(22) That if a female as regards the unclean period, and that of a male regarding the clean period. In the case of circumcision, the restrictions of Sabbath observance also have been imposed.

(23) That, on account of the doubt, additional restrictions were imposed.
(24) Since it is also possible that the law of 'uncleanness of birth' is not applicable in such a doubtful case, the woman should be subject must only to the restrictions connected with the birth of a male and a female, but also to those of menstruation. The unclean period due to birth (fourteen for a female which include the seven for a male should not, accordingly, be followed by the clean period of twenty-six days (v. note 1, supra) during which she is regarded as clean even if blood had appeared, but by that of menstruation, I.e., let her be treated as if nn birth at all had taken place and, consequently, if any blood appeared she should become menstrually unclean.

for one another.' What [is really] your opinion [on the matter]? If [Samuel] holds the same view as the Rabbis,[1] he should have sent [word] to them, according to the Rabbis; if he holds the same view as R. Judah.[1] he should have sent [word] to them according to R. Judah! — He was in doubt as to whether [the law is] according to R. Judah or according to the Rabbis.[2]

What is that [dispute]?[3] — It was taught: He shall acknowledge[4] [implies]. 'he shall [be entitled to] acknowledge him before others'.[5] From this R. Judah deduced that a person is believed when he declares, 'This son of mine is firstborn'.[6] And as a person is believed when he declares 'this son of mine is firstborn', so one is believed when one declares, 'this is the son of a divorced woman', or 'this is the son of a haluzah.'[7] But the Sages say he is not believed.[8]

R. Nahman b. Isaac said to Raba: According to R. Judah it is correct for Scripture to say, he shall acknowledge,'[9] according to the Rabbis, however, what need is there for[10] [the expression] he shall acknowledge? — When acknowledgment is required.[11] In what legal respect?[12] As regards giving him a double portion? Should he [even] be [regarded as] but a stranger, could he[13] not give [it][14] to him if he desired to make a gift of it? — This[15] is required only [in the case] where property has come into his possession[16] afterwards.[17] But according to R. Meir Who said, 'a man may give possession of a thing that has not come into existence',[18] what need is there for, he shall acknowledge?[19] — [It is needed for the case] where property came into his possession[20] while he was dying.[21]

Our Rabbis taught: [Where a son] was held to be a firstborn, and his father declared another [son] to be the firstborn, [the father] is believed. [Where, however, a son] was held not to be a first-born, and his father declared him to be a firstborn, [the father] is not believed. The first [clause harmonises with the view of] R. Judah,[22] and the last [clause harmonises with that of] the Rabbis.[23]

R. Johanan said: [If] a person declared, 'this is my son', and then retracted and declared, 'He is my slave', he is not believed. [If, however, he said], 'He is my slave', and then he retracted and declared, 'He is my son', he is believed, for he [may] mean,[24] 'who attends upon me as a slave'. [This law,] however, is reversed [when the statements were made] at a custom house. If, when passing the custom house, he declared, 'This is my son', and then he retracted, and said, 'He is my slave', he is to be believed.[25] [If, however,] he declared, 'He is my slave', and then he retracted, and said,'He is my son', he is not believed.[26]

An objection was raised: [It was taught:] If a man attended upon another as a son[27] and the latter came [before the court] and declared, 'He is my son' and, then, he retracted and stated, 'He is my slave', he is not believed. [If, however], he attended upon him as a slave, and [the latter] came [to the court] and declared, 'he is my slave', and then he retracted, and stated, 'He is my son', he is not believed![28] — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: [The case] there[29] [refers to one] whom he called, 'a slave of a rope of a hundred'.[30] What [is meant By] 'a rope of a hundred'? — A rope of a slave [who is worth] a hundred zuz.[31]

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: If one says to another, 'You stole my slave', and the other says, 'I did not steal [him]'. [And when the first inquires, 'In] what capacity [is he] with you?' [the latter replies]. 'You sold him to me,

(7) חלוצה The term is applied to the wife of a deceased brother (who left no issue) after she had been released from levirate marriage. The ceremony of release, in the course of which the widow takes off the shoe of her dead husband's brother, is called halizah, חליתה from root חלץ 'to take off'. Cf. Deut. XXV. 9f.

(8) If another son was reputed to be the firstborn.

(21) When he is physically unfit to make any gifts. The law of R. Meir which allows a person to give possession of what he might get in the future, applies only to one who is in a condition to make the gift when it reaches him. A dying man, though legally entitled to obtain possession, is not in a condition to make gifts and to give possession. Hence the necessity for a father's declaration on the birthright.

you gave him to me as a gift, [but] if you wish, take an oath[1] and you will get him back’;[2] and [the first] took the oath; [the latter] is not allowed to retract.[3] What does he teach us?[4] [The obvious principle underlying the law] has [surely] been taught [elsewhere]:[5] [If one of the litigants] said to the other,[6] ‘I have full confidence[7] in my father,[8] I have full confidence in your father, I have full confidence in three oxherds’,[9] R. Meir says, he may retract,[10] and the Sages say he may not![11] He[12] teaches us this: That the dispute[13] [relates also to the case] where [a litigant declared], ‘I will give it to you’[14] and [that] the halachah is in accordance with the words of the Sages.

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: the halachah is that slaves may be seized [from orphans, in payment of a debt incurred by the father].[15] R. Nahman. however, said they may not be seized.[16]

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: The halachah is that [a relative in the] third [degree] is qualified [to act as witness for or against a relative] in the second [degree].[17] Raba said: Also [for, or against a relative] in the first [degree][18] also. Mar, son of R. Ashi permitted [a grandson to act as witness] for his father's father. The law, [however], is not in accordance with [the view of] Mar, son of R. Ashi.

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: If a person possessed evidence[19] in one's favour [in the matter of a plot of] land, before he became blind, and [then] became blind, he is disqualified.[20] Samuel, however, said: He is permitted [to give evidence], [since] it is possible for him to gauge [the extent of] its boundaries; but [in the case of] a cloak [he is] not [to be admitted as witness].[21] R. Shesheth said: Even [in the case of] a cloak [his evidence is admissible, for] it is possible for him gauge the measurements of its length and of its breadth; but not [in the case of] a bar of metal. R. Papa said: Even [in the case of] a bar of metal, [for] it is possible for him to gauge its weight.

An objection was raised: ‘If a person possessed evidence[22] affecting another before he became his son-in-law, and, [subsequently,] he became his son-in-law, [or if that witness] had the faculty of hearing and became deaf, the faculty of seeing and became blind, sane and became insane, he is disqualified [from giving evidence]. If, however, he possessed evidence affecting him before he became his son-in-law, and when he became his son-in-law, his daughter died; [or if he] had the faculty of hearing, became deaf, and regained his hearing; [or if he] had the faculty of Seeing, became blind, and regained his eyesight; [or if] he was sane, became insane, and regained his sanity, [in all these cases] he is qualified [to act as witness]. This is the general rule: Whenever his beginning[23] or his end[24] was under a disqualification, he is disqualified, [but whenever] his beginning and his end [find him] in a suitable condition, he is permitted [to give evidence].[25]

(13) Between R. Meir and the Sages

(14) Against the view that the dispute has reference only to the case where a litigant declared, 'You may keep it.' R. Abba, by his statement that the defendant cannot retract but has to surrender the slave to the claimant, has taught us that the dispute between R. Meir and the Sages is not limited to the case where a claimant agrees to forfeit his claim in favour of the defendant on the ruling of relatives (or other disqualified persons), as in the view of one authority in Sanhedrin 24a, but applies also to that of a defendant who agrees to abide by the ruling of such disqualified persons and pay up; and that even in such a case the Sages hold the opinion that the defendant cannot retract.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 128b

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: If one said [something] concerning a child among [his] sons, he is to be trusted.[2] And R. Johanan said: He is not to be trusted.[2] What does this mean? — Abaye replied: It is this that was meant: If one said concerning a child among [his] sons [that] he shall be heir to all his estate, he is to be trusted in accordance with [the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka;[3] and R. Johanan said [that] he is not to be trusted, in accordance with [the view of] the Rabbis.[4]

Raba pointed out a difficulty. [If] that [is the meaning, why the expressions], 'trusted' and 'not trusted'? 'He shall be heir' and 'he shall not be heir' should have been [the expressions used]! But, said Raba, it is this that was meant: If one said concerning a child among [his] sons [that] he was the firstborn, he is to be trusted,[5] in accordance [with the view of] R. Judah;[6] and R. Johanan said that he was not to be trusted, in accordance with [the view of] the Rabbis.[6]

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: If one said, 'Let my wife receive [a share in my estate] as [any] one of [my] sons,'[7] she is to receive [a share] like [any] one of the sons. Raba said: But [only] in the property [which he had in his possession] at that time,[8] and among the sons who may appear subsequently.[9]

R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama: [In the case when] one produces a bond of indebtedness against another, and the lender states, 'I received no payment at all', and the borrower pleads, 'I have paid a half', while witnesses testify that all [the debt] was paid, that [borrower] must take an oath,[10] and the [lender] collects the [other] half from [the borrower's] free property but not from [that] which has been disposed of,[11] for [the buyers or the creditors] can say, 'We rely upon the witness.'[12] And even [according] to R. Akiba, who said [that he[13] is to be treated in the same way as] one who returns a lost object,[14] these words [apply only to the case] where there are no witnesses, but where there are witnesses [his admission may be due to the fact that] he is simply afraid.[15] Mar son of R, Ashi pointed out a difficulty: On the contrary, even [according] to R. Simeon b. Eleazar who said,[16] [in the case mentioned, that] he[17] is [to he treated as] one who admits part of the claim, these words, [it may be argued, are applicable only to the case] where there are no witnesses who support him, but where there are witnesses who support him, he [should] certainly [be treated as] one who returns a lost object![18]

Mar Zutra taught in the name of R. Shimi b. Ashi: The law in [the case of] all these reported statements [is] in accordance with [the messages] which R. Abba sent to R. Joseph b. Hama. Rabina said to R. Ashi: What [about the law] of R. Nahman?[19] He replied to him: We learnt that [message of R. Abba as], 'they may not be seized', and so said R. Nahman.[20] What, then, does [the declaration of] the law exclude?[21]

(18) How, then, could R. Abba subject the borrower in our case to an oath.

(19) Regarding the seizure of slaves, supra. In civil matters the law is always in accordance with R. Nahman's views, while here it has been stated that the law is in accordance with R. Abba's message. How, then, is one to reconcile the laws of R. Nahman and R. Abba, which are mutually contradictory?

(20) The two views are not contradictory, but identical.

(21) The declaration cannot have for its object the mere statement of the law regarding the seizure of slaves. Since that is obvious from the fact that R. Nahman and R. Abba hold the same opinion, there was no need to state it.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 129a

If [its purpose is] to exclude Raba's [law[1] , surely] he [merely] adds [to that of R. Abba]![2] If [to exclude the law] of Mar son of R. Ashi, [surely, it has already been stated that] the law is not according to Mar son of R. Ashi![3] If to exclude [the laws] of Samuel and R. Shesheth and R. Papa, to these, surely, objections have already been raised![4] — But, [this is the object of the declaration:] To exclude [the law] of R. Johanan,[5] and [that which was to be implied by] the difficulty of Mar son of R. Ashi.[6]

IF ONE DISTRIBUTED HIS PROPERTY VERBALLY [AND] GAVE TO ONE [SON] MORE, AND TO [ANOTHER] ONE LESS, etc. How is one to understand [the giving of] A GIFT AT THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, or AT THE END? — When R. Dimi came[7] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: [If one wrote,] 'Let a certain field be given to X and he shall inherit it,' this is [called] A GIFT AT THE BEGINNING. [If he wrote], 'let him inherit it and it shall be given to him', this is [called] A GIFT AT THE END. 'Let him inherit it and let it be given to him so that he may inherit it', this is A GIFT IN THE MIDDLE. [This law is] only [applicable to the case] of one person and one field,[8] but not to [the case of] one person and two fields,[9] [or] one field and two persons.[10] R. Eleazar said: ['The same law applies] even [to the case of] one person and two fields [or] one field and two persons'. [The law,][11] however, [is] not [applicable] in [the case of] two fields and two persons.

When Rabin came[7] he said: [In the case where one wrote], 'Let this field be given to X, and let Y inherit that [other] field', R. Johanan said: He[12] acquires possession, [and] R. Eleazar said: He[13] does not acquire possession. Said Abaye to Rabin: You have given us satisfaction [in one [respect] and cause for demurring in another.[14] [For, as regards the apparent contradiction between the statement] of R. Eliezar[15] and the other statement of His[16] one can well explain [that there is] no [real] difficulty [since] one statement[17] [may be said to refer to the case] of one person and two fields;[18] and the other,[19] to two persons and two fields. [The contradiction], however, [between the first statement] of R. Johanan,[20] and his second one[21] [presents] a difficulty![22] — [We[23] are] Amoraim [in dispute] as to [which were the views] of R. Johanan.

Resh Lakish, however, said: No possession is [ever] acquired[24] unless [the testator] had said, 'Let X and Y inherit this and that particular field, which I had assigned to them as a gift, so that they may inherit them'.[25]

[The following Amoraim are] in [the same] dispute [as that of those mentioned]. R. Hamnuna said: [The law that possession[26] is acquired], was only taught [in the case of] one person and one field, but not [in the case of] one person and two fields [or] one field and two persons.[27] And R. Nahman said: [The same law applies] even [to the case of] one person and two fields [or] one field and two persons, but not [to that of] two fields and two persons.[28] And R. Shesheth said: [Possession is acquired] even [in the case of] two fields and two persons.[29]

R. Shesheth said: I derive my decision from the following Baraitha.[30] If one[31] said, 'Give my children[32] a shekel a week',[33] and they require a sela',[34] a sela' is to be given to them.[35] If, however, he said,'Give them no more than a shekel', only a shekel is to be given to them. But if he gave instructions [that] if these died

(21) In the report of Rabin.

(23) R. Dimi and I (Rabin).

(24) Where the expression of 'inheritance' was used together with that of 'gift', in the case of two persons and two fields.

(25) Both acquire possession of the respective fields, because the testator had used the expression, 'I had assigned to them as a gift', implying that the gift was made before it was assigned as 'inheritance' (R. Gersh.).

(26) Where the expression of 'gift' was used with that of 'inheritance'.

others[1] shall be his heirs in their stead, only a shekel [a week] is to be given to them, whether he used the expression 'give' or 'give no [more]'.[2] Now here, surely, it is [a case] similar to that of two fields[3] and two persons,[4] and yet it is taught that possession is acquired.[5] He raised this[6] as an objection [to the opinions of his colleagues][7] and he [himself] gave the reply: [The Baraitha[8] deals with such persons] as are entitled to be his heirs,[9] and this [law is in agreement with the law of] R. Johanan b. Beroka.[10]

R. Ashi said: Come and hear! [If a person said], '[I give[11]] my estate to you; and after you, X shall be [my] heir; and after X,[12] Y shall be heir', [when the] first dies, the second acquires the ownership; when the second dies, the third acquires the ownership. And if the second died in the lifetime of the first, the estate reverts to the heirs of the first.[13] Now here, surely, [the case] resembles that of two fields and two persons[14] and yet it was taught that possession is acquired![15] And if it be suggested [that] here also [one deals with the case of one] who is entitled to be his heir and [that] it[16] is [in accordance with the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka;[17] if so,[18] [the question arises, how can it be said that if] the second died, the third acquired possession? Surely, R. Aha the son of R. Iwya sent [the following message]: According to the view of R. Johanan b. Beroka,[19] [if one said],[20] 'My estate [shall be] yours, and after you [it shall be given] to X', and the first is [one who is] entitled to be his heir, the second has no [claim] whatsoever in face of the first,[21] for this[22] is not a [specific] expression of 'gift' but [rather] of 'inheritance'[23] and an inheritance cannot be terminated.[24] [Is not this[25] then,] a refutation of [the views of] all of them?[26] — This is a refutation.

May this be regarded also as a refutation of [the view of] Resh Lakish?[27] — [How can] you think so! Did not Raba say,[28] 'The law is in accordance with [the views] of Resh Lakish in these three [cases]'?[29] — [This is] no difficulty, [for] here,[30] [the expressions of 'gift' and 'inheritance' may have been uttered] one immediately after the other;[31] there,[32] [the two expressions] may not have been uttered one immediately after the other.[33]

And the law is that [expressions uttered] immediately after one another[31] [are] always [regarded] as having been uttered simultaneously, except, [in the case of] idolatry[34]

(1) Whom he nominated.

(2) Since it is obvious that he desired to economise in the weekly maintenance of his children in order that as much as possible may remain for his appointed heirs.

(3) (a) The total sum of the shekels to be given to the children and (b) the sum to be given subsequently to his appointed beneficiaries.

(4) (a) The children, (b) the other heirs. In the case of the former he used the expression of 'giving'; in that of the latter, 'inheritance'.

(5) By the appointed heirs. Since it has been said that the children were not to be given more than a shekel a week in order to leave as much as possible for the appointed heirs, it is obvious that the latter acquire possession. Thus, the law of R. Shesheth is proved.

(6) The Baraitha cited.

(7) R. Hamnuna and R. Nahman, who stated that in such a case one cannot dispose of an 'inheritance' to strangers.

(8) Which allows one to bequeath his estate by the use of the term 'inheritance' .

(9) He did not bequeath the estate to strangers, but to one or more of his legal heirs. Hence the question of the use of the term 'inheritance' does not arise.

(10) Who allows the appointment to an estate of one of the heirs to the exclusion of all others, infra 130a.

(11) Using the expression of gift.

(12) Lit., 'after after you'.

(13) The third can gain possession from the second only, and since the latter died before he himself gained possession, the entire estate must revert to the first.

(14) (a) The 'gift' of usufruct to the first, and (b) the transmission thereof as 'inheritance' to the second or the entire estate to the third.

(15) which shows that, even in such a case, the term ‘gift’, used with reference to one, makes effective the term ‘inheritance’ applied to the other.
(16) The statement declaring the term ‘inheritance’ effective.
(17) V. p. 539, n. 12.
(18) that the second was not a stranger, but an heir.
(19) Who holds that provided the beneficiaries are heirs, the testator can distribute his property among them in any manner he thinks fit.
(20) Without specifying whether as a ‘gift’ or an ‘inheritance’.
(21) Or his heirs.
(22) The vague expression, ‘shall be yours’.
(23) Since the person is a legal heir.
(24) An estate, once bequeathed by a father to one of his heirs, becomes the absolute property of that heir, from whom it is transmitted to his own heirs. The father has no right to interrupt his succession by appointing any other person as second heir.
(25) The Baraitha cited by R. Ashi.
(26) All the Amoraim who maintained, supra, that if one gave instructions for field to be given as an ‘inheritance’ to one person and as a ‘gift’ to another, his instructions are invalid. As has been proved, the Baraitha cited by R. Ashi does not, as has been suggested, deal with the case of one who is entitled to be heir, but with that of any stranger appointed by the testator; and, though the estate was given as a ‘gift’ to one, and as an ‘inheritance’ to another, possession is acquired, the instructions of the testator being obviously regarded as legally valid. How then, could the Amoraim mentioned maintain that the testator's instructions in such a case are invalid, and that the person appointed as heir does not acquire possession of the estate?
(27) Who holds the opinion that the expression of ‘gift’ used in connection with the one, does not make effective the term ‘inheritance’ applied to the other.
(28) Yeb. 36a, Hul. 76a.
(29) Of which the view he advanced here is one. Surely, it would not have been regarded as law if it were refuted by the Baraitha.
(30) In the Baraitha; according to which possession is acquired when the expression ‘gift’ was used in the case of one and that of ‘inheritance’ in the case of the other.
(31) תוך כדי דבור, lit., ‘within as much (time) as is required for an utterance’, i.e., the time needed to utter a short greeting such as, ‘Peace be upon thee my master’, represented by the three words, שלום עליך רבי
(32) In the statement of Resh Lakish.
(33) Lit., ‘after the time required for an utterance.
(34) I.e., if one set aside an object for idol worship, though he withdrew immediately, the object remains prohibited. [Or, according to Tosaf. if a man proclaims an idol as his god, his immediate retraction does not save him from the death penalty. (V. Ned. 87a.)]

and betrothal.[1]

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON SAID, ‘X[2] SHALL BE MY HEIR’, WHERE THERE IS A DAUGHTER, [OR] IF HE SAID, ‘MY DAUGHTER SHALL BE MY HEIR’, WHERE THERE IS A SON, HIS INSTRUCTIONS ARE TO BE DISREGARDED,[3] FOR HE MADE A STIPULATION AGAINST A [LAW] WHICH IS WRITTEN IN THE TORAH. R. JOHANAN B. BEROKAH SAID: IF [A PERSON] SAID [IT][4] CONCERNING ONE WHO IS ENTITLED TO BE HIS HEIR, HIS INSTRUCTIONS ARE VALID; [IF], HOWEVER, [HE SAID IT] CONCERNING ONE WHO IS NOT ENTITLED TO BE HIS HEIR, HIS INSTRUCTIONS ARE NOT VALID.

GEMARA. The reason [why the testator's instructions are invalid, is,] because [he appointed, as has been said], another [legal heir] where there was a daughter, or a daughter where there was a son,[5] [had he appointed,] however, a son among the [other] sons or a daughter among the [other] daughters, his instructions would, [accordingly], have been valid; tell [me, then, what you understand by] the latter clause [which reads], R. JOHANAN B. BEROKAH SAID: IF [A PERSON] SAID [IT] CONCERNING ONE WHO IS ENTITLED TO BE HIS HEIR, HIS INSTRUCTIONS ARE VALID, surely this [represents] the same [view as that of] the first Tanna![6] And if it be suggested [that] R. Johanan b. Beroka maintains [that] even another [legal heir may be appointed] where there is a daughter, and [that] a daughter [may be appointed as heir] where there is a son;[7] [it may be retorted], surely, it has been taught: R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said, 'There was no dispute between father and the Sages concerning [the law] that one's instructions are invalid[8] when another [legal heir was appointed] where there was a daughter, or [where] a daughter [was appointed heir] where there was a son; their dispute related only[9] [to the case of an appointment as sole heir] of a son among the [other] sons or [of] a daughter among the [other] daughters, [in] which [case] father said, [the one appointed] inherits, and the Sages say [that] he does no inherit'![10] — If you wish, it may be replied: Since he[11] said that they[12] did not dispute, it may be inferred that the first Tanna[13] is of the opinion that they did dispute.[14] [And] if you prefer,[15] it may be replied that all [the Mishnah][16] represents[17] [the views of] R. Johanan b. Beroka, only some [words are] missing [from the text] which should read as follows:[18] IF A PERSON SAID, 'X SHALL BE MY HEIR', WHERE THERE IS A DAUGHTER, [OR IF HE SAID], 'MY DAUGHTER SHALL BE MY HEIR', WHERE THERE IS A SON, HIS INSTRUCTIONS ARE TO BE DISREGARDED, but [in the case of the appointment as heir of] a daughter among the [other] daughters or [of] a son among the [other] sons, if [the father] said, [that one of them][19] should inherit all his estate, his instruction is legally valid, for R. Johanan said: IF [A PERSON] SAID [IT][20] CONCERNING ONE WHO IS ENTITLED TO BE HIS [IMMEDIATE] HEIR, HIS INSTRUCTIONS ARE LEGALLY VALID.

R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with [the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka. And so said Raba: The halachah is in agreement with [the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka.

Raba said: What is the reason [for the opinion] of R. Johanan b. Beroka? — Scripture said: Then it shall be, in the day that he causeth his sons to inherit[21] [from which it is to be inferred that] the Torah gave authority to a father to cause anyone[22] whom he desires to inherit [his estate].

Abaye said to him: This [law,[23] surely, could be] deduced from, He may not make [the son of the beloved] the firstborn![24] — That [text] is required for [the purpose of another inference], as it was taught: Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eliezer:

(1) If a man betrothed a woman, though he changed his mind immediately, the betrothal remains valid. [In Ned. 87a the reading is fuller: 'except (in the case) of blasphemy, idolatry, betrothal and divorce.]

(2) I.e., any relative other than a son.

(3) Lit., 'he said nothing'.

(4) That one person shall he his sole heir.

(5) In both of which cases his instructions are contrary to the Torah.

(6) Wherein, then, lies the difference between them?

(7) And that it is on this point that he differs from the first Tanna.

(8) V, p. 541, n. 11.

(9) Lit., 'what do they dispute on?', or 'on what are they divided?'

(10) From this statement it is obvious that R. Johanan b. Beroka cannot be assumed to maintain, as has been suggested, that another legal heir may he appointed where there is a daughter, or that a daughter may be made heir where there is son

(12) R. Johanan b. Beroka and the Sages.

(14) Our Mishnah, then, may be explained to represent the view of the first Tanna. Hence it is possible to suggest that R. Johanan maintains, as has been suggested above, that another legal heir may be appointed even where there is a son etc.

(15) I.e., if there is an objection to the assumption that R. Ishmael was in dispute with another Tanna as to whether his own father was or was not in disagreement with the Sages.
(16) Lit., 'all of it'.
(17) Lit., 'is of',
(18) Lit., 'and thus it teaches'.
(19) Whom he named.
(20) Gave instructions as to whom he desired to be his heir.
(21) Deut. XXI, 16.
(22) Of his sons; or, according to the first interpretation (supra note 1), any one of his legal heirs.
(23) That a father may transmit all his estate to any one of his sons (or heirs).

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 130b

What [need was there for Scripture] to say, He may not make [the son of the beloved] the firstborn?[1] — Since it was said, Then it should be, in the day that he causeth his sons to inherit,[2] one might argue that it is a matter of logical deduction, [thus:][3] If [in the case of'] an ordinary [son], who is privileged to receive [a share] in any prospective [property of his father] as in that which is actually in his possession, the Torah [nevertheless] gave authority to the father to transmit [his estate] to whomsoever he pleases, how much more [should he have this right in the case of] a firstborn, whose rights are impaired in that he does not receive [the portion of the birthright] in prospective property as in that which is actually in the possession [of his father]; hence it was expressly stated, He may not make [the son of the beloved] the firstborn. Then let Scripture say, He may not make [the son of the beloved] the firstborn,[4] why should it [also] state Then it shall be, in the day that he causeth his sons to inherit? — Because one might [argue], is not this a matter of logical deduction?[5] If [in the case of] a firstborn, whose rights are impaired in that he does not receive [the portion of his birthright] in prospective [property] as in that which is actually in [his father's] possession, the Torah, [nevertheless,] said, He[6] may not make [the son of the beloved] the firstborn, how much less [should he have this right in the case of] an ordinary [son] who is privileged to receive in prospective [property] as in that which is actually in [his father's] possession; hence it was expressly stated, Then it shall be, in the day that he causeth his son to inherit, [in order to make it clear that] the Torah gave a father authority to transmit his estate to whomsoever he pleases.

R. Zerika said in the name of R. Ammi in the name of R. Hanina in the name of R. Jannai[7] in the name of Rabbi: The halachah is in agreement with [the views of] R. Johanan b. Beroka. R. Abba said to him: The statement was that he [only] gave [such] a decision![8] Wherein lies the difference?[9] — [One] Master holds [that] an halachah is preferable[10] and the [other] Master holds that a practical decision is [of] greater [importance].[11]

Our Rabbis taught: The halachah[12] may not be derived either from theoretical [conclusion] or from a practical [decision] unless one has been told [that] the halachah [is to be taken as a rule] for practical decisions. [Once a person has] asked and was informed [that] an halachah [was to be taken as a guide] for practical decisions, he may continue to give practical decisions [accordingly],[13] provided he draws no comparisons.[14] What [could be meant by], 'provided he draws no comparisons'? Surely, in the entire [domain of] the Torah comparisons are made! — R. Ashi said: It is this that was meant: Provided one draws no comparisons in [ritual questions relating to] trefoth.[15] For it was taught: In [the laws of] trefoth it must not be said this [one] is equal to that.[16] And do not be astonished [at this], for [an animal] may be cut on one side[17] and die, [yet when] it is cut on another side[17] it remains alive.[18]

R. Assi said to R. Johanan: 'May we, when the Master tells us:[19] "The halachah is so and so," give a practical decision accordingly?' He said: 'Do not use it as a practical guide[20] unless I declare [it to be] an halachah in [connection with] a practical decision.'[21]

Raba said to R. Papa and to R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: 'When a legal decision of mine comes before you [in a written form], and you see any objection to it, do not tear it up before you have seen me.[22] If I have a [valid] reason [for my decision] I will tell [it to] you; and if not, I will withdraw. After my death, you shall neither tear it up nor infer [any law] from it. "You shall neither tear it up" since, had I been there, it is possible that I might have told you the reason;

---

(1) This law, surely, is specifically stated in Deut. XXI, 17, 'but he shall acknowledge he firstborn etc.'!

(2) V. p. 543, n. 8.

(3) Lit., 'for one might [say], is it not an argument.'

(4) And this will amply prove that the birthright cannot be transferred.

(5) V. note 3.

(7) V. Bah., a.l.

(8) I.e., that he decided a particular case in agreement with R. Johanan's views; not that he laid it down as a general rule, or halachah.

(9) Between R. Zerika and R. Abba as regards practical considerations.

(10) Since a halachah may be regarded as a general rule; while one practical decision which happens to agree with R. Johanan's views would not show that the law is always to be administered in accordance with these views. Other factors and circumstances may have led to the decision in that particular case.

(11) Or, 'is a teacher', (Jast.) Since a practical case has been decided in agreement with R. Johanan, one may decide similar cases accordingly. A statement that the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan would not enable one to act accordingly, unless, as stated infra, it was specifically added that it was to be taken as a guide for practical decisions.

(12) I.e., laws for practical guidance.

(13) He need not ask for a new ruling every time an exactly similar case is brought before him.

(14) Whereby to decide other cases which do not resemble it in all respects.

(15) טרפות diseased animals which, though ritually slaughtered, are forbidden to be eaten.

(16) And thus derive one law from another; the law relating, e.g., to a diseased liver from that of a diseased lung.

(18) Which shows that the injury to one limb must in no way be compared, for ritual purposes, to the injury of another.

(19) In the course of our studies and discussions.

(20) Lit., 'do not do'.

(21) In which case one is careful with one's statements. In the course of theoretical discussions, however, one may sometimes give an unconsidered decision which may be contrary to the accepted law,

(22) Lit., 'until you come before me'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 131a

"nor infer [any law] from it" — because a judge must be guided only by that[1] which his eyes see.

Raba inquired: What[2] [is the law in the case of] a person in good health?[3] Does R. Johanan b. Beroka[4] speak [only] of [the case of] a dying man, who has the right to appoint an heir [on the spot],[5] but not [of] one [who is] in good health; or [does he] perhaps [speak] also even of one in good health? — R. Mesharsheya said to Raba: Come and hear: R. Nathan said to Rabbi,[6] 'You[7] have taught your Mishnah[8] in accordance with [the views of] R. Johanan b. Beroka; for we learnt:[8] [A husband who] did not give [his wife] in writing[9] [the following statement, viz.], "The male children that will be born from our marriage[10] shall inherit[11] the money of thy marriage settlement in addition to their shares with their brothers",[12] is [nevertheless] liable, because it is a condition[13] laid down by the court'.[14] And Rabbi replied [to him]:[15] "We learnt: they shall take".[16] [Later], however, Rabbi stated: "It was childishness on my part to be presumptuous in the presence of Nathan the Babylonian.

The fact is[17] that the law is well established [that] male children may not seize[18] any sold property [of their father in payment for their mother's kethubah]".[19] [Now], if it is assumed [that] we learnt, "they shall take", why may they not seize sold property?[20] Consequently it must be inferred that we learnt: "they shall inherit"'.[21] [Now], who has been heard to hold this view?[22] [Surely] R. Johanan b. Beroka! Thus it may be inferred [that the law[23] applies] even to [the case of] one who is in good health.[24]

R. Papa said to Abaye: Whether according to him who said, [that the reading[25] was] 'they shall take', or according to him who said [that the reading was], 'they shall inherit', [the question may be asked], surely one [has] not [the right] to give possession of something which is not yet in existence! And even R. Meir,[26] who maintains [that] one may give possession of that which is not yet in existence, applies this law[27] [only to the case where the possession was given] to one who is [already] in existence,[28] but not [to the case where possession is given] to one who does not exist.[29] [The reason], however,[30] [must be that] a condition [imposed] by a court is different [from an ordinary assignment],[31] here, likewise,[32] [it could have been explained[33] that] a condition [imposed] by a court is different![34] — He replied to him: Because he [first] used the expression, 'they shall inherit'.[35]

Subsequently, Abaye said: What I said is nothing,[36] For we learnt:[37] [A husband who] did not give his wife in writing[38] [the following] undertaking, viz., 'The female children that will be born from our marriage[39] shall live in my house and be maintained out of my estate until they shall be taken [in marriage] by men ,is [nevertheless] liable, because that [fatherly duty] is a condition [imposed] by the court. Consequently, this[40] is a case of giving to one as a 'gift'[41] and to another as an 'inheritance',[42] and wherever [something is given] to one person as an inheritance and to another as a gift[43] even the Rabbis agree [that the assignments are valid].[44]

R. Nihumai (one said, it was R. Hananya b. Minyumai) asked Abaye:

---

(1) Lit., 'a judge has nothing but'.

(2) Lit., 'how'.

(4) In our Mishnah, supra 130a.

(5) Without the necessity for a formal written document. The instructions of a dying man, though only verbal, are legally binding.

(6) R. Judah I, Editor of the Mishnah.

(8) Keth. 52b.

(9) As part of her kethubah, or marriage contract,

(10) Lit., 'that you will have from me'.

(11) ירתין

(12) This provision is necessary, in the interests of the children, in case their mother predeceases their father who subsequently marries another wife who gives birth to new male children.

(13) That the marriage settlement of a wife who predeceased her husband is to be inherited by her sons on the death of the husband. [The reason of this enactment is given by R. Simeon b. Yohai (Keth. 52b) 'in order that a man may be encouraged to give as liberal a dowry to his daughter as he would give to his son — for the fear lest the daughter's property should eventually go to another woman's children would make a father hesitate before dowering her as liberally as he would like on marriage.]

(14) This shows that the Mishnah is in accordance with the views of R. Johanan. Why, then, Rabbi was asked, did he adopt the view of an individual against the Rabbis who were in the majority?

(16) Not 'inherit', i.e., as a gift and not as an inheritance. That a father has the right to give his estate as a gift, to whomsoever he desires, is disputed by no one.

(17) Lit., ‘but’.
(18) Lit., ‘it (the kethubah) may not’ etc.
(20) Which was really mortgaged to them prior to the sale. The right to the gift was acquired at once, i.e., on the date of the marriage contract.
(21) Since an inheritance takes effect after the testator's death, the buyers of the property, purchase of which took place in the owner's lifetime, have the prior claim. R. Nathan's objection was, therefore, well founded.
(22) Enunciated in the cited Mishnah.
(23) Of R. Johanan in our Mishnah.
(24) Since here the appointment to heirship was made at the time of the marriage.
(25) In the Mishnah cited by R. Nathan.
(26) Lit, ‘according to R. Meir’.
(27) Lit., ‘these words’.
(28) At the time when possession was conferred.
(29) How, then, can the children, who were not in existence when the marriage contract between their father and mother was written, acquire possession of their mother's kethubah?
(30) Why the children do acquire possession.
(31) Though a private assignment is not valid unless the assignee was alive at the time when it was made, an assignment based on the decision of a court takes effect in all cases.
(32) In respect to the objection raised by R. Nathan.
(34) And all (even the Rabbis who elsewhere maintain that the expression of ‘inherit’ does not confer possession), agree that, in such a case, the assignment is valid. What need, then, was there for Rabbi to suggest a change if reading from ‘inherit’ to ‘receive’?
(35) Instead of the generally more effective term ‘take’, denoting ‘gift’. This seemed to imply agreement with the view of R. Johanan b. Beroka, as against that of the Rabbis. Hence, Rabbi preferred to change the reading.
(36) There was really no need for Rabbi to suggest a change of reading, for in either case, whatever the reading, the Mishnah may be considered to be in agreement with both R. Johanan and the Rabbis.
(39) Lit., ‘which you will have from me’.
(40) The husband's undertaking with reference to the male children on the one hand, and to that of the female children on the other.
(41) The maintenance of the daughters. There is legal obligation on a father to provide for the maintenance of his daughters.
(42) The sons are given their mother's kethubah as her legal heirs.
(43) And the expressions of ‘gift’ and ‘inheritance’ were used one immediately after the other.
(44) According to the Mishnah, supra 126b, which represents the opinion of the Rabbis, an assignment made by using the expression of inheritance is legally valid whenever the expression of ‘gift’ was used with it. This was explained in the Gemara, supra 129a, to apply even to the case of two separate fields given as an inheritance and a gift respectively to two different persons. Similarly, here, the kethubah for the sons and the maintenance for the daughters may be regarded as the assignment of an inheritance and a gift respecting two persons; and, since the two provisions were made by the same court and are to be entered in the same contract, the two clauses, one containing the term, ‘inherit’, and the other, ‘give’, may be assumed to follow in close proximity to one another; in which case the Rabbis also agree that both the inheritance and the gift are acquired. The question, therefore, remains why was Rabbi compelled to have recourse to a change of reading?

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 131b

Whence [it is to be inferred] that [both provisions] were made by one court? Is it not possible [that] they were made by two [different] courts?[1] — This possibility[2] cannot be entertained,[3] for in the earlier part [of the Mishnah cited] it was stated: R. Eleazar b. Azariah gave the following exposition in the presence of the Sages in the Vineyard of Jabneh:[4] '[Since it was provided that] the sons shall be heirs [to their mother's kethubah], and the daughters shall be maintained [out of their father's estate, the two cases are to be compared]: As the sons cannot be heirs except after the death of their father, so the daughters cannot claim maintenance except after the death of their father'[5] . [Now], if it is granted [that both provisions][6] were enacted by one court, one can well understand why an analogy was drawn between one provision and the other. If, however, it is argued [that they] were enacted at two [different] courts, how could an analogy be drawn between one provision and the other?[7] — What proof![8] It is quite possible still to maintain [that the provisions][9] were enacted by two [different] courts;[10] but[11] the latter court had to frame its provisions on the lines analogous to those of the former court in order that there might be no discrepancy between the one provision and the other.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: If a [dying] man gave all his property[12] to his wife, in writing, he [thereby] only appointed her administratrix.[13]

It is obvious [that if he assigned all his property to] his grown up son, he [thereby], merely appointed him administrator.[14] What [is the law, however, if he assigned it to] his young son? — It was stated [that] R. Hanilai b. Idi said in the name of Samuel: Even [If to] his youngest son who [still] lies in [his] cradle.[15]

It is obvious [that if a father assigned all his property to] his son or [to] a stranger, the stranger [is to receive it] as a gift,[16] while the son [is merely appointed] administrator.[17] [If he assigned it to] his betrothed or [to] his divorced wife, [either of them is to receive it] as a gift.[18] The question was [however], asked, What [is the law if the assignment was made to] a daughter where there are sons, [to] a wife where there are brothers,[19] or to a wife where there are sons of the husband?[20] — Rabina said in the name of Raba: None of these[21] acquires possession, except his betrothed, or divorced wife. R. 'Awira in the name of Raba said: All these acquire possession except a wife where there are brothers,[22] and a wife where there are sons of the husband.[23]

(1) And, consequently, the two expressions, ('inheritance' for the sons, and 'gift' for the daughters), cannot be regarded as made one immediately after the other. And since in this case the Rabbis would regard the assignments as invalid, Rabbi had to revert to a change of reading, in order that the Mishnah may conform with the view of the Rabbis.

(2) That the provisions were made at two courts.

(3) Lit., 'it cannot enter your mind'.

(4) [The name of the School established in that town (Jamnia) by R. Johanan b. Zakkai, and so called because the members sat in rows like vines in a vineyard (J. Ber. IV, 1). Krauss Lewy's Festschrift, 22, maintains that they originally met in a vineyard.]

(5) He thus holds that there is no legal, as distinct from moral, obligation on the father to support his daughter after a certain age, v. Keth. 49a.

(6) Kethubah for the sons, and maintenance for the daughters.

(7) One court may have given the sons the right of heirship after the father's death, while the other court may have granted the daughters' maintenance even during the lifetime of their father. Hence it must be assumed that both provisions were made by the same court.

(8) Lit., 'whence your proof'?

(10) Hence the expressions of 'inheritance' and 'gift' cannot be regarded as having been made one immediately after the other. Rabbi was consequently compelled, in order that the Mishnah may conform with the view of the Rabbis, to change the reading from 'they shall inherit' to 'they shall take'.

(11) As to the argument, how could R. Eleazar draw an analogy between provisions made by different courts.

(12) As a gift.

(13) And his sons are entitled to receive their due shares in the estate. Since no father would give all his estate to his wife and leave his children penniless it is taken for granted that the testator's wish was not that all his property shall be given to his wife for her sole use, but that she shall only administer it in the interests of all the heirs. His use of the expression 'gift' is assumed to have been intended as a means of making his children dependent on her, so that she might enjoy the respect due to her.

(14) So that his brothers may pay him due respect.

(15) The estate is not to be given to him alone but to all the heirs. The father's wish is interpreted as a desire that all the other heirs shall pay respect to his youngest son.

(16) For, had the testator merely meant him to be administrator, he would have stated the fact explicitly.

(17) V. n. 8 and 9 supra.

(18) As he can hardly be so much concerned about safeguarding their respect as to make provision to that extent.

(19) Of the testator; and no other heirs.

(20) Born from another wife, in each of these cases the consideration of respect is likely to arise.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 132a

Raba inquired: What[1] [is the law] in [the case of] a person in good health?[2] [Should we say] that this[3] applies only to a dying person because [we assume] he is desirous [to make provision] for due respect to be paid to her,[4] but [not] to a person in good health, since he himself is alive;[5] or, is it the same with a man in good health, since there too he may desire [to make provision] that respect may be paid to her[4] already in his lifetime?[6] — Come and hear: [It was taught:] If a person gives the usufruct of his estate to his wife, in writing,[7] she may [nevertheless] collect her kethubah from [his] landed property.[8] [If he gave her] a half,[9] a third or a quarter, she may collect her kethubah from the rest.[10] If he gave all his property to his wife in writing, and a bond of indebtedness[11] was produced against him, R. Eliezer said: She may tear up [the deed of] her gift and claim the rights of[12] her kethubah.[13] But the Sages said: She tears up her kethubah,[14] remains with the claim of her gift,[15] and forfeits both.[16] And R. Judah the baker related: [Such] a case once happened with the daughter of my sister [who was] a bride,[17] and [when] the matter was brought before the Sages they decided [that] she must tear up her kethubah, remain with the claims of her gift and forfeit both. [Front this Baraitha it follows that] the reason [why the widow forfeits her claims is] that a bond of indebtedness bad been produced against [her husband] but had no such bond been produced she would have acquired possession [of the entire estate]. Now, with what [kind of testator is the Baraitha concerned]? If it be suggested [that it deals] with a dying man, surely, [it may be pointed out,] it has been said that [a person in such a condition] merely appointed her administratrix! [Must it] not, then, [be concluded that the Baraitha deals] with a person in good health?[18] — [No; the Baraitha cited may] really [be concerned] with a dying man but[19] R. 'Awira establishes it as dealing with all cases[20] [while] Rabina establishes it as dealing with one's betrothed, or divorced wife.[21]

R. Joseph b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that she is to tear up her kethubah,[22] remain with the claim of her gift[23] and forfeit both.[24] Does this[25] imply that R. Nahman is not guided by an assumption?[26] Surely, it has been taught: in the case of [a person] whose son went to a distant country,[27] and having heard that the latter[28] had died, assigned all his property, in writing, to strangers; though his son subsequently appeared, his gift is [nevertheless, legally] valid.[29] R. Simeon b. Menasya said: His gift is not [legally] a gift, for had he known that his son was alive, he would not have given it away.[30] And R. Nahman said: The halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Menasya![31] — There[32] it is different, for she is content [to renounce her claim to her kethubah] for the pleasure of having it known[33] that [her husband] had presented[34] her with that property.[35]

We learned elsewhere:[36] If [a person] assigns his property to his sons, in writing, and he [also] assigns to his wife [a piece of] land of any size whatsoever[37] she loses [the claims of] her kethubah.[38] [Does] she lose her kethubah because he assigned to her any [small] piece of land?[39] — Rab replied: [This applies to the case] where he[40] confers the ownership upon them[41] through her[42] agency.[43] Samuel replied: [This applies also to the case] where he[43] made the distribution in her presence and she remained silent.[44] R. Jose b. Hanina replied: [This may also apply to the case] where he said to her,[45] 'Take this [piece of] land in place of your kethubah'.[46]

---

(1) Lit., 'how'.

(2) Who has assigned all his property as a gift to his wife.

(3) The ruling that the husband thereby appointed her only as administratix.

(4) His widow. Lit., 'that her word may be listened to.'

(5) And well able to safeguard her honour.

(6) Lit., 'from now.'

(7) Assigning it to her as a gift.

(8) Since all real estate of a husband is mortgaged for his wife's kethubah. The gift of usufruct is not regarded as an inducement for the wife to renounce her established rights.

(10) From the portion which was not assigned to her.

(11) Bearing a date later than that of the kethubah and earlier than that of the gift.

(12) Lit., 'and stand upon'.

(13) Since the gift was made later than the date of the bond of indebtedness, the creditor has the prior claim. The widow, therefore, renounces the gift, and claims her kethubah the date of which is earlier than that of the debt. She is entitled to do so according to R. Eliezer since he holds the view that she originally accepted the gift with the object of gaining any amount over and above her kethubah, but not to lose any of the rights to which that document entitled her.

(14) by accepting her husband's gift she is assumed, according to the Sages, to have renounced the rights of her kethubah as far as that property (which formed part of the gift) is concerned.

(15) Which, owing to the debt which antedated it, is invalid.

(17) The bridegroom gave her a kethubah on their betrothal, and, prior to his death, having incurred a debt, presented her with all his estate.

(18) Thus it has been proved that in the case of a person in good health the presentation by him of his entire estate to his wife confers upon her the full rights of possession and not merely those of an administratrix. Consequently (in answer to Raba's enquiry), Samuel's law must refer to the case of a dying man only.

(19) As to the objection that in such a case it has been said that the widow is merely appointed administratrix.

(20) Mentioned by him supra 131b, in all these, according to his report in the name of Raba, possession is acquired.

(21) In which two cases, according to Rabina's report also (supra 131b), possession is acquired. Hence, neither according to R. 'Awira nor according to Rabina can the law applying to the case of a person in good health be inferred.

(25) R. Nahman's decision that the widow forfeits her claim to the kethubah.

(26) Since the assumption must he that no woman would renounce the rights to which her kethubah entitles her for the sake of such a gift made to her by her husband.

(27) Lit., 'country of (i.e., beyond) the sea'.

(28) Lit., 'his son'.

(29) Lit., 'a gift'. Since it was made unconditionally.

(30) Lit., 'written them'.

(31) As R. Nahman upholds it. Simeon's decision, according to which it is assumed that 'had the father known that his son was alive he would not have made the gift', he most also agree with the view that an assumption is to be taken into consideration. How, then, (v. supra note 5), could R. Nahman say that the widow forfeited the rights of her kethubah?

(32) In the case of a widow who forfeits her kethubah on account if a gift she received from her husband.

(33) Lit., 'that a voice may issue about her'.

(35) The assumption, therefore, is that she willingly renounced her claims to the kethubah. R. Nahman, in his decision, consequently takes assumption into consideration here also.
(36) Pe'ah III, 7.
(37) Not specifying whether as a gift or in payment for her kethubah.
(38) I.e., the right to seize the land assigned to the sons; since, as will be explained, infra, she accepted the arrangement in return for the gift made to her.
(39) Surely, no woman would give up her kethubah in return for any small piece of land
(40) The husband.
(43) Lit., 'through her hand.' I.e., she acquired it on their behalf by means of a 'scarf', Kinyan Sudar (v. Glos. and cf. p. 310, n. 11, supra). Since she assisted in the transfer of the estate, received also a small share for herself and raised no protest whatsoever, it is taken for granted that she agreed to lose the amount of her kethubah, should her husband possess no other lands at the time of his death.
(44) Even though she did not assist in the transfer. Her presence alone, since she raised no protest and received also some share, is sufficient proof that she agreed to give up her claims as far as the lands distributed are concerned. If she, however, receives no share whatsoever, her silence is interpreted not as acquiescence but as designed to gratify her husband.
(45) When he gave her in writing that piece of land.
(46) According to R. Jose, even if she was absent from the distribution, her silence, when the gift was made to her, is sufficient evidence that she renounced her claims, upon the lands distributed.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 132b

And [the laws] taught here [are among those in which the claims relating to] a kethubah [are] weaker [than those of creditors].[1]

We learned: R. Jose said: If she accepted, [explicitly][2] although the husband did not put her [gift] in writing, she loses her kethubah.[3] [Does not] this is[4] imply that the first Tanna holds the opinion that both writing and her [explicit] acceptance are required?[5] And if it be suggested that the whole [Mishnah] represents [the view of] R. Jose,[6] surely, [it may be retorted,] it was taught: 'R. Judah said:[7] When [is it said that she lost her kethubah]? [Only] when she was there[8] and accepted [explicitly][9] but if she was there and did not accept,[10] or accepted and was not there, she did not lose her kethubah.' [This, surely, is] a refutation[11] of [the views of] all [the previous explanations]![12] It is a refutation.

Raba said to R. Nahman: Here is [the explanation] of Rab, here [that of] Samuel, [and] here [that of] R. Jose the son of R. Hanina; what is the opinion of the Master? — He replied to him: It is my opinion that since he made her partner with the sons,[13] she lost her kethubah.[14] [The same] was also said [elsewhere]: R. Jose b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman: Since he made her a partner with the sons she loses her kethubah.

Raba enquired: What[15] [is the law] in [the case of] a person in good health?[16] Shall we say that this[17] is only in [the case of] a dying man since she knows that he has no more property[18] and [therefore by her acceptance] renounces her claims, but in [the case of] a person in good health[16] [we do not assume that she renounces her claim since] she might expect that he would again acquire [property];[19] or, perhaps, [in the latter case also she is assumed to renounce her claims since] now, at least, he has none?[20] — Let it stand.[21]

[Once] a certain [dying] man said to [his executors]; — 'A half[22] [shall be given] to [one] daughter [of mine], a half to [the other] daughter, and a third of the fruit to [my] wife'. R. Nahman, [who] happened to be [at that time] at Sura was visited by R. Hisda [who] inquired of him [as to] what [was the legal position] in such a case.[23] — He replied to him: Thus said Samuel, 'Even if he allotted to her one palm-tree for its usufruct[24] her kethubah is lost,'[25] [R. Hisda] asked him [again], 'is it not possible[26] that Samuel held this view[27] [only] there, where he allotted to her [a share] in the land itself[28] [but not] here, [where] only fruit[29] [was allotted]? — [R. Nahman] replied to him: ' [Do] you speak of movable objects?[30] I certainly do not suggest [that the law quoted is to be applied to] moveables'.

[Once] a certain [dying] man said to [his executors], 'a third [of my estate shall be given] to [one] daughter [of mine], a third to [the other] daughter, and a third to [my] wife'.[31] [Then] one of his daughters died.[32] R. Papi intended to give his decision [that the wife] receives only a third;[33]

(1) A creditor cannot be deprived of his right to seize the debtor's lands even though he received from him a gift.

(2) The arrangement as to the distribution of her husband's property. This Mishnah is a continuation of that just cited and discussed.

(3) Pe'ah III, 7.

(4) R. Jose's expression, 'if she accepted although . . . did not put . . . in writing'.

(5) For, had writing alone sufficed to deprive her of her claim according to the first Tanna, R. Jose should have said as follows: 'Although he put it in writing, she does not lose her kethubah unless she explicitly accepted.' Hence it must be concluded that the first Tanna holds that both, writing and her explicit acceptance, are required. How then could Rab, Samuel and R. Jose the son of Hanina explain the Mishnah as dealing with the case where the woman merely remained silent?

(6) And, accordingly, the first part would teach that writing alone, and the second part that acceptance alone is sufficient.

(7) In explanation of the Mishnah of Pe'ah cited supra 132a.

(8) When the distribution took place.

(9) For had she not acquiesced in the arrangements she would surely have protested at being deprived of her due share.

(10) But remained silent.

(11) Since from R. Judah's interpretation it follows that the first Tanna is not R. Jose, and that he requires both writing and explicit acceptance.

(12) Lit., 'of all of them'. Those of Rab, Samuel and R. Jose the son of R. Hanina, according to whom the silence of the wife although there was no explicit acceptance on her part, is sufficient to deprive her of her kethubah.

(14) If she accepted explicitly (R. Gersh.). Either writing or explicit acceptance is enough (Rashb.).

(16) Who assigned his property, in writing, to his sons and allotted some fraction of land to his wife.

(17) The law that she forfeits her kethubah.

(18) And a dying man is certainly not likely to acquire any new possessions. Hence, her silence may be interpreted as consent.

(19) Her silence in such a case might be due to her consideration for the feelings of her husband whom she did not wish to annoy unnecessarily at the moment, thinking that there would be time to protest later if he does not acquire any new property. Hence, her claim upon the lands assigned to the sons cannot be regarded as renounced, and her kethubah, therefore, is not lost.

(20) And, had she not been reconciled to the idea of losing her claims upon the lands allotted to the sons, she would have protested immediately.

(23) Where the husband had assigned no land at all to his wife. The question is whether it is assumed that a woman renounces her claims only when she is given a share in the land itself but not when she only obtains a portion of fruit (as here), or whether there is no difference between land and fruit as regards the renouncement of her claims.

(24) I.e., only while it continues to be fruit-bearing.

(25) Her share of the fruit of the tree is regarded as a share in the land itself, since the tree draws its nourishment from the ground and is consequently regarded as real estate. The same law should apply to the case under consideration.

(26) Lit., 'Say'.

(27) Lit., ‘said’.

(28) The tree was planted in the ground and is regarded as real estate.

(29) I.e., detached from the ground.

(30) R. Nahman first understood the question to refer to fruit that was still growing on the trees.

(31) In consequence of this gift his wife forfeited her right to seize the other two thirds in payment of her kethubah.

(32) And her third reverted to her father who (in the absence of sons of her own) is heir to his daughter.

(33) Viz., that third which her husband had allotted to her. She cannot claim her kethubah, according to R. Papi, from the third that reverted to her husband from his dead daughter, because once she renounced her claim upon it (when one of the thirds was allotted to her) she cannot any more regain it.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 133a

R. Kahana, [however], said to him: If [her husband] had [subsequently] bought other property would she not [have been entitled to] seize [it]?[1] Now, since if he had bought other property she would [have been entitled to] seize [it],[1] in this case too she [is] also [entitled to] seize [the dead daughter's third].[2]

[Once] a certain [dying] man divided his estate between his wife and his son, [and] left over one palm-tree.[3] Rabina intended to give his decision [that] she[4] can only have[5] [that] one palm-tree.[6] R. Yemar, [however], said to Rabina: If she had no [claim upon the son's share], she [should] have no [claim] even [upon] the one palmtree.[7] But since she may seize[8] the palm-tree she may also seize[8] all the estate.[9]

R. Huna said, [if] a dying man assigned all his estate, in writing, to another [person][10] the matter is to be investigated.[11] If he[12] is entitled to be his heir, he receives it as an inheritance; and if not, he receives it as a gift. R. Nahman said to him: Why should you indulge in circumlocution![13] If you hold [the same view] as R. Johanan b. Beroka,[14] say, ‘The halachah is according to R. Johanan b. Beroka’, for, indeed, your statement runs on [the same lines] as [those of] R. Johanan b. Beroka? [But], perhaps, you meant [your statement to apply to a case] like the following.[15] Once, while a person was in a dying condition he was asked to whom his estate shall be given. ‘[Shall it] perhaps [be given] to X?’ he was asked. And he replied to them, ‘To whom [else] then?’ And [is it] on [such a case as] this [that] you told us, ‘[If that person] is entitled to be his heir he receives it as an inheritance, and if not, he receives it as a gift?’ — He replied to him: ‘Yes, this [is exactly] what I meant’.

In respect of what legal practice?[16] — R. Adda b. Ahabah wished to explain[17] before Raba [that] if he[18] is entitled to be his heir his[19] widow is maintained out of his estate,[20] and if not, his[19] widow is not maintained out of his estate.[20] Raba, however, said to him: Should she be worse off [in the case of a gift]? If[21] in [the case of] an inheritance which is Biblical,[22] it has been said [that] his[19] widow is to be maintained out of his estate,[23] how much more [should that be so] in [the case of] a gift[24] which is only Rabbinical?[25] But, said Raba, [the difference[26] lies in a case] like [the following] which [was] sent [by] R. Aha son of R. ‘Awya: According to the view of R. Johanan b. Beroka, [if a dying man said], ‘My estate [shall be] yours, and after you [it shall be given] to X’, if the first was [one] entitled to be his heir, the second has no [claim] whatsoever beside the first, for this is not a [specific] expression of ‘gift’ but [rather] of ‘inheritance’, and an inheritance cannot be terminated.[27] Raba said to R. Nahman: Surely, he[28] has [already] intercepted it![29] — He thought [erroneously] that it could be intercepted but the All-Merciful said, ‘It cannot be terminated’.[30]

(1) In payment of her kethubah. She only renounced her claim upon that property which her husband gave to his daughters at the time her share was assigned to her.

(2) Lit., ‘now’. The third that her husband inherited from his dead daughter is regarded as new property acquired by him after the assignments were made. (V. previous note).

(3) Which he assigned to no one.
(4) The widow.
(5) In payment of the balance of her kethubah.
(6) She has no claim, however, on the share which the son received. Since a wife is assumed to renounce her claims in the case where her husband assigned to others all his estate with the exception of any small fraction allotted to her, she must also be assumed to have renounced her claims in this case, where only one palm-tree was not disposed of, in consideration of the share allotted to her.
(7) Just as she renounced her claim upon the share of the son in consideration of the share allotted to her, so she must have renounced her claim upon the palm-tree. She well knew that besides her share, her husband had no property other than that palm-tree and the share assigned to the son. As she forfeits her rights in the case of the one, so she should forfeit them in the case of the other.
(8) Lit., 'go down'.
(9) Even the share that was given to the son. A wife is assumed to renounce the claims to which her kethubah entitles her only when her husband had disposed of all his estate, in which case she must have known that nothing was left for her kethubah and, since she did not protest, she must have acquiesced in its forfeiture. When, however, one palm-tree remains, she is assumed to rely on the proceeds of that tree for the payment of the kethubah. Consequently, she does not renounce her rights; and her silence is assumed to be due to a desire for postponing her protest until the value of the tree had been ascertained. When, therefore, it becomes known that the palm-tree does not cover the amount of her kethubah, she is entitled to seize any other part of the estate also.
(10) Not specifying whether as an 'inheritance' or as a 'gift'.
(11) Lit., 'we see'.
(12) The assignee.
(13) 'O thou cunning man, what is the use of thy going round about?' (Jast.).
(14) That one has a right to assign all his estate to one of his legal heirs, V. supra 130a.
(15) I.e., to a case when the testator had no sons or daughters, contrary to the opinion of R. Johanan b. Beroka who allows it even when there is a son or a daughter (R. Gersh.). According to Rashb., the suggestion of R. Nahman is that R. Huna wishes to state the case where the testator was vague in his instructions and did not declare whether the bequest was to be in the terms of a gift or those of an inheritance.
(16) Does it matter whether the estate was given as a gift or ass 'inheritance'?
(18) The person named.
(19) The testator's.
(20) Which he inherited from her husband.
(22) The laws of inheritance are enumerated in Numbers and Deuteronomy.
(23) V. p. 558, n. 11.
(24) Made by a dying man without a properly binding agreement.
(25) According to Biblical law a gift made in such a manner is not legally binding and remains part of the estate.
(26) Between 'gift' and 'inheritance'.
(27) V. p. 540, n. 10 and 11, supra. Similarly, in the case under discussion, if the dying man said, in reply to the question whether his estate shall be given to a certain person, 'To whom else? But after him it shall be given to a certain other person,' the second is entitled to receive it only if the first was not a legal heir and received it as a gift.
(28) The testator.
(29) By making the assignment of the estate to the first conditional upon its being transferred later to the second.
(30) Since the divine word prohibits interception of the succession no one has the right to make arrangements which disagree with it.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 133b

Once a certain man said to his friend, 'My estate [shall be] yours and after you [it shall pass over] to X'. The first [was one] entitled to be his heir.[1] [When] the first died, the second came to claim [the estate]. R. 'Ilish proposed in the presence of Raba to give his decision[2] that the second also is entitled to receive the bequest.[3] [Raba, however], said to him, 'Such decisions are given by arbitration judges,[4] [is] not [the case exactly] the same as [that] which [was] sent [by] R. Aha son of 'Awya?'[5] As he[6] became embarrassed, [Raba] applied to him the Scriptural text. I, the Lord, will hasten it in its time.[7]

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON GIVES HIS ESTATE, IN WRITING, TO STRANGERS, AND LEAVES OUT HIS CHILDREN, HIS ARRANGEMENTS ARE LEGALLY VALID,[8] BUT THE SPIRIT OF THE SAGES FINDS NO DELIGHT IN HIM.[9] R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: IF HIS CHILDREN DID NOT CONDUCT THEMSELVES IN A PROPER MANNER HE WILL BE REMEMBERED FOR GOOD.[10]

GEMARA. The question was raised whether the Rabbis[11] were in disagreement with [the view of] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel[12] or not. — Come and hear, Joseph b. Joezer,[13] had a son who did not conduct himself in a proper manner. He had a loft [full] of denarii[14] and he consecrated it [for the Temple]. He, [the son], went away and married the daughter of King Jannai's[15] wreath-maker. [On the occasion when] his wife gave birth to a son he bought for her a fish. Opening it he found therein a pearl. 'Do not take it to the king', she said to him, 'for they will take it away from you for a small sum of money.[16] Go take it rather[17] to the Treasurers [of the Temple], but do not you suggest its price, since the making of an offer to the Most High[18] is [as binding] as [actual] delivery in ordinary transactions.[19] But let them fix the price'. On being brought [to the Temple][20] it was valued at thirteen lofts of denarii.[21] 'Seven [of them]', they said to him, 'are available, [but the remaining] six are not available'.[22] He said to them, 'Give me the seven; and the six[23] are, [hereby]. consecrated to the Temple'.[24] Thereupon it was recorded,[25] 'Joseph b. Joezer brought in one, but his son brought to six others say, [the record read as follows]: 'Joseph b. Joezer brought in one, but his son took away seven'. Now, since the expression used [in the record[26] was], 'he[27] brought in', it may be inferred that [in their opinion] he[28] acted rightly.[29] On the contrary! Since the expression used[30] was, 'he took out', it may be inferred that he did not act rightly.[31] But [the fact is that] from this [record] nothing may be inferred.

What, then, is the answer to the enquiry?[32] — Come and hear: Samuel said to Rab Judah. 'Shinena'.[33] Keep away from[34] transfers[35] of inheritance even [if they be] from a bad son to a good son, much more [when they are] from a son to a daughter'.[36]

Our Rabbis taught: Once it happened with a certain person whose sons did not conduct themselves in a proper manner [that] he took the definite step of assigning his estate, in writing,[37] to Jonathan b. Uzziel. What did Jonathan b. Uzziel do? — He sold a third,[38] consecrated a third, and returned a third to his[39] sons. [Thereupon], Shammai came upon him with his staff and bag.[40] He[41] said to him, 'Shammai! If you can take back what I have sold and what I have consecrated, you can [also] take back what I have returned;[42]

(1) The testator's.

(2) Lit., 'to say'.

(3) Since the rights over the estate were given to the first during his lifetime only, they cease with his death.

(4) I.e., judges whose knowledge of the law is not extensive enough to enable them to give legal decisions, and they consequently have recourse to arbitration (Rashi. and R. Gersh.). 'Graveyard judges' (R. Han.).

(5) Since the first was entitled to be legal heir, the succession cannot be terminated.

(7) Isa. LX, 22, i.e., he need not worry too much about the slip he had made, since he was saved in time from giving effect to a wrong decision.

(8) Lit., 'what he has done is done'.

(9) Though his action is strictly legal, it is not human.

(10) His action will serve as a warning to wicked children.

(12) I.e., do they object to the disinheritance of bad children?
(13) [Identified by Weiss, Dor, I, 107, with Jose, the first of the Pairs (v. Aboth I, 5) who had been put to death by the renegade High-Priest Alcimus. Buchler, The Hebrew University, Jerusalem Inauguration, Hebrew part, 79, shows the untenability of this view, and suggests Jose b. Joezer, the Priest (v. Hag. II, 7) who lived in the days of Agrippa II.]
(14) I.e., a large sum of money.
(15) [Identified variously either with Jonathan, son of Mattathias, or Agrippa who appears elsewhere in the Talmud under this name. (V. Buchler, ibid.)]
(16) Lit., 'for light money'.
(17) Lit., 'go bring it.'
(18) I.e., Temple of God.
(19) Lit., 'to an ordinary person.' Once the seller made an offer in a Temple transaction, the price can no more be raised, however much the object may have been undervalued.
(20) Lit., 'he brought it'.
(22) I.e., the Treasury had no funds wherewith to pay the full amount of its value.
(23) The balance of the price.
(25) Lit., 'they stood and wrote'.
(26) According to the first version.
(27) The son.
(28) The father.
(29) 'Brought in', is all expression of approval, and it implies that the father's act was meritorious and resulted in the moral improvement of the son. Since, also, the wording if the record met with general approval, as evidenced by the statement 'they (1.e. all) stood and wrote', the Rabbis are obviously of the same opinion as R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(30) According to the second version of the record.
(31) 'Took out', is an expression of disapproval of the act of the son which reflects also on the action of the father. The fatherly act was, accordingly, regarded by the Rabbis with disfavour. (Cf. n. 10). Hence they must be in disagreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(32) Lit., 'what is about it'.
(33) שיננא (root שנן, 'sharp'); (i) 'keen witted', [(ii) 'long-toothed', denoting some facial characteristic; (iii) 'man of iron endurance' (Bacher).]
(34) Lit., 'be not among.'
(35) I.e., from one who is legally entitled to be heir.
(36) Since Samuel's opinion (being that of an Amora) must be in agreement with one at least of the Tannaim, and since his opinion is clearly in direct contradiction to that of R. Simeon h. Gamaliel, it is obvious that Samuel must have had as his authority the view of the Rabbis (the authors of the first part of our Mishnah). Thus it follows that the Rabbis are in disagreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel in maintaining, like Samuel, that even a bad son must not he disinherited.
(37) Lit., 'he stood and wrote his estate'.
(38) The proceeds of which he retained for himself.
(40) I.e., he objected vehemently to his return of the one third to the sons, maintaining that, though he did not say it explicitly, the deceased gave his estate to Jonathan for the express purpose of depriving his sons from any share in it; and since it was the duty of Jonathan to carry out the dead man's wishes, his gift of one third to the sons is invalid, and must be taken from them.
(42) To the sons.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 134a

if not, neither can you take back what I have returned'.[1] He exclaimed: 'The son of Uzziel has confounded[2] me, the son of Uzziel has confounded me!'[3]

Why did he first hold [a different opinion]? — On account of the incident at Beth Horon.[4] For we learnt: Once it happened at Beth Horon with a person whose father was forbidden, by a vow, to derive any benefit from him. Celebrating the marriage of his [own] son, he said to his friend, 'The court and the banquet are presented to you as a gift, but they are at your disposal only with the object that [my] father comes and dines with us at the banquet'. [The other] said to him, 'If they are mine, behold, they are consecrated to the Temple'.[5] The first said to him, 'I did not give you my possessions that you shall consecrate them to the Temple!' 'You gave me yours', said the other, 'only [with the object] that you and your father might eat and drink and be reconciled to one an other while the sin[6] will fall upon my head![7] [Thereupon][8] , the Sages said: Any gift which is not [of such a character] as would [allow it to] become sacred when [the recipient] consecrated it, is not a [proper] gift.[9]

Our Rabbis taught:[10] Hillel the Elder had eighty disciples. Thirty of them deserved that the divine presence shall rest upon them as [upon] Moses our teacher. Thirty of them deserved that the sun shall stand [still] for them as [for] Joshua the son of Nun.[11] Twenty were of an average character. The greatest of them[12] was Jonathan b. Uzziel; the least of them was R. Johanan b. Zakkai.

It was said of R. Johanan b. Zakkai that his studies included[13] the Scriptures, the Mishnah, the Gemara,[14] the Halachoth[15] , the Aggadoth;[16] the subtle points of the Torah and the minutiae of the Scribes; the inferences from minor to major and the [verbal] analogies; astronomy and geometry;[17] washer's proverbs[18] and fox fables; the language of the demons, the whisper of the palms, the language of the ministering angels and the great matter and the small matter. The 'great matter' is the manifestation of the [divine] chariot[19] and the small matter is the arguments of Abaye and Raba.[20] Thereby is fulfilled the Scriptural text, That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance and that I may fill their treasuries.[21] Now, if the least among them [was] so, how great must have been the greatest among them! It was related of Jonathan b. Uzziel [that] when he sat and studied the Torah, every bird that flew over him was burned.

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON STATES, 'THIS IS MY SON', HE IS BELIEVED. [IF, HOWEVER, HE STATES], 'THIS IS MY BROTHER', HE IS NOT BELIEVED,[22] BUT HE[23] RECEIVES [A SHARE] WITH HIM IN HIS PORTION.[24] [IF] HE[23] DIES, THE PROPERTY[25] REVERTS TO ITS OWNER.[26] [IF, HOWEVER,] HE ACQUIRED PROPERTY FROM OTHER SOURCES,[27] HIS BROTHERS SHARE THE INHERITANCE WITH HIM.[28]

GEMARA. 'THIS IS MY SON', HE IS BELIEVED; in [respect of] what legal practice? — Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: As regards the right of heirship[29] , and the exemption of his wife from levirate marriage[30] .

(1) If the sale and the consecration are valid it follows that the estate has passed into the absolute ownership of Jonathan. Consequently he is entitled to dispose of it in any way he pleases. Hence his gift to the sons of the deceased is also legally valid.

(2) Lit., 'cast mud'.

(3) Tacitly admitting defeat.

(5) Lit., 'heaven'.

(6) For the breach of the vow; since the presentation of the court and banquet was mere sham.

(7) As one guilty of aiding and abetting.

(9) From this it follows that a gift which is dependent on certain conditions is not legally valid. Shammai, drawing an analogy between this case and that of Jonathan, where the father was manifestly determined that his sons shall have no benefit from his estate, disputed the legality of the return of the third to the sons. Though the father's condition was not explicit it was sufficiently implicit, in the opinion of Shammai, to render the gift to Jonathan entirely dependent on its fulfilment. Jonathan by his reply pointed out to Shammai that the gift to him could not possibly he regarded as conditional, since it was generally conceded that he was fully entitled to sell it and to consecrate it and to dispose of it in any way he liked. [For a different version of the story, v. J. Nedarim, v. 6].

(11) V., Josh. X, 12-13.

(13) Lit., 'he did not leave'.

(14) The interpretation and elucidation of the Mishnah.

(15) הלכות plur. of Halachah, הלכה

(16) אגדות plur. of Aggada, אגדה

(18) [The washer is a well known figure in Roman comedy, v. Krauss, TA, I, 520, note 325.]

(19) מעשה מרכבה the esoteric lore concerning the divine chariot described in Ezek. I.

(20) Whose keen discussions and arguments occupy a considerable portion of the present Gemara. [For a discussion of the various branches of study mentioned in this passage, v. Blau, Sauberwesen, 46f.]

(22) If the other brothers dispute his statement.

(24) In the case of two brothers, A and B, for example, one of whom (A) does not, and the other (B) does acknowledge a third person (C) as a brother, the estate is divided into three portions, and each one of the two brothers (A and B) receives one and a half of these portions (half the estate). The second (B), however, retains only one portion (a third of the estate) to which he is in any case entitled, giving to the doubtful brother (C) the half of the third portion. Should C ever be able to establish his brotherhood, he would also be entitled to receive from A the other half of the third portion.

(25) The half of the third portion which B (v. previous note) has given him.

(26) Lit., 'their place'. I.e., to B from whom he received it. The other brother (A), who previously disowned, and denied C the second half of the third portion, is not entitled to claim any portion at all of that which was allowed him by B. Even if C were his real brother from whom he is entitled to inherit, A has no claim now, since he already received his share of C's estate by his retaining the half of the third portion.

(27) Lit., 'property fell to him from another place', either as an inheritance or as a gift or purchase.

(28) With B, since he had acknowledged them as brothers of C.

(29) Lit., 'to inherit him'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 134b

As regards the right of heirship! Is it not obvious [that a father is believed]?[1] — [The statement] was required in respect of the exemption of his wife from levirate marriage. Surely, this also has been taught [elsewhere]:[2] 'A person who declared at the time of his death, 'I have sons', is believed.[3] [If he declared], 'I have a brother', he is not believed'![4] — There, [the law refers to the case] where it was not known [that he had] a brother,[5] [but] here [it refers] even [to a case] where it is known[6] that he had a brother.[7]

R. Joseph said in the name of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: Why has it been stated [that if a person said], 'This is my son', he is believed?[8] — Because a husband who said, 'I divorced my wife', is believed.[9] 'God of Abraham', exclaimed R. Joseph.[10] 'could he[11] have proved[12] that which we have learnt from that which we have not learnt?[13] If, however, that statement was made, it must have been in the following terms;[14] Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Why has it been stated [that if a person said]. 'This is my son', he is believed? — Because it is in his power to divorce her'.[15] 'Now that you have accepted the principle of[16] Because',[17] continued[18] R. Joseph, 'a husband is believed if he stated "I divorced my wife", because it is in his power to divorce her'.

When R. Isaac b. Joseph came,[19] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A husband who said, 'I divorced my wife', is not believed. R. Shesheth blew upon his hand[20] [exclaiming]. 'R. Joseph's "because'[21] has gone'.[22] [But] it is not [so]![23] For, surely, R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Johanan: A husband who stated, 'I divorced my wife', is believed![24] There is no difficulty: One[25] [speaks] retrospectively;[26] the other,[27] of the future.[28]

The question was raised: [Is a husband who] testified retrospectively[29] believed as regards the future?[30] Do we divide [his] statement[31] or do we not divide it?[32] — R. Mari and R. Zebid [are in dispute on the matter]. One said, 'we do divide', and the other said, 'we do not divide [it]'. Wherein [is this] different from [the law] of Raba? For Raba said: [If a husband testifies,] 'X had intimate intercourse with my wife', he and [one] other [witness] may combine to procure his death;[33] his death, but not her death![34] — In [the case of] two individuals[35] we [may] divide [a statement]; in [the case of] one individual[36] [it is possible that we may] not divide.

(1) For, were he not his real son there was no need for the father falsely to declare him as an heir. He could have assigned the estate to him as a gift.

(3) And his wife is exempt from levirate marriage.

(4) V. infra n. 6. Why, then, should the same law be repeated in our Mishnah?

(5) Or sons; and the question of halizah (V., Glos.) could only arise through his own statement. Hence, he is believed only in so far as he does not impair the freedom of the widow.

(6) There is a general belief, but not reliable evidence.

(7) Our Mishnah teaches that, even in such a case, where owing to general belief the widow might be assumed to be subject to the laws of levirate marriage, the husband's statement that he has sons exempts her from the levirate marriage (V. infra). The second clause, according to which the statement, 'This is my brother' is not accepted, does not deal with the question of levirate, but with that of inheritance; v. Mishnah and notes a.l.

(8) And his widow is, accordingly, exempt from the Ievirate marriage.

(9) If his statement, then, were not true, and motivated only by a desire to liberate his wife from the levirate marriage, or halizah, he could have stated that he divorced her, and would thus have achieved the Same object.

(10) R. Joseph, as a result of serious illness, forgot his studies and many of his own statements (v. Ned. 41a). He was here wondering how he could possibly have made such a statement in the name of his masters.

(13) The law of the reliability of a father's statement in respect of a son has been taught in the Mishnah, while that in respect of the divorce of a wife does not occur either in a Mishnah or a Baraitha.

(14) Lit., 'but if it were said, it was said thus'.

(15) Since he could divorce her there and then and then liberate her from the levirate marriage, and halizah, he is also believed when he states, 'this is my son'. (Cf. p. 565, n. 10).

(16) Lit., 'that you said, we say'.

(17) 'Because it is in his power etc., i.e., the principle that a person is believed regarding what he said, because it is in any case in his power to achieve his object.

(18) Lit., 'said'.

(19) From Palestine to Babylon.

(20) As though blowing away some imaginary fluff.

(22) Since R. Johanan's view is definitely opposed to it'

(24) This confirms the view of R. Joseph. It reveals, however, a contradiction between the two statements if R. Johanan

(26) I.e., if the husband states that his wife was divorced prior to the date of his statement, he is not believed since he cannot now divorce her retrospectively, and she is regarded as a married woman at least up to that date, v. infra.

(28) If the husband states 'I divorced my wife', whether he specifies, 'now', or not, he is believed, since he can divorce her there and then; and the woman is regarded as divorced from that day onwards.

(29) Declaring that the divorce took place prior to the date of his statement.

(30) Is the woman regarded as divorced from that day onwards.

(31) I.e., though he is not believed as regards the time that had passed, is his word nevertheless relied upon as regards the future? (V. previous note).

(32) Since part of the statement (that relating to the past), is not relied upon, is the entire statement disregarded?

(33) Lit., 'to kill him'.

(34) Because a husband is not qualified to act as witness against his wife. Thus it follows that the evidence is divided; the part relating to the wife being disqualified, that relating to her seducer being accepted as valid.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 135a

[Once] a certain [man] was dying.[1] Being asked to whom his wife [was permitted to be married[2] and] he replied to them, 'She is suitable for the High Priest',[3] [in considering this case], Raba said: What is there to apprehend?[4] Surely R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan [that] a husband who said, 'I divorced my wife' is believed.[5] Abaye said to him: But, surely, when R. Isaac b. Joseph came, he said in the name of R. Johanan [that] a husband, who said, 'I divorced my wife', is not believed! — He said to him: Is he not? Surely it has been explained that one[6] [report speaks] retrospectively and the other[6] as to the future! Shall we then,[7] [came the reply], rely upon an explanation?![8] [Thereupon] said Raba to R. Nathan b. Ammi: Take this into consideration.[9]

A certain [person] was known[10] to have no brothers,[11] and at the time of his death he declared that he had no brothers, [in considering the case.] R. Joseph said: What is there here[12] to apprehend? In the first place[13] it is known that he has no brothers, and secondly[14] he [himself] has declared at the time of his death that he had none. Abaye said to him: But [people] say that in the countries beyond the sea[15] there are witnesses who know that he has brothers! — 'Now, at any rate [replied the other, 'they are not before us'.[16] [Is] not [this case] the same as that of R. Hanina? For R. Hanina said: Shall she[17] be forbidden [because there are] witnesses at the North Pole!'[18] Abaye said to him: Shall we relax [the law] in [the case of] a married woman[19] because[20] we relaxed [it] in [the case of] a captive woman?[21] [Thereupon] said Raba to R. Nathan b. Animi: Take this into consideration.[22]

THIS IS MY BROTHER', HE IS NOT BELIEVED. And what do the other [brothers] say? If they say. 'He is our brother', why should he [only] take [a share] with him[23] in his portion and no more?[24] [If], however, they say, 'He is not our brother', [how will you] explain the latter [clause]: [IF, HOWEVER,] HE ACQUIRED PROPERTY FROM ANOTHER SOURCE, HIS BROTHERS SHARE THE INHERITANCE WITH HIM. [Why should they inherit?] Surely they had declared of him, 'He is not our brother'! — [This law is] required [in the case] only where they say, 'We do not know'.[25]

Raba said: This implies [that if a person claims from another], 'You owe me a maneh' and the other replies. 'I do not know, he[26] is exempt.[27] Said Abaye:

(1) Who had brothers but no sons.

(2) I.e., whether she was subject to the laws of levirate marriage.

(3) I.e., 'she may marry anyone' having been divorced by him. 'High Priest' is thus not to be taken literally, since even a priest is forbidden by law to marry a divorced woman (v. Rashb. and Tosaf.) [Yad Ramah, a.l., explains that the marriage had not been consummated and the husband claimed the annulment thereof because it had been contracted on a certain condition which was not fulfilled, in these circumstances the woman might be allowed to marry even a High Priest.]

(4) If she is exempted from the levirate marriage.
(5) For the reason stated supra. Similarly, here, since he said that she may marry anyone, i.e., that he had divorced her (or, owing to the non-fulfilment of the condition on which the marriage was contracted), he is believed.
(7) Lit., 'shall we rise'.
(8) It is still possible, despite the explanation, that the matter is in dispute between Amoraim, and that according to one opinion the husband's evidence in such a case is not accepted at all.
(9) I.e., the widow must not marry without obtaining halizah (v. Glos.)
(10) But there was no legal evidence.
(11) It was certain, however, that he had no children.
(12) In allowing the widow to marry.
(14) Lit., 'and again, surely'.
(15) Lit., 'country of the sea'.
(16) And one need not go to the ends of the earth to discover witnesses in order to restrict the widows freedom.
(17) The incident related to the daughters of Samuel, who were in captivity; and when brought to Palestine, declared that their honour was not violated. R. Hanina allowed them to be married to priests, who are forbidden to marry a woman whose chastity had been violated.
(18) Goldschmidt. Heb., istan, אסתן 'the north wind'. Cf. Assyr. is-ta-na-ni (= north), C. J. Gadd, Tablets from Kirkuk in Revue d'Assyriologie, vol. XXIII, no. 34, line 12, and il-ta-an (= north) op. cit., no. 2, line 6, and passim.
(19) Lit., 'wife of a man', where the assumption is that she is subject to the laws of the levirate marriage.
(20) Lit., 'if'.
(21) In this case the captive is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, since there is the assumption that she as a woman protected her chastity and honour.
(22) I.e., do not allow her to marry before complying with the laws of halizah.
(23) With the brother who acknowledged him.
(24) He should receive all equal share with all the brothers.
(25) He cannot claim a share in their portions since he has no legal proof of the brotherhood. They, however, are entitled to be his heirs since both he and the brother who acknowledged him admitted that they were brothers.
(27) He need not pay the claim. It is incumbent upon the claimant to produce the proof; v, B.K. 118a; B.M. 97b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 135b

It may still be maintained [that he is] liable,[1] but here [the case is] different[2] , for it resembles [the case where one states]. 'You owe a maneh to another [person]'.[3]

IF HE DIES THE PROPERTY REVERTS TO ITS OWNER [etc.][4] Raba inquired: What [is the law in respect of] the natural appreciation of the estate? As regards appreciation which reaches the carriers[5] there is no question at all,[6] since this resembles PROPERTY ACQUIRED FROM OTHER SOURCES.[7] The question, however, arises [as to] what [is the law] in [the case of] appreciation which does not reach the carriers as, for example, [where he[8] gave him] a palm-tree and it grew stronger [or a plot of] land and it yielded alluvial soil.[9] This remains undecided.

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON DIED AND A WILL[10] WAS FOUND TIED TO HIS THIGH,[11] IT IS OF NO LEGAL VALUE.[12] IF THEREBY[13] HE[14] MADE AN ASSIGNMENT[15] TO SOMEONE,[16] WHETHER [THIS PERSON IS ONE] OF THE HEIRS OR NOT, HIS[17] INSTRUCTIONS ARE LEGALLY VALID.[18]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: What is a deyathiki?[19] — Any [deed] in which is written, 'This is to stand and to be'.[20] And which is a [legal] gift?[21] — Any [deed] in which is written, '[Acquire the gift][22] from this day, and[23] after my death'. But, [accordingly], a gift would be [legal only when it is written] ‘from this day, and after my death’,[24] [if. however, it were written].’from now[25] the gift would not be [legal]?[26] — Abaye replied: [It is] this that was meant: ‘Which is the gift of a person in good health that is [regarded] as the gift of a dying man in that no possession [of its fruit] is acquired until[27] after death? — Any [deed] in which it is written, "from this day and after my death".’

Rabbah, son of R. Huna sat in the hall,[28] of the school-house,[29] and reported [the following statement] in the name of R. Johanan: [If] a dying man said, ‘Write [the deed] and deliver a maneh to X’, and he died,[30] they [must] neither write not deliver, since it is possible[31] that he has determined to give him the right of ownership by means of the deed only, and no deed [may be the means of acquiring possession] after [the testator's] death. R. Eleazar said to them, ‘Be careful about this’.[32] R. Shezbi said [that] R. Eleazar had reported it, and [that] R. Johanan said to them, ‘Be careful about this’. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: Logical reasoning favours the opinion of R. Shezbi. [For] if it be said that R. Eleazar had reported it, it was quite right [for] R. Johanan to corroborate his statement;[33] if, however, it be said [that] R. Johanan had said it, [was] it necessary [for] R. Eleazar to corroborate the view of R. Johanan his master? And, furthermore, come and hear [the following which proves] that R. Eleazar had recited it. For Rabin sent in the name of R. Abbahu: Be [it] known to you that R. Eleazar has sent [word] to [those in] the diaspora[34] in the name of our Master[35] [that] if a dying man said, ‘Write and deliver a maneh to X’, and he died, they must neither write nor deliver, since it is possible that he has determined to give him the right of ownership by means of the deed only, and no deed [may serve as a means of acquiring possession] after [the testator's] death. And R. Johanan said,[36] ‘[The matter][37] shall be investigated’. What is meant by, ‘it shall be investigated’? — When R. Dimi came he[38] said: [i]. [One] will annuls [another] will.[39] [ii], [If] a dying man said, ‘Write [a deed] and give a maneh to X’ and he died, [his motive] is inquired into.[40] If [it was] to strengthen his claim,[41] [the deed] is written; but if not,[42] it is not written.[43]

R. Abba b. Memel raised an objection: [It was taught,] ‘If a person in good health said, "Write [a deed] and deliver a maneh to X", and he died, they must neither write nor deliver.’ But, [it follows,[44] in the case of] a dying man, they may both write and deliver![45] — He raised the objection and he himself explained it: [This refers to the case] where [the testator desired] to strengthen his[46] claim. How is one to understand [whether a testator desired] to strengthen [the beneficiary's] claim?

(1) Since the one party is certain of its claim while the other is doubtful.

(2) The doubtful brother does not himself advance a certain claim, but one of his brothers does that for him, so that as far as he is concerned his claim is as doubtful as that of the other brothers.

(3) One of the brothers claims that the others owe a share to the brother whose claim is disputed.

(5) I.e., fruit, which is carried in baskets. If the land given to him by the brother who acknowledged him was fallow and he improved it so that it produced quantities of fruit. Heb., כתפים ‘carriers’, with the Lamed of the dative. R. Tam reads ktayfayim ‘shoulders’, with the Lamed of the instrument; i.e., appreciation due to hard and strenuous work (v., supra 42b, Tosaf. s.v., שבח.) Cf. ‘putting the shoulder to the wheel’, a barren track was turned into a fruit-producing field.

(6) That all the brothers are entitled to have shares in it.

(7) Which, according to our Mishnah, is shared by all the brothers.

(8) The brother who acknowledged him.

(9) And similar cases where there is no appreciation that can be carried away, or that had been brought about by human effort, in such cases there might apply the law that ‘the property reverts to its owner,’ that is, the brother who had given it to him.

(10) Heb. deyathiki, דייתיקי ,Gr. ** .

(11) I,e., even on his thigh, in which case it is obvious that the deceased himself had written it,

(12) Lit., ‘this is nothing’. The person to whom a bequest was made in this will is not entitled to receive it; since possession is to be acquired by means of the receipt of the will, and since, at the time it reaches him, the owner, being dead, is not there to transfer to him the right of ownership.

(13) I,e., by the handing over of the will,
(15) While he was still alive.
(16) Lit., ‘to another’. I,e., if when handing over the will to the assignee he said that thereby he desired to confer upon him the ownership of the bequest mentioned in it.
(17) The testator's.
(18) Even if the assignee is not the testator's legal heir, and even though his name is not mentioned in the will, he receives all that is enumerated in it. The verbal instructions of a dying person are legally binding.
(19) V. note I. The question is, which kind of will entitles one to acquire ownership of an estate after the death of the testator, in the case where ‘immediate’ acquisition is not provided for?
(20) I.e., after death. Aram.’ Do T'hey lmaykam wlhiyot’ a play upon the word דייתיקי .
(21) Of a person in good health.
(22) I.e., the property itself,
(24) I.e., where ‘after my death’ was explicitly added to ‘from this day’.
(25) Without the addition of ‘after my death’.
(26) How is this possible? Surely, the expression, ‘from now, without any additions, rather implies that both land and produce are given to the recipient at once.
(28) Gr. ** .
(29) Taking רב as meaning, ‘teacher’, v. supra 11b.
(30) Before his instructions were carried out.
(32) I.e., this is the accepted law,
(33) It would be quite natural and necessary for the master (R. Johanan) to corroborate the view of his disciple (R. Eleazar).
(34) [Heb. גולה denoting generally Nehardea, the earliest and most important centre of Babylonian Judaism; after its destruction in 259 by Odenathus its place was taken by Pumbeditha, which then became also known as Golah (v. R.H. 23a and Lewin, Methiboth I).]
(35) Rab, or Abba Arika,
(36) in amplification of the previous statement.
(37) Whether the testator wished the beneficiary to acquire possession by means of the receipt of the deed only.
(38) From Palestine. (12) He made two statements, the second of which explains the method of the investigation.
(39) A dying man who bequeathed his estate in his will to one person can cancel this by making a second will in favour of another person.
(40) Lit., ‘(they) see’.
(41) That the beneficiary shall have documentary proof of the gift.
(42) If the object of the deed was to make acquisition of the gift dependent upon the receipt of the deed by the beneficiary.
(43) For it is possible that the testator had since changed his mind.
(44) Since a person ‘in good health’ had been mentioned.
(45) Because a dying man's instructions must be scrupulously adhered to. How, then, could it be said above that his motive must be inquired into first?

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 136a

— As R. Hisda said:[1] [This is a case where the witnesses record,] ‘And we have acquired [legal possession] of him,[2] in addition to [the presentation of] this gift.[3] [so] here also [the testator's motive may be known] when he declared, ‘Also write, and sign, and deliver to him.’[4]

It was stated: Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The halachah is that [the deed of a gift] is written and delivered.[5] And Raba in the name of R. Nahman said likewise: The halachah is that [the deed] is written and delivered.[5]

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON [DESIRES] TO GIVE HIS ESTATE IN WRITING TO HIS SONS,[6] HE MUST WRITE, '[THIS ESTATE IS ASSIGNED][7] FROM THIS DAY AND[8] AFTER [MY] DEATH';[9] THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. JOSE SAID: THIS[10] IS NOT NECESSARY.[11] IF A PERSON ASSIGNED HIS ESTATE, IN WRITING, TO HIS SON[12] [TO BE HIS][13] AFTER HIS[14] DEATH, THE FATHER MAY NOT SELL [IT][15] BECAUSE IT IS ASSIGNED IN WRITING TO THE SON, AND THE SON MAY NOT SELL [IT] BECAUSE IT IS IN THE POSSESSION OF THE FATHER. IF THE FATHER SOLD [THE ESTATE]. THE SALE IS VALID UNTIL HIS DEATH.[16] IF THE SON SOLD [IT], THE BUYER HAS NO CLAIM WHATSOEVER UPON IT UNTIL THE FATHER'S DEATH.

GEMARA. [Of] what [avail] is it that he wrote, 'FROM THIS DAY, AND AFTER [MY] DEATH'? Surely we learnt, [if one inserts in a divorce]. 'from this day, and after [my] death', the divorce is valid and invalid;[17] and if he dies she is subject to the law of halizah[18] but not to that of the levirate marriage![19] — There[20] it is doubtful whether it[21] is a condition[22] or a retraction.[23] Here, however, [it is obvious that] he meant to say this to him.[24] 'Acquire the land itself[25] today; the fruit after [my] death'.[26]

R. JOSE SAID: THIS IS NOT NECESSARY. Rabbah b. Abbuha was indisposed [and] R. Huna and R. Nahman came in [to see him]. 'Ask him', said R. Huna to R. Nahman,[27] '[is] the halachah in accordance with [the view of] R. Jose or [is] the halachah not in accordance with [the view of] R. Jose?' — 'I do not [even] know R. Jose's reason, replied the other, '[shall] I ask him[28] [about] the halachah?' 'You inquire of him,' said [R. Huna] 'whether the halachah [is according to R. Jose] or not; and as to his reason I will tell you [it later].' [Thereupon, R. Nahman] inquired of [Rabbah], who replied to him, 'Thus said Rab: The halachah [is] in accordance with [the view of] R. Jose'. When[29] they came out, [R. Huna] said to him.[30] 'This is R. Jose's reason: He is of the opinion that the date of the deed proves its import,'[31] Thus it was also taught [elsewhere]: R. Jose said, 'This is not necessary, because the date of the deed proves its import.'

Raba inquired of R. Nahman: What [is the law] in [the case of a deed of transfer?[31] — He said to him: in [the case of] a deed of transfer this[32] is not required. R. Papi said: There are deeds of transfer where [this[32] is] required, and there are deeds of transfer where [this is] not required. [If the deed reads]. 'He conferred upon him[33] possession', [concluding with], 'and we[34] acquired it from him',[35] there is no need [for this].[36] [If, however, it reads], 'We acquired it from him' [concluding with], 'he gave him possession', this[37] is required.[38] R. Hanina of Sura demurred: Is there anything we do not know and the scribes would know?[39] The scribes of Abaye were asked and they knew;[40] the scribes of Raba, and they knew.[40]

R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said, whether [the order was]. 'He conferred upon him possession . . . and we acquired it of him', or, 'We acquired it of him . . . and he conferred upon him possession the insertion of 'from this day] is not required;[41] and their dispute[42] [has reference only to the case] where [the deed reads], 'a memorandum of the transaction that took place in our presence'.[43]

R. Kahana said: I mentioned the reported statements in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, and he told me: You read thus,[44] [but] we have the following version: Raba said[45] in the name of R. Nahman, 'In [the case of] a deed of transfer this[46] is not required whether [the formula was], 'He conferred upon him possession . . . and we acquired it of him' or, 'We acquired it of him . . . and he gave him possession'; their dispute [has reference only to the case] where [the formula is], 'a memorandum of the transaction that took place in our presence'.

IF A PERSON ASSIGNED HIS ESTATE, IN WRITING TO HIS [TO BE HIS] AFTER HIS DEATH. It was stated: If the son sold [the estate][47] during the lifetime of his father, and died while his father was still alive,

(2) I.e., they had executed the legal formality of conveyance by means of a kinyan (v. Glos.) between the testator and the recipient.

(3) V. infra 152b.

(4) in which case the testator clearly indicated that the gift was independent of the written deed, the purpose of which was only to strengthen the beneficiary's claims.

(5) After the testator's death; if it was ascertained (as R. Johanan stated, supra) that the purpose of the deed was to strengthen the beneficiary's claim.

(6) I.e., a person in good health who desires, for example, to marry a second time, and wishes to protect the sons that were born from his first marriage from the possible seizure of his estate by his second wife, in payment of her kethubah.

(7) I.e., the land itself.

(8) The produce thereof also.

(9) If, 'from this day', is not specified, the gift is invalid, since a person cannot give possession after his death.

(10) The addition, 'from this day'.

(12) Inserting the formula, 'from this day and after my death'. The law that follows applies to a gift made to any other person.

(15) The land and its produce.

(16) Lit., 'sold until he dies', Until then only, may the buyer have its usufruct.

(17) Lit., 'a divorce and it is not a divorce'. It is not certain whether by the first part of the expression he meant the divorce to be effective at once, in which case it is valid; or whether by the second part of the expression he withdrew the first, and desired the divorce to become effective after his death, in which case (since one cannot divorce after death) it is invalid.

(18) V. Glos. Since it is possible that the divorce was invalid and she is therefore the widow of a husband who died without issue.

(19) Since it is also possible that the divorce was valid, and a divorced woman may not be married by the brother of her former husband. Similarly, in the case of the will, the same doubt exists, why, then was it said that possession was definitely acquired?

(20) In the case of the divorce.

(21) The addition, 'and after death'.

(22) I.e., that when he dies the divorce shall be considered as having taken effect from now; and since the condition has been fulfilled, the divorce is valid.

(23) Asserting that the divorce was not to take effect from that day onwards, as the first part of the expression implied, but only after his death; and since one cannot give a divorce after death, the document is invalid.

(24) To the son.

(25) Lit., 'the body', i.e., the principal. capital, actual estate.

(26) In the case of a divorce, such a division in the meaning of the two parts of the expression is, of course, impossible.

(27) [R. Nahman was Rabbah b. Abbuha's son-in-law.]

(30) R. Nahman.

(31) That the presentation of the gift is to begin on that day (though the expression 'from that day' was not inserted). Had it been intended to postpone the presentation till after death, there would have been no point in recording the date of the deed. (12) הקנאה 'giving', or 'transferring possession' of the gift, i.e., when it is recorded in the deed that the legal formality of conveyance, the kinyan, had been executed as between the testator and the recipient, which virtually places the gift in the possession of the recipient. Does R. Judah in such a case also require the specific insertion, 'from this day'?

(32) The insertion, 'from this day'?
(33) The donee.
(35) From the testator, by symbolic acquisition.
(36) For the insertion of 'from this day'. Since two distinct kinds of transfer of possession have been mentioned, (1) he conferred possession and (2) we acquired etc., the claim of the donee is thereby strengthened and he acquires ownership of the gift even though, 'from this day' has not been recorded.
(37) The addition of 'from this day'.
(38) Since the second part of the expression may be taken as an interpretation of the first. Thus: 'We acquired possession etc.' because 'he gave him possession'. Consequently, the two parts imply only one transfer of possession which, unless 'from this day' is inserted, cannot be effective or valid. (Rashb.)
(39) If most scholars do not know the difference between the one and the other formula, would the scribes be able to tell what this one or the other implied?
(40) The difference in the meaning and purport of the two formulae.
(41) In agreement with R. Nahman.
(42) Of R. Judah and R. Jose as to whether the insertion, 'from this day', is required.
(43) I.e., when the deed is not one recording a transfer of possession through the witnesses; but a memorandum of the transactions at which the witnesses were present. R. Jose holding that even in such a case the date of the memorandum proves its import.
(45) I.e., a statement of fact, not an inquiry.
(47) Assigned to him by his father for possession after his death.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 136b

R. Johanan said: The buyer does not acquire ownership;[1] and Resh Lakish said: The buyer does acquire ownership.[2] R. Johanan said [that] the buyer did not acquire ownership, [because] possession of usufruct is like the possession of the capital;[3] and Resh Lakish said [that] the buyer did acquire ownership [because] possession of usufruct is not like the possession of the capital.[4]

But, surely, on this [principle][5] they have once disputed![6] For it was stated: If a person sells the usufruct of his field,[7] R. Johanan said, [the buyer] must bring [the bikkurim][8] and recite [the declaration];[9] and Resh Lakish said, he must bring but does not recite. R. Johanan said [that] he must bring and recite because he holds the opinion that possession of usufruct is like the possession of the capital.[10] and Resh Lakish said [that] he must bring but not recite [because in his opinion] the possession of usufruct is not like the possession of the capital![6] — R. Johanan [can] answer you: Although possession of usufruct is, generally, like the possession of the capital [itself], it was necessary [to re-state the principle] here; since it might have been supposed [that] a father would renounce his claims in favour of his son;[11] so he taught us [that this is not so]. And R. Simeon b. Lakish [can] answer you: Although possession of usufruct is, generally, not like the possession of the capital [itself], it was necessary [to re-state the principle] here; since it might have been supposed [that] whenever [it is a matter] of self-interest a man considers himself first even where there is a son;[12] so he taught us [that this is not so].

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: [If a person said]. 'I give my estate to you; and after you, X shall be [my] heir; and after X, Y shall be my heir', [when the] first dies, the second acquires the ownership; when the second dies the third acquires ownership. [If] the second dies in the lifetime of the first the estate reverts to the heirs of the first.[13] Now, if it were [so],[14] it should [revert] to the heirs of the [original] owner?[15] — He replied to him: Rab. Hoshaia in Babylon[16] has already explained this: It is different [when the expression], 'after you', [was used].[17] Rabbah son of

R. Huna pointed out the same incongruity in the presence of Rab, who [likewise] replied: It is different [when one used the expression] ‘after you’.

But, surely, it was taught.[18] [The estate] reverts to the heirs of the [original] owner![19]

(1) Even after the father's death, since the estate has never come into the possession of the son.

(2) After the death of the father, as the representative of the son who, if alive, would have been entitled to the inheritance.

(3) Since the usufruct was in the ownership of the father, the capital, i.e., the soil also is regarded as being in his possession, and the son, therefore, is not entitled to transfer it to a buyer.

(4) The soil, therefore, was the undisputed property of the son who, consequently, was fully entitled to transfer it to a buyer.

(5) Whether possession of usufruct is like the possession of the capital.

(6) Why then dispute it again?

(7) Lit., ‘his field for fruit’.

(8) First ripe fruit. V. Deut. XXVI, 2.

(9) Ibid. 3-10.

(10) Hence he may recite the declaration which contains the sentence, ‘the land which thou hast given me’.

(11) And that, consequently, the soil is the son's despite the usufruct of the father.

(12) As the father retained for himself the usufruct so he also retained his rights in the soil.

(14) That possession of the usufruct is not like the possession of the capital itself.

(15) Lit., ‘giver’. Since the first recipient enjoyed only the usufruct, the capital must have remained in the possession of the original owner; and, consequently when the second dies, the estate should revert to the heirs of him to whom the soil belonged.

(16) [A pupil of R. Johanan who hailed from Babylon, in contradistinction to R. Hoshaiah, the teacher of R. Johanan. Some MSS delete ‘in Babylon’ and may thus refer to the latter.]

(17) By the use of ‘after you’, the owner has clearly intimated that the first, while alive, was to have possession of both capital and usufruct. Elsewhere, however, acquisition of usufruct alone is not the same as the acquisition of the capital itself.

(18) Even in the case where ‘after you’ was used.

(19) Which shows that even in such a case the possession of usufruct is not at all like the possession of the capital, how then can R. Johanan maintain the view, contradictory to the Baraitha, that possession of usufruct is always like the possession of the soil itself?

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 137a

This [law is a matter of dispute between] Tannaim.[1] For it was taught: [If a person said.] My estate [shall be] yours, and after you [it shall be given] to X', and the first [recipient] went down [into the estate] and sold [it] and spent [the money],[2] the second may reclaim [the estate] from those who bought it;[3] [these are] the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The second [may] receive only what the first had left.[4]

An incongruity was pointed out: [If a person said]. 'My estate [shall be] yours and after you [it shall be given] to X', the first [may] go down [into the estate], and sell [it] and spend [the money; these are] the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The first has only [the right of] usufruct. [This, surely, presents] a contradiction [between one statement] of Rabbi and the other statement of his,[5] and [between one statement] of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and the other statement of his![6] — There is no contradiction between the two statements of Rabbi,[7] [since] one[8] [may refer] to the capital;[9] and the other,[10] to the usufruct.[11] There is [also] no contradiction between the two statements of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel[12] [since] one[13] may speak of what is the proper thing;[14] the other, of the law ex post facto.[15]

Abaye said: Who is a cunning rogue? — He who counsels[16] to sell an estate,[17] in accordance with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.[18]

R. Johanan said: The halachah is according to Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, who [however], admits that if [the estate] was assigned[19] as the gift of a dying person, the transaction is invalid.[20] What is the reason? — Abaye said, [because] the gift of a dying person is acquired only after death, and [by that time] 'after you'[21] had preceded him.[22] But did Abaye say so? Surely it was stated: When is possession of the gift of a dying man acquired? Abaye said, 'at death', and Raba said, 'after death'![23] Abaye withdrew from that opinion.[24] Whence [is it proved] that he withdrew from this view,[24] perhaps he withdrew from that?[25] — This cannot be entertained,[26] for we have learnt: [If a dying man[27] said to his wife] 'Here is thy divorce should I die'[28] [or] 'Here is thy divorce [after] my present illness'[29] [or] 'Here is thy divorce after [my] death', [the divorce in all these cases] is invalid.[30]

R. Zeira said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah is according to Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and even if the estate contained slaves whom he liberated.[31] [Is this not] obvious? — It might have been presumed [that] he could be told that it was not given to him for the purpose of doing what was prohibited,[32] hence he taught us [that we do not say so].

R. Joseph said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah is according to Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and even in the case where a dead man's shrouds were made of it.[33] [This is surely] obvious! It might have been presumed that it was not given to him[34] to turn[35] into [something of which it is] forbidden to have any benefit[36] so he taught us [that this is not so].

R. Nahman b. R. Hisda gave the following exposition. [If one said to another]. 'This ethrog[37] is given to you as a gift, and after you[38] [it shall be given] to X', [and] the first [recipient] took it and performed with it his duty,[39] — this will be a point of dispute[40] between Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.[41] R. Nahman b. Isaac demurred: The dispute between Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel can only extend as far as [the case] there[42] because [one] Master is of the opinion [that] acquisition of usufruct is like the acquisition of the capital, and the other] Master is of the opinion [that] acquisition of the usufruct is not like the acquisition of the capital, but here,[43]

(2) Lit., 'ate'.

(3) After the death of the first, who was entitled to usufruct only and had no right to sell the estate itself.
(4) According to this view, the first, being in possession of the usufruct, is regarded as being also in the possession of the capital itself, R. Johanan follows Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(5) Lit., 'on that of Rabbi'.
(6) Lit., 'on that of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel'.
(7) Lit., 'of Rabbi on that of Rabbi'.
(8) Allowing the second to reclaim what the first had sold.
(9) Which is not the possession of the first, and which he has, consequently, no right to sell. Hence it may rightly be reclaimed from the buyer.
(10) Which confers upon the first the right to sell.
(11) I.e., the fruit only, which certainly belongs to him and which he may certainly sell.
(12) Lit., 'of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel on that of R. Simeon etc.!
(13) According to which the first has only the right of usufruct.
(14) לכתחלה 'as at the commencement', 'for a start'. The proper thing is that the first shall respect the wishes of the testator (who obviously desired the second to have at least some of the estate), and dispose of the usufruct only, leaving the capital itself intact for the benefit of the second.
(15) דיעבד 'having been done', i.e., if the first had not come to inquire whether he is entitled to sell the land, but, acting on his own, has sold all, or part of it, the second can only receive what the first had left.
(16) [Rashb.; R. Gersh, renders, 'who takes counsel with himself.']
(17) Which was given to a person with the stipulation that after his death it shall be transferred to another person.
(18) Though the sale is morally wrong, since the original owner meant the second beneficiary to have the estate after the death of the first, it is legal in accordance with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. [According to the explanation of Rashb., it is only he who counsels, that is dubbed 'cunning rogue', since he derives no benefit therefrom.]
(19) By the first recipient.
(20) And the second beneficiary may reclaim it from the donee.
(21) I.e., the second beneficiary, with reference to whom the original owner and testator had said to the first beneficiary, 'after you it shall be given' etc.
(22) The second beneficiary acquires ownership of the estate, on the strength of the instructions of the original owner, at the very moment the first died. The owner, by his instruction, 'after you to X', has clearly intimated that the first was to have the estate only while alive. As soon, therefore, as he dies, X acquires possession. The person, however, to whom the first assignee has presented the estate, 'as the gift of a dying man', does not acquire possession until after the death of the donor. Hence, 'after you' had anticipated him,
(23) Since Abaye, here, holds the view that the gift of a dying man is acquired at death, how could it be said that according to him such a gift is acquired after death?
(24) That the gift is acquired at death.
(25) According to which ownership is acquired after death,
(26) Lit., 'It (should) not enter your mind',
(27) Desirous that his wife shall have the status of a divorced woman (to exempt her, e.g., from the levirate marriage), and not that of a widow.
(28) I.e., when he dies, the divorce shall become effective.
(29) I.e., after death will have brought it to an end.
(30) Lit., 'he said nothing'. because he meant that the divorce shall not become effective except when he died, but after death one cannot give a divorce similarly, in the case of the gift of a dying man, possession was meant to be acquired after and not in death.
(31) The liberation is valid.
(32) It is prohibited to liberate a heathen slave. Cf. Lev. XXV, 46.
(33) Lit., , 'he made them into a shroud for the dead', i.e., the gift or any part of its proceeds was used for the purpose.
(34) Lit., 'they (or we) did not give you'.
(35) Lit., 'to make them'.
(36) Lit., 'prohibitions of use'. A dead man's shroud may not be used for any other purpose, nor may any benefit be derived from it. (v. Sanh,. 47b).
(37) אתרוג a fruit of the citrus family used with the palm leaves, myrtle and willows on the Festival of Tabernacles.

Cf. Lev. XXIII, 40.

(38) I.e., after his death.

(39) Lit., 'and he went out (from his obligation) by it', i.e., he used it in the prescribed manner and recited the proper benediction.

(40) Lit., we have arrived at the dispute'.

(41) According to Rabbi he has not properly performed his duty; since the commandment relating to ethrog requires the the fruit itself to be the property of him who makes liturgical use of it, while the ethrog, in this case, does not itself belong to him, he having received it for use only. According to Rabban Simeon R. Gamaliel, however, who allows the first recipient to sell the estate as his own property, the ethrog also is regarded as his own property, and may therefore be used for the performance of the commandment.

(42) Where the gift consisted of an estate which produced fruit.

(43) The case of the ethrog.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 137b

if [the first recipient] is not able[1] properly to perform the precept[2] therewith, for what [other purpose] was the thing given to him![3] But [it is obvious] that no one [can][4] dispute [the view] that [the first recipient] may properly perform the commandment with it;[5] [as regards, however, the case where] he sold, or consumed it, this will be a point of[6] dispute between Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.[7]

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: When brothers acquired an ethrog[8] out of an [inherited] estate,[9] [and] one of them used for its ritual purpose,[10] if he is able to eat it,[11] he has [also] properly acquitted himself of his ritual duty;[12] but if not, he has not acquitted himself of his ritual duty.[13] This, however, only in the case where an ethrog is available for everyone [of the brothers].[14]

Raba said: [If one said to another,] 'This ethrog is given to you as a gift on the condition that you return it to me', [and the recipient] used it for its ritual purpose,[15] then if he [subsequently] returned it, he is exempt;[16] [if] he did not return it, be is not exempt. [Hereby] we are taught that a gift [presented] on the condition that it be returned is regarded as a [proper] gift.[17]

A certain woman owned a palm-tree on ground belonging to R. Bibi b. Abaye. Whenever she went to cut it he showed resentment, [so] she made it over to him for life.[18] He thereupon went and made it over to his little son.[19] R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: 'Because you are [yourselves] frail [beings] you speak frail words.[20] Even Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel gave his decision only [in the case where the original owner had assigned the estate] to another [person], but not when [it is to return] to [the owner] himself'.[21]

Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: [If one said to another], 'This ox is given to you as a gift on the condition that you return it to me', [and the recipient] consecrated, and returned it, both the consecration and the restitution are legally valid.[22] '[But] what', asked Raba of R. Nahman, 'has he returned to him?'[23] 'And what', replied the other, 'has he taken away from him?'[24] But, said R. Ashi, the matter is looked into: If he said to him, 'on condition that you return it' [he has no claim upon the donee, for] he had surely returned it, if, [however], he said to him, 'on condition that you return it to me', [he can claim compensation], since he implied [that the return must be of] a thing which he may use. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: [If a person] assigned his estate, in writing, to another, and the latter[25] said, 'I do not want it', he acquires possession [of it] even if he stands and protests.[26] R. Johanan, however, said: He does not acquire possession. R. Abba b. Memel said: There is [really] no difference of opinion between them;

(1) According to Rabbi.

(2) Lit., 'if to go out, he cannot go out'.

(3) Not being allowed to consume the fruit, the only other purpose for which one can use an ethrog is for the performance of the commandment.
(4) Lit., 'all the world do not'.
(5) Cf. n. 4, supra.
(6) V. p. 580, n. 12.
(7) according to Rabbi he does, nad according to Rabban Simeon he does not pay compensation to the second, the ethrog itself, through not productive of any usufruct, being treated as capital in relation to the ritual performed with it.
(8) Either as part of the estate or by purchase from its proceeds,
(9) Lit., 'that which belongs to the house'; i.e., before the division of the property had taken place.
(10) Lit., 'he took it and went out (from obligation) thereby'.
(11) I.e., if the brothers do not object to his consumption of the fruit.
(12) Lit., he went out'. Cf. n. 12, supra.
(13) Since an ethrog cannot be used for its ritual purpose unless it is in the exclusive possession of him who uses it, the ethrog of the inherited estate cannot be regarded as being in the undisputed possession of one of the brother unless it is known that the others do not object to his complete consumption of it.
(14) Some edd., 'but not a quince or a pomegranate'.
(16) I.e., he has properly performed his ritual obligation.
(17) I.e., it is considered for the time being the property of the recipient.

(19) So that, according to the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, the woman could not claim it after his death.
(20) ממולאי ממוליאתא 'frail things', applied to both people and words. דאתו = because you. Others, משום דאתיתו ממולאי 'because you are descendants of short-lived people'. Abaye was a descendant of the house if Eli who were condemned to die young. V. I, Sam. II, 32. [Levias. HUC 1904, 155, connects the phrase with the Arabic 'to be foolish'.]
(21) Here, the woman stipulated that the tree shall revert to her. Hence, R. Bibi's transfer to his son is legally invalid.

one refers to the case[1] where he protested[2] and the outset;[3] the other,[1] where he kept silent at first and then[4] protested.[5]

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: [If a donor] transferred ownership to one through the medium of another and [the former] kept silent;[6] and ultimately[7] protested, we have arrived at a dispute[8] between Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis. For it was taught: [If a person] had assigned to another, in writing, an estate of his, part of which consisted of slaves; and the latter[9] said, 'I do not want them',[10] they[11] may, [nevertheless], if their second master[12] was a priest, eat of the heave-offering.[13] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: As soon as the donee[14] had said , 'I do not want them', the heirs [of the testator] become their legal owners.[15] And [when] we were discussing the subject [the question was raised, would] the first Tanna [consider the assignee legal owner] even if he stands and protests? — Raba, and some say R. Johanan, said: [in the case] where he protested from the outset, all agree[16] that he does not acquire ownership. [If he first] kept silent and finally he protested. all agree[16] that he does acquire ownership.'They are in disagreement only [in the case] where the [testator] transferred ownership to the donee through a third party,[17] and [he at first] kept silent and finally he protested. [In such a case], the first Tanna holds the opinion [that] since he kept silent [at first] he acquired ownership, and that [the reason] why he protests [now is because] he has simply changed his mind. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, holds the opinion [that] his final [act] proves what [he had in his mind] at the beginning, and that [the reason] why he did not then[18] protest [is] because he thought. 'Why should I cry before they come into my possession!

Our Rabbis taught:[19] If a dying man[20] said, 'Give two hundred zuz to X, three hundred to Y, and four hundred to Z', it must not be assumed[21] [that] whoever is [mentioned] in the deed first gains possession [first]. Hence, [if] a note of indebtedness was produced against him,[22] [the debt] is to be collected from all of them.[23] [If], however, he[22] said, 'Give two hundred zuz to X, and after him [three hundred zuz] to Y, and after him [four hundred zuz] to Z', the law is[24] [that] whoever is [mentioned] first in the deed acquires possession [first].[25] Hence, [if] a note of indebtedness was produced against him,[22] [the debt] is collected from the last [mentioned]. [If] he has not [enough], collection [of the balance] is made from the one [mentioned] before him. If the share of this one also does not suffice,[26] collection [of the remaining balance] is made from the one mentioned first.[27]

Our Rabbis taught: If a dying man said,[28] 'Give two hundred zuz to X [who is] my firstborn son, in accordance with his due', he receives these as well as[29] [the portion of] his birthright.[30] If, [however], he said, 'As his birthright'.[31] he[32] is given the choice.[33] He may, if he wishes, receive these;[34] he may, if he prefers, receive the portion of his birthright. [If] a dying man said, 'Give two hundred zuz to X [who is] my wife, in accordance with her due', she receives these as well as[35] her kethubah. If, [however], he said 'as her kethubah'[36]

(2) Cf. n. 2, supra.

(3) When the deed of assignment was offered to him. Hence the opinion of R. Johanan that ownership is not acquired.

(5) His first silence is interpreted as consent to his acquisition of the ownership. Hence the opinion of Rab Judah that, though he protested later, ownership is acquired by him.

(6) When the transfer took place.

(7) When the deed of assignment was offered him.

(8) As to whether ownership had been acquired by him who protested.

(9) Lit., 'that one'.

(10) He did not wish to have the responsibility of managing and maintaining slaves.

(12) The donee who objects to have them.

(17) Lit., 'through another'.

(20) Lit., 'a dying man who'.

(23) All the three, being regarded as heirs who have acquired simultaneous right of possessions by his mere verbal instructions (supra 135b), must pay the debt in proportions equal to the shares they received.

(24) Lit.,m 'we say'.

(25) By definitely stating, after him he indicated the order of acquisition he desired.

(26) Lit., 'he has not'.

(27) Lit., 'from him who was before him'.

(28) V. n. 4, supra.

(29) Lit., 'and he receives'.

(30) It is assumed that this was the wish of the deceased. Had he wanted him to receive the specified two hundred zuz only, he would not have added, 'in accordance with his due'.

(31) I.e., that the two hundred zuz shall be given to his firstborn son as the portion of his birthright.

(32) The firstborn.

(33) Lit., 'his hand is upon the upper (part)', i.e., he has the advantage.

(35) Lit., 'and she receives'.

she is to have the choice.[1] She may, if she wishes, receive these, she may, if she prefers, receive her kethubah. [If] a dying man said, 'Give two hundred zuz to X [who is] my creditor, in accordance with his due', he[2] receives these as well as his debt.'[3] If, [however], he said, 'as his debt',[4] he receives these in [payment of] his debt. Should he[5] then, because he[6] said, in accordance with his due', receive these and receive [also] his debt, when it is possible that he meant, 'in accordance with what is his due on account of the debt'? — R. Nahman replied: Huna has told me that this law represents the view of[7] R. Akiba who draws inferences [from] superfluous expression[s]. For we learnt:[8] [He[9] sold] neither the cistern nor the cellar, even though he has included in the contract[10] depth and height.[11] He[12] must, however, buy for himself a passage [to these];[13] these are the words of R. Akiba. But the Sages say: He[12] need not buy for himself a passage. R. Akiba, however, admits that where he[12] said to him, 'except these',[14] he need not buy a passage for himself.[15] From this it clearly follows [that] where [a person] mentioned [that] which was not necessary, his object was[16] to add something; [so] here also, since he mentioned [that][17] which was not necessary, his object was to add something.[18]

Our Rabbis taught: If a dying man said, 'X owes me a maneh', the witnesses may write [it down].[19] although they do not know [whether there is any truth in the statement].[20] Consequently, when [the debt] is collected, proof[21] has to be brought;[22] these are the words of R. Meir. But the Sages say: [The witnesses must] not write unless they know [the statement to be true].[23] Consequently, when [the debt] is collected, there is no need for proof to be produced.[24] R. Nahman said: Huna told me [that] a tanna reported [the following]: R. Meir said, '[The witnesses] must not write', and the Sages say, 'They may write'; and even R. Meir said this[25] only on account of[26] a court [that might] err.[27]

R. Dimi of Nehardea said: The law is[that] there is no need to provide against[28] all erring court.[29] And why [is this case] different from [that] of Raba? For Raba said[30] : Halizah must not be arranged unless [the court] know [the widow and her brother-in-law], nor may a declaration of refusal[31] be accepted unless [the court] know [the parties]. Consequently[32] [it is permissible for witnesses][33] to write out a certificate of halizah[34] as well as a certificate of refusal[34] even though they do not know [the parties].[35] [Has not this precaution[36] been taken] in order to provide against an erring court![37] No;[38] a court does not minutely examine [the decision of] another[39] court;[40] [that of][39] witnesses, [however], it does minutely examine.[41]

MISHNAH. A FATHER[42] MAY PLUCK [THE FRIT] AND GIVE IT TO ANY ONE HE WISHES FOR CONSUMPTION; AND ANY PLUCKED [FRUIT] WHICH HE LEAVES [AFTER HIS DEATH] BELONGS TO [ALL] THE HEIRS.[43]

GEMARA. PLUCKED [FRUIT] only belongs to all the heirs,[44] [but] not [fruit] that is still attached to the ground?[45]

(1) Cf. n. 3, supra.

(2) The creditor.
(3) V. p. 584, n. 13.
(4) I.e., the two hundred zuz shall be given to the creditor in payment of his debt.
(5) The creditor.
(6) The testator.
(7) Lit., 'who is this? It is , etc.'.
(8) Supra 63b, and 64a.
(9) Who sold a house.
(10) Lit., 'he wrote for him'.
(11) Of the house. A cistern and a cellar are not regarded as its indispensable parts.
(12) The seller.
(13) The sale of the house includes the area surrounding it. Hence, the seller, though retaining the ownership of the cistern and the cellar, has no claim upon the path that leads to them.
(14) Cistern and cellar.
(15) It was not necessary for the seller to specify, 'except these', if he wished to retain the cistern and the cellar only, since these are implicitly excluded from the sale. The addition of, 'except these', is, therefore, taken to imply the exclusion from the sale of the path that leads to them.
(16) Lit., 'he comes'.
(17) 'In accordance with his due'.
(18) I.e., that the sum shall be in addition to his debt.
(19) As a memorandum of what they heard.
(20) V., R. Gersh. a.l. and cf. Rashb.
(21) Of the defendant's liability.
(22) By the heirs.
(23) Because a memorandum signed by witnesses may sometimes lead a court to a wrong decision through the assumption that the witnesses had verified the statement.
(24) The existence of a written document is sufficient evidence that the witnesses had satisfied themselves of the veracity of the statements it contains.
(25) That the witnesses may not put the statements on record.
(26) Not because that was the law.
(27) V. n. 8, supra.
(28) Lit., 'to fear', 'apprehend'.
(29) Hence, witnesses may put on record the statements of a dying person (as R. Nahman above quoted in the name of the Rabbis), even though they had not satisfied themselves as to the veracity of the statements.
(30) Jeb. 106a.
(31) Heb. Mi'un, A minor who has been betrothed by her father may have the engagement annulled on declaring before a court that she refuses to live with the man.
(32) Since no court would allow halizah, or a declaration of refusal, unless the parties were known to it.
(33) Who were present during one or other of such ceremonies.
(34) Which would enable the woman to re-marry.
(35) Though they do not know, the court well knew.
(36) That a court must not arrange a halizah or accept a declaration of refusal unless the parties concerned are known to it.
(37) I.e., a second court that might be called upon to deal with the question of the remarriage of the parties, and that might wrongly assume that the previous court had satisfied itself as to their identity. Now, if here provision was made against an erring court, why is not such provision necessary in the case spoken of by R. Dimi?
(38) The case of a court is not to be compared with that of witnesses.
(40) Hence, no court must arrange halizah or annul a minor's betrothal unless the parties are known to it.
(41) Hence, every document that would be brought before them, though attested by witnesses, would always be carefully scrutinised. Witnesses, therefore, nay put on record the statements of a dying man (as R. Dimi stated supra) even though they had not satisfied themselves as to whether the debt he mentioned was really due to him.

(42) Who directed that after his death his estate shall be given to his son, so that the land itself is acquired by the son at once while the right of usufruct remains with the father.
(43) And not only to that son to whom the estate had been assigned.
(44) Lit., 'yes'.
(45) Lit., 'joined'. Since our Mishnah stated that detached fruit belongs to all the heirs it seems to imply that fruit attached to the ground is regarded as the ground itself and belongs to the son to whom the estate was assigned.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 139a

Surely it was taught:[1] the fruit attached [to the ground].[2] is valued[3] for the buyer![4] — 'Ulla replied: There is no difficulty Here[5] [the law deals] with one's [own] son;[6] there[7] [it deals] with a stranger.[8] [In the former case, attached fruit belongs to the son] because a person is favourably disposed towards his son.[9]

MISHNAH. [IF] ONE LEFT SONS[10] [WHO WERE] OF AGE, AS WELL AS MINORS, THOSE WHO ARE OF AGE ARE NOT TO BE SUPPORTED[11] AT THE EXPENSE OF[12] THE MINORS,[13] NOR ARE THE MINORS TO BE FED AT THE EXPENSE OF[14] THOSE WHO ARE OF AGE,[15] BUT ALL RECEIVE EQUAL SHARES] IN THE ENTIRE ESTATE].[16] [IF] THOSE WHO WERE OF AGE MARRIED[17] , THE MINORS [ALSO] MAY TAKE [A SIMILAR SUM TOWARDS THEIR MARRIAGE EXPENSES].[18] IF THE MINORS, HOWEVER, CLAIMED,[19] 'WE DESIRE TO TAKE AS MUCH AS YOU HAVE TAKEN',[20] THEIR REQUEST IS DISREGARDED[21] BUT WHAT THEIR FATHER HAD GIVEN THEM[22] IS REGARDED AS A GIFT.[23] [IF] ONE LEFT DAUGHTERS [WHO WERE] OF AGE, AS WELL AS MINORS THOSE WHO ARE OF AGE ARE NOT TO BE SUPPORTED[24] AT THE EXPENSE[25] OF THE MINORS,[26] NOR ARE THE MINORS TO BE FED AT THE EXPENSE[27] OF THOSE WHO ARE OF AGE.[28] BUT ALL RECEIVE EQUAL SHARES [IN THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE ESTATE]. [IF] THOSE [WHO WERE] OF AGE MARRIED,[29] THE MINORS [ALSO] MAY TAKE [A SIMILAR SUM TOWARDS THEIR MARRIAGE EXPENSES].[30] IF THE MINORS, HOWEVER, CLAIMED,[31] 'WE DESIRE TO TAKE AS MUCH AS YOU HAVE TAKEN',[32] THEIR REQUEST IS DISREGARDED.[33] IN THE FOLLOWING RESPECT[34] DAUGHTERS[35] ARE OF GRATER IMPORTANCE THAN SONS.[36] FOR DAUGHTERS ARE FED AT THE EXPENSE OF THE SONS[37] BUT NOT AT THE EXPENSE OF [OTHER] DAUGHTERS.[38]

GEMARA. Raba said: If[39] the eldest of the brothers[40] drew upon the general funds of the estate for his dress and outfit,[41] his action cannot be disputed.[42] But surely, we learnt, THOSE WHO ARE OF AGE ARE NOT TO BE SUPPORTED AT THE EXPENSE OF THE MINORS! — Our Mishnah [refers] to [those who are] without a calling.[43] [In the case of] one without a calling, [is this not] obvious![44] — [Since] it might have been assumed that [the brothers] desire that he should not be disgraced[45] it was necessary to teach us [that this is not so].

IF THOSE WHO WERE OF AGE MARRIED, THE MINORS ALSO MAY TAKE. What does this mean?[46] — Rab Judah replied, it is this that was meant: IF THOSE WHO WERE OF AGE HAD MARRIED after the death of their father, THE MINORS [ALSO] MAY TAKE[47] after the death of their father; if, however, those who were of age had married during the lifetime of their father, and the MINORS after the death of their father, CLAIMED, 'WE DESIRE TO TAKE AS MUCH AS YOU HAVE TAKEN', THEIR REQUEST IS DISREGARDED BUT WHAT THEIR FATHER HAD GIVEN THEM IS REGARDED AS A LEGAL GIFT.

[IF] ONE LEFT DAUGHTERS [WHO WERE] OF AGE, AS WELL AS MINORS. Abbuha b. Geniba sent to Raba: Will our Master teach us, [in the case of a woman who] took a loan and spent it, and thereupon[48] married,[49] [whether] the husband has [the legal] status of a buyer[50] or that of an heir? Is he [regarded as] a buyer [and consequently he need not repay her debt] since a verbal loan cannot be collected from a buyer; or is he, perhaps, regarded as an heir, [who must pay her debt], since a verbal loan may be collected from heirs? — He replied to him: We have learned this in our Mishnah, [IF] THOSE [WHO WERE] OF AGE MARRIED, THE MINORS [ALSO] MAY TAKE; does not [this mean that] IF THOSE WHO WERE OF AGE [WERE] MARRIED to husbands, THE MINORS MAY TAKE [towards their marriage expenses] from the husbands?[51] — No; [this may mean that] IF THOSE [WHO WERE] OF AGE [WERE] MARRIED to husbands, THE MINORS [ALSO] MAY TAKE[52] [a similar sum towards the expenses of their marriage] to husbands. [But] this is not [so];[53] for, surely, R. Hiyya taught: [If] those who were of age had married husbands,[54] the minors may take [their due] from [those] husbands![55] — It is possible that maintenance[56] is different,[57] since such [an obligation] is generally known.[58]

R. Papa said to Raba:[59] Is not this[60] the very [case] which Rabin had sent in his letter?[61] If a person died, [he wrote], and left a widow and a daughter, his widow is to receive her maintenance out of his estate.[62] [If] the daughter married,[63] his widow is [still] to receive her maintenance out of his estate. [If] the daughter died?[64] Rab Judah, the son of the sister of R. Jose b. Hanina, said: I had [such] a case, and it was decided[65] [that] his widow is to receive her maintenance out of his estate. [Now,] if it be granted[66] that he[67] is [regarded as] an heir,[68] it is quite correct that his widow should be maintained out of his[69] estate[70] ; if, however, it is held[66] that he[67] is [regarded as] a buyer, why should she be maintained out of his estate![71]

Abaye said: Would we not have known [this],[72] if Rabin had not sent [his letter]? Surely we learnt:[73] The following do not return in the Jubilee year:[74] The [portion of] the birthright,

(1) Tosef. Keth. VIII.

(2) In a field that was sold by a son to whom his father had assigned it during his lifetime.

(3) After the death of the father.

(4) I.e., the buyer must pay the price, at which the fruit was valued, to the heirs. This proves that even attached fruit does not belong to him to whom the soil belongs but to the heirs. In the case, then, of our Mishnah also, attached fruit should belong to all the heirs.

(5) In our Mishnah.

(6) Where the estate was assigned by a father to a son, and the latter did not sell it to another person.

(8) When the son had sold the estate to a stranger, or the father had assigned it to a stranger as a gift, reserving the usufruct for himself during his lifetime.

(9) Hence he allows him not only the ground itself but also the fruit attached to it.

(10) And did not provide in a will for the disposal of his estate.

(11) I.e., provided with clothing and the like.

(12) Lit., ‘through the hands of’.

(13) I.e., out of the general proceeds of the estate before it had been divided between the heirs. Sons who are of age require a greater allowance for their clothing than minors; and this they must provide out of their own shares.

(15) Cf. n. 10, supra. Minors require less for clothing but more for food.

(16) I.e., before the estate has been divided, neither the minors, who require a greater allowance for food, nor those of age, who require more for their clothing, though less for their actual food, may draw for their extra requirements upon the common funds, which must be equally divided between all of them.

(18) Out of the common funds of the estate.

(20) I.e., if the minors wish to spend on their marriages, out of the general funds of the estate, as much as the older brothers had spent on their marriages during their father's lifetime.

(21) Lit., ‘they do not listen to them’.

(31) Loc. cit. n. 16.
(32) Loc. cit. n. 17.
(33) Loc. cit. n. 1.
(34) Lit., ‘this’.
(35) Who inherited their father's estate in the absence of sons.
(36) Where there are born sons and daughters.
(37) in the case where the sons inherited a large estate, v. infra 139b.
(38) I.e., if older and younger daughters, in the absence of sons, inherited the estate, the latter are not to be fed from the general funds of the estate.
(39) Lit., ‘This’.
(40) Who manages the estate.
(41) Lit., ‘dressed and covered himself out of the house’.
(42) Lit., what he has done is done’. Though it is not proper for him to make personal expenses out of the common funds, the brothers cannot, after the amount had been spent, claim its return; since it is important for him, as the manager of the estate, to dress well.
(43) שדכא (edd. שרכא), ‘a man at ease’; one who is not in any way engaged in the improvement of the estate or in the increase of its value.
(44) If he is of no use to the management or maintenance of the estate, what possible claim can he have upon the general funds in respect of his personal dress?
(45) Through the wearing of unbecoming clothes, and would thus agree to beat the expense.
(46) This, surely, seems to be in contradiction to the following clause, ‘If the minors, however, claimed "we desire to take as much as you have taken", their request is disregarded’.
(47) A similar sum towards their marriage expenses.
(48) Lit., ‘and ate it and stood up’.
(49) And thus transferred all her possessions to her husband.
(50) Of the property brought to him by his wife.
(51) Of the married sisters; which proves that the husbands are regarded as heirs, not as buyers. The claim of the minors is now assumed to have the same force as that of a verbal loan which cannot be collected from a buyer.
(52) Out of the residue of the estate; not from their sisters’ husbands who are regarded as buyers, not as heirs.
(53) I.e., the husbands cannot be regarded as buyers.
(55) Had these been regarded as buyers, the minors who have the status of a creditor of a verbal loan, could not have taken anything from them.
(57) From a verbal loan.
(58) Lit., ‘it has a voice’, i.e., people well know the fact that the deceased had left minors who are entirely dependent on his estate for their maintenance. Hence the husbands of the elder daughters are assumed to have known the fact. Consequently, the claim of the minors is not to be compared to that of a verbal loan but to one given under a written note of indebtedness, in which case it may be collected even from a buyer of the estate, v. infra 175a.
(59) Who had attempted to prove above, from R. Hiyya's statement, that a husband is regarded as an heir.
(60) That a husband has the status of an heir.
(61) From Palestine to Babylon
(62) in accordance with his undertaking in the kethubah which is given to one's wife.
(63) And thus transferred the estate into her husband's possession.

(65) Lit., ‘they said’.
(66) Lit., ‘you said’.
(67) The husband of the daughter, and so every husband.
(68) Of the property that his wife had brought to him; even during her lifetime.
(69) Her dead husband's, even if it passed into the possession of her daughter's husband.
(70) Since the amount required for the maintenance of a widow, may be collected from her husband's heirs.
(71) Surely a widow's maintenance cannot be collected from the buyers of her husband's property (Cf. Git. 48b)
(72) That a husband is regarded as an heir.

and that [which a husband] inherits [from] his wife![1] Raba said to him: And now that he did send [his letter] do we know [this]?[2] Surely R. Jose b. Hanina stated:[3] At Usha[4] it was ordained [that if] a woman had sold during the lifetime of her husband, usufruct property,[5] and died, the husband may seize them from the buyers?[6] — But, said R. Ashi, the Rabbis have given a husband the status[7] of an heir and [also the status of] a buyer; and whichever was better for him they gave him.[8] In respect of the Jubilee year, the Rabbis gave him the status of an heir, in order [to prevent] loss to him.[9] In the case of [the statement of] R. Jose b. Hanina, the Rabbis gave him the status of a buyer [also] in order [to avert] loss to him.[10] In respect of [the statement of] Rabin, [however], in order [to avert] a loss to the widow, the Rabbis gave him the status of an heir.[11] But, surely, in the case of R. Jose b. Hanina, where the buyers suffer[12] loss, the Rabbis had yet given him the status of a buyer![13] — There,[14] they[15] caused the loss to themselves; for since [it was known that] a husband was involved,[16] they should not have bought from a woman who is subject to a husband's jurisdiction.[17]

CHAPTER IX

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] ONE WHO DIES AND LEAVES SONS AND DAUGHTERS, IF THE ESTATE IS LARGE,[18] THE SONS INHERIT [IT], AND THE DAUGHTERS ARE MAINTAINED [FROM IT].[19] [IF] THE ESTATE IS SMALL, THE DAUGHTERS ARE MAINTAINED [FROM IT], AND THE SONS SHALL GO BEGGING.[20] ADMON SAID, ‘AM I TO BE THE LOSER BECAUSE I AM A MALE!’ R. GAMALIEL SAID: ADMON'S VIEW HAS MY APPROVAL.[21]

GEMARA. What is considered a large estate?[22] — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Out of which both[23] may be maintained for twelve months. When I recited this before Samuel,[24] he said, ‘This is the view of R. Gamaliel b. Rabbi, but the Sages say that [the estate must be large enough] to provide for the maintenance of both[23] until they reach their majority’. [So] it was also stated [else. where]: When Rabin came,[25] he said in the name of R. Johanan, (others say [that it was] Rabbah b. Bar Hanah [who] said it in the name of R. Johanan): When [the estate is large enough] to provide for the maintenance of both until they have reached their majority, It is [considered] large; if less, it is regarded as small. And if [the estate] does not suffice for both until they have reached their majority,

(1) This clearly proves that a husband is regarded as heir. For had he been regarded as a buyer of the property that was brought to him by his wife, he would have retained that status even after her death; and all her landed possessions, as all landed property bought, would have had to be returned in the Jubilee year to their original owner.

(8) Lit., 'and they did as it was better for him'.
(9) That he shall not be compelled to return what he inherited from his wife to her family.
(10) So that he shall be entitled to seize the property from anyone who bought it.
(11) The husband's undertaking to provide for his wife's maintenance preceded the marriage. Hence her claim must receive priority.
(12) Lit., 'there is'.
(13) Why were not the interests of the buyers taken into consideration as much as those of the widow?

would the daughters receive all of it![1] — But, said Raba, [the amount, required for] the maintenance of the daughters until they reach their majority is drawn [from the estate] and the balance is given to the sons.

[It is] obvious [that, if the estate was] large[2] and it depreciated,[3] the heirs have already acquired ownership thereof.[4] What [is the law, however, if the estate was] small[5] and it appreciated;[6] does it remain in the possession of the heirs[7] and, consequently, has appreciated in their possession[8] or are the heirs,[7] perhaps, entirely disregarded here?[9] — Come and hear: R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan [that] if orphans anticipated [the daughters] and sold the estate where it was small,[10] their sale is valid.[11]

R. Jeremiah sat before R. Abbahu, when he addressed to him [the following question].. Does one's widow[12] , reduce [the value of] an estate?[13] Do we assume [that] since she receives[14] maintenance she [thereby] reduces [its value]; or perhaps, since she would receive none[15] if she married [she is regarded as if] she has none even now?[16] If you would find [some reason] for saying [that] since she would receive none if she married [she is regarded as if] she has none even now, [the question arises] whether his wife's daughter[17] reduces [the value of] the estate?[18] Do we say [that] since she would receive [her maintenance] even if she married, she does reduce [the value of the estate]; or, perhaps, since she would receive none if she died,[19] she does not reduce [its value]? And if you would find [some ground] for saying that since she would receive nothing if she died, she does not reduce [its value], [the question arises] whether a creditor[20] reduces the [value of the] estate.[21] Do we say that he reduces [its value] since he[22] would receive [his debt] even If he died,[23] or perhaps, he does not reduce [it] since the debt still requires collecting?[24] (Others[25] [report that he] put the questions in the reverse order:[26] Does a creditor reduce [the value of] the estate?

(1) Since such an estate is considered 'small', the sons, according to our Mishnah, would receive nothing. Should, then, the daughters get the surplus over and above the amount required for their maintenance

(2) At the time the father died.
(3) Lit. 'became less', i.e the estate had been damaged, or the cost of living had risen, so that the income does not suffice for the maintenance of the daughters.
(4) As soon as the death of their father took place, the estate passed over into their possession. Hence, the daughters acquired their share for maintenance and the sons the residue. Any loss, therefore is to be shared by both the sons and the daughters, in equal proportions.
(5) And was, consequently, reserved entirely for the maintenance of the daughters
(6) Lit., 'became large', i.e., the estate was bringing in a higher income, or the cost of maintenance fell.
(7) The sons.
(8) Hence the sons should receive any surplus above the amount required for the daughter's maintenance.
(9) Lit., 'removed from here.' And all the benefits of the appreciation goes to the daughters.
(10) Lit., 'in possessions that were few.' Before the court heard the claim of the daughters.
(11) And the sold property cannot be seized for the daughters maintenance. This proves that the estate remains in the possession of the sons. Hence, in case of appreciation, the surplus belongs to them.
(12) Who is entitled to receive maintenance from the estate during her widowhood.
(13) I.e., is the amount due to the widow for her maintenance deducted from the value of the estate which is thus reduced from a 'larger', to a 'smaller' estate, from which, if it just suffices for the maintenance of the daughters, the sons will receive nothing.
(14) Lit., 'she has'.
(15) Lit,.'she has not'. As soon as a widow re-marries she loses the right of receiving her maintenance from her dead husband's estate.
(16) And the estate is to be given to the sons who would provide for the maintenance of the daughters and the widow until she re-marries.
(17) A step-daughter of the deceased who, at the time of his marriage to her mother, had undertaken to maintain her for a period of years. Now that he died before that period elapsed it is the duty of his sons to provide for her maintenance out of the estate of their father.
(19) I.e., neither she nor her heirs.
(20) of the deceased.
(21) If it suffices only for the payment of the debt and the maintenance of the daughters.
(22) I.e., his heirs.
(23) And consequently the sons of the deceased debtor would receive nothing, (v. note).
(24) And before collection the estate not only suffices for the maintenance the daughters but leaves also a surplus for the sons.
(25) Lit., 'and there are'.
(26) Lit., 'towards the other side'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 140b

Does[1] his wife's daughter[2] reduce [its value]? Does[3] his widow[4] reduce [its value]?) [In the case of claims of] his widow and [her] daughter,[5] who is to have the preference? — He said to him: Go away to-day and come to-morrow. When he came, he said to him: Solve at least one [problem]. For R. Abba said in the name of R. Assi [that] the relationship between[6] a widow and [her] daughter, in the case of a small estate, has been put [on the same basis] as that of the relationship between[7] a daughter and brothers. As [in the case of] the relationship between a daughter and brothers, the daughter is maintained [out of the estate] while the brothers have to go begging at [people's] doors, so [in the case of] the relationship of a widow and [her] daughter, the widow is maintained, and the daughter may go begging at [people's] doors.[8]

ADMON SAID, 'AM I TO BE THE LOSER BECAUSE I AM A MALE' etc. What does he mean?[9] — Abaye replied: He means this: 'AM I TO BE THE LOSER BECAUSE I AM A MALE and am capable of engaging in the study of the Torah?' Raba said to him: Now, then, would he who is engaged in the study of the Torah be entitled to heirship, [and he who is not engaged in the study of the Torah not be entitled to be heir?[10] — But, said Raba, he means this: 'AM I, BECAUSE I AM A MALE and am entitled to be heir in [the case of] a large, estate, TO BE THE LOSER [of my rights] in [the case of] a small estate?'

MISHNAH. [IF A MAN] LEFT SONS AND DAUGHTERS, AND ONE WHOSE SEX IS UNCERTAIN,[11] THE MALES MAY, WHERE THE ESTATE IS LARGE,[12] REFER[13] HIM TO THE FEMALES.[14] [IF] THE ESTATE, [HOWEVER], IS SMALL,[15] THE FEMALES MAY REFER HIM TO THE MALES.[16] IF A MAN SAID: SHOULD MY WIFE BEAR A MALE CHILD, HE SHALL RECEIVE A MANEH, [AND HIS WIFE] DID BEAR A MALE CHILD, HE RECEIVES A MANEH. [IF HE SAID: SHOULD MY WIFE BEAR] A FEMALE [SHE SHALL RECEIVE] TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ, AND] SHE BORE A FEMALE, SHE TAKES TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. [IF HE SAID]: SHOULD [SHE BARE] A MALE CHILD [HE SHALL RECEIVE] A MANEH [AND] IF A FEMALE SHE SHALL RECEIVE TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], AND SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A MALE AND A FEMALE, THE MALE RECEIVES A MANEH [AND] THE FEMALE RECEIVES TWO HUNDRED ZUZ. [IF] SHE BORE A TUMTUM, HE[17] RECEIVES NOTHING. IF, [HOWEVER], HE SAID: WHATEVER MY WIFE SHALL BEAR, SHALL RECEIVE [A CERTAIN PORTION]. HE[17] RECEIVES [IT]. AND IF THERE IS NO [OTHER] HEIR BUT THIS ONE,[17] HE INHERITS ALL. [THE ESTATE].

GEMARA [How can it be said that the males] REFER HIM [to the females] and he [presumably] receives [maintenance] as a daughter. Seeing that in the latter clause it states: IF SHE BORE A TUMTUM, HE RECEIVES NOTHING! — Abaye replied: THEY REFER HIM [to the females] and he receives nothing. Raba, however, said: THEY REFER HIM and he does receive [maintenance]; and the latter clause [of our Mishnah][18] represents the view[19] of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. For we learnt:[20] [If an animal][21] gave birth to a tumtum or an androginos,[22] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said that the sanctity does not extend to [either of] them.[23]

An objection was raised: A tumtum inherits like a son and receives maintenance like a daughter. According to Raba[24] this statement may well be explained [as follows]: He inherits like a son in [the case of] a small estate,[25] and receives maintenance like a daughter [in the case of] a large estate;[26]

(1) If the answer to the first question is that a creditor does reduce the value of the estate, it may he argued that only he does it, since his debt may be collected even after his death.

(2) Whose right to maintenance she cannot transmit to her heirs since it ceases with her death.

(3) If it is answered that his wife's daughter reduces the value of the estate. It may he argued that this is so only in her case since she retains her rights to maintenance even after her marriage.

(4) Who loses her right to maintenance as soon as she re-marries

(5) both of whom claim maintenance, while the estate suffices only for one.

(9) What reason is there to assume that, as regards maintenance, a male should have any preference at all over a female?

(10) Surely no son could be deprived of a share in his father's inheritance for the sole reason that he was not able to engage in the study of the Torah!

(11) Heb., tumtum v. Glos.

(12) In which case the sons are entitled to inherit it, while the daughters receive only their maintenance until they marry or become of age.

(14) I.e., to receive maintenance only as a daughter.

(15) And is, consequently, allotted entirely to the maintenance of the daughters.

(16) And he would thus receive nothing.
(17) The tumtum
(18) According to which the tumtum receives nothing.
(19) Lit., 'we arrive'.
(20) Ter. 24b; cf. Tosaf. Yeb. 83b. s.v., לא לכל
(21) Of which the male or female firstling was consecrated as a sacrifice before it was born.
(22) Gr. , a hermaphrodite. having characteristics of both male and female.
(23) Thus it has been proved that in the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel a tumtum is regarded as a distinct species which is neither male nor female. This view is voiced by the author of the latter clause of our Mishnah, according to whom a tumtum receives neither a share like a son nor maintenance like a daughter.
(24) Who regards a tumtum not as a distinct species but as one of uncertain sex and that, accordingly, he is either male or female.
(25) I.e., nothing: since the daughters may refuse him maintenance on the ground that he has no proof that he is a female.
(26) He cannot claim the greater privilege of receiving a share like a son, because he has no proof that he is a male. He is entitled, however, to the lesser privilege of maintenance, since if he is not a male he is inevitably a female. Cf. p. 598. n. 8.

according to Abaye. however,[1] what [is meant by], 'he receives maintenance like a daughter'? — Granted your argument is right [how will you explain], according to Raba, what [is the meaning of] 'he inherits like a son'?[2] But, [you must explain it as meaning that] 'he is entitled to inherit but [actually] receives nothing', so here[3] [it may be explained as] 'entitled to maintenance but [in fact] receives nothing'.

IF A MAN SAID: SHOULD MY WIFE BEAR A MALE CHILD etc. Does this imply that a daughter is dearer to him, than a son?[4] Surely R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: The Holy One, blessed be He, is filled with wrath against anyone who does not leave a son to be his heir, for it is said, And you shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter,[5] and by the expression of 'causing to pass'[6] 'wrath'[7] is implied, for it is said, That day is a day of wrath![8] — As regards succession, a son has preference;[9] as regards maintenance, a daughter is given preference.[10]

And Samuel said: We deal here[11] with [the case of a mother] who gave birth for the first time, and [this[12] is to be understand] in accordance with [a saying] of R. Hisda. For R. Hisda said: [If a] daughter [is born] first, it is a good sign for the children. Some say, because she rears her brothers; and others say. because the evil eye[13] has no influence over them.[14] R. Hisda said: To me, however, daughters are dearer than sons.[15]

If preferred it may be said that [the Tanna of our Mishnah] is in agreement[16] [with the view of] R. Judah. Which [view of] R. Judah? If it is suggested, [that relating to the exposition] of 'in all';[17] for it was taught.[18] And the Lord blessed Abraham with all.[17] R. Meir said, [the meaning is] that he had no daughter; [and] R. Judah said, [the meaning is] that he had a daughter whose name was 'Inall',[19] it may be objected[20] that [from this] one may only infer[21] that, according to R. Judah, the All Merciful did not deprive Abraham even of daughter; this is no proof, however,[22] that [a daughter] is better than a son! But [it is] this [saying of] R. Judah: It was taught:[23] 'It is a meritorious act to feed one's daughters; and how much more so one's sons' — since [the latter] are engaged in the study of the Torah, these are the words of R. Meir R. Judah said, 'It is a meritorious act[24] to feed one's sons and how much more so one's daughters' — in order that they be not degraded.[25]

But how is one to understand that Baraitha which teaches,[26] '[if] she gave birth to a male and a female, the male receives six [gold] denarii[27] and the female receives two [gold] denarii'?[28] — R. Ashi replied: I interpreted[29] this reported tradition,[30] before R. Kahana, [as dealing] with [the case of] one who inverted the order [of his first instruction] by making a statement like the following:[31] '[If] a male [be born] first, [he shall receive] two hundred zuz[32] , and the] female [born] after him [shall receive] nothing: [if a] female [be born] first, [she shall receive] a maneh, [and the] male [born] after her [shall receive] a maneh' ;and she gave birth to [both] a male and a female, and it is not known which of them was born[33] first. The male does, [consequently]. receive a maneh [which is] in any case [due to him].][34] The other maneh [however] is money of doubtful ownership[35] and is to be divided.[36]

And how is one to understand the Baraitha which teaches[37] [that 'if] she gave birth to a male and a female, he only receives one maneh[38] -Rabina replied: [This is possible] where [the promise of the sum of money was made by the father]. 'to him who will bring me tidings';[39]

(1) Who asserted that a tumtum receives nothing.

(2) Since the estate is small, 'inheriting like a son' really signifies 'receiving nothing'. How then, could the expression of inheriting8 be used?

(3) I.e according to Abaye.

(4) Since the bequest to her was two hundred zuz, while to a son it was a maneh only (i.e., one hundred zuz).

(9) Lit., 'better to him', since he perpetuates the name of the tribe.

(10) It is more difficult for a woman to earn her living, and a father would naturally desire to make provision for her maintenance rather than for that of a son.

(11) In our Mishnah, where preference is given to a daughter.

(12) The preference of the father for her first daughter.

(13) V. Glos.

(14) The birth of a male child first may cause the envy of other mothers

(15) His daughters married husbands who were among the greatest of their generation. viz., Raba, Rami b. Hama: and Mar 'Ukba b. Hama (Tosaf.)

(16) Lit., 'this according to whom'?

(19) בכל 'in all'; v. supra 16b.

(21) Lit., 'you have heard him'.

(22) Lit., 'did you hear him?'

(23) Tosef. Keth. IV.

(24) Though there is no legal obligation after a certain age.

(25) In their search for a livelihood. From this it follows that, according to R. Judah, a father would provide for a daughter more than for a son. Hence it may be concluded that our Mishnah represents this view.

(26) Lit., 'but that which is taught . . . in what'.

(27) A gold denar = 25 zuz.

(28) Making a total of two hundred zuz. In an ordinary case, in view of the principle enunciated in our Mishnah, a daughter should receive the greater share [According to R. Gershom this Baraitha is not quoted as an argument, but for the purpose of obtaining information on its interpretation.]

(29) Lit., 'I said'.

(30) The Baraitha cited.

(31) Lit., 'when he said'.

(32) l.e., eight gold denarii.

(33) Lit., 'came out'.

(34) If he was born first, the maneh is certainly due to him, since in such a case, his father had really allotted him two hundred zuz. But even if he was born second he is still entitled by virtue of of the definite instructions of his father, to the one maneh

(35) Because it is not known to whom that second maneh belongs. Had it been certain that the son was born first he would have been entitled to that maneh also. Had it been certain, on the other hand , that the daughter was born first she would have been entitled to that maneh ; hence it is of doubtful ownership.

(36) Between the son and the daughter. The first maneh being due to the son in any case, is given to him in full(four gold denarii), with the addition of a half(two gold denarii) of the second maneh. Hence he receives a total of one maneh and a half(six gold denarii). The daughter, being entitled to half a maneh, receives, therefore, two gold denarii.

(37) Lit., 'but that which was taught...how do you find it'.

(38) The expression 'he only receives one maneh', implies that though it might have been assumed that he receives more than that sum, he receives only one maneh. Under what circumstances is this possible?

as it was taught: '[If a person said]:"He who will bring me tidings whereby the womb of my wife was opened, shall receive, if the child be a male, a maneh", [then]. if she gave birth to a male he receives a maneh. [If. however.] he said: "[He will receive] a maneh if [he brings 'me tidings that she gave birth to] a female", [then] if she gave birth to a female, he receives a maneh, [and if] she gave birth to a male and a female, he only receives a maneh'. But surely'. he did not speak of a 'male and a female'![1] — [This refers to the case] where he also said, 'He shall also receive a maneh if [he brings tidings that] a male and a female [were born]'. What. then. [did he mean] to exclude?[2] To exclude a miscarriage.[3]

[Once] a certain [man] said to his wife: 'My estate shall be his with whom you are pregnant — R. Huna said, 'This is [a case of] making an assignment to an embryo through the agency of a third party. and whenever such an assignment is made, [the embryo does] not acquire possession. R. Nahman raised an objection against R. Huna's ruling: IF A MAN SAID: SHOULD MY WIFE BEAR A MALE CHILD, HE SHALL RECEIVE A MANEH, [AND HIS WIFE] DID BEAR A MALE CHILD, HE RECEIVES A MANEH![4] -He replied to him: [As to] our Mishnah. I do not know' who is its author.[5] But should he not have replied to him [that] it[6] [represents the view' of] R. Meir who stated [that] a man may convey possession of a thing that has not [yet] come into the world![7] -[It is possible to] say that R. Meir holds this view[8] [only when possession is conveyed] to that which is [already'] in the world;[9] [but] has he been heard [to hold the same view when possession is conveyed] to that which is not [yet] in the world![10] But let him reply to him that it[11] [represents the view of] R. Jose who said [that] an embryo acquires [possession]! For we learnt:[12] 'An embryo disqualifies [his deceased father's slaves from eating the heave.offering[[13] but does not confer the right of eating it [on his mother];[14] these are the words of R. Jose'?[15] — An inheritance which came to one under the ordinary laws of succession,[16] is different .[17] But let him reply to him [that] it[18] [represents the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka who said, that there was no difference between an inheritance and a gift! For we learnt:[19] R. Johanan b. Beroka said: If [a person] said [it][20] concerning one who is entitled to be his heir,[21] his instruction is legally valid[22] -[It is possible to] say that R. Johanan b. Beroka has been heard [to hold the view only where possession is given] to that which is [already] in the world;[23] [but] did he say [that the same law applies also] to that which is not in the world![24] And let him reply to him [that] it[25] [represents the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka and [that] he holds the [same] opinion as R. Jose![26] Who can say that he[27] holds such an opinion![28] Let him then reply to him [that our Mishnah speaks of the case] where [the money was offered by a husband] 'to him who would bring me tidings'![29] - If so.[30] [explain] the last clause wherein it is stated. AND IF THERE IS NO [OTHER] HEIR BUT THIS ONE, HE INHERITS ALL [THE ESTATE]. If [the Mishnah speaks] of a reporter[31] what has he to do with heirship![32]

Then let him reply to him [that our Mishnah speaks of the case] where she has [already] given birth [to the child]![33] -If so,[34] the last clause is wherein it is stated. IF [HOWEVER] HE SAID: whatever MY WIFE SHALL BEAR, SHALL RECEIVE [A CERTAIN PORTION]. HE RECEIVES [IT] [instead of]. WHATEVER SHE SHALL BEAR, should have [read]. 'whatever she has born'!

(1) He only spoke of the birth of a male or a female; why then should he give the maneh when twins were born?

(2) If the maneh was promised to the reporter in the case of the birth of a male. a female or twins. i.e.. apparently in all possible cases. what need was there for the father to specify them, at all? It would have been sufficient for him, to say. that he would pay the maneh to him who would report'whereby the womb of my wife was opened'. Since the three apparently possible cases were specified the intention must have been to exclude' some other possible case.

(3) By specifying male, female and twins,he implied that the maneh would be paid only when he received a report of a living child.

(4) This shows that though the assignment was made while the child was still in embryo. possession is acquired by him.

(5) Lit., 'who taught it.' i.e.,its authorship is obscure and consequently unreliable.

(6) Our Mishnah.

(7) Why. then. did he say that he did not know who the author of our Mishnah was?

(8) Lit., 'that you heard.'

(9) I.e., though the object is not, the recipient is. in existence.

(10) The embryo, therefore, could not acquire possession even according to R. Meir. Hence, the authorship of our Mishnah remains unknown

(13) The heave-offering. (terumah. v. Glos.). is forbidden to laymen (Israelites and Levites). but the wife and the non-Jewish slaves of a priest are allowed to eat of it. When the priest dies. his slaves, becoming the property of his sons who are themselves priests,are still allowed to eat terumah. If however the wife of the priest, who is the daughter of an Israelite, was pregnant when her husband died, the slaves are forbidden to eat of the terumah on account of the embryo who is not regarded as a priest and who is their partial owner. (The slaves of a layman are forbidden to eat terumah.

(14) If she is the daughter of an Israelite. Only a son that was born confers this right upon his mother: but not an embryo

(15) From this it clearly follows that the embryo is regarded as the owner of the slaves, which proves that according to R. Jose an embryo does acquire possession; why. then, could not our Mishnah be attributed to R. Jose's authorship?

(17) From a gift.Consequently. while R. Jose may hold the view that an embryo acquires the ownership of an inheritance, it does not follow that be would grant the embryo the right of acquiring possession of a gift,which forms the subject of our Mishnah

(20) That a certain individual shall inherit all his estate.

(21) Presumably even an embryo.

(22) Which proves that, according to R. Johanan b. Beroka, an embryo acquires possession even of that to which he would not have been entitled under the ordinary laws of succession.

(23) I.e., one of the sons already born.

(24) E.g., an embryo. Hence the authorship of our Mishnah remains unknown.

(25) Our Mishnah.

(26) Supra; that an embryo may acquire possession.

(28) That of R. Jose.

(29) i.e. that the sum of money spoken if in our Mishnah was not assigned to an embryo but promised by a husband to anyone who would report to him, on the confinement of his wife as to the sex of child (cf. supra). The question of an embryo's right of acquisition would consequently be outside the scope of our Mishnah: and R. Huna would accordingly be able to maintain, against R. Nahman's assumption, that an embryo does not acquire possession.

(30) That our Mishnah deals with a promise to a stranger, and not with an assignment to an heir.

(31) Lit 'he who will report to me'.

(32) Lit., 'an heir, what is his work'. A reporter on the birth of one's child could not possibly he described as heir

(33) At the time the father had assigned to him the sum of money. An embryo, however, as R. Huna stated, would not acquire possession.

(34) That the Mishnah speaks of a child already born.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 142a

But let him reply to him [that our Mishnah speaks of the case] where he said, 'After she will have born [the child']![1] — R. Huna follows his own view. For R. Huna said: [A child] does not acquire ownership[2] even [where the father had said].[3] 'after she[4] , will have born [him][5] 'For. [it was stated.] R. Nahman said: If a person conveys possession. through the agency of a third party. to an embryo.[the latter] does not acquire ownership. [If however, he said].][3] 'After she will have born'.[5] [the child] does acquire ownership. But R. Huna said: Even [where he said]. 'After she will have born'. [the child] does not acquire ownership. R. Shesheth however said: Whether he used the one, or the other expression.[6] [the child] acquires ownership. Said R. Sheshet: Whence do I derive this? — From the following:[7] If a proselyte died[8] and Israelites plundered his estate; and [subsequently] they heard that he had a son or that his wife was pregnant. they must return [whatever they have appropriated].[9] [If]. having returned everything they subsequently heard that his son died or that his wife miscarried,he who took possession the second [time][10] has acquired ownership;[11] but [he who took possession] the first [time] has not acquired ownership. Now, if it could be assumed [that] an embryo does not acquire ownership why should they[12] need to take possession a second time? They have, surely. already taken possession once![13] Abaye [however] said: An inheritance which comes [to one] under the ordinary laws of succession[14] is different[15] Raba said: There[16] it is different,[17] because at first[18] they[19] were really uncertain of the legality of their acquisition.[20] What [practical difference is there] between them?[21] There is [a difference] between them [in the case] where a report was brought[22] that he[23] died, while [in fact] he was not dead. and after that he died.[24] Come and hear: 'A babe [who is] one day old inherits and transmits[25] [From this it follows that only] one [who is] one day old [may inherit][26] but not an embryo![27] -Surely R. Shesheth had explained[28] [this as meaning]: He[29] inherits the estate of his mother to transmit [it][30] to his paternal brothers;[31] hence, only [then when he is] one day old but not [when] an embryo.What is the reason?

---

(1) So that a born child, not an embryo, would acquire possession. Hence, no objection could be raised from our Mishnah against R. Huna's statement.

(2) Of a sum of money that his father had assigned to him before his birth, while still an embryo.

(3) That the child shall acquire possession.

(4) The mother.

(5) The child to whom the assignment was made.

(6) Lit., 'whether this or this'.

(7) Lit., 'for it was taught'.

(8) And, having left no children, his possessions become public property, and whosoever takes possession of them acquires ownership.

(9) Since the son or the embryo. as legal heir. acquired the ownership of the estate as soon as the proselyte died.

(10) After the death of the son or the miscarriage.

(11) Since at that time there were no legal heirs

(12) In the case where there was no born son, but an embryo.

(13) The existence of the embryo if it could not acquire possession, should not have made any difference to their right of ownership. Consequently it follows, as R. Shesheth had stated, that an embryo does acquire possession.

(14) Lit., 'of itself'.

(15) Though an embryo may acquire ownership of an estate which is due to him as the legal heir, it does not follow that it can also acquire the ownership of a gift or any other assignment.

(16) n the case of the estate of a proselyte.

(17) From other cases of acquisition.

(18) Before it was known whether there were any legal heirs.

(19) Who seized the estate.
(20) Lit., 'it was really loose in their hands at first'. While seizing the property, they were well aware that they might loose it at any moment should a legal heir appear. Hence, ownership cannot be acquired unless possession was taken after it had been ascertained that there were no legal heirs.
(21) In either case, whether the reason is that given by Abaye or that of Raba,the first acquisition is invalid.
(22) Lit., 'they heard'.
(23) The legal heir.
(24) In such a case, the plunderers, since they thought that the heir was dead, have from the very beginning taken definite and certain possession of the estate which, according to Raba, would consequently become their legal property. even if they did not take possession of it a second time. According to Abaye. however. their first acquisition is of no avail since the embryo was at that time the legal owner of the estate.
(25) Nid. 44a. 'Ar. 7a.
(26) Lit.. 'yes'.
(27) Had an embryo been able to inherit, there would be no need to specify the limitation,'one day old'. Now, if an embryo cannot acquire possession of a legal inheritance how much less could it acquire possession of a gift! How, then, could R. Shesheth maintain that an embryo can acquire possession of a gift?
(28) v.. Nid. loc. cit.
(29) An infant who Is one day old.
(30) When he dies.
(31) Born from the same father and not the same mother.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 142b

— Because [the embryo] dies first[1] and no son in the grave[2] may inherit from his mother to transmit [the inheritance] to his paternal brothers 'Do you mean to say that it[3] dies first, surely there was a case when it made three convulsive movements?[4] — Mar. son of R. Ashi, replied: Those were only [reflex movements] like those of the tail of the lizard which moves convulsively [even after it has been cut of].[5]

Mar the son of R. Joseph said in the name of Raba: This[6] teaches[7] that he[8] causes a diminution in the portion of the birthright.[9] [This] however [applies] only [to a child who is] one day old, but not to an embryo.[10] What is the reason?-The All Merciful said, And they have born to him.[11] For [so] said Mar, the Son of R. Joseph. in the name of Raba: 'A son who was born after the death of his father does not cause a diminution In the portion of the birthright. What is the reason? The All Merciful said, And they shall have born to him[11] , which is not [the case here].[12] Thus[13] it was taught at Sura. At Pumbeditha. [however]. it was taught as follows:[14] Mar. the son of R. Joseph, said in the name of Raba: A firstborn son who was born after the death of his father[15] does not receive a double portion. What is the reason? The All Merciful said, He shall acknowledge,[16] and, surely. he is not [alive] to acknowledge [him]. And the law is in accordance with all those versions which Mar the son of R. Joseph quoted in the name of Raba. R. Isaac said in the name of R. Johanan: If possession was given to an embryo [through the agency of a third party]. it does not acquire ownership. And if objection should be raised from[17] our Mishnah,[18] [it may be replied that there it is different] because a person is favourably disposed towards his son.[19]

Samuel said to R. Hana of Bagdad: 'Go. bring me a group of ten [people] and I will tell you in their presence[20] [that] if possession Is given to an embryo [through the agency of a third party]. it does acquire ownership'. But the law is that if possession is given to an embryo [through the agency of a third party]. it does not acquire ownership. Once a certain man said to his wife, 'My estate [shall belong] to the children that I shall have from you'. His eldest son[21] came [and] said to him, 'What shall become of me?'[22] He replied to him, 'Go acquire possession as one of the [other] sons' .[23] Those[24] [can] certainly acquire no ownership.[25] since they are not yet in existence; has [however]. this lad[26] an [additional] share beside[27] the [other] sons,[28] or has the lad no [additional] share beside[27] the [other] sons? — R. Abin and R. Measha and R. Jeremiah say: The lad receives an [additional] share beside the [other] sons. R. Abbahu and R. Hanina b. Papi and R, Isaac Nappaha say: The lad receives no [additional] share beside the [other] sons.

R. Abbahu said to R. Jeremiah. 'Is the law in accordance with our view[29] or in accordance with yours?' He replied to him, 'It is obvious that the law' is in accordance with our view because we are older than you. and [that] the law' [can] not be according to your view because you are [only] juniors.' The other retorted, 'Does the matter then depend on age? [Surely] the matter depends on reason!' 'And what is the reason?' [R. Jeremiah asked.] 'Go to R. Abin,' [replied R. Abbahu.] 'to whom I have explained the matter

(1) Before the mother.

(2) I.e. after his death.

(3) An embryo.

(4) After the mother was dead.

(5) Such movements are no signs of life.

(6) The Mishnah of Niddah cited, wherein a child one day old is mentioned,implying the exclusion of an embryo.

(8) A child who is one day old.

(9) I.e.,if there are, e.g.. two brothers exclusive of the child, the estate is divided not into three portions (two for the two ordinary portions of the two brothers and one for the birthright, but into four portions. Each brother, including the child, receives one such portion and the firstborn receives the additional fourth portion as his birthright. The firstborn thus receives, as the portion of his birthright, a quarter of the estate, and not, (as would have been the case if the child were excluded). a third.

(10) An embryo. though receiving a portion of the estate, does not reduce the portion of the birthright. In the case mentioned, e.g., in the previous note. the estate would first be divided into three portions (as if the embryo did not exist) and the firstborn would receive as his birthright, one of these, i.e., a third of the estate. The remaining two thirds would then he divided into three equal shares, each of the three brothers receiving one, i.e., two ninths of the estate. The full portion of the firstborn would accordingly amount to 1/3+2/9=3/5) five ninths of the estate, while where the child was one day old, the firstborn's full portion would amount to half the estate only. i.e.,(5/9-1/2=1/18),one eighteenth less.

(11) Deut.,XXI,15 This implies that, as regards the birthright, the children must have been actually born. An embryo cannot come under this category and is, therefore, regarded as non-existent in this respect.

(12) The son having been born after his father's death. Thus, according to Mar the son of R. Joseph, it is possible to concede that an embryo may die after its mother and that consequently. as R. Shesheth maintained, it inherits her estate which it then transmits to its paternal brothers.

(15) I,e,, where his widow bore twins or where he left two widows and both bore sons one of whom was the firstborn,

(16) Deut. XXI, 17.

(17) Lit., 'and if you will say'.

(18) From which it might be inferred, as R. Nahman suggested supra that an embryo does acquire ownership.

(19) Hence he wholeheartedly transfers ownership to the embryo. In the case of a stranger however, this principle is inapplicable.

(20) To give the matter due publicity.

(22) Lit.,of that man ,i.e., himself.

(23) That were to be born from the second wife

(24) The future children who at the time of the assignment were not even in embryo. (

(26) The eldest son.

(27) Lit., 'in place'.

(28) When, in due course they inherit the estate by the right of succession would he, in addition to what is due to him as one of the sons, receive also a share by virtue of the special assignment made to him by his father?

(29) Lit., ‘ ‘us’.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 143a

at the College,and he expressed his approval’.[1] He went to him [when the other] explained[2] Would anyone acquire possession if he were told, ‘Acquire ownership as an ass’?[3] For it was stated: [If one was told]. ‘Acquire possession like an ass’. he does not acquire ownership. [If. however. one was told]. ‘You and an ass [shall acquire possession].’ R. Nahman said: He acquires the ownership of a half.[4] And R. Hamnuna said: The statement is invalid ‘[5] And R. Shesheth said: He acquires the ownership of all.

R. Shesheth said: Whence do I derive this?[6] -For it was taught: R. Jose said: In cucumbers, the inner portion only’ is bitter.[7] Consequently. when a person is giving [a cucumber] as a heave-offering[8] he [must]add[9] to the external part of it,[10] and [thus] gives the heave-offering. [But] why? [This is surely the same as the case of] ‘You and the ass’![11] — There it is different; for Biblically it[12] is perfect terumah,’ for R. Elai said, ‘Whence [is it inferred] that if one separates a heave-offering from an inferior quality for the [redemption of] a superior quality that his offering is valid? For it is said. And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, seeing that ye have set apart from it the best thereof.[13] [From this it is to be inferred that if you do not set apart from the best,but of the worst, you shall bear sin]; if, [however, the inferior quality] does not become consecrated, why should there be any bearing of sin![14] Hence [it follows] that if one separates a heave-offering from an inferior quality for [the redemption of] a superior quality, his offering is valid.’[15] R. Mordecai said to R. Ashi: R. Iwya raised an objection [from the following Mishnah]: It once happened with five women, among whom there were two sisters. that a person gathered a basket of figs which were[16] theirs and[which] were’ [also of the fruit] of the Sabbatical year[17] and said, ‘Behold you are all betrothed[18] unto me by this basket’ ,[19] and one of them accepted on behalf of all. The Sages said: The sisters are not betrothed.[20] [From this it follows that] only the sisters were not consecrated. but the strangers were consecrated;[21] but why? This [is surely the same case as] ‘You and the ass’![22] — He said unto him: This is indeed [the reason] why I saw R. Huna b. Iwya in [my] dream: Because R. Iwya raised the objection. Have we not [however]. explained [the Mishnah[23] as referring only to the case] where he said, ‘She who is [legally] suitable among you for cohabitation shall be betrothed unto me’?[24]

A certain [person] said to his wife, ‘My estate shall belong to you and to your children’ — R. Joseph said: She acquires the ownership of half [of it]. R. Joseph. furthermore, said: Whence do I derive this?- For it was taught:[25] Rabbi said: And it shall be for Aaron and his sons,[26] half for Aaron [and] half for his sons.[27] Abaye said to him: This[28] is quite correct there;[29] [since] Aaron was [in any case] entitled to receive a share, the All Merciful [must have] mentioned him explicitly in order [to indicate] that he is to receive a [full] half, [in the case of] a woman, [however], [who] is not entitled to be heir [at all]. it should be sufficient for her to receive like one of the children,[30] [But] this is not [so] — For surely there was [such] a case at Nehardea where Samuel allowed her to receive a half; at Tiberias, and R. Johanan allowed her to receive a half. Furthermore, when R. Isaac b. Joseph came, he related [that] the Government[31] once imposed crown money[32] upon Bule[33] and Startege[33] [and] Rabbi said: Bule shall give a half and Startege a half![34] — What a comparison![35] There, when an order was issued[36] on previous occasions it was directed to[37] Bule, [yet] Startege contributed together with them, and the Government[38] knew that they were assisting. Why. then, did they now direct the order to both Bule and Startege? [Obviously] to indicate that these [as well as] those [shall each contribute] a half.

R. Zera raised an objection: If a person said; I undertake to bring a meal.offering [of] a hundred ‘isaron[39] in two vessels, he [must] bring sixty[40] in one vessel, and forty in the other vessel,

(1) Lit., 'and he bowed his head concerning it,' i e.,'nodded assent'.

(2) Lit., said to him.'

(3) Surely not! the man would in such a case acquire as little possession as the ass: so in this case, just as the unborn brothers cannot acquire ownership of their shares, neither can the lad acquire the ownership of his share.

(4) The owner having implied by his statement that he wished the man and the ass to acquire equal shares.

(5) Lit., 'he said nothing'. Since the animal and the man were given simultaneous possession. the owner has thereby intimated his desire that one shall not acquire ownership without the other; and since the animal cannot acquire ownership. the man also cannot.

(6) That though the ass and the man were given possession simultaneously. the man acquires ownership of the whole.

(7) Lit., 'you have not bitter in a cucumber but the inner (portion) which is in it'.

(8) For another forty-nine cucumbers. The heave-offering (terumah, v. Glos.) must contain a fiftieth of the produce.

(9) The outer and sweet portion of another cucumber.

(10) Bitter produce cannot he consecrated as Terumah. Consequently without such an addition, the cucumber which he set aside as heave-offering might represent less than a fiftieth of the produce. should it happen to have a rather large bitter core.

(11) As here, though the sweet and the bitter portion of the cucumber are simultaneously included in the terumah, and though the latter is unfit for it,the former is, nevertheless, regarded as proper terumah, so in the case of possession given simultaneously to a man and an ass, though the latter cannot acquire possession. the former should well acquire it.

(14) Surely no wrong has been done, since his action is null and void, and he has to give another heave-offering.

(15) Supra 84b, B.M. 56a. Since, as has been proved, an inferior quality may be used as a heave-offering for the redemption of a superior quality,a bitter cucumber might well be used as a heave-offering. Hence this case cannot be compared to that of possession that was given to a man and an ass where the ass cannot possibly be regarded as qualified to acquire ownership.

(16) Lit 'was'. treating the figs as one unit, 'basket of figs'.

(17) Which are free to all.

(18) Lit,, 'consecrated', 'Consecration' in this formula implies 'marriage bonds',

(19) Betrothal is effected by the man's handing over to the woman a coin or an object of value,

(20) I.e., the betrothal is null and void.

(22) As here the betrothal of the strangers is valid though that of the sisters is not, so in the case of possession given to a man and an ass, the man should acquire ownership though the ass does not. The two cases are parallel, since in the one case the betrothal was simultaneous and in the other possession was given simultaneously. How, then, in view of the decision of the Sages in the case of the women. could it he held that in the case of the man and the ass the man does not acquire ownership?

(23) Declaring valid the betrothal in the case of the strangers.

(24) Since the sisters were accordingly excluded, the betrothal of the others could rightly he regarded as valid. In the case of the man and the ass both were included; as that of the ass must be invalid so may be that of the man.

(26) Lev, XXIV, 9

(27) As the mention of Aaron at the side of his sons implies that his share shall be equal to the total of their shares, so the mention by the husband of his wife at the side of his sons implies that her share shall be equal to the total of theirs, i.e., half the estate for her and the other half for the sons,

(28) That an individual mentioned at the side of many receives a half of the whole.

(29) In the case of Aaron and his sons'

(30) Had not her husband specifically named her she would have received nothing, the mention of her can entitle her to one share only like any one of the other heirs.

(31) Lit.. 'the royal house'.

(34) Though one of these may have been wealthier or more numerous than the other. This proves that the mention of two names implies that the bearers of these names, whether consisting of many or few, give. or receive, collectively, equal shares. Hence, in the case of the estate given to one's wife and sons, the former should receive a share equal to the total received by the sons, i. e. a half!

and if he brought fifty in one vessel and fifty in the other, he has [also] fulfilled his duty. There, we are in a position to testify[4] that this person first intended [to bring as] big [an] offering [as possible],and that [the reason] why' he said, 'In two vessels' [was] because he knew that it was impossible to bring [all] in one vessel.[5] [Hence] we order him to bring as much as it is possible.

a covered cistern[1] the proceeds[2] are to be equally divided'; but [the proceeds of] a covered cistern [are surely] due to [the elder brothers] themselves![3] — A covered cistern is different, since It [only] requires watching[4] and even minors can keep a watch over it. THEY SAID, 'SEE WHAT [OUR] FATHER HAS LEFT; WE DESIRE TO CULTIVATE [OUR OWN SHARES] AND TO ENJOY THE PROFITS'. THE PROCEEDS BELONG TO THEM. R. Safra's father left [some] money. He took it [and] carried on with it a business. [Then] came his brothers and sued him before Raba.[5] He said to them. 'R. Safra is a great man; he [is] not [expected to] leave his studies in order to toil for others'.[6] [WHERE] THE WIFE HAD EFFECTED IMPROVEMENTS IN THE ESTATE. SHE IMPROVED IT FOR THE COMMON GOOD- What has a wife to do with the property of orphans?[7] -R. Jeremiah replied: [The Mishnah speaks] of a wife [who is] an heiress.[8] [Is this not] obvious?[9] , — It might have been assumed [that] since it is not usual for her to look after an orphan's estate[10] [she is entitled to all the profits],even where she did not [first] make a specific declaration.[11] . as if she had [actually] made [it], hence it [was necessary to] teach us [that this is not so].

IF [HOWEVER] SHE SAID,' SEE WHAT MY HUSBAND HAS LEFT ME; I DESIRE TO CULTIVATE [MY SHARE] AND TO ENJOY THE BENEFITS.' THE PROCEEDS BELONG TO HER. [Is not this] obvious? It might have been assumed [that] since it is creditable to her when people say that she works for the orphans. she might [consequently] forego her claims,[12] hence it [was necessary to] teach us [that this is not so]. R. Hanina said: If a person marries his adult son in a house [of his], he[13] acquires its ownership. But this only [in the case of] one [who is] of age, and only [where he married] a virgin, and only [when she is] his first wife, and only- where he is the first [son] whom he married.[14] It is obvious [that] where his father had set aside for him[15] a house and [there is] an upper story [thereon], [the latter] acquired the ownership of the house [but] not [of] the upper story. What [is, however, the law in the case of] a house and an exedra?[16] [Or in the case of] two houses one within the other?-This is undecided. An objection was raised: [If] his father had set aside for him a house and [it contains] furniture, he acquires possession of the furniture [but] not of the house! — R. Jeremiah replied: [This refers to a case] where, for instance, his father's store[s] were kept there.[17] The Nehardeans say': Even [if only) a dove-cote.[18] R. Judah and R. Papi say: Even [if only] a pot of fish-hash.[19]

Mar Zutra married his son and hung up[20] for himself[21] a sandal.[22] R. Ashi married his son and hung up[20] for himself[21] a jug of oil.[23]

Mar Zutra said: The following three things have [been] enacted [by] the Rabbis as fixed law without [adducing any] reason. One [is] this.[24] The other [is that] which Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel, [namely that]. a [dying] man [who] gave all his property to his wife, in writing. [thereby] only appointed her adminstratrix.[25] [.And the] third[26] [is that] which Rab had stated: [If one said] 'You owe me a maneh; give it to X' ,in the presence of the three parties,[27] [X] acquires possession.[28] MISHNAH

(2) Out of the sale of its water.

(3) Since no expenses for its upkeep and protection are drawn out of the funds of the estate. And yet it is stated that the proceeds are to be equally divided. How then, could Raba say that if the improvement was at the expense of the elder brothers all the profits belong to them only?

(4) Lit., 'was made for watching', i.e., no expenses are involved. and all the elder brothers have to do is to watch that no water is stolen from it.

(5) Demanding a share in the profits.

(6) When an elder brother is an important person, he is entitled to all the profits which are due to his efforts. even though he did not first make the proper declaration that he desired the estate to be divided and that he intended keeping to himself any profits he would make.

(7) She either receives the amount of her kethubah(v. Glos.) after which she has no more claim upon the estate: or she looks after the property of the orphans in return for her maintenance. How, then, could she claim any profits resulting from improvements in the estate.

(8) In the case, e.g.. where the deceased gave instructions that the widow shall be co-heir with his sons (Rashb.).
(9) Why was it necessary for our Mishnah to restate it in the case of a widow, seeing that the law had already been stated in regard to brothers.
(10) Lit., 'to take the trouble'.
(11) Lit., 'specified'; that she desired the estate to be divided and that she intended to make the improvements in her interests alone.
(12) Even though she first declared that she would work in her interests alone.
(13) The son.
(14) In such cases the father's joy is so great that he willingly and wholeheartedly gives away the house to his son.
(15) His son: on the occasion of his marriage.
(17) Since he requires it for his own purposes he would not transfer its ownership to his son.
(18) Of the father is kept in the house, the son does not acquire ownership of the house.
(19) Cf. n 6.
(20) In the house where the marriage took place.
(21) To indicate to his son that the house was not to become his property.
(22) The sandal, like any of the other objects mentioned above is regarded for this purpose as a store.
(23) Cf. n. 10
(24) The ruling just mentioned, that a son acquires the ownership of a house of his father in which his marriage took place, even if the father did not explicitly present it to him.
(25) V. .supra 131b.
(26) Lit.. 'other'.
(27) I..e., the debtor, the creditor, and X, the assignee.
(28) Though there were no proper witnesses and no legal form of acquisition, the transfer of the claim is valid. This rabbinic law, which is declared to be arbitrary and based on tradition alone, recognises the transfer of claims to a third party, though this is not provided for by Biblical Law.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 144b

IF ONE OF THE BROTHERS WHO ARE PARTNERS [IN THE INHERITED ESTATE][1] WAS APPOINTED[2] TO A GOVERNMENT POST[3] THE INCOME FROM THE APPOINTMENT IS TO BE EQUALLY DIVIDED BETWEEN ALL THE BROTHERS.[4] [IF ONE OF THEM] CONTRACTED A DISEASE AND HAD HIMSELF CURED, THE [EXPENSES OF THE] CURE [MUST BE DEFRAYED] OUT OF HIS OWN.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: The appointment[5] [in our Mishnah means] a government appointment.[6]

Our Rabbis taught: [In the case where] one of the brothers was appointed [tax] collector or overseer,[7] if [the appointment was] due to the brothers[8] [the income[9] belongs] to the brothers; if [the appointment was] due to himself[10] [the income belongs] to himself. 'If [the appointment was] due to the brothers', [it was said). [the income belongs] to the brothers'; [is not this] obvious! — This is required only [in the case] where he is exceptionally' smart [since] it might have been said [that] his smartness had caused him [to receive the appointment].it was necessary to teach us [that this is not so]. Our Rabbis taught: [If] one of the brothers took [from an inherited estate][11] two hundred zuz to study Torah or to learn a trade. the brothers can tell him:[12] 'If you are with us you [can] have [your] maintenance; if you are not with us. you [can] have no maintenance'. But let them give [it] to him wherever he is? — This [is proof] in support of R. Huna. For R. Huna said, 'The blessing of a house [is proportionate] to its size'[13] Then let them give him according to the blessing of the house![14] -That is so[15] . [IF ONE OF THEM] CONTRACTED A DISEASE AND HAD HIMSELF CURED, THE [EXPENSES OF THE] CURE [MUST BE DEFRAYED] OUT OF HIS OWN. Rabin sent in the name of R. El'a: This applies only[16] [to the case] where he contracted the disease through [his own] negligence. but [if] by accident the [cost of the] cure is [defrayed] from the common funds. What is meant by negligence?-As R. Hanina [taught]. For R. Hanina said:[17] Every' thing is in the power of heaven except [illness through] cold [or] heat; for it is said, Cold [and] heat[18] are in the way of the froward. he that keepeth his soul holdeth himself far from them.[19]

MISHNAH. IF SOME OF THE BROTHERS HAVE BESTOWED GIFTS AS GROOMSMEN[20] IN THE LIFETIME OF [THEIR] FATHER[21] [WHEN] THE WEDDING GIFTS ARE RECIPROCATED[22] THEY REVERT TO THE COMMON FUNDS OF THE ESTATE; FOR [THE RECIPROCATION OF] WEDDING GIFTS MAY BE CLAIMED THROUGH A COURT OF LAW[23] . IF, HOWEVER, ONE HAS SENT TO HIS FRIEND JARS OF WINE OR JARS OF OIL[24] ,HE CANNOT CLAIM THEM[25] THROUGH A COURT OF LAW, BECAUSE [THE PRESENTATIONS OF] SUCH [GIFTS] ARE [MERE ACTS OF] LOVINGKINDNESS.[26]

GEMARA A contradiction was raised: [If] his father had sent [through] him[27] a wedding gift. the reciprocated gift returns to him.[27] [If] a wedding gift was sent[28] to his father, the reciprocated gift[29] is to be returned[30] from the common funds![31] - R. Assi replied in the name of R — Johanan: Our Mishnah also speaks[32] [of the case where the gift] was sent to his father. But, surely it was stated, IF SOME OF THE BROTHERS ACTED AS GROOMSMEN!-Read, 'TO SOME'.[33] But. Surely. it was taught. [WHEN] THE WEDDING GIFTS ARE RECIPROCATED! — It means this: [When] it has to be reciprocated, it is returned from the common funds. R. Assi said: There is no difficulty:[34] Here[35] [it is a case] where [the father] did not specify[36] ; here[37] [it refers to the case] where he did specify; as It was taught: If his father sent wedding gifts [through] him,[38] the reciprocated gift belongs to him.[39] If his father. [however.] sent wedding gifts without specifying [which son was to take them],the reciprocated gift reverts to the common estate.[40] And Samuel explained: Here[41] it is a case of a levir[42] who is not [entitled] to receive the prospective possessions[43] of his dead brother' as those which he already possessed[44] . Does this then imply that the other[45] must repay;[46] [why could] he [not] say. 'Give me my. shoshbin and I will rejoice with him'?[47] Has it not been taught. 'Where it is the custom to return[48] the [token of] betrothal[49] it [must] be returned, [and] where the custom is not to return. it [need] not [be] returned'; and R. Joseph b. Abba said in the name of Mar 'Ukba in the name of .Samuel,'This applies only to the case[50] where she died but [where] he died it [need] not [be] returned. What is the reason? Because she can say:

(3) אומנות Lit., 'handicraft', 'trade' . 'workmanship' : a form of compulsory service exacted by the Roman government from different households in turn. Barth, J., Etym.Studies 60,connects the word with Assyrian umanate, 'troop'. 'army'.

(4) Lit., 'he fell for the middle or common funds .Since his appointment is due to his membership of the family all its members are entitled to its benefits, (v. however n. 7 and 9 infra).

(12) If he expects maintenance from them while he is away from home in pursuit of his studies or trade.
(13) Keth. 101a. The more the members of a household the cheaper the cost of living. The absent brother has consequently saved little by his departure while the amount he requires for his maintenance is incomparably higher than what would have been the case had he remained with the family.

(21) Who defrayed the cost of the presents.
(22) On the occasion of the marriage of one of the sons after their father's death.
(23) The gifts are consequently regarded as a loan and as part of the common estate.
(24) As an ordinary gift: not as that of a shoshbin.
(25) Lit.. 'they cannot he collected'.
(26) The recipient does not incur any liability'.
(27) His son who was a shoshebin.
(28) By a shoshbin.
(29) That is sent after the father's death on the occasion of that groomsman's marriage.
(30) A reciprocated wedding gift being regarded as a loan. (V supra note 3), it is the duty of the orphans to repay it as any other of the debts of their father.
(31) From the first part of this Baraitha it follows that a reciprocated wedding gift belongs to the son through whom the father had sent the original gift; how, then, could it be stated in our Mishnah that a reciprocated gift reverts not to the son but to the common estate?
(32) Lit., 'when we learnt'.
(33) I.e., when a gift sent in return for the one made by their father reached them.
(34) Even if the meaning of the Mishnah is taken as it is read.
(35) In our Mishnah.
(36) Which son was to act as shoshbin (R. Gersh.) Hence. the reciprocated gift reverts to the common estate.
(37) In the cited Baraitha.
(39) The son who acted as shoshbin.
(40) Though one of the sons had acted as the shoshbin and carried the presents.
(41) Our Mishnah according to which the reciprocated gift reverts to the common estate.
(42) The husband's brother, who, in accordance with Deut. XXV, 5, married the widow of his brother who died childless and who, had he been alive, would have been entitled as shoshbin to the reciprocated gift.
(43) The reciprocated gift is the prospective property of the dead brother, which the brother who married his widow cannot inherit, though he inherits all property that was in his brother's possession prior to his death.
(44) Hence the gift reverts to the common estate.
(45) The original recipient of the gifts from the dead brother.
(46) To the heirs of him who presented him with the gifts.
(47) He should only be expected to reciprocate, i.e., to act as best man for his friend as the latter had acted for him, but not to send presents to heirs who have no claims on him.
(48) In the case where the bride died before the marriage took place (as explained infra).
(49) The token of betrothal, consisting of money or any object of value, which the man gives to the woman at betrothal, whereby the union was legalised.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 145a

‘Give me my husband I will rejoice with him’;[1] here also he[2] could say. ‘Give me my shoshbin and I will rejoice with him’![3] R. Joseph replied: We deal here with a case where[4] he[5] rejoiced with him[6] the seven days of the [wedding] feast[7] but had no opportunity of repaying him[6] before he died.[8] May it be suggested [that the question whether a betrothed woman may advance the plea] . ‘Give me my husband and I will rejoice with him’ [is a matter of dispute between] Tannaim? For it was taught: ‘[In the case where] a person betrothes a woman,[9] [if] a virgin she is entitled to two hundred [zuz] and [to] a maneh[10] [if] a widow, Where it is the custom to return the [token of] betrothal[11] it [must] be returned; where it is the custom not to return the [token of] betrothal [it is] not [to be] returned; [these are] the words of R. Nathan. R. Judah the Prince said, in truth [the Sages] said: Where it is the custom to return, it [must] be returned; where it is the custom not to return, it [need] not [be] returned’. [Does not] R. Judah the Prince [say exactly the same thing] as the first Tanna: [Must it] not then [be explained][12] that [the difference] between them lies in [the admissibility of the plea]. ‘Give me my husband and I will rejoice with him,’ and that there is a lacuna [in the text] which should read[13] thus: ‘[In the case where] a person betrothes a woman, [if] a virgin she is entitled to two hundred [zuz, and [to] a maneh [if] a widow. This applies only to the case where he has retracted but [if] she died, [the token of betrothal] is to be returned where it is the custom to return; where it is the custom not to return, it [need] not be returned — This, [furthermore.] applies only [to the case] where she died, but [where] he died.it [need] not [be] returned.’ What is the reason? Because she can plead. ‘Give me my husband and I will rejoice with him’ And [with reference to this statement] R. Judah the Prince said[14] ‘In truth [the Sages] stated [that] whether he died. or she died. it Is to be returned where it is the custom to return; where it is the custom not to return.it [need] not [be] returned’;[15] and she cannot say, ‘Give me my husband and l will rejoice with him’![16] -No; all[17] [may agree that] she may advance the plea. ‘Give me my husband and I will rejoice with him’; and [in the case] where he died no one [in fact] disputes [this].[18] Their dispute has reference only[19] [to the case] where she died; their [point of) disagreement [centering] here on [the question whether a token of] betrothal is unreturnable.[20] R. Nathan holds the opinion that [a token of] betrothal is not unreturnable,[20] and R. Judah the Prince holds the opinion that [a token of] betrothal is unreturnable. But surely it was taught. ‘Where it is the custom to return. it [must] be returned’![21] -He means this: And [as regards the] gifts.[22] they [must] certainly be returned where it is the custom to return [them]. These Tannaim [differ on the same principle][23] as the following Tannaim — For it was taught: If one betrothes a woman[24] with a talent,[25] [if] a virgin she is entitled to two hundred [zuz][26] and [to a] maneh [if] a widow; these are the words.of R. Meir. R. Judah said: A virgin is entitled to two hundred [zuz] and a widow [to] a maneh. and the remainder[27] she returns to him. R. Jose said: [If] he betrothed her with twenty [shekels].[28] he gives her, [in addition,] thirty halves; [if] he betrothed her with thirty [shekels]. he gives her, [in addition]. twenty halves. Now, of what case is it spoken here?[29] If it is suggested [of that] where she died; does she, [in such a case, it may be asked]. receive her kethubah.[30] But [in the case] where he died? Why, [it may be argued again.] does she[31] return to him the remainder? Let her advance the plea.’Give me my husband and I will rejoice with him’! If. however, [it be suggested that we deal] with [the case of] the wife of an Israelite who committed adultery,[32] ‘then, it may be queried.in what [circumstances. did this happen]? If with [her] consent, does she [in such a case] receive [her]kethubah?[33] And if under duress, she is surely permitted to [continue to live with] him![34] Hence [the Baraitha] must [deal] with [the case of] the wife of a priest who [committed adultery] under duress[35] and the [point of] disagreement between them[36] is [the question of] whether [a token of] betrothal is unreturnable. R. Meir holds the opinion [that a token of] betrothal is unreturnable;[37] and R. Judah holds the opinion [that a token of betrothal is] not unreturnable,[38] while R. Jose is doubtful [as to] whether it is returnable or not, and, consequently. [if] he betrothed her with twenty [shekels][39] he gives her,[40] [in addition].thirty halves,[41] [and if] he betrothed her with thirty [shekels][42] he gives her twenty halves.[43] R. Joseph b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman: Wherever It Is the custom to return.[44] it [must] be returned. And the explanation is Nehardea[45] What [is the practice in] the rest of Babylon? — Both Rabbah and R. Joseph stated: Presents[46] are returned;[47] [tokens of] betrothal are not returned. R. Papa said: The law [is that] whether he died or she died or he retracted., presents[46] are to be returned, [tokens of] betrothal are not to be returned . If she retracted, even [tokens of) betrothal [must] also be returned. Amemar said: [A token of] betrothal [must] not be returned. [This is] a preventive measure against the possibility' of assumption that betrothal would take effect in the case of her sister.[48] R. Ashi said: Her bill of divorce [would] prove her [status][49] But [the statement] of R. Ashi is to be rejected '[50] for there [may] be some who heard of the one[51] and did not hear of the other.[52] FOR [THE RECIPROCATION OF] WEDDING GIFTS MAY BE CLAIMED THROUGH A COURT OF LAw'. Our Rabbis taught: Five things were said in respect of [reciprocation of a] wedding gift: It may be claimed through a court of law; it is to be reciprocated at its proper time;[53] and it is not subject to [the restrictions of] usury;[54]

(1) I.e., since it is not her fault that the marriage was not consummated she is entitled to retain, the money or the object that was given to her at the betrothal.

(2) The original recipient of the gifts.

(3) It is not his fault that his friend died and that he cannot, consequently. reciprocate his services and gifts. How, then, can it he assumed above that the heirs are entitled to the reciprocation of the gifts?

(4) Lit., 'here, in what case are we engaged?- As for instance'.

(5) The original recipient.

(7) And has thus become liable to present the gifts in reciprocation of those he had received.

(16) May it. consequently. be assumed that only the first Tanna does, but that R. Judah does not allow the plea 'Give me husband etc.'?

(17) Lit.. 'all the world', i.e.. even R. Judah.

(18) Cf. n. 4; even R. Judah agrees that the plea is eligible.

(19) Lit., 'when do they dispute'.

(20) Lit, 'given for sinking'. i.e., 'that it be not returned under any conditions whatsoever.

(21) And, as was stated above, even R. Judah agrees on this point

(22) The Sablonoth, dona sponsalitia (v. infra p. 628, n. 6). which the groom gives to the bride after betrothal, not forming part of the legal token of betrothal.

(25) Sixty maneh (cf. R. Gersh. a.I.).

(26) As her kethubah, in addition to the talent (the token of betrothal) which she received. This shows that R. Meir holds that a token of betrothal is unreturnable under any circumstances. (R.Gersh.).

(27) Of the talent, after the amount of the kethubah had been deducted. This shows that according to R. Judah a token of betrothal is returnable under certain conditions.

(28) Jose's statement is explained infra.

(29) Lit., 'in what are we engaged', in the Baraitha cited.

(30) Surely she does not.

(31) According to R. Judah.

(32) In consequence of which she has been divorced by her husband from whom she now claims her kethubah.

(33) A woman who played the harlot is certainly not entitled to it.
(34) So that the question of a kethubah could not arise. And if he were to insist on divorcing her, despite her misfortune, she would undoubtedly be entitled to her kethubah.
(35) And a priest. being forbidden to live with such a wife, must divorce her,
(36) The Tannaim of the Baraitha.
(37) Hence he stated that the amount of the kethubah must he given to her in addition to the talent which she received as the token of her betrothal.
(38) Consequently she must in such circumstances return the difference between the talent (given to her as token of betrothal) and the amount of her kethubah.
(39) Or eighty zuz (a shekel==four zuz).
(40) If she is a widow.
(41) Of a shekel, viz. , sixty zuz. The twenty shekels with which he betrothed her, being of a doubtful ownership (R. Jose not being certain whether a token of betrothal is unreturnable) is divided, and she accordingly retains ten shekels, viz., forty zuz. Since a widow is entitled to a kethubah of a maneh, or a hundred zuz he must give her in addition sixty zuz (thirty halves of a shekel).
(42) In which case she retains fifteen shekels or sixty zuz.
(43) Of a shekel viz., forty zuz, thus completing the total amount of the kethubah of a hundred zuz.
(44) The token of betrothal, and gifts.
(45) Nehardea was a place where it was customary to return both the token of betrothal and gifts.
(46) Such as jewels which the bridegroom sends the bride after betrothal.
(47) If she died or was divorced.
(48) Since it might be assumed that the return of the token of betrothal implied that the betrothal was invalid, the man might In consequence be allowed to marry his first wife's sister.
(49) That her betrothal was valid. Had It been invalid there would have been no need for a divorce. Hence a token of betrothal may be returned.
(50) ברותא ,outside', or בדתא. 'invention', 'fiction;,v. B.M. 9a..
(51) Lit., 'this', i.e., of the return of the token.
(52) I.e, of he divorce.

'And it is not subject to [the restrictions of] usury' — because he[4] did not give it to him with this intention[5] 'And the Sabbatical year does not cause Its cancellation' — because the Scriptural [injunction] . he shall not exact,[6] cannot be applied to it.[7] 'And the firstborn does not receive a double portion' — because it is prospective.[8] and a firstborn does not receive [a double portion] in prospective [property] as in that which was in [his father's] possession [at the time of his death]. R. Kahana said, [This is] the rule of groomsmanship: [If] he[9] was In town,[10] he should have come.[11] [If] he[12] [could] hear the sound of the [wedding] bells,[13] he should have come.[11] [If] he [could] not hear the sound of the bells,[14] the [other][15] should have informed him. He has , therefore, a grievance [against him] ,[16] but [must] nevertheless repay him. And up to how much?[17] -Abaye said: Wedding guests[18] are in the habit of putting in their stomachs up to the value of a zuz brought in their hands;[19] up to four [zuz].a half [of the value of the gifts] is paid;[20] in case of any higher values,[21] every man according to his importance.[22] Our Rabbis taught: If a person rendered service [to a bridegroom][23] at a public[24] [wedding] and he[25] [now] desires [the latter] to reciprocate his services[26] at [a] private [wedding] he[27] may tell him, 'At a public [wedding] l will act for you as you have acted for me.[28] If he rendered service to one[29] [who married] a virgin. and he [now] desires [the latter] to reciprocate'' [on the occasion of his marriage] with a widow he" can say to him, '[At your marriage] with a virgin I will act for you as you acted for me'[28] If he rendered service to one[29] on [the occasion of his] second [marriage] and he [now] desires [the latter] to reciprocate[30] on [the occasion of his own] first [marriage]. he[31] can say to him, 'When you will marry a second wife l will reciprocate'[28] If he rendered service to one[29] [on the occasion of his marriage] with one [woman] and he [now] desires [the latter] to reciprocate'' [on the occasion of his marriage] with two, [the latter] can say to him, '[On the occasion of your marriage] with one I will act for you as you acted for me.'[28] Our Rabbis taught: Rich in possessions[32] [and] rich in pomp[33] — that is a master of aggadoth.[34] Rich in money[35] [and] rich in oil[36] — that is a master in dialectics.[37] Rich in products[38] [and] rich in stores[39] — that is a master of traditions.[40] All. [however]. are dependent on[32] the master of wheat. [i.e.] Gemara.[41] R. Zera said in the name of Rab: What [character is meant] by the Scriptural text, All the days of the poor are evil?'[42] — A master of Gemara;[43] but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast'' refers to[44] a master of the Mishnah[45] Raba reversed the order; and this is what R. Mesharsheya stated in the name of Raba: What [characters are referred to] in the Scriptural text, Whoso quarrieth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood is warmed up thereby?[46] is He that quarrieth stones shall be hurt therewith, has reference to[47] the masters of the Mishnah;[48] and he that cleaveth wood is warmed up thereby, has reference to[47] the masters of Gemara[49] R. Hanina said: All the days of the poor are evil.[42] refers [to him][44] who has a wicked wife; but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast,[42] refers'[44] [to him] who has a good wife. R. Jannai said: All the days of the poor are evil[42] refers to[44] one who is fastidious; but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast[50] refers to one of a robust constitution. R. Johanan said: All the days of the poor are evil,[50] refers to one who is compassionate; but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast,[50] refers to one who is cruel. And R. Joshua b. Levi said: All the days of the poor are evil,[50] refers to an impatient[51] man; but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast,[50] refers to a contented man.

(1) If it occurred before the gift had been reciprocated.

(2) Though it causes the cancellation of debts (cf. Deut. XV,.2ff).

(3) Where the gift reverted to the common estate of the heirs.

(4) The shoshbin.

(5) That the reciprocated gift shall be of a higher value than the original one. It might just as well have been worth less.

(6) Deut. XV, 2.

(7) Since it cannot be exacted at the .Sabbatical year, reciprocation not being due until the groomsman celebrates his marriage. (Cf. Mak. 3b).

(8) The reciprocated gift was never in the possession of the first-born's father; and all he inherited was only a claim for the future.

(9) The man who has to reciprocate the wedding gift.

(10) When his shoshbin celebrated his own marriage.

(11) With the gift. And since he did not, it may be claimed through a court of law.

(12) Being out of town.

(13) Heb. tabla, טבלא , Gr, , an instrument from which bells were suspended, used at bridal and other processions. [Others, 'drum', 'tambourine'; v. Krauss, op cit 92ff.]

(14) (Either he was not within hearing distance (R. Gersh.): or, the custom had fallen into desuetude in the locality (Krauss. op. cit. II, 41).]

(16) For failing to inform him.

(17) I.e., when the reciprocated gift is claimed through a court or when it is repaid in any other way, in the case where the giver of it did not participate in the wedding festivities, how much may he deduct from the value of the gift in lieu of the food and refreshments he would have consumed had he attended the festivities?

(19) l.e.,if they bring gifts not exceeding one zuz in value they consume refreshments and food, at the wedding festivities, to the full value of their gift. Consequently, if the present bridegroom (the former shoshbin) had brought a gift not exceeding one zuz in value, the first bridegroom (to whom it was brought and from whom the reciprocated gift is now claimed) need not now return anything; since be saved the claimant (the present bridegroom) the value of a zuz by absenting himself from his wedding.

(20) Guests who bring gifts worth more than a zuz but not exceeding four zuz receive greater attention, and their entertainment is worth half the value of their gifts. Hence, half the value of the reciprocated gifts may be deducted in lieu of the food and refreshments saved.
(22) The more important the man and the more costly his gifts, the more the expense of his entertainment. Such a person. if he could not attend the festivities, may' consequently deduct a proportionate sum from the value of his reciprocated gift.
(23) Lit., 'he did with him', i.e., acted as shoshbin and brought the customary gifts.
(24) Gr. ,' (Lat. pompa), 'attended with pomp and a public procession'.
(25) The first mentioned.
(26) Lit., 'to do with him'.
(27) The latter.
(28) I.e., a person need only reciprocate under conditions similar to those under which service was rendered to him. If, therefore, he is asked to act under different conditions he may refuse, and there is no obligation on his part either to reciprocate the gifts or to come to the wedding.

(35) Lit., sela'im.
(36) Heb.. Tekoa', תקוע, a Palestine town famous for its oils. Others, 'rich in the ownership of houses.'
(37) [Who by his creative powers is continually able to establish new points and evolve new principles. thus making his knowledge as continually productive as the possession of money and choicest oils.]
(38) Lit., '(things that are) measured',
(39) Lit., 'cellar', 'store-room'.
(40) (Who keeps his store of traditional teachings in readiness for guidance whenever the occasion arises.]
(41) The discussions and interpretations of the Mishnah and Baraithoth, and the decisions arrived at, which are indispensable for right practice and conduct.
(42) Prov. XV.15.
(43) [Who is often in difficulty in finding his way through the maze of the involved and intricate argumentation.]
(44) Lit., 'this',
(45) Where the teachings are given clearly and precisely.
(46) Eccl. X,9, . Heb. yissaken, 'is warmed up'. (E.V. 'endangered').
(47) Lit., 'these'.
(48) [The study of the Mishnah alone, in the absence of the principles underlying the teaching thereof', affords no competence for the giving of decisions, V. Sotah 22a.]
(49) The study of the Gemara affords a sensible appreciation of the principles of the teaching of the Mishnah and thus enables the student to make practical application of his learning.]
(50) Prov. XV. 15

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 146a

R. Joshua b. Levi further stated: 'All the days of the poor are evil? Surely there are Sabbaths and Festivals![1] — [The explanation, however, is] according to Samuel. For Samuel said: A change of diet is the beginning of sickness'[2] It is written in the Book of Ben Sira: All the days of the poor are evil; Ben Sira says : The nights also. Lower than [all] roofs is his roof, [and] the rain of other roofs [pours down] upon his roof; on the height of mountains is his vineyard. [and] the earth of his vineyard [is washed down] into the vineyards [of others] .[3]

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON HAD SENT WEDDING PRESENTS TO THE HOUSE OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW,[4] EVEN IF HE SENT A HUNDRED MANEH AND ATE THERE A BRIDEGROOM'S MEAL, [EVEN IF IT WERE ONLY OF THE VALUE] OF ONE DENAR, THEY[5] [CANNOT [ANY MORE] BE RECLAIMED.[6] [IF. HOWEVER]. HE DID NOT EAT THERE A BRIDEGROOM'S MEAL THEY[5] MAY BE RECLAIMED. [IF] HE SENT MANY PRESENTS WHICH WERE TO RETURN WITH HER TO THE HOUSE OF HER HUSBAND.[7] THESE MAY BE RECLAIMED.[8] [IF. HOWEVER, HE SENT A] FEW PRESENTS WHICH SHE WAS TO USE AT THE HOUSE OF HER FATHER, [THESE MAY] NOT BE RECLAIMED.

GEMARA. Raba said: Only [when the meal[9] was worth] a denar,[10] but not [when it was worth] less than a denar. [Is not this] obvious? We have, [surely], learnt, ONE DENAR! — It might have been assumed that the same law [applies] even [to the case where it was worth] less than a denar, and that [the reason] why a denar was mentioned[11] [was because that] was the usual cost,[12] hence [it was necessary to] teach us [that we do not say so]. We learnt, HE ATE; what [is the law if] he drank? We learnt, HE; what [is the law in the case of] his representative?[13] We learnt, THERE; what [if] it[14] was sent to him?[15] -Come and hear what Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: It once happened with a' certain man who had sent to the house of his father-in-law a hundred wagons of jars of wine and jars of oil, and vessels of silver and of gold and silk garments while he [himself]. in his joy. came riding. and stopped at the door of the house of his father-in-law. They brought out a cup of something warm and he drank and died. This practical question[16] was brought up by R. Aha. the 'Governor of the Castle' ,[17] before the Sages at Usha , and they decided, 'Gifts which were intended[18] to be used up[19] cannot be reclaimed; and such as are not intended to be used up[19] may be reclaimed. ' From this it may be inferred [that] even if he [only] drank; from this it may [also] be inferred [that] even [if the meal was worth less than a denar.[20] R. Ashi asked: 'Who can tell us that they did not crush a pearl[21] for him which was worth a thousand zuz and gave him to drink! [May] it be inferred, [however that] even if [it] was sent to him?[22] — [No;] it is possible [that] anywhere [near] the door of the house of one's father-in-law is [the same] as the house [itself]. The question was raised: Has he[23] to pay[24] in proportion?[25] [Further:] Is he entitled to[26] the appreciation of the gifts?[27] [Do we say that] since if they[28] are available they are returned to him, the appreciation took place in his possession; or, perhaps. since if they were lost or stolen she[29] has to make compensation. the appreciation took place in her possession?-This is undecided. Raba inquired: What [is the law in the case of] gifts intended to be used up that were not used up?[30] -Come and hear: 'And this practical question was brought up by R. Aha, the governor of the castle, before the Sages at Usha and they decided [that] gifts intended to be used up [can] not be reclaimed, and such as are not intended to be used up may be reclaimed' — Does[31] not [this refer] even [to the case] where they were not used up! — No; where they were used up. Come and hear: [IF, HOWEVER, HE SENT A] FEW PRESENTS WHICH SHE WAS TO USE AT THE HOUSE OF HER FATHER, [THESE MAY] NOT BE RECLAIMED![32] — Raba interpreted [the Mishnah as referring to] a veil or a hair-net.[33] Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: It once happened that a certain person sent to the house of his father-in-law new wine and new oil and garments of new linen[34] at [the] Pentecost season. What does [this][35] teach us? — If you wish I would say: The praise of the land of Israel.[36] And if you prefer [it] I would say: That if he advances [such] a plea it is accepted.[37] Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: It once happened that a certain person was told [that] his wife was defective in the sense of smell[38] He followed her into a ruin to test her[39] He said unto her, 'I sense the smell of radish[40] in Galilee.'[41]

(1) During which days, at least, the poor were provided with wholesome and substantial meals.

(2) For a poor man, who is in the habit of consuming all the week nothing but dry bread, the meat and the other expensive foodstuffs, with which he is supplied on Sabbaths and Festivals, cause indigestion.

(3) [Not in our texts].

(4) On the morning after the betrothal it was customary for the bridegroom to send to the house of his father-in-law, in honour of the bride, jewels and various kinds of wine or oil. [These gifts were known as Sablonoth, סבלונות, dona sponsalitia, derived according to Kohut from Gr,  and according to Maimonides from סבך 'to carry', as

משאת 'gift' from נשא.]
(5) The presents.
(6) Even in the case where he or she died, or where he desired to divorce her. It is assumed that the bridegroom, thanks to his joy and satisfaction with the company and the meal, however small the latter might have been. has definitely determined to present the gifts wholeheartedly and permanently.
(7) As the wife's property.
(8) Cf. p. 628, n. 8.
(9) Which the bridegroom had in the house of his father-in-law.
(10) Only then may the gifts be reclaimed.
(11) Lit., 'taught'.
(12) Lit., 'thing'.
(13) Who had a meal of the value of a denar at the house of his father-in-law.
(14) The meal.
(17) [Cf Neh. VII, 2. Here probably an hereditary title].
(18) Lit., 'made',
(19) Before the wedding.
(20) The drink he had could not have been worth a denar.
(21) For medicinal purposes (Rashb.). A pearl was regarded as a life.giving substance. Cf. M. A. Canney. JMEOS. XV, 43ff.
(22) Since the drink was brought to the door.
(23) A bridegroom who consumed a meal of less value than a denar.
(24) In a case where the gifts are reclaimed,
(25) According to Raba who stated that if the value of the meal was less than a denar the gifts may he reclaimed, has the bridegroom to pay at least for what he has consumed? (Cf. Tosaf. a.I., s,v., איבעיא).
(26) Lit., 'what',
(27) That took place during the time they were at the bride's house.
(28) The gifts themselves.
(29) The bride.
(30) Are they to be returned or not?
(31) Lit., 'what'.
(32) Since here, unlike the wording of the previous citation, the expression. 'intended to be used up'. does not occur, it is assumed to refer to all cases, even to those where they were not used up.
(33) I.e., articles of little value, the return of which one does not expect. Hence, even if they were not used up they need not be returned.
(34) Of flax that grew in that year.
(35) The mention of Pentecost.
(36) That its harvests are earlier than those of other countries.
(37) Lit. , 'his plea is a plea'. i.e., if he reclaims such gifts. asserting that he had sent them at the Pentecost season, he is believed. Though that season is too early for the harvest in other countries it is not so in Palestine.
(38) תותרנית. 'in the habit of sniffing'.
(39) A husband who finds his wife to be affected with a hidden defect is entitled, under certain conditions, to divorce her without a kethubah.
(40) He had with him a radish. According to others, a date.
(41) The incident occurred near that district; and the object of his test was to ascertain whether she could sense the smell of the radish. According to the other interpretation. he expected her to reply that she sensed the smell of a date and not that of a radish,

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 146b

She said to him, 'Would that one gave me of the dates of Jericho and l would eat with it.'[1]

[Thereupon] the ruin fell upon her and she died. The Sages decided:[2] Since he only followed her in order to test her,[3] he is not [entitled to be] her heir [if] she died [during the test][4] FEW PRESENTS WHICH SHE WAS TO USE AT THE HOUSE OF HER FATHER, ETC. Rabin the elder sat before R. Papa and stated [the following]: Whether she died, or he died, [or] he retracted,[5] the wedding gifts are to be returned, foodstuff[s] and drink[s][6] are not to be returned. If [however] she retracted, even a bundle of vegetables [must be returned]. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: And it is valued for them[7] at the cheap[er] price of meat,[8] Up to how much is [considered] cheap?-Up to a third.[9] MISHNAH. IF A DYING MAN GAVE ALL HIS PROPERTY IN WRITING, TO OTHERS, AND LEFT [FOR HIMSELF] SOME [PIECE OF] LAND[10] HIS GIFT[11] IS VALID[12] . [IF, HOWEVER,] HE DID NOT LEAVE [FOR HIMSELF] SOME [PIECE OF] LAND, HIS GIFT IS INVALID[13]

GEMARA. Who is the Tanna [that holds the view] that the assumed motive[14] is a determining factor?[15] -R. Nahman replied: It [is the view of] R. Simeon b. Menasya. For it was taught: In the case of [a person] whose son went to a distant country[16] and having heard that the latter had died. assigned all his property, in writing. to a stranger. though his son subsequently appeared. his gift is. [nevertheless]. legally] valid.[17] R. Simeon b. Menasya said: His gift is not [legally] valid; for had he known that his son was alive, he would not have given it away.[18] R. Shesheth said: It [is the view of] R. Simeon Shezuri.[19] For It was taught : At first it was held [that] when one who was led out in chains[20] ,said, 'Write a bill of divorce for my wife', It is to be written and delivered [to her];[21] later, however, It was held[22] [that the same law applies] also [to] one who goes out [to sea] or on a caravan [journey]. R. Simeon Shezuri said: [The same law] also [applies to one] who is dangerously [ill][23] For what reason, however, does not R. Nahman establish it[24] in accordance with [the view of] R. Simeon Shezuri?-There [the case is] different, since he said, 'write'.[25] And why does not R. Shesheth establish it[24] in accordance with [the view of] R. Simeon b. Menasya?-A well grounded assumption[26] is different.[27] Who is the author of the following ruling[28] which was taught by our Rabbis? 'If a person was lying ill in bed, and was asked, "To whom [shall] your estate [be given]? and he replied

(1) Jericho was famous for its dates which were so sweet that radishes had to he eaten with them to mitigate their excessive sweetness.

(2) Where the husband claimed her possessions as her heir.

(3) And had he found her to he defective, as he suspected, he would have insisted on divorcing her, he forfeited thereby his rights to be her heir. As soon as one determines to divorce his wife, if she were found to be suffering from some defect, he loses the privileges of an heir unless a reconciliation between them subsequently took place.

(4) Since in that case there was no time for their reconciliation before death took place.

(5) And divorced her.

(6) Sent by the bridegroom to the bride.

(7) Where foodstuffs are returned,

(8) Or any other foodstuff.

(11) Even if he recovers from that illness.

(12) Since he left for himself some land it is assumed that he did not intend the gift to be conditional upon his death, and it is. therefore, regarded as having been given by a man in good health. It is, consequently. valid even if he recovered from his illness.

(13) If he recovered. Since he left nothing for himself it is obvious that at the time he made the gift he did not expect to live any longer. Had he hoped to recover from his illness he would not have given away all his landed property. leaving himself destitute.

(14) אומדנא, lit., assumption'. 'estimation'.

(15) Lit., 'that we go after assumption', i.e., that the assumed motives and intentions of a testator are to be taken into consideration when deciding the legality of his 'statements In our Mishnah, the assumed motive and intention are obviously the determining factors (V., notes 3 ,4) ;who is its author?

(16) Lit., ‘country of (i.e., beyond) the sea’.
(17) Since it was not specifically made conditional upon his son's death.
(18) Lit., ‘write them’. Thus it has been shown that R. Simeon b. Menasya takes the assumed motive and intention into consideration,
(19) Others, ‘of Shezar’, [Sedschut between Akko and Kefar ‘Anan, in Gallilee. v. Klein, NB. p’ 7.]
(20) קוֹלָר ‘collar’. the chain, or iron band round a prisoner's neck.
(21) Though he only authorized the writing of the divorce, and not its delivery, it is assumed that he had forgotten to mention the latter owing to the perturbed state of his mind
(22) Lit., ‘they returned to say’.
(23) Because it is assumed that his motive and intentions were to have his wife divorced so that she might be exempt from the levirate marriage and from halizah.. Since the same principles of motive and intention underlie the law of our Mishnah,, it may be taken to represent the view of R. Simeon Shezuri.
(24) Our Mishnah.
(25) By this instruction It was made clear that he wished his wife to be legally divorced; and since this cannot be done without the delivery of the bill of divorcement, his instruction must he taken to, extend to, the delivery also. For the case of our Mishnah, however,this argument cannot be applied.
(26) In the case of the father who gave all his property to a stranger. since he did not give it away so long as he believed his son to he alive, it is clear that the sole reason why he gave it away subsequently was the reported death of his son.
(27) From the case of our Mishnah Since most ailing persons recover, there is not necessarily any reason for the assumption that the gift was due to the testator's belief that he would not recover.
(28) Lit., ‘who taught that’.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 147a

‘l thought I had a son; now, [however] that I have no son, [let] my estate [be given] to X’; [or] if a person was lying ill in bed, and on being asked to whom his estate [shall be given]. he replied, ‘I thought my wife was with child; now’ [however] ‘that my wife is not with child, [let] my estate [be given] to X’; and it [subsequently] transpired that he had a son or that his wife was pregnant, his gift is invalid,’[1] Is it to be assumed that this [statement represents the view of] R Simeon b. Menasya and not [that of] the Rabbis?[2] — It may even be said [to represent the view of] the Rabbis, [but] ‘I thought’ is different.[3] And what did he that raised the question imagine?[4] — It might be suggested that he[5] was merely mentioning his grief,[6] hence [it was necessary] to teach us [that this is not so]. R. Zera said in the name of Rab: Whence [is it proved] that the gift of a dying man[7] [is considered valid] by the Torah?-For it is said, Then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass to his daughter[8] [which[9] implies that] there exists another transfer which is [the same] as this [one]. And which is it? It is the gift of a dying man.[10] R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha said: [It may be derived] from the following.[11] Then shall ye give his inheritance unto his brethren,[12] [which[13] implies that] there exists another giving which is like this [one]. And which is it? It is the gift of a dying man.[14] Why does not R. Nahman derive it from , Then ye shall cause to pass?[14] — He requires that [expression] for [the following] ‘ according to Rabbi. For it was taught: Rabbi said, In [the case of] all [the relatives[15] the expression of] ‘giving’ is used but here[16] [the expression] used is that of ‘causing to pass’,[17] [in order to teach] you that no other but a daughter causes an inheritance to pass from one tribe to [another] tribe, since [in her case] her son and her husband are her heirs.[18] And why does not R. Zera derive it from, Then shall ye give?[19] — This is the usual [expression] of Scripture.[20] R. Menashya b. Jeremiah said: [It[21] may be derived] from the following:[22] In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death ; and Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, ‘ Thus saith the Lord; Set thy house in order for thou shalt die, and not live’,[23] by mere verbal instruction.[24] Rami b. Ezekiel said: [It[21] may be derived] from the following: And when Ahitophel saw that his counsel was not followed. he saddled his ass and arose, and got him home into his city and set his house in order, and strangled himself.[25] by mere verbal instruction.[26]

Our Rabbis taught: Ahitophel advised his sons three things: Take no part[27] in strife, and do not rebel against the government of the House of David, and [if] the weather on the Festival of Pentecost is fine sow wheat[28] Mar Zutra stated: It was said, 'cloudy'[29] The Nehardeans said in the name of R. Jacob: 'Fine' [does] not [mean] absolutely fine, nor does 'cloudy' mean completely overcast, but even [when it is] 'cloudy' and the north wind blows [the clouds], it is regarded as 'fine'.[30] R. Abba said to R. Ashi: We rely upon [the weather information] of R. Isaac b. Abdimi. For R. Isaac b. Abdimi said: [At] the termination of[31] the last day of Tabernacles , all watched the smoke of the wood pile.[32] [If] it[33] inclined towards the north, the poor rejoiced and landowners[34] were distressed because [that[35] was an indication] that the yearly rains would be heavy[36] and the crops would decay.[37] [If] it inclined towards the south, the poor were distressed and landowners rejoiced because [that[38] was an indication] that the yearly rains would be scanty and the crops could be preserved[39] ' [If] it inclined towards the east,all were glad;[40] towards the west ,. all were distressed.[41] A contradiction was raised: The east [wind] is always beneficial; the west [wind] is always harmful; the north wind is beneficial for wheat that reached[42] [the stage of] a third [of its maturity].[43] and harmful for olives in blossom; and the south wind is injurious' for wheat that reached[42] [the stage of] a third [of maturity] . and beneficial for olives in blossom. And R. Joseph. (others say Mar Zutra and others say. R. Nahman b. Isaac), said: Your mnemonic is , 'Table in the north and candelabra in the south ;[44] the one[45] Increases Its own[46] and the other[47] increases Its own.[48] -There is no difficulty: This[49] for us,[50] and that[51] for them[52] It was taught: Abba Saul said: Fine [weather at] the Festival of Pentecost is a good sign[53] for all the year. R. Zebid said: If the first day of the New Year is warm, all's the year will be warm; if cold, all[54] the year will be cold. Of what [religious] significance is this[55] [weather information]?

(1) Because it is assumed that if he had known the facts he would not have given his estate to X but to his son or his wife.

(3) In such a case as this, where the testator specifically said that he thought he had no son and that only because he was told that he had no son his estate was to be given to a stranger. even the Rabbis admit that motive which need no longer be merely assumed is the determining factor.

(4) Lit., 'and he that threw (i.e.. argued) what did he throw?' How could he even for one moment assume that the' Rabbis would not in such a case hold the same view as R. Simeon h. Menasya, when the difference between the two cases is so self evident?

(5) The testator,

(6) The mention of the death of his son might not have been due at all to his desire to indicate the cause of his giving away his estate to strangers. It might have been a mere expression of sorrow at having no son to survive him, a fact which the disposal of his estate had brought to his mind.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 147b

— In respect of the prayer of the High Priest [on the Day of Atonement][1] Raba,[2] however, said in the name of R. Nahman: The [validity of a verbal] gift of a dying man is a mere [provision] of the Rabbis[3] lest his mind become affected.[4] ; But did R. Nahman say so?[5] Surely R. Nahman said: Although Samuel had stated that if a person sold a bond of indebtedness to another and subsequently[6] remitted [the debt] it is remitted,[7] and that even an heir may remit,[8] Samuel, [nevertheless]. admits that if he presented it to him as the gift of a dying man, he cannot [subsequently] remit it.[9] [Now]. if it is agreed'[10] that [this[11] is] Biblical, one can well understand the reason why one cannot remit [the debt]; if, however, It is maintained[10] that [this is merely] Rabbinical, why should he not be able to remit [it]? — It is not Biblical; but was given[12] [the same force] as [a law] of the Torah.[13] Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: If a dying man said, 'Let X live[14] in this house' , or,'Let X eat the fruit of this date-tree', his Instructions are to be disregarded[15] unless he used the following expression:[16] 'Give this house to X that he may live in it', or 'Give this date-tree to X that he may eat of its fruit'[17] Does this mean to imply[18] that R. Nahman holds the opinion that [only] the rights[19] that a man in good health may confer,[20] may also be conferred by[21] a dying man, [while those] which a man in good health cannot confer,[21] can neither be conferred by a dying man?[21] Surely Raba said in the name of R Nahman:

(1) When he offered up a special prayer for rain. If the signs indicated heavy rains. his prayer had to be modified.

(2) At this point is resumed the discussion of the theme introduced by R. Zera (p. 634).

(3) Biblically the gift would not be valid unless attended by actual or symbolic acquisition.

(4) As a result of any resistance which might be offered to his instructions. Hence, legal force was given to his verbal and informal instructions as if legal acquisition had taken place.

(5) That the validity of the verbal gift of a dying man n only Rabbinical.

(6) Lit., 'and he returned'.

(7) And the buyer cannot claim the debt from the borrower. He only bought the rights of the creditor which now exist no more. He can, however, reclaim from the creditor (the seller) the sum he paid him for the bond.

(8) A debt he inherited.

(9) B.K. 92a; B.M. 201; Kid. ,38a.

(10) Lit., 'you said'.

(11) The validity of the verbal gift of a dying man.

(12) Lit., 'and they made it'.

(14) Lit., 'shall dwell'.

(15) Lit., 'he said nothing'. X cannot acquire the right of living in the house or that of eating the dates. since the former is abstract, while the dates are nol yet in existence. As such rights cannot be given away by one in good health, even by means of symbolic and legal transfer, the acquisition of the object itself (the house or the tree) being required, a dying man also cannot by his mere verbal instructions (though valid in the acquisition of concrete and existing objects), confer such rights.

(16) Lit., 'until he would say'.

(17) By transferring the possession of the concrete object. the abstract or the yet non-existing. may also simultaneously he transferred.

(18) Lit., 'to say'.

(20) Lit., 'there is'.

(21) Lit.. 'there is not', i.e.,that the only difference between the rights of a healthy, and those of a dying man consists in the privilege of the latter to transfer possession by a mere verbal instruction, while in the case of the former, actual or symbolic acquisition must take place.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 148a

If a dying man said, 'Give my loan to X' ,[1] his loan is [immediately] acquired by X;[2] although a man in good health has no[3] [such power]![4] -R. Papa replied: Since an heir inherits it.[5] R. Aha the son of R. Ika replied: A loan is also transferable[6] in [the case of] a man in good health; and [this is) in accordance with [the statement] of R Huna in the name of[7] Rab. For R. Huna said in the name of Rab: [If one said] . 'You owe me a maneh, give it to X', in the presence of the three persons.[8] ,X acquires possession. The question was raised: [If dying man gave instructions for his] date-tree [to be given] to one [person] and the fruit thereof to another, what [is the law.]? Has he [in such a case]. left [for himself] the place of the fruit[9] or did he not leave?[10] If [some reason] be found for the decision[11] [that if the fruit were given] to another [person, the dying man does] not reserve [their place, the question may be asked]: What [is the law if] he said,[12] except its fruit'?[13] ; Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: [Even] if [some reason] be found for the decision[14] [that in the case where the] date-tree [was given] to one [person] and the fruit thereof to another, the place of the fruit is not [regarded as] reserved, [if he specifically added,] 'Except its fruit', he [thereby] reserved the place of the fruit; and [this is] in accordance with [the view of] R, Zebid[15] who stated that if he wished to attach mouldings to it he may do [so]. From this it clearly follows that because he reserved the upper storey he also reserved the place of the mouldings. [so] here also, since he said, 'Except its fruit'. he reserved the place of the fruit. R. Abba said to R. Ashi: We learnt it[16] in connection with [the following statement] of R. Simeon b. Lakish. For R. Simeon b. Lakish stated: When someone, in selling a house to another, told him, 'On condition that the upper storey [remains] mine', the upper storey [remains] his.[17]

(1) I.e. — the verbal loan which someone owes him shall he paid by that person to X.

(2) Through the mere verbal instruction of the testator. Had he been in good health. he could not transfer in this way a verbal loan, which, since a person usually spends the money he borrows, is not In existence.

(3) Lit., 'it is not'.

(4) He cannot transfer an abstract thing (cf. p. 637 n. 16). How', then, could it be said that. apart from only one difference (v. note 6), there was no distinction between the power of a healthy, and those of a dying man?

(5) I.e.. the verbal loan; it is considered to be in the possession of the dying man who accordingly has the power to transfer it as gift to another person. since the gift of a dying man is treated as an inheritance, v. infra 149a. This, however, does not apply to a man in good health, since his gift is not regarded as an inheritance.

(6) Lit., 'it is'.

(7) Lit., 'said',

(8) The creditor, borrower and X; v. 147b-148a .

(9) On the branches; and since the branches are attached to the tree they are regarded as ground. Consequently it is a case of one who left for himself some ground, and who, in accordance with our Mishnah, cannot withdraw his gift. even if he recovers.

(10) And when he gave the tree to the first, he gave him the branches also. Hence he left for himself no ground at all, and can withdraw the gift if he recovers.

(12) The text and interpretation here adopted (cf. Rashb. second version; R. Gersh. first versionl; and Bah, a.I.) differ from the version in the current editions and from its rather difficult interpretation to which commentators had recourse. A translation of that version would run somewhat as follows: (If he left the fruit) for himself (giving away the tree) except its fruit, what (is the law)? (Is it assumed that for oneself one makes liberal reservation and, consequently. he left for himself the place of the fruit also, and the gift is. accordingly, valid; or is there no difference between reserving for oneself and for another)? Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: If (some reason) could be found for the decision (that where a person gave) a date-tree to one (man) and its fruit to another, the place of the fruit is not reserved; (if he gave) a date-tree to one and reserved the fruit for himself, he did reserve the place of the fruit. What is the reason?-Wherever it is a case of personal interests one makes liberal reservation.

(13) In addition to, 'Give him the date tree'. Does the superfluous addition, 'except etc.', imply that he wished to reserve for himself the place of the fruit and, consequently, he cannot anymore withdraw? (V. note l).

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 148b

The question was [accordingly] raised: [If one sold] a house to one and [its] upper storey to another, what [is the law']? Is it [assumed that he] reserved [some air space in the courtyard][1] or not? If [some reason] could be found [for the decision that if] a house [was sold] to one and [its] upper storey' to another [the seller] reserved nothing [of the air space of the courtyard], what [is the law when he specifically added]. 'Except its upper storey'? Raba said in the name of R, Nahman: If you can find [a reason] for the decision [that he who sold] a house to one and [its] upper storey to another has not reserved [anything from the air space of the courtyard, if he specifically added]. 'Except [its] upper storey', he did reserve [a portion of the air space of the courtyard]. And [this is] in accordance with [the view] of R. Zebid who stated that if he[2] wished to attach[3] mouldings to it,[4] he may do so.[5] From this it clearly follows [that] because he [specifically] reserved [for himself] the upper storey. he has also reserved the place of the mouldings. R, Joseph b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman: If a dying man gave all his property in writing. to strangers ,[6] [the following] should be noted: If he did it by way of distribution,[7] [then if] he died all of them acquire possession;[8] [if] he recovered he may withdraw in [the case of] all of them.[9] If, [however,] he did it after consideration,[10] [then if] he died, all of them acquire possession;[8] [if] he recovered, he may only withdraw in [the case of] the last,[11] But is it not possible that he merely considered the [matter][12] and then gave [the further gifts]? — It is usual for a dying man carefully' to consider [the whole matter] first and subsequently to distribute [the gifts].[13] R. Aba b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman: If a dying man gave all his property. in writing, to strangers and [then] recovered, he may not withdraw [the gifts], since it may be suspected that he has possessions in another country[14] Under what circumstances, however, is [the case of] our Mishnah, where it is stated [that if] he did not leave some ground his gift was invalid,possible? — R. — Hama replied: [In the case] where he said, 'All my possessions'.[15] Mar son of R. Ashi replied: [In the case] where it is known to us that he has none.[16] The question was raised: Is partial withdrawal[17] [considered] complete withdrawal[18] or not?[19] — Come and hear: [If a dying man gave] all his possessions[20] to the first, and a part of them[21] to the second, the second acquires ownership [and] the first does not. Does not [this refer to the case] where [the testator] died?[22] - No; where he recovered.[23] Logical reasoning also supports this [view];[24] , since the final clause reads: [If he gave] a part of his possessions[25] to the first and all of them[26] to the second, the first acquires ownership [and] the second does not.[27] [Now,] if [the Baraitha] is said [to refer to the case] where he[28] recovered, one can well understand why the second does not acquire possession;[29] if, however, it is said [to refer to the case] where he[28] died, both should have acquired ownership![30] R. Yemar said to R. Ashi: Even if it[31] be explained[32] [as referring to the case] where he[33] recovered [the following objection may be raised].[34] If it is said [that] partial withdrawal is [considered] complete withdrawal, one can at least understand why the second acquires possession;[35] if, however, It is said [that] partial withdrawal is not [considered] complete withdrawal, [the testator] should be [regarded] as one who distributes [his possessions][36] and none of them should acquire ownership![37] And the law [is that] partial withdrawal is [considered] complete withdrawal. [Hence.] the first clause [of the Baraitha] may be applicable either [to the case] where he died or [to that] where he recovered:[38] the final clause can only be applicable [to the case] where he recovered.[39] The question was raised: [If a dying man] consecrated all his possessions and [subsequently] recovered, what [is the law]?[40] ; Is it assumed that whenever it is a case of consecrated objects the transfer of possession made is unqualified[41] or, perhaps. when it is a matter of personal interests one does not transfer unqualified possession? [If the answer is in the affirmative, the question arises] what [is the law in the case where] he renounced the ownership of all his property'?[42] Is it assumed that since [ownerless property may be seized] by the poor[43] as well as by the rich, he transfers [therefore] unqualified possession[41] or, perhaps, whenever it is a matter of personal interests one does not transfer unqualified possession? [If the answer is in the negative.][44] what, [it may be asked. is the law where] he distributed all his possessions among the poor? Is it assumed [that in a matter of] charity he has undoubtedly transferred unqualified possession or, perhaps, wherever it is a matter of personal interests one does not transfer unqualified possession? — This is undecided. R. Shesheth stated: 'He shall take', 'acquire', 'occupy' and own'[45] [used by a dying man][46] are all [legal] expressions denoting gift. In a Baraitha it was taught: [The expressions of] 'he,shall receive the bequest'[47] and 'he shall be heir' [are] also [legal] in [the case of] one who is entitled to be his heir; and this is [in accordance with the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka.[48] The question was raised

---

(1) For the projection of mouldings from the upper storey.

(2) The seller of the house.

(3) Lit., 'to bring out',

(4) The upper storey which he retained for himself by specifying when selling the house, 'except its upper storey'.

(5) L.it., ‘brings out’.
(6) In succession. one after the other.
(7) l.e., if his intention from the very beginning was to distribute all his estate among these.
(8) Even if no legal acquisition took place. since the verbal gift of a dying man is legally valid.
(9) Because he left nothing for himself, in which case, as stated in our Mishnah, he may withdraw the gifts he made in the expectation of death.
(10) I.e., if his intention at first was not to give away all his estate, and only after giving a portion to one he reconsidered the matter and made the gifts to the others.
(11) Because with the last gift, the dying man left nothing for himself. In the case of all the previous gifts there was always something over.
(12) When pausing to think, he may not have been considering whether to give or not but only what to give. In which case his mind was made up from the beginning to distribute all his estate and, consequently. he should he able to withdraw all the gifts he made.
(13) And since the man was pausing for reflection, after every gift he made. it is obvious that it was not his first intention to distribute all his estate.
(14) And consequently he was not left destitute.
(15) He did not present specified portions but all his possessions wherever they may be situated.
(16) No other possessions than those of which he had disposed.
(17) If a dying man presented all his estate to one person and then, in accordance with his rights (v. supra 135b). withdrew a part of the gift, and presented that part to another person.
(18) Of the entire gift made to the first. The question is whether it is assumed that by his withdrawal of that part, presenting it to the second person. he also indicated the complete withdrawal of the entire gift he made to the first and that, therefore, when he made the gift to the second he was in possession of the rest of his estate; and, consequently, if he recovered he cannot withdraw the gift from the second; while if he died. his heirs may claim from the first the return of bis gift.
(19) And the second acquires possession of whatever was given to him, while the first retains the ownership of the rest. If the testator subsequently recovers he may consequently withdraw both gifts (since when disposing of the estate he had left himself nothing), whereas if he dies the heirs would have no claim at all upon either of the donees.
(20) Lit., ‘all of them’,
(21) Which he withdrew from the first,
(22) And if so, it may be proved from here that the withdrawal of a part is the same as the withdrawal of the whole,
(23) And desires to withdraw the gifts. The first cannot retain possession because when the gift was made to him the testator was left with nothing. The right of ownership on the part of the second is discussed in the Gemara infra.
(24) That the Baraitha cited refers to a case of recovery.
(25) Lit., ‘of them’.
(26) [I.e., the remaining part of the estate (Alfasi).]
(27) Ned. 43b.
(28) The testator.
(29) Because when he received the gift the testator had left for himself nothing.
(30) Since in such a case possession is acquired by the recipients whether the testator had left anything for himself or not. Consequently it must he concluded that the final clause refers to the case where the testator recovered; and since the final clause refers to a case of recovery the first clause also must refer to such a case.
(31) The first clause of the Baraitha cited.
(32) Lit., ‘and let it be also’,
(33) V note 9
(34) To the argument that the Baraitha supplies no proof to the statement that the partial withdrawal is considered complete withdrawal,
(35) Because when the part was given to him, the rest of the estate having been withdrawn from the first, the testator was in possession of some property.
(36) Since the first is retaining the remainder of the estate while the second acquires possession of its part.
(37) Owing to the fact that the testator in distributing his estate had left nothing for himself.
(38) The second donee acquires ownership because when the gift was given to him the testator (having withdrawn the gift from the first) was in possession of property. The first does not acquire ownership because the gift has been withdrawn from him in favour of the testator (if he recovers) or his heirs (if he dies).

(39) The first acquires ownership because when he was given the gift the testator was still in possession of some of his estate. The second does not acquire ownership because when the gift was given to him the testator had left for himself nothing. Had the testator died both would have acquired ownership.

(40) May he withdraw his donation?

(41) Without any reservation in case of recovery.

(42) Placing them at the disposal of anyone who would take possession of them.

(43) So that it is possible for the property to fall into the hands of some poor man.

(44) Because the property may happen to fall into the hands of a rich man.

(45) These expressions, some of which are synonymous, cannot be exactly rendered into English.

(48) Who maintained supra 130) that a person may appoint one of his heirs to be the sole inheritor of all his estate.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 149a

What [if he[1] said]. 'Let him[2] have the benefit of them'?[3] Does he, [thereby] imply that they all shall be [treated as] a gift[4] or, perhaps, he [only] meant that he[5] shall have some benefit from them? What [is the law where he[6] said]. 'He[5] shall see them', 'Stand in them', 'Recline upon them' ?[7] — This is undecided, The question was raised: What [is the law' in a case where a dying man] has sold all his possessions?[8] - Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: If he recovered he may not withdraw; sometimes, however, Rab Judah said in the name of Rab [that] if he recovered he may withdraw. But there is no contradiction [between the two statements]. The one[9] [refers to the case] where the money is [still] available;[10] the other[9] [to the case] where he paid away for his debt.[11] The question was raised: What if a dying man [spontaneously] admitted [a debt]?[12] -Come and hear: The proselyte Issur[13] had twelve thousand zuz: [deposited] with Raba. The conception of his son R. Mari was not in holiness,[14] though his birth [was] in holiness, and he was [then] at school. Raba said: How could Mari gain possession of this money? If as an inheritance; [surely] he is not entitled to [it as] an heir.[15] If as a gift; the gift [surely] of a dying man has been given[16] by the Rabbis [the same legal force] as [that of] an inheritance, [and consequently]. whosoever is entitled[17] to an inheritance is [also] entitled to a gift [and] whosoever is not entitled to an inheritance is not entitled to a gift [either]. If by pulling;[18] they are [surely] not with him. If by exchange;[19] a coin [can] not be acquired by 'exchange'.[20] If on the basis of land;[21] he has no land. If In the presence of the three of us;[22] if he [were to] send for me I would not go.[23]

R. Ika son of R. Ammi demurred: Why?[24] Let Issur acknowledge that that money belongs to R. Mari and [the latter] would acquire it by [virtue of this] admission! Meanwhile,[25] there issued [such] an acknowledgement from the house of Issur.[26] [Whereupon] Raba was annoyed [and] said,'They teach people what to say[27] and cause loss to me'.[28]

(7) Do these expressions legally ratify a gift?

(8) May he, if he recovers, cancel the sale as he may withdraw a gift?

(9) Lit., 'that'.

(10) In such a case it is obvious that he kept the purchase money in readiness for the purpose of returning it should he recover and decide to cancel the sale.

(11) In such a case he cannot, on recovery, cancel the sale.
(12) Or that the property he possessed belonged to another person. Is this spontaneous admission sufficient to entitle the person named to the ownership of the sum or objects mentioned?
(13) Issur, while still a heathen, had married Rachel, one of Mar Samuel's captive daughters. (Cf. Keth. 23a). While she was in her pregnancy and before she gave birth to the child (the future R. Mari). Issur embraced Judaism; and Mari was accordingly born from parents both of whom professed the Jewish faith, while his conception took place when one of them was still a heathen.
(14) l.e., while his father was still a heathen.V. n. 15. Hence he was not entitled to the heirship of his father's estate (v. Kid. 18a).
(15) V. p. 644, n. 16,
(16) Lit., 'made'.
(17) Lit., 'where he is'.
(18) Meshikah, v. Glos., supra.
(19) Heb., halifin (V. Glos.). whereby possession may be gained though the object to be acquired is kept elsewhere.
(20) Cf. B.M. 46a.
(21) That might be presented to him at the same time. (V. Kid. 26a). One may acquire a movable object (including money) by the acquisition of land that was sold or presented simultaneously with it though the former may not actually be delivered at that time.
(22) Issur, Mari and Raba. Lit., 'three of them', v. supra 144a. A person may instruct another from whom he claims anything to give it to a third party; and, if all the three are present at the time the instruction was given, the transfer is immediately binding even though the object itself was not with them.
(23) And thus the money would remain in Raba's possession. who held the view that he was entitled, as anyone else, to retain the sum of money which, on the death of Issur who was a proselyte, would become ownerless and free to anyone who would first gain possession of it.
(24) Surely there is a way by which R. Mari could obtain the twelve thousand zuz!
(25) The discussion at the academy having been reported to Issur.
(26) And R. Mari thus acquired ownership of the twelve thousand sins.
(27) Lit., 'plea', 'argument'.
(28) It is possible that Raba had no intention whatsoever to appropriate Issur's money and that the whole discussion of the possible legal means whereby R. Mari could acquire possession of his father's money was only the master's method of impressing these subtle laws upon his students' minds. No one at the academy suspected for one moment that the master would in all earnestness desire to retain the money he held as a deposit from one who obviously confided in him. Had Raba been in earnest he would not have spoken publicly about such a matter when he well knew that Issur was still alive and could easily find legal means whereby to transfer possession to his son, if not to reclaim the deposit himself. Raba's pretended annoyance and ironical exclamation, 'They teach people what to say and cause me loss', must have been just a mild chiding to the students or their friends who deprived him of the satisfaction of passing on the money to R. Mari as a generous gift rather than as something legally due to him. The mention of the fact that R. Mari was בי רב 'at the master's house', i e 'school', which according to the ordinary interpretations has not much point (cf. Strashun a.l.) receives a new significance. It was discussed by Raba publicly despite the fact that R. Mari was himself at the school (perhaps Raba's very own school) and would well be aware of the whole discussion and could, if he chose, report it himself to his father and give him the necessary legal advice. The mention of R. Mari's presence at the school is probably the key to the indication of Raba's integrity and honour.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 149b

AND LEFT FOR HIMSELF SOME [PIECE OF] LAND, HIS GIFT IS VALID. And how much is SOME?- Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Land sufficient for his maintenance, while R. Jeremiah b. Abba said [even if only] movables [that are] sufficient for his maintenance.

R. Zera exclaimed: 'How accurate are the reported traditions of the elders![1] What is the reason [in the case of the reservation of] land?[2] [Because] he depended on it [for his maintenance] if he should recover; [in the case of] movables also [it may be assumed that] he depended on them if he were to recover'. R. Joseph demurred: Where is the accuracy? [Against him] who said, 'movables',[3] [it may be objected that] we learned, land; [while against him] who said, 'sufficient for his maintenance', [it may be objected that] we learnt, 'whatsoever'![4] — Abaye replied to him: [Do you suggest that] wherever 'land' is stated, land only [is meant]? Surely we learnt: If one gave all his property to his slave, in writing. [the latter] goes forth [as] a free man. [If] he left [for himself] any land whatsoever,[5] [the slave] does not go forth [as] a free man.[6] R. Simeon said: [The slave] is always[7] free[8] unless [the master] said, 'All my possessions are given to my slave X, except a ten thousandth part of them'.[9]

(2) I.e , why is the gift of a dying man valid in such a case, even if he recovered?

(3) That even the reservation of some movables renders the gift valid.

(4) כל שהוא kol shehu, lit., 'any so ever'. (5) Since the slave himself is part of the property the master gave him.

(5) Not specifying which.

(6) A slave is regarded as 'land', (real estate), and it is possible that by the reservation of 'some land' his master may have meant to exclude him. Hence, (since the property or a slave belongs to his master), the slave acquires nothing.

(7) Even if the master had reserved some land.

(8) Since people do not describe a slave as 'land'.

(9) By which expression he may rightly have meant the exclusion of the slave. Git. 8b; Pe'ah III, 8.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 150a

And R. Dimi b. Joseph said in the name of R. Eleazar: Movables[1] in the case of a slave were regarded[2] as a reservation; but movables in the case of a kethubah[3] were not regarded as a reservation![4] — There,[5] [R. Joseph retorted,] it would have been proper that [the term] 'land', should not have been used [at all]; only because in the first part [of the Mishnah] it was stated, 'R. Akiba said: Land of any size is liable to [have the ears at its] corner[s left for the poor], and to [the bringing of its] first ripe fruit [to Jerusalem]; a prosbul[6] may be written in connection with it;[7] and movable property[8] may be acquired in conjunction with it by means of money, deed[9] and possession',[10] [the term] 'land' was in consequence used [in the second part of this Mishnah also].[11]

And [do you suggest. Abaye again asked R. Joseph,[12] that] wherever 'whatsoever'[13] was taught no [minimum] size is required?[14] Surely we learnt: R. Dosa b. Horkinas said: Five ewes which supply[15] [fleeces of the weight of] a maneh and a half each,[16] are subject to [the law of] 'the fist of the fleece'.[17] But the Sages said, '[Even] five ewes [which] supply any [quantity] whatsoever [of wool]'[18] . And to the question,[19] how much [was meant by] any [quantity] 'whatsoever',[13] Rab replied: A [total of a] ,maneh and a half, provided each supplies [no less than] a fifth [of the total quantity]![20] — There, [R. Joseph retorted], it would have been proper that [the expression] 'any [quantity] whatsoever' should not have been used [at all]; only because the first Tanna speaks[21] of a large quantity.[22] [the Sages] also speak[21] of a small quantity,[23] which is described [as] 'any quantity whatsoever'.[24]

[It is] obvious [if a person] said, 'My movables [shall be given] to X', [the latter] acquires possession of all the things he used except wheat and barley. [If he said], 'All my movables [shall be given] to X'.[the latter] acquires possession even of wheat and barley and even of the upper millstone,[25] except the lower millstone.[26] [If he said], 'All that can be moved',[the latter] acquires possession even of the lower millstone.[27] The question. [however]. was raised: Is a slave regarded as real estate or as movables![28] — R Aha son of R. Awia said to R. Ashi, Come and hear: He who sold a town has [also] sold [its] houses, ditches and caves, [its] bath houses, olive presses and irrigation works, but not the movables [that it contains]. In the case, however,[29] where he said, 'It and all that it contains', all its contents,[30] even if it consisted of[31] cattle or slaves, are sold.[32] [Now.] if it is granted [that slaves are] like movables, one can well understand why they are not included in the sale in the first [case];[33] if, however, it is assumed [that] they are like real estate, why are they not included in the sale? — What, then, [is it suggested, that] they are like movables? Why 'even'?[34] All, however, that can be said in reply[35] [is that] movables which [can] move [of themselves][36] are different from movables that [can] not move;[37] so also it may be said[38] [that slaves] are like real estate [but that] real estate that moves is different from real estate that does not move.[39]

Rabina said to R. Ashi, Come and hear:[40] If one gave all his property to his slave, in writing, [the latter] goes forth [as] a free man. [If] he left [for himself] any land whatsoever [the slave] does not go forth [as] a free man. R. Simeon said: [The slave] is always free unless [the master] said, 'All my possessions are given to my slave X, except a ten thousandth part of them'. And R. Dimi b. Joseph said in the name of R. Eleazar: Movables in the case of a slave are regarded as a reservation,[41] but movables in the case of a kethubah are not regarded as a reservation.[42] And Raba asked R. Nahman, 'What is the reason?' [To which the latter replied.] 'A slave is [regarded as] movables, and [in the case of] movables,[43] movables[44] are regarded as a reservation; the kethubah of a woman, however, is [payable from] real estate,[45] and [in the case] of real estate, movables[44] [are] not [regarded as] a reservation.[46]

---

(1) Though this Mishnah speaks only of 'land', 'movables' are included.

(2) Lit., 'they made'.

(3) If a person allotted to his wife a share in his lands when he distributed them to his sons, she loses thereby the claims of her kethubah (v. supra 132a). If, however, he gave her a share in movables only. her rights are not impaired.

(4) From the fact that, in the case of a slave, 'movables' are regarded as 'land', though the latter term only is used, it follows that the expression 'land' may include movables; how, then, could R. Joseph urge that since our Mishnah spoke of 'land', movables could not have been included?!

(5) In the case of a slave.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) V. p. 324. n. 8.

(8) Lit., property which has no security , i.e., from which creditors cannot collect their debts.

(9) Confirming the sale of the land.

(10) By performing some kind of work on the estate. V. Supra 42a; 77b.

(11) In this case only, for the reason given, R. Joseph maintains, could the term 'land' include movables. Elsewhere, however, 'land' implies real estate only.

(12) Who objected (supra, 149b) to the interpretation that 'some' in our Mishnah meant, 'sufficient for one's maintenance'. V. Rashb.

(13) כל שהוא

(14) Lit., 'it has not'.

(16) Lit., 'maneh and a half' (bis).

(19) Lit., 'and we said'.

(20) Which shows, contrary to R. Joseph's argument, that even where the expression, 'any (quantity) whatsoever' is used, a minimum is required

(21) Lit., 'said'.

(22) A maneh and a half per ewe.

(23) A fifth of the first Tanna's quantity.

(24) Elsewhere, however, where 'any quantity whatsoever' (kol shehu), is mentioned no minimum is required. Hence R. Joseph's objection (supra 149b), against the interpretations of the elders is well founded.

(25) Since It is sometimes removed from its place, it is included in the movables.

(26) Which is always kept in its place on the ground.

(27) It can be removed from its place since it is not actually fixed to the ground.

(28) Though, as regards Biblical laws, slaves are regarded as 'land' or 'real estate' as, e.g., in the case of oaths and acquisition by means of money, deed and possession, the question here is whether in the course of ordinary conversation people describe a slave as ‘real estate’ or as ‘movables’.

(29) Lit., ‘and at the time’.

(30) Lit., ‘all of them’.

(31) Lit., ‘they were in it’

(32) Supra 88a.

(33) Where the town only was sold, and all movables were, consequently, excluded.

(34) ‘Even’, suggests that they are not in fact like ‘movables’.

(35) Lit., ‘but what have you to say’.

(36) I.c., ‘slaves’.

(37) And this is the reason why ‘even’ was used.

(38) Lit., ‘you may even say’. in relation to the first case.

(39) Hence slaves who can move about could not have been in the mind of the person who sold ‘a town’ that cannot move. In other cases, however. where no particular kind of real estate was mentioned, slaves also may have been included, while in the ease where only ‘movables’ were specified, slaves may have been excluded.

(41) As the slave does not gain his freedom where his master has reserved some real estate so he does not gain his freedom when his master reserved some movables.

(42) v. p. 647. n. 8.

(43) I.e., when the master reserved for himself ‘any movables’ whatsoever.

(45) A woman can collect her kethubah from real estate only (v. infra 150b) and not from movable objects.

(46) It has thus been proved from R. Nahman's statement that a slave is regarded as movables; and not as real estate.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 150b

He[1] replied to him:[2] We explain this[3] as being due to [the fact[4] that the freedom] certificate is not complete.[5]

Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: [In] five [cases] it is necessary[6] that all one's possessions shall be given away in writing;[7] and they are the following:[8] [The case of a] dying man; one's slave; one s wife, one's sons; [and] a woman who keeps her husband away from her estate.[9] ‘A dying man’ — for we learnt: IF A DYING MAN GAVE ALL HIS PROPERTY, IN WRITING, TO OTHERS, AND LEFT [FOR HIMSELF] SOME [PIECE OF] LAND, HIS GIFT IS VALID. [IF, HOWEVER], HE DID NOT LEAVE [FOR HIMSELF] SOME [PIECE OF] LAND, HIS GIFT IS INVALID.[10] ‘One's slave’ — for we learnt: If one gave all his property to his slave, in writing. [the latter] goes forth [as] a free man. [If] he left [for himself] some lands [the slave] does not go forth [as] a free man.[11] ‘One's wife’ — for Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: If [a dying man] gave all his property to his wife, in writing. he [thereby] only appointed her administratrix.[12] ‘One's sons’ — for we learnt: If [a person] assigns all his property to his sons in writing, and he has assigned [also] to his wife [a piece of] land of any size whatsoever, she loses [the claims of] her kethubah.[13] ‘A woman who keeps her husband away from her estate’ — for a Master said: A woman who [desires to] keep [her husband] away [from her estate],[14] must give away all her estate, in writing.[15] In all these [cases][16] movables are [also regarded as] a reservation,[17] except [in that] of a kethubah since [in respect to it] the Rabbis have enacted [that a woman has a claim] upon lands, [but] have not provided [her with the right of collecting it][18] from movables.[19]

Amemar said: Movables that are entered in the kethubah and are [also] available, are [regarded as] a reservation.[20]

described [as] property; for we learnt: Property which has a security[24] may be acquired by means of money, deed and possession.[25] A cloak is called property, for we learnt:[26] And that which has no security[27] can only be acquired by means of pulling.[28] Money is called property; for we learnt: And that which has no security may be acquired in conjunction with property which has a security. [bought jointly with it,] by means of money, deed and possession;[29] as in the case of[30] R. Papa [who] had a [money claim of] twelve thousand zuz at Be-Huzae, [and] he passed them over into the possession of R. Samuel b. Aha by virtue of the threshold of his house, [and] when the latter came [back] he went out to meet him as far as Tauak.[31] A deed is called property; for Raba b. Isaac said: There are two [kinds] of deeds. [If a person says.] 'Take possession of the field on behalf of X, and write for him the deed', he may withdraw the deed but not the field. [If. however, he says. 'Take possession of the field] on condition that you write for him the deed', he may withdraw both the deed and the field. But R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Huna: There are three [kinds of] deeds. Two have just been described. [And the] third is one which the seller writes before [the sale] in accordance with the law we have learnt that

(5) Lit., 'cut'. In order that the slave may procure his freedom it is essential that the master should present him, with a writ 'of emancipation which definitely severs (cuts off) all connections and all relationships between master and slave. Where, however, the master reserves for himself in the writ something, whether in land or in movables, the separation between them effected by it is not complete. Furthermore, it may also be assumed that by that reservation the slave himself may have been intended. In other cases, however, R. Ashi maintains, it is possible, contrary to R. Nahman (Rashb.), or even R. Nahman would agree (R. Tam), that a slave is spoken of as 'land' or 'real estate'.

Since no sane person would give away all his possessions and leave for himself nothing, it is obvious that the sole purpose of her presentation of the whole of her estate must have been the prevention of her husband from acquiring ownership thereof. IF, however, she left some portion of the estate for herself, this law does not apply, the gift is valid and she is not entitled ever to reclaim it.

a deed may be written for the seller though the buyer is not with him. [In this case,] as soon as [the buyer] takes possession of the ground he acquires [also] the deed, irrespective of the place in which it is kept. And this accords with what we have learnt [that] movable property may be acquired with landed property by means of money. deed and possession.[1] Cattle are called property; for we learnt: If a person consecrated his property[2] which contained cattle suitable [as sacrifices] for the altar; males are to be sold[3] for[4] burnt offerings, and females are to be sold for[5] peace offerings.[6] Birds are called property; for we learnt: If a person consecrated his property which contained things suitable [for sacrifices] for the altar, [such as] wines, oils and birds [etc.].[7] Phylacteries are called property; for we learnt: If a person consecrated his property, [his] phylacteries [also] are taken away[8] from him.[9]

The question was raised: What [is the law in the case of] a scroll of the Law; is [it] not [regarded as] property, since It is unsalable because it is prohibited to sell it, or, perhaps. since it may be sold in order to study Torah or to take a wife,[10] it is [regarded as] property? — This is undecided.

(Mnemonic:[11] Zutra, the mother of Amram of two sisters, R. Tobi and R. Dimi and R. Joseph.)

The mother of R. Zutra b. Tobia gave her property in writing. to R. Zutra b. Tobiah, because she intended to marry R. Zebid.[12] She [duly] married, but was [subsequently] divorced. She [thereupon] appeared before R. Bibi b. Abaye.[13] He said: [She made a gift of her property] because she desired to marry[14] and, behold she married.[15] R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said unto him, 'Because you are [yourselves] frail [beings] you speak frail words'.[16] Even according to him who said [that a gift given by] a woman who wished to keep it away from her future husband is acquired [by the recipient], this law is only applicable[17] [to a case] where [the woman] did not declare her reason. Here, however, she has [specifically] declared that [she made the gift] because she [wished] to marry. and, surely. [though] she married, she was [now] divorced.[18]

The mother[19] of Rami b. Hama gave her property in writing to Rami b. Hama, in the evening; [but] in the morning she gave them in writing to R. 'Ukba b. Hama. Rami b. Hama came before R. Shesheth who confirmed him in the possession of the property. R. 'Ukba b. Hama, [however]. went to R. Nahman who [similarly] confirmed him in the possession of the property. R. Shesheth [thereupon] appeared before R. Nahman [and] said unto him, 'what is the reason [that] the Master has confirmed R. 'Ukba b. Hama in possession? Is it because she retracted? Surely she died'![20] He[21] replied unto him: Thus said Samuel, 'Wherever a person may retract if he recovered,[22] he may [also] withdraw his gift'.[23] May it be suggested[24] that Samuel said [this[25] in the case only where the withdrawal was] for himself; did he, [however], say [this[25] in the case where the withdrawal was in favour] of another person?[26] He[27] replied unto him,: Samuel distinctly stated, 'whether for himself or for another'.

The mother of R. Amram the pious had a case[28] of notes [of indebtedness]. While she was dying she said, 'Let it be [given] to my son Amram'. His brothers appeared before R. Nahman [and] said to him, 'Surely he[29] did not pull[30] [the case of documents]'! He replied unto them: The instructions of a dying person [are regarded legally] as written and delivered.[31]

The sister of R. Tobi b. R. Mattenah gave her possessions, in writing. to R. Tobi b. R. Mattenah in the morning. In the evening, Ahadboi son of R. Mattenah came [and] wept before her, saying: Now [people will] say [that] one[32] is a scholar[33] and the other is no scholar. [So] she gave them in writing to him. He [subsequently] appeared before R. Nahman, [who] said unto him: Thus said Samuel, 'Wherever a person may retract if he recovers, he may [also] withdraw his gift'.[34]

The sister of R. Dimi b. Joseph had a piece of an orchard. Whenever she fell ill she transferred the ownership of it to him, but as [soon as] she recovered she withdrew. On one occasion she fell ill and sent [word] to him, 'Come [and] take possession'. He replied,[1] 'I have no desire'. [Thereupon] she [again] sent [word] to him, 'Come [and] take possession in whatever manner you desire'.[2] [Then] he went,left for her

[some portion of the intended gift][3] and [symbolic] acquisition from her was [also] arranged.[4] As she [again] recovered she retracted [and] came before R. Nahman.[5] He sent for him.[6] He, [however,] did not come, saying, 'Why should I come? Surely, [some portion of the estate] was left to her and [symbolic] acquisition from her [also] took place.'[7] [Thereupon] he sent to him, [the following message]: 'If you do not come I will chastise you with a thorn that causes no blood to flow'.[8] He[9] asked the witnesses how the incident had occurred, [and] they told him [that when she sent for her brother] she exclaimed thus: 'Alas that I am dying'.[10] He said unto them: If so, the disposal[11] [of her estate was] due to [her expectation of] death, and he that gives instructions owing to [his expectation of] death, may retract.

It was stated: [In the case where] a dying man presented a part[12] [of his estate], Raba[13] said in the name of R. Nahman: It is like the gift of a man in good health and requires [symbolic] acquisition. The Rabbis reported the following,[14] in the presence of Raba, in the name of Mar Zutra,son of R. Nahman, who reported in the name of R. Nahman: It is like the gift of a man in good health; and it is like the gift of a man who is dying. 'It is like the gift of a man in good health', in that if he recovered he [can] not retract; and 'it is like the gift of a man who is dying', in that no [symbolic] acquisition is required.[15] Raba said unto them: Did I not tell you [that] you shall not hang empty jars on R. Nahman?[16] Thus said R. Nahman: It is like the gift of a man in good health and requires [symbolic] acquisition.

Raba raised an objection against R. Nahman: [IF] HE LEFT [FOR HIMSELF] ANY LAND WHATSOEVER, HIS GIFT IS VALID.[17] Does not [this refer to the case] where no [symbolic] acquisition from him took place?[18] — No; where symbolic acquisition did take place. If so.explain the second clause: [IF. HOWEVER] HE DID NOT LEAVE [FOR HIMSELF] ANY LAND WHATSOEVER, HIS GIFT IS INVALID![17] Now if, [as you assert, our Mishnah refers to the case] where symbolic acquisition took place.[18] why is his gift invalid? — He replied unto him: Thus said Samuel, 'If a dying man gave all his property, in writing, to strangers, although [symbolic] acquisition took place,[19] he may retract if he recovered, because it is known that he disposed[20] [of his estate] only on account of [his expectation of] death.

R. Mesharsheya raised an objection against Raba: The mother of the sons of Rokel once fell ill and she said, 'Let my brooch[21] be given to my daughter', and it was worth twelve maneh,' and when she died they fulfilled her words?[22] — There [it was a case] of an Instruction [clearly] given owing to [the expectation of] death.[23]

Rabina raised an objection against Raba: If a person said, 'Give this bill of divorce to my wife', or, '[Give] this writ of emancipation to my slave', and he died, it must not be delivered after [his] death.[24] [If. however, he said.] 'Give a maneh to X, and he died, it is to be given [to X] after [the testator's] death![25] — And what reason is there to assume that no symbolic acquisition took place?[26] — [Because it[27] is obviously] similar to a bill of divorce;[28] as a bill of divorce is not an object for [symbolic] acquisition.[29] so this[27] also [was not attended by] a symbolic acquisition![30] — There[31] also [it is a case] of one giving instructions [clearly] on account [of his expectation] of death. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua replied: Elsewhere, an Instruction [given] owing to [the expectation of] death requires [symbolic] acquisition. but the Mishnayoth mentioned refer [to the case][32] of one who distributed all his estate,[33] for in such a case it was given the same legal force as[34] the gift of a dying man.[35]

And the law is [that where] a dying man presented a part [of his estate].[36] [symbolic] acquisition is required although he [subsequently] died. [If. however] his instructions [concerning the gift] were due to [his expectation of] death, no [symbolic] acquisition is required. This, however, [only] when he died; [if] he recovered he [may] retract even though [symbolic] acquisition from him took place.[37]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 152a

It was stated: [As to] the gift[1] of a dying man [in the deed of] which was recorded [symbolic] acquisition. the school of Rab in the name of Rab reported [that the testator] has [thereby] made him[2] ride on two harnessed horses;[3] but Samuel said: I do not know what decision to give on the matter. The school of Rab reported in the name of Rab, that he made him ride on two harnessed horses, for it is like the gift of a man in good health[4] [and] 'it is [also] like the gift of a dying man. 'It is like the gift of a man in good health', in that, if he recovered, he [can] not retract, [and] 'it is like the gift of a dying man' in that, if he said [that] his loan[5] [shall be given] to X, his loan [is to be given] to X.[6] Samuel, however, had said, 'I do not know what decision to give on the matter' since it is possible that[7] he decided not to transfer possession to him[8] except through the deed,[9] and no [possession by means of a] deed [may be acquired] after [the testator's] death.[10]

A contradiction was pointed out [between one statement] of Rab and another statement of his,[11] and [between one statement] of Samuel and another statement of his.[12] For Rabin sent in the name of R. Abbahu: Be [it] known to you that R. Eleazar had sent to the Diaspora in the name of our Master[13] [that] where a dying man said, 'Write[14] and deliver a maneh to X', and he died,[15] they must neither write [the deed] nor deliver [the maneh], because it is possible that [the testator][16] had decided not to transfer possession to him[17] except through the deed,[18] and no [possession by means of a] deed [may be acquired] after [the testator's] death.[19] And Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel [that] the law is that one may both write and deliver.[20] [Does not this present] a contradiction [between one statement] of Rab and another statement of his [and between one statement] of Samuel and another statement of his?[21] — There is no contradiction between the two statements of Rab.[22] One[23] [deals with the case] where symbolic acquisition took place;[24] the other[23] where no symbolic acquisition took place.[25] There is [also] no contradiction between the two statements of Samuel,[26] [because in the latter case the reference is to one] who [specifically] strengthened his[27] claims.[28]

R. Nahman b. Isaac sat behind Raba while Raba was sitting before R. Nahman when he addressed to him the [following] enquiry: Did Samuel say. 'since it is possible that he decided not to transfer possession to him except through the deed, and no [possession by means of a] deed [may be acquired] after [the testator's] death'? Surely Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel, 'If a dying man gave all his property, in writing, to strangers. although [symbolic] acquisition took place. he may retract if he recovered

(1) That is where be distributed all his estate (Rashb.).

(2) The recipient.

(3) I.e., his claim has a double force. That of the gift of a dying man and that of legal acquisition.

(4) Owing to the symbolic acquisition that took place.

(5) Which someone owes him.

(6) Although the money was not, at the time, in his possession and the gift was not made in the presence of the three parties concerned (v. 144a).

(7) By the unnecessary mention of symbolic acquisition.

(10) Hence it was difficult for Samuel to give a decision on the matter. It may be added that the same difficulty would also arise even where no deed was written and symbolic possession was accompanied by verbal instructions only, or where a deed alone was written unattended by any symbolic acquisition. The mere Fact that the testator had recourse to the unnecessary symbolic form of acquisition raises the question whether his intention thereby was not to annul his first transfer (that of a dying man) and postpone until after his death the donee's acquisition of the gift. Had he wished him to acquire immediate possession there would have been no need For the additional symbolic acquisition. His mere word as a dying man would have done that. Once the possibility of postponement until after death is granted, the donee can no more acquire possession, because as soon as death had taken place the entire estate of the dead man had passed over into the ownership of his legal heirs. (So Rashb.; v. however Tosaf. s.v. מתנת .)

(11) Lit., ‘on that of Rab’.

(12) CF. previous note.

(14) I.e., the deed.

(15) Before the deed was written or the maneh delivered to X.

(16) By his demand that a deed also be written which, since his mere verbal instruction as a dying man would have been sufficient, was unnecessary.

(18) CF. supra p. 658, n.10.

(19) Supra 135b, q.v. notes a.l. The legal force given to the word of a dying man extends only to monetary gifts but not to the delivery of a deed.

(20) It is assumed that the testator's request for a written document was for the purpose of strengthening the donee's claim; not to weaken it.

(21) In the report above it was stated that any unnecessary addition of a deed to the verbal instructions of a dying man was according to Rab assumed to be in favor of the donee and according to Samuel against him, while here the reverse is reported!

(22) Lit , ‘that of Rab upon Rab, there is no difficulty’.

(24) Lit , ‘where they acquired of him’. In such a case the testator obviously wished to improve the donee's claims.

(25) CF. previous note. It is possible, therefore, that the testator desired acquisition of the gift effected by means of a deed and since he died the deed is no longer of any avail.

(26) Cf. supra n. 12.

(27) The donee's.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 152b

because it is known that the [symbolic] acquisition took place[1] only on account of [his expectation of] death’![2] He answered him[3] by [a wave of] his hand and remained silent.[4] When he rose, R. Nahman b. Isaac asked Raba, ‘What did he indicate to you?’ [Raba] replied to him,’ That Rab Judah's report refers to the case] where [the testator] strengthened the donee's claims.’[5] In what manner [is it indicated that one wished to] strengthen the donee's claims? — R. Hisda replied: [By including in the deed the formula]. ‘And we[6] acquired from him[7] in addition to this [presentation of the] gift.’[8]

[It is] obvious [that where a dying man] gave [all his estate] in writing to one man[9] and [subsequently] to another[10] the [law is the] very same as [that which] R. Dimi enunciated when he came, [vis., one] will annuls [another] will.[11] [If. however.] he wrote [a deed of the gift] and handed[1] it[12] to one[13] and [subsequently] wrote [a deed of the gift] and handed[1] it[2] to another,[13] Rab said: The first acquires [its] ownership; while Samuel said: The second acquires [its] ownership. Rab said, ‘the first acquires [its] ownership’ for[14] it is like the gift of a person in good health;[15] while Samuel said, the second acquires [Its] ownership’, for it is like the gift of a dying man.[16]

But surely their[17] difference of opinion on the [principle] has [already] once been expressed in [the case of] the [deed of a] gift of a dying man, in which symbolic acquisition was entered![18] [Both are] required. For if [their dispute] had been stated [in connection] with the first case,[19] [it might have been assumed that] in that [case only] Rab adheres[20] to [his opinion], because symbolic acquisition took place;[21] but in this case,[19] where no symbolic acquisition took place, it might have been suggested [that] he agrees with Samuel.[22] And if [their dispute] had been stated [in connection] with the second case,[19] [it might have been assumed that] in that [case only] Samuel adheres[20] to [his opinion];[23] but in that [case]’[24] it might have been suggested [that] he agrees with Rab. [Hence both were] required.

At Sura they taught as above.[25] At Pumbeditha they taught as follows.[25] R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: [The following enquiry] was sent from the academy[26] to Samuel. 'Will our Master instruct us [as to] what [is the law in the case where] a dying man gave all his estate to strangers, in writing; and symbolic acquisition [also] took place,[27] [but was not entered in the deed]?'[28] He replied[29] to them: 'After [symbolic] acquisition no withdrawal is of any avail'.[30]

(2) From this it follows that if the testator did die the donee acquires possession after the death of the testator though a deed was written. How, then, could it be said in the name of Samuel that where a deed was written there can be no acquisition after death?

(3) LIt., 'showed.' 'told'.

(4) [Or 'he (Raba) remained silent', having understood what R. Nahman meant to signify by the wave of his hand.]

(5) Lit., 'his power'. In such a case the donee acquires possession after death even where the testator ordered the writing of a deed.

(6) I.e., 'witnesses'.

(8) Supra 136a.

(9) Lit., 'this'.

(10) Lit., 'and he wrote to this'.

(11) Supra 135b. Hence the second donee acquires the ownership of the gift.

(12) Lit., 'caused him to merit', i.e., to acquire the right of 'ownership', by means of delivering to him the deed.

(14) Owing to the delivering of the deed to the donee, which Rab holds has the same effect as symbolic acquisition.

(15) Which cannot be withdrawn.

(16) And since it can be withdrawn if the testator recovered, it may also be withdrawn while he is still on his deathbed. Hence it was within the rights of the testator to present it to the second who, consequently, acquires its ownership.

(17) Rab and Samuel.

(18) Supra 152a top. Why, then, should they express the same principles again?

(19) Lit., 'in that',

(20) Lit., 'said'.

(21) Lit., 'they acquired for him'. And since the donee's claim has a double force, that of the gift of a dying man and that of symbolic acquisition, the gift cannot be withdrawn.

(22) Hence the second case was necessary.

(23) Since there was no symbolic acquisition.

(24) Where symbolic acquisition did take place.

(25) Lit,, 'thus',

(26) [Or, 'from the school of Rab', after Rab's death in 247.]

(27) Cf. supra p.656,n.4 and 5.

(28) And subsequently the estate was presented to a second person. (Cf. R. Gersh.) The question is whether, under such circumstances, the first or the second acquires the ownership of the estate.

(29) Lit., 'sent'.

(30) Lit., 'there is nothing'; and the first donee acquires the legal ownership of the gift. Samuel's view, supra, that the existence of a deed in addition, to symbolic acquisition may imply a desire, on the part of the testator to postpone until after his death the donee's acquisition of the gift does not apply to this case, since here symbolic acquisition had not been entered in the deed itself. (CF. R. Gersh.). [V. however' Rashb., who refers the question back to the case of זיבה where the deed was delivered to the first donee.]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 153a

They understood him to mean [that] this decision[1] [applied only to the case of withdrawal in favour] of a stranger but not for himself. R. Hisda, [however]. said unto them: When R. Huna came from Kafri[2] he explained it [to mean]. 'whether for himself or for others'.

There was a certain [man][3] from whom [symbolic] acquisition was taken, who came before R. Huna.[4] [The latter] said, 'What can I do for you [in such a case] where you did not transfer possession as [other] people do?'[5]

There was a certain [deed of] a gift[6] in which there was entered,[7] 'in life and in death'.[8] Rab said: Behold it is [to be treated] like the [usual] gift of a dying man;[9] and Samuel said: Behold it is [to be treated] like the gift of a man in good health.[10] Rab said, 'Behold, it is like the gift of a dying man — since it contains the entry. 'in death', [the testator] meant [thereby] the donee [to acquire possession] after death, while the insertion,[11] 'in life', was just for good luck;[12] and Samuel said, 'Behold, it is like the gift of a man in good health' — since it contained the entry, 'in life', [the testator thereby] meant [to transfer possession] while he was alive, while his entry[13] of, 'and in death', [is only] like one saying. 'from now and for evermore'.

The scholars of Nehardea stated: The law is in accordance with [the decision] of Rab.

Raba said: If, however, the deed contains the entry.[14] 'from life', [the donee] acquires [immediate] possession.[15] Amemar said: The law is not according [to the view] of Raba. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: [Is not this] obvious, seeing that the scholars of Nehardea distinctly said [that] the law was in accordance with [the decision] of Rab! — It might have been assumed [that where the entry was]. 'from life', Rab agrees,[16] hence it was necessary to teach us [otherwise].

There was a certain [person] who once came [with an enquiry][17] to Nehardea before R. Nahman, [but] he sent him to Shumtamya before R. Jeremiah b. Abba,[18] declaring.[19] 'This is Samuel's province;[20] how could we act in accordance with [a decision] of Rab!'[21]

There was a certain [woman] who once came before Raba [to ask for his ruling].[22] [As] Raba gave his decision[23] in accordance with his traditional [teaching][24] she worried him.[25] He [consequently][26] said to R. Papa. the son of R. Hanan, his scribe: Go, write for her [a statement [but add to it,'He may hire at their expense[27] or deceive them'.[28] She[29] called out, 'May your[30] ship sink! Are you trying to fool me?' Raba's clothes were soaked in water;[31] and yet he did not escape the drowning.

MISHNAH. IF HE HAS NOT ENTERED IN IT[32] [THAT] HE WAS LYING SICK, [AND] HE [NOW] PLEADS, 'I WAS LYING SICK',[33] AND THEY PLEAD, 'YOU WERE IN GOOD HEALTH,[34] HE MUST PRODUCE EVIDENCE THAT HE WAS A DYING MAN;[35] [THESE ARE] THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAY: HE WHO CLAIMS FROM THE OTHER[36] MUST PRODUCE THE PROOF.

GEMARA. Once a [deed of a] gift contained the entry, 'As he was lying sick in his bed', but not,[37] 'And as a result of his illness he departed from the world'.[38]

(4) Desiring, on recovery, the return of his estate.

(5) Lit., cause to acquire'. Had he presented his estate without allowing symbolic acquisition to take place be could retract on recovery. After symbolic acquisition one has no right to withdraw.

(6) Of a dying man who presented all, or part of his estate, and 'symbolic acquisition' was entered on the deed.

(28) This is an extract from a Mishnah (B.M. 75b), dealing with workmen who broke the arrangements entered into with their employers. ‘Deceive them’, was expressly to be inserted in order to indicate that the statement dictated by Raba was to be of no value whatsoever to the woman, its only object being to make her believe that it contained a decision in her favour and that, consequently, the disturbance she created might come to an end.
(29) Perceiving the subterfuge.
(30) Lit., ‘his’.
(31) To ward off thereby the imprecation. IF the curse was to be fulfilled the soaking of the clothes might form a substitute For the drowning of their wearer or of any of his possessions.
(32) In the deed of a gift be made of his entire estate.

(34) And that, consequently, he cannot retract.
(35) When he made the gift. If no such proof is forthcoming, the donee is entitled to the gift.
(36) The donee. The gift is regarded as being in the possession of its original owner until proof to the contrary is produced.
(37) As was customary to enter in a deed of a gift that was written after the death of the testator, to indicate that the gift was made by a dying man and that, having died from that same illness, he did not retract.
(38) Lit., ‘to the house of his world’, i,e., eternity.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 153b

Rabbah said: Behold, he is dead and his grave indeed proves this.[1] Abaye [however] said to him: [How] now! If [in the case of] a ship [that sank], where most of the passengers[2] are doomed to perish, [we] apply to the victims[3] the restrictions of living[4] men and the restrictions of dead[5] men, how much more [ought we to do] so[6] [in the case of] sick men, of whom most do recover.

R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua. said: In accordance with whose [view] may that reported statement of Rabbah be justified?[7] In accordance with [the view of] R. Nathan. For it was taught:[8] Who takes away from whom?[9] He[10] takes away of their[11] possession without proof, but they [can] not take away of his possession except by [the production of] proof; these are the words of R. Jacob. R Nathan, [however]. said: If he[10] was in good health,[12] he must produce proof that [at the time the gift was made] he was lying sick;[13] if he was lying sick,[12] they[11] must produce proof that [at the time the gift was made], he was in good health.

R. Eleazar said: As regards [Levitical] uncleanness also [they[14] differ in their views on the same principles][15] as in [this] dispute. For we learnt: A [walled] valley in the summer [is subject to the laws of] a private domain in respect of the Sabbath[16] and [to those of] a public domain[17] in respect of [Levitical] uncleanness.[18] In the rainy season[19] it is regarded as a private domain[20] in both respects.[21]

Raba said: This[22] has reference only[23] [to the case] where a winter has not passed over it,[24] but [where] a winter has passed over it, [it is regarded as] a private domain in all respects.[25]

THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAY: HE WHO CLAIMS FROM THE OTHER HAS TO PRODUCE THE PROOF.

(1) Lit., 'upon him'. Since there is no evidence that the testator recovered from the illness during which be made the gift, the fact that be is dead is sufficient ground for the assumption that be died from that illness.

(2) Lit., 'most of whom'.

(3) Lit., 'upon them'.

(4) If among the victims there was, for example, an Israelite who had married the daughter of a priest, it is assumed that he remained alive, and his wife is, consequently. forbidden to eat of the heave-offering. Had it been assumed that her husband was dead she, as the daughter of a priest, would have regained her right to eat of the heave-offering (cf. Git. 28b).

(5) If a priest who had married the daughter of an Israelite (and who had, thereby. conferred upon her the right of eating of the heave-offering) was among the passengers, it is assumed that he is dead, and his wife is henceforth deprived of the privilege he had conferred upon her (cf. Git. ibid.).

(6) To assume that the testator recovered from the illness during which be made the gift.

(16) And nothing may be removed from the valley into a public domain and vice versa.

(17) Since in the summer the crops have been removed from it, and the public use it as a thoroughfare.

(18) Any doubtful case of uncleanness in a public domain, is treated as 'clean'.

(19) When the valley is sown.

(20) Because the public abstain from using it on account of its growing crops.

(21) Lit 'to here and to here'; as regards the Sabbath (v. supra p. 665, n.15), and as regards 'doubtful Levitical uncleanness' which in a private domain is regarded as unclean. Consequently. if a person entered the valley and is not certain whether he entered it in summer or in winter he should, according to R. Nathan, be regarded as clean if his case was dealt with by the court in the summer, and as unclean if dealt with in the winter. According to R. Jacob, who does not take into consideration the time the decision is given, the person would always be regarded as clean whatever the season in which his case is dealt with (since a person is presumed to be usually clean), unless witnesses testified that they saw him enter the valley in winter.

(22) That a walled valley in the summer season is subject to the laws of a public domain in respect of Levitical uncleanness.

(23) Lit., 'they did not teach but',

(24) Since the time when a wall was put round it.

(25) Even in the summer season. Once it has acquired the status of a private domain it retains that status permanently.

Huna said, 'Proof [is produced] by witnesses' [for he holds that] they[5] differ on [the same] principles[6] [as those] of R. Jacob and R. Nathan;[7] (Mnemonic: Meniah)[8] R. Meir [is of the same opinion] as R. Nathan[9] and the Rabbis[10] [are of the same opinion] as R. Jacob.[11] R. Hisda and Rabbah, son of R. Huna, said, 'Proof [is produced] by the attestation of the deed,' [because] they differ [on the question whether, in the case] where a person admitted that he wrote a deed, [independent] attestation[12] is required;[13] for R. Meir is of the opinion [that] where one admitted that he wrote a deed,[14] no [independent] attestation is required[15] and the Rabbis[16] are of the opinion [that], where one admitted that he wrote a deed, [independent] attestation [also] is required.[17]

But [did] they[18] [not], however, once dispute on this [question]?[19] For it was taught [in a Baraitha]: They[20] are not believed [so far as] to invalidate it;[21] these are the words of R. Meir.[22] But the Sages say: They are believed![23] — [Both are] required. Because if [their] dispute] had been stated [in connection with] that [alone],[24] [it might have been assumed that] in that [case only] did the Rabbis say [that attestation of the witnesses was necessary] because the witnesses are all-powerful and they themselves impair [the validity of] the document,[25] but here,[26] where all [the force of the document] does not depend on him,[27] it might have been assumed [that he is] not [believed].[28] And if [their dispute] had been stated in [connection with] this [alone], [it might have been assumed that] in this [case only] did R. Meir say [that the donor is not believed], but in that [case] it might have been assumed [that] he agrees with the Rabbis. [Hence both were] required.

Rabbah likewise stated [that the] proof[29] is by witnesses. Abaye said unto him: What is the reason?[30] If it be said[31] 'Because in all [deeds][32] it is entered,[33] "As he was [able] to walk about[34] in the street", and in this [deed] no such entry is made,[35] [therefore] it is to be concluded [that when the gift was made] he was a dying man', [it may be retorted], 'On the contrary! Since in all [deeds][36] it is entered,[33] "As he was lying sick in his bed,", and [in] this [deed] no such entry is made,[35] [therefore] it is to be concluded [that when he made the gift] he was in good health!' — As one inference is just as reasonable as the other,[37] [replied Rabbah,] the money[38] is to remain in the possession of its [original] owner.[39]

And [the following are] in the [same] dispute.[40] For R. Johanan said: Proof [must be produced] by witnesses; and R. Simeon b. Lakish said: Proof [consists] in the attestation of the deed. R. Johanan pointed out [the following] objection against R. Simeon b. Lakish: It once happened at Bene-Berak that a person sold his father's estate, and died. The members of the family, thereupon,[41] protested [that] he was a minor at the time of [his] death.[42] They[43] came [to] R. Akiba and asked whether the body might be examined.[44] He replied to them: You are not permitted to dishonour him; and, furthermore, [the] signs [of maturity] usually undergo a change after death.[45]

(1) This question may apply to the statements of both R. Meir and the Sages.

(2) Who testify as to the state of the health of the donor at the time the gift was made.

(3) Required by the Sages. (For the proof required by R. Meir, v, infra.)

(4) The signatures of the witnesses on the deed must be verified before a court, and only when the validity of the deed had been established, independently of the donor's admission, have the donees established their right to the ownership of the gift.
(5) R. Meir and the Sages in our Mishnah.
(6) Lit., 'in dispute'.
(7) Supra 153b. V. p. 665, n. 14.
(8) As an aid to memory in pairing the Tannaitic authorities. M = Meir, N = Nathan, I (Y) = Jacob, H = Hakamim, the Sages, the Rabbis.
(9) That the condition of the person at the time the lawsuit is before the court is the determining factor. And since the donor is then in good health it is assumed that he was in a similar condition when the gift was made. Hence it is for him to bring witnesses who could testify that at that time he was lying sick.
(10) The Sages of our Mishnah.
(11) Who maintains that the gift cannot be taken out of the confirmed possession of its original owner (the donor), unless witnesses can be brought by the donee to testify that at the time the gift was made he was in good health.
(12) Before a court.
(13) So that the validity of the deed shall not in any way be dependent on the donor's own word.
(14) And he only disputes its present force, by pleading, for instance, in the case of a deed of a gift, that he was lying sick when he made the gift, or, in the case of a note indebtedness, that he repaid the debt.
(15) Hence, the deed spoken, of in our Mishnah is valid, and the donor must bring witnesses as proof that he was a sick man at the time the gift was made.
(16) V. n. 3, supra
(17) Hence it is incumbent upon the donee to procure the necessary attestation.
(18) R. Meir and the Sages.
(19) Whether a deed acknowledged by its writer as genuine, also requires attestation before a court.
(20) Witnesses who identified their signatures on a deed.
(21) By asserting that they signed under compulsion or when they were minors.
(22) Who requires no attestation of a document on the part of the witnesses in a case where the debtor himself admitted that he wrote it. The validity of the deed, which has been acknowledged by the debtor, cannot, therefore, be impaired by the statements of the witnesses.
(23) A document, though admitted by the debtor to be genuine, requires the attestation of the witnesses before a court; and since the witnesses are, accordingly, the sole authorities for its validity, they are also to be believed when they declare it to be disqualified. Now, since the dispute between R. Meir and the Sages in the Baraitha depends on the same principles as those underlying their dispute in our Mishnah, why should a repetition be necessary?
(24) The Baraitha.
(25) Hence the debtor's admission is disregarded.
(26) Our Mishnah.
(27) The donor.
(28) When, after admitting that he wrote the deed, he states that he was a sick man when he made the gift.
(29) Referred to in our Mishnah.
(30) Why do the Sages require the donee, and not the donor, to produce the proof?
(31) Lit., 'we shall say'.
(32) Given by a man in good health.
(33) Lit., 'in all of them it is written'.
(34) Lit., 'walking on his feet'.
(35) Lit., 'it is not written in it',
(36) That are given by dying men.
(37) Lit., 'it may be said thus and it may be said thus'.
(38) Or property.
(39) Hence the gift cannot be taken away from the donor unless reliable proof is produced by the donee.
(40) I.e.,they differ on the same points as R. Huna on the one hand, and R. Hisda and Rabbah, son of R. Huna, on the other, supra.
(41) Lit., 'and stood up' Cf Rashb.

(42) A minor, under twenty years of age, is not eligible to sell any of his father's estate. Hence, the property he sold should belong to the surviving members of the family. [The words 'of his death' do not occur in some MSS.; v.D.S].
(43) I.e., 'the buyers'. This is the present assumption of R. Johanan. V. answer of R. Lakish, infra.
(44) Lit., 'what is he to examine him'; to exhume him, so as to ascertain his age by a post-mortem.
(45) Cf. Semahoth IV, 12; infra 155a. Hence the examination could not produce any reliable evidence of his age.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 154b

[Now]. according to my interpretation[1] [of our Mishnah that] evidence [is produced] by [the testimony of] witnesses, one can well understand why, when he[2] asked the buyers [to] bring witnesses and they [could] not obtain [them]. they came to ask him whether the body might [not] be examined. But according to your interpretation[3] that evidence [consists] in the attestation of the deed, why should they [wish] to examine [the body]? Let them procure the attestation of their deeds and [thus] gain possession of the property![4] — Do you think, [replied R. Lakish], that the property was in the possession of the members of the family and that the buyers came to protest? [This was not the case.] The property was in the possession of the buyers, and the members of the family came and protested.[5] Logical reasoning also [supports] this [view]. Since when he[6] said to them, 'You are not permitted to dishonour him', they remained silent. If it is granted [that] the members of the family protested, one can well understand why they remained silent;[7] if, however, it be assumed [that] the buyers protested, why [it may be asked] did they remain silent? They should have replied to him, 'We paid him money; let him be dishonoured!'[8] — If [only] because of this[9] [there would be] no argument. [for R. Akiba may] have said to them[10] thus: In the first place,[11] [a post mortem must not be held] because you are not permitted to dishonour him; and, furthermore, in case you might say. 'He took [our] money. let him be dishonoured', the signs [of maturity] usually undergo a change after death.

R. Simeon b. Lakish enquired of R. Johanan: With reference[12] to what has been taught in the Mishnah of Bar Kappara[13] [that], 'If a person was enjoying[14] [the usufruct of] a field on the strength[15] of the current belief that it [was] his, and someone lodged[16] a protest against him claiming.[17] "It is mine"; and the first[18] produced his deed, stating,[17] "You sold it to me" or "You gave it to me as a gift",if [the latter] said, "I never saw this deed",[19] the deed is to be attested by those who signed it;[20] if, [however], he said, "It was a deed of trust[21] or a deed [given on] trust[22] [for something] which I sold you but [for which] you did not pay me the price", then if witnesses[23] are available, one must be guided by[24] witnesses, but if [they are] not [available] one is to be guided by[23] the deed.'[25] Are we to assume [asked Resh Lakish, that] this[26] is [in accordance with the opinion of] R. Meir, who stated that where one admits that he wrote the deed, attestation is not required, but not [in accordance with the view of] the Rabbis?[27] — He [R. Johanan] replied to him: No; because I maintain [that] all[28] agree[29] [that where] one admitted that he wrote a deed no attestation is required. But, surely, [Resh Lakish rejoined,] they[30] are actually in dispute [on this question]; as it was taught, 'They are not believed [so far as] to invalidate it; these are the words of R. Meir. But the Sages say: They are believed'![31] — He replied to him: [Should] he, because[32] witnesses are all-powerful and [may] impair [the validity of] a deed,[33] [have the same power as if] all depended on him![34] But, Resh Lakish asked him again, in your [own] name it was reported that, 'the members of the family have justly protested'![35] — He replied to him, 'This [was] said [by] Eleazar;[36] I have never said such a thing.'

R. Zeira said: If R. Johanan could contradict his disciple R. Eleazar,[37] would he contradict his master R. Jannai? For R. Jannai said in the name of Rabbi: [Though] one admits that he wrote a deed, attestation is [nevertheless] required. And R. Johanan said to him: 'Is not this, Master, [the law enunciated in] our Mishnah [where it is stated] AND THE SAGES SAY: HE WHO CLAIMS FROM THE OTHER HAS TO PRODUCE THE PROOF, [and] proof [can be produced] only through the attestation of the deed?'[38] Acceptable, however, are the words of our master Joseph. For our Master

Joseph, in the name of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel, said: 'This[39] is the view of the Sages. but R. Meir said: [Though] one admits the writing of a deed, attestation is [nevertheless] required;[40] and [as to the expression] 'all agree',[41] [the words] of the Rabbis in relation to [those of] R. Meir [may be described as] the words of all. But, surely, we learnt the reverse: AND THE SAGES SAY: HE WHO CLAIMS FROM THE OTHER HAS TO PRODUCE THE PROOF?[42] — Reverse [the order].[43] But, surely. it was taught. 'They are not believed [so far as] to invalidate it; these are the words of R. Meir. And the Sages say: They are believed'?[44] — Reverse [the order]. But, surely, R. Johanan said: Proof [must be produced] by witnesses?[45] — Reverse [the order].[46] Is it [then] to be assumed [that] the objection also is to be reversed?[47] — No;

(4) Witnesses would not sign a deed of sale unless they were satisfied that the seller has attained the legal age. Their attested signatures would, consequently, supply sufficient evidence that the sale was legally valid.

(5) Since the members of the family did not, of course, possess the deed, the question of their procuring attestation of the deed cannot possibly arise,

(33) Witnesses, according to the Sages. are justly entitled to invalidate a deed, despite the debtor's admission that he wrote it.

(34) Once he himself admitted that he wrote the deed, it is assumed that no witnesses would have signed it if it represented a purely fictitious transaction, and, consequently, even the Sages agree that he has no further power subsequently to invalidate it. Hence, no attestation is needed.

(35) Although they admitted the authenticity of the deed, (i.e.. that the seller had written it), and only disputed its validity (by asserting that he was a minor). How, then, could R. Johanan say that once a person admitted the authenticity of a deed, (i.e., that he wrote it,) he cannot any more dispute its validity?

(40) Thus it is the Sages, and not R. Meir, who require no attestation, when the writing of a deed had been admitted.
(41) Lit,, 'and what (is meant by) "the words of all"? Surely, according to what has been said, R. Meir disagrees'.
(42) I.e., the donee; which shows that, according to the Sages. the admission by the donor that he wrote the deed does not remove from the donee the need of attestation, while according to R. Meir it does thus said R. Johanan to R. Simeon b. Lakish: According to my interpretation that[1] proof [is produced] through the attestation of the deed, one can well understand how it was possible for the buyers to seize[2] the property.[3] according to you, however, since you maintain [that] proof [is to be produced] through [the evidence of] witnesses, how was it possible for the buyers to seize[4] the property?[5] — He replied to him: In the case of a protest on the part of members of the family I agree with you that it is no [legal] protest; [for] what do they plead? [That] he was a minor! [But] it is an established fact [that[witnesses do not sign a deed unless [they know that] he was of age.[6]

It was stated: At what age[7] [may] a minor sell his [deceased] father's estate? — Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: [When he is] eighteen years of age. And R. Huna b. Hinena said in the name of R. Nahman: [When] twenty years of age.

R. Zera raised an objection: It once happened at Bene-Berak that a person sold his father's estate, and died. The members of his family. thereupon.[8] protested. asserting [that] he was a minor at the time of [his] death. They came [to] R. Akiba and asked whether the body might be examined. Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 155b one can well understand the reason why they came and asked whether the corpse might be examined.[1] If, however, it is said, 'At twenty', what useful purpose could the examination serve?[2] Surely we learnt:[3] [If at the] age of twenty he[4] did not produce two hairs,[5] they[6] shall bring evidence that he is twenty years old and he [becomes] a saris;[7] he may neither perform halizah[8] nor the levirate marriage![9] — Has it not been stated in connection with this [Mishnah], 'R. Samuel, son of R. Isaac, said in the name of Rab: That[10] only [applies to the case] where [other] symptoms of a saris[11] [also] appeared on his body!'[12] Raba said: [This; may] also [be arrived at by] deduction. For it was taught, 'And he [becomes] a saris', from which [this][13] may [well] be deduced.

And. [in the case] where no symptoms of a saris developed, how long [is one regarded a minor]?[14] — R. Hiyya taught: Until he has passed middle age.[15]

Whenever [such a case][16] came before R. Hiyya[17] he used to tell them, if [the youth was] emaciated, 'Let him [first] be fattened'; and if he was stout, he used to tell them, 'Let him [first] be made to lose weight'; for these symptoms appear sometimes as a result of emaciation [and] sometimes they develop as a result of stoutness.

The question was raised: [Is] the intervening period[18] [regarded] as that of under, or over age?[19] — Raba said in the name of R. Nahman: The Intervening period is [regarded] as that of under age.[20] Raba son of R. Shila said in the name of R. Nahman: The intervening period is [regarded] as that of over age.[20] That [view] of Raba, however, was not stated[21] explicitly but was arrived at[21] inferentially. For there was a certain [youth], who during [his] 'intervening period' went and sold the estate [of his deceased father]. He came before Raba[22] [who] decided[23] that the action was illegal.[24] [The student] who saw [what had happened] thought [that Raba's reason was] because during the intervening period [one is regarded] as being under age;[25] but this is not [so]. In this [particular] case[26] [Raba] observed excessive foolishness, for [the youth] was [also] liberating his slaves [without any apparent cause].[27]

Giddal b. Menashya sent [the following enquiry] to Raba:[28] Will our Master Instruct us [as to] what [is the ruling in the case of] a girl [who is] fourteen years and one day old [and] understands how to carry on business.[29] He sent [word] to him [in reply]: If she understands how to carry on a business, her purchase is [legal] purchase and her sale is [legal] sale.[30] Why did he not enquire of him[31] [about the case of] a boy? — The incident happened to be such.[32] Why did he not address his enquiry[31] [with reference to] a girl [who is] twelve years and one day old?[33] — That case happened to be of such a nature.[32]

A certain [youth who was] under twenty [years of age] sold the estate [he inherited] from his father in accordance with [the decision sent to] Giddal b. Menashya. [When] he appeared before Raba[34] his relatives told him,[35] 'Go [and] eat dates, and throw the stones at Raba'.[36] He did so; [and Raba] said to them, 'His sale is not a [legal] sale'. When the verdict[37] had been written out for him, the buyers said to him, 'Go tell Raba: The scroll of Esther[38] [may be obtained] at a zuz [and] the master's written verdict[39] [cannot be obtained] at [less than] a zuz!' He went and told him [so]. [Thereupon. Raba] said to them, 'His sale is a [legal] sale'.[40] [When] the relatives told him[41] [that] the buyers had taught him,[42] he[41] replied to them, '[But] he understands [that which] is explained; [and] since he understands when explained, he possesses intelligence,[43] and his [previous] action[44] was due to[45] his excessive impudence.

R. Huna son of R. Joshua said: As regards [the giving of] evidence, his[46] testimony [is legal] evidence. Mar Zutra said: This applies only[47] to [the case of] movables[48] but not to [that of] real estate. Said R. Ashi to Mar Zutra: Why only movables? [Is it] because his sale [of these] is a [legal] sale?[49] If so,[50] [would] the evidence of little children,[51] of whom[52] we learnt [that] their purchase [is a valid] purchase and their sale [is a legal] sale in [the case of] movables,[53] also [be regarded as legal] evidence?[54] — He replied to him: There[55] it is required [that] both the men shall stand[56] which is not [the case].[57]

Amemar said: His[58] gift [is a valid] gift. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: [How] now! If in the case of a sale, where he receives money, it has been said that it is not [valid] because it is possible [that] he might sell too cheaply, how much more so [in the case of] a gift where he receives nothing! He replied to him:

(55) In the case of the evidence of witnesses.
(56) Deut., XIX, 17, referring to witnesses. (Cf. Shebu. 30a).
(57) Where children of six or seven give evidence.
(58) That of a boy who is thirteen years and one day old, who is unable to carry on transactions and whose sale of real estate is invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 156a

And according to your reasoning,[1] [if] he sold [something] worth five for six[2] would his sale indeed be [legally] valid?[3] But [this is the reason]: The Rabbis were well aware that a child is susceptible to the temptations of money; and if it would have been laid down[4] [that] a sale of his is legally valid, [people] might sometimes rattle money before him [and] he would be tempted[5] to sell all the possessions of his [dead father]. In the case of a gift, however, [it is known that] had he not had [some] benefit from him[6] he would not have presented him with a gift; the Rabbis, [therefore.] said [that] his gift shall be a [legal] gift in order that people might render him service.[7]

R. Nahman said in the name of Samuel: [A youth] must be examined [to ascertain whether he has the signs of maturity][8] in respect of betrothal,[9] divorce, halizah,[10] [declarations of] refusal.[11] But in regard to the sale of the estate of his father, he cannot do so until he becomes twenty years of age.[12] But since [the youth][13] was examined in respect of his betrothal what need is there[14] [for an examination] in respect of [his] divorce?[15] — This [law] is required only [in the case] of a youth who married his dead brother's widow.[16] For we learnt: [If] a boy of the age of nine years and a day had connexion with his sister-in-law,[17] he has acquired her [as wife] and may not divorce her until he had attained [legal] age.[18] '[In respect] of halizah'[19] — to exclude [the ruling] of R. Jose who said, 'In the [Biblical] section [of halizah] it is written, Man;[20] but [in the case of] a woman there is no difference between a major and a minor';[21] hence it was necessary to teach us that 'woman' is compared to 'man', contrary to [the view of] R. Jose.

'And [in respect of declarations of] refusal', [this had to be mentioned] in order to exclude [the ruling] of R. Judah who said: [A girl can exercise the right of refusal] until the black[22] predominates;[23] hence it was necessary to teach us that [the law is] not in accordance with [the view of] R. Judah.[24] 'And [in respect of] the sale of the estate of his father, until he becomes twenty years of age' [had to be taught] in order to exclude [the view] of him who said [the youth need only be] eighteen years of age.

The law [is that during the] 'intervening period'[25] [one is regarded] as being under age.[26] The law [is] in accordance with Giddal b. Menashya.[27] The law [is] in accordance with Mar Zutra.[28] The law is according to Amemar.[29] And the law is in accordance with [what] R. Nahman said in the name of Samuel, in all [cases].[30] MISHNAH. IF [A PERSON] DISTRIBUTED HIS POSSESSIONS VERBALLY, R. ELEAZAR[31] SAID, WHETHER HE WAS IN GOOD HEALTH OR DANGEROUSLY ILL, [ALL] REAL ESTATE[32] IS ACQUIRED BY MEANS OF MONEY,[33] DEED[34] AND POSSESSION,[35] WHILE MOVABLE OBJECTS[36] ARE ONLY ACQUIRED BY MEANS OF PULLING.[37]

(8) Though he is thirteen years and one day old; or, in the case of a girl, twelve years and a day.

(12) Even if he has grown two hairs,

(13) The same applies, mutatis mutandis, to a young woman.

(14) Lit., 'why to me'.

(15) Since he was allowed to betroth he must have been examined and found to have produced the necessary signs of maturity.

(16) In such a case no formal betrothal is necessary. A boy who is over nine years of age becomes the legal husband of his dead brother's wife by the mere act of coition. If he desires, subsequently, to divorce her he must undergo an examination for signs of maturity.

(17) Whose husband had died childless.

(18) Nid. 45a; Sanh. 55b.

(27) That a youth of the age of thirteen and one day, who is able to carry on business transactions, may sell the estate he inherited from his father, whether it consists of movables or of real estate.

(28) That the evidence of a youth who is unable to transact business and is of the age of thirteen and one day, is legal only in the case of a dispute on movable objects, but not in that of real estate.

(29) That the gift made by such a youth (of the age and character described in the previous note) is legal, though a sale be contracted is invalid.

(30) Mentioned above. In the case of betrothal, divorce, halizah and declarations of refusal, age alone is no guide unless signs of maturity also appeared. As regards the legality of the sale of an estate inherited from his Father, a youth, if be is not intelligent enough to carry on business transactions, must be twenty years of age, and must also produce signs of maturity. If at the age of twenty no signs of maturity had appeared. the youth remains legally a minor until he had obtained the age of thirty-six, unless marks of a saris had meanwhile made their appearance.

(34) Setting out and confirming the sale.

(36) Lit., ‘possessions which have no secure foundation’.

(37) Heb., meshikah, v. Glos, R. Eleazar is of the opinion that a dying man's verbal instruction has no more legal force than that of a person in good health. Hence, unless legal acquisition took place, the donee acquires no possession even if the donor died; and in case of recovery, the donor may retract even where only a part of his estate had been given away.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 156b

THEY[1] SAID UNTO HIM: THE MOTHER OF THE SONS OF ROKEL ONCE FELL ILL; AND SHE SAID, ‘LET MY BROOCH WHICH IS WORTH TWELVE MANEH BE GIVEN TO MY DAUGHTER’, AND WHEN SHE DIED, HER INSTRUCTIONS WERE CARRIED OUT![2] HE REPLIED TO THEM: [AS TO] THE SONS OF ROKEL, MAY THEIR MOTHER BURY THEM![3]

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Eliezer[4] said to the Sages, ‘Once there lived[5] a man of Meron[6] in Jerusalem and he possessed much movable property which he desired to give away as gift[s]. He was told, [however. that] there was no means [of carrying out his wish] unless he transferred possession [to the donees][7] by virtue of land [transferred to them at the same time]. He consequently[8] purchased a rocky[9] piece of land near Jerusalem and gave the following instructions:[10] "Its northern side [shall be given] to X, and [together] with it a hundred sheep and a hundred casks; and its southern side [shall be given] to Y, and together with it a hundred sheep and a hundred casks". And when he died the Sages carried out his instructions’.[11] They[12] replied to him, ‘[Is there any] proof from there? The Meronite was in good health’![13]

HE REPLIED TO THEM: [AS TO] THE SONS OF ROKEL, MAY THEIR MOTHER BURY THEM! Why did he curse them,? — Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: They allowed thistles to grow in [their] vineyard; and R. Eliezer [is thereby consistent] with his view. For we learnt: If [a person] allows thistles to grow in a vineyard he [thereby], R. Eliezer says, causes [the fruit] to be forbidden;[14] and the Sages say: one does not cause [the fruit of a vineyard] to be forbidden unless [he grows] a plant the like of which [people] usually allow to grow.[15] Said[16] R. Hanina: What is R. Eliezer's reason? Because in Arabia they allow thistles to grow in their fields [as fodder] for their camels.[17]

R. Levi said: [Symbolic] acquisition may be acquired from a dying man[18] even on the Sabbath;[19] but [this is] not due to a consideration of the view of R. Eliezer,[20] but to the possibility that his[21] [peace of] mind might be disturbed.[22]

MISHNAH. R. ELIEZER[23] SAID: ON THE SABBATH, HIS [VERBAL] INSTRUCTIONS[24] ARE LEGALLY VALID, BECAUSE HE IS UNABLE TO WRITE,[25] BUT NOT ON A WEEK-DAY.[26] R. JOSHUA SAID: [IF] THEY SAID [THIS][27] IN [RESPECT OF] THE SABBATH[28] HOW MUCH MORE SO IN [THE CASE OF] A WEEK-DAY?[29] SIMILARLY: ONE MAY ACQUIRE OWNERSHIP ON BEHALF OF A MINOR[30] BUT NOT ON BEHALF OF [A PERSON WHO IS] OF AGE,[31] THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER. R. JOSHUA SAID: [IF THEY ALLOWED POSSESSION[32] TO BE ACQUIRED] ON BEHALF OF A MINOR,[33] HOW MUCH MORE SO ON BEHALF OF [A PERSON WHO IS] OF AGE.[34]

GEMARA. Whose [version is represented in] our Mishnah? — It [is that of] R. Judah. For it was taught: R. Meir stated, ‘R. Eliezer said: On a week-day his [verbal] instructions[35] are legally valid because he is able to write,[36] but not on the Sabbath.[37] R. Joshua

(1) The Sages.

(2) Cf. Supra, 151b, q.v. for notes. Since the verbal instructions of the mother were in this case carried out, how could R. Eleazar maintain that the word of a dying man has no more force than that of one in good health?

(3) They were wicked men and the instructions of their mother, who deprived them of a portion of her estate in favour of her daughter, were carried out, (though there was no legal acquisition on behalf of the daughter), as some sort of punishment for their wickedness. No inference, therefore, as regards the case of other testators, may be derived from this special one.

(4) Cf. supra, note 1,

(5) Lit., 'was'.

(6) [In Galilee near Gush Halab, v. Neubauer, Geographie, 228ff.]

(7) Who were not themselves present to acquire possession.

(8) Lit., 'he went

(9) Unsuitable for cultivation and, therefore, obtainable at a very low price.

(10) Lit., 'and said',

(11) R. Eliezer assumed that the Meronite was a dying man, when he disposed of his property. and since he was compelled to transfer possession by means of land, it is to be inferred that the mere verbal instructions of a dying man have no legal force. How, then, R. Eliezer argued, could the Sages maintain that the verbal disposition of his estate by a dying man is legally valid?

(12) The Sages.

(13) Had he been in a dying condition his verbal Instruction alone would have been sufficient.

(14) It is forbidden to grow in the same vineyard heterogeneous plants even though one is used for human, and the other only for animal consumption.

(15) I.e., plants for human consumption or use. Thistles are mere weeds and as a rule are not allowed to grow among the vines, V. Kil. v, 8.

(16) Current editions insert the following, 'Saffron is well suitable, but of what use are thistles'. It is wanting in most MSS, and is unintelligible in this context.

(17) R. Eliezer, therefore, regards thistles as a proper plant that comes under the prohibition of the growing of heterogeneous kinds, The Sages, however, do not class them as a plant since in most parts of the world they are not grown.

(19) When it is forbidden to arrange legal transactions.

(20) Who requires legal acquisition even in the case of the gift of a dying man.

(22) Seeing that no legal acquisition is being arranged he will feel that he is already being regarded as a dying man. As this mental anguish might accelerate his death, the Sages have allowed legal acquisition to be performed even on the Sabbath in order to ensure the patient's peace of mind. Legally, however, the mere word of a dying man transfers possession to the donees.

(26) Since a written document may be prepared, and symbolic acquisition may be arranged.

(27) That no written deed or symbolic acquisition is necessary.

(28) When these are forbidden, and the rule, 'whenever something is suitable for fusion, actual fusion is not essential', cannot be applied.

(29) When writing and acquisition are permissible and possible, and the rule, 'Whenever something is suitable etc.' (V. previous note) may be applied.

(30) Because he himself is not legally entitled to acquire possessions.

(31) Since he is himself able to acquire possession.

(32) In his absence.

(33) Who cannot himself acquire.

(34) Since he himself is entitled to acquire and be may also appoint an agent to act on his behalf, others also, much more than in the case of a minor, are entitled to acquire possession for him in his absence.
(35) V. supra p. 681, n. 7.
(36) And the rule, 'Whenever fusion is possible. actual fusion is not essential', can be applied. Since writing and acquisition are possible on a week-day, actual writing and acquisition are not indispensable.

said: They said [this][1] in [respect of] a week-day.[2] and how much more so in the case of the Sabbath.[3] Similarly: One may acquire ownership on behalf of [a person who is] of age,[4] but not on behalf of a minor;[5] these are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua said: [If they allowed possession to be acquired] on [behalf of] one who is of age, how much more so on behalf of a minor'. R. Judah stated,[6] 'R. Eliezer said: On the Sabbath his [verbal] instructions are legally valid , because he is unable to write, but not on a week-day. R. Joshua said: [If] they said [this] in [respect of] the Sabbath, how much more so in [the case of] a week-day. Similarly: One may acquire ownership on behalf of a minor but not on behalf of [a person who is] of age; these are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua said: [If they allowed possession to be acquired] on behalf of a minor, how much more so on behalf of[a person who is] of age.[7]

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE WHERE] A HOUSE[8] COLLAPSED UPON A MAN[9] AND HIS FATHER OR UPON A MAN[9] AND THOSE WHOSE HEIR HE IS,[10] AND [THAT PERSON] HAD AGAINST HIM [THE CLAIM OF] A WOMAN'S KETHUBAH[11] OR [THAT OF] A CREDITOR;[12] [AND, IN THE FIRST CASE]. THE HEIRS OF THE FATHER PLEAD [THAT] THE SON DIED FIRST AND THE FATHER AFTERWARDS,[13] WHILE THE CREDITORS PLEAD [THAT] THE FATHER DIED FIRST AND THE SON AFTERWARDS,[14] BETH SHAMMAI HOLD[15] [THAT THE AMOUNT IN DISPUTE IS] TO BE DIVIDED,[16] AND BETH HILLEL HOLD[17] [THAT] THE ESTATE [IS TO REMAIN] IN ITS FORMER STATUS.[18]

GEMARA. We learnt elsewhere: He who lends [money] to another on a bond[19] [is entitled to] collect [his debt] from [the borrower's] lands [even though they were subsequently] mortgaged.[20] [If, however, the loan was made] in the presence[21] of witnesses[22] it may be collected from free[23] property [only].[24] Samuel inquired: What [is the law in the case where the borrower entered in the bond]. 'that I may acquire'.[25] and he acquired?[26] According to R. Meir who holds [the view that] a person may transfer possession of something that has not [yet] come into existence, there can be no question; for [the lender] has undoubtedly acquired possession.[27] The question arises according to [the view of] the Rabbis who maintain [that] a person may not transfer possession of something that has not [yet] come into existence.[28]

R. Joseph said, Come and hear: And the Sages Say: This [creditor] who sold him[29] the land[30] was prudent, because thereby[31] he was in a position to take from him a pledge.[32] Raba said to him: You mean,[33] 'from him'![34] From him[35] [surely], even the cloak that is upon his shoulders [may be seized]![36] Our question, however, is what [is the law in the case] where [the borrower entered in the bond]. 'That I may acquire'. [and] he [subsequently] bought and sold, [or where he entered] 'That I may acquire' [and] he [subsequently] bought or transmitted [his purchase] as an inheritance?[37]

R. Hana replied, Come and hear: [IN THE CASE WHERE] A HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN AND HIS FATHER [OR] UPON A MAN AND THOSE WHOSE HEIR HE IS, AND [THAT PERSON] HAD AGAINST HIM [THE CLAIM OF] A WOMAN'S KETHUBAH OR [THAT OF] A CREDITOR; [AND. IN THE FIRST CASE]. THE HEIRS OF THE FATHER PLEAD [THAT] THE SON DIED FIRST AND THE FATHER AFTERWARDS, WHILE THE CREDITORS PLEAD [THAT] THE FATHER DIED FIRST etc. Now, if it were to be assumed [that where a borrower entered in the bond]. 'that I may acquire'. [and] he [subsequently] bought and sold, [or where he entered]. 'that I may acquire'. and he [subsequently] bought or transferred [his purchase] as an inheritance, [the land] does not become mortgaged [to the creditor, what claim could the creditors advance?] Even if it were granted that the father had died first [and that the son, had consequently. inherited his estate]. this [is merely another form of the case where a bond contains the entry] 'that I may acquire'![38] R. Nahman said to them: Our colleague Zera has explained this [as follows]: It is the moral duty of the orphans to repay the debt of their father.[39]

R. Ashi demurred: This [surely] is a verbal loan,[40] and both Rab and Samuel stated [that] a verbal loan cannot be collected either from the heirs or from the buyers![41]

(8) Lit., 'the'.

(9) Lit., 'upon him'.

(10) E.g., brothers or other relatives who had no other heirs but him.

(13) The son did not consequently inherit from his father whose estate would, therefore, be inherited by his living heirs.

(14) Hence, the son inherited his father's estate, and they, as the son's creditors, are entitled to seize it for their debts.

(16) The claim of the creditors is considered to be of equal force with that of the heirs.

(17) V. note 3.

(18) The claim of the heirs is regarded as certain, since they are entitled to the estate as the heirs either of the Father or of the son, while the claim of the creditors is doubtful, and no 'doubt' may supplant a 'certainty'.

(19) Even though no security on the lender's real estate had been entered in it.

(20) Or sold. No one, it is assumed, would lend money without proper security, and the omission of the guarantee from the bond is regarded as a mere scribal oversight. Furthermore, any future buyer (or subsequent lender on the security) of the lands is assumed to have known of the existence of the loan (since the issue of a written note ensures for the matter due publicity), and must have consented to take the risk of having to surrender them to the creditor should the latter find no other property from which to collect his debt. (Cf. B.M. 14a).

(22) Without a written note.

(23) Such as has not been sold or mortgaged.

(25) I.e., not only what be already possesses but also that which he may purchase in the future shall be mortgaged for the debt.

(26) After the note had been issued. Is the creditor entitled to seize this property if it was sold?

(27) I.e.,the lender is entitled to seize any real estate bought and sold after the date of the note.

(28) Has a mortgage, according to the Rabbis, more force than a sale, and may the lender, therefore, seize the sold land or not?

(29) The borrower.

(30) After the date of the loan, and the latter points to this fact as evidence that the loan had already been repaid. Had he not repaid his debt, one authority (Admon) maintains (Keth. 110a), the lender would not have sold him the field but would have retained its purchase money as payment of the loan. The fact that he did sell it confirms, in Admon's opinion, the borrower's claim; and the lender consequently forfeits his right to seize it.

(31) By the sale of the land.

(32) Keth. 110a. The sale, then, according to the Sages, is no evidence that the loan had been repaid; and the creditor is, therefore, entitled to seize the land though it was bought after the date of the note of indebtedness. Thus it has been proved, in answer to Samuel's enquiry, that property purchased after the loan was made may be seized by the creditor.
(33) [Lit., 'say'. Following the reading of R. Gersh. and MSS.]
(35) I.e., when the property is still in the borrower's own possession.
(36) And no question would arise in such a case.
(37) I.e., where the land is no more in the possession of the borrower.
(38) Since at the time the debt was incurred the son was not yet in possession of his inheritance; and after it came into his possession it was, as soon as he was killed, automatically transmitted to his heirs. As our Mishnah, however, regards the creditors' plea as tenable, it must be inferred that even an estate that was acquired and transmitted to others, after the date of a loan, is also mortgaged to the creditors.
(39) The claim of the creditors, in our Mishnah, is not based on the law of mortgage but on moral considerations. Hence no inference may be drawn from it on the law of the mortgage of property bought and sold after the date of a loan.
(40) Since, as has just been asserted, the creditors have no legal claim upon the dead man's estate, the bond of indebtedness is of no value, and the loan, as far as this estate is concerned, becomes merely a verbal one.
(41) Only in the case of a loan for which a bond of indebtedness had been given is it the moral duty of orphans to repay their father's debt. The creditors, in our Mishnah, could not, consequently, advance even a moral claim. What, then, is their plea?

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 157b

— But [the fact is that] this [Mishnah] represents the view of[1] R. Meir who holds [that] a person may transfer possession of something that is not [yet] in existence.[2]

R. Jacob of Nehar Pekod[3] said in the name of Rabina, Come and hear: Ante-dated bonds of indebtedness are invalid[4] and post-dated [ones] are valid.[5] Now, if it could be assumed [that where the bond contained the entry]. 'That I may acquire'. [and] he [subsequently] bought and sold [or where it contained the entry] 'That I may acquire' [and] he [subsequently] bought and transmitted [the purchase] as an inheritance, [the land] is not mortgaged, [to the creditor], why [are] post-dated [bonds] valid?[6] This [is surely similar to the case of an entry] 'That I may acquire'! — [But] this [may] represent the view of[7] R. Meir who holds [that] a person may transfer possession of something that is not [yet] in existence.[8]

R. Mesharsheya in the name of Raba said, Come and hear! How [is one to understand the statement that] for improvement of lands [one may not seize any sold property]? If [a person] has sold a field to another who improved it,[9] and a creditor [of the seller] came and seized it,[10] when [the buyer] collects [from the seller].[11] he collects [the value of] the principal [even] from mortgaged property, but [that of the] improvement from free[12] property [only].[13] Now, if it is assumed, that where [a bond of indebtedness contained the entry]. 'That I may acquire'. [and] the debtor bought [land] and sold [it, or where the bond contained the entry]. 'That I may acquire'. [and] he bought [land] and transmitted [it] as an inheritance, [that land is] not mortgaged [to the creditor], why does the creditor seize the improvement[s]?[14] — This [may] represent the view of[15] R. Meir who holds [that] a person may transfer possession of something that is not [yet] in the world.

If [a good reason] could be found for the statement[16] [that where there was an entry in a bond of indebtedness], 'That I may acquire'.[17] [and the debtor subsequently] bought [land] and sold [it, or where the bond contained the entry]. 'That I may acquire',[17] [and the debtor subsequently] bought [land] and transmitted it as an inheritance, [that land is] not mortgaged [to the creditor, the question that follows does not arise], since [the land was] not [in any way] mortgaged. If, [however. a reason] could be found for the statement[16] [that such land][18] is mortgaged [to the creditor, the question arises as to] what [is the ruling in the case where the debtor] borrowed [from one person].[19] and [then] borrowed [from another],[20] and then purchased [some real estate which he subsequently sold].[21] [Is this land] mortgaged to the first [lender],[22] or is it mortgaged to the second?[23] — R. Nahman replied: We [also] have raised the same[24] question,[25] and [a reply] was sent from Palestine[26] [that] the first acquired [the right of seizing that land]. R. Huna said: They[27] divide [the land among themselves].[28] And Rabbah b. Abbuha also learned [that the land] is to be divided [between them].[27]

Rabina said: In the first version,[29] R. Ashi told us[30] [that] the first [creditor] acquired [the right over the land];[31] the second[32] version of R. Ashi [however], told us [that the land was] to be divided.[33] And the law is [that the land] is to be divided.[33]

An objection was raised: How [is one to understand the statement that] for improvement of lands [one may not seize any sold property]? If [a person] has sold a field to another who improved it, and a creditor [of the seller] came and seized it,[34] when [the buyer] collects [from the seller][35] he collects [the value of] the principal [even] from sold property but [that of the] improvement from free[36] property [only]. Now, if that were so,[37] he[38] should [only be able to claim] half [the cost of his] improvement![39] — [The expression]. 'he collects', which was used,[40] also implies half [the value of his] improvement.

(5) Sheb. X, 5, B.M. 17a, 72a, Sanh, 32a. The creditor, by allowing the entry of a later date, has thereby surrendered his right to seize those lands which the borrower sold between the actual date of the loan and the later date that was entered in the bond.

(6) Lands that the borrower bought (say in February) between the real date of the loan (say January) and the later one (say March) that was entered on the bond, though acquired after the date of the loan, and consequently not mortgaged to the creditor, could nevertheless be seized by him from purchasers who bought these (say in April) on the plea that they were bought by the borrower before the date and sold by him after the date of the loan entered on the bond. And since a post-dated bond is valid, despite this possibility, one must conclude that lands bought and sold after the date of a loan are also mortgaged to the creditor,

(8) Hence no answer may be derived from it to Samuel's question which had reference to the view of the Rabbis.

(9) By manuring, ploughing and sowing.

(10) In its improved condition.

(11) Compensation for his loss.

(13) B.M. 14b.

(14) The improvements, surely, took place after the loan was made.

(15) V. supra p. 685. n. 5.

(17) I.e., the debtor pledged for his loan not only the lands that he already possessed but also those that he may acquire in the future.

(18) Bought and sold under the conditions just described, (Cf. previous note).

(19) And pledged his present and future possessions. V. supra, n. 3.

(20) To whom he gave the same security as to the first.

(21) Or transmitted it as an inheritance.

(22) Since his security was obtained before the second loan was incurred, he is also entitled to the priority of his claim.

(23) Lit., 'last'. As it might be maintained that the hold of the first creditor on the property which was non-existent at the time of the loan is not sufficiently strong to prevent the debtor from withdrawing it from him and assigning it as security to a second creditor.

(25) Lit., ‘thing’.
(26) Lit., ‘From there’. The statement was made in Babylonia where Palestine was often referred to as ‘there’.
(27) The two creditors.
(28) The land having been purchased after the second loan, when both creditors had equal security on the debtor's possessions, it must be equally divided between them in proportion to their respective claims.
(29) [Thus, Yad Ramah.]
(30) He is said to have lived sixty years, and to have concluded at the age of thirty the first version of his lectures, and at the age of sixty (i.e., during the second thirty years of his life), his second version. [V. Letter of Sherira Gaon, ed. Lewin, 93-94. The tradition connecting R. Ashi with the Editorship of the Talmud is based on this statement, v. Brill, N., Jahrbucher, II, 10. Halevy, Doroth, II, 263ff., however, disputes this.]
(31) V. supra p. 687, n. 4.
(32) Lit., ‘last’. Cf. p. 687, n. 14.
(33) V. supra p. 687, n. 14.
(34) V. supra p. 686, n. 5.
(35) V. ibid. n. 6.
(37) Lit., ‘and if there is’, i.e., if the law is that the second creditor has equal rights with the first, owing to the fact that the land in question was purchased after the second loan.
(38) The buyer.
(39) The buyer, who received no less security for his purchase than the creditor for his loan, should have the same rights as the creditor, just as, in the previous case, the second creditor has the same rights as the first. The improvement of the land, which obviously took place after the sale, may be regarded as land purchased by the debtor after the second loan and sold (since the improvement is claimed from him by both, first by the creditor and ultimately by the buyer. and, in either case, it was no more in his possession than the land sold). Accordingly, the creditor and the buyer (like the two creditors supra) are entitled to equal shares. The creditor could thus seize only half the value of the improvement, the other half remaining with the buyer. Why then should be collect from the seller its full value?

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 158a

MISHNAH. IF THE HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN[1] AND HIS WIFE[2] [AND] THE HEIRS OF THE HUSBAND[3] PLEAD [THAT] THE WIFE DIED FIRST[4] AND [THAT] THE HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS,[5] [WHILE] THE HEIRS OF THE WIFE[6] PLEAD [THAT] THE HUSBAND DIED FIRST [AND THAT] THE WIFE DIED AFTERWARDS, BETH SHAMMAI HOLD [THAT THE ESTATE] IS TO BE DIVIDED,[7] AND BETH HILLEL HOLD [THAT] POSSESSIONS[8] [ARE TO REMAIN WITH THOSE WHO ARE] IN THEIR ESTABLISHED RIGHT OF OWNERSHIP;[9] THE KETHUBAH[10] IN THE POSSESSION OF THE HEIRS OF THE HUSBAND; [AND] THE PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER[11] IN THE POSSESSION OF THE HEIRS OF THE FATHER.[12]

(1) Lit., ‘upon him’.
(2) From whom he had no children.
(3) His sons, e.g., that were born from another wife or his father and brothers.
(4) And her estate was consequently inherited by her husband before he died.
(5) And, consequently, his heirs are entitled to his estate including all that he inherited From his wife.
(6) Her relatives who are not related to her husband.
(7) Since it is impossible to ascertain who in fact died first, the ownership of the estate is a matter of doubt, and any property the ownership of which is in doubt must be divided between the claiming parties.
(8) I.e., property which the wife brought to her husband on marriage, and the value of which was included in her marriage contract, the husband assuming full responsibility for loss or profit.
(9) The Gemara, infra, explains who these are,

(10) I.e.,the sum of a hundred, (in the case of the marriage of a widow), or of two hundred zuz (in the case of the marriage of a virgin), and the 'additional sum' which a husband undertakes to pay to his wife upon divorce or upon his death, and which forms the principal element in a marriage contract.

(11) Property, the principal of which is retained in the wife's possession while its usufruct is enjoyed by the husband. V. supra, p. 206, n. 7.

(12) Of the wife. Since she obtained the property from her father's house and since the property itself remained all the time in her possession, the heirs of her father's house are entitled to inherit it. (CF. Rashb. and R. Gersh. a.l.)

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 158b

GEMARA. In whose established right of ownership?[1] — R. Johanan said: In the right of the ownership of the heirs of the husband.[2] R. Eleazar said: In the right of ownership of the heirs of the wife;[3] and R. Simeon b. Lakish in the name of Bar Kappara said: [The estate in dispute] is to be divided.[4] And so did Bar Kappara teach: Since these appear as heirs and those appear as heirs, [the estate] is to be divided [between them].

MISHNAH. IF THE HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN[5] AND HIS MOTHER,[6] BOTH[7] AGREE THAT [THE ESTATE IN DISPUTE] IS TO BE DIVIDED.[8] R. AKIBA SAID: I AGREE IN THIS [CASE] THAT THE ESTATE [IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE WHO ARE] IN ITS ESTABLISHED RIGHT OF OWNERSHIP.[9] BEN AZZAI SAID TO HIM: [IS IT NOT ENOUGH THAT] WE ARE SUFFERING FROM THE EXISTING DIVISIONS OF OPINION[10] THAT YOU [MUST] COME TO CREATE DIFFERENCES FOR US WHERE UNANIMITY WAS DECLARED?[11]

GEMARA. In whose established right of ownership?[12] — R. Elai said: In the established right of the ownership of the heirs of the mother. R. Zera said: In the established right of the ownership of the heirs of the son. When R. Zera went up [to Palestine] he adopted[13] the principle of R. Elai.[14] R. Zera said: From this[15] one may deduce that the climate of the land of Israel makes one wise. And what is the reason?[16] — Abaye replied: Because the inheritance[17] has become the established possession of that tribe.[18]

BEN AZZAI SAID TO HIM: [IS IT NOT ENOUGH THAT] WE ARE SUFFERING FROM EXISTING DIVISIONS OF OPINIONS etc. R. Simlai said: This implies [that] Ben Azzai was disciple [and] colleague of R. Akiba [seeing] that he said to him, 'That you come'.[19]

[The following statement] was sent from Palestine:[20] '[If] a son borrowed on [the security of] the estate of his father, during the lifetime of his father, and he died, his son may take away from the buyers; and this it is that presents a difficulty in civil law.'[21] [If] he borrowed, [it may be asked.] what [is he to] take away? And, furthermore, what has he to do with buyers?[22] — But, if that statement was made, thus

---

(1) Do the possessions to which Beth Hillel referred in our Mishnah, remain?

(2) Since the husband is entirely responsible for loss or profit and is also entitled to sell it, it is regarded as his possession and, consequently, on his death, it passes over into that of his heirs,

(3) Since it was she who brought it to him from her father's house.

(4) Between the heirs of the husband and those of the wife.

(5) Lit., 'upon him'.

(6) In her widowhood. Her heirs (e.g.. her brothers) plead that the son died first and that, consequently, his mother inherited his estate before she died, and they now inherit it from her, while his heirs (e.g., his paternal brothers) plead that the reverse had happened and that they, therefore, are entitled to the inheritance.

(7) Lit., 'these and these', Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel who are in disagreement on the cases in the Mishnah, supra 157a and 158a.

(8) Unlike the case of a father and son (Mishnah supra 157a), where one party claims possession as heirs and the other as creditors, or the case of a husband and wife (Mishnah. supra 158a), where certain kinds of property are in the legal ownership of the husband while others are in that of the wife, the case in our Mishnah deals with claims both of which are of equal strength, both being based on the right of inheritance, the widow being acknowledged as the undisputed possessor of the estate, the only point in doubt being whether the one party or the other is to be heir. As the equality of the claims leaves the question of ownership in equal doubt on either side, both schools are of the unanimous opinion that the estate in dispute must be divided.
(9) I.e., even in this case, the School of Hillel maintain the view they had advanced in the previous cases. 'I agree' may be paraphrased 'I agree to differ' (cf. Rashb.)
(10) Which are an obstacle to the formulation of the authoritative law.
(11) Since It was generally agreed that in the case spoken of in our Mishnah Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in agreement, why should R. Akiba introduce a note of discord by asserting that even here they are in dispute?
(12) Does the estate remain according to R. Akiba?
(13) Lit., 'stood'.
(14) 'Rabbah adopted the principle of R. Zera', which follows in current editions is to be deleted. (V. Bah, R. Gersh. and R. Han, a.l.) — [It is, however, well to remember that R. Elai was a Palestinian and that R. Zera must have become aware of R. Elai's view only after he came to Palestine when he was led to abandon his own opinion, whereas Rabbah, who still remained behind in Babylon, retained the view of his colleague, R. Zera. Considered in this light, the reading in our current editions is quite in order.]
(15) That in Palestine he was able to see the wisdom of R. Elai's decision.
(16) for R. Elai's decision that the heirs of the mother are entitled to the estate.
(17) The possessions of the widow from the moment her husband died.
(18) To which the mother belongs. Hence it must not be taken away from her heirs, who naturally belong to the same tribe, in favour of the son's heirs who may belong to another tribe and who would, consequently. alienate the property from the tribe the ownership of which had been established.
(19) And not, 'that our Master comes'.
(20) Lit., 'there'. v. supra p. 687, n. 12. The statement is unintelligible and is explained in the Gemara infra.
(21) Lit., 'laws of monies or money matters'.
(22) In the statement no sale but a loan was mentioned!

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 159a

it [must] have been made: [If] a son sold the estate[1] of his father, during the lifetime of the father,[2] and he died, his son[3] may take [it] away from the buyers;[4] and this it is that presents a difficulty in civil law;[5] for they[6] could say to him, 'Your father has sold and you are taking away'![7]

What objection is this! Could he[8] not[9] reply. 'I succeed to the rights of the father of [my] father'?[10] You may know [that such a plea is justified] for it is written, Instead of thy fathers shall be thy sons, whom thou shalt make princes in all the land.[11] If, however, [a message was sent to which] objection [is to be raised, it may be] the following:[12] 'A firstborn son who sold the share of [his] birthright during the lifetime of his father, and he died during the lifetime of his father, his son may take [it] away from the buyers; and this it is that presents a difficulty in civil law',[for] his father sold [it] and he takes [it] away! And if it be suggested [that] in this case[13] also [he might plead]. 'I come as successor to the rights[14] of my father's father', [it may be retorted.] 'If he comes as successor to the rights of his father's father what claim has he upon the portion of the birthright?'[15]

But what difficulty [is this]? Could he not[16] reply, 'I succeed to the rights of [my] father's father[17] but take [also] the place of [my] father'?[18] If, however, [a message was sent to which] objection [is to be raised it might be] the following.[19] 'If a person was in a position to tender[20] evidence for one[21] [in respect of a transaction that was recorded] in a deed,[22] before he turned robber, and [then] he turned robber,[23] he is not [permitted] to attest his handwriting,[24] but others may attest it.'[25] Now, if he [himself] is not trusted[26] [shall] others be trusted![27] This, then, [it is] which [presents] a difficulty in civil law.

What difficulty [is this]? [It is] possible [that the Palestine message refers to] a case where his[28] handwriting was endorsed at a court of law![29] If, however, [a message was sent to which] objection [is to be raised, it might be] the following.[30] 'If a person was in a position to tender[31] evidence for one[32] [in respect of a transaction that was recorded] in a deed,[33] before it[34] had fallen as an inheritance to him, he is not eligible to identify his handwriting[35] but others may identify his handwriting.'[36]

What difficulty, however, [is this]? [Is it not] possible [that] here also [the reference is to] a case where his handwriting was endorsed at a court of law?[37] If, however [a message was sent to which] objection [is to be raised, it might be] the following.[38] 'If a person was in a position to tender evidence for one, before he became his son-in-law and he [subsequently] became his son-inlaw, he is not [permitted] to attest his handwriting,[39] but others may attest it. [Now. if] he is not trusted [shall] others be trusted![40] And if it be suggested [that] here also [the reference is to] a case where his handwriting was endorsed at a court of law, surely, [it may be retorted], R. Joseph b. Manyumi said in the name of R. Nahman, 'Even though his handwriting was not endorsed at a court of law'![41]

What difficulty. however, [is this]? [It is] possible [that] it is a decree of the king[42] that he[43] shall not be trusted [as a witness] while others[44] shall be trusted; and [the reason is] not because he might lie![45] for should not [this explanation] be accepted,[46] [could it be imagined that] Moses and Aaron [are not permitted to act as witnesses] for their fathers-in-law because they are untrustworthy! [The] only [possible explanation] then [is that] it is a decree of the king that they[47] shall not act as witnesses for them,[48] [so] here also [the explanation may be that] it is the decree of the king that he[49] shall not attest his handwriting in favour of his father-in-law.[50]

Hence [the message sent from Palestine was in fact just the one that was mentioned at first;[51] and as to your objection [from the verse]. Instead of thy fathers shall be thy sons,[52] [it may be pointed out that] this was written in [connection with] a blessing.[53] But can it be said [that this verse] was written [only] in [connection with] a blessing

(1) His share of the inheritance.

(2) I.e., while it was still in his father's possession.

(3) The son of the dead man who sold his share in his father's estate.

(4) That which his father had sold them. That sale was invalid because his father's father having been alive at the time, his father was not yet in possession of the land he sold; and, since he died before his father, the land has never come into his possession. Hence the son (the grandson of the owner) inherits that land from his grandfather and is entitled therefore, to take it away from the buyers, on his grandfather's death.

(5) V. p. 691, n. 9.

(6) The buyers.

(7) The son's title to the estate is solely due to the rights of his father, how then, could he lay any claim to that which his father himself had sold

(8) The son, the grandson of the original owner.

(10) And not to those of his father. As the Torah conferred upon a son the right to inherit from his father so it has also conferred upon the son's son the right to inherit from his grandfather. Hence, the inheritance has passed directly from the grandfather to the grandson who should, therefore, be entitled to seize the estate which has never come into the possession of his father who, consequently, had no right to sell it.

(11) Ps. XLV, 17. This proves that a person's son takes the place of his father, i,e., the grandson succeeds his grandfather.

(12) Lit., 'that (is) a difficulty'. But the message in the form given supra, as explained, presents no difficulty at all.

(14) Lit., 'from the power'.
(15) Were it not for the rights of his father who was a firstborn son, he should not have been entitled to the double portion!
(17) As regards the right to be heir,
(18) I.e., he inherits from his grandfather as if he himself had been the firstborn (Rashb.). V. Mishnah supra 116a.
(19) V. p. 692 n. 10.
(21) Lit., 'for him'.
(22) Which be signed as a witness.
(23) Who is ineligible to act as a witness. Cf. Ex, XXIII, 1.
(24) Cf. previous note.
(25) And the deed is valid.
(26) Presumably because the deed may have been forged.
(27) Granted that the signature is his, there is no proof that the deed itself is not a forgery!
(28) The robber's.
(29) Before he embarked on his lawless career. At that time his word could be relied upon; and the deed is, therefore, valid if the witnesses now testify that they signed the endorsement when he was still an upright man.
(30) V. supra, p. 692, n. 10.
(31) Lit., 'knew'.
(32) Lit., 'him'.
(33) E.g., a loan for which a bond of indebtedness has been given.
(34) The bond, i.e., the debt.
(35) He is now an interested party and is, consequently. disqualified from acting as witness.
(36) Since it has been said that he himself is not trusted, it is apparently assumed that he might have forged the document, why then should it be valid if others confirm his handwriting? Could not that very handwriting represent a record of an imaginary transaction? This then may have been the message sent from Palestine which presents a difficulty in civil law.
(37) CF. mutatis mutandis, supra, n. 13.
(38) V. supra p. 692, n. 10.
(39) I.e., his signature on any document in favour of his father-in-law.
(40) CF. supra p. 693, n. 20.
(41) This, then, may have been the Palestine message and the difficulty in civil law that it presented.
(42) A divine precept, a statute without a reason.
(43) A relative such as a son-in-law.
(45) Hence, the correctness of the statements in the deed never having been doubted, the deed is valid if strangers attest the signature.
(46) Lit,, 'for if you will not say so'.
(47) Moses and Aaron as any other relatives.
(48) Their fathers-in-law (or other relatives).
(49) A son-in-law.
(50) What, then, could have been meant by the 'difficulty' mentioned?
(51) The case of a son who sold his share in his father's estate during the latter's lifetime (supra).

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 159b

and that with respect to [a matter of] law,[it is] not [applicable]? Surely it was taught: [In the case where] a house collapsed upon a man and his father [or] upon a man and those whose heir he is, and [that man] had against him [the claim of] a woman's kethubah or [that of] a creditor, [and. in the first case]. the heirs of the father plead [that] the son died first and the father afterwards, while the creditor[s] plead [that] the father died first and the son afterwards;[1] [now,] 'sons'[2] [denote] 'the heirs of the father',[3] do they not? and 'brothers'[4] 'those whose heir he is'? If then it could be assumed [that] one cannot plead. 'I come by virtue of the rights of the father of [my] father', because the verse,[5] Instead of thy fathers shall be thy sons, [was] written in [connection with] a blessing. what avails[6] it [for the heirs] that the son died [first] and the father died afterwards, the creditor [surely] could say to them,[7] 'I collect [my debt from] the inheritance of their father'![8] — No; [by] 'the heirs of the father','his brothers'[9] [are meant; and by] 'those whose heir he is' the 'brothers of his father'[10] [are meant].

R. Shesheth was asked: May a son in the grave[11] be heir to his mother[12] to transmit [her estate] to his paternal brothers?[13] — R. Shesheth said to them, You have learnt it: If a father was taken captive [and died] and his son died in the [home] country, or if a son was carried into captivity [where he died] and his father died in the [home] country. [the estate] is to be divided between the heirs of the father and the heirs of the son. How is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that it is to be understood] as was taught,[14] who then are the heirs of the father and who are the heirs of the son?[15] [Must it] not then [be concluded that it is] this that was meant: If a father was taken into captivity [where he died] and the son of his daughter died in the [home] country, or if the son of one's daughter was taken into captivity [where he died], and the father of his mother died in the [home] country; and it is not known which of them died first, [the estate] is to be divided between the heirs of the father and the heirs of the son. Now, if it were so,[16] granted even that the son died first, he should in his grave inherit [the estate] of the father of his mother and transmit it to his paternal brothers! [Must it] not consequently be inferred that a son in the grave does not inherit [the estate of] his mother to transmit [it] to his paternal brothers?

R. Aha b. Manyumi said to Abaye. 'We also were taught [to the same effect] : IF THE HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON ON A MAN AND HIS MOTHER, BOTH AGREE THAT [THE ESTATE IN DISPUTE] IS TO BE DIVIDED.[17] Now, if it were so,[16] granted even that the son had died first, he should in his grave inherit [the estate] of his mother and transmit it to his paternal brothers! [Must it] not then be concluded that a son in the grave does not inherit [the estate of] his mother to transmit [it] to his paternal brothers?' This proves it.

And what is the reason? — Abaye replied: 'Remove' is mentioned in [the case of the inheritance of] a son,[18] and 'remove' is [also] mentioned in [the case of the inheritance of] a husband,[19] as [in the case of] removal [of an estate] mentioned in [respect of] the husband, a husband in the grave does not inherit [the estate of] his wife, so [also in the case of the] removal [of an estate] mentioned in [respect of] the son, a son in the grave does not inherit [the estate of] his mother to transmit [it] to his paternal brothers.

A man once said to his friend, 'I am selling you the estate of Bar Sisin.' [In it] there was [a plot of] land that bore the name of Bar Sisin, [but the seller] told him, 'This does not belong to Bar Sisin, though it bears the name of Bar Sisin.'[20] [When the matter] was brought before R. Nahman he decided in favour of the buyer.[21] Said Raba to R. Nahman: 'Is this the law? [Surely], he who claims from the other has to produce the proof!'

A contradiction was pointed out between two statements of Raba[22] and between two statements of R. Nahman.[23] For, once a person said to another, 'What claim have you upon this house?' [The other] replied to him, 'I bought it from you and enjoyed [undisturbed] usufruct [during the three] years [required to establish the legal right] of possession.' [The first] said to him, 'I occupied [however], the inner rooms.'[24] [When the matter] was brought before R. Nahman he said [to the buyer]. 'Go [and] bring proof of your [undisturbed] enjoyment of the usufruct.' Said Raba to R. Nahman, 'Is this the law? [Surely], he who claims from the other has to produce the proof!' [Does not this present] a contradiction between the two statements of Raba and between the two statements of R. Nahman ![25] — There is no contradiction between Raba's statements, [because] here,[26] the seller is in possession of his property;[27] and there,[28] the buyer is in the possession of his property.[27] There is [also] no contradiction between the statements of R. Nahman,[because] since here[26] he spoke to him, of the estate of Bar Sisin and [that plot] bore the name of Bar Sisin, It is incumbent upon him[29] to prove that it does not belong to Bar Sisin; here,[28] [however.] [granted] that he has no [less a claim] than [one] who holds a deed, do we not [even in such a case] say [to the holder], 'Attest your deed and you will retain possession of the estate'?[30] [

(1) Supra 157a, q.v. for notes.

(2) Of the son who was killed.

(3) 'The father of their father', i.e., their grandfather. They claim that their inheritance does not come to them from their father, who was in debt, but from their grandfather; and that for this reason they (and not the creditors) are entitled to the estate.

(4) V. supra n. 2.

(5) Lit., 'when it is written'.

(6) Lit., 'what is'.

(7) The court.

(8) Since their inheritance, as has been assumed, cannot come direct from their grandfather but from their father. As, however. they are allowed to advance such a plea, it follows that even in legal matters (not only in a blessing) grandchildren succeed directly to the estate of their grandfather

(9) The brothers of the son that was killed, who are, of course, the sons of the father that was killed whose entire estate they inherit, in the case where their brother died first and afterwards their father.

(10) The uncles of the son that was killed. The Mishnah, in the second case, refers to an uncle and a nephew upon whom a house collapsed. If the nephew died first, the brothers of the uncle (the 'heirs of the father' who is one of the brothers of the uncle) are entitled to the entire estate. If, however, the uncle died first, the nephew is entitled as the heir of his father (one of the brothers) to share the estate with them.

(13) Who are complete strangers to his mother.

(14) That it is a case of a father and his own son,

(15) Both, surely. are represented by the very same heir or heirs. If the son has no issue the heirs of the father would also inherit the sons' estate, and if he has issue, his sons would inherit the estate of their grandfather as well as that of their father.

(18) V. Num. XXXVI, 7. So shall no inheritance . . . remove, which refers to the inheritance of a son from his mother. Cf. supra 112b.

(19) So shall no inheritance remove. Num. XXXVI, 9, which refers to a husband's inheritance from his wife. Cf. supra l.c.

(20) It is his in name only, not in fact.

(21) Lit., 'he placed it firmly in the hand of the buyer'.

(23) Lit., 'R. Nahman on R. Nahman'.

(24) Since the occupier of the inner rooms is making use of the outer ones, the enjoyment of the usufruct for three years in the latter does not establish the right of ownership.

(25) Cf. supra notes 5 and 6.

(26) The case of the land of Bar Sisin.

(27) Hence it belongs to him.

(28) In the dispute about the outer rooms.

(29) The seller.

(30) Hence, it is the buyer who has to produce the proof. On the whole passage, v. supra 29b, 30a.

MISHNAH. A PLAIN DEED[1] [MUST BEAR THE SIGNATURES OF] THE WITNESSES ON ITS INSIDE; A FOLDED ONE[2] [MUST BEAR THE SIGNATURES OF] THE WITNESSES ON THE REVERSE.[3] A PLAIN [ONE] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURES OF THE WITNESSES ON THE REVERSE[4] [AND] A FOLDED [ONE] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURES OF ITS WITNESSES ON THE INSIDE ARE BOTH INVALID.[5] R. HANINA B. GAMALIEL SAID: A FOLDED [DEED] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURES OF THE WITNESSES ON ITS INSIDE IS VALID, BECAUSE IT CAN BE TURNED INTO A PLAIN [ONE].[6] R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: ALL DEPENDS ON[7] THE USAGE OF THE COUNTRY. A PLAIN DEED REQUIRES TWO WITNESSES[8] AND A FOLDED [ONE] THREE.[9] A PLAIN [DEED] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURE OF ONE WITNESS [ONLY]. AND A FOLDED [ONE] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURES OF TWO WITNESSES [ONLY] ARE BOTH INVALID.

GEMARA. Whence these words?[10] — R. Hanina said: For Scripture says, Men shall buy fields for money and subscribe the deeds, and seal them, and procure the evidence of witnesses.[11] Men shall buy fields for money and subscribe the deeds,

(1) גט פשוט, an ordinary deed or note, relating, e.g., to a debt or divorce, all the writing of which appears on one side of the document.

(2) מקשר or מקושר, lit., 'knotted', i.e., stitched. This was a special form of deed, written on alternate lines, blank lines and written lines alternating. Each written line was folded over the blank line adjacent to it, each successive two being stitched together.

(3) Each fold must bear on its external upper side the signature of a different witness, the number of folds not to exceed the number of witnesses.

(4) Lit., 'whose witnesses wrote on its back'.

(5) If it is a bill of divorce, the woman cannot be divorced by it; and if it is a bond of indebtedness, the creditor is not entitled to seize any of the debtor's sold lands.

(6) By removing the stitches.

(7) Lit., 'like'.

(8) Lit., 'its witnesses by two'. [Meir Abulafia, in his Yad Ramah, explains 'a folded deed' differently. 'We take,' he writes, 'a long scroll, and draw from it three to seven thongs below which there comes the written text of the deed. The deed is then folded, special care being taken that the bottom of the reverse of the deed should remain exposed for the signatures of the witnesses. The scroll being rolled together and fastened by the thongs which are knotted together, the witnesses sign between the knots.' This, as Fischer, L. (ZAW. XXX, 139ff.) points out, is in accord with the 'folded deeds' discovered among the Greek papyri. V. also his article in Jahrb. de Jud. Lit., Gesel. IX. 51ff.]

(9) The folded deed contained two elements. The specific (date and amount), and the Formula which is common to all deeds. The first element usually occupied three lines which were folded on the intervening blank lines and stitched together. Hence no less than three witnesses were required. Cf. infra n. 14.

(10) That there are two kinds of deeds differing from each other in the number of witnesses and the mode of folding.

refers to[1] the plain [deed]; and seal[2] them, refers to[1] the folded [one]; and procure the evidence, [implies] two [witnesses][3] witnesses, [implies] three.[4] How [is] this[5] [possible]? Two for a folded [deed]; three for a plain [one]. Might not this be reversed?[6] — Since it has more folds,[7] it [must also] have more witnesses.

Rafram said: [It[8] may be derived] from the following.[9] So I took the deed of the purchase, both that which was sealed, containing the terms and conditions, and that which was open.[10] So I took the deed of the purchase, refers to[11] the plain [deed]; that which was sealed, refers to the folded [one]; and that which was open. refers to the plain [portion] in the folded [deed];[12] the terms and conditions, refers to[13] the laws which distinguish[14] the plain [deed] from[15] the folded [one]. viz.,[16] the one[17] [requires] two witnesses[18] and the other,[17] three witnesses;[18] the witnesses of the one [sign] on the obverse, while the witnesses of the other [sign] on the reverse side. Might not this be reversed?[19] Since it has more folds[20] it [must also] have more witnesses.

Rami b. Ezekiel said: [It[21] may be derived] from, the following text.[22] At the mouth of two witnesses, or at the month of three witnesses, shall a matter be established.[23] If their evidence may be established by two, why should three be specified? To tell you [that] two [are required] for a plain [deed]; three for a folded [one]. Might not this be reversed? — Since it has more folds,[20] it [must also] have more witnesses.

[Is it] for this [purpose][24] that the verses[25] [mentioned] were intended?[26] [Surely] each one is required[27] for a separate purpose;[28] as it was taught: [By the statement], men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe the deeds, and seal them,[29] good advice was tendered;[30] so I took the deed of the purchase,[31] [is] just [a record of] what had happened; at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses,[32] [has been specified], in order to compare three [witnesses] to two,[33] concerning which[34] R. Akiba and the Rabbis are in dispute![35] [The fact], however, [is that the law of] a folded [deed] is [only] Rabbinical, and the Scriptural verses [quoted] are a mere asmakta.[26]

What is the reason why the Rabbis instituted a folded [deed]? — They were [in] a place [inhabited] by priests, who were very hot-tempered and they divorced their wives.[36] Consequently the Rabbis made [this] provision,[37] so that in the meantime[38] they might cool down.[39] This satisfactorily explains bills of divorce; what [explanation, however], may be given[40] [in the case of other] documents? — In order that there may be no distinction between bills of divorce and [other] deeds.

Where, [in the case of a folded deed], do the witnesses sign? — R. Huna said: Between [one] fold and the other;[41] and R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: [On] the back of the writing and corresponding to [all] the written part, on the external [side of the deed]. Rami b. Hama said to R. Hisda: According to R. Huna who said [that the witnesses sign] 'between [one] fold and the other', assuming [that he meant], 'between [one] fold and the other on the external side'[42] [the following objection may be raised]: Surely, a folded [deed] was once brought before Rabbi who remarked, 'There is no date on this [deed]'. [Thereupon] R. Simeon son of Rabbi said to Rabbi, 'It might be hidden between the folds'. [On] ripping [the seams] open he saw it.[43] Now, if it were [so],[44] he should have [remarked].' There is neither date nor are there witnesses on this deed!' — He replied to him: Do you think [that according to R. Huna the witnesses sign] between the folds on the inside? No; [they sign] between the folds on the outside.[45] But [is there no reason] to apprehend that he might forge [the lower section of the folded deed][46] and enter whatever he wished [after] the witnesses had signed?[47] — 'Firm and established',is entered on it.[48] Is [there, however, no reason] to apprehend that he might enter whatever he wished and then write a second time, 'firm and established'? — [The formula], 'firm and established', is entered [only] once,[49] not twice.[50] Is [there no] apprehension that he might erase the [original] 'firm and established', and add[51] whatever he wished, and then write, 'firm and established'? — Surely, R. Johanan said: A suspended [word[52] that has been] confirmed[53] is admissible;[54]

(1) Lit., 'this'.

(2) חתם, seal, close, tie up.

(3) The minimum number of witnesses. All evidence must be given by no less than two witnesses unless the contrary has been specifically indicated. (V. Sot. 2b).

(4) The minimum number above two that has already been mentioned.
(5) That two, as well as three witnesses are required.
(6) Two witnesses for a folded deed and three for a plain one.
(7) I.e., since Scripture surrounded the folded deed with more restrictions.
(8) V. supra n. 1.
(10) Jer. XXXII. 11.
(11) Lit., 'this'.
(12) The folded deed, beside the date and amount which were entered in the first lines which were folded and stitched, also contained the formula, common to all deeds, which was entered in the same manner as on a plain deed. This second element is, 'the plain in the folded'. Cf. Supra p. 699, n. 9.
(13) Lit., 'these'.
(14) Lit., 'which between'.
(15) Lit., 'to'.
(16) Lit., 'how this'.
(17) Lit., 'this'.
(18) Lit., 'its witnesses'.
(19) V. p. 700, n. 8.
(20) V. l.c n. 9.
(23) Deut. XIX, 15.
(24) To indicate the differences between the two kinds of deeds.
(25) Lit., 'and these'.
(26) Lit., that they came'.
(27) Lit., 'that it came'.
(28) Lit., 'For its thing'.
(29) Jer. XXXII, 44.
(30) Lit., 'he taught us'. The text is a guide to purchasers how to proceed with such transactions. Cf. supra 28b.
(31) Jer. XXXII, 21.
(32) Deut. XIX, 15.
(33) That three witnesses have no more powers or privileges than two.
(34) Cf. Mak. 5b.
(35) How, then, could these same verses be said to refer to the laws of folded and plain deeds? (20) אסמכתא, 'support', i.e., the Scriptural text was used by the Rabbis as some slight support, or mnemotechnical aid to the laws of the plain and folded deeds which they themselves have enacted.
(36) For the slightest or imaginary provocation. A plain bill of divorce was easily obtainable, and once the divorce had taken place none could re-marry his wife, since a divorced woman is forbidden to a priest. Cf. Lev. XXI, 7.
(37) The folded bill of divorce.
(38) While the elaborate document was being prepared, written, folded, stitched and signed.
(39) And reconsider their hasty decisions.
(40) Lit., 'is there to be said'.
(41) The assumption at present is that they sign on the blank spaces between the written lines on the obverse of the deed.
(42) Of the document.
(44) That the witnesses sign between the written lines on the inside and that their signatures are consequently folded and stitched in the same way as the date.
(45) Hence the signatures may be seen without ripping open the stitched folds. [According to the description of the folded deed given by the Yad Ramah, the signatures would appear as in fig. 2, p. 704.]
(47) On the external sides of the folds of the upper section. Since the signatures do not appear at the foot of the deed, there is no guarantee that the holder would not add anything he pleased.

(48) This formula appears at the foot of every deed, and anything added after it would be detected at once as a forgery.

(49) Lit., 'one firm etc. we write.

(50) Lit., 'two'. Cf. previous note. Hence the forgery would be detected by the double entry of the formula.

(52) Or words, inserted between the lines of a deed.

(53) At the foot of the deed.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 161a

an erasure [however] is inadmissible[1] although it had been confirmed.[2] [The law,] however, [that] an erasure invalid only applies[3] [to the case where it occurs] in the position [of the formula] 'firm and established'[4] and [occupies the] same space as 'firm and established'.[5]

According to R. Jeremiah b. Abba, however, who stated, '[On] the back of the writing and corresponding to [all] the written part, on the external [side of the deed]',[6] is [there no cause] to apprehend that he might write on the inside[7] whatever he wished and induce additional witnesses to sign on the outside;[8] and might say, 'I did it[9] in order to increase the number of witnesses'?[10] — He[11] replied to him:[12] Do you think [that] witnesses[13] sign in the [same] order [as the lines of the deed],[14] they sign [vertically] from bottom to top?[15] But is [there no reason] to apprehend [that some] unfavourable condition might occur in the last line [of the deed] and he would cut off that last line, and [though] with it he would [also] cut off [the name of the witness] 'Reuben',[16] [the deed] would [yet] remain valid through [the remaining part of the signature], 'son of Jacob witness';[17] as we learnt: [The signature]. 'son of X, witness', is valid?[18] — [The witness] writes, 'Reuben son of', across one line,[19] and, 'Jacob. witness', above it.[20] Is [there no reason, however,] to apprehend that [though] he might cut off, 'Reuben son of', [the deed] would [yet] remain valid through [the remaining portion of the signatures]. 'Jacob, witness';[21] as we learnt: [a signature], 'X, witness' is valid?[22] — [The word], 'witness' is not written.[23] And if you wish it may be said [that a witness], in fact, does write [after his signature], 'witness', [but this is a case] where it is known that the signature

(1) Any writing on the spot erased is invalid.

(2) Because it is possible that the formula, 'firm and established', had been erased from its original position and re-written after the spurious matter that had been inserted in its place. Since an erasure of the formula would, thus, invalidate the added matter, there is no cause to apprehend any forgery, though the witnesses sign on the external side of the deed.

(3) Lit., 'they only said'.

(5) Or more.

(6) And, since the signatures cover the entire extent of the writing, the end of the deed is clearly indicated; and the formula, 'firm and established', is not required at the foot of the deed.

(8) On the back of the additional written matter.

(9) Added extra witnesses over and above the prescribed number of three.

(10) To give the matter greater publicity.

(14) I.e., in horizontal lines on the reverse of the deed, corresponding to the lines on the obverse, the first signature corresponding to the first line of the deed, the second to the second, and so on. If that were the case, spurious matter could certainly be added.

(17) The proper form of a signature was, 'X son of Y, witness'. The algebraic symbols are represented in the Talmud by the Biblical characters, Jacob and his son Reuben.
(18) Git. 87b.
(19) So that by cutting off the last horizontal line of in the deed, 'Reuben son of' which is written vertically on the other side is cut off with it.
(20) Above the last line and across the back of the second line (from the bottom) of the text; and this, i.e., the name only of the father of the witness, would remain on the deed were the last line to be cut off. [(V. fig. 1, cf. Fischer loc. cit.)]. According to the description of the Yad Ramah, the signatures appear thus (v. fig. 2).
(21) The court mistaking the name of the father for the name of a witness, regarding 'Jacob' as the name of the witness.
(23) In such a case, the name of a witness without the name of his father is invalid. Hence, should one line of the deed be cut off leaving the name of the witness's father only on the remaining portion of the deed,the signature would be invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 161b

is not that of Jacob.[1] Is it not possible [that] be signed on behalf of his father?[2] — No one gives up his own name and uses as his signature the name of his father. Might he not have used it[3] as a mere mark?[4] For, surely, Rab drew a fish;[5] R. Hanina drew a palm-branch;[5] R. Hisda a Samek.[6] R. Hoshaia, an Ayin,[6] Rabbah[7] son of R. Huna, a mast![8] — No one would be so impertinent [as] to make of the name of his father a [mere] symbol. Mar Zutra said: What is the need for all this![9] Any folded [deed the signature of] whose witnesses[10] do not terminate[11] with the same line [on the deed],[12] is an invalid [document].[13] R. Isaac b. Joseph said in the name of R. Johanan: All erasures[14] require confirmation;[15] and the last line[16] must contain a repetition of the subject matter of the deed.[17] What is the reason?

---

(1) Hence no court would assume Jacob himself to be the witness.
(2) Using the name of his father rather than his own, as a mark of respect.
(3) The name of his father.
(4) As an arbitrary combination of letters in lieu of his full name. Such a symbol or mark is as legitimate in deeds as one's proper signature.
(5) Instead of his and his father's full name. This symbol has this become his recognised and legally valid signature.
(6) One letter of his name.
(7) Current editions, 'Raba'.
(8) Others, 'ship'. Now, since these scholars used symbols in lieu of their proper signatures, is it not possible that a witness might use the letters forming the name of his father as a symbol for his signature?
(9) All this series of difficult and forced explanations.
(10) Written vertically across the back of the deed, whether from top to bottom or from bottom to top.
(11) On the upper and lower edge of the document.
(12) I.e., the first letters and last letters of all the signatures must begin and end respectively with the same top and bottom lines of the deed.
(13) Hence there is nothing to apprehend. Should one add any spurious matter, it would be detected by the fact that the back of it would protrude below the signatures. Should one cut off a line, the initial or final sections of all the signatures also would thereby be lopped off.
(14) In legal documents; other than the formula, 'firm and established', which must not be erased, cf. supra 161a.
(15) At the conclusion of the text of the deed before the formula, 'firm etc.', all erasures must be enumerated. Current edd.: He is required to write, 'and this is their confirmation'. 'And this', is to be deleted. (Cf. Rashb.). V. however Tosaf, s.v. אמר for a justification of the text.

(17) I.e., no fact, condition or qualification that has not already appeared in the text of the deed may be contained in the last line. The approved formula for the last line is, 'And we took symbolic possession from X son of Y in accordance with all that is written and specified above etc.'

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 162a

— R. Amram said: Because the last line cannot be taken as a determining factor.[1] Said R. Nahman to R. Amram: Whence do[2] you [derive] this? [The other] replied to him: Because it was taught, If the [signatures of the] witnesses were removed two lines from the text, [the deed] is invalid; [if only] one line, [it is] valid. Why are two lines different [from one line]? Because one might commit forgery and add[3] [some unauthorised matter]! [In the case of] one line also [might not one] commit forgery and add[3] [some spurious matter]? Must we not then conclude [that] the last line cannot be taken as a determining factor'? This proves it.

---

(1) Lit., '(people) do not learn from the last line'. Witnesses do not as a rule take care to write their signatures immediately below the text of the deed, and usually leave some space between their signatures and the text. As this space might be used by the unscrupulous for the insertion, in his own interests, of an unauthorised line, it has been provided that nothing essential that has not already appeared in the text of the deed may appear in its last line. Consequently, should this line ever contain a vital point not recorded in the text, it would immediately be detected as spurious.

(2) Lit., 'to'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 162b

The question was raised: What [is the ruling in the case of] a line and a half?[1] — Come and hear: 'If the [signatures of the] witnesses were removed two lines from the text,[2] [the deed] is invalid',[3] [from which it may be inferred that if they were removed] a line and a half only [the deed] is valid. Explain, [however], the first clause: '[If only] one line, [it is] valid'[3] [from which it follows] that only [if the interval was] one line is [the deed] valid but [if it was] a line and a half [the deed] is invalid! From this, then, no deduction can be made.[4] What about an answer to the question?[5] — Come and hear what has been taught: [If] the [signatures of the] witnesses were removed two lines from the text, [the deed] is invalid; [if] less than this[6] [it is] valid.[7]

[If] four or five witnesses have signed on a deed, and the first two were found to be relatives or [such as are in any other way] disqualified,[8] the evidence may be confirmed by the remaining witnesses.[9] [This] affords support to [the view of] Hezekiah; for Hezekiah said, '[If] it[10] was filled with [the signatures of] relatives, [the deed] is valid',[11] And there is nothing strange[12] [in this law],[13] for [while] air [space][14] renders the festive tabernacle ritually unfit when [that space measures only] three [handbreadths],[15] unfit roofing[16] renders [it] ritually unfit [only] when [that roofing measures] four [handbreadths].[17]

The question was raised: [Do] the 'two lines' which were mentioned[18]

(1) If a space sufficient for the writing of a line and a half was left between the text and the witnesses' signatures.

(3) Supra 162a.

(4) Since the deduction from the first part is in contradiction to that of the second, the Baraitha can be used as a guide only for that which it actually teaches.

(5) Lit., 'what becomes about it'.

(8) Cf. Rashb. a.l. Current edd., 'four and (or) five witnesses. . . and one of them was found to be a relative etc.'

(9) Though the signatures of the disqualified witnesses are entirely ignored, the space, nevertheless, on which their signatures are written, even if it extends to two lines between the text and the signatures of the qualified witnesses, is not regarded as a blank to disqualify the deed.
(10) The blank space of two lines between the text of a deed and the signatures of the witnesses.
(12) Lit., 'be not astonished'.
(13) That a blank of two lines renders the deed invalid, while disqualified signatures. though ignored, and though covering the space of two lines, do not.
(14) Corresponding to a blank in a deed.
(15) If the tabernacle has only three walls, and the air space of three handbreadths in the roof runs across the entire length or breadth of the tabernacle intercepting one or two of the walls, so that the tabernacle is, as it were, short of the prescribed minimum number of walls. (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. שהרי a.I.).
(16) The roof of the festive tabernacle must consist of twigs or any other suitable materials which grow from the ground and are not subject to Levitical defilement.
(18) In respect of the law that a blank space of two lines between the text of a deed and the signatures of the witnesses renders the deed invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 163a

[include] themselves[1] and the space between them or, perhaps, themselves [only] and not the space between them? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It stands to reason that they and the space between them [were meant];[2] for if it could be assumed [that only] they[3] [were meant] and not the space between them, of what use[4] [is such a narrow space]?![5] Consequently it follows [that] they and the space between them [were meant]. This proves it.

R. Sabbathai said in the name of Hezekiah: The 'two lines' that were mentioned[6] [are such as are] in the handwriting of the witnesses, not [in] the handwriting of the scribe.[7] What is the reason? Because whoever [desires to] commit forgery does not go to a scribe to get it done[8] . And how much [space]?[9] — R. Isaac b. Eleazar said: As [much] for instance [as is required for the writing of] Lak Lak[10] above one another. This shows that he is of the opinion [that the limit is] two [written] lines and four [intervening] spaces.[11] R. Hiyya b. Ammi in the name of 'Ulla said: As [much] for instance [as is required for the writing of] a Lamed[12] in the upper.[13] and a [final] Kaph[14] in the lower [line].[15] [from this][16] it clearly follows that he is of the opinion [that the limit is] two [written] lines and three [intervening] spaces.[17] R. Abbahu said: As [much] for instance [as is necessary for the writing of] Baruk b. Levi[18] in one line; [for] he holds the opinion [that the limit is] one [written] line and two [intervening] spaces.

Rab said: What has been taught[19] is only applicable [to the space] between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the text; but between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the legal attestation,[20] even if [the blank space is] wider, [the deed] is valid. Why [is the limit] between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the text different [from the other]?[21] Because, the witnesses having signed, [the holder of the deed] might commit forgery by entering [on it] whatever he desires! [In the case of the blank space] between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the attestation too, [could not] forgery be committed by entering whatever one desired and attaching the signature of witnesses?[22] — [In the case][23] where [the blank space] is dotted with ink marks.[24] If so, one [could] also dot with ink marks [any blank space] between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the [text of the] deed![25] — It might be assumed [that] the witnesses had confirmed[26] the dotted [portion].[27] [In the case of dotted ink marks] between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the attestation, [would it not] also be assumed [that] the court had confirmed[28] the dotted portion? — A court does not confirm an ink dotted [space].[29] Is [there no reason] to apprehend[30] that the upper [portion of the deed], might be [entirely] cut off, the ink dots erased, any [terms] desired entered,[31] and the signatures of witnesses [also] might be attached[32] [and yet the deed would be regarded as valid], since Rab stated that a deed the text[33] and the [signatures of the] witnesses of which appear on an erasure[34] is legally valid?[35]

(2) And that if space enough for the written lines only was left, the deed is valid.

(3) V. p. 707. n. 26.

(4) Current edd., 'one line without its space', is to be deleted. (CF. Rashb. and Bah, a.I.).

(5) No forgery could in such a case be committed with impunity. Whether the two lines would be inserted without the proper space between them or whether intervening space would be obtained by the use of a smaller hand, the forgery would be easily detected. Why, then, should a deed containing such a narrow blank space be invalid?

(6) CF. p. 707, n. 15.

(7) The characters in the handwriting of ordinary witnesses ate larger than those of a skilled scribe, and naturally occupy more space.

(8) Lit., 'and forge'. A forgery would be carried out in the secrecy of one's house and the unskilled writer would naturally draw big characters.

(9) Is implied by the limit of 'two lines'.

(10) lach lach to thee, to thee, (or perhaps lech lecha get thee out, a clause from Gen. XII, 1). There must be sufficient space for allowing of the writing, in each of the two lines, of letters which extend upwards (ל) and downwards (ך) without their touching each other. These letters, furthermore, are to be in the larger kind of character as reported above in the name of Hezekiah. Cf. supra note 6.

(16) Since mention is only made of a ל in the upper, and a ך in the lower line.

(17) One above the upper line for the letters which, like a ל, extend upwards; another below the second line for the letters which like ך, extend downwards; and a third between the two written lines for the letters that run both downwards and upwards. Should a ל happen to come below a ך, one could easily move the letter forward or backward to avoid coalescence.

(18) ברוך בן לוי contains two letters which extend downwards and one which runs upwards.

(21) That between the signatures and the attestation of the court.

(22) And the attestation at the foot would be regarded as a confirmation of the entire deed inclusive of the spurious additions and signatures.

(23) I.e., more blank space than the 'two lines' maximum is allowed not in all cases but only in that particular case.

(24) So that nothing could be entered on that space. Aruk reads דמדיית (דיית to dot with ink); cur. edit.דמטייט(טייט to blot, smear).

(25) Why, then, was the blank space in this case restricted to the minimum of two lines?

(26) Lit., 'signed'.

(27) Not the text; and this would invalidate the deed (cf. Git. 87a). Hence, no dotted ink marks are permissible between the text of a deed and the signatures of the witnesses.

(28) V. p. 709. n. 10.

(29) And it would, therefore, be obvious that the attestation referred to the text of the deed. In the case of witnesses, however, such an assumption is not warranted, since not every witness knows the law and it is possible to assume that the holder of the deed had found some witnesses who consented to confirm with their signatures that a blank space was dotted with ink marks.

(30) If an unlimited blank space be allowed between the signatures of the witnesses and the attestation of the court.

(31) On the spot erased.

(32) Without their knowledge.

(34) V. infra 163b seq.

(35) If the signatures are known. In the case, therefore, where an attestation of a court appears at the foot of the deed, the authenticity of the signatures of the witnesses would be taken for granted; and since, according to Rab, the fact that the deed is written on an erasure is no disqualification of its legality, the forgery would never be detected. How, then, could Rab state that the two lines limit does not apply to the space between the signatures of the witnesses and the attestation of the court?

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 163b

According to R. Kahana who reported it[1] in the name of Samuel, this is quite right;[2] according to R. Tabyumi. however, who reported it[1] in the name of Rab, what is there to be said?[3] — He[4] is of the opinion that in any such case[5] [a deed] is not confirmed by the attestation of the court that [may appear] on it but by the witnesses on it.[6]

R. Johanan, however, said: What has been taught[7] is only applicable [to the space] between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the text; but between the [signatures of the] witnesses and the legal attestation[8] even [if the blank space is limited to] one line[9] [the deed is] invalid. Why [is the limit] between the witnesses and the attestation different [from the other]?[10] Because the upper [portion of the deed] might be cut off and the text[11] [of a new deed] and its witnesses might be written on the one line, and he[12] is of the opinion that a deed the text and the witnesses of which appear on one line is valid! If so, [in the case of a space] between the witnesses and the text also, might not the upper [portion of the deed] be cut off and, the witnesses having signed, anything one desires might be entered? — He holds the opinion [that] a deed the text[11] of which appears on one line and its witnesses on another is invalid.[13] But is [there no reason] to apprehend that the text and the witnesses might be written in one line[14] and [the holder of the deed might] plead, 'I did this[15] in order to increase the number of witnesses'?[16] — He[12] holds the opinion [that] in any such case[17] a deed is not confirmed by[18] the witnesses that [appear] below but by[18] the witnesses who [appear] above.[19]

[Reverting to the above] text. 'Rab stated [that] a deed the text and [the signatures of the] witnesses of which appear on an erasure is valid.'[20]

(1) The legality of a deed, the text and signatures on which are written on an erasure.

(2) No difficulty arises, since it may be claimed that, in the opinion of Rab, a deed on an erasure is invalid.

(3) In reply to the difficulty raised. Cf. supra note 8.

(4) Rab.

(5) Where the text of the deed and its witnesses are written on an erasure though an attestation of a court also appears on it.

(6) As the personal evidence of the witnesses, or that of those who knew their signatures, is thus required, a forgery on the lines suggested would, of course, be detected.

(8) V. l.c., n. 4.

(9) And even though that space is dotted with ink marks (Rashb.).

(10) That between the text and the witnesses.

(11) Lit., 'it'.

(13) Because, as stated supra 162a, the last line cannot be taken as the determining factor.

(14) I.e., all the Original text of the deed would be cut away, leaving only the two lines' blank space above the signatures and, on one of these, a forged text and signatures would be written.

(16) The genuine witnesses, though appearing in the second line, would not invalidate the deed, since the first line contains the text and witnesses, while for confirmation of the deed, the holder would not make use of the signatures of the fictitious witnesses in the first line but of those of the genuine witnesses in the second line.

(17) Where the text of a deed and the signatures of its witnesses appear in one and the same line, and these are followed by other witnesses in the next line.

(19) Since the signatures of the witnesses in the first line, being fictitious, could not be attested, the forgery would be exposed.

If, however, it is objected[1] [that, since the writing on the document had been] erased [once, it might] be erased again,[2] [it may be replied that anything which] has been erased once is not like [that which] has been erased twice.[3] But [is there no cause] to apprehend that ink might first be poured on the place of the witnesses,[4] and this[5] would be erased,[6] so that when the text[7] is subsequently erased[8] the lower and the upper sections would represent[9] a repeated erasure?[10] — Abaye replied: Rab is of the opinion [that] Witnesses [must] not sign on an erasure unless the erasure was made[11] in their presence.[12]

An objection was raised: [A deed] the text[13] [of which is written] on [clean] paper[14] and its witnesses on an erasure is valid. Is [there no cause] to apprehend that [the text] might be erased, and any [terms] one desires substituted,[15] and [thus] there would result [a deed] the text[13] and witnesses of which [appear] on an erasure?[16] — They[17] write as follows:[18] 'We witnesses signed on an erasure and the text is written on paper'. Where, [however], do they write [this]? If below,[19] [surely] one [can] cut it off! If above,[19] one [can] erase it![20] They write [it][21] between the signatures.[22] If so, explain the second clause: [A deed] the text[23] [of which appears] on an erasure and its witnesses on [clean] paper is invalid.[24] Why, [it may be asked,] should it be invalid? Let them in this case[25] also write thus: 'We witnesses signed on paper and the text [is written] on an erasure'. Would you now also reply [that as the writing] was [once] erased,[26] one might again erase it?[27] Surely, you said [that] what was erased once is not like that which was erased twice! — This[28] [has been said in the case only] where the witnesses are signed on an erasure.[29] Where, [however], the witnesses are not signed on an erasure but on [clean] paper [the difference[30] can] not be detected.[31] But let any[32] scroll be brought, [on which some writing could] be erased, and compared![33] — The erasure on one scroll is not [always] like the erasure on another scroll.[34] Let, then, the signatures of the witnesses be accepted by the court,[35] and be erased and compared![36] — R. Hoshaia replied: An erasure of one day's [standing] is not like an erasure of two days [standing]. Let it stand [for some time]![37] — R. Jeremiah replied: Precaution had to be taken [to provide] against an erring court.[38]

R. HANINA B. GAMALiel SAID: A FOLDED [DEED] ETC. Rabbi raised an objection against the statement[39] of R. Hanina b. Gamaliel:

(1) Lit., 'thou wilt say'.

(2) And, consequently, while leaving the signatures on the first erasure, the text above them could be erased again. and on this second erasure a forged text might be substituted for the original!

(3) The forgery would be discovered by comparing the signatures which appear on a first erasure with the text appearing on a repeated erasure.

(4) I.e., on the lower section (corresponding to the place of the witnesses) of a paper which has been once erased from top to bottom.

(5) The ink poured.

(6) And thus the witnesses, not suspecting that the section where they append their signatures had been erased twice, whereas the upper section only once, would be signing on a double erasure.

(7) Lit., 'to that'.

(8) from the upper section, and a forged text substituted.
(9) Lit., 'this and this is'.
(10) Lit., 'erased twice'; and since both text and signatures would thus appear on the same kind of erasure, the court would not be able to detect the forgery.
(11) Lit., 'it was erased'.
(12) They would, consequently, be able to satisfy themselves that the upper and lower sections of the erasure were exactly alike.
(13) Lit., 'it'.
(14) I.e., on which nothing has ever before been written.
(15) Lit., 'write'.
(16) Which, as has been said, is valid! Since this would facilitate forgery, why were witnesses allowed to sign on an erasure?
(17) The witnesses.
(19) Their signatures.
(20) And the erasure would raise no suspicion since the witnesses also are signed on an erasure.
(21) The formula, 'We witnesses etc.'
(22) Lit., between witness and witness'. Consequently it cannot be cut off without cutting away with it one of the signatures; and should it be erased, it would leave a doubly erased spot which could be easily distinguished from that of the signatures which appear on what was erased only once.
(23) Lit., 'it'.
(24) Because it is possible that the original had been erased and a forged text had been substituted for it.
(25) Lit 'here'.
(26) The text being written on an erasure.
(27) And substitute a forged text for the original.
(28) Lit., 'these words', that it is possible to distinguish between the two kinds of erasure.
(29) Since the two kinds of erasure appear side by side, on the same document, the contrast between them would be noticed.
(30) Between a first, and second erasure.
(31) The contrast on the document being not that between two kinds of erasure but between an erasure and clean paper.
(32) Lit., 'another'.
(33) With the erasure on the deed. The comparison would determine whether the writing on the deed was erased once or twice.
(34) One of them may be thicker than the other and would not show up the erasure as well as the other.
(35) Provisionally, until it had been ascertained whether the text was, or was not a forgery.
(36) With the erasure on which the text of the deed is written. CF. supra note 11.
(37) When the difference between the old, and the new erasure would disappear and comparison could be made between the erasures on the two sections of the deed.
(38) Which might not think of comparing erasures and, relying on the clear signatures of the witnesses, could accept the validity of the deed. (R. Gersh.) Which might not be aware of the fact that an old erasure differs in appearance from a new one and would, consequently, accept a forged document as genuine (Rashb., cf. Bah, a.l.). Hence it was ordained that any deed the text of which appears on an erasure and the signatures of its witnesses on a clean section of the paper is invalid.
(39) That a folded deed may be turned into a plain one.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 164b

Surely. the date of the one[1] [deed] is not like that of the other;[1] [for in the case of] a Plain [deed,. the first completed year of a king's reign[2] is counted as his first,[3] [and] the second completed year[4] as his second;[4] [while in the case of] a folded [one], the first year of a king's reign[2] is counted as his second,[4] the second as his third;[5] and sometimes [it may happen] that [a person] might borrow money from another[6] on a folded [deed] and, in the meantime,[7] he might obtain funds and repay him, but [when] requesting the return of his deed,[8] [the creditor] might reply to him, 'I lost it', and would write out for him [instead], a receipt; and when the time of its payment[9] arrived, he[10] might convert it [into] a plain [deed] and say to him, 'You borrowed from me now'![11] — He holds the view that a receipt is not written.[12]

Was Rabbi, however, familiar with [the dating of] a folded [deed]? Surely, once a certain folded [deed] was brought[13] before Rabbi who remarked, 'This is post-dated',[14] and Zonin said to him, 'Such is the practice of this nation: [If a king] reigned a [full] year they count it as his second year;[15] [if] two [years], they count them as his third[16] [year]'![17] — After he heard it from Zonin he knew it.[18]

In a certain [plain] deed there occurred the [following] date:[19] 'In the year[20] of the archon[21] X'. Said R. Hanina: Let enquiry be made when [that] archon assumed office.[22] Might he [not on that date] have been in office for some years?[23] — R. Hoshaia replied, 'Such is the practice of this nation: [In the] first year they call him, "archon", [in the] second they call him, digon.'[24] Is it not possible that he was deposed and re-appointed?[25] — R. Jeremiah replied: [In] such [a case] he is designated, 'archon-digon'.

Our Rabbis taught: [In the case where a person said.] 'I am to be a nazarite',[26] Symmachus said, [if he added], hena[27] [he must observe] one [term];[28] [if he added], digon [he must observe] two terms;[29] trigon,[30] three [terms];[29] tetragon,[31] four [terms]; pentagon,[32] five [terms].[33]

Our Rabbis taught: A circular, two cornered, three cornered, and five cornered[34] house is not subject to uncleanness from [house] plagues;[35] a four-cornered house is subject to uncleanness from [such] plagues. Whence is this inferred?[36] — for our Rabbis taught: Above it is said, [instead of] 'wall', walls,[37] [signifying] two;[38] below[39] [also]. [instead of] 'wall', it is said, walls,[39] [which similarly signifies] two, thus making a total of[40] four [walls].[41]

A folded [deed] was once brought before Rabbi who remarked, 'There is no date on this [deed]'. [Thereupon], R. Simeon son of Rabbi said to Rabbi, 'It might be hidden between its folds'. [On] ripping [the seams] open he saw it.[42] Rabbi turned round [and] looked at him with displeasure.[43] 'I did not write it', [said the other]. 'R. Judah Hayyata[44] wrote it'. Keep away from talebearing',[45] [Rabbi] called to him.

Once he[46] was sitting in his[47] presence when he finished a section of the Book of Psalms.[48] 'How correct is this writing'? said Rabbi. 'I did not write it', replied the other, 'Judah Hayyata wrote it'. 'Keep away from tale-bearing'. [Rabbi] called to him. In the first case[49] one can well understand [Rabbi's exhortation, since] there was slander; what tale-bearing, however, was there here?[50] — Owing to [the teaching] of R. Dimi; for R. Dimi, brother of R. Safra, taught: A man should never speak in praise[51] of his friend, because by praise of him he brings about[52] his blame.[53]

R. Amram said in the name of Rab: [There are] three transgressions which no man escapes for a single[54] day: Sinful thought,[55] calculation on [the results of] prayer,[56] and slander.[57] 'Slander'? [How] could one imagine [such a thing]![58]

(1) Lit., 'this'.

(2) Lit., 'he reigned a year'.

(3) Lit., 'a year'.

(4) Lit., 'two'.

(5) Deeds were dated according to the year of the reigning sovereign, folded deeds were post-dated by adding one year to the reign of the ruling king. Hence the same date (e.g. 'the fourth year of King X') on a plain and a folded deed would represent a difference of a full year. [The extra year was probably obtained by reckoning the period elapsing between the day of the king's accession to the throne and the end of the civil year as a full year. Cf. R.H. 2b: 'If a king ascends the throne on the 29th Adar, as soon as1st Nisan comes, it is counted for him as one year.' This practice in vogue among Persians and Babylonians was adopted by the Romans after the days of Trajan, when the years of emperors were counted from10th December. V. Fischer, L., Jahrb. d. Jud. Lit. Gesel. IX, 67ff; and Bornstein, Sokolow's Sefer hayovel 184 ff.]

(8) Lit., 'and say to him: give me my deed'.

(9) Lit., 'its time'.

(11) I.e., after the date of the receipt. By converting the folded, into a plain deed, its date is moved a full year forward, and the receipt is thus made to appear as having been given prior to the loan. The creditor is, consequently, in a position to assert that the receipt was given for a previous loan, and to claim payment for the loan recorded on the deed. How, then, in view of such possible fraud, could R. Hanina allow the conversion of a folded, into a plain deed?

(12) If the creditor cannot produce and return the deed he is not entitled to the re-payment of his debt.

(13) Lit., 'that came'.

(14) A year later than the current year.

(15) Lit., 'two'.

(17) This shows that Rabbi did not know that folded deeds were dated a year later than ordinary ones. How, then, could he raise the objection against R. Hanina, supra, which shows that he knew that the dating of one kind of deed was different from that of the other?

(18) And it was then that he, raised the objection.

(22) Lit., 'when archon stood in his archonship'; and that year is to be regarded as the date of the document. If such a deed relates to a loan, the creditor is entitled to seize any of the creditor's lands that were sold or mortgaged after that date.

(23) Lit., 'that his reign was long'.

(24) Gr.  (born a second time), 'second term in office', iterum consul; the deed, since the title of 'archon' was used in it, must have been written in his first year of office.

(25) And thus assumed the title of 'archon', a second time. Since there may have been a difference of some years between the first and second archonship, and since the deed may have been written in the second, how could R. Hanina decide that the year of the first archonship was to be regarded as the date of the deed?

(26) If no period has been specified the term is thirty days.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 165a

— But the fine shades[1] of slander [were meant].

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Most [people are guilty] of robbery,[2] a minority of lewdness, and all of slander. 'Of slander'? [How] could one imagine [such a thing]! — But the fine shades of slander[1] [were meant].

RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: ALL DEPENDS ON THE USAGE OF THE COUNTRY. And does not the first Tanna hold [the principle of the] 'usage of the country'?[3] — R. Ashi[4] replied: Where[5] it is the custom [to use] plain [deeds] and one said to [the scribe]. 'Prepare for me a plain deed', and [the latter] prepared for him a folded [one], the objection [is valid].[6] [Where it] is the custom [to use] folded [deeds] and one said to [the scribe]. 'Prepare for me a folded deed', and [the latter] prepared for him a plain [one, legal] objection [may be raised.[6] Their dispute relates to a place where [both] plain and folded [deeds] are in use, and he said to [the scribe], 'Prepare for me a plain [deed],' and [the latter] prepared for him a folded [one]. [In such a case],[7] [one] master[8] is of the opinion [that legal] objection [may be raised][9] and [the other] master[10] is of the opinion [that] it was merely an intimation.[11]

Abaye said: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Simeon and R. Eleazar are of the opinion [that, in such a case,[12] the instruction] is [regarded as] a mere intimation.[13] [As to] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, [proof may be brought from] what has [just] been said. [As to] R. Simeon? — Because we learnt: R. Simeon said, If his mistake was in her favour, she is betrothed.[14] [As to] R. Eleazar? — Because we learnt: If a woman said [to an agent] 'Receive a bill of divorce on my behalf at[15] such and such a place', and he received it on her behalf at a different place [the divorce is] invalid; but R. Eleazar considers it valid.[16] [for one] master is of the opinion [that by her instruction[17] she expressed her] objection.[18] while [the other] master holds the opinion [that] it was merely an intimation to him of the place.[19]

A PLAIN [DEED] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURE OF ONE WITNESS etc.[20] One can well understand why it was necessary [to state]. A FOLDED [ONE] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURES OF TWO WITNESSES is invalid; [since] it might have been imagined [that] because elsewhere [such evidence is] valid, it is valid here also, it [was necessary] to teach us that it is invalid. [In the case] however, [of] A PLAIN [DEED] THAT BEARS THE SIGNATURE OF ONE WITNESS, [is not this] obvious?[21] Abaye replied: This was required[22] [for the following]. That even [where, in addition to] the signature of one witness,[23] there is also the oral evidence of another[24] [the deed is invalid].

Amemar [once] declared [a deed] valid on the signature of one witness[25] and the oral evidence of another.[24] Said R. Ashi to Amemar: And what [about] the [view] of Abaye?[26] [The other] replied to him: I did not hear [of it], that is to say[27] I do not share his view. But, [if so],[28] the difficulty in our Mishnah[1] [remains]! — It[2] teaches us this: That two [witnesses] on a folded [deed are] like one witness on a plain [one]; as in the latter[3] the defect is Biblical,[4] so also in the former[5] the defect is Biblical.[6] [This][7] can be proved.[8] for the members of the College[9] sent[10] [the following enquiry] to R. Jeremiah:[11] [In the case of witnesses] one of whom had signed[12] [the deed] and the other [confirmed the contents] orally,[13] are they combined?[14] According to the first Tanna of R. Joshua b. Korha,[15] the question does not arise because, [according to him, independent evidence[16] of two can] not be combined even [in the case where] the two [witnesses] signed the deed,[17] or the two [gave] oral [evidence]. The question, however, arises according to R. Joshua b. Korha.[18] Is the [independent evidence] combined only [in the case where] the two [witnesses] signed the deed[17] or where the two [gave] oral [evidence], but [in the case where] one witness signed[17] and one [testified] orally, [their evidence] is not combined, or [is there], perhaps, no difference? He sent to them [the following reply]: I am not worthy of having [this enquiry] addressed to me; but your disciple is inclined to the opinion[19] that [the witnesses] may be [regarded as] combined.

He[20] said unto him:[21] We learned it[22] thus:[23] for the members of the College sent [the following enquiry] to R. Jeremiah: [In the case of] two [witnesses] who gave evidence, one at one court[24] and the other[25] at another court,[24] may [one] court come to the other and [thus cause the evidence to be] combined? According to the first Tanna of R. Nathan[26] the question does not arise, since, [according to him, such evidence[27] can] not be combined even where [it was given before] one court. The question, however, arises according to R. Nathan.[28] Is [the evidence] combined only [where it was given] at one court, but [if] at two courts [it is] not combined, or [is there], perhaps, no difference? And he sent to them [his reply]; I am not worthy of having [this enquiry] addressed to me, but your disciple is inclined to the opinion[29] that [the witnesses may] be [regarded as] combined.

Mar b. Hiyya said: This was [the enquiry] addressed to him: [In the case where] two gave evidence at one[28] court, and then they gave evidence at another[30] court,[31] may one [member] of either court come [to the other court] and combine?[32] According to [the view] of R. Nathan,[33] the question does not arise, [for] since witnesses may be combined, is there [any] need [to say that] judges [may be combined]? The question, however, arises according to the first Tanna of R. Nathan.[34] [Is it] witnesses only that are not combined but judges are, or is there, perhaps, no difference? He sent to them [in reply]: I am not worthy of having [this enquiry] addressed to me; but your disciple is inclined to the view[35] that they may be combined. Rabina said; Such was [the enquiry] sent to him: [Where] three [judges] sat down to confirm a deed, and one of them died,[36] [is it] necessary to write; 'We were in a session[37] of three[38] and one is [now] no more,[39] or not?[40] He sent to them [in reply]: I am not worthy of having [this enquiry] addressed to me; but your disciple is inclined to the view[41] that it is necessary to write, 'We were in a session of three[38] and one is [now] no more'. And on account of this[42] R. Jeremiah was re-admitted to the College.[43] MISHNAH. [WHEN] IN [A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS] IT IS WRITTEN. 'A HUNDRED ZUZ WHICH ARE TWENTY[44] SELA' [THE CREDITOR] RECEIVES ONLY[45] TWENTY [SELA'].[46] [IF THE ENTRY WAS]. 'A HUNDRED [ZUZ] WHICH ARE THIRTY [SELA']' HE[47] RECEIVES ONLY[45] A MANEH.[48] [IF THE ENTRY READS], SILVER ZUZ IN WHICH ARE . . . AND [THE AMOUNT IS] BLOTTED OUT, [IT REPRESENTS] NO LESS THAN TWO. [IF THE ENTRY READS]. 'SILVER SELA'S WHICH ARE. . . , AND [THE AMOUNT IS] BLOTTED OUT, [IT REPRESENTS] NO LESS THAN TWO. [IF], 'DARICS[49] WHICH ARE. . . AND [THE AMOUNT IS] BLOTTED OUT, [IT IS] NO LESS THAN TWO. [IF] ABOVE[50] A MANEH[51] IS WRITTEN AND BELOW[52] TWO HUNDRED,[53] [OR IF] TWO HUNDRED[53] [ARE WRITTEN] ABOVE AND A MANEH[51] BELOW, ONE IS ALWAYS TO BE GUIDED BY THE LOWER ENTRY.[54] IF SO,[55] WHY SHOULD THE UPPER [PORTION AT ALL] BE WRITTEN? — IN CASE A LETTER IN THE LOWER [SECTION] BE RUBBED OFF IT MAY BE INFERRED[56] FROM THE UPPER [PORTION].

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught:[57] 'Silver'[58] [signifies]no less than a silver denar. 'Silver denarii' or 'denarii silver' [signifies] no less than two silver denarii. 'Silver for denarii', [signifies] silver for no less than two gold denarii.[59]

The Master said: '"Silver" [signifies] no less than a silver denar.' Might it not signify[60] a bar [of silver]? — R. Eleazar replied: [This is a case] where coin was mentioned.[61] Might it not signify[60] small change? — R. Papa replied: In [the case of] a place where small silver coins are not current.[62]

Our Rabbis taught: 'Gold'[63] [signifies] no less than a golden denar. 'Gold denarii' or 'denarii gold' [signifies] no less than two gold denarii. 'Gold for denarii' [signifies] gold of the value of no less than two silver denarii.[64]

The Master said: "gold" [signifies] no less than a gold denar'. Might it not mean[60] a bar [of gold]? — R. Eleazar replied: [In the case] where coin was mentioned.[65]

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 166a

Might it not signify small change? — Small change is not made of gold.[1]

'"Gold for denarii" [signifies] gold of the value of no less than two silver denarii.' Might he[2] not have meant, broken gold [ware] of [the value of] two gold denarii.? — Abaye replied: The holder of the bond [must always be] at a disadvantage.[3] If[4] so,[5] [the same principles should be followed in] the former [cases] also![6] — R. Ashi replied: [In the] first [cases] denarii was written; [in the] last, dinrin was written.[7] And whence may it be deduced[8] that there is a difference between denarii and dinrin? — for we learnt[9] : A woman who had[10] five doubtful confinements[11] [or] five doubtful issues,[12] brings one offering[13] and may[14] [subsequently] eat of sacrificial meat. She is not obliged, [however, to bring] the rest.[15] [If] she had[16] five certain confinements [or] five issues, she brings one sacrifice and [may subsequently] eat of sacrificial meat but is [also] obliged to [bring] the rest.[15] It once happened that [the price of a pair of] birds[17] in Jerusalem had risen[18] to gold denarii.[19] [Thereupon] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel exclaimed, '[By] this Temple![20] I shall not go to rest this night before these [can] be [obtained] for silver denarii'.[21] He entered the Beth din and issued the following instruction:[22] 'A woman who had[23] five certain [child] confinements, [or] five certain issues, brings one sacrifice and may [subsequently] eat of sacrificial meat, and there is no obligation upon her to bring the rest'.[24]

(2) The writer of the bond.

(3) Lit., 'the hand of the owner of the bond on the lowest'. And the borrower, being in possession of the sum claimed, has the right of interpreting the bond in terms advantageous to himself.

(4) for this reading. v. Rashal, a.l. The printed texts contain the following in round brackets: The first (part) where it was taught 'silver for denarii' (signifies) silver for no less that, two gold denarii, why? I might say (that) he meant a bar of silver for two silver denarii.

(5) That the bond is to be interpreted in terms advantageous to the borrower and disadvantageous to the creditor.

(6) In the case of (a) the entry. 'silver denarii'; why should this be interpreted to mean 'silver for no less than two gold denarii' (which is in favour of the holder of the bond), and not, 'small silver coins for two silver denarii' (which would be in favour of the borrower)? And, again (b) in the entry. 'gold denarii' or 'denarii gold'; why should that be given the interpretation, 'no less than two gold denarii' (which also is in favour of the creditor) rather than, 'gold of the value of no less than two silver denarii' (which would be in favour of the borrower)?

(7) The latter, being the usual plural form of denar, signifies silver denarii; the former, being the unusual plural of the noun, implies gold denarii. Cf. Rashb., R. Gersh. and Goldschmidt. For a further discussion of the denar v. Zuckermann's Tal. Munz., 19ff; and Smith's Dict. Gk. Rom. Ant., s.v. Denarius.

(11) Lit., 'births', i.e., if she miscarried five times and, in each case, it was unknown whether the miscarriage was a human embryo or some other object. In the former case the woman would be liable to bring an offering after the termination of a period of Levitically unclean, and clean days (cf. supra p. 528, n. 1); in the latter case she would not.

(12) When it is uncertain whether the discharge occurred during the ordinary course of menstruation (cf. supra p. 528. n. 8). or during the 'eleven days' that intervene between the menstrual periods. In the latter case she is liable to bring an offering (cf. Lev. XV, 25ff); In the former she is exempt.

(17) Lit., 'nests'. Sacrifices after recovery from an issue, (cf. Lev. XV. 29). and, in cases of poverty, also after confinements, (ibid. XII, 8). consisted of birds (two turtles or two young pigeons).

(19) The price had risen owing to the large demand on the part of women who brought separate sacrifices for each confinement.

(20) An oath.

(21) Dinrin, implying silver denarii, while gold denarii were previously described (v. supra n. 13), as denari. Thus it has been shewn that a distinction was made between the two names, denari and dinrin.

(22) Lit., 'he taught'.

(23) Lit , 'there were upon her'.

(24) The other four sacrifices.

On that day [the price of a pair of] birds fell[1] to a quarter [of a denar'].[2]

IF ABOVE IS WRITTEN etc. Our Rabbis taught: The lower [section] may be corrected[3] from the upper [one] where one letter [is missing], but not in [the case of] two letters; for example, Hanan from Hananis[4] or 'ANan from 'ANani.[4] What is the reason[5] why two letters [must] not [be replaced]? [Because] a name of four letters might occur and these[6] would represent half of the name! If so, [in the case of] one letter also, might [not] a name of two letters occur and this[7] would represent half of the name? — But this is the reason [for] two letters: A name of three letters might occur, and these would represent the greater part of the name.[8]

R. Papa said: It is obvious to me [that if] Sefel[9] [appears] in the upper [section].[10] and Kefel[11] in the lower [section], the latter is always to be taken as a guide.[12] R. Papa, [however], inquired what [is the ruling if] Kefel [appears] above and Sefel below? May this be attributed[13] to a fly,[14] or not? — This remains undecided.[15]

In a certain [deed] there was written, 'six hundred and a zuz'. R. Sherabya sent this [enquiry] to[16] Abaye: [Is the entry to be interpreted as], 'six hundred istira[17] and a zuz', or perhaps, [as] 'six hundred perutoth[18] and a zuz?' — He replied to him: 'Dismiss [the question of] perutoth which [could] not [have been] written in the deed, since they are counted up

(8) A scribe might omit half a name if that consisted of a single letter. He is not likely, however, to omit two letters which in some names represent the greater part of the name. and converted into zuzim.[1] What, [then could the entry] mean?[2] [Either] "six hundred istira and a zuz" [or] "six hundred zuz and a zuz";[3] [but] the holder of the bond [must always be] at a disadvantage.'[4]

Abaye said: One who is required to present his signature at a court of law[5] shall not present it at the foot of the scroll [because] a stranger might find it and write [above the signature] that he [has a] claim [of] money upon him; and we learnt [that a person], who produced against another[6] [a bond in] the latter's[7] handwriting [showing] that he owes him [a debt], may collect [it] from his free[8] property.[9]

A collector of bridge tolls[10] once came before Abaye [and] said to him, 'Will the Master give[11] me his signature so that when the Rabbis come [and] present to me [an authorisation][12] I will allow them to pass without [payment of] the toll'.[13] He was writing it down[14] for him at the top of a scroll. As [the other] was pulling it,[15] he[16] said to him,'The Rabbis have long ago anticipated you'.[17]

Abaye said: [Numbers] from three to ten [should] not be written at the end of a line, [because] forgery might be committed by adding letters to them;[18] and if this occurred, the sentence should be repeated two [or] three times, [since] it [would then] be impossible that [the numbers] should not [once] occur in the middle of a line.[19]

In a certain [deed][20] it was entered,[21] 'a third of an orchard'.[22] [The buyer] subsequently[23] erased the top, and the base of the Beth[24] and converted[25] [the second word] into, 'and an orchard'.[26] [When] he appeared before Abaye [the latter] said to him, 'Why has the Waw so much space round about it?'[27] Having been placed under arrest[28] he confessed.

In a certain [deed] there was entered, 'the portion of Reuben and Simeon, brothers'.[29] They had a brother whose name was 'Brothers';[30] and [the buyer] added to[31] it[32] a Waw and converted [the word into], 'and Brothers'.[33] [When] he came before Abaye[34] [the latter] said to him. 'Why is there so little space round the Waw!.[35] He was placed under arrest[36] and he confessed.

A certain deed bore the signatures of Raba and R. Aha b. Adda. He[37] came before Raba [who] said to him, '[This] signature is mine; never, however, have I signed before R. Aha b. Adda!' He was placed under arrest[36] and he confessed.[38] Said [Raba] to him, 'I can well understand how you forged my [signature], but how [could] you manage [that] of R. Aba b. Adda whose hand trembles?' 'I put my hand',[39] the other replied, 'on a rope-bridge'.[40] Others say [that] he stood on a hose and wrote.[41]

MISHNAH. A LETTER OF DIVORCE [MAY] BE WRITTEN FOR A HUSBAND THOUGH HIS WIFE IS NOT PRESENT,[42] AND A RECEIPT[43] [MAY BE WRITTEN] FOR A WIFE THOUGH HER HUSBAND IS NOT PRESENT,[44] PROVIDED THEY ARE KNOWN.[45] THE FEE[46] IS PAID BY THE HUSBAND.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 167b

A BOND MAY BE WRITTEN FOR A BORROWER THOUGH THE LENDER IS NOT PRESENT.[1] IT [MUST] NOT, HOWEVER, BE WRITTEN FOR THE LENDER UNLESS THE BORROWER IS WITH HIM. THE FEE[2] IS PAID BY THE BORROWER. A DEED [OF SALE] MAY BE WRITTEN FOR THE SELLER IN THE ABSENCE OF THE BUYER.[3] IT [MUST] NOT BE WRITTEN, HOWEVER, FOR THE BUYER UNLESS THE SELLER IS PRESENT.[4] THE FEE[5] IS TO BE PAID BY THE BUYER. DEEDS OF BETROTHAL[6] AND MARRIAGE[7] ARE NOT TO BE WRITTEN EXCEPT WITH THE CONSENT OF BOTH PARTIES, AND THE FEE IS PAID BY THE BRIDE GROOM. A CONTRACT OF TENANCY ON SHARES[8] OR ON A FIXED RENTAL[9] IS NOT WRITTEN EXCEPT WITH THE APPROVAL OF BOTH PARTIES, AND THE FEE IS PAID BY THE TENANT.[10] DEEDS OF ARBITRATION[11] AND ALL [OTHER] JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS ARE NOT WRITTEN EXCEPT WITH THE APPROVAL OF BOTH PARTIES, AND BOTH PAY THE FEE.[12] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID; TWO [DEEDS] MAY BE WRITTEN[13] FOR THE TWO PARTIES, ONE FOR EACH.[14]

GEMARA. What [is meant by] PROVIDED THEY ARE KNOWN? — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Provided the name of the man is known[15] [in the case of] a letter of divorce,[16] and the name of the woman in [the case of] a receipt.[17]

R. Safra and R. Aha b. Huna and R. Huna b. Hinena sat [together] and Abaye [also] was sitting with then, and, while they were in session,[18] they raised [the following] question: [Why is] the name of the man required[19] [to be known] in [the case of] a letter of divorce, [and] not the name of the woman; [and] the name of the woman [and] not that of the man in [the case of] a receipt? [Surely] there is reason to fear that one might write[20] a letter of divorce and give[21] it to the wife of another person;[22] and sometimes a woman might procure the writing[23] of a receipt and give it to a strange[24] man![25] — Abaye said to them: Thus said Rab, 'The name of the man[26] in [the case of] a letter of divorce, and the same law [applies] to the name of the woman; the name of the woman[26] in [the case of] a receipt and the same law [applies] to the name of the man'.

But is [there no reason] to apprehend[27] [that there might be a case] of two [persons of the name of] Joseph b. Simeon[28] living in the same town [and that one of them] might write[29] a letter of divorce and deliver[30] it to the other's wife? — R. Aha b. Huna said to them: Thus said Rab: Two [persons of the name of] Joseph son of Simeon who live in one town, must not divorce their wives except in the presence of each other.[31]

Is [there no reason], however, to apprehend[32] that [a person] might go to another town and make his name [there] known as Joseph b. Simeon and [then] would write[29] a letter of divorce[33] and carry it to the wife of that person?[34] — R. Huna b. Hinena said to them,: Thus said Rab; Provided one's name was known in a town [for] thirty days, he need not be suspected.[35]

What [is the law where one's name] is not known?[36] Abaye said, Where they[37] call him[38] and he answers.[39] R. Zebid said, 'A deceiver is vigilant in his deceit'.[40]

A certain receipt [was produced] on which the signature of R. Jeremiah b. Abba appeared. The woman,[41] [however], came before him [and] said to him, 'It was not I',[42] 'I also said to them'.[43] [R. Jeremiah] replied, '[that] it was not she';[44] but they[43] told me, 'She has grown old and her voice has become rough'.[45] Said Abaye: Although the Rabbis said,

(1) Lit., 'with him'.

(2) For the writing of the document.

(3) Lit , ‘though the buyer is not with him’.
(4) V. p. 728. n. 13.
(5) V. loc. cit. n. 14.
(6) Agreements between the parties on the amounts promised. Cf. Keth. 102b.
(7) Kethubah contracts.
(8) The tenant giving the landowner an agreed portion of the crops.
(9) A certain fixed amount irrespective of the yield of the land.
(10) Lit., ‘the receiver’, i.e ‘he who undertook the work’.
(11) Heb. Shetare berurin, שטרי בירורין. V. Gemara, infra.
(12) For the preparation of the shetare berurin.
(13) By the witnesses.
(14) Lit., ‘to this for himself and to . . . himself’.
(15) To the scribe and witnesses.
(16) So that a false name might not be given, and the document presented to the wife of the man bearing that name. The woman would then on producing the letter of divorce be able to collect the kethubah from her husband, even though she did not produce a written kethubah. Cf. Keth. 89b.
(17) She might give the name of a woman who has been divorced and has not received what was due to her as her kethubah, and present the document to the man who would use it as proof that he discharged his obligation to his divorced wife.
(18) Lit., ‘sat’ , i.e delivering, or listening to lectures and discussing them.
(19) Lit ‘yes’.
(20) I.e., obtain a scribe and witnesses to write it for him.
(21) Lit., ‘go and bring’.
(22) Whose name might be identical with his own.
(23) Lit., ‘go (and) write’.
(24) Lit., ‘who is not hers’.
(25) Whose wife might bear the same name as hers.
(26) Must be known.
(27) Even where the names of the parties are known.
(28) I.e., husbands and wives bearing respectively the same names.
(29) I.e., instruct a scribe and witnesses to write it for him.
(30) Lit., ‘and go (and) bring’.
(31) If one of them divorces his wife the other must be present.
(32) According to the Tanna of our Mishnah who requires the names of the parties to be known in order to guard against the possibility of the use of the document by the wrong party.
(33) In his adopted name.
(34) Whose real name is Joseph b. Simeon: and the woman would thus be able to prove that she had been divorced.
(35) That the name by which he is known is not his real name. No one, it is assumed, would venture to go under a false name for so long a period, for fear of being discovered.
(36) How are the scribe and witnesses to decide whether the name submitted to them is the genuine one?
(37) The persons preparing the letter of divorce.
(38) Suddenly, unexpectedly.
(39) One would not respond, it is assumed, to a name which is not really his.
(40) And would, therefore, respond when called by his false name. The genuineness of a name cannot consequently be determined unless a person was known by that name for a sufficiently long period.
(41) Lit., ‘that woman, on whose behalf the receipt was written.
(42) Who authorised the writing of the receipt.
(43) The other witnesses who signed the document with him.
(44) Judging by her voice which was different from that which he heard at the time he signed the receipt.
(45) With which opinion R. Jeremiah, after consideration, concurred.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 168a

'Once a statement has been made it cannot be withdrawn',[1] it is not the nature of a scholar to take particular note [of a woman's face].[2]

A certain receipt[3] on which the signature of R. Jeremiah b. Abba appeared [was produced, but the woman] said to him, 'It was not I'.[4] 'I am sure',[5] he insisted,[6] 'it was you'. Said Abaye: Although a scholar is not in the habit of taking note [of a woman's appearance], when [however] he does take notice he is relied upon.[7]

Abaye said: A scholar who desires[8] to betroth a woman should take with him a layman[9] [so that another woman] might [not] be substituted for her [who would be taken away] from him.[10] AND THE HUSBAND PAYS THE FEE etc. What is the reason? — Because Scripture says: And he shall write . . . and give.[11] And why is this not done[12] at the present time? — The Rabbis have imposed it[13] upon the woman to order that he might not cause her [undue] delay.[14]

A BOND MAY BE WRITTEN FOR A BORROWER THOUGH THE LENDER IS NOT PRESENT etc. [Is not this] obvious?[15] — [This[15] would] not [have been] required [except] in [the case of a loan for] merchandise on shares.[16]

A DEED [OF SALE] MAYBE WRITTEN FOR THE SELLER IN THE ABSENCE OF THE BUYER etc. [Is not this] obvious?[17] — [This would] not [have been] required [except in the case] where one sells his field on account of its inferiority.[18]

DEEDS OF BETROTHAL AND MARRIAGE ARE NOT WRITTEN etc. [Is this not] obvious?[19] — [This would] not [have been] required [except for the fact] that even a scholar [has to pay the fee] though it is a satisfaction to his father-in-law to bring him into his family.[20]

A CONTRACT OF TENANCY ON SHARES OR ON A FIXED RENTAL IS NOT WRITTEN etc. [Is not this] obvious? — [It would] not [have been] required [except for the case] where [the land is to lie] fallow.[21]

DEEDS OF ARBITRATION . . . . ARE NOT WRITTEN EXCEPT WITH THE APPROVAL OF BOTH PARTIES etc. What [is meant by] shetare berurin?[22] — Here[23] it was explained [as] 'records of the pleas'.[24] R. Jeremiah b. Abba explained: One[25] [of the litigants] chooses one and the other chooses another.[26]

RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: TWO [DEEDS] MAY BE WRITTEN FOR THE TWO PARTIES, ONE FOR EACH. May it be suggested [that] they are in dispute on [the principle of] exercising force against a Sodomite character;[27] for [one] Master[28] is of the opinion [that] force is exercised[29] and the [other] Master[30] is of the opinion that force is not exercised![31] — No; both[32] [agree that] force is exercised, but the reason of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel here[33] is this: Because [one can] say to the other,[34] 'I do not like your rights to be at the side of my rights, for you appear to me as a lurking lion'.[35]

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE] WHERE [A PERSON] PAID A PART OF HIS DEBT AND THE BOND WAS DEPOSITED WITH A THIRD PARTY TO WHOM [THE BORROWER SAID]. 'IF I WILL NOT PAY YOU [THE BALANCE] BETWEEN NOW AND[36] A CERTAIN DATE, GIVE HIM[37] HIS BOND', [AND] THE DATE ARRIVED AND HE DID NOT PAY, R. JOSE SAID: HE[38] SHALL GIVE [IT];[39] R. JUDAH SAID, HE SHALL NOT GIVE [IT].

GEMARA. Wherein[40] [lies] the difference between them? — R. Jose holds [that] asmakta[41] conveys possession.[42] and R. Judah holds [that] an asmakta does not convey possession.[43] R.

Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha in the name of Rab said: The halachah is according to R. Jose. When [such cases][44] came before R Ammi, he said: 'Since R. Johanan has taught us again and again[45] [that] the halachah is according to R. Jose, what can I do?' The halachah, however, is not according to R. Jose.

MISHNAH IF A MAN'S BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS WAS EFFACED, HE MUST SECURE[46] WITNESSES,[47] AND APPEAR BEFORE A COURT OF LAW WHERE HE IS SUPPLIED WITH [THE FOLLOWING] ATTESTATION: 'THE BOND OF X SON OF Y WAS FADED ON SUCH AND SUCH A DATE,

(1) Lit., 'since he said, he cannot say again'. Ket. 18b, Sanh. 44b, Mak. 3a.

(2) Hence R. Jeremiah's first statement may be assumed to have been made under a misapprehension, while his second statement, made after due consideration, is accepted.

(3) For a kethubah.

(4) But another woman whose name happened to be the same as hers.

(5) Lit., 'indeed'.

(6) Lit., 'said to her'.

(7) Lit., 'he took note'. Hence R. Jeremiah's statement is to be accepted.

(8) Lit., 'goes'.

(9) Heb. Am-ha-arez, v. Glos.

(10) Since he does not observe and recognise women.

(11) Deut. XXIV, 3.

(12) Lit., 'that we do not do so', that the husband is made to pay the fee

(13) The payment of the fee.

(14) By refusing, or delaying the payment of the scribe's fee, as the scribe would hardly part with the deed before his fee had been paid, the husband is able to postpone also the paying of the kethubah which does not become due until after the divorce had taken place. (Cf. R. Gersh., a.l.). Furthermore, the husband, in order to avoid payment, might desert her altogether and she would thus remain separated from him and prevented from ever marrying again. (Rashb.).

(15) That the borrower, in whose interest the loan is made, must pay the fee of the scribe.

(16) עיסקא, a loan for trading purposes the profits of which are shared by the borrower and lender, (v. supra 70b). Though the latter also benefits from the profits, the fee, as in the case of any ordinary loan, must be paid by the borrower.

(17) That the buyer is to pay the scribe's fee.

(18) Though the seller may be more anxious to sell than the other to buy, the latter, as is the case with an ordinary buyer, must pay for the preparation of the deed.

(19) That the bridegroom is to pay the fee.

(20) It is a source of deep satisfaction for one to be able to secure a scholar for a son-in-law. This, however, is no reason why the bridegroom, though a scholar, should not pay the fees that are paid by other bridegrooms.

(21) Though the tenant would for a year or two, while the land is to lie fallow, derive no benefit from the purchase, he has nevertheless, like an ordinary buyer, to pay the fee

(23) In Babylon.

(24) Of the litigants. Those were recorded by the court scribes, and the decision of the judges was based on the pleas thus recorded.

(25) Lit., 'this'.

(26) Lit., 'One'. An agreement was then signed in which the names of the litigants and the respective arbitrators they have chosen were duly entered.

(28) The first Tanna.

(29) Hence if one of the litigants demands a separate copy of the document for himself for which he offers to pay, and expects the other to pay for another copy, he, acting in the 'character of Sodom', is forced by the court to content himself with one common document towards the cost of which both parties contribute in equal shares.

(30) R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(31) Consequently he maintains that a separate copy of the document may be prepared for each of the litigants if one of them so desires it. Now, since the principle of exercising force against a 'Sodomite character' has been disputed elsewhere, why should it be re-argued here again?
(32) Lit 'that all the world'.
(33) Against the use of force in this case.
(34) Lit., 'to him'.
(35) Since a common document might lead to new arguments and quarrels. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's view is that, in such a case, it is better to allow separate copies for each of the litigants if one of them had expressed a desire to have a copy of his own.
(37) The creditor.
(38) The trustee.
(39) To the creditor, who can consequently claim the payment of the full debt.
(40) On what principle.
(41) אסמכתא, (lit.. 'reliance'), an undertaking to pay or to forfeit something without receiving for it sufficient consideration, which is dependent on the non-fulfilment of a certain condition given by a person in the hope (reliance) that he would be able to fulfil the condition and would not in consequence have to carry out the undertaking.
(42) Though the undertaking to pay the full debt was given in the hope and expectation that it would never have to be carried out, it is nevertheless legally binding, since the condition on which it was dependent was not in fact fulfilled.
(43) It is obvious that the borrower never intended to pay the full debt after he had already paid an instalment. His undertaking to pay the full debt if the balance were not paid by a certain date must have been in the nature of an expression of good faith, in his desire to show that it was his earnest hope and intention to pay the balance before that date arrived.
(44) Relating to the laws of asmakta.
(45) Lit., 'a first, and second time'.
(46) Lit., 'causes to stand concerning it'.
(47) Who remember the contents of the bond.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 168b

AND A AND B [WERE SIGNED ON IT AS] ITS WITNESSES GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: What is the form of its[1] attestation? — 'We, X, Y and Z, being in a session of three, A son of B produced before us a faded bond on such and such a date, and C and D [were signed as] Its witnesses'. And if the attestation contains [the following]. 'We have dealt with the evidence of the witnesses and their evidence was found to agree', [the creditor] collects [his debt][2] and is not required to produce [any additional] proof; but if not,[3] he is required to produce proof.[4] [A bond] intentionally torn is invalid; if torn accidentally, it is valid. [In case] it was effaced or obliterated, if the tracing[5] [of the letters] is distinguishable it is valid. How is one to understand 'intentionally torn' and how, 'torn accidentally'? Rab Judah said: 'Intentionally torn' [means] a tear made by a court of law; 'torn accidentally', a tear which [was] not made by a court of law. How is 'a tear made by a court of law' to be understood? — Rab Judah said:[If it was made at] the place of the witnesses, the place of the date and the place of the amount.[6] Abaye said: [If it runs] lengthwise and crosswise.

Certain Arabs who came to Pumbeditha were seizing by force the lands of the inhabitants.[7] The owners[8] came to Abaye [and] said to him: 'Will the Master examine our deeds and write for us duplicates[9] so that, in case one is forcibly taken away. we shall [still] hold one in our possession'?[10] He said to them: 'What can I do for you. when R. Safra said: Two deeds [may] not be written in respect of the same field [since a person] might [thereby] seize and seize again'.[11] [As] they were troubling him,[12] be said to his scribe, 'Go [and] write for them the text[13] [of the deeds] on an erasure and [let] the[14] witnesses [sign] on [clean] paper, [and thus produce duplicate deeds], which [are] invalid.[15] Said R. Aha b. Manyumi to Abaye;[16] Might it not happen that the [original] tracing[17] would be distinguishable, and [concerning such a case, surely,] it was taught: [A deed that] was effaced or obliterated, if its tracing is distinguishable. [is] valid![18] — He replied to him: Did I say a proper deed [shall be written]?[19] What I said was mere [letters of the] alphabet.[20] Our Rabbis taught: Should [a creditor] come and say, 'I lost my bond of indebtedness'[21] , the bond [may not] be rewritten for him although witnesses stated, 'We wrote, signed and delivered [such a deed] to him'.[22] This, [however], applies only to the case[23] of bonds of indebtedness[24] but [in the case of] deeds of purchase and sale [a deed], with the omission[25] of [the clause] pledging [property may] be [re]written.

(1) A Faded bond. Cf. our Mishnah.

(2) from the property which the borrower may possess or from that which he sold after the date of the original deed.

(3) If the formula, 'we have dealt with the evidence of the witness etc.. Is not entered.

(4) As to the contents of the bond such as date, sum, etc.

(5) Lit., 'its tracing'.

(6) תורף, The 'specific element' of a deed (opp. טופס 'formal element'). viz., date and amount. (Cf. supra p. 699. n. 9.) So called because by virtue of it the creditor may seize (טורף) even the sold lands of the creditor (R. Gersh.). [Krauss, op. cit. III, 352. Connects it with תורפה, 'exposed', 'blank', hence the blank part of the deed which has to be filled in.]

(7) [During the long drawn out Roman-Persian war (338-363). Shapur II invited certain warring Arab tribes to help him in this struggle against the Romans. V. Funk, S., Die Juden in Babylonian, II. 41.]

(8) Lit., 'their owners', of the seized lands, who were compelled by the Arabs to hand over also their deeds.

(9) Lit., another deed on it'.

(10) And use it as proof of ownership if they should succeed in recovering their lands from the Arabs. [V. Obermeyer. op. cit. 235.]

(11) Infra 169a. A buyer who purchased a field the sale of which has been secured by the seller's landed property might, if a creditor of the seller should ever seize that field for his debt, secure double compensation from the lands of subsequent buyers by the production in turn of one of the two deeds.

(14) Lit., 'its'.

(15) They. not knowing that the duplicates were of no legal value, would cease troubling the Master, while no loss to subsequent buyers. (v. supra n. 1,) could possibly be involved (v. supra 164a).

(16) R. Aha understood Abaye to have instructed his scribe (a) to copy the deeds on clean paper; (b) to erase the text, and (c), to copy the deeds again on these erasures.

(18) Of what avail, then, was Abaye's device seeing that they could erase the second text whilst preserving the tracing of the first text?

(20) These were (a) to be written; (b) erased; and on the erasure thus produced, a duplicate of the deed was to be written. Should, in such a case, the original letters re-appear they would signify nothing and the deed would remain invalid.

(21) And there are no witnesses to testify that the deed was really lost.

(22) Because this evidence merely proves that the creditor is entitled to the rights of one such bond. It does not prove, however, that he lost his bond. Hence no second one in lieu of the first may be written for him, since he might make use of the two and thus reimburse himself twice.

(23) Lit., 'in what (case) are the words said'.

(24) Because the creditor might thereby collect his debt twice. Even if no security on the borrower's lands were to be entered, it could still be collected from his 'free' property.

(25) As will be explained, infra 169b.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 169a

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Deeds of purchase and sale also [must] not be re-written.[1] for thus said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: Where a person made a gift to his friend and [the latter] returned the deed to him, his gift [also is, thereby] returned.[2] But the Sages say: His gift is valid. The Master had said, 'with the exception of its land security'; what is the reason?[3] — R. Safra replied: Because two deeds may not be written In respect of the same field in case a creditor[4] might go and seize [the field] of this [person][5] and [the latter][6] would go and produce one [deed][7] and seize [thereby the lands of subsequent] buyers.[8] He[9] would [then] say to the creditor.[10] 'Wait[11] until I am firmly established in the possession of this field[12] and then come and seize it[13] from me. He would [then][14] produce the other [deed][15] and [thereby] rob other buyers [also].[16]

Since, however, the creditor's bond was torn,[17] whereby would he again seize [any] land?[18] And if it be said [that this might refer to a case] where it was not torn; surely, [it may be pointed out,] R. Nahman stated: Any tirpa[19] which does not contain[20] [the declaration], 'we have torn up the creditor's bond of indebtedness', Is not a [legal] tirpa;[21] and any adrakta[22] which does contain [the entry][20] 'we have torn up the tirpa is not a [legal] adrakta;[21] I and any shuma[23] in which [the statement]. 'We have torn up the adrakta' is not entered[20] is not a [legal] shuma![24] — [The precaution was] necessary [in the case] only[25] where one asserts a claim by virtue of his paternal rights.[26] R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: Why [should it be necessary][27] for him[28] to say to the creditor, 'Wait until I am firmly established in the possession of this land'?[29] This[30] [surely], could be derived [from the fact] that since he[31] holds two deeds he [can] seize [once] and [immediately] seize again![32] — If [he were to do] so [he would have had too] many litigants against him .[33]

And [why] should [not] a proper deed[34] be written for that [man],[35] while, for the seller,[36] [the following quittance might] be written out: 'All deeds that [may] be produced against this land are invalid except the one bearing[37] this date'?[38] The Rabbis recited this before R. Papa — and others say, before R. Ashi — [and suggested that] this proves [that] no quittance is [ever] to be written.[39]

---

(1) Because it is possible that the original deed was returned by the buyer to the seller who has thereby (in accordance with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel which follows) again acquired the land he sold.

(2) Similarly, in the case of a sale, it is possible that the deed of sale was returned, and the land was, thereby, re-transferred from the buyer to the seller. Cf. previous note.

(3) Why must the security be excluded from the duplicate.

(4) Of the seller of that field.

(5) The buyer for whom a duplicate deed was written.

(6) Lit., 'that', the buyer from whom the field has been taken by the creditor and for whom a duplicate deed was written. V. previous note.

(7) The duplicate.

(8) Who bought from the same seller after the date of the sale in question and whose purchased lands are consequently included in the security of the first sale.

(9) The buyer. Cf. supra note 7.

(10) With whom he would form a conspiracy to defraud subsequent buyers.

(11) Or 'allow me a period of peace'.

(12) Lit., 'in it', i.e., till the whole affair of the seizure be forgotten.

(13) For the debt for which the creditor was already reimbursed by his first seizure.

(14) After the creditor had staged a second seizure.

(16) He and the creditor sharing the spoils of the fraud between them. Hence the provision that no duplicates are to be written even in the case of deeds of sale and purchase.

(17) When he seized the property from the buyer the first time.

(18) Lit., 'it'.

(19) טירפא (rt. טרף, 'to seize'), a document issued by a court of law to a creditor (to whom the debtor is unable or unwilling to pay his debt), authorising him to trace the debtor's property (including any land sold after the date of his loan), for the purpose of eventually seizing it in payment of his debt.

(20) Lit., 'in which it is not written'.
(21) Had it been made legal, one could have used both documents, each at a different court in a different town.
(22) אדרכתא, (rt. דרך 'to tread'), an authorisation (following that of the tirpa) which a court issues to a creditor, after he had traced the debtor's property (cf. n. 1). to seize it (to 'tread' on) for the purpose of having it offered for public sale and his receiving the proceeds or the land itself at the price valued.
(23) שומא. (rt. שום to appraise', 'value'), a record of the valuation of the seized property, which is delivered by the court to the creditor as evidence of the value at which it was assessed for him. Since a debtor may at any time repay the amount at which the land had been assessed, such a record is necessary to enable the creditor to receive the sum due to him.
(24) Cf. n. 3. How then could it happen that a bond of indebtedness should not be torn up by the time the creditor had already taken possession of the property?
(25) Lit., 'not necessary (but)'.
(26) Lit., 'when he comes from the power of his fathers', i.e., the reason why a duplicate of a deed of purchase and sale is not issued, is not, as has been assumed, because a creditor might conspire to obtain double payment; but to provide against an heir who might prove by witnesses that a buyer had purchased a field from a seller who had robbed it from his father and in consequence of this proof it would be returned to him, while the buyer would be given a certificate authorising him to seize the property which anyone may have purchased from the same seller after the date of his purchase. Such a buyer, were he allowed a duplicate of his deed of purchase, could form a conspiracy with the heir by asking him to wait for a certain period, until he had been firmly established in the ownership of the field which he seized by virtue of one of the two copies of the deed and, after the whole affair had been forgotten, to claim again that field so that the buyer could, with the aid of the second of his two copies of the deed, seize the lands of other subsequent buyers. Hence R. Safra's ruling that no two deeds may be written in respect of one field.
(27) In giving a reason why R. Safra forbids the issue of two deeds of purchase in respect of the same field.
(28) The buyer who, as has been stated above, might form a conspiracy with a creditor to defraud subsequent buyers by means of the duplicate of his deed of purchase.
(29) Lit., 'in this land and I will be established in it'.
(30) R. Safra's law.
(31) The buyer.
(32) Why, then, the necessity for postponing the seizure of the second field to a later date.
(33) And his conspiracy might thereby be more likely to be discovered.
(34) One containing the clause pledging the seller's lands.
(35) Spoken of in the Baraitha (supra 168b, end), who pleads that he lost his deed and requests that a duplicate be given to him in its stead.
(36) In order to protect him against being called upon by the production of two deeds, to pay the buyer twice.
(37) Lit., 'that will go out with'.
(38) That in the duplicate. Should the buyer ever present the first deed, the seller could prove its invalidity by the production of his quittance.
(39) I.e., a debtor cannot be compelled to repay a loan unless his bond is returned to him. He is not obliged to become the keeper of a quittance. Cf. Mishnah 170b, infra.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 169b

He, [however,] said to them: Elsewhere[1] a quittance is to be written,[2] and [the reason why it is not written] in this case[3] is because the creditor[4] might call upon, and take [the field] away from the buyer[5] and he[6] would call upon, and seize [the fields of subsequent] buyers, while [these] buyers [would] have no quittance [to show].[7] After all, however, [would] not the buyers [ultimately] return to the owner of the land?[8] — In the meantime he[9] [would be] plucking and eating the fruit, or else,[10] [he[9] might seize the land] from one who has purchased [it] without security.[11] If so,[12] [the same should apply to] bonds of indebtedness also![13] — In that case[14] where the claim is money they[15] assume [that] the debtor might have satisfied the claim[16] with money.[17] In this case[18] [however] where the claim is for land, they well know that one who claims land would not be satisfied with money.[19]

The Master had said, 'With the omission of [the clause] pledging [property]'. How [is such a deed][20] to be written? — R. Nahman said: It is written as follows: 'This deed is not for the purpose of collecting thereby either from sold, or from free property but for that of establishing the land in the possession of the buyer'.[21] Rafram said: This[22] proves [that the omission[23] of the clause] pledging property [is regarded as the] scribe's error,[24] [since] the reason [given[25] was] because such an entry[26] was actually included[27] but, [it follows], had it not been included[28] he[29] [could have] claimed [his compensation from the seller's lands].[30]

R. Ashi said: [The omission of the clause] pledging property [is] not [regarded as] the scribe's error; and the meaning of[30] 'with the omission [of the clause] pledging property' is that no such clause is entered in the deed.[31]

A certain woman once gave to a man money [wherewith] to buy for her [a plot of] land. He went [and] bought for her [the land] without [providing for the] security[32] of its tenure. She came before R. Nahman[33] [who] said to the agent.[34] '[The woman has the right to declare]. "I sent you to improve [my position]; not to make [it] worse".[35] Go [then], buy it [yourself] from him[36] without security and then sell it [to the woman] with due security of tenure'.[37]

'Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said; Where a person made a gift to his friend and [the latter] returned the deed to him, his gift [also is, thereby] returned. But the Sages said: His gift is valid.' What is Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel's reason? — R. Assi said: [Because] it[38] is just as if [the donor] had said to the donee.[39] 'This field is given to you for so long [a period] as the deed [remains] in your possession'.[40]

Rabbah demurred; If so,[41] [the same law should apply] also [to the case where] it[42] was stolen or lost! — But, said Rabbah, they differ on [the question whether] 'letters'[42] [may] be acquired by delivery.[43] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds the opinion [that] 'letters' are acquired by delivery while the Rabbis[44] hold the opinion [that] 'letters' may not be acquired by delivery.

Our Rabbis taught: Where a person appears in court[45] with a deed[46] and with [evidence of] undisturbed possession[47] judgment is given [on the basis of] the deed; [these are] the words of Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: [Judgment is given] on [the basis of his] undisturbed possession. On what [principle] do they differ? — When R. Dimi came[48] he said: They differ on [the question whether] 'letters' may be acquired by delivery.

(1) In the case where a bond of indebtedness was lost by a creditor.

(2) for the debtor on paying his debt.

(3) And on the strength of it provide the buyer with a duplicate.

(4) Of the seller.

(5) Who bought his land from the debtor subsequent to the date of the loan.

(6) That buyer.

(7) The first buyer, wore he able to secure a duplicate deed on a plea of having lost the original, would, thereby, be placed in a position to form a conspiracy with the creditor to defraud subsequent buyers.

(8) I.e., the seller, to claim compensation for the lands seized; and he would, naturally, tell them about the quittance wherewith they could to — claim the lands of which they were robbed by the first buyer.

(9) The first buyer.

(10) Lit., 'also'.

(11) Such a buyer could not advance any claim for compensation against the seller. Hence he would never learn of the existence of the quittance.

(12) That provision is made against the possibility of seizing lands from buyers who are unaware of the existence of a quittance.

(13) I.e why then is a quittance permitted, where a bond of indebtedness was lost? Surely it is possible that the buyers might not be aware of the existence of such a quittance.
(14) The case of a loan.
(15) The subsequent buyers whose lands the first buyer comes to seize.
(16) Lit., 'him'.
(17) Hence they would not part with their fields before ascertaining the position from the seller, (i.e. the debtor) and so would learn of the existence of the quittance.
(18) That of a deed of sale and purchase.
(19) And would, therefore, allow the first buyer to take possession of their lands in the hope that, in due course, the seller might compensate him and arrange for the return to them of their property. They are not, therefore, in a hurry to go to the seller. When they ultimately learn of the existence of a quittance a considerable time has already elapsed and they lose the fruits which the first buyer had consumed in the meantime.
(20) Which enables the holder to establish his claim upon his land and yet prevents him from seizing that of others.
(21) That the previous owner (the seller) shall not be able to deprive him, of it by the assertion that he had never sold it to him.
(22) R. Nahman's requirement specifically to enter in the deed that it does not provide any security.
(23) from any deed.
(24) And is regarded as entered though the scribe had omitted it. V. B.M. 14a.
(25) Why the deed does not entitle the holder to claim compensation from the seller's lands.
(26) 'This deed is not etc.'.
(27) Lit., 'because he wrote for him thus'.
(28) Lit., 'not written for him, thus'.
(29) The holder of the deed.
(30) Lit., and what'.
(31) Lit., 'that pledging is not written in it'.
(32) He failed to arrange for the seller to pledge his landed property for the field he bought.
(33) To complain against the unsatisfactory terms of the purchase.
(34) Lit., to him', the man who acted on behalf of the woman.
(35) By spending her money on unsecured property.
(36) The seller.
(37) So that in case the land is ever taken away from her by a creditor of the seller or by previous buyers she will he entitled to compensation from the agent.
(38) Since the gift is conveyed to the donee by means of a deed.
(39) Lit., 'to him'.
(40) Hence it returns to the donor as soon as the deed is returned to him.
(41) That the donee can retain ownership of the gifts so long only as the deed remains with him.
(42) A deed.
(43) Heb., mesirah, v. supra 76a (q.v. for notes), and Glos.
(44) The Sages.
(45) Lit., 'who comes to be judged', i.e., to respond to a claim that a plot of land which he Occupies is not his.
(46) Of purchase, which X, the person who sold the land to him, received from Y, from whom he in turn bought it; pleading that, though his own name does not appear in it, he acquired ownership of the land by the act of delivery which X had performed when he handed the deed to him. [So Rashb. R. Gersh. and Rashi (Sanh. 23b) take it simply to refer to the deed of purchase which the buyer claims to have received from the seller.]
(47) Hazakah (v. Glos.). Witnesses testify that he occupied the land during the statutory period of three years required for establishing his title to it.
(48) From Palestine to Babylon.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 170a

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds [that] 'letters' are not acquired by delivery[1] and Rabbi holds [that] 'letters' are acquired by delivery.

Said Abaye to him: If so,[2] [this would present] a disagreement with the Master![3] [The other] replied to him, 'Then let there be disagreement!'[4] 'I mean to say to you this', said [Abaye] to him, '[that] the Baraitha cannot be [well] explained except on the lines which the Master had laid down; and since [that is] so.,[there would emerge] a contradiction between one statement of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the other statement of his!'[5] But, said Abaye, here it is a case[6] where one of them[7] was found to be a relative[8] or [otherwise] disqualified; and they differ on the [same principle that underlies the] dispute of R. Meir and R. Eleazar. Rabbi holds the [same] View as R. Eleazar who maintains [that] the witnesses to the delivery[9] effect the legal separation;[10] while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel is of the [same] opinion as R. Meir who maintains [that] the witnesses who signed[11] [the letter of divorce] are the main factor in the legal separation.[12]

But, surely. R. Abba had said: R. Eleazar agrees that [a deed] is invalid if the irregularity is internal![13] — But, said Rabina, all agree[14] that [the deed] is invalid if it[15] contains the entry.[16] 'we have dealt with the evidence of the witnesses and their evidence was found to be irregular'.[17] in accordance with [the law laid down by] R. Abba; they only differ in [the case of] a deed which bears no [signatures of] witnesses at all [in] which [case] Rabbi holds the [same] view as R. Eleazar who maintains [that] the witnesses to the delivery effect the legal separation;[18] while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds the [same] view as R. Meir who maintains [that] the witnesses who signed the deed[19] effect the final separation.[20] If you prefer, however, I might say, [that] they differ on [the question whether in the case] where a person[21] admitted that he wrote a deed,[22] [independent legal] attestation is required. For Rabbi holds [that where a person] admitted that he wrote a deed, no [independent] attestation is required;[23] while R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds [that independent] attestation is required.[24]

[Did] we [not], however, hear [that] they hold contrary [views]? for it was taught:[25] Where two men[26] cling to a deed, the creditor pleading. 'It is mine, I dropped it, and you found it', and the borrower pleading. 'It is[27] [indeed] yours but I have paid you'. the [validity of the] deed is established by those who signed it.[28] So[29] Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Let them[30] divide it.[31] And when this was discussed [the following] question was raised: Does not Rabbi accept[32] what we have learnt: Where two [men] hold a cloth, one pleading, 'I found it' and the other [also] pleading, 'I found it', the one must take an oath that he possesses in it no less than a half and the other must take an oath that he possesses in it no less than a half and they divide [it]?[33] And Raba in the name of R. Nahman replied: In [the case of] an attested[34] [deed] no one disputes [the law] that they[35] must divide;[36] they differ only in [the case of a deed] which has not been attested, [since] Rabbi holds the opinion [that where one] admitted that he wrote a deed [independent] attestation is required, and [consequently] if [the creditor is able to] secure its attestation he collects a half, and if not [the deed is regarded as] a mere potsherd; while Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds the opinion [that where one] admits that he wrote [a deed] no [independent] attestation is required and they divide![37] — Reverse.[38]

If you prefer, however, it may be said [that] there is really no [need] to reverse [the reported opinions],[39] but the dispute here[40] is on [the question of] proving [all one's pleas];[41] such as [the case] of R. Isaac b. Joseph [who] claimed [a sum of] money from R. Abba. [When] he came before R. Isaac Nappaha. [R. Abba] pleaded. 'I repaid to you in the presence of X and Y'. 'Let X and Y come', said R. Isaac to him, 'and let them give [their] evidence'. 'If they will not come', said [R. Abba] to him, 'am I not to be believed? Surely we have it as an established law [that] a loan made in the presence[42] of witnesses need not be repaid[43] in the presence of witnesses!' 'In this [case', R. Isaac] replied to him, 'I am of the same opinion as [that in] the reported statement of the Master.[44] for R. Abba in the name of R. Adda b. Ahabah in the name of Rab said: Where one said to another, 'I paid you [your debt] in the presence of X and Y', it is necessary that X and Y should come and give evidence. 'But surely', said [R. Abba] to him,[45] 'R. Giddal said in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accordance with the statement of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel;[46] and even Rabbi

(1) The production of the deed is, therefore, useless and the title to the land must rest entirely on the evidence of 'undisturbed possession'.

(2) That according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel 'letters' are not acquired by delivery.

(3) Rabbah, who said supra that according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel 'letters' are acquired by delivery.

(4) I.e 'I do not mind differing from Rabbah'.

(5) Lit., 'R. Simeon etc' on R. Simeon etc.' V. supra notes 9 and 10.

(6) Lit., 'in what are we engaged'.

(7) The witnesses who signed an ordinary deed.

(9) Of the letter of divorce to the woman.

(10) Lit., 'cut', the matrimonial relationship between husband and wife (v. Git. 9b). The signatures of the witnesses on the document, which are required 'for the sake of the social order' (cf. ibid. 86a). do not in any way affect the legal and final separation between husband and wife, which is entirely dependent on the presence of suitable witnesses at the time of the delivery of the document. Similarly in the case of a deed of purchase and sale, Rabbi regards the document as valid irrespective of the signatures or the qualification of the witnesses. Hence he maintains that the tight of ownership may be established even where one of the witnesses is a relative or is in any other way disqualified.

(12) Git. 21b. Cf. note 5. As in the case of a letter of divorce the validity of the document is entirely dependent on the witnesses whose signatures are appended to it so in the case of a deed of purchase or sale, unless the witnesses who signed it are eligible, the document is invalid. Hence R. Simeon b. Gamaliel maintains that, where one of the witnesses was found to be disqualified for any reason whatsoever, the entire deed is invalid, and right of ownership must be determined by the result of the evidence of witnesses on the statutory period of undisturbed possession of the land, on the part of the present holder.

(13) Git. 10b. Though a letter of divorce on which no signatures at all appear is valid (the witnesses to the delivery effecting the legal and final separations), where disqualified witnesses are signed on it, thereby causing an irregularity in the document itself, the deed is invalid. Similarly, in the case of the deed of purchase under discussion, how could R. Simeon b. Gamaliel regard it as valid when, owing to the disqualification of one of the witnesses, an internal irregularity arises in the deed itself!

(14) Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

(15) The deed produced as evidence of the holder's tight of ownership. supra 169b, end.

(16) Lit., 'written in it'. [Read with Ms. M., 'IF they dealt with the evidence, etc.']

(22) And he only disputes its validity. In the case under discussion, e.g., he might plead that he did not deliver the deed to the other party, as the sale never took place, but he lost the document and the other found it.

(23) Consequently, in the present case since the seller admits the writing of the deed and only disputes the buyer's claim, the latter's word is accepted and there is no need to hear witnesses on the question of undisturbed possession.

(24) Judgement, therefore, cannot be given in favour of the buyer on the strength of the deed alone; and his claim must be based on the evidence of undisturbed possession which is given by qualified witnesses. Cf. 154a; B.M. 7b; 72b.

(25) B.M. 7a.

(26) Creditor anti debtor.

(27) [Some texts: 'It sits yours'; v D.S.B M. 7a.]

(28) Since the original validity of the deed is thus established, the creditor is entitled to judgment in his favour.

(29) Lit., 'the words of'.

(30) Creditor and debtor.

(31) The amount of the debt, the debtor repaying only a half of the claim.

(32) Lit , 'is there not'.

(33) B.M. 2a. As the cloth in that case is divided so here the amount of the debt should be divided. Why, then, did Rabbi say that the entire amount of the debt was to be repaid to the creditor?
(34) Legally endorsed by a court of law.
(35) Creditor and debtor.
(36) The amount of the debt; as the cloth is divided between the two who claim to have found it. The creditor is entitled to his half by virtue of the endorsed deed; the debtor also is entitled to his half by virtue of his holding on to the deed jointly with the creditor.
(37) Cf. previous note. Thus it follows that Rabbi does not, and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel does require independent attestation. How, then, could it have been assumed supra that their respective opinions were directly the opposite?
(38) One or other of the two reported statements, so that Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel should hold respectively the same opinions in both cases.
(39) OF Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(40) The Baraitha. supra 169b.
(41) In the case where one of two pleas is essential, and the other superfluous. According to Rabbi both pleas must be proved since they were both advanced together. Hence it is necessary for the buyer (supra 169b) to prove the validity of the deed though, had he based his claim on the tight of undisturbed possession only, there would have been no need for him to produce any deed at all, no one being expected to preserve a deed after three years which is the statutory period of undisturbed possession. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, holds that the superfluous plea is altogether disregarded. Hence it is sufficient for the buyer to prove undisturbed possession to secure judgement in his favour.
(42) Lit., 'who lends to his friend with'.
(43) Lit., 'to pay him'. V. Shebu.41b, Ket. 18a.
(46) Who maintains that where a superfluous plea was advanced together with one which is essential, the former is altogether disregarded. Here, then, since it is not necessary to repay a loan in the presence of witnesses, why should it be necessary to bring the witnesses that were needlessly mentioned?

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON[5] REPAID PART (OF HIS DEBT, R. JUDAH SAID, HE SHALL EXCHANGE [HIS BOND FOR ANOTHER].[6] R. JOSE SAID: HE[7] SHALL WRITE A QUITTANCE.[8] R. JUDAH SAID: THUS, THIS [DEBTOR] WOULD HAVE TO GUARD HIS QUITTANCE FROM MICE![9] SAID R. JOSE TO HIM: SUCH [A COURSE][10] IS BETTER FOR THE CREDITOR[11] AND HIS[12] RIGHTS MUST NOT BE IMPAIRED.

GEMARA. R. Huna said in the name of Rab: The halachah is neither in accordance with R. Judah nor in accordance with R. Jose; but [only] a court of law [has the authority to] tear up the deed and to write for the creditor[13] another deed[14] entering the original date.[15]

Said R. Nahman to R. Huna, and others say [that] R. Jeremiah b. Abba said to R. Huna: Had Rab heard that Baraitha[16] wherein it was taught, 'Witnesses may tear up a deed and write 'for [the creditor]; another deed entering the original date', he would have withdrawn.[17] He said unto him: He heard it and he did not withdraw.

(1) Lit., 'said'.
(2) Legally however, Rabbi admits, this is not necessary (R. Gersh.)
(3) Lit. , 'say'.
(4) I.e., R. Isaac holds the same opinion as Rabbi. Had not R. Abba mentioned witnesses his word alone would have been accepted. Since, however, he did mention witnesses, he must prove his statement or lose his case. [R. Gersh. 'I also require it merely to prove your plea, without however affecting the issue should you fail to bring the witnesses.']

(6) For one in which the balance if the debt is entered, while the original deed is to be destroyed.

(7) The creditor.

(8) For the sum received; and delivered to the debtor.

(9) Lit., 'keep his receipt from the mice'. It is more equitable for the creditor to exchange the bond than for the debtor to be encumbered with the necessity of taking care of a receipt the loss of which might involve him in a claim for the repayment of the full loan.

(10) The writing of a receipt instead of changing the original deed.

(11) Lit 'for him'.

(12) Lit., 'of this'.

(13) Lit., 'for him'.

(14) for the balance of the debt.

(15) Lit. , 'from the first time'.

(17) His ruling; and would have admitted the halachah to be in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah in our Mishnah. Since the original date is entered in the new bond, the creditor is involved in no loss or disadvantage whatsoever, and there should, therefore, be no difference whether the court or witnesses change the deed.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 171a

[In the case of] a court of law, one can well understand,[1] because it has the power and authority to confiscate[2] money;[3] but [as regards] witnesses, who had once performed their mission,[4] [how could they] perform their mission again?[5] — But [can they] not? Surely Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Witnesses may write even tell [successive][6] deeds in respect of one field! — R. Joseph replied: [This[7] is permitted only] in [the case of] a deed of gift.[8] And Rabbah replied: [Even] in [the case of] a deed [of sale] which does not contain [the clause] pledging [property].[8]

What [was that] Baraitha?[9] — It was taught: If [a creditor] was claiming from [a debtor] a thousand zuz and he repaid five hundred zuz of these, the witnesses [may] tear up the bond and write for him another deed bearing the original date;[10] so[11] R. Judah. R. Jose said: This deed must remain where it is. and a quittance is to be written.[12] And for two reasons has it been said [that] a receipt was to be written. Firstly[13] in order that he be compelled [thereby][14] to repay [the debt] and secondly[15] in order that [the debt] may be collected from [property sold] since the original date.

But R. Judah also said, 'bearing the original date'![16] — This[17] is what R. Jose said to R. Judah: If you mean, 'bearing the first date', I disagree with you for one [reason];[18] if you mean 'bearing the second date' 'I disagree with you for two [reasons].

Our Rabbis taught: A deed the date of which[19] is a Sabbath or the Tenth of Tishri[20] is [regarded as] a postdated deed[21] and is valid.[22] So R. Judah. R. Jose [declares it to be] invalid.[23] Said R. Judah to him: Was not [such[24] a deed] actually brought before you at Sepphoris and you declared [it] to be valid? [R. Jose] replied to him: When l declared [it] to be valid, I declared [it] in that [case only].[25] But, surely. R. Judah also speaks of such [a deed]![26] — R. Pedath replied: All[27] agree that if the date of the deed was calculated and it[28] was found to coincide exactly with a Sabbath day or the Tenth of Tishri, it is a postdated deed and is valid.[29]

(1) Why it may tear up a deed and insert its date in the one given in exchange.

(2) Lit., 'to take Out'.

(3) A deed entitled its holder to seize any real estate which the debtor had sold to mortgaged after, but not before the date of the deed. Consequently. when a now deed is written for the balance of a debt in exchange for the original deed, the creditor should not be entitled to seize any property that was sold between the date of the original and that of the new deed. A court of law, however, having the right to confiscate any property. Is also empowered to enter in the second deed the date of the original and thus to subject to the creditor's seizure property to which he would not otherwise have been entitled.

(4) OF writing and signing the first deed.

(5) What authority have they for inserting the date of the original deed and to confer thereby upon the creditor privileges to which his new deed would not otherwise have entitled him?

(6) If the holder has lost the previous ones.

(7) The issue by witnesses of a second, or subsequent deed bearing the date of the original one.

(8) Such a deed does not entitle its holder to the seizure of any property, and the date is therefore, of no consequence.

(16) What point, then, is there in R. Jose's second reason?

(18) The first reason, that the debtor may be compelled to repay the loan.

(20) Writing is forbidden on the Day of Atonement, as on the Sabbath.

(21) Since it is obvious that it was not written on the Day of Rest or the Day of Atonement, it is assumed15 have been written on a previous day. and post dated so as not to invalidate without any proof the deed (Rashb.)

(22) According to R. Judah, any postdated deed is valid even though the contents do not show that it was postdated; much more so in this case where it is obvious (of. p.748. n.16) that it was postdated.

(25) When the date of the deed is a day on which writing is forbidden, from which it would be obvious to all (cf. loc. cit. n.16) that It was postdated. No one, therefore, could possibly be misled by the date, and no confusion or loss would arise. Any other postdated deed, however, the contents of which do not clearly show that it is postdated, (i.e.. where the date is an ordinary working day). and which might consequently be mistaken for one written on that very date, and thus cause confusion or loss, is regarded by R. Jose as invalid.

(26) Why. then, was it stated that It. Jose declares it to be invalid?

(27) It. Judah and R. Jose.

(28) Lit 'its date'.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 171b

They are in disagreement only in [the case of] an ordinary Postdated deed,[1] [in] which [case] R. Judah follows his own view, according to which[2] no quittance is written,[3] and consequently no loss[4] would ensue,[5] while R. Jose follows his view according to which a quittance may be written and loss might consequently ensue.[6] R. Huna son of R. Joshua said: Even according to him who said [that] a quittance may be written, this may be done only[7] for a half,[8] but not for the whole [of the debt].[9]

And [the law is] not so, but[10] even for the full amount of a debt[11] [a quittance] may be written; as in the case of R. Isaac b. Joseph. He claimed [a sum of] money from R. Abba whom he sued[12] before R. Hanina b. Papi. [When] he[13] said to him,[14] 'Give me my money', [the other] replied to him, 'Return to me my deed and you will receive your money'. 'I lost your deed', said [R. Isaac] to him, '[but] I will write for you a quittance'. 'Surely', the other replied to him, 'It was both Rab and Samuel who said [that] no quittance was to be written'.'[Were] one [to] give us of the dust of Rab and Samuel', he[13] exclaimed, 'we should put it into our eyes;[15] but it was both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish who stated [that] a quittance is to be written'.[16]

Similarly, when Rabin came[17] he stated in the name of R. Elai [that] a quittance may be written. And it stands to reason that a quittance may be written; for should it be assumed [that] a quittance must not be written, [is it conceivable that where] the bond of this one[18] was lost, the other should eat[19] and enjoy himself!

Abaye demurred: What then; is a quittance to be written? Should this one,[20] [if] the quittance of the other was lost, eat and enjoy himself? 'Yes', replied Raba to him, 'the debtor[21] is the slave of the creditor'.[22]

Elsewhere We learnt: Antedated bonds of indebtedness are invalic[23] and postdated [ones] are valid.[24] Said R. Hamnuna: This law applies only to[25] bonds of indebtedness but [in the case of] deeds of purchase and sale even [those which are] postdated are invalid. What is the reason? [A person] might sometimes sell [a plot of] land to another in Nisan and write [the deed] for him in Tishri; and in the meantime he might obtain some money and repurchase it from him.[26] But when Tishri arrived he[27] would produce it[28] and say, 'I have [subsequently] bought it from you again'.[29] If so, [in the case of] bonds of indebtedness also, one might sometimes borrow [money] in Nisan and write the bond for the creditor[30] in Tishri, and in the meantime he would obtain some money and repay him. When [however the debtor] requested the return of his[31] bond, he would reply to him, 'I lost it', and would [instead] write out for him a quittance. When [later] the date of payment[32] arrived he would produce it[33] and plead 'You have borrowed from me just now!' — He[34] holds the opinion that no receipt is to be written.[35]

Said R. Yemar to R. Kahana, and others say [that] R. Jeremiah of Difti said to R. Kahana: But [what of] the present time, when postdated deeds are written though quittances also are written?[36] He replied to him[37] : [This is permissible] since the time when R. Abba said to his scribes: 'When you write a postdated deed, write as follows: This deed was not written on the date indicated[38] but was postdated.'[39]

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: And [what of] the present time when this is not done![40] — [This[41] is not necessary] since R. Safra instructed his scribes: When you write out quittances, enter the date of the deed[42] if you know it; if not, leave the quittance undated so that whenever [the deed] is produced [the receipt] will render it invalid.[43]

Said Rabina to R. Ashi, and others say [that] R. Ashi [said] to R. Kahana:

(1) The date of which is that of a working day and dies not, consequently, prove that the deed was postdated.

(2) Lit., 'who said'.

(3) Where the debtor repaid a part of the loan or the whole of It and the creditor lost the deed.

(4) To the debtor.

(5) Since the deed would be returned to him on his repayment of the debt, or would be exchanged for a second deed should he pay a portion only of the debt.

(6) The creditor, after giving the debtor a quittance for his repayment of the loan, might produce the postdated deed (the date of which is later than the date of the quittance) and thereby claim his loan again. pleading that the quittance was given for an earlier loan. As the Fact that the deed is postdated could not be proved, the debtor would be the loser having to repay rise same loan twice. In the case, however, where the date coincides with a sacred day, on which no writing is permitted, the creditor's fraud would be detected. (Cf. p. 748. n. 16 and supra n. 4).

(7) Lit., 'these words'.

(8) I.e where the debtor repaid a part of the debt only and desires to have evidence of payment.

(9) It is the creditor's own fault if he lost the bond. He must either produce the bond or forfeit the loan.

(11) Lit., ‘on all of it’.
(12) Lit. , ‘he came’.
(13) R. Isaac.
(14) R. Abba.
(15) Out of respect and reverence for their memory.
(16) Despite the greatness of the departed Masters, the law is in accordance with the ruling of R. Johanan and R. Lakish.
(17) From Palestine to Babylon.
(18) The creditor.
(19) Consume other people's money.
(20) The creditor.
(21) Since he has the benefit of the transaction.
(22) Hence he must beat the burden of preserving the receipt.
(23) Since a creditor, who is justly entitled to seize any real estate sold by the debtor after the date of the loan, might fraudulently lay claim to lands which the borrower had sold between the date entered in the bond and the actual date of the loan, by pleading that the earlier date in the deed was the actual date of the loan.
(24) Though the creditor is thereby prevented from seizing any of the debtor's property that was sold between the actual date of the loan and the date in the deed. By allowing the entry of the later date he is assumed to have voluntarily surrendered his right upon such lands as were sold during the period intervening between the two dates, Sheb. X. 5.
(25) Lit., ‘they did not teach but’.
(26) Without having the deed of sale returned to him, the buyer having asserted that he lost it.
(27) The buyer.
(28) The postdated deed.
(29) Even the document which the buyer might have given to the seller as confirmation of his to.purchase would be of no avail, since its date is earlier than the one which appears on the postdated bill of sale, and the former could, therefore, plausibly claim that after the to purchase by the seller the land was sold to him again.
(30) Lit., ‘for him’.
(31) Lit., ‘and said to him, give me my’.
(32) Lit., ‘its time’.
(33) The postdated deed.
(34) R. Hamnuna.
(35) The creditor must return the bond itself before he can receive repayment of the debt.
(36) How, in view of what has been said above, could a postdated deed be permitted where a receipt also is allowed?
(37) for this reading. v. Rashb., R. Gersh. and Bah, a.l.
(38) Lit., ‘in its time’.
(39) Lit., ‘we delayed (or postponed) it and wrote it.’
(40) No formula such as that introduced by R. Abba is entered in a postdated deed, though the writing of a quittance is permitted!
(42) I.e., the quittance must not only contain the names of the creditor and debtor as well as the amount of the loan, but also the date of the bond in lieu of which the quittance is given. Consequently should the creditor ever attempt to make use of the cancelled bond because it was postdated the debtor would be in a position to expose him by means of the quittance in which the date of that bond is entered.
(43) Since the receipt is undated and contains all the particulars (such as names of parties and amount) of the bond, it can be used by the borrower against the creditor whenever the latter should attempt to advance a claim by means of that bond. Whether the date of the bond is earlier, or later than that on which the quittance was written matters little, since the quittance, being undated, can always be presented as a document written after the date of the bond. The issue of such an undated quittance, however, would naturally preclude the creditor from ever lending the debtor a sum equal to that in the bond in question.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 172a

But this[1] is not done at the present time?[2] — He replied to him: The Rabbis have made the necessary provision. Whosoever acts [accordingly] reaps the benefit;[3] he who does not act [accordingly] has himself to blame, for any loss suffered.[4] Raba son of R. Shila said to those who were writing deeds of transfer:[5] When you write deeds of transfer enter[6] the date of transfer[7] if you know it; and if not, enter the date on which the deed is prepared,[8] so that it[9] might not have the appearance of a falsehood.

Rab said to his scribes, and R. Huna, similarly, said to his scribes: When you are at Shili write [in any deed] 'at Shili', although the information was given to you at Hini;[10] when you are at Hini, write, 'at Hini'[10] , although the information was given to you at Shili.[10]

Raba said: If a man [who] is in possession of a bond of a hundred zuz, said, 'Convert it into two bonds each of fifty zuz',[11] his request must not be granted.[12] What is the reason? — The Rabbis instituted a law[13] which is acceptable to the creditor and is [also] acceptable to the borrower. It is acceptable to the creditor in that [the debtor is thereby] compelled to repay him [the entire loan];[14] and it is [also] acceptable to the borrower in that [the legal force of] the bond is [thereby][15] impaired.[16]

Raba further stated: If a man, holding two bonds each of fifty [zuz:], requests that they be converted into one [bond] of a hundred [zuz], his request must not be granted,[17] [because] the Rabbis have ordained a law[18] which is agreeable to the creditor and is also agreeable to the borrower. It is agreeable to the creditor in that [the force of] his bond is not [thereby] impaired;[19] and it is [also] agreeable to the borrower in that he is not [thereby][15] under pressure to repay the debt.[20]

R. Ashi said: If a man holds a bond for a hundred zuz and requests that it be converted into[21] one of fifty [zuz],[22] his request must not be granted. What is the reason? — We assume [the debtor] had already repaid him that [loan] and [that when] he asked him for the return of his bond[23] he was told [that] he[24] had lost it and [so] he wrote out for him a quittance[25] but [that later] he would produce that [new bond] and claim,[26] 'This is [for] another [loan]'.[27]

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] TWO BROTHERS, THE ONE POOR AND THE OTHER[28] RICH, WHOM THEIR FATHER HAD LEFT A BATH-HOUSE OR AN OLIVE-PRESS, [IF] HE BUILT THESE [TO BE LET OUT] ON HIRE, THE RENT BELONGS TO THE COMMON ESTATE.[29] [IF,] HOWEVER, HE BUILT THEM FOR HIS OWN [USE][29] THE RICH [BROTHER] MAY[30] SAY TO THE POOR [BROTHER], BUY FOR YOURSELF SLAVES THAT THEY MAY BATHE IN THE BATH-HOUSE', [OR] 'BUY FOR YOURSELF OLIVES AND COME AND PREPARE [THEM] IN THE OLIVE-PRESS'.[31]

IF THERE WERE TWO [MEN] IN THE SAME TOWN [AND THE] NAME OF THE ONE [WAS] JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON AND THE NAME OF [THE] OTHER [WAS] JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON, NEITHER MAY PRODUCE A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST THE OTHER, NOR MAY ANOTHER [PERSON] PRODUCE A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST THEM.[32] [IF] A MAN FOUND AMONG HIS DEEDS [A QUITTANCE SHOWING THAT] THE BOND OF JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON [WAS] DISCHARGED, THE BONDS OF BOTH [ARE CONSIDERED TO BE] DISCHARGED. HOW SHOULD THEY PROCEED?[33] THEY SHOULD INDICATE THE THIRD [GENERATION].[34] AND IF [THEIR NAMES] ARE [ALIKE] TO THE THIRD [GENERATION], THEY ADD[35] [SOME PERSONAL] DESCRIPTION;[36] AND IF THEIR [PERSONAL] DESCRIPTIONS ARE ALIKE THEY WRITE, 'PRIEST'.[37]

GEMARA. In a certain bond that was presented at the court of R. Huna there was [the following] entry:[38] 'I.X, son of Y, borrowed from you[39] a maneh'.

(1) The omission of the date it, a receipt.
(2) When deeds are written without R. Abba's formula, and dated quittances are issued.
(3) Lit., 'he who does, does'.
(4) The provision was made by the Rabbis for the benefit of debtors who may wish to benefit by it. No man, however, is compelled to carry out a provision which was enacted solely in his own interests.
(5) אקניאתא , deeds of gifts, or deeds of sale in which land security is entered. (Cf. Rashb.). Jastrow's definition is. 'An agreement by which one's landed estate is mortgaged in the form of a sale from date, independent of the loan to be consummated afterwards.' [Since agreement was accompanied by a kinyan from which the deed subsequently drawn up obtains its name. V. Rappaport. J., Das Darlehen, p. 70 ff.]
(6) Lit., 'write'.
(7) V. previous note. [In order to preclude the donor from presenting the gift to some one else.] In the case of a deed of sale, the buyer must be enabled, in addition, to seize such lands as wore sold during the period subsequent to the date of transfer. (Rashb.)
(8) Lit., 'on which you stand'.
(9) The entry of a date of which they were not certain.
(10) The locale of a deed is the place where the deed is written, not where the transaction (gift, sale, or loan) which it records took place. The former, therefore, must be entered in the deed. According to Rashb. both places arc entered, thus: 'We wrote at . . . what we saw at . . . ' [Hini and Shili were two places South of Sura and close to each other. The point in R. Huna's instructions to the scribes according to Obermeyer, op. cit. 320, is that they were not to regard the two localities as one and write 'Hini-Shili'.]
(11) So that in case the debtor repays him half the debt he can return one of the two bonds.
(12) Lit., 'we do not make them'.
(13) Lit., 'thing'.
(14) Having repaid half of the debt and received in return a quittance, the debtor is anxious to repay the other half at the earliest possible moment, so that he might secure the destruction of the bond and thus be liberated from the necessity of guarding his receipt 'from the mice'.
(15) By the repayment of half of the amount mentioned in the bond.
(16) The creditor will not be able to recover with it the balance, except on oath (cf. Keth. 87a. Shebu. 41a).
(17) V. p. 753, n.8.
(19) Instead of giving a receipt for half the amount repaid and thus impairing the force of the deed (cf. n. 1), one bond is destroyed while the other retains its full force.
(20) Since he secures the return and destruction of one of the deeds and need not take care of any quittance.
(21) Lit., 'make the thing'.
(22) Even though he consents to enter on the new bond the date of the original bond.
(23) Lit., 'and he said to him: Give me my bond'.
(24) Lit., 'I', the creditor.
(26) Lit., 'and say to him'.
(27) The bond being made out for a sum of fifty zuz, the creditor could plausibly claim that the receipt for the hundred zuz was given for a totally different loan which had no connection whatsoever with the fifty zuz bond produced. Hence no bond must be exchanged at the request of a creditor even though he request the issue of a bond for a smaller amount in lieu of one containing a larger amount.
(28) Lit., 'one'.
(29) Lit., 'to the middle', i.e., it is divided between the two brothers in equal proportions.
(30) Lit., 'behold'.
(31) None of the brothers has the right to use the bequeathed joint estate (except, of course, by mutual consent) for any purpose other than that for which their father had originally intended it (v. supra 13a).
(32) Since each can say that it was not he but the other who signed the bond.
(33) If they desire to borrow, or buy from one another or from a third party.
(34) They give their own names and the names of their fathers and grandfathers.

(35) Lit., 'they shall write'.

(36) Such as Joseph etc. the tall, the short, black, brown.

(37) If one of these was a priest, or some similar patronymic. e.g.. Levite.

(38) Lit., 'written'.

(39) The name of the creditor not being entered, and the holder of the bond claiming that the pronoun referred to him.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 172b

R. Huna decided [that], 'from you' [might] even [signify] 'from the exilarch', and even 'from King Shapur'.[1] Said R. Hisda to Rabbah: Go and consider this matter,[2] for in the evening R. Huna will question you on the subject. He went out, carefully considered [the matter], and found [the following Baraitha] wherein it was taught: [In the case of] a letter of divorce which bears [the signatures of] witnesses but no date,[3] Abba Saul said: If there was written in it. 'I divorced you[4] this day,' it is valid. This[5] clearly proves that that day[6] [is taken] to mean that day on which it was produced,[7] [so] here also,[8] 'from you' must mean from that person who produced [the bond].[9]

Said Abaye to him: Is it not possible that Abba Saul holds the same view as R. Eleazar[10] who maintains that the witnesses to the delivery[11] affect the legal separation,[12] but here [surely, there is reason] to apprehend that it was lost![13] He replied unto him: [That a deed] was lost is not to be apprehended.[14] And whence is it deduced that the losing [of a deed] is not to be apprehended? — For we learned: IF THERE WERE TWO [MEN] IN THE SAME TOWN [AND THE] NAME OF THE ONE [WAS] JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON AND THE NAME OF [THE] OTHER [WAS] JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON, NEITHER MAY PRODUCE A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST THE OTHER, NOR MAY ANOTHER [PERSON] PRODUCE A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST THEM. Either of them,[15] however [it follows] may [produce a bond of indebtedness] against others. But why? Why not apprehend the loss [of the deed]?[16] from this[17] then[18] it may be deduced that we do not apprehend the loss. And Abaye?[19] We do not apprehend the loss [of a deed] by one [particular individual];[20] but we do apprehend loss [of deeds] generally by many.[21]

(1) Since the pronoun might refer to anybody, the creditor is not in a position to establish his claim.

(2) Lit., 'in it'.

(3) The omission of the date renders a divorce invalid.

(4) [So Ms. M. Cur. edd. 'hot'.]

(5) The fact that it is valid if only the witnesses saw it in the hand of the husband on a certain date, that date being regarded as the legal date of the divorce.

(6) On which witnesses saw it in the husband's hand though it, the document that date is not entered.

(7) So long as the witnesses saw it on that day in his hand.

(8) The case of tho deed wherein the name of the creditor does not appear.

(9) Lit , 'from under whose hand it goes out'. Since the bond is produced by a certain person in the presence of the court that person should be assumed to be the creditor.

(10) Cur. edd., 'Eliezer'.

(11) Of a letter of divorce to the woman.

(12) But the signatures of the witnesses, or the date, do not affect the legality of the divorce, hence he stated that the divorce was valid, v. supra 170a.

(13) Lit., 'to falling'. i.e.. the bond may have been lost by the real creditor and the present claimant may have found it.

(14) The person who presents a bond must be assumed to be the real creditor.

(15) Lit 'they'.

(16) One Joseph, the creditor, might have lost the bond and the other Joseph who presents it might have found it.

(17) From the fact that either of them is entitled to establish a claim against a third patty by the production of his bond.

(18) Lit., 'but not'.

(19) How, in view of the inference from our Mishnah, could he suggest that loss of the deed should be apprehended?

(20) It is most unlikely that a particular person of the very same name as the one who presents the bond should have lost it.

(21) It is not unusual for people to lose their bonds and for others to find them. Hence, as regards the bond presented at R. Huna's court, Abaye was well justified in suggesting that loss of the deed should be suspected.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 173a

Since it was taught, however, 'As they cannot produce a bond of indebtedness against one another so they cannot produce [a bond] against others'[1] [the question arises][2] wherein [lies the principle of] their disagreement?[3] — They differ on [the question whether] 'letters'[4] [may] be acquired by means of delivery.[5] Our Tanna holds [that] 'letters' are acquired by means of delivery[6] and the external[7] Tanna holds [that] 'letters' are not acquired by means of delivery.[8]

And if you prefer I would say that all[9] [agree that] 'letters' may be acquired by delivery., but they differ here on [the question whether] it is necessary[10] to produce proof.[11] Our Tanna[12] 'holds that proof need not be produced[13] while the external Tanna[14] holds that proof must be produced,[15] for it was stated: 'Letters' are acquired by delivery; Abaye said: He[16] must, however, produce proof;[17] and Raba said: He need not produce proof.[18]

Said Abaye: Whence do I derive this?[19] — For it was taught: 'The brother[20] who presents[21] the bond of indebtedness[22] must[23] produce proof'.[24] Obviously, this applies also to the case[25] of others.[26] Raba, however, said: Brothers are different because they pilfer from one another.[27]

Others say, Raba said: Whence do I derive this?[28] — For it was taught: 'The brother who presents the bond of indebtedness must produce proof'.[29] [from which it is obvious that this applies to] brothers [only] since they pilfer from one another but not [to] others.[30] And Abaye[31] [explains that] it was necessary [to specify] brothers[32] [because] it might have been assumed [that], as they pilfer from one another, they are [all] particularly alert[33] and should not [therefore] require to produce proof;[34] hence [it was necessary] to teach us [that it is not so].[35]

As regards, however, the following wherein it was taught. 'As they[36] may present a bond of indebtedness against others so may they present [bonds] against each other', [the question arises] wherein lies [the principle of] their[37] disagreement?[38] They differ on [the question whether] a bond [may] be written for a borrower though the creditor be not with him. Our Tanna[39] holds [that] a bond may be written for a borrower although the creditor be not with him. [Consequently it may] sometimes [happen] that one[40] would go to a scribe and witnesses and tell them, 'Write for me a bond because I intend borrowing [money] from my friend Joseph son of Simeon'; and, after they had written and signed [it] for him, he would take hold of it and demand from him,[41] 'Give me the hundred [zuz] which you borrowed from me'.[42] The external Tanna,[43] holds that no bond may be written for a borrower unless the creditor be with him.[44] [IF] A MAN FOUND AMONG HIS DEEDS [A RECORD TO THE EFFECT THAT] THE BOND OF JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON [WAS] DISCHARGED, THE BONDS OF BOTH [ARE CONSIDERED TO BE] DISCHARGED etc. The reason[45] is thus because [a record] was found, but had there been found none, [a bond] could be presented [against one of them]? Surely we have learnt, NOR MAY ANOTHER [PERSON] PRODUCE A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST THEM! — R. Jeremiah replied: In [the case where the bonds record the names of] the third [generation].[46] Then let us see in whose name the discharge was made out![47] — R. Hoshaia replied: Where the third [generation] is indicated in the bond but not in the discharge.[48] Abaye said: This is the meaning[49] [of our Mishnah]; [IF[50] a borrower][51] FOUND AMONG HIS DEEDS [A QUITTANCE SHOWING] THAT THE BOND OF JOSEPH SON OF SIMEON [against him[52] WAS] DISCHARGED, THE BONDS OF BOTH [ARE CONSIDERED TO BE] DISCHARGED.[53]

HOW SHOULD THEY PROCEED? THEY SHOULD INDICATE THE THIRD

[GENERATION] etc. A Tanna taught: If both were priests[54] they enter [the names of previous] generations.[55]

MISHNAH. IF [A FATHER][56] SAID TO HIS SON,' ONE[57] AMONG MY BONDS IS DISCHARGED BUT I DO NOT KNOW WHICH', THE BONDS OF ALL HIS DEBTORS[58] ARE [CONSIDERED] DISCHARGED.[59] IF AMONG THEM[60] WERE FOUND TWO [BONDS, PERTAINING] TO ONE [DEBTOR], THE LARGER[61] [ONE IS DEEMED] DISCHARGED AND THE SMALLER UNDISCHARGED.[62]

GEMARA. Raba said: [If a person declared], 'The bond against you, [which l have] in my possession is discharged', the larger [one is deemed] discharged and the smaller undischarged. [If, however, he declared], 'The debt you owe me is paid', all[63] his bonds [are deemed] discharged.[63] Said Rabina to Raba: Consequently[64] [should one say to another],' My field is sold to you', his larger field [would be deemed to have been] sold to him, [but if he said,] 'The field that l have is sold to you', all his fields[65] [would then be deemed] sold! — There,[66] the holder of the deed is at a disadvantage.[67]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN LENDS MONEY TO ANOTHER ON A GUARANTOR's SECURITY,[68] HE MUST NOT EXACT PAYMENT FROM THE GUARANTOR.[69]

---

(1) Because it is possible that one of them lost the bond and the other, who presents it at court, accidentally found it.

(2) Since, as has been said, loss of the bond is not suspected.

(3) That between the Baraitha and Our Mishnah, from the latter of which it was deduced, supra, that either of the Josephs may produce a bond against others, a deduction with which, since it referred to the case of a particular individual, even Abaye agreed.

(4) A bond.

(5) Mesirah, v. Glos.

(6) Since loss of the bond is not suspected, it can only be assumed that Joseph the creditor delivered the bond to the other Joseph. As 'letters' are acquired by delivery, the holder of the bond is legally entitled to the loan.

(7) The Tanna of the Baraitha.

(8) The debtor can consequently refuse payment of the bond, pleading that he does not owe the money to the holder of the bond but to the other Joseph; while to the other he can refuse payment on the ground that he has no bond to prove his claim.

(9) The authors of the Baraitha under discussion and of our Mishnah. (16) Mesirah, v. Glos. And no deed of sale is necessary (v. supra 77a).

(10) For the holder of the bond.

(11) That he received the bond as a gift or purchase and that he did not merely find it or receive it as a deposit.

(12) The author of our Mishnah.

(13) The possession of the bond is sufficient evidence that the debt is owing to its holder. Hence the inference from our Mishnah, that one of the Josephs may present a bond of indebtedness against a third person who cannot consequently refuse payment by demanding additional proof of the holder's title to ownership.

(15) Otherwise the debtor can plead that the holder has found the bond in the street or that it was only deposited with him. Hence the statement in the Baraitha that none of the Josephs may present a bond against a third person who could plead that the bond belongs to the other Joseph and that the one who presented it received it only as a deposit or found it.

(22) Which bears the name of his father as creditor or which has been acquired by the father from another creditor.
(23) If the other brothers claim that the bond was bequeathed to all of them, and that the holder has unlawfully appropriated it for himself.
(24) That the bond lawfully belongs to him only.
(25) Lit., 'what not? The same law'.
(26) Strangers. who dispute his claim to the bond he holds.
(27) In the case of a bequeathed estate. All the brothers being heirs to it, every one considers himself entitled to appropriate as much of it as he possibly can. It is for this reason only that it was ordained that the brother who claims, against the statement of the other brothers, to be the sole owner of an inherited bond, must produce proof. As this unlawful appropriation could not apply to the case of a stranger, proof in that case is not required.
(28) That apart from the production of the bond no other proof is required.
(29) V. supra notes, 11, 15.
(30) Who could have no plausible excuse or justification for such an appropriation. Hence no proof is required in the case of a stranger.
(31) Who requires proof in the case of a stranger also.
(32) Though the law applies to strangers also.
(33) In watching one another.
(34) Apart from the presentation of the bond. The fact that one of them is actually holding it should be sufficient proof that it belongs to him.
(35) But that brothers as well as strangers must produce proof of lawful acquisition.
(36) Two Josephs living in the same town. Cf. our Mishnah.
(37) This Baraitha on the one hand and the Baraitha previously cited and our Mishnah on the other.
(38) According to this Baraitha the two Josephs may present bonds against one another while according to the previously cited Baraitha and our Mishnah, they may not.
(39) Of our Mishnah; and so the Tanna of the previously cited Baraitha.
(40) Of the two Josephs.
(41) His namesake whose name would appear in the bond as the debtor.
(42) In order to avoid such a fraud it had been instituted that, in the case of two Josephs, bonds may not be presented by one against the other.
(43) The author of the last-mentioned Baraitha.
(44) Consequently, the one Joseph would not be able to obtain a bond unless the other Joseph should be present. Hence there would be no possibility to practise the fraud described. The Josephs, therefore, may present bonds against one another.
(45) Why the bonds of both are considered as discharged and no claim may be advanced against either of them.
(46) Cf. our Mishnah. In such a case bonds may be presented against them.
(47) Lit., 'written'. Why, then, should the bonds of both be considered discharged.
(48) Each Joseph is consequently in a position to claim that the name of his grandfather was omitted from the discharge though it was mentioned in the bond.
(49) Lit.,' thus he said'.
(50) Bah inserts, 'they may present (bonds) against others'.
(51) Not, as has been previously assumed, a creditor.
(52) Lit., 'against me'.
(53) Since the debtor can produce the same quittance whenever either of the two Josephs should present his bond. On the question of mutual authorisation or the simultaneous presentation of the bonds of the two, v. Rashb. a l.
(54) And their names also were alike up to the third generation.
(55) Until the names of ancestors are reached whose names differ.
(56) Lying on his death-bed.
(57) Lit., 'bond'.
(58) Lit., 'all of them'.
(59) It is left to the conscience of those debtors who did not yet repay their loans to admit their liabilities.
(60) Lit., 'there'.
(61) The one containing the bigger amount.

(62) The debtor is given the benefit of the doubt. He must, however, repay the smaller amount since the creditor declared that one bond only was discharged.
(63) 'Debt' implies all that the debtor owes irrespective of the number of the written bonds.
(64) Lit., 'but from now'.
(65) 'Field', like 'debt', in Raba's statement, being regarded as a collective noun, implying all one's fields.
(66) The case of sale and purchase.
(67) Lit., 'the hand of the owner of the deed is upon the lowest'. He seeks to deprive the owner of property in the possession of which he is confirmed. Hence he must produce convincing proof. In the case of a debt, however, the claimant is the creditor, while the debtor is the confirmed possessor of the sum claimed. Hence the advantage is on the side of the latter.
(68) Lit., 'by the hands of a guarantor'.
(69) Before the debtor was sued and, the court having ordered him to pay, was found unable to meet his obligation.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 173b

IF, HOWEVER, HE SAID TO HIM,[1] 'ON CONDITION THAT I MAY EXACT PAYMENT FROM WHOM I WILL', PAYMENT MAY BE EXACTED FROM THE GUARANTOR. RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: IF THE BORROWER HAS PROPERTY, PAYMENT FROM THE GUARANTOR MAY IN NEITHER CASE[2] BE EXACTED.[3] AND SO SAID RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL: WHERE [A MAN] WAS GUARANTOR FOR A WOMAN IN [RESPECT OF] HER KETHUBAH, AND HER HUSBAND DIVORCED HER, [THE HUSBAND] MUST VOW TO DERIVE NO [FURTHER] BENEFIT FROM HER. [SINCE IT IS] POSSIBLE THAT THEY MIGHT FORM A CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE PROPERTY OF THE GUARANTOR[4] AND THEN [THE HUSBAND] WOULD TAKE HIS WIFE BACK AGAIN.[5]

GEMARA. What is the reason?[6] — Both Rabbah and R. Joseph explain: [Because the guarantor can say,] 'You have entrusted me with a man;[7] and a man have I handed over to you'.[8] R. Nahman demurred: [Is not] this[9] the law of the Persians? — On the contrary; they [invariably] go after the guarantor![10] — [This,] however, [is the objection]: [Is not this ruling[9] like that of] a Persian court of law [the judges of] which do not give [any] reason for their decisions?[11] — But, said R. Nahman, the meaning of[12] HE [MUST] NOT EXACT PAYMENT FROM THE GUARANTOR [is that] he [may] not demand [payment from] the guarantor first.[13] Thus it was also taught [elsewhere]: If [a man] lends [money] to another on a guarantor's security, [payment] shall not be demanded [from the] guarantor [in the] first instance. If, however, [the creditor] said, 'On condition that I may exact payment from whom I will' the guarantor may be called upon first.[14]

Said R. Huna: Whence [may it be deduced] that a guarantor becomes responsible [for a debt he has guaranteed]?[15] — For it is written, I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him.[16] R. Hisda demurred: [This], surely was [an unconditional] assumption [of obligation],[17] for it is written, Deliver him into my hand,[18] and I will bring him back to thee![19] — But, said R. Isaac: [It[20] may be deduced] from the following: Take his garment that is surety,[21] for a stranger; and hold him in pledge that is surety for an alien woman.[22] Furthermore, it is said, My son, if thou art become surety for thy neighbour,[23] if thou hast struck thy hands for a stranger,[24] [if] thou art snared by the words of thy mouth,[24] thou art caught by the words of thy mouth, do this now, my son, and deliver thyself, seeing that thou art come into the hand of thy neighbour; go, humble thyself, and urge thy neighbour.[25] If he has [a claim of] money upon you,[26] open out[27] for him the palm of [your] hand;[28] and if not,[29] get at him through many friends.[30]

Amemar said: [The question] whether a guarantor is responsible[31] [for the payment of the debt he guaranteed, is a matter of] dispute [between] R. Judah and R. Jose. According to R. Jose. who said, 'asmakta[32] conveys title,'[33] a guarantor is responsible. According to R. Judah, [however], who said 'asmakta gives no title', the guarantor Is not responsible.[34] Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Surely, it is the regular practice[35] [of the courts to rule] that asmakta gives no title,[36] and [yet that] a guarantor is held responsible! — But, said R. Ashi having regard to the pleasure of being trusted [by the creditor] he determines to undertake the responsibility.[37]

IF, HOWEVER, HE SAID, 'ON THE CONDITION THAT[34] MAY EXACT PAYMENT FROM WHOM[34] WILL' etc. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: This applies only in the case[38] where the debtor has no property,[39] but where the debtor has property no payment may be exacted from the guarantor. Since, however, it is stated in the final clause: RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: IF THE BORROWER HAS PROPERTY, PAYMENT FROM THE GUARANTOR MAY IN NEITHER CASE BE EXACTED,[40] one might infer that in the opinion of the first Tanna there is no difference whether he had or had not[41] [any property]![42] — There is a lacuna [in our Mishnah].and the proper reading is as follows:[43] IF [A MAN] LENDS [MONEY] TO ANOTHER ON A GUARANTOR'S SECURITY HE [MUST] NOT EXACT PAYMENT FROM THE GUARANTOR. IF, HOWEVER, HE SAID 'ON THE CONDITION THAT I MAY EXACT PAYMENT FROM WHOM I WILL', PAYMENT MAY BE EXACTED FROM THE GUARANTOR. This law applies only to the case[44] where the debtor has no property, but where the debtor has property, payment from the guarantor may not be exacted. And [in the case of] a kabbelan,[45] even though the debtor has property, payment may be exacted from the kabbelan.

(1) 'To him' is omitted in the Gemara; v. infra, where it is also shown that the Mishnah contains a lacuna.

(2) Lit., 'whether so or so'.

(3) In the first instance.

(4) By staging a divorce, and the husband having no money, the woman would be enabled to exact the amount of her kethubah from the guarantor.

(5) And divide the spoil with her.

(6) Why payment may not be exacted from the guarantor. At present it is assumed that so long as the borrower is alive and did not abscond the guarantor cannot be called upon to pay.

(7) The debtor; i.e., the creditor has, so to speak, put the debtor in charge of the guarantor who has undertaken to present him when payment falls due.

(8) Since the debtor neither died nor absconded, the guarantor has carried out his obligation. As the debtor is present in person the claim is to be addressed to him and not to the guarantor.

(9) The exemption of the guarantor from payment where the debtor himself is available.

(10) Even where the debtor is in possession of property.

(11) Lit., 'words'. As the decisions of a Persian court of law are arbitrary, so is the ruling which exempts a guarantor from payment where the debtor is available though destitute. Of what use is the guarantee if the guarantor cannot be called upon to pay where the debtor himself is unable to meet his obligation!

(13) In the first instance the debtor must be called upon to pay. If the obligation, however, has not been met owing to the debtor's poverty, refusal to appear in court, or death, the guarantor must discharge the debt.

(15) By his mere verbal undertaking, though it was not attended by a kinyan.

(16) Gen. XLIII. 9. Thus spake Judah to Jacob in urging him to entrust Benjamin to him.

(18) 'Into my hand' implies unconditional responsibility.

(19) Ibid. XLII, 37. [Although this was said by Reuben, it is unlikely that Judah's guarantee involved less responsibility than that of Reuben's which Jacob had rejected (Maharsha).]

(20) V. supra, n. 3.

(21) By mere verbal undertaking, since no legal agreement15 mentioned.

(24) By insulting or calumniating.

(26) Lit., ‘in thy hand’.
(27) Lit., ‘loosen’.
(28) I.e., pay him. התר ל פיסת יד, a play upon הת פם. (E.V. ‘go humble thyself’).
(29) When the claim or grievance15 not due to monetary matters.
(30) Who may plead with him and obtain his pardon. הרבה עליו רעים, a play upon רהב עיך, (E.V. ‘urge thy neighbour’).
(31) Lit., ‘subjects himself’.
(32) V. Glos.
(33) Supra 168a.
(34) His guarantee to repay the debt is regarded as a mere asmakta, it being assumed that what he meant to convey by it amounted to no more than an expression of his conviction that the debtor would meet his obligation. Had he known that the debtor would default, he would not have given his guarantee.
(35) Lit., ‘actions every day’.
(36) In accordance with the ruling of R. Judah.
(37) Though a similar undertaking would elsewhere be regarded as an asmakta which is not legally binding, the pleasure of being trusted transforms such an asmakta into a legal undertaking.
(38) Lit., ‘they did not teach but’.
(39) [I.e., it is not known whether the debtor has any property from which the creditor could recover his claim, in which case, having regard to the stipulation, the guarantor can immediately be called upon to pay the debt, whereas in the absence of such a stipulation, the creditor would still have first to sue the debtor (Yad Ramah).]
(40) V. Bah, a l.
(41) Lit., ‘no difference thus’.
(42) But in either case the guarantor may be called upon to pay. How, then, could Rabba b. Bar Hana assert that the first Tanna speaks only of the case where the debtor had no property?
(43) Lit., ‘and thus it teaches’.
(44) Lit., ‘in what (are the) words said’.
(45) ,קבלן, a guarantor who accepts unconditional responsibility. an ‘acceptor’.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 174a

RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: IF THE BORROWER HAS PROPERTY, PAYMENT MAY BE EXACTED neither from the one nor from the other.[1]

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: Wherever Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel taught in our Mishnah, the halachah is in agreement with his ruling[2] except [in the cases of] ‘guarantor’,[3] ‘zidon’[4] and the ‘latter proof’.[5]

R. Huna said: [Should one say], ‘Lend him [a sum of money] and I [shall be] guarantor’. ‘Lend him and I [shall] repay [you]’, ‘Lend him and I [shall be] liable [for the loan]’, [or] ‘Lend him and I [shall] give [it back to you]’ — all these are expressions of guarantee.[6] [If, however, one said], ‘Give him [a sum of money] and I [shall be] kabbelan’.[7] ‘Give him and I shall repay [you]’, ‘Give him and I [shall be] liable [for the loan]’, [or] ‘Give him and I [shall] give [it back to you]’ — all these are expressions of kabbelanuth.[8] The question was raised: What [is the law if one said], ‘Lend him[9] and I [shall be] kabbelan’[7] [or], ‘Give him and I [shall be] guarantor’?[10] — R. Isaac replied: The expression of guarantee [has the force of a] guarantee; the expression of kabbelanuth[11] I [has the force of] acceptance.[12] R. Hisda said: All of these are expressions of kabbelanuth, except [that] of ‘Lend him [a sum of money] and I [shall be] guarantor’.[13] Raba said: All of these are expressions of ‘guarantee’, except that of ‘Give him and I [shall] give [it back to you]’.[14]

Mar b. Amemar said to R. Ashi: Father said thus: [If one said,] ‘Give him [a sum of money] and I [shall] give [it back to you]’, the creditor has no claim whatsoever against the borrower. The law,[15] however, is not [so]; [for] a debtor cannot escape from the creditor unless [the guarantor] had taken

A certain judge once allowed a creditor to take possession[16] of the property of the debtor before [that] debtor had been sued. [The matter having been brought to his notice,] R. Hanin the son of R. Yeba removed him.[17] Said Raba: Who [would have been so] wise [as] to do such a thing if not R. Hanin the son of R. Yeba! He holds the opinion that a man's possessions are his surety, and we have learnt, IF [A MAN] LENDS [MONEY] TO ANOTHER ON A GUARANTOR'S SECURITY, HE MUST NOT EXACT PAYMENT FROM THE GUARANTOR, and this[18] has been established [to mean that] the guarantor may not be called upon first.[19]

A certain guarantor of orphans[20] once paid the creditor before the orphans were sued.[21] Said R. Papa: The repayment [of a verbal loan to] a creditor is a commandment, and orphans[22] are not subject to the performance of commandments.[23] But R. Huna son of R. Joshua said:[24] It may be assumed [that] he[25] deposited with him[26] [some] bundles [of valuables].[27]

---

(1) Lit., 'whether this or this, payment from them shall not be exacted', neither from the guarantor not from the kabbelan.

(2) Lit., 'like him'.

(3) The law just quoted from our Mishnah. Payment, contrary to the ruling of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, may be exacted from a kabbelan, though the debtor has property.

(4) V. Git. 74a.

(5) V. Sanh. 31a

(6) ערבות, security. Since the expression of lending was used the guarantor has thereby intimated that the other shall be the borrower. He has consequently to pay only in the case where the debtor has no property of his own.

(7) V. supra note 2.

(8) קבלנות, 'acceptance'. By using the expression give and not lend he thereby gave the order and thus he makes himself in form the principal debtor. Consequently, whether the debtor possesses property or not, payment may be exacted from the kabbelan.

(9) A sum of money.

(10) I.e., the expression of lending was used together with that of kabbelanuth and the expression of give with that of guarantee.

(11) V. note 10.

(12) The expressions of 'lending' and 'giving', are of no consequence where the term denoting 'guarantee' or 'acceptance' was specifically mentioned.

(13) Cf. p.765. notes 8 and 10 supra. Since both expressions wore used, lending and guarantee.

(14) Cf. loc. cit. note 10. Since the expression of 'giving' was used twice; much more so if the expressions of giving and kabbelanuth were used.

(15) Lit., 'it'.

(16) Lit., 'caused him to go down'.

(17) He re-transferred the property to the borrower.

(18) Lit., 'for us'.

(19) Similarly, in the case of seizure of property (a person's surety), the debtor must be sued first before his possessions may be approached.

(20) I.e., guarantor to a loan incurred by their father.

(21) And after paying he desired compensation by the orphans. [So Rashb. Cur. edd. read 'before he informed them'. Had he, that is to say, informed them first and paid on their instructions, he would have been able to recoup himself. V. Yad Ramah.]

(22) Minors under thirteen years of age.

(23) The guarantor who discharged their father's debt and has thus become, so to speak, the creditor, cannot exact payment from them.

(24) The reason why the orphans need not refund the guarantor is not that given by R. Papa, since orphans also are subject to the performance of such a commandment as that of paying their Father's debts (cf. 'Ar. 22a).

(25) The father of the orphans.

(26) The creditor.

(27) As a security for his loan. The guarantor, consequently, should not have repaid the debt before obtaining the return of the valuables. Since he overlooked this, he has himself to blame, and there is no obligation on the part of the orphans to indemnify him. He may, however, sue them when they obtain their majority.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 174b

What [is the practical difference] between them?[1] — [The difference] between them is [the case] where the debtor admitted [liability],[2] or[3] where he was placed under the ban[4] and died [while still] under the ban.[5] [A message] was sent from Palestine:[6] [Where one] was placed under a ban[5] and died under the ban, the law is in accordance with [the view of] R. Huna the son of R. Joshua.[7]

An objection was raised: A guarantor who produced[8] a bond of indebtedness[9] cannot exact payment.[10] If, however, it contains the entry,[11] 'I[12] received[13] from you' he[14] may exact payment.[15] [Now], according to R. Huna the son of R. Joshua one can well understand [this law][16] to be applicable in the case where the debtor had admitted [liability].[17] According to R. Papa.[18] however, there is a difficulty![19] — There it is different; since[20] he[21] took the trouble to write[22] for him, 'I received,'[23] for this [very object].[24]

A certain guarantor to a gentile once paid the gentile before he sued the orphans.[25] Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi:[26] Thus said Abimi of Hagronia[27] in the name of Raba: Even according to him who said [that the possibility that] bundles [of valuables were deposited with the creditor was] to be taken into consideration,[28] this is only applicable to[29] an Israelite,[30] but [in the case of] a Gentile, since he [invariably] goes [for payment] to the guarantor[31] [the possibility that] bundles [of valuables were deposited with the creditor] need not be taken into consideration.[32] [The other][33] said unto him: On the contrary; even according to him who said that [the possibility that] bundles [of valuables were deposited with the creditor] need not be taken into consideration, this is only applicable to[34] an Israelite, but [in the case of] gentiles, since their judges [invariably] go to the guarantor, [it may be taken for granted] that had not [the debtor] deposited with him[35] [some] bundles [of valuables] at the outset, he would not have accepted [any responsibility whatsoever].[36]

AND SO SAID R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL: WHERE [A MAN] IS GUARANTOR FOR A WOMAN IN [RESPECT OF] HER KETHUBAH ETC. Moses b. Azri was guarantor for the kethubah of his daughter-in-law. Now his son, R. Huna, was a scholar but in poor circumstances.[37] Said Abaye: Is there no one who would go and advise R. Huna to divorce his wife, so that she might go and collect her kethubah from his father, and then re-marry her?[38] 'But,' said Raba to him, 'have we [not] learned that [the husband] MUST VOW TO DERIVE NO [FURTHER] BENEFIT FROM HER?' 'Does everyone who divorces [his wife]', said Abaye to him, 'do it[39] at a court of law?'[40] Finally, [however], it was discovered that he[41] was a priest.[42] 'This is just what people say', exclaimed Abaye, 'poverty follows the poor'.[43]

Could Abaye have said such a thing?[44] Surely Abaye had said, 'Who is a cunning rogue? He who counsels to sell an estate, in accordance with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel'![45] — [The case of] one's son is different, and [the case of] a scholar is [also] different. But, surely, he[46] [was only] a guarantor, and a guarantor for a kethubah, it has been definitely established,[47] is not responsible for payment? — He was a kabbelan.[48] This [reply] would be quite correct according to him who said that, though the husband had no property, a kabbelan for a kethubah is responsible for payment; what, however, can be replied according to him who said [that] he is responsible for payment [only] where the [husband][49] has [property], but is not responsible for payment where the husband has not?[50] — If you wish, I might say: [R. Huna] did have property[51] but it was struck with blast. And if you prefer, I might Say: A father in the case of his son always undertakes responsibility,[52] for it was stated: A guarantor for a kethubah is, in the opinion[53] of all, not responsible for payment;[54] a kabbelan for a creditor is, in the opinion of all, responsible for payment; [in the case, however, of] a kabbelan for a kethubah or a guarantor for a creditor, there is a dispute. [One] Master holds that he[55] is responsible only where the debtor has property, but if he has none, he is not responsible;[56] and the [other] Master holds that he[55] is responsible whether [the debtor] has, or has not any property. And the law [is that a guarantor] is responsible for payment in all[57] [cases],[58] with the exception of a guarantor for a kethubah who is not responsible for payment even though the husband possessed property. What is the reason? — He[59] was [merely] performing a religious act[60] and [the woman][61] had lost nothing.[62] R. Huna said: If a dying man consecrated all his property and then stated 'I owe[63] a maneh to X',he is believed, because it is known that no one would form a conspiracy against sacred property.[64] R. Nahman demurred: Would a person form a conspiracy against his children[65] and yet both Rab and Samuel stated that if a dying man said, 'I owe a maneh to X', if he [specifically] added, 'Give [it to him]', it is to be given, but if he did not [specifically] say, 'Give', it is not to be given,[66] from this it clearly follows [that] a person is wont to disclaim wealth for[67] his children;

(1) R. Papa and R. Huna. Whatever the reason, the guarantor is not entitled to exact payment from the orphans!

(2) While dying he stated that he had not deposited any valuables with the creditor.

(3) Lit., 'or also'.

(4) for refusing to obey an order of the court for the payment of the debt.

(5) In both these cases it is obvious that the debtor had not entrusted the creditor with any valuables as a security for the loan. Hence, according to R. Huna, the orphans, whose duty it is to discharge their father's debts, must indemnify the guarantor. According to R. Papa. however, they are not obliged to pay even in such cases.

(6) Lit., 'from there'.

(7) That the guarantor who discharged the debt of such a debtor is entitled to exact payment from the orphans; since, in such a case, it is certain that no valuables were deposited by the debtor with the creditor.

(8) Lit., 'from under whose hand goes out'.

(9) Which ho received from the creditor on payment of the debt incurred by the father of the orphans.

(10) from the orphans, while they are still minors; since it is possible that he never repaid the loan, but accidentally found the bond which the creditor may have lost. When, however, the orphans obtain their majority they may be sued by the guarantor who, on taking the required oath, must be duly compensated.

(13) The amount of the debt.

(14) The guarantor.

(15) In this case it is certain that the bond was not found by him but that it was delivered to him by the creditor.

(16) That the guarantor may exact payment from the orphans where the receipt for the debt is entered on the bond.

(17) V. supra p. 767. n. 7.

(18) Who holds that orphans are not obliged to discharge the debts of their father.

(19) Why should the orphans be made to indemnify the guarantor?

(22) Lit., 'and wrote'.

(23) I.e., he has given him a receipt for the amount received.

(24) In order that the guarantor may become the legal possessor of the bond. The amount now due to him can no longer be regarded as a verbal loan but as one secured by a written bond. R. Papa exempts orphans from the payment of a verbal loan only, but not from that which is secured by a bond. The payment of such a bond on the part of the orphans is obligatory.

(25) Whose father was the debtor.

(26) When the claim of the guarantor for compensation from the orphans was submitted to him for decision.

(27) [A suburb of Nehardea, v. Obermeyer, op. cit. 265 ff.]

(28) V. supra 174a (end), and notes.

(29) Lit., 'these words',

(30) Who knows the law that before calling upon the guarantor to pay, the creditor must first approach the debtor. Hence it is possible that valuables might have been deposited with him by the debtor.
(31) V. supra 173b.
(32) As the debtor well knows that the gentile would, in any case, exact payment from the guarantor, who would not entrust him with any valuables which would only enable the gentile to collect the debt twice.
(33) R. Ashi.
(35) The guarantor.
(36) Knowing full well that the creditor would exact payment from him. Hence, he cannot recoup himself from the orphans while they are still minors. Cf. p. 767. n. 15 end.
(37) Lit., 'and the thing was pressing him'.
(38) And thus come into the possession of some money.
(39) Lit., 'divorce'.
(40) The divorce could be arranged in the presence of witnesses out of court where no one would compel the husband to vow that he would derive no further benefit from his wife.
(41) R. Huna.
(42) Who is forbidden to marry a divorced woman.
(43) B.K. 92a, Hul. 105b.
(44) That R. Huna should be so advised.
(45) V. supra 137a. How then could he have contemplated giving such advice to R. Huna.
(46) R. Huna's father.
(47) Rashal. Lit., 'established for us', v. infra.
(48) V. Glos.
(49) Lit., 'to him'.
(50) Since R. Huna was poor, he could not have been the possessor of any property. His father, consequently, though a kabbelan, could not have become liable for the payment of the kethubah.
(51) At the time his father undertook to be kabbelan.
(52) Even where the son is destitute.
(53) Lit., 'words'.
(54) The reason is given infra.
(55) The guarantor.
(56) Since no one would guarantee a loan where it is known that the debtor has no means wherewith to meet his obligations. A guarantee in such a case must not, therefore, be taken seriously.
(57) V. Bah and Rashal, a.l.
(58) Whether the debtor, has or has no property.
(59) The guarantor.
(60) By his guarantee he was helping to bring about the marriage of the parties. A guarantee in a matrimonial affair is not to be taken seriously as pledging actual payment, but as a mere expression of confidence in the honesty and integrity of the party concerned.
(61) Who, it is assumed, always prefers married life to spinsterhood.
(62) It is certain that even if she had known that her kethubah would not be paid, she would still have consented to the marriage. In the case of a loan, however, it is clear that had it not been for the guarantee, given by the guarantor, the creditor would not have risked his money. In the latter case, therefore, the guarantor is liable.
(63) Lit., 'in my hand'.
(64) Hence, his statement15 accepted, and the maneh he mentioned is to be paid to the creditor named.
(65) To deprive them of their due in favour of a stranger.
(66) Though ho clearly admitted liability.
(67) Lit., not to satisfy'. i.e., a person is in the habit of concealing the wealth of his children in order to ward off envy.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 175a

[could it not then be said] here[1] also [that] a person is wont to disclaim wealth for himself![2] — R.

Huna gave his ruling there[1] only when [the creditor] was in possession of a bond of indebtedness.[3] [Does this] imply that Rab and Samuel [deal with a case] where the [creditor] is not in possession of a bond?[4] [Why, then,] is [the maneh] to be given [where the dying man] said 'Give'? [This, surely,] is [only] a verbal loan, and both Rab and Samuel stated [that] a verbal loan may be recovered neither from the heirs nor from the buyers![5] — But, said R. Nahman, both[6] [are cases] where [the creditor] is in possession of a bond, but[7] there is no contradiction. The one [is a case of a bond] that was authenticated;[8] the other where it was not authenticated. [Consequently,[9] if] he said, 'Give,' he [thereby] confirmed[10] the bond. [If, however], he did not say, 'Give,' he did not confirm[11] the bond.

Rabbah stated: If a dying man said, 'I owe a maneh to X', and the orphans stated, 'We have paid it'< they are believed. [If, however, he said,] 'Give a maneh to X', and the orphans stated, 'We have paid it', they are not believed. Topsy-turvy![12] [Does not] the reverse stand to reason? If he[13] said, 'Give a maneh', since their father had given a definite order,[14] it might be [justly] assumed that they discharged [the debt]; [if, however, he said.] 'I owe a maneh to X', since their father did not give a definite order, it ought to be assumed that they did not discharge it![15] — If, however, [such a statement] was made, it was made[16] in the following terms: If a dying man said, 'I owe a maneh to X', and the orphans declared, 'Our father subsequently told us that he paid',[17] they are believed. What is the reason? He might have [subsequently] recalled it[18] to his mind. [If, however, he said,] 'Give a maneh to X', and his orphans declared, 'Our father subsequently told us that he paid',[17] they are not believed; for had it been the case that he paid it, he would not have used [the word], 'Give'.[19]

Raba inquired: What [is the law where] a dying man admitted [a debt]? Is it necessary [for him] to say [also] 'Be you my witnesses,[20] or is it not necessary to say, 'Be you my witnesses'? [Is it assumed that] a man[21] might jest in the hour of his death or that a man does not jest in the hour of his death? Is it necessary [for him] to say. 'Write',[22] or is it not necessary to say, 'Write'? — After having raised these questions, he answered them himself:[23] No one jests in the hour of [his] death, and the words of a dying man are regarded [legally] as written and delivered.[24]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN LENT [MONEY] TO AN OTHER ON [THE SECURITY OF] A BOND OF INDEBTEDNESS,[25] HE MAY COLLECT [THE DEBT] FROM MORTGAGED PROPERTY.[26] [IF, HOWEVER, THE LOAN WAS MADE] BEFORE[27] WITNESSES,[28] HE[29] MAY RECOVER [HIS DEBT] FROM FREE PROPERTY [ONLY].

(1) In the case of consecrated property.

(2) Consequently, it might be rightly assumed that his admission of indebtedness to a creditor amounted to no more than a desire to conceal his wealth. How then could R. Huna state that the sum specified must be paid to the creditor?

(3) And the dying man only confirmed it. Had there been no bond, but a verbal admission only, R. Huna would not have authorised payment to the alleged creditor.

(4) And this is the reason why the creditor must not be paid if the dying man did not add, 'Give'?

(5) Of the debtor.

(6) Lit., 'these and those'. The statement of R. Huna, on the one hand, and that of Rab and Samuel on the other.

(7) As to the question why in the case dealt with by Rab and Samuel it was necessary for the instruction, 'Give', to be added.

(8) By the Court.

(9) In the latter case.

(10) And the sum is to be paid to the creditor though his bond had no authentication.

(11) Hence the possibility of his desire to conceal his children's wealth must be taken into consideration, and the sum must not be paid in the absence Of an authentication in court.

(12) V. supra p. 435. n. 27.

(14) Lit., 'cut off the thing'.

(15) Why, then, did Rabbah give a decision which is directly opposed to such logical reasoning5

(16) Lit , ‘it was said’.
(17) Lit., ‘I paid’.
(18) The fact that ho had already repaid that debt.
(19) His use of the definite order, ‘Give’, implies that he was absolutely certain that the debt had not been discharged.
(20) As is the case with a man in good health (cf. Sanh. 29a), otherwise he can subsequently deny all liability, pleading that his admission was a mere jest.
(22) I.e., a bond. In the case of a pots in in good health such an order is essential to the validity of the creditor's claim (cf. supra 40a).
(23) Lit., ‘after he enquired he returned and solved it’.
(24) Hence there is no need to add, ‘Be my witnesses’, or, ‘Write out a bond’.
(25) Even though the clause pledging security had not been entered (v. B.M. 15b, and cf. supra 157a).
(26) Which was mortgaged subsequent to the date of the loan, and certainly from property in possession of the debtor.
(27) Lit., ‘by the hands of’.
(28) And no bond was written.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 175b

[IF A PERSON] PRODUCED AGAINST ANOTHER HIS[1] NOTE-OF-HAND[2] [SHOWING] THAT [THE LATTER] OWES HIM [A SUM OF MONEY], HE MAY RECOVER [IT] FROst HIS FREE PROPERTY.[3] [IF THE GUARANTEE AND SIGNATURE OF] A GUARANTOR APPEAR[4] BELOW THE SIGNATURES TO BONDS OF INDEBTEDNESS, [THE CREDITOR] MAY RECOVER [HIS DEBT] FROM [THE GUARANTOR'S] FREE PROPERTY.[5] SUCH A CASE ONCE CAME BEFORE R. ISHMAEL, WHO DECIDED THAT [THE DEBT MAY] BE RECOVERED FROM [THE GUARANTOR'S] FREE PROPERTY. BEN NANNUS [HOWEVER] SAID TO HIM, ‘[THE DEBT MAY] BE REPLIED NEITHER FROM SOLD PROPERTY NOR FROM FREE PROPERTY.’ ‘WHY?’ THE OTHER ASKED HIM. BEHOLD’, HE REPLIED TO HIM, ‘THIS IS JUST AS IF A CREDITOR] WERE [IN THE ACT (IF] THROTTLING A DEBTOR[6] IN THE STREET,[7] AND HIS FRIEND FOUND HIM AND SAID, "LEAVE HIM ALONE AND[8] WILL PAY YOU", HE WOULD [CERTAINLY] BE EXEMPT [FROM LIABILITY], SINCE THE LOAN WAS NOT MADE THROUGH TRUST IN HIM.[8] BUT WHAT MANNER OF GUARANTOR, HOWEVER, IS LIABLE [TO REFUND A DEBT]? [IF THE GUARANTOR SAID], LEND HIM [A SUM OF MONEY] AND I WILL REPAY [IT] TO YOU", HE IS LIABLE, SINCE THE LOAN WAS MADE THROUGH TRUST IN HIM.

R. ISHMAEL FURTHER STATED: HE WHO WOULD BE WISE SHOULD ENGAGE IN THE STUDY OF CIVIL LAWS,[9] FOR THERE IS NO BRANCH IN THE TORAH MORE COMPREHENSIVE[10] THAN THEY, AND THEY ARE LIKE A WELLING FOUNTAIN. AND HE THAT WOULD ENGAGE IN THE STUDY OF CIVIL LAWS LET HIM WAIT[11] UPON SIMEON BEN NANNUS.

GEMARA. ‘Ullah said: [According to] the word of the Torah, either a loan [secured] by a bond or a verbal loan may be recovered from mortgaged property. What is the reason? — The hypothecary obligation [involved] is Biblical.[12] Why then has it been said [that] a verbal loan may be collected from free property only? — On account of [possible] loss to the buyers.[13] If so,[14] [the same law should apply] also [to] a loan [that is secured] by a bond![15] [In this case][16] they have brought the loss upon themselves.[17]

Rabbah, however, said: [According to] the word of the Torah either a loan [secured] by a bond or a verbal loan may be recovered from free property only. What is the reason? — The hypothecary obligation [involved] is not Biblical.[18] Why then has it been said that a loan [secured] by a bond may be recovered from sold property? — In order that doors may not be locked in the face of borrowers.[19] If so, [the same law should apply] also [to] a verbal loan! — In that case the loan is not [sufficiently] known.[20]

Did Rabbah, however, give such [a ruling]?[21] Surely, Rabbah said: If land was collected[22] he[23] receives [a double portion,[24] but] if money was collected, he does not, and R. Nahman said: If money was collected he has [a double portion]![25] And if it be suggested that [the statement] of Rabbah should be transposed to ‘Ulla and that of ‘Ulla to Rabbah,[26] surely [it may be pointed out] ‘Ulla said: [According to] the word of the Torah a creditor is to receive[27] of the worst![28] — Rabbah [only] stated the reason of the Palestinians,[29] but he himself does not share [their view].[30]

Both Rab and Samuel stated: A verbal loan may be recovered neither from the heirs[31] nor from the buyer.[32] What is the reason? — The hypothecary obligation [involved] is not Biblical. Both R. Johanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish stated: A verbal loan may be recovered either from the heirs[33] or from the buyers.[34] What is the reason? — The hypothecary obligation [involved] is Biblical. An objection was raised: If [a man] was digging a pit in a public domain and an ox falls upon him and kills him, [the owner of the ox] is exempt.[35] Moreover, if the ox dies,[36] [compensation for] its value must be paid to its owner by the heirs of the owner of the pit![37] — R. Elai replied in the name of Rab: [This law[38] is applicable to the case only] where he[39] appeared before [a court of] law.[40] But, surely, it was stated that it killed him![41] — R. Adda b. Ahabah replied: [This is a case] where he was fatally injured.[42] But R. Nahman, surely. said that a tanna[43] recited [the statement as follows]: It killed and buried him![44] — That [is a case] where judges sat at the mouth of the Pit and convicted him.[45]

(1) The debtor's.

(2) And no other evidence.

(3) Mortgaged property may be seized only where the creditor can produce a bond duly signed by qualified witnesses. Y. Gemara, infra.

(4) Lit., ‘which goes out’.

(5) But not from property he sold. Since the signatures of the witnesses do not appear below the guarantee, the guarantor's undertaking can have no more force than a verbal promise, or a loan that has not been secured by a bond, in which case no mortgaged property is pledged to the creditor.

(6) Lit., ‘one’.

(7) I.e., using violence against him.

(8) Such a guarantee was offered for the sole purpose of rescuing the debtor from the creditor's violence. It cannot be regarded as a serious guarantee to discharge the debt, since the debt was incurred prior to the guarantee.

(9) Lit., ‘laws of monies’ or ‘property’.

(11) Lit., ‘serve’, as a disciple to his master.

(12) Cf. Deut. XXIV, 11. Every debt carries with it a pledge of the debtor's property in favour of the creditor.

(13) Who might not be aware of the existence of the loan and would thus purchase property which might at any time be taken away from them.

(14) That the interests of the buyers are to be safeguarded.

(15) Cf. n. 6.

(16) Lit., ‘there’, a loan secured by a bond.

(17) A loan that has been secured by a bond and made or acknowledged in the presence of witnesses receives due publicity, and intending buyers are well aware of its existence.

(18) V. B.M. 114b.

(19) No man would consent to lend any money if no land security were available.

(20) Lit., ‘it has no voice’.

(21) Lit., ‘say so’, that the hypothecary obligation involved by debts is not Biblical.

(22) By sons, in payment of a debt that was due to their deceased father.

(23) The firstborn son.
(24) Because Biblically land is deemed to have been in their father's virtual possession, and a firstborn son is entitled to a double share in all that his father possessed. Cf. Deut. XXI, 17.
(25) V. supra 124b; B.K. 43a. At any rate, in view of this statement of Rabbah's, the debtor's land is Biblically deemed to be in the creditor's virtual possession; how then could ho say here that the hypothecary obligation is not Biblical?
(26) And thus Rabbah's view here would be that the pledging of property is Biblical, in agreement with his statement, supra 124b, that a firstborn receive a double portion where land was collected, and 'Ulla's view would be that the hypothecary obligation is not Biblical.
(28) Of the lands of the debtor. And this is deduced from a Biblical text (v. B.K. 8a). which proves that, according to 'Ulla, the debtor's landed property is pledged to the creditor Biblically.
(29) Who, as reported supra 124b, stated that a firstborn son takes a double portion in a loan.
(30) But maintains that, consistent with his view here that the hypothecary obligation is not Biblical, a firstborn son does not receive a double portion in a loan that was due to his deceased father, whether money or land was collected.
(31) Of the debtor.
(32) Though the dates of their purchases were later than the date of the loan.
(33) V. p. 775, n. 24.
(34) Cf. p. 775, n. 15.
(35) Since it is the fault of the digger of the pit that the ox had fallen upon him.
(36) Through the fall.
(37) The liability to compensation is, surely, of no greater legal force than that of a verbal loan (since no bond can be produced in support of it), and yet it has been said that it may be recovered from heirs; how, then, could Rab and Samuel state that heirs are not liable to repay a verbal loan incurred by their father?
(38) That heirs are to pay compensation for their father's liability.
(39) Who was digging the pit.
(40) And was ordered to pay compensation. An order made by a court has the same legal force as that of a loan that is secured by a written bond.
(41) A dead man could not appear before a court!
(42) The infliction of injuries from which one dies may be described as 'killing'. A man injured, though fatally, may be able to appear before a court.
(43) 'Ar. 7a.
(44) In the pit. How could it be said that he appeared before a court.
(45) Just before he died.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 176a

R. Papa said: The law is [that] a verbal loan may be recovered from the heirs[1] but may not be recovered from the buyers.[2] It 'may be recovered from the heirs' in order that doors might not be locked in the face of borrowers;[3] 'but may not be recovered from the buyers', because it is not [sufficiently] known.[4] [IF A PERSON] PRODUCED AGAINST ANOTHER HIS NOTE-OF-HAND [SHOWING] THAT [THE LATTER] OWED HIM [A SUM OF MONEY]. HE MAY RECOVER [IT] FROM FREE PROPERTY ETC. Rabbah b. Nathan inquired of R. Johanan: What [is the law in the case where] his handwriting[5] was legally endorsed at a court of law?[6] [The other] replied to him: Although one's handwriting had been legally endorsed at a court of law [the debt] may be recovered from free property only.[7]

Rami b. Hama raised an objection: [There are] three [kinds of] letters of divorce [which are] invalid;[8] but, if [the woman did] remarry, her child is [deemed] legitimate.[9] And they are the following: [A letter of divorce] written in the husband's handwriting, which bears no [signatures of] witnesses; [one] bearing [the signatures of] witnesses but no date; [and one] bearing a date and [the signature of] one witness only. These are the three [kinds of] letters of divorce [which are] invalid; did [the woman] however, re-marry, the child is [deemed] legitimate. R. Eleazar said: [A letter of divorce,] although it bears no [signatures of] witnesses but was given[10] to the woman[11] in the presence of witnesses, is valid;[12] and [such a document entitles one to] collect from mortgaged property![13] — There[14] it is different, because he[15] pledged himself at the very time of writing.[16]

[IF THE GUARANTEE AND SIGNATURE OF] A GUARANTOR APPEAR BELOW THE SIGNATURES TO BONDS OF INDEBTEDNESS, etc. Rab said: [If the guarantee appears] before the signatures on the bond, [the debt] may be recovered from mortgaged property; if after the signatures on the bond, [it] may be recovered from free property [only]. At times, Rab said: Even [if the guarantee appears] before the signatures on the bond [the debt] may be recovered from free property only. [This, surely, presents] a contradiction [between one ruling] of Rab and the other ruling of his![17] — There is no contradiction. The one[18] [refers to the case] where it was entered,[19] 'X is guarantor'; the other [speaks of a case] where it was entered, 'and X is guarantor'.[20]

R. Johanan. however, said: Either with the one or with the other[21] [the debt] may be recovered from [the guarantor's] free property only; even though it was entered 'and X is guarantor', Raba raised an objection: A bill of divorce containing greetings, under which the witnesses have signed, is invalid,[22] [because we apprehend that they might have signed the greetings [only];[23] and R. Abbahu said: I had the [following] explanation of this law[24] from R. Johanan: [The entry.] 'give greetings' [renders the bill] invalid, [but with the entry,] 'and give greetings'[25] it is valid'![26] — Here also[27] [it is a case] where the entry was,[28] 'X is guarantor'.[29] If so, [this statement] is exactly the same [as that] of Rab![30] — Read,[31] 'and so said R. Johanan'.[32]

SUCH A CASE ONCE CAME BEFORE R. ISHMAEL etc. Said Rabbah b. Bar Hana in the name of R. Johanan: Although R. Ishmael praised Ben Nannus,[33] the halachah is in accordance with his[34] [own view].

A question was raised: What is R. Ishmael's view[35] in [the case of] 'throttling'?[36] — Come and hear that which R. Jacob said in the name of R. Johanan: R. Ishmael differed in [the case of] 'throttling' also. [Is the] halachah in accordance with his view or is the halachah [in this case] not in accordance with his view? — Come and hear: When Rabin came[37] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: R. Ishmael differed in [the case of] 'throttling' also; and the halachah is in accordance with his view in [the case of] 'throttling' also.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel; [A guarantor, even in a case of] 'throttling', who was made to enter into a legal obligation,[38] assumes responsibility [for the payment of the debt], [from this] it is to be inferred[39] that a guarantor generally[40] does not require a kinyan.[41] And [this is] in disagreement with [the statement] of R. Nahman. for R. Nahman said:

---

(1) Of the debtor.

(3) No one would be able to obtain a loan if creditors could not be assured of recovering it from the debtor's heirs.

(4) V. p. 775, n. 3. Unlike a loan secured by a bond, it is neither made, nor acknowledged in the presence of witnesses nor in the presence of a scribe. Hence no one besides the lender and debtor may ever be aware of its existence. The buyers of the debtor's property must, therefore, be protected against loss not due to any Fault of theirs.

(5) I.e., the note-of-hand mentioned in our Mishnah.

(6) Does the endorsement confer upon the creditor the same rights as those of a bond signed by witnesses, and thus entitle him to seize the debtor's mortgaged lands as if the clause pledging security had actually been entered (omission of the clause being regarded as the scribe's error); or does it merely establish the authenticity of the debtor's signature, while the creditor's rights remain unaltered?

(7) As a note-of-hand that has not been endorsed. The endorsement of a document by a court serves only the purpose of safeguarding its current force so that debtor or witnesses should not subsequently be able to deny their signatures.

(8) They do not entitle the woman to re-marry.

(9) The invalidity of the divorce not being so definite as to affect the legitimacy of the child.
(10) Lit., 'he (the husband) gave it'.
(11) Lit., 'to her'.
(12) Because, in R. Eleazar's opinion, the legality of a document depends on the witnesses to its delivery, not on those who signed it.
(13) Git. 86a. Whether the document be a kethubah or (as has been explained in Git. 22b) a bond of indebtedness, from this it follows that, though no witnesses had signed the bond, the creditor is entitled to seize the debtor's mortgaged property if there were only witnesses testifying to the delivery to him of the bond; much more so when the bond had been endorsed in a court of law which has certainly more power than ordinary witnesses. How, then, could R. Johanan maintain that an endorsement by a court of a note-of hand does not entitle the creditor to the seizure of sold property?
(14) The Mishnah of Gittin.
(15) The husband (in case of a divorce), or a creditor (in the case of a bond).
(16) Of the document, i.e., it was originally written with the intention of delivering it in the presence of witnesses instead of having their signatures on the document. Since witnesses to the delivery confer upon a document the same force as witnesses who sign it, the document is valid. R. Johanan, however, speaks of a note-of-hand given to the creditor sometime after the loan was made as a token of indebtedness. Such a note, not being written in the form of a bond and bearing no signatures of witnesses, cannot transform a verbal loan into one secured by a bond.
(17) Lit., 'on Rab'.
(18) Where the guarantor's mortgaged property may not be seized.
(19) Lit., 'that he wrote in it'.
(20) In the latter case, 'and' indicates continuation, so that the guarantee forms a part of the bond the whole of which is attested by the witnesses whose signatures appear below. In the former case, the guarantee appears as a detached statement; and the witnesses may, consequently, be regarded as having attested the text of the bond only, exclusive of the guarantee.
(21) Lit., 'one this and one this', 'whether one or the other', i.e., whether the guarantee is entered above, or below the signatures of the witnesses.
(22) Lit., 'witnesses who are signed on an enquiry of peace in a letter of divorce'.
(23) Not the text of the divorce. Tosef., Git. VII.
(24) Lit., 'to me it was explained'.
(25) The conjunction, 'and', combining the greetings and the text into one unit.
(26) The signatures clearly bearing testimony to the entire bill (text of divorce and greetings). Now, since R. Johanan draws here a distinction between the insertion and the omission of the conjunction, how could he be said to hold that there is no such distinction in the case of a guarantee to a bond, and that whether 'and' was, or was not inserted, the debt may be recovered from Free property only?
(27) A guarantee on a bond, which does not entitle to the seizure of sold property.
(28) Lit., 'when he wrote'.
(29) Had the conjunction 'and' been inserted, the guarantee would have assumed full force and the guarantor's sold property also could be seized.
(30) Rab also draws the same distinction between the insertion, and the omission of the conjunction.
(31) Lit., 'say'.
(32) R. Johanan does not differ from, but agrees with Rab.
(33) Later in the Mishnah.
(34) R. Ishmael's; that free property may be seized.
(35) Lit., 'what to me said etc.'.
(36) The case cited by Ben Nannus in our Mishnah where the guarantee was made after the loan was granted for the purpose of saving the debtor from the creditor's power.
(37) from Palestine to Babylon.
(38) Lit., 'and they (witnesses) acquired from him', by means of a kinyan (v. Glos.).
(39) Since a kinyan is specifically postulated in this case.
(40) Lit., 'in the world'.
(41) He assumes responsibility though no kinyan had been effected.

Talmud - Mas. Baba Bathra 176b

only [in the case of] a guarantor appointed by a court of law is no kinyan required;[1] in all other cases, however, kinyan is required.

And the law is: [If one] guarantees [a loan] at the time the money is delivered,[2] no kinyan is required;[3] if, after the money is delivered, kinyan is required;[4] [and in the case of] a guarantor appointed by a court of law[5] no kinyan is required, for, having regard to the pleasure he has in the confidence reposed in him,[6] he [wholeheartedly] determines to shoulder the full responsibility.[7]

---

(1) The reason is given infra.

(2) I.e., when the loan was made.

(3) Since the loan was obviously made through trust in the guarantor, he assumes full responsibility.

(4) To enable the creditor to recoup himself.

(5) Though after the loan has been made.

(6) Lit., 'that he is trusted' by the court.

(7) Lit., 'and subjects himself to him', i.e., to the creditor.

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. MONETARY CASES [MUST BE ADJUDICATED] BY THREE JUDGES; CASES OF LARCENY AND MAYHEM,[1] BY THREE; CLAIMS FOR FULL OR HALF DAMAGES,[2] THE REPAYMENT OF THE DOUBLE[3] OR FOUR- OR FIVE-FOLD RESTITUTION [OF STOLEN GOODS],[4] BY THREE, AS MUST CASES OF RAPE[5] SEDUCTION[6] AND LIBEL[7] ; SO SAYS R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES[8] HOLD THAT A CASE OF LIBEL REQUIRES A COURT OF TWENTY-THREE SINCE IT MAY INVOLVE A CAPITAL CHARGE.[9]

CASES INVOLVING FLOGGING,[10] BY THREE; IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL IT IS SAID, BY TWENTY-THREE.

THE INTERCALATION OF THE MONTH IS EFFECTED BY A COURT OF THREE;[11] THE INTERCALATION OF THE YEAR,[12] BY THREE: SO R. MEIR. BUT R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS THE MATTER IS INITIATED BY THREE, DISCUSSED BY FIVE AND DETERMINED BY SEVEN. IF HOWEVER, IT BE DETERMINED ONLY BY THREE, THE INTERCALATION HOLDS GOOD. THE LAYING OF THE ELDERS' HANDS [ON THE HEAD OF A COMMUNAL SACRIFICE][13] AND THE BREAKING OF THE HEIFER'S NECK[14] REQUIRE THE PRESENCE OF THREE: SO SAYS R. SIMEON. ACCORDING TO R. JUDAH, FIVE. THE PERFORMANCE OF HALIZAH,[15] AND THE DECISION AS TO MI'UN[16] IS MADE BY THREE. THE FOURTH YEAR FRUIT[17] AND THE SECOND TITHE[18] OF UNKNOWN VALUE ARE ASSESSED BY THREE. THE ASSESSMENT OF CONSECRATED OBJECTS FOR REDEMPTION PURPOSES IS MADE BY THREE; VALUATIONS OF MOVABLE PROPERTY[19] BY THREE. ACCORDING TO R. JUDAH ONE OF THEM MUST BE A KOHEN;[20] IN THE CASE OF REAL ESTATE, BY TEN INCLUDING A KOHEN, IN THE CASE OF A PERSON, BY THE SAME NUMBER. CAPITAL CASES ARE ADJUDICATED BY TWENTY-THREE. THE PERSON OR BEAST CHARGED WITH UNNATURAL INTERCOURSE, BY TWENTY-THREE, AS IT is WRITTEN, THOU SHALT KILL THE WOMAN AND THE BEAST,[21] AND ALSO, AND YE SHALL SLAY THE BEAST.[22]

THE OX TO BE STONED[23] IS TRIED BY TWENTY-THREE, AS IT IS WRITTEN, THE OX SHALL BE STONED AND ITS OWNER SHALL BE PUT TO DEATH[24] — AS THE DEATH OF THE OWNER, SO THAT OF THE OX, CAN BE DECIDED ONLY BY TWENTY-THREE.

THE DEATH SENTENCE ON THE WOLF OR THE LION OR THE BEAR OR THE LEOPARD OR THE HYENA OR THE SERPENT[25] is TO BE PASSED BY TWENTY-THREE. R. ELIEZER SAYS: WHOEVER IS FIRST TO KILL THEM [WITHOUT TRIAL], ACQUIRES MERIT, R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, HOLDS THAT THEIR DEATH IS TO BE DECIDED BY TWENTY-THREE.

A TRIBE,[26] A FALSE PROPHET[27] AND A HIGH PRIEST CAN ONLY BE TRIED BY A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE. WAR OF FREE CHOICE[27] CAN BE WAGED ONLY BY THE AUTHORITY OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE. NO ADDITION TO THE CITY OF JERUSALEM OR THE TEMPLE COURT-YARDS CAN BE SANCTIONED SAVE BY A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE.

SMALL SANHEDRINS FOR THE TRIBES CAN BE INSTITUTED ONLY BY A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE.

NO CITY CAN BE DECLARED CONDEMNED[28] SAVE BY A DECREE OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE. A FRONTIER TOWN CANNOT BE CONDEMNED NOR THREE CITIES AT A TIME,[29] BUT ONLY ONE OR TWO.

THE GREAT SANHEDRIN CONSISTED OF SEVENTY-ONE MEMBERS; THE SMALL SANHEDRIN OF TWENTY-THREE. WHENCE DO WE DEDUCE THAT THE GREAT SANHEDRIN IS OF SEVENTY-ONE? — IT IS SAID, GATHER UNTO ME SEVENTY MEN;[30] WITH MOSES AT THEIR HEAD WE HAVE SEVENTY-ONE. R. JUDAH SAID IT CONSISTED ONLY OF SEVENTY. WHENCE DO WE KNOW THAT THE SMALL SANHEDRIN IS OF ONLY TWENTY-THREE? — IT IS SAID, AND THE 'EDAH[31] SHALL JUDGE... AND THE 'EDAH SHALL DELIVER.[32] ONE 'EDAH JUDGES, [I.E. CONDEMNS] AND THE OTHER MAY DELIVER [I.E. ACQUIT], HENCE WE HAVE TWENTY. BUT HOW DO WE KNOW THAT A CONGREGATION CONSISTS OF NOT LESS THAN TEN? — IT IS WRITTEN, HOW LONG SHALL I BEAR WITH THIS EVIL 'EDAH?[33] EXCLUDING JOSHUA AND CALEB, WE HAVE TEN. AND WHENCE DO WE DERIVE THE ADDITIONAL THREE? — BY THE IMPLICATIONS OF THE TEXT, THOU SHALT NOT FOLLOW A MAJORITY FOR EVIL,[34] I INFER THAT I MAY FOLLOW THEM FOR GOOD;[35] IF SO, WHY IS IT SAID, TO INCLINE AFTER THE MAJORITY[36] ? TO TEACH THAT THE MAJORITY TO 'INCLINE AFTER' FOR GOOD [I.E. FOR A FAVOURABLE DECISION] IS NOT THE ONE TO 'INCLINE AFTER' FOR EVIL [I.E. FOR AN ADVERSE DECISION] SINCE FOR GOOD, A MAJORITY OF ONE SUFFICES; WHEREAS FOR EVIL, A MAJORITY OF TWO IS REQUIRED. [

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 2b

AND AS A COURT CANNOT CONSIST OF AN EVEN NUMBER[1] ANOTHER ONE IS ADDED, MAKING A TOTAL OF TWENTY THREE.

WHAT MUST BE THE POPULATION OF A TOWN TO MAKE IT ELIGIBLE FOR A [SMALL] SANHEDRIN? — ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY. R. NEHEMIA SAYS: TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY, SO THAT EACH MEMBER SHOULD BE A RULER OF [AT LEAST] TEN.[2]

GEMARA. Do not LARCENY AND MAYHEM come under the category of MONETARY CASES? [Why then this specification?] R. Abbahu says: The Tanna adds here an explanatory clause, teaching that the MONETARY CASES of the Mishnah refer only to LARCENY AND MAYHEM, but not to admission and transaction of loans[3] [i. e. cases of indebtedness]. And both clauses are necessary. For had the Tanna mentioned only MONETARY CASES I might have said that they included also cases of indebtedness. Hence the necessity of the explanatory LARCENY AND MAYHEM; or again had the Tanna mentioned only LARCENY AND MAYHEM, I might have said that these included cases of indebtedness, and that the reason for specifying particularly LARCENY AND MAYHEM is that the regulation requiring three judges is laid down in Scripture In connection with larceny and mayhem (the verse, the master of the house shall come near unto the judges,[4] though primarily dealing with cases of larceny,[5] includes also those of mayhem, there being actually no difference in regard to an injury whether it is inflicted on one's person or on one's property). The Tanna had accordingly to supplement the MONETARY clause by that of LARCENY AND MAYHEM, to exclude thereby cases of indebtedness.

And what is the point in excluding cases of indebtedness? Shall l say it is to show that three judges are not required for them? But did not R. Abbahu [himself] say that all agree that no judgment given by two in monetary cases is valid? — It is to teach that cases of indebtedness require no Mumhin[6] of their adjudication. [This being the case, let us consider] what is the determining principle of the Tanna. Does he hold that we have here an instance of transposition of sections, [in which case all the provisions in this section[7] apply to cases of indebtedness]?[8] He should then demand Mumhin here also [since the term Elohim denoting Mumhin is mentioned in this place]. If on the other hand, he does not hold this view [and in this case the provisions in this section are limited to the cases of larceny as set forth], where is the authority for the necessity of three judges? — Indeed the Tanna accepts the principle of 'transposition of sections' — and consequently, in accordance with the strict application of the Law, in cases of indebtedness he would require [three] Mumhin — nevertheless they have become exempted from this regulation for the reason advanced by R. Hanina. For R. Hanina said:[9] In accordance with the Biblical law, the juridical procedure in regard to the investigation[10] and examination[11] of witnesses applies to monetary as well as to capital cases , for it is written,

One manner of judgment shall you have.[1] Why then did they [the Sages] declare that monetary cases are not subject to this exacting procedure? In order not to 'bolt the door' against borrowers.[2] But if non-Mumhin are competent to adjudicate in monetary cases, ought they not to be protected against any claim of compensation in case of their having given an erroneous decision? — All the more then would you be 'bolting the door' against borrowers.

If it be so, [that cases of indebtedness require three, why does R. Abbahu say that the Tanna adds an explanatory clause, and not simply that] the Mishnah teaches two separate laws; viz. MONETARY cases are tried by three laymen[3] whilst cases of LARCENY AND MAYHEM are tried by three Mumhin[3] . Moreover, if the two clauses merely explain each other, why mention 'three' in each? — indeed, said Raba,[4] the Tanna teaches two separate laws; and cases of indebtedness need no Mumhin for the reason given above by R. Hanina.

R. Aha the son of R. Ika says: According to Scriptural law, even a single person is competent to try cases of indebtedness as it is said: In righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor.[5] Three, however, are needed in case traffickers[6] presume to act as judges. But even with the provision of three might they not all be traffickers? — It is, however unlikely that none of them should have any knowledge of the law. If this be so, they should be exempt from liability in case they erred? — But how much more would traffickers presume in such circumstances to act as judges![7] Wherein then lies the difference between Raba and R. Aha the son of R. Ika [since both agree that mere laymen are competent]? Their difference centres round the opinion of Samuel who said: 'if two [laymen] have tried a monetary case, their decision holds good. but they are called a presumptuous Beth din.' Whereas Raba[8] does not agree with Samuel, R. Aha does agree with him.

CLAIMS FOR FULL OR HALF DAMAGES etc.

Do not FULL DAMAGES come under the category of MAYHEM[9] [why then this specification]? — Since the Tanna had to state HALF DAMAGES he mentions, also FULL DAMAGES. But is not HALF DAMAGES also included in the same category? — The Tanna speaks of two classes of payment — kenas[10] [fine] and indemnity . This opinion would be in accord with the Amora who considers HALF DAMAGES kenas, but how meet the difficulty according to the one who regards it as indemnity?[11] — Since the Tanna had to state DOUBLE AND FOUR- OR FIVE-FOLD RESTITUTION, which is an indemnity not corresponding with the exact amount of damage done, he mentions HALF DAMAGES which is likewise an indemnity that does not correspond with the exact amount of damage done. And as he has to state HALF DAMAGES, WHOLE DAMAGES is incidentally also stated.

Whence do we deduce that three are needed [for the composition of a court]? — From what our Rabbis taught: 'It is written: The master of the house shall come near unto the judge. here you have one; and again: the cause of both parties shall come before the judge, here you have two; and again: whom the judge shall condemn,[1] so you have three.' So says R. Josiah. R. Jonathan holds the initial reference to judges occurs In the first passage above, and cannot as such, be employed for exegetical purposes.[2] But [the deduction is as follows:] The cause of both . . . judge, here you have one; again whom the judge shall condemn, here you have two; and since a court must not be of an even number, another is added, making the total of three. Shall we say that R. Josiah and R. Jonathan have as point of dispute the question whether or not first citations can be used for exegetical purposes. R. Josiah being of the opinion that they can be used, and R. Jonathan that they cannot? — No! Both agree that first citations cannot be used. R. Josiah nevertheless employs one such in this case because were its purpose merely to indicate the need of a judge, the text should have stated The master. . . unto the Shofet [judge]. Why does it say 'Elohim'? — To enable us to infer that the first citation is to be used to derive from it the number of three judges. R. Jonathan, however, argues that the verse employed the popular term ['Elohim' for a recognised judge]. even as the current saying goes; 'Whoever has a trial let him go to the Dayyan.'[3] And is not R. Josiah of the opinion that a court must consist of an uneven number of judges?[4] Has it not been taught; R. Eliezer the son of R. Jose the Galilean says: 'What is the signification of the phrase to incline after many to arrest judgement?'[5] The Torah implies: Set up for thyself a court of an uneven number, the members of which may be able to incline to one side or the other? — R. Josiah is of the opinion of R. Judah that the Great Sanhedrin consisted of seventy. For we learnt: THE GREAT SANHEDRIN CONSISTED OF SEVENTY-ONE . . . R. JUDAH SAYS OF SEVENTY. It might, however, be objected that R. Judah has been known to express this view only regarding the Great Sanhedrin [and that on Biblical authority]; but have you heard him express it with regard to other courts? Should you presume to say that [R. Judah] makes no such distinction, how then explain what we learnt: THE LAYING OF HANDS BY THE ELDERS AND THE CEREMONY OF BREAKING THE HEIFER'S NECK [REQUIRE THE PRESENCE OF] THREE. SO HOLDS R. SIMEON. R. JUDAH SAYS FIVE. And it has been stated. 'What is R. Judah's reason? He finds it in the text, the elders shall lay.[6] the plural in each word indicating at least two, and so four in all, and since there cannot be a court of an even number, a fifth is added.'[7] R. Josiah's opinion goes further than that of R. Judah. Whilst the latter is of the opinion that only the Great Sanhedrin needs an uneven number, but not other courts, R. Josiah extends that requirement to all courts. But [on R. Josiah's opinion] how is 'to incline' explained?[8] — He applies it to capital but not to monetary cases. If so, what of the ruling which we learnt that in [monetary] cases: if two of the judges acquit the defendant and the third condemns him, he is acquitted; if two condemn him and one acquits, he is condemned.[9] Can it be said it does not accord with R. Josiah's view?[10] — No! you can correlate that Mishnah's ruling even with that of R. Josiah [for he will agree that the decision of the majority is valid even in civil cases] by virtue of a kal wahomer[11] from capital cases. If in capital cases that are so grave, the Divine Law[12] vested the authority in the majority, all the more so in monetary cases.

Our Rabbis taught: Monetary cases are tried by three. Rabbi says, by five, so that in case of a division there will be a majority verdict, i.e., of three. But surely even in the case of three there is possible a majority verdict [namely, of two]? — What Rabbi means is that an unanimous decision of three is required for the verdict. Hence he holds that the stage at which three judges are prescribed is the final decision. This opinion was ridiculed by R. Abbahu, for the Great Sanhedrin would accordingly have to consist of one hundred and forty one, in order that the final verdict might be given [in case of a division] by a majority of at least seventy-one; and the small Sanhedrin would have to consist of forty-five, in order that the final verdict might be given by twenty-three? This however cannot be maintained, since the text, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel[13] prescribes seventy at the time of gathering; and likewise, the verse, The congregation shall judge, and the congregation shall deliver[14] refers to the time when the congregation proceeds to judge. Similarly it may be concluded that the verse, The master of the house shall come near unto the judges[15] [from which the need of three judges in monetary cases is derived], is to be explained as referring to the time when the plaintiff appears before the Court, at which point three judges are required. [Whence then does Rabbi deduce that three are needed?] — Rabbi derives this from the plural form of the predicate 'yarshi'un' [they shall condemn], arguing that the subject 'Elohim' [judges] is here a plural, indicating at least two; and similarly the earlier 'Elohim'[16] in the same context denotes two. So we have four. Adding another, since a court cannot consist of an even number, there are five;

but the Rabbis [who hold that only three are needed] adopt the written form yarshi'un.[1]

R. Isaac b. Joseph[2] said in the name of R. Johanan: Rabbi and R. Judah b. Ro'ez, the Shammaites. R. Simeon and R. Akiba, all hold that Mikra[3] is determinant in Biblical exposition.

Rabbi's opinion is reflected in what has been said; that he reads yarshi'un.

The opinion of R. Judah b. Ro'ez is given in the following: For it has been taught: The disciples of R. Judah b. Ro'ez asked him: Why not read shibe'im [seventy] instead of shebu'ayim [two weeks][4] [extending the period of uncleanliness to seventy days]? He answered: The law has fixed the period of purity and impurity in the case of a male child and it has fixed the period of purity and impurity in case of a female child. Just as the period of purification after the birth of a female child is double that after the birth of a male child, so must the period of uncleanness after the birth of a female child be no more than double that after the birth of a male child [which is only seven days]. After they left him he sought them out again and said 'You have no need of that explanation since Mikra is determinant, and we read shebu'ayim [two weeks].

The opinion of the Shammaites is advanced in the following [Mishnah]: For we learned:[5] Beth Shammai said: If the blood of sacrifices that is to be sprinkled on the outer altar was applied only once,[6] the offering is valid, as it is said, the blood of thy sacrifice shall be poured out[7] [denoting one application]. In the case of a sin offering, however, they hold that two applications are required; but the Hillelites hold that in the case of a sin offering also a single sprinkling effects atonement. And R. Huna said: What is the Shammaites' reason for their opinion? — It is that the plural 'karnoth' [horns of the altar] occurs three times in this context[8] denoting six, and so implying that four sprinklings are prescribed in the first instance, but that two are indispensable. But the Hillelites argue that since 'karnoth'[9] is twice written defectively, and can be read 'karnath'[10] [singular], only four sprinklings are implied, three being prescribed in the first instance, and that only one is indispensable. But why not argue that all the four are merely prescribed without a single one being indispensable? — We do not find an act of expiation effected without an accompanying rite.

R. Simeon's opinion is expressed in the following [Baraitha]: It has been taught:[11] A Sukkah[12] needs at least two walls of the prescribed dimensions and a third of the width of at least a hand-breadth. R. Simeon says; Three complete walls and the fourth the width of a hand-breadth. What is really their point of dispute? — The Rabbis[13] hold that Masorah[14] is determinant in Biblical exegesis, while R. Simeon holds that Mikra is determinant. The Rabbis, taking the former view, argue that as the word 'bassukoth' which occurs three times[15] is written once plene [in the plural] and twice defectively[16] making in all four references. So, subtracting one as required for the command itself, there are three left. Next comes the Sinaitic Halachah[17] and diminishes the third and fixes it at a hand-breadth. But R. Simeon is of the opinion that Mikra is determinant and thus all the three bassukkoth are to be read in the plural, making a total of six. One of these is required for the command itself, leaving four, and the fourth is diminished in virtue of the Sinaitic Halachah, to a handbreadth.

As to R. Akiba's opinion — it has been taught:[18] R. Akiba said: Whence is it deduced that a fourth of a log[19] of blood which issues front two corpses carries uncleanness according to the law relating to the pollution of tents.[20] It is said: He shall not go in unto any dead body.[21] [The plural nafshoth translated 'body' indicates that] even from two bodies a single [vital] quantity suffices to carry uncleanness; but the Rabbis argue that it is written nafshath [singular], [denoting that a vital quantity can defile only if it issues from one corpse].

R. Aha b. Jacob questioned this statement of R. Isaac b. Joseph — Is there no one [apart from those above mentioned] who does not accept the Mikra as determinant? Has it not been taught: Thou shalt not seethe a kid in the milk of [bahaleb][22] its mother[23] in which verse you might read beheleb[24] [in the fat of]?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 4b

Say: this is unacceptable, as Mikra is determinant?[1] — Hence all agree that Mikra is determinant, but Rabbi and the Rabbis[2] differ in the following: Rabbi holds that the plural yarshi'un[3] refers to two judges [elohim] other than those prescribed in the previous verse;[4] while the Rabbis maintain that it refers to elohim here [its own subject] and to that in the previous clause.[5]

As to R. Judah b. Ro'ez, the Rabbis do not oppose him.[6]

As for the Hillelites, they derive their ruling[7] from the following: For it has been taught: wekipper[8] has to be repeated three times [in connection with the sin offering][9] to indicate that even one application is adequate, contrary to an analogy which might otherwise be advanced in favour of the need of four applications. But could we not have deduced this by [the following] analogy? The use of blood is mentioned [for application] above the line;[10] and the use of blood is mentioned [for application] below the line.[11] Just as in the case of the blood to be applied below the line, one application effects atonement,[12] so should it be with the blood to be applied above the line.

But you may argue this way: Sprinkling is prescribed for sacrifices offered on the outer altar[13] and also for those offered on the inner altar.[14] As in the case of those offered on the inner altar, expiation is not effected if one application has been omitted, so should it be with sacrifices offered on the outer altar!

Let us, however, see to which it is to be compared. Comparisons may be made between sacrifices offered on [the same] the outer altar, but not between sacrifices offered on the outer and inner altars.[15]

But may you not, on the other hand, argue in this way? We can compare sin offerings, the blood of which is applied on the four horns of the altar,[16] to other sin offerings, the blood of which is applied on the four horns,[17] but no proof can be deduced from such a sacrifice as is neither a sin offering nor has the blood sprinkled on the four horns of the altar![18] Hence on account of this latter analogy, Wekipper has to be repeated three times, to indicate that atonement is effected by means of three sprinklings, or even by means of two, or indeed even by means of one alone.

Now as to R. Simeon and the Rabbis, their real point of difference is the following: R. Simeon holds that a cover for a Sukkah needs no textual basis,[19] while the Rabbis maintain that a special textual basis is necessary for a cover.[20]

R. Akiba and the Rabbis again disagree on the following point: According to the former, nafshoth denotes two bodies,[21] while the Rabbis say that nafshoth is a general term for bodies.[22]

But do all, indeed, regard the Mikra as determinant? Has it not been taught: 'letotafoth [frontlets] occurs thrice in the Torah, twice defective and once plene,[23] four in all, to indicate [that four sections are to be inserted in the phylacteries]. Such is the opinion of R. Ishmael. But R. Akiba maintains that there is no need of that interpretation, for the word totafoth itself implies four, [it being composed of] tot which means two in Katpi[24] and foth which means two in Afriki?[25] — Hence, in reality, it is disputable whether Mikra is always determinant in Biblical exegesis, but this is true only of cases where Mikra and Masorah differ in the spelling of a word.[26] But where-as for example, in the case of the milk — the reading behaleb involves no change in the spelling,[27] Mikra is determinant. But does not the text, Three times in the year all thy males shall appear [shall be seen] before the Lord[28] , occasion a dispute whether we shall follow the Mikra [yera'eh][29] or read yir'eh[30] according to Masorah?[31] For it has been taught: R. Johanan b. Dahabai said on behalf of R. Judah b. Tema: One who is blind in one eye is exempted from visiting the Temple, for we read YR'H[32] which according to Mikra means he shall be seen and according to Masorah, he shall see. That is to say, as He comes to see the worshipper, so should man come to be seen by Him; as He [the Lord] comes to see [so to speak] with both eyes.[33] so should he, who comes to be seen by Him, come with both eyes![34] Hence, says R. Aha, the son of R. Ika: The scriptural text says. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk. It is seething, as a method of cooking, that the law forbids.[35]

Our Rabbis taught: Monetary cases are decided by three;

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 5a

but one who is a recognised Mumheh[1] may judge alone.

R. Nahman said: One like myself may adjudicate monetary cases alone. And so said R. Hiyya.

The following problem was [consequently] propounded: Does the statement 'one like myself' mean that as I have learned traditions and am able to reason them out, and have also obtained authorisation[2] [so must he who wishes to render a legal decision alone]; but that if he has not obtained authorisation, his judgment is invalid; or is his judgment valid without such authorisation? Come and hear! Mar Zutra, the son of R. Nahman, judged a case alone and gave an erroneous decision. On appearing before R. Joseph, he was told: If both parties accepted you as their judge, you are not liable to make restitution. Otherwise, go and indemnify the injured party. Hence it can be inferred that the judgment of one, though not authorised, is valid.

Said Rab: Whosoever wishes to decide monetary cases by himself and be free from liability in case of an erroneous decision, should obtain sanction from the Resh Galutha,[3] And so said Samuel.

It is clear that an authorisation held from the Resh Galutha 'here' [in Babylonia] holds good 'here' — And one from the Palestinian authority 'there' [in Palestine] is valid 'there' — Likewise, the authorisation received 'here' is valid 'there', because the authority in Babylon is designated 'sceptre' — but that of Palestine, 'lawgiver' [denoting a lower rank] — as it has been taught: The sceptre shall not depart from Judah,[4] this refers to the Exilarchs of Babylon who rule over Israel with sceptres;[5] and a lawgiver . . . , this refers to the descendants of Hillel [in Palestine] who teach the Torah in public. Is, however, a permission given 'there' valid 'here'? Come and hear! Rabbah b. Hana gave an erroneous judgment [in Babylonia]. He then came before R. Hiyya, who said to him: If both parties accepted you as their judge, you are not liable to make restitution; otherwise you must indemnify them. Now — Rabbah b. Hana did hold permission [but from the Palestinian authority]. Hence we infer that the Palestinian authorisation does not hold good for Babylon.[6]

But is it really not valid in Babylon? Did not Rabbah, son of R. Huna, when quarrelling with the members of the household of the Resh Galutha, maintain:, I do not hold my authorisation from you. I hold it from my father who had it from Rab, and he from R. Hiyya, who received it from Rabbi [in Palestine]'? — He was only trying to put them in their place with mere words.

Well, then, if such authorisation is invalid in Babylon, what good was it to Rabbah, son of R. Huna? — It held good for cities that were situated on the Babylonian border [which were under the jurisdiction of Palestine].[7]

Now, what is the content of an authorisation? — When Rabbah b. Hana was about to go to Babylon, R. Hiyya said to Rabbi: 'My brother's son is going[8] to Babylon. May he, decide in matters of ritual law?' Rabbi answered: 'He may. May he decide monetary cases?' — He may.' 'May he declare firstborn animals permissible [for slaughter]?'[9] — 'He may.' When Rab went there, R. Hiyya said to Rabbi: 'My sister's son is going to Babylon. May he decide on matters of ritual law?' — He may. 'May he decide [monetary] cases?' — 'He may.' 'May' he declare firstborn animals permissible for slaughter?' — 'He may not.' Why did R. Hiyya call the former 'brother's son' and the latter 'sister's son'? You cannot say that it was actually so, since a Master said that Aibu [Rab's father] and Hana [Rabbah's father], Shila and Martha and R. Hiyya were the sons of Abba b. Aha Karsela of Kafri?[10] — Rab was also R. Hiyya's sister's son [on his mother's side], while Rabbah was only his brother's son. Or, if you prefer, I might say he chose to call him sister's son' on account of his eminent wisdom, as it is written: Say unto wisdom, thou art my sister.[1]

What was the reason that Rab was not authorised to permit the slaughter of firstborn animals? Was it that he was not learned[2] enough? But have we not just said that he was very learned? Was it because he was not an expert in judging defects? But did not Rab himself say: I spent eighteen months with a shepherd in order to learn which was a permanent and which a passing blemish ? — Rabbi withheld that authorisation from Rab, as a special mark of respect to Rabbah b. Hana.[3] Or, if you prefer, I might say that for the very reason that Rab was a special expert in judging blemishes, he might in consequence declare permissible, with a view to slaughter, [permanent] defects which to others might not be known as such. These latter might thus be led to maintain that Rab had passed cases of such a kind and so to declare permissible transitory blemishes.

We were told above that Rabbi authorised him, Rabbah, and Rab respectively, to] decide in matters of ritual law. Since he was learned in the law, what need had he to obtain permission? — Because of the following incident, for it has been taught: Once Rabbi went to a certain place and saw its inhabitants kneading the dough without the necessary precaution against levitical uncleanness.[4] Upon inquiry, they told him that a certain scholar on a visit taught them: Water of bize'im [ponds] does not render food liable to become unclean. In reality, he referred to bezim [eggs], but they thought he said bize'im [ponds].[5] They further erred in the application of the following Mishnah:[6] The waters of Keramyon and Pigah,[7] because they are ponds, are unfit for purification purposes.[8] They thought that since this water was unfit for purification, it likewise could not render food liable to become unclean. But this conclusion is unwarranted, for whereas there, that is in connection with the purification offering, running water is required, waters, from any source, can render food liable to uncleanness. There and then[9] it was decreed that a disciple must not give decisions unless he was granted permission by his teacher.

Tanhum son of R. Ammi happened to be at Hatar, and in expounding the law to its inhabitants, taught them that they might soak the grain before grinding for Passover.[10] But they said to him: Does not R. Mani of Tyre live here, and has it not been taught that a disciple should not give an halachic decision in the place where his teacher resides, unless there is a distance of three parasangs — the space occupied by the camp of Israel — between them? He answered: The point did not occur to me.

R. Hiyya saw a man standing in a cemetery and asked him: 'Are you not the son of so and so who was a Priest?'[11] 'Yes,' he answered, 'but my father being wilful, set his eyes upon a divorced woman, and by marrying her, profaned his priesthood.'[12]

It is obvious that a partial authorisation is valid,[13] as has already been said. But how is it with a conditional authorisation?[14] Come and hear! R. Johanan said to R. Shaman:[15] You have our authorisation until you return to us.

The text [above states]: 'Samuel said, If two [commoners] try a case [instead of three] their decision holds good, but they are called a presumptuous Beth din.'

R. Nahman sat and reported this teaching, but Rabbah objected to it on the ground of the following [Mishnah]:[16] Even if two acquit or condemn, but the third is undecided[17] the number of the judges must be increased. Now if it were so, as Samuel maintains, why add; why not let the decision of these two be as valid as that of two who have tried a case? — There [in the Mishnah] the case is different, since from the outset they sat with the intention of constituting a court of three; whereas here they did not sit with that intention.

He raised a further objection:[18] 'R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Legal judgment is by three; arbitration is valid if made by two. And the force of arbitration is greater than that of legal judgment, for if two judges decide a case, the litigants can repudiate their decision, whilst if two judges arbitrate, the parties cannot repudiate their decision.'[19]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 6a

And should you maintain that the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel,[1] it may be asked: Did not R. Abbahu say that all agree that a judgment given by two in monetary cases is not valid? — But why should you seek to show a disagreement between two persons?[2]

The text [above states]: ‘R. Abbahu says all agree that a judgment given by two in monetary cases is not valid.’ R. Abba objected and asked R. Abbahu [from the following]: If one has judged a case by himself and pronounced the guilty ‘guiltless’ and the guiltless ‘guilty’, or the clean ‘unclean’ and the unclean ‘clean’, his act cannot be undone, but he has to pay indemnity from his own pocket?[3] — Here we are dealing with a case where the parties accepted the judge. If so, why make him pay indemnity? — Because they had said to him: We agree to abide by your award on condition that you give a decision in accordance with the Torah.

R. Safra asked R. Abba: What did the judge overlook in giving this erroneous decision? Was it a law cited in the Mishnah? But did not R. Shesheth say in the name of R. Ashi: ‘If one overlooks a law cited in the Mishnah, he may revoke his decision’? — Hence it must be he erred in deciding against common practice. How can we conceive that? R. Papa said: If, for example, two Tannaim or Amoraim opposed each other's views in a certain matter and it was not clear with whom the true decision lay, but the general trend of practice followed the opinion of one of them, and yet he decided according to the opinion of the other, that is termed ‘an error of judgment against common practice’.

Is it true to say that the point of difference [between Samuel and R. Abbahu] had been anticipated by Tannaim in the following controversy? Arbitration is by three, so says R. Meir. The Sages say that one is sufficient. Now the Schoolmen presumed that all agree that the force of arbitration is equal to that of legal decision; their point of difference would accordingly resolve itself into one holding that three are required for legal decision and the other holding that two are enough.[4] — No, all [both R. Meir and the Sages] agree that legal decision is by three, and the point in which they differ is this: One [R. Meir] holds that the force of arbitration should be regarded as equal to that of legal decision, while the other disputes it.

May it be assumed then that there are three views held by the Tannaim with regard to arbitration, viz., one [R. Meir] holds that three are needed; another [R. Simeon b. Gamaliel] holds that two are sufficient[5] , while the Sages hold that one is enough? — R. Aha the son of R. Ika, or according to others R. Yemar b. Salomi, said: The Tanna who says two are necessary is really of the opinion that a single one is sufficient. And the reason he requires two is that they might act as witnesses in the case, if required.

R. Ashi said: We may infer from this that no Kinyan[6] is needed for arbitration, for if it be thought necessary, why does the Tanna in question require three? Surely two should suffice, the two parties being bound by Kinyan![7] The adopted law however, is that arbitration requires Kinyan [even when made by three].[8]

Our Rabbis taught: Just as for legal judgment three are required, so are three required for settlement by arbitration. After a case has been decided by legal judgment, thou must not attempt a settlement.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 6b

(Mnemonic: Sarmash Bankash.)[1]

R. Eliezer the son of R. Jose the Galilean says: It is forbidden to arbitrate in a settlement, and he who arbitrates thus offends, and whoever praises such an arbitrator [bozea'] contemneth the Lord, for it is written, He that blesseth an arbiter [bozea'], contemneth the Lord.[2] But let the law cut through the mountain,[3] for it is written, For the judgment is God's.[4] And so Moses's motto was: Let the law cut through the mountain. Aaron, however, loved peace and pursued peace and made peace between man and man, as it is written, The law of truth was in his mouth, unrighteousness was not found in his lips, he walked with Me in peace and uprightness and did turn many away from iniquity.[5]

R. Eliezer says: If one stole a se'ah [a measure] of wheat, ground and baked it and set apart the Hallah,[6] what benediction can he pronounce? This man would not be blessing, but contemning, and of him it is written, The robber [bozea'] who blesseth, contemneth the Lord.[7]

R. Meir says: This text refers to none but Judah, for it is written, And Judah said to his brethren, What profit [beza'] is it if we slay our brother?[8] And whosoever praises Judah, blasphemes, as it is written, He who praiseth the man who is greedy of gain [bozea'] contemneth the Lord.[9] R. Judah b. Korha says: Settlement by arbitration is a meritorious act, for it is written, Execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates.[10] Surely where there is strict justice there is no peace, and where there is peace, there is no strict justice! But what is that kind of justice with which peace abides? — We must say: Arbitration.[11] So it was in the case of David, as we read, And David executed justice and righteousness [charity] towards all his people.[12] Surely where there is strict justice there is no charity, and where there is charity, there is no justice! But what is the kind of justice with which abides charity? — We must say: Arbitration.

But the following interpretation of this verse will accord with the First Tanna [who holds arbitration to be prohibited]: In rendering legal judgment, David used to acquit the guiltless and condemn the guilty; but when he saw that the condemned man was poor, he helped him out of his own purse [to pay the required sum], thus executing judgment and charity, justice to the one by awarding him his dues, and charity to the other by assisting him out of his own pocket. And therefore Scripture says, David practised justice and charity towards all his people.[13]

Rabbi, however, objected to this interpretation, for in that case [he said], the text ought to have read 'towards the poor' instead towards all his people? Indeed, [he maintained,] even if he had not given assistance out of his own pocket, he would nevertheless have executed justice and charity; justice to the one by awarding him his dues, and charity to the other by freeing him from an ill-gotten thing in his possession.

R. Simeon b. Manasya says: When two come before you for judgment, before you have heard their case, or even afterwards, if you have not made up your mind whither[14] judgment is inclining,[15] you may suggest to them that they should go and settle the dispute amongst themselves. But if you have already heard their case and have made up your mind in whose favour the verdict inclines, you are not at liberty to suggest a settlement, for it is written: The beginning of strife is as one that letteth out water. Therefore, leave off contention before the quarrel break out.[16] Before the case has been laid bare, you may leave off [give up] the contention;[17] after the case has been laid bare, you cannot leave it off.

The view of Resh Lakish[18] is as follows: When two men bring a case before you, one weak [i.e. of small influence], the other strong [of great influence], before you have heard their case, or even after, so long as you are in doubt in whose favour judgment is inclining, you may tell them: 'I am not bound to decide in your case', lest the man of great influence should be found guilty, and use his influence to harass the judge. But, if you have heard their case and know in whose favour the judgment inclines, you cannot withdraw and say, I am not bound to decide in your case', because it is written: Ye shall not be afraid of the face of any man.[19]

R. Joshua b. Korha says: Whence do we know that a disciple, who is present when his master judges a case and sees a point which would tell in favour of a poor man or against a rich man, should not keep silence?. From the words of the text: Ye shall not be afraid [lo taguru] of the face of any man.[20] R. Hanin explains this word to mean, 'Ye shall not hold back your words because of anyone.[21] Further, witnesses should know against whom they are giving evidence, before whom they are giving evidence and who will call them to account [in the event of false evidence]. For it is written: Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord.[22] Judges should also know whom it is they are judging, before whom they are judging, and who will call them to account [if they pervert justice], as it is written: God standeth in the Congregation of God [in the midst of judges doth He judge].[23] And thus it is said, concerning Jehoshaphat, He said to the judges, Consider what ye do, for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord.[24] And lest the judge should say: Why have all this trouble and responsibility? It is further said: He is with you in giving judgment.[24] The judge is to be concerned only with what he actually sees with his own eyes.

When is judgment to be regarded as rendered [i.e. at which point is arbitration forbidden]? — Rab Judah, in the name of Rab. says: On the pronouncement of the words: So and so, thou art guilty; or, so and so, thou art not guilty.

Rab says: the halachah is in agreement with R. Joshua b. Korha [who holds arbitration to be a meritorious act]. How can this be? Was not R. Huna a disciple of Rab, and yet, when a case was brought to him, he would ask the litigants whether they desired to resort to law or to a settlement?[25] As to the expression, 'meritorious act which R. Joshua b. Korha uses, he means that it is a meritorious act to ask the litigants whether they wish to resort to law or to a settlement. If so, this agrees with the opinion of the first Tanna?[1] There is this difference, however: R. Joshua b. Korha regards this as a moral obligation; the first Tanna merely as a permissible act. But this would make the first Tanna express the same opinion as R. Simeon b. Manasya? — The difference centres round the latter part of R. Simeon's statement: 'If you have already heard the case and know in whose favour the verdict inclines, you are not at liberty to suggest a settlement', [a distinction which the first Tanna does not admit].

A difference of opinion is expressed by R. Tanhum b. Hanilai, who says that the verse quoted[2] refers only to the story of the golden calf, as it is written: And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it.[3] What did he actually see? — R. Benjamin b. Japhet says, reporting R. Eleazar: He saw Hur lying slain before him and said [to himself]: If I do not obey them, they will now do unto me as they did unto Hur, and so will be fulfilled [the fear of] the prophet, Shall the Priest and the Prophet be slain in the Sanctuary of God?[4] and they will never find forgiveness. Better let them worship the golden calf, for which offence they may yet find forgiveness through repentance.[5]

And how do those other Tannaim, who allow a settlement even when a case has been heard, interpret the verse: The beginning of strife is as one that letteth out water?[6] They interpret it as does R. Hamnuna. For R. Hamnuna says: The first matter for which a man is called to give account in the

Hereafter is regarding the study of the Torah, as it is said: The beginning of judgment[7] concerns the letting out of water.[8]

R. Huna says [with reference to this verse]: Strife is compared to an opening made by a rush of water that widens as the water presses through it.

Abaye the Elder[9] says: Strife is like the planks of a wooden bridge; the longer they lie, the firmer they grow.

('Mnemonic: Hear, And Two, Seven, Songs, Another.)[10]

There was a man who used to say: Happy is he who hears abuse of himself and ignores it; for a hundred evils pass him by. Samuel said to Rab Judah: This is alluded to in the verse: He who letteth out water [of strife] causeth the beginning of madon[11] [the numerical value of which is a hundred].[12] that is, the beginning of a hundred strifes.

Again, there was a man who used to say: Do not be surprised if a thief goes unhanged for two or three thefts; he will be caught in the end. Samuel said to Rab Judah: This is alluded to in the verse: Thus saith the Lord: for three transgressions of Judah, but for four I will not reverse it[13] [i.e. My judgment].

Another used to say: Seven pits lie open for the good man [but he escapes]; for the evil-doer there is only one, into which he falls. This, said Samuel to Rab Judah, is alluded to in the verse: The righteous man falleth seven times and riseth up again.[14]

Yet another used to say: Let him who comes from a court that has taken from him his cloak sing his song and go his way.[15] Said Samuel to Rab Judah: This is alluded to in the verse, And all this people also [i.e. including the losers] shall come to their place in peace.[16]

There was yet another who used to say: When a woman slumbers the [working] basket drops off her head.[17] Said Samuel to Rab Judah: This is alluded to in the verse, By slothfulness the rafters sink in.[18]

Another man used to say: The man on whom I relied shook his fist at me.[19] Samuel said to Rab Judah: This is alluded to in the verse: Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted and who did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.[20]

Another used to say: When love[21] was strong, we could have made our bed on a sword-blade; now that our love has grown weak, a bed of sixty [cubits] is not large enough for us. Said R. Huna: This is alluded to in the verses: Of the former age [when Israel was loyal to God] it is said: And I will meet with thee and speak with three from above the ark-cover;[22] and further it is taught: The Ark measured nine hand-breadths high and the cover one hand-breadth, i.e. ten in all. Again it is written: As for the House which King Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was three score cubits, the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.[23] But of the latter age [when they had forsaken God] it is written: Thus saith the Lord, The Heaven is my throne and the earth my footstool. Where is the house that ye may build unto me?[24]

What evidence is there that the verb taguru [translated 'be afraid'] can also be rendered 'gather in'?[25] R. Nahman answered by quoting the verse: Thou shalt neither drink of the wine nor gather [te'egor] the grapes.[26] R. Aha b. Jacob says that it can be proved from the following verse: Provideth her bread in the summer and gathereth [agerah] her food in the harvest.[27] R. Aha the son of R. Ika says it can be derived from the following verse: A wise son gathereth [oger] in summer.[28]

(Mnemonic: Truth, Money, Shall See.)

R. Nahman said, reporting R. Jonathan: A judge who delivers a judgment in perfect truth[29] causes the Shechinah to dwell in Israel, for it is written: God standeth in the Congregation of God; in the midst of the judges He judgeth.[30] And he who does not deliver judgments in perfect truth causes the Shechinah to depart from the midst of Israel, for it is written: Because of the oppression of the poor, because of the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord.

Again. R. Samuel b. Nahmani, reporting R. Jonathan. said: A judge who unjustly takes the possessions[31] of one and gives then to another, the Holy One, blessed be He, takes from him his life, for it is written: Rob not the poor because he is poor; neither oppress the afflicted in the gate', for the Lord will plead their cause, and will despoil of life those that despoil them.[32]

R. Samuel b. Nahmani further said, reporting R. Jonathan: A judge should always think of[33] himself as if he had a sword hanging over his head[34] and Gehenna[35] gaping under him,

R. Josiah, or, according to others, R. Nahman b. Isaac, gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the verse, O house of David, thus saith the Lord: Execute justice in the morning and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor![2] Is it only in the morning that one acts as judge and not during the whole day? — No, it means: If the judgment you are about to give is clear to you as the morning [light], give it; but if not, do not give it.

R. Hiyya b. Abba says: R. Johanan derived this from the following verse: Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister.[3] If the matter is as clear to you as is the prohibition of your sister [in marriage], give your decision, but not otherwise.

R. Joshua b. Levi says: If ten judge a case, the chain hangs on the neck of all;[4] Is not this self-evident? — This need not be stated except in reference to the case of a disciple who sits in the presence of his master, and allows to pass unchallenged an erroneous decision of his master.

When a case was submitted to R. Huna he used to summon and gather ten schoolmen, in order, as he put it, that each of them might carry a chip from the beam.[5]

R. Ashi, when a terefah[6] was submitted to him for inspection, sent and gathered all the slaughterers of Matha Mehasia, in order, as he put it, that each of them should carry a chip from the beam.

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he related that R. Nahman b. Kohen had given the following exposition of the verse, The King by justice establisheth the land, but he that loveth gifts overthroweth it.[7] If the judge is like a king, in that he needs no one's help, he establishes the land, but if he is like a priest who goes about threshing floors to collect his dues, he overthrows it.

The members of the Nasi's[8] household once appointed an incompetent teacher,[9] and the Rabbis said to Judah b. Nahmani, the interpreter[10] of Resh Lakish: Go and stand at his side as interpreter. Standing by him, he [Judah] bent down to hear what he wished to teach, but the teacher made no attempt to say anything. Thereupon R. Judah took as his opening text: Woe unto him who saith unto wood: Awake! — to the dumb stone: Arise! Can this teach? Behold, it is overlaid with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it;[11] but the Holy One, blessed be He, [he proceeded], will call to account those who set them up, as it is written: But the Lord is in His holy Temple; let all the earth, keep silence before Him.[12]

Resh Lakish said: He who appoints an incompetent judge over the Community is as though he had planted an Asherah[13] in Israel, for it is written: Judges and officers shalt thou appoint unto thee, and soon after it is said: Thou shalt not plant thee Asherah of any kind of tree.[14] R. Ashi said: And if such an appointment be made in a place where scholars are to be found, it is as though the Asherah were planted beside the Altar, for the verse concludes with the words: beside the altar of the Lord thy

God.[15]

Again, it is written: Ye shall not make with Me gods of silver or gods of gold.[16] Is it only gods of silver and gold that may not be made, while those of wood are permitted? — The verse, says R. Ashi, refers to judges appointed through the power of silver or gold.

Rab, whenever he was to sit in court used to say: Of his own free will he [the judge] goes to meet death. He makes no provision for the needs of his household, and empty does he return home. Would only that he returned [as clean of hand] as he came![17] When [at the entrance] he saw a crowd escorting him, he said: Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish for ever like his own dung.[18]

Mar Zutra the Pious, as he was carried shoulder-high[19] on the Sabbaths preceding the Pilgrimage Festivals [when he preached on the Festival Laws], used to quote the verse: For riches are not for ever, and doth the crown endure unto all generations?[20]

Bar Kappara said in a lecture: Whence can we derive the dictum of our Rabbis: Be deliberate in judgment? From the words: Neither shalt thou go up by steps upon My altar.[21] For this is followed by: And these are the judgments . . .[22]

R.Eleazar said: Whence is it to be derived that a judge should not trample over the heads of the people?[23] It is written: Neither shalt thou go up by steps [i.e. force thy way] upon My altar; and this is followed by: And these are the judgments.

The same verse continues: which thou shalt set before them. It should have stated: which thou shalt teach them. R. Jeremiah, or according to some, R. Hiyya b. Aha, said: This refers to the insignia of the judges [which they have to set before the public].[24]

R. Huna, before entering the Court, used to say: Bring forth the implements of my office: the rod;[25] the lash;[26] the horn;[27] and the sandal.[28]

Again. it is written: And I charged your judges at that time.[29] R. Johanan said: This is a warning to them to use the rod and lash with caution.

Again: Hear [the causes] between your brethren and judge righteously.[30] This, said R. Hanina, is a warning to the court not to listen to the claims of a litigant in the absence of his opponent; and to the litigant not to explain his case to the judge before his adversary appears. Shamoa'[31] [hear], in the verse, can also be read, shammea'.[32]

R. Kahana, however, says: We can derive this rule from the verse: Thou shalt not take up [tissa] a false report[33] [referring to the judge], which may be read, tashshi.[34]

As for the text quoted above, You shall judge righteously.[35] Resh Lakish says that it means: Consider rightly all the aspects of the case before giving the decision.

As for the words, Between a man and his brother . . . R. Judah says that this refers to disputes between brothers about trifles such as, for instance, who should occupy the lower and who the upper part of a house. And the stranger that is with him . . . This, says R. Judah, refers even to so insignificant a dispute as one concerning a stove and an oven.[36]

You shall not respect persons [lo takkiru] in judgment.[37] R. Judah says this means: You shall not favour [lit. recognise] any one [even if he is your friend]; and R. Eleazar takes it to mean; You shall not estrange anyone [even if he is your enemy].[38]

A former host of Rab came before him with a law-suit, and said: 'Were you not once my guest?' 'Yes,' he answered, [and what is your wish?]'[39] 'I have a case to be tried,' he replied. 'Then,' said Rab,

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 8a

'I am disqualified from being your judge,' and turning to R. Kahana, said: 'Go you and judge the case'. R. Kahana noticed that the man presumed too much on his acquaintance with Rab, so he remarked: 'If you will submit to my judgment, well and good; If not, I shall put Rab out of your mind [by showing you my authority].'[1]

Ye shall hear the small and the great alike.[2] Resh Lakish says: This verse indicates that a law-suit involving a mere perutah[3] must be regarded as of the same importance as one involving a hundred mina.[4] For what practical purpose is this laid down? If it is to urge the need of equal consideration and investigation, is it not self-evident! Rather, it is to give the case due priority, if it should be first in order.

For the judgment is God's.[5] R. Hamma, son of R. Hanina, comments: The Holy One, blessed be He, hath said: It is not enough for the wicked [judges] that they take away money from one and give it to another unjustly, but they put Me to the trouble of returning it to its owner.

And the cause that is too hard for you, bring unto me.[6] R. Hanina, [according to some, R. Josiah,] says: For this utterance Moses was punished,[7] as we can infer from this later passage: And Moses brought their cause before the Lord.[8]

R. Nahman objects to this comment, and asks: Did Moses say: 'Bring it unto me and I will let you hear it'? No, he said: 'I will hear it; if I am instructed, it is well! If not, I will get me instruction [how to deal with it]'. And the case of the daughters of Zelophehad is to be explained as was taught:[9] The section relating to the laws of inheritance was intended to have been written at the instance of Moses our Teacher. The daughters of Zelophehad, however, were found worthy to have the section recorded on their account. Similarly, the law concerning the gathering of sticks on the Sabbath[10] was to have been written at the instance of Moses our Teacher. The gatherer, however, was found culpable, and so it was recorded on his account. This is to teach us that evil is brought about through the agency of sinful men, and good through that of worthy men.

And I charged your judges at that time;[11] and again, I charged you at that time.[12] R. Eleazar, on the authority of R. Simlai, says: These passages are a warning to the Congregation to revere their judges, and to the judges to bear patiently with the Congregation. To what extent! — R. Hanan, [some say R. Shabatai,] says: As the nursing father carrieth the sucking child.[13]

One text reads: For thou [Joshua] must go with this people, etc.[14] And another text says: For thou shalt bring the Children of Israel.[15] R. Johanan said: Thou shalt be like the elders of the generation that are among them.[16] But the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Joshua: Take a stick and strike them upon their head;[17] there is only one leader to a generation not two.

A Tanna taught: A summons [Zimmun][18] requires three. What is meant by a summons? Shall I say it means a summons to say Grace after a common meal?[19] But has it not been already taught that a summons and a summons to Grace need three?[20] Again, you cannot maintain that they both mean the same thing, the latter phrase merely explaining the earlier [and both referring to a summons to Grace], since it has been taught: A summons needs three, and a summons to Grace needs three [i. e., Zimmun is here particularly specified afresh as requiring three persons] — 'Summons' here, consequently, must mean a summons to appear before Court. As Raba said: When three judges sit in judgment, and the Court messenger, on summoning to Court, conveys the summons in the name of one only, the summons is of no account until he has brought it in the names of all three. This procedure, however, is necessary only on an ordinary day; on a Court-day[21] it is not necessary.

R. Nahman, son of R. Hisda, sent to ask R. Nahman b. Jacob: Would our teacher inform us how many judges are required for the adjudication of cases of Kenas? But what did his question imply? Surely we learnt, THE REPAYMENT OF THE DOUBLE[22] . . . . . BY THREE. What he meant to ask was whether or not cases of fine may be adjudicated by one Mumheh. R. Nahman b. Jacob said to him: We have learnt, THE REPAYMENT OF DOUBLE OR OF FOUR OR FIVE-FOLD RESTITUTION, BY THREE. Now what kind of persons are these three to be? Shall I say they are commoners? But did not your father's father say, in the name of Rab, that even ten commoners are incompetent to adjudicate cases of fine? Hence it must refer to Mumhin, and even of these, three are required.

BUT THE SAGES HOLD THAT A CASE OF LIBEL[23] REQUIRES A COURT OF TWENTY-THREE, etc. But, even though it may lead to capital punishment, what does it matter? [Since there are no witnesses yet known to be available, to corroborate the husband's suspicion, is it not merely a monetary case, involving only the Kethubah]?[24]

'Ulla says that the point of dispute [in the Mishnah between R. Meir and the Sages] is whether we consider seriously the effect of the husband's allegation.[25] R. Meir does not consider seriously the effect of the allegation — while the Rabbis do.

Raba says that all agree that the effect of the allegation need not be seriously considered.[26] They differ, however, as to whether [in cases where the judges have been reduced in number][27] the honour of those who retired has to be considered or not. The actual case treated here is where the husband — [having had expectations of supporting his allegation with evidence,] appeared before a court of twenty-three[28] assembled to judge a capital case. Afterwards, [when he could not produce the required witnesses,] the Court began to disperse, and he then appealed to it that three should remain to decide his monetary claim.[29] [The Sages, in order to protect the dignity of those judges who would have left, require them to reassemble, while R. Meir does not hold this view.]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 8b

The scholars, however, raised an objection from the following: The Sages say: If there is only a monetary claim, three are sufficient; if it involves capital punishment, twenty-three are needed.[1] This may be correct according to Raba,[2] [in which case the Baraitha should be understood thus:] If [the husband did not offer support of his allegation] his claim, being then only monetary, is decided by three. If however he proposed to bring evidence [on which basis a court of twenty-three was set up], as for a capital charge, but in the end, [owing to the failure to produce witnesses,] only makes a monetary claim, nevertheless the twentythree remain. But how would 'Ulla[3] explain the Baraitha? Raba said: [In answer] I and the lion[4] of the group, namely R. Hiyya b. Abin, have elucidated it. The case in question is one in which the husband attested his wife's guilt by witnesses. Her father, however, brought witnesses refuting their evidence.[5] In that case the father's monetary claim from the husband[6] is decided by three.[7] But in a case [where witnesses have not yet been produced and consequently not refuted, and] which may yet turn out a capital charge, twenty-three are required.

Abaye says that all [even R. Meir] agree that the eventual effect of the allegation is to be taken into consideration, as well as the honour of the judges who had retired. And the reason that three are sufficient, according to R. Meir, is that the case treated here is that of a woman who, before committing adultery, was cautioned in general terms [as to the penalty of death to which she would make herself liable, but without the kind of death being defined]. And his opinion concurs with that of the following Tanna: For it has been taught:[8] All those under sentence of death according to the Torah are to be executed only by the decree of a court of twenty-three, after proper evidence and warning, and provided the warners have let them know that they are liable to a death sentence at the hand of the Court. According to R. Judah, the warners must also inform them of the kind of death they would suffer [and failing that, they are not to be executed].[9]

R. Papa[10] said: The case discussed here is that of a scholarly woman who received no warning at all; and they differ according to the difference of opinion between R. Jose b. Judah and the [other] Rabbis. For it has been taught: R. Jose b. Judah, [with whom the Rabbis who oppose R. Meir agree.] holds that a scholar[11] is held responsible for his crimes even without being formally warned, as warning is only a means of deciding whether one has committed the crime wilfully or not.[12]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 9a

R. Meir and the Rabbis treat of a case where the woman was cautioned in regard to her liability to lashes[1] only and not to capital punishment; and they differ in accordance with the difference of opinion between R. Ishmael and the [other] Rabbis. For we learnt: CASES INVOLVING LASHES BY THREE JUDGES; IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL IT IS SAID BY TWENTY-THREE.

Rabina said that [R. Meir and the Rabbis are dealing with a case] where one of the witnesses, [who testified to the woman's guilt,] was found afterwards to be a relative or otherwise disqualified. Their point of difference is the same as that in which R. Jose and Rabbi differ in applying the opinion of R. Akiba. For we learnt: R. Akiba says that the third witness[2] is mentioned in the Torah, [not for the purpose of making him less responsible], but, on the contrary, to increase his responsibility, by making his status equal to that of the other two, indicating, incidentally, that if Scripture punishes as sinners those who associate with sinners, much more will it reward those who associate with men who fulfil the commandments, as though they themselves had actually fulfilled them.[3] And just as in the case of two witnesses, if one is found to be a near kinsman or otherwise disqualified[4] person, the whole testimony is rendered void, so in the case of three witnesses, the disqualification of one invalidates the whole evidence. And whence do we infer that this law would apply even if the number of witnesses reached a hundred? — We infer it from the repetition of the word witnesses.[5] R. Jose says: These aforementioned limitations apply only to witnesses in capital charges, whereas, in monetary cases, the evidence offered can be established by those remaining. Rabbi says it is one and the same rule; whether in monetary or capital cases the evidence becomes equally void, that is, provided the disqualified witnesses took part in the prerequisite warning. But if they were not among those who gave the warning, why should the evidence be affected by disqualified witnesses?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 9b

And what would be the situation of three acting as witnesses in a murder case, of whom two were brothers?[1] Or if you wish, you may say that the case [of the Mishnah] is one where the woman was warned by others and not by the witnesses. The point of difference, again, is the same as that between R. Jose and the Rabbis, as we learnt.[2] R. Jose says: A criminal cannot be executed unless he was cautioned by two who witnessed the crime, for it says: At the mouth of two witnesses or three shall he be put to death.[3]

Or, if you prefer, you may say that [R. Meir and the Rabbis differ in a case] where the witnesses contradicted themselves during the Court cross-examination regarding accompanying circumstances[4] but corroborated each other during cross-examination [on such matters as date, time and place]. And their point of dispute is that of the principle on which the Rabbis and Ben Zakkai differ; for we learnt:[5] Ben Zakkai once examined the witnesses minutely, enquiring as to the size of the prickles on the fig-[tree under which a certain crime had been committed].[6]

R. Joseph said: If a husband has produced witnesses testifying to his wife's guilt, and her father has brought witnesses refuting their evidence,[7] the former are liable to death[8] but are exempted from paying [the value of the Kethubah].[9] If, however, the husband has again brought witnesses to refute the father's witnesses, the latter are then liable to death[10] and also to pay the fines[11] — the money fine for intended injury to one person, and the death penalty for intended death to another.

R. Joseph again said:If a man says that so and so committed sodomy with him against his will, he himself with another witness can combine to testify to the crime. If, however, he admits that he acceded to the act, he is a wicked man [and therefore disqualified from acting as witness] since the Torah says: Put not thy hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.[12] Raba said: Every man is considered a relative to himself, and no one can incriminate himself.[13] Again Raba said:

---

(1) In this case the disqualified brother must not have participated in the warning, or the whole evidence is void. If he did not participate in the warning, the evidence of the remaining two holds good. Hence, in such a case the Rabbis, holding with Rabbi that the evidence is not invalidated by the presence of one disqualified witness, consider this a capital charge requiring twenty-three.

(2) Mak. 6b.

(3) Deut. XVII, 6.

(4) V. p. 225.

(5) Infra 40a.

(6) Hence, according to R. Meir, who agrees with Ben Zakkai, the testimony is invalidated as a result of contradictions in the evidence regarding accompanying circumstances.

(7) I.e., they proved them Zomemim, v. Glos.

(8) For intending to bring about the death of the woman according to the law of retaliation. Deut. XIX, 16 ff. cf. Mak. I.

(9) Of which she would also have been deprived in the case of her condemnation, for he who has committed two offences simultaneously is held liable in law for the graver only. V. Keth. 36b.

(10) For intending to bring about the death of the husband's witnesses.

(11) A hundred pieces of silver, which the husband would have been fined in case his allegation was disproved.

(12) Ex. XXIII, 1.

(13) Consequently his evidence is valid only with regard to the criminal but not to himself, on the principle that we consider only half of his testimony as evidence.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 10a

[If one gives evidence, saying,] So and so has committed adultery with my wife, he and another witness can convict him [the adulterer] but not her [the wife]. What does he intend to teach us thereby? Does he mean to say that only half of a man's evidence is to be considered? Was this not understood from his previous teaching? — No, for you might have thought that whereas the principle was admitted that one is considered a relative of himself, we did not admit the principle that a man is considered a relative of his wife. Hence this rule.

Again Raba said: [If witnesses testify] that so and so committed adultery with a betrothed woman[1] and their evidence is refuted, they are liable to capital punishment, but not to the indemnification of the Kethubah.[2] If, however, they say, 'with the [betrothed] daughter of so and so,'[3] they are liable to both capital punishment and the indemnification of the Kethubah. The money fine for intended injury to one person, and the death penalty for intended death to another.

Raba said further: [If witnesses testify] that so and so committed an unnatural crime with an ox, and the evidence is afterwards refuted, they are liable to capital punishment, but not to be mulcted in respect of the ox.[4] If, however, they say, 'with the ox of so-and-so,' they must pay the fine and are put to death; the fine because of the loss they intended to inflict on one person, and death because they sought to bring about the death of another person. Why is it necessary to state this latter law? Is not the underlying principle the same as in the previous case? — It had to be stressed because Raba propounded in connection with it a question as follows: If witnesses declare that 'so-and-so has committed an unnatural crime with my ox,' what would in this case be the law?[5] While adopting the principle, 'one is considered a relative to himself', do we admit the principle, 'one is considered related to his property', or do we not? After propounding the problem, he later solved it. We accept the principle as affecting his own person, but not as affecting his property.[6]

CASES OF FLOGGING BY THREE, etc. Whence do we infer this? — R. Huna said: Scripture says: They [the judges] judge them,[7] indicating [at least] two, and since no Beth din can consist of an even number, another judge is added, giving a total of three.

But now, according to our exegesis, the verb 'vehizdiku' — [and they shall justify] — should also denote two, and so likewise the verb 'vehirshi'u' [and they shall condemn][8] an additional two, [so making, together with, the above three], a total of seven in all? — These verbs are to be explained according to 'Ulla. For 'Ulla said: Where in the Torah do we find an allusion to the treatment of witnesses attested as Zomemim? Where is there found any allusion to Zomemim [witnesses]! Do we not read, Then shall ye do unto him as he had purposed to do to his brother?[9] What is required is some allusion supporting infliction of stripes upon Zomemim.[10] This we find where it is written: And they shall justify the righteous, and shall condemn the wicked.[11] Now [assuming that this refers to the judges], how, since the judges justify the righteous and condemn the wicked, does it follow that the wicked man deserves to be beaten?[12] — [The text cannot therefore refer to judges;] rather it must refer to witnesses who have incriminated a righteous man, after whom other witnesses came and justified the righteous, and rehabilitated his [the injured man's] character, and thus condemned the wicked, that is, established the wickedness of the witnesses, in which case, if the wicked man [the false witness] deserve to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten. But why, could not this be deduced from the commandment: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour?[13] — No! Because that is a prohibition involving no material action, and the transgression of a prohibition involving no material action is not punishable by flogging.

IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL IT IS SAID, BY TWENTY-THREE. Whence is this deduced? — Said Abaye: It is derived from the word rasha', which occurs alike in connection with flogging and with capital punishment. In the one case it is written: If the wicked [guilty] man [ha-rasha'] deserve to be beaten,[14] and in the other, it is written, that is guilty, [rasha] of death.[15] Just as in the case of the extreme penalty twenty-three are needed, so in the case of flogging. Raba says: Flogging is considered a substitute for death.[16] R. Aha son of Raba said to R. Ashi: If so, why then the need of medical opinion as to the amount of lashes the condemned can stand? Let him be beaten, and, should he die, well, let him die![17] — R. Ashi answered: Scripture says: Then thy brother should be dishonoured before thine eyes,[18] to indicate that when the lashes are applied, they must be applied to the back of a living person. But in this case [how explain what] has been taught: If in their [the medical] opinion he can stand no more than, say, twenty lashes, he is to be given a number of lashes divisible by three; namely, eighteen?[19]

Rather let him receive twenty-one. For even if he should die by reason of the twenty-first lash, he would still be alive when it [the twenty-first] begins to be applied? — R. Ashi replied: Scripture says, Then thy brother should be dishonoured before thine eyes.[1] that is to say, after the last lash has been administered, he must still be 'thy [living] brother.'

THE INTERCALATION[2] OF THE MONTH BY THREE. [The Tanna of the Mishnah] mentions neither the 'calculation'[3] nor the 'sanctification'[4] , but the INTERCALATION of the month. [Why then the need of three for this?] Suppose it is not sanctified [on the thirtieth day] it will then be automatically intercalated! — Abaye therefore said: Read then, THE SANCTIFICATION OF THE MONTH. It is also taught to the same effect: The sanctification of the month and the intercalation of the year is to be determined by three. So R. Meir holds. But, asked Raba, does not the Mishnah say, the INTERCALATION? — Hence, said Raba, the Mishnah means that the sanctification made on INTERCALATION, that is on the intercalary day,[5] is determined by three; but on the day after it there is to be no sanctification. And this represents the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Zadok, as it has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Zadok says: If the new moon has not been visible in time, there is no need for the Sanctification next day, as it has already been sanctified in Heaven.[6]

R. Nahman said: [The Mishnah means] that Sanctification is held on the day after INTERCALATION [that is after the intercalary day] by three; but on the day itself, there is to be no Sanctification. And whose view is this? — Polemo's, as it was taught: Polemo says, [If the new moon has appeared] at its due time,[7] there is not to be Sanctification; but if it has not appeared at its due time, Sanctification is to be proclaimed.

R, Ashi said: In reality, the Mishnah refers to the 'calculation', and as for THE INTERCALATION, it means the calculation relating to THE INTERCALATION. But having to state [explicitly] THE INTERCALATION OF THE YEAR,[8] the Tanna also employs the phrase THE INTERCALATION OF THE MONTH.

The Mishnah thus holds that only ‘calculation’ is required in fixing the length of the month, but no formal ‘sanctification’. Whose view is this? — R. Eliezer's; as it has been taught: R. Eliezer says: Whether the moon appears at its due time or not, no sanctification is needed, for it is written, Ye shall sanctify the fiftieth year[9] [from which it is to be inferred that] thou art to sanctify years[10] but not months.

R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, BY THREE etc. It has been taught: How [are we to understand] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel when he says, THE MATTER IS INITIATED BY THREE, DISCUSSED BY FIVE AND DETERMINED BY SEVEN? — If, for example, one holds a meeting [for the purpose of considering the question of intercalation] to be necessary, but two hold that it is unwarranted, the opinion of the single one, being in the minority, is overruled. If, however, two are in favour of the meeting and one is not, two more are co-opted, and the matter is then discussed. Should then two [of the five] find intercalation necessary, and three not, the opinion of the two, being in the minority, is overruled. If, however, three favour intercalation and two not, an additional two are co-opted, as not less than seven form a quorum to determine an intercalation [where there is a division of opinion].

To what do these numbers, three, five and seven, correspond? — R. Isaac b. Nahmani, and an associate of his, namely, R. Simeon b. Pazi; or according to others [who invert the order], it was R. Simeon b. Pazi and an associate of his, namely. R. Isaac b. Nahmani, differ in the matter. One said [that the numbers, three, five and seven] correspond to [the respective number of Hebrew words] in [the three verses of] the Priestly Benediction;[11] the other said, they correspond to the three keepers of the threshold,[12] the five of them that saw the king's face,[13] and the seven . . . who saw the king's face.[14]

R. Joseph learned: [The numbers] three, five and seven, correspond [as follows]: Three, to the keepers of the threshold, five, to those of them that saw the king's face, and seven, to those who saw the king's face. Whereupon Abaye asked him: ‘Why has the Master not explained it to us hitherto?’ He answered: ‘l knew not that you needed it. Did you ever ask me to interpret anything and I refused to do it?’

But if no announcement was made on the 30th day, that day was reckoned to the current month, which was then called full, and the ensuing day was considered the first of the next month.

whose members have been appointed for that purpose.[1]

It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel[2] said: 'Send me up seven [scholars] early in the morning to the upper chamber[3] [for this purpose].' When he came in the morning and found eight, he asked: 'Who is he who has come up without permission? Let him go down.' Thereupon, Samuel the Little arose and said: 'It was I who came up without permission; my object was not to join in the intercalation, but because I felt the necessity of learning the practical application of the law.' Rabban Gamaliel then answered: 'Sit down, my son, sit down; you are worthy of intercalating all years [in need of such], but it is a decision of the Rabbis that it should be done only by those who have been specially appointed for the purpose.' — But in reality it was not Samuel the Little [who was the uninvited member] but another;[4] he only wished to save the intruder from humiliation.

Similarly it once happened that while Rabbi was delivering a lecture, he noticed a smell of garlic. Thereupon he said: 'Let him who has eaten garlic go out.' R. Hiyya arose and left; then all the other disciples rose in turn and went out. In the morning R. Simeon, Rabbi's son, met and asked him: 'Was it you who caused annoyance to my father yesterday?' 'Heaven forfend[5] that such a thing should happen in Israel,' he answered.[6]

And from whom did R. Hiyya learn such conduct? — From R. Meir, for it is taught: A story is related of a woman who appeared at the Beth Hammidrash[7] of R. Meir and said to him, 'Rabbi, one of you has taken me to wife by cohabitation.' Thereupon he rose up and gave her a bill of divorce,[8] after which every one of his disciples stood up in turn and did likewise. And from whom did R. Meir learn this? — From Samuel the Little. And Samuel the Little? — From Shecaniah son of Jehiel, for it is written, And Shecaniah son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam answered and said unto Ezra: We[9] have broken faith with our God and have married foreign women of the peoples of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.[10] And Shecaniah learnt it from [the story told of] Joshua. As it is written, The Lord said unto Joshua, Get thee up, wherefore, now, art thou fallen upon they face? Israel hath sinned . . .[4] 'Master of the Universe,' asked Joshua, 'who are the sinners?' 'Am I an informer?' replied God. 'Go and cast lots [to find out].'[11] Or, if you like, I might say that he learnt it from [the incident with] Moses, as we read, And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep My commandments and My laws?[12]

Our Rabbis taught: Since the death of the last prophets, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachai, the Holy Spirit [of prophetic inspiration] departed from Israel; yet they were still able to avail themselves of the Bath-kol.[13] Once when the Rabbis were met in the upper chamber of Gurya's[14] house at Jericho, a Bath-kol was heard from Heaven, saying: 'There is one amongst you who is worthy that the Shechinah[15] should rest on him as it did on Moses, but his generation does not merit it.' The Sages present set their eyes on Hillel the Elder. And when he died, they lamented and said: 'Alas, the pious man, the humble man, the disciple of Ezra [is no more].'

Once again they were met in the upper chamber at Jabneh, and a Bath-kol was heard to say: 'There is one amongst you who is worthy that the Shechinah should rest on him, but his generation does not merit it.' The Sages present directed their gaze on Samuel the Little. And when he died, they lamented and said: 'Alas! the pious man, alas! the humble man, the disciple of Hillel [is no more].' Samuel the Little also said shortly before he passed away: 'Simeon[16] and Ishmael[17] will meet their death by the sword, and his friends[18] will be executed; the rest of the people will be plundered, and many troubles will come upon the world.' The Rabbis wished to use the same words of lamentation for R. Judah b. Baba;[19] the troublous conditions of the time, however, did not permit it, for no funeral orations were delivered over those who were martyred by the [Roman] Government.[20]

Our Rabbis taught: A year cannot be intercalated unless the Nasi sanctions it. It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel was away obtaining permission from the Governor in Syria[21] , and, as his return was delayed, the year was intercalated subject to Rabban Gamaliel's later approval. When Rabban Gamaliel returned he gave his approval with the result that the intercalation held good.

Our Rabbis taught: A year may not be intercalated except where it is necessary either for [the improvement of] roads[22] or for [the repair of] bridges, or for the [drying of the] ovens[23] [required for the roasting] of the paschal lambs, or for the sake of pilgrims[24] from distant lands who have left their homes and could not otherwise reach [Jerusalem] in time.[25] But no intercalation may take place because of [heavy] snows or cold weather[26] or for the sake of Jewish exiles [from a distance] who have not yet set out.

Our Rabbis taught: The year may not be intercalated on the ground that the kids[27] or the lambs or the doves are too young.[28] But we consider each of these circumstances as an auxiliary reason for intercalation.[29] How so? — R. Jannai [gave the following example of the law in operation], quoting from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's [letter to the Communities]: 'We beg to inform you that the doves are still tender and the lambs still young, and the grain has not yet ripened. I have considered the matter and thought it advisable to add thirty days to the year.

An objection was raised: How long a period was intercalated in the year? Thirty days. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A month?[30] — R. Papa Said: [The matter is left to the judgment of the intercalary court:] if they wish, they may add a month; or if they wish thirty days.

the proud leaders of former days and their modest successors of later times. For it has been taught: It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel[1] was sitting on a step on the Temple-hill and the well known[2] Scribe Johanan was standing before him while three cut sheets were lying before him. 'Take one sheet', he said, 'and write an epistle to our brethren in Upper Galilee and to those in Lower Galilee, saying: "May your peace be great! We beg to inform you that the time of 'removal' has arrived for setting aside [the tithe][3] from the olive heaps." Take another sheet, and write to our brethren of the South, "May your peace be great! We beg to inform you that the time of 'removal' has arrived for setting aside the tithe from the corn sheaves."[4] And take the third and write to our brethren the Exiles in Babylon and to those in Media, and to all the other exiled [sons] of Israel, saying: "May your peace be great for ever! We beg to inform you that the doves are still tender and the lambs still too young and that the crops are not yet ripe. It seems advisable to me and to my colleagues[5] to add thirty days to this year."' [Yet] it is possible [that the modesty shown by Rabban Gamaliel in this case belongs to the period] after he had been deposed [from the office of Nasi].[6]

Our Rabbis taught: A year may be intercalated on three grounds: on account of the premature state of the corn-crops;[7] or that of the fruit-trees;[8] or on account of the lateness of the Tekufah[9] Any two of these reasons can justify intercalation, but not one alone. All, however, are glad when the state of the spring-crop is one of them.[10] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: On account of [the lateness of] the Tekufah. The Schoolmen inquired: Did he mean to say that 'on account of the [lateness of the] Tekufah' [being one of the two reasons], they rejoiced,[11] or that the lateness of the Tekufah alone was adequate reason for intercalating the year? — The question remains undecided.

Our Rabbis taught: [The grain and fruit of the following] three regions [are taken as the standard] for deciding upon the declaration of a leap-year: Judea,[12] Trans-Jordania,[13] and Galilee.[14] The requirements of two of these regions might determine the intercalation, but not those of a single one. All, however, were glad when one of the two was Judea, because the barley for the Omer[15] was obtained [by preference] in Judea.[16]

Our Rabbis taught: The intercalation of a year can be effected [by the Beth din] only in Judea; but if for some reason [it had been decided upon by the Beth din] in Galilee, the decision holds good. Hanania of Oni, however, testified: 'If the intercalation was decided upon in Galilee, it is not valid.' R. Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazi asked: What is the reason for the view of Hanania of Oni? — Scripture states, Unto His habitation shall ye seek and thither thou shalt come:[17] whatever search[18] you have to make shall be only in the habitation of the Lord.[19]

Our Rabbis taught: A leap-year is to be declared only by day, and if it has been declared by night, the declaration is invalid. The sanctification of a month is to be performed by day, and if it has been performed by night it is not valid. R. Abba says: What passage [proves this]? — Blow the horn at the new moon, at the covering[20] of the moon our feast-day.[21] Now on which feast is the moon covered? — We must say on the New Year.[22] And it is thereupon written, For this is a statute for Israel, a judgment[23] of the God of Jacob: Just as judgment is executed by day,[24] so also must the sanctification of the month take place by day.

Our Rabbis taught: A year is not to be intercalated

(3) Tithes were of four classes: (a) the Levitical or First tithe; (b) the Priestly tithe given by the Levites from their own tithe; (c) the Second tithe, and (d) the triennial or Poor tithe. The Second tithe was to be eaten in Jerusalem every year of the septennial cycle, except the third and sixth, when it was replaced by the Poor tithe. The whole series of tithes reached its completion close upon Passover in the fourth and seventh year, and all the tithes which ought to have been paid in the course of the three years, but which, whether through negligence or other circumstances, were not given, had to be removed (ביעור) on the eve of Passover, and a prayer of confession (וידוי) offered, in accordance with Deut. XXVI, 13. Cf. M. Sh. V, 6.

(6) He was deprived of his position owing to the great displeasure he aroused in the Assembly by his harsh attack on R. Joshua b. Hanina, a famous pupil of R. Johanan b. Zakkai, but subsequently reinstated as joint-president with R. Eliezer b. Azaria. Cf. Ber. 27.

(7) This species must be ripe in the mouth of Nisan which is known in the Bible as the Abib (Ex. XIII,44) the month of ears (of corn), in reference to the ripeness of the corn in that month.

(8) Which should, as a rule, ripen close before 'Azereth (Pentecost), the time when the Pilgrims bring the first fruits to Jerusalem (Num. XXVIII, 26). If it happens that the fruit is unripe, the year may be intercalated so as to prevent a special journey.

(9) Lit. 'cycle', 'season'. The Jewish Calendar, while being lunar, takes cognisance of the solar system to which it is adjusted at the end of every cycle of nineteen years. For ritual purposes the four Tekufoth seasons, are calculated according to the solar system, each being equal to one fourth of 365 days, viz. 91 days, 71/2 hours. Tekufah of Nisan (Vernal equinox) begins March 21; Tekufah of Tammuz (Summer Solstice), June 21; Tekufah of Tishri (Autumnal equinox), September 23; Tekufah of Tebeth (Winter Solstice), December 22. Should the Tekufah of Tammuz extend till after the Succoth Festival, or the Tekufah of Tebeth till the sixteenth of Nisan, the year would be intercalated, so that the festivals might fall in their due seasons, viz., Passover in Spring, Succoth in Autumn.

(10) Because if the corn-crop is already ripe and the intercalation prompted by other reasons, the prohibition of new produce till after the Omer Offering (v. p. 50, n. 4) according to Lev. XXIII, 14, would be unduly prolonged for another month.

(11) Because if the Tekufah was in order, and the intercalation had been effected for other reasons, the pilgrims would be subject to wintry weather when returning from Jerusalem after the Succoth Festival.

(15) A measure of barley (1/10th of an ephah) taken from tender ears, was brought on the 16th day of Nisan to the Temple as a heave-offering. v. Lev. XXIII, 10-11.

(16) For two reasons, firstly, because the grain taken for the Omer offering had to be tender, and this could only be so if it was cut from a field in the proximity of Jerusalem, for if it were brought from a far-off distance, the stalks would become hardened in transit, by the wind. Secondly, according to the Talmudic rule, that one must not forego the occasion of performing a commandment (cf. Yoma 33a), the ripe corn in the vicinity of Jerusalem offered the earliest opportunity of fulfilling the precept (v. Men. 64b). If the grain in Judea, however, gave no cause for intercalation, it would be overripe at the time of the Omer, and so unfit for the purpose.

in years of famine.[1] It has been taught: Rabbi says: A man came from Baal Shalisha and brought to the man of God bread of the first fruits; twenty loaves of barley, [bread of the newly ripened crop].[2] Now, there was no other place in Palestine where the fruit ripened earlier than in Baal Shalisha; yet, according to this account, only one species had ripened there [by that date]. If you suggest that it was wheat,[3] the text reads 'barley'. If again you suggest that it was ripened before the bringing of the Omer, the text reads further: Give unto the people that they may eat, which must have been after the bringing of the Omer.[4] We may conclude therefore that the year should have been intercalated.[5] But why did Elisha not do so? — For the reason that it was a year of famine[6] and all hastened to the threshing floor [to procure food].

Our Rabbis taught: The year may not be intercalated before the New Year,[7] and if it be intercalated, the intercalation is invalid. In case of necessity,[8] however, a year may be intercalated immediately after the New Year; yet even so, only a [second] Adar is added.[9] But is this really so? Was not a message once sent to Raba:[10] 'A couple [of scholars] have arrived from Rakkath[11] who had been captured by an eagle[12] whilst in possession of articles manufactured at Luz, such as purple,[13] yet through Divine mercy and their own merits they escaped safely. Further, the offspring of Nahshon[14] wished to establish a Nezib,[15] but yon Edomite[16] would not permit it.[17] The Members of the Assembly,[18] however, met and established a Nezib in the month in which Aaron the Priest died'?[19] Yes, the calculations were indeed made, but not published [until after the New Year].

How was it implied that the term Nezib [mentioned in the message] connoted 'month'? — Because is is written, Now Solomon had twelve Officers [Nezibim] over all Israel who provided victuals for the king and his household; each man his month in the year.[20] (But is it not written, And one officer [Nezib] that was in the land?[21] — Rab Judah and R. Nahman — one holds that one single officer was appointed over all [the other officers]: the other is of the opinion that this refers to the [special officer in charge of the provisions during] the intercalated month.)

Our Rabbis taught: We may not, in the current year, intercalate the following year,[22] nor intercalate three years in succession. R. Simeon said: It once happened that R. Akiba, when kept in prison,[23] intercalated three years in succession. The Rabbis, however, retorted: 'Is that your proof? The court sat and intercalated each year at its proper time.'[24]

Our Rabbis taught: We may not intercalate a Sabbatical year[25] nor the year following a Sabbatical year.[26]

But which year was it usual to intercalate? — That preceding the Sabbatical year.[27] Those of the House of Rabban Gamaliel, however, used to intercalate the year following the Sabbatical year.[28] And this enters into the dispute of the following Tannaim. For it has been taught: Herbs may not be imported from outside the land [of Israel]. But our Rabbis permitted it.[29]

Wherein do they differ? — R. Jeremiah said: They differ as to whether we apprehend lest the earth attached to them [should also be imported].[30]

Our Rabbis taught: We may not intercalate a year because of uncleanness.[31] R. Judah said: We may intercalate. R. Judah observed: It once happened that Hezekiah king of Judah declared a leap year because of uncleanness, and then prayed for mercy, for it is written, For the multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun had not cleansed themselves,

(6) Cf. II Kings IV, 38: And there was a dearth in the land.

(7) I.e., Beth din may not declare before Tishri that a second Adar shall be added six months later, because in the meantime it may be forgotten and so the prohibition of leaven on the Passover be infringed through misdating.

(8) When possibly no intercalatory Board will be available later on, or it is feared that the Roman authorities may forbid intercalation, v. p. 52 n. 9.

(9) But not, e. g., a second Tishri.

(10) From Palestine.

(12) נשר aquila, the eagle as the principal standard of the Roman legions; hence, Roman.

(13) I.e., the fringes for four-cornered garments, v. Num. XV, 38.

(14) The Nasi of Palestine, descendant of Nahshon, the first of the Princes of Judah. Cf. Ex. VI, 23.

(15) Nezib means month as well as officer; v. infra. Hence, they wished to intercalate one month.

(16) Primarily name given to Esau (Cf. Gen. XXV, 30; XXXVI, 1). אדום (Edom) is used by the Talmudists for the Roman Empire, as they applied to Rome every passage of the Bible referring to Edom or Esau. In the middle ages it came to be used symbolically of Christianity, and that accounts for the substitution of ארמי 'Aramean' in censored editions.

(17) The above messages were sent in this obscure form to prevent them from being stopped by the Government under the reign of Constantius II (337-361 C.E.) when the persecutions of the Jews reached such a height that, as in the days of Hadrian, all religious exercises, including the computation of the Calendar, were forbidden under pain of severe punishment. Cf. Graetz, Geschichte, IV, 332 seq. pp. 402 seq.

(18) The Sanhedrin.

(19) The month of Ab. It is thus seen that the decision to intercalate may, in case of emergency, be made before the New Year, i.e. before Tishri.

(20) I Kings IV, 7. Nezib (sing. of Nezibim) can thus be employed as metonymy of 'month'.

(21) Ibid. IV, 19.

(22) I.e., make the necessary calculations and arrive at the decision to intercalate. So Tosaf. Rashi: One may not intercalate one year instead of the following. Maim. (Yad, Kid. Hahodesh IV, 13) agrees with the former.

(23) Akiba was kept in prison several years before being finally martyred for practising and teaching the Jewish religion. V. Ber. 61b.

(24) R. Akiba only made the calculation of the next three leap years, since he was the accepted authority on the computation of the calendar and the Rabbis always employed his aid in this matter, but the leap years were not in three successive years.

(25) Cf. Lev. XXV, 1-7. So as not to prolong the prohibition against tilling the soil.

(26) For the reason that the prohibition of the use of the new produce would be prolonged.

(27) To give an additional month for working the soil.

(28) They did not apprehend a shortage of provisions during the Sabbatical year, since importation from outside Palestine, which they held permissible (cf. Ned. 53b, and below), would prevent it.

(30) Foreign soil was declared unclean. V. Shab. 14b.

(31) Even if it should involve the risk of offering the Paschal lamb in uncleanness. E.g. if the Nasi were dangerously ill, and it was judged that he would die less than a week before Passover, in which case the community, by attending the obsequies in his honour, would become unclean. (Rashi). Cf. Pes. 66b.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 12b

yet did they eat the Passover otherwise than it is written,[1] for Hezekiah had prayed for them, saying: May the Lord in His goodness pardon everyone.[2] R. Simeon said: If the intercalation was actually on the ground of uncleanness, it holds good. Why then did Hezekiah implore Divine mercy? — Because only an Adar can be intercalated and he intercalated a Nisan in Nisan.[3] R. Simeon b. Judah said on behalf of R. Simeon, that it was because he had persuaded Israel to celebrate a Second Passover [unduly].[4]

The Master has said: 'R. Judah said: We may intercalate [on the ground of uncleanness].' Hence R. Judah holds that [the law of] uncleanness, in the case of an entire Community, is only suspended [and not abrogated].[5] But has it not been taught: The ziz,[6] whether it is on his [the Priest's] forehead or not, propitiates. So said R. Simeon. R. Judah said: Only when it is on his forehead does it propitiate, but not otherwise. R. Simeon thereupon said to him: The case of the High Priest on the Day of Atonement affords proof, seeing that it propitiates even when it is not worn on his forehead.[7] And R. Judah answered him: Leave the Day of Atonement aside[8] , for the [laws concerning] impurity are entirely abrogated in the case of a whole Community?[9] — But even according to this reasoning,[10] is there not a contradiction within the passage itself? [Thus:] R. Judah said: We may intercalate [on account of uncleanness]; and then he himself relates what happened in the case of Hezekiah, king of Judah, who intercalated a year because of uncleanness, but implored Divine mercy on himself [for his action]?[11] But the text is evidently defective, and should read as follows: 'We may not intercalate a year on account of uncleanness, but if it has been intercalated, the decision holds good. R. Judah maintained that the intercalation is not valid,[12] and R. Judah observed: It once happened with Hezekiah etc.

But if so, [when] R. Simeon says: If the year is intercalated for the sake of [avoiding] uncleanness, the decision holds good, is [he not merely repeating] the opinion of the first Tanna? — Said Raba: They differ as to whether [it may be intercalated] at the outset.[13] It has been taught likewise: A year may not be intercalated at the outset because of uncleanness. R. Simeon said: It may be intercalated. Why then did he [Hezekiah] pray for mercy? — Because only an Adar can be intercalated, whereas he intercalated a Nisan in Nisan.

The Master has said: 'Because only an Adar can be intercalated, whereas he intercalated a Nisan in Nisan.' But did not Hezekiah agree [that the verse], This month shall be unto you the beginning of months,[14] [implies], only this month can be Nisan [once proclaimed], and no other?[15] — He erred on a ruling of Samuel, for Samuel said: The year is not to be intercalated on the thirtieth day of Adar, since it is eligible to be appointed [the first day of] Nisan.[16] He [Hezekiah] however thought that we do not consider its eligibility [to belong to Nisan].[17] It has been taught likewise: The year may not be intercalated on the thirtieth day of Adar, since it is eligible to be appointed [the first day] of Nisan.

[It was stated above:] 'R. Simeon b. R. Judah said on behalf of R. Simeon that it was because he had [wrongfully] persuaded the people to celebrate a Second Passover [that Hezekiah prayed to be forgiven].' How did it happen?[18] — R. Ashi said: E.g., half of Israel[19] were clean and half unclean, but the women[20] made up the number of the clean and turned it into a majority. Now, at first he held that women too are bound [to offer the lamb] on the first [Passover],[21] so that only a minority[22] was unclean; and a minority is relegated to the Second Passover.[23] But later he adopted the view [that the participation of] women in the First [Passover celebration] is only voluntary,[24] so that the unclean were in a majority, and a majority is not relegated to the Second Passover.[25]

The text [states]: 'Samuel said, The year is not to be intercalated on the thirtieth day of Adar, since it is eligible to be appointed [the first day of] Nisan.' But what if it were intercalated? — 'Ulla said: The month must not be sanctified.[26] But what if it were sanctified? — Raba said: Then the intercalation is invalid. R Nahman said: Both the intercalation and the sanctification are valid.

Raba said to R. Nahman: Let us consider! Between Purim[27] and the Passover there are thirty days, and from Purim we begin to lecture on the laws of Passover, as has been taught: People must begin to inquire into the Passover laws thirty days before the Festival. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A fortnight before. If, then, it [sc. Passover] is postponed at the beginning of the month [of Nisan],[28] people[29] will be liable to disregard[30] the law regarding leaven [on Passover].[31] — He [R. Nahman] answered him: It is well-known that the intercalation of a year depends on [minute] calculations, hence they would say that [the declaration was not made until the thirtieth day] because the Rabbis had not completed their calculation until then.

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: A year is not to be intercalated[32] unless the [summer] Tekufah[33] is short of completion by the greater part of the month.[34] And how much is that? — Sixteen days: so holds R. Judah.

---

(1) I.e., not at the prescribed time, the 14th day of Nisan. Cf. Ex. XII, 9.

(2) II Chron. XXX, 18.

(3) I.e., after it had already been sanctified as Nisan, he reconsidered it and sanctified the month as the second Adar.

(4) Instead of intercalating, to render this unnecessary.

(5) There is a dispute whether uncleanness, in the case of a community, is entirely permitted, as though there were no prohibition at all against it, or whether it is merely suspended on account of the communal need. On the latter view, it is disregarded only when unavoidable, but not here, where it may be avoided by intercalation.

(6) ציץ, The golden front-plate. V. Ex. XXVIII, 36-38. It atoned for sacrifices offered in a state of uncleanness, and rendered them acceptable.

(7) The High Priest did not officiate in the interior, i.e., the Holy of Holies, on the Day of Atonement, robed in garments that had gold interwoven, as that would recall the sin of the golden calf. Cf. Lev. XVI, 3-4; R.H. 26a.

(8) It is no proof in this case.

(9) As on the Day of Atonement, when offerings for the whole Community are made. Hence the above inference of R. Simeon is contradicted.

(10) That even in a case involving a whole Community, as that of the Passover Offering, the year should be intercalated so as to avoid the state of uncleanness.

(11) Surely, according to the said argument, his action was lawful!

(12) Since there was no need at all for intercalation, the laws of impurity being withdrawn for the sake of a whole Community. Hezekiah, in intercalating the year, therefore prayed for forgiveness.

(13) According to R. Simeon it may be intercalated even at the outset, but he speaks of the case as if the act were already performed, merely in contradistinction to R. Judah.

(15) I.e., once Nisan has been proclaimed, it cannot be re-proclaimed Adar, making the ensuing month Nisan.

(16) When Adar is deficient.

(17) Hence he intercalated the year on that day. But afterwards, coming to agree with the standpoint represented by Samuel, and so realising his mistake, he prayed for forgiveness.

(18) That in the first place he thought it right to intercalate the year, but subsequently repented of his earlier decision?

(19) I.e., the male population. From the context, it is seen that the clean were not actually half, but a minority.

(20) Who were clean.

(21) As is the opinion advanced by R. Judah and R. Jose. Cf. Pes. 91b.
(22) Sc., of males, for whom the offering is compulsory.
(23) Therefore he intercalated the year, to obviate the necessity of this.
(24) As R. Simeon holds (ibid.).
(25) Hence the intercalation was unnecessary.
(26) As the second Adar. The succeeding month, however, will he sanctified as Nisan, the current month remaining unnamed.
(27) Feast celebrated on the fourteenth of Adar in commemoration of the deliverance of the Jews from the plot of Haman, as recorded in the Book of Esther.
(28) Through the institution of a second Adar, the lecturing on Passover laws having already begun.
(29) Not believing the report of the messengers that an intercalation had been made. — Raba's assumption that the messengers might be disbelieved, would seem to show that there were enemies of the Jews who might seek to upset the Calendar. Cf. p. 52, n. 9 on the attitude of the Roman authorities to intercalation.
(30) Lit., 'treat lightly'.
(31) Because they will not treat the Passover fixed by the Rabbis as such, having already celebrated it a month before.
(32) On account of the Tekufah. V. supra 11b.
(33) The solar year which consists of three hundred and sixty-five and a quarter days is divided into four equal parts, each period consisting of ninety-one days and seven and a half hours. These are called respectively the Nisan (vernal), Tammuz (summer), Tishri (autumnal), Tebeth (winter) Tekufoth. The lunar year which forms the basis of our calendar comprises altogether three hundred and fifty-four days. Though according to Biblical tradition our months are to be lunar (cf. Ex. XII, 2), yet our Festivals are to be observed at certain agricultural seasons; Passover and Pentecost in the Spring; Tabernacles, or Feast of Ingathering, in the autumn. In order to harmonise the lunar and solar years, a second Adar is intercalated once in two or three years. Our text lays down certain principles by which the Intercalators are to be guided.
(34) Tishri. I.e., the greater part of Tishri must be taken in to complete the Tekufah of Tammuz.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 13a

R. Jose said: Twenty-one days.[1] Now, both deduce it from the same verse, And the Feast of Ingathering at the Tekufah [season] of the year.[2] One Master[3] holds that the whole Feast [of ingathering][4] is required to be included [in the new Tishri Tekufah];[5] the other,[6] that only a part of the Festival [of ingathering] must [be included].[7]

Now, which view do they adopt?[8] If they hold that the Tekufah day[9] is the completion [of the previous season]: then, even if it were not so,[10] it will meet with the requirement neither of him who holds that the whole Festival [must be included,] nor of him who holds that only part of it [is necessary]! —[11] One must say therefore that they both hold that the Tekufah day begins [the new Tekufah].

An objection is raised: The Tekufah day concludes [the previous season]: this is R. Judah's view. R. Jose maintains that it commences [the new].[12] Further has it been taught: A year is not intercalated unless the [summer] Tekufah is short of completion by the greater part of the month [Tishri]. And how much is that? Sixteen days. R. Judah said: Two thirds[13] of the month. And how much is that? Twenty days.[14] R. Jose ruled: It is to be calculated thus: [If there are] sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes Passover,[15] the year is to be intercalated.[16] [If, however, there are] sixteen [short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes the Feast [of Tabernacles],[17] the year is not to be intercalated.[18] R. Simeon maintained: Even where there are sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes the Feast [of Tabernacles], the year is intercalated.[19] Others say [that the year is intercalated even if the Tekufah is short of completion] by the lesser part of the month. And how much is that? Fourteen days?[20] — The difficulty remained unsolved.

The Master has said: 'R. Judah said: Two thirds of the month. And how much is that? Twenty days. R. Jose ruled: It is to be calculated [thus: if there are] sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes Passover, the year is to be intercalated.'[21] But is not this view identical with R. Judah's?[22] — They differ as to whether the Tekufah day completes [the previous] or begins [the new cycle].[23]

The Master has said: '[R. Jose holds that] if there are sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes the Feast [of Tabernacles], the year is not intercalated.' According to R. Jose, then, only if there are sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] preceding the Feast [of Tabernacles is intercalation] not [permitted]; but if there are seventeen or eighteen [days short], the year is intercalated. But has he not himself said: If there are sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes Passover, we may intercalate, but not if less?[24] — But no; in neither case[25] may we intercalate. But seeing that he spoke of the number sixteen [with regard to the Tekufah] preceding Passover,[26] he gives it also [in connection with the Tekufah] preceding the Feast [of Tabernacles].

[It was stated above]: 'R. Simeon maintained:[27] Even where there are sixteen [days short of completing the Tekufah] which precedes the Feast [of Tabernacles], the year is intercalated.' But is not this view the same as that of the first Tanna?

---

(1) As seen from the context, the entire statement, including that of the views of R. Judah and R. Jose, is Samuel's.

(2) Ex. XXXIV, 22. I.e., it must fall within the Tishri Tekufah.

(3) R. Judah.

(4) I.e., beginning with the day when the work of ingathering is permitted — the 16th day of the month, the day after the Festival.

(5) Hence if the summer Tekufah is short of completion by sixteen days, the new autumnal Tekufah begins on the seventeenth, and will thus not include all the days when the work of ingathering is permitted.

(6) R. Jose.

(7) Hence its possible delay until the 21st of the month, but not later, because the 22nd of Tishri is a full Festival again, on which no gathering is permitted. Neither consider the possibility of including Ellul, a full month of thirty days, and so giving one day more, because if Ellul were extended, it would interfere with the calculations whereby the first day of New Year must not fall on Sunday, Wednesday or Friday, v. R.H. 19b; Suk. 43b.

(8) Viz., with reference to the day on which the sun enters into the new Tekufah.

(9) I.e., the day on which the new Tekufah begins.

(10) I.e., even if it were not much short of completion, as sixteen days according to R. Judah, and twenty-one days according to R. Jose, but fifteen or twenty days, respectively.

(11) For even if the Tekufah day begins on the sixteenth or twenty-first day, the new season will commence only on the following day.

(12) Thus, according to R. Judah, none of the Festival of Ingathering is included in the new season.

(13) Lit., 'two hands' interpreted as 'two portions'. Cf. Tosef. Men. IX,10.

(14) V. infra. This refutes Samuel on both points: (a) R. Judah holds here that part of the Feast is sufficient; and (b) in his view the Tekufah day commences the new season, and does not end the last.

(15) I.e., the winter Tekufah.

(16) For if not, the summer Tekufah would not end until the 21st of Tishri, the new Tekufah beginning on the 22nd. The two Tekufoth, the spring and summer, consist of hundred and eighty-two days, and the five lunar months between Nisan and Tishri consist of hundred and forty seven days which, when added to the fourteen days of Nisan and the twenty-one days of Tishri make a total of hundred and eighty-two days. The Tishri Tekufah beginning on the 22nd of the month will thus not include any part of the Festival of Ingathering.

(17) I.e., the summer Tekufah.

(18) Because at least part of the Feast of Ingathering will then fall in the new Tekufah.

(19) V. infra.

(20) Hence the contradiction of the two statements of R. Judah.

(21) In that the end of the cycle is delayed until the 21st of Tishri. V. n. 2.

(22) As it appears that both require the inclusion of only part of the Festival of Ingathering.
(23) According to R. Judah, that day completes the previous Tekufah, consequently, if twenty days have passed and the sun has reached its new cycle on the 21st, the new Tekufah begins on the 22nd, in which case not even part of the Feast of Ingathering is included; whilst according to R. Jose's calculation, even if the solstice occurs on the 21st day, that day is added to the new cycle.
(24) According to the above, in the case of fewer days, if these carry the Tekufah seventeen or eighteen days into Tishri, intercalation is permissible.
(25) I.e., in the case of a shortage neither of seventeen nor eighteen days. The number 'sixteen' therefore is not to be taken in its exact sense, for even if there is a shortage of more than that, intercalation is not justified.
(26) In which case, it is only a shortage of sixteen days which justifies intercalation.
(27) In contradistinction to R. Jose.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 13b

— They differ as to whether the Tekufah day completes [the previous] or begins [the new season].[1] But their views were not defined.[2]

[Again it was stated:] 'Others say: [That the year is intercalated even where there is a shortage] by the lesser part of the month. And how much is that? Fourteen days.' Now, which view do they adopt? Do they hold that the Tekufah day completes [the previous season], and that we require the whole Feast [of Ingathering to be included in the new Tekufah?] But surely in our case, it is so.[3] [Why then intercalate?] — The 'Others', says R. Samuel son of R. Isaac, speak of the Nisan Tekufah, for it is written, Observe the month of Abib [spring];[4] i.e., take heed that the beginning[5] of the vernal Tekufah shall occur on a day in Nisan [when the moon is still in the process of renewal].[6]

But why not intercalate a day in Adar?[7] — R. Aha b. Jacob said: The Tanna reckons from higher numbers downward, and says as follows: [If there is a deficiency] as far as [i.e., by more than] the lesser part of the month,[8] the year is intercalated.[9] And how much is that? Fourteen days.'

Rabina said: In reality, the 'Others' refer to the Tishri Tekufah, but they hold that the whole Feast [of Ingathering][10] must fall [in the new Tekufah] including also the first [day of the Feast].[11] '[Including] the first day'?[12] But is it not written, The Feast of Ingathering [shall be] at the Tekufah of the year; [meaning the day on which ingathering is permitted]? — [They interpret it as] 'The Feast which occurs in the season of ingathering.'

THE LAYING ON [OF HANDS] BY THE ELDERS. Our Rabbis taught: [And the elders . . . shall lay, etc.:][13] it might be assumed that it means ordinary people advanced in age;[14] Scripture therefore adds, of the congregation.[15] Now, if [you emphasised] congregation, I might think, [it referred to] the minor members of the congregation:[16] therefore it is stated, 'the congregation',[17] [meaning] the distinguished of the congregation.[18] And how many are required? — The plural of 'wesameku'[19] ['and they shall lay'] implies two; similarly, 'zikne' ['the elders'] implies two, and as there can be no court with an even number, another is added; hence five in all are required: this is R. Judah's view. R. Simeon said: 'Zikne' ['elders'] indicates two, and as a court cannot consist of an even number, another is added, making three in all. But according to R. Simeon, is it not written 'wesameku' ['and they shall lay']? — That is needed for the text itself.][20] And R. Judah?[21] — That is not needed for the text itself, since if the word wesameku has no significance for deduction, the text could have read [without it]: The Elders, their hands [being] on the head of the bullock.[22] And R. Simeon?[23] — Had it been so written,[24] I might have translated 'al[on], 'in proximity'.[25] And R. Judah?[26] — He deduces this [actual contact] from the use of the word rosh [head] in this case and in connection with the burnt offering.[27] And R. Simeon? — He does not admit the deduction of head written here and in the case of the burnt offering.[28]

It is taught: The laying on [of hands], and the laying on [of hands] of the Elders is performed by three. What is meant by, 'Laying on [of hands]', and 'Laying on [of hands] of the Elders'? — R. Johanan said: [The latter] refers to the ordination of Elders. Abaye asked R. Joseph: Whence do we deduce that three are required for the ordination of Elders? Shall we say, from the verse, And he [Moses] laid his hand upon him [Joshua][29] If so, one should be sufficient! And should you say, Moses stood in place of seventy-one,[30] then seventy-one should be the right number! — The difficulty remained unanswered.

R. Aha the son of Raba, asked R. Ashi: Is ordination effected by the literal laying on of hands? — [No,] he answered; it is by the conferring of the degree: He is designated by the title of Rabbi and granted the authority to adjudicate cases of kenas.[31]

Cannot one man alone ordain? Did not Rab Judah say in Rab's name: 'May this man indeed be remembered for blessing — his name is R. Judah b. Baba; were it not for him, the laws of kenas would have been forgotten in Israel.' Forgotten? Then they could have been learned. But

(1) Though they both state the number sixteen, the one who holds that the day completes the previous Tekufah must count the new season as beginning on the seventeenth.

(2) I.e., it is not clear who is of the one and who of the other opinion.

(3) For the Tishri Tekufah then commences on the fifteenth, whereas the Feast of Ingathering, as defined in p. 58, n. 1, commences on the sixteenth.

(5) Lit., 'ripening'.

(6) That accounts for the limit of fourteen days, after which it is on the wane. This is implied in the word חודש which, derived from חדש 'new', means the 'new month'.

(7) Which would bring in the new Tekufah on the thirteenth day, when the moon is still waxing, rather than cause the derangement of a whole month; and though the first day of Passover must not fall on Monday, Wednesday or Friday, and the addition of a day might cause that, it would not matter, because the limitation of the days on which Passover may commence is due to the desire to avoid New Year falling on Sunday, Wednesday or Friday, and that could be avoided by adding a day to one of the normally defective months between Nisan and Tishri.

(8) I.e., down to, but not including, the fourteenth day.

(9) But if there is actually a shortage of fourteen days, only the month Adar is intercalated.

(10) Even the first day.

(11) And being of the view that the Tekufah day completes, the season, if there is a shortage of fourteen days, in which case the new autumnal Tekufah will begin on the fifteenth day, the first day of the Feast will not be included in it, so that intercalation is justified.

(12) On which work is prohibited.

(13) וסמכו זקני, And the elders (of the Congregation) shall lay etc. Lev. IV, 15.

(14) Lit., 'elders of the market'.

(15) עדה, lit., 'Group', or 'Congregation.' 'Edah' is frequently interpreted by the Rabbis as 'Sanhedrin'. V. Num. Rab. 15, Ch. 16, and Rashi on Lev. IV, 13. The latter derives his statement from Sifra, which again derives it by analogy between 'Edah in Num. XXXV, 24-25, cf. supra 2a.

(16) I.e., the minor Sanhedrin of twenty-three.

(17) With the definite article.

(18) I.e., the major Sanhedrin.

(19) It could have been written וסמך 'we-samak', denoting that any one of the elders should lay his hands. Cf. Malbim on Lev. IV, 15.

(20) Viz., that there must be laying on of hands,

(21) Does he not admit this?

(22) A kind of absolute clause.

(23) Does he not admit the superfluity of 'and they shall lay'?

(24) As R. Judah suggests.

(25) I.e., that the hands need not actually be laid on the head but only brought near. The word wesameku makes it clear.
(26) Who employs wesameku for another interpretation.
(27) Lev. I, 4: And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the burnt offering, which obviously means actual contact.
(28) This type of exegesis, deducing identity of fact from identity of language, is called gezerah shawah, and it is a well-established principle that such deduction could not be made by a scholar without a direct tradition from his teacher that that particular identity of phraseology was intended to intimate identity of law. R. Simeon had no such tradition in respect of these two words.
(29) Num. XXVII, 23.
(30) I.e., having the same authority.
(31) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 14a

these laws might have been abolished; because once the wicked Government,[1] [as an act of religious persecution],[2] decreed that whoever performed an ordination should be put to death, and whoever received ordination should he put to death, the city in which the ordination took place demolished, and the boundaries[3] wherein it had been performed, uprooted. What did R. Judah b. Baba do? He went and sat between two great mountains, [that lay] between two large cities; between the Sabbath boundaries of the cities of Usha and Shefaram[4] and there ordained five elders:[5] viz., R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Simeon, R. Jose and R. Eliezer b. Shamua'. R. Awia adds also R. Nehemia in the list. As soon as their enemies discovered them he [R.J.b.B.] urged them: 'My children, flee.' They said to him, 'What will become of thee, Rabbi?' 'I lie before them like a stone which none [is concerned to] overturn,'[6] he replied. It was said that the enemy did not stir from the spot until they had driven three hundred iron spear-heads into his body, making it like a sieve.[7] — With R. Judah b. Baba were in fact some others, but in honour to him, they were not mentioned.

Was R. Meir indeed ordained by R. Judah b. Baba? Did not Rabbah b. Bar Hannah say in R. Johanan's name: He who asserts that R. Meir was not ordained by R. Akiba is certainly in error? — R. Akiba had indeed ordained him, but the ordination was not acceptable;[8] while R. Judah b. Baba's later ordination, on the other hand, was accepted.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: There is no ordination outside Palestine. What is to be understood by, 'There is no ordination'? Shall we assert that they[9] have no authority at all to adjudicate cases of Kenas[10] outside Palestine?[11] But have we not learnt: The Sanhedrin has competence both within and without Palestine! — This must therefore mean that ordination cannot be conferred outside Palestine.

It is obvious, that if the ordainers are outside Palestine and those to be ordained in Palestine, [then] surely as has been said, they cannot be ordained. But what if the ordainers are in Palestine, and those to be ordained outside? — Come and hear: [It is related] of R. Johanan that he was grieved when R. Shaman b. Abba was not with them [in Palestine] to receive his ordination. [Again it is related of] R. Simeon b. Zirud and another who was with him, viz., R. Jonathan b. Akmai, or according to others [who invert the order,] R. Jonathan b. Akmai and another who was with him, viz., R. Simeon, b. Zirud,[12] that the one who was with them was ordained, and the other, who was not, was not ordained.[13]

R. Johanan was very anxious to ordain R. Hanina and R. Oshaia, but his hope could not be realised,[14] and it grieved him very much. They said to him: Master, you need not grieve, for we are descendants of the house of Eli.[15] For R. Samuel b. Nahman, quoting R. Jonathan, said: Whence do we learn that none of the house of Eli are destined to be ordained? — From the verse, And there shall be no zaken[16] [old man] in thy house for ever.[17] What does the word 'zaken' mean [here]? Shall we say, literally, 'an old man', but it is written [immediately after], and all the increase of thy house shall die [young] men! — It must therefore refer to ordination.[18]

R. Zira used to hide himself to avoid ordination, because R. Eleazar had said: Remain always obscure,[19] and [so] live.[20] But later, having heard yet another saying of R. Eleazar, viz., One does not attain greatness unless all his sins are forgiven,[21] he himself strove [to obtain it]. When they ordained him, they[22] sang before him, 'Neither paint nor rouge nor [hair-]dye, yet radiating charm.'[23]

When the Rabbis ordained R. Ammi and R. Assi, they sang thus of them: Only such men, only such men ordain ye for us, but ordain not for us any of the 'sarmitin' and 'sarmisin', or as some say, 'hamisin' or 'termisin'.[24]

When R. Abbahu arrived at the Emperor's Court[25] from College, the ladies of the court went out to receive him and sang to him: Great man of thy people, leader of thy nation, lantern of light, thy coming be blessed with peace.

BREAKING THE HEIFER'S NECK IS BY THREE. Our Rabbis taught: And thy Elders and thy judges shall come forth.[26] 'Elders' [indicates] two; [similarly,] 'judges', two. And as a court must not be evenly-balanced, another is added; hence there are five: this is R. Judah's view. R. Simeon says: 'Elders' indicates two, and as a court cannot consist of an even member, another is added, making three in all. Now, according to R. Simeon, what purpose is served by the words 'thy judges'? — It is needed, in his view, to indicate the necessity of choosing the most distinguished of 'thy judges'.[27] And R. Judah?[28] — [He deduces it] from the pronominal suffix [appended] to Zaken.[29] And R. Simeon? — [He maintains:] Had 'elders' [alone] been written,[30] I might have said that it refers to [any] old men of the street.[31] Hence the Torah says: 'thy elders'.[32] Yet had 'thy elders' [alone] been written, I might have said that it refers to [the members of] the minor Sanhedrin. Therefore Scripture wrote, 'thy judges', to indicate that the reference is to the most distinguished of 'thy judges'.[33] And R. Judah?[34] — He derives this[35] from a comparison of the word elders [as used here][36] and in the verse, And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands [on the head of the bullock].[37] Just as there, the most distinguished of the congregation[38] [are necessary],[39] so here, too, the most distinguished of thy elders [are required]. But if this deduction be made, let us infer everything from that passage![40] and what need then is there for 'thy elders' and 'and thy judges'? — But [we should say: In R. Judah's opinion,] the [superfluous] waw [and] of, and thy judges, intimates the number.[41] And R. Simeon[42] — He does not employ the conjunction 'waw' for interpretative purposes.

But according to this line of argument, we might further deduce from the clauses, and they shall come forth, and, and they shall measure — each indicating two — that nine should be required, in R. Judah's opinion, and seven in R. Simeon's? — But these clauses are necessary, even as it has been taught: And they shall come forth, [meaning,] they, and not their deputies. And they shall measure; in all circumstances, even when the corpse is found at the entrance of a town, measurement must be made.

Our Mishnah[1] is not in accord with the following Tanna. For it has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, Thy elders and thy judges shall come forth.[2] ‘Thy elders’, refers to the Sanhedrin; ‘and thy judges', to the King and High Priest. [That it 'refers to] the King' is deduced from the verse, The King by justice establisheth the land.[3] 'The High Priest', as it is written, And thou shalt come unto the Priests, the Levites and unto the Judges.[4]

The schoolmen asked: Does R. Eliezer b. Jacob differ from the Mishnah in one thing, or in two? Does he differ only with respect to the King and High Priest,[5] but as to the [number of the members of the] Sanhedrin, [he agrees with] either R. Judah or R. Simeon; or does he differ on that point too, requiring the whole Sanhedrin to come forth? — Said R. Joseph: Come and hear! If he [sc. the rebellious elder][6] found them[7] at Beth Pagi,[8] and there rebelled against their decision, one might assume that his rebellion was punishable.[9] Scripture therefore declares, And then shalt thou arise and get thee up unto the place,[10] [thus teaching] that it is the place that conditions [the act].[11] Now, how many had gone out? If only part of the Sanhedrin [how could the elder be condemned?] Perhaps those remaining inside would have agreed with him? It is clear therefore that the whole of the Sanhedrin must have gone out, But if so, for what? Shall we say, for a secular purpose! Are they then permitted to go out? Is it not written, Thy navel is like a round goblet wherein no mingled wine is wanting?[12] Hence it was obviously for a religious purpose, and for what else, if not for measuring in connection with the heifer, the author of the passage being R. Eliezer b. Jacob, who holds that the attendance of the whole Sanhedrin is required?[13] Abaye retorted: No; they might have gone out for the purpose of enlarging the city[14] or the Temple court-yards, as we learnt: The city or the Temple court-yards may be enlarged only by [the sanction of] a court of seventy-one.[15]

The following Baraitha agrees with R. Joseph:[16] If he[17] met them[18] at Beth Pagi and rebelled against their decision, when, for example, they had gone out for the purpose of measuring in connection with the heifer, or for the enlargement of the city or the Temple Courtyards, you might assume that his rebellion is culpable;[19] but it is written, — And thou shalt arise and get thee up to the place,[20] to teach that it is the place that conditions [the act].

THE VALUATION OF THE FOURTH YEAR'S FRUIT, AND THE SECOND TITHE THE VALUE OF WHICH IS NOT KNOWN, IS BY THREE. Our Rabbis taught: What kind of second tithe has no established price? Decayed fruit, wine that has grown a skin,[21] and rusty coins.[22]

Our Rabbis taught: The second tithe that has no fixed price is to be redeemed [at the valuation of] three [experienced] dealers, but not by three who are inexperienced.[23] Even a Gentile or the owner may be amongst the assessors. R. Jeremiah propounded: What of three who are business partners,[24] [can they be appointed valuers]? — Come and hear! 'A man and his two wives may redeem the second tithe of unknown value.'[25] Perhaps in a case such as that of R. Papa and [his wife], the daughter of Abba from Sura.[26]

DEDICATION IS BY THREE. Our Mishnah is not in accordance with the following Tanna: For it has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: Even a hook of the sanctuary requires ten persons [to assess it] for its redemption.[27]

R. Papa said to Abaye: As to R. Eliezer b. Jacob's opinion, it is well, its grounds being Samuel's dictum. For Samuel said: There are ten Biblical references to Priest in the Chapter.[28] But whence do the Rabbis learn that only three [are required]? And should you answer: Because it [sc. the word Priest] appears three times in relation thereto;[29] then since with reference to land [redemption] the word appears four times, let four be sufficient? And should you say that this is indeed so, have we not learnt: THE VALUATION OF LAND REQUIRES NINE PERSONS AND A PRIEST? But what [will you say]? — That this is because with these verses the ten references are completed? Then should not other consecrated objects,[30] with the section on which six such references are completed, require six assessors? The difficulty was not solved.

THE ASSESSMENT OF MOVABLE OBJECTS etc. What is meant by THE ASSESSMENT OF MOVABLE OBJECTS?[31] R. Giddal, reporting Rab, says: For example, one who says, 'I undertake to give the value of this vessel';[32] for, R. Giddal said, reporting Rab:

(32) To the Sanctuary.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 15a

If one declares, 'I dedicate the value of this vessel [to the Sanctuary]', its value must be handed over. Why so? Because it is well known[1] that there is no fixed assessment [in the Torah] for such objects:[2] he must therefore have spoken with reference to value;[3] consequently, he must pay its value. But if so, [the words in the Mishnah] VALUATIONS OF MOVABLE OBJECTS should have read VALUATION CAUSED BY MOVABLE OBJECTS?[4] — Read: VALUATIONS CAUSED BY MOVABLE OBJECTS.

R. Hisda, quoting Abimi [said]: It refers to one who pledges movable objects in payment of his own dedicated value.[5] But in that case the words VALUATIONS OF MOVABLE OBJECTS should have been written MOVABLE OBJECTS OF ASSESSMENT![6] Read: MOVABLE OBJECTS OF ASSESSMENT.

R. Abbahu said: This refers to one who declares, 'I dedicate my value;' when the Priest comes to collect it, [on his failure to pay],[7] movable property is assessed by three; immovable property by ten.[8]

R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: The requirement of three assessors is correct in the case of one having to redeem anything out of the possession of the Sanctuary;[9] but why need three to bring them into its possession?[10] — It is common sense, he answered. What is the difference between appropriating a thing to, and expropriating a thing from [the possession of the Sanctuary]? In the case of expropriation, the reason [for three assessors] is the eventuality of error; but the same eventuality exists in the case of appropriation.[11]

R. JUDAH SAYS etc. R. Papa said to Abaye: On R. Judah's opinion this is right: for that reason 'Priest' is written. But according to the Rabbis,[12] [who hold that no priest is required] — what is the purpose of that reference? — The question remained unanswered.

LAND VALUATION NEEDS NINE AND A PRIEST. Said Samuel: Whence is this inferred? — [From the] ten Biblical references to 'Priest' in the chapter [relating to valuation],[13] One is needed for the actual law;[14] the others are merely exclusions [of non-priests], one following the other. And [according to Talmudic rule,][15] exclusion, following exclusion, implies, not limitation, but extension,[16] and so includes [as valid, a valuation made] even by nine non-priests,[17] and [only] one priest.

R. Huna, the son of R. Nathan, demurred: Why not say that the ten assessors must consist of five priests and five non-priests?[18] The difficulty remained unsolved.

THE VALUATION OF A MAN IS SIMILAR. But is a man an object that can be dedicated?[19] — The words refer, said R. Abbahu, to the case of one who says; 'I dedicate my value'; as it has been taught 'If one says, I dedicate my value [to the Sanctuary-]', he is assessed exactly as a slave sold in the market; — and a slave is equated to immovable property.[20]

R. Abin asked: How many assessors are needed for the valuation of hair that is ready to be shorn? Is it regarded as already shorn, and thus assessed by three,[21] or as attached to the body, hence by ten?[22] — Come and hear! If one dedicates his slave, no liability to a trespass-offering is incurred in respect of him.[23] But R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Liability is incurred in respect of his hair. And we know that the point on which they differ is regarding the hair which is ready to be shorn. Infer, therefore, from this [that R. Abin's question is a point of difference among the Rabbis].

Shall we take it that these Tannaim[24] differ in the same respect as the Tannaim of the following Mishnah? For we learnt: R. Meir says: There are things that notwithstanding their attachment to the soil are considered as movable property.[25] But the Sages disagree with him. In what case? [If A says to B.] 'I handed over to thee ten vines laden with fruit,' and the latter replies, 'They were only five,' R. Meir imposes [an oath on the defendant],[26] while the Sages say that an object which is still attached to the soil is subject to the laws of immovable property.[27] And R. Jose b. Hanina said: The case in question is one of grapes ready to be gathered: according to the one master,[28] they are considered as gathered; according to the other.[29] they are not! — No, you might say it is so[30] even according to R. Meir. Only there, in the case of grapes, which after ripening deteriorate by remaining ungathered, does R. Meir hold that they are considered as gathered: whereas hair, the longer it is left, the better it is.

CAPITAL CASES, CASES OF CARNAL CONNEXION WITH BEASTS etc. The law is stated categorically, without any distinction whether the connection is between a beast and a man or a beast and a woman. It is right as regards the [requirement of twenty-three] in the case of a woman, as this follows from the verse, Thou shalt slay the woman and the beast.[31] But whence is it to be deduced in the case of a man? — It is written, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.[32] If this has no bearing on a case where a man is the active participant,[33] we must refer it to one in which he is the passive offender. And it is expressed in the Divine Law as if the man were the active sinner, for the purpose of equating the passive sinner to him. Just as in the case where the man approaches the beast, both he and the beast are judged by [a court of] twenty-three; so also, where the man is approached by the beast, both he and the beast are judged by twenty-three.

THE CASE OF AN OX TO BE STONED IS BY TWENTY-THREE, AS IT IS WRITTEN: THE OX SHALL BE STONED AND ITS OWNER ALSO SHALL BE PUT TO DEATH.[34] AS THE DEATH OF THE OWNER [IS BY TWENTY-THREE], SO THE DEATH OF THE OX. Abaye said to Raba: Whence do we know that the verse, and its owner also shall be put to death, means to [teach that] the judgment of the ox is to be similar to that of the owner?

(1) Lit., 'a man knows'.

(2) In the Bible, the word ערך ('erek) is used only in reference to men, and indicates a dedication of fixed sums varying according to the age and sex of the person who is the subject of such a dedication. Hence, strictly speaking, the word is meaningless when used in reference to utensils, and therefore a different meaning has to be given to it here.

(3) For, according to the Talmudic dictum, 'No man makes a purposeless declaration.' Cf. 'Ar. 5a.

(4) The difficulty is a grammatical one. ערכין is the absolute form, and therefore ערכין המטלטלין really means, 'valuations which are movable' the article ה being here a relative pronoun. The Talmud answers that the genitive particle של is to be understood.

(5) Which, until their value is redeemed, are subject to the laws of sacred property, the assessment of which requires three. This interpretation is to justify the grammatical form used in the Mishnah, the meaning of the phrase being VALUATIONS (of human beings) which have been tendered in the form of MOVABLE OBJECTS.

(6) I.e., movable objects offered as the redemption price of human dedications.

(7) In case of non-payment his property is seized. V. 'Ar. 21a.

(8) The Mishnah therefore is to be interpreted thus: As for הערכין (human dedications), if movable property be rendered in redemption thereof, it is assessed by three; if real estate, by ten.

(9) As in the cases quoted by R. Giddal and R. Hisda.

(10) As in the case advanced by R. Abbahu.

(11) Hence the need of assessors in either case.

(12) The representatives of the first opinion cited anonymously.

(14) I.e., to state that a priest must be the assessor.

(15) Which is based on the following inference: For excluding purposes, one reference to 'priest' would have been sufficient; hence its repetition is not intended to exclude non-priests, but to extend. V. R. Han. a.l.

(16) In this case the extension to non-priests of the authority to make assessments.

(17) Lit., 'Israelites'. There were three classes in Israel, viz., 'Priests', 'Levites' and 'Israelites'.

(18) Since the rule that 'exclusion following exclusion implies extension' is based on redundancy, where there are a whole series of such exclusions, they are not all redundant. Thus, the first 'priest' teaching the exclusion of an Israelite, the second is redundant, and therefore teaches his inclusion. Hence, when the word has been written twice, we know that one priest and one Israelite are necessary. But for that very reason, the third 'priest' is not redundant, but to intimate that a priest is again required; after which the fourth is redundant, and so on; thus the first, third, fifth, seventh and ninth are needed for the actual law of priests and the others are superfluous, which gives five priests and five Israelites.

(19) So that he may be classed with sacred property.

(20) V. Meg. 23b. This is derived from the verse, And ye may make them an inheritance to your children after you, to hold for a possession. Lev. XXV, 46. Hence the need of ten assessors.

(21) Like movable property.

(22) Like immovable property.

(23) So, if one puts him to service, as is the case when one makes use of any other consecrated object; for the laws concerning the unlawful use of sacred property are not applicable to lands or things of similar status, as slaves. v. Me'i. 18b.

(24) R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the first Tanna of the Baraitha.

(25) Lit., 'there are things which are as real estate (being attached to the soil) yet are not as real estate (in a legal sense).'

(26) As in a case where there is partial admission of the claim (cf. B.K. 107a) and though an oath is not administered in cases of immovable property (v. Shebu, VI, 5). Here, however, since the vines no longer depend on the soil for ripening, they are considered as gathered.

(27) Hence no oath can be administered.

(29) The Rabbis.

(30) I.e., that hair, even though ready for cutting, is to be considered as immovable property, because the cases are not alike.

(31) Lev. XX,16, which indicates that the judgment on the ox is similar to that on the woman, and therefore the verdict must be pronounced by a similar body.

(32) Ex. XXII, 18.

(33) Since the reference in Lev. XX, 15, And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death, suffices.

(34) Ex. XXI, 29.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 15b

Perhaps it is meant to [indicate] capital punishment [for the owner]? — In that case it should have been written, and the owner also, and no more. But [perhaps] had the Divine Law written so,[1] it could be argued that [the text implies death] by stoning?[2] — Could this view possibly be entertained! If a man himself is the murderer, his death is by the sword:[3] when his property [sc. an ox] slays, shall he [the owner] be stoned![4]

But might it not be argued[5] that the reason the Divine Law wrote 'yumath'[6] is to [indicate] an easier death, i.e., to commute death by the sword to death by strangulation?[7] Now, on the view that strangulation is a severer death,[8] it is correct;[9] but according to the view that strangulation is an easier death [than decapitation],[10] what is there to be said [against it]?[11] — This cannot be entertained, because it is written, If there be laid on him a ransom;[12] and, should you maintain that he is liable to death, is it not written, You shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer?[13] On the contrary, that fact [proves that the text is literal, Thus:] in case of a man's own crime, money is no adequate punishment, only death; whereas, when his beast kills, he can ransom himself with money?[14] — But, said Hezekiah, and thus said a Tanna of the school of Hezekiah: Scripture state, He that smote him [a human being] shall surely be put to death, he is a murderer.[15] For a murder committed by himself, you may put him to death, but you may not put him to death for a murder committed by his ox.[16]

The schoolmen asked: How many were needed [to judge] the ox [that sinned in approaching] Mount Sinai?[17] [The question is] whether we can derive a temporary enactment from permanent practice or not? — Come and hear! Rammi b. Ezekiel taught, Whether it be beast or man, it shall not live;[18] just as a man is judged by twenty-three, so is a beast judged by twenty-three.

THE LION AND THE WOLF etc. . . . Resh Lakish said: Provided, however, that they killed [a human being], but not otherwise.[19] Thus he holds that they can be tamed and have owners.[20] R. Johanan says [that it is R. Eliezer's view] even when they have killed no one. Hence he holds that they cannot be tamed or have owners.[21]

We learnt: R. ELIEZER SAYS, WHOEVER IS FIRST TO KILL THEM [WITHOUT TRIAL], ACQUIRES. This is correct according to R. Johanan:[22] What does he acquire? — He acquires [the possession of] their skin. But according to Resh Lakish, what does he acquire? As soon as they killed someone, the Rabbis regarded them as sentenced [to death], in which case every benefit from them is prohibited![23] What then does he acquire? — He acquires [merit] in the sight of Heaven.

There is [a Baraitha] taught which is in agreement with Resh Lakish: It is all one whether it be an ox, or any other beast or animal that killed a man, [it is judged] by twenty-three. R. Eliezer says: Only an ox that killed [is tried] by twenty-three, but any other animal or beast who killed, whoever is first to kill them acquires merit in the sight of Heaven.[24]

R. AKIBA SAID etc. Is not R. Akiba's opinion identical with that of the first Tanna [of the Mishnah]?[25] — [No;] they differ in the case of a serpent.[26]

A WHOLE TRIBE MUST NOT BE JUDGED etc. What sin was committed by the tribe? Shall I say, that it is a case of a tribe that desecrated the Sabbath? But[27] if the Divine Law made a distinction between individual sinners and a multitude, it was only in cases of idolatry; did it then differentiate in cases [of the transgression] of other commandments? — It must therefore refer to a tribe that was beguiled [into idolatry]. Is it to imply that it must be tried like a multitude? [If so,] this coincides with the opinion of neither R. Josiah nor R. Jonathan. For it has been taught: How many inhabitants must a town have that it may be proclaimed condemned? Not less than ten and not more than a hundred:[28] this is the view of R. Josiah. R. Jonathan says: From a hundred to the majority of the tribe in question. And even R. Jonathan admits only the majority of a tribe, but not the whole of it.[29] The case in question, says R. Mathna, is one

(29) For in the case of a whole tribe, the members are to be tried individually as when an entire community, as distinct from a town, practises idolatry (v. preceding note).

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 16a

where the head of the tribe has sinned;[1] did not R. Adda b. Ahabah say: Every great matter they shall bring unto thee[2] means the delinquencies of the great man;[3] so this one [sc. the head of a tribe] too, is a great man.[4]

'Ulla, quoting R. Eleazar says: [This refers to the case of] a dispute over the division of land [where the procedure must be the same] as at the first [division] in Eretz Yisrael. As in the commencement,[5] [such a dispute was decided by a Court of] seventy-one, so does it stand for all time.[6] But if so, just as originally the division was made by means of the urn, the Urim and Tummim,[7] and in the presence of all Israel, so at all times there must be an urn, the Urim and Tummim, and the presence of all Israel! But clearly, the answer given by R. Mathna is the better one.

Rabina says: I still maintain that the case in question is that of a tribe led astray into idolatry, and if you object that such should be judged after the manner of a multitude [I say,] True! though they are executed as individuals;[8] yet their trial must indeed be by a court competent to try a multitude.[9] For did not R. Hama son of R. Jose say in the name of R. Oshaia [in reference to the Scriptural passage]: Then shalt thou bring forth that man and that woman,[10] that an individual man or woman may be brought unto [the court at] thy gates,[11] but not a whole town?[12] Similarly in this case, only an individual man or woman canst thou bring forth to thy gates, but thou canst not bring forth a whole tribe.

NOR THE FALSE PROPHET. Whence is this inferred? — R. Jose son of R. Hanina says: It is derived from [the analogy set up] by the word hazadah,[13] used both here,[14] and in reference to the rebellious elder.[15] Just as there, [the rebellious elder is to be put to death only if he has rebelled against a Sanhedrin of] seventy-one, so here too, [the false prophet is to be tried by a court of] seventy-one. But is not the expression 'hazadah' mentioned in reference to his execution,[16] which is determined by a court of twenty-three? —[17] Resh Lakish therefore said: It is derived from the use of dabar [word] employed here,[18] and in reference to his [the elder's] rebelliousness. But let us, in turn, deduce [that the execution of] the rebellious elder [is by seventy-one] by employing the analogy of hazadah written therein and in the case of the false prophet.[19] — He [the Tanna] had a tradition authorising the analogy of dabar, but not that of hazadah.[20]

NOR THE HIGH PRIEST.

Whence is this derived? — R. Adda b. Ahabah said: Scripture states, Every great matter they shall bring unto thee.[21] [This means:] The matters [viz., delinquencies] of the great [man].[22]

An objection is raised: A great matter [means] 'a difficult[23] case'. You say, 'a difficult case'; but perhaps it is not so, the meaning being 'the matters of the great man'? Since Scripture states further on, Hard causes [difficult cases] they brought unto Moses,[24] it is clear that difficult cases are meant. [Hence great matter means 'difficult case']? — His[25] view is that of the following Tanna. For it has been taught: Every great matter, means 'the matters of a great [man]'. You say so, but may it not mean, ‘every difficult case’? When Scripture further refers to ‘hard causes’ [difficult cases], these have already been mentioned.[26] How then, do I interpret, ‘great matter’? — ‘The matters of the great [man].’[27]

But according to that Tanna,[28] why the need of both verses? — The one states the law itself; the other, its practice.[29] But the other [Tanna]?[30] — If so,[31] either ‘great’ should be employed in both passages, or ‘difficult’ in both. Why ‘great’ in one passage and ‘difficult’ in the other? We may infer therefrom the two meanings.[32]

R. Eleazar asked: How many judges are needed to judge the [goring] ox of the High Priest? Is it assimilated to the execution of his owner,[33] or is it assimilated to that of owners in general?[34] — Abaye said: Since he raised the question with regard to his ox, it seems that in regard to his other monetary cases, he is certain.[35] But is not this obvious? — No, for you might have supposed from the verse, Every great matter . . . that every matter of the great man[36] [is to be brought before the great Sanhedrin]. He [Abaye] therefore informs us [otherwise].

WAR OF FREE CHOICE etc.

Whence do we deduce this? — Said R. Abbahu: Scripture states, And he shall stand before Eleazar the Priest [who shall inquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the Lord. At his word shall they go out and at his word they shall come in, both he and all the children of Israel with him even all the Congregation].[37] ‘He’, refers to the King;[38] ‘And all the children of Israel with him,’ to the Priest anointed for the conduct of war;[39] and, ‘all the Congregation,’ means the Sanhedrin.[40] But perhaps it is the Sanhedrin whom the Divine Law instructs to inquire of the Urim and Tummim?[41] — But [it may be deduced] from the story related by R. Aha b. Bizna in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: A harp hung over David's bed, and as soon as midnight arrived, a northerly wind blew upon its strings and caused it to play of its own accord. Immediately David arose and studied the Torah until the break of dawn. At the coming of dawn, the Sages of Israel entered into his presence and said unto him: ‘Our Sovereign King, thy people Israel need sustenance.’ ‘Go and support yourselves by mutual trading,’[42] David replied, ‘But,’ said they, ‘a handful does not satisfy the lion, nor can a pit be filled with its own clods.’[43] Whereupon David said to them: ‘Go and stretch forth your hands with a troop [of soldiers].’[44] Immediately they held counsel with Ahitophel and took advice from the Sanhedrin[45] and inquired of the Urim and Tummim. R. Joseph said: What passage [states this]?

(18) The false prophet: ibid. XVIII, 20, The prophet that shall speak a word. The elder: ibid. XVII, 10, And thou shalt do according the word. The need of seventy-one for the false prophet, therefore, is derived from the passage relating to the rebelliousness of the elder, which must be directed against the major Sanhedrin.
(19) I.e., just as the rule, that the judgment of the false prophet must be by seventy-one, is derived from an analogy of the two dabars, so, on the other hand, we may deduce that the execution of the elder must be by seventy-one, from an analogy of the two hazadahs.
(20) That analogy was not handed down to him by his teachers, and no man may set up an analogy of his own. Cf. Pes. 66a and other places.

(43) A community cannot live on its own resources.
(44) Invade foreign territory.
(45) Hence the ruling in the Mishnah, that the permission of the Sanhedrin was required for the proclamation of war.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 16b

— And after Ahitophel was Benaiah the son of Jehoiada[1] and Abiathar; and the Captain of the king's host was Joab.[2] 'Ahitophel' is the adviser, even as it is written, And the counsel of Ahitophel which he counselled in those days, was as if a man inquired from the word of God.[3] 'Benaiah the son of Jehoiada', refers to the Sanhedrin, and 'Abiathar' to the Urim and Tummim. And so it is written, And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over[4] the Kerethites and Pelethites.[5] And why were they[6] termed Kerethites?[7] — Because they gave definite instructions,[8] And Pelethites?[9] — Because their acts were wonderful. Only after this [is it written]. And the captain of the king's host was Joab.[10] R. Isaac the son of R. Adda, — others state, R. Isaac b. Abudimi — said: What verse [tells us of the harp hanging over David's bed]? — Awake my glory, awake psaltery and harp; I will wake the dawn.[11]

THE ENLARGEMENT OF THE CITY, etc. Whence is this derived? R. Shimi b. Hiyya said: Scripture states, According to all that I show thee, the pattern of the Tabernacle [and the pattern of all the furniture thereof] even so shall ye make it[12] — [meaning,] in future generations[13] Raba objected: All vessels made by Moses were hallowed by their anointing: those made subsequently were consecrated by [their] service.[14] But why? Let us suppose [that] 'even so shall you make' applies to future generations [in this respect too]![15] — There it is different, for Scripture states, And he had anointed them and sanctified 'otham' [them];[16] [hence] only they [were sanctified] by anointing, but not those of later generations. But why not deduce this: those[17] [could be consecrated only] by anointing, whereas the vessels made afterwards might be consecrated either by service or by anointing? — R. Papa said: Scripture reads, . . . wherewith they shall minister in the Sanctuary.[18] . Thus, Scripture made them [i.e., their consecration] dependent on service.[19] Why then do we need 'otham'?[20] — But for 'otham', I might have thought that the consecration of the vessels of the future required both anointing and service, since it is written, so shall you make it;[21] the Divine Law therefore emphasised, 'otham',[22] i.e., only they need anointing, but not those of future generations.

THE APPOINTMENT OF THE SANHEDRIN IS BY SEVENTY-ONE. Whence do we derive this law? — Since we find that Moses set up Sanhedrins,[23] and Moses had an authority equal to that of seventy-one.[24]

Our Rabbis taught: Whence do we know that judges are to be set up for Israel? — From the verse, Judges thou shalt made thee.[25] Whence do we deduce the appointment of officers[26] for Israel? — From the same verse, Officers shalt thou make thee. Whence the appointment of judges for each tribe? — From the words, Judges . . . for thy tribes.[27] And the appointment of officers for each tribe? — From the words, Officers . . . for thy tribes. Whence the appointment of judges for each town? From the words, Judges . . . in all thy gates. And the appointment of officers for each town? — From the words, Officers . . . in all thy gates.[28] R. Judah says: One [judicial body][29] is set over all the others, as it is written, . . . shalt thou make thee.[30] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: [The immediate connection] of 'they shall judge' and 'for thy tribes'[31] indicates that the tribal court must judge only those of its own tribe.

THE CONDEMNATION OF A TOWN [etc.]. Whence is this derived? — R. Hiyya b. Joseph said in R. Oshaia's name: Scripture states, Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman,[32] [teaching,] an individual man or woman thou mayest bring to thy gates,[33] but not a whole town.[34]

A CITY ON THE BORDER MAY NOT BE CONDEMNED. Why? — Because the Torah says: From the midst of thee,[35] but not [a city] on the border.[36]

NOR CAN THREE CITIES BE CONDEMNED. For it is written, Concerning one of the cities.[37] Yet one or two may be condemned, as it is written, of thy cities.[38]

Our Rabbis taught: [Concerning] one [of the cities]: 'one', excludes three. You say that it excludes three; but why not assume that it excludes even two? — When it states, 'thy cities', two then are indicated;[39] hence, how do I explain 'one'? — That one [or two] cities may be condemned, but not three. At times Rab said that a single court cannot condemn three cities, but that [that number] may be condemned by two or three courts; at others he maintained that [three cities] can never be condemned, even by two or three courts. What is Rab's reason? — Because of 'baldness'.[40] Resh Lakish said: They [sc. the Rabbis] taught this [only if the cities are] in a single province,[41] but if they lie in two or three different provinces, they may be condemned. R. Johanan holds that they may not be condemned [even in that case], for fear of 'baldness'. [A Baraitha] was taught which is in agreement with R. Johanan: We cannot condemn three cities in Eretz Yisrael; but we may condemn two [if situated in two provinces] e.g one in Judea and one in Galilee; but two in Judea or two in Galilee may not be condemned; and near the border, even a single city cannot be condemned. Why? Lest the Gentiles become aware of it and destroy the whole of Eretz Yisrael.[42] But may not this[43] be deduced from the fact that the Divine law wrote, From the midst of thee, [implying], but not from the border? — He [the author of the Baraitha] is R. Simeon, who always interprets the Biblical law on the basis of its meaning.[44]

THE GREAT SANHEDRIN etc. What is the reason for the Rabbis maintaining that MOSES WAS OVER THEM?[45] — Scripture says, That they may stand there with thee:[1] 'With thee' implies, 'and thou with [i.e., in addition to] them.' And R. Judah?[2] — 'With thee' was stated on account of the Shechinah.[3] And the Rabbis?[4] — Scripture saith, And they shall bear the burden of the people with thee:[5] 'With thee' implies, 'and thou with them'. And R. Judah? — With thee' intimates that [the elders must] be like thee,[6] [Moses]. And the Rabbis?[7] — Scripture saith, So shall they make it easier for thee and bear the burden with thee;[8] and the major Sanhedrin is deduced from the minor.

Our Rabbis taught: But there remained two men in the camp.[9] Some say: They [i.e., their names][10] remained in the urn.[11] For when the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, Gather unto me seventy of the elders of Israel,[12] Moses said [to himself]: 'How shall I do it? If I choose six out of each tribe, there will be two more [than the required number]; if I select five, ten will then be wanting. If, on the other hand, I choose six out of one and five out of another, I shall cause jealousy among the tribes.' What did he do? — He selected six men [out of each tribe], and brought seventy-two slips, on seventy of which he wrote the word 'Elder', leaving the other two blank. He then mixed them all up, deposited them in an urn, and said to them, 'Come and draw your slips.' To each who drew a slip bearing the word 'Elder', he said, 'Heaven has already consecrated thee.' To him who drew a blank, he said: 'Heaven has rejected thee, what can I do?' Similarly, thou readest, Thou shalt take five shekels apiece by the poll.[13] Moses reasoned: How shall I act toward Israel? If I say to a man, 'Give me [the shekels for] thy redemption,' he may answer, 'A Levite has already redeemed me.' What did he do? He brought twenty-two thousand slips and wrote on each, 'Levite', and on another two hundred and seventy-three he wrote, 'five shekels'. Then he mixed them up, put them into an urn and said to the people, 'Draw your slips.' To each who drew a slip bearing the word 'Levite', he said, 'The Levite has redeemed thee.' To each who drew a ticket with 'five shekels' on it, he said, 'Pay thy redemption and go.'

R. Simeon said: They[14] remained in the Camp. For when the Holy One, blessed be He, ordered Moses: Gather unto me seventy of the elders of Israel, Eldad and Medad observed, 'We are not worthy of that dignity.' Thereupon the Holy One, blessed be He, said, 'Because you have humbled yourselves, I will add to your greatness yet more greatness.' And how did He add to their dignity? — In that all [the other prophets] prophesied and ceased, but their prophesying did not cease. And what did they prophesy? — They said, 'Moses shall die and Joshua shall bring Israel into the land.'

Abba Hanin said on the authority of R. Eliezer: They prophesied concerning the matter of the quails,[15] [saying], 'Arise, quail; arise, quail.'

R. Nahman said: They prophesied concerning Gog and Magog.[16] as it is said, Thus saith the Lord God: Art thou he of whom I spoke in old time by My servants the prophets of Israel, that prophesied in those days for many years[17] that I would bring thee against them? etc.[18] Read not 'shanim' [years] but 'shenayim' [two].[19] And which two prophets prophesied the same thing at the same time? — Say, they are Eldad and Medad.

The Master said: 'All the other prophets prophesied and ceased, but they prophesied and did not cease.' Whence do we infer that the others ceased? Shall we say, from the verse, They prophesied 'velo yasafu' [but they did so no more]?[20] If so, what of the passage. With a great voice, velo yasaf?[21] Does that too mean, it went on no more?[22] But that must be interpreted, It did not cease![23] — But here[24] it is written, And they prophesied,[25] whereas there[26] it is stated, [they] were prophesying[27] , i.e., they were still continuing to prophesy.

Now, according to the statement [that they prophesied] that Moses would die, [Joshua's request,] My Lord Moses, forbid them, is understandable; but on these two other views,[28] why [did he say],

My Lord Moses, forbid them[29] — Because their behaviour was not seemly, for they were like a disciple who decides questions in the very presence of his teacher. Now, according to these two other opinions [the wish expressed by Moses,] Would that all the Lord's people were prophets[29] is reasonable; but on the view [that they prophesied] that Moses would die, was he then pleased therewith? — They did not complete their prophecy in his presence. How was Moses to 'forbid them' [as Joshua requested]? He [Joshua] said to him: Lay upon them public cares, and they will cease [prophesying] of themselves.[30]

WHENCE DO WE LEARN THAT WE MUST FIND ANOTHER THREE? But after all, a majority of two for an adverse verdict is impossible:[31] if eleven find the man not guilty and twelve find him guilty, there is still a majority of only one;[32] and if there are ten for not guilty and thirteen for guilty, there is a majority of three? — R. Abbahu said: [The majority of two] is possible only where [two] judges are added,[33] and then the Mishnah agrees with the opinion of all, whilst in the major Sanhedrin, it is possible in accordance with the view of R. Judah, who holds their number to be seventy.[34]

R. Abbahu also said: Where judges are added, an evenly-balanced court may be appointed from the very outset. But is this not obvious?[35] — You might have assumed that the one who says, 'I do not know' is regarded as an existing member, and that anything he says is to be taken into consideration. We are therefore informed that he who says, 'I do not know,' is regarded as nonexistent, and if he gives a reason [for a particular verdict] we do not listen to him.

R. Kahana said: If the Sanhedrin unanimously find [the accused] guilty, he is acquitted. Why? — Because we have learned by tradition that sentence must be postponed till the morrow in hope of finding new points in favour of the defence.[36] But this cannot be anticipated in this case.[37]

R. Johanan said: None are to be appointed members of the Sanhedrin, but men of stature, wisdom, good appearance, mature age, with a knowledge of sorcery,[38] and who are conversant with all the seventy languages of mankind,[39] in order that the court should have no need of an interpreter. Rab Judah said in Rab's name: None is to be given a seat on the Sanhedrin unless he is able to prove the cleanness of a reptile from Biblical texts.[40] Rab said: 'I shall put forward an argument to prove its cleanness.

(13) Num. III, 47. After the completion of the Tabernacle, the Levites were called to replace the firstborns of all Israelites in the service of the Sanctuary, (cf. Ex. XXIV, 5; XIX, 24.) In order to effect this transfer of office, both the firstborn and the Levites were numbered. And when it was found that of the former there were twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three; and of the latter, twenty-two thousand, the two hundred and seventy-three firstborns who were in excess of the Levites were redeemed at the rate of five shekels per head. (Five shekels is the legal sum for the redemption of a firstborn. v. Num. XVIII, 16). To solve the difficulty of deciding who was to be redeemed and who exchanged, the above scheme was adopted.

(14) Eldad and Medad.
(15) The birds by which the Israelites were miraculously fed in the wilderness. Ex XVI, 11-13; Num. XI, 31.
(16) According to a widespread tradition, Gog and Magog represented the heathen nations or aggregate powers of evil, as opposed to Israel and the Kingdom of God, v. 'Eduy. II, 5. Ezekiel (XXXVIII, 2; XXXIX, 6) pictured the final destruction of the heathen world before the city of Jerusalem, as the defeat of Gog and Magog.
(17) שנים which may be read either 'shanim' years or 'shenayim' 'two'.
(18) Ezek. XXXVIII, 17.
(19) I.e., the two prophets who prophesied, etc.
(20) ולא יספו
(21) ולא יסף Deut. V, 19.
(22) But surely this cannot be said of the Shechinah.
(23) So in the first verse, יספו must bear the same connotation.
(24) Speaking of the elders, Num. XI, 25.
(25) ויתנבאו (imperfect with waw conversive = perfect).
(26) In the case of Eldad and Medad, Num. XI, 27.
(27) מתנבאים (participle).
(28) That they prophesied concerning the quails, or about Gog and Magog.
(29) Ibid. XI, 29.
(30) There is here a play on words, 'forbid them' being connected with 'ceasing'. Communal activities bring sorrow, and prophecy is possible only to the joyous spirit (Tosaf.).
(31) In a Sanhedrin of twenty-three.
(32) And for conviction, a majority of two is necessary; v. p. 3.
(33) As in the following case: If eleven found him guilty and eleven not guilty, while the twenty-third is dubious, the law provides for an addition of two members. In case these agree with the accusers, the majority for condemnation is then two, v. Mishnah infra 40a.
(34) It might happen that thirty-six condemn and thirty-four acquit.
(35) Surely this has already been stated in the Mishnah cited. For if two are added when the twenty-third is dubious, the court consists of an even number.
(36) V. infra 34a; 35a.
(37) Lit., 'But these will no more see for him (any merit).'
(38) So as to be able to detect those who seduce and pervert by means of witchcraft, cf. Rashi.
(39) This number is given frequently in Talmud and Midrash as the number of languages existing in the world. V. Pirke de R. Eliezer, ch. 24; Targum Jonathan on Gen. XI, 8, and Rashi on Deut. I, 5. As it is impossible for one man to know all these languages, he must have meant that amongst them all, all the languages were to be known. But cf. Rab's dictum below.
(40) I.e., he must be of subtle mind, so as to be able to prove the cleanness of reptiles that are definitely declared unclean in Scripture. V. Lev. XI, 29-39.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 17b

If a snake which causes so much uncleanness through killing is clean,[1] should not a reptile, which does not kill and spread uncleanness, be clean?' But it is not so, [as is proved] by comparison with an ordinary thorn.[2]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: A Sanhedrin must not be established in a city which does not contain [at least] two who can speak [the seventy languages] and one who understands them. In the city of Bethar there were three and in Jabneh four [who knew how to speak them]: [viz.,] R. Eliezer, R. Joshua. R. Akiba, and Simeon the Temanite, who used to discuss before them sitting on the ground.[3]

An objection is raised: A Sanhedrin that has three[4] [able to speak the seventy languages] is wise [capable]; if four,[5] it is of the highest standard possible.[6] — He[7] holds the same view as the Tanna [of the following Baraitha]: It has been taught: With two, [the Sanhedrin is] wise [capable]; with three, it reaches the highest standard possible.

[The following rules apply throughout the Talmud: The statement,] 'It was argued before the Sages,' refers to Levi who argued before Rabbi. 'It was discussed before the Sages,' refers to Simeon b. Azzai, Simeon b. Zoma, Hanan the Egyptian, and Hanania b. Hakinai[8] . R. Nahman b. Isaac taught that there were five: the three Simeons,[9] Hanan [the Egyptian] and Hanania [b. Hakinai].

'Our Rabbis in Babylon' refers to Rab and Samuel.

'Our Rabbis in Eretz Yisrael', to R. Abba.

'The judges of the Exile', to Karna.[10]

'The judges of Eretz Yisrael', to R. Ammi and R. Assi.

'The judges of Pumbeditha', to R. Papa b. Samuel,

'The judges of Nehardea', to R. Adda bar Minyomi.

'The elders of Sura', to R. Huna and R. Hisda.

'The elders of Pumbeditha', to Rab Judah and R. 'Aina.

'The keen intellects of Pumbeditha', to 'Efa and Abimi, sons of Rehabah.

'The Amoraim of Pumbeditha', to Rabbah and R. Joseph.

'The Amoraim of Nehardea', to R. Hama. [Where we read,] 'Those of Neharbelai[11] taught,' it refers to Rammi b. Berabi.[12]

'They said in the School of Rab', refers to R. Huna. But did not R. Huna himself say, 'They said in the School of Rab'? — R. Hamnuna is therefore the one referred to.

'They said in the West',[13] refers to R. Jeremiah.

'A message was sent from Palestine,'[14] to R. Jose b. Hanina. 'They laughed at it in the West', to R. Eleazar. But do we not read: 'A message was sent from Palestine: according to R. Jose b. Hanina . . .'?[15] — Therefore reverse it: 'A message was sent from Palestine' refers to R. Eleazar; 'They laughed at it in the West', to R. Jose b. Hanina.

WHAT MUST THE POPULATION OF A CITY BE IN ORDER THAT IT MAY QUALIFY FOR A SANHEDRIN? A HUNDRED AND TWENTY, etc. What is the reason for that NUMBER?[16] — Twenty-three, corresponding to the number of the minor Sanhedrin, and three rows of twenty-three,[17] make ninety-two. Adding the ten 'batlanim'[18] of the Synagogue, we have a hundred and two. Then, a further two clerks,[19] two sheriffs,[20] two litigants, two witnesses, two zomemim,[21] and two to refute the zomemim,[22] gives a hundred and fourteen in all. Moreover, it has been taught: A scholar should not reside in a city where the following ten things are not found: A court of justice that imposes flagellation and decrees penalties; a charity fund[23] collected by two and distributed by three;[24] a Synagogue; public baths; a convenience; a circumciser; a surgeon, a notary;[25] a slaughterer[26] and a school-master.[27] R. Akiba is quoted [as including] also several kinds of fruit [in the list], because these are beneficial[28] to the eyesight.

R. NEHEMIA SAYS, [TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY etc.]. It has been taught: Rabbi said:

---

(1) As it is not included in the list of unclean creatures in Scripture; ibid.: and its dead carcase does not defile.

(2) For a thorn-prick also causes death, and so spreads uncleanness, yet it cannot be regarded by anyone as otherwise than clean.

(3) Because he was as yet unqualified owing to his immaturity, yet he was allowed to take part in the discussion.

(4) [Lit. 'of three', v. Yad. Ramah.]

(5) Cf. preceding note.

(6) Hence it appears that at least three such men are needed by a city, in order that it may qualify for a Sanhedrin.

(7) I.e., Rab, who says that only two are required.

(8) Though not ordained they were permitted to join the discussion in the presence of the ordained Rabbis; v. Bacher, AT. I, 409, 3.

(9) I.e., the two Simeons referred to above, and Simeon the Temanite.

(10) [Var. lec. Samuel and Karna, v. Rashbam, B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 279. n. 8; p. 419, n. 3.

(11) [Neharbel identified with Nehar Bil, east of Bagdad, Obermeyer, p. 269.]

(12) Beribi (v. Rashi, Bezah 8b); or 'Beroki' according to the Aruch.

(13) The Babylonians, when alluding to Palestine, called it the West, as Palestine was to the W. of Babylon. V. Ber. 2b.

(14) Lit., 'from there', which refers usually to Palestine, v. p. 15.

(15) How then could the sender himself be R. Jose b. Hanina?

(16) Lit., 'what has (the number) to do (with that)?'

(17) Usually seated behind the Sanhedrin for the purpose of completing courts. For full explanation, v. Mishnah, infra 37a.

(18) בטלנים fr. בטל 'to rest from labour', 'to be at ease or idle', hence men with leisure. Ten such men were appointed in every Community to attend religious services, in order to ensure the requisite quorum for public worship — the minyan. v. Meg. 3b.

(19) To take down notes for the prosecution and defence, v. infra 37a.

(20) The court beadles, who summoned the litigants and carried out the court sentences, such as flagellation.

(21) V. Glos. No testimony is valid if there is no possibility of its being refuted. Hence two are necessary for that.

(22) As a further precaution, lest false witnesses be hired to refute the first two.

(23) קופה, kupah, the communal fund from which distributions in money were made to the poor every Friday. B.B. 8b.

(25) For writing scrolls, etc.

(26) Rashal deletes this; in that case, the charity fund ranks as two institutions, viz., the collection and distribution.

(27) Rashi suggests the following persons as the six necessary to complete the hundred and twenty: viz., the two collectors and three distributors of charity, and one man capable of practising all the other professions.

(28) Lit., 'enlighten'.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 18a

[The population must be] two hundred and seventy-seven.[1] But has it not been taught: Rabbi said, [The population must be] two hundred and seventy-eight? — There is no difficulty: The one statement is according to R. Judah;[2] the other according to the Rabbis.[3]

Our Rabbis taught: And place such over them to be rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties and rulers of tens:[4] The rulers of thousands amounted to six hundred;[5] those of hundreds, six thousand; those of fifties, twelve thousand; and those of tens, sixty thousand. Hence the total number of judges in Israel was seventy-eight thousand and six hundred.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. THE HIGH PRIEST MAY JUDGE AND BE JUDGED, TESTIFY AND BE TESTIFIED AGAINST. HE MAY PERFORM HALIZAH,[6] AND THE SAME MAY BE DONE TO HIS WIFE. THE DUTY OF YIBBUM[7] MAY BE PERFORMED TO HIS WIFE; HE HOWEVER, MAY NOT, PERFORM THAT DUTY, SINCE HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY A WIDOW.[8]

IF A DEATH HAPPENS IN HIS FAMILY, HE MUST NOT WALK IMMEDIATELY BEHIND THE BIER,[9] BUT WHEN THEY[10] DISAPPEAR,[11] HE MAY SHOW HIMSELF;[12] WHEN THEY APPEAR [IN ONE STREET], HE MUST BE HIDDEN.[13] [IN THIS MANNER] HE MAY GO WITH THEM AS FAR AS THE ENTRANCE OF THE GATE OF THE CITY. SO HOLDS R. MEIR. R. JUDAH SAID: HE MUST NOT LEAVE THE SANCTUARY, BECAUSE IT IS WRITTEN, NEITHER SHALL HE GO OUT OF THE SANCTUARY'.[14] WHEN HE CONSOLES OTHERS, IT IS CUSTOMARY FOR THE PEOPLE TO PASS ALONG, ONE AFTER THE OTHER,[15] AND FOR THE 'MEMUNNEH'[16] TO PLACE HIM BETWEEN HIMSELF AND THE PEOPLE.[17] IF HE IS CONSOLED BY OTHERS, ALL THE PEOPLE SAY TO HIM, 'MAY WE BE THY ATONEMENT, AND HE ANSWERS THEM,' BE YE BLESSED OF HEAVEN. AND WHEN THE MOURNERS' MEAL[18] IS GIVEN TO HIM, ALL THE PEOPLE ARE SEATED ON THE FLOOR AND HE ON A STOOL.

THE KING MAY NEITHER JUDGE NOR BE JUDGED, TESTIFY NOR BE TESTIFIED AGAINST. HE MAY NOT PERFORM HALIZAH NOR MAY IT BE PERFORMED TO HIS WIFE. HE MAY NOT PERFORM YIBBUM, NOR MAY IT BE PERFORMED TO HIS WIFE. R. JUDAH SAID: IF HE WISHES TO PERFORM HALIZAH OR YIBBUM, HE SHALL BE REMEMBERED FOR GOOD. BUT THEY [THE RABBIS] SAID: [EVEN IF HE WISHES] HE IS NOT LISTENED TO; NOR MAY ANY ONE MARRY HIS WIDOW. R. JUDAH SAID: A KING MAY MARRY A KING'S WIDOW, FOR SO WE FIND IN THE CASE OF DAVID WHO MARRIED THE WIDOW OF SAUL, AS IT IS WRITTEN, AND I GAVE THEE THY MASTER'S HOUSE AND THY MASTER'S WIVES INTO THY BOSOM.[19]

GEMARA. THE HIGH PRIEST [MAY JUDGE]. But is this not obvious? — It is necessary to state, HE MAY BE JUDGED.[20] But that too is obvious, for if he cannot be judged, how can he judge? It is not written, hithkosheshu wa-koshshu,[21] which Resh Lakish interpreted: Adorn yourselves first, and then adorn others?[22] — But since he [the Tanna] wishes to state: A KING MAY NEITHER JUDGE NOR BE JUDGED, he also, teaches' THE HIGH PRIEST MAY JUDGE AND BE JUDGED. Alternatively, he [the Tanna] informs us of the following: Viz., of what has been taught: If a High priest killed anyone; if intentionally, he is executed, if unintentionally, he is exiled.[23] He transgresses positive and negative commandments, and ranks as a hedyot[24] in all respects.[25]

'If intentionally, he is executed.' Is this not obvious? — It is necessary to state, 'If unintentionally, he is exiled.'[26] But is not that, too, evident? It is necessary; for you might have thought that I could argue from the verse, And he shall dwell therein until the death of the High Priest[27] that only he whose return is provided for,[28] is exiled, but one whose return is not provided for, is not exiled. For we learnt:

---

(1) Tosef. III. Two hundred and thirty in accordance with R. Nehemia, and forty-seven held in reserve for increasing the number of the court of twenty-three, where one is uncertain and the rest equally divided, adding two at a time, up to a maximum of seventy or seventy-one, v. infra 40a.

(2) Requiring only seventy to constitute the Sanhedrin.

(3) Requiring seventy-one.

(4) Ex. XVIII, 21.

(5) Since the population consisted of 600,000. Likewise for the other officials. (Ex. XII, 35.). [This is to teach that the judges were included in the number of each respective group (Tanh. Mishpatim].

(6) V. n. p. 1 and p. 31.
(7) יבום, The duty of a levirate marriage, i.e., the obligation of marrying one's brother's widow if she be childless. (V. Deut. XXV, 5.) Although marriage with a brother's widow was forbidden as a general rule (Lev. XVIII, 16; XX, 21), in the case of childlessness it was obligatory. This obligation could, however, be avoided by the ceremony of Halizah, which was recommended later in Talmudic times in preference to yibbum (v. Yeb. 39b; 109a).
(8) Lev. XXI, 14. A widow, or one divorced, or a profaned woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take.
(9) Though by following the bier, he would not come in actual contact with the dead: (v. p. 18, n. 7), precautions had to be taken so as to prevent any possibility of his becoming levitically impure.
(10) The other mourners.
(11) From one street, having entered a second.
(12) In the first.
(13) I.e., he most always be one street behind the concourse following the bier.
(14) Lev. XXI, 12.
(15) In ordinary cases, after the burial, friends of the mourner passed by in a line and offered him comfort. In later times this was reversed, the friends standing in two rows, and the mourner passing between them.
(16) Lit., 'the appointed one'. An officer of high rank in the Temple, generally the superintendent of the Temple service. Here identical with the Segan; v. R. Papa's statement, p. 97 and n. 5. loc. cit.
(17) I.e., The High Priest was attended on the right by the Memunneh and on the left by the people.
(18) 'se'udath habra'ah', the first meal after the funeral which is prepared and given to the mourners by a neighbour. (v. II Sam. III. 35; M.K. 27b). This meal consists of bread and eggs. V.B.B. 16b.
(19) II Sam. XII, 8.
(20) And so the first is mentioned too, for completeness.
(22) By a play on the similarity of' gather yourselves together', fr. קושש and 'adorn yourselves', Heb. קשט

(25) V. Sanh. Tosef. IV.
(26) V. p. 92, n. 4.
(27) Num. XXXV, 25.
(28) I.e., by the death of the High Priest.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 18b

One who killed the High Priest [unintentionally] or the High Priest who [so] killed a person, may never come forth from his place of exile.[1] Hence I would say that he should not be exiled. He therefore informs us [that he is]. But perhaps it is indeed so?[2] — Scripture states, Every man slayer may flee thither,[3] implying even the High Priest.

'He transgresses positive and negative commandments.' But is he bound[4] to transgress?[5] — What it means is: If he transgressed a positive or a negative commandment, he is in every respect [equal to] a hedyot.[6] But is this not obvious? — [No,] I might think, since we learnt: 'A whole tribe, a false prophet or a high priest are not to be judged except by a court of seventy one';[7] and R. Adda b. Ahabah said: [This is deduced from the verse,] Every great matter they shall bring unto thee,[8] meaning, 'the matters of a great man':[9] — therefore (I might think) all matters of a great man [involve trial by the Great Sanhedrin]; the Tanna therefore teaches us [otherwise].[10]

But perhaps it is so?[11] — Is it actually written, 'matters of a great [man]'? What it states is: 'The great matter', i.e., the really important matter.[12]

HE MAY TESTIFY AND BE TESTIFIED AGAINST. He may testify? But has it not been taught: And hide thyself from them;[13] there are times when thou mayest hide thyself[14] and there are times when thou mayest not. How so?[15] — [E.g., when the finder is] a Kohen and it [sc. the object found] is in a grave-yard;[16] or an old man, and it is undignified for him;[17] or when his work is of greater value than his neighbour's [loss]: in such cases Scripture says, And hide thyself[18] . — said R. Joseph: He may be a witness for the king.[19] But have we not learnt: HE [THE KING] MAY NEITHER JUDGE NOR BE JUDGED; TESTIFY NOR BE TESTIFIED AGAINST? — But, said R. Zera: He may be a witness for the king's son. But the king's son is a commoner![20] — Rather [say thus]: He may testify in the presence of the king.[21] But surely the king may not be given a seat on the Sanhedrin! — For the sake of the High Priest's dignity, he comes and sits down until his evidence is received, after which he leaves and then we deliberate on his[22] case.

The text [states]: 'The king may not be given a seat on the Sanhedrin;' nor may the king or the High Priest be members of the board for the intercalation of the year.

'The king [may not be given a seat] in the Sanhedrin,' — because it is written, Thou shalt not speak 'al rib [in a case].[23] [meaning], thou shalt not speak against the rab [chief of the judges].[24] Again. 'nor may the king or the High Priest be members of the board for the intercalation of the year.' The king, on account of 'Afsanya' [the upkeep of the army];[25] the High Priest, because of the [autumnal] cold.[26]

R.Papa said: This[27] proves that the seasons of the year fall in with the normal lunar months.[28] But is it so? Were there not three cowherds who were standing conversing, and who were overheard by some Rabbis. One of them said: If the early and late sowing[29] sprout together, the month is Adar; if not, it is not Adar.[30] The second said: If in the morning frost is severe enough to injure[31] an ox, and at mid-day the ox lies in the shade of the fig-tree and scratches its hide,[32] then it is Adar, if not, it is not Adar. And the third said: When a strong east wind is blowing and your breath can prevail against it, the month is Adar; if not, it is not Adar. Thereupon the Rabbis intercalated the year?[33] — Is it then logical for you to assume that the Rabbis intercalated the year by a simple reliance upon cowherds? But they relied on their own calculations, and the cowherds [merely] corroborated their proposed action.[34]

HE MAY PERFORM HALIZAH. The Tanna teaches this[35] categorically. irrespective of whether [his sister-in-law was widowed] after nesu'in or only after erusin.[36] Now, as for a widow after nesu'in, it is correct, since he is interdicted by a positive and a negative command;[37]

---

(1) That is, if there was no High Priest at the time when he was exiled. V. Mak. 11b.

(2) That he should actually be exempt from exile.

(3) Deut. XIX,3.

(4) Lit., 'Is there no way', 'is it impossible that he should not transgress'?

(5) 'He transgresses etc.' implies that he must transgress.

(6) V. Tosef. Sanh. IV.

(7) V. supra 2a.

(8) Ex. XVIII, 22.

(9) I.e., the High Priest, v supra 16b.

(10) That through transgression he becomes a mere hedyot and is tried by three.

(11) May not the interpretation of the matters of a great man apply to this also?

(12) I.e., one involving capital punishment.

(13) Deut. XXII, 4, in reference to the return of lost objects.

(14) I.e. refrain from carrying out the duty of returning the find.

(15) When is one permitted to retreat?

(16) V. p. 18, n.7.

(17) To pick up the object.

(18) Thus a man's dignity abrogates the injunction, Thou mayest not hide thyself'; in the same way, the duty of bearing testimony (v. Lev. V,1) should be abrogated in favor of a High Priest, since it is not in keeping with his exalted office.

(19) I.e. in a case where the king is one of the litigants.
(20) Hence even so it is still undignified for the High Priest to testify.
(21) I.e., when the king is a member of the Sanhedrin.
(22) The king's son's (Rashi).
(23) Ex. XXIII, 2. רב rib is here written defectively, i.e., without a yod, hence can be read rab, 'master' or 'chief'.
(24) I.e. if the king were a member of the Sanhedrin, other members would be inclined to suppress their opinions in deference to him.
(25) Gr. from  wages. As it would be to his interest sometimes to intercalate and sometimes not to intercalate the year. according as the payment of the army is by the year or by the month.
(26) Since he might be biassed against intercalation which, by placing the Day of Atonement later in the autumn, would make the several ritual baths which he has to take on that day (five immersions in all) rather cold. V. Yoma 31b.
(27) The objection to the High Priest's taking part in the intercalation of the year.
(28) I.e., when the year is intercalated, the weather in Tishri is the equivalent of that of Marcheshvan in an ordinary year.
(29) I.e., the wheat sown earlier and the barley that was sown later (Rashi).
(30) But Shewat.
(31) Lit., 'kill'.
(32) Through the heat.
(33) Thus we see that the purpose of intercalation is to readjust the seasons, and the second Adar then has the climate of the first Adar in normal years, therefore Tishri will have its usual degree of heat in an intercalated year.
(34) In case, therefore, intercalation has been prompted by a reason other than the readjusting of the seasons, the weather will vary according to the months.
(35) That the High Priest may not perform Yibbum.
(36) V. Glos. A widow after erusin is still a virgin.
(37) a) A virgin of his people he shall take to wife, Lev.XXI, 14; b) A widow he shall not take. ibid.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 19a

and a positive command[1] cannot abrogate a positive and a negative command. But in the case of a widow after erusin, why [is he not permitted to marry her]?[2] The positive command[3] should set aside the negative? — The first act of connubial intercourse was forbidden as a preventive measure against further acts.[4] It has been taught likewise: [Where the widow is forbidden in marriage to the brother-in-law by a negative or positive command] and he has connubial relations at all with her, he acquires [her in marriage] but may not retain her for further cohabitation.[5]

IF A DEATH HAPPENS IN HIS FAMILY. Our Rabbis taught: Neither shall he go out of the Sanctuary:[6] [this means,] he shall not go out with them, but he may go after them. How so? — When they [the other mourners] disappear, he may reveal himself [to the public]; and when they appear [in a street], he must be hidden [in another].[7]

AND HE MAY GO WITH THEM AS FAR AS THE ENTRANCE GATE OF THE CITY. [R. JUDAH SAID. . .BECAUSE IT IS WRITTEN . . .]. Surely R. Judah's argument is correct? — R. Meir will tell you: in that case,[8] he must not [leave the Temple] even for his house![9] Hence this must be the meaning of, Neither shall he go out of the Sanctuary: He must not depart from [i.e., profane] his holy status, and in this case, since he has something to remind him [of his status][10] he will not come into contact [with the dead]. And R. Judah? — Owing to his bitter grief, he might be tempted to overlook that, and thus come into contact [therewith].

WHEN HE GOES TO CONSOLE OTHERS. Our Rabbis taught: When he passes along the row to comfort others, the Segan[11] and the former High Priest[12] stand on his right; whilst the Rosh-Beth-Ab,[13] the mourners and all the people are on his left. And when he stands in the row to be comforted by others, the Segan is stationed on his right and the Rosh Beth Ab and all the public on his left. But the former High Priest is not present on this latter occasion. Why? — He [the High Priest] might feel depressed by the thought, 'He rejoices at my misfortune.'[14]

From this Baraitha. says R. Papa, we can infer three things: [i] that the Segan [here] and the Memunneh [in the Mishnah] are identical;[15] [ii] that the mourners stand, while the people pass by; [iii] that the mourners are placed to the left of the comforters.

Other Rabbis taught: Formerly the mourners used to stand still while the people passed by. But there were two families in Jerusalem who contended with one another, each maintaining, 'We shall pass first'. So the Rabbis established the rule that the public should remain standing and the mourners pass by.

Rammi bar Abba said: R. Jose restored the earlier custom in Sepphoris,[16] that the mourners should stand still and the public pass by. He also said: R. Jose enacted in the same town that a woman should not walk in the street followed by her child,[17] owing to an incident that once happened.[18] Further, Rammi B. Abba said: R. Jose also enacted in that town that women while in the closet should talk to one another for the sake of privacy. [from the intrusion of men].

R.Manashia b. 'Awath said: I inquired of R. Josiah the Great, in the grave-yard of Huzal,[19] and he told me that a row [for condolence] must consist of not less than ten people, excluding the mourners, and that it was immaterial whether the mourners stood still and the public passed by, or the mourners passed by and the public remained standing.

WHEN HE IS COMFORTED BY OTHERS etc. The schoolmen asked: When he consoled others, what did he say to them? — Come and hear! 'And he said [to them], Be comforted'. On what occasion [did he actually say this]? Shall we say, when others comforted him? But how could he say, 'Be comforted'? He would suggest ill-omen to them! — it must therefore be taken that when he comforted others, he said: 'Be comforted'. Draw your own conclusion!

THE KING MAY NEITHER JUDGE etc. R. Joseph said: This refers only to the Kings of Israel, but the Kings of the House of David may judge and be judged, as it is written, O House of David, thus saith the Lord, execute justice in the morning;[20] and if they may not be judged, how could they judge: is it not written, Hithkosheshu wakoshshu,[21] which Resh Lakish interpreted. 'adorn yourself first and then adorn others'?[22] But why this prohibition of the kings of Israel? Because of an incident which happened with a slave of King Jannai.[23] who killed a man. Simeon b. Shetah[21] said to the Sages: 'Set your eyes boldly upon him and let us judge him.' So they sent the King word, saying: 'Your slave has killed a man.' Thereupon he sent him to them [to be tried]. But they again sent him a message 'Thou too must come here, for the Torah says, If warning has been given to its owners,[24] [teaching], that the owner of the ox must come and stand by his ox.'[25] The king accordingly came and sat down. Then Simeon b. Shetah said: 'Stand on thy feet, King Jannai, and let the witnesses testify against thee; yet it is not before us that thou standest, but before Him who spoke and the world came into being, as it is written, Then both the men between whom the controversy is, shall stand etc.'[26] 'I shall not act in accordance with what thou sayest, but in accordance with what thy colleagues say,' he answered.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 19b

[Simeon] then turned first to the right and then to the left, but they all, [for fear of the King], looked down at the ground.[1] Then said Simeon b. Shetah unto them: 'Are ye wrapped in thoughts?[2] Let the Master of thoughts [God] come and call you to account!' Instantly, Gabriel[3] came and smote them to the ground, and they died. It was there and then enacted: A King [not of the House of David] may neither judge nor be judged; testify, nor be testified against.

HE MAY NOT PERFORM HALIZAH NOR MAY IT BE PERFORMED etc. [R. JUDAH SAID etc.]

But is this really so?[4] Did not R. Ashi say, that even according to the view that if a Nasi foregoes his honour his renunciation is accepted, yet if a King foregoes his honour, it is not accepted; for it is written, Thou shalt not in any wise set him over thee[5] intimating, that his authority[6] should remain over you?[7] — A precept is a different matter.

NOR MAY ANYONE MARRY [HIS WIDOW. R. JUDAH SAID . . .] It has been taught: They [the Rabbis] said to R. Judah: He [David] married women of the house of the King who were permissible to him, namely, Merab and Michal.[8]

R.Jose was asked by his disciples: How could David marry two sisters while they were both living?[9] He answered: He married Michal after the death of Merab. R. Joshua b. Korha said: His marriage to Merab was contracted in error,[10] as it is said, Deliver me my wife Michal whom I betrothed unto me for a hundred foreskins of the Philistines.[11] How does this prove it? — R. Papa answered: Because he said, My wife Michal but not 'my wife Merab'. Now, what was the error in his marriage [with Merab]? [It was this:] It is written, And it shall be that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches and will give him his daughter.[12] Now he [David] went and slew him, whereupon Saul said to him: I owe thee a debt, and if one betroths a woman by a debt,[13] she is not betrothed.[14] Accordingly he gave her to Adriel, as it is written, But it came to pass at the time when Merab, Saul's daughter should have been given to David, that she was given to Adriel the Meholathite to wife.[15] Then Saul said to David, 'If you still wish me to give you Michal to wife, go and bring me [another] hundred foreskins of the Philistines.' He went and brought them to him. Then he said: 'You have now two claims on me, [the repayment of] a loan[16] and a perutah.[17] Now, Saul held that when a loan and a perutah are offered [as kiddushin], he [the would-be husband] thinks mainly of the loan;[18] but in David's view, when there is a loan and a perutah, the mind is set on the perutah.[19] Or if you like, I will say, all agree that where a loan and a perutah [are offered], the mind is set on the perutah. Saul, however, thought that [the hundred foreskins] had no value, while David held that they had value at least as food for dogs and cats. How does R. Jose[20] interpret the verse, Deliver me my wife Michal? —[21] He explains it by another view of his. For it has been taught: R. Jose used to interpret the following confused passage thus: It is written, But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Ayah whom she bore unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth, and the five sons of Michal, the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Adriel the son of Barzillai, the Meholathite etc.[22] But was Michal really given to Adriel; was she not given to Palti the son of Layish, as it is written, Now Saul had given Michal, David's wife, to Palti the son of Layish . . .?[23] But Scripture compares the marriage of Merab to Adriel to that of Michal to Palti, to teach that just as the marriage of Michal to Palti was unlawful.[24] so was that of Merab to Adriel.[25]

Now as to R. Joshua b. Korha,[26] surely it is written, And the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul whom she bore to Adriel. — R. Joshua [b. Korha] answers thee: Was it then Michal who bore them? Surely it was rather Merab who bore them! But Merab bore and Michal brought them up; therefore they were called by her name. This teaches thee that whoever brings up an orphan in his home, Scripture ascribes it to him as though he had begotten him.

(Mnemonic: Hanina — he called,' Johanan — and his wife,' Eleazar — and Redemption; and Samuel among his Disciples.)[27]

R.Hanina says this is derived from the following: And the women her neighbours, gave it a name, saying, There is a son born to Naomi.[28] Was it then Naomi who bore him? Surely it was Ruth who bore him! But Ruth bore and Naomi brought him up; hence he was called after her [Naomi's] name.

R.Johanan says it is derived from the following: And his wife Ha-Jehudiah[29] bore Yered the father of Gedor [and Heber the father of Soco, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah][30] and these are the sons of Bithia the daughter of Pharaoh, whom Mered took.[31] Now, 'Mered' was Caleb; and why was he called Mered?[32] . — Because he opposed the counsel of the other spies.[33] But was he [Moses][34] indeed born of Bithia and not rather of Jochebed? — But Jochebed bore and Bithia reared him;[35] therefore he was called after her.

R.Eleazar says: It is inferred from the following: Thou hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph, Selah.[36] Did then Joseph beget them; surely it was rather Jacob? — But Jacob begot and Joseph sustained them; therefore they are called by his name.

R.Samuel b. Nahmani said in R. Jonathan's name: He who teaches the son of his neighbour the Torah, Scripture ascribes it to him as if he had begotten him, as it says, Now, these are the generations of Aaron and Moses;[37] whilst further on it is written, These are the names of the sons of Aaron: thus teaching thee that Aaron begot and Moses taught them; hence they are called by his name.[38]

Therefore thus saith the Lord unto the house of Jacob, who redeemed Abraham.[39] But where do we find that Jacob redeemed Abraham? — Rab Judah answered; It means that he redeemed him from the pains of rearing children;[40] hence the passage, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.[41] He shall not now be ashamed — of his father, neither shall his face now become pale — because of his grandfather.

[The second husband of David's undivorced wife] is variously called Palti[42] and Paltiel![43] — R. Johanan said: His name was really Palti, but why was he called Paltiel? Because God saved him from transgression.[44] What did he do [to be delivered from sin]? He planted a sword between her [Michal] and himself, and said, Whoever [first] attempts this thing,[45] shall be pierced with this sword. But is it not stated: And her husband [Palti] went with her?[46] — This means that he was to her like a husband.[47] But is it not written, He went weeping? — This was for losing the good deed [of self-restraint]. Hence [he followed her] to Bahurim, implying that they both had remained like unmarried youths[48] and not tasted the pleasure of marital relations.

R.Johanan said: Joseph's strong [temptation][49] was but a petty trial to Boaz;[50] and that of Boaz was small in comparison with that of Palti son of Layish. ‘Joseph's strong temptation was but a petty trial to Boaz,’ as it is written, And it came to pass at mid-night and the man was startled, ‘wa — yillafeth’.[51] What is the meaning of wa — yillafeth? — Rab said: His flesh became [as hard] as turnip heads.[52]

Many are compound with the name of God (El) preceding it, as El-Nathan, or succeeding it, as Amiel, or as in the instance in question. The chief reason for the later addition of 'El' to 'Palti' is taken to express, as it were, the ineffably holy name to which he dedicated himself.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 20a

'And that of Boaz was small in comparison with that of Palti son of Layish.' as has been stated above.[1]

R.Johanan said: What is meant by the verse, Many daughters have done valiantly, but thou excellest them all?[2] — 'Many daughters', refers to Joseph and Boaz; 'and thou excellest them all', to Palti son of Layish.[3]

R.Samuel b. Nahmani said in R. Jonathan's name: What is meant by the verse, Grace is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised?[4] — 'Grace is deceitful' refers to [the trial of] Joseph; 'and beauty is vain', to Boaz; while 'and a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised', to the case of Palti son of Layish. Another interpretation is: 'Grace is deceitful', refers to the generation of Moses;[5] 'and beauty is vain' to that of Joshua; 'and she that feareth the Lord shall be praised', to that of Hezekiah.[6] Others Say: 'Grace is deceitful', refers to the generations of Moses and Joshua; 'and beauty is vain', to the generation of Hezekiah; while 'she that feareth the Lord shall be praised'. refers to the generation of R. Judah son of R. Ila'i, of whose time it was said that [though the poverty was so great that] six of his disciples had to cover themselves with one garment between them, yet they studied the Torah.[7] MISHNAH. IF A DEATH OCCURS IN HIS [THE KING'S] FAMILY, HE MUST NOT GO OUT OF THE DOOR OF HIS PALACE. R. JUDAH SAID: IF HE WISHES TO FOLLOW THE BIER, HE MAY, EVEN AS WE FIND IN THE CASE OF DAVID, WHO FOLLOWED THE BIER OF ABNER, AS IT IS WRITTEN, AND KING DAVID FOLLOWED THE BIER.[8] BUT THEY [THE RABBIS] ANSWERED: [THIS IS NO PROOF, FOR] THAT WAS BUT TO PACIFY THE PEOPLE.[9] AND WHEN THE MOURNERS' MEAL[10] [AFTER THE FUNERAL] IS GIVEN TO HIM, ALL THE PEOPLE RECLINE ON THE GROUND, AND HE SITS ON THE DARGESH.[11]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Wherever it is customary for women to follow the bier, they may do so; to precede it, they may do so [likewise]. R. Judah said: Women must always precede the bier, for we find that David followed the coffin of Abner, as it is written, And King David followed the bier.[12] They [sc. the Rabbis] said to him: That was only to appease the people, and they were indeed appeased, for David went to and fro, from the men to the women and back from the women to the men, as it is written, So all the people and all Israel understood that day that it was not of the king to slay Abner.[13]

Raba expounded [in a lecture]: What is meant by the verse, And all the people came 'lehabroth' [to cause] David [to eat bread]?[14] The original text was, 'lehakroth'[15] but we read, 'lehabroth'. At first they intended to destroy him;[16] but afterwards, [being appeased,] they gave him to eat [the comforters' meal].

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Why was Abner punished? — Because he should have protested to Saul[17] but did not. R. Isaac, however, said: He did indeed do so, but was not heeded. Both derive their views from the same verse, viz., And the king lamented for Abner and said: Should Abner die as a churl dieth, thy hands were not bound nor thy feet put into fetters.[18] The one who says that he did not protest, interprets it thus: Thy hands were not bound nor thy feet put into fetters, why then didst thou not protest? [Therefore,] As a man falleth before the children of iniquity so didst thou fall. The other who maintains that Abner did protest but was not listened to, [holds that] he [David] expressed his astonishment: Should he have died as a churl dieth? Seeing that thou didst indeed protest to Saul, Why, then, didst thou fall as a man falleth before the children of iniquity? But on the view that he did protest, why was he punished? — R. Nahman b. Isaac says: Because he delayed the accession of David's dynasty by two and a half years.[19]

AND WHEN THE MOURNERS MEAL IS GIVEN TO HIM etc. What is a dargesh? — 'Ulla said: The bed of the domestic genius.[20] The Rabbis asked 'Ulla: How can it be that he should be made to sit on it now [as a mourner], when he had never sat on it before? Raba refuted their objection: What is the difficulty? Is this not similar to the eating and drinking, for hitherto we had not given him food and drink, while now, [after the funeral] we do![21] But if there is any objection, it is this: [It was taught] The dargesh need not be lowered[22] but must be stood up.[23] Thus, should you maintain that the daresh is the bed of the domestic genius, why is there no need to lower it? Surely it has been taught: The mourner in lowering the beds shall lower not only his own couch but all the others he has in the house! — But what is the difficulty? Perhaps it [the dargesh] is in the same category as a bed [sideboard] designed for holding utensils of which, the Tanna taught, that if it is designed for holding utensils, it need not be lowered. If indeed, there is any objection, it is this: [It has been taught:] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: As for the dargesh, its loops are undone, and it collapses of itself. Now if it be the bed of the domestic genius, has it any loops? — But when Rabin came [from Palestine][24] he said: One of the Rabbis named R. Tahlifa. who frequented the leatherworkers' market, told me that dargesh was the name of a bed of skins.[25] R. Jeremiah said in R. Johanan's name: A dargesh

Six months having elapsed after be was slain, David was generally recognised as king of Israel. There is a controversy with regard to the chronology of his reign. Rashi and Tosaf. both agree that the throne of Israel remained vacant for five years, but they differ as to the time the vacancy occurred. The former maintains it took place before the reign of Ish-Bosheth.

Gamaliel holds that there is no fear of this.

has the strapwork inside,[1] while an ordinary bed has the strapwork fixed over the frame.

An objection is raised: At what time do wooden utensils become susceptible to uncleanness?[2] A bed and a cradle when they are rubbed over with fish-skin.[3] Now if the ordinary bed has the strapwork over the frame, what need is there to rub over with fish-skin, [seeing that it is covered with the straps]? — Hence, both [a bed and a dargesh have the strappings] inside. But while the straps of a bed go in and out through slits, those of a dargesh go in and out through loops.

R.Jacob said in R. Joshua b. Levi's name: The halachah follows Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.

R.Jacob b. Ammi said: In the case of a bed whose poles[4] protrude [downward],[5] it is sufficient to set it up [on one side only].[6] MISHNAH. HE [THE KING] MAY LEAD FORTH [THE HOST] TO A VOLUNTARY WAR[7] ON THE DECISION OF A COURT OF SEVENTY-ONE. HE MAY FORCE A WAY THROUGH PRIVATE PROPERTY[8] AND NONE MAY OPPOSE HIM. THERE IS NO LIMITATION TO THE KING'S WAY.[9] THE PLUNDER TAKEN BY THE PEOPLE [IN WAR] MUST BE GIVEN TO HIM, AND HE RECEIVES THE FIRST CHOICE [WHEN IT IS DIVIDED].

GEMARA. But we have already once learnt it:[10] A voluntary war may be declared only by the permission of a court of seventy-one? — As the Tanna deals with all matters pertaining to the king, he also states [the law] concerning the declaration of a voluntary war.

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: All that is set out in the chapter [dealing with the actions] of a king,[11] he is permitted to do. Rab said: That chapter was intended only to inspire them with awe,[12] for it is written, Thou shalt in anywise set him king over thee;[13] [i.e.,] his awe should be over thee.

[The same point of difference is found among the following] Tannaim; R. Jose said: All that is set out in the Chapter [relating to the king],[14] the king is permitted to do. R. Judah said: That section was stated only to inspire them with awe,[12] for it is written, Thou shalt in anywise set him king over thee,[13] [meaning], that his awe should be over thee. And thus R. Judah said: Three commandments were given to Israel when they entered the land: [i] to appoint a king,[15] [ii] to cut off the seed of Amalek,[16] and [iii] to build themselves the chosen house.[17] While R. Nehorai[18] said: This section[19] was spoken only in anticipation of their future murmurings,[20] as it is written, And shalt say, I will set a king over me etc.[21]

It has been taught: R. Eliezer[22] said: The elders of the generation made a fit request, as it is written, Give us a king to judge us.[23] But the am ha-arez[24] acted unworthily, at it is written, That we also may be like all the nations and that our king may judge us and go before us.[25]

It has been taught: R. Jose[26] said: Three commandments were given to Israel when they entered the land; [i] to appoint a king; [ii] to cut off the seed of Amalek; [iii] and to build themselves the chosen house [i.e. the Temple] and I do not know which of them has priority. But, when it is said: The hand upon the throne of the Lord, the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation,[27] we must infer that they had first to set up a king, for ‘throne’ implies a king, as it is written, Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king.[28] Yet I still do not know which [of the other two] comes first, the building of the chosen Temple or the cutting off of the seed of Amalek. Hence, when it is written, And when He giveth you rest from all your enemies round about etc., and then [Scripture proceeds], Then it shall come to pass that the place which the Lord your God shall choose,[29] it is to be inferred that the extermination of Amalek is first. And so it is written of David, And it came to pass when the king dwelt in his house, and the Lord had given him rest from his enemies round about, and the passage continues; that the king said unto Nathan the Prophet: See now, I dwell in a house of cedars etc.[30]

Resh Lakish said: At first, Solomon reigned over the higher beings;[31] as it is written, Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king;[32] afterwards, [having sinned,] he reigned [only] over the lower,[33] as it is written, For he had dominion over all the region on this side the river, from Tifsah even to Gaza.[34]

Rab and Samuel [explain this verse in different ways]: One says, Tifsah was situated at one end of the world[35] and Gaza at the other. The other says: Tifsah and Gaza were beside each other,[36] and just as he reigned over these, so did he reign over the whole world. But eventually his reign was restricted to Israel, as it is written, I Koheleth have been king over Israel etc.[37] Later, his reign was confined to Jerusalem alone, even as it is written, The words of Koheleth, son of David, king in Jerusalem.[38] And still later he reigned only over his couch,[39] as it is written, Behold it is the litter of Solomon, three-score mighty men are about it etc.[40] And finally, he reigned only over his staff as it is written, This was my portion from all my labour.[41]

Rab and Samuel [explain this differently]: One says: His staff [was all that was left him]; the other: His Gunda.[42]

Did he regain his first power, or not? Rab and Samuel [differ]: One maintains that he did; the other, that he did not. The one who says that he did not, agrees with the view that Solomon was first a king and then a commoner;[43] the other, who says that he did, agrees with the view that he was first king, then commoner and finally king again.

HE MAY FORCE A WAY THROUGH PRIVATE PROPERTY etc.

Our Rabbis taught: Royal treasures[44] [must be given] to the king; but of all other spoil, half to the king and half to the people. Abaye said to R. Dimi or, according to others, to Rab Aha: We quite understand it is the natural thing to give royal treasures [wholly] to the king; but where do we learn that of all other spoil he is to receive half? — From the verse,

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 21a

And anointed him [Solomon] unto the Lord to be prince, and Zadok to be priest.[1] Thus, the prince is compared with Zadok: just as in the case of Zadok [High Priest], half belonged to him, and half to his brethren, so also in the case of the ruler. And whence do we know it of Zadok himself? — As it has been taught, for Rabbi said: And it [the shewbread] shall be for Aaron and his sons;[2] this means, half belonged to Aaron and half to his sons.

MISHNAH. NEITHER SHALL HE MULTIPLY WIVES TO HIMSELF[3]. — ONLY EIGHTEEN. R. JUDAH SAID: HE MAY HAVE MORE, PROVIDED THEY DO NOT TURN AWAY HIS HEART. R. SIMEON SAID: HE MUST NOT MARRY EVEN ONE WHO MAY TURN AWAY HIS HEART. WHY THEN IS IT WRITTEN, NEITHER SHALL HE MULTIPLY WIVES TO HIMSELF?[4] — EVEN THOUGH THEY BE WOMEN LIKE ABIGAIL.[5]

GEMARA. Are we to assume that R. Judah interprets Biblical law on the basis of its reason,[6] and

R. Simeon does not?[7] But we find the reverse; for it has been taught: A pledge must not be taken from a widow, whether poor or rich, as it is written, Thou shalt not take the widow's raiment to pledge:[8] this is R. Judah's view. R. Simeon ruled: We may take a pledge of a rich widow but not of a poor one, for [in the latter case] thou art bound to return [the pledge] to her daily, and [thereby] cause her an evil name among her neighbours. Whereon we asked: What does he mean? [And the answer was:] Since thou hast taken a pledge of her, thou must return it to her [each evening][9] and so [by her frequent visits to thee] thou wouldst get her an evil name among her neighbours. Hence we see that R. Judah does not interpret the Biblical law according to its reason, while R. Simeon does![10] — Generally, indeed, R. Judah does not interpret Biblical law on the basis of its reason; here, however, it is different, for here he merely expounds the reason stated in the text. Thus: Why the command, he shall not multiply wives to himself? It is that his heart be not turned aside.[11]

And R. Simeon? — He could answer you: Let us see: Generally we interpret the law according to the reason implied;[12] then Scripture should have read, He shall not multiply wives to himself, and nothing further, and I would then have known that the reason was that his heart turn not away. Why then state: That his heart turn not away? — To imply that he must not marry even a single one who may turn away his heart. Then how am I to explain, he shall not multiply?[13] — [As meaning that he may not marry many] even though they be [women like Abigail.

Whence do we deduce the number eighteen? — From the verse, And unto David were sons born in Hebron; and his first-born was Ammon of Ahinoam the Jezreelitess; the second, Chileab of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite; the third Absalom the son of Maacah; and the fourth, Adonijah the son of Haggith; and the fifth, Shefatiah the son of Abital; and the sixth, Ithream of Eglah, David's wife. These were born to David in Hebron.[14] And of them the Prophet said: And if that were too little, then would I add unto thee the like of these, [Ka-hennah] and the like of these, [we-kahennah],[15] each ‘kahennah’ implying six, which, with the original six, makes eighteen in all. Rabina objected: Why not assume that ‘kahennah’ implies twelve,[16] and ‘we-kahennah’, twenty-four?[17] It has indeed been taught likewise: ‘He shall not multiply wives to himself beyond twenty-four.’ And according to him who interprets the redundant ‘waw’,[18] it ought to be forty-eight. And it has been taught even so: ‘He shall not multiply wives to himself, more than forty-eight.’ Then what is the reason of the Tanna of our Mishnah? — R. Kahana said: He parallels the second ‘kahennah’ with the first; thus, just as the first ‘kahennah’ indicates [an increase of] six, so does the second. But there was Michal too![19] — Rab said: Eglah is Michal. And why was she called Eglah? Because she was beloved by him, as an Eglah [calf] by its mother. And thus it is said, If ye had not ploughed with my heifer etc.[20] But did Michal have children? Is it not written, And Michal the daughter of Saul had no child unto the day of her death.?[21] — R. Hisda said: She had no child until the day of her death, but on the day of her death she did.[22]

Let us see then: His children are enumerated [as born] in Hebron, whereas the incident with Michal[23] occurred in Jerusalem,[24] as it is written, Michal the daughter of Saul looked out at the window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the Lord, and she despised him in her heart.[25] And Rab Judah, or according to others, R. Joseph, said: Michal received her due punishment?[26] — But we might argue thus: Prior to that incident she did have [children], but after it she did not.

[Now as to the number eighteen:] Is it not stated, And David took him concubines and wives out of Jerusalem?[27] — To make up the eighteen. What are ‘wives’, and what are ‘concubines’? — Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Wives have ‘kethubah’[28] and ‘kiddushin’;[29] concubines have neither.

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: David had four hundred children, and all born of yefoth to'ar;[30] they had long locks[31] and all drove[32] in golden carriages. They used to march at the head of the troops and were men of power in the household of David.

Rab Judah further said in Rab's name: Tamar was a daughter of a yefath to'ar, as it is written, Now therefore I pray thee,[33] speak unto the King, for he will not withhold me from thee.[34] Now, should you imagine that she was the offspring of a legitimate marriage, how could his sister have been granted him [in marriage]? We must infer therefore, that she was the daughter of a yefath-to'ar.

And Amnon had a friend, whose name was Jonadab the son of Shimeah, David's brother, and Jonadab was a very subtle man etc.[35] Rab Judah said in Rab's name: 'Subtle' to do evil. And he said unto him, Why, O son of the king, art thou thus becoming leaner . . . . And Jonadab said unto him, Lay thee down on thy bed and feign thyself sick . . . and she dress the food in my sight . . . And she took the pan and poured them [the cakes] out before him.[36] Rab Judah in the name of Rab said: She made for him some kind of pancakes.[37]

Then Amnon hated her with exceeding great hatred etc.[38] For what reason? — R. Isaac answered: A hair becoming entangled, mutilated him privily. If this happened of itself, what was her part in it? — But we might rather say that she entangled it and caused, mutilation. But is this so? Did not Raba expound: What is meant by the verse: And thy renown went forth among the nations for thy beauty.[39] It is that the daughters of Israel had neither under-arm nor pubic hair?[40] — It was otherwise with Tamar, for she was the daughter of a yefath to'ar.

And Tamar put ashes on her head and rent her garment of many colours.[41] It was taught in the name of R. Joshua b. Korha. In that hour Tamar set up a great fence [about chastity]. They[42] said: if this could happen to kings' daughters, how much more to the daughters of ordinary men; if this could happen to the chaste, how much more to the wanton?

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: On that occasion, they made a decree against yihud[1] with [a married] or unmarried woman. But surely the prohibition of yihud with a married woman is a Biblical law! For R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: Where is [the prohibition of] yihud alluded to in the Biblical text? It is written: if thy brother, the son of thy mother entice thee.[2] Is it then only the son of a mother that can entice, and not the son of a father? But it is to teach that only a son may be alone with his mother; but no other man may be alone with women Biblically interdicted on account of incest![3] — Say rather that they enacted a decree against yihud with unmarried women.

And Adonijah the son of Haggith exalted himself, saying:' I will be king.[4] Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: This teaches us that he attempted to fit [the crown on his head] but it would not fit him.[5]

And he prepared him chariots and horses and fifty men to run before him.[6] What is there remarkable in this?[7] — Rab Judah said in Rab's name: They all had their spleen[8] and also the flesh of the soles of their feet cut off.[9] MISHNAH. HE SHALL NOT MULTIPLY HORSES UNTO HIMSELF[10] — ONLY AS MANY AS SUFFICE FOR HIS CHARIOT. AND SILVER AND GOLD HE SHALL NOT GREATLY MULTIPLY UNTO HIMSELF[11] — ONLY AS MUCH AS IS REQUIRED FOR 'ASPANYA'.[12] AND HE SHALL WRITE IN HIS OWN NAME A SEFER TORAH.[13] WHEN HE GOES FORTH TO WAR HE MUST TAKE IT WITH HIM; ON RETURNING, HE BRINGS IT BACK WITH HIM; WHEN HE SITS IN JUDGMENT IT SHALL BE WITH HIM, AND WHEN HE SITS DOWN TO EAT, BEFORE HIM, AS IT IS WRITTEN: AND IT SHALL BE WITH HIM AND HE SHALL READ THEREIN ALL THE DAYS OF HIS LIFE.[14]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: He shall not multiply horses to himself [lo]:[15] I might think, [this meant] not even such as are required for his horsemen and chariots. Scripture therefore states: 'lo' [to himself]: for himself[16] he may not multiply, but he may multiply as many as are required for his chariots and horsemen. How then am I to interpret the word horses?[17] — As [referring to] horses that stand idle.[18] And whence do we know that even a single idle horse comes under such a prohibition? — Scripture states: that he should multiply sus [a horse].[19] But if even a single idle horse involves [the prohibition,] He shall not multiply, why state horses [plural]? — To show us that with each single idle horse he transgresses anew the prohibitory command.

[Reverting to chariot horses:] Thus, it is only because Scripture wrote 'lo' [to him]: but otherwise, might we have thought that even those necessary for his chariots and horsemen are forbidden?[20] — It is necessary here to permit a large number.[21]

AND SILVER AND GOLD HE SHALL NOT MULTIPLY UNTO HIMSELF etc.

Our Rabbis taught: And silver and gold he shall not multiply 'lo' [unto himself]:[22] I might think [this meant] even for 'aspanya'. Therefore Scripture writes, 'lo'; only for himself [i.e., his own use] may he not multiply silver and gold, but he may do so for 'aspanya'. Thus, it is only because Scripture wrote 'lo': but otherwise, might we have thought that the prohibition extended even to money for 'aspanya'?[23] — [the word] is necessary here only to permit him a more generous provision.

Now that you say that 'lo' [to him] is for purpose of exegesis, how will you interpret, He shall not multiply wives 'lo' [to himself]?[24] — As excluding commoners.[25]

Rab Judah raised a point of contradiction [in the following passages:] It is written, And Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots.[26] But elsewhere we read, And Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots.[27] How are these [to be reconciled]? Thus: If he had forty thousand stables, each of them must have contained four thousand horsestalls; and if he had four thousand stables, each of them must have contained forty thousand stalls.

R. Isaac raised the following point of contradiction: It is written, Silver was nothing accounted for in the days of Solomon,[28] and further, And the king made silver to be in Jerusalem [as plentiful] as stones.[29] [Hence it had some value?] But these verses present no difficulty; the former refers to the period before he married Pharaoh's daughter; the latter, to the period after he married her.[30]

R. Isaac said: When Solomon married Pharaoh's daughter, Gabriel[31] descended and stuck a reed in the sea, which gathered a sand-bank around it, on which was built the great city of Rome.[32]

R. Isaac also said: Why were the reasons of [some] Biblical laws not revealed? — Because in two verses reasons were revealed, and they caused the greatest in the world [Solomon] to stumble. Thus it is written: He shall not multiply wives to himself,[33] whereon Solomon said, 'I will multiply wives yet not let my heart be perverted.' Yet we read, When Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart.[34] Again it is written: He shall not multiply to himself horses;[35] concerning which Solomon said, 'I will multiply them, but will not cause [Israel] to return [to Egypt].' Yet we read: And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six [hundred shekels of silver].[36]

AND HE SHALL WRITE IN HIS OWN NAME A SEFER TORAH. A Tanna taught: And he must not take credit[37] for one belonging to his ancestors.

Rabbah said: Even if one's parents have left him a Sefer Torah, yet it is proper that he should write one of his own, as it is written: Now therefore write ye this song[38] for you.[39]

Abaye raised an objection: 'He [the king] shall write a Sefer Torah for himself, for he should not seek credit[40] for one [written] by others:' [Surely, this implies] only a king [is thus enjoined], but not a commoner? — No, it is necessary here to teach the need for two Scrolls of the Law [for the King], even as it has been taught: And he shall write him the repetition[41] of this law,[42] [i.e.,] he shall write for himself two copies, one which goes in and out with him and the other to be placed in his treasure-house. The former which is to go in and out with him, [he shall write in the form of an amulet[43] and fasten it to his arm, as it is written, I have set God always before me, surely He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved.][44] He may not, while wearing it, enter the bath house, or the closet, as it is written: And it shall be with him and he shall read therein[45] — in places appropriate for reading it.

Mar Zutra or, as some say, Mar 'Ukba said: Originally the Torah was given to Israel in Hebrew characters and in the sacred [Hebrew] language; later, in the times of Ezra,[46] the Torah was given in Ashshurith script[47] and Aramaic language. [Finally], they selected for Israel[48] the Ashshurith script and Hebrew language, leaving the Hebrew characters and Aramaic language for the hedyototh. Who are meant by the 'hedyototh'? — R. Hisda answers: The Cutheans.[49] And what is meant by Hebrew characters? — R. Hisda said: The libuna'ah script.[50]

It has been taught: R. Jose said: Had Moses not preceded him, Ezra would have been worthy of receiving the Torah for Israel. Of Moses it is written, And Moses went up unto God,[51] and of Ezra it is written, He, Ezra, went up from Babylon.[52] As the going up of the former refers to the [receiving of the] Law, so does the going up of the latter. Concerning Moses, it is stated: And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments;[53] and concerning Ezra, it is stated: For Ezra had prepared his heart to expound the law of the Lord [his God] to do it and to teach Israel statutes and judgments.[54] And even though the Torah was not given through him, its writing was changed through him, as it is written:

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 22a

And the writing of the letter was written in the Aramaic character and interpreted into the Aramaic [tongue].[1] And again it is written, And they could not read the writing nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof.[2] Further, it is written: And he shall write the copy [mishneh] of this law,[3] — in writing which was destined to be changed.[4] Why is it called Ashshurith? — Because it came with them from Assyria.[5]

It has been taught: Rabbi said: The Torah was originally given to Israel in this [Ashshurith] writing. When they sinned, it was changed into Ro'az.[6] But when they repented,[7] the [Assyrian characters] were re-introduced, as it is written: Turn ye to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will bring back the Mishneh unto thee.[8] Why [then] was it named Ashshurith?[9] — Because its script was upright [me'ushshar].

R. Simeon b. Eliezer said on the authority of R. Eliezer b. Parta, who spoke on the authority of R. Eleazar of Modin: This writing [of the law] was never changed, for it is written: The 'waws' [hooks] of the pillars.[10] As the word 'pillars' had not changed, neither had the word 'wawim' [hooks].[11] Again it is written, And unto the Jews, according to their writing and language[12] ; as their language had not changed, neither had their writing. Then how shall I interpret the words, and he shall write for himself Mishneh [a copy] of this law?[13] — As indicating the need of two written Torahs; the one to go in and out with him; the other to be deposited by him in his treasure-house. The one that is to go in and out with him, he is to write in the form of an amulet and attach to his arm, as it is written, I have set God always before me.[14] But how does the other [who maintains that the writing was changed][15] interpret, I have set [etc.]? — He employs it as R. Hanah b. Bizna, who said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: He who prays should regard himself [i.e., behave] as if the Shechinah were before him, as it is written, I have set God always before me.[16]

But what can the phrase, they could not read the writing, mean [on the view of R. Simeon, who asserts that this writing was not changed]? — Rab said: The passage was written in Gematria:[17] Y-T-T. Y-T-T. 'A-D-K. P-U-G-H-M-T.[18] How did he interpret it to them? — As M-N-A. M-N-A. T-K-L. U-F-R-S-Y-N.[19] — 'Mene', God has numbered thy kingdom and brought it to an end. 'Tekel', thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting. 'Peres', thy kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians.

Samuel said: [It was written thus:] M-M-T-U-S. N-N-K-F-Y. 'A-'A-L-R-N.[20] R. Johanan said: [It was written:] A-N-M. A-N-M. L-K-T-N-Y-S-R-F-U;[21] while R. Ashi says: It was written: N-M-A. N-M-A.K-T-L. F-U-R-S-Y-N.[22]

MISHNAH. NO ONE MAY RIDE ON HIS [THE KING'S] HORSE, OR SIT ON HIS THRONE, OR MAKE USE OF HIS SCEPTRE, NO ONE MAY SEE HIM WHEN HIS HAIR IS BEING CUT, OR WHEN HE IS NAKED, OR WHEN IN HIS BATH, FOR IT IS WRITTEN: THOU SHALT SURELY SET OVER THEE A KING[23] — THAT HIS AWE MAY BE OVER THEE.

GEMARA. R. Jacob said in R. Johanan's name: Abishag was permitted to Solomon [in marriage][24] but not to Adonijah.[25] She was permitted to Solomon, for he was a king, and a king may make use of the king's sceptre;[26] but she was forbidden to Adonijah, for he was a commoner.

What are the facts regarding Abishag? — It is written: King David was old, stricken in years etc. His servants said unto him, Let there be sought etc. Further it is written, They sought for him a fair damsel etc.; and it is written, And the damsel [Abishag] was very fair, and she became a companion to the king and ministered unto him.[27] She said to him, 'Let us marry,' but he [David] said: 'Thou art forbidden to me.'[28] 'When courage fails the thief, he becomes virtuous,'[29] she gibed. Then he said to them [his servants], 'Call me Bath-Sheba'. And we read: And Bath-Sheba went to the king into the chamber.[30] Rab Judah said in Rab's name: On that occasion Bath-Sheba dried herself thirteen times.[31]

R. Shaman b. Abba said: Come and see with what great reluctance is divorce granted; King David was permitted yihud [with Abishag], yet not divorce [of one of his wives].[32]

R. Eliezer[33] said: For him who divorces the first wife, the very altar sheds tears, as it is written: And this further ye do, ye cover the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping and with sighing, in so much that he regardeth not the offering any more, neither receiveth it with good will at your hand.[34] Further it is written: Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously, though she is thy companion and the wife of thy covenant.[35]

R. Johanan or, as some say, R. Eleazar said: The death of a man's wife may only be ascribed to his failure to pay his debts,[36] as it is said: If thou hast not wherewith to pay, why should he take away the bed from under thee?[37] R. Johanan also said: He whose first wife has died, [is grieved as much] as if the destruction of the Temple had taken place in his days, as it is written: Son of man, behold I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke; yet thou shalt not make lamentation nor weep; neither shall thy tears run down.[38] Again it is written, And I spoke unto the people in the morning, and at even my wife died. And further it is written, Behold I will profane my Sanctuary, the pride of your power, the desire of your eyes.[39]

R. Alexandri said: The world is darkened for him whose wife has died in his days [i.e., predeceased him], as it is written, The light shall be dark because of his tent[40] and his lamp over him shall be put out.[41] R. Jose b. Hanina said: His steps grow short,[42] as it is said: The steps of his strength shall be straightened.[43] R. Abbahu said: His wits collapse, as it is written, And his own counsel shall cast him down.[44]

Rabbah b. Bar Hannah said in R. Johanan's name: To effect a union between man and woman is as difficult as the dividing of the Red Sea,[45] as it is written: God maketh the solitary dwell in houses; He bringeth out the prisoners unto prosperity.[46] But is it really so? Did not Rab Judah say in Rab's name: Forty days before the embryo is formed, a heavenly voice goes forth and says: The daughter of so and so for so and so?[47] — There is no difficulty: this applies to the first marriage; the earlier statement, to the second.

R. Samuel b. Nahman said: All things can be replaced, except the wife of one's youth, as it is written, And a wife of [one's] youth, can she be rejected?[48]

Rab Judah taught his son R. Isaac: Only with one's first wife does one find pleasure,[49] as it is said: Let thy fountain be blessed and have joy of the wife of thy youth.[1] 'Of what kind of woman do you speak?' he asked him. — 'Of such as your mother', was the reply. But is this true? Had not Rab Judah taught his son R. Isaac, the verse: And I find more bitter than death the woman whose heart is snares and nets,[2] and he [the son] asked him: 'What kind of woman?' He answered. 'Such as your mother'? — True, she was a quick-tempered woman but nevertheless easily appeased with a word.

R. Samuel b. Unya said in the name of Rab: A woman [before marriage] is a shapeless lump,[3] and concludes a covenant only with him who transforms her [into] a [useful] vessel, as it is written: For thy maker is thy husband; the Lord of Hosts is his name.[4]

A Tanna taught: The death of a man is felt by none but his wife; and that of a woman, but her husband. Regarding the former, it is said: And Elimelech, Naomi's[5] husband, died.[6] And regarding the latter it is written: And as for me, when I came from Padan, Rachel died unto me.[7]

NOR MAY ONE SEE HIM etc. Our Rabbis taught: The king has his hair trimmed every day; the High Priest, every eve of the Sabbath, and a common Priest, once in thirty days.

'The king has his hair trimmed every day.' as it is written, Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty.[8] 'The High Priest, every eve of the Sabbath.' R. Samuel b. Nahman said in R. Johanan's name: This is because of the [weekly] renewal of the priestly watches.[9]

'The Common Priest, once in thirty days,' because it is written: Neither shall they shave their heads nor suffer their locks [pera'] to grow: they shall only poll their heads.[10] Identity of law is deduced from [the use of] pera' here and in the section on the Nazirite; here it is written, They shall not let their locks [pera'] grow; while there it is stated, He shall let the locks [pera'] of the hair of his head grow long;[11] Just as there, [a] thirty days' [growth is meant], so here too.[12] And we also learnt:[13] The period for unspecified neziruth[14] is thirty days. Whence do we deduce this in the other passage?? — R. Mathna said: Scripture states, He shall be [yihyeh] holy;[15] the gematria[16] of yihyeh being thirty.[17]

R. Papa said to Abaye: But perhaps [it means] that they shall not [let their hair] grow so long — [i.e. for a full month]?[18] — He answered: Were it written, 'They shall not let [their hair] grow to become 'pera''; it would have meant what you suggest. But since the text reads, And their locks [pera'] they shall not let grow, it implies that they may let it become 'pera'' but thereafter must not let it grow longer. If so [that the prohibition is based on that verse], it should [hold good] even nowadays, [when there is no Temple]! — This [restriction] is analogous to [that of] wine: just as wine was forbidden [them] only when they entered [the Temple],[19] but permitted at any other time, so is the growing of hair forbidden only when there is entry [into the Temple] and permitted at all other times. But is wine permitted them when there is no entering into the Temple? Has it not been taught: Rabbi said: In my opinion, Priests should by right be at all times forbidden to drink wine,[20] but what can I do, seeing that 'their calamity [the destruction of the Temple] has been to their advantage in the matter?[21] Whereon Abaye said: In agreement with whom do priests drink wine nowadays? In agreement with Rabbi. It may therefore be inferred that the Rabbis forbid it![22] — In that case, the reason is this: the Temple might speedily be rebuilt and when a priest suitable for its service is required, he might not be found. Then here too [i.e., regarding the restriction of hair-growth] may not the same thing happen? — In the latter case, it is possible to trim the hair and [immediately] enter. But there too [sc. wine drinking], one can slumber a while [i.e., sleep it off] and then enter? For R. Aha said: A mil's walk or a little sleep counteracts [the effects of] wine. But surely it was stated of this: R. Nahman said in R. Abbahu's name: This applies only to one who has drunk not more than a rebi'ith;[23] but if he has drunk more, the walk will only cause more fatigue, and the sleep more drunkenness!

R. Ashi said: Since those drunk with wine defile the service [if they officiate], the Rabbis enacted that precautionary measure;[24] but seeing that those with long hair do not defile the service, they made no decree against them.

An objection is raised: The following [priests] are liable to death: those who let their hair grow and those who are drunk with wine.[25] Now, as for those drunk with wine, it is correct, because it is written, Drink no wine nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons with thee, that ye die not.[26] But whence do we know it of those with long hair? — Because the former is assimilated to the latter, for it is written, Neither shall they shave their heads nor suffer their locks to grow long, which is followed by, Neither shall they drink wine etc. Hence, just as drunkenness [during the service] is punishable by death, so is the growth of long hair. And it also follows, just as drunkenness defiles the Temple service, so does the growing of long hair![27] This is a difficulty.[28]

Rabina said to R. Ashi: Before Ezekiel came, and told us this [that those who let their hair grow and officiate thus are punishable by death], who stated it?[29] — But according to your view,[30] what of R. Hisda's statement, [viz.,] This law[31] was not learnt from the teaching of Moses our teacher, until Ezekiel came and taught, No alien, uncircumcised in heart and uncircumcised in flesh shall enter into my Sanctuary to serve me.[32] But before Ezekiel came, who stated it? Consequently, it must have been a tradition, and then Ezekiel came and found a support for it in Scripture [i.e., the Pentateuch]. Similarly, here too, [in the question of hair-growth] it was a traditional teaching, and Ezekiel merely upheld it in the passage quoted [further, the Halachah, as handed down, states only that they are liable to death, but not that they defile the Temple-service].[33]

What is the meaning of, They shall only poll their heads? — A Tanna taught: Hair cut in the Julian style.[34] What was that? — Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: A unique manner of hairdressing. Yet what was it like? R. Ashi said: The ends of one row [of hair] lay alongside the roots of the next.

Rabbi was asked: In what fashion was the hair of the High Priest cut? — He answered: Go and observe the haircut of Ben Eleasa.[35] It has been taught: Not for nothing did Ben Eleasa expend money so lavishly upon his hairdressing, but to display the High-Priestly fashion. [

MISHNAH. CIVIL ACTIONS [ARE TO BE TRIED] BY THREE. EACH [LITIGANT] CHOOSES ONE, AND THE TWO JOINTLY CHOOSE A THIRD: SO HOLDS R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES RULE: THE TWO JUDGES NOMINATE THE THIRD. EACH PARTY MAY OBJECT TO THE JUDGE CHOSEN BY THE OTHER, SO HOLDS R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: WHEN IS THIS SO? ONLY IF THE OBJECTOR ADDUCES PROOF THAT THEY ARE EITHER KINSMEN OR [OTHERWISE] INELIGIBLE; BUT IF FIT OR RECOGNISED BY THE BETH DIN AS MUMHIN,[1] THEY CANNOT BE DISQUALIFIED.

EACH PARTY MAY REJECT THE WITNESSES PRODUCED BY THE OTHER:[2] SO HOLDS R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY, WHEN IS THIS SO? ONLY WHEN PROOF IS BROUGHT THAT THEY ARE EITHER KINSMEN OR [OTHERWISE] INELIGIBLE; BUT IF THEY ARE [LEGALLY] ELIGIBLE, NO ONE CAN DISQUALIFY THEM.

GEMARA. Why should each of the parties choose one [Beth din]:[3] do not three [judges] suffice? — The Mishnah is meant thus: If each party chose a different Beth din, [so that one is not mutually accepted], they must jointly choose a third.[4] Can then the debtor too reject [the Beth din chosen by the creditor]? Did not R. Eleazar say:[5] This refers only to the creditor; but the debtor can be compelled to appear for trial in his [the creditor's] town? — It is as R. Johanan said [below]: we learnt this only in reference to Syrian lawcourts;[6] and so here too; but not Mumhin.[7] R. Papa said: It may even refer to Mumhin, e.g., the courts of R. Huna and R. Hisda,[8] for he [the debtor] can say:

Am I giving you any trouble?[9]

We learnt: THE SAGES RULE: THE TWO JUDGES NOMINATE THE THIRD. Now, should you think it means as we have said, viz., Beth din;[10] can a Beth din, after being rejected, go and choose them another?[11] Again, how interpret, EACH PARTY CHOOSES ONE?[12] — But it means thus: Each [litigant] having chosen a judge, these two [litigants] jointly select a third. Why should they do so? — They said in 'the West'[13] in the name of R. Zera: Since each selects a judge, and together they [the litigants] select the third, a true judgment will be rendered.[14]

BUT THE SAGES RULE etc. Shall we say that they[15] differ in regard to the law cited by Rab Judah in the name of Rab? For Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Witnesses may not sign a deed unless they are aware who is to sign with them:[16] R. Meir thus disagreeing with the dictum of Rab Judah given in the name of Rab,[17] while the Rabbis accept it?[18] — No, all agree with Rab Judah's statement in Rab's name and none dispute that the [third judge] must have the consent of his colleagues; they only differ as to whether the consent of the litigants is necessary. R. Meir maintains that the consent of the litigants is also required, while the Rabbis hold, only that of the judges is required, but not that of the litigants.

The [above] text [states]: Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Witnesses may not sign a deed etc. It has been taught likewise: The fair minded[19] of the people in Jerusalem used to act thus: They would not sign a deed without knowing who would sign with them; they would not sit in judgment unless they knew who was to sit with them; and they would not sit at table without knowing their fellow diners.

EACH PARTY MAY OBJECT TO THE JUDGE CHOSEN BY THE OTHER.

Has then anyone the right to reject judges? — R. Johanan said: This refers to the Syrian courts.[20] But [you say that] Mumhin cannot be rejected? Surely since the last clause states, BUT THE SAGES SAY: WHEN IS THIS SO? ONLY IF THE OBJECTOR ADDUCES PROOF THAT THEY ARE EITHER KINSMEN OR [OTHERWISE] INELIGIBLE; BUT IF FIT OR RECOGNISED BY THE BETH DIN AS MUMHIN, THEY CANNOT BE DISQUALIFIED: does it not follow that R. Meir refers even to Mumhin! — It is meant thus: But if they are fit, they rank as Mumhin appointed by the Beth din, and so cannot be disqualified.

Come and hear: 'The Rabbis said to R. Meir: It does not rest with him to reject a judge who is a Mumheh for the public'?[21] — Say [thus]: It does not rest with him to reject a judge whom the public has accepted as a Mumheh. It has been taught likewise: One may[22] go on rejecting judges until he undertakes [that the action shall be tried] before a Beth din of Mumhin:[23] this is the view of R. Meir.[24]

But witnesses [when not disqualified] are as Mumhin;[25] yet R. Meir said: EACH PARTY MAY REJECT THE WITNESSES PRODUCED BY THE OTHER! — Surely it has been stated regarding this: Resh Lakish said: Imagine a holy mouth [sc. R. Meir] uttering such a thing![26] Read [therefore] 'THE WITNESS', [singular].[27] But for what purpose is a single witness [competent]? Shall we say, for the actual payment of money?[28] then his testimony is Biblically invalid! If for [the administration of] an oath, then his evidence is [legally] as trustworthy as that of two![29] — In fact, he refers to the payment of money, but it [sc. R. Meir's ruling] arises only where both parties have voluntarily accepted his testimony as equivalent to that of two witnesses. Then what does he thereby teach: that he may retract? But we have already learnt this once:[30] If one says, I accept my father or thy father as trustworthy,[31] or I have confidence in three herdsmen,[32] R. Meir says, He may [subsequently] retract; but the Sages rule, He cannot.

(1) V. Glos.

(2) The Gemara discusses the conditions of such disqualification.
(3) Which consists of three judges. By 'ONE' in the Mishnah, the text understands a court, according to which interpretation nine judges are necessary. So Rashi. This, however, is a very strained interpretation, particularly in view of the opening statement of the Mishnah: CIVIL ACTIONS ARE TO BE TRIED BY THREE. Tosaf. therefore states that the question is based on the assumption that the meaning of the Mishnah is this: Each litigant chooses a complete Beth din; and then the two courts jointly nominate a third court, and it is the third court that tries the case. Hence the question: Why such a clumsy proceeding: cannot the two litigants jointly select one court which shall try the action?
(4) But it is not meant that the procedure must be so from the very outset.

(8) [R. Huna's court was at Sura, and R. Hisda had his school, according to Sherira, at Matha Mehasia on the outskirts of Sura.]
(9) For, while it is just that the debtor shall not have the power of putting the creditor to great trouble in choice of locale, seeing that the debtor is under an obligation to the creditor, this objection does not hold good when the two courts are so close to each other.
(10) I.e., each litigant chooses a Beth din.
(11) Surely not!
(12) Which implies that the actual procedure must be so from the beginning.
(13) R. Jeremiah, supra 17b.
(14) For both parties have confidence in the court.
(15) R. Meir and the Sages.
(16) I.e., who is the other witness. The reason is that the other witness may prove to be unfit, in which case both signatures are null, and the eligible signatory is thus put to shame.
(17) I.e., he does not require the witnesses to know beforehand who will join them; and in the same way, it is unnecessary for the two judges to know beforehand whether the third will be a fit and proper person; therefore the third is selected by the litigants.
(18) V. previous note; the reasoning is reversed.
(19) נקיי הדעת, [(a) 'the cautious' (Buchler); (b) 'the pious' (Muller); (c) 'the nobility' (Klein, S. מדעי היהדות I, 72 ff.)]
(20) v. supra p. 130, n. 2.
(21) From this it may be inferred that in R. Meir's opinion even Mumhin may be rejected.
(22) But not a competent body, in which case R. Meir may agree with the Rabbis.
(23) This translation follows an emended text. V. marginal gloss in curr. edd.
(24) Hence it is evident that even R. Meir agrees that Mumhin cannot be rejected.
(25) All are expert to attest what they have witnessed.
(26) Surely it is absurd to suggest that a litigant having produced witnesses in his favour, his opponent can simply reject them.
(27) I.e., each can reject only a single witness produced by the other: a single witness, of course, is not on a par with an expert Beth din.
(28) I.e., the debtor is to be ordered to pay on his evidence.
(29) If the plaintiff has one witness in his support, his testimony is so far admissible as to subject the defendant to an oath; and the defendant cannot reject his testimony, just as he could not reject the testimony of two witnesses.
(30) Viz., in the next Mishnah.
(31) To act as judges in a dispute, though normally relations of the litigants were ineligible. That the reference is to judges follows from the fact that three herdsmen are mentioned.
(32) In those days holding the lowest rank in society.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 23b

And thereon R. Dimi the son of R. Nahman the son of R. Joseph observed: This means, e.g., that he accepted him as one [of the three judges]![1] — Both are necessary. Had he stated only the law regarding the 'fathers' it might have been assumed that only there do the Rabbis[2] rule that he cannot retract, because 'my father' and 'thy father' are fit [to act as judges] in other cases; but where one witness is accepted as two, one might have thought that the Rabbis agreed with R. Meir, since he is unfit in general.[3] Whilst had the law been stated in this instance, I might have thought that only here does R. Meir rule thus; but in the other case, he agrees with the Rabbis.[4] Hence both are necessary. But since the first clause mentions, 'JUDGE' [singular], whilst the second reads, 'WITNESSES' [plural], it follows that it is to be taught literally?[5] — Said R. Eleazar: This is a case where he [the litigant] together with another come forward to disqualify them.[6] But is he empowered to do this, seeing that he is an interested party?[7] — R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: [Yes;] e.g., where he makes public the ground of his objection. What objection is meant? Shall we say, an objection based on a charge of robbery? But does that rest with him, seeing that he is an interested party? Hence it must be an objection on the grounds of family unfitness.[8] Now, R. Meir contends that they [sc. the litigant and his supporter] testify against the man's family,[9] whilst he is automatically disqualified; and the Rabbis hold that after all said and done, he is an interested party.

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine][10] he said in R. Johanan's name: The controversy arises only where [the plaintiff said that he could produce] two pairs of witnesses. Now, R. Meir holds that the litigant is obliged to verify [his statements regarding his second set of witnesses];[11] while the Rabbis say that he is not so obliged.[12] But if only one pair of witnesses [are offered], all agree that they cannot be disqualified.

R. Ammi and R. Assi said in R. Dimi's presence: What if there is only one pair [of witnesses]? [You ask, what if] there is only one set? Have you not just said, 'but if only one pair of witnesses [are offered] all agree that they cannot be disqualified'? But the question is, what if the second pair is found to consist of kinsfolk or to be [otherwise] ineligible?[13] — He answered them: The first witnesses have already testified.[14]

Others say that R. Ashi gave the above answer.

Shall we say that their [sc. R. Meir and the Rabbis'] dispute is the same as that of Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? For it has been taught: If one comes to be judged on the strength of a deed and hazakah;[15] Rabbi said: The case must be determined by a deed.[16] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: It is determined by hazakah [alone]. But we raised this question thereon: By hazakah [only], and not by deed?[17] But rather say thus: Even by hazakah [alone]. And it is an established fact that their dispute is whether the defendant is obliged to verify [his statement]![18] — No, according to the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, none [i.e. neither R. Meir nor the Rabbis] differ here;[19] they only differ on the basis of Rabbi's opinion. Thus, R. Meir agrees with Rabbi. But the Rabbis can tell thee: Rabbi gives this ruling there only in the case of hazakah, which is valid proof[20] only in virtue of there having been a deed.[21] But here, since the legal standing of one pair is independent of the other, even Rabbi agrees that the claimant need not verify [his statements in full].

When Rabin came [from Palestine],[22] he said in R. Johanan's name: The first clause [of the Mishnah]

---

(1) And since one of the three judges is ineligible by Biblical law, he may retract; so here, since one witness cannot impose payment by Biblical law, although he was accepted as trustworthy, he may retract. Consequently we were already informed of this. It may be asked, Why is R. Dimi's observation mentioned at all: does not the difficulty arise in any case? But without this dictum, it might be said that the litigant can retract in this case because there are two irregularities: (a) one only was permitted to try the suit; (b) even he was Biblically ineligible. But if there is only one irregularity, as in the case under discussion, where a single witness was accepted as the equivalent of two, it might be thought that the litigants cannot retract. Therefore R. Dimi's interpretation is adduced, to show that here too there was only one fault, that one of the judges was a relative (Tosaf.).

(2) The Sages.
(3) To count as two.
(4) By the preceding argument inverted.
(5) Which overthrows Resh Lakish's interpretation, hence the original difficulty remains.
(6) And two have authority to reject; but actually the reference is to two witnesses.
(7) Hence, only one witness is left, and one has no power to overthrow the evidence of two.
(8) E.g., that he was the descendant of an unliberated slave whose testimony is inadmissible.
(9) And in this matter, the litigant is not an interested party.
(10) V. p. 393, n. 1.
(11) Therefore, the defendant is not regarded as an interested party when he testifies to the family unfitness of one of the first pair, since the plaintiff is bound to adduce the second set in any case, who are themselves sufficient. Should the plaintiff be unable to adduce a second set, he is the cause of his own loss.
(12) Consequently, notwithstanding his first assertion, he can insist on basing his claims on the first pair of witnesses only, and so the defendant becomes an interested party in seeking to disqualify one of these witnesses. — Tosaf. and one interpretation of Rashi. Rashi, however, reverses the reading and gives another explanation.
(13) Can we say, since the second pair has thus been rendered ineligible, the defendant is retrospectively discovered to have been an interested party in his testimony disqualifying the first pair, since the second is no longer available, and therefore his evidence in respect to the first is now inadmissible? Or, on the other hand, it may be argued that when the defendant gave his evidence he was a disinterested party, and consequently it still holds good.
(14) I.e., the testimony of the defendant in respect to the first, having been accepted, stands good.
(15) A claim based on undisturbed possession during a legally fixed period — three years. This means, if one's ownership of land is challenged, and he asserts that he can prove it both by a deed of sale, which he has in his possession, and also by hazakah.
(16) And if he failed to produce it, hazakah would not determine ownership. Though hazakah is usually accepted as proof, it is not accepted here, since the defendant asserted that he had the deed of conveyance in his possession.
(17) Surely it cannot be maintained that if a deed of sale is produced, three years of undisturbed possession must also be proved!
(18) Thus: Rabbi maintains that the whole statement must be verified, and therefore the deed is necessary; whilst R. S. b. G. holds that it need not be verified, just as though he had never made it, and therefore hazakah alone is sufficient (v. B.B. 169b-170a). Rabbi will accordingly agree with R. Meir, and R. S. b. G. with the Rabbis.
(19) For it is obviously impossible to reconcile R. Meir with R. S. b. G.
(20) Lit., ‘which comes’.
(21) Three years undisturbed possession proves ownership only when the defendant pleads that he bought the land, was given a deed, but lost it. Therefore, since the defendant asserted in the first place that he could produce the deed, evidence of undisturbed possession is not enough.
(22) V. p. 390, n. 1 .

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 24a

refers to invalid witnesses, but competent judges: hence, since[1] the witnesses are invalidated, the judges too are disqualified.[2] While the latter clause deals with invalid judges and competent witnesses; therefore, since the judges are disqualified, the witnesses too are rejected. Raba objected: As for arguing[2] that since the witnesses are [undisputably] disqualified, so are the judges too: that is correct, seeing that another bench of judges is available [to try the case]. But [can one argue], since the judges are disqualified, so are the witnesses too, seeing that no other witnesses may be available? — This holds good only when another set of witnesses is available. Then what if no other set of witnesses is available; [will you say that] here too [viz., according to Rabin] the witnesses cannot be disqualified? But his view is then identical with that of R. Dimi![3] — They differ in respect to Miggo;[4] one master [Rabin] accepts the reasoning of Miggo; while the other [R. Dimi] rejects it.[5]

The above text reads: ‘Resh Lakish said: "Imagine a holy mouth [sc. R. Meir] uttering such a thing!" Read therefore [in the Mishnah], "The witness" [singular].' Surely this is not so! For 'Ulla said: One who saw Resh Lakish in the Beth-Hamidrash [engaged in debate] would think that he was uprooting mountains and grinding them against each other![6] — Rabina said: But did not he who saw R. Meir in the Beth-Hamidrash feel that he was uprooting yet greater mountains and grinding them against each other?[7] — He means this:[8] Come and see how they [the Palestinians] esteem one another![9] Another instance; Rabbi sat and said: It is forbidden to store away the cold [water].[10] But R. Ishmael son of R. Jose remarked in his presence; My father permitted it. Then the Zaken[11] has already decided the matter,[12] replied Rabbi. [Thereupon] R. Papa said: Come and see how much they respected each other, for were R. Jose alive, he would have sat submissively before Rabbi, for as we have seen, R. Ishmael son of R. Jose, who was a worthy successor of his forefathers,[13] sat submissively before him,[14] yet he [Rabbi] said of him, 'The Zaken has already decided.'

R. Oshaia said: What is the meaning of the verse, And I took unto me the two staves; the one I called No'am [graciousness] and the other I called 'hoblim'[15] [binders]?[16] — 'No'am' refers to the scholars of Palestine, who treat each other graciously [man'imim] when engaged in halachic debates; 'hoblim', to the scholars of Babylon, who injure each other's feelings [mehablim] when discussing halachah.[17]

[It is written]: Then said he, These are the two anointed ones etc.[18] [This is preceded by:] And two olive trees by it.[19] R. Isaac said: 'yizhar' designates the scholars of Palestine, who are affable to each other when engaged in halachic debates, like olive oil [which is soothing]; [whilst] and two olive trees stand by it, symbolise the scholars of Babylon, who are as bitter to each other in halachic discussions as olive trees.[20]

Then lifted I up mine eyes and saw, and behold there came forth two women and the wind was in their wings; for they had wings like the wings of a stork. And they lifted up the measure between the earth and the heaven. Then said I to the angel that spoke with me, 'Whither do these bear the measure?' And he said unto me, 'To build her a house in the land of Shinar.'[21] R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Simeon b. Johai: These [the 'two women'] symbolise hypocrisy and arrogance, which made their home[22] in Babylon. But was Babylon really the home of haughtiness; did not the master say, Ten kabs[23] of arrogance came down into the world, of which EIam[24] took nine and the rest of the world one? — Yes, originally it descended to Babylon, but it travelled to Elam. This can also be inferred from the phrase, to build her[25] a house in the land of Shinar. This proves it.

But a Master said that the symptom of pride is poverty, and did not poverty descend upon Babylon? — By 'poverty',[26] the dearth of learning[27] is meant, for it is written, We have a little sister and she has no breasts;[28] whereon R. Johanan observed: This is a symbol of Elam, which was privileged to study, but not to teach.[29]

What does [the name] Babel connote?[30] — R. Johanan answered: [That the study of] Scripture, Mishnah and Talmud was intermingled [therein].[31]

He hath made me to dwell in dark places like those that have been long dead.[32] This, said R. Jeremiah, refers to the Babylonian Talmud.[33]

MISHNAH. IF ONE [OF THE CONTENDING PARTIES] SAYS TO THE OTHER: I ACCEPT MY FATHER OR THY FATHER AS TRUSTWORTHY,[34] OR, I HAVE CONFIDENCE IN THREE COWHERDS,[35] R. MEIR SAYS, HE MAY [SUBSEQUENTLY] RETRACT; BUT THE SAGES RULE, HE CANNOT. IF A MAN WAS UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF AN OATH TO HIS NEIGHBOUR, AND THE LATTER SAID TO HIM 'VOW TO ME BY THE LIFE OF THY HEAD,'[36] R. MEIR HOLDS, HE MAY RETRACT; BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN, HE CANNOT.[37]

GEMARA. R. Dimi the son of R. Nahman the son of R. Joseph said: [The Mishnah refers to a case] e.g., where he [the litigant] accepted him [sc. one of those mentioned] as one [of the three judges required].[38]

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The controversy [of R. Meir and the Rabbis[39] over a case] is only [where the plaintiff says]: 'My claim against thee be remitted' [if the judges so decide]; but [if the defendant says], 'I will pay thy claim' [should it be so decided], all [even the Rabbis] agree that he may retract.[40] R. Johanan said: They differ over the latter case.

The scholars propounded [the following problem]: [Does R. Johanan mean that] they differ only over the latter case, but that in the former, all [even R. Meir] agree that he cannot retract; or does he hold that they differ with respect to both cases? — Come and hear! For Raba said: They differ [only] in respect of, 'I will pay thee;' but in the case of, 'It be remitted to thee,' all [even R. Meir] agree that he cannot retract. Now, if you say [that R. Johanan maintains], Their difference is only in the case of, 'I will pay thee'; but in the case of, 'It be remitted to thee,' all agree that he cannot retract, it is correct: then Raba's opinion coincides with that of R. Johanan. But should you say, their dispute applies to both, with whom does Raba agree?[41] — Raba [on the latter hypotheses] states an independent view.[42]

R. Aha b. Tahlifa objected to Raba's view: IF ONE WAS UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF AN OATH TO HIS NEIGHBOUR, AND THE LATTER SAID TO HIM, 'VOW TO ME BY THE LIFE OF THY HEAD;' R. MEIR HOLDS HE MAY RETRACT; BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN, HE CANNOT.

(1) מגו, Miggo. A Talmudical rule by which an action is declared valid because part of it is indisputably legitimate. In this case, the rule is accepted by R. Meir but not by the Rabbis.

(2) I.e., the litigant proved his opponent's witnesses invalid, but was unable to do so likewise in the case of the proposed judges. Yet in virtue of the first, he can object to his opponent's choice of judges too.

(3) Who said above that where there is only one set of witnesses available, all agree that they cannot be rejected.

(4) V. p. 135, n. 7.

(5) The dispute is whether this reasoning is acceptable in general, though in the actual case under discussion there may possibly be no difference. Thus, Rabin holds that miggo is generally accepted, and here too, whilst R. Dimi rejects this reasoning here and elsewhere; therefore, it is only because R. Meir maintains that a litigant must substantiate his whole statement that his opponent is able to disqualify his witnesses, as explained above, and this is irrespective of whether the judges have been proved incompetent or not.

(6) So ingenious a mind did he have. How then could he be so modest as to refer to R. Meir as 'a holy mouth', thus implying that the latter's learning and skill was far above his own? — 'Mountain' is used figuratively for the problems overcome by dialectical ingenuity.

(8) This is an answer to Rabina's observation. In fact, the previous remark was not an objection, but a comment.

(9) Able as he was, Resh Lakish did appreciate R. Meir, as the above quotation shows.

(38) Though there are two others eligible, R. Meir still holds that he may retract (Rashi). Tosaf. explains more plausibly: Only then do the Sages rule that he cannot retract. If, however, he had accepted one of these as the equivalent of a complete court, even the Sages admit that he can subsequently retract. V. supra p. 132, n. 11.
(39) The Sages.
(40) Less authority is required to rule that one retains what is already in his possession, since possession itself affords a presumption of ownership, than to transfer money from one to another. Hence, only in the former case do the Rabbis rule that an undertaking to abide by the decision of an unqualified judge is binding, but not in the latter.
(41) For it coincides neither with that of Samuel nor with that of R. Johanan.
(42) I.e., he is not bound to agree either with Samuel or R. Johanan. Hence the question remains unanswered.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 24b

Now surely, this refers to those who swear and do not pay,[1] and hence is analogous to, ‘It be remitted thee’?[2] — No; this refers to those who swear and receive their claim,[3] so that it is analogous to ‘I will pay thee’.

But if so, has this not already been taught in the first clause [of the Mishnah]?[4] — It [the Mishnah] teaches the case where he [sc. the defendant] makes the irregular procedure depend on the judgment of others,[5] and also where he makes it depend on his [sc. the plaintiff's] action. And both are necessary. For had it taught only the case where he [the defendant] makes it depend on the judgment of others, [we might have assumed that] in this case alone does R. Meir hold that he can retract since he might not definitely have decided to abide by their decision, but [inwardly] argued, ‘Who can say that they will give judgment in the other's favour?’ Whereas, if he makes it depend on his [sc. the plaintiff's] action, I might think that he [R. Meir] agrees with the Rabbis [that he cannot retract].[6] Again, had he [the Tanna] stated the latter case alone, we might have assumed, only there do the Rabbis rule thus; but in the former case, we might think[7] that they agree with R. Meir. Hence both are necessary.

Resh Lakish said: The dispute [between R. Meir and the Rabbis] is [over a case where the litigant retracts] before the rendering of the legal decision:[8] but once the decision has been given, all [even R. Meir] agree that he cannot retract. While R. Johanan said: They differ [where one retracts] after the decision is rendered.

The scholars propounded [the following problem:] [Does this mean that] the dispute is [only where the litigant retracts] after the promulgation of the decision; but before, all [even the Rabbis] agree that he can retract; or do they differ in both instances? — Come and hear! For Raba said: If one accepted a kinsman or a man [otherwise] ineligible [as judge or witness], he may retract before the promulgation of the decision; but not after. Now, if you understand [R. Johanan to mean] that the dispute refers only to the time after the decision; but that prior thereto, all agree that he may retract, it is correct: then Raba's statement agrees with R. Johanan's, and is based on the view of the Rabbis. But should you say, The controversy holds good in both cases, who is Raba's authority?[9] Hence it surely follows that the dispute arises only after the decision has been given. This proves it.

R. Nahman son of R. Hisda[10] sent a question to R. Nahman b. Jacob: Will our Master please inform us, Is the dispute before or after the verdict, and with whom does the halachah rest? — He sent back word: The dispute arises after the promulgation of the decision, and the halachah agrees with the Sages. R. Ashi said: This was the question he sent: — Do they differ in the case of 'I will pay thee,' or in respect to 'It be remitted to thee', and with whom does the halachah rest? To which he replied: The dispute refers to, 'I will pay thee;' and the halachah rests with the Sages. Thus they taught in Sura. But in Pumbeditha they taught as follows: R. Hanina b. Shelamiah said: A message was sent from the school of Rab[11] to Samuel, saying: Will our Master please inform us, [If one of the parties pledged himself] by Kinyan[12] [not to retract], what [if he seeks to retract] before the promulgation of the decision? — He returned word, saying: After Kinyan, nothing [can be done to repudiate the transaction].

MISHNAH. AND THESE ARE INELIGIBLE [TO BE WITNESSES OR JUDGES]: A GAMBLER WITH DICE,[13] A USURER, A PIGEON-TRAINER,[14] AND TRADERS [IN THE PRODUCE] OF THE SABBATICAL YEAR.[15] R. SIMEON SAID: AT FIRST THEY CALLED THEM 'GATHERERS OF [THE PRODUCE OF] THE SABBATICAL YEAR.' BUT WHEN THE OPPRESSORS[16] GREW IN NUMBER, THEY CHANGED THEIR NAME TO TRADERS IN THE SABBATICAL PRODUCE.'[17] R. JUDAH SAID: WHEN IS THIS SO? — IF THEY HAVE NO OTHER OCCUPATION BUT THIS. BUT IF THEY HAVE OTHER MEANS OF LIVELIHOOD, THEY ARE ELIGIBLE.

GEMARA. What [wrong] does the dice player do? — Rammi b. Hama said: [He is disqualified] because it [sc. gambling] is an Asmakta,[18] and Asmakta is not legally binding.[19]

R. Shesheth said: Such cases do not come under the category of Asmakta;[20] but the reason is that they [sc. dice players] are not concerned with the general welfare.[21] Wherein do they differ? — If he [the gambler] acquired another trade.[22] We learnt:[23] R. JUDAH SAID: WHEN IS THIS SO? — IF THEY HAVE NO OTHER OCCUPATION BUT THIS. BUT IF THEY HAVE OTHER MEANS OF LIVELIHOOD, THEY ARE ELIGIBLE. This proves that the ruling of the Mishnah is for the sake of the welfare, of humanity, which refutes Rami b. Hama.[24] And should you answer, The Rabbis dispute R. Judah's opinion:[25] did not R. Joshua b. Levi say, Wherever R. Judah observes,

(1) I.e., who meet the claim against them simply by an oath, since Biblical oaths were imposed on the defendant. Cf Shebu. 44b.

(2) I.e., the plaintiff agrees to abandon his claim as the result of an irregular procedure, whether in the choice of judges or in the form of the oath. This shows that they differ also in respect of 'It be remitted to thee'.

(3) E.g., where a labourer claims his wages when due, or where the defendant is legally incapable of taking an oath, e.g., if he is known to have committed perjury on a previous occasion. Cf. ibid.
(4) According to the explanation thereof by Raba.
(5) By accepting the judgment of people ineligible as judges.
(6) For he must have felt certain that the plaintiff would take up his challenge.
(7) By inverting the preceding argument.
(8) V. p. 24.
(9) In this case, it would only be R. Meir, in the opinion of Resh Lakish, who rules thus. But Raba could not abandon the majority ruling of the Rabbis and follow R. Meir. Nor can it be answered that Raba had an independent view of the circumstances in which they differ, as above, since his statement is not made regarding the Mishnah.
(10) Or R. Isaac, according to another version.
(11) Be Rab. For another possible meaning, v. p. 89.
(12) Kinyan, lit., 'acquisition', is a formal act whereby one definitely pledges himself. V. Glos.
(13) Heb. קוביא, Gr. K  dice-playing, a popular game of antiquity. The term was applied by the Rabbis indiscriminately to any form of gambling. Cf. Shab. 149b.
(14) Lit., 'pigeon flyers'. The exact meaning of 'pigeon-flyer' is discussed in the Gemara. The disqualification of these is based upon Ex. XXIII, 1: Put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness. In this case, though they cannot be considered actual robbers, since they do not appropriate their gain by violence, the Rabbis nevertheless held such gain a form of robbery.
(15) The Sages interpret Lev. XXV, 6: The Sabbath of the land shall be for food to you, to mean, 'for food' and not for 'commerce'. Cf. Bek. 12b. The transgressors of this enactment, because they showed so passionate a greed for gain, were not regarded as trustworthy to judge or testify.
(16) Government officials who spared no means of extorting heavy taxation from the people. As a result, even the Sabbatical year produce had to be given in payment.
(17) The meaning of this is discussed in the Gemara.
(18) אסמכתא 'speculation', from סמך, 'to rely,' 'to support', is a term in civil law denoting a contract wherein each party promises to pay, on fulfilment of a certain condition which he expects will not be fulfilled. It is not binding according to some teachers, because the obligation has not been assumed with serious intent, since each hopes that his promise will be nullified by the non-realization of the condition. Gambling, as in this case, is an excellent example, for in it, A promises B to forfeit a certain object or amount on the realization of a condition which he hopes and expects will not occur.
(19) I.e., does not create an actual obligation. Hence, the receiver is regarded as having taken illegal possession, and so is akin to a robber.
(20) His definition of Asmakta is illustrated in B.B. 168a: If, for instance, A paid a fraction of his debt on a note to B, and told him to deposit the note with C, adding that if he did not pay the note by a certain date, C should return the note to B who would then collect the amount in full; and if on the due date A did not pay, R. Judah says that B may collect only the amount which was not paid, and not its full value, because A's promise is not valid, seeing that at the time he made it, he assumed that failure to pay would not occur. But in the case under consideration, where it is a game of chance, the odds in either case are equal, and A's intent to pay must be taken seriously. Consequently, the gain cannot be considered as a form of robbery.
(21) I.e., they do not contribute to the stability of civilised society.
(22) When, according to R. Shesheth, he should not be disqualified.
(23) [So Ms., M. introducing a refutation of Rami b. Hama. Cur. edd. read, 'and we learnt'.]
(24) Since he holds that the reason for their disqualification is Asmakta, irrespective of whether they have another trade or not.
(25) In which case his argument agrees with that of the Rabbis, representing the anonymous opinion cited first in the Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 25a

'When is this so,'[1] or 'In what case,'[2] he merely aims at explaining the words of the Sages? [Whilst] R. Johanan said: 'When etc.' is explanatory, but 'In what case' indicates disagreement. Thus all agree that 'When etc. indicates explanation.[3] — Do you oppose one amora[4] to another?[5] One Master [Rami b. Hama] holds that they [the Rabbis and R. Judah] differ; the other [R. Joshua b. Levi] holds that they do not.[6] But do they really not differ? Has it not been taught:[7] Whether he has another occupation or not, he is disqualified?[8] — That is the view of R. Judah, stated on the authority of R. Tarfon. For it has been taught: R. Judah said on the authority of R. Tarfon: In truth, neither of them is a nazir, because a vow of neziruth[9] must be free from doubt.[10]

A LENDER ON INTEREST . . . Raba said: A borrower on interest is unfit to act as witness. But have we not learnt: A LENDER [malweh] ON INTEREST [is disqualified]? — [It means] a loan [milweh][11] on interest [disqualifies the parties to the transaction].

Two witnesses testified against Bar Binithus. One said, 'He lent money on interest in my presence. ' The other said, 'He lent me money on interest.' [In consequence,] Raba disqualified Bar Binithus [from acting as witness etc.]. But did not Raba himself rule: A borrower on interest is unfit to act as witness? Consequently he[12] is a transgressor, and the Torah said: Do not accept the wicked as witness?[13] — Raba[14] here acted in accordance with another principle of his. For Raba said: Every man is a relative in respect to himself, and no man can incriminate himself.[15]

A certain slaughterer was found to have passed a terefah[16] [as fit for food], so R. Nahman disqualified[17] and dismissed him. Thereupon he went and let his hair and nails grow.[18] Then R. Nahman thought of reinstating him, but Raba said to him: Perhaps he is only pretending [repentance]. What then is his remedy? — The course suggested by R. Iddi b. Abin, who said: He who is suspected of passing terefoth cannot be rehabilitated unless he leaves for a place where he is unknown and finds an opportunity of returning a lost article of considerable value, or of condemning as terefah meat of considerable value, belonging to himself.[19]

AND PIGEON TRAINERS: What are PIGEON TRAINERS? — Here[20] it has been interpreted, [of one who says to another], 'If your pigeon passes mine [you win].'[21] R. Hama b. Oshaia said: It means an Ara.[22] On what ground does he who interprets [the phrase to mean] 'pigeon-racer' disagree with him who interprets it as Ara? — His answer is that the conduct of an Ara [is regarded as robbery] merely from the standpoint of neighbourliness.[23] And he who interprets it as 'Ara', why does he not accept this view [sc. 'if thy pigeon etc.]? — His answer is, in that case it is identical with a dice player. And the former?[24] — He [the Tanna of the Mishnah] deals with a case where he relies on his own capabilities. [i.e., dice-playing] and a case where he relies on the capabilities of his pigeon. And both are necessary. For had he dealt only with the case where a man relies upon himself, [I might have supposed that] only there was his promise without serious intent, since he thinks,

(3) So that R. Judah does not differ from the Rabbis. Hence they too hold that the reason for disqualification is not 'Asmakta', but for 'the sake of the welfare of humanity'.

(9) For nazir and neziruth, v. Glos.

(10) Lit., 'applies only to distinct utterance.' This refers to the following: A and B were sitting by the road-side, and a man passed them. Whereupon A said to B: If the man who has passed is a Nazir, as I maintain he is, then I too will take the vow of neziruth; and B said that he for his part would take the vow if he were not. R. Tarfon ruled that the vow is not binding even upon him whose view was subsequently found to be correct, for the vow was based on a doubtful matter, whereas neziruth requires a distinct and explicit pledge. (V. Nazir 34a). R. Judah himself may thus, notwithstanding his statement in the Mishnah, which is only explanatory of the view of the Rabbis, concur in R. Tarfon's view. With respect to the actual reasoning of the Talmud, Rashi states: This proves that in R. Tarfon's opinion, an undertaking dependent on an unknown circumstance is not binding, and therefore the same applies to gambling, each gambler undertaking to pay his opponents without knowing the latter's strength, and therefore the gambler is akin to a robber, as explained on p. 143, n. 2, whether gambling, is his sole occupation or not.

(23) Lit., ‘ways of peace’, but not its law, since birds may, and often do change their homes of their own will. According to strict law, these birds are considered as semi-wild, and therefore ownerless. Yet it is robbery on account of ‘the ways of peace’.

(24) How does he answer this objection?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 25b

‘I feel certain that I know more [than my opponent], [and so I am sure to win]; but where he relies on his pigeon's ability, I should say [that the gain is] not [illegal].[1] Again, had the Mishnah dealt only with a case where he relies on his pigeon's ability. [I might have assumed that only then was the gain illegal], as he might have thought: ‘Surely winning the race depends on the use of the rattle,[2] and I am the more skilled in its use;’ but where he depends on his own abilities, I might have said that [the gain is] not [illegal].[3] Hence both are necessary.

An objection is raised: Dice-players include the following: Those who play with checkers,[4] and not only with checkers, but even with nut-shells and pomegranate peel.[5] And when are they considered to have repented?[6] When they break up their checkers and undergo a complete reformation, so much so, that they will not play even as a pastime.[7] A usurer: this includes both lender and borrower.[8] And when are they judged to have repented? When they tear up their bills and undergo a complete reformation, that they will not lend [on interest] even to a Gentile. Pigeon trainers: that is those who race pigeons,[9] and not only pigeons, but even cattle, beasts, or other birds. When may they be reinstated? When they break up their pegmas[10] and undergo a complete reformation, so that they will not practise their vice even in the wilderness.[11] Sabbatical traders are those who trade in the produce of the Sabbatical year. They cannot be rehabilitated until another Sabbatical year comes round and they desist from trading.[12] Whereon R. Nehemia said: They [the Rabbis] did not mean a mere verbal repentance, but a reformation that involves monetary reparation. How so? He must declare, ‘I, so and so, have amassed two hundred zuz by trading in Sabbatical produce, and behold, here they are made over to the poor as a gift.[13] At any rate, cattle too are mentioned.[14] Now, on the view that it means pigeon racing, it is correct, for racing of beasts, is also possible. But if it means ‘an Ara’, are cattle suited to this [viz. to decoy other beasts]? — Yes, in the case of the wild ox,[15] on the view that this is a species of cattle. For we have learnt:[16] A wild ox is a species of cattle; R. Jose said: It is a wild animal.[17]

A Tanna taught: [To those enumerated in the Mishnah] were added robbers and those who compel a sale.[18] But are not robbers [disqualified] by Biblical law?[19] — [Yes, but] it [the addition] was necessary in respect of one who appropriates the finds of a deaf-mute, an imbecile, or a minor.[20] At first it was thought that this was of infrequent occurrence,[21] or [that such appropriation was robbery only] judged by neighbourliness in general:[22] but when it was seen that after all it was someone else's property[23] that they seized,[24] the Rabbis disqualified them.

'Those who compel a sale:' At first they thought, They do, in fact, pay money, and their pressure is incidental.[25] But when they observed that they deliberately seized the goods,[26] they made this decree against them.

A Tanna taught: They further added to the list, herdsmen,[27] tax collectors and publicans.[28]

'Herdsmen': At first they thought that it was a question of mere chance;[29] but when it was observed that they drove them there intentionally, they made the decree against them.

'Tax collectors and publicans:' At first they thought that they collected no more than the legally imposed tax. But when it was seen that they overcharged, they were disqualified.

Raba said: The 'herdsmen' whom they [the Rabbis] refer to, include the herdsmen of both large and small cattle, [i.e both cowherds and shepherds]. But did Raba actually say so? Did he not say: Shepherds are disqualified only in Palestine, but elsewhere they are eligible; while cowherds are qualified even in Palestine?[30] — That applies to breeders.[31] Logic too supports this. For we learnt: [If one says,] I HAVE CONFIDENCE IN THREE COWHERDS etc. [they are acceptable].[32] Surely [that implies that they are normally ineligible] for witnesses? — No: for judges.[33] This is also evident from the expression: THREE COWHERDS; for if it means, qualified as witnesses, why three? What then: it refers to judges? Then why particularly cowherds; the same applies to any court of three men unversed in law?[34] — He [the Tanna] means this: Even such as these, who are rarely to be found in populous areas.[35]

Rab Judah said: A herdsman in general[36] is ineligible, while a tax collector in general is eligible.[37]

R. Zera's father acted as tax collector for thirteen years. When the Resh Nahara[38] used to come to a town, if he [R. Zera's father] saw the scholars [of the city] he would advise them, Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers.[39] And when he saw the other inhabitants of the town he would say to them: The Resh Nahara is coming to the city, and now he will slaughter the father in the presence of the son, and the son in the presence of the father;[40]

(22) But not by Biblical law, because these have no legal powers of acquisition or possession, and therefore, Biblically speaking, their finds do not belong to them. Nevertheless, it is obvious that to enforce this in practice would lead to strife and a feeling of grievance, and hence the Rabbis conferred upon them the power of effecting possession. Thus, since such appropriation was not robbery in the Biblical sense, it was thought unnecessary to impose disqualification on its account.
(23) Though only by Rabbinical law, still, the ruling of the Rabbis was fully binding.

whereupon they all hid themselves. When the officer arrived [and rebuked him for failing in his duty,] he would say: Of whom shall I make the demand?[1]

Before he died, he said: Take the thirteen ma'ahs[2] that are tied in my sheets and return them to so and so, for I took them from him [by way of tax] and have had no need for them.

R. SIMEON SAID, AT FIRST . . . GATHERERS OF THE PRODUCE OF THE SABBATICAL YEAR. What does he mean? — Rab Judah said: This; at first they [the Rabbis] ruled that gatherers of the Sabbatical produce[3] are eligible, but traders in it are not. But when they saw that large numbers offered money to the poor,[4] who then went, gathered the produce and brought it to them, they revised the law and enacted that both [gatherers and traders] are ineligible. The sons of Rehabah[5] objected to this: Does this mean, WHEN THE OPPRESSORS GREW IN NUMBER? It should then have been worded: When the traders grew in number! But we may explain it thus: At first they ruled that both [even gatherers] were ineligible. But when THE OPPRESSORS GREW IN NUMBER, viz., the [collectors of] Arnona[6] (judging by R. Jannai's proclamation, 'Go and sow your seed [even] in the Sabbatical year, because of the [collectors of] Arnona,')[7] they revised the law and enacted that only traders were disqualified but not gatherers.[8] R. Hiyya b. Zarnuki and R. Simeon b. Jehozadak once went to Assia[9] to intercalate the year.[10] They were met by Resh Lakish, who joined them, saying, 'I will come and see their procedure.'[11] On the way, he saw a man ploughing, and remarked to them, 'That man who is ploughing is a priest.'[12] But they replied, 'Can he not say: I am an imperial servant[13] on the estate?' Further on he saw a man pruning his vineyard, and again observed, 'That pruner is a priest.' 'But', they demurred, 'he might say: I need [the twigs] to make a bale[14] ['akkel] for the wine-press, [a legitimate purpose].' 'The heart knows whether it is for 'akkel' or 'akalkaloth [perverseness]', he retorted.[15] — Now, which remark did he make first? Shall we say, his first remark was the one first recorded: then for the other too they could have suggested [the same excuse], 'I am an imperial servant on the estate.' Hence the latter remark must have come first: and only subsequently did he make the other observation. Why was each assumed to be a priest? — Because they [the priests] are suspected of breaking the Sabbatical laws, as it has been taught; If a se'ah of Terumah[16] [accidentally] fall into a hundred se'ahs of Sabbatical produce, it [the Terumah] is neutralised.[17] In case of a lesser quantity [of Sabbatical produce], the whole must be left to rot.[18] Now, we raised the question, Why must it be left to rot? Why not let it be sold to a priest at a price of Terumah[19] less the value of the one se'ah![20] To which R. Hiyya replied on the authority of 'Ulla: This fact[21] proves that the priests were suspected of violating the laws of the Sabbatical year.[22]

[To resume the narrative.] They said:[23] He is a troublesome person, and so, on reaching their destination, they ascended to the upper chamber,[24] and removed the ladder.[25] Thereupon he [Resh Lakish] went before R. Johanan and asked: Are people suspected of trespassing Sabbatical laws[26] qualified to intercalate the year? But on second thoughts he said: This presents no difficulty, for there is a similar case of three cowherds,[27] upon whose calculations the Rabbis relied. Subsequently, however, he said: There is no comparison between the two cases; there it was the Rabbis who eventually decided[28] and declared the year intercalated,[29] whereas here, it is a confederacy of wicked men,[30] such as may not be counted [on the intercalary board]. R. Johanan replied: That is a misfortune.[31]

When they[32] came before R. Johanan, they complained: He described us as cowherds, and you made no objection whatever.[33] R. Johanan answered: Even had he called you shepherds,[34] what could I have said?

What is [the reference to] 'a confederacy of wicked men'? — [It is as follows:] Shebna[35] expounded [the law] before thirteen myriads,[36] whereas Hezekiah expounded it only before eleven. When Sennacherib[37] came and besieged Jerusalem, Shebna wrote a note, which he shot on an arrow [into the enemy's camp, declaring]: Shebna and his followers are willing to conclude peace; Hezekiah and his followers are not. Thus it is written, For lo, the wicked bend the bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string.[38] So Hezekiah was afraid, and said: Perhaps, Heaven forfend, the mind of the Holy One, blessed be He, is with the majority; and since they wish to surrender, we must do likewise! Thereupon the Prophet came and reassured him: Say ye not a confederacy, concerning all of whom this people do say, A confederacy;[39] it is a confederacy of the wicked, and as such cannot be counted [for the purpose of a decision].

[Later, when] Shebna went to hew out for himself a sepulchre among the sepulchres of the house of David, the Prophet came and said to him: What hast thou here and whom hast thou here that thou hast hewn here a sepulchre? Behold, the Lord will hurl thee down as a man is hurled.[40] Rab observed: Exile is a greater hardship for men than for women.[41]

Yea, He will surely cover thee[42] R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: This teaches that he was stricken with leprosy: here it is written, surely cover; and elsewhere [in reference to a leper] it is said, And he shall cover his upper lip.[43]

He will violently roll and toss thee like a ball into a large country.[44] It has been taught : He [Shebna] sought the shame of his master's house: therefore his own glory was turned to shame.[45] [For] when he went out [on his way to surrender to Sennacherib], Gabriel came and shut the city gate in the face of his servants

(1) [The demand here was not for the regular poll-tax, but in respect of a special imposition, v. Obermeyer, op. cit. 237.]

(2) Small coins, one ma'ah = 1/2 a silver dinar.

(3) It was permissible to gather Sabbatical produce and keep it as long as the same kind was available for the beasts of the field too. But when that was consumed, private possession was forbidden, and the produce had to be removed from the house and deposited in the fields, where it would be free to all. Now, in the case under discussion, it might have been possible for the gatherers to consume all they had gathered before the 'time of removal', in which case they committed no transgression; therefore they were not disqualified. [Yad Ramah adds 'even if they happened to sell any of the hoard'.]

(4) The poor could gather from all fields irrespective of the 'time of removal' (cf. Sheb. IX, 8; Nahmanides on Lev. XXV, 7), but only for their personal use. Thus, these wealthy men were disqualified because they virtually bribed the poor to trade therein. According to this, the Mishnah must be explained thus: At first, these were only regarded as gatherers (from the poor), and therefore eligible. But subsequently, when owing to the increase of oppressors (q.v. Mishnah), the practice of making gifts to the poor grew apace, the donors were classed as traders, not merely gatherers, and therefore disqualified (Rashi). [According to Yad Ramah it was the poor who were declared disqualified, as traffickers in Sabbatical produce.]

(5) [Efo and Abimi, v. supra 17b.]

(6) An adaptation of annona, the annual income of natural products. Hence taxes paid in kind.

(7) The observance of the Sabbatical year in post-Temple times was merely Rabbinical and therefore R. Jannai felt justified in abrogating it in the face of dire necessity (Rashi). [The privilege which the Jews enjoyed since the days of Caesar exempting them from taxes in the Sabbatical year (v. Josephus, Ant. XIV, 10, 5-6) was abrogated in the year 261 C.E. V. Graetz IV, 213, and Auerbach, M., Jahrb. d. jud. liter. Gesel. V, 155-188].

(8) Accordingly, the Mishnah is thus to be interpreted: AT FIRST . . . GATHERERS etc. i.e., even gatherers were classed amongst the ineligibles; BUT . . . . TRADERS, i.e., only the latter were so designated, but not the former.

(9) Tosaf. regards it as a district outside Palestine and, since it was thus not qualified as a place for the intercalation of a year (cf. supra 11b), suggests that they must have gone there only for the purpose of calculating. (V. Yeb. 164). It is, however, probably Essa, east of the lake Tiberias, Neub. p. 38. 'Weinstein maintains that it is identical with Callirhoe and its surroundings on the east of the Jordan, near the Dead Sea (Jast.). [Halevy, Doroth, Ie, 787, suggests that Assia was specially chosen for the Intercalation as it was considered a safe place owing to its hot springs which attracted many visitors from far and wide, and the arrival of the Rabbis would not rouse the suspicion of the Romans.]

(10) From the context it appears that the incident must have happened in a Sabbatical year. But no intercalation could take place in such a year, (v. supra 12a) hence, as has been said, Tosaf. suggests that they must have gone there only for the purpose of making the necessary calculations. But even a Sabbatical year may be intercalated in an emergency. Cf. Yad, Kid. Hahodesh, 4, 16.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 26b

[who were following him].' On being asked, 'Where are your followers' he answered, 'They have deserted me.' 'Then you were merely ridiculing us' they (the Assyrians) exclaimed. So they bored holes through his heels, tied him to the tails of their horses, and dragged him over thorns and thistles.

R. Eliezer said: Shebna was a Sybarite. Here it is written, Get thee unto ha-soken [the steward];[1] and elsewhere it is written, And she [the Shunamite] became a sokeneth [companion] unto him.[2]

When the foundations [ha-shathoth] are destroyed, what hath the righteous wrought?[3] Rab Judah and R. 'Ena [both explained the verse]. One interpreted it thus: If Hezekiah and his followers had been destroyed [by the plot of Shebna], what would the Righteous [sc. God] have achieved?[4] The other: If the Temple had been destroyed, what would the Righteous have achieved?[5] 'Ulla interpreted it: Had the designs of that wicked man [Shebna] not been frustrated, how would the righteous [Hezekiah] have been rewarded?[6]

Now, according to the [last] explanation, viz., Had the designs of the wicked man [etc.], it is well: hence it is written, When ha-shathoth are destroyed.[7] The explanation which refers it to the Temple is likewise [acceptable]. For we learnt:[8] A stone lay there [beneath the Ark] ever since the time of the Early Prophets and it was called 'shethiyah'.[9] But as for its interpretation as referring to Hezekiah and his party: where do we find the righteous designated as 'foundations'? — In the verse, For the pillars of the earth are the Lord's and He hath set [wa-yasheth] the world upon them.[10] Alternatively [it may be deduced] from the following, Wonderful is His counsel and great his Tushiyah [wisdom].[11]

R. Hanin said: Why is the Torah called Tushiyah? — Because it weakens the strength of man [through constant study].[12] Another interpretation: Tushiyah because it was given to Moses in secret, on account of Satan.[13] Or again, because it is composed of words, which are immaterial, upon which the world is [nevertheless] founded.[14]

'Ulla said: Anxiety[15] [adversely] affects [one's] learning,[16] for it is written, He abolisheth the thoughts of the skilled [i.e., scholars], lest their hands perform nothing substantial.[17] Rabbah said: [But] if they study it [the Torah] for its own sake, it [anxiety] has no [adverse] effect, as it is written, There are many thoughts in man's heart, but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand:[18] counsel in which there is the word of God [i.e., study of the Torah] will stand for ever [under all circumstances].

R. JUDAH SAID: WHEN etc. R. Abbahu said in R. Eleazar's name: The halachah rests with R. Judah. R. Abbahu also said in R. Eleazar's name: All [those] enumerated in the Mishnah as ineligible must be proclaimed at the Beth din [as such]. As for a shepherd, R. Aha and Rabina differ therein: one maintains that proclamation must be made; the other holds that it is unnecessary.[19]

Now, on the view that it is not required, it is correct: hence the dictum of Rab Judah in Rab's name, viz., a shepherd in general is incompetent.[20] But according to the view that a proclamation is necessary, what is meant by 'a shepherd in general is incompetent'?[21] — That in general[22] he is proclaimed so.

A certain deed of gift was witnessed by two robbers. Now, R. Papa b. Samuel wished to declare it valid, since their [the robbers'] ineligibility as witnesses had not been publicly announced. But Raba said to him: Granted that proclamation is required in the case of persons declared only by the Rabbis as robbers;[23] must those defined as such by Biblical law also be proclaimed?[24]

(Mnemonic: Dabar, wa-Arayoth, Ganab).[25]

R. Nahman said: Those who accept charity from Gentiles[26] are incompetent as witnesses;[27] provided, however, that they accept it publicly, but not if they accept it in private. And even if publicly [accepted], the law is applicable only if, when it was possible for them to obtain it privately they yet degraded themselves by open acceptance. But where [private receipt] is impossible, it [public acceptance] is vitally necessary.[28]

R. Nahman said: One who is suspected of adultery is [nevertheless] eligible as a witness. Said R. Shesheth: Answer me,[29] Master; forty stripes on his shoulders,[30] and yet [you say] he is eligible![31] Raba observed: Even R. Nahman admits that he is incompetent to testify in matrimonial matters. Rabina — others state R. Papa — said: That is only where his evidence is to free her;[32] but if it is to bind her,[33] there is no objection [to him]. But is this not obvious?[34] — I might think that he would prefer this,[35] even as it is written, Stolen waters are sweet;[36] therefore he teaches us that as long as she is in her present [unmarried] state, she is even more within his reach.[37]

R. Nahman said further: One who steals [produce from the fields] in Nisan, and [fruit from the orchards] in Tishri[38] is not regarded as a thief[39] . But this is only in case of a metayer,[40] where the quantity is small and the produce is ripe[41] [and no longer needs tending].

One of R. Zebid's farm-labourers' stole a kab of barley, and another a cluster of unripe dates. So he disqualified them [from acting as witnesses].

Certain grave diggers buried a corpse on the first day festival 'Azereth,[42] so R. Papa excommunicated them, and disqualified them as witnesses.[43] R. Huna the son of R. Joshua, however, removed their disqualification; whereupon R. Papa protested: 'But surely, they are wicked men!' — 'They might have thought that they were doing a good deed!' 'But did I not excommunicate them?'[44] — They might have thought that the Rabbis thereby effected expiation for them.[45]

It has been stated:

(1) Isa. XXII, 15.

(2) I Kings I, 4. A play on the different meanings of the verb סכן, to serve, to administer, to associate, or to be a companion of one (of the opposite sex).

(3) Ps. XI, 3.

(4) Where is the fulfilment of the promise to him?

(5) Where is God's miraculous power? people would ask.

(6) He translates: For the designs (of the wicked) shall be overthrown; (otherwise) what would the Righteous have achieved?

(7) From the verb שית 'to set' — set one's thoughts. Cf. Ex. VII, 23. In some editions there follows, 'as it is written, And David laid (wa-yasheth) those words on his heart.' This verse, however, appears nowhere in Scripture, and Rashi here quotes Ex. VII, 23, but not this phrase. Hence Maharsha a.l. deletes it as an erroneous interpolation.

(8) Yoma 53b.

(9) שתיה, i.e., foundation stone. 'Ha-shathoth' therefore, may refer to the foundations of the Temple.

(10) I Sam. II, 8. And the righteous are considered the foundations of the world. Cf. Prov. X, 25: But the righteous are the foundation of the universe. (This verse could not be quoted, as a different word is used there.)

(11) Isa. XXVIII, 29. Referring to the Torah, upon the teachings of which the world was established. תושיה is here connected with שתת.

(12) Connecting תושיה with מתשת, to weaken.

(13) Satan was purposely kept in ignorance of the giving of the law, since he had opposed its being delivered into Moses's hands, on the ground that forty days later the Israelites would violate it by worshipping the golden calf. Cf. Tosaf. Shab. 89a quoting Midrash.

(14) Tohu-shuthath, indicated by the syllables composing Tushiyah תו — תוהו void, שיה — שית foundation.

(15) Lit., 'thought' — about one's livelihood etc.

(16) Lit., 'words of the Torah'.

(17) Job V, 12; i.e., he frees them from thoughtful anxiety (by providing them with food), for otherwise they could not progress in their studies. Both Rashi and Tosaf. offer additional interpretations.

(18) Prov. XIX, 21.

(19) For if he had trespassed in other persons' fields, it would be known.

(20) Cf. B.M. 5b.

(21) Once a proclamation is made, he ceases to be 'a shepherd in general' and becomes an individualized person.

(22) Even if there are no witnesses that he has led his flocks into other people's fields.

(23) Such as those enumerated in the Mishnah.

(24) Surely not! hence the deed is invalid. A robber, according to Biblical law, is one who, without judicial sanction, has seized the movable property of another by force or intimidation. Cf. B.K. 79b.

(25) On mnemonics v. p. 21, n. 5. The phrase reads: A Thing, and Incest, Theft.

(26) Lit., 'Those who eat of a thing unnamed (other).' דבר אחר is the colloquial term for pork; the whole expression is metaphorical, and is meant as translated in the text. (V. Rashi and Tosaf.).
(27) For such an action is regarded as a profanation of 'The Name', and he who performs it is regarded as wicked.
(28) Lit., 'it is a matter of life'. Cf. Yoma 82a, 'Nothing stands in the way of saving life'.
(29) So Rashi. Jast.: 'Be slow', 'beg pardon'.
(30) I.e., even though he is liable to flagellation.
(31) Surely not! Though by Biblical law punishment could not be imposed without evidence and warning, it was nevertheless meted out on the ground of strong suspicion. Cf. Kid. 81a where Rab said: We impose the punishment of lashes even on the ground of an evil report alone, as it is written, For it is no good report which I hear (I Sam. II, 24).
(32) E.g., when he testifies to the death of her husband or that she was divorced from him. His purpose is then quite obvious, and therefore his evidence is suspect.
(33) Lit., 'to bring her into' (the married state).
(34) Since no selfish interests can animate him.
(35) I.e., to keep her in a forbidden state to him, for then her occasional company would be more pleasurable.
(36) Prov. IX, 17.
(37) And that this factor is bound to outweigh the other; therefore his evidence is admissible.
(38) Its these months cereals and fruits ripen respectively.
(39) In respect of bearing witness.
(40) Who works for a certain share in the produce.
(41) Lit., 'its work is completed.'
(42) עצרת solemn assembly. The Talmudic name for the Feast of Weeks. (Cf. Lev. XXIII, 9 ff). Burial is forbidden on the first day of a Festival. Cf. Bez. 6a top.
(43) Since they violated the law for the sake of gain. It should be observed that this is the main test of eligibility.
(44) That should have indicated to them that their action was not right; yet they repeated their action.
(45) For the desecration of the day, though their act in itself was meritorious.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 27a

A witness who was proved a Zomem:[1] Abaye ruled, His disqualification is retrospective;[2] Raba maintained, He is disqualified only for the future.[3] Abaye makes the disqualification retrospective: he was a wicked man from the time of testifying [falsely], and the Torah says: Do not accept the wicked as witness.[4] Raba holds that he is disqualified prospectively [only]: now, the entire law of a falsified witness is anomalous; for [it is two against two, then] why accept the evidence of one pair rather than that of the other? Therefore it can take effect only from the time that this anomalous procedure is employed. Some say that Raba really agrees with Abaye; yet why does he rule [that the incompetence is] prospective? — Because of the purchaser's loss.[5] Wherein do they [the two views on Raba's ruling] differ? — A difference arises where two have testified against one,[6] or where he was disqualified on the grounds of robbery.[7] And R. Jeremiah of Difti related that R. Papi ruled in a certain case in accordance with Raba's view; while Mar son of R. Ashi said: The law rests with Abaye. And, [concludes the Talmud], the law rests with Abaye in Y'AL KGM.[8]

As for a Muma'[9] who eats nebelah[10] merely to satisfy his greed,[11] all agree that he is disqualified.[12] If his purpose is provocative;[13] Abaye said, He is ineligible; Raba ruled, He is eligible. Abaye said: He is ineligible, because he is classed with the wicked, and the Torah said: Do not accept the wicked as witness.[14] Raba ruled: He is eligible, because he must have been wicked for the sake of gain [hamas].[15]

An objection is raised: Do not accept the wicked as witness; [this means,] Do not accept a despoiler[16] as witness; e.g., robbers, and those who have trespassed by [false] oaths.[17] Surely this refers to both a vain oath[18] and an oath concerning money matters?[19] — No; in both cases,[20] oaths concerning money matters are alluded to; then why state 'oaths' [plural]? — [To indicate] oaths in general.[21]

An objection is raised: Do not accept the wicked as witness; [this means,] Do not accept a despoiler as witness, e.g., robbers and usurers.[22] This refutation of Abaye's view is unanswerable.

Shall we say that their difference is identical with that of Tannaim? [For it has been taught:][23] A witness proved a Zomem is unfit [to testify] in all Biblical matters: this is R. Meir's view. R. Jose said: That is only if he has been proved a Zomem in capital cases;[24] but if in monetary cases, his evidence is valid in capital charges. Shall we affirm, Abaye agrees with R. Meir, and Raba with R. Jose? 'Abaye agrees with R. Meir,' who maintains that we impose [disqualification] in respect of major cases as a result of a minor transgression.[25] 'And Raba[26] with R. Jose,' who says, We impose [disqualification] in respect of minor matters[27] as a result of a major transgression;[28] but not the reverse! — No! On R. Jose's opinion, there is no dispute at all.[29] They differ only on the basis of R. Meir's opinion. Abaye certainly agrees with R. Meir. But Raba [may argue]: So far R. Meir gives his ruling only in the case of a Zomem in a monetary case, who is evil in the sight of God and man. But in this case, since he is evil in the sight of God alone,[30] even R. Meir does not disqualify him. And the law rests with Abaye. But has he not been refuted? — That [Baraitha which refuted him] represents the opinion of R. Jose.[31] Granted; yet even so, [wherever] R. Meir and R. Jose [are in dispute], the halachah rests with R. Jose![32] — In the other case it is different, for the Tanna has taught R. Meir's view anonymously.[33] And where does this occur? — [As we find] in the case of Bar Hama, who committed murder. The Resh Galutha[34] said to R. Abba b. Jacob:[35] Go and investigate the matter, if he is definitely the murderer, dim his eyes.[36] Two witnesses thereafter appeared and testified to his definite guilt; but he [Bar Hama] produced two other witnesses, who gave evidence against one of the accusing witnesses. One deposed: In my presence this witness stole a kab of barley; the other testified: In my presence he stole

(1) V. Glos. This refers to a case where a period elapsed between his giving of evidence and being proved a Zomem.

(2) I.e., from the time he began to give his evidence in court, and all the evidence he has given in the intervening period becomes invalidated.

(3) I.e., from the time when he is proved a Zomem.

(4) An interpretation of Ex. XXIII, 1.

(5) If purchasers have transacted business through documents signed by the Zomemim, having been unaware of their disqualification, they would become involved in considerable loss, should their evidence be declared invalid.

(6) Rashi: two pairs against one pair, each of the former refuting the testimony of a single member of the latter; in this case there is no anomaly, hence disqualification is retrospective. Tosaf.: there are two witnesses refuting one, leaving the other unaffected. The reason based on the injury to purchasers, on both interpretations, however, is still valid.

(7) Here again the argument that it is an anomalous procedure no longer holds good. It should be observed that, strictly speaking, the term Zomem is inapplicable in that case, but it is here used rather loosely in the sense of a witness proved to have been ineligible. Tosaf. however, gives this explanation: A and B attested a certain act, claiming that they had witnessed it together, whereupon C and D declared A a Zomem, but leaving the testimony of B unaffected. Now, in point of fact, since A and B jointly testified, they both (including B), deny the allegation of C and D, and therefore it is an anomaly that credence is given to the latter pair. Here, however, B too was proved to be incompetent, though on other grounds, viz., robbery; therefore it is no anomaly that the testimony of C and D against A should be accepted.

(8) יע"ל קג"ם. Six decisions scattered throughout the Babylonian Talmud in which Abaye differs from Raba, and where the law rests with the former. Y'AL KGM is composed of six initial letters of words which indicate various legal terms, YOD (י) יאוש, 'abandonment of lost article,' B.M. 21b. 'AYIN (ע) עד זומם, referred to here. LAMED (ל) לחי העומד מאליו, 'A pole put up accidentally,' 'Er. 15a. KOF (ק) קידושין שלא נמסרו לביאה, 'Betrothal which cannot result in actual cohabitation,' Kid. 51a. GIMEL (ג) גילוי דעת בגיטין 'The act of revealing one's attitude indirectly in regard to a Get,' Git. 34a. MEM (מ) מומר, A Pervert, in the following discussion.

(9) מומר (from מור convert, exchange), hence a pervert; an apostate; an open opponent of the Jewish law; a non-conformist. The word Mumar is also employed by the Talmud to designate one who transgresses a Biblical command in general.

(10) נבילה carrion, an animal that died a natural death or which was not slaughtered according to ritual law.
(11) I.e., his greed for money, because it is cheaper.
(12) Because he is classed with the wicked, who commit their misdeeds for gain.
(13) I.e., to defy, and show his contempt for, the law.
(14) Cf. Ex. XXIII, 1.
(15) חמס, 'violence', 'plunder'. Cf. Ex. XXIII, 1, 'to be a witness of violence' (E.V. 'unrighteous witness'). I.e., such as a robber; whereas in this case his action is prompted by other motives.
(16) One who violates another's rights to satisfy his own greed.
(17) I.e., perjurers.
(18) E.g., an oath that a pillar of stone is made of stone, which is a needless oath.
(19) As follows from the plural, oaths. Hence the motive for his evil act need not be lust for money, in contradistinction to Raba's opinion.
(20) Actually, only one case is mentioned, viz., oaths. But the phrase is used on the questioner's hypothesis (v. n. 6), and the answer proceeds to demolish that assumption.
(21) I.e., such as are made in litigation.
(22) Hence his wickedness must, to disqualify him, have been prompted by gain for money only, in contradistinction to the opinion of Abaye.
(23) Tosef. Mak. I.
(24) For, having been found dishonest in grave matters, his evidence is all the more suspect in matters less grave.
(25) And the case under discussion is similar: that of a provocative Mumar only; nevertheless, he is declared incompetent to testify in a civil suit, though false evidence in such a case is evil both in the sight of God and man, and hence constitutes a greater transgression.
(26) Who maintains that the evidence of a man who transgressed a ritual law (an evil in the sight of God alone) need not be doubted in a civil case.
(27) E.g., is the case of a Zomem in monetary cases.
(28) E.g., in the case of a Zomem in capital cases.
(29) Abaye can certainly not agree with R. Jose, for he can in no wise hold that a Zomem in civil cases is eligible in capital cases.
(30) Such as is involved in the open defiance of the ritual law by eating Nebelah.
(31) In accordance with the preceding argument (cf. n. 3). Abaye, however, rules as does R. Meir.
(32) Cf. 'Er. 46b. This is a general rule.
(33) It is a general principle that if an individual view is stated anonymously, as though it were a general opinion, the halachah rests with it.
(34) Exilarch.
(35) [Read with Ms. M., R. Aha b. Jacob, v. D.S. a.l.]
(36) Perhaps, 'blind him,' 'put out his eyes.' Capital punishment was abolished four decades before the fall of Jerusalem (cf. infra 41a). Others, however, interpret it of Kenas, i.e., confiscation of property.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 27b

the handle of a burtya.[1] Then [R. Abba] said to the [defendant]: What is thy intention: [to disqualify this man] in accordance with the opinion of R. Meir?[2] But wherever R. Jose is at variance with R. Meir, the halachah rests with R. Jose; and R. Jose ruled: One [a witness] who was proved a Zomem in a civil suit is competent [to testify] in capital charges. Said R. Papi: That [the rule] is only where the Tanna has not stated R. Meir's view anonymously. Here, however, he has. Whence do we infer this?[3] Shall we say, from what we learnt? 'Whoever is competent to try capital cases, is also competent to try civil suits'?[4] Now, whose opinion is this? Shall we say, R. Jose's? But what of a witness proved a Zomem in monetary cases, who, even though incompetent in civil suits, is nevertheless eligible in capital charges? Hence it must surely express the opinion of R. Meir.[5] But why so? Perhaps it [the Mishnah] refers to those who are disqualified on account of [defective] family descent?[6] For should you not agree, what of the latter clause of the Mishnah, viz., One may be competent to try monetary cases, but incompetent for capital cases? Now, why is he incompetent:

because he was proved a Zomem in a capital charge? Is he then competent to adjudicate a monetary case? But all agree that he is ineligible! Hence it must refer to disqualification through [some defect of] family descent.[7] Similarly, here too [the first clause of the Mishnah] it must refer to this type of disqualification![8] — But this is where the Tanna stated it anonymously, for we learnt:[9] These are ineligible [to be witnesses or judges]: a gambler with dice, usurers, pigeon trainers, traders in Sabbatical produce, and slaves. This is the general rule: For all testimony for which a woman is ineligible, they too are ineligible.[10] Now, whose opinion is this? Shall we assume, R. Jose's? But there is the case of testimony in capital charges, for which a woman is not eligible, whilst they are![11] Hence it must surely express the opinion of R. Meir.[12] Thereupon Bar Hama arose and kissed his [R. Papi's] feet, and undertook to pay his poll-tax for him for the rest of his life.[13]

MISHNAH. NOW, THE FOLLOWING ARE REGARDED AS RELATIONS;[14] A BROTHER,[15] FATHER'S BROTHER, MOTHER'S BROTHER, SISTER'S HUSBAND, THE HUSBAND OF ONE'S PATERNAL OR MATERNAL AUNT, A STEP-FATHER, FATHER-IN-LAW, AND BROTHER-IN-LAW [ON THE SIDE OF ONE'S WIFE]; ALL THESE WITH THEIR SONS AND SONS-IN-LAW; AND ONE'S STEPSON HIMSELF.[16]

R. JOSE SAID: THIS IS [THE TEXT OF] R. AKIBA'S MISHNAH;[17] BUT THE FIRST MISHNAH[18] [READS]: AN UNCLE AND HIS SON[19] , AND WHOEVER IS ELIGIBLE TO BE ONE'S HEIR.[20] AND ALL WHO WERE RELATED AT THAT MOMENT.[21] IF ONE HAD BEEN RELATED, BUT SUBSEQUENTLY CEASED TO BE SO,[22] HE IS ELIGIBLE. R. JUDAH HOLDS; EVEN IF ONE'S DAUGHTER HAS DIED, BUT HE [THE SON-IN-LAW] HAS HAD CHILDREN BY HER, HE STILL RANKS AS A KINSMAN.

FURTHER, A FRIEND OR AN ENEMY [IS INELIGIBLE]. BY 'FRIEND' ONE'S GROOMSMAN[23] IS MEANT; BY 'ENEMY', ANY MAN WHO, BY REASON OF ENMITY, HAS NOT SPOKEN TO ONE FOR THREE DAYS, IS UNDERSTOOD.TO THIS THE RABBIS REPLIED: ISRAELITES, AS A RULE, ARE NOT TO BE SUSPECTED ON SUCH GROUNDS.[24]

GEMARA. Whence is this law derived? — From what our Rabbis taught: The fathers shall not be put to death for [on account of] the children.[25] What does this teach? Is it that fathers shall not be executed for sins committed by their children and vice versa? But is it not already explicitly stated, Every man shall be put to death for his own sin?[26] Hence, Fathers shall not be put to death on account of children, must mean, fathers shall not be put to death on the testimony of their sons and similarly, and sons shall not be put to death on account of fathers, means, nor sons on the testimony of their fathers.

[To revert to the text.] Are not children then to be put to death for the sins committed by their parents? Is it not written, Visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children?[27] — There the reference is to children who follow their parents' footsteps.[28] As it has been taught: And also in the iniquities of their parents shall they pine away with them,[29] [i.e.,] if they hold fast to the evil doings of their fathers. Thou sayest thus: Yet perhaps it is not so, but true even if they do not hold fast to their [evil] doings?[30] When Scripture states, Every man shall be put to death for his own sin,[31] [it must refer to those who do not hold fast to their fathers' ways. Then how shall we interpret, And also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them?][32] — As referring to those who continue in the ways of their fathers.[33] But do they [really] not [suffer for the sins committed by others]? Is it not written, And they shall stumble one upon another,[34] meaning, One [will stumble] through the sin of the other, which teaches that all are held responsible for one another?[35] — There the reference is to such as had the power to restrain [their fellowmen from evil] but did not.

(11) In accordance with his ruling that one whose wickedness has been prompted by monetary gain is not disqualified from testifying in capital cases.
(12) This then is the anonymous Mishnah taught in accordance with R. Meir. Hence the evidence of evil-doers by reason of their monetary greed is invalid in capital charges; hence one of the witnesses against Bar Hama was disqualified.

(17) V. n. 7.
(18) A collection of Halachoth the compilation of which began, according to Gaonic accounts, as early as Hillel and Shammai. When owing to political disorders many Halachoth of the Mishnah had been forgotten and their words had become a subject of controversy, the one Mishnah developed into many. This multiplication of Mishnahs occurred during the period of the later Beth Hillel and Beth Shammai. In order to avert the danger which threatened its uniformity a synod was convened in Jabneh to examine differences and to consider revision. But as the mass of material grew and with it the need for a methodical arrangement, R. Akiba undertook the task of sifting the material and editing it systematically in various sections (Sedarim) and treatises (Massekoth). J.E. vol. VIII, p. 610.
(19) דוד is the brother of one's father.

(24) I.e., they are not suspected of giving false evidence through friendship or enmity; hence they are competent to testify. Nevertheless, they cannot act as judges, because it is difficult for them to be unbiassed and impartial.
(25) Deut. XXIV, 16. Fathers and sons are unnecessarily in the plural. The Rabbis deduce from this that the text refers to fathers who are brothers, whose relationship is next to that of father and son, so that not only the kinship between one another but also that between one and the son of the other debars from giving evidence. The following kinsmen are thus derived from the text: Father, son, brother and nephew. V. infra.

(35) Shewing that the iniquities of one may be borne by the other.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 28a

We have thus found that 'fathers'[1] [cannot testify] for the sons [of each other], and vice versa; and all the more, 'fathers' [cannot testify] in respect of each other.[2] But whence is derived [the inadmissibility of] 'sons' [to give evidence] in respect of 'sons'?[3] — If so [sc. that such evidence is admissible], the text should have read, The fathers shall not be put to death on account of [the evidence of] a son.[4] Why 'sons'?[5] [To teach] that they too [are ineligible] in respect of each other. Thus we have found that 'sons' [are inadmissible] for each other. Whence do we know their inadmissibility [as joint witnesses] concerning others?[6] — Said Rami b. Hama: It is deduced by logic. For it has been taught: Witnesses cannot be declared Zomemim[7] until both are proved Zomemim.[8] Now, should you think that kinsmen[9] are eligible [to testify in cases] concerning strangers, a witness declared a Zomem[10] might suffer death because of his brother's evidence [which supported his own].[11] Raba demurred: But according to your argument, what of that which we learnt: If three brothers are [separately] supported by another witness,[12] they count as three separate sets of witnesses. But they count as one set in respect of being proved Zomemim.[13] It thus results that the perjured witness must pay money on account of the evidence given by his brother?[14] Hence [it must be assumed that the penalty for] false testimony is brought about through outsiders;[15] so here too, [the penalty for] false testimony comes about through strangers![16] — But if so,[17] the text should have read: and a son on account of fathers, or, and they on account of the fathers. Why and sons? — To show that 'sons'[18] [are not eligible] in respect of strangers.

We have thus deduced [the exclusion of] paternal relations. Whence do we know [the same] of maternal relations? — Scripture says, 'fathers' twice.[19] Since [the repetition] is unnecessary in respect to paternal relations, we may refer it to maternal relations.[20] Now, we have thus learnt [the exclusion of relatives' evidence] for condemnation.[21] Whence do we know [the same] of acquittal? — Scripture states, they shall be put to death, twice. Since that [the repetition] is unnecessary in respect of condemnation, refer it to acquittal. Again, we have learnt [the exclusion of relatives] in capital cases. Whence is the same known of civil suits? — Scripture says, Ye shall have one manner of law,[22] meaning that the law must be administered similarly in all cases.

Rab said:[23] My paternal uncle, his son and his son-in-law may not bear testimony for me;[24] nor may I, my son nor my son-in-law testify for him. But why so? Does not this involve relationships of the third and the first degrees?[25] whereas we learnt that a relative of the second degree[26] [may not testify] for a relative of the second degree; and also that one of the second degree cannot testify for one of the first;[27] but not that a relative of the third degree may not bear testimony for one of the first? — What is meant by HIS SON-IN-LAW, stated in the Mishnah, is the son-in-law of his [the uncle's] son.[28] But should he not include [instead] his [the uncle's] grandson?[29] — He [the Tanna] teaches us incidentally that the husband bears the same relationships as his wife.[30] But what of that which R. Hiyya taught: [The Mishnah enumerates] eight chief relations[31] who make up the number of twenty-four.[32] But these [on the assumption that a son-in-law of the uncle's son ranks as a relative of the third degree] amount to thirty-two![33] — But in fact, SON-IN-LAW is literally meant.[34] Why then does he [Rab] designate him the son-in-law of his [the uncle's] son?[35] — Because since his relationship comes from without,[36] he is regarded as one degree further removed.[37] If so, it is a case of the third degree vis a vis the second[38] [which is forbidden], whereas Rab allowed [the testimony of] the second degree to the third![39] — But Rab agrees with R. Eleazar.[40] For it has been taught: R. Eleazar said: Just as my paternal uncle, his son and son-in-law may not testify for me so the son of my paternal uncle, his son and son-in-law may not testify for me. But still, that includes relatives of the third and the second degrees,[41] whereas Rab permitted the testimony of such relatives![42] — Rab agrees with R. Eleazar in one point,[43] but differs from him in another.[44]

What is Rab's reason? — Scripture states, Fathers shall not be put to death for sons ['al banim]; and sons . . . :[45] this [the 'and'] teaches the inclusion of another generation [as ineligible to testify]. And R. Eleazar?[46] — Scripture states, 'al banim,[47] implying that the fathers' disqualification is carried over to the sons.[48]

R. Nahman said: My mother-in-law's brother, his son, and my mother-in-law's sister's son, may not testify for me. The Tanna [of the Mishnah] supports this: A SISTER'S HUSBAND; THE HUSBAND OF ONE'S PATERNAL OR MATERNAL AUNT, . . . ALL THESE WITH THEIR SONS AND SONS-IN-LAW [ARE INELIGIBLE AS WITNESSES].[49]

R. Ashi said: While we were with 'Ulla,[50] the question was raised by us: What of one's father-in-law's brother, the father-in-law's brother's son, and the father-in-law's sister's son? — He answered us: We learnt this: A BROTHER, FATHER'S BROTHER, AND MOTHER'S BROTHER . . . ALL THESE WITH THEIR SONS AND SONS-IN-LAW [ARE INELIGIBLE].[51]

It once happened that Rab went to buy

---

(1) I.e., who are brothers.

(2) As the exclusion of 'sons' is due only to the kinship of their fathers.

(3) I.e., first cousins. Cf. Mishnah, PATERNAL UNCLE'S SON.

(4) I.e., on the evidence of any brother's son.

(5) In the plural.

(6) I.e., that witnesses who are related to each other may not join in giving evidence in a case concerning strangers.

(7) In the sense that they are punished with the penalty they sought to impose, v. Deut. XIX, 19.

(8) Mak. 5b, cf. Tosef. VI. But otherwise, though their evidence may be dismissed, no penalty is imposed upon the false witness.

(9) Lit., 'sons'.

(10) In a murder case.

(11) For had no one else supported him, he could not, according to the above ruling, have been declared a Zomem. Consequently he would incur the death penalty through his kinsman's testimony.

(12) E.g., in support of a claim to the title of land; v. next note.

(13) V. B.B. 56b. Proof of three years' undisturbed possession of land is sufficient to establish a claim to it (cf. B.B. 28a). The case under consideration is one where each of three brothers testified to one year only, while the other witness who joined them attested possession for the three consecutive years. Thus the evidence of the three sets taken together was adequate proof for establishing the possessor's claim. When, however, collusion is discovered, the three pairs of witnesses are considered as one set, since the evidence of all was necessary before the claim could be established. Therefore no penalty is imposed unless they are all proved Zomemim.

(14) Who would have helped to establish the claim had it not been refuted.

(15) So that it is not the brothers who cause the infliction of punishment.

(16) Hence the difficulty remains; — whence do we know that two kinsmen are inadmissible as witnesses in cases of other persons?

(17) That such evidence is admissible.

(18) I.e., relatives.

(19) The verse might have been written, Fathers shall not be put to death for sons nor they for them.

(20) V. p. 368, n. 7, on this mode of exegesis.

(23) To understand Rab's statement and the others that follow it is necessary to give some explanation of affinity and consanguinity in Talmudic law. Relationships between persons are divided into two categories: (a) relationships between persons governed by the ties of consanguinity, i.e., persons of the same blood either lineally or collaterally; (b) relationships through marriage, i.e., affinity. And on the principle that man and wife are considered as one, the relatives of the one are related to those of the other by affinity. Again, the rules by which kinsfolk are excluded from bearing testimony for or against each other affect only certain degrees of relationship, e.g., relatives in the first degree, such as father and son, or brothers may not testify for or against each other; relatives in the second degree may not testify for or against those of the first degree. e.g., a nephew for his uncle; relatives in the second degree may not testify for or against each other, e.g., first cousins. On the other hand, relatives in the third degree may testify for or against relatives in the first, e.g., a grand-nephew in respect of an uncle (according to Raba in B.B. 128a, in opposition to Rab's opinion here); and relatives in the third degree may testify for or against relatives in the second degree, e.g., first cousins for second cousins (Rab agrees with this opinion, but not R. Eleazar.) It should be noted that the ineligibility is mutual.

(24) Cf Mishnah. In all these passages, 'for someone' means in a case where that person is a litigant, whether the evidence be in his favour or not.

(25) Rab's son is a grand-nephew' of Rab's uncle; hence, Rab's son is a relative of the third degree to Rab's uncle, who is of the first degree in relation to Rab's father. (N.B. 'First,' 'Second', and 'Third' almost correspond to generations, but not quite, since a father vis a vis his son ranks as first to first.)

(26) I.e., a first cousin.

(27) E. g., his uncle.

(28) The Mishnah is therefore to be explained thus: ALL THESE (which includes an uncle) WITH THEIR SONS AND THEIR (sc. THE SONS') SONS-IN-LAW. Hence this teaches the inadmissibility of relatives of the third degree.

(29) 'Which is a more direct way of stating a third degree of relationship.

(30) Just as the daughter of his uncle's son is a relation of the third degree, so is her husband.

(31) There are actually nine chiefs enumerated, apart from the step-son who is counted by himself. This point will be raised later on; v. infra 28b.

(32) Since each is counted together with his son and son-in-law.

(33) Eight fathers, eight sons, eight grandsons, and eight sons-in-law of the sons.

(34) The uncle's, not the uncle's son's.

(35) [Thus Rashi, in accordance with the reading in our texts which seems to assume that the answer given above, 'What is meant by HIS SON-IN-LAW is the son-in-law of his son still stands as representing the view of Rab. This assumption is however hardly justified. Yad Ramah's text did not seem to contain the words, 'Why then . . . of his son', which certainly makes the reading smoother.]

(36) I.e., through marriage.

(37) Hence, he ranks as a third degree relation, and thus justifies Rab's ruling.

(38) A man and his uncle's son-in-law are in the relationship of the second to the third degree. Thus: If A and B are brothers, then C, A's son, and B are second and first degrees; C and D, B's sons, are two seconds; therefore C and E, B's sons-in-law, rank as second and third (since a son-in-law, according to the last answer, is one degree further removed than a son).

(39) In that he said: I, my son and my son-in-law (a relative of the third degree) may not bear testimony against my uncle; from which it may be inferred that Rab's son (third degree) may bear testimony against the uncle's son (second degree).

(40) In truth, he does not regard the son-in-law as a relative of the third degree, and so the Mishnah does, in fact, contradict him, as explained above. His view, however, is based on R. Eleazar.

(41) C and F (B's grandson) are second and third degrees.

(42) As stated above, v. n. 1.

(43) In that he disqualifies the evidence of a relative of the third degree for a relative of the first.

(44) That of disqualifying a relative of the third degree for one of the second degree.

(45) ו-בנים Deut. XXIV, 16.

(46) Why does he rule that even second and third degrees are inadmissible?

(47) על בנים, 'upon', or 'for sons'. על means upon or for

(48) I.e., all who are disqualified in respect of the fathers, are likewise disqualified is respect of the sons. Therefore, just as the first and third are ineligible (for R. Eleazar accepts Rab's exegesis of 'and'), so are the second (i.e., the son of the first) and the third disqualified.

(49) To his sister's son-in-law he is his mother-in-law's brother, to his paternal aunt's son-in-law he is his mother-in-law's brother's son, and to his maternal aunt's son-in-law he is his mother-in-law's sister's son.

(50) [Read with Ms. M. Rab 'Ulla.]

(51) To his brother's son-in-law he is his father-in-law's brother; to his father's brother's son-in-law he is his father-in-law's brother's son; and to his maternal uncle's son-in-law he is his father-in-law's sister's son.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 28b

parchment,[1] and they[2] asked him[3] whether a man may testify for his step-son's wife.[4] [Rab answered:] In Sura they say that a husband is as his wife;[5] in Pumbeditha, that the wife is as her husband,[6] For R. Huna said in Rab [Nahman]'s[7] name: Whence do we know that a woman is as her husband? — From the verse: The nakedness of thy father's brother thou shalt not uncover; thou shalt not approach to his wife, she is thine aunt.[8] But is she not actually thy uncle's wife?[9] Hence we infer that a woman is as her husband.[10]

AND A STEP-FATHER, HE, HIS SON AND SON-IN-LAW. HIS SON! But that is his brother![11] — R. Jeremiah said: This is only added to indicate [the exclusion of] a brother's brother.[12] R. Hisda declared a brother's brother eligible. Said the Rabbis to him: Are you unaware of R. Jeremiah's dictum? — 'I have not heard it,' he answered, that is to say, 'I do not accept it.'[13] If so, [the difficulty remains,] he [i.e., his step-father's son] is HIS BROTHER! — He [the Tanna] enumerates both a paternal and a maternal brother.

R. Hisda said: The fathers of the bride and bridegroom may testify for each other; their inter-relationship is no more than that of a lid to a barrel.[14]

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: One may testify for his betrothed wife.[15] Rabina remarked: That is only where his evidence is to her disadvantage;[16] but if it is to her advantage, he is not to be believed.[17] But [in reality] that is not so: it makes no difference whether his evidence is to her advantage or disadvantage; in neither case is he to be believed. [For] on what [do you base] your opinion [that you do not regard him as a relative]? On R. Hiyya b. Ammi's dictum stated on the authority of 'Ulla, viz.: When the betrothed wife [of a Priest dies], he is not obliged to mourn as an Onen[18] nor may he defile himself.[19] Similarly, she is not bound to mourn as an Oneneth[20] [if he dies] nor to defile herself.[21] If she dies, he does not inherit from her;[22] but if he dies, she receives her Kethubah![23] But there, the Divine law has made it all[24] depend on the fact that she is 'she'ero' [his wife],[25] a designation which cannot be applied to a betrothed wife.[26] Whereas here [the evidence of a relative is inadmissible] because of mental affinity; and such mental affinity does exist here [in the case of a betrothed woman and her groom].[27]

ONE'S STEP-SON HIMSELF. Our Rabbis taught: A step-son himself. R. Jose said: A brother-in-law.[28] Another [Baraitha] has been taught: A brother-in-law himself. R. Judah said: A step-son. What does this mean? Shall we assume it to mean as follows: A step-son himself, and the same applies to a brother-in-law; whereas R. Jose reversed this: A brother-in-law himself, and the same applies to a step-son?[29] If so, when our Mishnah states: A BROTHER-IN-LAW, HIS SON AND SON-IN-LAW, whose view is this? It is neither R. Judah's nor R. Jose's![30] But [again] if this is its meaning: A step-son himself; while as for a brother-in-law, [the exclusion extends to] his son and son-in-law; whereas R. Jose reversed this: A brother-in-law himself; while as for a step-son, [the exclusion extends to] his son and son-in-law too: in that case, what R. Hiyya taught, viz., that the Mishnah enumerates eight chief relations which [together with the sons and sons-in-law] involve twenty-four in all,[31] is neither the opinion of R. Judah nor that of R. Jose! —[32] Hence this must be the meaning: A step-son himself; but as for a brother-in-law, his son and son-in-law too [are included]; whereas R. Jose ruled: A brother-in-law himself, and a fortiori his step-son. The Mishnah[33] therefore agrees with R. Judah; while [the view expressed in] the Baraitha[34] is R. Jose's.[35]

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel; The halachah rests with R. Jose.[36]

A certain deed of gift had been attested by two brothers-in-law. Now, R. Joseph thought to declare it valid, since Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: The halachah rests with R. Jose. But Abaye said to him: How do we know that [he referred to] the ruling of R. Jose as stated in the Mishnah which permits the evidence of a brother-in-law: perhaps he meant the ruling of R. Jose in the Baraitha, which disqualifies a brother-in-law? — One cannot think so, for Samuel said:[37] 'E.g., I and Phinehas, who are brothers and brothers-in-law (are inadmissible);'[38] hence others who are only brothers-in-law are admissible.[39] But [Abaye retorted] may it not be that Samuel, in saying, 'e.g., I and Phinehas,' meant only to illustrate the term 'brothers-in-law'?[40] Thereupon [R. Joseph] said to him:[41] Go and establish your title through those who witnessed the delivery,[42] in accordance with R. Eleazar.[43] But did not R. Abba say: Even R. Eleazar agrees that a deed bearing its own disqualification[44] is invalid? — Thereupon R. Joseph said to him: Go your way; they do not permit me to give you possession.

R. JUDAH SAID etc. R. Tanhum said in the name of R. Tabla in the name of R. Beruna in Rab's name: The halachah rests with R. Judah. Raba said in R. Nahman's name: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said likewise in R. Johanan's name: The halachah does not rest with R. Judah. Some refer this dictum of Rabbah b. Bar Hana to the following: R. Jose the Galilean gave the following exposition: And thou shalt come unto the Priests, the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days.[45] Is it then conceivable that, one could go to a judge who does not exist in his lifetime? But the text refers to a judge who was formerly a relative but who subsequently ceased to be one.[46] [Whereon] Rabba b. Bar Hana said: The halachah rests with R. Jose the Galilean.

The sons of Mar 'Ukba's father-in-law who

(1) Cf. J. Sanh. 17a, where it is related that Rab went to buy skins for R. Hiyya the Great, his uncle (cf. supra 5a) who needed them for parchment on which to write scrolls of the Torah. V. also Keth. 103b, how far R. Hiyya distinguished himself in the promotion of learning.

(2) Some scholars.

(3) In J. loc. cit. Rab heard R. Johanan raise the question.

(4) In a case where her personal estate is involved.

(5) This answer is here irrelevant; probably it was given in answer to the question whether one may testify for or against his step-daughter's husband. Cf. J. Sanh. ibid.

(6) Hence the evidence is inadmissible.

(7) Some versions rightly omit the word in brackets.

(8) Lev. XVIII, 14.

(9) The term aunt is usually applied to a father's sister.

(10) Which justifies her being referred to as an avuncular relative, dodah (the word translated 'aunt') being the feminine of dod (uncle).

(11) Who has already been mentioned.

(12) I.e., the son of his step-father by another wife; though he is not related to him at all, but only through his brother.

(13) I.e., he holds that one who is related neither by blood nor by marriage, but merely through an intermediary brother, is not excluded.

(14) Which is not fastened thereto, but merely lies upon it. I.e., they have a neighbourly but not an intimate relationship.

(15) V. p. 34 n. 3.

(16) Lit., 'to draw away from her.'

(17) Though he is not a relation yet, nevertheless, he is not believed, since what is to her advantage will be to his too, when the marriage is completed.

(18) אונן. One deeply grieved. Designation given to a mourner during the time between death and burial, when he is not permitted to eat consecrated things. Cf. Deut. XXVI, 14.

(19) According to the exegesis of Lev. XXI, 2, a Priest is obliged to defile himself for his wife. Yeb. 22b. Here, however, there is no obligation, and hence he is forbidden too.

(20) אוננת fem. of אונן.

(21) This latter law is only incidentally stated since even a wife by marriage, or even the daughter of a Priest, has no restriction imposed upon her as regards contact with the dead. Cf. Sot. 23b.

(23) Provided he has written her one. Hence, since he may not defile himself for her, it proves that there is no real relationship between them.

(24) The compulsory defilement and inheritance.
(25) שארו. E.V., 'his kin that is near unto him,' Lev. XXI, 2.
(26) The root meaning of שאר is 'flesh relationship,' and hence excludes a betrothed wife. Cf. Mek. on Ex. XXI, 10: שארה means marital duty
(27) Therefore his evidence might be biassed. '
(28) The husband of the wife's sister.
(29) Thus differing, not in the application of the law, but in expression. On this hypothesis, the difference lies in which is to be regarded as fundamental and which as derivative.
(30) Both agreeing that only a brother-in-law himself is excluded.
(31) V. supra 28a.
(32) For according to both of them there will be nine chief relations. According to R. Judah, the brother-in-law is included in the list; according to R. Jose there is to be added, the step-son.
(33) That the exclusion of one's brother-in-law is extended to his son and son-in-law.
(34) That there are eight chief relations, involving twenty-four in all.
(35) Who does not extend the exclusion of a brother-in-law to his son and son-in-law too. However, it must not be taken that R. Jose differs from the Mishnah to the extent of admitting a brother-in-law's son, since he has already been excluded by the ruling: 'The husband of his mother's sister,' which, in other words, means that one may not give evidence for or against his sister-in-law's son, with which ruling he is in agreement, since he supports the view in the Baraitha, that there are twenty-four relations in all, and the above-named is included in that number. He differs however from the Mishnah in that he admits the evidence of one's brother or sister-in-law's son-in-law, since the ruling in the Mishnah, 'one's mother's sister's husband', is not irreconcilable with this opinion. The Mishnah excludes only a mother's sister's husband, not a mother-in-law's sister's husband. V. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.
(36) Here the reference is assumed to be to R. Jose, in the Mishnah, who excludes only such relations as are eligible to be heirs, which brothers-in-law are not.
(37) In illustration of a brother-in-law who is disqualified.
(38) They must have married two sisters.
(39) In accordance with R. Jose in the Mishnah.
(40) And so the fact that they were also brothers was immaterial. Hence brothers-in-law are ineligible as witnesses, so that the deed was invalid.
(41) The man who had produced the contract.
(42) Of the deed of gift to you,
(43) That it is the witnesses who saw the delivery of the document who establish its validity. In fact, according to R. Eleazar, a document unsigned by witnesses is also valid. Cf. Git. 3b.
(44) I.e., which is signed by incompetent witnesses.
(45) Deut. XVII, 9.
(46) I.e., at the time the litigation is brought before him. Such a judge is eligible.

had ceased to be relatives of his,[1] came before him [Mar 'Ukba] for trial. But the latter said to them: I am ineligible to try your suit. They answered: What is your opinion; is it as R. Judah's [in the Mishnah]? We can produce a letter from 'the West'[2] that the halachah does not rest with R. Judah! He retorted: Am I then stuck to you by a kab of wax?[3] I told you that I was disqualified from acting as your judge only because [I knew] that you do not accept court decisions.[4]

BY 'FRIEND' ONE'S GROOMSMAN IS MEANT. How long [is he regarded as such]? — R. Abba said in R. Jeremiah's name in Rab's name: The whole seven days of the [marriage] feast.[5] The Rabbis said on Raba's authority: After the very first day [he is no longer regarded as such].

BY 'ENEMY', ANY MAN etc. Our Rabbis taught; And he was not an enemy;[6] then he may give evidence. Again, neither sought his harm;[7] then he may be his judge.[8] Here we find [the exclusion of] an enemy. Whence is deduced [the exclusion of] a friend? — Read [these texts] thus: And he was not his enemy, nor his friend, — then he may give evidence, neither sought his harm, nor his good, — then he may be his judge. Is then 'his friend' actually stated?[9] — But it is a matter of logic. Why is an enemy [excluded]? Because of his disaffection.[10] Then a friend too [is ineligible] because of his friendly inclination.[11] Now, how do the Rabbis[12] interpret this text, And he was not his enemy, neither sought his harm?[13] — One [expression] intimates [his unfitness to be] a judge;[14] the other they interpret as has been taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah said, And he was not his enemy, neither sought his harm; from this we deduce that two scholars who hate each other may not sit together as judges.

MISHNAH. HOW ARE THE WITNESSES EXAMINED? — THEY ARE BROUGHT INTO A ROOM,[15] AND AWE IS INSTILLED INTO THEM.[16] THEN THEY ARE SENT OUT,[17] SAVE FOR THE OLDEST [WITNESS] TO WHOM THEY [THE JUDGES] SAY, TELL US, HOW DOST THOU KNOW THAT SO AND SO OWES [MONEY] TO SO AND SO? IF HE ANSWERS: HE PERSONALLY TOLD ME: 'I OWE HIM [THE MONEY],' OR, 'SO AND SO TOLD ME THAT HE OWES HIM,' HIS STATEMENT IS WORTHLESS,[18] UNLESS HE DECLARES, 'IN OUR PRESENCE,[19] HE ADMITTED TO HIM THAT HE OWES HIM TWO HUNDRED ZUZ.'[20] AFTER THAT THE SECOND WITNESS IS ADMITTED AND SIMILARLY EXAMINED. IF THEIR STATEMENTS TALLY, THEY [THE JUDGES] PROCEED TO DISCUSS THE CASE. SHOULD TWO FIND HIM NOT LIABLE AND ONE LIABLE, HE IS DECLARED NOT LIABLE; TWO LIABLE, AND ONE NOT LIABLE, HE IS DECLARED LIABLE; ONE LIABLE, AND ONE NOT LIABLE, OR TWO EITHER NOT LIABLE OR LIABLE, WHILE THE THIRD IS UNDECIDED,[21] THE NUMBER OF JUDGES IS INCREASED.

WHEN THE VERDICT IS ARRIVED AT,[22] THEY[23] ARE READMITTED, AND THE SENIOR JUDGE SAYS: SO AND SO, THOU ART NOT LIABLE; OR, SO AND SO, THOU ART LIABLE.

AND WHENCE DO WE KNOW THAT HE [ONE OF THE JUDGES] WHEN LEAVING, MUST NOT SAY, 'I WAS FOR ACQUITTAL WHILST MY COLLEAGUES WERE FOR CONVICTION, BUT WHAT COULD I DO, SEEING THAT THEY WERE IN THE MAJORITY?' — OF SUCH A ONE IS IT WRITTEN: THOU SHALT NOT GO ABOUT AS A TALEBEARER AMONG THY PEOPLE,[24] AND AGAIN, HE THAT GOETH ABOUT AS A TALEBEARER REVEALETH SECRETS.[25]

GEMARA. How are they[26] cautioned? Rab Judah said: We admonish them thus: As vapours and wind without rain, so is he that boasteth himself of a false gift.[27] Raba remarked: They might say [inwardly]: Though a famine last seven years it does not pass the artisan's gate.[28] But, said Raba, this is what is said to them: As a maul and a sword and a sharp arrow, so is a man that beareth false witness against his neighbour.[29] R. Ashi demurred: They might say: Though a plague last seven years, no one dies before his time! But, said R. Ashi, Nathan b. Mar Zutra told me, We warn them thus: False witnesses are despised [even] by their own employers, as it is written, And set two men, base fellows, before him, and let them bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst curse God and the King.[30]

IF HE ANSWERS, HE [PERSONALLY] TOLD ME: I OWE HIM [THE MONEY];' OR, 'SO AND SO TOLD ME THAT HE OWES HIM,' HIS STATEMENT IS WORTHLESS, UNLESS HE DECLARES, 'IN OUR PRESENCE HE ADMITTED THAT HE OWES HIM TWO HUNDRED ZUZ. This[31] supports Rab Judah. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: One must definitely instruct them [those who witness a transaction]: Ye are my witnesses.[32] It has been stated, likewise: R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name. [If A says to B,] 'You owe me a maneh',[33] and B admits it; and if he demands it from him the following day, and B answers, 'I was only jesting with you,'[34] he is not liable.[35] So also it has been taught: [If A says to B,] 'You owe me a maneh'; and B answers, 'Yes, it is so;' but on the following day, when the former demands it, the latter replies. 'I was but jesting with you,' he is not liable. Moreover, if he hid witnesses behind a fence and said to him: 'You owe me a maneh', and B answered, 'Yes;' and A added, 'Are you willing to make this admission in the presence of so and so?' And he replied: 'I am afraid to do so, lest you compel me to go to court;' and if on the following day, on his [A's] demanding it from him, B retorts; 'I was only jesting with you', he is not liable. But we do not plead [thus] on behalf of a Mesith.[36] ' Mesith? Who mentioned him?[37] — The text is defective, and should read thus: If he himself did not plead [this],[38] we do not plead it for him. But in capital charges, even if he himself does not plead,[39] we plead on his behalf. Yet no such plea is made on behalf of a Mesith. Wherein does a Mesith differ? — R. Hama b. Hanina said: I heard it said in a lecture[40] by R. Hiyya b. Abba: A Mesith is different, because the Divine Law states, Neither shall thine eyes pity him; neither shalt thou conceal him.[41]

R. Samuel b. Nahman said in R. Jonathan's name: Whence do we know that we do not plead on behalf of a Mesith? — From the [story of] the ancient serpent.[42] For R. Simlai said: The serpent had many pleas to put forward but did not do so. Then why did not the Holy One, blessed be He, plead on its behalf? — Because it offered none itself. What could it have said [to justify itself?] — 'When the words of the teacher and those of the pupil [are contradictory], whose words should be hearkened to; surely the teacher's!'[43]

Hezekiah said: Whence do we know that he who adds [to the word of God] subtracts [from it]? — From the verse, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it neither shall ye touch it.[44]

R. Mesharshia said: [We derive it] from the following verse: Ammathayim [two cubits] and a half shall be his length.[45] R. Ashi said: From this: 'Ashte-'esreh [eleven] curtains.[46]

Abaye said: The above ruling[47] holds good only if he says: 'I was only joking with you'; but if he pleads:

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 29b

'The whole thing never happened,'[1] he is adjudged a confirmed liar.[2] R. Papa the son of R. Aha b. Adda said to him: Thus we say on the authority of Rab; People do not remember aimless words.[3]

A man once hid witnesses against his neighbour behind the curtains of his bed, and said to him: 'You owe me a maneh'. 'Yes', he replied. 'May all present, whether awake or asleep be witnesses against you? he asked[4] 'No', was the reply. R. Kahanah [before whom the trial was brought] observed; Surely he answered, No![5]

A man hid witnesses against his neighbour in a grave, and then said to him: 'you owe me a maneh. 'Yes' he answered. 'Shall the living and the dead be witnesses against you?' 'No', he retorted. Said R. Simeon [b. Lakish]: Surely he answered, No![6]

Rabina, or some say R. Papa, said: We may infer from the above, that the dictum of Rab Judah in Rab's name, viz., One must definitely instruct them: 'You are my witnesses,' holds good no matter whether the debtor says it, or the creditor says it while the debtor remains silent. For it[7] is only because the debtor said, 'no'.[8] but had he kept silent, it would indeed have been so.[9]

A certain man was nicknamed, 'A kab-ful of indebtedness.' [On hearing the name,] he exclaimed: 'To whom do I owe anything but to so and so and so and so?' Thereupon they summoned him before R. Nahman. Said he: A man is wont to disclaim abundance [of wealth].[10]

A certain man was nicknamed, 'The mouse lying on the denarii.'[11] Before he died, he declared: 'I owe money to so and so and to so and so.' After his death they summoned his heirs before R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. Said he to them:[12] The dictum, 'A man is wont to disclaim abundance [of wealth],' holds good only in life, but not in death.[13] They paid half, and were summoned for the other half, before R. Hiyya. Said he to them: Just as one is wont to disclaim his own abundance [of wealth], so he is likely to disclaim it for his children.[14] Thereupon they [the plaintiffs] asked: 'Shall we return [the half we have already received]?' R. Hiyya replied: The Zaken[15] has already given his ruling.[16]

If a man admitted [a claim] in the presence of two witnesses, and they confirmed this by Kinyan,[17] they may indite [a note],[18] if not, they may not do so.[19] [If he admitted] it in the presence of three, and they made no Kinyan: Rab [Ammi][20] said, They may write a note;[21] R. Assi ruled, They may not. There was a case once where Rab took into consideration R. Assi's ruling.

R. Adda b. Ahabah said: Sometimes a deed of acknowledgment[22] may be drawn up; sometimes it may not. If they [the witnesses] merely happened to be assembled [when he made the admission,] it may not be drawn up; but if he [the debtor] called them together, it is to be drawn up. Raba said: Even then it may not be indited, unless he definitely told them, 'Be you my judges.'[23] Mar son of R. Ashi said: Even then, it may not be drawn up, unless the [necessary] meeting place is fixed and he [the debtor] is summoned to appear before the court.[24]

If a man admitted a claim of movable property, and they [the witnesses] secured a formal title from him, they may record it; but not otherwise. But what if it concerned real estate, and they secured no formal title? — Amemar said: They may not record it. Mar Zutra said: They may. The law is that a deed is to be drawn up.[25]

Rabina once happened to be at Damharia,[26] and R. Dimi son of R. Huna of that town asked him: What of movable property which is still intact [i.e., in the possession of the debtor]? — He answered: It ranks as real estate.[27] R. Ashi, however, ruled: Since it still needs collection, it is not so.

A certain deed of [debt] acknowledgment did not contain the phrase: 'He said unto us, Write it, attest it and give it to him [the creditor].'[28] Abaye and Raba both said: This case comes under the ruling of Resh Lakish, who said: We may take it for granted that witnesses will not sign a document unless he [the vendor] has attained his majority.[29] R. Papi — others say, R. Huna the son of R. Joshua — objected: Can there be anything which we [the judges] do not know, and yet the clerks of the court know?[30] But in fact when the clerks of Abaye's court were questioned, they were found to know this law, and similarly the clerks of Raba's court.[31]

A certain deed of acknowledgment contained the phrase; 'A memorial of judicial proceedings,'[32]

(1) That he never admitted liability, notwithstanding that there are witnesses who testify to the contrary.

(2) So that not even an oath can free him.

(3) I.e., what one says in jest is not remembered. His total denial therefore does not weaken his case.

(4) Probably the plaintiff knew that the defendant would refuse to admit the debt in the presence of witnesses, but he thought that he might assent if he believed that all were asleep. (Rashi.)

(5) And so refused to admit his debt in the presence of witnesses. Hence he is not liable.

(6) Therefore he acquitted him.
(7) The ruling in the above-mentioned cases, where the debtor is acquitted.
(8) When requested to authorise those present to be witnesses.
(9) I.e., his admission in liability in the first place would be valid
(10) Therefore he probably spoke of non-existent debts so as to disclaim wealth. Consequently he is not liable.
(11) I.e., a miser. [Mice often drag away into their holes glittering object such as coins, rings, etc. V. Lewysohn, Zoologie, p. 106.]
(12) The heirs.
(13) Hence the claim against the heirs is established.
(14) So that his declaration before death might have been fictitious.
(15) The elder R. Ishmael, son of R. Jose. v. supra p. 137, n. 1.
(16) So that I cannot reverse the decision with regard to the amount already paid.
(17) V. p. 142, n. 2.
(18) Of the debt, even if not explicitly instructed by the debtor.
(19) Unless directly requested, for though the debtor expressly appointed them as witnesses, he may prefer an oral debt to a written bond, since the former can be collected only out of property in his possession, but not out of real estate sold subsequent to the incurring of the debt, whereas the latter can be so collected.
(20) Some versions correctly omit the name in brackets.
(21) Since in this case they are given the authority of a Beth din to convert an oral debt into a written one.
(22) אודיתא, Of debt, made before three witnesses and without Kinyan.
(23) I.e., he conferred upon them the powers of a court.
(24) I.e., this improvised court must observe the usual formalities of a court, sitting in a place previously determined, and summoning the debtor.
(25) In the case of immovable property, as soon as the admission is made, the debt is considered as collected; consequently there is no reason why the debtor should prefer an oral debt to a written one; which latter, however, might well be preferred in the case of movable property.
(26) [A town in the neighbourhood of Sura, v. Obermeyer, op. cit. p. 298.]
(27) The law of which is stated above.
(28) The question is whether the omission is proof that the contract was written without the debtor's request or not.
(29) I.e., the age of twenty, v. B.B. 156a; the sale of a legacy before that is invalid, and it is taken for granted that witnesses are aware of this law. So also in this case, where the admission was made before two witnesses, and without Kinyan, the latter would know that they could not write a deed without the debtor's instructions; hence they must have been so instructed.
(30) This law, that two witnesses must not record the admission without explicit instructions, is not even known to all judges. How then can it be assumed that they must have known it?
(31) It was therefore shewn that this rule was known to clerks of the court, charged with the drafting of legal documents, and before whom they were generally attested.
(32) Lit., 'A memorial of the words of so and so,' instead of, 'A memorial of testimony by witnesses.'

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 30a

and was entirely worded like a Court document,[1] but did not include [the usual phrase], 'We were in a session of three judges one of whom [subsequently] absented himself.'[2] Rabina thought to rule: This is covered by Resh Lakish's dictum;[3] but R. Nathan b. Ammi observed: It has been said on the authority of Raba: In all such cases a mistaken Beth din is to be suspected.[4] R. Nahman b. Isaac said: If 'Beth din' is mentioned anywhere in the document, no such [fear] is necessary.[5] But suppose it was a presumptuous Beth din: for Samuel said: If two tried a case, their decision stands, but they are called, 'A presumptuous Beth din!'[6] — No, for the document referred to[7] stated: 'The Beth din of Rabbana Ashi.'[8] But perhaps the Rabbis of Rabbana Ashi's academy agreed with Samuel?[9] — There was written therein, 'Rabbana Ashi told us [to write the document].[10] '

Our Rabbis taught: If a man says to them:[11] 'I saw your father hiding money, [say,] in a strong box, a chest, or a store-room, and he told me that it belonged to so and so, or that it was [for the redemption] of the second tithe:'[12] if it [the hiding place] is in the house, his statement is valueless,[13] if in a field, his words stand. This is the general rule of the matter: Wherever he has access [to the hiding place] his statement stands;[14] but otherwise, it is of no value. If they [the heirs] saw their father hide money in a strong box, chest or store-room, saying, 'It belongs to so and so,' or 'It is for the payment of the second tithe': if it [his statement] was by way of giving directions, his words stand; but if it was in the nature of an evasion,[15] his statement is of no value. If one felt distressed over some money which his father had left him,[16] and the dispenser of dreams[17] appeared to him and named the sum, indicated the place, and specified its purpose, saying that it was [for the redemption] of the second tithe — such an incident once occurred, and they [the Rabbis on that occasion] said: Dreams have no importance for good or ill.[18]

IF TWO DECLARE HIM NOT LIABLE etc. How is it [the judgment] worded?[19] — R. Johanan said: [Thus; 'The defendant is] not liable.' Resh Lakish said: 'So and so [of the judges] acquit; so and so holds him liable.' R. Eleazar said: 'As a result of their [the judges'] discussion, [it is decided that] he is not liable.' Wherein do they [practically] differ? — As to whether he is to share in the payment of compensation, [in case of error,] together with the others.[20] On the view [that the verdict is to be worded]: 'He [the defendant] is not liable,'[21] he [the dissenting judge] must pay his share;[22] while on the view [that the wording should be]: 'So and so acquit, and so and so holds him liable,' he makes no restitution.[23] But even on the view [that the wording should be]: 'He is not liable,' he [the dissentient] might argue, 'Had you accepted my opinion, you too would not have to pay![24] — But the difference arises concerning their liability to pay his share in addition to their own. According to the view [that the verdict is framed thus]: 'He is not liable,' they bear [the whole] liability;[25] but on the view [that it is worded]: 'So and so [of the judges] acquit, and so and so holds him liable,' they do not pay [the dissentient's share].[26] But even according to the opinion [that the wording should be]: 'He [the defendant] is not liable,' why should they pay [the whole amount]? They might surely argue:[27] Hadst thou not been with us, the trial would have had no result at all! — The difference must arise therefore with reference to, Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people.[28] R. Johanan says: [The verdict is to be framed thus:] He is not liable,' because of this injunction against talebearing.[29] Resh Lakish holds [that the wording must be]: 'So and so acquit; so and so holds him liable,' since [otherwise] it [the verdict] would appear a falsehood,[30] while R. Eleazar agrees with both; therefore it [the verdict] must be framed thus: 'After a decision by the judges, he was found not liable.'

WHEN THE VERDICT IS ARRIVED AT, etc. Whom [do they admit]? Shall we say, the litigants: but they are there already?[31] But [if it refers to] the witnesses: whose view is this? Assuredly it does not agree with R. Nathan, for it has been taught: The evidence of witnesses cannot be combined,[32] unless they simultaneously saw what they state in evidence. R. Joshua b. Korha said: Evidence is valid even if they witnessed it consecutively. Again, their evidence is not admissible by the court unless they both testify together. R. Nathan said; The court may hear the evidence of one witness one day, and when the other appears the next day, they may hear his evidence![33] No. In reality, the litigants are meant, and this represents the view of R. Nehemiah. For it has been taught: R. Nehemiah said: This was the custom of the fair-minded[34] in Jerusalem; first the litigants were admitted and their statements heard; then the witnesses were admitted and their statements heard. Then they[35] were ordered out, and the matter was discussed. [And when the verdict was arrived at etc.][36] But has it not been explicitly taught: When the deliberations come to an end, the witnesses are readmitted?[37] That certainly does not agree with R. Nathan.

The above text [reads]: 'The evidence of witnesses cannot be combined unless they simultaneously saw what they state in evidence. R. Joshua b. Korha said: It is valid even if they saw it consecutively.' Wherein do they differ? — If you wish, I might say, in the interpretation of a Biblical verse; alternatively, in a matter of logic. On the latter assumption, [the first Tanna argues,] the [loan of the] maneh to which the one testifies, is not attested by the other, and vice versa.[38] Whereas the other [Tanna][39] [argues that, after all,] both testify to a mina in general.[40] Alternatively, they differ in respect to a Biblical verse. For it is written, And he is a witness whether he has seen or known of it.[41] Now, it has been taught:[42] From the implications of the verse, A witness shall not rise up etc.,[43] do I not know that one is meant? Why then state 'one'.? — That it may establish the principle that wherever it says A witness, it implies two, unless one is specified by the verse.[44] And the Divine Law expressed it in the singular to teach that they must witness [the act in question] both together as one man.[45] And the other?[46] — He is a witness whether he hath seen or known of it,[47] teaches that in all circumstances [the evidence is admissible].[48]

'Again, their evidence is not admissible by the court unless they both testify together. R. Nathan said: The court may hear the evidence of one witness one day, and when the other witness appears the next day, they may hear his evidence.' Wherein do they differ? — Either in a matter of logic or in [the interpretation of] a Biblical text.

'Either in a matter of logic.' One Master argues: A single witness comes to impose an oath, but not to prove liability.[49] The other[50] argues: Even if they appear simultaneously, do they testify with one mouth?[51] But [nevertheless], their evidence is combined. So here too [where they come separately] their evidence may be combined.

'Or [in interpretation of] a Biblical text.' [And he is a witness whether he has seen or known of it;] If he do not utter it, then he shall bear his iniquity.[52]

(1) Though it was signed only by two.

(2) Cf. Keth. 22a: If one of the three judges necessary for the authentication of a document died before signing it, the document should be so worded.

(3) V. supra, where Resh Lakish said that it may be taken for granted that an attested document has been legally drawn up. Hence the presence of three originally may be assumed.

(4) In this case where the phrase 'In a session of three judges' was omitted they might have thought that two judges sufficed for purposes of authentication.

(5) That two thought that they constitute a Beth din, for all know that the term 'Beth din' applies to three.

(6) V. supra 3a.

(7) By R. Nahman b. Isaac.

(8) The signatories belonged to his school, and they, no doubt, were aware that two cannot compose a Beth din. R. Ashi, the Babylonian Amora, is given here merely as an illustration because his was the principal court at the time when this passage was incorporated in the Gemara (cf. Rashi). 'Rabbana is a higher title than Rabbi, and is the Aramaic equivalent of Rabban', Chief Teacher (cf. Graetz, Geschichte, IV, 350ff). [According to Funk, Die Juden in Babylonien II, 103, however, the title Rabbana (the Great One) in Persia was reserved for Exilarchs, yet it was bestowed on R. Ashi owing to his unique position and the power he wielded, v. also I, 33.]

(9) That two could form a Beth din, though they did not care about Samuel's uncomplimentary designation.

(10) The court must therefore have been legally constituted, since he would not have asked two to form a Beth din.

(11) To heirs.

(13) Unless there is another witness to support his statement.

(14) Since he is then not under suspicion of having been prompted in his statement by some ulterior motive, e.g., the desire to serve someone's interests; for had he wished, he himself could have handed over the amount to whomever he wished.

(15) I.e., as though he purposely told them this, so that they might not use it, or that they might not realise his wealth and indulge in extravagance.

(16) And which he suspected to be tithe-money, but was unable to trace the amount.

(17) Or, 'The Master of Dreams', which merely represents the personification of the dream.

(18) Lit., 'neither raise nor lower'. Hence the money might be used for secular purposes. Cf. Tosef., M. Sh. V.

(19) I.e., in a case of disagreement.
(20) C. supra 6a; and infra 33a with reference to the liability of judges to compensate in cases of misjudgment.
(21) Irrespective of whether there has been disagreement or not.
(22) For without him, the remaining two could not have issued such a decree.
(23) Since his opinion is explicitly stated in the verdict.
(24) So that he himself should certainly bear no liability.
(25) Since their view is finally adopted.
(26) The opinion of the two judges was specified to show that the final decision was given by only two (Rashi).
(27) With the third judge.
(28) Lev. XIX, 16.
(29) And stating the names of the dissenting judges is tantamount to talebearing
(30) I.e., the protection of truth is more urgent than the avoidance of talebearing.
(31) Nowhere in the Mishnah is it mentioned that they had to withdraw.
(32) As is necessary for it to be valid.
(33) Cf. Tosef. Sanh. V; B.B. 32a. Hence if it is the witnesses who are admitted after a decision has been arrived at, which implies the necessity of their joint appearance this interpretation of the law is not in accord with the view of R. Nathan as given.
(34) [נקיי הדעת v. supra p. 131, n. 3. Ms. M. אנשי ירושלים 'men of Jerusalem' whom Klein, S., loc. cit., regards as synonymous with נקיי הדעת]
(35) This is understood to refer to the witnesses.
(36) [This seems to be quoted from the Mishnah and hence rightly omitted by Rashal. Ms. M. however, reads. 'when the verdict is arrived at they readmit the litigants' etc.]
(37) Hence the necessity of their conjoint appearance.
(38) E.g., if A claims a mina from B, and C testifies that he saw B receive a maneh from A on the first day of the month, while D testifies that he saw B receive a maneh on the second of the month, notwithstanding that both testify that A gave B a maneh, it is evident that they do not refer to the same transaction, and therefore there is only one witness for each alleged loan, and therefore the evidence is invalid.
(39) I.e., R. Joshua b. Korha.
(40) Hence the fact of the loan is proved, though one witness must have mistaken the date.
(41) Lev. V, 1, referring to witnesses who were adjured by parties in a case to testify before the court in their favour.
(42) Sot. 2b; 31b.
(43) Deut. XIX, 15.
(44) Therefore in the text above, And he is a witness, two are implied. Also, because the guilt-offering for the transgression of the oath imposed on the witnesses (שבועת העדות), referred to in the Biblical text, applies only to two witnesses and not to one. V. J. Sanh. III, 9; and Shebu. 31b.
(45) Otherwise their testimony is invalid.
(46) R. Joshua b. Korha: how does he interpret the verse?
(47) Which appears superfluous, for a witness is supposed to see and know of things.
(48) Whether the act was witnessed or the evidence given at the same time or not.
(49) If the claimant produces one witness in his favour, an oath is imposed on the defendant, but he is not ordered to repay. (V. Shebu. 40a.) Hence, when witnesses testify separately, the evidence of neither proves liability, and therefore the two testimonies cannot be combined.
(50) R. Nathan.
(51) Surely not!
(52) Lev. V, 1.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 30b

Now, both agree with the Rabbis who disagree with R. Joshua b. Korha:[1] they differ as to whether the 'uttering' [of the testimony] is assimilated to the 'seeing' [of the fact attested]. One Master[2] maintains that 'uttering' is assimilated to 'seeing';[3] the other[4] holds that they are not assimilated.

R. Simeon b. Eliakim was anxious for R. Jose son of R. Hanina to be ordained, but an opportunity did not present itself.[5] One day, as he was sitting before R. Johanan, the latter asked them [the students]: 'Does anyone know whether the halachah rests with R. Joshua b. Korha or not?'[6] R. Simeon b. Eliakim replied, 'This man here [R. Jose son of R. Hanina] knows.' 'Let him then answer,' said R. Johanan. Thereupon P. Simeon b. Eliakim said: 'Let the Master first ordain him.'[7] So he ordained him and then asked: 'My son, what tradition in the matter have you heard?' — 'I heard,' replied R. Jose son of R. Hanina, 'that R. Joshua b. Korha agreed with R. Nathan [that the evidence need not be given simultaneously].'[8] R. Johanan exclaimed: 'Is that what I wanted? If R. Joshua b. Korha maintained that the essential witnessing [of the act need not have been simultaneous, is it necessary [to state this] in reference to the giving of evidence [in court]! However, he concluded, since you have ascended,[9] you need not descend.'[10] R. Zera said: We may infer from this that once a great man is ordained, he remains so.[11]

R. Hiyya b. Abin said in Rab's name: The halachah rests with R. Joshua b. Korha in respect to both immovable and movable property.[12] 'Ulla said: The halachah rests with R. Joshua b. Korha only in respect to immovable,[13] but not movable property[14] . Said Abaye to him: [Your statement as to the] halachah, implies that they [the Rabbis] dispute [thereon]: but did not Raba say in R. Huna's name in Rab's name: The Sages agree with R. Joshua b. Korha in respect to testimony concerning real estate? Moreover, R. Idi b. Abin learned in Karna's compilation [of Halachoth] on Nezikin:[15] 'The Sages agree with R. Joshua b. Korha in respect to [evidence regarding] firstborns,[16] real estate, Hazakah,[17] and [the symptoms of puberty] in males and females likewise'?[18] — Would you oppose man to man![19] One Master ['Ulla] holds that they differ: the other [R. Abba or R. Idi] holds that they do not.

What is meant by, 'And [the symptoms of puberty] in males and females likewise'? Does it mean that one [witness] testified to [the appearance of] one hair on the part below [the genitals] and another to one hair on the part above? But that is both half of the necessary fact, and also half of the requisite testimony![20] — But it means that one testified to two hairs on the part below, and the other to two hairs on the part above.

R. Joseph said: I state on the authority of 'Ulla that the halachah is as R. Joshua b. Korha says, in respect to both movable and immovable property. Whilst the Rabbis who came from Mehuza state that R. Zera said in Rab's name: [This ruling holds good only] in the case of movable, but not immovable property. Rab[21] follows his own views. For he said: An admission after an admission,[22] or an admission after a loan,[23] may be combined.[24] But a loan after a loan,[25] or a loan after an admission cannot be combined.

R. Nahman b. Isaac, on meeting R. Huna the son of R. Joshua, asked him:Wherein does a loan after a loan differ, so that it [the testimony] is not [combined]: because the [loan of a] maneh witnessed by one is not the same as that witnessed by the other? Then the same applies to an admission after an admission: the [debt of a] maneh which he admitted in the presence of one witness may not be the same as that which he admitted before the other witness! — It means that he declared to the latter (witness): 'Regarding the maneh which I have admitted in your presence, I have also made an admission in the presence of so and so.' Yet even then, only the latter would know [this], but not the former? — He [subsequently] went again and said to the first witness: 'The maneh which I admitted receiving in your presence, I also admitted receiving in the presence of so and so.' Thereupon [R. Nahman] said to him [R. Huna the son of R. Joshua]: 'May your mind be at ease as you have made mine.' Said he, 'Why at ease?' Did not Raba — others say, R. Shesheth — hurl a hatchet at this [answer];[26] viz., surely it is then identical with the case of an admission after a loan.[27] Thereupon he [R. Nahman b. Isaac] said to him: 'This proves what I heard about you folk, that you tear down palm trees and set them up again.'[28]

The Nehardeans said: [In all cases,] whether of admission after admission, admission after loan, loan after loan, or loan after admission, the testimonies are combined. With whom does this agree? — With R. Joshua b. Korha.

Rab Judah said: Testimony that is contradicted[29] under examination,[30] is valid in civil suits. Raba said: Logically, Rab Judah's ruling refers to such a case as where one witness says: '[I saw it paid] out of a black bag,' and the other says, 'Out of a white bag.' But if one declares, 'The money was old,'[31] and the other says, 'The money was new,'[32] their testimonies cannot be combined. But in criminal cases, are not testimonies combined where there are differences such as over the colour of a bag? Did not R. Hisda say: 'If one testifies that it [sc. the murder] was with a sword, and the other maintains, it was with a dagger, it is not valid[33] evidence; whereas if one affirms that the colour of his garments was black, and the other that it was white, their evidence is valid'?

(1) I.e., they hold that the act must be witnessed by both witnesses simultaneously.

(2) The first Tanna.

(3) I.e., just as the act must be seen by both simultaneously, so also must it be attested simultaneously. He deduces this from the juxtaposition of the witnessing of the act and the giving evidence of it.

(4) R. Nathan.

(5) V. p. 65, n. 3.

(6) V. supra. R. Joshua b. Korha holds that the two witnesses need not observe the deed attested simultaneously.

(7) For only traditions reported by ordained scholars can be relied upon. Cf. Rashal a.l.

(8) From this answer, which has no bearing on the question, one might be led to conclude that R. Simeon b. Eliakim, though aware that R. Jose b. R. Hanina was incapable of providing the information desired by R. Johanan, nevertheless stated that he could give the information, in order to have him ordained. This cannot but appear as an unworthy ruse. A similar incident, however, is recorded in the Jerushalmi, though the names of the Sages figuring in the story are slightly different in order. There, the question is asked whether the halachah rests with R. Nathan, and the answer given there is more pertinent. This would seem to indicate that our text is in some confusion. [Cf. Weiss, Dor III, 90, n. 15]

(9) I.e., seeing that the degree of Rabbi has been conferred upon you.

(10) It will not be withdrawn. 'Ascended' and 'descended' are probably meant quite literally, the ordained scholars sitting on a higher bench than the unordained.

(11) So the text as emended in the marginal note. Our reading is: once a great man confers ordination, it stands.

(12) I.e., whether the alleged transaction referred to, e.g., the sale of land, or the granting of a monetary loan.

(13) Be-cause they must both be referring to the same transaction.

(14) Where each may be testifying with respect to a different object.

(15) A collection of Baraithoth compiled by Karna and his Beth din, of which only quotations are found here and there in Talmud. V. Weiss, Dor, vol iii, p. 164.

(16) Even after the destruction of the Temple a firstborn animal might not be employed for secular purposes unless it suffered from some physical blemish. To inflict such blemishes was strictly forbidden. In the case of animals belonging to Priests, two witnesses had to testify that their injuries were not man-inflicted, since Priests were under suspicion of exposing their firstborn animals to such defects in order that they might put them to domestic use. The testimony of one witness to one defect and of another to another defect on the same animal could be combined to declare the animal permissible for work. According to Tosaf., their difference concerns the testimony that one is a firstborn and so entitled to a double share of the patrimony.

(17) To prove a three years' undisturbed possession of an estate, where one witness testifies to the possession of the land for the first three years of the Sabbatical cycle, and another for the latter three years, their evidence is combined for the establishment of the possessor's claim, since each separately testifies in reference to the same estate.

(18) Where it is necessary to establish the majority of a person, from which point he or she is to be regarded as an adult and responsible for his actions to the laws of the Community. His or her majority begins from the time when two hairs appear in the region of the pubes. V. Nid. 52a. Hence from the reference given above it may be seen that the Rabbis agree with the view of R. Joshua b. Korha regarding the case of immovable property.

(19) R. Abba and R. Idi on the one hand, and 'Ulla on the other. They enjoyed equal status, so that the teaching of one cannot authoritatively refute that of the other. Nor does the fact that there are two against one make any difference.

(20) I.e., each witness does not individually testify to the complete fact necessary to establish puberty, but to half a fact. Moreover, that half fact (i.e., a single hair in a particular place) is attested by only half the necessary testimony — one witness instead of two. Whereas in the other cases under discussion each witness testifies to a whole fact, e.g., that A lent money to B.
(21) Who holds that successive evidence cannot be combined in the case of movable property.
(22) I.e., where one witness testifies that A admitted indebtedness to B on the first day of the month, and another testifies likewise, but refers it to the second day of the month.
(23) I.e., where one witness testifies to the transaction of a loan between A and B on the first day of the week, and another to A's admission of indebtedness to B on the second day.
(24) Since it is quite possible that both refer to the same loan
(25) I.e., where one witness testifies to the transaction of a loan between A and B on one day, and another testifies to the same on another day.
(26) I.e., disproved the opinion.
(27) For since it is necessary, according to this answer, that each witness shall know what the other has seen, it follows that an admission after a loan must be explained likewise, viz., he must have said to the latter witness: The maneh I have admitted receiving in your presence, I borrowed in the presence of so and so; and then he must have gone and said to the former witness: The maneh which I borrowed in your presence, I have admitted receiving before so and so. Why then did Rab need to state both laws?
(28) I.e., you remove difficulties merely to resurrect them!
(29) I.e., if the testimony of one witness contradicts that of the other.
(30) As to attendant circumstances, e.g., regarding the colour of the clothes worn etc., in which cases the agreement or disagreement is immaterial in reference to the law of declaring them Zomemim. V infra 40a.
(31) Lit., 'black' (with use).
(32) Lit., 'white'.
(33) Lit., 'certain', cf. Deut. XIII, 15.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 31a

— Would you oppose man to man![1]

The Nehardeans said: Even if one testified that it was an old maneh, and the other declares that it was new, we combine [their testimony]. With whom does this agree: with R. Joshua b. Korha?[2] But tell me! when did you learn that R. Joshua b. Korha ruled thus? Only where they are not contradictory:[3] Yet did he rule so even where they contradict each other? — But they [i.e.,the Nehardeans] agree with the following Tanna: For it has been taught:[4] R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel[5] do not differ with respect to two sets of witnesses, [of which] one attests a debt of two hundred [zuz] and the other of one hundred [a maneh]: since one hundred is included in two hundred.[6] They differ only where there is but one set.[7] Beth Shammai say, Their testimony is sundered,[8] but Beth Hillel maintain, Two hundred include one hundred.[9]

If one witness attests [the loan of] a barrel of wine, and the other, of a barrel of oil: — such a case happened, and it was brought before R. Ammi, who ordered him [the defendant] to repay a barrel of wine out of [the value of] the barrel of oil.[10] In accordance with whom? With R. Simeon b. Eleazar [as above]! But might it not be said that R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled so only [of a case such as the former,] where a hundred zuz is certainly included in two hundred.[11] Did he however rule thus in such a case as this?[12] — This holds good only in respect to the value thereof.[13]

If one deposes, It [e.g., the loan] was given in the upper storey, and the other declares, In the lower storey, — R. Hanina said: It happened that such a case was brought before Rabbi and he combined their evidence.

AND WHENCE DO WE KNOW etc. Our Rabbis taught: Whence do we know that when he goes out he must not say: I was for acquittal, whilst my colleagues were for condemnation; but what could I do, seeing that they were in the majority? — Scripture states: Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people,[14] and further, He that goeth about talebearing revealeth secrets.[15]

It was rumoured of a certain disciple that he revealed a matter stated [as a secret] in the Beth ha-Midrash twenty-two years before. So R. Ammi expelled him from the Beth ha-Midrash saying: This man revealeth secrets. MISHNAH. WHENEVER HE[16] BRINGS PROOF, IT[17] CAN UPSET THE VERDICT. BUT IF THEY[18] HAVE TOLD HIM: 'ALL THE PROOFS WHICH YOU MAY HAVE YOU MUST PRODUCE WITHIN THIRTY DAYS:' IF HE DIES SO WITHIN THIRTY DAYS, IT UPSETS [THE DECISION]. AFTER THIRTY DAYS, IT DOES NOT. BUT RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: WHAT IS HE TO DO WHO DID NOT FIND [FAVOURABLE EVIDENCE] WITHIN THE THIRTY DAYS, BUT ONLY THEREAFTER?[19]

IF THEY[18] HAVE SAID TO HIM, 'BRING WITNESSES,' AND HE ANSWERED, 'I HAVE NONE,' OR, 'BRING PROOF,'[20] AND HE REPLIED, 'I HAVE NONE:' YET SUBSEQUENTLY HE PRODUCED PROOF, OR FOUND WITNESSES, IT IS OF NO VALUE.[21] SAID RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL: WHAT IS HE TO DO WHO DID NOT KNOW THAT WITNESSES WERE AVAILABLE, BUT FOUND THEM AFTERWARDS; OR THAT THERE WAS PROOF,YET DISCOVERED IT LATER?[22]

IF ON SEEING THAT HE WAS ABOUT TO BE CONDEMNED HE SAID: 'ADMIT SO AND SO TO TESTIFY IN MY FAVOUR,' OR PRODUCED [DOCUMENTARY] PROOF FROM HIS FUNDA,[23] IT IS VALUELESS.[24]

GEMARA. Rabbah son of R. Huna said: The halachah rests with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.[25] Rabbah son of R. Huna also said: The halachah does not rest with the Sages. But is this not obvious; since he says that the halachah rests with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel it automatically follows that the halachah is not as the Sages? — I might have thought that his ruling[26] holds good only at the outset;[27] but once it [i.e., the reverse] has been done,[28] it is correct: therefore he informs us[29] that even then, it [the decision] is reversed.

IF THEY SAID TO HIM: 'BRING WITNESSES,' ETC. . . . SAID RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL etc. — Rabbah son of R. Huna said in R. Johanan's name: The halachah rests with the Sages. Rabbah son of R. Huna also said in R. Johanan's name: The halachah does not rest with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. But is this not obvious; since he said that the halachah rests with the Sages it follows automatically that the halachah does not rest with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel? What he teaches us is this: Only in this case is the halachah not as Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds; whereas in all other cases,[30] the halachah rests with him. Thus he opposes the dictum of Rabbah b. Bar Hana in the name of R. Johanan, viz., Wherever Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel's view is taught in our Mishnah, the halachah rests with him, except in [the following three cases]: 'Areb,[31] Zidon[32] and 'the latter proof'.[33]

A lad[34] was once summoned for a [civil] suit before R. Nahman. The latter asked him: 'Have you any witnesses?' He answered: 'No.' 'Have you any [documentary] proof?' 'No,' was the reply. Consequently, R. Nahman ruled him to be liable. As he went along weeping, some people heard him and said to him, 'We know your father's affairs.'[35] Said R. Nahman: In such a case even the Rabbis[36] agree that the youth is not expected to know his father's affairs.[37] A certain woman[38] produced a note of a debt,[39] but said to him:[40] 'I know that this bill was discharged.' R. Nahman[41] believed her.[42] Said Raba to him: According to whose view [did you act]? According to Rabbi who said: [Ownership of] 'letters' is acquired through delivery?[43] This case is different, he replied, since she could have burnt it, had she desired.[44] Others say, R. Nahman did not believe her. Thereupon Raba objected: But had she desired,

(1) V. p. 189, n. 2.
(2) V. p. 185. For here too, after all, both testify to the same fact, viz., the debt of a maneh.
(3) Differing only in the matter of date.
(4) B.B. 41b, Nazir 20a.
(5) Who are at variance in the following case, viz., where of two sets of witnesses one testifies that A took upon himself the vow of neziruth for two years, and the other, for five years. The Shammaites maintain that since they differ, their evidence is invalid; the Hillelites say that, as both sets of witnesses testify for a period of not less than two years, the lesser period is considered proved.
(6) So that the debt of a hundred zuz is witnessed to by both.
(7) One witness testifying to a hundred, and the other to two hundred.
(8) I.e., since one is obviously false, he is cut off from the other; hence there is no valid testimony at all.
(9) So that there are two witnesses for a debt of a hundred. Hence the Nehardeans are supported by this view.
(10) I.e., since the value of the latter is greater, he regarded the smaller debt as proved.
(11) I.e., a hundred is actually part of two hundred.
(12) Where they differ as to the substance.
(13) I.e., the witnesses did not attest the indebtedness of the defendant in actual wine or oil, but his indebtedness for their value. Accordingly they differed in respect to the amount.
(14) Lev. XIX, 16.
(15) Prov. XI, 13.
(16) The defendant (Rashi). According to the Codifiers, Tur and Caro, any of the litigants, v. H.M. XVI, 1.
(17) The court (Rashi).
(18) The judges. So Alfasi, Me'iri and others. The text reads אמר לו (He, the other litigant, said unto him). The version rendered seems the more acceptable.
(19) I.e., even if he produces it after the stipulated period, the decision may be reversed.
(20) Viz., documentary evidence.
(21) Since he might forge a document or engage false witnesses.
(22) I.e., both documentary proof and witnesses are valid.
(23) Gr. . A moneybag or hollow belt for keeping money or documents.
(24) Even according to Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel; since he knew of it, and yet did not produce it, we fear that it is false.
(25) In the first clause, where the litigant was asked to produce evidence within thirty days and did not say that he had none.
(26) That the halachah rests with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(27) I.e., even if proof is brought after the prescribed time, it is to be accepted.
(28) I.e., the court had rejected this evidence and given a verdict accordingly.
(29) By his second statement that the halachah does not rest with the Sages.
(30) Where Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel is at variance with other Sages.
(31) Surety. V. B.B. 173a.
(32) Git. 74a.
(33) I.e., the case, dealt with in our Mishnah, of evidence offered late, the case under discussion; thus Rabbah b. R. Huna maintains that the halachah does rest with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel in respect to ‘Areb and Zidon.
(34) I.e., minor.
(35) And can testify in your favour.
(36) Who oppose Rabban Simeon B. Gamaliel in the Mishnah.
(37) Hence the decision can be reversed.
(38) Who was a trustee, appointed by the creditor and debtor, of a bill of indebtedness.
(39) Lit., ‘A Shetar came forth from under her hand.’
(40) The creditor.
(41) Before whom the dispute was brought.
(42) Notwithstanding the creditor's denial; for as long as they kept her their trustee, they vouched thereby for her truthfulness.

(43) I.e., if a creditor wishes to make over a debt, he can do so merely by handing the note — referred to here as a compilation of (alphabetical) letters — to the assignee. Hence in our case, the woman could have claimed ownership of the note, on the plea that it had been handed to her not as a trustee, but in transference of the debt. Consequently her statement that the bill was paid may be regarded as true by reason of a Miggo, v. Glos. Raba was not in favour of the opinion of Rabbi, as it opposes the view of the majority of the Sages that a Shetar cannot be legally assigned by mere delivery. V. B.B. 76a.
(44) Hence, without accepting Rabbi's ruling, there are still grounds for believing her.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 31b

she could have burnt it! — Since it had been proved at Court,[1] we cannot say that she could have destroyed it had she desired.

Raba refuted R. Nahman: A witnessed receipt[2] must be authenticated by the signatories. If unwitnessed, but produced by a trustee, or if written on the note of indebtedness, under the signatures of the witnesses, it is also valid.[3] Hence we see that the trustee is believed! This refutation of R. Nahman remains unanswered.

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said in R. Johanan's name: One may always adduce proof to upset [the decision unless he declares his arguments closed, and [immediately thereafter] says: Admit so and so to testify on my behalf.[4] But is not this selfcontradictory? First you say, 'Unless he declares his arguments closed,' — which agrees with the Rabbis[5] ; then you say, 'and [immediately thereafter] says, Admit so and so to testify on my behalf' — which agrees with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel![6] And should you answer, The whole agrees with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, and that [the latter clause is] merely elucidatory [of the first] viz., What is meant by, 'Unless he declares his arguments closed'? That means he says, Admit so and so that he may give evidence for me:'[7] but did not Rabbah b. Bar Hana say in R. Johanan's name: Wherever Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel's view is taught in our Mishnah, the halachah rests with him, save in the cases of 'Areb, Zidon, and the 'latter proof'?[8] — But when R. Samuel b. Judah came [from Palestine], he said in R. Johanan's name: One may always produce evidence to upset [a decision], unless he declares his case closed and they say unto him, 'Bring witnesses,' and he answers, 'I have no witnesses;' 'Bring proof,' and he replies, 'I have no proof.'[9] If, however, witnesses arrive from overseas, or if his father's despatch case[10] had been deposited with a stranger, he can produce the evidence and upset [the decision].

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine], he said in R. Johanan's name: If a man, known as a difficult adversary in court, [has a trial,][11] and one of them[12] says: Let us be tried here; while the other says: Let us go to the place of Assembly,[13] he is compelled to go to the place of Assembly. R. Eleazar, however, said in his presence: Rabbi, if a man claims a maneh from his fellow, must he spend another maneh[14] on top of the first? Nay, he is compelled to attend the local court.[15] It has been stated likewise: R. Safra said [in R. Johanan's name]:[16] If two litigants are in obstinate disagreement with respect to [the venue of] a lawsuit, and one says: Let us be tried here; and the other says: Let us go to the place of Assembly;[17] he [the defendant] must attend the court in his[18] home town. And if it is necessary to consult [the Assembly], the matter is written down and forwarded to them. And if the litigant[19] says ' Write down the grounds on which you made your decision and give them to me,[20] they must write them down and give him the document.

The Yebamah[21] is bound to follow the Yabam [to his own town] that he may release her.[22] How far? — R. Ammi answered: Even from Tiberias to Sepphoris.[23] R. Kahana said: What verse proves it? — Then the elders of his city shall call him;[24] but not the elders of her city.

Amemar said: The law is that he is compelled to go to the place of the Assembly.[25] R. Ashi said to him: Did not R. Eleazar say, He is compelled to attend court in his [opponent's] town? — That is only where the debtor demands it[26] of the creditor; but if the creditor [demands, it, the debtor must submit, for] The borrower is servant to the lender.[27]

A message was once sent[28] to Mar 'Ukba:[29] 'To him whose lustre is like that of the son of Bithia,[30] Peace be with thee. 'Ukban the Babylonian has complained to us, saying: "My brother Jeremiah has obstructed my way."[31] Speak therefore to him, and see that he meets us in Tiberias.' But is this not self-contradictory? First you say, 'Speak to him,'i.e., judge him;[32] and then you add, 'See that he meets us in Tiberias,' shewing [that they told him], Send him hither! — What they meant was: Speak to him and judge him;[33] if he accepts your decision, well and good; if not, see to it that he appears before us in Tiberias.[34]

R. Ashi says: This was a case of Kenas, and in Babylonia they could not try cases of Kenas.[35] But as for their sending him a message in such terms,[36] that was only to shew respect to Mar 'Ukba. [

(1) Rashi: Its genuineness had been proved in Court. Tosaf. however points out that even then, it was still in her power to burn it. Therefore Tosaf. explains: It had been proved at court that she had it in her possession.

(2) סימפון; Gr. , a kind of codicil, the precise significance of which is unknown.

(3) For the note is in the creditor's possession, and he would certainly not have permitted a false receipt to be written thereon.

(4) This implies, that, having stated that he has no more evidence in his favour, he then asks, (presumably because he sees the case going against him, as in the Mishnah,) that certain witnesses shall be heard on his behalf.

(5) Who hold that once he states that he has no more evidence, his case is closed, and new evidence cannot be offered even at a later date.

(6) For this implies that the evidence is not admissible only because he offered witnesses of whose existence he had known and who were available at the time. But if he subsequently produced new evidence, unknown to him when he made his declaration, it would be valid.

(7) I.e., only if he immediately thereafter offers fresh evidence is it not accepted, the court abiding by his previous statement that his case was closed.

(8) Thus proving that R. Johanan holds that once he has declared, 'I have no further proof,' he cannot produce any, much later.

MISHNAH. BOTH CIVIL AND CAPITAL CASES DEMAND INQUIRY AND EXAMINATION.[1] AS IT IS WRITTEN: YE SHALL HAVE ONE MANNER OF LAW.[2] WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CIVIL AND CAPITAL CASES? — CIVIL SUITS [ARE TRIED] BY THREE; CAPITAL CASES BY TWENTY-THREE[3] CIVIL SUITS MAY BE OPENED EITHER FOR ACQUITTAL OR CONDEMNATION; CAPITAL CHARGES MUST BE OPENED FOR ACQUITTAL, BUT NOT FOR CONDEMNATION.[4] CIVIL SUITS MAY BE DECIDED BY A MAJORITY OF ONE, EITHER FOR ACQUITTAL OR CONDEMNATION; WHEREAS CAPITAL CHARGES ARE DECIDED BY A MAJORITY OF ONE FOR ACQUITTAL, BUT [AT LEAST] TWO FOR CONDEMNATION.[5] IN MONETARY CASES THE DECISION MAY BE REVERSED[6] BOTH FOR A ACQUITTAL AND FOR CONDEMNATION; WHILST IN CAPITAL CHARGES THE VERDICT MAY BE REVERSED FOR ACQUITTAL ONLY, BUT NOT FOR CONDEMNATION; WHILST IN CAPITAL CHARGES THE VERDICT MAY BE REVERSED FOR ACQUITTAL ONLY, BUT NOT FOR CONDEMNATION. IN MONETARY CASES, ALL[7] MAY ARGUE FOR OR AGAINST THE DEFENDANT; WHILST IN CAPITAL CHARGES, ANYONE MAY ARGUE IN HIS FAVOUR, BUT NOT AGAINST HIM. IN CIVIL SUITS, HE WHO HAS ARGUED FOR CONDEMNATION, MAY[8] THEN ARGUE FOR ACQUITTAL, AND VICE VERSA; WHEREAS IN CAPITAL CHARGES, ONE WHO HAS ARGUED FOR CONDEMNATION MAY SUBSEQUENTLY ARGUE FOR ACQUITTAL, BUT NOT VICE VERSA.[9]

CIVIL SUITS ARE TRIED BY DAY, AND CONCLUDED AT NIGHT.[10] BUT CAPITAL CHARGES MUST BE TRIED BY DAY AND CONCLUDED BY DAY. CIVIL SUITS CAN BE CONCLUDED ON THE SAME DAY, WHETHER FOR ACQUITTAL OR CONDEMNATION; CAPITAL CHARGES MAY BE CONCLUDED ON THE SAME DAY WITH A FAVOURABLE VERDICT, BUT ONLY ON THE MORROW WITH AN UNFAVOURABLE VERDICT.[11] THEREFORE TRIALS ARE NOT HELD ON THE EVE OF A SABBATH OR FESTIVAL.[12] IN CIVIL SUITS.[13] AND IN CASES OF CLEANNESS AND UNCLEANNESS, WE BEGIN WITH [THE OPINION OF] THE MOST EMINENT [OF THE JUDGES]; WHEREAS IN CAPITAL CHARGES, WE COMMENCE WITH [THE OPINION OF] THOSE ON THE SIDE [BENCHES].

ALL ARE ELIGIBLE TO TRY CIVIL SUITS, BUT NOT ALL ARE ELIGIBLE TO TRY CAPITAL CHARGES, ONLY PRIESTS, LEVITES, AND ISRAELITES [LAYMEN] WITH WHOM PRIESTS CAN ENTER INTO MARRIAGE RELATIONSHIP.[14]

GEMARA. Do civil suits really need inquiry and examination? The following opposes it: If a bond is dated the first of Nisan in the Shemittah,[15] and witnesses came and said: 'How can ye testify to this bond: were ye not with us on that day in such and such a place?' the bond is valid, and its signatories remain competent [witnesses], for we presume that they might merely have postponed writing it.[16] Now if you should think that inquiry and examination are necessary, how 'presume that they might merely have postponed writing it?[17] — But on your reasoning, one should object rather to the [following] Mishnah:[18] Ante-dated bonds[19] of indebtedness are invalid;[20] if post-dated, they are valid.[21] Now, if you should think that examination and inquiry are necessary, why are post-dated notes valid?[22] — This[23] is no difficulty, for a more powerful objection is raised,[24] viz., that even in the case of a bond dated the first of Nisan in the Sabbatical year, when people, as a rule, do not transact loans, and when, consequently, we cannot [plausibly] say that the writing [of the bond] might have been postponed, since no one would intentionally weaken the validity of his document:[25] yet since the annulment of debts is effectuated only at the expiration of the Sabbatical year,we declare the bond valid.[26] At all events, however, the difficulty[27] remains.

(Mnemonic: Harpash.[28])

R. Hanina said: By Biblical law, both monetary and capital cases require inquiry and investigation, as it is written: One manner of judgment ye shall have.[29] Why then were civil suits exempted from this procedure? In order not to lock the door against borrowers.[30] But if so,

(1) Heb. דרישה והקירה, i.e, examination of witnesses on the main points, e.g., amount (loaned), date and place.

(2) Lev. XXIV, 22. I.e., both capital and monetary cases shall be alike. With regard to capital cases it is written; Then shalt thou inquire and make search (Deut. XIII, 15).

(3) V. supra 2a; 23a.

(4) The reference is to the judicial debate on the matter. In civil suits, the points in favour of condemnation may be put first; but in capital charges, the arguments for acquittal must be first marshalled, but v. Krauss, a.l. for another interpretation. But of course, it cannot refer to the actual opening of the case; the indictment and case for the prosecution must obviously be stated before there is a charge to answer.

(5) V. supra 2a and infra 36b.

(6) On errors being revealed.

(7) Even the pupils, those seated behind the judges for the purpose of filling up vacancies. Cf. infra 37a.

(8) On finding his arguments erroneous.

(9) According to Rashi, this is deduced from Num. XXXV, 25, The Congregation shall deliver the manslayer, meaning that all the endeavours of the court should be directed towards deliverance. According to Maim., Yad, Sanh., X, 2, it is deduced from Ex. XXIII, 2, Neither shalt thou speak in a quarrel to incline etc. Probably he based his deduction on the Mekilta comment on the verse, where reference is made to the judges' duty to lean towards acquittal.

(10) Where the deliberations have been protracted.

(11) In case points in the accused's favour are discovered during the night.

(12) Since should he be found guilty, the case cannot be concluded on the morrow, execution being forbidden on Sabbaths and Festivals. (From this it is seen that by 'concluding' the actual carrying out of the sentence is meant, not merely the promulgation of the verdict.) Moreover, it is against the law — except in the case of a rebellious Elder, v. infra 89a — to leave judgement in suspense. V. Maim., Yad, Sanh. XII, 4.

(13) CIVIL SUITS is omitted in most Mishnaic versions.

(14) I.e., of pure descent.

(15) שמיטה; Sabbatical year. Though the regulations of the Sabbatical year include also the annulment of all monetary obligations, 'when the creditor is legally debarred from collecting his debt (v. Deut. XV, 2), yet in various exceptional cases the law of Shemittah did not operate, e.g., if a Prosbul (פרוזבול) had been written. This was a legal instrument executed and attested in Court whereby the lender retained the right to collect the debt at any time he thought fit (cf. Sheb. X, 4). Further shemittah does not affect a loan advanced on a pledge, or where the claim for collection had been made before the expiration of the Sabbatical year, in which cases loans are not annulled. V. 'Ar. 28b.

(16) I.e., they might have witnessed the loan on an earlier date, but have postponed writing the bond until the first day of Nisan (Rashi). [According to Yad Ramah, render, 'they might have post-dated it.' We do not assume that it has been ante-dated (v. infra) as there is a presumption in favour of all duly attested documents, v. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 748, n. 16.]

(17) If such an assumption is permissible, examination as to date and placed is purposeless.

(18) Rather than the Baraitha, since scholars are more conversant with the Mishnah than with Baraithoth.

(19) I.e., bearing on the evidence of witnesses, of an earlier date than the actual loan.

(20) As a rule the debtor's property is given as security for the loan, and in the case of default, the creditor may seize it if sold after the loan was incurred, but not before. Hence, if the note was ante-dated, sold property might be seized unlawfully. In order to prevent this, an ante-dated bond was declared altogether invalid, even from the date of transaction. Cf. B.M. 72a.

(21) It appears that the creditor must have renounced his security for the period between the date of the loan and that appearing on the note.

(22) Seeing that they might be mere forgeries? Hence, even if the loan itself is attested as having taken place, it should rank as only a verbal loan, which cannot be collected from property sold even after it was incurred.

(23) I.e., the fact that the objection is raised on the ground of a Baraitha rather than of a Mishnah.

(24) In the Baraitha quoted.
(25) By dating it some time in the Sabbatical year, when the debt is threatened with annulment, and so inevitably arousing the suspicion of forgery.
(26) By assuming its writing has been postponed to the Sabbatical year. Thus, this assumption, since it is possible, is made in spite of its improbability, a loan in the Sabbatical year still being rare. How much more so is the assumption to be made in normal cases. Why then should the witnesses be examined on the date, since even if it is disproved, their testimony holds good?
(27) I.e., the fact that the Baraitha is contradictory to our Mishnah; v. preceding note.
(28) V. p. 21, n. 5. Here it stands for R. Hanina, Raba, R. Papa, and R. ASHi. the four Rabbis whose views are given here.
(29) Lev. XXIV, 22.
(30) V. supra 2b. The view expressed in our Mishnah was taught before this enactment; and the Baraitha and Mishnah in Sheb., after this enactment.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 32b

when they [the judges] erred [in their verdict], they should not be liable! — Then thou wouldst most certainly lock the door against borrowers.[1]

Raba[2] said: Our Mishnah refers to a case of Kenas,[3] the other teachings[4] to the admission and transaction of loans.[5]

R. Papa said:[6] Both this and the other teachings deal with the admission and transaction of loans. In our Mishnah, however, the suit is [suspected of being] dishonest,[7] while in the other,[8] the claim is [i.e., appears] genuine. This agrees with Resh Lakish, for Resh Lakish opposed [two verses to each other]: It is written, In justice[9] shalt thou judge thy neighbour;[10] but elsewhere, Justice, justice shalt thou follow.[11] How so? — The latter refers to a suit suspected to be dishonest; the former, to an [apparently] genuine claim.

R. Ashi said: The [contradictory] teachings are reconciled as above;[12] but as for the [Scriptural] verses, one[13] refers to a decision based on strict law, the other to a compromise. As it has been taught: Justice, justice shalt thou follow; the first [mention of justice] refers to a decision based on strict law; the second, to a compromise. How so? — E.g., where two boats sailing on a river meet; If both attempt to pass simultaneously, both will sink,[14] whereas, if one makes way for the other, both can pass [without mishap]. Likewise, if two camels met each other while on the ascent to Beth-Horon;[15] if they both ascend [at the same time] both may tumble down [into the valley]; but if [they ascend] after each other, both can go up [safely]. How then should they act? If one is laden and the other unladen, the latter should give way to the former. If one is nearer [to its destination] than the other, the former should give way to the latter. If both are [equally] near or far [from their destination,] make a compromise between them, the one [which is to go forward] compensating the other [which has to give way].

Our Rabbis taught: Justice, justice shalt thou follow, means, Thou shalt follow an eminent Beth din, as for example, [follow] R. Eliezer [b. Hyrkanus] to Lydda.[16] or R. Johanan b. Zakkai to Beror Hail.[17] It has been taught: The noise of grindstones at Burni[18] [announced] a circumcision[19] [was being performed]; and the light of a candle [by day, and many candles by night] at Beror Hail, showed that a feast [was being celebrated] there.[20]

Our Rabbis taught: justice, justice shalt thou follow,' this means, Follow the scholars to their academies. e.g.. R. Eliezer to Lydda, R. Johanan b. Zakkai to Beror Hail,[21] R. Joshua to Peki'in,[22] Rabban Gamaliel [II] to Jabneh,[23] R. Akiba to Benai Berak,[24] R. Mathia to Rome,[25] R. Hanania b. Teradion to Sikni,[26] R. Jose [b. Halafta] to Sepphoris. R. Judah b. Bathyra to Nisibis,[27] R. Joshua[28]

to the Exile,[29] Rabbi to Beth She'arim,[30] or the Sages[31] to the chamber of hewn stones.[32]

CIVIL SUITS MAY BE OPENED EITHER FOR ACQUITTAL etc. What is said?[33] Rab Judah said: We speak thus to them:[34] Who can tell that it is as ye say?[35] 'Ulla objected: But do we not thereby shut their lip?[36] — Then let them be shut! Has it not been taught: R. Simeon b. Eliezer said: The witnesses are moved from place to place,[37] that they[38] may become confused, and withdraw [their evidence].[39] What comparison is there! In that case, they are automatically repelled, whereas here, we repel them by our own act!

But, said 'Ulla: We say thus: Have you [sc. the defendant] any witnesses to refute them?[40] Rabbah demurred: Can we then open the defence of one in a manner which involves the condemnation of another?[41] — But does this really involve his condemnation? Have we not learnt: Witnesses declared Zomemim are not executed unless the verdict has [already] been given![42] — I mean this: Should the defendant remain silent until the verdict is given, and then produce witnesses and refute the others, it involves their condemnation?[43] — Therefore Rabbah said: We say to him: Have you any witnesses to contradict them?[44]

R. Kahana said: [We open the defence by saying,] From your words it appears that so and so is not guilty.[45] Abaye and Raba both say: We say to him: If you did not commit the murder, have no fear. R. Ashi says: [We begin thus:] Whoever knows anything in his [sc. the accused's] favour, let him come forward and state it. It has been taught in agreement with Abaye and Raba: Rabbi said, If no man have lain with thee and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness, etc.[46] ;

(15) בית חורון (lit., 'the house of the hollow'). There were two towns of this name, distinguished on account of their situation, as Beth Horon the Upper, and Beth Horon the Lower. They both lay on the southern border of Ephraim and close to the territory of Benjamin (cf. Josh. XVI, 3, 5; XVIII, 13, 14) Beth Horon the Upper stands on the summit of a conical hill, while a short distance west of this point, on a rocky eminence, stands Beth Horon the Lower. The deep valley between the two places may account for the name, "The house of the hollow.' The road winds up the mountain in zig-zag line, and is in many places cut in the rock. It is rugged and difficult. (10) Lit., 'if one is near and the other is not near.'

(40) The accusing witnesses, and prove them Zomemim..
(41) For in a capital charge, witnesses proved Zomemim are liable to death.
(42) And unless before it was carried out, they had been proved Zomemim. Consequently, if the accused is invited to produce witnesses to refute the other at this early stage of the proceedings, no question of condemnation arises.
(43) Hence at the very outset, he must not be invited to prove the accusing witnesses Zomemim.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 33a

We infer from this that capital charges are opened for acquittal.[1]

IN MONETARY CASES THE DECISION MAY BE REVERSED etc. But the following contradicts this: ‘If a man judged a case [by himself] and pronounced him who was liable, "not liable", or vice versa; the clean, "unclean," or the reverse: his decision stands, but he must pay an indemnity[2] out of his own pocket’?[3] — R. Joseph answered: This presents no difficulty: here it [our Mishnah] refers to a Mumheh;[4] there, to one who is no Mumheh.[5] But in the case of a Mumheh, do we reverse [the decision]? Have we not learned: If he was recognised by the Beth din as a Mumheh, he is exempted from paying [compensation]! —[6] R. Nahman answered: Here [in our Mishnah] the circumstances are that there is a court superior to this one in learning and numbers;[7] whereas in the other Mishnah there is no court available superior to this in learning and numbers.[8] R. Shesheth said: Here it treats of a case where he [the judge] erred regarding a law cited in a Mishnah;[9] there, of a case where he erred in the weighing of [conflicting] opinions. For R. Shesheth said in R. Assi's name: If he erred in a law cited in the Mishnah, the decision is reversed; if he erred in the weighing of [conflicting] opinions, the decision may not be reversed.

Rabina asked R Ashi: Is this also the case if he erred regarding a teaching of R. Hiyya or R. Oshaia?[10] — Yes, said he, And even in a dictum of Rab and Samuel?[11] Yes, he answered. Even in a law stated by you and me? Are we then reed cutters in the bog?[12] he retorted.

How are we to understand the phrase: ‘The weighing of [conflicting] opinions’? — R. Papa answered: If, for example, two Tannaim or Amoraim are in opposition, and it has not been explicitly settled with whom the law rests, but he [the judge] happened to rule according to the opinion of one of them, whilst the general practice[13] ; follows the other, — this is a case of [an error] in the weighing of [conflicting] opinions.

R. Hamnunah refuted R. Shesheth: It once happened that R. Tarfon ordered a cow [belonging to Menahem],[14] whose womb had been removed, to be given to dogs.[15] When the matter was brought before the Sages in Jabneh, they permitted [her as human food], for Theodos[16] the Physician stated that no cow or sow was allowed to leave Alexandria in Egypt unless her womb had first been cut out, so as to prevent her from having issue.[17] Thereupon R. Tarfon exclaimed: Thy ass is gone, Tarfon![18] But R. Akiba said to him: You are not bound to make compensation, since he who is publicly recognised as a Mumheh is free from liability to pay.[19] Now if it [your dictum] is correct,[20] she should have said to him: You erred regarding a law cited in a Mishnah,[21] and he who errs in a law cited in the Mishnah, may revoke his decision! — He[22] meant two things:[23] Firstly, you have erred in a law cited in the Mishnah, and he who errs in a law cited in the Mishnah may reverse his decision. Secondly: even if you had erred in the weighing of [conflicting] opinions, you are a publicly recognised Mumheh, and such are free from liability to pay [compensation].

R. Nahman b. Isaac said to Raba: What objection did R. Hamnunah raise against R. Shesheth from the case of the cow? Surely, the cow had already been given as food to dogs, and was no longer available for return to its owner![24] — He meant this: Should you say, that he who errs regarding a law cited in the Mishnah may not reverse the decision, it is correct: seeing that his decision stands, R. Tarfon was apprehensive, whereupon [R. Akiba] said to him: You are recognised by the Court as a Mumheh, and free from liability to refund. But if you say that he who errs in a law stated in the Mishnah may revoke his decision, then [R. Akiba] should have said to him: Since if the cow were still in existence, your decision would have been invalid and you would have done nothing, so too now, [that the cow has been consumed] you have done nothing.[25]

R. Hisda said:[26] The one [Mishnah][27] treats of a case where he [the judge] took [from one] and gave [to the other] with his own hand;[28] the other [Mishnah],[29] where he did not take and give with his own hand.[30] Now, that is correct in regard to pronouncing him who is not liable, ‘liable’; when he might have taken [from the defendant] and given [to the plaintiff] with his own hand; but how is it conceivable in the reverse case [except] where he said to him: ‘Thou art not liable’? Then he did not take [from one] and give [to the other] with his own hand! — Since he declared, ‘Thou art not liable,' it is really as though he had taken [from one] and given [to the other] with his own hand.[31] Then what of our Mishnah, which teaches: IN MONETARY CASES THE DECISION MAY BE REVERSED BOTH FOR ACQUITTAL, AND FOR CONDEMNATION? As for acquittal, it is correct: this is conceivable where he [the judge] originally said to him, 'Thou art liable,' but did not actually take [from him] and give [to the other] with his own hand.[32] But how is it possible [to make any reversal] for condemnation, [except in the case] where the judge has first said to him: 'Thou art not liable'?[33] But you maintain that when he said to him: 'Thou art not liable,' it is as though he had taken and given with, his own hand![34] — The Mishnah really states [only] one ruling. Viz., IN MONETARY CASES A DECISION MAY BE REVERSED IN FAVOUR [OF THE ONE],[35] WHICH IS [TO THE OTHER'S (i.e.. THE PLAINTIFF'S)] DISADVANTAGE. Then by analogy, in regard to capital charges, [the statement,] THE VERDICT MAY BE REVERSED FOR ACQUITTAL ONLY

---

(1) Since Scripture begins with the negative. Thus, Rabbi too understands by this that the 'opening for acquittal' is an assurance to the accused that he has nothing to fear if he is innocent.

(2) For any loss caused by his erroneous decision.

(3) Mishnah, Bek. 28b. Thus it is evident that in monetary cases the decision cannot be reversed.

(4) V. Glos. To such authority was given to retract his first decision.

(5) Who, though his decision stands, must pay compensation in case of error.

(6) For an erroneous judgment, whilst his decision holds good. Thus, even if the judge is a Mumheh, his decision is not reversed.

(7) Which can act, in a sense, as a court of appeal to reverse the lower court's decision.

(8) And hence the desire to reverse the decision may be opposed by one of the parties. But in reality, both instances, viz., that of the Mishnah here, and that of the latter part of the Mishnah there, treat of a case where the decision is given by a Mumheh.

(9) In which case his decision may be revoked.

(10) I.e., does the above ruling regarding an error in a law cited in Mishnah apply also to an error in a law cited in the Tosefta: a collection of Halachoth the redaction of which is attributed to R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia? The authority of the Tosefta is not equal to that of the Mishnah.

(11) Whose ruling is not so authoritative as the traditional law in the Tosefta.

(12) I.e., insignificant, of no importance.

(13) Adopted by a majority of judges. So the text as given in Rashi and elsewhere. Our reading is: and the general trend of the (Talmudic) discussion thereon, v. supra 6a.

(14) The bracketed phrase is absent in Bek. 28b, whence this Mishnah is quoted.

(15) I.e., he declared her unfit for human consumption

(16) Or, Theodoros.

(17) The Egyptian breed was unique in its quality, and so they took this measure in order to limit its breeding to that country. Such a mutilation did not, however, affect them.

(18) I.e., shall now have to sell my ass to compensate the owner of the cow for my erroneous decision!

(19) Bek. 28b and infra 93a.

(20) That an error in a law cited in Mishnah justifies rescinding.

(22) R. Akiba

(23) Lit., He meant, 'One thing and yet another.'

(24) What purpose, then, could the reversal of the decision serve?

(25) I.e., you personally did not throw it to the dogs: it was the owner's misfortune to follow your ruling. (V. B.K. 100a.) Seeing therefore that R. Akiba did not argue in the manner, it can be inferred that if one errs regarding a law cited in the Mishnah, the decision may not be reversed.

(26) In answering the contradiction.

(27) The Mishnah in Bek.

(28) Then the decision cannot be reversed.

(29) Our Mishnah.

(30) In that case, an erroneous judgment was reversed.

(31) For he is confirming the defendant in the possession of the money claimed from him by the plaintiff.

(32) Then he can subsequently revise his verdict.

(33) And now declares that he is.

(34) In which case judgment cannot be reversed according to R. Hisda, and yet it is taught that the verdict may be upset.

(35) Sc., the defendant, who had previously been pronounced liable.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 33b

BUT NOT FOR CONDEMNATION, must mean, it can be reversed for acquittal, provided this involves only acquittal.[1] BUT NOT FOR CONDEMNATION. i.e., [there must be no reversal] in favour [of one] which is detrimental [to the other]. But to whose detriment can it possibly be? — That is no difficulty: It means to the detriment of the avenger of blood.[2] Because it is detrimental to him, are we to execute a man![3] Moreover, how explain, BOTH . . . AND?[4] This remains a difficulty.

Rabina explained it[5] thus: E.g he [the plaintiff] had a pledge [from the defendant] and he [the judge] had taken it from him:[6] He declared the clean, 'unclean', means that he brought it into contact with a reptile;[7] he declared the unclean,'clean', by mixing it with his [the questioner's] own fruit.[8]

IN CAPITAL CHARGES etc. Our Rabbis taught: Whence [do we infer] that if the accused leaves the Beth din guilty, and someone says: 'I have a statement to make in his favour,' he is to be brought back?[9] — Scripture reads: The guiltless[10] slay thou not.[11] And whence [do we infer] that if he leaves the Beth din not guilty, and someone says: 'I have something to state against him,'he may not be brought back? — From the verse, And the righteous,[12] slay thou not.[13]

R. Shimi b. Ashi said: It is the reverse in the case of a Mesith, for it is written: Neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him.[14] R. Kahana derived it[15] from the words: But thou shalt surely kill him.[16]

R. Zera asked of R. Shesheth: What of those condemned to exile?[17] — Identical law is inferred from the use of rozeah in both cases.[18] What of those liable to flagellation? Identical law is derived from the use of rasha' [guilty] in both cases,[19] it has been taught likewise: Whence [do we infer the same procedure] for those liable to exile? — Identify of law is derived from the use of 'murderer' in both places. And in the case of those liable to flogging? — From the fact that 'guilty' is used in both places.[20]

BUT NOT FOR CONDEMNATION. R. Hiyya b. Abba said in R. Johanan's name: Proving that he erred in a matter which the Sadducees[21] do not admit.[22] But if he erred in a matter which even they admit,[23] let him go back to school and learn it.[24]

R. Hiyya b. Abba asked R. Johanan: What if he erred in a law regarding an adulterer or an adulteress?[25] — He answered: While thy fire is burning, go, cut thy pumpkin and roast it.[26] It has been stated likewise: R. Ammi said in R. Johanan's name: If he erred in the case of an adulterer, the decision must be reversed. Then in what cases are decisions not reversed?[27] — R. Abbahu said in R. Johanan's name: E.g., If he erred in respect to unnatural intercourse.[28]

IN MONETARY CASES, ALL etc. 'ALL' [implies] even the witnesses. Shall we say that our Mishnah represents the view of R. Jose son of R. Judah, and not that of our Rabbis? For it has been taught: 'But one witness shall not testify against any person[29] — both for acquittal and condemnation.[30] R. Jose son of R. Judah said: He may testify for acquittal, but not for condemnation'? — Said R. Papa: ['ALL'] refers to [even] a single one of the disciples, and thus it agrees with all.[31]

(1) I.e., it does not cause damage to anyone else, e.g in the ease of the intentional desecration of the Sabbath, or of adultery.

(2) V. Num. XXXV, 19. It is a duty of the avenger of blood, the victim's nearest relative, to call the murderer to account (v. Mak. 12a; infra 45b; Mains. Yad, Rozeah I, 2), therefore in case the verdict were reversed for acquittal he would lose the opportunity of avenging his relative's blood.

(3) Surely it will not be argued that in order to soothe the kinsman's wrath we are to abide by the decision to execute the accused, even where there are reasons for reversing it.

(4) In the words of the Mishnah; BOTH FOR CONDEMNATION AND FOR ACQUITTAL; this proves that two statements are made, not one.

(5) R. Hisda's statement above, that where he found the guilty innocent, the decision cannot be reversed for condemnation, for that would mean actually a taking from the one and giving to the other.

(6) And had given it to the defendant on finding him not liable.

(7) In a case where there was a doubt as to the cleanness of a certain object, and the judge established his decision by actually making it unclean.

(8) As a demonstration of its cleanness. These are illustrations of the possibility of the judge himself causing loss through his verdict.

(9) For re-trial.

(10) נקי, not guilty of the crime so long as there are still arguments in his favour unheard.

(11) Ex. XXIII, 7.

(12) צדיק, found righteous in court, though not necessarily innocent, seeing that there is still evidence against him to be heard.

(13) Ex. XXIII, 7.

(14) Deut. XIII, 9.

(15) I.e., that it is the reserve in the case of a Mesith.

(16) Ibid. 10.

(17) For unintentional homicide. Cf. Num XXXV, 11ff. Is his trial similar in procedure to trials in capital, or monetary cases?

(18) רוצח; 'murderer', as used in connection with murder (Num. XXXV, 16), where he is punished by death, and as used in connection with unintentional homicide (ibid. 11) which shows that the procedure with regard to reversing decisions is the same in both cases.

(19) רשע. Flagellation: If the guilty is worthy to be beaten, Deut. XXV, 2; capital punishment: Who is guilty of death. Num. XXXV, 31.

(20) Tosef. Sanh. VII.

(21) צדוקים. A party holding views directly opposite to those of the Pharisees. They regarded only those observances obligatory which are contained in the written Word, and did not recognise those derived from Rabbinical interpretations; but v. p. 239, n. 9.

(22) E.g., the prohibition in marriage of a father-in-law's mother (Cf. infra 75a) which is transmitted by oral law.

(23) Such as a law found in the Biblical text.

(24) I.e., Since he erred in a Biblical law, his decision must be reversed.

(25) Whereas other criminal cases lend themselves to mistakes in judgment, owing to the investigation of the manifold details accompanying the act, in cases of illicit intercourse, once the act is done, there is no room for error (Rashi). According to R. Hananel, the question is, what if the judge erred by deciding that liability falls only on the male transgressor against whom alone Scripture provides, (cf. Lev. XVIII, 20), and not on the woman?

(26) I.e when engaged in your lesson pursue it further, it will save you from asking questions, for the law provides against an adulteress in Lev. XX, 10.

(27) Cf. Mishnah. Decisions in capital cases (including adultery) may not be reversed for condemnation.

(28) Which is derived from an interpretation of Lev. XVIII, 22, which the Saducees do not agree. V. infra 54a.

(29) Num. XXXV, 30.

(30) I.e., A witness who has testified in a case may not come again to bear other testimony in favour of, or against the accused, in the same case.

(31) I.e., with the Rabbis too.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 34a

What is R. Jose b. R. Judah's reason?[1] — Scripture says: But one witness shall not testify against any person [that he die]:[2] hence, only 'so that he die' may he not testify, but he may testify for acquittal. And the Rabbis?[3] — Resh Lakish answered: Their reason is that the witness seems personally concerned in his testimony.[4] But how do our Rabbis interpret, so that he die?[5] — They apply it to one of the disciples,[6] as it has been taught: Whence do we learn that if one of the witnesses says, I have a statement to make in his favour, that he is not listened to? — From the verse, But one witness shall not testify.[7] And whence do we know that if one of the disciples says, I can argue a point to his disadvantage, that he is not listened to? From the verse, One[8] shall not testify against any person that he die.[9]

IN CAPITAL CHARGES, ONE WHO ARGUED etc. Rab said: They taught this only of the period of the deliberations,[10] but at the time of pronouncement of the verdict,[11] one who has argued for acquittal may turn and argue for condemnation. An objection is raised:[12] On the following day, they rise early and assemble. He who was for acquittal declares, I was in favour of acquittal and I stand by my opinion. He who was for condemnation says, I was in favour of condemnation and I stand by my opinion. He who was in favour of condemnation may argue in favour of acquittal. But he who was in favour of acquittal may not retract and argue in favour of conviction. Now surely, on the 'the following day' the decision is to be promulgated![13] — But on thy view, are there no deliberations on the 'the following day'? Therefore the reference of the Mishnah is merely to the period of the deliberations.

Come and hear! They debate the case amongst themselves, until one of those who are for conviction agrees with those who are for acquittal.[14] Now if that is so,[15] then he [the Tanna] should have taught the reverse too! — But the Tanna fosters the possibilities of acquittal, not those of condemnation.[16]

Come and hear! R. Jose b. Hanina said: If one of the disciples pronounced for acquittal and then died, he is regarded [when the vote is taken] as if he were alive and [standing] in his place.[17] But why not assume, had he been alive, he might have retracted?[18] — Because in fact he did not retract! But did they not send [a message] from 'there' [Palestine], that the words of R. Jose b. Hanina preclude the words of our Master?[19] The true version was, 'Do not preclude [the words of our Master]'.

Come and hear! Two judges' clerks stand before them [the judges], one on the right and one on the left, and indite the arguments of those who would acquit, and those who would convict.[20] Now, as for the arguments for conviction. It is well [that they be recorded], for on the following day another argument[21] may be discovered, which necessitates postponement of judgment over night.[22] But why [record] the grounds of the defenders; surely so that should they discover different arguments for conviction, they may not be heeded?[23] — No, it is lest two judges draw a single argument from two Scriptural verses, as R. Assi asked R. Johanan: What if two [judges] derive the same argument from two verses? — He answered: They are only counted as one.[24] Whence do we know this? — Abaye answered: For Scripture saith, God hath spoken once, twice have I heard this, that strength belongeth unto God.[25] One Biblical verse may convey several teachings, but a single teaching cannot be deduced from different Scriptural verses. In R. Ishmael's School it was taught: And like in hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces:[26] i.e., just as [the rock] is split into many splinters,[27] so also may one Biblical verse convey many teachings.

What is an example of: 'One argument drawn from two Biblical verses'? — R. Zebid answered: As we learnt: The Altar sanctifies[28] all that is 'fit' for it.[29] R. Joshua said: [That means,] Anything

'fit' for the fire of the Altar',[30] once it ascended [thereon], may not descend,[31] for it is written: The burnt offering, it is that which goeth up upon its fire-wood, upon the altar:[32] Just as the burnt offering which is 'fit' for the altar-fire, once it ascended, may not descend,[33] so everything which is 'fit' for the altar-fire, once it ascends, may not descend. R. Gamaliel said: Anything 'fit' for the altar,[34] once it has ascended, may not descend, for it is written: The burnt offering, it is that which goeth up upon its fire-wood upon the altar: Just as the burnt offering which is 'fit' for the altar, once it has ascended, may not descend, so everything else which is 'fit' for the altar, once it has ascended, may not descend. What do both include?[35] — Invalidated objects.[36] One Master [sc. R. Joshua] deduces the law from the word 'fire-wood', and the other from 'altar'.[37] But there, they do actually differ! For the second clause [of that Mishnah] states: R. Gamaliel and R. Joshua differ only with reference to the Sacrificial blood and libations: according to R. Gamaliel. these may not descend; whereas in R. Joshua's view, they do descend.[38] But, said R. Papa, it [the required example] is illustrated in the following Baraitha: R. Jose the Galilean said: From the verse,

(1) For the view that the witnesses may change their evidence only in favour of the accused.

(2) Num. XXXV, 30.

(3) Why do they forbid a change of his evidence in favour of the accused?

(4) Since he might have been induced to change his evidence in favour of the accused, lest he be proved a Zomem and so become subject to punishment by the law of retaliation.

(5)) Which seem to indicate that the testimony may not be changed only when it leads to death.

(6) That he may not put forward arguments in favour of condemnation.

(7) Num. XXXV, 30. I.e., change his testimony even in his favour.

(8) Who is not a witness, but a disciple.

(9) Ibid. But he may do so for acquittal.

(10) When all endeavours must be used to strengthen the case for acquittal.

(11) When all arguments in favour of acquittal have been exhausted.

(12) Cf. infra 40a.

(13) Then why not retract in favour of conviction.

(14) Infra 40a.

(15) Viz., that when the decision is about to be pronounced, an opinion can be reversed even for condemnation.

(16) Theoretically, however, the trend of the debate might be in the reverse direction.

(17) Infra 43a.

(18) In favour of conviction, when judgment is pronounced.

(19) Sc. Rab. Therefore his ruling not to consider an eventual change of opinion is due to the fact that he holds that at the promulgation of the decision one cannot retract.

(20) Infra 36b.

(22) Cf. supra 17a; i.e., so as to give the judges a chance to alter their opinion. Hence the necessity of recording their statements in order to shew that they have changed their grounds for conviction, so necessitating a further postponement.

(23) Unless they erred in a law accepted even by the Sadducees. Hence the necessity of recording their grounds for acquittal in order to be able to discover the nature of the error. This proves that an opinion for conviction may not be reversed even at the time of the promulgation of the decision.

(24) Since no two verses are intended to teach one and the same thing, one of the judges must have erred.

(25) Ps. LXII, 12.

(26) Jer. XXIII, 29.

(27) The test contains a grammatical difficulty. Literally translated, it is, Just as the hammer is split etc.; whereas for the present translation, the text must read מחלק instead of מתחלק, and some commentators emend the text accordingly. R. Tam, however, on the basis of Ekah R. IV, 7, retains the present text and its literal translation, as above, and explains, Just as the hammer, when it smites an extraordinary hard object, may itself be split, — so may the Biblical verse, when subjected to the scrutiny of a very keen intellect, split up into different meanings.

(28) I.e., that nothing that was laid upon it may be taken back.

(29) I.e., anything which has come into contact or relationship with the altar, after having been appointed for it. Even if it became subsequently invalid for its original purpose, for any reason, e.g., in the case of a sacrifice, if the officiating priest slaughtered it with a forbidden intention, it nevertheless retained its sanctity. Now, this statement lays down the general principle with which all are in agreement, the further definition and application of which form the subject of dispute amongst various teachers whose views the Mishnah proceeds to state.

(30) I.e., only that which could have served that purpose. e.g., the flesh of a burnt offering. If, however, the blood of a sacrifice became invalid, since that is not intended to feed the fires of the altar, it does not retain its sanctity.

(31) I.e., may not be taken back, for the altar has given it a sacred character.

(32) Lev. VI, 2.

(33) Derived from . . . upon the altar all night unto the morning. (ibid).

(34) I.e., not only fit for the fires of the altar, but used in any service of the altar. Hence, in his opinion, the law applied to blood and libations too, since these were respectively sprinkled and poured upon the altar.

(35) Among the things which may not be taken back when once laid upon the altar.

(36) As explained in note 2.

(37) Now, at this stage it is assumed that since both deduce the same general principle from two different verses, there is no real disagreement between them. Thus this affords an illustration of 'one law drawn from two different verses.

(38) I.e.. they lose their sanctity. For the explanation of this, v. p. 215. n. 3. Hence, this is not a true example of one law devised from two texts. (Note: A single word is also referred to as a 'verse' or 'text'.)

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 34b

Whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy,[1] I might infer [that this holds good] whether it be fit for the altar or not.[2] Scripture therefore says,[3] [Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar; two lambs . . .; just as lambs are fit [for the altar], so are all things that are fit [included in the previous statement].[4] R. Akiba said: [Scripture states,] burnt offering:[5] Just as the burnt offering is fit [for the altar], so with all things that are so. And what do both exclude? Invalid objects.[6] One Master deduces this from the word 'lambs'; the other, from 'burnt offering'.[7] But did not R. Adda b. Ahabah say: They differed with respect to a fowl burnt offering which had been disqualified: he who deduced it [the scope of the law] from 'lambs', holds that only lambs are included,[8] but not the burnt offering of a fowl; whereas he who deduced it from 'burnt offering' includes even a burnt offering of a fowl? — But, said R. Ashi, it is illustrated by the following Baraitha:[9] Blood shall be imputed unto that man, he hath shed blood;[10] this[11] is to include [him] who sprinkles:[12] that is R. Ishmael's view. R. Akiba said: [Scripture adds] Or a sacrifice:[13] this is to include him who sprinkles. Thus, What do both include? — Sprinkling; one Master deducing it from the words: Blood shall be imputed, the other from the words: Or a sacrifice.[14] But did not R. Abbahu say: They differ where a man both slaughtered and sprinkled [the blood of a sacrifice]:[15] for according to R. Ishmael,[16] he is liable only to one [sin offering]; whereas on R. Akiba's view,[17] he is liable to two? — But surely it was stated regarding this: Abaye said: Even according to R. Akiba he is liable only to one [sin offering], for Scripture writes, There thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings and there thou shalt do [all that I commanded thee]:[18] the Divine Law thus grouped all acts [of sacrifice in the same category]![19]

CIVIL SUITS ARE TRIED BY DAY etc. (Mnemonic: Judgment, Answering, Inclining.)

Whence is this derived? — R. Hiyya b. Papa said: From the verse, And let them judge the people at all times.[20] If so, even the beginning of the trial may [take place at night]! — It is as Raba explained. For Raba opposed [two verses]: It is written, And let them judge the people at all times;[21] but elsewhere it is said, And in the day that he causeth his sons to inherit.[22] How [can these be reconciled]? — The day is for the beginning of the trial, the night is for the conclusion of the trial.[23]

Our Mishnah[24] does not agree with R. Meir. For it has been taught. R. Meir used to say: What is meant by the verse, According to their word shall every controversy and every leprosy be?[25] Now, what connection have controversies with leprosies? — But controversies are assimilated to leprosies: just as leprosies [must be examined] by day, since it is written, And in the day when [raw flesh] appeareth in him,[26] so controversies [must be tried] by day; and just as leprosies cannot [be examined] by the blind,[27] for it is written, Wherever the priest looketh,[28] so controversies too may not be tried by the blind.[29] And leprosies are further compared to controversies: Just as the latter may not be tried by relatives, so the former may not be examined by relatives. Now, if so,[30] [one might argue,] that just as controversies must be tried by three, so must leprosies too [be examined] by three; moreover, it follows a minori,' [if questions affecting] one's wealth are [to be tried] by three, how much more so [when they concern] one's body! Therefore Scripture teaches, When he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest or unto one of his sons the priests,'[31] thus thou learnest that a single priest may examine leprosies.

A blind man in the neighbourhood of R. Johanan used to try suits, and R. Johanan raised no objection. But how could he do so?[32] Did not R. Johanan himself say, The halachah is as [every] anonymous Mishnah.[33] and we learnt: He who is qualified to judge is qualified to testify; some, however, are qualified to testify but not to judge. Whereon R. Johanan said: This is to admit [as witness] one who is blind of one eye?[34] — R. Johanan found another anonymous Mishnah,[35] viz., CIVIL SUITS ARE TRIED BY DAY AND CONCLUDED BY NIGHT.[36] But why is this anonymous Mishnah more authoritative[37] than the other? — Either because an anonymous Mishnah which expresses the opinion of the majority is preferable;[38] or alternatively, because this Mishnah is taught in the tractate relating to legal procedure.[39] But how does R. Meir[40] interpret the verse, And let them judge the people at all times? — Raba answered: As including even a cloudy day.[41] For we learnt:[42] Leprosies may not be examined in the morning, in twilight, in the house, or on a cloudy day, for [then] a dull [spot] might appear bright,[43] at mid-day,[44] for a bright [spot] might then appear dull.[45] Now [again], according to R. Meir, what is the purpose of, And in the day that he causeth his sons to inherit?[46] — He utilises it, even as Rabbah b. Hanina recited before R. Nahman: And in the day he causeth his sons to inherit: only by day mayest thou assign estates, but not by night. Whereupon the other retorted:[47] If so, if one dies by day, his sons inherit, but should he die at night, they do not inherit! Perhaps you refer to the legal procedure in bequests.[48] For it has been taught: And it shall be unto the children of Israel a statue of judgment:[49] that invests the whole chapter with the force of judicial proceedings.[50] Thus [your dictum] will agree with that which Rab Judah said in Rab's name, viz.: If three [persons] come to visit a sick man,[51] they may, according to their desire, either record [his bequest],[52] or render a judicial ruling.[53] In case of two, however, they may write it down,[54] but not render a judicial ruling.[55] Whereon R. Hisda said: This[56] holds good by day; at night, however, they may indite the bequest, but not render a judicial ruling, since they are witnesses, and a witness cannot act as judge.[57] — He [Rabbah b. Hanina] answered: Yes, I meant it so.

BUT CAPITAL CHARGES MUST BE TRIED BY DAY [AND CONCLUDED BY DAY]. Whence is this deduced? — R. Shimi b. Hiyya said: Scripture states, And hang [we — hoka'] them up unto the Lord in face of the sun.[58] Whence do we know that hoka'ah means hanging? — From the verse, And we will hang them up [we — hoka'anum] into the Lord in Gibeah of Saul, the chosen of the Lord.[59]

(1) Ex. XXIX, 37. I.e., once it touches the altar, it retains its sanctity, as above.

(2) E.g., leaven and honey, (cf. Lev. II, 11) which are never permissible for the altar, or unconsecrated animals (i.e., hullin), which are not yet fit for the altar. — Animals had to be formally consecrated before they might be sanctified upon the altar.

(3) In the following verse. Ex. XXIX, 38.

(4) Even if now disqualified. Yet they must be things that are essentially fit for the altar, as explained in p. 215. n. 7; otherwise, the law does not apply to them.

(5) עולה Ibid. verse 42; This shall be a continued burnt offering (R. Hananel). According to Rashi, it occurs in the same verse 38 as above. Though the word does not appear in the Masoretic text, it occurs in the Samaritan Text. On such variants, v. Heller, Samaritan Pentateuch, an adaptation of the Masoretic Text.

(6) I.e., things that were never permissible upon the altar, e.g., leaven and honey; v. Lev. II, 11.

(7) Thus, this Baraitha illustrates one law drawn from two Biblical verses.'
(8) Amongst the objects which, though disqualified, may not be taken back when once laid upon the altar.
(9) Zeb. 107a.
(10) Lev. XVII, 4.
(11) Apparent redundance of the expression.
(12) The blood of a sacrifice outside the Temple courts, as being liable to excision (kareth).
(13) Ibid. verse 8.
(14) Thus it illustrates 'one law drawn derived from two Scriptural verses.'
(15) Without the Temple precincts, i.e. Unwittingly, in a spell of forgetfulness, without being reminded between the two acts that they were of a forbidden character. Now, it is a principle that every forbidden act, which, if done wittingly, involves kareth, requires a sin offering if done wittingly. There is a further principle that all things whose forbidden nature is deduced from the same word, rank as a small transgression, and therefore involve only one sacrifice.
(16) Who deduces the penalty of kareth for sprinkling outside the court from the same verse which prohibits slaughter.
(17) That kareth for sprinkling without the Temple precincts is deduced from a different verse.
(18) Deut. XII, 14.
(19) Hence there is only this one verse which commands that all acts of sacrifice, which includes slaughtering and sprinkling, shall be done in the prescribed fashion. Therefore, transgression of both involves only one sacrifice
(20) Ex. XVIII, 22; i.e., even at night.
(21) Ibid.
(22) Deut. XXI, 16. From the fact that day is stressed, the Talmud deduces that all matters in connection therewith, which principle includes disputes over the inheritance, are to be settled by day. But such disputes are part of civil suits in general, and thus this verse contradicts the preceding.
(23) For, 'and they shall judge . . . at all times' implies the giving of the verdict, which is the essence of judgment.
(24) Which rules that the decision may be issued at night.
(25) Deut. XXI, 5.
(26) Lev. XIII, 14.
(27) [Even of one eye only. v. Neg. II, 3.]
(28) Ibid. verse 12.
(29) [Even by one who is blind of one eye only, since it is deduced from 'leprosies', Yad Ramah.]
(30) If they are similar in so many respects.
(31) Ibid. verse 2.
(32) I.e., permit him to judge.
(33) A Mishnah that is taught without mention of its author, or of any conflict of opinions that exists regarding it.
(34) But not as judge, so coinciding with R. Meir's opinion stated above, (v. p. 218 nn.5 and7).
(35) Which implied that a blind man is permitted to judge.
(36) For there are many whose eye-sight is as dim by night as that of a blind man by day.
(37) Lit., 'stronger'.
(38) The Mishnah which, according to R. Johanan, treats of a blind man, expresses the view of R. Meir as expressed in the preceding Baraitha, but our Mishnah, that of the majority.
(39) Whereas the other anonymous Mishnah is cited only incidentally in a tractate relating to a different subject entirely, and it stands to reason that greater care would be taken in the former to teach what is actually the halachah.
(40) Who holds that disputes may only be tried by day.
(41) On which, unlike the cases of leprosies, civil suits may be tried.
(42) Neg. II, 2.
(43) So that it might wrongfully be declared unclean. Cf. Lev. XIII, 2ff.
(44) When the sun is brightest.
(45) So that it might wrongfully be declared clean, Neg. II, 2.
(46) Since R. Meir deduces the law that civil suits must be tried by day from the case of the examination of leprosies, the reference to 'day' here appears superfluous.
(47) In B.B. 113b, this question is attributed to Abaye.
(48) If made by day, a bequest has judicial authority, and does not need court authentication; by night, those who witnessed it are required to legalise it before court. (Rashi.) The Rashbam in B.B. 113b translates: 'Perhaps you refer to lawsuits concerning legacies,' i.e that these, like any other civil suits, must take place by day.

(49) Num. XXVII, 11, at the conclusion of the section dealing with laws of inheritance.

(50) I.e., when a bequest is made, those who are present become ipso facto a Beth din, even against the wish of the testator's natural heirs. This is the explanation given by Tosaf. in B.B. 113b, which adds that the reference is not particularly to a bequest made on one's deathbed, but even to one made in full health, save that it must be accompanied by a formal kinyan (q.v.). Rashi's interpretation here is on the same lines, but he appears to refer it to a sickbed bequest.

(51) And hear him assign his estate to his heirs.

(52) Merely as witnesses. That document is afterwards produced by the heirs in court and there given its necessary authority.

(53) Since they are three they can constitute themselves into a court and have legal authority to execute the Will.

(54) In the form of a witnessed document.

(55) Since two do not make a properly constituted Court.

(56) Ruling with reference to three.

(57) I.e., when they hear a bequest at night, they can obviously do so only as witnesses, since a court cannot function at night, consequently, they cannot subsequently constitute themselves a court, for they already have the status of witnesses.

(58) והוקע, Num. XXV, 4; i.e., in the day time.

(59) והוקענום II Sam. XXI, 6.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 35a

And it is written, And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sack-cloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest.[1]

It is written, And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the chiefs of the people.[2] If the people had sinned, wherein had the chiefs sinned?[3] — Rab Judah said in Rab's name: The Holy One, blessed be He, said unto Moses: Divide them into [many] courts.[4] Why? Shall we say, because two [men] may not be tried [and sentenced] on the same day?[5] But R. Hisda said: This was taught only with reference to [charges involving] two different modes of execution;[6] whereas [cases that involve only] one mode of execution[7] may be tried? — But it was so, that the fierce anger of the Lord may turn away from Israel.[8]

CIVIL SUITS MAY BE CONCLUDED ON THE SAME DAY etc. . . . Whence is this derived? — R. Hanina said: Scripture saith, She that was full of justice, righteousness lodged [yalin] in her,[9] but now, murderers.[10] Raba derived it from the following: Ashsheru hamoz[11] — i.e., bless[12] the judge who reserves[13] his verdict. And the other?[14] — [He interprets it thus:] Relieve the oppressed,[15] not the oppressor.[16] And the latter [Raba]: how does he utilize the verse: And she that was full of justice? — Even as R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Isaac. Viz.: If on a fast day, the distribution of alms[17] is postponed overnight, it is just as though blood were shed,[18] as it is written, She that was full of justice, charity[19] etc. This, however, applies only to bread and dates;[20] but in the case of money, wheat or barley, [postponement] does not matter.

THEREFORE TRIALS ARE NOT HELD [ON THE EVE OF A SABBATH OR FESTIVAL] etc. Why so? — Because it is impossible, for how could it be done? Should they try him [the accused] on the eve of the Sabbath and pronounce judgment on the same day; perhaps they may find cause for condemnation, and judgment will then have to be postponed overnight.[21] Or again, if they try him on the eve of the Sabbath, and pronounce judgment on the Sabbath, and execute him on that day,[22] but execution cannot supersede the Sabbath.[23] Again, should he be executed in the evening; execution must be carried out 'in the face of the sun.'[24] One the other hand, if judgment is pronounced on the Sabbath whist he is executed on the first day of the week [Sunday], they might delay the course of justice.[25] If he be tried on the eve of the Sabbath, and the matter concluded on the first day of the week, they might have forgotten their reasons by then, for although two judges' clerks stand before them and write down the arguments of those who would acquit and those who would convict, they can but record according to the mouth,[26] yet once the heart forgets, it remains forgotten.[27] Hence this is impossible.

Resh Rakish said to R. Johanan: Why should not the burial of a Meth-Mizwah[28] supersede [the laws of] the Sabbath, reasoning a minori: if the Temple service, which sets aside the Sabbath,[29] is itself suspended for the burial of a Meth-Mizwah (as is deduced from, And to his sister, even as it has been taught: To his father and to his mother and to his brother and to his sister:[30] What does this teach us?[31] [Even] if he [the Nazir] were on his way to sacrifice the Paschal lamb or to circumcise his son,[32]

(1) Ibid. verse 10, as a protection from the birds of prey. They must have been hanged on trees.

(2) Num. XXV, 4.

(3) Only the people are mentioned as sinning (vv. 2,3), but not particularly the chiefs.

(4) To try the sinners. The verse is accordingly translated: Take the chiefs of the people (and appoint them as judges,) and hang up them (whom they shall condemn) etc.

(5) By one court; therefore many courts had to be set up, since the culprits were many'.

(6) Since the members of the court would find it difficult to find a plea in favour of the accused in each case.

(7) When the crime committed is the same, as in this case.

(8) When it was seen that all the chiefs were concerned in punishing the sinners.

(9) Isa. I, 21. I.e., judgment was held over lest points for acquittal might be found. ילין means, 'to stay over night'.

(10) I.e., but now they do not postpone the verdict until the next day, and thus are (judicial) murderers.

(11) Ibid, 17. אשרו חמוץ (E.V. 'relieve the oppressed').

(12) אשרו is rendered, 'declare happy'.

(13) Lit., 'makes sour,' (חמוץ from מחץ, 'sour') in the sense of preserving (e.g., pickle vegetables), and hence metaphorically 'to postpone', 'to keep in reserve.'

(14) R. Hanina, who derives it from the other verse. How does he interpret the verse?

(15) I.e., attend to the plaintiff.

(16) The defendant. He is hinting at the general rule in legal procedure that the plaintiff must be heard first. Cf. B K. 46b. The application of this law is particularly noticeable in the case of a counter claim, designed to nullify the original, when priority must be given to the first claim.

(17) It was customary to distribute the value of the food saved during the fast to the poor. Cf. Ber. 6b the merit of a fast consists in dispensing charity.

(18) For the needy who relied on it might have died of starvation.

(19) צדק means also 'charity', as in fact, in Hebrew there is only one word for 'righteousness' and 'charity': charity is righteousness. The verse is accordingly translated: She was full of justice; but now that charity is made to lodge therein, i.e., postponed overnight, they ate as murderers.

(20) I.e., only when these articles of food were distributed, on which the poor depend for breaking their fast.

(21) And pronounced on the Sabbath, which is not permissible, v. nn 6 and 7.

(22) Execution must be carried out on the same day as the pronouncement of the verdict.

(23) Killing is one of the labours forbidden on the Sabbath, even when it takes the form of judicial execution.

(24) I.e., in the day time. Num XXV, 4.

(25) Since execution must be carried out on the same day as the verdict. ענה 'to afflict', when used in connection with a court verdict, means to afflict the condemned man by postponing his execution, the wait being an additional mental torment. (10) Supra 34a.

(26) I.e., the actual words.

(27) I.e., the spirit of the argument may not be recalled through the written word.

(28) מת מצוה Lit., 'A corpse which it is a religious obligation (to bury). 'The burial of a dead person has no relatives to attend to him devolves upon anyone, even a High Priest. THis query is raised here only because of a subsequent question whether execution on a Sabbath day is permissible.

(29) E.g., by the offering of the Tamid or daily burnt offering. Cf. Num. XXVIII, 2; Pes 77a.

(30) Num. VI, 7. For these the Nazarite may not render himself unclean. A similar restriction is imposed on the High Priest.

(31) I.e., why is it necessary to detail all these relations, seeing that it has already been stated in the previous verse: He shall not come near to a dead body, which includes all relations? The Sifre on the verse comments on the reason for each: He may not defile himself for his father, but he must for a Meth-Mizwah; nor for his mother, but he must for a Meth-Mizwah, even if he be a priest as well as a Nazarite, nor for his brother, but he must for a Meth-Mizwah even if he be a High Priest as well as a Nazarite; nor for his sister, but he must defile himself for a Meth-Mizwah, even if he be a High Priest as well as a Nazarite and engaged in such duties as are stated in the Gemara.

(32) Both of which acts must he performed at a prescribed time.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 35b

and he heard that one of his relatives had died, it might be thought that he should defile himself, but in fact the law[1] provides that he should not. Now, it might be thought that just as he may not defile himself for his sister, so may he not defile himself for a Meth-Mizwah: therefore Scripture states, And to his sister, i.e., [only] for his sister may he not defile himself, but he must do so for a Meth-Mizwah). Then the Sabbath, which is abrogated in favour of the Temple service, should surely be set aside for the burial of a Meth-Mizwah! — He answered: Execution[2] can prove it [sc. the contrary]: it supersedes the Temple service,[3] and yet does not set aside the Sabbath.[4] But let execution itself supersede the Sabbath, arguing [likewise] a minori: If the Temple service, which supersedes the Sabbath, is itself set aside for execution, as it is written, Thou shalt take him[5] from mine altar that he may die:[6] then the Sabbath, which the Temple service sets aside, should surely be set aside by execution! — Said Raba: A Tanna of R. Ishmael's School has already decided this, for a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Ye shall not kindle a fire:[7] What does this teach?[8] 'What does this teach?' [askest thou]! According to R. Jose, [it is particularized] in order to constitute it merely a prohibitory command;[9] according to R. Nathan in order to teach separation,[10] as has been taught: The [singling out of] kindling is to shew that it is subject merely to a negative command: this is the view of R. Jose. R. Nathan said: It is to teach separation. But, said Raba, the Tanna's difficulty is [the word] 'habitations'.[11] Why is the word 'habitations'[12] stated? For consider: [the observance of the] Sabbath is a personal duty,[13] and a personal duty is obligatory both within and without the Land [sc. Palestine]; what then is the purpose of 'habitations', which the Divine Law wrote? — A disciple said on R. Ishmael's authority: Since it is written, And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death and he be put o death,[14] I [might] understand it to mean both on week-days and on the Sabbath.[15] How then should I interpret, He that profaneth it shall surely be put to death?[16] — As referring to other forms of work, but not judicial execution. Or perhaps that is not so, and it does indeed include execution by the Beth din; and how an I to interpret, And he be put to death? — as applying only to week-days, but not to the Sabbath![17] Or perhaps, on the contrary, even the Sabbath is meant?[18] — Therefore[19] Scripture states: Ye shall not kindle a fire throughout your habitations,[20] and elsewhere it says And these things shall be for a statute of judgment for you throughout your generations in all your habitations:[21] Just as the word 'habitations' found there,[22] refers to [matters concerning] a Beth din, so the word 'habitations' found here refers to [work entailed by a] Beth din.[23] And regarding it the Divine Law states: Ye shall not kindle a fire in all your habitations.[24]

Abaye said: Now that you have concluded that execution does not supersede the Sabbath, it [necessarily] follows that execution does not suspend the Temple service, a minori: If the Sabbath, which is abrogated in favour of the Temple service, is not set aside for execution; then the Temple service, which supersedes the Sabbath, is surely not suspended by execution! And as to the Scriptural verse, Thou shalt take him from mine altar that he may die?[25] — this refers only to a private sacrifice,[26] which does not suspend the Sabbath.[27] Raba said:[28] But execution should not suspend [attendance even upon] a private sacrifice, a minori:

---

(1) In the verse under discussion; v. n. 6.

(2) Lit., 'Murder'.

(3) If a priest is convicted of murder; he must be executed, even if he wishes to perform the Temple service.
(4) As was stated above.
(5) The murderer.
(6) Ex. XXI, 14.
(7) Ex. XXXV, 3.
(8) I.e., why was the kindling of fire specially mentioned; surely it was already included in: Ye shall not do any work! (Ex. XX, 10.)
(9) I.e., its infringement is punishable only by lashes and not by stoning, as is the performance of other work on the Sabbath.
(10) I.e., to teach that each transgression of the Sabbath laws is to be atoned for separately. This interpretation is based on the eighth of the thirteen exegetical principles expounded by R. Ishmael, namely: If anything is included in a general proposition and is then made the subject of a special statement, that which is predicated of it is not to be understood as limited to itself alone, but applies to the whole of the general proposition.
(11) Ex. XXXV, 3.
(12) Which word, as a rule, indicates that the law is confined to Palestine alone.
(13) As opposed to laws dependent on the soil, such as those of the Sabbatical year, or the fruits of the soil, such as tithes etc.
(14) Deut. XXI, 22.
(15) Since, by reason of the a minori argument propounded above, execution might supersede the Sabbath.
(16) Ex. XXXI, 14.
(17) Since the argument a minori can be refuted by the fact that the burial of a Meth-Mizwah does not suspend the Sabbath laws even thought it sets aside the Temple service.
(18) I.e., execution might nevertheless supersede the Sabbath, a minori, as above. Nor is the refutation stated in the last note a valid one, since the same reasoning may be used to show that the burial of a Meth-Mizwah too should be permissible on the Sabbath.
(19) I.e., in order to clarify the position.
(20) Ex. XXXV, 3.
(21) Num. XXXV, 29.
(22) With reference to the manslayer and court executions.
(23) I.e., execution.
(24) Even such fire as is involved in execution by burning, ordered by a Beth din. This execution cannot suspend the Sabbath laws, in spite of the argument a minori. This fact too refutes the argument by which it was sought to prove that the burial of a Meth-Mizwah should abrogate the Sabbath.
(25) Ex. XXI, 14, which conflicts with this conclusion.
(26) I.e., when a priest accused of murder officiates at an offering brought by an individual.
(27) Execution therefore supersedes it. But if he is engaged in offering a public sacrifice, execution may not set it aside, by the preceding argument.
(28) Raba disagrees with Abaye, and proceeds to demonstrate the incorrectness of Abaye's view by an argument somewhat similar to a reductio ad absurdum.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 36a

If a festival, which is superseded by a private offering,[1] is not abrogated for an execution;[2] then a private offering, which supersedes the festival, is surely not to be suspended by an execution? Now, on the view that vows and free-will offerings [i.e., private offerings] may not be sacrificed on festival days, it is correct;[3] but on the view that vows and free will offerings may be sacrificed on Festivals, what can you say?[4] Therefore Raba said: [Abaye's reasoning is unacceptable] not only on the view that vows and free-will offerings can be sacrificed on a festival, — since in that case, [the verse] From mine altar etc. has no applicability at all,[5] — but even if it be held that vows and free-will offerings cannot be sacrificed on festivals.[6] For, is it not written: From mine altar, [implying,] my altar, viz., that which is peculiarly mine;[7] and which altar is that? the Tamid.[8] And thereon the Divine Law writes, Thou shalt take him from mine altar that he may die.[9]

IN CIVIL SUITS, AND IN CASES OF CLEANNESS AND UNCLEANNESS etc. Rab said: I was once one of the voters in the school of Rabbi, and it was with me that the voting began.[10] But did we not learn, WE COMMENCE WITH THE ELDEST? — Rabbah the son of Raba — others state, R. Hillel the son of R. Wallas — said: The voting in the school of Rabbi was different [from the usual form], because in all their voting they began with the side [benches].[11]

Rabbah the son of Raba — others state, R. Hillel the son of R. Wallas — also said: From Moses until Rabbi we do not find sacred learning and [secular] greatness combined in the one [person]. But do we not? Was it not so in the case of Joshua? — [No, for] there was Eleazar.[12] But what of Phinehas? — There were the Elders.[13] But was not Saul such? — No, [with him] was Samuel. But did not Samuel die [before him]? — We are referring to his whole life-time. But did not David [combine these possessions]? — There was Ira the Jairite.[14] But he died [before David]! — We are referring to his whole life-time. Was not Solomon [such a man]? — [No, for] there was Shimei son of Gera.[15] But he [Solomon] slew him! — We are referring to his whole life-time. Was there not Hezekiah? — [with him] was Shebnah.[16] But he was slain [during Hezekiah's life-time]! — We are referring to his entire life-time. But was this not true of Ezra? — No, for [with him] was Nehemia the son of Hachalia.

R.Adda b. Ahabah said: I similarly affirm that since the days of Rabbi until R. Ashi we do not find learning, and high office combined in the same person. But do we not: was there not Huna b. Nathan?[17] — Huna b. Nathan was certainly subordinate to R. Ashi.[18]

WHEREAS IN CAPITAL CHARGES, WE COMMENCE WITH [THE OPINION OF] THOSE ON THE SIDE BENCHES. Whence is this derived? R. Aha b. Papa said: Scripture states, Thou shalt not speak[19] ‘al rib [in a case][20] — [i.e.,] thou shalt not speak ‘al rab, against the chief [of the judges]. Rabbah b. Bar Hana deduced it in R. Johanan's name from the following verse, And David said unto his men, gird ye on every man his sword; and they girded on every man his sword, and David also girded on his sword.[21]

Rab said: In capital charges one may instruct his disciple,[22] and pronounce judgment with him.[23] An objection was raised: ‘In cases of cleanness and uncleanness, a father and his son, or a master and his disciple count as two;[24] but in monetary cases, capital cases of flagellation, the sanctification of the month and the intercalation of the year, a father and his son, or a master and his disciple count only as one’?[25]

(1) I.e., a private offering may be brought on a Festival, though it entail labour unconnected with the preparation of food for human consumption, v. Ex. XII, 16.

(2) Since in regard to work there is no difference between Sabbaths and Festivals save as regards the preparation of food.

(3) Since the preceding argument is fallacious, being based on a false premise (v. Bezah, 19a). — This is still part of Raba's reasoning.

(4) The premise being correct, the deduction is likewise correct, viz., that an execution cannot supersede a private offering. How then can the verse, Thou shalt take him from mine altar, be reconciled with this conclusion?

(5) For, as shown above, if Abaye's reasoning be accepted, execution does not suspend even private offerings: to what then can from mine altar etc.’ refer?

(6) According to which view the Scriptural verse might refer to private offerings; yet even so, Abaye's deduction is unacceptable.

(7) I.e., public offerings in which the individual, as an individual, has no part.

(8) I.e., the altar on which the daily offering was made.

(9) Thus the Bible expressly negatives the deduction a minori proposed by Abaye.

(10) In connection with the Sikarikon (robber) law, a title to a piece of property held by such for twelve months. Cf. Git. 59a.

(11) Owing to Rabbi's humility.
(12) His colleague, equal to him in wisdom.
(13) Who shared his authority with him.
(14) Chief Minister to David. II Sam. XX, 26. Cf. M.K. 16b which speaks of his great learning.
(15) V. II Sam. XIX, 18, where his great influence is indicated.
(16) Whose college was larger than Hezekiah's. V. supra 26a.
(17) Cf. Zeb. 19a. which refers to his intimate friendship with the Persian King, Yezdegerd. [According to Sherira's Epistle, he was exilarch in the time of R. Ashi.]
(18) [He surrendered one by one his prerogatives to R. Ashi, v. Blank, REJ. XXX, 51.]
(19) Lit., 'Answer'.
(20) Ex. XXIII, 2. V. p. 94. n. 2. He takes רב in the sense of רב. Therefore the opinion of the lessor judges is first ascertained.
(21) I Sam. XXV, 13. I.e., the question whether Nabal the Carmelite's act was to be treated as rebelliousness against the king was here discussed and a vote taken in the form of girding on the sword. David was the last to express his opinion.
(22) In the laws relating to such cases, and the pros and cons for conviction.
(23) The master and the disciple have each a separate vote.
(24) Since such cases could at the outset be decided by a single person, the need for voting arises only in the event of a controversy.
(25) Since these cases require at the very outset a fixed number of judges. Tosef. Sanh. IV.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 36b

— Rab referred to [disciples] such as R. Kahana and R. Assi who needed Rab's traditional teaching,[1] but not his reasoning.[2]

R. Abbahu said: In ten respects do civil suits differ from capital charges,[3] and none of those is practised in [the trial of] the ox that is stoned,[4] save that twenty-three [judges are necessary] — Whence is this derived? — R. Aha b. Papa said: Scripture states, Thou shalt not wrest[5] the judgment of thy poor in his cause;[6] — the judgment of thy poor thou mayest not wrest,[7] but thou mayest do so in the case of the ox that is stoned.[8]

Ten? But there are only nine! ([You say that there are only nine,] but indeed, ten are taught! — The laws that not all [persons] are eligible,[9] and that twenty-three judges are necessary, are but one.)[10] — There is yet another [difference]:[11] for it has been taught: 'We do not appoint as members of the Sanhedrin, an aged man, a eunuch or one who is childless.[12] R. Judah includes also a cruel man. It is the reverse in the case of a Mesith,' for the Divine Law states , Neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him.[13]

ALL ARE ELIGIBLE TO TRY CIVIL SUITS. What does 'ALL' include? — It includes a bastard. But have we not already learnt this once, viz.: Whoever is competent to try capital charges is also competent to try civil suits. But some are competent to try civil suits, yet not capital charges.[14] Now, when we discussed this question: What does that[15] include? Did not Rab Judah answer, It includes a bastard? — One includes a proselyte, the other, a bastard. And both are necessary. For had the rule been given concerning a proselyte only, [one might have assumed that the reason is] because he is eligible to come into the Congregation;[16] but a bastard,[17] we would say, is not [competent]. Again, had this been stated of a bastard only, [we should think that the reason was that] he issues from a proper origin,[18] but a proselyte, who does not issue from a proper origin, is not [competent]. Hence the statements are [both] necessary.

BUT NOT ALL ARE ELIGIBLE TO TRY CAPITAL CHARGES. Why?[19] — As R. Joseph learned: Just as the Beth din must be pure in righteousness, so they must be free[20] from every blemish.[21] Amemar said: What verse [proves this]? — Thou art all fair, my love, and there is no blemish in thee.[22] But perhaps a literal defect [blemish] is meant?[23] — R. Aha b. Jacob answered: Scripture states, That they may stand there with thee:[24] 'with thee' implies, like to thee.[25] But perhaps it was so stated there on account of the Shechinah?[26] — But, said R. Nahman b. Jacob: Scripture states, And they shall bear with thee:[27] 'with thee' implies that they must be like to thee.

MISHNAH. THE SANHEDRIN SAT IN THE FORM OF A SEMICIRCULAR THRESHING FLOOR,[28] SO THAT THEY MIGHT SEE ONE ANOTHER, AND TWO JUDGES CLERKS STOOD BEFORE THEM, ONE TO THE RIGHT, THE OTHER TO THE LEFT, AND WROTE DOWN THE ARGUMENTS OF THOSE WHO WOULD ACQUIT AND THOSE WHO WOULD CONDEMN.[29] R. JUDAH SAID: [THERE WERE] THREE: ONE TO RECORD THE ARGUMENTS FOR ACQUITTAL, A SECOND, THOSE FOR CONVICTION, AND A THIRD, TO RECORD THE ARGUMENTS FOR ACQUITTAL AND CONVICTION.

---

(1) I.e., laws transmitted down from Master to pupil.

(2) In the application of these traditions. Therefore they rank as independent opinions, for with respect to the actual traditions, even the Masters had to receive them from their masters.

(3) As detailed in the Mishnah.

(4) Though its trial must be similar to that of its owner. Cf. supra 2a.

(5) Lit., 'incline', or 'bend'.

(6) Ex. XXIII, 6. This is interpreted, judgment must not be inclined in favour of conviction by a majority of only one.

(7) By a majority of one, for condemnation.

(8) From this it may be inferred that the procedure in the trial of an ox to be stoned is other than that of capital cases, except in the number of judges; and that difference is extended to all the other peculiarities of capital procedure, since the object of particularly applying that procedure in capital cases was to achieve the acquittal of the accused. Not so with an ox.

(9) E.g., bastards may not try capital cases.

(10) So making the total of nine given in the Mishnah. People of illegitimate birth are ineligible as judges in capital cases because a court of twenty-three holds the status of a minor Sanhedrin, with whom pure descent is essential; hence they are counted as one.

(11) Which completes the number of ten.

(12) Because such are more or less devoid of paternal tenderness Cf. Tosef Sanh. VII and X.

(13) Deut. XIII, 9.

(14) V. supra 27b.

(15) The law that one may be competent to act as judge in one and not in another case.

(16) I.e., to intermarry with Israelites.

(17) Who may not come into the Assembly. Cf. Deut. XXIII, 3

(18) I.e., is of pure Israelitish blood.

(19) Since the Talmud does not ask, 'whence is this derived,' as before, but 'why', it may be assumed that this limitation is a Rabbinical one, and therefore the Talmud asks why it was imposed.

(20) Lit., 'pure'.

(21) Of family descent.

(22) Cant. IV, 7. [This verse must refer to the Sanhedrin, as such a praise can hardly be sung of the whole people (Yad Ramah).]

(23) I.e., a bodily defect.

(24) Num. IV, 16.

(25) The Elders were required to be like Moses with regard to family descent.

(26) That passage explicitly states that the Shechinah was to rest upon them. Cf. Num. XI, 17. And I will take of the spirit which is upon thee and put it upon them; therefore, purity of descent was indispensable, but elsewhere, this may be unnecessary.

(27) Ex. XVIII, 22, with reference to the judges set up on the advice of Jethro, to bear with Moses the burden of the people. In that passage there is no indication of the bestowal of the divine spirit upon them.

(28) In Krauss, Sanhedrin-Makkot (1933) a.l. this is discussed at great length. In fact, most threshing floors were round, but their essential feature was that they were shaped like a trough. i.e., forming a depression in the soil. It is to this aspect of the threshing floor that they are compared. Hence the meaning of the passage is: They sat in semi-circular rising tiers, as in an amphitheatre.

(29) They were two, as a precautionary measure against error. Cf. supra 34a.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 37a

AND THREE ROWS OF SCHOLARS SAT[1] IN FRONT OF THEM; EACH KNOWING HIS OWN PLACE.[2] IN CASE IT WAS NECESSARY TO ORDAIN [ANOTHER JUDGE],[3] HE WAS APPOINTED FROM THE FIRST [ROW] IN WHICH CASE ONE OF THE SECOND [ROW] MOVED UP TO THE FIRST, ONE OF THE THIRD TO THE SECOND, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLED [AUDIENCE][4] WAS SELECTED AND SEATED IN THE THIRD [ROW]. HE[5] DID NOT SIT IN THE PLACE VACATED BY THE FIRST[6] BUT IN THE PLACE SUITABLE FOR HIM.[7]

GEMARA. Whence is this derived? — R. Aha Haninah said: Scripture states, Thy navel is like a round goblet [‘aggan ha-Sahar] wherein no mingled wine is wanting.[8] ‘Thy navel’ — that is the Sanhedrin. Why was it called ‘navel’? — Because it sat at the navel-point[9] of the world. [Why] ‘aggan?[10] — Because it protects [meggin] the whole world. [Why] ha-Sahar? — Because it was moon-shaped.[11] [Why] in which no mingled wine is wanting? — I.e., if one of them had to leave, it had to be ascertained if twenty-three, corresponding to the number of the minor Sanhedrin, were left,[12] in which case he might go out; if not, he might not depart.

Thy belly is like a heap of wheat:[13] Just as all benefit from a heap of wheat, so do all benefit from the deliberations of the Sanhedrin.

Set about with lilies:[14] Even through a hedge of lilies they would make no breach.[15] In this connexion there is the story of a Min[16] who said to R. Kahana: Ye maintain that a menstruant woman is permitted yihud [privacy] with her husband: can fire be near tow without singeing it? He retorted: The Torah testifies this of us: Set about with lilies — even through a hedge of lilies they make no breach. Resh Lakish deduced [the same answer] from the following verse, Thy temples [rakkathek] are like a pomegranate split open![17] Even the emptiest [rekanin][18] among you are as full of meritorious deeds as a pomegranate [of seeds].[19] R. Zera deduced it from the following verse, And he smelt the smell of his raiment;[20] read not begadaw [his raiment] but bogedaw [his traitors].[21]

In the neighbourhood of R. Zera there lived some lawless men. He nevertheless showed them friendship in order to lead them to repent; but the Rabbis were annoyed [at his action]. When R. Zera's soul went to rest,[22] they said: Until now we had the burnt man with the dwarfed legs[23] to implore Divine mercy for us; who will do so now? Thereupon they felt remorse in their hearts and repented.

THREE ROWS Abaye said: We may infer from this[24] that when one moves they all move.[25] But can he[26] not object to them: Until now I used to sit at the head,[27] whilst now ye place me at the tail![28] Said Abaye: They can answer him thus: Better a tail to lions than a head to foxes.[29]

MISHNAH. HOW WERE THE WITNESSES INSPIRED WITH AWE? WITNESSES IN CAPITAL CHARGES[30] WERE BROUGHT IN AND INTIMIDATED [THUS]: PERHAPS WHAT YE SAY IS BASED ONLY ON CONJECTURE,[31] OR HEARSAY,[32] OR IS EVIDENCE FROM THE MOUTH OF ANOTHER WITNESS,[33] OR EVEN FROM THE MOUTH OF A TRUSTWORTHY PERSON:[34] PERHAPS YE ARE UNAWARE THAT ULTIMATELY WE SHALL SCRUTINIZE YOUR EVIDENCE BY CROSS EXAMINATION AND INQUIRY? KNOW THEN THAT CAPITAL CASES ARE NOT LIKE MONETARY CASES. IN CIVIL

SUITS, ONE CAN MAKE MONETARY RESTITUTION[35] AND THEREBY EFFECT HIS ATONEMENT; BUT IN CAPITAL CASES HE IS HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR HIS BLOOD [sc. THE ACCUSED'S] AND THE BLOOD OF HIS [POTENTIAL] DESCENDANTS UNTIL THE END OF TIME,[36] FOR THUS WE FIND IN THE CASE OF CAIN, WHO KILLED HIS BROTHER, THAT IT IS WRITTEN: THE BLOODS OF THY BROTHER CRY UNTO ME:[37] NOT THE BLOOD OF THY BROTHER, BUT THE BLOODS OF THY BROTHER, IS SAID — i.e., HIS BLOOD AND THE BLOOD OF HIS [POTENTIAL] DESCENDANTS. (ALTERNATIVELY, THE BLOODS OF THY BROTHER, TEACHES THAT HIS BLOOD WAS SPLASHED OVER TREES AND STONES.)[38] FOR THIS REASON WAS MAN CREATED ALONE, TO TEACH THEE THAT WHOSOEVER DESTROYS A SINGLE SOUL OF ISRAEL,[39] SCRIPTURE IMPUTES [GUILT] TO HIM AS THOUGH HE HAD DESTROYED A COMPLETE WORLD; AND WHOSOEVER PRESERVES A SINGLE SOUL OF ISRAEL, SCRIPTURE ASCRIBES [MERIT] TO HIM AS THOUGH HE HAD PRESERVED A COMPLETE WORLD.[40] FURTHERMORE, [HE WAS CREATED ALONE] FOR THE SAKE OF PEACE AMONG MEN, THAT ONE MIGHT NOT SAY TO HIS FELLOW, 'MY FATHER WAS GREATER THAN THINE, AND THAT THE MINIM[41] MIGHT NOT SAY, THERE ARE MANY RULING POWERS IN HEAVEN; AGAIN, TO PROCLAIM THE GREATNESS OF THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE: FOR IF A MAN STRIKES MANY COINS FROM ONE MOULD, THEY ALL RESEMBLE ONE ANOTHER, BUT THE SUPREME KING OF KINGS,[42] THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, FASHIONED EVERY MAN IN THE STAMP OP THE FIRST MAN, AND YET NOT ONE OF THEM RESEMBLES HIS FELLOW. THEREFORE EVERY SINGLE PERSON IS OBLIGED TO SAY: THE WORLD WAS CREATED FOR MY SAKE.[43]

PERHAPS YE WILL SAY:

(1) Also in semi-circular form, but on the floor. Each row numbered twenty-three, making a total of sixty-nine. They were there for completion purposes in case there might be a majority of only one for condemnation. Although forty-eight would have sufficed for that purpose, since the completion goes on till the number of seventy-one is reached, some difficulty would have been experienced in arranging that number into rows. It would not have been proper to make two rows of twenty-four, since these would have been larger than that of the Sanhedrin, nor three rows of sixteen, which would have seemed too small, nor two rows of twenty-three and a third one only of two. Hence the sixty-nine (Rashi).

(2) The disciples were seated according to rank.

(3) If a member died, or for completion purposes.

(4) [Behind the rows of the members of the Courts there stood a large audience of scholars, v. Krauss op. cit.]

(5) Who was chosen from the assembly.

(6) Of the row.

(7) When the one at the head of the row was promoted, all moved one place up, leaving the last seat for the new member.

(8) Cant. VII, 3.

(9) I.e., the centre. According to Midrashic legend the Temple was situated in the centre of the world. Cf. Tanhuma, Wayikra. XVIII,23.

(10) אגן akin to מגן — 'to enclose'. Hence,shield, protect.

(11) סהר=moon.I.e., they were seated in circular form like a moon.

(12) The actual number required for capital cases is twenty-three, roughly a third of seventy-one, the remaining two-thirds being for completion purposes. The Aggadists therefore compare the court to mingled wine, a mixture of one-third of wine and two-thirds of water. Cf. B M. 60a; Tanhuma. Bamidbar IV.

(14) Ibid.

(15) Metaphorically: the lightest barrier sufficed to keep them from sin.

(18) ריקנין from ריק (empty, void: a play on רקתך). Even those who by comparison are emptiest of good deeds.

(19) So there is no fear of their infringing the prohibition.

(20) Gen. XXVII, 27.
(21) The consonants of both words are the same — בגדיו I.e., even those who are traitors to the teachings of Judaism diffuse the fragrance of good deeds. Maharsha: Isaac was able to trace in Jacob his original character even though he appeared before him in disguise, so even in his apparently unworthy descendants their good qualities are discernible.
(22) I.e., when he died.

(31) I e.. from circumstantial evidence.
(32) [A general rumour (Yad Ramah).]
(33) [Each one of you has heard it from a separate witness (Yad Ramah).]
(34) [You both heard it from the same trustworthy person.]
(35) If he causes financial loss through giving false testimony.
(36) Lit., 'the world', i.e., not only for the death of the accused himself, but of his potential descendants for all time.
(37) Gen.IV,10; דמי is plural.
(38) This is obviously not part of the caution, but interpolated. V. Krauss, Sanhedrin-Makkot a.l.
(39) 'OF ISRAEL' is absent in some texts.
(40) Since all mankind originated from one man.
(41) V. p. 211, n. 8, and p. 239, n. 9; here, however, it is more probable that the allusion is to the Gnostics and their doctrine of the Demiurgus; v. Krauss, op. cit. a.l.
(42) Lit., 'the King of the Kings of the Kings.'
(43) How grave the responsibility therefore of corrupting myself by giving false evidence, and thus bringing the moral guilt of murder upon a whole world.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 37b

WHY SHOULD WE INCUR THIS ANXIETY?[1] [KNOW THEN:] IS IT NOT ALREADY WRITTEN, AND HE BEING A WITNESS, WHETHER HE HATH SEEN OR KNOWN, IF HE DO NOT UTTER IT?[2] AND SHOULD YE SAY: WHY SHOULD WE BEAR GUILT FOR THE BLOOD OF THIS [MAN]:[3] — SURELY, HOWEVER, IT IS SAID, WHEN THE WICKED PERISH, THERE IS JOY![4]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: What is meant by BASED ON CONJECTURE? — He [the judge] says to them: Perhaps ye saw him running after his fellow into a ruin, ye pursued him, and found him sword in hand with blood dripping from it, whilst the murdered man was writhing [in agony]: If this is what ye saw, ye saw nothing.[5]

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Shatah said: May I never see comfort[6] if I did not see a man pursuing his fellow into a ruin, and when I ran after him and saw him, sword in hand with blood dripping from it, and the murdered man writhing, I exclaimed to him: Wicked man, who slew this man? It is either you or I![7] But what can I do, since thy blood [i.e., life] does not rest in my hands, for it is written in the Torah, At the mouth of two witnesses etc., shall he that is to die be put to death?[8] May he who knows one's thoughts exact vengeance from him who slew his fellow! It is related that before they moved from the place a serpent came and bit him [the murderer] so that he died.

But should this man [have died] through a serpent? Did not R. Joseph say, and so too it was taught in the school of Hezekiah: From the day the Temple was destroyed, although the Sanhedrin was abolished, the four modes of execution were not abolished? They were not abolished, [you say,] but surely they were! — But the law of the four modes of execution was not abolished:[9] He who is worthy of stoning either falls from the roof,[10] or is trampled to death by a wild beast; he who merits burning either falls into the fire or is bitten by a serpent;[11] he who is worthy of decapitation is either delivered to the [gentile] Government[12] or brigands attack him; he who is worthy of strangulation is either drowned in a river or dies of suffocation?[13] — I will tell you: that man was guilty of another crime,[14] for a Master said: One who incurs two death penalties imposed by Beth din is executed by the severer.[15]

BASED ON CONJECTURE. Thus, only in capital charges do we disallow conjecture, but permit it in civil suits.[16] Who [is the authority for this]? — R. Aha. For it has been taught: R. Aha said: If among camels there is a lustful one, and a camel is found killed by its side, it is certain that this one killed it.[17] Now, on your reasoning,[18] when he [the Tanna] regards EVIDENCE FROM THE MOUTH OF ANOTHER WITNESS [as invalid]: it is only in capital charges that we do not admit it; whilst we do in monetary cases? But did we not learn: If he [the witness] says: He [the defendant] said to me, 'I owe him [the money],' or, 'So and so told me that he owes him,' his statement is worthless,[19] unless he states, 'In our presence[20] he admitted to him that he owed him two hundred zuz!'[21] This proves that although [such evidence] is inadmissible in monetary cases too, we caution them[22] only in capital cases. So in the present instance,[23] though it [sc. conjecture] is inadmissible in civil suits too, we nevertheless admonish them only in capital cases.

KNOW THAT etc. Rab Judah the son of R. Hiyya said: This teaches that Cain inflicted upon his brother many blows and wounds, because he knew not whence the soul departs,[24] until he reached his neck.[25] Rab Judah the son of R. Hiyya also said: Since the day the earth opened her mouth to receive the blood of Abel, she has never opened it again, for it is written, From the edge of the earth have we heard songs, glory to the righteous:[26] implying, from the 'edge' of the earth, but not from the mouth of the earth. Hezekiah his brother objected thereto: And the earth opened her mouth![27] — He answered: She opened if for evil,[28] but not for good.

Rab Judah the son of R. Hiyya also said: Exile atones for the half of men's sins. Earlier [in the Cain narrative] it is written, And I shall be a fugitive and a wanderer;[29] but later, And he dwelt in the land of Nod [wandering].[30]

Rab Judah said: Exile makes remission for three things, for it is written, Thus saith the Lord etc. He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword and by the famine and by the pestilence; but he that goeth out and falleth away to the Chaldeans who beseige you he shall live and his life shall be unto him for a prey.[31] R. Johanan said: Exile atones for everything, for it is written, Thus saith the Lord, write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days, for no man of his seed shall prosper sitting upon the throne of David and ruling any more in Judah.[32] Whereas after he [the king] was exiled, it is written, And the sons of Jechoniah, — the same is Assir — Shealtiel his son etc.[33] [He was called] Assir,[34] because his mother conceived him in prison. Shealtiel,[35] because God did not plant him[36] in the way that others are planted. We know by tradition that a woman cannot conceive in a standing position. [

(1) If the moral responsibility is so great, why should we give evidence at all? Quite unintentionally we may cause a perversion of justice.

yet she[1] did conceive standing.[2] Another interpretation: Shealtiel, because God obtained[3] [of the Heavenly court] absolution from His oath.[4] Zerubbabel [was so called] because he was sown in Babylon.[5] But [his real name was] Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah.

Judah and Hezekiah, the sons[6] of R. Hiyya, once sat at table with Rabbi and uttered not a word. Whereupon he said: Give the young men plenty of strong wine,[7] so that they may say something. When the wine took effect, they began by saying: The son of David[8] cannot appear ere the two ruling houses in Israel shall have come to an end, viz., the Exilarchate, in Babylon and the Patriarchate in Palestine, for it is written, And he shall be for a Sanctuary, for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both houses of Israel.[9] Thereupon he [Rabbi] exclaimed: You throw thorns in my eyes, my children![10] At this, R. Hiyya [his disciple] remarked: Master, be not angered, for the numerical value of the letters of yayin[11] is seventy, and likewise the letters of sod:[12] When yayin [wine] goes in, sod [secrets] comes out.

R. Hisda said in Mar 'Ukba's name — others state, R. Hisda quoted from a lecture of Mari b. Mar: What is meant by the verse, And so the Lord hath hastened[13] the evil and brought it upon us, for the Lord our God is righteous?[14] Because God is righteous He hastened with the evil and brought it upon us! — Even so: the Holy One, blessed be He, did a righteous [i.e., charitable] thing unto Israel in that he anticipated the exile of Zedekiah while the exile of Jechoniah was yet in being,[15] for it is written with reference to the latter, And the craftsmen [he-harash] and the smiths [masger], a thousand.[16] Harash,[17] implies, as soon as they opened a [learned] discussion, all [the others] became as though deaf.[18] Masger:[19] i.e., when they closed [the discussion of] a halachah, it was not reopened.[20] And how many were they? — A thousand.

'Ulla said: He advanced [the exile by] two years as compared with the period indicated by we-noshantem.[21] R. Aha b. Jacob said: We infer from this that the 'speediness' of the Lord of the universe meant eight hundred and fifty-two years.[22]

THEREFORE etc.

Our Rabbis taught: Man was created alone.[23] And why so? — That the Sadducees[24] might not say: There are many ruling powers in Heaven. Another answer is: For the sake of the righteous and the wicked; that the righteous might not say: 'Ours is a righteous heredity.'[25] and that the wicked might not say: 'Ours is an evil heredity.'[26] Another answer is: For the sake of [the different] families, that they might not quarrel with each other.[27] Now, if at present, though but one was [originally] created,[28] they quarrel. how much more if two had been created![29] Another answer is: Because of robbers and plunderers: I.e., If at present, though but one was originally created, people rob and plunder, how much more had two been created.[30]

AND AGAIN, TO PROCLAIM THE GREATNESS OF etc. Our Rabbis taught: [The creation of the first man alone] was to show forth the greatness of the Supreme King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He. For if a man mints many coins from one mould, they are all alike, but the Holy One, blessed be He, fashioned all men in the mould of the first man, and not one resembles the other, for it is written, It is changed as clay under the seal and they stand as a garment.[31] And why are men's faces not like one another? — Lest a man see a beautiful dwelling or a beautiful woman and say, 'She is mine for it is written, But from the wicked their light is withholden and the high arm is broken.[32]

It has been taught: R. Meir used to say: In three things man differs from his fellow: In voice, appearance and mind [i.e., thoughts]. In voice and appearance', to prevent unchastity;[33] 'In mind', because of thieves and robbers.[34]

Our Rabbis taught: Adam was created [last of all beings] on the eve of Sabbath. And why? — Lest the Sadducees say: The Holy One, blessed be He, had a partner [viz., Adam] in His work of creation. Another answer is: In order that, if a man's mind becomes [too] proud, he may be reminded that the gnats preceded him in the order of creation. Another answer is: That he might immediately enter upon the fulfilment of a precept.[35] Another answer is: That he might straightway go in to the banquet.[36] The matter may be compared to a king of flesh and blood who built palaces and furnished them, prepared a banquet, and thereafter brought in the the guests. For it is written: Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars. She hath prepared her meat, she hath mingled her wine, she hath also furnished her table. She hath sent forth her maidens, she calleth upon the highest places of the city.[37] Wisdom hath builded her house, — this is the attribute of the Holy One, blessed be He, who created the world by wisdom. She hath hewn out her seven pillars, — these are the seven days of creation. She hath prepared her meat, she hath mingled her wine, she hath also furnished her table, — these are the seas and the rivers and all the other requirements of the world. She hath sent forth her maidens, she calleth, — this refers to Adam and Eve. Upon the highest places of the city; Rabbah b. Bar Hana opposed [two verses]. It is written, Upon the top of the highest places.[38] But elsewhere it is written, On a seat on the high places.[39] — At first[40] he was seated upon the 'top' of the highest places, but subsequently upon a 'seat'.

Whoso is thoughtless, let him turn in hither; as for him that lacketh understanding, she saith to him.[41] The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Who was it that enticed him? — A woman[42] hath spoken to him, for it is written, He that committeth adultery with a woman, lacketh understanding.[43]

It has been taught: R. Meir used to say: The dust of the first man was gathered from all parts of the earth, for it is written, Thine eyes did see mine unformed substance,[44] and further it is written, The eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth.[45] R. Oshaiah said in Rab's name: Adam's trunk came from Babylon, Subtracting two years according to this Haggadah, there are eight hundred and fifty years left, which is the length of time between Israel's entry into Palestine and the destruction of the Temple. The Temple was erected in the four hundred and eightieth year from the Exodus out of Egypt, and it stood for four hundred and ten years. Subtracting forty years for the period of their wanderings in the desert, we reach a total of eight hundred and fifty years that acceleration by two years is here regarded as a 'righteous' (i.e., charitable) act, since it averted the complete destruction threatened in Deut. IV, 26.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 38b

his head from Erez Yisrael,[1] his limbs from other lands, and his private parts, according to R. Aha, from Akra di Agma.[2]

R. Johanan[3] b. Hanina said: The day consisted of twelve hours. In the first hour, his [Adam's] dust was gathered; in the second, it was kneaded into a shapeless mass. In the third, his limbs were shaped;[4] in the fourth, a soul was infused into him; in the fifth, he arose and stood on his feet; in the sixth, he gave [the animals] their names; in the seventh, Eve became his mate; in the eighth, they ascended to bed as two and descended as four;[5] in the ninth, he was commanded not to eat of the tree, in the tenth, he sinned; in the eleventh, he was tried, and in the twelfth he was expelled [from Eden] and departed, for it is written, Man abideth[6] not in honour.[7]

Rami b. Hama said: A wild beast has no dominion over man unless he appears to it as a brute,[8] for it is written. Men are overruled[9] when they appear as beasts.[10]

(Mnemonic: When;[11] The End; Aramaic.)

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: When the Holy One, blessed be He, wished to create man, He [first] created a company of ministering angels and said to them: Is it your desire that we make a man in our image? They answered: Sovereign of the Universe, what will be his deeds? Such and such will be his deeds, He replied. Thereupon they exclaimed: Sovereign of the Universe, What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou thinkest of him?[12] Thereupon He stretched out His little finger among them and consumed them with fire. The same thing happened with a second company. The third company said to Him: Sovereign of the Universe, what did it avail the former [angels] that they spoke to Thee [as they did]? the whole world is Thine, and whatsoever that Thou wishest to do therein, do it. When He came to the men of the Age of the flood and of the division [of tongues] whose deeds were corrupt, they said to Him: Lord of the Universe, did not the first [company of angels] speak aright? Even to old age I am the same, and even to hoar hairs will I carry,[13] He retorted.

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: The first man reached from one end of the world to the other, as it is written, Since the day that God created man upon the eath, even from the one end of Heaven unto the other.[14] But when he sinned, the Holy One, blessed be He, laid His hand upon him and diminished him, as it is written, Thou hast hemmed me in behind and before, and laid Thy hands upon me.[15] R. Eleazar said: The first man reached from earth to heaven, as it is written, Since the day that God created man upon the earth, and from one end of the Heaven [to the other].[16] But when he sinned, the Holy One, blessed be He, laid His hand upon him and diminished him, for it is written, Thou hast hemmed me in behind and before etc.[15] But these verses contradict each other! — Both measurements are identical.[17]

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: The first man spoke Aramaic,[18] for it is written, How weighty are thy thoughts unto me, God.[19] And that is what Resh Lakish meant when he said: What is the meaning of the verse, 'This is the book of the generations of Adam?[20] It is to intimate that the Holy One, blessed be He, showed him [Adam] every generation and its thinkers,[21] every generation and its sages. When he came to the generation of Rabbi Akiba, he [Adam] rejoiced at his learning but was grieved at his death,[22] and said: How weighty[23] are Thy friends[24] to me, O God.[19]

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: Adam was a Min,[25] for it is written, And the Lord God called unto Adam and said unto him, Where art thou?[26] i.e., whither has thine heart turned? R. Isaac said: He practised episplasm:[27] For here it is written, But like man, [Adam] they have transgressed the covenant;[28] whilst elsewhere it is said, He hath broken my covenant,[29] R. Nahman said: He denied God.[30] Here it is written, THey have transgressed the covenant;[28] whilst elsewhere it is stated, [He hath broken my covenant,[31] and again,] Because they forsook the covenant of the Lord their God.[32]

We learnt elsewhere:[33] R. Eliezer said: Be diligent to learn the Torah and know how to answer an Epikoros.[34] R. Johanan commented: They taught this only with respect to a Gentile Epikoros; with a Jewish Epikoros, it would only make his heresy more pronounced.[35]

R. Johanan sad: In all the passages which the Minim have taken [as grounds] for their heresy,[36] their refutation is found near at hand. Thus: Let us make man in our image,[37] — And God created [sing.] man in His own image;[38] Come, let us go down and there confound their language,[39] — And the Lord came down [sing.] to see the city and the tower;[40] Because there were revealed [plur.] to him God,[41] — Unto God who answereth [sing.] me in the day of my distress;[42] For what great nation is there that hath God so nigh [plur.] unto it, as the Lord our God is [unto us] whensoever we call upon Him [sing.];[43] And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, [like] Israel, whom God went [plur.] to redeem for a people unto himself [sing.],[44] Till thrones were placed and one that was ancient did sit.[45]

Why were these[46] necessary? To teach R. Johanan's dictum; viz.: The Holy One, blessed be He, does nothing without consulting His Heavenly Court,[47] for it is written, The matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the sentence by the word of the Holy Ones.[48] Now, that is satisfactory for all [the other verses], but how explain Till thrones were placed? — One [throne] was for Himself and one for David.[49] Even as it has been taught: One was for Himself and one for David: this is R. Akiba's view. R. Jose protested to him: Akiba, how long will thou profane the Shechinah?[50] Rather, one [throne] for justice, and the other for mercy. Did he accept [this answer] from him or not? Come and hear! For it has been taught: One is for justice and the other for charity; this is R. Akiba's view.

Said R. Eleazar b. Azariah to him: Akiba, what hast thou to do with Aggada? Confine thyself to [the study of] Nega'im and Ohaloth.[51] But one was a throne, the other a footstool: a throne for a seat and a footstool in support of His feet.

R. Nahman said: He who is as skilled in refuting the Minim as is R. Idith,[52] let him do so; but not otherwise. Once a Min said to R. Idith: It is written, And unto Moses He said, Come up to the Lord.[53] But surely it should have stated, Come up unto me! — It was Metatron[54] [who said that], he replied, whose name is similar to that of his Master,[55] for it is written, For my name is in him.[56] But if so, [he retorted,] we should worship him! The same passage, however, — replied R. Idith says: Be not rebellious[57] against him, i.e., exchange Me not for him. But if so,[58] why is it stated: He will not pardon your transgression?[59] He answered: By our troth[60] we would not accept him even as a messenger,[61] for it is written, And he said unto him, If Thy [personal] presence go not etc.[62]

A Min once said to R. Ishmael b. Jose: It is written, Then the Lord caused to rain upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord:[63] but from him should have been written! A certain fuller[64] said, Leave him to me, I will answer him. [He then proceeded,' It is written, And Lamech said to his wives, Ada and Zillah, Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech;[65] but he should have said, my wives! But such is the Scriptural idiom — so here too, it is the Scriptural idiom.

Whence do you know that? asked he [R. Ishmael]. — I heard it in a public discourse[66] of R. Meir, [he answered]. Even as R. Johanan said: When R. Meir used to deliver his public discourses, a third was Halacha, a third Haggadah, and a third consisted of parables. R Johanan also said: R. Meir had three hundred parables of foxes, and we have only three left,[67]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 39a

[as illustrations to the verses]. [a] The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge;[1] [b] Just balances, just weights,[2] [c] The righteous is delivered out of trouble and the wicked comes in in his stead.[3]

The Emperor[4] once said to Rabban Gamaliel:[5] Your God is a thief, for it is written, And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man [Adam] and he slept [and He took one of his ribs etc.][6] Thereupon his [the Emperor's][7] daughter said to him: Leave him to me and I will answer him, and [turning to the Emperor] said: 'Give me a commander.'[8] 'Why do you need him?' asked he. — 'Thieves visited us last night and robbed us of a silver pitcher, leaving a golden one in its place.' 'Would that such visited us every day!' he exclaimed. 'Ah!' she retorted, 'was it not to Adam's gain that he was deprived of a rib and a wife[9] presented to him in its stead to serve him?' He replied: 'This is what I mean: he should have taken it from him openly.'[10] Said she to him: 'Let me have a piece of raw meat.' It was given to her. She placed it under her armpit,[11] then took it out and offered it to him to eat. 'I find it loathsome,' he exclaimed. 'Even so would she [Eve] have been to Adam had she been taken from him openly,' she retorted.[12]

The Emperor also said to Rabban Gamaliel: I know what your God is doing, and where He is seated. Rabban Gamaliel became, [as it were] overcome and sighed, and on being asked the reason, answered. 'I have a son in one of the cities of the sea, and I yearn for him. Pray tell me about him.'[13] 'Do I then know where he is,' he replied. 'You do not know what is on earth, and yet [claim to] know what is in heaven!' he retorted.

Again the Emperor said to Rabban Gamaliel: 'It is written, He counteth the number of the stars etc.[14] In what way is that remarkable; I too can count them!' Rabban Gamaliel brought some quinces, put them into a sieve, whirled them around, and said: 'Count them.' 'Keep them still,' he requested. Thereupon Rabban Gamaliel observed, 'But the Heavens revolve so.' Some say that the Emperor spoke thus to him: 'The number of the stars is known to me.' Thereupon Rabban Gamaliel asked him, 'How many molars and [other] teeth have you' Putting his hand to his mouth, he began to count them. Said he to him, 'You know not what is in your mouth and yet wouldst know what is in Heaven!'

Again the Emperor said to Rabban Gamaliel, 'He who created the mountains did not create the wind, for it is written, For lo, there is a former of mountains and creator of wind.'[15] — According to this reasoning, when we find it written of Adam, And He created...[16] and, And he formed:[17] would you also say that He who created this [one limb] did not create that [another limb]? Further there is a part of the human body just a handbreadth square, which contains two holes,[18] and because it is written, He that planteth ear, shall he not hear; he that formeth the eye, shall he not see?[19] would you maintain there too that He who created the one did not create the other? 'Even so,' he answered. 'Yet,' he [Rabban Gamaliel] rejoined, 'at death both[20] are brought to agree!

A mag.[21] once said to Amemar: From the middle of thy [body] upwards thou belongest to Ormuzd;[22] from the middle downwards, to Ahriman.[23] The latter asked: Why then does Ahriman permit Ormuzd to send water[24] through his territory?

The Emperor proposed to R. Tanhum, 'Come, let us all be one people.' 'Very Well,' he answered, 'but we who are circumcised cannot possibly become like you;[25] do ye become circumcised and like us.' The Emperor replied: 'You have spoken well; nevertheless, anyone who gets the better of the king [in debate] must be thrown into the vivarium,[26] So they threw him in, but he was not eaten. Thereupon a heretic remarked: 'The reason they did not eat him is that they are not hungry.' They threw him [the heretic] in, and he was eaten.[27]

The Emperor said to Rabban Gamaliel: 'Ye maintain that upon every gathering of ten [Jews] the Shechinah rests:[28] how many Shechinahs are there then?' Rabban Gamaliel called [Caesar's] servant, and tapped him on the neck, saying, 'Why does the sun enter into Caesar's house?'[29] 'But,' he[30] exclaimed, 'the sun shines[31] upon the whole world!' 'Then if the sun, which is but one of the countless myriads of the servants of the Holy One, blessed be He, shines on the whole world, how much more the Shechinah of the Holy One, blessed be He, Himself!'

A certain Min said to R. Abbahu: 'Your God is a jester,[32] for He said to Ezekiel. Lie down on thy left side,[33] and it is also written, Lie on thy right side.'[34] [Just then] a disciple came and asked him: 'What is the reason for the Sabbatical year?' 'Now,' said R. Abbahu, 'I shall give you an answer which will suit you both equally. The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel, Sow your seed six years but omit the seventh, that ye may know that the earth is mine[35] They, however, did not do so, but sinned and were exiled. Now, it is the universal practice that a king of flesh and blood against whom his subjects[36] have rebelled, if he be cruel, kills them all; if merciful, he slays half of them; but if he is exceptionally merciful,[37] he only chastises the great ones.[38] So also, the Holy One, blessed be He, afflicted Ezekiel in order to cleanse Israel from their iniquities.'

A certain Min said to R. Abbahu: Your God is a priest, since it is written, That they take for me Terumah [wave offering].[39] Now, when He had buried Moses,[40] wherein did He bathe [after contact with the corpse]?[41] Should you reply, 'In water: is it not written, Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of His hand?[42] — 'He bathed in fire,' he answered, 'for it is written, Behold the Lord will come in fire.'[43] 'Is then purification by fire effective?' 'On the contrary,' he replied, 'bathing [for purposes of purification] should essentially be in fire, for it is written, And all that abideth not the fire ye shall make to go through the water.'[44]

A Min once said to R. Abina: It is written, And what one nation in the earth is like Thy people, [like] Israel.[45] Wherein lies their superiority: ye too are combined with us, for it is written, All the nations are as nothing before Him?[46] He answered: One of yourselves [Balaam] has already testified for us, as it is written,

(3) Prov. XI, 8 Rashi gives the parables in question, as follows, combined in a single story. [Cf. however, Ms. M.: 'We have only one'.] A fox once craftily induced a wolf to go and join the Jews in their Sabbath preparations and share in their festivities. On his appearing in their midst the Jews fell upon him with sticks and beat him. He therefore came back determined to kill the fox. But the latter pleaded: 'It is no fault of mine that you were beaten, but they have a grudge against your father who once helped them in preparing their banquet and then consumed all the choice bits.' 'And was I beaten for the wrong done by my father?' cried the indignant wolf. 'Yes,' replied the fox, 'the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge. However,' he continued, 'come with me and I will supply you with abundant food. He led him to a well which had a beam across it from either end of which hung a rope with a bucket attached. The fox entered the upper bucket and descended into the well whilst the lower one was drawn up. 'Where are you going?' asked the wolf. The fox, pointing to the cheese-like reflection of the moon, replied: 'Here is plenty of meat and cheese; get into the other bucket and come down at once.' The wolf did so, and as he descended, the fox was drawn up. 'And how am I to get out?' demanded the wolf. 'Ah' said the fox 'the righteous is delivered out of trouble and the wicked cometh in in his stead. Is it not written, Just balances, just weights'?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 39b

And he [Israel] shall not be reckoned amongst the nations.[1]

R. Eleazar opposed [two verses]: It is written, The Lord is good to all,[2] but it is also written, The Lord is good unto them that wait for Him![3] — This may be compared to a man who has an orchard. When he irrigates it, he irrigates the whole; but when he prunes, he prunes only the best [trees].[4]

THEREFORE EVERY SINGLE PERSON etc. And there went out the song[5] throughout the host:[6] R. Aha b. Hanina said: [It is the song referred to in the verse.] When the wicked perish, there is song;[7] [thus] when Ahab b. Omri perished there was 'song'. But does the Holy One, blessed be He, rejoice over the downfall of the wicked? Is it not written, [That they should praise] as they went out before the army, and say, Give thanks unto the Lord for His mercy endureth for ever;[8] concerning which R. Jonathan asked: Why are the words, He is good[9] omitted from this expression of thanks? Because the Holy One, blessed be He, does not rejoice in the downfall of the wicked.[10] For R. Samuel b. Nahman said in R. Jonathan's name: What is meant by, And one approached not the other all night?[11] In that hour the ministering angels wished to utter the song [of praise][12] before the Holy One, blessed be He, but He rebuked them, saying: My handiwork [the Egyptians] is drowning in the sea; would ye utter song before me![13] — Said R. Jose b. Hanina: He Himself does not rejoice, yet He causes others to rejoice. Scripture supports this too, for it is written, [And it shall come to pass, that as the Lord rejoiced over you to do good . . . so yasis will the Lord] cause rejoicing [over you by destroying you],[14] and not yasus [so will the Lord rejoice etc.][15] This prove it.

[And dogs licked his blood] and the harlots washed themselves:[16] R. Eleazar said: This was in clear fulfilment of two visions, one of Micaiah, the other of Elijah. In the case of Micaiah it is written, If thou returned at all in peace the Lord hath not spoken by me.[17] In the case of Elijah it is written, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth.[18]

With reference to the harlots:] Raba said, they were real [pictures of] harlots. Ahab was frigid by nature [passionless], so Jezebel painted pictures of two harlots on his chariot, that he might look upon them and become heated.[19]

And a certain man drew his bow at a venture[20] and smote the king of Israel.[21] R. Eleazar said: The word means 'without intention'. Raba said: In order to fulfil[22] the two visions, that of Micaiah and that of Elijah.

(Mnemonic: He called, merited, to Edom.)

It is written, And Ahab called Obadiah who was over the household — Now Obadiah feared the Lord exceedingly.[23] What did he[24] say to him? — R. Isaac answered: He spoke thus to him: Of Jacob it is written, I have observed the signs and the Lord hath blessed me [Laban] for thy sake;[25] and of Joseph it is written, The Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake,[26] whilst my house[27] has not been blessed! Perhaps [it is because] you are not a God-fearing man? Thereupon a Heavenly voice issued and proclaimed, And Obadiah feared the Lord greatly, but the house of Ahab is not fit for a blessing.

R. Abba said: Greater [praise] was expressed of Obadiah than Abraham, since of Abraham the word 'greatly' is not used,[28] while of Obadiah it is.

R. Isaac said: Why did Obadiah attain[29] the gift of prophecy? — Because he hid a hundred prophets in caves, as it is written, For it was so when Jezebel cut off the prophets of the Lord that Obadiah took a hundred prophets and hid them, fifty in a cave.[30] Why just fifty? — R. Eleazar said: He learnt this lesson from Jacob,[31] as it is written, 'Then the camp which is left shall escape.[32] R. Abbahu said: It was because the one cave could not hold more than fifty.

'The vision of Obadiah. Thus said the Lord God concerning Edom.[33] Why particularly Obadiah against Edom? — R. Isaac said: The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let Obadiah, Who has lived with two wicked persons[34] and yet has not taken example by their deeds, come and prophesy against the wicked Esau,[35] who lived with two righteous persons[36] and yet did not learn from their good deeds.

Ephraim Maksha'ah,[37] the disciple of R. Meir, said on the authority of R. Meir: Obadiah was an Edomite proselyte: and thus people say, From the very forest itself comes the [handle of the] axe [that fells it].[38]

And he [David] smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground.[39] R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Thus the proverb runs, From the very forest itself comes the [handle of the] axe [that fells it].[40] When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said [similarly]: The joint putrefies from within.

Then he took his eldest son that should have resigned in his stead and offered him for a burnt offering upon the wall.[41] Rab and Samuel [differ therein:] One said: [He offered him] to God; the other, To a heathen deity. Now, on the view that it was to God, it is correct: hence it is written, And there came great wrath upon Israel.[42] But if it be maintained that he was offered to a heathen deity, why, And there was great wrath etc.? — Even as R. Joshua b. Levi [taught]: For R. Joshua b. Levi opposed [two verses]: It is written, Neither have ye done according to the ordinances of the nations that were round about you;[43] yet it is [elsewhere] written, But ye have done according to the ordinances of the nations that were round about you?[44] [That means:] Ye did not act as the right minded,[45] but as the corrupt amongst them.[46]

And they departed from him and returned to the earth.[47] R. Hanina b. Papa said: In that hour the wicked of Israel descended to the lowest depths [of depravity].[48]

And the damsel was fair, until [she was] exceedingly [so].[49] R. Hanina b. Papa said: Yet she never attained to half of Sarah's beauty, for it is written, 'until . . . exceedingly', 'exceedingly' itself not being included.[50]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 40a

MISHNAH. THEY [THE JUDGES] USED TO EXAMINE THEM[1] WITH SEVEN [HAKIROTH] SEARCHING QUERIES: IN WHAT SEPTENNATE?[2] IN WHAT YEAR? IN WHAT MONTH?

ON WHICH DAY OF THE MONTH? ON WHAT DAY?[3] AT WHAT HOUR [OF THE DAY]? AND, AT WHAT PLACE? R. JOSE SAID: [THEY WERE ONLY ASKED:] ON WHICH DAY [OF THE WEEK]? AT WHAT HOUR? AND, AT WHAT PLACE? [THEY WERE FURTHER ASKED:] DID YE KNOW HIM?[4] AND, DID YE WARN HIM?[5]

WHERE ONE COMMITS IDOLATRY, [THE WITNESSES ARE ALSO ASKED] WHAT[6] DID HE WORSHIP? AND, HOW[7] DID HE WORSHIP? THE MORE EXHAUSTIVE THE CROSS-EXAMINATION [BEDIKOTH] THE MORE PRAISEWORTHY THE JUDGE. IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT BEN ZAKKAI[8] CROSS-EXAMINED [THE WITNESSES] EVEN AS TO THE STALKS OF THE FIGS.[9]

WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HAKIROTH AND BEDIKOTH?[10] — IN HAKIROTH, IF ONE [OF THE WITNESSES] ANSWERS: 'I DO NOT KNOW,' THEIR[11] EVIDENCE IS VOID. WITH RESPECT TO BEDIKOTH, HOWEVER, IF ONE ANSWERS: I DO NOT KNOW,' OR EVEN IF BOTH SAY: 'WE DO NOT KNOW, THEIR EVIDENCE IS VALID. BUT IF THEY [THE WITNESSES] CONTRADICT EACH OTHER, WHETHER IN THE HAKIROTH OR THE BEDIKOTH, THEIR EVIDENCE IS VALID.

IF ONE [WITNESS] TESTIFIES, '[IT HAPPENED] ON THE SECOND OF THE MONTH,' AND THE OTHER, 'ON THE THIRD OF THE MONTH:' THEIR EVIDENCE IS VALID, FOR ONE MAY HAVE BEEN AWARE OF THE INTERCALATION OF THE MONTH AND THE OTHER MAY NOT HAVE BEEN AWARE OF IT.[12] IF, HOWEVER, ONE SAYS, 'ON THE THIRD,' AND THE OTHER, 'ON THE FIFTH, THEIR EVIDENCE IS INVALID. SIMILARLY, IF ONE TESTIFIES, 'DURING THE SECOND HOUR [OF THE DAY]'[13] AND THE OTHER 'DURING THE THIRD HOUR:' THEIR EVIDENCE IS VALID.[14] BUT IF ONE SAYS, AT THREE,' AND ANOTHER, 'AT FIVE,' THEIR EVIDENCE IS INVALID.[15] R. JUDAH SAID: [EVEN THEN, THEIR EVIDENCE IS] VALID. BUT IF ONE SAYS, 'AT FIVE,' AND THE OTHER, 'AT SEVEN,' THEIR EVIDENCE IS INVALID, FOR AT FIVE THE SUN IS TO THE EAST, WHILE AT SEVEN, THE SUN IS TO THE WEST.

AFTER THIS, THE SECOND [WITNESS] IS ADMITTED[16] AND [LIKEWISE] EXAMINED. IF THEIR EVIDENCE TALLIES, THEY [THE JUDGES] COMMENCE [THE PROCEEDINGS] IN FAVOUR [OF THE ACCUSED].[17]

SHOULD ONE OF THE WITNESSES DECLARE, 'I HAVE SOMETHING TO SAY IN HIS FAVOUR'; OR ONE OF THE DISCIPLES, 'I HAVE AN ARGUMENT IN HIS DISFAVOUR', HE IS SILENCED.[18] BUT IF A DISCIPLE SAYS, 'I HAVE SOMETHING TO PLEAD IN HIS FAVOUR', HE IS BROUGHT UP AND SEATED WITH THEM,[19] AND DOES NOT DESCEND FROM THERE ALL THAT DAY. IF THERE IS SUBSTANCE IN HIS STATEMENT HE IS HEARD. AND EVEN IF HE [THE ACCUSED] HIMSELF SAYS,' I AM IN A POSITION TO PLEAD IN MY OWN DEFENCE, HE IS HEARD, PROVIDED THERE IS SUBSTANCE IN HIS STATEMENT.

IF THEY FIND HIM NOT GUILTY, HE IS DISCHARGED, IF NOT, IT [THE TRIAL] IS ADJOURNED TILL THE FOLLOWING DAY,[20] WHILST THEY [THE JUDGES] GO ABOUT IN PAIRS,[21] PRACTISE MODERATION IN FOOD, DRINK NO WINE THE WHOLE DAY,[22] AND DISCUSS[23] THE CASE THROUGHOUT THE NIGHT. EARLY NEXT MORNING THEY REASSEMBLE IN COURT. HE WHO IS IN FAVOUR OF ACQUITTAL STATES, 'I DECLARED HIM INNOCENT AND STAND BY MY OPINION.' WHILE HE WHO IS IN FAVOUR OF CONDEMNATION SHALL SAY: 'I DECLARE HIM GUILTY AND STAND BY MY OPINION.' ONE WHO [PREVIOUSLY] ARGUED FOR CONVICTION MAY NOW ARGUE FOR ACQUITTAL, BUT NOT VICE VERSA. IF THEY HAVE MADE ANY MISTAKE, THE TWO JUDGES' CLERKS[24] ARE TO REMIND THEM THEREOF.

IF THEY FIND HIM NOT GUILTY, THEY DISCHARGE HIM. IF NOT, THEY TAKE A VOTE.[25] IF TWELVE ACQUIT AND ELEVEN CONDEMN, HE IS ACQUITTED. IF TWELVE CONDEMN AND ELEVEN ACQUIT, OR IF ELEVEN CONDEMN AND ELEVEN ACQUIT AND ONE SAYS, 'I DO NOT KNOW,'[26] OR EVEN IF TWENTY-TWO ACQUIT OR CONDEMN AND A SINGLE ONE SAYS, 'I DO NOT KNOW,'[27] THEY ADD TO THE JUDGES. UP TO WHAT NUMBER IS THE COURT INCREASED? — BY TWOS UP TO THE LIMIT OF SEVENTY-ONE.[28]

IF THIRTY-SIX ACQUIT AND THIRTY-FIVE CONDEMN,[29] HE IS ACQUITTED. BUT IF THIRTY-SIX CONDEMN AND THIRTY-FIVE ACQUIT, THE TWO SIDES DEBATE THE CASE TOGETHER UNTIL ONE OF THOSE WHO CONDEMN AGREES WITH THE VIEW OF THOSE WHO ARE FOR ACQUITTAL.

GEMARA. 'Whence is this[30] inferred? — Rab Judah said: Scripture states, Then shalt thou inquire and make search and ask diligently;[31] and it says, And [if] it be told thee and thou hear it, then shalt thou inquire diligently;[32] again it says, And the judges shall inquire diligently.[33]

(1) The witnesses, in a capital charge, after admonition. Other versions read 'him', i.e., the witness, since the witnesses were separately examined.

(2) Of the Jubilee, was the murder committed?

(3) Of the week. This latter inquiry is necessary because witnesses who might come to refute their evidence, might not remember the date while knowing on what day of the week it took place. (Rashi).

(4) Rashi, the murderer; Maim. and others: the accused: R. Hananel: the murderer and the accused.

(5) That murder is forbidden on pain of death? These two questions, according to Maimonides (Yad 'Eduth, I, 4-5) belong to the specific category of דרישות (inquiry) which is on the one hand treated like בדיקות (investigation) in that the evidence is invalid if one of the witnesses cannot answer them; and on the other like בדיקות, (cross-examination) in this respect that the witnesses are not amenable to the law of retaliation in case of refutation.

(6) I.e , which idol?

(7) Lit., 'with what?'

(8) Cf. infra 41a.

(9) Of the tree under which a murder was alleged to have been committed.

(10) HAKIROTH refers to the questions on date, hour and place: BEDIKOTH to cross examination on the accompanying circumstances.

(11) I.e., that of both witnesses.

(12) I.e., one knew that the previous month had consisted of thirty days whilst the other thought that it had consisted only of twenty-nine days provided they agree as to the day of the week. Cf. Kesef Mishneh, on Yad'Eduth II, 4, and Tosaf. 41b s.v. אחד.

(13) The length of the day was counted from sunrise to sunset, and having regard to the variation of that period, an hour lasted anywhere between 49 and 71 minutes.

(14) For people are liable to error in matters of the exact time in the hour.

(15) An error in two hours is improbable.

(17) V. supra 32b.

(18) Cf. supra 34a. Witnesses after having given their testimony, are not allowed to make any further statements, even for acquittal, as they might do so with a view to avoiding any possible charge of collusion arising out of their first evidence.

(19) The judges. It follows that the judges sat on raised seats faced by the disciples. V. supra p. 230, n. 10.

(20) Cf. supra 32a, and note.

(21) During the adjournment, to discuss the matter.

(22) Another precautionary measure in capital cases

(24) Cf. supra 36b.
(25) Lit., 'they stand to vote.'
(26) So that there is no majority of two for conviction. cf. supra 2a.
(27) The member who is doubtful is regarded as non-existent (cf. supra 17a), whilst capital cases may not be tried by less than twenty-three.
(28) If there is a division of opinion amongst the newly co-opted members.
(29) When the court has been increased to the extreme limit.
(30) The seven questions of time and place.
(31) Deut. XIII, 15. In reference to a condemned city. The three expressions for investigation indicate three questions. It should be observed, however, that the Talmud does not regard the word 'ask' by itself as teaching that a formal question must be put to the witnesses but that here it is coupled with 'diligently'.
(32) Ibid. XVII, 4, in connection with the trial of an idolater. The words thou shalt inquire denote one question, and the emphasis, diligently, a second.
(33) Ibid. XIX, 18, with reference to witnesses proved Zomemim (v. Glos). Here also two questions are implied. Hence seven questions in all are necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 40b

But perhaps we should say that each case is as written,[1] for if it be so,[2] the Divine Law should have stated them in a single case?[3] — Since all [seven] are severally prescribed,[4] [the requirements of] each is inferred from the other,[5] and that being so, it is as though all [seven] were written with reference to each. But surely they [the cases in question] are not similar to each other![6] (Mnemonic: Spared, Sword, Warning.) Thus: The condemned city is unlike the other two,[7] for their possessions [the condemned's, in the latter two charges,] are spared.[8] Again, idolatry differs from the other two cases, for in them [execution is] by the sword.[9] Again, witnesses proved Zomemim are unlike the other two cases, since they require a formal warning?[10] — We infer it[11] from the identical use of 'diligently'[12] and the gezerah-shawah[13] is free,[14] for otherwise, it [the deduction] could be refuted.[15] And it is truly free: since Scripture could have read,[16] And they shall inquire and they shall search,[17] and yet changes its expression [by employing the word] 'diligently',[18] it follows that the purpose thereof was to leave it free.[19] But it [the analogy] is free only on one side![20] [For] granted that it is free in these two cases,[21] since [another expression] could have been used:[22] in the case of the condemned city,[23] what else could have been written:[24] for are not all [three][25] employed?[26] — There too it [sc. 'diligently'] is truly free, for Scripture could have read, Inquiring thou shalt inquire,[27] or searching thou shalt search;[28] and varies the idiom by the use of 'diligently'; it may therefore be inferred that this was in order to leave it free.[29]

Now,[30] we infer [the same requirement for charges punishable by] strangulation a minori from cases punishable by stoning or decapitation.[31] Again, the same is deduced for cases of burning a minori from those of stoning.[32] This [however] is right on the view of the Rabbis that stoning is severer [than burning]. But what is to be said on the view of R. Simeon that burning is the severer?[33] — Rab Judah therefore said: [Scripture states,] Behold if it be truth and the thing certain,[34] [and again] Behold if it be truth and the thing certain:[35] this gives eleven [expressions implying inquiry].[36] Seven [are employed] to indicate the seven queries: then subtracting the three needed for the gezerah shawah,[37] one still remains, whose purpose according to R. Simeon, is to include the cases of burning,[38] whereas according to the Rabbis,[39] [the necessary explanation is that] Scripture [sometimes] takes the trouble of stating a fact which can be deduced a minori. R. Abbahu ridiculed this [explanation]: Perhaps it [the eleventh expression] indicates an eighth query![40] But are eight queries [hakiroth] conceivable?[41] Why not? Surely, What part of the hour, may be added [as the eighth question]! And indeed, it has been taught even so: 'They examined him with eight queries.' Now, that is correct[42] according to Abaye on R. Meir's ruling, viz., A man is [to be treated as] not liable to make even the slightest error.[43] And even according to the version which states, A man is liable to make a slight error: it is also right.[44] But according to Abaye on R. Judah's ruling, viz., A man is liable to err to the extent of half an hour, and according to Raba, who said, People are liable to err to even a greater extent, what can you say? — Well then, [the eleventh expression] may be intended to add, 'Which year of the Jubilee' as a query. But that is identical with: 'In what septennate?'! — Rather this is the additional question: 'In what Jubilee? And the other Tanna? —[45] Since he [the witness] tells us in which septennate, it is necessary to ask: 'In which Jubilee?'[46] R. JOSE SAID etc. it has been taught: R. Jose said to the Sages: According to your view, one who comes and testifies, 'He killed him last night,' must be asked: 'In which septennate? In what year? In what month? On what day of the month?' They retorted: And according to your view, one who comes and declares, 'He killed him just now,' is to be asked: 'On what day? At what hour? And where?' But [you too must answer that] even though the questions may be unnecessary, they are put to them [the witnesses], in accordance with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar;[47] so here too,[48] even if they are unnecessary, they are put to them [the witnesses], in accordance with R. Simeon b. Eleazar's view. And R. Jose?[49] — 'He killed him last night,' is a frequent testimony; whereas, 'He has killed him just now,' is rare.[50]

DID YE KNOW HIM? Our Rabbis taught: [The following questions are asked]: Do ye know him? Did he kill a heathen? Did he kill an Israelite? Did ye warn him? Did he accept your warning?[51] Did he admit his liability to death?[52] Did he commit the murder within the time needed for an utterance?[53] Where he committed idolatry, [the witness is asked:] Which [idol] did he worship? Did he worship Peor?[54] Did he worship Merkolis?[55] How did he worship? By sacrifice, offering incense, libations, or prostration? 'Ulla said: Where is the need of warning intimated in the Torah? — In the verse, And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness.[56] Does guilt then depend upon [mere] seeing? Hence it must mean [that he is liable to punishment] only if he 'sees' the reasonableness thereof.[57] And since this is inapplicable to Kareth,[58]

---

(1) I.e., three questions are to be put to the case of the condemned city; two in a charge of idolatry, and two for Zomemim.

(2) That seven are necessary in each individual charge.

(3) Whence the procedure for all other capital charges would follow.

(4) I.e., in the three charges taken together. [Our text is difficult. Yad Ramah reads וכולהו לחקירה קאתו 'Since all have been prescribed for the purpose of enquiry'].

(5) I.e., since close examination is stated in the case of each, the three charges are assimilated to each other, and therefore the questions that are to be put in one case are to be put in the others too (Rashi)

(6) How then assimilate the three charges to each other?

(7) That of the idolater and the Zomemim.

(8) This act of leniency may indicate a greater degree of leniency in general, therefore a more rigid inquiry might be necessary, this too being in favour of the accused; but in the case of the condemned city, where the possessions of the condemned are destroyed, the inquiries might be less exacting, since the general tendency there is to greater severity. Hence only the number explicitly stated, as above, may be necessary.

(9) Deut. XIII, 16, with regard to the condemned city. V. also Deut. XIX, 21, where a false charge of murder seems to be referred to, which is punished by decapitation, which is therefore also the punishment of the Zomemim. This is a milder form of death than stoning, the penalty for idolatry. Cf. infra 49b.

(10) I.e., before conviction is possible but in the case of Zomemim, no previous warning is required. V. Keth. 33a and Rashi's interpretation a.l., which is based on the verse. Ye shall do unto him as he had purposed to do unto his brother. Since then the cases are dissimilar, how could the procedure in all capital cases be learnt from one?

(11) That the requirements of each case are transferred to the others

(12) Which is common to all the three verses cited.

(13) V. Glos.

(14) I.e., the words of the text which form the basis of the analogy are pleonastic and not legally essential.

(15) As shown above. It is a principle of exegesis that if the two terms of the analogy are not altogether similar the deduction of the gezerah shawah is not valid. V. also p. 363, n. 3.

(16) With reference to the Zomemim.
(17) Which is the expression used in respect of a condemned city.
(18) I.e., instead of 'they shall search', the second question was expressed by 'diligently'.
(19) I.e., though the main purpose of the verse is to indicate the number of questions to be put, this alteration of expression serves the subsidiary purpose too of intimating that the verse is free, so as to permit an analogy to be drawn.
(20) I.e., the word 'diligently' which forms the basis of the analogy is pleonastic only in one of the two terms that are compared, regarding idolatry and Zomemim as one term, and a condemned city as the other. Hence the analogy can be rejected. (This is a matter of dispute on the part of various teachers; v. p. 363, n. 3.)
(21) Sc. idolatry and Zomemim.
(22) E.g., make a search. The modification of the expression therefore denotes a basis for the analogy.
(23) Where there is the expression search.
(24) Instead of 'diligently'.
(25) I. e., (i) thou shalt inquire; (ii) and make search, (iii) and ask diligently, 'ask' by itself being disregarded, as stated on p. 258. n. 4.
(26) Hence 'diligently' cannot be regarded as pleonastic and consequently the analogy can be refuted.
(27) דרוש תדרוש.
(28) חקור תחקור The connection of the infinitive with the verb to convey emphasis is a common feature in the Bible. Cf. Ex. XXII, 3: Deut. XV, 10, 14.
(29) Hence it is free on both sides, and so cannot be rejected.
(30) Since the need of the seven questions has been established in cases punishable by stoning or decapitation, viz., idolatry and witnesses proved Zomemim.
(31) Strangulation is regarded as a milder form of death than the former two, hence the seven questions are certainly necessary there. (V. p. 259, n. 2).
(32) Stoning is severer than burning, and decapitation milder.
(33) I.e., how then can we deduce a seven-fold inquiry from cases involving a milder to those involving a severer punishment?
(34) Deut XIII, 15, with reference to the condemned city.
(35) Ibid. XVII, 4, with reference to the idolater.
(36) For 'if it be truth' implies that a question is put to ascertain it;likewise,'and (if) the thing (be) certain' implies another question; hence the two sentences imply another four questions, in addition to the seven.
(37) Sc. concerning the word 'diligently' in the cases of idolatry, Zomemim, and the condemned city.
(38) That there too the witnesses must be examined with the seven queries of time and place.
(39) For, as stated above, they declared the need of seven queries in the cases of charges punishable by burning a minori from stoning. What need then of the eleventh expression, which likewise indicates the case of burning? Hence this assumption must be made.
(40) How can it be taken for certain that its purpose is to extend the law of seven queries to charges of burning?
(41) I.e., can one ask a further question through which false witnesses may be declared Zomemim?
(42) I.e., that eight queries are conceivable, each of which may serve the purpose of refuting the witnesses.
(43) In regard to the exact time (Pes. 11b). So that, should the witnesses be refuted over a matter of half an hour, e.g., if they stated that they witnessed a murder at 4:30, and other witnesses testify that they were elsewhere, we do not assume that they might have witnessed the murder at 4 or 5, and erred in half an hour, but declare them Zomemim. Hence a purpose is served by questioning them on the precise part of the hour.
(44) To add another query as regards the precise part of the hour.
(45) Who does not favour an eight-fold inquiry, — what view does he hold?
(46) Since it is highly improbable that evidence would be postponed from one Jubilee to another (Rashi) (Or. one includes the other, v. Yad Ramah]. — It may be observed that owing to the discussion on the possibility or need of eight questions, R. Abbahu's objection remains unanswered, unless it be assumed that R. Simeon who maintains that burning is severer than stoning also agrees with the Tanna of the Mishnah that only seven questions are put.
(47) Cf. supra. 32b. 'They shall take the witnesses from one place to another in order to confuse them.'
(48) I.e., to defend our view.
(49) How does he maintain his objection, seeing that it may rightly be raised against his own view too?
(50) Therefore R. Jose maintains that the latter possibility may be disregarded.

(51) By saying, e.g., 'I know that I am warned not to do so.'
(52) By answering you, e.g., 'Even though I shall be punished by such and such a death, yet I will commit this crime.'
(53) Such as a greeting from a disciple to teacher, e.g., 'Peace be unto thee, my Master and Teacher'. V. B.K. 73b; Mak. 6a. If the murder was delayed longer, the plea that he forgot the warning might be accepted. (Rashi)
(54) Num. XXV, 1-9. Worshipped by obscene rites. V. infra 60a, and Rashi, on Num. loc. cit., also p. 410, n. 1.
(55) מרקולים, Roman, Mercurius, Greek, Hermes, the patron deity of wayfarers. V. p. 410, n. 2.
(56) Lev. XX, 17.
(57) I.e., if the witnesses previously warn him that his proposed action is forbidden on pain of kareth.
(58) כרת; excision — punishment by Heaven, where no warning is needed, since God knows whether the culprit was aware of the forbidden nature of his action or not.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 41a

we must refer it to flogging.[1]

The school of Hezekiah taught: And if a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour to slay him with guile;[2] — this implies that they warned him, yet he remained with wilful intent.[3] The school of R. Ishmael taught: And they that found him gathering sticks:[4] that implies that they warned him, yet he continued gathering. The school of Rabbi taught: Because [lit., 'for the word that'] he hath humbled [his neighbour's wife']5 , teaching, [it is] by reason of 'the word' [that he is stoned].[6] And [these verses] are all necessary: for had the DIvine Law stated [this provision] only in reference to a man's sister, one might have said that it applied only to those liable to flogging, but not to those liable to death,[7] therefore the Divine Law wrote, If a man come presumptuously etc.[8] Again, had this verse only been written, I might have thought that it [sc. a warning) is necessary only for decapitation, which is a milder form of death; but for stoning, which is severer, one might hold that it is not [required]: thus all are necessary. But why need two [intimations][9] in respect of stoning? — According to R. Simeon,[10] to extend [the law of warning] to cases of burning;[11] whilst the Rabbis[12] [answer]: (Scripture [sometimes] takes the trouble of stating a law[13] which can be deduced a minori. But Scripture should have intimated it for stoning [only], and then these other cases[14] could have been inferred from it! — Here too [the same answer must be given]: Scripture [sometimes] takes the trouble of stating a law which can be deduced a miniori.

'Did he admit his liability to death?' Whence do we infer this? Raba — others state, Hezekiah — said: Scripture states, Shall he that is to die[15] be put to death;[16] [He is not put to death] unless he [previously] admitted his liability to death.[17]

R. Hanan said: Witnesses against a betrothed damsel[18] who were proved Zomemim, are not executed,[19] since they may plead, We came forward [to testify] only to render her ineligible for her [intended] husband.[20] But they must surely have warned her![21] — This treats of a case where they did not warn her. But if so, how could she be put to death at all?[22] This refers to an educated woman, and is based on the view of R. Jose son of R. Judah. For it has been taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah said: A scholar needs no warning, for warning was instituted only in order to distinguish between wilfulness and unwilfulness.[23] But since they are not executed, how could she be? For this becomes evidence to which the law of Zomem cannot be applied,[24] and such is not admissible![25] — He [R. Hanan] actually meant it thus: Since they are not executed, for they can plead, 'We came only to make her ineligible for her [intended] husband,' she too cannot be executed, because it is evidence to which the law of Zomem cannot be applied. Then in the case of an educated woman, who, as we know, is to be executed on the view of R. Jose son of R. Judah, how, is that possible?[26] — If she misconducted herself twice.[27] But they [the witnesses] can still plead, We came only to render her forbidden to her second paramour![28] — [The case in question is one] where the misconduct was repeated with the first adulterer,[29] or one of misconduct with one of her relations.[30]

But why state this only of a 'betrothed damsel': surely the same applies to a married woman too! — True: but [the purpose here is to teach that] even in such a case, though she has not yet lived with her husband, they can plead, We came forward only to make her ineligible for her [intended] husband.

R. Hisda said: If one testified that he [the accused] slew him with a sword, and another, that he slew him with a dagger, it [the evidence] is inadmissible.[31] If one says, His clothes were black, and the other, His clothes were white; the evidence is admissible.[32]

An objection is raised: 'Certain'[33] implies that the evidence must be certain; if one witness says, He slew him with a sword, and the other says, With a dagger; or if one says, His clothes were black, and the other, They were white, the evidence is not 'certain'?[34] — R. Hisda interpreted this as referring to the [colour of] the cloth with which he strangled him, which comes under the same category as sword or dagger.

Come and hear! If the one says that his sandals were black, and the other, that they were white, the evidence is not certain'![35] — There too the meaning is, that he kicked him with his sandal and killed him.[36]

Come and hear! IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT BEN ZAKKAI CROSS-EXAMINED [THE WITNESSES] AS TO THE STALKS OF THE FIGS. — Rami b. Hama replied: The meaning is, that a man cut off a fig on the Sabbath, for which he was to be put to death.[37] But has it not been taught: They said to him, 'He killed him beneath a fig-tree'? — But, said Rami b. Hama: It was a case where he [the accused] pierced his victim with the sharp end of a fig branch.

Come and hear! He questioned [the witnesses]: Were the stalks of this fig tree thin or thick? And were the figs [themselves] black or white?[38] But, answered R. Joseph: Would one raise an objection from Ben Zakkai! Ben Zakkai had a different view, since he assimilated bedikoth to hakiroth.[39] Now, who was this Ben Zakkai? Shall we say, R. Johanan b. Zakkai? Was he then [a member] of the Sanhedrin?[40] Has it not been taught:[41] The whole lifetime of R. Johanan b. Zakkai was a hundred and twenty years. Forty years he engaged in business; forty years he studied, and forty years he taught. And it has also been taught: Forty years before the destruction of the Temple, the Sanhedrin were exiled[42] and took up residence in Hanuth.[43] Whereon R. Isaac b. Abudimi said: This is to teach that they did not try cases of Kenas.[44] 'Cases of Kenas!' Can you really think so![45] Say rather, They did not try capitol charges.[46] Again we learnt:[47] When the Temple was destroyed, R. Johanan enacted [so and so].[48] But the reference is to some other Ben Zakkai. Reason too supports this: for were R. Johanan b. Zakkai meant, would Rabbi[49] have called him merely Ben Zakkai![50] Yet has it not been taught: It once happened that R. Johanan b. Zakkai examined [witnesses] as to the stalks on the figs?[51] — He must therefore have been a disciple sitting before his Master,[52] when he made this statement the reasoning of which was so acceptable to them [the Rabbis]

(1) I.e., a warning must be given that he is liable to flagellation.

(2) Ex. XXI, 14.

(3) From the use of the imperfect יזיד, which connotes a continuous present. Murder is punishable by decapitation.

(4) Num. XV, 33; here too, the deduction follows from the use of the present part. (מקושש), i.e 'he went on gathering sticks after he was found (and warned). This shows the need for warning in the case of stoning

(5) Deut. XXII, 24.

(6) על דבר 'By reason of the word' — sc. of warning.

(7) For one might think that owing to the severity of the crime people would themselves realise the consequences and so not need warning.

(8) So indicating the need of warning in a case punishable by death.

(9) One in connection with the 'gatherer of sticks', and the other regarding the 'betrothed damsel'.

(10) Who holds that burning is a severer death; consequently, the warning here cannot be deduced from the reference to stoning, since it might be thought that in the case of a severer punishment, warning is not required.
(11) R. Simeon bases this on the hermeneutical אם אינו ענין i.e if it has no hearing on cases of stoning, it must refer to cases of burning.
(12) Who hold that stoning is a severer death, so that warning for burning follows therefrom a fortiori.
(13) Here, not explicitly, but by the same principle of אם אינו ענין.
(14) Sc. lashes and decapitation.
(15) Lit., 'the dead.'
(16) Deut. XVII, 6.
(17) This is deduced from the expression, המת, the dead, instead of 'murderer'. In accepting the warning then, he is regarded as dead de jure, even before appearing in court, since the warning involves the consequences of the evil deed.
(18) Who have testified to her infidelity. Had the charge been proved, she would have been executed.
(19) Despite the fact that collusive witnesses are punished according to the law of retaliation.
(20) For if the charge were proved,even if for some reason she were not executed, she would be forbidden to her husband!
(21) That the consequence of her act was death. How then could this argument for the defence be raised
(22) And in that case the witnesses too are not liable, since it is written, And ye shall do unto him as he thought (plotted) to do unto his brother (Deut. XIX, 19), i.e., they are punished only as the accused would have been punished.
(23) If the murderer was not warned he could plead ignorance of the death penalty. A scholar could not raise such a point in his defence. Hence this woman would have been liable to death, and in consequence, the false witnesses too, but for the plea stated above.
(24) I.e., even if their evidence is proved to be false, the law of retaliation cannot operate, because of their possible defence that they intended only to make her ineligible for her intended husband, and not to bring the death penalty upon her.
(25) Lit., 'is not called testimony.' For unless there is this deterrent to false testimony, it is suspect ab initio.
(26) Since the witnesses themselves, if proved Zomemim, are not executed.
(27) And so the witnesses in the second charge can no longer plead that their intention was only to prohibit her to her husband, since she is already forbidden.
(28) An unfaithful woman is forbidden not only to her husband, but also to the adulterer, if he afterwards wishes to marry her. V. Sotah 26b.
(29) To whom she is already prohibited in consequence of their earlier relations.
(30) Whom she is absolutely forbidden to marry at all.
(31) Lit., 'not certain', quoted from: Behold if it be truth and the thing certain (Deut. XIII, 15. XVII, 4.), v. supra 30b.
(32) Contradictory statements made during cross examination are of sufficient importance to be invalidated only when they refer to the act itself.
(33) Deut. XIII, 15: XVII, 4. V p. 265, n. 9.
(34) Hence inadmissible. I.e the evidence must tally, even in respect of matters which have no direct bearing on the act.
(35) Although there is here no actual contradiction in matters directly involving the act.
(36) The sandals being the actual weapons, the question of colour is on a par with the question of sword or dagger.
(37) Hence the species of fig is of direct importance for the veracity of the witnesses.
(38) I.e., ripe or unripe. Now surely, he could not have killed anyone with the figs. This proves that the meaning is that the witnesses deposed that the accused had killed his victim under or near a fig-tree, and thus this again refutes R. Hisda.
(39) And maintained that just as contradictions on the latter invalidated the evidence, so on the former. The general view, however, disagrees with this, and R. Hisda's dictum was likewise in accordance with the general view.
(40) At the time when they still had power to try capital cases.
(41) Cf. R. H. 31b.
(42) From the Hall of Hewn Stones. V. infra p. 205, n. 5.
(43) חנות A place on the Temple Mount outside the hewn chamber where they had temporary residence. (Derenbourg, Essai, p. 467, and Krauss, REJ, LXIII, 66f., identify it with the 'Chamber of the sons of Hanan' (a powerful priestly family, cf. Jer. XXXV, 4) mentioned in J. Pe'ah I, 5.]
(44) V. Glos.
(45) That these, like capital charges, could be tried only in the chief seat of the Sanhedrin — the Hall of Hewn Stones!

These cases could, in fact, be tried anywhere in Palestine.

(46) V. A.Z. 8b on Deut. XVII, 10: And thou shalt do according to the tenor of the sentence which they shall declare unto thee, from that place; this implies that it is the place that conditions the authority of the Sanhedrin in respect of the death sentence. [J. Sanh. I, 1 has, 'the right to try capital cases was taken away from them, i.e., by the Romans. For a full discussion of the subject v. Juster. op. cit, II, 138ff.]

(47) R. H. 29b.

(48) Hence the last period of R. Johanan's career was after the destruction of the Temple, when the Sanhedrin no longer tried capital cases.

(49) In the Mishnah.

(50) Depriving him of the title given at ordination.

(51) I.e., it must be the same person.

(52) At a time when capital cases were yet tried.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 41b

that they established it in his name. Thus while he was yet a student he was called Ben Zakkai, as is customary for a disciple sitting before his master, and when later he was a teacher,[1] he was called Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai. Hence, when he is referred to as Ben Zakkai,[2] it is in accordance with his earlier status;[3] while when he is called R. Johanan b. Zakkai, it is in accordance with his status at the time [that the Baraitha was taught].

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT ETC. . . WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HAKIROTH AND BEDIKOTH.? etc. What does 'EVEN[4] IF BOTH SAY etc. mean? It is surely obvious that if when one of the two witnesses says, 'I do not know,' their evidence is valid, if two say so, their testimony is likewise valid?[5] — R. Shesheth said: This refers to the first clause [of the Mishnah][6] and its meaning is as follows: In hakiroth, even if two say, 'We know,' and one is in doubt, their evidence is invalid. With whom does this agree? — With R. Akiba, who treated three [witnesses] as equal to two.[7] Raba demurred: Surely the Mishnah states: THEIR EVIDENCE IS VALID![8] — But, said Raba, it means this: Even in hakiroth, if two say, 'We know,' and the third says, 'I do not know,' their evidence is valid. With whom does this agree? — Not with R. Akiba.

R. Kahana and R. Safra were studying [the Tractate] Sanhedrin in the school of Rabbah. When Rami b. Hama met them, he asked them: What have ye to say on the Tractate Sanhedrin as taught in the school of Rabbah?[9] They retorted: And what in particular are we to say of the Tractate itself?[10] What is your special difficulty? — He answered: [The difficulty arises] from what is stated: WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HAKIROTH AND BEDIKOTH? IN HAKIROTH, IF ONE [OF THE WITNESSES] ANSWERS, 'I DO NOT KNOW,' THEIR EVIDENCE IS VOID. WITH RESPECT TO BEDIKOTH, HOWEVER, IF ONE ANSWERS, I DO NOT KNOW,' OR EVEN IF BOTH SAY, 'WE DO NOT KNOW THEIR EVIDENCE IS VALID. Now consider: both are Biblically [required]:[11] why then should hakiroth differ from bedikoth? — They said to him: How compare them?[12] As for hakiroth, if one of the witnesses says, , 'I do not know', the evidence is invalid because it cannot be refuted;[13] but with respect to bedikoth, if one of them answers, 'I do not know', the evidence remains valid, since it is still subject to refutation. Thereupon he said to them: If that is what you have to say, you have much to say thereon. But they replied: only because of your great forbearance have we said so much; had you criticized us, we should not have said anything.[14]

IF ONE TESTIFIES . . . [FOR ONE MAY HAVE BEEN AWARE OF THE INTERCALATION OF THE MONTH etc.] Till what date?[15] — R. Aha b.Hanina said in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan: Until the greater part of the month [has passed].[16] Raba said: We too learnt likewise' IF HOWEVER, ONE SAID, 'ON THE THIRD , AND THE OTHER, 'ON THE FIFTH, THEIR EVIDENCE IS INVALID. But why so? Why not assume that the one may have known of two intercalations,[17] whilst the other was ignorant of both! Hence it must surely be so because, when the greater part of the month has passed, one knows thereof [sc. intercalation]! — [No.] In truth I might argue that even after the passing of the greater part of the month, one does not necessarily know [of the intercalation],[18] yet he must have known of the Shofar-signal:[19] , we may then say that he may have erred regarding one signal,[20] but not regarding two.[21]

R. Hanina also said in the name of R. Assi in R. Johanan's name: Until what day of the month may the benediction over the new moon be recited?[22] — Until its concavity is filled up. And how long is that? — R. Jacob b. Idi said In Rab Judah's name: Seven days. The Nehardeans said: Sixteen [days].

---

(1) I.e., after ordination.

(2) In the Mishnah.

(3) Which is chronologically correct.

(4) The word 'even' gives the impression that when both witnesses are dubious, the evidence is less likely to be valid than when only one is in doubt.

(5) For if one is ignorant on a certain point, the other's knowledge thereof is valueless. Hence whatever evidence is valid when one is ignorant, is also valid when both are ignorant.

(6) Which deals with HAKIROTH.

(7) Just as when there are only two witnesses, if one of them is disqualified, the whole evidence falls to the ground, so when there are three. V. Tosaf. and cf. Mak. 5b.

(8) How then interpret it of a case where the evidence is invalid?

(9) Seeing that you have studied under such a great man, you must surely have discovered many new points.

(10) I.e., even if we had not studied with Rabbah, was there really any difficulty to be found there? (Rashi). [Yad Ramah adds: 'as generally taught' (lit., 'as all the world teaches')?

(11) V. supra 40b, 41a.

(12) Lit., 'How so, now!'

(13) Be proving that the witnesses were elsewhere at the said time. Hence, if one is in doubt regarding the place or time, such refutation is impossible. — It should be observed that only refutation of time and place is meant in the whole discussion, since that is the only form of refutation which renders the witnesses liable to the law of retaliation.

(14) I.e., had you criticized our arguments we should not have been able to resist yours!

(15) I.e., until what day of the month may ignorance of the defectiveness or fullness of the last month be assumed in explanation of the discrepancy between two witnesses?

(16) After that, contradiction as to date invalidates the evidence. The greater part of the month means one day beyond half way.

(17) Either consecutively or alternately.

(18) And so the question from the Mishnah is not corroborative.

(19) Blown at the proclamation of the new moon, be the month full or defective.

(20) I.e., though knowing that the Shofar had been sounded, he may have erred once as to the day on which it was sounded.

(21) Hence the invalidity of the evidence where there is a difference of two days.

(22) A benediction is recited at each re-appearance of the new moon just as on the re-appearance of everything that is beneficial to mankind. V. J. Ber. IX, 2. 'He who sees the moon in her stage of renovation, utters: Blessed etc.'

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 42a

Now, both agree with R. Johanan,[1] but the one [explains it as meaning]: Until it is like a strung bow;[2] the other: Until it is like a sieve.[3]

R. Aha of Difti[4] said to Rabina:[5] Yet should not one utter the benediction,[6] 'Blessed . . . who art good and dispensest good'![7] — He replied: But when it is waning, do we say, 'Blessed be the true judge.' '[8] that we should say: 'Blessed . . . who art good and dispensest good?'[9] But why should not both be recited?[10] Since it is a regular phenomenon, no benediction at all is required.[11]

R. Aha b. Hanina also said in the name of R. Assi in R. Johanan's name: Whoever pronounces the benediction over the new moon in its due time welcomes, as it were, the presence of the Shechinah: for one passage states, This month;[12] whilst elsewhere it is said, This is my God, and I will giorify Him.[13]

In the school of Rabbi Ishmael it was taught: Had Israel inherited no other privilege[14] than to greet the presence of their Heavenly Father once a month,[15] it were sufficient. Abaye said: Therefore[16] we must recite it standing. But Meremar and Mar Zutra allowed themselves to be carried on the shoulders[17] when they pronounced the blessing.

R. Aha said to R. Ashi: In 'the West,' they pronounce the following benediction: 'Blessed be He who reneweth the moons.' Whereupon he retorted: Such a blessing even our women folk pronounce![18] But [one should rather use the following], in accordance with Rab Judah, who gives it thus: Praised etc.[19] who created the Heavens with His word, and all their hosts with the breath of His mouth. He appointed unto them fixed laws and times, that they should not change their ordinance. They rejoice and are glad to do the will of their Creator. They work[20] truthfully, for their action is truth. The moon He ordered that she should renew herself as a crown of beauty for those whom He sustains from the womb,[21] and who will, like it, be renewed in the future, and magnify their Maker in the name of the glory of His kingdom. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who renewest the moons.

For with wise advice[22] thou shalt make thy war.[23] R. Aha b. Hanina [further] said in the name of R. Assi in R. Johanan's name: In whom do you find [skill to conquer in] the battle of the Torah?[24] — Only in him who possesses bundles of Mishnah [teaching].[25]

R. Joseph applied to himself [the verse]: Much increase [of grain] is by the strength of the ox.[26]

SIMILARLY, IF ONE TESTIFIED, 'DURING THE SECOND HOUR' etc. R. Shimi b. Ash said: They taught this only of hours.[27] But if one testifies, 'It was before sunrise,' and the other says, 'After sunrise, their evidence is invalid.[28] This is obvious[29] — But [put it thus:] if one testifies, 'Before sunrise,' and the other, 'During sunrise.'[30] But this too is obvious! I might, however, think that he [the witness] was standing in the glow [before sunrise] and what he saw was but a gleam:[31] He therefore informs us otherwise.

AFTER THIS, THE SECOND WITNESS IS ADMITTED etc. [AND HE DOES NOT DESCEND FROM THERE ALL THAT DAY.] Only THAT DAY,[32] and no longer? But has it not been taught: 'If there is substance in his statement, he does not go down from there at all;[33] but if there is no substance therein, he does not descend thence all that day, that his rise be not his fall'?[34] — Abaye said: Interpret it [sc. the Mishnah] as applying [to a case] where no substance was found in his statement.

IF THEY FIND HIM NOT GUILTY etc. [AND DRINK NO WINE]. Why drink no wine? — R. Aha b. Hanina said: Scripture states, It is not for princes[35] to say, Where is strong drink?[36] [i.e.,] those who are engaged in [unravelling] the secrets of the world[37] must not become drunk.

THE TWO SIDES DEBATE THE CASE TOGETHER UNTIL ONE OF THOSE WHO CONDEMN AGREES WITH etc. But what if they do not agree? R. Aha ruled: He is discharged. R. Johanan said likewise: He is discharged. R. Papa said to Abaye: Then he should be set free in the first place![38] He answered: Thus did R. Johanan say: It is in order that they may not leave the Court in confusion.[39] Some say that R. Papa said to Abaye: Why add, Let him be discharged by the first court?[40] To which he replied: R. Jose is in agreement with you. For it has been taught: R. Jose said: Just as a court of seventy-one is not increased, so may a court of twenty-three not be increased.

Our Rabbis taught: In civil suits, a declaration is made, The judgement nizdakan;[41] but not in capital charges.[42] What does nizdakan mean? Shall we say, The case is difficult:[43] surely, the reverse should have been taught![44] R. Huna b. Manoah said in the name of R. Aha the son of R. Ika: We should reverse (the instances). R. Ashi said: In truth, you need not reverse it: what is meant by 'The judgment nizdakan'? — The case is wisely [established].[45]

An objection is raised: The presiding judge declares, 'The judgment nizdakan.' Now, should you agree that it means, 'The case is wisely established,' it is correct, hence the presiding judge makes the declaration. But if you maintain that it means, The case is difficult;' is it not better that the presiding judge should not say it? Surely in doing so he actually disgraces himself! — There is no comparison between declaring one's own disgrace and having another declare it.[46] Others state: Should you agree that it means, The case is difficult,' it is correct, for there is no comparison between declaring ones own disgrace and having another declare it. But if you maintain that it means, 'The case is wisely established:' does not the president [of the court] thereby praise himself? Whereas it is written, Let another praise thee and not thine own mouth?[47] — It is different in judicial matters, since the president is charged with the duty,[48] as we learnt: When a decision has been arrived at, they are admitted, and the presiding judge declares, 'So and so, thou art not liable,' or, 'So and so, thou art liable.'[49] [

(1) That the recital of the benediction is conditioned by the filling up of the moon's concavity.

(2) I.e., semicircular, which shape it assumes after seven days.

(3) I.e., round, at full moon.

(4) [Dibtha on the Tigris. (Obermeyer op. cit. p. 197)].

(5) With reference to Rab Judah's view.

(6) After seven days and until full moon.

(7) This benediction is made on the attainment of a thing over which its due blessing has already been pronounced, but which has now either been improved or been replaced by a thing of the same kind but of a better quality (v. Ber. 59b). And so R. Aba maintained that even if in Rab Judah's opinion the usual benediction for the new moon is not to be uttered after seven days because it is then no longer new, yet since it is still in its growing stage, becoming more luminous as the days pass until full moon is reached, this latter blessing should be uttered.

(8) A benediction recited on hearing bad tidings. Cf. Ber. 54a.

(9) When it is waxing. I.e., since its waning is not regarded as a loss, entailing this benediction, its waxing is not a gain, necessitating the other.

(10) On the respective occasions.

(11) For its waxing is no particular boon from God, nor its waning an infliction, which are the fundamental reasons of these benedictions.

(12) Ex. XII, 2, concerning the New Moon.

(13) Ex. XV, 2, in the Song of Moses. 'This' is taken as connoting something that could, as it were, be pointed at with the finger (v. Mekilta. Ex. XV, 2), and the use of this word in the two verses suggests that he, who praises God at the periodical renewal of the moon, gives witness to the revelation of Divine Glory as manifested in natural phenomena.

(14) זכות; v. p. 153. n. 2.

(15) I.e., if they practised no other observance but this — the benediction over the new moon.

(16) Because it is a greeting of God's Presence.

(17) Probably because of their infirmity through age. Cf. supra 7b, and Rashi's comment

(18) As if to say, 'There is nothing in that.' Such a short benediction is fit only for the uneducated. e.g., women (Maharsha).

(19) The 'etc.' (curr. edd. in brackets) stands for 'art thou, O Lord our God. . .'

(20) Tosaf.'s reading:' 'He works', referring to God.

(24) I.e., who is qualified to meet the difficulties of the Torah, and give a true interpretation?

(25) I.e., he who is fully conversant with the law; according to Rashi, the point is that mere dialectic skill and ingenuity are no substitutes for a sound knowledge of the sources. חבילה, bundle, is a word play on חבולות.
(26) Prov. XIV, 4. V. Deut. XXXIII, 17, where Joseph is symbolically compared to a bullock; also Hor. 14a: R. Joseph was renowned for his erudition, being known as Sinai. Hence his application of the above verse to himself.
(27) I.e., if the witnesses state a definite time, e.g., three hours, four hours. etc. Only then is there a dispute in the Mishnah as to the margin of possible error.
(28) Even according to R. Judah.
(29) As there could be no error in such a matter.
(30) Their evidence is null.
(31) Mistaking it for the rays of sunrise; thus their statements tally.
(32) Does the disciple remain seated with the Judges.
(33) I.e., he becomes a member of the Court. V. Yad, Sanh. X, 8, although according to Tosafoth Yom Tob on Sanh. V, 4, he is not given a (for note 9 see p. 274) vote. Me'iri, however, maintains that he is seated with them only as long as the trial lasts.
(34) If he had to resume his seat in the presence of the Assembly, he would be disgraced.
(35) רוזנים, here connected with רז, secret. V. Dan. II, 18, 29.
(36) Prov. XXXI, 4.
(37) I.e., seeking to bring to light the secrets hidden in men's hearts, and so endeavouring to establish the truth — in a capital charge.
(38) I.e., after the court was increased to seventy-one and there was yet no clear majority. Why then delay by debating, surely the court as a whole must not seek to convict?
(39) I.e., without a definite decision. It reflects discredit on a court that it should rise in a state of controversy, having been unable to bring the matter to a definite conclusion (Rashi).
(40) Of twenty-three. If there was then no clear majority, both sides should have endeavoured to win one more vote over to their opinion, and in the case of failure, he should have been set free there and then.
(41) נזדקן, from the root זקן, may have a twofold meaning; a) old, in that the case has become old in discussion and could not be solved; or b) wise, in that the case has become clear, or wisely established, and is no longer in need of discussion. The following discussion is based on these two alternative meanings.
(42) Cf. Tosef. Sanh. VII.
(43) Lit., 'old', I.e., the case is become old and stale through prolonged discussion, and cannot be solved.
(44) I.e., in capital cases one should all the more say, 'The judgment nizdakan,' so as to acquit the accused.
(45) זקן according to the Rabbis, denotes 'wise' Cf. Kid. 32b.
(46) Which would be the position if the words were pronounced by another member of the court.
(47) Prov. XXVII, 2.
(48) Of declaring the verdict.
(49) Supra 29a.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 42b

C H A P T E R V I

MISHNAH. WHEN THE TRIAL IS ENDED,[1] HE [THE CONDEMNED] IS LED FORTH TO BE STONED.[2] THE PLACE OF STONING WAS WITHOUT THE COURT, EVEN AS IT IS WRITTEN, BRING FORTH HIM THAT HATH CURSED.[3]

A MAN WAS STATIONED AT THE DOOR OF THE COURT WITH THE SIGNALLING FLAG[4] IN HIS HAND, AND A HORSE-MAN WAS STATIONED AT THE DISTANCE YET WITHIN SIGHT OF HIM,[5] AND THEN IF ONE[6] SAYS, 'I HAVE SOMETHING [FURTHER] TO STATE IN HIS FAVOUR', HE [THE SIGNALLER] WAVES THE FLAG, AND THE HORSE-MAN RUNS AND STOPS THEM.[7] AND EVEN IF HE HIMSELF SAYS, 'I HAVE SOMETHING TO PLEAD IN MY OWN FAVOUR', HE IS BROUGHT BACK, EVEN FOUR OR FIVE TIMES, PROVIDING, HOWEVER, THAT THERE IS SUBSTANCE IN HIS ASSERTION.

GEMARA. And was the place of stoning only just outside the court and no further? Has it not been taught: The place of stoning was outside the three encampments?[8] — True, it is even as you say, yet he teaches it thus, so that one may infer from it that if the Beth din went forth[9] and stationed itself outside the three encampments,[10] even so the place of stoning had to be without the court, in order that it [the court] should not appear murderously inclined, or that there might be a possibility of deliverance.[11]

Whence is this inferred?[12] From what our Rabbis taught: Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp:[13] i.e., without the three camps. You say, 'without the three camps:' but may it not mean simply outside one camp? — It is here stated, Without the camp; and in reference to the bulls that were [wholly] burned,[14] it is also said, without the camp:[15] Just as there, [it means] without the three camps, so here too. And whence is that derived there? — From what our Rabbis taught: The whole bullock shall he carry away without the camp[16] — i.e., without the three camps. You say, 'without the three camps;' but perhaps it simply means 'without one camp'?[17] — But when Scripture states further, with reference to the bull offered for the Community,[18] without the camp, which is unnecessary, for it has already been stated, And he shall burn it as he hath burned the first bullock,[19] its purpose is to add a second camp.[20] And when Scripture states further, with reference to the ashes,[21] without the camp,[22] which is also superfluous, since it has already been said, Where the ashes are poured out shall it be burned,[23] its purpose must be to add a third camp.[24]

But why not derive it[25] from the sacrifices slaughtered without [the legitimate precincts]?[26] Just as there, [the meaning is] without one camp,[27] so here too, without one camp is meant! — It is logical to make the deduction from the bullocks that were [wholly] burned, since they have the following points in common: [i] Bring forth... without the camp; [ii] [the bringing forth] is a necessary preliminary [to the act]; [iii] atonement.[28] On the contrary, it should rather be deduced from the sacrifices slaughtered without, since they have the following in common; [i] human being; [ii] sinners; [iii] life is taken; and [iv] piggul?[29] — It is preferable to deduce one necessary preliminary from another. R. Papa said:[30] Where did Moses reside? In the camp of the Levites.[31] And God said to him: Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp[32] — which therefore means, without the camp of the Levites. Hence, when it states, And they brought forth him that had cursed outside the camp, the camp of the Israelites [must be meant].[33] But surely, that is necessary to intimate the fulfilment [of the command]? — This fulfilment is expressly stated:

---

(1) And the accused is found guilty.

(2) If he be so sentenced. Stoning is given here as an example, it being enumerated first in the list of the four modes of execution in Jewish law. Cf. infra 49b.

(3) 'Bring forth' implies 'without,' as is also shewn by the end of the sentence: without the camp. Lev. XXIV, 14.

(4) Sudarium, a cloth or kerchief.

(5) The signal man.

(6) Of the judges (Rashi).

(7) From carrying out the sentence until the court has gone into the details to see whether there is any substance in the new statement offered.

(8) That of the Divine Presence and the Priests, that of the Levites, and that of the rest of the Israelites. In Jerusalem they were situated as follows: The first was confined to the space of the Temple court, the second to the Temple Mount and the third occupied the rest of the city.

(9) From its usual locale, as stated in the previous note.

(10) I.e., one of the minor Sanhedrins.

(11) Between sentence and execution. The further the place of execution was from the court, therefore, the better for the condemned.

(12) That the execution must take place outside the three camps.

(13) Lev. XXIV, 14, with reference to the blasphemer.

(14) I.e., the sin offering of the anointed priest (Lev. IV, 3, seq.), and of the whole community (ibid. 13 seq.).
(15) Ibid. 12, 21.
(16) Ibid. 12.
(17) I.e., only outside the precincts of the Temple.
(18) In case the whole community committed an unwitting transgression.
(19) Ibid. i.e., the sin offering of the anointed priest, ibid. 3 seq.
(20) Beyond, which the burning is to take place.
(21) Which were heaped up and had to be removed.
(22) Lev. VI, 4.
(23) Lev. IV, 12; this explicitly states that the place for burning the ashes was without the camp. Hence the same statement in the verse first quoted is redundant.
(24) V. n. 12.
(25) Sc. the meaning of 'without the camp', Lev. XXIV, 14.
(26) Cf. Lev. XVII, 3ff. What ever man etc. . . . that offereth a burnt offering or sacrifice and bringeth it not unto the entrance of the appointed tent . . . that man shall be cut off from among his people.
(27) As is deduced from the words, bringeth it not unto the entrance of the appointed tent, i.e., the priestly camp, but outside it.
(28) In both these cases there is a positive command, Bring forth, etc. Whereas with references to sacrifices slaughtered outside the forecourt it is only stated, He that slaugthtered it outside the camp. Again, the bringing forth without the camp is a prerequisite for the fitting performance of the act; whereas in the case of sacrifices slaughtered outside the Temple court it is a transgression. Moreover, the burning of the bullock is an atonement for the High Priest and the whole Congregation (cf. Lev. IV, 20), and stoning likewise is an atonement for the malefactor; but that feature is absent in the case of sacrifices slaughtered without.
(29) 'Without the camp' in both these places refers to a human being; the blasphemer was to be taken 'without the camp', whilst it was a human being who slaughtered 'without the camp'; whereas, in connection with the burnt bullocks, this phrase relates to animals; they were to be taken 'without the camp'. Again, the blasphemer and the slaughterer without the camp are both sinners, whereas the bullock, in direct relation to which the phrase is stated, is not a sinner. Further, in both these cases, the leading 'without the camp' was in order to take life — that of the blasphemer and the sacrifice yet to be slaughtered; but the burnt bullocks were already slaughtered; and 'without the camp' is mentioned in connection with burning their carcases. And finally, the law of piggul is inapplicable to these two. פיגול, unfitness caused by an intention in the mind of the officiating priest to dispose of a sacrifice outside the legal limits of space or time. In both these cases the performance of the act outside does not involve this sin. In stoning it is, of course, not applicable, and sacrificing outside the prescribed area is not piggul, which implies instead a sacrificing outside the precincts but unlawful intentions about the sacrifice's subsequent disposal. Nor is piggul possible in the case of sacrifices slaughtered without. In the case of the bullocks to be wholly burned, an intention to burn them beyond their proper place makes the sacrifice in a sense piggul (v. Rashi). (5) V. n. 3.
(30) In proof that the third camp is meant.
(31) Since he was a Levite.
(32) Lev. XXIV, 14.
(33) It was not necessary to repeat the words, out of the camp; therefore the words here mean something different from their use earlier.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 43a

And the children of Israel did as the Eternal had commanded Moses.[1] If so,[2] what is the purpose of the sentence, And they stoned him with a stone?[3] — This is needed for what was taught: And they stoned him with a stone,[4] — him,[5] but not his garments. With a stone,[6] — [to teach] that if he was killed by a single stone the commandment is fulfilled.[7] And it was necessary to write [in this instance], 'stone', and [in another], 'stones'.[8] For had the Divine Law written [only] 'a stone', I might have said: In case he does not die through one stone, no more are to be brought to kill him. The Divine Law therefore states, 'stones'. Again, had the Divine Law written 'stones' [only], I might have said that at the outset two must be fetched. The Divine Law therefore states, 'a stone'.[9]

But this Tanna states, 'Here it is written [etc.],'[10] — He meant, If it were not written, i.e., even if this verse[11] were not found,[12] I could have adduced a gezerah shawah; seeing, however, that this verse is written, a gezerah shawah is not necessary. R. Ashi said; Where did Moses reside? In the camp of the Levites And God said to him: Bring forth him that hath cursed, — i.e., without the camp of the Levites; without the camp, — i.e., outside the camp of the Israelites.[13] And they brought forth him that had cursed,[14] — this stands for the actual fulfilment [of the command]. But the fulfilment is expressly stated: And the children of Israel did as the Eternal had commanded Moses! — That is necessary to indicate that hands were laid [on the culprit][15] and that he was hurled down.[16] Whereupon the Rabbis asked R. Ashi: How, according to you, do you interpret all the expressions; 'briny forth', in connection with the bullocks that are [wholly] burned?[17] This is a difficulty.

A MAN WAS STATIONED. R. Huna said: It is obvious to me that the stone with which one is stoned, the gallows on which one is hanged, the sword with which one is decapitated, and the cloth with which one is strangled, are all provided by the Community. And why so? Because we could not tell a man to go and fetch his own property to kill himself. But, asked R. Huna, who provides the flag for signalling and the horse on which one rides to stop them?[18] Seeing that they are for his protection, must they be provided by him, or rather, since the court is bound to endeavour to save him, by them? Again, what of R. Hiyya b. Ashi's dictum in R. Hisda's name; When one is led out to execution, he is given a goblet of wine containing a grain of frankincense, in order to benumb his senses, for it is written, Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto the bitter in soul.[19] And it has also been taught; The noble women in Jerusalem used to donate and bring it. If these did not donate it, who provided it? As for that, it is certainly logical that it should be provided out of the public [funds]: Since it is written. 'Give', [the implication is] of what is theirs.

R. Aha son of R. Huna inquired of R. Shesheth: What if one of the disciples said, 'I have a statement to make in his favour,' and there and then becomes speechless?[20] R. Shesheth blew into his hand,[21] and said; [You ask, what] if one becomes speechless! Why there may also be some one in the farthest part of the earth [who could make such a statement]![22] — In the latter case, however, no one has actually said so, but in the former case, such a declaration has been made! [Hence the problem,] What then? — Come and hear! For R. Jose b. Hanina said: If one of the disciples who argued for acquittal died, he is regarded as though alive and in his place.[23] Thus, it is so only if he had actually spoken in favour of acquittal,[24] but not otherwise.[25] [That does not solve it:] where one has actually argued for acquittal, I have no doubts; but the problem arises if he only declared [that he could do so].[26]

AND EVEN IF HE HIMSELF etc. Even the first and second time?[27] But it has been taught: 'The first and second time, whether his statement has substance or not, he is brought back; thereafter, if there is substance in his statement, he is brought back, but not otherwise'? — Said R. Papa: Interpret it, from the second time[28] onwards. How do they [the judges] know?[29] — Abaye said: Two Rabbis are sent with him; if his statement has substance, he is [brought back]; if not, he is not [brought back]. But why not do so in the first place?[30] — Because being terrified, he cannot say all he wishes.[31]

MISHNAH. IF THEN THEY FIND HIM INNOCENT, THEY DISCHARGE HIM; BUT IF NOT, HE GOES FORTH TO BE STONED, AND A HERALD PRECEDES HIM [CRYING]: SO AND SO, THE SON OF SO AND SO, IS GOING FORTH TO BE STONED BECAUSE HE COMMITTED SUCH AND SUCH AN OFFENCE, AND SO AND SO ARE HIS WITNESSES. WHOEVER KNOWS ANYTHING IN HIS FAVOUR, LET HIM COME AND STATE IT.

GEMARA. Abaye said; It must also be announced: On such and such a day, at such and such and hour, and in such and such a place [the crime was committed], in case there are some who know [to the contrary], so that they can come forward and prove the witnesses Zomemim.[32]

AND A HERALD PRECEDES HIM etc. This implies, only immediately before [the execution], but not previous thereto.[33] [In contradiction to this] it was taught: On the eve of the Passover Yeshu[34] was hanged. For forty days before the execution took place, a herald went forth and cried, 'He is going forth to be stoned because he has practised sorcery and enticed Israel to apostacy. Any one who can say anything in his favour, let him come forward and plead on his behalf.' But since nothing was brought forward in his favour he was hanged on the eve of the Passover![35] — 'Ulla retorted: Do you suppose that he was one for whom a defence could be made? Was he not a Mesith [enticer], concerning whom Scripture says, Neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him?[36] With Yeshu however it was different, for he was connected with the government [or royalty, i.e., influential].

Our Rabbis taught: Yeshu had five disciples, Matthai, Nakai, Nezer, Buni and Todah. When Matthai was brought [before the court] he said to them [the judges], Shall Matthai be executed? Is it not written, Matthai [when] shall I come and appear before God?[37] Thereupon they retorted; Yes, Matthai shall be executed, since it is written, When Matthai [when] shall [he] die and his name perish.[38] When Nakai was brought in he said to them; Shall Nakai be executed? It is not written, Naki [the innocent] and the righteous slay thou not?[39] Yes, was the answer, Nakai shall be executed, since it is written, in secret places does Naki,[40] [the innocent] slay.[41] When Nezer was brought in, he said; Shall Nezer be executed? Is it not written, And Nezer [a twig] shall grow forth out of his roots.[42] Yes, they said, Nezer shall be executed, since it is written, But thou art cast forth away from thy grave like Nezer [an abhorred offshoot].[43] When Buni was brought in, he said: Shall Buni be executed? Is it not written, Beni [my son], my first born?[44] Yes, they said, Buni shall be executed, since it is written, Behold I will slay Bine-ka [thy son] thy first born.[45] And when Todah was brought in, he said to them; Shall Todah be executed? Is it not written, A psalm for Todah [thanksgiving]?[46] Yes, they answered, Todah shall be executed, since it is written, Whoso offereth the sacrifice of Todah [thanksgiving] honoured me.[47]

(2) That the words, And they brought forth him etc., must be separately interpreted.

(3) Ibid. It is not needed to show how the execution was carried out, as that was already stated in the words quoted above; hence, by analogy, this too needs a distinctive interpretation.

(4) That is the literal translation, the sing. (stone) being used here.

(5) I.e., his bare body.

(6) Sing., as here.

(7) And more stones are not to be thrown at his corpse, to add to his disgrace.

(8) In the case of the gatherer of sticks, it is written, with stones (plural), Num. XV, 36.

(9) To teach that if he died by a single stone, it was satisfactory.

(10) I.e., he deduces the fact that the third camp is meant from a gezerah shawah. How then could R. Papa, an Amora, make the deduction from the verse itself?

(11) Quoted by R. Papa.

(12) Which itself indicates that the third camp is meant.

(13) For 'bring forth' itself implies beyond the camp (v. p. 578, n. 4), therefore the additional phrase denotes another camp.

(14) Lev. XXIV, 23.

(15) Cf. Lev. XXIV, 14. Let all that heard him lay their hands upon him.

(16) From a height, before stoning. V. infra 45a. The phrase quoted above cannot be taken as giving information regarding the carrying out of the stoning, as that has already been stated in the first portion of the verse. It indicates therefore the observance of all other regulations in connection with that penalty. e.g., the laying on of hands etc.

(17) Since he maintained that 'bring forth' has a meaning apart from 'without the camp. What separate meaning does he then give to these expressions when found in connection with the burnt bullocks?

(18) From carrying out the sentence, in case one of the judges raises a new point for the defence.
(19) Prov. XXXI, 6.
(20) I.e., should it be assumed that his arguments would have been weighty, and so now that he is unable to give them, the case should be retried by other judges?
(21) As a sign of ridicule at the question. [The figure of speech is probably taken from the method of blowing at the chaff when sifting ears of corn from one hand to the other, v. Ma'as. IV, 5.]
(22) Justice is impossible if such assumptions are permitted.
(23) I.e., when the vote is taken (supra 34a).
(24) I.e., gave his grounds for doing so.
(25) Hence if one said he could speak for the defence and there and then became dumb, his declaration is disregarded.
(26) I.e., when R. Jose states, 'argued for acquittal,' did he mean that he must have given reasons for his statement, or that he merely said he could do so, even if he was subsequently prevented from giving his reasons.
(27) I.e., must there be substance in his statement even the first and second time?
(28) Exclusive, not inclusive, i.e., from the end of the second time, viz., from the third time.
(29) Whether his statement has substance.
(30) I.e., as soon as he starts out for the place of execution, so as to avoid an unnecessary return even the first time.
(31) Therefore the first two times he receives the benefit of the doubt.
(32) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 43b

R. Joshua b. Levi said; He who sacrifices[1] his [evil] inclination and[2] confesses [his sin] over it,[3] Scripture imputes it to him as though he had honoured the Holy One, blessed be He, in both worlds, this world and the next; for it is written, Whoso offereth the sacrifice of confession honoureth me.[4]

R. Joshua b. Levi also said: When the Temple was in existence, if a man brought a burnt offering, he received credit for a burnt offering; if a meal offering, he received credit for a meal offering; but he who was humble in spirit, Scripture regarded him as though he had brought all the offerings, for it is said, The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit.[5] And furthermore, his prayers are not despised, for it is written, A broken and contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise.[6]

MISHNAH. WHEN HE IS ABOUT TEN CUBITS AWAY FROM THE PLACE OF STONING, THEY SAY TO HIM, 'CONFESS',[7] FOR SUCH IS THE PRACTICE OF ALL WHO ARE EXECUTED, THAT THEY [FIRST] CONFESS, FOR HE WHO CONFESSES HAS A PORTION IN THE WORLD TO COME. EVEN SO WE FIND IN THE CASE OF ACHAN, THAT JOSHUA

SAID UNTO HIM, MY SON, GIVE, I PRAY THEE, GLORY TO THE LORD, THE GOD OF ISRAEL, AND MAKE CONFESSION UNTO HIM.[8] AND ACHAN ANSWERED JOSHUA AND SAID, OF A TRUTH, I HAVE SINNED AGAINST THE LORD THE GOD OF ISRAEL, AND THUS AND THUS HAVE I DONE.[9] AND WHENCE DO WE KNOW THAT HIS CONFESSIONS MADE ATONEMENT FOR HIM? — FROM THE WORDS, AND JOSHUA SAID: WHY HAST THOU TROUBLED US? THE LORD SHALL TROUBLE THEE THIS DAY,[10] I.E., THIS DAY ART THOU TO BE TROUBLED, BUT THOU SHALT NOT BE TROUBLED IN THE NEXT WORLD.

AND IF HE KNOWS NOT WHAT TO CONFESS,[11] THEY INSTRUCT HIM, 'SAY, MAY MY DEATH BE AN EXPIATION FOR ALL MY SINS.' R. JUDAH SAID: IF HE KNOWS THAT HE IS A VICTIM OF FALSE EVIDENCE, HE CAN SAY: MAY MY DEATH BE AN EXPIATION FOR ALL MY SINS BUT THIS. THEY [THE SAGES] SAID TO HIM: IF SO, EVERYONE WILL SPEAK LIKEWISE IN ORDER TO CLEAR HIMSELF.[12]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The word na[13] is none other than a form of supplication. When the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Joshua, Israel hath sinned,[14] he asked Him, 'Sovereign of the Universe, who hath sinned?' 'Am I an informer?' He answered, 'Go and cast lots.' Thereupon he went and cast lots, and the lot fell upon Achan. Said he to him; 'Joshua, dost thou convict me by a mere lot?[15] Thou and Eleazar the Priest are the two greatest men of the generation, yet were I to cast lots upon you, the lot might fall on one of you.[16] I beg thee,'[17] he replied, 'cast no aspersions on [the efficacy of] lots, for Eretz Yisrael is yet to be divided by means of lots, as it is written, The land shall be divided by lot.[18] [Therefore,] make confession.' Rabina said: He bribed him with words, saying, Do we seek aught from thee but a confession? confess unto Him and be free. Straightway, Achan answered Joshua and said: Of a truth, I have sinned against the Lord, the God of Israel, and thus have I done.[19] R. Assi said in R. Hanina's name: This teaches that Achan had thrice violated the ban, twice in the days of Moses,[20] and once in the days of Joshua, for it is written, I have sinned,[21] and thus and thus have I done.[22]

R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Eleazar b. Simeon: He did so five times, four times in the days of Moses,[23] and once in the days of Joshua, for it is written, I have sinned and thus and thus have I done.[24] And why were they [the Israelites] not punished until this occasion? R. Johanan answered on the authority of R. Eleazar b. Simeon: Because [God] did not punish for secret transgressions until the Israelites had crossed the Jordan.

This point is disputed by Tannaim: The secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever.[25] Why are the words: Lanu u-lebanenu, [unto us and to our children] and the 'ayin of the word 'ad, [for ever] dotted?[26] — To teach that God did not punish for transgression committed in secret, until the Israelites had crossed the Jordan:[27] this is the view of R. Judah. Said R. Nehemia to him; Did God ever[28] punish [all Israel] for crimes committed in secret; does not Scripture say for ever?[29] But just as God did not punish [all Israel] for secret transgressions [at any time], so too did He not punish them [corporately] for open transgressions until they had crossed the Jordan.[30] Then

(26) לנו ולבנינו דע Fifteen passages in the Bible contain dotted words. Many meanings have been attached to such dots, but the most probable is that they were a device to indicate homiletical explanations which the Rabbis had connected with the words. Cf. C. D. Ginsburg, Introduction to the Massoretic Critical Edition of the Hebrew Bible, p. 331.
(27) The dots on the words, To us and to our children, denote that corporate responsibility holds good only for revealed or open transgressions, whilst secret offenders have responsibility individually to God alone. But as one might then have inferred that it was so for all time , the ע of the word עד (until) is therefore dotted, indicating that it was so only until, i.e., up to the crossing of the Jordan, but not after it, when corporate responsibility was involved also in secret transgressions.
(28) I.e., even after they crossed the Jordan.
(29) Translating, To us and our children belong only the revealed or open things; but the secret offender will 'for ever' be alone responsible to God, and will not implicate the whole people.
(30) According to R. Nehemia the absence of corporate responsibility for secret sins, irrespective of peril, is expressly stated in the words for ever. The dot on the ע in עד however, indicates a change of responsibility for revealed transgressions in the time they crossed the Jordan.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 44a

in the case of Achan, why were they punished? — Because his wife and children knew thereof.[1]

Israel hath sinned. R. Abba b. Zabda said: Even though [the people] have sinned, they are still [called] 'Israel'.[2] R. Abba said: Thus people say, A myrtle, though it stands among reeds, is still a myrtle, and it is so called.

Yea, they have even transgressed my covenant which I have commanded them, yea, they have even taken of the devoted thing and have also stolen [it], and dissembled also, and they have even put it amongst their own stuff.[3] R. Ile'a said on behalf of R. Judah b. Masparta: This teaches that Achan transgressed the five books of the Torah, [for the word 'gam'[4] is written there five times].

R. Ile'a also said on behalf of R. Judah b. Masparta; Achan was an epispastic:[5] Here it is written, They have even transgressed my covenant;[6] and elsewhere[7] it is said, He hath broken my covenant.[8]

But is this not obvious?[9] — I might have thought that he would not practise a licence in respect of a precept which concerned his own body; therefore he (R. Ile'a) informs us otherwise.

And because he hath wrought a wanton deed in Israel.[10] R. Abba b. Zabda said; This teaches that Achan committed adultery with a betrothed damsel: Here it is written, And because he hath wrought a wanton deed in Israel, and elsewhere, it is said, For she hath wrought a wanton deed in Israel.[11] But is this not obvious?[12] — I might have thought that Achan was not so extremely licentious;[13] therefore he gives us this information.[14] Rabina said: He was punished as is a betrothed damsel [who commits adultery], viz., by stoning.[15]

The Resh Galutha once said to R. Huna; It is written, And Joshua took Achan the son of Zerah and the silver and the mantle and the wedge of gold and his sons and his daughters, and his oxen and his asses, and sheep, and his tent and all that he had.[16] If he sinned, wherein did his sons and daughters sin? — He retorted: On your view, [one might ask:] If he sinned, how did all Israel sin, that it is written, And all Israel with him?[17] But it was to overawe[18] them. So here too, it was to overawe them.[19]

And they burned them with fire and they stoned them with stones.[20] By both [forms of death]?[21] — Rabina answered: Those suitable for burning[22] were burned, and those suitable for stoning[23] were stoned.

And I saw among the spoil a goodly mantle of Shinar,[24] and two hundred shekels of silver.[25] Rab said: It was a silk mantle;[26] Samuel maintained: It was a cloak dyed with alum.

And they laid them down[27] before the Lord.[28] R. Nahman said: He [Joshua] came and cast them down before God, exclaiming, 'Sovereign of the Universe! for these shall a [number equal to a] majority of the Sanhedrin he killed?'[29] For it is written, And the men of Ai smote of them about thirty-six men;[30] regarding which it was taught, i.e., literally thirty-six: this is R. Judah's view. R. Nehemia said to him; Were there actually thirty-six? Surely, only about thirty-six men is written. But this refers to Jair the son of Manasseh[31] who was equal [in importance] to the majority of the Sanhedrin.[32] R. Nahman said in Rab's name: What is meant by, The poor useth entreaties, but the rich answereth insolently.?[33] — The poor useth entreaties — that refers to Moses;[34] the rich answereth insolently, — to Joshua. Why so? Shall we say, because it is written. And they laid them down before the Lord,[35] which R. Nahman interpreted, He came and cast them down before God;[36] But did not Phinehas do the same? For it is written, Then stood up Phinehas and wrought judgment [wa-yefallel] and so the plague was stayed:[37] whereon R. Eleazar said: Not wayithpallel,[38] but wa-yefallel is written;[39] thus teaching that he had contentions with his Creator: he came and cast them[40] before God and cried out, 'Sovereign of the Universe! because of these, shall twenty-four thousand of Israel fall?' As it is written, And those that died by the plague, were twenty and four thousand?[41] — Nay it is inferred[42] from the following: [And Joshua said, Alas! O Lord,] wherefore hast Thou brought this people over the Jordan.[43] Yet Moses too spake thus: Wherefore hast thou dealt ill with this people.?[44] — Nay but it is derived from the following: Would that we had been content and dwelt beyond the Jordan.[45]

And the Lord said unto Joshua, Get thee up.[46] R. Shila expounded this: The Holy One blessed be He, said to him: Thy [transgression] is greater[47] than theirs,[48] for I commanded, And it shall be when ye are passed over the Jordan that ye shall set up [these stones];[49] ye advanced sixty mils however, [into the country before setting them up].[50] But when he [R. Shila] had gone out, Rab[51] set up his interpreter to speak for him, who expounded; As the Lord commanded Moses His servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses.[52] What then do the words, Get thee up,[53] teach us? — The Lord said to him, Thou hast brought [guilt] upon them:[54] and for that reason He said to him with reference to Ai: And thou shalt do to Ai and her king as thou didst to Jericho and her king, [only the spoil thereof and the cattle thereof shall ye take for a prey.][55]

And it came to pass when Joshua was by Jericho that he lifted up his eyes and looked . . . And he said, Nay, but I am captain of the host of the Lord, I am now come. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth and bowed down.[56] But how could he do so?[57] Did not R. Johanan say: One may not greet his fellow at night for fear that he may be a demon?[58] There it was different, for he said; I am captain of the host of the Lord, I am now come, etc. But perhaps he lied? — We have a tradition that such do not utter the name of God in vain.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 44b

He [this stranger] said to him: 'Yesterday evening, ye omitted the evening Tamid,[1] and to-day[2] ye have neglected the study of the Torah.'[3] 'For which of these [offences] hast thou come?' 'I have now come,'[4] he replied. Straightway [we read], And Joshua lodged that night in the midst of the vale'.[5] Whereon R. Johanan observed: It teaches that he spent the night in the profundities[6] of the law.

R. Samuel b. Unia said in the name of Rab: The study of the Torah is more important than the offering of the Tamid, since it is written, I have now come.[7]

Abaye asked R. Dimi:[8] To what do ye in 'the West' relate the following verse: Go not forth hastily to strife, for what wilt thou do in the end thereof when thy neighbour hath put thee to shame. Debate thy cause with thy neighbour, but reveal not the secrets of another?[9] — [He answered]: When the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Ezekiel, Go and say unto Israel, An Amorite was thy father, and thy mother was a Hittite,[10] the intercessory[11] spirit said before the Holy One, blessed be He, 'Sovereign of the Universe! if Abraham and Sarah came and stood before Thee, wouldst Thou say [this] to them and put them to shame?' Debate thy cause with thy neighbour,[12] but reveal not the secret of another![13] But has he so much license?[14] — Yes, For R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: He has three names: Pisakon, Itamon, and Sigaron.[15] Pisakon, because he argues against the Most High;[16] Itamon, because he hides the sins of Israel, Sigaron, because when he concludes[17] a matter, none can reopen it.[18] Hadst thou prepared thy prayer before thy trouble came?[19] R. Eleazar said: One should always offer up prayer before misfortune comes; for had not Abraham anticipated trouble by prayer between Beth-el and Ai,[20] there would not have remained of Israel's sinners a remnant or a survivor.[21] Resh Lakish said: He who devotes his strength to prayer[22] below,[23] has no enemies [to overcome] above.[24] R. Johanan said: One should ever implore mercy that all [sc. Heavenly beings] may support his effort [in prayer] so that he may have no enemies on high.[25]

AND WHENCE DO WE KNOW THAT HIS CONFESSIONS MADE ATONEMENT FOR HIM etc. Our Rabbis taught: Whence do we know that his confessions made atonement for him? — From the verse, And Joshua said unto him, Why hast thou troubled us, the Lord shall trouble thee this day: [implying] this day art thou troubled, but thou shalt not be troubled in the next world. And again it is written, And the sons of Zerah: Zimri,[26] and Ethan and Heman and Calcol and Darda,[27] five of them in all.[28] Why the phrase: five of them in all?[29] — Because all five were equally destined for the world to come. Here he is called Zimri, but elsewhere, Achan.[30] Rab and Samuel [differ thereon]: One maintains his real name was Achan; and why was he called Zimri? — Because he acted like Zimri.[31] The other maintains, His real name was Zimri; and why was he called Achan? — Because he wound the sins of Israel about them like a serpent.[32]

AND IF HE KNOWS NOT WHAT TO CONFESS . . . R. JUDAH SAID . . . TO CLEAR HIMSELF. Why not let them clear themselves? — In order that they may not bring discredit upon the Court and the witnesses.

Our Rabbis taught: It happened once that a man who was being taken to be executed said: 'If I am guilty of this sin, may my death not atone for any of my sins; but if I am innocent thereof, may my death expiate all my sins. The court and all Israel are guiltless, but may the witnesses never be forgiven.' Now, when the Sages heard of the matter they said: It is impossible to reverse the decision, since the sentence has been promulgated. He must therefore be executed, and may the chain [of responsibility] ever hang on the neck of the witnesses. But is he to be relied on?[33] — This holds good only where the witnesses have retracted.[34] But even so, of what consequence is it? Once a witness testified — he cannot testify again![35] It is necessary [to state this] even where they [the witnesses] give a reason for their action,[36] as happened in the case of Ba'ya[37] the tax-collector. MISHNAH. WHEN HE IS ABOUT FOUR CUBITS DISTANT FROM THE PLACE OF STONING, HE IS STRIPPED OF HIS GARMENTS.[38] A MAN IS COVERED IN FRONT AND A WOMAN BOTH IN FRONT AND BEHIND: THIS IS R. JUDAH'S VIEW. BUT THE SAGES SAY: A MAN IS TO BE STONED NAKED BUT A WOMAN IS NOT TO BE STONED NAKED.

(5) The ordinary text reads: among the people instead of: in the midst of the vale. Again, verse 13 of the same chapter in which we do find, in the midst of the vale, begins with, And Joshua went, instead of, And Joshua lodged. It is probable that the Rabbis combined the two verses for the purpose of their exegesis, which is not unusual with them. Cf. Tosaf. Meg. 3a. s.v. וילן; Shabb. 128a s.v. ונתן. In a parallel passage in 'Er. 63b, the verse quoted conforms to the Biblical text: And Joshua went, and the text further reads: He went into the depths of the study of the law. Bah mentions another version which reads as follows: And Joshua lodged that night amongst the people; further it is written, into the midst of the vale, — this teaches that he went and spent that night in the depths of the study of the law. V.D.S. a.l.

(6) עמק means 'valley', as well as 'deep' or 'depth'.

(26) According to the Rabbis, he is identical with Achan. Although the latter was a great grandson of Zerah, he is called the son of Zerah in Josh. VII, 24. The four other sons are referred to in I Kings (V, 11) as great men, and the fact that Achan (Zimri) is associated with them is taken as an indication that his confession helped him to enter the world to come in common with the others.
(27) Dara, in I Chron II, 6.
(28) I Chron. II, 6.

(32) Cf. Gr. **.
(33) I.e., is his statement so trustworthy that responsibility may be thrust upon the witnesses? — Such would seem to have been the text before Rashi, v. D.S. a.l. Our reading is: But that is obvious, (for) is he then the sole authority! I.e., why state that the Rabbis did not reverse the sentence! Is he then to have his own way entirely so that we should disbelieve the witnesses.
(34) After the sentence had been promulgated.
(35) Witnesses are not permitted to retract their first statement and make another, since they may have been prompted thereto out of pity for the accused.
(36) In withdrawing their previous statement. E.g., when they say that they have previously testified against him out of hatred. In this case, though the execution is carried out, the witnesses bear responsibility.
(37) According to Kohut 'Aruch Completum, vol II, p. 140, Ba'ya is derived from the Arabic, meaning an informer. In the case in question he had denounced the tax defaulters in the Government, an act which, of course, aroused the enmity of the people. According in Rashi, the subject matter of the text is connected with this name as follows: The funeral of the said collector coincided with that of a very pious man, but accidentally the coffins were exchanged, so that the honour intended for the Rabbi was paid to the other, and vice versa. An explanation of the happening was given by the Rabbi in a dream to one of his pupils who was disturbed at the occurrence, and he also informed him that severe punishment was in store for Simeon b. Shetah in the world to come for the neglect of his duty in tolerating eighty women in Ashkelon guilty of sorcery. Simeon, on being informed about it, took a serious view of the matter and had them executed. The relatives of these women, however, inflamed with a passion for revenge, plotted against his son, charging him with a capital crime, as a result of which he was sentenced to death. On his way to the place of execution the condemned man protested his innocence so vehemently that even the witnesses were moved to admit the falsity of their evidence, giving as ground for their former act their feelings of enmity against Simeon b. Shetah. Yet their latter statement was not accepted, according to the law expounded in the text, that a witness is not to be believed when be

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: One part of a man was covered, [viz.,] in front and two parts of a woman, [viz.,] in front and behind, because she is wholly shameful [when naked]: this is R. Judah's opinion. The Sages said: A man is stoned naked, but not a woman, What is the Rabbis' reason? — Scripture states, And they shall stone otho [him]. Why state 'otho'?[1] Shall we say, 'otho' but not 'othah,' [her]? but it is written, Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman![2] What then is the significance of 'otho'. — That only he[3] [is stoned] without his garments, but she[4] is stoned in her clothes.

R. Judah[5] said: 'Otho' implies without clothes, and there is no distinction of sex.[6] Are we to assume that the Rabbis are apprehensive of unchaste thoughts, and that R. Judah is not? But we know in fact that they both hold the reverse, for we learnt:[7] The Priest seizes her garments,[8] it does not matter if they are rent or torn open, until he uncovers her bosom and unloosens her hair. R. Judah said: If her bosom was beautiful, he did not expose it, and if her hair was comely, he did not loosen it,[9] Rabbah said: In the other case, this was the reason: lest she should come forth from the Beth din innocent and the young priests conceive a passion for her; but here, she is about to be executed! And should you object, But through her their passions might be inflamed for others, Rabbah said: We have it on tradition that evil inclination moves a man only towards what his eyes see.

Raba said: Is there only an inconsistency between R. Judah's two statements and not between those of the Rabbis?[10] — But, said Raba, R. Judah's two statements are not contradictory, even as we have solved the difficulty. And the Rabbis' views are also not opposed: Scripture says, That all women may be warned and not to do after your lewdness:[11] but here, no greater warning is possible than this [sc. the execution].[12] And should you say, Let us wreak both[13] upon her, behold R. Nahman said in Rabbah b. Abbahu's name: Scripture says Love thy neighbour as thyself:[14] choose an easy death for him.[15]

Shall we say that R. Nahman's statement is the subject of a conflict between Tannaim?[16] — No: all agree with R. Nahman, but they differ on the following point: One Master[17] holds that [the avoidance of] personal humiliation is far preferable to lack of bodily pain,[18] and the other holds the reverse.

MISHNAH. THE PLACE OF STONING WAS TWICE A MAN'S HEIGHT.[19] ONE OF THE WITNESSES PUSHED HIM BY THE HIPS, [SO THAT] HE WAS OVERTURNED ON HIS HEART. HE WAS THEN TURNED ON HIS BACK.[20] IF THAT CAUSED HIS DEATH, HE HAD FULFILLED [HIS DUTY];[21] BUT IF NOT, THE SECOND WITNESS[22] TOOK THE STONE[23] AND THREW[24] IT ON HIS CHEST. IF HE DIED THEREBY, HE[25] HAD DONE [HIS DUTY]; BUT IF NOT, HE [THE CRIMINAL] WAS STONED BY ALL ISRAEL,[26] FOR IT IS WRITTEN: THE HAND OF THE WITNESSES SHALL BE FIRST UPON HIM TO PUT HIM TO DEATH, AND AFTERWARDS THE HAND OF ALL THE PEOPLE.[27]

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: And with his own height,[28] there were three [men's heights] in all. Yet do we really require so much height?[29] For the following contradicts it: 'Just as a pit to be reckoned as causing death must be ten handbreadths [deep],[30] so must all other [excavations] be sufficient to cause death, viz., ten handbreadths'?[31] — R. Nahman said in Rabbah b. Abbahu's name: Scripture states, Love thy neighbour as thyself;[32] i.e., choose an easy[33] death for him. But if so, it [sc. the place of stoning] should be still higher! — [That, however, is not so] to prevent disfiguration.[34]

ONE OF THE WITNESSES PUSHED HIM: Our Rabbis taught: Whence do we know that it [the execution][35] was accomplished by hurling down?[36] — Scripture states, And he shall be cast down.[37] And whence the necessity of stoning? — Scripture states, He shall be stoned.[38] And whence do we know that both stoning and hurling down [were employed]?[39] — From the verse, he shall surely be stoned or thrown down.[40] And whence do we know that if he died through being hurled down, it is enough? — Scripture states, or cast down.[41] Whence do we know the same procedure is to be followed for [all subsequent] generations?

(9) Hence it is R. Judah and not the Rabbis who are apprehensive that the sight of her may incite to unchaste thought.

(41) Because if stoning were always necessary in addition to the hurling down, even when the latter alone had caused death, why state or cast down?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 45b

— Because Scripture states, He shall surely be stoned.[1]

BUT IF NOT, THE SECOND WITNESS TOOK THE STONE. HE TOOK'?[2] But has it not been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: 'A stone was there which it took two men to lift, — he lifted that and dropped it on his [the victim's] chest; if it killed him, his duty was fulfilled'?[3] But on your reasoning, that itself is inconsistent! That 'which it took two men to lift' — 'he lifted that and dropped it on his chest!' But it must mean that he lifts it up together with his fellow witness, but drops it [down] by himself in order that it may come down with force.[4] BUT IF NOT, HE WAS STONED BY ALL ISRAEL, etc. But has it not been taught: It [the stoning] was never actually repeated?[5] — Do I then say that it was done? I merely state what might be necessary!

The Master said: 'A stone was there etc.'[6] But has it not been taught: 'The stone with which he [the condemned] was stoned, the gallows on which he was hanged, the sword with which he was beheaded, or the cloth with which he was strangled, are all buried with him'?[7] — It merely means that others were prepared and brought in their place.[8] 'They are all buried with him.' Surely it has been taught: They are not buried with him![9] — R. Papa explained: What is meant by 'with him?' In the earth surrounding his corpse.[10]

Samuel said: If the hand[s] of the witnesses were cut off,[11] he [the condemned] goes free. Why so? — Because it is necessary that The hand of the witnesses shall be first upon him,[12] which is here impossible. But according to this, if they were without hands from the outset,[13] are they also ineligible?[14] — There[15] it is different, for Scripture states, The hand of the witnesses, implying, the hand which they had previously possessed.[16]

An objection is raised; 'Wherever two witnesses testify, saying, We testify against so and so[17] that he was sentenced by such and such a court, and so and so are his witnesses, he is to be executed'.[18] — Samuel explained this as referring to a case where the same were also the original witnesses.[19] But must [every] verse be [carried out] as written? Has it not been taught: 'He that smote him shall surely be put to death, he is a murderer?[20] I only know that he may be executed with the death that is decreed for him.[21] But where it is not possible to execute him in the manner prescribed,[22] whence do I know that one may execute him by any means possible? From the verse: He that smote him shall surely be put to death, — in all cases'?[23] — There it is different, for Scripture says, He shall surely be put to death.[24] Then let us draw an inference from it.[25] — Because the references to a murderer, and the 'avenger of blood' are two verses written with the same object, and the teaching of two such verses does not extend to anything else.[26] 'A murderer', as has just been stated. And what is the reference to the 'avenger of blood'? — It has been taught: The avenger of blood shall himself put the murderer to death;[27] it is [primarily] the duty of the avenger of blood [to slay the murderer]. And whence do we know that, if he [the murdered man] has no avenger of blood,[28] the Beth din must appoint one?[29] — From the verse, When he meeteth him,[30] i.e., in all cases.[31]

Mar Kashisha, the son of R. Hisda, said to R. Ashi: But are we really not to interpret the verse literally? Have we not learnt: If either of them[32] has a hand or fingers cut off, or is dumb, lame, blind, or deaf, he does not become a 'stubborn and rebellious son';[33] because it is written, And they shall lay hold on him,[34] — this excludes those with hands or fingers cut off; and they shall bring him out, so excluding lame [parents]; and they shall say, excluding the dumb; this our son,[35] excluding the blind; he will not obey our voice, excluding the deaf.[36] Why so? Surely because a verse must be literally interpreted! — No. There it is different, because the entire verse is superfluous.[37]

Come and hear! If it [the city] has no 'public square',[38] it cannot become a condemned city: this is R. Ishmael's view. R. Akiba said: If it has no public square, one is made for it.[39] Now, they differ only in that one holds that 'the public square thereof'[40] implies, that it must have been there from the outset [i.e., before sentence]; and the other holds that 'the public square thereof', even if it has only now [sc. after sentence] become one, is to be regarded as though it had been one originally. Yet both agree that the verse must be interpreted literally! — It is a point of difference between Tannaim, for we learnt:[41] If he has no thumb or great toe or right ear, he can never obtain cleansing. R. Eliezer said: He [the priest] applies it [the blood] on the corresponding place, and his duty is discharged. R. Simeon said: He applies it on the left side and his duty is discharged.[42]

MISHNAH. ALL WHO ARE STONED ARE [AFTERWARDS] HANGED: THIS IS R. ELIEZER'S VIEW, THE SAGES SAY: ONLY THE BLASPHEMER AND THE IDOLATER ARE HANGED. A MAN IS HANGED WITH HIS FACE TOWARDS THE SPECTATORS, BUT A WOMAN WITH HER FACE TOWARDS THE GALLOWS: THIS IS THE VIEW OF R. ELIEZER. BUT THE SAGES SAY: A MAN IS HANGED, BUT NOT A WOMAN. WHEREUPON R. ELIEZER SAID TO THEM: BUT DID NOT SIMEON B. SHETAH HANG WOMEN AT ASHKELON?[43] THEY RETORTED: [ON THAT OCCASION] HE HANGED EIGHTY WOMEN, NOTWITHSTANDING THAT TWO [MALEFACTORS] MUST NOT BE TRIED ON THE SAME DAY.[44]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [Scripture states,] And if he be put to death, then thou shalt hang him on a tree:[45] I might think that all who are put to death are to be hanged: therefore Scripture states, For he is hanged [because of] a curse against God.[46] Just as the blasphemer in question is executed by stoning, so all who are stoned [must be subsequently hanged]: this is R. Eliezer's view. But the Sages say: Just as the blasphemer in question denied the fundamental principle [of faith].[47] So all who deny the fundamental principle [of faith].[48] Wherein do they differ?[49] — The Rabbis[50] employ [the rule of] the general and the particular; whilst R. Eliezer employs [the rule of] extension and limitation.[51] 'The Rabbis employ [the rule of] the general and the particular.' [Thus:] And if he be put to death then thou shalt hang him, is a general proposition; for he is hanged [because of] a curse against God is the particular. Now, had these two clauses been placed beside each other,[52] we should have said, the general includes nothing [but] the particular, i.e., only this man[53] and no one else.

(1) In the future tense. [Ms. M. adds 'or he shall surely be thrown down.']

(2) Was it done by one man alone?

(3) Obviously two people were required to handle it.

(4) Because if two threw it they might not both follow exactly the same direction with a consequent loss of force.

(5) Death having always resulted from the first operation.

(6) Implying that the same stone was regularly employed for stoning.

(7) A.Z. 62b.

(8) I.e., that a stone was lying there in readiness, and not brought just at the moment when it was needed.

(9) Tosef. Sanh. IX.

(10) Which comes to be regarded as part of the body and must be carried with it when moved. Cf. Nazir 64b.

(11) After they testified.

(12) Deut. XVII, 7.
(13) Before they testified.
(14) Seeing that the injunction in Deut. XVII, 7 cannot in their case be applicable.
(15) In the case dealt with by Samuel.
(16) But if they lack hands at the outset they are eligible to testify.
(17) If the condemned person escaped and was recaptured (Mak. 7a).
(18) Even in the absence of the original witnesses. This proves that the injunction in Deut. XVII, 7 is not indispensably essential, but only desirable when possible.
(19) Hence the injunction can be carried out.
(20) Num. XXXV, 21,
(21) I.e., decapitation by the sword.
(22) E.g., if he fled, but could be reached by an arrow (Rashi on 72b).
(23) Infra 53a; 72b. Hence it is not necessary to understand the verse literally.
(24) מות יומת. The infinitive strengthens the idea of the verb and denotes an inclusion of other modes of execution if necessary.
(25) That just as there, where he should be decapitated, he is nevertheless executed by any means possible, so here too, where he should be hurled down by the hands of the witnesses, he is still to be executed even if their hands have been cut off.
(26) V. p. 458, n. 9.
(27) Num. XXXV, 19, referring to wilful murder. Rashi's interpretation that it refers to accidental homicide where the murderer was found outside the city of refuge is difficult. V. Mishneh Lemelek on Yad, Rozeah I, 2.
(28) A near kinsman, upon whom devolves the duty of hunting down a murderer to death.
(29) I.e., the Court is always responsible for prosecuting the murderer, whether there is a relative or not.
(30) Ibid.
(31) Thus this verse too shows that the provisions of an avenging kinsman are not limited to the precise statement of the Bible,
(32) The parents of a 'stubborn and rebellious son'; Deut, XXI, 18ff.
(33) So the law concerning such is not operative.
(34) Ibid, 19.
(35) Showing that they must point him out.
(36) Who are unable to bear his reply to their orders. V. infra 71a.
(37) It could have been written thus: 'And they shall bring him unto the elders of his city, and all the men shall stone him with stones,' as is usual with other cases punishable by stoning, without repeating the indictment. Therefore that verse must certainly be understood literally; but it does not prove that all verses are to be understood exactly as they are written.
(38) Cf. Deut, XIII, 17: And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the public square thereof.
(39) Infra 112a,
(40) Cf. n. 5.
(41) Nazir 46b, with reference to the purification of a leper. Cf. Lev, XIV, 14:
(42) I.e., the leper becomes clean, This proves that in the opinion of R. Eliezer and R. Simeon a verse need not be understood literally, whilst the first Tanna maintains that it must be so interpreted. Hence Samuel agrees with the latter.
(43) Though this southern coastal city was never for any length of time populated by Jews, a fact which makes such an execution most unusual, it was twice surrendered to Jonathan the Maccabee (cf. Mace. X, 36; XI, 60) and later to Alexander Jannaeus (Simeon's brother-in-law). It is therefore not improbable that Jews made their home there, despite the view of Schurer. [V. Klausner, היסטוריה ישראלית II, 134. Derenbourg, however, op. cit., p. 69, n. 1, maintains that Simeon Maccabeus has been here confused with Simeon b. Shetah, as it was only in the days of the former that Ashkelon had a large Jewish population, and it is also known from other sources that he visited Ashkelon several times.]
(44) Hence this occurrence cannot be brought forward as a valid precedent, owing to its extraordinary nature. Witchcraft amongst Jewish women prevailed at that time to an alarming extent, and in order to prevent a combined effort on the part of their relations to rescue the culprits, he had to execute all of them at once. He hanged them, then, to prevent such practices and to avoid rescue, but his action is no precedent, and in itself was actually illegal, as the Sages pointed out.

(45) Deut. XXI, 22.
(46) קללת אלהים (E.V. For he that is hanged is a reproach unto God,) is so interpreted by the Mishnah, i.e., he was a blasphemer.
(47) I.e., the unity of God.
(48) Are to be hanged. 'All' can only mean an idolater.
(49) On what principle of exegesis — the practical difference, of course, being obvious,
(50) The Sages.
(51) These two hermeneutical rules form one of R. Ishmael's thirteen principles by which the law is expounded. The former rule כלל ופרט means that when a general term (which may denote an indefinite number of things) is followed by a particular (specifying a definite thing), the law is restricted to the specified thing alone. A particular is then regarded, not as an illustrative example of the preceding general, but as its explanation, so indicating that the content of the general is restricted solely to that of the particular. According to the other theory רבוי ומיעוט, the general retains its significance as applying to many things, but the particular limits the scope of the preceding general so as to include in it only things which are similar and to exclude such as are not similar thereto. The application of these exegetical principles, however, is dependent on the two terms following each other in the same passage. If they are found in two different passages, the rule is somewhat varied, as explained here in the Talmudic discussion.
(52) I.e., in the same verse.
(53) The blasphemer.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 46a

Since, however, they are separated from each other, it has the effect of including an idolater,[1] who is like him, [the blasphemer] in every respect. 'Whilst R. Eliezer employs [the rule of] extension and limitation.' [Thus:] And if he be put to death then thou shalt hang him is an [indefinite] extension; for he is hanged because of a curse . . . is a limitation. Now, had these two clauses been placed beside each other, we should have extended the law only to an idolater, who is similar to him in every respect. Since, however, they are separated from each other, it has the effect of extending [the law] to all who are stoned.[2]

A MAN IS HANGED etc. What is the Rabbis' reason? — Scripture states, then the shalt hang him — 'him',[3] but not her.[4] And R. Eliezer?[5] — 'Him' implies without his clothes. And the Rabbis?[6] — [They admit that] that indeed is so; but Scripture says, And if a man have committed a sin,[7] implying, a man, but not a woman. And R. Eliezer, — how does he interpret the words, And if a man have committed? — Resh Lakish answered: As excluding a stubborn and rebellious son[8] [from that mode of execution]. But has it not been taught: A stubborn and rebellious son is stoned and [afterwards] hanged: so says R. Eliezer? — But, said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [He interprets it] as including a stubborn and rebellious son. How so?[9] — Scripture says, As if a man has committed a sin — 'a man,' but not a son; 'a sin' implies one who is executed for his [present] sin, thus excluding a stubborn and rebellious son, who is executed on account of his ultimate destiny.[10] So we have one exclusion following another, and such always indicates inclusion.[11]

WHEREUPON R. ELIEZER SAID TO THEM: BUT DID NOT SIMEON B. SHETAH HANG etc. R. Hisda said: They taught this[12] only of two different death penalties,[13] but if a single mode of execution is involved, they [two charges] may be tried [on the same day]. But in the instance of Simeon b. Shetah, only one mode of execution was involved, and yet [the Sages] said to him[14] that the cases should not [legally] have been tried! — But if a statement was made, it was made thus: They taught this only of a single death penalty appearing as two. And how can that be? E.g., [when one is accused of] two different transgressions.[15] But cases dealing with the same transgression and the same mode of execution may be tried.[16]

R. Adda b. Ahabah raised an objection: 'Two [capital] cases may not be tried in one day; not even that of an adulterer and his paramour'?[17] R. Hisda explained this as referring to the daughter of a priest and her paramour;[18] or to the daughter of a priest and the refuters of the refuting witnesses.[19]

It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: I have heard[20] that the Beth din may, [when necessary,] impose flagellation and pronounce [capital] sentences even where not [warranted] by the Torah; yet not with the intention of disregarding the Torah but [on the contrary] in order to safeguard it.[21] It once happened that a man rode a horse on the Sabbath in the Greek period and he was brought before the Court and stoned, not because he was liable thereto,[22] but because it was [practically] required by the times.[23] Again it happened that a man once had intercourse with his wife under a fig tree.[24] He was brought before the Beth din and flogged, not because he merited it,[25] but because the times required it.[24] MISHNAH. HOW IS HE HANGED?[26] — THE POST IS SUNK INTO THE GROUND WITH A [CROSS-] PIECE BRANCHING OFF [AT THE TOP].[27] AND HE[28] BRINGS HIS HANDS TOGETHER[29] ONE OVER THE OTHER AND HANGS HIM UP [THEREBY]. R. JOSE SAID: THE POST IS LEANED AGAINST THE WALL,[30] AND HE HANGS HIM UP AFTER THE FASHION OF BUTCHERS. HE IS IMMEDIATELY AFTERWARDS LET DOWN. IF HE IS LEFT [HANGING] OVER NIGHT, A NEGATIVE COMMAND IS THEREBY TRANSGRESSED, FOR IT IS WRITTEN, HIS BODY SHALL NOT REMAIN ALL NIGHT UPON THE TREE, BUT THOU SHALT SURELY BURY HIM THE SAME DAY FOR HE IS HANGED [BECAUSE OF] A CURSE AGAINST GOD,[31] — AS IF TO SAY WHY WAS HE HANGED? — BECAUSE HE CURSED THE NAME [OF GOD]; AND SO[32] THE NAME OF HEAVEN [GOD] IS PROFANED.[33]

R. MEIR SAID:[34] WHEN MAN SUFFERS,[35] WHAT EXPRESSION DOES THE SHECHINAH[36] USE? — MY HEAD IS TOO HEAVY FOR ME, MY ARM IS TOO HEAVY FOR ME.[37] AND IF GOD IS SO GRIEVED OVER THE BLOOD OF THE WICKED THAT IS SHED, HOW MUCH MORE SO OVER THE BLOOD OF THE RIGHTEOUS! AND NOT ONLY OF THIS ONE [A CRIMINAL,] DID THEY [SC. THE SAGES] SAY IT,[38] BUT WHOSOEVER LETS HIS DEAD LIE OVER NIGHT TRANSGRESSES A NEGATIVE COMMAND.[39] IF HE KEPT HIM OVER NIGHT FOR THE SAKE OF HIS[40] HONOUR, TO PROCURE FOR HIM A COFFIN OR A SHROUD, HE DOES NOT TRANSGRESS THEREBY.

AND THEY DID NOT BURY HIM [THE EXECUTED PERSON] IN HIS ANCESTRAL TOMB, BUT TWO BURIAL PLACES WERE PREPARED BY THE BETH DIN, ONE FOR THOSE WHO WERE DECAPITATED OR STRANGLED, AND THE OTHER FOR THOSE WHO WERE STONED OR BURNED.

WHEN THE FLESH WAS COMPLETELY DECOMPOSED, THE BONES WERE GATHERED AND BURIED IN THEIR PROPER PLACE.[41] THE RELATIVES THEN[42] CAME AND GREETED THE JUDGES AND WITNESSES, AS IF TO SAY, WE HAVE NO [ILL FEELINGS] AGAINST YOU IN OUR HEARTS, FOR YE GAVE A TRUE JUDGMENT.

(1) The separation indicates that the rule of the general and particular is not to be applied in the usual way to limit the law solely to the thing specified, but to extend it to some similar thing.

(2) Whatever their offence.

(3) A man.

(4) A woman.

(5) How does he interpret the verse?

(6) Do they not agree with the interpretation given by R. Eliezer; whence then do they deduce the exemption of a woman from hanging?

(7) Deut. XXI, 22, which is the introduction to the passage under discussion,

(8) The term ‘man’ is used of one who has reached the age of thirteen, and one cannot be declared rebellious once he has reached that age. V. infra 68b.

(9) Surely ‘man’ implies the reverse, if anything.

(10) V. infra 72a, top.
(11) V. p. 71, n. 7. Hence this includes a rebellious son.
(12) That two capital cases may not be tried on one day by the same court.
(13) Because where the crimes committed are different, the mitigating circumstances cannot be carefully brought forward to a hasty discussion.
(14) R. Eliezer, in answer to his remark.
(15) E.g., the desecration of the Sabbath and idolatry, although both are punishable by the same penalty — stoning. Two such cases may not be tried on the same day. All the more so cases involving two different modes of execution may certainly not be tried on the same day.
(16) But in the instance of Simeon the son of Shetah the women were convicted for what Scripture regards as two different branches of witchcraft, viz., necromancy and charming. Cf. Lev. XX, 27; hence the Rabbis remarked that his action was illegal, but that it was done in an emergency.
(17) Tosef, Sanh. VII. Although it is one transgression involving the same penalty; moreover, the crime of both consisted in the single identical act.
(18) Whose executions are not simiiar. The woman is punished by burning (Lev. XXI, 9) and the man by strangulation if she be a nesu'ah, or by stoning, if she be an arusah (v. Glos.).
(19) E.g., if A and B, who gave evidence against the daughter of a priest, were refuted by C and D, and the latter were afterwards themselves refuted by E and F, the woman undergoes her due death penalty — burning — since her refuting witnesses C and D were proved to be collusive, and the false witnesses are punished by the same penalty as the male adulterer (strangulation or burning, according to the status of the woman). V. infra 90a.
(20) From my teachers.
(21) Lit., ‘to make a fence round it. ‘
(22) The prohibition against riding on the Sabbath is only a ‘shebuth’, l.e., a Rabbinical injunction. Cf. Bezah. 37a M.
(23) During the time that Palestine was under Greek rule there was great laxity in the Jews’ adherence to their religion, and stringent measures had to be adopted to enforce observance (Rashi). [Cf. Derenbourg, Essai, p. 107.]
(24) I.e., in public.
(25) The law does not prescribe this punishment for such improper conduct. (11) I.e., loose morals prevailed at the time.
(26) After being stoned.
(27) This bears no resemblance at all to crucifixion. Cf. Rabbinowicz, Legislation criminelle du Talmud, p. 111: What a difference between this hanging after death, where the executed man had both his hands tied and did not remain one minute upon the gallows, and the Supplicium, which the Romans inflicted upon Jesus, who was nailed to the cross whilst alive, with his hands on the cross, and left hanging on the gallows all day.
(28) The first witness, Krauss, loc. cit.
(29) [מקיף, Me'iri reads סומך]
(30) And not fixed into the ground.
(31) Deut. XXI, 23. קללת אלהים is interpreted by the Mishnah as an objective genitive — ‘a curse against God’.
(32) If his body be left hanging a considerable time, thus reminding men of his blasphemy.
(33) Man's sin reflecting, in a manner of speaking, on God.
(34) In interpretation of the words קללת אלהים.
(35) In consequence of sin, as those are who are executed in this instance.
(36) The word שכינה is omitted in most editions of the Mishnah. Where it is omitted, the definite article is added to the word לושן, and the phrase is translated, ‘When man suffers, what does the tongue say?’ [The tongue stands for the Divine, and some texts accordingly add here, "if it could be said’, כביכול.]
(37) V. Gemara. The phrase is intended to express how painful it is to God when His children suffer, even though they may deserve punishment for their iniquities, as a father would deplore the pain of his sinful son.
(38) I.e., that the corpse must not be left hanging over night.
(40) ‘HIS’ is ambiguous, and the Talmud on 47a discussed to whom it refers.
(41) I.e., the family vault.
(42) Soon after the execution.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 46b

AND THEY OBSERVED NO MOURNING RITES[1] BUT GRIEVED [FOR HIM],[2] FOR GRIEF IS BORNE IN THE HEART ALONE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Had it been written, 'If he has sinned, then thou shalt hang him,' I should have said that he is hanged and then put to death, as the State does.[3] Therefore Scripture says, And he be put to death, then thou shalt hang him — he is first put to death and afterwards hanged. And how is this done? — It [the verdict] is delayed until just before sunset. Then they pronounce judgment and put him [immediately] to death, after which they hang him; One ties him up and another unties [him],[4] in order to full the precept of hanging.

Our Rabbis taught: [Then thou shalt hang him on] a tree:[5] this I might understand as meaning either a cut or a growing tree; therefore Scripture states, Thou shalt surely bury him:[6] [thus, it must be] one that needs only burial,[7] so excluding that which needs both felling and burial.[8] R. Jose said; [It must be] one that needs only burial, thus excluding that which requires both detaching and burial.[9] And the Rabbis?[10] — Detaching is of no consequence.[11]

AS IF TO SAY WHY WAS HE HANGED? — BECAUSE HE CURSED etc. It has been taught: R. Meir said: A parable was stated, To what is this matter comparable? To two twin brothers [who lived] in one city; one was appointed king, and the other took to highway robbery. At the king's command they hanged him. But all who saw him exclaimed, 'The king is hanged!'[12] whereupon the king issued a command and he was taken down.

R. MEIR SAID etc. How is that implied?[13] — Abaye answered: It is as though one said: It is not light.[14] Raba objected: If so, he [the Tanna] should have said: My head is heavy upon me, my arm is heavy upon me![15] Raba therefore explained it thus: It is as though one said: Everything is light[16] to me. But this [the word Kilelath] is needed for its own purpose![17] — If so, Scripture should have stated 'mekallel:'[18] why 'kilelath'![19] Then perhaps the entire verse was written for that purpose?[20] — If so, it should have stated, 'killath:'[21] why 'kilelath'.[22] Hence both [meanings] are inferred from it.

AND NOT ONLY OF THIS ONE etc. R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Whence is it inferred that whoever keeps his dead [unburied] over night transgresses thereby a negative conmmand?[23] — From the verse, Thou shalt surely bury him;[24] whence we learn that he who keeps his dead [unburied] over night transgresses a prohibitory command. Others state: R. Johanan said on the authority of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Where is burial [as a means of disposing of the dead] alluded to in the Torah? — In the verse, Thou shalt surely bury him: here we find an allusion to burial in the Torah.

King Shapor[25] asked R. Hama: From what passage in the Torah is the law of burial derived? The latter remained silent, and made no answer. Thereupon R. Aba b. Jacob exclaimed: The world has been given over into the hands of fools, for he should have quoted, For thou shalt bury![26] — [That is no proof, since] it might merely have meant, that he should he placed in a coffin![27] But it is also written, Bury, thou shalt bury him.[28] — He [King Shapor] would not have understood it thus.[29] Then he should have proved it from the fact that the righteous were buried![30] — [He might object.] That was merely a general custom.[31] Well then, from the fact that the Holy One, blessed be He, buried Moses![32] — But, [he might answer,] that was so as not to depart from the general custom. But come and hear! And all Israel shall make lamentation for him and they shall bury him.[33] — That [too] might have been done so as not to depart from the general custom. [But again it is written,] They shall not be lamented, neither shall they be buried; they shall be as dung upon the face of the ground?[34] — The purpose of that, however, might have been to depart from the established custom.[35]

The scholars propounded : Is burial [intended to avert disgrace.[36] or a means of atonement?[37] What is the practical difference? If a man said, 'I do not wish myself[38] to be buried.' If you say that it is to prevent disgrace, then it does not depend entirely upon him;[39] but if it is for atonement, then in effect he has declared, 'I do not desire atonement.'[40] What [then is its purpose]? Come and hear! 'From the fact that the righteous were buried.' If then you say that it is for atonement — are the righteous in need thereof? Even so, for it is written, For there is not a righteous man upon earth who doeth good and sinneth not.[41]

Come and hear! [It is written,] And all Israel shall make lamentations for him, and they shall bury him, for only he of Jeroboam shall come to the grave.[42] Now should you assert [that burial] is for the attainment of forgiveness, then the others too should have been buried, that there might be atonement for them? — This one [sc. Abijah], who was righteous, deserved to find forgiveness, but the others were not [worthy] to attain it.

Come and hear! They shall not be lamented neither shall they be buried.[43] — [It may be precisely] in order that there might be no atonement for them.

The scholars asked: Is the funeral oration in honour of the living or of the dead? What is the practical difference? If the deceased had said, Pronounce no funeral oration over me;[44] or again in respect of collecting [the cost] from the heirs![45] — Come and hear! And Abraham came[46] to mourn for Sarah and to weep for her.[47] Now, should you maintain that it is no honour of the living: in that case for Abraham's honour he delayed Sarah's [burial]! — [There] Sarah herself was pleased that Abraham should attain honour through her.

Come and hear! And all Israel shall make lamentation for him and they shall bury him:[48] If you say that it is in honour of the living, were these [Abijah's relatives] worthy of honour?[49] — It is pleasing to the righteous that people[50] should be honoured through them.

Come and hear! They shall not be lamented neither shall they be buried![51] — The righteous do not wish to be honoured through evil-doers.

Come and hear! They shall die in peace, and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings that were before thee, so shall they make a burning for thee, and they shall lament thee, saying Ah! Lord.[52] Now if you maintain that it is in honour of the living, of what consequence was this to him?[53] — He spoke this to him: Israel will be honoured through thee, as they were honoured through thy parents.[54]

(7) Such as a detached post.

(8) E.g., a growing tree.

(9) I.e., excluding a post which is driven into the earth, because it must be detached thence before it can be buried. Therefore he maintains that it must not be fixed in the ground, but merely leaned against the wall.

(10) Do they not admit the justice of R. Jose's arguments, and if so, why do they assert that the post is driven into the earth?

(11) I.e., it is not a weighty action which constitutes a real delay of burial.

(12) Being twins their appearance was similar. So man has some resemblance to God, having been created in His image. Cf. Gen. V, 1.

(14) קל לית.
(15) Using the positive adjective כבד instead of the negative, 'not light'.
(16) Euphemistically for heavy, as no one is inclined to speak evil in connection with his own person. (Rashi). Kohut explains it as meaning that when one is in trouble he cannot pull himself together, and is in a state of light headedness or giddiness. V. 'Aruch. vol. VII, p. 90, n. 4.

(19) Which, though it may mean 'a curse (against God),' (v. p. 304, n. 6), is not as unambiguous as mekallel. Hence it must have been chosen because both meanings can be understood in it.
(20) Which R. Meir deduces from it, according to Raba; how then do I know that it refers to a blasphemer at all? It may refer to any criminal.
(21) קלת; 'the lightness of'.
(22) Which also implies blasphemy.

The fact that he would come to his grave in peace and be mourned by all Israel was foretold to his mother by the Prophet Ahijah, whom she consulted respecting his recovery. Hence it is evident that burial was an established practice after the giving of the law also.
(34) Jer. XVI, 4. Hence non-burial was regarded as a punishment for the wicked.
(35) Which would thus be a great disgrace. Kohut accounts for this discussion being raised on the part of the Persian King Shapor by the fact that the ancient Persians regarded burial as a desecration of the soil, which they looked upon as sacred. V. 'Aruch. Vol. I, p. 271 s.v. ארגז.

(50) I.e., the people as a whole even outside the immediate family circle.

(51) Jer. XVI, 14. If lamentation is in honour of the living, why were the righteous who survived them deprived of that honour?

(52) Jer. XXXIV, 5; a prophecy to Zedekiah, the last king of Judah.

(53) Zedekiah, that Israel would be honoured.

(54) It may be observed, both here and in the following passage, that if the deceased is a king, the honour of the living, if that is the purpose of the funeral eulogy, extends beyond his immediate family circle and embraces the people as a whole.

Come and hear! In whose eyes a vile person is despised[1] — this refers to Hezekiah, king of Judah, who had his father's remains dragged upon a pallet made of ropes.[2] But if it [the respect paid to the dead] is in honour of the living, why [did he do so]?[3] — It was in order that his father might obtain forgiveness. And for the sake of his father's atonement he disregarded[4] the honour of Israel! — Israel itself was pleased to have its honour violated for his sake.

Come and hear! He[5] said to them:[6] Do not hold funeral orations over me in the [small] towns.[7] Now, should you maintain that it is in honour of the living, what did it matter to him? — He wished that Israel might be honoured through him, in greater measure.

Come and hear! IF HE KEPT HIM OVER NIGHT FOR THE SAKE OF HIS HONOUR, TO PROCURE FOR HIM A COFFIN OR A SHROUD HE DOES NOT TRANSGRESS THEREBY. Now surely that [sc. FOR THE SAKE OF HIS HONOUR] means, for the honour of the dead?[8] — No: for the honour of the living. And for the sake of the honour of the living the dead is to be kept overnight! — Yes When did the Merciful One say, His body shall not remain all night upon the tree,[9] only in a case similar to be hanged, where it [the keeping of the corpse] involves disgrace;[10] but here, where there is no disgrace[11] it does not apply.

Come and hear! If he [the relative] kept him overnight for his own honour, so as to inform the [neighbouring] towns of his death, or to bring professional women mourners for him,[12] or to procure for him a coffin or a shroud, he does not transgress thereby, for all that he does is only for the honour of the deceased![13] — What he [the Tanna] means is this: Nothing that is done for the honour of the living involves dishonour to the dead.

Come and hear! R. Nathan said: It is of good omen for the dead when he is punished [in this world] after death. E.g., if one dies and is not mourned, or [properly] buried, or if a wild beast drags him along, or if rain drips down on his bier, it is a good omen for him.[14] We may infer therefore from this that the funeral rites are in honour of the dead.[15] This proves it.

AND THEY DID NOT BURY HIM etc. And why such severity?[16] — Because a wicked man may not be buried beside a righteous one. For R. Aha b. Hanina said: Whence is it inferred that a wicked man may not be buried beside a righteous one? — From the verse, And it came to pass as they were burying a man that behold they spied a band and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elishah, and as soon as the man touched the bones of Elishah, he revived and stood up on his feet.[17] Said R. Papa to him, Perhaps that was only to fulfil [the request], Let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me?[18] — Thereupon he retorted: If so, what of that which was taught: [He only] arose on his feet, but did not return home?[19] Then what of, Let a double portion of thy spirit etc. where is it found that he resurrected [two people]? — As R. Johanan said: He healed the leprosy of Naaman,[20] which is the equivalent of death, as it is written, Let her not, I pray Thee, be as one dead.[21]

And just as a wicked person is not buried beside a righteous one, so is a grossly wicked person not to be buried beside one moderately wicked. Then should there not have been four graveyards?[22] — It is a tradition that there should be but two.

'Ulla said in R. Johanan's name: If one ate forbidden fat[23] and thereupon dedicated a sacrifice,[24] abjured his faith, but subsequently returned, since it [the offering] has [once] been invalidated,[25] it remains so. It has been stated likewise: R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Abbahu in R. Johanan's name; If one ate forbidden fat and thereupon dedicated a sacrifice, became insane, but later recovered, since it [the sacrifice] has once been invalidated.[26] it remains so. And both rulings are necessary. For had he taught us the first one only, [one might have assumed that] it is because he had rendered himself unfit [to offer a sacrifice] by his own action;[27] but as for the latter case [insanity], where he was automatically unfitted, I might say that he is [merely] as a person who has slept [in the meantime].[28] Again, had he taught us only the latter, [one might have thought that] it was because it was not in his power to recover; but there [in the case of apostasy], since it was in his power to return, one might say that it does not [remain invalidated]. Both rulings are therefore necessary.

R. Joseph said: We too have learnt similarly: If there are holy objects therein,[29] that which is dedicated to the altar [i.e.. sacrifices] must die;[30] to the Temple repair, must be redeemed.[31] Now we pondered thereon, Why should they die? Since they [the inhabitants of the condemned city] are executed, they obtain forgiveness: should they [the sacrifices] not then be offered to Heaven![32] Surely then is it not so because we hold that once invalidated, they remain so? Abaye retorted; Do you then think that he who dies in his wickedness obtains forgiveness [by his death]? Nay, he who dies in his wickedness does not obtain forgiveness, for R. Shemaiah learnt: One might have thought that even if his [the priest's] parents had dissociated themselves from the practices of the congregation,[33] he [the priest] may defile himself:[34] but Scripture states, among his people[35] teaching, that it is so provided he [the parent] has followed the practices of his people.[36] Said Raba to him: Dost thou compare one who was executed in his wickedness to one who died in his wickedness? In the latter case, since he dies a natural death, he attains no forgiveness;[37] but in the former, since he does not die a natural death, he obtains forgiveness [by the mere execution]. In proof thereof, it is written, A Psalm of Asaph, O God, the heathen are come into Thine inheritance; they have defiled Thy Holy Temple... They have given the dead bodies of Thy servants to be food unto the fowls of the heaven; the flesh of Thy saints onto the beasts of the earth.[38] Who are meant by 'Thy servants,' and who by 'Thy saints'? Surely 'thy saints' means literally, saints, whereas, 'thy servants' means those who were at first liable to sentence [of death], but having been slain, are designated 'servants'.[39] Abaye retorted: Would you compare

(1) Ps. XV, 4. in answer to the question in verse 1: Who shall sojourn in Thy Tabernacle?

(2) A rude bed made out of ropes so depriving him of a kingly burial, his object being to show that the deceased deserved contempt because of his wickedness in spreading heathendom in Israel. The act could not be viewed as transgression of the fifth commandment, as the latter does not apply to a father who is wicked. — V. Yeb. 22b on the verse, Nor curse a prince among thy people (Ex. XXII, 27). — Again, he did not consider his own honour, as is deduced from the verse quoted above.

(3) Surely he had no right to deprive the living of their due.

(4) Lit., 'delayed'.

(5) R. Judah, the Prince (135-220 C.E.), who died in Sepphoris and was carried to Beth She'arim for burial. V. Keth. 103a.

(6) His sons. So Rashi. From the context in Keth. it appears that the request among other testamentary wishes, was made to the Sages.

(7) But only in the more important towns where there would be larger audience.

(8) Hence it follows that anything done in connection with the dead is for the honour of the dead.

(9) Deut. XXI, 22, in connection with the criminal from whom this procedure has been deduced for all other dead.

(10) I.e., the longer the body remains exposed, the greater the disgrace; and even in the case of an ordinary person, if the funeral is delayed without cause, but simply out of neglect, it is likewise accounted a disgrace to the dead, therefore it is forbidden.

(11) The delay not being due to neglect (v. preceding note), but to the needs of the living.

(12) V. Jer. IX, 16, and cf. M. K. III, 9.

(13) Hence it follows that funeral orations are for the deceased's honour.

(14) That his sins will be forgiven.

(15) For otherwise why should any such disgrace have an atoning effect?

(16) As to have two burial grounds.

(17) II Kings XIII, 21. According to tradition, the man buried was the old prophet of Beth-El (I Kings XIII, 1; v. infra p. 312, and note a.l.). Hence it is seen that it is not the Divine Will to have a wicked man buried with a righteous.

(18) II Kings II, 9. This was Elishah's request of Elijah. Hence, since the latter had restored one person from death (cf. I Kings XVII, 22), Elishah should have restored two, whereas he had as yet restored but one — the son of the Shunamite (II Kings IV) Thus this incident does not prove that a wicked man may not be buried beside a good man.
(19) I.e he did not live for more than a few minutes: surely that is not a fulfilment! Hence the reason of the man's momentary resurrection must have been because the wicked must not be buried beside the righteous.
(20) V. II Kings V.
(21) Num XII, 12, with reference to Miriam, who was stricken with leprosy.
(22) One for each mode of execution since these varied in severity.
(23) V. Lev. III, 17.
(24) To atone for his sin. Cf. Lev. IV, 27-28.
(25) Lit., 'repelled'. Sacrifices are not accepted from apostates Cf. Hul. 5b.
(26) Because he lacked the intelligence to be cognisant of his doing. v. 'Ar. 21a.
(27) In becoming a apostate.
(28) Where no suspension is caused by the normal intermediary gap in one's intelligent consciousness.
(29) The condemned city, all the property of which save holy things, have to be destroyed. Deut XIII, 16.
(30) Even though not destroyed, they cannot he offered, v. infra 112b.
(31) Just as all other objects intended for the repair-fund.
(32) Lit., 'the (most) High'. Since after death their offerings cannot be classed as offerings of the wicked
(33) E.g., if they (the parents) had been apostates.
(34) Through their dead bodies, attending in their funerals, etc.
(35) The whole passage reads: 'Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There shall none be defiled for the dead among his people. But for his kin, that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father etc. Lev. XXI, 1-2. By linking 'among his people' (as interpreted here) with the following verse, 'But for his kin, etc.' it is deduced that only then may a priest defile himself, but not if his parents were, e.g., apostates.
(36) Hence death does not bring forgiveness if one had died in his wickedness.
(37) By mere death without repentance.
(38) Ps. LXXIX, 1-2.
(39) Having attained expiation through execution.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 47b

those who are slain by a [Gentile] Government,[1] to those who are executed by the Beth din? The former, since their death is not in accordance with [Jewish] law, obtain forgiveness; but the latter, whose death is justly merited, are not [thereby] forgiven. This can also he proved from what we learnt: THEY DID NOT BURY HIM IN HIS ANCESTRAL TOMB. And if you should imagine that having been executed, he attains forgiveness: he should be buried [with his fathers]! — Both death and [shameful] burial[2] are necessary [for forgiveness].[3]

R. Adda b. Ahabah objected: THEY OBSERVED NO MOURNING RITES, BUT GRIEVED FOR HIM FOR GRIEF IS BORNE ONLY IN THE HEART. But should you think that having been [shamefully] buried, he attains forgiveness, they should observe mourning rites! — The decay of the flesh too is necessary.[4] This also follows from what he [the Tanna] teaches: WHEN THE FLESH WAS COMPLETELY DECOMPOSED, THE BONES WERE GATHERED AND BURIED IN THEIR PROPER PLACE.[5] This proves it.

R. Ashi said: When do the mourning rites commence? From the closing of the grave with the grave stone.[6] When is atonement effected? After the bodies have experienced a little of the pains of the grave.[7] Therefore, since they [the mourning rites] have once been suspended,[8] they remain so. If so, why must the flesh be consumed?[9] — Because it is impossible [otherwise].[10]

It was the practice of people to take earth from Rab's grave and apply it [as a remedy] on the first day of an attack of fever. When Samuel was told of it,[11] he said: They do well; it is natural[12] soil, and natural soil does not become forbidden, for it is written, And he cast the dust thereof[13] upon the graves of the common people:[14] thus he compares the graves of the common people to idols. Just as [the use of] idols is not forbidden when they are 'attached,'[15] for it is written, [Ye shall utterly destroy all the places, wherein the nations] that ye are to dispossess served their gods, upon the high mountains,[16] their gods which are upon the high mountains [are forbidden for use], but not the mountains which themselves are their gods;[17] so here too, what is 'attached' [i.e., what belongs to the dead] is not forbidden.

An objection is raised: 'If one hews a grave for his [dead] father and then goes and buries him elsewhere, he himself may never he buried therein'?[18] — The reference here is to a built grave.[19] Come and hear! 'A fresh grave[20] may be used. But if an abortion had been laid therein, it is forbidden for use'?[21] — Here too, the reference is to a built grave.

Come and hear! 'Thus we see[22] that there are three kinds of graves:[23] A grave that has been found;[24] a known grave;[25] and one which injures the public.[26] A grave that has been found may be cleared;[27] when cleared, the place thereof is [levitically] clean and permitted for use.[28] A known grave may not be cleared; if it has been, the spot is unclean and forbidden for use.[29] A grave which injures the public may be cleared; if it has been, the place thereof is clean but may not be used'?[30] — Here too, the reference is to a built grave. But may a grave that was found be evacuated? Perhaps a meth-mizwah was buried therein; and a meth-mezwah takes possession of his place of burial![31] A meth-mizwah is quite different, since its existence is generally known.[32]

It has been stated: If one wove a shroud for a dead person: Abaye rules, it is forbidden;[33] Raba says, It is permitted. 'Abaye rules, It is forbidden;' [he holds,] designation is a material act.[34] 'Raba says, It is permitted;' designation is not a material act. What is Abaye's reason? — He deduces [identity of law] from the use of 'sham' [there] both here [with reference to the dead] and in connection with the broken-necked heifer.[35] Just as the broken-necked heifer becomes forbidden through designation,[36] so this too[37] becomes prohibited through designation. But Raba makes his deduction from the use of sham both here and in connection with idol-worship.[38] Just as in idol-worship mere designation imposes no prohibition,[39] so here too, it does not become forbidden through designation. But why does Raba not make his deduction from the broken-necked heifer? — He answers you:

---

(1) Such as that referred to in the Psalm.

(2) I.e in the criminals' graveyard.

(3) The inhabitants of the condemned city, therefore, having undergone both punishments, obtained forgiveness on this view, and their offerings could have been accepted, but for the reason that, having been once invalidated, they remained so.

(4) For forgiveness.

(5) Proving that only then is the crime fully expiated

(6) גולל from גלל 'to roll,' so called because it can be rolled away. This is not to be confused with the modern tombstone, but was a stone placed on top of the grave immediately it was filled in.

(7) The process of decay in the earth was believed to be painful to the body. Cf. Ber. 18b, 'The worm is as painful to the flesh of the dead, as the needle to the flesh of the living.

(8) In the interval between the covering of the grave and the experiencing of pains in the grave. Since forgiveness had not yet been obtained, the dead are yet accounted wicked, and therefore no mourning rites are necessary.

(9) Before they can bury him in the family vault.

(10) I.e., owing to the decomposition of the body, it is impossible to remove the remains before the flesh is completely destroyed.

(11) Thus calling his attention to their use of an object belonging to the dead, which is forbidden. Cf. A.Z. 29b.

(12) Lit., 'world'.

(14) II Kings XXIII, 6.
(15) The technical term for soil, mountains, etc., and things growing therein.
(16) Deut. XII, 2.
(17) I.e., only detached idols are forbidden for use, but if natural earth (which includes mountains) is worshipped, it is not thereby forbidden for use.
(18) Because having been prepared for a particular corpse, it may not be used for anyone else. Now, it is assumed that this holds good even if it was dug for any corpse, 'father' being mentioned merely because that is the usual thing. Thus we see that even natural soil is under the same prohibition.
(19) [A grave erected within the excavation (Yad Ramah).] Such a grave is not regarded as part of the soil, and, had it been prepared for any other person, would not have been forbidden. The prohibition here, however, is on account of filial respect.
(20) One just dug and not yet assigned to any dead body.
(21) The argument is that even natural soil must be forbidden.
(22) Lit., 'it is found that thou sayest.
(23) I.e., which are separate and distinct in the laws pertaining to them.
(24) One in which a dead body had been buried by stealth, and without the consent of the owner of the ground, i.e., it has only now been found to be a grave.
(25) In which a body was buried with the consent of the owner.
(26) E.g., which lies in a thoroughfare.
(27) I.e., the bones may be transferred elsewhere.
(28) Since the burial took place without the knowledge of the owner of the ground, the dead man does not 'take possession of the place' (v. infra for the meaning of that phrase).
(29) This is a precautionary measure against the unwarranted transference of bones.
(30) This proves that natural soil can also be prohibited.
(31) I.e., it becomes his, whether it had a right to the soil in the first place or not. This is one of the ten enactments of Joshua on entering the land. Cf B.K. 81a.
(32) Lit., 'he has a voice'. I.e., the discovery of such was broadcast, and his burial was not really a secret unknown to the owner.
(33) To be used for any other purpose.
(34) I.e., mere designation for the dead subjects it to the same law as though it has been employed for the purpose.
(35) In connection with the dead: And Miriam died there and was buried there (שם) (Num. XX, 1); with reference to the heifer, And shall break the heifer's neck there (Deut. XXI, 4).
(36) Even the mere bringing it down to the valley renders it forbidden for any other purpose (Rashi: cf. Kid. 57a)
(37) Sc. a shroud woven for the dead.
(38) Ye shall surely destroy all the places there (שם) where the nations which ye are to dispossess serve their gods. (Deut. XII, 2).
(39) I.e., if one dedicates an object for idol-worship, it does not become forbidden, unless actually used so, because 'The laws of dedication do not operate in connection with idol worship.' A.Z. 44b.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 48a

Objects of service are deduced from objects of service,[1] thus excluding the broken-necked heifer, which is in itself taboo. And why does Abaye not deduce [his ruling] from idol-worship? — He answers you: Normal practices are deduced from normal practices so excluding idol-worship which is not normal.[2]

(Mnemonic: Veil; Tomb; Hewn. The craftsman's bag.)[3]

An objection is raised: 'If a veil, which is unclean[4] through Midras,[5] is designated [as a cover] for the Book [of the law], it is purified from [the uncleanness of] Midras,[6] yet may become unclean by direct contact [with the dead]'?[7] — Say thus: If it was designated for and wrapped round [the Book].[8] But why are both 'designation' and 'wrapping' necessary?[9] — This is in accordance with R.

Hisda, who said: If a cloth was assigned for wrapping Tefillin therein, and was so used, one may not tie up coins in it. If it was assigned, but not used so, or vice versa,[10] one may tie up coins in it.[11] But on Abaye;s view, viz., that [mere] designation is a material act; if one had assigned the cloth [for the purpose of wrapping up his Tefillin], even though he did not do so, or if he wrapped them in it, and also assigned it [for that purpose], it is so [i.e., the prohibition holds good]; but if he had not assigned it, it is not [forbidden].

Come and hear! 'A tomb[12] built for a man still alive, may be used.[13] If, however, one added a single row of stones for a dead person,[14] no [other] use may be made thereof'?[15] — This deals with a case where the corpse had actually been buried there. If so why [teach] particularly 'if one added [etc.]'; even if not, the law would have been the same! — This is only necessary [to teach that the prohibition remains] even if the body has [subsequently] been removed.[16]

Rafram R. Papa said In R. Hisda's name: If he recognizes that [additional row] he may remove it and the tomb becomes again permissible.

Come and hear! 'If one hews a grave for his [dead] father and then goes and buries him elsewhere, he [himself] may never be buried therein'?[17] — Here it is on account of his father's honour.[18] That too stands to reason. For the second clause teaches: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said; Even if one hews stones[19] [for a tomb] for his father, but goes and buries him elsewhere, he [himself] may never employ them for his own grave.[20] Now, if you agree that it is out of respect for his father, it is correct. But if you say that it is because of designation, does any one maintain that yarn spun for weaving [a shroud is forbidden]?[21]

Come and hear! A fresh grave may be used. But if an abortion has been laid therein, it is forbidden for use,[22] Thus, it is so only if it has actually been laid therein, but not otherwise![23] — The same law holds good even if it [the abortion] was not laid therein;[24] and it [the statement, 'if it has been laid therein'] is [only] intended to exclude the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who maintains: Abortions take no possession of their graves.[25] He therefore teaches us [otherwise].[26]

Come and hear! 'The surplus [of a collection] for the dead must be used for [other] dead,[27] but the surplus [of a collection] for a [particular] deceased person belongs to his heirs'?[28] — This refers to a case [where the money was] collected during [the deceased's] lifetime. But [the Tanna] did not teach thus? For we learnt: The surplus [of a collection] for the dead must be used for [other] dead, but the surplus [of a collection] for a [particular] deceased person belongs to his heirs. Now, it was taught thereon: How so? If it was collected for the dead in general that is where we rule; The surplus [of a collection] for the dead must be used for [other] dead, but if it was collected for a particular dead person, that is where we rule, The surplus [of a collection] for a deceased belongs to his heirs! — But according to your view,[29] consider the second section: R. Meir said: It must remain intact until Elijah comes;[30] R. Nathan ruled: It is to be expended for a monument on his grave, or sprinkling [aromatic wine] before his bier.[31] But Abaye reconciles them[32] in accordance with his view, and Raba in accordance with his view.[33] 'Abaye reconciles them in accordance with his view;' [thus;] all agree that designation is a material act. Now, the first Tanna holds that he [the dead] takes possession[34] only of as much as he needs, and not of the surplus;[35] R. Meir, however, is doubtful whether he takes possession [of the surplus] or not: consequently it must remain intact until Elijah comes; whereas R. Nathan holds that he certainly takes possession [even of the surplus]; hence it is to be employed for a monument on his grave. 'And Raba in accordance with his view;' [thus:] all agree that assignment is not a material act.[36] Now, the first Tanna maintains: Though they humiliated him,[37] he forgives his humiliation for his heirs' sake,[38] R. Meir, however, is doubtful whether he forgives it or not; therefore it must remain intact etc.; whilst R. Nathan takes the definite view that he does not forgive it, therefore the surplus must be expended on a monument for his grave or for sprinkling [aromatic wine] before his bier.

Come and hear! If his father and mother are throwing garments upon him,[39] it is the duty of others to save them.[40]

---

(1) I.e., the shroud for the dead and the animal devoted to be sacrificed to an idol are not in themselves taboo, but merely so because they are used in the service of something that is forbidden. In A.Z. 51b the verse referring to idolatry (quoted in n. 4) is interpreted as bearing upon objects used in the service of idols.

(2) 'Normal' is used in the sense of 'sanctioned by law.' I.e., it is a normal (permitted) practice to make a shroud for the dead, likewise to break the neck of a heifer under prescribed conditions. But under no circumstances can idolatry be 'normal' (i.e. — permitted). Therefore, mere designation in connection with idolatry does not impose a prohibition, because, since it is abnormal (forbidden), one may repent and never use it for the purpose. But in the case of the other two, if permitted (or even obligatory), once they are designated for that purpose they will certainly be used, unless unforeseen circumstances intervene. Therefore the mere designation suffices to give them the same status as though they had actually been used.

(3) [On this mnemonic v. Brull. I., Mnemotechnick p. 44.]

(4) Rashi here, and the commentary of R. Samson of Sens on the Mishnah, Kel. XXVIII, 5, understand it literally, i.e., it had actually become unclean. Maim. and Asheri, however, translate (loc. cit.), which is liable to become unclean, but had not, in fact, become so.

(5) מדרס, a technical term in the laws of purity, from דרס 'to tread', denoting the uncleanness of an object through being used either for sitting on or lying on, i.e., being made to bear the weight of a person with issue. If it is so defiled, it becomes a primary source of uncleanness to men and utensils. A veil is thus liable, since it may be folded up and sat upon, or, when it is being worn on the head, the wearer may lean back on her seat or the wall, and thus cause it to bear her weight.

(6) So according to Rashi and R. Samson. M. and Asheri: it ceases to be liable to the uncleanness of Midras. The reason, according to all interpretations, is that it can no longer be used in such a way.

(7) As all other finished articles which have a definite use (technically, 'utensils'). Rashi translates (with a different reading): yet it retains the uncleanness of touch, i.e., if when the person with issue bore down on it, he also touched it, the uncleanness of Midras disappears, but it retains to the uncleanness of having been touched by him — which is a different degree of impurity', (Kelim XXVIII, 5). This proves that mere designation is a material act which suffices to change the status of an object, and thus contradicts Raba's ruling.

(8) Hence there was not merely designation, but also use; the combination can certainly effect a change.

(9) The use itself should have sufficed for the change.

(10) I.e., Tefillin were wrapped therein, but it had not been previously assigned for that purpose.

(11) I.e., assignment by itself is not a material act. Again, wrapping something in it without having made the assignment is assumed to be merely incidental. The same applies to the veil, and therefore both are required. — Of course, that is only on Raba's view; Abaye will interpret the Mishnah cited quite literally.

(12) נפש. The word actually means a structure built over a tomb, to be used as a grave.

(13) For other purposes.

(14) I.e., the addition was made when the person was actually dead.

(15) Thus proving that mere designation is a material act.

(16) When the prohibition of its use depends on whether a special row of stones was added for the corpse. If not it loses its forbidden character, for it is then like the cloth in which Tefillin were wrapped without its having been previously designated for that purpose.

(17) V. p. 315, n. 12.

(18) That the grave is prohibited to serve as the son's burial place.

(19) From a quarry for the purpose of building a vault.

(20) Lit., 'may never be buried in them.'

(21) None, not even Abaye. For Abaye only maintains that if a shroud is actually woven, and so fit for its purpose, it is forbidden through mere designation. But when yarn is spun, though its ultimate destiny is to be woven into a shroud, it is not forbidden, since as yarn it is useless for its purpose. Similarly, when stones are prepared for building a tomb, they should not become forbidden. Hence the prohibition must be on account of filial respect, not designation.

(22) V. p 316, n. 2.

(23) I.e., if it was merely assigned for an abortion, it is not forbidden, proving that mere assignment is not a material act.
(24) On account of the assignment of the abortion.
(25) I.e., they do not impose a lasting prohibition thereon, to operate even after the graves are cleared.
(26) Therefore the Tanna is particular to mention 'an abortion,' but is not exact in his statement as to what is done for the abortion. But actually, even if the grave is merely designated for an abortion, it is forbidden for use.
(27) If a collection was made for burying the poor, the actual person, however, being unspecified, and at any particular moment there is a balance in hand, it must be kept for other dead. This is so even if, when the collection was made, it was known that it was for certain dead, but they were not specified.
(28) To be used for any purpose, thus proving that designation is not a material act (Mishnah Shek. II. 5).
(29) That assignment is not material.
(30) I.e., Elijah the prophet glorified in the Haggadah as a messenger charged with various tasks, one of which is to be the precursor of the Messiah, when he will solve all questions in doubt. (Cf. B.M. 29b; Pes. 15a).
(31) From this it would seem that since it was designated for the dead,it must be so used, proving that designation is a material act. [The words, 'Or sprinkling . . . his bier', do not occur in the cited Mishnah, but in Tosef, Shek. I.]
(32) The differences of opinion in the Mishnah.
(33) In such a way that the differing Tannaim may he seen to agree with their (Abaye's and Raba's) views respectively.
(34) I.e., it becomes his peculiar property, in the sense that it may not be used for any other purpose.
(35) Lit., 'of what he does not need.'
(36) And the reasons given by R. Meir and R. Nathan for prohibiting the balance for general use is not that it is actually forbidden, but because the deceased was put to shame when a public collection was made for his funeral.
(37) V. preceding note.
(38) I.e., that they may have the benefit of the surplus.
(39) Their dead son. It was an expression of extreme grief, and a symbol that they were ready to renounce everything left behind, that belonged to him (Rashi).
(40) By removing them from the corpse, as though returning lost property. Now, had assignment been a material act, how could they be saved after being dedicated to the dead?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 48b

— There [it is done] solely out of grief.[1] If so, how explain what was taught regarding this: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: When is this so? Only if they [the garments] have not [actually] touched the bier, but if they have, they are forbidden [for use]?[2] — 'Ulla interpreted this as referring to a bier which is buried with him,[3] [the garments being forbidden] because they might be confused with the vestments of the dead.[4]

Come and hear! 'One may not put money in a bag which was made to hold Tefillin.[5] But if one [incidentally] put Tefillin in a bag, he may afterwards put money therein'?[6] — Let us put it thus: If a man made it [for Tefillin] and placed Tefillin therein, it is forbidden to put money in it: and this is in accordance with R. Hisda.[7]

Come and hear! 'If one says to a craftsman, Make me a sheath for a Scroll [of the Law], or a receptacle for Tefillin,' before they are actually used for their sacred purposes, they may be employed for secular requirements; but once used for their sacred purposes they may not be put to secular use!'[8] — There is here a dispute among Tannaim for it has been taught: If one overlaid them [the Tefillin] with gold or covered them with the hide of an unclean beast, they are unfit.[9] If with the hide of a clean beast, they are permissible, even though it was not dressed for the purpose. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Even if covered with the hide of a clean beast, they are unfit, unless it was not specially dressed for the purpose.[10] Rabina said to Raba: Is there any place where the dead lie while the shroud is being woven?[11] Yes, he answered; e.g., it is so with the dead of Harpania.[12] Meremar said in a lecture: The law rests with Abaye. But the Rabbis say: The law rests with Raba. In fact the law is as Raba says.

Our Rabbis taught: The property of those executed by the State[13] belongs to the King: the property of those executed by the Beth din belongs to their heirs. R. Judah said: Even the property of those executed by the State goes to their heirs. Said they to R. Judah: But it is not written, Behold he [Ahab] is in the vineyard of Naboth whither he is gone down to take possession of it?[14] — He answered: He [Naboth] was his [the King's] cousin,[15] and therefore he [Ahab] was his legitimate heir.[16] But he [Naboth] had many sons! — He [the King] slew both him and his sons, he replied, as it is written, Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth and the blood of his sons.[17] And the Rabbis?[18] — They refer to his potential sons.[19] Now, on the view that their property belongs to the King, it is correct: hence it is said, Naboth did curse God and the King.[20] But on the view that their estate belongs to their heirs,[21] why mention and the King?[22] — But even according to your reasoning,[23] why state, 'God'?[24] Hence [it must have been added] in order to increase the anger [of the judges].[25] So here too,[26] it [the mention of the King] was made in order to increase the anger [of the judges].[27] Now, on the view that the estate belongs to the King, it is correct: hence it is written, And Joab fled unto the tent of the Lord and caught hold of the horns of the Altar;[28] and it is further written, And he said Nay, but I will die here.[29] But on the view that their estate belongs to their heirs, what difference did it make to him? — [It would serve] to prolong his life for a while.[30]

And Benaiah brought back word unto the King saying, thus said Joab and thus he answered me:[31] He [Joab] had said to him: Go and tell him [the King]: Thou canst not inflict a twofold punishment upon me:[32] if thou slayest me, thou must submit to the curses which thy father uttered against me;[33] but it thou art unwilling [to submit thereto], thou must let me live and suffer from thy father's curses against me. And the King said unto him, Do as he hath said,[34] and fall upon him and bury him.[35]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name; All the curses wherewith David cursed Joab were fulfilled in David's own descendants. [It is written:] Let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth by the sword, or that lacketh bread.[36] 'He that hath an issue' [was fulfilled] in Rehoboam,[37] for it is written, And king Rehoboam made speed[38] to get him up to his chariot to flee to Jerusalem;[39] whilst it is elsewhere written, And what saddle soever he that hath the issue rideth upon shall be unclean.[40] 'A leper' — Uzziah,[41] for it is written, But when he was strong his heart was lifted up so that he did corruptly, and he trespassed against the Lord his God, for he went unto the Temple of the Lord to burn the incense upon the altar of incense;[42] and it is further written, And the leprosy broke forth on his forehead.[43] 'He that leaneth on a staff' — Asa,[44] for it is written, Only in the time of his age he was diseased in his feet:[45] concerning which Rab Judah said in Rab's name: He was afflicted with gout.[46] Mar Zutra the son of R. Nahman asked R. Nahman; What is it [this complaint] like? — He answered: Like a needle in the raw flesh. But how did he [R. Nahman] know that? — Either because he himself suffered with it; alternatively, he had a tradition from his teacher; or again [he knew it] because, The secret[47] of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and His covenant to make them know it.[48] 'He that falleth by the sword,' — Josiah,[49] for it is written, And the archers shot at king Josiah:[50] concerning which Rab Judah said in Rab's name: They riddled his body like a sieve. 'That lacketh bread' — Jechoniah,[51] for it is written, And for his allowance, there was a continual allowance given him [by the king].[52] Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Thus people say,

(1) But without seriously intending to devote the garments to the dead. Therefore it is not regarded as designation at all.

(2) But seeing that the act is done only out of grief and there is no assignment to the dead at all, why should they be forbidden?

(3) Such was the custom in those days.

(4) I.e., the permission given to use the garments might be taken as applying also to the vestments, seeing that they come in contact with one another. Otherwise they might have been permitted for use, not because assignment is not material, but because in this case it was only an expression of grief.

(5) Although it had not actually been used for that purpose.

(6) Hence assignment is material.

(7) Who holds that both designation and actual use are needed for prohibition. Cf. supra 48a.
(8) V. Tosef Meg. II. This definitely proves that use and not designation is material, and contradicts Abaye.
(9) Cf. Shab. 108a on the verse in Ex. XIII, 9, That the law of the Eternal may be in thy mouth, — they (the Tefillin) should be made out of objects permissible for food.
(10) Men. 42b. Git. 45b. thus, the first Tanna considers designation as immaterial, whereas R. Simeon B. Gamaliel holds it to be a material act. Hence Raba agrees with the first Tanna; Abaye is with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(11) I.e., surely one does not wait for a person to die and delay the funeral while a shroud is being woven. In that case, the dispute of Abaye and Raba, whether a shroud woven for the dead (which means when the person is actually dead) may be used for other purposes, is entirely an imaginary one, such circumstances being inconceivable.
(12) [Or Neharpania (v. D.S. a.l.), a town in Babylon in the Mesene district, v. Obermeyer, op. cit., p. 197.] According to Rashi, its inhabitants were so poor that they could not afford to prepare the shrouds beforehand,and only after a death occurred was a public collection made, and a shroud hastily woven. [According to Obermeyer, op. cit., p. 201, the corpse in the meantime was lying naked in accordance with the Zoroastrian practice which the Jews of that town seemed to have adopted which forbade the covering or dressing of a corpse with any cloth but one that had been specially woven and prepared for the purpose.]
(13) The reference is to the Jewish State, e.g., those executed for treason against the King.
(14) So God said to Elijah. I Kings XXI, 18. The expression ‘take possession’ (from the verb ‘to inherit’) indicates that he took legitimate possession, as an heir.
(15) Lit., ‘the son of his father's brother.’
(16) This statement has no Biblical source.
(17) II Kings IX, 26.
(18) How could they urge the fact that he had sons in face of the definite statement that they were slain?
(19) Lit., ‘to the sons that should have issued from him.’ — A murderer is held guilty not only of his victim's death, but also for the frustration of the lives of his potential descendants for all time. (Cf. Mishnah. supra 37a). But in their view, Ahab did not slay his actual sons.
(20) I Kings XXI, 13, pointing to his culpability for treason to the King in addition to blasphemy, which is punished by the Beth din; hence his estate would fall to the crown.
(21) So that Ahab took possession of the vineyard as heir.
(22) Since blasphemy itself was sufficient for conviction, why needlessly add a false indictment?
(23) That treason was punished by death and royal confiscation.
(24) The charge of blasphemy being in itself superfluous.
(25) I.e., they might have been inclined to think that a charge of treason alone was trumped up, but when blasphemy was added, they assumed it to be genuine. So Rashi. Kimhi maintains that the judges knew the testimony to be false, but that the accusation was made stronger in order to keep the people from revolting against the execution.
(26) I.e., even if he held that their estate did not belong to the King.
(27) I.e. to make the crime appear more heinous.
(28) I KIngs II, 28.
(29) Ibid. 30. I.e., he declined to be tried by the King so that his estate might not be confiscated.
(30) He wished to gain the time which it would require to take his message to the King and bring back an answer.
(31) Ibid. This gives the impression that Benaiah had had a long conversation with Joab.
(32) Lit., ‘that man.’
(33) For the murder of Abner. V. II Sam. Ill, 29: The curse is quoted in the text. — That curse then was to be Joab's punishment. But if Solomon executed him, the curse would be transferred to Solomon himself.
(34) And kill him where he is.
(35) I Kings II, 31. Thus Solomon accepted the curses.
(36) II Sam. III, 29.
(37) Solomon's only son. V. I Kings XIV, 21.
(38) Lit., ‘used effort’.
(39) I Kings XII, 18.
(40) Lev. XV, 9. The deduction is made from a comparison of the uses of the expression ‘to ride’ in both verses. According to Kimhi, however, it is deduced from the fact that he had to use an effort to mount his chariot.
(41) Son of Amaziah, called also Azariah, Cf. II Kings XV, 1.

(42) II Chron. XXVI, 16.
(43) Ibid. 19.
(44) Son of Abijah, King of Judah. II Kings XV, 8.
(45) I Kings XV, 23.
(46) Podagra, gout in the feet, in consequence of which he had to lean on a staff.
(47) E.V. 'The counsel.'
(48) Ps. XXV, 14, — i.e., as a Divine revelation.
(49) Son of Amon, II Kings XXII, 1.
(50) II Chron. XXXV, 23.
(51) Grandson of Josiah.
(52) Of Babylon, II Kings XXV, 30.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 49a

Let thyself be cursed rather than curse [another].[1]

Then Joab was brought before the Court,[2] and he [Solomon] judged and questioned him, 'Why didst thou kill Abner?'[3] He answered, 'I was Asahel's[4] avenger of blood.'[5] 'But Asahel was a pursuer!'[6] 'Even so,' answered he; 'but he [Abner] should have saved himself at the cost of one of his [Asahel's] limbs.'[7] 'Yet perhaps he could not do so, remonstrated [Solomon]. 'If he could aim exactly at the fifth rib,' he retorted, ('even as it is written, Abner with the hinder end of the spear smote him at the waist;[8] concerning which R. Johanan said: It was at the fifth rib, where the gall-bladder and liver are suspended.) — could he not have aimed at one of his limbs?' Thereupon [Solomon] said: 'Let us drop [the incident of] Abner; why didst thou kill Amasa?'[9] He answered: 'Amasa disobeyed the royal order,[10] for it is written, Then said the King to Amasa, Call me the men of Judah together within three days etc. So Amasa went to call the men of Judah together; but he tarried etc.' 'But,' said he [Solomon], 'Amasa interpreted [the particles] 'Ak and Rak.'[11] [Thus:] he found them[12] just as they had begun [the study of] a tractate; whereupon he said: It is written, Whosoever he be that shall rebel against thy [the King's] commandments and shall not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death.[13] Now, one might have thought that this holds good even [when the transgression is committed] for the sake of the study of the law: it is therefore written, only [Rak] be strong and of good courage.[14] But thou thyself[15] didst disobey the royal order, for it is written, And the tidings[16] come to Joab, for Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he had turned not after Absalom.[17] What is the purpose of 'though he had turned not.'[18] — Rab Judah said: He wished to turn [after him], but did not. And why did he not? — R. Eleazar said: David still possessed his vitality.[19] R. Jose the son of R. Hanina said: David's star[20] was still in the ascendant, for Rab Judah said in Rab's name:[21] Four hundred children had David, all the issue of yefoth to'ar; they had long locks, and used to march at the head of the troops; it was they who were the men of power in David's household.

This [view of Joab] is in contradiction to the view held by R. Abba b. Kahana, who said: But for David,[22] Joab would not have succeeded in[23] war; and but for Joab, David could not have devoted himself to [the study of] the Torah, for it is written, And David executed justice and righteousness for all his people, and Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host:[24] — i.e., why was David able to execute 'justice and righteousness for all his people'? — Because 'Joab was over the host.' And why was 'Joab over the host'?[25] — Because 'David executed justice and righteousness for all his people.'

And when Joab was come out from David he sent messengers after Abner and they brought him back from Bor-Sira.[26] What meaning has [the name] Bor-Sira? — R. Abba b. Kahana said: Bor[27] and Sira[28] caused Abner to be killed.[29]

And Joab took him aside into the midst of the gate to speak with him quietly.[30] R. Johanan said:

He judged him according to the law of the Sanhedrin.[31] Thus he asked him: 'Why didst thou kill Asahel?' — 'Because Asahel was my pursuer.' 'Then thou shouldst have saved thyself[32] at the cost of one of his limbs!' 'I could not do that,' [he answered]. 'If thou couldst aim exactly at his fifth rib, couldst thou not have prevailed against him by [wounding] one of his limbs?'

'To speak with him ba-sheli [quietly]:' Rab Judah said in Rab's name: [He spoke to him] concerning the putting off [of the shoe].[33] 'And smote him there at the waist:' R. Johanan said: At the fifth rib, where the gall-bladder and liver are suspended.[34]

And the Lord will return his [Joab's] blood upon his own head because he fell upon two men more righteous and better than he.[35] 'Better,' because they interpreted aright [the particles] 'ak and rak,[36] whilst he did not;[37] 'More righteous,' because they were instructed verbally,[38] yet did not obey, whereas he was instructed in a letter,[39] and nevertheless carried it out.

But Amasa did not beware of the sword that was in Joab's hand.[40] Rab said: That was because he did not suspect him. And he was buried in his own house in the wilderness.[41] But was his house a wilderness?[42] — Rab Judah said in Rab's name: It was like a wilderness, just as a wilderness is free to all, so was Joab's house free to all.[43] Alternatively: 'Like a wilderness' means, just as a wilderness is free from robbery and licentiousness,[44] so was Joab's house free from robbery and licentiousness.

And Joab kept alive[45] the rest of the city:[46] R. Judah said: Even fish broth and hashed fish he would merely taste and then distribute to the poor.[47]

(1) For, as in this case, the curses always recoil on oneself or on one's descendants.

(2) This is a continuation of the narrative commenced on 48b, which was interrupted to shew that all David's curses were fulfilled upon his descendants.

(3) Cf. II Sam. III, 27.

(4) Joab's brother, who pursued Abner when he fled for his life, after having been defeated by Joab at Gibeon whilst fighting for Ishbosheth, Saul's surviving son, v. II Sam. II, 23.

(5) Cf. Num. XXXV, 19.

(6) I.e., Abner, seeing his life in danger, killed him in self-defence. Cf. II Sam. II, 8-32.

(7) And so incapacitate him, instead of inflicting a mortal wound. V. infra 74a: If one can injure his adversary in self-defence, but kills him instead, he is guilty of murder.

(8) II Sam. II, 23 חומש 'loins', 'waist', means also 'fifth'. Hence R. Johanan's interpretation.

(9) Son of Abigail, King David's sister, who commanded the rebel army of Absalom. Subsequently he was pardoned by David and given the command of the army when the rebellion of Shebah broke out (II Sam. XX). On that account Joab saw a dangerous rival in him. II Sam. XVII, 25; XIX, 14.

(10) Lit., 'he rebelled against the throne.' This was punishable by death.

(11) אך, 'but'; רק, 'only', both denoting limitation.

(12) The men of Judah.

(13) Josh. I, 18.

(14) Rak intimating a limitation. Hence the duty to fulfil the King's command does not apply where one is engaged in the study of the Law, According to the view held by Amasa, God's Law seemed more important to him than the will of the King, and no transgression was involved in waiting until they had finished their study.

(15) Lit., 'that man.'

(16) Of Solomon's ascent to the throne.

(17) I Kings II, 28.

(18) For the information that he did not turn after Absalom seems superfluous at this point.

(19) Lit., 'moisture'. But as soon as David became feeble he inclined after Adonijah.

(20) איצטגנינו (astrological power), symbol of his mighty men upon whom he placed reliance in war, and who led him to victories.

(21) V. nn. 4-5, supra p. 114.
(22) Who studied the Torah continuously.
(23) Lit., 'waged'.
(24) II Sam, VIII, 15-16.
(25) I.e., why was he successful in war?
(26) Ibid. III,26.
(27) בור 'well',hence container of water, a pitcher.
(28) סירה a thorn-bush.
(29) The explanation of this statement is found in J. Sotah I, where one of the reasons given for Abner's death was his indifference to the effecting of a reconciliation between Saul and David, instead of seeking which, he rather endeavoured to increase their hatred. He did not take advantage of the following two occasions when he might have brought about the reconciliation: One, when Saul entered the cave of En-Gedi where David and his band were hidden, and the latter, though he could have destroyed his pursuer, contented himself with merely cutting off the skirt of his robe (I Sam. XXIV, 4). The second time, in the wilderness of Ziph, when David found Saul sleeping and took the spear and jug of water from beside his head (ibid. XXIV, 12ff), subsequently reproaching Abner for not watching better over the King. Abner, however, made nought of this generous treatment of Saul by David, contending that the jug of water might have been given to David by one of the servants, whilst the skirt of the robe might have been torn away by a thorn-bush, and left hanging. These two incidents are hinted at in the words Bor (well, i.e., a jug of water), and Sira (a thorn-bush).
(30) II Sam. III, 27.
(31) This is inferred from the word 'gate', frequently denoting 'court'; cf. Deut. XXI, 19.
(32) Lit., 'him', i.e., save the pursuer from committing a crime, v. supra p. 326, n 8.
(33) The word בשלי is here derived from נשל to draw or pull off. Joab is supposed to have inquired from Abner in what way a one-armed woman would loosen the shoe in the ceremony of halizah (v. Deut. XXV, 9). On his replying that she would do it with her teeth (cf. Yeb 105a), he asked him to demonstrate it, and as he stooped low to do so, he smote him. This incident is hinted at in David's words of farewell to Solomon: He (sc. Joab) shed the blood of war in peace, — and put the blood of war in the shoes that were on his feet (I Kings II, 5).
(34) V. p. 326, n. 9.
(35) And slew them with the sword. I Kings II, 32.
(36) Signifying limitation. v. p. 326, n. 12. According to this, the king's orders were not to be obeyed where they involved serious transgressions; v. p. 327 n. 2, with reference to Amasa, Abner's attitude is intimated in a reference to the murder of the Priests of Nob (v. I Sam. XXII, 17). And the King said unto the guard that stood about him, turn and slay the Priests of the Lord, but the servants of the king would not put forth their hand to fall upon the Priests of the Lord. Cf. also supra 20a, where, according to R. Isaac, Abner tried to restrain the king from committing a murder, but without avail.
(37) When the king directed him to expose Uriah the Hittite to the enemy in such a manner as to ensure his destruction. V. II Sam. XI, 14ff.
(38) To kill the priests of Nob.
(39) Ibid. XI, 14. And a verbal command by the king is stronger than a mere written order.
(40) II Sam. XX, 10.
(41) I Kings II, 34.
(42) Regarding 'in' as indicating apposition: i.e.,'in his own house,' viz. 'the wilderness.'
(43) I.e., Everyone was sure to find hospitality there.
(44) Because it it not inhabited by men.
(45) יהיה lit., 'made alive,' (E V,: repaired) i.e., fed.
(46) I Chron. XI, 8.
(47) I.e., even his smallest meal he would share with the poor.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 49b

MISHNAH. FOUR DEATHS HAVE BEEN ENTRUSTED TO BETH DIN: STONING, BURNING, SLAYING [BY THE SWORD] AND STRANGULATION.[1] R. SIMEON

ENUMERATED THEM THUS: BURNING, STONING, STRANGULATION AND SLAYING.[2] THAT IS THE MANNER OF STONING.[3]

GEMARA. Raba said in the name of R. Sehora in the name of Rab: Whatever the Sages taught by number is in no particular order, excepting the [Mishnah of] the seven substances. For we learnt: Seven substances are applied to the stain, viz., tasteless saliva,[4] the liquid exuded by crushed beans, urine, natron,[5] lye,[6] Cimolian earth[7] and ashleg.[8] Now, the latter clause [of that Mishnah] states: If they were not applied in this order, or if they were all applied simultaneously,[9] the test is inconclusive. R. Papa the Elder said in Rab's name: The same [exception] applies to 'FOUR DEATHS etc'; for, since R. Simeon disputes the order, it is to be inferred that it is exact. But the other?[10] — He does not refer to cases [where the order] is disputed. R. Papa said: The order of Service on the Day of Atonement is also exactly taught, for we learnt: All the rites of the Day of Atonement which are prescribed in a particular order, if one was performed out of its turn, it is invalid. But the other?[11] — That law is merely one of added stringency.[12] R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua said: The order of the Tamid[13] is also exact, for in connection therewith we have learnt: This is the order of the Tamid.[14] But the other?[15] — That [Mishnah] merely teaches that the precept of the Tamid is best carried out in this order.[16]

[Now reverting to Raba's statement] this ['whatever etc.'] is intended to exclude the precept of halizah[17] [from the need of a particular order in its procedure], for we have learnt: the precept of halizah is thus carried out: — He [the deceased man's brother] and his sister-in-law come before Beth din, who counsel him in a manner fitting for him,[18] as it is written. Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him.[19] Then she declares: My husband's brother refuseth etc.,[20] whilst he states: I like not to take her.[21] The members of Beth din thereupon announce in Hebrew:[22] Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and remove his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his sight[23] — the spittle was to be visible to the judges — Then shall she answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man etc. . . . And his name shall be called in Israel etc. Now Rab Judah said: The precept of halizah is carried out thus: [First] she declares [My husband's brother refuseth etc.]; then he declares [I like not to take her]; then she removes his shoe and spits in his presence, and then she again declares [So shall it be done etc.]. But we pondered thereon: What does Rab Judah teach us? Is this not stated in the Mishnah? — Rab Judah teaches us this: The precept is best carried out thus; but if the order was changed, it does not matter. It has been taught likewise: Whether the halizah was performed before the spitting or the reverse, the ceremony is efficacious.

Raba's statement above is also intended to exclude that which we learnt: The High Priest officiates [in the Temple] wearing eight garments, but the ordinary priest wears only four, viz., tunic, breeches, mitre and girdle; to which the High Priest adds the breast plate, ephod, robe[24] and head plate. Now it has been taught: Whence do we know that nothing must be donned before the breeches? From the verse: [He shall put on the holy linen tunic,] and the linen breeches shall [already] be upon his flesh.[25] But why does the Tanna give precedence [in this enumeration] to the tunic? — Because it is given precedence in Scripture;[26] and why does Scripture do this? — Because it prefers to state first that which covers the whole body.[27]

STONING, BURNING, etc.

Stoning is severer than burning, since thus the blasphemer[28] and the idol-worshipper are executed.[29] Wherein lies the particular enormity of these offences? — Because they constitute an attack upon the fundamental belief of Judaism.[30] On the contrary, is not burning more severe, since that is the punishment of a priest's adulterous daughter; and wherein lies the greater enormity of her offence: in that she profanes her father?[31]

(1) The enumeration is in descending order of severity.

(2) The Gemara discusses the consequences of this dispute.
(3) This refers to the directions given in the Mishnah on 45a.
(4) I.e., the saliva of one who had not eaten that day. Nid. 62a.
(5) Nether () is correctly translated 'nitre' in Jer. II, 22, where it signifies carbonate of soda, a cleansing agent. But by a transference of terms 'natron' has been adopted to denote carbonate of soda; whilst 'nitre' now denotes saltpetre, which has no washing properties.
(6) A sort of soap.
(7) A clay used in cleaning clothes.

(10) Raba, why did he not cite our Mishnah as an exception?
(11) R. Papa the Elder, why does he not include this latter Mishnah among the exceptions?
(12) I.e., Scripture, in insisting on a certain order of ceremonial on the Day of Atonement, did not thereby ascribe greater sanctity to any particular rite, but decreed the order merely as a matter of greater stringency. having regard to the solemnity of the Day. But in those cases cited as exceptions, the order is intimately bound up with the effectiveness or importance of the things mentioned. E.g.,in our Mishnah the order of deaths is in descending severity; in the Mishnah treating of the test applied to a stain, these materials, if applied in a different order, are actually ineffective.
(13) The daily burnt offering.
(14) Tamid VII, 3; the preceding Mishnah enumerated its rites: this Mishnah states that they must be performed in the order taught.

(30) Since both are virtually a denial of the existence of the true God. This is undoubtedly an assertion that the confession of God is the cardinal tenet of Judaism — a dogma, in fact. Notwithstanding the controversies that have arisen on the questions whether Judaism contains any dogmas, there can be no doubt that the rejection of idolatry is a sine qua non of Judaism. V. Schechter, Studies in Judaism: The Dogmas of Judaism. Cf. also Y. D. 268, 2, on the admission of proselytes, of whom is demanded the profession of belief in God and the rejection of idolatry.
(31) V. infra 52b. This discussion, though refuted at a later stage, is interesting as shewing the eminently practical character of Judaism. Though adultery does not undermine the essential basis of Judaism, it is nevertheless suggested that it is to be regarded as a greater offence than idolatry, particularly where its results extend beyond the person of the offender.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 50a

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 50a

— The Rabbis[1] maintain that a priest's daughter, only if a nesu'ah, is excepted [from the usual punishment by strangulation meted out for adultery] and is executed by burning; but an arusah, [who, if an Israelite's daughter, is stoned] as [if a priest's daughter] not excepted [from the usual punishment, i.e., she is stoned likewise].[2] Now since [in a case of a priest's daughter] an arusah is singled out by the Divine Law [and punished] by stoning [instead of burning], we may conclude that stoning is more severe than burning.[3] Stoning is severer than slaying by the sword, since it is the punishment of a blasphemer and an idol worshipper, the greater enormity of whose offence has already been stated.[4] On the contrary, is not death by the sword more severe, since that is the penalty for the inhabitants of a seduced city,[5] the graver character of whose sin is proved by the fact that their property is destroyed? — Now, let us consider: whose crime is greater; that of the seducer or of the seduced? Surely that of the seducer.[6] And it has been taught: The seducers of a seduced city are executed by stoning.[7]

Stoning is severer than strangulation, since it is the penalty of the blasphemer and the idol worshipper, the enormity of whose offence has already been stated. On the contrary, is not strangulation severer, since it is the punishment of one who smites his father or mother, the greater seriousness of whose offence lies in the fact that their honour is assimilated to that of the Omnipresent?[8] — Since the Divine Law excluded an arusah, the daughter of an Israelite, from the general penalty of a nesu'ah, the daughter of an Israelite, altering her punishment from strangulation to stoning, it follows that stoning is severer.[9]

Burning is severer than slaying by the sword, since it is the penalty of a priest's adulterous daughter, the greater enormity of whose offence lies in the fact that she thereby profanes her father. On the contrary, is not the sword severer, since this is the penalty of the inhabitants of a seduced city, the enormity of whose crime is shewn by the fact that their property is destroyed? — 'Her father' is mentioned in connection with stoning;[10] 'her father' is also mentioned in reference to burning:[11] just as when 'her father' is mentioned in connection with stoning, stoning is severer than the sword; so 'her father', when mentioned in connection with burning, shews that burning is severer than slaying by the sword.[12]

Burning is severer than strangulation, since it is the punishment of a priest's adulterous daughter, the enormity of whose offence has already been stated. On the contrary, is not strangulation severer, since it is the punishment of one who smites his father or mother, the greater enormity of whose offence lies in the fact that their honour is assimilated to that of the Omnipresent? — Since the Divine Law varied the penalty of a nesu'ah, if a priest's daughter, from that of a nesu'ah, if an Israelite's daughter, from strangling to burning, we may conclude that burning is severer.[13]

Slaying is severer than strangling, since thereby the inhabitants of a seduced city are punished, the severity of whose punishment is attested by the fact that their property is destroyed. On the contrary, is not strangulation severer, being the punishment of one who smites his father or mother, the greater enormity of whose offence lies in the fact that their honour is assimilated to that of the Almighty? — Even so the offence against the fundamental tenet of Judaism [which is the crime of the seduced city] is greater.

R. SIMEON ENUMERATED THEM THUS etc.

[In his view] burning is severer than stoning, since it is the punishment of a priest's adulterous daughter, the enormity of whose offence lies in the fact that she profanes her father. On the contrary, is not stoning severer, being the punishment of a blasphemer and idol-worshipper, the gravity of whose offence lies in that they reject the fundamental tenet of Judaism? — R. Simeon's view here is in accordance with his other opinion, viz., that a priest's adulterous daughter, whether an arusah or a nesu'ah, is excepted [from the punishment meted out to an Israelites' daughter], in that her penalty is burning. Now since the Divine Law varied the punishment of an arusah, if a priest's daughter, from that of an Israelite's daughter, from stoning to burning, it follows that burning is a severer penalty.

Burning is severer than strangulation, since it is the punishment of a priest's adulterous daughter, the gravity of whose offence has already been stated. On the contrary, is not strangulation severer than burning, being the punishment of one who strikes his father or mother,the enormity of whose offense is constituted by the fact that their honour is compared to that of the Omnipresent?-Since the Divine Law excluded a nesu'ah, the daughter of a priest, from the penalty of a nesu'ah, if an Israelite's daughter, by changing her death from strangling to burning, it follows that burning is severer.

Burning is severer than slaying, since it is the punishment of a priest's adulterous daughter, the enormity of whose offence has already been stated. On the contrary, is not the sword more severe, since it is the penalty of the inhabitants of a seduced city, the gravity of whose offence is shewn by the fact that their property is destroyed? Now consider, whose offence is greater: that of the seducer or of the seduced?

(1) The anonymous opinion cited first in the Mishnah.

(2) Marriage consists of two stages: kiddushin or erusin, whereby the matrimonial bond is made, not to be broken without divorce; and huppah, or home taking, without which cohabitation is forbidden. A woman who has undergone the first ceremony is called an arusah (betrothed); after the second she is called a nesu'ah (married). Nowadays both ceremonies are united, the canopy (huppah) being symbolic of the home to which the husband takes his newly-married wife; but in ancient days there was generally an interval between them.

(3) For obviously the offence of an arusah, who is still in her father's house and thereby profanes him, is greater than that of a nesu'ah; and therefore we may assume that her punishment is correspondingly greater. This conclusion is further supported by the fact that a nesu'ah, if an Israelite's daughter, is punished by strangulation, the most lenient of all death penalties, whilst an arusah is punished by stoning, the most severe. Rashi, however, points out that Scripture does not state that a priest's daughter, only if a nesu'ah, is excepted from the punishment of an Israelite's daughter: but not if an arusah. It is only because the Rabbis hold stoning to be more severe than burning that they assume that an arusah, if a priest's daughter, cannot be more leniently treated than if a Israelite's daughter, for her penalty to be commuted from stoning to burning. This vitiates the whole argument. Hence we must fall back upon the first line of reasoning, that stoning is severer, since it is the punishment of an idol worshipper and blasphemer, because their offence, constituting a rejection of the fundamental basis of Judaism is greater than that of the harlot, in spite of the fact that she profanes her father. That being so, the passage 'the Rabbis maintain etc.' will not be part of the proof, but an answer to an unexpressed difficulty. For this difficulty arises: If stoning is severer than burning , how is it that a priest's daughter is punished by the latter instead of the former, which is the punishment of an Israelite's daughter(if an arusah)?To this the answer is given that only a nesu'ah is thus punished by burning , whilst an Israelite's daughter is only strangled — an easier death than burning. But if an arusah, her death is by stoning, just as in the case of an Israelite's daughter. Consequently, the next passage now, since an arusah, etc.' is entirely superfluous, being neither part of the argument nor an answer to the unexpressed difficulty: Rashi therefore deletes it from the text.

(4) Supra. 49b.

(5) Deut. XIII, 13-19.

(6) The Rabbis always regarded the offence of the tempter as greater than that of the sinner himself. Cf. Ab. V, 23: 'He who causes the multitudes to sin, shall not have the means to repent.... Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, sinned and caused the multitude to sin; the sin of the multitude was laid upon him.' This is in conformity with the general rabbinic dictum: 'All Israel are sureties for one another'.

(7) Thus proving stoning to be the greater penalty.

(8) Cf. Honour thy father and thy mother (Ex. XX, 12) with Honour the Lord with thy substance (Prov. III, 9).

(9) An arusah's sin is greater, because she destroys her virginity in addition to disgracing her family.

(10) In the case of a betrothed damsel who committed whoredom: Then shall they bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die; because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house. Deut. XXII, 21.

(11) In the case of a priest's daughter: And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire. Lev. XXI, 9.

(12) A Gezerah Shawah, v. Glos.

(13) The sin of a priest's daughter is greater than that of an Israelite's daughter, since the former profanes her father in addition to disgracing herself.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 50b

Surely that of the seducer! This affords an argument from a major to a minor premise. If burning is severer than strangulation [as has already been shewn], though[1] the latter is severer than the sword,[2] it [burning] is surely severer than slaying, which is a lesser penalty.

Stoning is severer than strangulation, being the penalty of a blasphemer and idol worshipper, the extreme gravity of whose offence has already been stated. On the contrary, is not strangulation severer, since it is the penalty of one who smites his father or mother, the gravity of whose offence lies in the fact that their honour is likened etc.? — Since the Divine Law excluded an arusah, the daughter of an Israelite, from the penalty of a nesu'ah, the daughter of an Israelite, changing it from strangling to stoning,[3] it follows that stoning is severer.

Stoning is severer than slaying, being the penalty of a blasphemer, etc. On the contrary, is not slaying severer than stoning, since it is the penalty of the inhabitants of a seduced city, the gravity of whose offence is proved by the fact that their property is destroyed? — Now consider, whose offence is greater: the seducer's or the seduced? Surely that of the seducer! Hence you may argue from a major to a minor premise. If stoning is severer than strangulation, though the latter be severer than slaying,[4] surely it is severer than slaying itself.

Strangulation is severer than slaying, since it is the penalty of one who smites his father or mother, the gravity of whose offence has already been stated — On the contrary, is not slaying severer, since it is the penalty of the inhabitants of a seduced city, the enormity of whose crime is attested by the fact that their property is destroyed? — Now consider: whose offence is greater, the seducer's or the seduced? Surely the seducer's! And it has been taught: The seducers of a seduced city are punished by stoning. R. Simeon maintained: By strangulation.

R. Johanan used to teach:[5] If a betrothed [i.e.,an arusah] maiden[6] committed adultery, her punishment is stoning. R. Simeon said: It is burning. If she committed incestuous adultery with her father, her punishment is stoning. R. Simeon said: It is burning.[7] What does this shew? — That according to the Rabbis, only a nesu'ah, [if a priest's daughter] was excluded from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter by being burnt [instead of strangled], but not so an arusah — But according to R. Simeon, both an arusah and a nesu'ah, [if a priest's daughter] were thus excepted, by being burnt [instead of strangled]. Why so? — Because the Rabbis consider stoning to be severer, but R. Simeon holds burning to be severer; and from this is inferred that if a person incurred two death penalties, he is punished by the more severe.[8]

What statement of R. Simeon [shows that he holds that the priest's daughter, whether an arusah or nesu'ah, is punished by burning]? — It has been taught: R. Simeon said: Two general principles have been stated in respect of a priest's daughter.[9] Do these principles apply only to a priest's daughter, and not to an Israelite's daughter [surely not]?[10] — Say thus: In respect of a priest's daughter too. But then Scripture excluded a priest's daughter, a nesu'ah, from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter, a nesu'ah,' and an arusah, from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter, an arusah.[11] Now, just as when the scripture excluded the priest's daughter, a nesu'ah, from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter, a nesu'ah, it was in order to decree a severer punishment;[12] so also, when excluding the priest's daughter, an arusah, from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter, an arusah, it must have been in order to impose a greater punishment.[13] But false witnesses in respect of a nesu'ah, the daughter of a priest, are treated as though they had testified against an Israelite's daughter; likewise, if in respect of an arusah, who is a priest's daughter, they are punished just as though they had testified against an Israelite's daughter.[14]

Our Rabbis taught: And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself:[15] I might think that this applies even to the profanation of the Sabbath,[16] — but the Writ states by playing the whore: thus Scripture speaks only of profanation through whoredom. I might think that this applies even to an unmarried woman. But her father is mentioned in this passage,[17] and her father is also mentioned elsewhere:[18] just as elsewhere the reference is to whoredom by one who is bound to a husband, so here too. But perhaps 'her father' is stated in order to exclude others?[19] — When Scripture states, She profaneth her father, it must apply to whoredom with others.[20] Hence, to what purpose do I put the phrase 'her father' [which, strictly speaking, is superfluous]? 'Her father' is mentioned in this passage, and 'her father' is also mentioned elsewhere; just as elsewhere the reference is to whoredom by one who is bound to a husband, so here too.[21] If so, just as the reference there is to a maiden[22] who is an arusah, so here too the reference is to a maiden who is an arusah: but if she is a maiden and a nesu'ah, or if she is a full-grown damsel[23] and an arusah, or a full-grown damsel and a nesu'ah, or even if she is aged, whence do we know [that the same law applies]? — The Writ states: 'And the daughter of any priest',[24] implying that the law holds good in all cases.[25]

(2) B. Simeon holding that the seducer, whose offence is greater, was punished by strangulation, v. infra 89b.

(3) The offence of an arusah being greater, v. p. 335. n. 1.

(4) As will he proved in the next passage.

(5) Lit., 'It was fluent in his mouth', i.e., he received it orally from his teachers as at traditional law not actually taught in a Mishnah or a Baraitha (Rashi).

(6) 'The Hebrew נערה na'arah denotes a damsel between twelve years and a day and twelve and a half years of age. Before that she is a minor (קטנה), after that an adult, 'entering maturity', bogereth (בוגרת).

(7) All this is R. Johanan's saying.

(8) Since R. Johanan maintains that the Rabbis rule that a priest's daughter , an arusah, is stoned, because stoning is the severer death, whilst R. Simeon holds that she is burnt, because he regards burning severer, deducing all this from the Scripture, it follows that if one incurs a double death penalty, the severer must be imposed. For here too, a choice of two deaths lies before us, and we chose the severer penalty because of the greater gravity of the offence.

(9) One referring to an arusah, and one to a nesu'ah; i.e., when the Torah states, the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death, (Lev. XX, 10) this is a general law regarding a nesu'ah, in which a priest's daughter should be included. Likewise the law in Deut. XXII, 23f: If a damsel that is a virgin be betrothed unto a husband, and a man find her in the city and lie with her, then shall ye bring them both out unto the gate of the city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die, is a general principle for an adulterous arusah, which should embrace the priest's daughter too.

(10) This is an interjection.

(11) And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father; she shall be burnt with fire. (Lev. XXI, 9). 'The daughter of any priest', being unspecified, must refer both to an arusah and to a nesu'ah,' whilst Lev. XX, 10 (quoted in preceding note) refers to a nesu'ah, and the death penalty mentioned there is interpreted as strangulation. Thus a priest's daughter, whether an arusah or a nesu'ah, is excepted from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter in a like case.

(12) Burning instead of strangulation, all admitting that the former is more severe.

(13) Burning instead of stoning, making Lev. XXI,9 (quoted on p. 335, n. 3) refer both to a nesu'ah and an arusah. This Baraitha then will be the authority for R. Johanan,'s statement that R. Simeon maintained that both an arusah and a nesu'ah, if priests' daughters, were excepted from the penalty of an Israelite's daughter.

(14) Deut. XIX, 16-19. If a false witness rise up against any man, to testify against him that which is wrong . . . . then shall ye do unto him as he had thought to do unto his brother. Thus a false witness incurred the penalty he had sought to impose. But if he testified against a priest's daughter, whether an arusah or a nesu'ah, his punishment was that of an Israelite's daughter in like circumstances.
(15) Lev. XXI, 9.

(19) I.e., only if she committed incest with her father is she punished by burning, but not for playing the harlot with others. The Talmud explains further on why one should wish to interpret the passage thus.
(20) For if she commits incest with her father, he profanes her too.
(21) I.e., that her profanation is in respect of this tie.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 51a

from, this phrase I know the law only if she was married to a priest;[1] but if she was married to a Levite, Israelite, heathen,[2] a profaned person,[3] bastard,[4] or a Nathin,[5] whence do we know that the same applies? From the verse: And the daughter of a man who is a priest, which teaches that even if she is married to one who is not a priest the same applies.[6] Further: she [profaneth her father; she shall be burnt in fire] teaches that only she is punished by fire, but not her paramour, nor those who testify falsely against her. R. Eliezer said: If with her father, she is burnt; if with her father-in-law, she is stoned.[7]

The Master said: 'I might think that this applies even to the Profanation of the Sabbath.' But if she profaned the Sabbath, must she not be stoned?[8] — Raba replied: This is taught according to R. Simeon, who regards burning a severer penalty.I might think that since the Divine Law has in general been stricter with the priests [than with the Israelites], giving them an additional number of precepts, therefore the priest's daughter [if she profaned the Sabbath] should be burnt; hence we are taught that this verse applies only to profanation by whoredom. But why should she differ from a priest himself?[9] — I would think that a priest is punished more leniently, because he is permitted to work on the Sabbath in the sacrificial service;[10] but since a priest's daughter is not so permitted, her punishment should be stoning. We are therefore taught otherwise.

'I might think that this applies even to an unmarried woman. But does not the Writ state: 'by playing the whore'? — This is taught on the view of R. Eliezer, who maintained: If an unmarried man cohabits with an unmarried woman without conjugal intent, he renders her a harlot.[11] 'But perhaps "her father" is stated in order to exclude others?' — How then would you explain the verse? That she committed adulterous incest with her father! If so, why only a priest's daughter: does not the same apply to an Israelite's daughter? For [did not] Raba say: R. Isaac b. Abudimi said unto me: 'We learn identity of law from the fact that hennah [they] occurs in two related passages, and likewise zimmah [wickedness] in two'?[12] — The verse [she profaneth] is necessary. For l would think that this whole passage treats of incest with one's father, and the penalty of burning is prescribed here intentionally to obviate Raba's deduction.[13] Hence the deduction [from she profaneth].

'The daughter of any priest: from this phrase I know the law only if she was married to a priest; if she was married to a Levite, Israelite, heathen, a profaned person, bastard, or a Nathin, whence do I know that the same applies? From the verse: And the daughter of a man who is a priest, which teaches that even if she is married to one who is not a priest the same applies.' But because she is married to one of these, is she no longer considered a priest's daughter? Moreover, does Scripture state . . . a priest's daughter married to a priest?[14] — I might think that since Scripture states, if she profane herself by playing the whore, the law deals only with one who now profanes herself for the first time;[15] but in these other cases where she was already profaned before [this law should not apply]. For, a Master stated : [The verse,] If the priest's daughter also be married unto a stranger, [she may not eat of an offering of the holy things][16] teaches that if she cohabits with one who is unfit for her,[17] he disqualifies her [to eat of the holy food] — And [similarly] if she was married to a Levite or an Israelite, since Scripture also states, [But if a priest's daughter be a widow or divorced, and have no child] and is returned unto her father's her house, as in her youth, [she shall eat of father's meat, i.e. , of the holy food],[18] it shows that as long as her husband [a Levite or Israelite] is alive, she must not eat of the holy food.[19] Hence l would think that she should not be burnt; therefore the verse teaches otherwise.

Now this ruling [that even if married to a bastard, etc., she is burnt] does not agree with R. Meir's view. For it has been taught: If a priest's daughter, married to an Israelite, ate of terumah,[20] she must repay the principals but not the additional fifth.[21] [If she committed adultery] her penalty is burning. But if she was married to one unfit for her [e.g.,a bastard, etc.] she must repay the principal and the added fifth, and her penalty is strangulation: this is the ruling of R. Meir. But the Sages hold that in both cases she must pay the principal but not the fifth, and her penalty is burning.

'R. Eliezer said: If with her father, she is burnt; if with her father-in-law, she is stoned.' What is meant by 'her father' and 'her father-in-law'? If we say 'her father' means [that she committed whoredom] with her father, and 'her father-in-law' [that she did so] with her father-in-law: why speak particularly of a priest's daughter; an Israelite's daughter too is thus punished — a daughter [for incest with her father] by burning, and a daughter-in-law by stoning?-But 'her father' means 'under her father's authority',[22] and 'her father-in-law' indicates 'under her father-in-law's authority'.[23] Whose view is this? If the Rabbis? Do they not maintain that a nesu'ah is excluded [from strangulation and punished] by burning, but not so an arusah [who is stoned]? If R. Simeon's? Does he not maintain that both an arusah and a nesu'ah are burnt? And if R. Ishmael's?[24] Does he not maintain that only an arusah is burnt, but not a nesu'ah, and accordingly, [when under the authority of] her father-in-law, she is strangled?[25] — Rabin sent a message in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina:[26] This is the explanation of the teaching.[27] Indeed it is in accordance with the Rabbis' views and this is its meaning: Where an adulterous woman's death is more lenient than that of her father for incest [with his daughter], that is in the case of an Israelite's daughter, who is a arusah, her punishment being strangulation;[28] then in the case of a priest's daughter, her punishment is the same as her father's, viz.,burning; but where an adulterous woman's penalty is greater than her father's, that is in the case of an Israelite's daughter, who is an arusah, her punishment being stoning,[29] then in the case of a priest's daughter, her punishment is as that of her father-in-law for incest with her, viz.,by stoning.[30] R. Jeremiah objected to this explanation: does then the Baraitha state 'greater' or 'lesser'? But R. Jeremiah explained it thus:

(4) The issue of adultery or incest forbidden on pain of death or Kareth: e.g.,the offspring of a father and his daughter, cp. Yeb. 49a.

(5) The Nethinim (Nathin, pl. Nethinim) are regarded in the Talmud as descendants of the Gibeonites, who, having obtained immunity during the Conquest of Canaan by a ruse, were degraded by Joshua to the position of 'hewers of wood and drawers of water' (Yeb. 78b; Josh. IX, 19-23). Actually they are first heard of as returning to Palestine after the Babylonian Exile (Ezra II, 58, VII, 20; Nehem. III, 26, 31). They served under the Levites in the Temple (Ezra VII, 24). Though first mentioned only after the return from the exile, it is stated that they were appointed by David to serve the Levites; hence they must have been well known in Israel long before the Babylonian Exile, in spite of their late mention. In Talmudic times they were placed on a very low level, being forbidden to intermarry with freeborn Israelites.

(6) Because 'man' (E.V. 'any') is superfluous; hence it teaches that only her father need be a priest for this law to apply.
(7) This is explained further on.
(8) Stoning is the penalty for desecrating the Sabbath, and it is surely not commuted to burning for a priest's daughter.
(9) If this be taught according to R. Simeon, why should I think that though a priest is stoned for desecrating the Sabbath — since nowhere does the Scripture differentiate between a priest and an Israelite in this respect, — his daughter is punished more severely by being burnt?
(10) All Sabbath laws were suspended in favour of the Temple service, for which male priests only were eligible.
(11) Whom a priest may not marry (Lev. XXI, 7); hence in his view whoredom includes pre-marriage unchastity.
(12) In Lev. XVIII,10 it is stated: The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover: for they (הנה hennah) are thine own nakedness. Further it is written (ibid. XVIII, 17): Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they (הנה hennah) are her near kinswomen: it is wickedness (זמה zimmah). Just as in the latter verse, intercourse with one's wife's daughter is treated as with her granddaughter, so in the former case, incest with one's daughter is the same offence as with one's granddaughter. Though this is not explicitly stated, it is deduced from the fact that hennah occurs in both cases. Further, in Lev. XX, 14 it is stated: And If a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness (זמה zimmah): they shall be burnt with fire. The use of zimmah in Lev. XX, 14 and in Lev. XVIII, 17 show that burning by fire is the penalty in both cases; and the use of hennah in Lev. XVIII, 17 and Lev. XVIII, 10 shews that in Lev. XVIII, 10 too the penalty is burning (cf. the Euclidean axiom: the equals of equals are equal). Thus we see that incest between a man, even an Israelite, and his daughter is punished by burning. How then could we assume that the verse under discussion, which decrees burning as a penalty for whoredom by a priest's daughter (implying the exclusion of an Israelite's daughter), refers to incest with one's father, and consequently what need is there for the deduction from she profaneth?
(13) I.e., to shew that only a priest's daughter committing incest is burnt, but not an Israelite's daughter, who is differently punished. In that case, the identical phrasing of the verses cited by Raba would have to be otherwise interpreted.
(14) I.e., on what grounds could we assume at all that the law is applicable only if she married a priest?
(15) I.e., through her whoredom.
(16) Lev. XXII, 12.
(17) E.g., a Nathin or bastard; that is the meaning attached to a stranger.
(18) Ibid. 13.
(19) This too is regarded as a measure of profanation.
(20) Lit., 'that which is separated': the portion of the corn produce due to the priest.
(21) Which a non-priest had to pay for eating terumah, ibid. 14.
(22) I.e., when one is under the parental roof, viz., an arusah, v. p. 333, n. 3.
(23) I.e., when she is to longer under the parental roof, viz., a nesu'ah.
(24) His view is explained later.
(25) Not stoned; for since he maintains that a nesu'ah, if a priest's daughter, does not differ from an Israelite's daughter, her penalty is strangulation, as in the case of the latter.
(26) Here we have an example of a Talmudic responsum. Rabin migrated from Babylonia to Palestine, and wrote many letters from Babylonia to Palestine with the results of his researches. Cf. Keth. 49b; B.M. 114a; B.B. 139a,. 'Rabin sent' then will mean from Palestine to Babylonia.
(27) I.e., the Baraitha containing the statement of R. Eliezer.
(28) Whilst her father's penalty is death by burning.
(29) Which, according to the Rabbis, in severer than burning, the father's punishment.
(30) Rashi points out that it is unnecessary to liken her punishment to her father-in-law's, since the penalty of every arusah is stoning. But in any case the Talmud refutes this explanation.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 51b

In truth, this is in accordance with R. Ishmael's views, and this is its meaning: ‘with her father’, i.e. whilst under her parental roof [i.e., an arusah], her punishment is burning; ‘with her father-in-law’, i.e., for incest with her father-in-law, she is stoned; but if she committed adultery with any other person, she is strangled. Raba objected to this: Why this difference [in the meaning attached to the two phrases]? Either each is to be understood literally,[1] or to refer to the authority under which she is?[2] Hence Raba explained it thus: This is in agreement with R. Simeon [who holds burning to be the severest penalty]. R. Eliezer [who taught this] maintaining that a nesu'ah is as an arusah: just as with an arusah, [the penalty of a priest's daughter] is raised in stringency by one degree more [than that of an Israelite's daughter], viz. , from stoning to burning, so also with a nesu'ah the penalty is raised in stringency by one degree, viz., from strangulation to stoning.[3] R. Hanina objected: But R. Simeon maintains that in both cases the penalty is burning! Hence Rabina explained it thus: This is really according to the Rabbis, but you must reverse the text, thus: If ‘with her father’ [i.e. an arusah], she is stoned; if ‘with her father-in-law’, [i.e., a nesu'ah], she is burned. And as to the phrase ‘with her father’?[4] He [R. Eliezer] is influenced by the general phraseology.[5]

R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accordance with the message sent by Rabin in the name of R. Jose b. Hanina. R. Joseph queried: [Do we need] to fix a halachah for [the days of] the Messiah?[6] — Abaye answered: If so, we should not study the laws of sacrifices, as they are also only for the Messianic era. But we say: Study and receive reward;[7] so in this case too, study and receive reward: [He replied:] This is what I mean: Why state a halachah? In the course of the discussion, was there given a ruling at all?[8]

Now, what statement of R. Ishmael was referred to?[9] — It has been taught: And the daughter of any priest, If she profanes herself by playing the whore:[10] Scripture here speaks of a maiden [na'arah] who is an arusah. You say so, but perhaps it also refers to a nesu'ah? — The Writ sayeth: And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall be put to death.[11] Now all are included in the terms ‘adulterer’ and ‘adulteress’, but the Writ excluded the daughter of an Israelite, teaching that she is stoned,[12] and the daughter of a priest, teaching that she is burnt. Just as the exception made for an Israelite's daughter refers to an arusah, but not a nesu'ah;[13] so also, when a priest's daughter was excepted, an arusah was so excepted, but not a nesu'ah. Further, false witnesses [in respect of the charge of adultery] and the paramour [of an adulterous woman] were [originally] included in the verse: [If a false witness rise up against any man to testify against him that which is wrong . . .] then ye shall do unto him, as he had thought to hove done unto his brother.[14] — Now, how can the words, as he had thought apply to a Paramour![15] — But say thus: The punishment of her false witnesses Is included in the text referring to the death of her paramour,[16] because Scripture states: then ye shall do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother; implying, but not unto his sister.[17] This is R. Ishmael's opinion. R. Akiba said: [A priest's daughter]. whether an arusah or a nesu'ah,is excepted [from the punishment of strangulation,] but is punished with fire. I might think that this applies even to an unmarried woman: but her father is mentioned in this passage, and her father is also mentioned elsewhere:[18] just as elsewhere the reference is to whoredom by one who is bound to a husband, so here too. Thereupon R. Ishmael said unto him: If so, just as the second passage refers to a maiden [na'arah] who is an arusah, so this verse [treating of a priest's daughter] should be taken to refer to a maiden who is an arusah; [but if a nesu'ah, her punishment should be different]. R. Akiba replied: My brother, I interpret the and the daughter etc., when it would have been sufficient to say the daughter etc., as teaching the inclusion of a nesu'ah.[19] R. Ishmael said to him: Shall we except this woman [i.e.,a nesu'ah from the punishment of strangulation] and impose [the severer penalty of] death by fire, because you interpret the superfluous ‘waw’ [‘and’]; if this superfluous wow indicates the inclusion of a nesu'ah, then include an unmarried woman too;[20] whilst if it implies the exclusion of an unmarried woman [since the Deuteronomic passage explicitly relates to a married woman], then exclude a nesu'ah too. And R. Akiba?[21] — [He holds that] the gezerah shawah serves the purpose to exclude an unmarried woman, whilst the superfluous ‘waw’ serves to indicate the inclusion of a nesu'ah. And R. Ishmael? — In raising the foregoing [objection] he thought that since R. Akiba had replied. 'I interpret the superfluous waw', it proved that he had withdrawn his deduction front the gezerah shawah.[22] Now, how does R. Ishmael interpret this superfluous waw? — As shewing that which was taught by the father of Samuel b. Abin: Since we find Scripture differentiating in male [priests] between the [physically] unblemished and the blemished,[23] I would think that a distinction must also be drawn in their daughters:[24] therefore Scripture writes a pleonastic 'waw' [to teach the inclusion of the daughter of a physically blemished priest].[25] And R. Akiba?[26] — He deduces this from the verse: [for the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and the bread of their God,] they [i.e. the priests] do offer: therefore they shall be holy.[27] And R. Ishmael? — He maintains that that verse could apply only to priests themselves,[28] but not to their daughters. Hence the necessity of the pleonastic 'waw'.

Now how does R. Ishmael interpret

---

(1) I.e., incest with her father, or with her father-in-law.

(2) I.e., under her father's authority, viz., an arusah; under her father-in-law's authority, viz., a nesu'ah.

(3) And 'with her father', 'with her father-in-law', refer to status, under whose authority she is.

(4) Why is such a roundabout expression used instead of simply 'arusah' and 'nesu'ah'?

(5) This is in accordance with the printed text. Rashi, apparently on the basis of a slightly different reading, renders 'He is influenced by the phraseology of the first Tanna', who quotes from Lev. XXI, 9, in which 'her father' is mentioned. Tosaf., however, points out, that in many versions the text reads: why does he say, (if with) her father she is burnt? According to this, the question is: how did such an error arise in the text? To which the answer is: he is influenced by the Biblical phraseology: And the daughter of any priest . . . she shall be burnt with fire. Lev. XXI, 9.

(6) Since the Sanhedrin no longer had jurisdiction in capital offences, there is no practical utility in this ruling, which can become effective only in the days of the Messiah.

(7) [Learning has its own merit, quite apart from any practical utility that may be derived therefrom].

(8) Surely not! Since Rabin and Rabina agree on the point of law, and differ only on the interpretation of R. Eliezer's statement.

(9) This reverts to the former discussion, when it was said, this is according to R. Ishmael.

(10) Ibid.

(11) Ibid. XX, 10. Wherever the manner of death is unspecified, strangulation is meant.

(12) Deut. XXII, 23f. referring to adultery by an arusah.

(13) Ibid. This explicitly treats of an arusah: if it be applied to a nesu'ah too, there is none to which Lev. XX, 10 can refer.

(14) Deut. XIX, 16,19.

(15) This is an interjection.

(16) That is, they are punished by the same death which they intended to have brought about on the paramour.

(17) Where the penalties differ; e.g.. when a priest's daughter commits adultery, she is burned, but her paramour is stoned; hence, if witnesses testified falsely on such a charge, they are to be stoned, not burned.

(18) Ibid. XXII, 21f.

(19) I.e., the deduction from the verbal identity (Gezerah Shawah, v. Glos.) of 'her father' does in fact apply only to an arusah: but the superfluous copulative wow (ו) extends the law to embrace a nesu'ah too.

(20) So the commentary of Hananel; Rashi interprets: if the gezerah shawah (identical use of 'her father' in both passages) indicates the inclusion of a nesu'ah, etc. This interpretation is rather difficult, as R. Akiba did not include nesu'ah through the gezerah shawah.

(21) How would he meet this objection?

(22) For mere identity of phraseology is insufficient to deduce similarity of law. There must be a tradition from one's teacher, and supposedly handed down from scholar to scholar, going right back to Moses. (Pes. 66a: so Rashi's interpretation of the rule: No one may draw conclusions from identical phraseology on his own authority). Thus R. Ishmael thought that R. Akiba had abandoned this gezerah shawah, being doubtful of the authenticity of its tradition.

(23) Lev. XXI, 17, forbidding priests with a physical blemish to perform the sacrificial service.

(24) With respect to adultery. viz., that only the daughter of a physically perfect priest is burnt.

(25) Weiss, Dor, Vol. II, p. 105, quotes R. Ishmael's remark in this connection 'shall we exclude a nesu'ah because thou interpretest a superfluous 'waw' as being a protest against R. Akiba's method of interpretation? From the whole passage, however, we see that R. Ishmael was not fundamentally opposed to this at all, but merely disagreed on the actual application of the extension and apparent inconsistency in R. Akiba's distinction between a nesu'ah and an unmarried woman.

(26) Whence does he derive this latter deduction?

(27) Ibid. XXI, 6. Therefore they shall be holy is an emphatic assertion of their holiness, implying that they do not lose it even if blemished.

(28) Teaching that they retain their holiness even if blemished, e.g that they may not be defiled by the dead.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 52a

the verse, she profaneth her father?[1] — He employs it in accordance with R. Meir's dictum, as it has been taught : R. Meir used to say: What is meant by the verse, she profaneth her father'? If he [the father] was regarded as holy, he is now regarded as profane;[2] if he was treated with respect, he is now treated with contempt; and men say, 'Cursed be he who begot her, cursed be he who brought her up, cursed be he from whose loins she sprung. R. Ashi said: in accordance with whose view is a wicked man called 'the son of a wicked man', even if he is actually the son of a righteous man? — It is in accordance with this Tanna's dictum.[3]

THAT IS THE MANNER OF STONING.

To what does this refer?[4] — To the statement [in a preceding Mishnah]: When the verdict [of guilty] was finally announced, he [the accused] was led out to be stoned . . .[5] Now, the scaffolding [for stoning] was twice a man's height etc.[6] And because the Tanna is about to teach the manner of death by fire, he sums up the foregoing with the words: THAT IS THE MANNER OF STONING etc.

MISHNAH. THE MANNER IN WHICH BURNING IS EXECUTED IS AS FOLLOWS: HE WHO HAD BEEN THUS CONDEMNED WAS LOWERED INTO DUNG UP TO HIS ARMPITS, THEN A HARD CLOTH WAS PLACED WITHIN A SOFT ONE,[7] WOUND ROUND HIS NECK, AND THE TWO LOOSE ENDS PULLED IN OPPOSITE DIRECTIONS, FORCING HIM TO OPEN HIS MOUTH. A WICK WAS THEN LIT, AND THROWN INTO HIS MOUTH, SO THAT IT DESCENDED INTO HIS BODY AND BURNT HIS BOWELS. R. JUDAH SAID: SHOULD HE HOWEVER HAVE DIED AT THEIR HANDS [BEING STRANGLED BY THE BANDAGE BEFORE THE WICK WAS THROWN INTO HIS MOUTH, OR BEFORE IT COULD ACT], HE WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN EXECUTED BY FIRE AS PRESCRIBED. HENCE IT WAS DONE THUS: HIS MONTH WAS FORCED OPEN WITH PINCERS AGAINST HIS WISH, THE WICK LIT AND THROWN INTO HIS MOUTH, SO THAT IT DESCENDED INTO HIS BODY AND BURNT HIS BOWELS. R. ELEAZAR B. ZADOK SAID: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER COMMITTED ADULTERY, WHEREUPON BUNDLES OF FAGGOTS WERE PLACED ROUND ABOUT HER AND SHE WAS BURNT. THE SAGES REPLIED, THAT WAS BECAUSE THE BETH DIN AT THAT TIME WAS NOT WELL LEARNED IN LAW.

GEMARA. What is meant by a WICK? — R. Mathna said: A lead bar.[8]

Whence do we know this?[9] — It is inferred from the fact that burning is decreed here;[10] and was also the fate of the assembly of Korah,[11] just as there the reference is to the burning of the soul, the body remaining intact, so here too. R. Eleazar said: It is deduced from the employment of the word 'burning' here and in the case of Aaron's sons;[12] just as there the burning of the soul is meant, while the body remained intact, so here too.

Now, he who deduces it from the assembly of Korah, whence does he know [that they were thus burnt]? — Because it is written: [Speak unto Eleazar . . . that he take up the censers out of the burning . . . The censers of these sinners against their own souls,[13] implying that their souls were burned, but their bodies were unharmed. And the other?[14] He maintains that they were literally burnt [i.e., their bodies], and what is the meaning of against their own souls? — That they incurred the punishment of fire because of [the pollution of] their souls; as Resh Lakish [taught]. For R. Simeon b. Lakish said: What is the meaning of the verse, with hypocritical mockers in feasts, they gnashed upon me with their teeth?[15] Because they hypocritically [i.e., polluting their own sincerity] flattered Korah in return for the feast he set before them, the Prince of Gehenna[16] gnashed his teeth against them [for their destruction]. Now he [R. Eleazar] who infers it from the sons of Aaron, whence does he know [that their bodies were not burnt]? — Because it is written, And they died before the Lord,[17] teaching that it was like normal death [from within]. And the other? — He maintains that they were actually burnt, whilst the verse, And the died before the Lord, shews that the fire commenced from within, as in normal death. For it has been taught: Abba Jose b. Dosethai said: Two streams of fire issued from the Holy of Holies, branching off into four, and two entered into each of their nostrils and burned them.[18] But it is written, And the fire devoured them?[19] — This implies them but not their garments.

But why should we not learn [the manner of death by fire] from the bullocks that were burnt,[20] just as there they were actually burnt, so here too? — It is logical to learn this from man, because these have the following points in common: — [i] man, [ii] sin, [iii] soul, and [iv] piggul.[21] On the contrÖry, should we not compare it rather to the burnt bullocks, since they have in common [i] the carrying out of God's command , and [ii] permanency?[22] — Even so, the others have more in common.

Now, he who deduces it from the assembly of Korah, why did he not learn it from Aaron's sons? — Because they were actually burnt [this being his opinion]. Then why not deduce from them [that this shall be the method of burning]? — R. Nahman answered in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The verse saith, But thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself,[23] [which implies:] choose an easy death for him.[24] Now, since we have R. Nahman's dictum, what need is there of the gezerah shawah? — But for the gezerah shawah — I would think that burning of the soul, the body remaining intact, is not deemed burning at all; whilst as for [the implication of the verse], Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, this can be fulfilled by piling up an abundance of faggots to cause a speedy death. Hence the teaching of the gezerah shawah.

Moses and Aaron once walked along, with Nadab and Abihu behind them, and all Israel following in the rear. Then Nadab said to Abihu, ‘Oh that these old men might die, so that you and I should be the leaders of our generation.’ But the Holy One, blessed be He, said unto them: ‘We shall see who will bury whom.’ R. Papa said: Thus men say: Many an old camel is laden with the hides of younger ones.’[25]

R. Eleazar said:

---

(1) Ibid. XXI, 9. Since R. Ishmael maintains that an arusah is burnt, but not a nesu'ah, deducing this by analogy, and not admitting the gezerah shawah based upon the phrase ‘her father’, what do these words teach?

(2) In the sense of not holy.

(3) That the father is cursed and reviled for his offspring's misdemeanours.

(4) [This is Rashi's reading, found also in MS.M.; cur edd.: What does be teach that he states?]

(5) Supra 42b.

(6) Supra 45a.

(7) The soft one alone could not exert sufficient pressure to open his mouth; whilst a hard one alone would bruise the skin and unnecessarily disfigure him (Rashi).

(8) 'Lit' in the Mishnah will therefore mean 'melted'.
(9) That death by fire was thus carried out, instead of burning the body.
(10) Lev. XXI, 9. She shall be burnt with fire.
(11) Num. XVII, 4. And Eliezer the priest look the brazen censers, wherewith they that were burnt had offered.
(12) Lev. X, 6. Let your brethren . . . bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled.
(13) Num. XVII, 2f(E. V. XVI, 37f).
(15) Ps. XXXV, 16.
(16) In the valley to the south of Jerusalem, known as the valley of the son of Hinnom, children were at one time sacrificed to Moloch (II Kings XXIII, 10; Jer. II, 23; VII, 31f). For this reason the valley was deemed accursed, and Gehenna thus became a synonym for hell. It is assumed to be in charge of a demon prince, who voraciously demands multitudes of victims (Shab. 104a).
(17) Lev. X, 12.
(18) So that the fire commenced, within and spread without.
(19) Ibid. This implies limitation: 'them', but not something else; now, if they were entirely burnt, what does this word exclude?
(20) As sacrifices, where, of course, the carcasses were burnt. Lev.IV, 12 et passim.
(21) I.e., both refer to (i) man, (ii) punishment for sin, (iii) destruction of the soul, and (iv) in both there is no law of piggul. Piggul, lit., 'abomination,' a sacrifice slaughtered with the unlawful intention of eating it beyond the prescribed limits of time; for the flesh of sacrifices had to be eaten within prescribed times (v. Zeb. V, 2. 53a). But the burnt bullocks differed from man on all these points
(22) I.e., they have the following in common: (i) each is performed by man in obedience to God's command, but Aaron's sons and the assembly of Korah were destroyed by God himself; (ii) the law of execution by fire, as that of sacrifices, was of permanent validity, whereas in the other two cases their deaths were unique, the result of miracles confined to particular times.
(24) But the burning of the body is a most painful death.
(25) I.e., many an old man surprises the young.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 52b

How is the scholar regarded by the ignorant? — At first, like a golden ladle; if he converses with him, like a silver ladle; if he [the scholar] derives benefit from him, like an earthen ladle, which once broken cannot be mended.[1]

Imarta the daughter of Tali, a priest, committed adultery. Thereupon R. Hama b. Tobiah had her surrounded by faggots and burnt. R. Joseph[2] said: He [R. Hama] was ignorant of two laws. He was ignorant of R. Mathna's dictum[3] and of the following Baraitha: And thou shalt come unto the priests, the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days:[4] This teaches that when the priesthood is functioning [in the Temple], the judge functions [in respect of capital punishment]; but when the priesthood is not functioning, the judge may not function.[5]

R. ELEAZAR B. ZADOK SAID, IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER COMMITTED ADULTERY, etc.

R. Joseph said: It was a Sadducee[6] Beth din that did this. Now, is this what R. Eleazar b. Zadok said, and did the sages answer him so? Has it not been taught: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said, 'I remember when I was a child riding on my father's shoulder that a priest's adulterous daughter was brought [to the place of execution], surrounded by faggots, and burnt.' The Sages answered him: 'You were then a minor, whose testimony is inadmissible'?[7] — There were two such incidents.[8] Now which incident did he first relate to them? Shall we say that he first told them of the incident first mentioned here

[which happened in his majority]: but if he told them what happened in his majority, and they paid no attention to him, surely he would not proceed to tell them what occurred in his minority? — But he must have related this one [of the Baraitha] first, to which they replied: 'You were a minor.' Then he told them of the case that occurred in his majority, and they replied, 'That was done because the Beth din at that time was not learned in the law.'

MISHNAH. EXECUTION BY THE SWORD WAS PERFORMED THUS: THE CONDEMNED MAN WAS DECAPITATED BY THE SWORD, AS IS DONE BY THE CIVIL AUTHORITIES.[9] R. JUDAH SAID: THIS IS A HIDEOUS DISFIGUREMENT; BUT HIS HEAD WAS LAID ON A BLOCK AND SEVERED WITH AN AXE.[10] THEY REPLIED, NO DEATH IS MORE DISFIGURING THAN THIS.

GEMARA. It had been taught: R. Judah said to the Sages: I too know that this is a death of repulsive disfigurement, but what can I do, seeing that the Torah hath said, neither shall ye walk in their ordinances?[11] But the Rabbis maintain: Since Scripture decreed the sword, we do not imitate them [when using their method]. For if you will not agree to this, then how about that which was taught: Pyres may be lit in honour of deceased kings,[12] and this is not forbidden as being of the 'ways of the Amorites': but why so? Is it not written, neither shall ye walk in their ordinances? But because this burning is referred to in the Bible, as it is written, [But thou shalt die in peace:] and with the burnings of thy fathers . . .[so shall they burn for thee],[13] it is not from them [the heathens] that we derive the practice. So here too, since the Torah decreed the sword,[14] it is not from them [the Romans] that we derive the practice. Now we have learnt in another chapter, 'The following are decapitated: A murderer, and the inhabitants of a seduced city.'[15] We know this to be true of the inhabitants of a seduced city, because it is written, ['Thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city] with the edge of the sword.[16] But whence do we know it of a murderer? — It has been taught: [And if a man smite his servant . . . and he die under his hand,'] he shall surely be avenged.[17] Now I do not know what form this vengeance is to take; but when the Writ saith, And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall execute the vengeance of the covenant,[18] I learn that vengeance is by the sword. But perhaps it means that he must be pierced through? — The Writ saith, with the edge of the sword. Then perhaps it means that he must be cut in two [lengthwise]? — R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Scripture teaches, But thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself'[19] choose an easy death for him. Now we find this law [of execution by the sword] when one murdered a slave; whence do we know that this law holds good if he murdered a free man? — Surely this can be deduced by reasoning from the minor to the major: if the murderer of a slave is decapitated, shall he who slays a free man be only strangled! Now, this answer agrees with the view that strangulation is an easier death; but what of the view that strangulation is more severe? It is then deduced from the following: It has been taught: [The verse], So shalt thou put away the guilt of the innocent blood from among you,[20] serves to denote that all that shed blood are likened [in treatment] to the atoning heifer:[21] just as there, it is done with a sword and at the neck, so here too, execution is with the sword and at the neck [i.e., the throat]. If so, just as there it was done with an axe, and on the nape of the neck, so here too? — R. Nahman answered in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Scripture saith: But thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself:[22] choose an easy death for him.

MISHNAH. STRANGULATION WAS THUS PERFORMED: — THE CONDEMNED MAN WAS LOWERED INTO DUNG UP TO HIS ARMPITS, THEN A HARD CLOTH WAS PLACED WITHIN A SOFT ONE, WOUND ROUND HIS NECK, AND THE TWO ENDS PULLED IN OPPOSITE DIRECTIONS UNTIL HE WAS DEAD.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death].[23] ' The man 'excludes a minor; ' that committeth adultery with another man's wife' excludes the wife of a minor; 'even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife' excludes the wife of a heathen; ‘shall surely be put to death’, by strangulation. You say, by strangulation; but perhaps one of the other deaths decreed by the Torah is meant here? — I will answer you: Whenever the Torah decrees an unspecified death penalty, you may not interpret it stringently but leniently:[24] this is R. Josiah's view. R. Jonathan said: Not because strangulation is the most lenient death, but because by every unspecified death in the Torah strangulation is meant. Rabbi [proceeding to demonstrate this] said: Death by God is mentioned in Scripture;[25] and death by man is also decreed. Just as the death by God[26] leaves no mark [of violence on the body], so also death by man must leave no mark [of violence], a condition which only strangling fulfils. But may it not apply to burning?[27] Since the Divine Law explicitly decreed burning for a priest's adulterous daughter, it follows that the adulterous married [Israelite] woman is not put to death by burning.

---

(1) This passage in inserted here because the assembly of Korah has just been mentioned, who were scholars ‘the elect men, of the assembly’ (Num. XVI, 2). These, becoming over familiar with Korah and accepting gifts from him, lost his esteem, until ultimately he incited them to support him in his revolt against Moses.

(3) That burning was carried out by pouring molten lead down the condemned man's throat.

(4) Deut. XVII, 9.

(5) Thus R. Hama, an Amora living long after the destruction of the Temple, had no jurisdiction for capital punishment. [According to Funk, loc. cit., R. Hama's rigorous sentence was prompted by his desire to combat the Mazdakian doctrine of the community of wives that had found many adherents in his day.]

(6) The party opposed to the Pharisees, and drawing their support mainly from the aristocratic classes. As they represented the nobility and wealth of the country, their interests were centred chiefly in the political, not the religious life, of the people. Their origin is wrapped in obscurity (Weiss, Dor, 1, 100); but Halevy, Doroth Voi. III: ‘The Sadducees and Boethusians’, regards them as the children of the Hellenizing Jews in the days of the Maccabeans; he denies that they were a religious party at all. The passage from Josephus (Ant. XIII, 10, 6) upon which this assertion is commonly based is explained by him as referring to the rejection of distinctive Rabbinic ordinances as apart from laws derived through interpretation of Scripture. In regard to criminal jurisdiction, they were very rigorous and, as seen in this passage, carried out the penalty of death by fire in a literal manner. Halevy (op. cit. Vol. III, p. 412f) observes that the reply of the Sages to R. Eleazar b. Zadok, — Because the Beth din at that time (amplified by R. Joseph as meaning a Beth din of the Sadducees) were not well learned in the law’, shews that their ruling was in the first instance not based on the principle of literal interpretation, but the result of ignorance, it was only subsequently that such ruling crystallized into definite principles. J. Derenbourg (Essai, p. 251, n. 2) suggests that the burning of the priest's adulterous daughter, as described by R. Eleazar b. Zadok, took place during the short interval between the death of Festus, the Roman Procurator, (in 62 C.E.) and the coming of Albinus (63 C.E.). during the High-Priesthood of Hanan b. Hanan (a Boethusian mentioned in Tosef. Yoma i). Cp. also ibid p. 262.

(7) This refutation differs from that of the Mishnah.

(8) One taking place during R. Eleazar's minority, the other during his majority. The answer in the Mishnah was in respect of the other.

(9) Under the Empire the Romans practised various forms of execution. Execution by the axe after flogging, previously confined to slaves, was revised in the early Empire and applied to citizens too. (Tac. An. II, 32; Suet. Nero, 49). Beheading by the sword (‘decollatio’) was also common, Sandys: A Companion to Latin Studies, p.339. With the introduction of the later, the former was prohibited (Hast. Dict. IV, 299), and therefore R. Judah stigmatises beheading by the sword as a Roman practice, and prefers the axe instead, though that too was formerly employed by the Romans.

This does not refer to the cremation of the body, but to the funeral pyre lit in honour of kings. The pyre consisted of the royal bed and his general utensils. The same honour was paid to Patriarchs, and the greater the value of the things burnt, the greater the honour. A.Z. 11a. (The A. V. of Jer. XXXIV, 5, ‘so shall they burn odours for thee’, is not warranted by the text.)

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 53a

Now, R. Jonathan's view raises no difficulty, its reason being explained by Rabbi. But on R. Josiah's view, how do we know that there is death by strangulation at all; perhaps the sword is meant?[1] — Raba replied: It is a tradition that there are four deaths. Why does R. Jonathan say, 'not because strangulation is the most lenient death'? — Because his dispute with R. Josiah is on the same lines as that of R. Simeon and the Rabbis.[2]

R. Zera asked of Abaye; Those who are stoned, but in whose case Scripture does not explicitly decree stoning,[3] so that we derive the penalty by analogy of a necromancer, or a wizard,[4] from which phrase do we deduce it: from 'they shall surely be put to death', or from 'their blood shall be upon them'?[5] — He replied: It is deduced from the phrase 'their blood shall be upon them,; for if it is inferred from the passage 'they shall surely be put to death', what need is there of the words 'their blood shall be upon them'? But do you say that it is deduced from 'their blood shall be upon them'; what need is there then of the phrase 'they shall surely be put to death'? — Even as it has been taught: He that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer.[6] I only know that he may be executed with the death that is decreed for him: Whence do I know that if you cannot execute him with that death, you may execute him with any other death? — From the verse: He that smote him shall surely be put to death, implying in any manner possible.[7]

R. Aha of Difti questioned Rabina: Now, had the deduction been from the phrase, they shall surely be put to death — what would be R. Zera's difficulty?[8] Shall we say that his difficulty would be in respect of [adultery with] a married woman,[9] namely, that we ought to learn the manner of death from the law of a necromancer or a wizard; just as there it is stoning, so here too?[10] But since the Divine Law ordained stoning for an arusah,[11] it follows that a nesu'ah is not stoned![12] If, again, the difficulty would arise in respect of one who smites his father or mother;[13] namely, that we ought to learn [by analogy of a necromancer or a wizard [that he is stoned]?[14] But instead of deducing it from the necromancer, etc., deduce it rather from adultery with a married woman [who is strangled], since you may not make a deduction in favour of a stringent penalty in preference to a lenient one.[15] — He replied: His difficulty would be in respect of all others who are stoned, for if it [the punishment of them by stoning] is deduced from the phrase, they shall surely be put to death, why deduce it from a necromancer and a wizard; deduce it rather from the adultery of a married woman?[16]

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING ARE STONED: HE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS MOTHER, HIS FATHER'S WIFE, OR HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW; HE WHO SEXUALLY ABUSES A MALE OR BEAST; A WOMAN WHO COMMITS BESTIALITY WITH A BEAST; A BLASPHEMER; AN IDOLATER; HE WHO GIVES OF HIS SEED TO MOLECH; A NECROMANCER OR A WIZARD; ONE WHO DESECRATES THE SABBATH; HE WHO

CURSES HIS FATHER OR MOTHER; HE WHO COMMITS ADULTERY WITH A BETROTHED MAIDEN; HE WHO INCITES [INDIVIDUALS TO IDOLATRY]; HE WHO SEDUCES [A WHOLE TOWN TO IDOLATRY];[17] A SORCERER; AND A WAYWARD AND REBELLIOUS SON.

ONE WHO [UNWITTINGLY] COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS MOTHER INCURS A PENALTY IN RESPECT OF HER BOTH AS HIS MOTHER AND AS HIS FATHER'S WIFE.[18] R. JUDAH SAID: HE IS LIABLE IN RESPECT OF HER AS HIS MOTHER ONLY. ONE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS FATHER'S WIFE INCURS A PENALTY IN RESPECT OF HER BOTH AS HIS FATHER'S WIFE, AND AS A MARRIED WOMAN. [HE IS GUILTY IN RESPECT OF THE FORMER] BOTH DURING HIS FATHER'S LIFETIME AND AFTER HIS DEATH, WHETHER SHE WAS WIDOWED FROM ERUSIN[19] OR FROM NESU'IN.[18] HE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW INCURS A PENALTY IN RESPECT OF HER BOTH AS HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW AND AS A MARRIED WOMAN. [HE IS GUILTY IN RESPECT OF THE FORMER] BOTH DURING HIS SON'S LIFETIME AND AFTER HIS DEATH, WHETHER SHE WAS WIDOWED FROM ERUSIN OR FROM NESU'IN. GEMARA. It has been taught: R. Judah said: If his mother was unfit for his father, he is guilty only in respect of her maternal relationship to him. What is meant by unfit for him? Shall we say, forbidden to him on pain of extermination[20] or death inflicted by the Beth din? This would prove that the Rabbis[21] hold that even for such he incurs a twofold penalty. But how so, seeing that his father cannot be legally married to her at all?[22] — Hence it must refer to a woman who is forbidden to him in virtue of a negative precept,[23] R. Judah agreeing with R. Akiba, who holds that Kiddushin is not valid between those who are interdicted to each other by a negative command.

R. Oshaia objected: [We have learnt:] A woman who is forbidden [to her deceased husband's brother] by a positive precept, or on the score of sanctity, must perform the halizah ceremony,[24] but may not marry her brother-in-law.

---

(1) Since the only ground for his assertion is the leniency of strangulation, perhaps there are only three death penalties, and when unspecified death is decreed in the Torah, it means the sword, the most lenient of the three.

(2) As to which is the easiest death (v. supra 50b). R. Jonathan maintaining that strangulation is not the easiest.

(3) For a number of offences such as idolatry, adultery by a betrothed maiden, desecration of the Sabbath, etc., Scripture explicitly ordains stoning. But in the case of others, e.g., witchcraft, incest, incitement to idolatry, etc., Scripture merely decrees death, and by a gezerah shawah we learn that stoning is meant.

(4) Cf. infra 54a.

(5) Lev. XX, 27 A man also or a woman that hath a familiar spirit (necromancer), or that is a wizard, they shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones: their blood shall be upon them. In the case of all other malefactors who are stoned, though stoning is not explicitly stated, the two phrases ‘they’ shall surely be put to death’ and ‘their blood shall be upon their head’ occur.

(6) Num. XXXV, 21.

(7) This is learnt from the emphatic ‘surely’, expressed in Hebrew’ as usual, by the insertion of the infinitive before the finite form of the verb. מות יומת V. supra 45b.

(8) For since he asked from which phrase the deduction is made, it is obvious that if from one particular phrase, a difficulty would arise.

(9) For which it was said above, that the death penalty being unspecified, it is strangulation.

(10) I.e. , instead of regarding it as an unspecified death penalty, why not treat it as explicit, in virtue of the phrase they shall surely be put to death, written also in the case of adultery with a married woman.

(11) Deut. XXII, 23f.

(12) So that this difficulty falls to the ground.

(13) Who is strangled, infra 84b.

(14) Since the phrase he shall surely be put to death (Ex. XXI, 15) is written of him too.

(15) For as the same phrase (v. p. 375. n.7) occurs in the three places. viz., (i) necromancer etc. (stoning), (ii) married woman (strangulation), and (iii) he that smites his father or mother, the last to be deduced from one of the first two, it follows, that one must incline to leniency. So that even if the deduction were made from the phrase, they shall surely be put to death, it would be still correct to say that one who smites his father or mother is strangled.

(16) Since the deduction must be in favour of the more lenient death.

(17) The former is called mesith: the latter maddiah.

(18) Hence if unwittingly, he is bound to bring two sin-offerings.

(19) V. p. 333, n. 3.

(20) Divine punishment (Kareth) through sudden or premature death, opposed to capital punishment at the hand of man, v. Glos.

(21) Represented by the anonymous opinion in the Mishnah.

(22) Lit., 'he has no claim of kiddushin in her regard'. Kiddushin (marriage betrothal) is invalid when contracted between parties forbidden to each other under such severe penalties. Consequently, she is not his wife, and her son, in committing incest, does not transgress the interdict attaching to one's father's wife.

(23) Which carries with it the penalty of flogging, but not of death or extermination; e.g. a bastard or a nathin or a divorcee in respect of a priest. The Sages maintain that in such cases kiddushin, though forbidden, is valid if contracted.

(24) V. p. 331, n. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 53b

Now 'forbidden by a positive precept' means the prohibitions in the second degree,[1] imposed by the Soferim,[2] and why is it thus designated? Because it is a 'positive precept' to obey the Sages. 'Forbidden on the score of sanctity' refers to the prohibition of a widow to [marry] a High Priest, and of a divorcee or a haluzah[3] to marry an ordinary priest; and why is it so called? Because it is written, they [sc. the priests] shall be holy unto their God.[4] And it has been taught thereon: R. Judah reversed the definition. Now, though reversing the definition, he agreed on the fundamental law, that these required halizah [before being free to marry others]. But if you maintain that R. Judah agreed with R. Akiba [on the invalidity of kiddushin between those who are forbidden by a negative command], then consider: R. Akiba places those who are forbidden by a negative command in the same category as those who are forbidden on pain of extermination; but are not the latter exempt from both halizah and Levirate marriage?[5] — R. Judah reverses the definition according to the ruling of the first Tanna, with which, however, he disagrees.[6]

When R. Isaac came,[7] he taught as we have learnt [in our Mishnah]: R. Judah said, he incurs guilt only on account of her maternal relationship to him.[8] Now why is this? — Abaye said: Scripture saith, The nakedness of thy father, or the nakedness of thy mother, shalt thou not uncover, she is thy mother.[9] [This teaches:] You must punish him for maternal incest, but not for incest with his father's wife. If so, what of the verse, The nakedness of thy father's wife shalt thou not uncover: It is thy father's nakedness?[10] Does it not imply, you may penalise him for incest with his father's wife, but not for maternal incest? In that case, if she is both his mother and his father's wife, one verse implies the exclusion of maternal incest [as the incriminating offence] — and the other excludes incest with his father's wife [as punishable].[11] Now if he is punished for incest with his mother, even when not his father's wife, and with his father's wife, though not his mother-shall we say that when she is both his mother and his father's wife, he incurs no penalty at all? A further difficulty is this: Do not the Rabbis admit the existence of this verse, 'she is thy mother'?[12] But they interpret it as teaching the law deduced by R. Shisha, the son of R. Iddi;[13] in that case, R. Judah must also utilise it for the same purpose.[14] But R. Aha the son of Ika said thus: The Writ sayeth: [she is thy mother: thou shalt not uncover] her nakedness.[15] This teaches: You may penalise him fo¦ one degree of 'nakedness', but not for two degrees,[16] If so, what of the verse: Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law: She is thy son's wife: thou shalt not u.cover her nakedness?[17] Does this too teach: You may penalise him for one degree of 'nakedness', but not for two? But we have learnt: HE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW INCURS A PENALTY IN RESPECT OF HER BOTH AS HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW AND AS A MARRIED WOMAN. (HE IS GUILTY

IN RESPECT OF HER BOTH DURING HIS SON'S LIFETIME AND AFTER H|S DEATH); and R. Judah does not dispute this! But since she is but one person, though forbidden in a double capacity, the Writ saith, ‘her nakedness’ [singular]: here too then, [in the ca±e of one's mother who is also the father's wife] since sh# is one person, even if she were doubly forbidden, the Writ saith: ‘her nakedness’.[18] — But Raba answered thus:+R. Judah maintains that the nakedness of thy father [thou shalt not uncover], means thy father's wife, deducing this by a gezerah shawah,[19] and it applies to her whether she is his mother or not; whence do we know then that one's mother who is not his father's wife is likewise forbidden? — From the verse, the nakedness of thy mother shalt thou not uncover. [Hence the phrase,] ‘she is thy mother’ teaches that he is guilty only on account of her maternal relationship, but not because she is his father's wife.[20]

_____J____

(1) This refers to a Rabbinical ordinance extending the prohibition of incest to one degree beyond the Biblical interdict, e.g., the Bible forbids one's mother: the Rabbis added one's maternal grandmother. The Bible forbids the father's wife: the Rabbis extended this to the grandfather's wife. The full list is given in Yeb. 21a. V. supra 27b seqq.

(2) Soferim, lit., ‘scribes.’ Originally it meant people skilled in writing (cf. II Sam. VIII, 17; II Kings XIX. 2). Later, in the time of Ezra, it referred to the body of teachers wh² interpreted the Law to the people, and then it came to mean teachers generally. Usually, when employed in the Talmud, it applies to teachers up to and including Simon the Just. Consequently, when an ordinance is described as a measure of the Soferim, it must have been of great antiquity. But occasionally the designation is applied to later teachers too; e.g., in J. Ber. I, 7, and R.H. 19a.

(3) A woman freed from Levirate marriage, by the ceremony of halizah.

(4) Lev. XXI, 6. This relates to these forbidden marriages.

(5) I.e. ‘a woman standing in such relationship to her brother-in-law is automatically free, without the halizah ceremony.

(6) I.e., R.. Judah maintains that in such cases there is neither halizah nor levirate marriage; but granted the view of the first teacher that halizah is obligatory, he holds that the defxnition must be reversed.

(7) From Palestine to Babylon. With the decay of the Palestinian academies in the fourth century, many scholars emigrated from Palestine. These brought with them traditional teachings of the Tannaim.

(8) In all cases, not, as stated in the Baraitha, only when she is forbidden to his father.

(9) Lev. XVIII, 7.

(10) Ibid. 8.

(11) Thus leaving no grounds for punishment at all. Or, as Rashi prefers, though admitting that this is undoubtedly punishable, the two verses contradict each other as to the grounds of punishment. On this interpretation, Rashi omits the following passage, ‘Now . . . at all’.

(12) I.e. , of course they do, yet they do not agree with R. Judah's view.

(13) This is given further on.

(14) Thus the question remains, what is R. Judah's reason?

(15) Ibid.

(16) Where a woman stands in a dual relationship of consanguinity, a penalty is incurred only in respect of one.

(17) Ibid. XVIII, 15.

(18) I.e., the use of the singular cannot teach that a penalty can be imposed only for one degree of consanguinity.

(19) As shewn further on.

(20) Thus, Raba agrees with Abaye that R. Judah's reason is the limitation implied in the phrase ‘she is thy mother’. But he disposes of the consequent difficulty. viz., that of the verse, it is thy father's nakedness in the following way: The dictum, The nakedness of thy father shalt thou not uncover, refers to his father's wife, whether his mother or not; and so far, (without an additional limiting phrase) it is implied that in both cases the interdict is on account of paternal, not maternal consanguinity. Hence, when the following verse states, (The nakedness of thy father's wife thou shalt not uncover:) it is thy father's nakedness, it cannot mean that guilt is incurred only on account of paternal, but not maternal relationship, since that has already been implied in the preceding verse, the nakedness of thy father . . . shalt thou not uncover. Therefore the limitation undoubtedly intended by the latter verse must be otherwise interpreted. (This is done further on.) Now, since the nakedness of thy father should imply that whether she is his mother or not he is penalised on account of paternal consanguinity, it follows that when the same verse inserts a limiting clause, ‘she is thy mother’, the limitation must apply to that which has already been expressed, viz. , that the father's wife, if also one's mother, is forbidden on account of maternal, not paternal, consanguinity. This is more fully explained in the next passage.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 54a

It has been taught in support of Raba; [And the man that lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness: both of them shall surely be put to death,' their blood shall be upon them.][1] The man excludes a minor; that lieth with his father's wife, implies whether she is his mother or not. Whence do I know that his mother who is not his father's wife [is also thus forbidden]? — From the verse, [he] hath uncovered his father's nakedness. For this is redundant,[2] in order that an analogy may be drawn therefrom and identity of meaning based on a gezerah shawah deduced.[3] [They] shall surely be put to death, by stoning. You say, by stoning; but perhaps it means by one of the other deaths decreed in the Torah? — The Writ saith here, their blood shall be upon them; and in the case of a necromancer or a wizard, the Writ saith likewise, their blood shall be upon them;[4] just as there, stoning is meant, so here too. Now, in this verse, we are informed of the penalty: whence do we know the formal prohibition?[5] — From the verse, The nakedness of thy father . . . shalt thou not uncover:[6] the nakedness of thy father means thy father's wife. You say so: but perhaps it has its literal meaning?[7] — It is here said, The nakedness of thy father . . . shalt thou not uncover; and elsewhere[8] it is said, [he] hath uncovered his father's nakedness: just as there the reference is to the opposite sex, so here too; and it implies his father's wife, whether his mother or not. Whence do we know [that this law applies to] his mother, even if she is not his father's wife? — From the verse, The nakedness of thy mother thou shalt not uncover. From this I learn only the formal prohibition, viz., that the Scripture interdicts his mother, though not his father's wife, just as his father's wife. Whence do I derive the punishment?[9] — It is here stated , the nakedness of thy father . . . thou shalt not uncover,' and It is said elsewhere, [he] hath uncovered his father's nakedness: just as the Writ assimilated his mother, when not his father's wife, to his mother who was also his father's wife, in respect of formal prohibition, so it assimilated her in respect of punishment. She is thy mother; this teaches, you must punish him in respect of her as a mother, but not as his father's wife.[10] But the Rabbis contend: the nakedness of thy father is literally meant. But is this not taught by the verse: Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind?[11] — This teaches that a double penalty is incurred; and as Rah Judah said: If a heathen committed pederasty with his father or with his paternal uncle he incurs a double penalty. Raba said: This dictum of Rab Judah presumably refers to a Jew, the offence having been committed unwittingly, and the penalty mentioned being a sacrifice; whilst the designation 'heathen' is a euphemism.[12] For if you will say that he meant a heathen literally, what is his penalty? Death! Will you slay him twice? It has been taught likewise: He who commits pederasty with his father or with his paternal uncle incurs a twofold penalty. Some say that this does not agree with R. Judah [of the Mishnah].[13] But others maintain that this may agree even with R. Judah, and he deduces a twofold penalty by reasoning from the minor to the major, basing his argument upon the law pertaining to a paternal uncle, [thus:] If for a paternal uncle, who is but a relation of one's father, a twofold penalty is incurred,[14] how much more so is a double penalty incurred for pederasty with one's father. These two conflicting views are involved in the dispute of Raba and Abaye,[15] one maintaining that punishment is imposed as a result of a minor to a major conclusion, the other maintaining that It is not.[16]

Now, whence do the Rabbis derive a formal prohibition against a father's wife?[17] — From the verse, The nakedness of thy father's wife thou shalt not uncover.[18] And R. Judah? — He maintains that this verse interdicts her after his father's death. And the Rabbis?They maintain that this is derived from it is thy father's nakedness.[19] And R. Judah? — He utilises it to teach that he is punished in respect of her as his father's wife, but not as a married woman.[20] But we have learnt, ONE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS FATHER's WIFE INCURS A PENALTY IN RESPECT OF HER BOTH AS HIS FATHER'S WIFE AND AS A MARRIED WOMAN. [HE IS GUILTY IN RESPECT OF THE FORMER] BOTH DURING HIS FATHER'S LIFETIME AND AFTER HIS DEATH; and R. Judah does not dispute it? — Abaye answered: He does dispute it in the Baraitha.

Now, whence do the Rabbis derive punishment for incest with one's father's wife after the former's death? It is all well according to R. Judah, for he derives it by means of the gezerah shawah; but whence do the Rabbis derive it? They answer thus: [he] hath uncovered his father's nakedness,[21] which R. Judah utilises for a gezerah shawah, is rather to be employed as teaching punishment for incest with one's father's wife after his death.

Now, whence do the Rabbis derive punishment for incest with one's mother who is not his father's wife?[22] — R. Shisha the son of R. Iddi said: The Writ saith, she is thy mother,[23] thereby teaching that one's mother, even if not his father's wife, is exactly as his father's wife.[24]

HE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW, etc. Why is he not also guilty in respect of her as his son's wife?[25] — Abaye answered: The Writ commences with his daughter-in-law, and concludes with his son's wife,[26] teaching that they are identical.[27] MISHNAH. HE WHO COMMITS SODOMY WITH A MALE OR A BEAST, AND A WOMAN THAT COMMITS BESTIALITY ARE STONED. IF THE MAN HAS SINNED, WHEREIN HAS THE ANIMAL OFFENDED? BUT BECAUSE MAN WAS ENTICED TO SIN THEREBY,[28] SCRIPTURE ORDERED THAT IT SHOULD BE STONED. ANOTHER REASON IS THAT THE ANIMAL SHOULD NOT PASS THROUGH THE STREETS, WHILST PEOPLE SAY, THIS IS THE ANIMAL ON ACCOUNT OF WHICH SO AND SO WAS STONED.

GEMARA. Whence do I know that pederasty is punished by stoning? — Our Rabbis taught : [If a man lieth also with mankind, as the lyings of a woman,[29] both of them have committed on abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them,][30] A man — excludes a minor; [that] lieth also with mankind — denotes whether an adult or a minor; as the lyings of a woman — this teaches that there are two modes of intimacy,[31] both of which are punished when committed incestuously. R. Ishmael said: This verse comes to throw light [upon pederasty] but receives illumination itself.[32] They shall surely be put to death: by stoning. You say, by stoning: but perhaps some other death decreed in the Torah is meant? — Their blood shall be upon them is stated here, and also in the case of one who has a familiar spirit or is a wizard:[33] just as there the reference is to stoning, so it is here too.

(1) Lev. XX, 11.

(2) In a gezerah shawah, the word used as a basis of deduction must be otherwise redundant (מופנה), being required for no other purpose. This is the opinion of R. Ishmael and R. Eliezer; the former deeming it sufficient if the redundancy is in one of the passages only, the latter insisting that the word must be superfluous in both. R. Akiba, however, maintained that such redundancy, even in one passage, is unnecessary.

(3) The gezerah shawah, whereby this phrase is made to include one's mother, is given further on.

(4) Lev. XX, 27. A man also or a woman that hath a familiar spirit (i.e., a necromancer), or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones, their blood shall be upon them.

(5) It is an axiom that before punishment can be imposed for any act, it must be explicitly prohibited. Now the whole of this verse merely decrees the punishment to be inflicted: hence the Talmud asks, where in the formal prohibition?

(6) Ibid. XVIII, 7.

(7) In which case it should be part of the wider injunction of Lev. XVIII, 22: Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind.

(8) Ibid. XX, 11.

(9) I.e., that it is a punishable offence too; for no punishment is mentioned in this verse.

(10) Thus the whole Baraitha supports Raba's statement.

(11) Lev. XVIII, 22.

(12) Not wishing to ascribe such a gross offence to a Jew.

(13) Since he does not interpret the verse, the nakedness of thy father, literally, there is only one prohibition against pederasty, viz., that of Lev. XVIII, 22; hence in his view there is only one penalty, no matter with whom the offence is committed.

(14) This is deduced from the verse (Lev. XVIII, 14), thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife. Since his wife is specifically prohibited, the first half of the verse must be understood literally. Consequently, it is twice prohibited. (for it is also included in the prohibition of Lev. XVII, 22) and hence a double penalty is incurred.

(15) Infra 76a.

(16) On the first view R. Judah may hold that a double penalty is incurred for pederasty with one's father. But on the second, this cannot be so. For he does not interpret the nakedness of thy father literally. Hence there is only one injunction (Lev. XVIII, 22) against this, and consequently only one penalty, the ad majus conclusion being insufficient to impose one.

(17) Since they interpret the nakedness of thy father literally.

(18) Ibid. XVIII, 8.

(19) Which being redundant, extends the prohibition to after his father's death.

(20) As she stands in a double relationship to him, being his father's wife and at the same time a married woman, which is separately forbidden in Lev. XVIII, 20, the emphatic ‘she is thy father's nakedness’ shews that the latter relationship is not considered in this matter.

(22) This being nowhere stated.

(23) Ibid XVIII, 7.

(24) I.e., the emphasis of the clause teaches that.

(25) Since there are two prohibitions, viz. Thou shall not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law; and, she is thy son's wife, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness (ibid. XVIII, 15).

(26) She is thy son's wife refers back to the word daughter-in-law.

(27) I.e., that it is to be regarded as one prohibition, not two, but that it applies even after the son's death.

(28) Lit., ‘a stumbling block has come to the man through it.’

(29) Lit. rendering of משכבי זכר translated ‘as he lieth with a woman’.

(30) Ibid. XX, 13.

(31) Natural and unnatural.

(32) For the phrase, the lyings of a woman, is redundant in so far as it teaches that even unnatural pederasty is punishable, since all pederasty is such. Hence its teaching is thrown back upon itself, viz., that unnatural cohabitation is punishable when committed incestuously.

(33) Ibid. XX, 27.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 54b

This teaches the punishment: whence do we derive the formal prohibition? — From the verse, Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is an abomination.[1] From this we learn the formal prohibition for him who lies [with a male]: whence do we know a formal prohibition for the person who permits himself thus to be abused? — Scripture saith: There shall be no sodomite of the sons of Israel:[2] and it is further said, And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to the abominations of the nations which the Lord had cast out before the children of Israel:[3] this is R. Ishmael's view. R. Akiba said: This is unnecessary, the Writ saith, thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind: read, ‘thou shalt not be lain with.’[4] Whence do we learn a formal prohibition against bestiality? — Our Rabbis taught : [and if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death: and ye shall slay the beast].[5] A man excludes a minor; [that] lieth with a beast — whether it be young or old; he shall surely be put to death — by stoning. You, by stoning; but perhaps one of the other deaths decreed in the Torah is meant? — It is here said, [and] ye shall kill [the beast]; and it is stated elsewhere, But thou shalt surely kill him. [. . . And thou shalt stone in him with stones]:[6] just as there, stoning is meant, so here too.

We have learnt from this the punishment for him who commits bestiality; whence do we derive punishment for him who allows himself to be thus abused? — The Writ saith: Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.[7] Since this is redundant in respect of the person committing bestiality,[8] you must regard it as applying to the person permitting himself to be thus abused.[9] From the Writ we know that there is punishment both for him who commits bestiality and for him who permits himself to be thus abused; whence do we know the formal prohibition? — Scripture saith, neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith.[10] From this verse we learn the formal prohibition for him who commits bestiality, whence do we derive the formal prohibition for him who allows himself to be thus abused? Scripture saith: There shall be no Sodomite of the sons of Israel; and it is elsewhere said, And there were also sodomites in the land, etc.[11] R. Akiba said: This is unnecessary. The Writ saith, Thou shalt not lie [with any beast], which means, thou shalt not permit thy lying [with any beast, whether actively or passively].

Now, he who [actively] commits pederasty, and also [passively] permits himself to be thus abused — R. Abbahu said: On R. Ishmael's view, he is liable to two penalties, one [for the injunction] derived from thou shalt not lie with mankind, and the other for [violating the prohibition,] There shall not be a Sodomite of the sons of Israel. But on R. Akiba's view, he incurs only one penalty, since thou shalt not lie and thou shalt not be lain with is but one statement.[12]

He who commits bestiality, and also causes himself to be thus abused — R. Abbahu said: On R. Ishmael's view, he incurs two penalties, one for the injunction, thou shalt not lie with any beast, and one for the prohibition, there shall be no sodomite of the sons of Israel. But on R. Akiba's view, he incurs but one penalty, since thy lying [actively] and thy lying [passively] is but one injunction. Abaye said: Even on R. Ishmael's view he incurs one penalty only, for there shall be no Sodomite applies to sodomy with mankind.[13] If so, whence does R. Ishmael derive a formal prohibition against permitting oneself to be bestially abused? — From the verse, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.[14] Now, this being redundant in respect of him who [actively] lies with a beast,[15] apply it to him who [passively] permits himself to be abused this; and the Divine Law designates the passive offender as the active offender:[16] this teaches that the punishment for, and the formal prohibition against, active bestiality[17] apply to passive submission too.[18]

He who submits both to pederasty and to bestiality — R. Abbahu said: On R. Akiba's view, he incurs two penalties; one for thou shalt not lie [with mankind], and the other for thou shalt not lie [with any beast]. But on R. Ishmael's view, he incurs only one punishment, both offences being derived from the single verse, There shall be no Sodomite.[19] Abaye said: Even on R. Ishmael's view, he incurs two penalties, because it is written, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.[20] This being redundant in respect of active bestiality, it must be applied to passive submission, and the Divine Law thus designated passive submission as an active offence: just as for the active offence there is punishment and prohibitions so for the passive offence too.[21] But he who commits pederasty and causes himself to be abused thus; and also commits bestiality and causes himself to be abused too — both R. Abbahu and Abaye maintain that on R. Ishmael's view he is trebly guilty, and on R. Akiba's view he is doubly guilty.[22]

Our Rabbis taught: In the case of a male child, a young one is not regarded as on a par with an old one; but a young beast is treated as an old one.[23] What is meant by this? — Rab said: Pederasty with a child below nine years of age is not deemed as pederasty with a child above that. Samuel said: Pederasty with a child below three years is not treated as with a child above that.[24] What is the basis of their dispute? — Rab maintains that only he who is able to engage in sexual intercourse, may, as the passive subject of pederasty throw guilt [upon the active offender]; whilst he who is unable to engage in sexual intercourse cannot be a passive subject of pederasty [in that respect].[25] But Samuel maintains: Scripture writes, [And thou shalt not lie with mankind] as with the lyings of a woman.[26]

It has been taught in accordance with Rab: Pederasty at the age of nine years and a day;

(2) Deut. XXIII, 18.
(3) I Kings XIV, 24. Just as abomination applies to sodomy in the latter verse, so it applies to it in the former too: thus it is as though the former verse read, There shall be no Sodomite of the sons of Israel: it is an abomination. And just as the abomination implicit here applies to both parties, so the abomination explicitly stated in Lev. XIII, 22 refers to both.
(4) I. e., the niph'al, the letters being the same, תשכב and תשכב.
(5) Ibid. XX, 15.
(6) Deut. XIII, 10, referring to a mesith, one who incites to idolatry.
(7) Ex. XXII, 18.
(8) As it is taught elsewhere, viz., in Lev. XX, 15.
(9) One of the methods of Talmudic hermenueutics is to apply a Biblical statement, superfluous in respect of its own law, to some other subject.
(10) Lev. XVIII, 23.
(11) Ibid. v. p. 368. n. 1: the same reasoning applying to bestiality as to pederasty.
(12) I.e., though differently vocalized in order to deduce two injunctions, it is nevertheless one statement only, so that a person transgressing these two injunctions violates one Biblical prohibition only.
(13) Not to bestiality at all, in spite of the fact that this was cited above in this connection.
(14) Ex. XXII, 18.
(15) Since it is stated in Lev. XVIII.
(16) I.e., though as shewn, this verse applies to a passive offender, yet its grammatical construction speaks of active bestiality.
(17) The reference having been given above.
(18) So that all is deduced from one verse, involving only one penalty.
(19) Since R. Akiba maintains that the prohibition of passive sodomy is included in active sodomy, it follows that passive pederasty and bestiality are two distinct offences, for there are two distinct injunctions. But as R. Ishmael maintains that the injunction against active sodomy does not include passive submission, and that the latter, whether in pederasty or bestiality, is derived from the single injunction, There shall be no sodomite, the double offence incurs one penalty only.
(21) Thus, this applies to passive bestiality, whilst there shall be no sodomite applies to passive pederasty. Hence, there being two separate injunctions for the two offences, a double punishment is incurred.
(22) Thus: R. Abbahu maintains that on R. Ishmael's view: (i) active pederasty is forbidden by Thou shalt not lie with mankind; (ii) active bestiality by Thou shalt not lie with any beast; (iii) passive pederasty and bestiality by There shall be no sodomite. Whilst Abaye maintains that on R. Ishmael's view, (i) active pederasty is derived from Thou shalt not lie with mankind; (ii) submission thereto from There shall be no sodomite; and (iii) active and passive bestiality from Neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith. (Lev. XVIII, 23) Hence, according to R. Abbabu and Abaye there are three injunctions for the four offences. Further, R. Abbahu and Abaye both teach R. Akiba's view to be that (i) active and passive bestiality are derived from Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind; and (ii) active and passive bestiality from Neither shalt thou lie with any beast. Hence there are two injunctions for the four offences.
(23) The reference is to the passive subject of sodomy. As stated supra 54a, guilt is incurred by the active participant even if the former be a minor, i.e., less than thirteen years old. Now, however, it is stated that within this age a distinction is drawn.
(24) I.e., Rab makes nine years the minimum; but if one committed sodomy with a child of lesser age, no guilt is incurred. Samuel makes three the minimum.
(25) At nine years a male attains sexual matureness.
(26) Lev. XVIII, 22. Thus the point of comparison is the sexual matureness of woman, which is reached at the age of three.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 55a

[he] who commits bestiality, whether naturally or unnaturally; or a woman who causes herself to be bestially abused, whether naturally or unnaturally, is liable to punishment .[1]

R. Nahman, son of R. Hisda stated in an exposition: In the case of a woman, there are two modes of intimacy, but in the case of a beast, only one.[2] R. Papa objected: On the contrary, since sexual intercourse with a woman is a natural thing, guilt should be incurred only for a natural connection, but for nothing else, whilst, since a connection with a beast is an unnatural thing, one should be punished for every such act, however it be done.[3]

It has been taught: Pederasty at the age of nine years and a day; she who commits bestiality, whether naturally or unnaturally, and a woman who causes herself to be bestially abused, whether naturally or unnaturally, are liable to punishment.[4]

Rabina asked Raba: What if one commits the first stage of pederasty? [He replied: Dost thou ask] what if one commits the first stage of pederasty! Is it not written, Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind?[5] But [the question to be asked is] what if one commits the first stage of bestiality? — He replied: Since the culpability of the first stage of incest, which is explicitly stated with reference to one's paternal or maternal aunt, is redundant there, for it is likened to the first stage of intercourse with a niddah,[6] apply its teaching to the first stage of bestiality [as being punishable].[7] Now consider: bestiality is a capital offence, punishable by Beth din. Why then does the Scripture teach the capability of its first stage in a law relating to a sin punishable by extinction:[8] should it not rather have been indicated in a verse dealing with sexual intercourse as a capital offence too;[9] so that one capital offence might be deduced from another? Since this entire verse[10] is written for the sake of new interpretations [whereby additional laws are deduced] — another statement for the same purpose is inserted.[11]

R. Ahdaboi b. Ammi propounded a problem to R. Shesheth: What if one excited himself to the first stage [of masturbation]? — He replied: You annoy us![12] R. Ashi said: What is your problem? This is impossible in self-stimulation; but it is possible in the case of coition with a membrum mortuum. On the view that such, in incest, is not punishable, in masturbation too it is not punishable. But on the view that it is punishable, a twofold penalty is incurred here, since he is simultaneously the active and passive partner of the deed.

It was asked of R. Shesheth: What if a heathen committed bestiality [is the animal killed or not]? Must it have been both a stumbling block and a cause of degradation [in order for it to be stoned], but here it was only a stumbling block, but not a cause of degradation;[13] or perhaps, even if it was only a stumbling block, without having led to degradation, [it is still stoned]?[14] — R. Shesheth replied, We have learnt it: If in the case of trees, which neither eat nor drink nor smell, the Torah decreed that they should be burnt and destroyed,[15] because they had proved a stumbling block: how much more so [must thou destroy him] who seduces his neighbour from the path of life to that of death.[16] If so, where a heathen worships his cow, should it not be forbidden and killed?[17] — Is there anything which is not forbidden to an Israelite, yet forbidden to a heathen?[18] But why should it not be forbidden if an Israelite worshipped it: is it not analogous to bestiality? — Abaye answered: In the latter case [bestiality] the degradation is great; whilst in the former [animal worship] the disgrace is little.[19] But in the case of trees, the degradation is not great, yet did not the Torah order them to be burnt, destroyed, and annihilated? — We are speaking of living creatures, for which the All-Merciful One shewed pity.[20] Raba said: The Torah ordered that the animal should be destroyed, because it too derived pleasure from sin.[21] But trees derive no pleasure, yet the Torah commanded that they should be destroyed, burnt, and annihilated! We are speaking of living creatures, for which the All-Merciful One shewed pity. Come and hear![22] ANOTHER REASON IS, THAT THE ANIMAL SHOULD NOT PASS THROUGH THE STREETS, WHILST PEOPLE SAY, THIS IS THE ANIMAL ON ACCOUNT OF WHICH SO AND SO WAS STONED.Now surely,

(1) (Rashi reads זכור instead of the זכר in our printed texts. A male, aged nine years and a day who commits etc.]

There are thus three distinct clauses in this Baraitha. The first — a male aged nine years and a day-refers to the passive subject of pederasty, the punishment being incurred by the adult offender. This must be its meaning — because firstly, the active offender is never explicitly designated as a male, it being understood, just as the Bible states, Thou shalt not lie with mankind, where only the sex of the passive participant is mentioned; and secondly, if the age reference is to the active party, the guilt being incurred by the passive adult party, why single out pederasty: in all crimes of incest, the passive adult does not incur guilt unless the other party is at least nine years and a day? Hence the Baraitha supports Rab's contention that nine years (and a day) is the minimum age of the passive partner for the adult to be liable.

(2) The reference is to bestiality. If a woman allows herself to be made the subject thereof, whether naturally or not, she is guilty. But if a man commits bestiality, he is liable only for a connection in a natural manner, but not otherwise.Thus Rashi. Tosaf., more plausibly, explains it thus: If one commits incest or adultery with a woman, whether naturally or not, guilt is incurred; but bestiality is punishable only for a connection in a natural manner, but not otherwise.

(3) The meaning according to the interpretation of Tosafoth is clear. Yet R. Papa's objection is not made in order to prove that unnatural incest is not liable (which, in fact, it is), but that if a distinction is to be drawn, unnatural bestiality is far more likely to be liable than unnatural incest. On Rashi's interpretation, R. Papa's objection is explained thus: Since a woman is naturally the passive object of sexual intercourse, it follows that she should be punished for bestiality only when the connection is carried out in a natural way. But as man is the active offender in an unnatural crime he should be punished even for unnatural connection. It must be confessed that this is not without difficulty, and hence Tosaf. rejects Rashi's explanation, which is based on a slightly different reading.

(4) V. supra p. 371. n. 5. This refutes the former view; and the latter too, on Rashi's interpretation.

(5) Ibid. XVIII, 20. Hence, why ask? Obviously, just as the first stage of incest or adultery is punishable, so also the first stage of pederasty.

(6) Niddah, a woman during her menstruation.

(7) In respect of one's paternal or maternal aunt, Scripture states: And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister: for he uncovereth his near kin. (Lev. XX, 19). The word for ‘he uncovereth’ (Heb. he'erah הֶעֱרָה) is understood as meaning the first stage of sexual intercourse, and this verse teaches that this is a culpable offence. But this teaching is superfluous, for in the preceding verse the same is taught of a niddah, which serves as a model for all forbidden human sexual intercourse. Hence the teaching, being redundant here, is applied to the first stage of bestiality. V. p. 368, n. 7.

(8) Incest with a paternal or a maternal aunt is so punishable.

(9) E. g., incest with one's mother, father's wife, or daughter-in-law is punished by stoning; v. supra 53a.

(10) Lev. XX, 19, referring to incest with a paternal or material aunt.

(11) In Yeb. 54b it is shewn that the whole verse is superfluous, its provisions being stated in Lev. XVIII, 12f. Hence it is written in XX, 19 in order that additional laws might be deduced.

(12) By a reprehensible sophistry, the thing being an impossibility. Other translations: ‘You disgust us; insolent man that you are!’

(13) Because bestiality was not unusual among the heathens, therefore he would not feel himself disgraced. This Talmudic judgment on heathen morals may appear very harsh and prejudiced, yet it is not a malicious slander. In the Gilgamesh epic Ebani, the primitive man, lives a wild life with the animals and satisfies his lust with them. Bestiality seems to have been prevalent among the Greeks and Romans of a later period, as is proved by an extremely unsavoury adventure described in the Metamorphoses of Apuleius. Cf. ‘A. Z. 22a, which forbids the stabling of cows with heathens, for fear of bestiality. (Hast. Dict. s.v. Bestiality.)

(14) The point of the problem is this: The Mishnah states two reasons for the stoning of the animal. The first, that it had been a stumbling block; the second, that it was a constant reminder that someone had been executed through it, i.e., that man had degraded himself thereby. Hence the question whether both are necessary before the animal must be stoned, or only one.

(15) Deut. XII, 3: And ye shall burn their groves with fire.

(16) I.e., to idolatry. That proves that that which caused sin, even without degradation, (the worship of trees by heathens not being accounted a disgrace to them) must be destroyed.

(17) Since a heathen is liable to death for animal worship, though it is not accounted a disgrace to him.

(18) Surely not. If a Jew worships his cow, it is not forbidden to benefit therefrom (Tem. 29a). Hence we cannot impose a prohibition if a heathen worships it. This is a general principle in the Talmud. It is very instructive as showing quite clearly the temper in which the Rabbis regarded the idea of election of Israel. So far from conferring special privileged dispensations, it could be taken as axiomatic that nothing permitted to the Jew was forbidden to the heathen. Cf. Joseph, M., Judaism as Creed and Life, pp. 153-4. 'In styling ourselves God's people we do not claim to possess any worldly advantage, or even any special share of the Divine love ... The pledge of God's affection for his people lies in his gift to them of a special opportunity of service, with its additional joys but also with its additional obligations. Nay, by taking upon himself the Yoke of the Law, Israel has been self-doomed to a life of trial.'

(19) Thus Tosaf. and R. Han. and one interpretation of Rashi. Another explanation by Rashi (adopted by Jast., s. v. קלון) is: In this case (of a Jew being the criminal) his disgrace is great, but in the latter (that of a Gentile) his disgrace is little. The first explanation seems to be more suited to the context.

(20) Hence, only where there is much degradation, as in bestiality, is the animal destroyed; but trees are destroyed even when the disgrace is not great.

(21) This is another point of difference between bestiality and animal worship. In the former, the animal too derives pleasure, but not in the latter.

(22) In answer to the problem, R. Shesheth's proof not being considered conclusive.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 55b

since the latter reason embraces both the reason of a stumbling block and of human degradation[1] , the former reason is that of stumbling block alone, e.g. when a heathen commits bestiality![2] — No. The second reason is that of stumbling block and of degradation,but the first teaches that even if there is degradation without a stumbling block, the animal is stoned, e.g., if a Jew committed bestiality in ignorance [of the fact that it is forbidden].[3] Even as R. Hamnuna propounded: What if a Jew committed bestiality in ignorance; must there have been both a stumbling block and degradation [for the animal to be stoned] and in this case there is only degradation, but no sin; or perhaps for degradation alone without there having been a stumbling block [the animal is stoned]?[4] — R. Joseph said: Come and hear! A maiden aged three years and a day may be acquired in marriage by coition, and if her deceased husband's brother cohabits with her, she becomes his. The penalty of adultery may be incurred through her; [if a niddah] she defiles him who has connection with her, so that he in turn defiles that upon which he lies, as a garment which has lain upon [a person afflicted with gonorrhoea].[5] If she married a priest, she may eat of terumah;[6] If any unfit person[7] has a connection with her, he disqualifies her from the priesthood —[8] If any of the forbidden degrees had intercourse with her, they are executed on her account,[9] but she is exempt.[10] Now, 'any of the forbidden degrees' implies even a beast: in this case, there is degradation but no stumbling-block, yet it is taught that they [including a beast] are slain on her account.[11] [No, this is not conclusive, as it can be argued that] since she deliberately offended there is a stumbling-block] [though she is a minor] but the All-Merciful One had mercy upon her; now, He shewed mercy to her, but not to the animal.

Raba said: Come and hear! A male aged nine years and a day who cohabits with his deceased brother's wife [the former having left no issue] acquires her [as wife]. But he cannot divorce her until he attains his majority.[12] He is defiled through coition with a niddah,[13] so that he in turn defiles that upon which he lies, as a garment which has lain upon [a person afflicted with gonorrhoea] — He disqualifies [a woman from the priesthood],[14] but cannot enable a woman to eat [of terumah].[15] He renders an animal unfit for the altar,[16] and it is stoned on his account,[17] and if he had intercourse with one of the degrees forbidden in the Torah, the latter is executed. Now here there is degradation, but no stumbling-block, yet it is taught: 'It is stoned on his account.' Since it was a deliberate offence, there is a stumbling-block, but the All-Merciful One had mercy upon him; now, He showed mercy to him, but not to the animal.

Come and hear! ANOTHER REASON IS THAT THE ANIMAL SHOULD NOT PASS THROUGH THE STREETS WHILST PEOPLE SAY, 'THIS IS THE ANIMAL ON ACCOUNT OF WHICH SO AND SO WAS STONED.' Now surely, since the latter reason embraces both stumbling-block and degradation, the former reason refers to degradation only, that is, when a Jew committed bestiality in ignorance.[18] No! The second reason is one of stumbling-block and degradation; but the first teaches that even if there is a stumbling block without degradation, the animal is stoned,[18] e.g., if a heathen committed bestiality, even as it was asked of R. Shesheth.[19]

MISHNAH. THE BLASPHEMER IS PUNISHED ONLY IF HE UTTERS [THE DIVINE] NAME.[20] R. JOSHUA B. KARHA SAID:

---

(1) When people remark that so and so was stoned through this animal, its own part in enticing to sin and the degradation of the offender are brought to mind.

(2) The reasoning is as follows: Since the second reason refers to both sin and disgrace, the first is superfluous; hence it must have been given in order to shew that even where sin alone is incurred, without degradation, the animal is stoned.

(3) According to this, the 'stumbling block' refers to the degradation involved, and not to the sin. When bestiality is committed in ignorance, one has not sinned, yet he has greatly degraded himself. The superiority of this explanation lies in the fact that both reasons now refer to a Jew, instead of one referring to a Jew and one to a heathen, which is not very plausible.

(4) According to the latter explanation of the Mishnah, this problem is solved, whilst the first remains unanswered; but according to the first explanation, the first problem is solved, but not the second. As we cannot be certain which is correct, both so far are unsolved.

(5) A man who had sexual connection with a niddah, defiles that upon which he lies even if he does not actually touch it. But the degree of uncleanliness it thereby acquires is not the same as that of bedding upon which a niddah herself, or a person afflicted with gonorrhoea, lies. For in the latter case, the defilement is so great that the bedding in turn renders any person or utensil with which it comes into contact unclean; whilst in the former, it can only defile foodstuffs and liquids. This is the same degree of uncleanliness possessed by a garment which has lain upon, or been borne by a zab (i.e., one afflicted with issue).

(6) As the law of an Israelite's (adult) daughter who married a priest. But if she was less than three years old, although the Kiddushin accepted on her behalf by her father is valid, yet since she is sexually immature, the marriage cannot be consummated, and hence she is not thereby enabled to eat of terumah. On terumah, the priest's portion of an Israelite's produce, v. Glos.

(7) E.g., a heathen, hallal, nathin, or bastard.

(8) I.e., if a priest's daughter, or if the daughter of a Levite or Israelite married to a priest, she may not eat of terumah.

(9) If they are of those forbidden on pain of death, v. supra 53a.

(10) As she is a minor.

(11) This solves R. Hamuna's problem.

(12) For, being a minor, he has no power to release her from a bond laid upon her, in the first place, by an adult (his brother).

(13) This rendering follows the more correct text of the Mishnah, Niddah 45a, of which this is a quotation, which has umittamma beniddah (through or by a niddah), instead of the reading here: umittamma keniddah, as a niddah.

(14) V. p. 343, n. 6.

(15) If he is a priest, and has sexual connection with an Israelite's daughter with marital intent, this does not authorise her to eat of terumah, because he has no legal powers of acquisition in marriage, excepting over his levirate sister-in-law, who is already bound to him.

(16) If he committed bestiality therewith, only one witness attesting the offence, the animal is not killed, nor does it become unfit for secular use, but it may no longer be offered as a sacrifice.

(17) If his bestiality was attested by two witnesses.

(18) Which solves the problem propounded by R. Hamnunah.

(19) V. p. 373, supra.

(20) I.e., the Tetragrammaton.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 56a

THE WHOLE DAY [OF THE TRIAL] THE WITNESSES ARE EXAMINED BY MEANS OF A

SUBSTITUTE FOR THE DIVINE NAME, THUS, 'MAY JOSE SMITE JOSE.'[1] WHEN THE TRIAL WAS FINISHED, THE ACCUSED WAS NOT EXECUTED ON THIS EVIDENCE, BUT ALL PERSONS WERE REMOVED [FROM COURT], AND THE CHIEF WITNESS WAS TOLD, 'STATE LITERALLY WHAT YOU HEARD. THEREUPON HE DID SO, [USING THE DIVINE NAME]. THE JUDGES THEN AROSE AND RENT THEIR GARMENTS, WHICH RENT WAS NOT TO BE RESEWN. THE SECOND WITNESS STATED; I TOO HAVE HEARD THUS' [BUT NOT UTTERING THE DIVINE NAME], AND THE THIRD SAYS: 'I TOO HEARD THUS'.

GEMARA. It has been taught: [The blasphemer is not punished] unless he 'blesses' the Name, by the Name[2] . Whence do we know this? — Samuel said: The Writ sayeth, And he that blasphemeth [nokeb] the name of the Lord . . . when he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death.[3] How do you know that the word nokeb[4] [used in the Hebrew] means a 'blessing'? — From the verse, How shall I curse [Ekkob][5] whom God hath not cursed;[6] whilst the formal prohibition is contained in the verse, thou shalt not revile God.[7] But perhaps it means 'to pierce,'[8] as it is written, [So Jehoiada the priest took a chest,] and bored [wa-yikkob][9] a hole in the lid of it,[10] the formal injunction against this being the verses, Ye shall destroy the names of them [idols] out of that place. Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God?[11] — The Name must be 'blessed' by the Name, which is absent here. But perhaps the text refers to the putting of two slips of parchment, each bearing the Divine Name, together, and piercing them both? — In that case one Name is pierced after the other.[12] But perhaps it prohibits the engraving of the Divine Name on the Point of a knife and piercing therewith [the Divine Name written on a slip of parchment]? — In that case, the point of the knife pierces, not the Divine Name. But perhaps it refers to the pronunciation of the ineffable Name, as it is written, And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed [nikkebu][13] by their names;[14] the formal prohibition being contained in the verse, Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God?[15] — Firstly, the Name must be 'blessed' by the Name, which is absent here; and secondly, it is a prohibition in the form of a positive command, which is not deemed to be a prohibition at all.[16] An alternative answer is this: The Writ saith, [And the Israelitish woman's son] blasphemed wa-yikkob[17] [and cursed],[18] proving that blasphemy [nokeb] denotes cursing. But perhaps it teaches that both offences must be perpetrated?[19] You cannot think so, because it is written, Bring forth him that hath cursed,[20] and not 'him that hath blasphemed and cursed', proving that one offence only is alluded to.

Our Rabbis taught: [Any man that curseth his God, shall bear his sin.[21] It would have been sufficient to say], 'A man, etc:' What is taught by the expression any man?[22] The inclusion of heathens, to whom blasphemy is prohibited just as to Israelites, and they are executed by decapitation; for every death penalty decreed for the sons of Noah is only by decapitation.[23]

Now, is [the prohibition of blasphemy to heathens] deduced from this verse? But it is deduced from another, viz., The Lord, referring to the 'blessing' of the Divine Name.[24] — R. Isaac the smith[25] replied; This phrase ['any man'] is necessary only as teaching the inclusion of substitutes of God's name[26] , and the Baraitha is taught in accordance with R. Meir's views For it has been taught: Any man that curseth his God shall bear his sin.[27] Why is this written? Has it not already been stated, And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death?[28] Because it is stated, And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord shall surely be put to death, I might think that death is meted out only when the ineffable Name is employed. Whence do I know that all substitutes [of the ineffable Name] are included [in this law]? From the verse, Any man that curseth his God-shewing culpability for any manner of blasphemy [even without uttering the Name, since the Name is not mentioned in this sentence]: this is the view of R. Meir. But the Sages maintain: [Blasphemy] with use of the ineffable Name, is punishable by death: with the employment of substitutes, it is the object of an injunction. [but not punishable by death].

This view [of R. Isaac the smith] conflicts with that of R. Miyasha; for R. Miyasha said: If a heathen [son of Noah] blasphemed, employing substitutes of the ineffable Name, he is in the opinion of the Sages punishable by death. Why so? — Because it is written, as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land [when he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death].[29] This teaches that only the stranger [i.e.. a proselyte], and the native [i.e., a natural born Israelite] must utter the ineffable Name; but the heathen is punishable even for a substitute only. But how does R. Meir interpret the verse, 'as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land'? — It teaches that the stranger and citizen are stoned, but a heathen is decapitated. For I would think, since they are included [in the prohibition], they are included [in the manner of execution too]: hence we are taught otherwise. Now how does R. Isaac the smith interpret the verse, 'as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land', on the view of the Rabbis?[30] — It teaches that only a stranger and a native must revile the Name by the Name, but for a heathen this is unnecessary. Why does the Torah state any man?[31] — The Torah employed normal human speech.[32]

Our Rabbis taught: seven precepts were the sons of Noah commanded: social laws;[33] to refrain from blasphemy, idolatry; adultery; bloodshed; robbery; and eating flesh cut from a living animal.[34]

(1) The witnesses, in giving testimony, do not state that they heard the accused say, 'May He slay himself', uttering the actual divine name, but use the word 'Jose' as a substitute for the divine name. 'Jose' is chosen as a substitute, because it contains four letters, like the actual Tetragrammaton, which must have been used by the blasphemer for him to be punished. Moreover, the numerical value of 'Jose' is the same as of Elohim (81). According to Levy, s.v. כינוי, the first Jose יוסי stands for Jesus (, son), and the second is an abbreviation of יוסף, Joseph, the Father, by which, however, God was to be understood. The witnesses were accordingly asked whether the accused in his blasphemy had set Jesus above God. (R. Joshua b. Karha, the author of this saying, lived at a time when Judeo-Christians ascribed more power to Jesus than to God.)

(2) As in the Mishnah, 'Jose strike Jose'. 'Bless' is here a euphemism for curse, and is so in the whole of the ensuing discussion.

(3) Lev. XXIV, 16. The repetition shows that the Divine Name must be cursed by the Divine Name.

(4) נקב

(5) אקב

(6) Num. XXIII, 8.

(7) Ex. XXII, 27.

(8) I.e., it is a capital offence to pierce the Divine Name, written on a slip of parchment, and thus destroy it.

(9) ויקב

(10) II Kings XII, 10.

(11) Deut. XII, 3f. The interpretation is based on the juxtaposition of the two verses; v. Mak. 22a.

(12) The knife passes successively from one slip to the other, but one Name does not pierce the other.

(13) נקבו

(14) Num. 1, 17.

(15) Deut. VI, 13, which is interpreted as a prohibition against the unnecessary utterance of His Name.

(16) The statement, Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, though implying abstention from something, is nevertheless given as a positive command, but punishment is imposed for the violation only of a direct negative precept.

(17) ויקב

(18) Lev. XXIV, 11.

(19) I.e., only he who both blasphemes, that is, utters the ineffable Name, and curses it, is executed.

(20) Ibid. XXIV, 14.

(22) Lit., 'A man, a man', heb.ish ish, איש איש

(23) The only place where death is explicitly decreed for non-Israelites is in Gen. IX, 6: Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed. It is a general law, applicable to all, having been given in the pre-Abrahamic era; his blood shall be shed must refer to the sword, the only death whereby blood is shed.

(24) V. infra 56b. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden, thou mayest freely eat. Gen. II, 16. Every word or phrase in this verse is separately interpreted, the Lord teaching the prohibition of blasphemy to a Noachide.

(25) In the Talmudic period the Rabbi was an honorary official; consequently, he had to have a private occupation e.g., R. Joshua, who came into conflict with R. Gamaliel, was a blacksmith, (Ber. 28a.) others translate, charcoal-burner.
(26) I.e., even if only a substitute was employed in blasphemy, the death penalty is incurred.
(27) Lev. XXIV, 15
(28) Ibid. 16.
(29) Ibid.
(30) That a heathen too must use the ineffable Name for incurring punishment.
(31) This is a difficulty For R. Isaac and R. Miyasha, as they explain the opinions of the Sages. They both maintain that the culpability of a heathen is deduced from And the Lord (God commanded etc.) When employing substitutes, his culpability, in the view of R. Miyasha is deduced from as well the stranger etc.; Whilst R. Isaac denies that it is punishable at all. Hence the difficulty, why the repetition ish ish, a man, a man?
(32) I.e., no particular significance attaches to the repetition, it being the usual idiom.
(33) I.e., to establish courts of justice, or, perhaps, to observe social justice (Nahmanides on Gen. XXXIV, 13): Hast. Dict. (s.v. Noachian precepts) translates 'obedience to authority'.
(34) These commandments may be regarded as the foundations of all human and moral progress. Judaism has both a national and a universal outlook in life. In the former sense it is particularistic, setting up a people distinct and separate from others by its peculiar religious law. But in the latter, it recognises that moral progress and its concomitant Divine love and approval are the privilege and obligation of all mankind. And hence the Talmud lays down the seven Noachian precepts, by the observance of which all mankind may attain spiritual perfection, and without which moral death must inevitably ensue. That perhaps is the idea underlying the assertion (passim) that a heathen is liable to death for the neglect of any of these. The last mentioned is particularly instructive as showing the great importance attached to the humane treatment of animals; so much so, that it is declared to be fundamental to human righteousness.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 56b

R. Hanania b. Gamaliel said: Also not to partake of the blood drawn from a living animal. R. Hidka added emasculation. R. Simeon added sorcery. R. Jose said: The heathens were prohibited everything that is mentioned in the section on sorcery. viz., There shall not be found among you any one, that maketh his son or daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them [sc. the heathens in Canaan] out from before thee.[1] Now, [the Almighty] does not punish without first prohibiting.[2] R. Eleazar added the forbidden mixture [in plants and animals]: now, they are permitted to wear garments of mixed fabrics [of wool and linen] and sow diverse seeds together; they are forbidden only to hybridize heterogeneous animals and graft trees of different kinds.

Whence do we know this? — R. Johanan answered: The Writ saith: And the Lord God commanded the man saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat.[3] And [He] commanded, refers to [the observance of] social laws, and thus it is written, For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment.[4] The Lord-is [a prohibition against] blasphemy, and thus it is written, and he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death.[5] God-is [an injunction against] idolatry, and thus it is written, Thou shalt have no other gods before Me.[6] The man-refers to bloodshed [murder], and thus it is written, Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed.[7] Saying-refers to adultery, and thus it is written, They say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and became another man's.[8] Of every tree of the garden-but not of robbery.[9] Thou mayest freely eat-but not flesh cut from a living animal.[10]

When R. Isaac came,[11] he taught a reversed interpretation. And He commanded-refers to idolatry; God [Heb. elohim] to social law. Now 'God' may rightly refer to social laws, as it is written, And the master of the house shall be brought unto elohim [i.e., the judges].[12] But how can 'and He commanded' connote a prohibition of idolatry? — R. Hisda and R. Isaac b. Abdimi-one cited the verse, They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, etc.[13] And the other cited, Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgment, because he willingly walked after the commandment.[14] Wherein do they differ? — In respect of a heathen who made an idol but did not worship it: On the view [that the prohibition of idolatry is derived from] they have made them a molten calf, guilt is incurred as soon as the idol is made [even before it is worshipped]; but according to the opinion that it is from, because he willingly walked after the commandment, there is no liability until the heathen actually follows and worships it. Raba objected: Does any scholar maintain that a heathen is liable to punishment for making an idol even if he did not worship it? Surely it has been taught: With respect to idolatry, such acts for which a Jewish Court decrees sentence of death [on Jewish delinquents] are forbidden to the heathen; but those for which a Jewish Court inflicts no capital penalty on Jewish delinquents are not forbidden to him.[15] Now what does this exclude? Presumably the case of a heathen who made an idol without worshipping it?[16] R. Papa answered: No. It excludes the embracing and kissing of idols.[17] Of which idols do you say this? Is it of those whose normal worship is in this manner; but in that case he is surely liable to death? — Hence it excludes the embracing and kissing of idols which are not usually worshipped thus.

'Social laws.' Were then the children of Noah bidden to observe these? Surely it has been taught: The Israelites were given ten precepts at Marah, seven of which had already been accepted by the children of Noah, to which were added at Marah social laws ,the Sabbath, and honouring one's parents; 'Social laws,' for it is written, There [sc. at Marah] he made for them a statute and an ordinance;[18] 'the Sabbath and honouring one's parents'. for it is written, As the Lord thy God commanded thee![19] — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The addition at Marah was only in respect of an assembly, witnesses, and formal admonition.[20] If so, why say 'to which were added social laws'?[21] — But Raba replied thus: The addition was only in respect of the laws of fines.[22] But even so, should it not have been said, 'additions were made in the social laws'? — But R. Aha b. Jacob answered thus: The Baraitha informs us that they were commanded to set up law courts in every district and town. But were not the sons of Noah likewise commanded to do this? Surely it has been taught: Just as the Israelites were ordered to set up law courts in every district and town, so were the sons of Noah likewise enjoined to set up law courts in every district and town! — But Raba answered thus: The author of this Baraitha [which states that social laws were added at Marah] is a Tanna of the School of Manasseh, who omitted social laws and blasphemy[23] [from the list of Noachian precepts] and substituted emasculation and the forbidden mixture [in plants, ploughing. etc.].[23] For a Tanna of the School of Manasseh taught: The sons of Noah were given seven precepts. viz., [prohibition of] idolatry, adultery, murder, robbery, flesh cut from a living animal, emasculation and forbidden mixtures. R. Judah said: Adam was prohibited idolatry only, for it is written, And the Lord God commanded Adam.[24] R. Judah b. Bathyra maintained: He was forbidden blasphemy too. Some add social laws. With whom does the following statement of Rab Judah in the name of Rab agree: viz., [God said to Adam,] I am God, do not curse Me; l am God, do not exchange Me for another; I am God, let My fear be upon you?[25] — This agrees with the last mentioned [who adds social laws to the list].

Now, what is the standpoint of the Tanna of the School of Manasseh? If he interprets the verse, And the Lord God commanded etc. [as interpreted above], he should include these two [social laws and blasphemy] also, and if he does not, whence does he derive the prohibition of the rest? — In truth, he does not accept the interpretation of the verse, 'And the Lord God commanded etc., but maintains that each of these [which he includes] is separately stated: Idolatry and adultery.

(1) Deut. XVIII, 10ff.

(2) Therefore, since it is stated that they are being expelled as a punishment for these sins, they must first have been warned (i.e., prohibited) against them.

(3) Gen. II, 16.
(4) Gen. XVIII, 19. Thus ‘command’ relates to justice and judgment.
(5) Lev. XXIV, 16-’The Lord’ being used in connection with blasphemy.
(6) Ex. XX, 3.
(7) Gen. IX, 6.
(8) Jer. III, 1. Thus ‘saying’ is used in connection with adultery.
(9) Since it was necessary to authorize Adam to eat of the trees of the garden, it follows that without such authorisation-i.e., when something belongs to another-it is forbidden.
(10) By interpreting thus: Thou mayest eat that which is now ready for eating, but not whilst the animal is alive. It is perhaps remarkable that a verse, the literal meaning of which is obviously permission to enjoy, should be interpreted as a series of prohibitions. Yet it is quite in keeping with the character of the Talmud: freedom to enjoy must be limited by moral and social considerations, and indeed only attains its highest value when so limited. Cf. Ab. VI, 2: No man is free but he who labours in the Torah.
(11) V. p. 361, n. 5.
(12) Ex. XXII, 7. The root idea of ‘elohim’ is power, majesty.
(13) Ex. XXXII, 8.
(14) Hos. V, 11, referring to idolatry; thus in both cases ‘command’ is used in connection with idolatry.
(15) V. Mishnah 60b.
(16) For which a Jew is not punished by death.
(17) Teaching that these are not punishable.
(18) Ex. XV, 25. Ordinance (Heb. mishpat) refers to social law.
(19) Deut. V, 16. This occurs in the fifth commandment of the second Decalogue. Similar words are used in the fourth commandment: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day. In both cases then there is a reference to some previous event, shewn by the use of the past tense: commanded thee. Now the second Decalogue, though spoken by Moses towards the end of his life in the plains of Moab many years after the first at Sinai, was nevertheless a repetition thereof. Therefore this reference back must have been made in the first promulgation also, and can only relate to Marah, where, as stated above, ‘he made for them a statute and an ordinance’, i.e., gave certain laws to the the Israelites.
(20) I.e., that Justice should be meted out by an ‘assembly’. viz., a Sanhedrin; that an accusation was to be attested by at least two witnesses, and that a formal warning or admonition was to be given to the accused before he committed his offence, as otherwise he was not liable to the prescribed penalty. But the sons of Noah, though bidden to observe civil laws, were not bound by these regulations.
(21) Since the addition was only in the method of procedure, but not in actual content.
(22) E.g., Deut. XXII, 19, 29, where a slanderer of a woman's honour is ordered to pay 100 silver shekels to her father, and a seducer of a virgin 50 silver shekels. These payments are not regarded as equitable indemnifications against loss sustained, but as fines for reprehensible acts. These laws were wanting in the civil code of the sons of Noah, and only these commands added at Marah.
(23) The text employs abbreviations for these commands.
(24) Which means that He commanded him to remember His Godhead, and not to reject it for a different deity.
(25) ‘Let my fear be upon you’ is an exhortation to dispense justice uprightly, without fear of man.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 57a

for it is written, The earth also was corrupt before God;[1] and a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Wherever corruption is mentioned, it must refer to immorality and idolatry.[2] ‘Immorality.’ as it is written, for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth.[3] ‘Idolatry,’ for it is written, Lest ye corrupt yourselves and make you a graven image, etc.[4] And the other teacher [who deduces this from the verse, and the Lord God commanded etc.]?[5] He maintains that this verse [sc. the earth also etc.] merely describes their way of living.[6] ‘Bloodshed’, as it is written, Whoso sheddeth man's blood, etc.[7] And the other?[8] — This verse [he will maintain] merely teaches the manner of execution.[9] Robbery, for it is written, As the wild herbs have I given you all things;[10] upon which R. Levi commented: as the wild herbs, but not as the cultivated herbs.[11] And the other?[12] — He will hold that this verse is written to permit animal flesh,[13] [but not to prohibit robbery]. Flesh cut from the living animal, as it is written, But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat.[14] And the other?[15] — He may hold that this verse teaches that flesh cut from live reptiles is permitted.[16] Emasculation, for it is written, Bring forth abundantly in the earth, and multiply therein.[17] And the other?[18] — He may regard this merely as a blessing.[19] Forbidden mixture, as it is said, Of fowls after their kind.[20] And the other?[21] — He will maintain that this was merely for the sake of mating.[22]

R. Joseph said, The scholars[23] stated: A heathen is executed for the violation of three precepts- Mnemonic G Sh R-[24] viz., adultery, bloodshed, and blasphemy. R. Shesheth objected: Now bloodshed is rightly included, since it is written, Whoso sheddeth the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed;[25] but whence do we know the others? If they are derived from bloodshed,[26] the other four should also be included; whilst if their inclusion is taught by the extending phrase any man,[27] should not idolatry too be included?[28] But R. Shesheth said thus: The scholars stated, A heathen is executed for the violation of four precepts [including idolatry]. But is a heathen executed for idolatry? Surely it has been taught: With respect to idolatry, such acts for which a Jewish court decrees sentence of death [on Jewish delinquents] are forbidden to the heathen. This implies that they are merely forbidden, but their violation is not punished by death! — R. Nahman b. Isaac answered: Their prohibition is their death sentence.[29]

R. Huna, Rab Judah, and all the disciples of Rab maintained: A heathen is executed for the violation of the seven Noachian laws; the Divine Law having revealed this of one [murder], it applies to all. Now is a heathen executed for robbery? Has it not been taught: 'With respect to robbery — if one stole or robbed[30] or [seized] a beautiful woman,[31] or [committed] similar offences,[32] if [these were perpetrated] by one Cuthean[33] against another, [the theft, etc.] must not be kept, and likewise [the theft] of an Israelite by a Cuthean, but that of a Cuthean by an Israelite may be retained'?[34] But if robbery is a capital offence, should not the Tanna have taught: He incurs a penalty? — Because the second clause wishes to state, 'but that of a Cuthean by an Israelite may be retained,' therefore the former clause reads, '[theft of an Israelite by a Cuthean] must not be kept.'[35] But where a penalty is incurred, it is explicitly stated, for the commencing clause teaches: 'For murder, whether of a Cuthean by a Cuthean, or of an Israelite by a Cuthean, punishment is incurred; but of a Cuthean by an Israelite, there is no death penalty'?[36] — How else could that clause have been taught? Could he state, 'forbidden' . . . 'permitted'? Surely it has been taught; A Cuthean and a [Jewish] shepherd of small cattle [sheep, goats, etc.][37] need neither be rescued [from a pit] nor may they be thrown [therein]![38]

'And similar acts.' To what can this apply in the case of robbery? — R. Aha b. Jacob answered: To a worker in a vineyard [who eats of the grapes]. When so? If his is the finishing work, it is permitted?[39] If it is not the finishing work, is it not actual robbery?[40] — But R. Papa said: This applies to [the theft of] an article worth less than a perutah.[41] But if so, why say that such robbery of a Jew by a Cuthean must not be kept: does he not forgive him?[42] — Though he later forgives him, he is grieved when it occurs [therefore it is prohibited] — But how can you say that such robbery by one Cuthean from another is but a 'similar act' [i.e., bordering on robbery]: since a Cuthean does not forgive,[43] is it not actual theft? — But R. Aha, the son of R. Ika answered; It applies to the withholding of a labourer's wage.[44] One Cuthean from another, or a Cuthean from an Israelite is forbidden, but an Israelite from a Cuthean is permitted.[45] To what can 'a similar act' apply in the case of a beautiful woman? — When R. Dimi came,[46] he said in the name of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hanina: To a heathen who allotted a bondwoman to his slave [for concubinage] and then took her for himself, for this he is executed.[47]

'A similar act', however, is not taught with reference to murder.[48] Abaye said: If it should be, however, that it is so taught, it would be in accordance with R. Jonathan b. Saul. For it has been taught; If one was pursuing his neighbour to slay him, and the latter could have saved himself by maiming a limb [of the pursuer, e.g., his foot], and did not thus save himself [but killed him instead],

(23) The term be Rab does not necessarily mean the school presided over by Rab, though it may have that meaning occasionally. In one sense, it connotes the school founded by him, but lasting many generations after his lifetime. In another, it denotes schools in general. In this very instance, the views attributed to be Rab conflict with the teaching of Rab, Rab Judah, and all his disciples (Weiss. Dor II, p. 206.)

(24) גש"ר: a mnemonic is given to facilitate the remembering of the subjects of a discussion. Here it stands for Gilluy 'Arayoth — adultery; Shefikuth damin — murder; and birkath ha-shem — blasphemy.

(26) That as bloodshed was forbidden on pain of death, so were the others too.

(27) Heb. איש איש ish ish. Lev. XXIV, 15: Any man (ish ish) that curseth his God shall bear his sin. Ibid. XVIII, 6: No man (ish ish) shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness. In both cases one referring to blasphemy, and the other to incest, the repetition of ish extends the law to embrace heathens too.

(28) Lev. XX, 2: Whosoever he be (ish ish) of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed to Moloch (i.e., engages in idol worship); he shall surely be put to death. The repetition then, here too, should extend the death penalty for idolatry to heathens.

(29) I.e., in speaking of heathens, when the Tanna teaches that they are forbidden to do something, he ipso facto teaches that it is punishable by death; for only in speaking of Jews is it necessary to distinguish between prohibition and punishment.

(30) Stole (ganab) refers to secret stealing, robbed (gazal), to stealing by open violence.

(31) In war, v. Deut. XXI, 10-14 — a species of robbery. [This is the only possible and correct rendering of the text, contra Goldschmidt. Cf. Tosef A.Z.]

(33) 'Cuthean' (Samaritan) was here substituted by the censor for the original goy (heathen).

(34) [I.e., though it is forbidden to rob the heathen (v. Yad, Genebah I, 2; VI, 8), the offence was non-actionable. For reason, v. B. K. (Sonc. ed.) note on Mishnah 37b.]

(35) But actually it is punishable too. [This is merely a survival of old Semitic tribal law that regarded theft and robbery as a crime against the state, and consequently punishable by death. V. Muller, D. H., Hammurabi, 88]

(36) Thus the Tanna does refer to punishment; since then he omits a reference to punishment in the clause under discussion, it shows that the heathen is not executed for robbery. In the whole of this discussion the punishment referred to is death.
(37) Both are regarded as robbers the latter because they permit their charges to graze in other people's fields.
(38) One need neither exert oneself to save them from death, nor may one encompass it. This, of course, is theoretical only, v. p. 388, n. 6. Not a few of these harsh utterances (where they do not reflect the old Semitic tribal law, v. p. 388. n. 7) were the natural result of Jewish persecution by the Romans, and must be understood in that light. In actual practice, these dicta were certainly never acted upon, and it is significant that a commission of Roman officers, after investigating Jewish law in its relation to Gentiles, took exception only to two laws, one relating to the damage done by a goring ox, and the other permitting a Jew the use of property stolen from a Gentile. R. Gamaliel repealed this latter law. (B.K. 38a: Sifre Deut. 344.) Hence, reverting to the discussion, the Tanna could not have stated that the murder of a Cuthean by a Jew is permissible, therefore he is forced to speak of punishment.
(39) E.g., the gathering in of the grapes. Deut. XXIII, 25 is interpreted by the Rabbis as referring to work in connection with the finishing touch given to the produce.

he is executed for his death.[1]

R. Jacob b. Aha found it written in the scholars'[2] Book of Aggada:[3] A heathen is executed on the ruling of one judge, on the testimony of one witness, without a formal warning, on the evidence of a man, but not of a woman, even if he [the witness] be a relation. On the authority of R. Ishmael it was said: [He is executed] even for the murder of an embryo. Whence do we know all this? — Rab Judah answered: The Bible saith, And surely your blood of your lives will I require;[4] this shows that even one judge [may try a heathen].[5] At the hand of every living thing will I require it: even without an admonition having been given;[6] And at the hand of man: even on the testimony of one witness;[7] at the hand of man:[8] but not at the hand [i.e., on the testimony] of a woman; his brother: teaching that even a relation may testify. On the authority of R. Ishmael it was said: [He is executed] even for the murder of an embryo. What is R. Ishmael's reason? Because it is written, Whoso sheddeth the blood of man within [another] man, shall his blood be shed.[9] What is a man within another man? — An embryo in his mother's womb.[10] But the first Tanna [who excludes the murder of an embryo from capital punishment] is a Tanna of the school of Manasseh, who maintains that every death penalty decreed for the heathens is by strangulation. He connects the [second] 'man' with the latter half of the sentence, and interprets thus: Whoso sheddeth man's blood, within man [i.e., within him], shall his blood be shed. Now, how can man's blood be shed, and yet be retained within him? By strangulation.

R. Hamnuna objected: Now, is not a [heathen] woman commanded [to keep the social laws]? Surely it is written, For I know him, that he will command his sons and his household [which includes the womenfolk] after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to exercise charity,and judgment?[11] — He raised the objection, and he answered it himself: he would command 'his sons' to exercise judgment; 'his daughters' to perform charity.

R. Awia the elder said to R. Papa: Let us say that a heathen woman who committed murder must not be executed, since it is written, at the hand of every man [who committed murder] etc. implying,[12] 'but not at the hand of woman'?- He replied: Thus did Rab Judah say: Whoso sheddeth man's blood implies whosoever it be [even a woman]. Let us say that a heathen woman who committed adultery is not executed, since it is written, therefore shall a man forsake [his father and mother, and cleave to his wife], implying[12] that a man [must cleave], but not a woman? — He replied: Thus did Rab Judah say: The verse, And they shall be as one flesh, reassimilated them to each other [making the law of fidelity applicable to both].

Our Rabbis taught: [A man, a man shall not approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness.[13] It would have been sufficient to state,] A man shall not approach etc. What is taught by the repetition, A man, a man? — The extension of the law to heathens, that they too are forbidden incest [including adultery]. Now is this deduced from this verse; is it rather not deduced from a different text, viz., [And the lord God commanded...] saying, which refers to adultery?[14] — The latter text refers to adultery with a woman of their own [i.e., with a heathen married woman]; the former to adultery with one of ours [i.e., a Jewish married woman], for the second clause teaches: If he committed incest with a Jewess, he is judged according to Jewish law. With regard to what is this?[15] — R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: With regard to an assembly, witnesses and formal admonition.[16] Is a Jewess then of less account?[17] But R. Johanan answered thus: It is with regard to a betrothed Jewish maiden,[18] whose violation by heathen law is not a capital offence;[19] hence they are judged by Jewish law.

But if their offence was against a fully married woman, are they judged according to their law? Surely it has been taught: 'If a heathen committed adultery with a [Jewish] betrothed maiden, he is stoned; with a fully married woman, he is strangled.' Now if we judged them according to the law pertaining to them, should he not be decapitated? — R. Nahman b. Isaac answered: By a 'married woman' this Baraitha means one whose huppah ceremony[20] has been performed, but without the marriage being consummated. Since by their law her violation is not a capital offence, they are judged by ours. For R. Hanina taught: They recognise the inviolability of a woman whose union has been consummated, but not if she merely entered the huppah without the union having been consummated. It has been taught in agreement with R. Johanan: All prohibited [sexual] relationships for which a Jewish Beth din imposes capital punishment are forbidden to heathens, but those for which a Jewish Beth din does not impose death are permitted to heathens; this is R. Meir's view. But the Sages maintain: There are many relationships[21] for which a Jewish Beth din does not impose death, which are nevertheless forbidden to a Gentile. If a heathen committed incest with a Jewess, he is judged according to Jewish law; if with a heathen woman, he is judged according to heathen law. The only difference that this makes is with respect to a betrothed maiden.[22] But should not the Tanna include a woman whose huppah ceremony has been performed without the marriage being consummated? — The teacher of this Baraitha is the Tanna of the college of Manasseh, who maintains that every death penalty decreed for the heathens is by strangulation, and by both codes [Jewish and heathen] this last-mentioned offence is punished by strangulation.

Now, is R. Meir of the opinion that all relationships for which a Jewish Beth din imposes capital punishment are forbidden to heathens? Surely it has been taught: A proselyte,

(1) Yet this cannot be regarded as real murder, and hence may be called 'a similar act'. But the sages dispute this, and maintain that he is not executed at all.

(3) Aggadah (or Haggadah, from nagad, to declare), means the whole non-legal portion of Jewish learning. Here however, an actual law is cited from the Book of Aggadah. In the T. J. and Midrashim, many statements cited in the T. B. as being from the Book of Aggadah of the schools, are those cited under the name of Noachian precepts. Hence it is possible that the reference is to a collection of laws relating to Gentiles, and in order to distinguish it from specifically Jewish laws, it was called the Book of Aggadah (Weiss, Dor, III, p. 158).

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 58a

born, but not conceived in sanctity,[1] possesses kin on his mother's side but not on his father's side. E.g., if he married his sister by his mother, [born before his mother's conversion, and who subsequently became converted too,] he must divorce her; by his father, he may keep her; his father's sister by his father's mother, he must divorce her; by his father's father, he may keep her; his mother's sister by her mother, he must renounce her; by her father — R. Meir ruled that he must divorce her, but the Sages maintained that he may keep her; for R. Meir held that all forbidden degrees of consanguinity on the mother's side must be divorced; on the father's side may be kept.[2] He may marry his brother's wife,[3] his paternal uncle's wife, and all other relations by marriage are permitted to him, this including his father's wife. If he married a woman and her daughter[4] he retains one and must divorce the other. But in the first place, he must not marry them.[5] If his wife died, he may marry his mother-in-law; others say that he may not![6] — Rab Judah said, There is no difficulty: one dictum is by R. Meir according to R. Eliezer, and one is by R. Meir according to R. Akiba.[7] For it has been taught: Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother;[8] R. Eliezer said: His father means 'his father's sister'; his mother, 'his mother's sister'.[9] R. Akiba said: His father means 'his father's wife'; his mother is literally meant. And he shall cleave, but not to a male;[10] to his wife, but not to his neighbour's wife;[11] and they shall be as one flesh, applying to those that can become one flesh, thus excluding cattle and beasts, which cannot become one flesh with man.[12]

The Master stated: 'R. Eliezer said: His father means 'his father's sister'. But may it not mean his father literally?[13] — This is forbidden by and he shall cleave, but not to a male. But perhaps it means 'his father's wife'? — That is taught by to his wife, but not to his neighbour's wife [which includes his father's]. But perhaps it forbids her even after his father's death? — It must be similar to his mother: just as his mother is not his relation by marriage, so his father must refer to a non-marriage relationship.

'His mother means, his mother's sister'. But may it not be literally meant? — That is taught by to his wife, but not to his neighbour's wife. But perhaps it forbids her even after his father's death? — It must be similar to his father: just as his father is not literally meant, so his mother is not literally meant.

'R. Akiba said: His father, means, his father's wife'. But perhaps it is literally meant? — That is taught by and he shall cleave, but not to a male. If so, is not his father's wife taught by to his wife, but not to his neighbour's wife? — That teaches that she is forbidden even after his father's death.

'His mother is literally meant'. But is this not taught by to his wife, but not to his neighbour's wife'? — This refers to his mother who was violated by his father.[14]

What are the grounds of their dispute? — R. Eliezer is of the opinion

---

(1) I.e., whose mother was a heathen at his conception, but became a Jewess before his birth.

(2) The guiding principal in all this is: 'a proselyte is as a new born babe', who stands absolutely in no relationship to any pre-conversion relation. Consequently, his brothers and sisters, father, mother, etc. from before his conversion lose his relationship on his conversion. Should they too subsequently become converted, they are regarded as strangers to him, and he might marry, e.g., his mother or sister. This is the Biblical law. But since heathens themselves recognised the law of incest in respect of maternal relations, the Rabbis decreed that this should hold good for a proselyte too, i.e., that he is forbidden to marry his maternal relations who were forbidden to him before his conversion, so that it should not be said that he abandoned a faith with a higher degree of sanctity than the one he has embraced (since he cannot be expected to understand the principle of complete annulment of relationships). In this case, since he was born in sanctity, he is really not a proselyte at all. He is so styled because he too is legally a stranger to all his father's and mother's pre-conversion relations. As for his mother's paternal sister, R. Meir held that since she is partly maternally related, she is forbidden, as otherwise it would be thought that a proselyte is permitted to marry his maternal relations. But the Rabbis held that there was no fear of this, and since the relationship is in its source paternal, it is not forbidden.

(3) By 'his brother's wife' is meant even his brother by his mother. For the heathens do not recognise consanguinity in relations by marriage, and consequently these are permitted to a proselyte.

(4) I.e., who stood in that relationship before they were converted.

(5) This is explained in Yeb. 98b as referring to those relations whom, as stated above, he may retain

(6) Now in this Baraitha a number of relations forbidden to Jews on pain of death e.g., his father's wife and his mother-in-law, are permitted to the proselyte, and hence to heathens in general; whilst a number of relations not forbidden on pain of death, e.g., his sister, his paternal and maternal aunts, are prohibited to him: This, taught in R. Meir's name, contradicts his other ruling that all forbidden degrees of consanguinity punishable by death are forbidden to heathens.

(7) Rashi states that both were his teachers, and cites Bezah 3b as proof. The J.E. (v. Meir) and Weiss, Dor II, 132, do not give R. Eliezer as one of his teachers. Nevertheless he may well have transmitted some of his rulings.

(8) Gen. II, 24.

(9) I.e., that union with these relations are forbidden.

(10) I.e., a prohibition against pederasty. This is deduced from the fact that it is natural only for the opposite sexes to cleave to each other.

(11) This is a prohibition of adultery.

(12) Hence R. Meir's dictum that heathens are forbidden those relations which are prohibited to Jews on pain of death, e.g., the father's wife, reflects R. Akiba's teaching, whilst his ruling in the Baraitha that a proselyte may marry his father's wife is R. Eliezer's view, who does not interpret 'his father' as his father's wife.

(13) Thus prohibiting pederasty.

(14) But not made his wife.

that only by referring to collateral relations[1] can his father and his mother bear similar interpretations.[2] But R. Akiba prefers to interpret his father as his father's wife, who is designated as the nakedness of his father, rather than his father's sister, who, is designated as his father's kin, not his father's nakedness.[3]

Come and hear: And Amram took him Jochebed his father's sister to wife.[4] Does it not [presumably] mean his father's sister on her mother's side [too]?[5] — No. It means his father's paternal sister.[6]

Come and hear: And yet indeed she is my sister; she is the daughter of my father, but not of my mother.[7] Does not this prove that his mother's daughter is forbidden?[8] — Now, is this logical: was she then his sister? She was his brother's daughter, and therefore, whether by his father or mother,[9] permitted to him. But Abram declared to him [i.e., Abimelech] thus: I am fraternally related to her, [i.e.,she is my brother's daughter] on my father's side [i.e., my brother by my father] but not on my mother's side.[10]

Come and hear! Why did not Adam marry his daughter?[11] So that Cain should marry his sister, as it is written, For I said, the world shall be built up by grace.[12] But otherwise, she would have been forbidden [to Cain]?[13] — Once however that it was permitted, it remained so.

R. Huna said: A heathen may marry his daughter. But should you ask, If so, why did not Adam marry his daughter? — In order that Cain might marry his sister, that the world might be built up by grace. Others give this version: R. Huna said: A heathen may not marry his daughter; the proof being that Adam did not marry his daughter. But that proof is fallacious: The reason was that Cain should marry his sister, so that the world should be built up by [Adam's] grace.

R. Hisda said: A heathen slave [owned by a Jew] may marry his daughter and his mother, for he has lost the status of a heathen, but has not yet attained that of a Jew.[14] When R. Dimi came,[15] he said in the name of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hanina: A heathen who allotted a bondwoman to his slave [for concubinage] and then took her for himself is executed on her account. From when [is she regarded as the particular concubine of that slave]? — R. Nahman said: When she is referred to as so and so's mistress.[16] When is she free again [to others]? — R. Huna said: From the time that she goes bareheaded in the streets.[17]

R. Eleazar said in R. Hanina's name: If a heathen had an unnatural connection with his wife, he incurs guilt; for it is written, and he shall cleave, which excludes unnatural intercourse.[18] Raba objected: is there anything for which a Jew is not punishable and a heathen is?[19] But Raba said thus: A heathen who violates his neighbour's wife unnaturally is free from punishment — Why so? — [Scripture saith:] To his wife, but not to his neighbour's; And he shall cleave, which excludes unnatural intercourse.[20]

R. Hanina said: If a heathen smites a Jew, he is worthy of death[21] for it is written, And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian.[22] R. Hanina also said: He who smites an Israelite on the jaw, is as though he had thus assaulted the Divine Presence; for it is written, one who smiteth[23] man [i.e. an Israelite] attacketh[24] the Holy One.[25]

(Mnemonic: lifts, his servant, Sabbath.)[26] Resh Lakish said: He who lifts his hand against his neighbour, even if he did not smite him, is called a wicked man as it is written, And he said unto the wicked man, Wherefore wouldst thou smite thy fellow?[27] 'Wherefore hast thou smiteth is not said, but wherefore wouldst thou smite, shewing that though he had not smitten him yet, he was termed a wicked man. Ze'iri said in R. Hanina's name: He is called a sinner, for it is written, But if not, I will take it by force;[28] and it is further written, Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great before the Lord.[29] R. Huna said: His hand should be cut off, as it is written, Let the uplifted arm be broken.[30] R. Huna had the hand cut off [of one who was accustomed to strike other people].[31] R. Eleazar said: The only thing to be done with him is to bury him, as it is written, And a man of [uplifted] arm, for him is the earth.[32] R. Eleazar also said: The earth was given only to the strong.[33] as it is said, But as for the mighty man, for him is the earth.[34] Resh Lakish said also: What is the meaning of the verse, He that serveth his land shall be satisfied with bread?[35] If one enslaves himself to his land [continually toiling thereon] he shall be satisfied with bread: if not, he shall not be satisfied with bread. Resh Lakish also said: A heathen who keeps a day of rest, deserves death, for it is written, And a day and a night they shall not rest,[36] and a master has said: Their prohibition is their death sentence.[37] Rabina said: Even if he rested on a Monday. Now why is this not included in the seven Noachian laws? — Only negative injunctions are enumerated, not positive ones.[38]

---

(1) I.e., to the father's sister or mother's sister.

(2) For they cannot both be literal, since his father is prohibited by ‘and he shall cleave’; nor can they both refer to relationship by marriage, since his mother is a blood relation.

(3) Lev. XVIII, 8: The nakedness of thy father's wife thou shalt not uncover it is thy father's nakedness; Lev. XVIII, 12: Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of my father's sister: she is thy father's near kinswoman. Since his father's wife is designated his father's nakedness she forms part and parcel of himself, as it were, in contradistinction to his father's sister, who by being described as his father's kin, is recognised as a separate entity. Consequently, in the interests of literalness ‘his father's wife’ is a more preferable interpretation.

(4) Ex. VI, 20.

(5) This refutes R. Eliezer's ruling. [Belonging to the pre-Sinaitic era, the Patriarchs were accounted Noachians.]

(6) Only this relation was permitted in the pre-Sinaitic era. But his father's maternal sister would have been forbidden.

(7) Gen. XX, 12. Spoken by Abraham about Sarah.

(8) This contradicts R. Akiba's ruling. For since he interprets the verse as referring us his father's wife and his mother, who are forbidden on pain of death, he evidently regards those who are forbidden under penalty of extinction as permissible, and his mother's daughter is only thus forbidden, but not on pain of death.

(9) This refers to his brother.

(10) Not that she would have been forbidden in that case, but this was stated merely for the sake of exactness.

(11) [Or why could not Adam have married his daughter? Eve's offence should have been followed by her death, and as to Adam, he could have found a help-meet in his daughter (Tosaf.)]

(12) Ps. LXXXIX, 2. It was an act of grace on Adam's part to deny himself his sister; or, as Rashi states, God commanded Adam to deal graciously with Cain, so that Cain, by marrying her, should build up the world.

(13) This proves that one's paternal sister was forbidden to the sons of Noah.

(14) Heathen slaves owned by Jews occupied an intermediate position in respect to Judaism. The males were circumcised, and permitted to eat of the Passover sacrifice. Like women, they were bound to observe all negative commandments and all positive ones not limited to certain times. We see here that this applied to marriage too. Their status was neither that of a heathen nor of an Israelite proper. As they were no longer heathens, they stood in no relationship to their former relations. But as they were not Jews either, there was no need to forbid them their former maternal relations through fear that it would be said that they had left a higher sanctity for a lower one.

(16) Lit., ‘girl’.

(17) Even non-Jewish married women did not walk bareheaded in the streets, and this bondwoman, though not legally married, would do likewise. If she appeared bareheaded, it was a sign that her connection with the slave to whom she had been allotted was now broken.

(18) His wife derives no pleasure from this, and hence there is no cleaving.

(19) A variant reading of this passage is: Is there anything permitted to a Jew which is forbidden to a heathen. Unnatural connection is permitted to a Jew.

(20) By taking the two in conjunction, the latter as illustrating the former, we learn that the guilt of violating the injunction ‘to his wife but not to his neighbour's wife’ is incurred only for natural, but not unnatural intercourse.

He has the privilege to become a true proselyte by accepting the whole law.' (Yad. Melakim, X, 9.) He also points out that 'Deserves death' expresses strong indignation, and is not to be taken literally; [cf. the recurring phrase. 'He who transgresses the words of the Sages deserves death.' Ber. 6b.]
(38) The seven Noachian laws deal with things which a heathen must abstain from doing. But when we say that a heathen must not observe a day of rest, we bid him to do a positive action, viz., work.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 59a

But the precept of observing social laws is a positive one, yet it is reckoned? — It is both positive and negative.[1]

R. Johanan said: A heathen who studies the Torah deserves death, for it is written, Moses commanded us a law for an inheritance;[2] it is our inheritance, not theirs.[3] Then why is this not included in the Noachian laws? — On the reading morasha [an inheritance] he steals it; on the reading me'orasah [betrothed], he is guilty as one who violates a betrothed maiden, who is stoned.[4] An objection is raised: R. Meir used to say. Whence do we know that even a heathen who studies the Torah is as a High Priest? From the verse, [Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments:] which, if man do, he shall live in them.[5] Priests, Levites, and Israelites are not mentioned, but men: hence thou mayest learn that even a heathen who studies[6] the Torah is as a High Priest! — That refers to their own seven laws.[7]

'R Hanania b. Gamaliel said: [They were also commanded] not to partake of the blood drawn from a living animal.'

Our Rabbis taught: But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat,[8] this prohibits flesh cut from the living animal. R. Hanina b. Gamaliel said: It also prohibits blood drawn from a living animal. What is his reason? — He reads the verse thus: flesh with the life thereof [shall ye not eat]: blood with the life thereof shall ye not eat. But the Rabbis maintain that this reading teaches that flesh cut from live reptiles is permitted.[9] Similarly it is said, Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life,' and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh.[10] But the

Rabbis maintain that the verse teaches that the blood of arteries, with which life goes out, [is also forbidden as blood].[11]

Why was it first enjoined upon the sons of Noah, and then repeated at Sinai? — As the dictum, of R. Jose b. Hanina. For R. Jose b. Hanina said: Every precept which was given to the sons of Noah and repeated at Sinai was meant for both [heathens and Israelites]; that which was given to the sons of Noah but not repeated at Sinai was meant for the Israelites, but not for the heathens. Now, the only law thus commanded to the children of Noah and not repeated at Sinai was the prohibition of the sinew that shrank [nervous ischiadicus], and in accordance with R. Judah's view.[12]

The Master said: 'Every precept which was given to the sons of Noah and repeated at Sinai was meant for both [Noachides and Israelites]'. On the contrary, since it was repeated at Sinai, should we not assume it to be meant for Israel only?[13] — Since idolatry was repeated as Sinai, and we find that the Noachides were punished for practising it,[14] we must conclude that it was meant for both.

'That which was given to the sons of Noah but not repeated at Sinai was meant for the Israelites, but not for the heathens.' On the contrary, since it was not repeated at Sinai, should we not assume that it was meant for the Noachides and not for Israel?[15] — There is nothing permitted to an Israelite yet forbidden to a heathen. Is there not? But what of a beautiful woman?[16] — There it is because the heathens were not authorised to conquer.[17] But what of a thing worth less than a Perutah?[18] — There it is because the heathens do not forgive.[19]

'Every precept which was given to the sons of Noah and repeated at Sinai was meant for both [Noachides and Israelites]'.

---

(1) Positive: In dispense justice; negative: to refrain from injustice. But the Sabbath is entirely positive.

(2) Deut. XXXIII. 4.

(3) This seems a very strong expression. In the J. E. (loc. cit.) it is suggested that R. Johanan feared the knowledge of Gentiles in matters of Jurisprudence, as they would use it against the Jews in their opponents' courts. In support of this it may be observed that the Talmud places R. Johanan's dictum (which, of course, is not to be taken literally) immediately after the passage dealing with the setting up of law courts by Gentiles. It is also possible that R. Johanan's objection was to the studying of Oral Law by Jewish Christians, as the possession of the Oral Law was held to be the distinguishing mark of the Jews. It is significant that it was R. Johanan who also said that God's covenant with Israel was only for the sake of the Oral Law. (Cf. Ex. Rab. 47.)

(4) In Pes. 49b two opinions on the reading of this verse are recorded. One view is that it should be read, Moses commanded us a law for an inheritance (morasha מורשה), in accordance with the Scriptural text. Another version is Moses commanded us a law for a betrothal (reading me'orasah מורשה =מארסה i.e., as something betrothed, consecrated to us, from ארש= ארם). On the first view, this prohibition is included in that of robbery; on the second, in that of adultery.

(5) Lev. XVIII. 5.

(6) Which includes observing.

(7) It is meritorious for them to study these; but not laws which do not pertain to them.

(8) Gen. IX, 4.

(9) V. infra 59b.

(10) Deut. XII, 23. Thus, the blood being equated with the life, it may not be eaten whilst 'the life' is with the 'flesh', i.e., whilst the animal is alive.

(11) The prohibition of blood is mentioned in the same chapter in connection with the slaughtering of the animal: 15 seq., Notwithstanding thou mayest kill and eat flesh in all thy gates . . . Only ye shall not eat the blood. Now, owing to this juxtaposition, I might think that only the blood that gushes forth from the throat when the animal is slaughtered is forbidden. Therefore the second injunction in v. 23 equates the prohibition of blood with that of flesh cut from the living animal. Just as the latter is forbidden in itself, so the former is forbidden irrespective of any connection with slaughtering. In Ker. 22a R. Johanan and Resh Lakish dispute as to what is meant by 'the blood with which life goes out'.

(12) R. Judah maintains that this was forbidden to the children of Jacob, who, living before the giving of the Law, are accounted Noachians. But the Rabbis maintain that this was given at Sinai, but that Moses when writing the whole Pentateuch, was commanded to insert it in Gen. XXXII, 33, so as to elucidate its reason.

(13) For if it were not so repeated, it would be natural to suppose that its application was a universal one. Hence its repetition would seem to limit it to Israel.

(14) V. p. 382. n. 3.

(15) The stand point of this objection is that the code promulgated at Sinai to the Israelites should cancel any previous code not given specifically to them.

(16) V. supra 57a.

(17) I.e., Palestine. For even the Israelites were permitted this only in the course of their conquest of Palestine, but not otherwise.

(18) The theft of which is regarded as an offence by heathens but not by Jews. V. supra 57a.

(19) Actually, it would be theft in the case of a Jew too, but that Jews are not particular about such a trifle, and readily forgive. Heathens, however, do not forgive, and therefore it is theft in their case.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 59b

But circumcision, which was given to the Sons of Noah, for it is written, Thou shalt keep my covenant,[1] and repeated at Sinai, And in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised,[2] yet was meant for Israel, and not for the Noachides? — That repetition was inserted to permit circumcision on the Sabbath, by interpreting, on the day [whichever it is], and even on the Sabbath.[3]

But procreation, which was enjoined upon the Noachides, for it is written, And you be ye fruitful and multiply.[4] and repeated at Sinai, as it is written, Go say to them, get you in to your tents again,[5] was nevertheless commanded to Israel but not to the heathens? — That repetition was to teach that whatever has been constitutionally forbidden by a majority vote requires another majority vote to abrogate it.[6] If so, may we not say of each [of the Noachian laws] that it was repeated£for a definite purpose?[7] — He éeans this: why should the prohibition be repeated?[8]

'Now the only law [thus commanded to the children of Israel and not repeated at S:nai] was the prohibition of the sinew that shrank [nervus ischiadicus], and in accordance with R. Judah's view.' But these[9] too were not repeated.[10] — These two were repeated, though for a purpose, but this was not repeated at all.

An alternative answer is this:[11] Circumcision was from the very first commanded to Abraham only [and not to the Noachides in general]: Thou shalt,keep my covenant, therefore, thou and thy seed after thee in their generation, [12] meaning, thou and thy seed are to keep it, but no others. If so, should it not be incumbent upon the children of Ishmael [Abraham's soa]? — For in Isaac shall thy seed be called.[13] Then should not the children of Esau be bound to practise it?-In Isaac,[14] but not all Isaac. R. Oshaia objected: If so, the children of Keturah should have been exempt![15] — Did not R. Jose b. Abin, or as otheÙs say, R. Jose b. Hanina, state: [And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised,that soul shall be cut off from his people;] he hath brokeŒ my covenant[16] — this extends the precept [of circumcision] to the children of K½turah?[17]

¡ Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Adam was not permitted to eat flesh, for it is written, [Behold I ave given you all the herbs, etc.] to you it shall be for food, and to all the beasts of the earth, [18] implying, but the beasts of the earth shall not be for ou.[19] But wi+h the adVent of the sons of Noah, it was permitted, for it is said, [Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you;] even as the green'he‹b have I given you all things.[20] Now one might think that the prohibition of flesh cut from the living animal does not apply to them [sc. the Noachides]: therefore the Writ teacheth, But flesh witó¨the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat.[21]

One might think that this prohibition applies even to reptiles; therefore it is stated — but.[22] How is this implied? — R. Huna said [But flesh with the life thereof, which is] the blood thereof: this shews that the prohibition applies only to those creatures whose flesh is distinct from their blood [in its prohibition]; excluding reptiles, whose flesh is not distinct from their blood.[23] An objection is raised: And rule over the fish of the sea;[24] surely that means that they should serve as food?[25] — No. It refers to toil.[26] But can fish be made to work? — Yes, even as Rahabah propounded: What if one drove [a waggon] with a goat and a shibbuta?[27] Come and hear: and over the foul of the heaven.[28] Surely this is in respect of food? — No. It refers to toil. But can fowø be made to work? — Yes, even as Rabbah, þon of R. Huna propounded: According to the ruling of R. Jose b. R. Judah, what if one threshed [corn] with geese or cocks?[29]

Come and hear: And over every living creature that moveth upon the earth![30] — That refers to the serpent. For it has been t³ught: — R. Simeon b. Manassia said: Woe for the loss of a great servant. For had not the serpent been cursed, every Israelite would have had two valuable serpents, sending one to the north and one to the south to bring him costly gems, precious stones and pearls.[31] Moreover, one would have fastened a thong under its tail, with which it would bring forth earth for his garden and waste land.[32]

A [further] objection is raised: R. Judah b. Tema said: Adam reclined in the Garden of Eden, whilst the ministering angels roasted flesh and strained wine for him. Thereupon the serpent looked in, saw his glory, and became envious of him?[33] — The reference there is to flesh that descended from heaven. But does flesh descend from heaven? — Yes; as in the story of R. Simeon b. Halafta, who was walking on the rnad, when lions met him and roared at him. Thereupon he quoted: The young lions roar after their prey;[34] and two lumps of flesh descended [from heaven]. They ate one and left the other. This he brought to the schoolhouse and propounded: Is this clean [fit for food] or not? — They [sc. the scholars] answered: Nothing unclean descends from heaven. R. Zera asked R. Abbahu: What if something in the shape of an ass were to descend? — He replied: Thou howling yorod:[35] did they not answer him that no unclean thing descends from heaven?[36]

'R. Simeon said, They were also forbidden to practice sorcery.' What is R. Simeon's reason? — Because it is written,

---

(1) Gen. XVII, 9. Abraham and his descendants until Sinai are also accounted sons of Noah.

(2) Lev. XII, 3.

(3) Hence, being repeated for a purpose, the above principle does not apply to it.

(4) Gen. IX, 7.

(5) Deut. V, 27. This is interpreted as a command to resume their marital obligations, which were suspended for three days before the Revelation, v. Ex. XIX, 15.

(6) Although the prohibition in Ex. XIX, 15 was explicitly limited to three days, yet after that it did not cease automatically, but was formally abrogated. This proves that any prohibition constitutionally imposed, as by a majority of the Sanhedrin, even for a limited period, must be constitutionally repealed thereafter. Hence the repetition being necessary, it is not subject to the general principle. — So Rashi. Tosaf however, (here and in Bezah 5a) maintains that a temporary prohibition automatically ceases at the end of its period. Accordingly, Ex. XIX, 15 is to be translated: Be ready against the third day (for God's Revelation); approach not your wives (for an unspecified period). Tosaf. therefore substitutes this explanation: A prohibitory measure, constitutionally passed, does not automatically cease when its reason no longer exists. Thus in this case the prohibition was obviously on account of the approaching Revelation, yet after the Revelation, when there was no longer any reason for its continuance, it had to be formally revoked.

(7) E.g., idolatry, to shew which acts of devotion are forbidden; incest, to teach its punishment.

(8) I.e., if some additional detail had to be taught, that alone could have been stated without repeating the basic law. Such repetition must have been to enlarge its scope, as embracing both Israelites and heathens.

(9) I.e., circumcision and procreation.

(10) For, as explained above, their repetition being for a definite purpose, is not a repetition at all.

(11) This is in answer to the first difficulty of circumcision having been given to the Noachides and repeated at Sinai.

(12) Gen. XVII, 9.

(14) Heb. ביצחק the ב (in) being taken as partitive preposition.

(15) Keturah was Abraham's wife after Sarah's death, by whom he had six sons. Gen. XXV, 1f. According to the verse

For in Isaac etc. these should not have been included in the precept.
(16) Gen. XVII, 14.
(17) This is the reply. The verse teaches the inclusion of the immediate sons of Keturah, but not of their descendants.
(18) Gen. I, 29f.
(19) I.e., the herbs, etc. have been given to you and to the beasts of the earth, but the beasts of the earth have not been given to you for food.
(20) Ibid. IX, 3.
(22) Heb. אך akh. It is a principle of Talmudic hermeneutics that the particles akh (but) and rak (save) always indicate a limitation or exclusion. Here akh is interpreted as teaching the exclusion of reptiles from the law under discussion.
(23) The mention of blood is redundant, for the verse should have read, but flesh with the life thereof shall ye not eat, meaning, whilst life is in it thou must not eat its flesh; it being self evident that the life force lies in the blood. The redundancy teaches that this applies only to those creatures that have a separate prohibition for its flesh (cut from, the living animal), and a separate one for its blood. But the blood of reptiles is not separate from its flesh and is forbidden by the same injunction, there being no separate law. Hence they are excluded from the present verse.
(24) Ibid. I, 28.
(25) This was said to Adam.
(26) Adam was given dominion over the lower creatures, to make them work for him.
(27) Name of a fish, conjectured by Jastrow to be the mullet (Cephalus, v. Payne Smith, Thesaurus Syriacus 4029). The problem raised is whether this would involve the transgression of the prohibition, Thou shalt not plow an ox and ass together, Deut. XXII, 10.
(28) Continuing the verse.
(29) V. B.M. 91b. The problems raised in connection with the prohibition, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. Deut. XXV, 4 shows that birds may be utilized for service.
(30) The Heb. חיה translated 'living creature', denotes literally a wild animal, which cannot be put to service, but can only be caught and eaten.
(31) Heb. סנדלבונים from  (Levy) or  (Krauss).
(32) Thus the Serpent was intended to be put to service before it was cursed.
(33) This proves that flesh was permitted to Adam.
(34) Ps. CIV, 21.
(35) Yarod is a bird of solitary habits, or a jackal (Rashi). The meaning is: what a foolish question to ask!
(36) Hence thy supposition is an impossible one; and if it did happen, it would be fit for food.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 60a

Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live;[1] and this is followed by, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death:[2] thus, all who are included in the second prohibition are included in the first.[3]

'R. Eleazar said; They were also enjoined against the forbidden mixtures.' Whence do we derive this? — Samuel replied: Because Scripture saith, My statutes ye shall keep,[4] implying the statutes which I have already decreed:[5] viz., Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: Thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed.[6] This teaches: just as in the case of animal life, the prohibition is against hybridization, so in plant life, the injunction is against grafting;[7] and just as the former holds good both within the land [sc. Palestine] and without,[8] so the latter holds good both within and without Palestine. But if so, does the verse, Ye shall therefore keep my statutes[9] also imply the statutes which I imposed long ago?[10] — There the verse reads, Ye shall therefore keep my statutes which I [now] command you: but here it reads, My statutes ye shall keep, implying the statutes decreed from of old shall ye keep.[11]

R. JOSHUA B. KARHA SAID etc. R. Aha b. Jacob said: He is not guilty unless he cursed the Tetragrammaton, excluding a biliteral Name,[12] the blaspheming of which is not punishable. Is this not obvious, the Mishnah stating, May Jose smite Jose?[13] — I might think that the name is used as a mere illustration;[14] he therefore teaches otherwise.

Others give this version: — R. Aha b. Jacob said: This proves that the Tetragrammaton is also a Divine Name.[15] But is it not obvious, since the Mishnah states: JOSE SMITE JOSE [using a four-lettered name]? — I might think that the great[16] Name must be employed, whilst Jose is merely an illustration [of the mode of testifying]; therefore he teaches otherwise.

WHEN THE TRIAL WAS FINISHED, etc. Whence do we know that they arose? — R. Isaac b. Ami said, because the Writ saith — And Ehud came unto him: and he was sitting in a summer parlour, which he had for himself alone. And Ehud said, I have a message from God unto thee. And he arose out of his seat.[17] Now, does this not afford an ad majus conclusion: If Eglon king of Moab, who was only a heathen and knew but an attribute of God's name, nevertheless arose, how much more so must an Israelite arise when he hears the Shem Hameforash.[18]

Whence do we know that they rent their garments? — From the verse, Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-Shakeh.[19]

WHICH RENT WAS NOT TO BE RESEWN. Whence do we derive this? — R. Abbahu said: A gezerah shawah is deduced from the word 'rent'.[20] This verse states, with their clothes rent; whilst elsewhere is written, And Elisha saw it [sc. Elijah's ascension] and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more; and he took hold of his own clothes and rent them in two rents.[21] Now, do we not understand from, 'and he rent them in two' that the cognate object is 'rents'; why then does the Writ expressly state 'rents'? — To teach that they were always to remain thus.[22]

Our Rabbis taught: He who hears [the Name blasphemed], and he who hears it from the person who first heard it [i.e., from the witness who testifies], are both bound to rend their garments. But the witnesses are not obliged to rend their clothes [when they hear themselves repeating the blasphemy in the course of their testimony], because they had already done so on first hearing it. But what does this matter: do they not hear it now too?[23] — You cannot think so, because it is written, And it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it [sc. the report of Rab-Shakeh's blasphemy] that he rent his clothes. Thus, Hezekiah rent his clothes, but they did not. Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: He who hears the Divine Name blasphemed by a gentile need not rend his clothes. But if you will object, what of Rab-Shakeh?[24] — He was an apostate Israelite.

Rab Judah also said in Samuel's name: One must rend his clothes only on hearing the Shem hameyuhad[25] blasphemed, but not for an attribute of the Divine Name. Now both of these statements conflict with R. Hiyya's views. For R. Hiyya said: He who hears the Divine Name blasphemed nowadays need not rend his garments, for otherwise one's garments would be reduced to tatters.[26] From whom does he hear it? If from an Israelite — are they so unbridled [as to sin thus so frequently]? But it is obvious that he refers to a gentile. Now, if the Shem hameyuhad is meant, are the gentiles so well acquainted with it [as to make such frequency possible]? Hence it must refer to an attribute, and concerning that he says that only nowadays is one exempt, but formerly one had to rend his clothes. This proof is conclusive.

THE SECOND WITNESS STATED, I TOO HAVE HEARD THUS. Resh Lakish said: This proves that 'I too have heard thus' is valid evidence in civil and capital cases,[27] but that the Rabbis imposed a greater degree of stringency [insisting that each witness should explicitly testify]. Here, however, since this is impossible [on account of the desire to avoid unnecessary blasphemy], they reverted to Biblical law. For should you maintain that such testimony is [Biblically] invalid, can we execute a person when it is impossible for the evidence to be validly given?[28]

AND THE THIRD DID LIKEWISE. This anonymous statement agrees with R. Akiba, who likens three witnesses to two.[29] [

(1) Ex. XXII, 17.

(2) Ibid. 18.

(3) Therefore, since the Noachides were forbidden bestiality, they were also forbidden sorcery.

(4) Lev. XIX, 19.

(5) Since other precepts are not introduced by this formula, we interpret it thus.

(6) Hence these were pre-Sinaitic, i.e., given to the sons of Noah.

(7) For the first is a law against crossing two actual animals to produce a hybrid. So the second must refer to the grafting of one tree upon another of a different kind, but not to the sowing of different seeds together, which are trees in posse but not in esse.

(8) It is a general principle that any obligation imposed upon man and not dependent upon the soil is binding outside Palestine too.

(9) Ibid. XVIII, 26.

(10) That verse refers to God's statutes in general, and if Samuel's interpretation is correct, it follows that all the statutes of the Torah were given to the Noachides.

(11) The answer is based on the fact that in Lev. XIX, 19 ‘statutes’ comes first in the verse, implying that they were already in existence, whilst in XVIII, 26 ‘ Ye shall keep’ is first, teaching that the statutes which follow were only then imposed.

(12) EL or YH.

(13) Thus, as a substitute a four lettered name is used, shewing that the Tetragrammaton must have been employed.

(14) Of how the witnesses gave their testimony. But the choice of a four lettered name — Jose — might be quite fortuitous.

(15) In addition to the Tetragrammaton, there were twelve-lettered, forty-two-lettered, and seventy-two-lettered Names. (Kid. 71a; Lev. Rab. XXIII; Gen. Rab. XLIV) R. Aha b. Jacob states that since ‘Jose’ is used as a substitute, it proves that even if the longer Names are not employed, but merely the Tetragrammaton, the guilt of blasphemy is incurred.

(16) I.e., of forty-two letters.

(17) Judg. III, 20.

(18) Lit., ‘the distinguished Name’, synonymous with the Shem hameyuhad, the unique Name. Both words designate something which is distinguished from other objects of its kind. (V. J. E., XI, 262) The term also means ‘preeminent’. From Rashi here and in ‘Er. 18b it appears that he does not regard the Shem hameforash as the Tetragrammaton. But Maimonides (Yad, Yesode Hatorah, VI, 2; Tefilah, XIV, 10) declares that they are identical. In general it was regarded as sinful to utter this Name (Sanh. 90a; ‘A.Z. 17b; Kid. 71a), nor was it widely known, being an object of esoteric knowledge (Kid. Ibid; Yer. Yoma 40), though there were exceptions

(19) II Kings XVIII, 37. Their clothes were rent on account of Rab-Shakeh's blaspheming of God. Cf. Ibid. XIX, 4.

(20) Ibid. II, 11.

(21) Ibid. 12.

(22) I.e., never to be resewn; and by analogy, the same interpretation is placed upon II Kings XVIII, 37.

(23) Hence they should be obliged to rend their clothes again.

(24) Who was a gentile, and yet his hearers rent their clothes: in fact, that incident is the basis of the law.

(25) V. p. 408, n. 1.

(26) Blasphemy being of such frequent occurrence.

(27) I.e., in these cases, when the first witness has testified, it is sufficient, by Biblical law, for the second to say, ‘I too heard (or saw) thus’, without explicitly stating what he had heard or seen.

(28) If the testimony must be given in particular form, but cannot, it is obvious that the malefactor should not be executed.

(29) This is in reference to Deut. XIX, 15: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses shall the matter be established. The difficulty arises, if two witnesses are sufficient, surely three are: then why state it? R. Akiba answers, To teach that just as in the case of two, if one is proved invalid, the whole testimony loses its validity (since only one witness is left), so also, even if there are three or more, and one was proved invalid, the testimony of all is valueless, though there are still two or more valid witnesses left. Now, when the Mishnah states that the third also must testify 'I too heard thus', it is in conformity with R. Akiba's ruling, so that should he be contradicted as having been absent, the entire testimony is null. Otherwise, it would be unnecessary for the third witness to be examined at all.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 60b

MISHNAH. HE WHO ENGAGES IN IDOL-WORSHIP [IS EXECUTED]. IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER HE SERVE IT, SACRIFICE, OFFER INCENSE, MAKE LIBATIONS, PROSTRATE HIMSELF, ACCEPT IT AS A GOD, OR SAY TO IT, 'THOU ART MY GOD.' BUT HE WHO EMBRACES, KISSES IT, SWEEPS OR SPRINKLES THE GROUND BEFORE IT, WASHES IT, ANOINTS IT, CLOTHES IT, OR PUTS ON ITS SHOES, HE TRANSGRESSES A NEGATIVE PRECEPT [BUT IS NOT EXECUTED]. HE WHO VOWS OR SWEARS [LIT. CONFIRMS A THING] BY ITS NAME, VIOLATES A NEGATIVE PRECEPT. HE WHO UNCOVERS HIMSELF BEFORE BAAL-PEOR[1] [IS GUILTY, FOR] THIS IS THE MODE OF WORSHIPPING HIM. HE WHO CASTS A STONE ON MERCULIS[2] THEREBY WORSHIPS IT.

GEMARA. What is meant by 'WHETHER HE SERVE IT'?[3] — R. Jeremiah said: This is what is meant: Whether he serve it in its normal way, or sacrifice, make libations, offer incense, or prostrate himself, even if these acts are not the normal mode of worshipping that particular deity. Why is blood sprinkling not included? — Abaye said: Because sprinkling is the same as offering LIBATIONS,[4] as it is written, their drink libations of blood will I not offer.[5]

Whence do we derive all these?[6] — Our Rabbis taught: Had Scripture written, He that sacrificeth shall be utterly destroyed.[7] I would have thought that the Writ refers to sacrificing without the Temple precincts;[8] therefore Scripture adds: to any God, shewing that it refers to sacrificing to idols.[9] From this I know only that sacrificing [as an abnormal act or worship] is punishable: Whence do I learn the same of offering incense and making libations? — From the additional words, save unto the Lord alone, whereby the Writ restricted all these services to the worship of the Divine[10] name. Now, since sacrificing was singled out from the general statement,[11] teaching that the latter applies to all services performed within the Temple precincts,[12] whence can it be extended to include prostration? — From the verse, And he hath gone and served other gods, and prostrated himself before them,[13] which is followed by, Thou shalt bring forth that man or that woman . . . and shalt stone them with stones.[14] From this we learn the punishment: whence do we derive the formal prohibition?From the verse, For thou shalt prostrate thyself to no other god.[15] I might think that I may also include embracing, kissing, and putting on its shoes [as punishable by death]:[16] but the Writ saith, He hath sacrificeth.[17] Now, sacrificing was included in the general statement;[18] wherefore was it singled out? — That a comparison therewith might be drawn, and to teach you: just as sacrificing is distinguished, in that it is a service within the Temple precincts, and the death penalty is incurred through it, so for all services performed in the Temple precincts [in lawful worship] one is liable to death [when performing them idolatrously]. Hence prostration was singled out to illumine itself alone, whilst sacrificing was singled out to throw light upon the general proposition.[19]

The Master stated: 'I would have thought that the Writ refers to sacrificing without the Temple precincts'. But is that not punishable by extinction?[20] — I might have thought: if he was warned, he is executed; if not, he is punished by extinction. It is therefore taught otherwise.

Raba, son of R. Hanan asked Abaye: Let us say that prostration was singled out in order to throw light upon the general law; and if you answer, in that case, why was sacrificing singled out too?[21] To throw light upon itself, viz., that the intention to perform one act in the service of idolatry, even if made during the performance of another [non-idolatrous] act, renders one liable to punishment. For it has been taught: If one slaughtered a cow with the intention of sprinkling its blood and burning its fat idolatrously, — R. Johanan said,

(1) A Moabite deity. 'That the statements of the Rabbis (on the repulsive mode of worship) are not wholly imaginative and do not take their colouring from the rites of some heathen or antinomian-Gnostic sects is shewn by the fact that the worship of Peor is ridiculed, but nowhere stigmatised as moral depravity, by the Rabbis, which latter might have been expected, had the assertion of the Rabbis been based on the Gnostic cults mentioned.' J. E. s.v. Baal-Peor.
(2) Mercurius, a Roman divinity, identified with the Greek Hermes; also a statue or a way-mark dedicated to Hermes, the patron deity of the wayfarer.
(3) Are not all the actions mentioned modes of worship?
(4) And already included in the Mishnah.
(5) Ps. XVI, 4.
(6) I.e., that guilt is incurred for all these acts of worship.
(7) Omitting the words, to any God, Ex. XXII, 19.
(8) Since this is forbidden elsewhere; Lev. XVIII, 3f; 8f.
(9) Now the reference must be to sacrificing as an abnormal mode of worship, for the normal act of worship is designated in Heb. by עבד (to serve), and the verse should have read, He who serves any other god by sacrificing to it. Every normal act of service is derived from Deut. XVII, 3.
(10) Heb. Shem Hameyuhad, v. p. 408, n. 1.
(11) In Deut. XVII, 2-5; v. next note.
(12) The penalty of death for idolatry is stated in Deut. XVII, 2-5; If there be found among you . . . a man or woman that hath wrought wickedness . . . And hath gone and served other gods and prostrated himself before them . . . thou shalt stone them with stones, till they die. 'And hath gone and served other gods' is a general statement, not particularizing any mode of service. Consequently, the verse in Ex. XXII, 19, which ordains the death penalty for sacrificing, is a singling out of a particular service from the general proposition of Deut. XVI, 3. Now it is one of the principles of exegesis that in such a case the particularized statement is intended to illumine and define the general proposition as a whole: thus just as sacrificing is a form of service performed within the Temple precincts (in lawful worship), so the general statement, 'and hath . . . served other gods' refers to such services, e.g., sprinkling of the blood, offering incense, and making libations. But prostration was not a mode of worship within the Temple precincts.
(13) Ibid. 3.
(14) Ibid. 4.
(15) Ex. XXXIV, 14.
(16) Since prostration is specially stated, I might think that it teaches that for any act of adoration, even if it is not the normal mode of worship, and not performed within the Temple precincts, just as prostration, guilt is incurred.
(17) Ibid. XXII, 19.

the animal is forbidden for any use;[1] but Resh Lakish ruled that it is permitted.[2] Now this difficulty is disposed of on R. Johanan's view;[3] but on the view of Resh Lakish,[4] [why not say that] the verse is required [for this purpose]?

R. Papa demurred: Would the verse singling out sacrificing be superfluous on R. Johanan's view? Surely he merely rules that the animal is forbidden [as a result of the analogy from piggul], but the person may not be liable to death. Hence the verse teaches [by singling out sacrificing] that he is so liable!

R. Aha the son of R. Ika demurred: Would the verse singling out sacrificing not be superfluous on the view of Resh Lakish? Surely he merely rules that the animal is permitted, yet the person may be punishable by death, just as in the case of one who prostrates himself before a mountain, the mountain remaining free for use though the person thereby renders himself liable to decapitation![5]

R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: According to Raba son of R. Hanan's question to Abaye, vi., 'let us say that prostration was singled out in order to throw light upon the general law,' what is excluded by the verse, [Take heed to thyself . . . that thou enquire not after their gods, saying,] How did these nations serve their gods[3] even so will I do likewise]?[6] Should you say, it excludes the act of uncovering oneself before deities whose normal mode of worship is sacrifice — but that is derived from prostration: just as prostration is an act of honour, so every act [to be punishable] must be one of honour! — But it excludes the act of uncovering oneself before merculis: for I would think, since its normal mode of worship is a contemptuous act [viz. — casting stones thereon], therefore any other degrading action [incurs guilt]; hence the verse excludes it. But what of R. Eleazar's dictum: Whence do we know that, if one sacrificed an animal to merculis, he is liable to punishment? — From the verse, And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto demons.[7] Since this is redundant in respect of normal worship, being derived from, How did these nations serve their gods,[8] apply it to abnormal worship [as being punishable].[9] Now, [on Raba son of R. Hanan's hypothesis that prostration throws light on the general statement] is not abnormal worship derived from prostration? — That verse teaches that even if he sacrificed to merculis merely as an act of provocation[10] [but without thereby accepting it as a divinity], he is punished.

R. Hamnuna lost his oxen. [On going to seek them] he was met by Rabbah, Who showed a contradiction in two Mishnahs. We have learnt: He WHO ENGAGES IN IDOL-WORSHIP [IS EXECUTED]; implying, only if he actually worshipped it, but Ð0 he merely said that he would serve it, he is not punished. But we have learnt: If he [the seduced person] says — 'I will worship.' or 'I will go and worship'. or we will go and worship' [the seducer is executed].[11] — He replied, The first Mishnah refers to one who said, 'I will not accept it as a god before I serve it.' R. Joseph said: You have chosen Tannaim at random![12] This is a conflict of Tannaim. For it has been taught: If a man said, 'Come and worship me,' R. Meir declared him liable to death [as any other seducer], but R. Judah ruled that he is not. Now if they [his listeners] did actually worship him, all agree that he is executed, for it is written, Thou shalt not make unto thee any idol.[13] Their dispute is only if they merely affirmed that they would worship him: R. Meir maintaining that a mere affirmation is of consequence[14] , whilst R. Judah holds that a mere affirmation is of no consequence.[15] Subsequently R. Joseph said: My answer is groundless for even R. Judah maintains that guilt is inc{rred for a mere assertion, as it has been taught: R. Judah said: He [the seducer] is nt liable to execution unless the seduced person declares, 'I will worship it,' or 'I will go and worship,' or 'Let us go and worship.'[16] But the dispute of R. Meir and R. Judah applies to a case where he incited others to worship him, and they replied. 'Yes!', R. Meir maintaining that when a man incites others to worship him, he is paid heed to, and the 'yes' was said in earnest; whilstóR. Judah holds that no heed is paid to him, for they say,

(1) Although it was not slaughtered with idolatrous intent, and even if subsequently the blûod was not sprinkled idolatrously, the unlawful intention at the time of slaughtering, though in respect of a different service, renders the animal unfit for use. R. Johanan deduces this by drawing an analogy from piggul (v. Glos.).

(2) Resh Lakish does not accept the analogy of piggul.

(3) Since R. Johanan draws an analogy in respect of the animal itself, he can apply the same analogy to the offender-viz., that an idolatrous intention in respect of one service is punishable, even though made in another act. Consequently, if prostration was singled out in order to illumine the entire law, the special statement of sacrificing is superfluous. Hence we are forced to the conclusion that prostration was singled out only for itself.

(4) For since he does not accept the analogy, we can argue thus. Prostration was singled out to illumine the whole, and sacrificing was singled out to teach that though an unlawful intention in respect of one act of service made in the course of another does not affect the animal's fitness for use, it is nevertheless punishable.

(5) I.e., though Resh Lakish rejects the analogy of piggul, he might accept that of mountain worship. For he rejects the former because piggul is in the course of service within the Temple, whilst ordinary slaughter is without. But mountain service, being also without, may provide the basis of an analogy.
(6) Deut. XII, 30. This implies that only the normal mode of serving the deities is forbidden. But, as shewn above, the light thrown upon the general statement of Deut. XVII,3, whether by prostration or by sacrificing, is in respect of abnormal acts of worship. Now, if prostration teaches that even extra-Temple acts are punished, what is excluded by this verse?
(7) Lev. XVII, 7.
(8) Deut. XII, 30.
(9) Hence sacrificing to merculis, though not its normal mode of worship, incurs guilt.
(10) I.e., to God.
(11) Infra 67a.
(12) I.e.. there is no warrant for assuming both Mishnahs to be of the same Tanna.
(13) Ex. XX, 4. Hence, since they worshipped him, he is guilty as a seducer.
(14) And renders the seducer liable.
(15) Hence the first Mishnah is taught in accordance with R. Judah; the second agrees with R. Meir.
(16) Thus though he did not actually worship it, even R. Judah maintains that he is executed.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 61b

'Wherein does he differ from us'? and in saying 'yes' they were but mocking him.[1] The two Mishnahs however are to be reconciled thus: The first Mishnah refers to a multitude who were seduced; the second to an individual. For an individual will not reconsider his resolve, hence he will surely go astray after the seducer; but a multitude do reconsider [because they discuss it with each other],and will therefore not go astray after the seducer.[2]

R. Joseph said: Whence do I know it [that the seducer is liable in the case of an individual]? — From the verse, [If thy brother . . . entice thee . . .] Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him.[3] Hence, if he consented and hearkened unto him [declaring that he would do as the seducer urged], guilt is incurred. Abaye demurred to this: Is there any difference whether the one or the many are seduced? Surely it has been taught: If thy brother, the son of thy mother, entice thee;[4] it is all one whether the one or the many are seduced. Scripture however excludes an individual from the law pertaining to a multitude, and a multitude from the provisions of an individual; [viz..] an individual is excluded from the law pertaining to a multitude, in that his person is punished with greater severity, whilst his property is treated with greater leniency, whilst a multitude are excluded from the law of an individual, being personally punished with greater leniency, but their property is treated with greater severity.[5] Hence the distinction is only in this respect, but in all other matters they are alike[6] . Abaye therefore answered thus:[7] The first Mishnah refers to one who is self-persuaded, the second to enticement by others; if he is self-persuaded, he may reconsider the matter [therefore he is punished only if he actually engages in worship]; but if he is enticed by others, he will be dragged after them [therefore for his mere assertion the penalty is merited]. Abaye said: Whence do I know this? From the verse, Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him: hence if he consented and hearkened [unto the seducer by affirmation] he is liable.

Raba said: Both Mishnahs deal with one who was seduced by others; the second Mishnah refers to a seducer who [described the idol's might] saying. 'it eats thus,' 'it drinks thus,' 'it does so much good and so much harm;' but the first Mishnah treats of a seducer who did not thus descant upon the idol's greatness.[8] Raba said, Whence do I learn this? — From the verse, [If thy brother... entice thee . . . saying let us go and serve other gods . . . ;] Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee or far from thee.[9] Now, what does it matter whether they are far or near? — But the Writ means this: from the character of the near idols you can learn the nature of the distant ones.[10] Surely then it means that the seducer had said to the seduced; 'It eats thus, it drinks thus, it does so much good and so much harm.' This proof is conclusive.

R. Ashi said; The second Mishnah refers to a non-conforming Israelite.[11] Rabina said: The two Mishnahs teach 'not-only-this. but-even-that.'[12]

It has been taught; If one engages in idolatry through love or fear [of man, but does not actually accept the divinity of the idol], Abaye said, he is liable to punishment; but Raba said, he is free from a penalty. Abaye ruled that he is liable, since he worshipped it; but Raba said that he is free: only if he accepts it as a god is he liable, but not otherwise.

Mnemonic; 'ebed yishtahaveh lemoshiah.'[13] Abaye said, how do I know it? Because we have learnt, HE WHO ENGAGES IN IDOL WORSHIP, IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER HE SERVE IT etc. Surely it means: whether he serve it through love or fear, [or whether he sacrifice to it as a god].[14] But Raba answers you: That is not so, but as R. Jeremiah resolved the difficulty.[15]

Abaye [further] said, Whence do I know it? For it has been taught: Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them:[16] thou mayest not bow down to them, but thou mayest bow down to a human being like thyself. I might think that this applies even to one who is worshipped, like Haman; but the Writ adds, not serve them.[17] But Haman was thus served through fear.[18] Raba, however, explains it thus: 'like Haman, but not altogether so. [To bow down to one] 'like Haman' [is forbidden], since he set himself up as a divinity; 'but not altogether so,' for Haman was worshipped through fear, whilst the prohibition of this verse applies only to a voluntary action.

Abaye said: Whence do I know it? — For it has been taught: [As for an anointed High priest's[19] [liability to a sacrifice] for [unwitting] idol-worship — Rabbi said: It holds good even if his inadvertency was in respect of the action only. But the Sages say, There must have been forgetfulness of the [principal] law itself.[20] They agree, however, that his sacrifice is a she-goat, as that of a private individual [who committed idolatry inadvertently].[21] They also agree that he is not bound to bring the guilt offering of doubt.[22] Now, how can the act of idol-worship be committed unwittingly? If he [saw an idolatrous shrine,] thought it to be a synagogue, and bowed down to it. — surely his heart was to heaven![23] But it must mean that he saw a royal statue and bowed down to it;[24] now, if he accepted it as a god, he is a deliberate sinner;

---

(1) And therefore he is not treated as a seducer, the likelihood of his obtaining a hearing being so remote

(2) Therefore in their case guilt is incurred only for actual worship; but in the case of a single individual the mere declaration is punishable.

(3) Deut XIII, 9, referring to an individual.

(4) Ibid. 7.

(5) Deut. XIII, 13-17 treats of a multitude that are seduced; they are to be decapitated (an easier death than stoning), and their properly destroyed. Deut. XVII, 2-5 deals with an individual (or individuals) who engage in idol worship; he is to be stoned, but nothing is said about his property, whence it may be concluded that it is left intact. Thus the individual is excluded from the law pertaining to the multitude, and vice versa, there being an aspect of greater severity and leniency in each.

(6) This refutes R. Joseph's distinction between an individual and a multitude.

(7) The difficulty presented by the two Mishnahs.

(8) Consequently his listener is likely to reconsider his resolve, and therefore punishment is not imposed until actual worship.

(9) Ibid. 8.

(10) A seducer generally seeks to entice one to worship distant idols by describing their great power, but avoids mention of the near ones, which his victims would themselves know to be powerless; therefore Scripture warns one against such enticement, by pointing out that the near (and known) idols are an object lesson for the distant ones. Scripture thus assumes that such blandishments were used.

(11) Therefore his mere assertion is sufficient to condemn him, as it is certain that he will keep it. But an observant Israelite may reconsider his desire.

(12) The first Mishnah states that the death penalty is imposed for engaging in idol worship, the second adds that this is so not only for actually worshipping idols but also for the mere statement of intention. Both Mishnahs will then refer to the same kind of Jew.

(13) ישתחוה עבד למשיח Lit. 'The servant shall bow down to the anointed one.' Three passages are adducced, whose catchwords are respectively Service, Prostration, The Anointed One. S. Funk (Die Juden in Babylonien, P. 94. n. 2) sees in this mnemonic an allusion to the Christians' acceptance of Jesus, 'the servant' being the title claimed by those who worship him as the Messiah.

(14) For, as in supra 60b the difficulty arises, what is meant by 'whether he serve it', Seeing that all other actions mentioned are forms of service. Abaye therefore proposes this solution.

(15) Supra 60b.

(16) Ex, XX, 5.

(17) Ibid. This phrase is superfluous, and is therefore so interpreted.

(18) This proves that idolatry (which includes worshipping a human as a divinity) is forbidden even when done through fear.

(19) Until the destruction of the First Temple, High Priests were consecrated by anointing (Ex. XXVIII, 41; XXX, 30; Lev, VII, 36. X, 7); and one thus consecrated was called Kohen ha-mashiah (the anointed priest). But during the second Temple, when no anointing took place (Sifra Zaw, Par. 3 ch, v.). they were consecrated by investiture in the official garments of the High Priesthood. Such a high priest was called merubeh begadim, i.e distinguished by a larger number of garments (eight as against the ordinary priest's four).

(20) Lit., 'the thing (in itself)'. This is in reference to Lev. IV, 2f: If soul shall sin through ignorance ... If the priest that is anointed do sin . . .then let him bring for his sin . . .etc. In Hor. 7b it is deduced that by ignorance in the case of the anointed priest is meant an inadvertence; viz., the action involving a complete forgetfulness of the prohibition on his part, as against an ordinary individual who has to bring an offering even if his inadvertency was only in regard to the action, but not to the prohibition itself. Now the Sages maintain that this applies to all sins, including idolatry. But Rabbi rules that if idolatry be committed inadvertently by the anointed Priest, though without forgetting that it is forbidden, he is still obliged to offer a sacrifice like an ordinary individual.

(21) I.e., though in Lev. IV, 3, a young bullock is prescribed as the sacrifice for an anointed Priest's inadvertent sin, yet in the ease of idolatry, even the Sages agree that he is treated as an ordinary individual, who offers a she-goat: Num. XV, 27. And if any soul sin through ignorance, then he shall bring a she-goat of the first year for a sin offering. By 'any soul' one understands even a High Priest; and 'sin' is interpreted as referring to idol-worship.

(22) If one is in doubt whether he has committed a sin, for the certain (unwitting) transgression of which a sin-offering must be brought, he is bound to bring a guilt offering of doubt (Lev. V, 17-19). This, however, does not apply to a High Priest. Now, even if the doubt is in respect of idolatry, though Rabbi assimilates the High Priest in this case to the common people as to the measure of inadvertency required, he nevertheless concurs with the Sages that the High Priest differs from others, in that he need not bring a guilt-offering of doubt. All this is deduced from Scripture in Hor. 7b.

(23) Hence, he has not even inadvertently committed idolatry.

(24) It was customary to set up royal statutes to which homage was paid. This was quite permissible. But occasionally a royal statue was actually worshipped; thereafter it was forbidden to make obeisance to it.

whilst if not, his action was not idolatrous at all. Hence, it surely must mean that he worshipped it idolatrously, through love or fear.[1] But Raba answers you thus: His inadvertency arose through his declaring that idolatry is permissible. But if he declares it permissible, is it not forgetfulness of the law? It refers to a declaration that it is entirely permissible; whilst forgetfulness consists of partial confirmation and partial annulment.[2]

R. Zakkai recited to R. Johanan: If one sacrificed, offered incense, made libations, and prostrated himself [before an idol] in one state of unawareness,[3] he is bound to bring only one sacrifice. Thereupon R. Johanan retorted: 'Go, teach this outside'.[4]

[But] R. Abba said, This teaching of R. Zakkai is the subject of a dispute between R. Jose and R. Nathan. For it has been taught: The prohibition of kindling [on the Sabbath] was singled out [from the general prohibition of work] to teach that it is merely the object of a negative precept — This is R. Jose's view. R. Nathan maintained, it was particularly specified to indicate 'separation'.[5] Now, on the view that kindling was specified to teach that it is merely the object of a negative precept, prostration too was singled out for that purpose. Whilst if kindling was singled out to indicate 'separation', prostration was likewise singled out for the same reason.[6] R. Joseph objected: Perhaps R. Jose maintains that kindling was singled out to teach that it is the object of a negative precept, only because he derives 'separation' of different acts of labour from the phrase 'of one of them'.[7] For it has been taught: R. Jose said, [If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the Lord, concerning things which ought not to be done,] and shall do of one of them:[8] this teaches that sometimes one sacrifice is incurred for 'all of them' [transgressions], whilst at others for each one [of the transgressions] a separate sacrifice must be brought. Whereon, R. Jonathan remarked, What is the reason of R. Jose [i.e., how does he deduce this from the verse]? — Because It is written, and shall do of one of them.[9] This teaches that liability is incurred for one complete act of violation [i.e., 'one']; and for one which is but a part of one [i.e., 'of one']; and for transgressing actions forbidden in themselves [i.e., 'them'], and for actions [the prohibited nature of which is derived] from others [i.e., 'of them']; further, that one transgression may involve liability for a number of sacrifices [i.e. 'one' = 'them']. whilst many offences may involve but one sacrifice [i.e., 'them' = 'one']. Thus: 'one complete act of violation,' — the writing [on the Sabbath] of Simeon; 'one which is but a part of one,' — the writing of Shem as part of Simeon;[10] 'actions forbidden in themselves' [i.e., 'them'] — the principal acts of labour forbidden on the Sabbath; 'actions [the prohibited nature of which is derived] from others [i.e., "of them"]' — the derivatives;[11] 'One transgression may involve liability for a number of sacrifices [i.e., "one" = "them"]' — e.g., if one knew that it was the Sabbath [and that some work is forbidden on the Sabbath] — but was unaware that these particular acts are forbidden;[12] 'many offences may involve but one sacrifice [i.e., "them" = "one"]' — e.g., if he was unaware that it was the Sabbath, but knew that his actions are forbidden on the Sabbath.[13] But here [in idol worship]. since separation of actions is not derived from elsewhere, may we not say that all agree [even R. Jose] that prostration was singled out to indicate 'separation'?[14] [But is this so?] May not 'separation' of acts in the case of idolatry too be deduced from 'of one of them'?[15] Thus, 'one complete act of idolatry' — sacrificing [to idols]; a part of one [i.e., 'of one'] — the cutting of one organ.[16] 'Actions forbidden in themselves' [i.e., 'them'] — principal acts; i.e., sacrificing, burning incense, making libations, and prostration; 'actions derived from others' [i.e., 'of them'] the derivatives of these — e.g.,if he broke a stick before it;[17] 'one transgression may involve liability for a number of sacrifices,' [i.e., 'one'='them']. e.g., when one knows that it is an idol [and that idolatry is forbidden], but is unaware that the particular acts in question constitute idol-worship;[18] many offences may involve but one sacrifice, [i.e., 'them' = 'one']; if he is unaware that it is an idol, but knows that these acts are forbidden in idol worship?[19] — Now, how is the unawareness of the idolatrous nature of a thing possible?[20] If one [saw an idolatrous shrine,] thought it to be a synagogue, and bowed down to it? Surely his heart was to heaven! But it must mean that he saw a royal statue and bowed down to it. Now, if he accepted it as a god, he is a deliberate sinner; whilst if not, he has committed no idolatry at all. Hence it must surely mean that he worshipped it idolatrously through love or fear. Now, this interpretation [of the phrase 'of one of them'] is possible on Abaye's view that a penalty is incurred for this. But on Raba's view that there is no liability, what can you say? Hence you will have to explain it that his inadvertency arose through his declaring that idolatry is permissible.[21] But on that assumption you may solve the problem which Raba propounded to R. Nahman, viz., 'What if one forgot both?[22] [Now on that assumption] you may deduce that he is liable only for one sacrifice?[23] — That causes no difficulty: then solve it![24]

But canst thou apply this verse to idolatry? In this chapter,[25] for the sin of an anointed High priest a bullock is prescribed;[26] of a chief, a he-goat[27] ; and of a private individual, a she-goat or a lamb;[28] whilst with respect to idolatry we have learnt: They agree that his sacrifice is a she-goat, as that of a private individual. There is nothing more to be said about the matter.[29]

When R. Samuel b. Judah came,[30] he said:

---

(1) Without knowing that this is idol worship. This constitutes inadvertency in respect of the action, but not forgetfulness (or ignorance) of the law, since he knows that idolatry per se is forbidden. Hence this Baraitha supports Abaye's ruling.

(2) E.g if the priest declares: Sacrificing and offering incense to idols are forbidden, but prostration is permitted, that is called ignorance of the law; if he declares that idolatry is not prohibited at all, it is, in Raba's opinion, regarded as inadvertency of action.

(3) I.e., he was not apprised between these actions of their forbidden character, subsequently forgetting it, but was unconscious thereof throughout.

(4) I.e., it is incorrect, and not to be admitted to the school as authentic teaching.

(5) In Ex. XX, 10, it is stated: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work. This is repeated in XXV, 2, with a special prohibition against kindling a fire, v. 3: Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations on the Sabbath day. Now kindling is prohibited by the general law of Ex. XX, 10: why is it singled out? R. Jose answers, to teach that whereas other modes of work are punishable by death, this is merely punishable like any other negative precept (viz., by flagellation). But R. Nathan maintained that it was in order to shew that if one did a number of separate acts on the Sabbath (in one state of forgetfulness) e.g., seething, reaping, and threshing, they are accounted as separate offenses, just as kindling was given as a separate offence, and a sacrifice must be brought on account of each.

(6) On 63a (infra) it is stated that prostration is specifically forbidden three times: (i) Ex. XX, 5: Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them, (ii) Ibid. XXIII, 24: Thou shalt not bow down to their Gods, nor serve them; and (iii) Ibid. XXXIV, 14: For thou shalt not bow down to any other god. (The injunctions against prostration in Deut. are not included, since Deut. is a repetition of the preceding books). One prohibition teaches that prostration even as an abnormal mode of worship is forbidden; the second that as a normal mode of worship it is forbidden (v. 63a); and the third intimates 'separation', viz., that if a number of idolatrous acts were unwittingly committed (in one state of ignorance), separate atonement must be made for each. Now, R. Abba holds that interpretation to agree only with the view that kindling was specified in order to teach separation. But on the other view, prostration was singled out to indicate not 'separation' but that its deliberate transgression is the subject of a negative precept and not punished by extinction as other idolatrous acts, involving consequently no sin offering for its unwitting transgression, albeit here the punishment is greater, viz., death instead of extinction (v. Deut. XVII, 3, 5). Consequently, R. Zakkai's statement is not incorrect; it is in accord with the view of R. Jose.

(8) Ibid.

(9) מאחת הנה. This is a peculiar construction. The Scripture should have written, 'and shall do one (not of) of them', or, 'and do of them' (one being understood), or, 'and shall do one' (of them being understood). Instead (of which, a partitive preposition is used before each. Hence each part of the pronoun is to be interpreted separately, teaching that he is liable for the transgression of 'one' precept; and for part of one (i.e.. for 'of one'); for 'them' (explained as referring to the principal acts); and for the derivatives ‘of them’ (acts forbidden because they partake of the same nature as the fundamentally prohibited acts); also, each pronoun reacts upon the other, as explained in the discussion.

(10) A sin offering for the unwitting violation of the Sabbath is not due unless a complete action is performed. The writing of a complete word — Simeon — is given as an example. Now, if one commenced writing the word Simeon שמעון SHime'on in Hebrew, and only wrote the first two letters thereof, viz., Shem, שם, SHem, he is also liable, though his intention was only partly fulfilled, because Shem is a complete name in itself; similarly, if he commenced writing Daniel and only wrote Dan. This the Talmud calls one action which is part of another (i.e. — ‘of one’). If, however, the part he wrote is not complete in itself, e.g., the first two letters of Reuben, in Hebrew, there is no liability.

(11) Labour forbidden on the Sabbath is divided into two categories: (1) fundamental or principal acts, forbidden in themselves and named in the Talmud ‘fathers’ — 39 are enumerated in Shab. 73a; and (ii) derivative or secondary acts, regarded as species of the former, and called ‘toledoth’, lit., ‘offsprings’. E.g., Sowing, ploughing, and reaping belong to the first category; planting, digging, and vintaging are their respective derivatives.

(12) Hence, though he violated only one injunction, viz., the sacredness of the Sabbath, yet since he was ignorant of each of these acts, he is regarded as having committed a number of separate inadvertent transgressions, for each of which a sacrifice is due.

(13) Therefore, since all his actions were the result of being unaware of one single fact, viz., that it was the Sabbath, only one sacrifice is due. In this discussion ‘them’ is taken to indicate more than one. We see from this Baraitha that R. Jose derives ‘separation’ of labour on the Sabbath from this verse, therefore he is bound to interpret the singling out of kindling as teaching something else, viz., that kindling is only subject to a negative precept.

(15) Since that verse refers to sin in general, not particularly to the Sabbath, its deductions apply to idolatry too.

(16) The ritual slaughtering and the sacrificing of an animal consists of cutting through two organs, the windpipe and the gullet. Now, if one cuts only one organ (in idol worship) he commits ‘part of one’ forbidden action. Nevertheless, he incurs the penalty of idolatry, because this partial action is a complete action elsewhere, for a fowl sin-offering needs only the severing of one organ.

(17) I.e., in honour of the idol. As an idolatrous act, this being similar to slaughter, whereby the neck is broken, is hence a derivative. A penalty is incurred only if this is the normal mode of worship of that particular deity. ‘A.Z. 51a.

(18) E.g., knowing that sacrifice is forbidden, but thinking that burning incense and offering libations are permitted.

(19) The reasoning is the same as in the case of the Sabbath.

(20) This is the answer.

(21) Though this does not constitute unawareness that a particular thing is an idol and consciousness that these particular acts are forbidden in idol worship, yet it is a case where many transgressions involve but one sacrifice.

(22) This refers to the Sabbath. If one did a number of forbidden acts on the Sabbath, unaware that it was the Sabbath and also ignorant that these particular acts are forbidden on the Sabbath.

(23) For if one declared that idolatry is permissible, it is as though he were unaware that a particular thing was an idol, as explained at the beginning of 62a. Hence if we deduce from the verse that in idolatry only one sacrifice is needed for such inadvertence, the same must apply to the Sabbath. At this stage of the discussion it is assumed, however, that this deduction is impossible, as otherwise Raba would not have propounded his problem. Consequently the verse cannot be applied to idolatry, and R. Abba is justified in regarding kindling and prostration as interdependent both in interpretation and in the resultant laws and R. Zakkai's statement is admissible as correct — according to R. Jose.

(24) I.e., the fact that this interpretation solves Raba's problem does not militate against its correctness. Consequently, the verse can be applied to idolatry, and R. Abba's views are again refuted.

(25) Introduced by the passage under discussion, viz., If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the Lord . . . and shall do of one of them.

(26) Lev. IV, 3.

(27) Ibid. 22f.

(28) Ibid. 27f, 32.

(29) I.e., to this no answer is possible. Consequently this verse cannot teach separation of idolatrous actions. In R. Joseph's view, as expressed by his objection, it is deduced from the singling out of prostration.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 62b

This is the teaching which he [R. Zakkai] recited to him [R. Johanan]: [In one respect] the Sabbath is more stringent than other precepts; [in another,] it is the reverse. Now the Sabbath is more stringent than other precepts — in that if one did two acts of work in one state of unawareness, he must make atonement for each separately; this is not so in the case of other precepts. Other precepts are more stringent than the Sabbath, for in their case, if an injunction was unwittingly and unintentionally violated, atonement must be made: this is not so with respect to the Sabbath.[1]

The `aster said: 'The Sabbath is more stringent than other precepts, in that if one did two acts of work etc.' How so? Shall we say that he reaped and ground [corn]? Then an analagous violation of other precepts would be the partaking of forbidden fat and blood — but in both cases, two penalties are incurred! But how is it possible in the case of other precepts that only one liability is incurred? E.g., if one ate forbidden fat twice;[2] then by analogy, the Sabbath was desecrated by reaping twice — but in each case, only one liability is incurred! Therefore R. Johanan said to him? 'Go, teach it outside!'

But what is the difficulty? Perhaps it can be explained after all as referring to reaping and grinding. whilst 'this is not so in the case of other precepts' refers to idolatry, and in accordance with the dictum of R. Ammi, who said: If one sacrificed, burnt incense, and made libations [to an idol] in one state of unawareness, only one penalty is incurred [though a number of services were performed]! — This cannot be explained as referring to idolatry, because the second clause states: 'Other precepts are more stringent than the Sabbath, for in their case, if an injunction was unwittingly and unintentionally violated, atonement must be made.' Now, how is an unwitting and unintentional transgression of idolatry possible? If one thought it [sc. an idolatrous shrine] to be a synagogue, and bowed down to it — but his heart was to heaven! But it must mean that he saw a royal statue, and bowed down to it; now, if he accepted it as a god, he is a deliberate sinner; whilst if he did not accept it as a god, he has not committed idolatry at all. Hence it must mean that he worshipped it idolatrously through love or fear. Now this agrees with Abaye's view that a penalty is incurred; but on Raba's view that there is no liability, what can you say? You will therefore explain that his inadvertency arose through his declaring that idolatry is permissible.[3] Then 'this is not so in the case of the Sabbath' will mean that there is no liability at all.[4] But this cannot be so, for when Raba propounded to R. Nahman, 'What if one is unaware of both [i.e. that it is the Sabbath, and that labour on the Sabbath is forbidden],' his problem was whether one sacrifice is incurred or two [one for each act of work]; but none maintain that he is entirely exempt? What difficulty is this! Perhaps after all, it ought be said, the first clause [dealing with the greater severity of the Sabbath] refers to idolatry, whilst the second treats of other precepts; the unwitting and unintentional transgression of which consisted of thinking that [melted forbidden fat] was spittle, which he swallowed. [For this, liability is incurred,] which is not so with regard to the Sabbath, there being no liability [in an analogous case, e.g] if one intended lifting something detached from the soil, but accidently tore out a plant from the earth, he is exempt from a penalty.[5] Now, this is in accordance with R. Nahman's dictum in Samuel's name, viz., He who violates the injunction of forbidden fat or consanguineous relationship whilst intending to do something else[6] is liable to a penalty, since he derived pleasure thereby. But he who mistakenly did a forbidden act on the Sabbath whilst intending to do another[7] is free from penalty — because the Torah prohibited only a calculated action.[8] But R. Johanan [who said, 'Go, teach it outside'.] was consistent with his attitude [elsewhere], that two clauses of a Mishnah must not be interpreted as referring each to different circumstances — for R. Johanan said: He who will explain to me the Mishnah of 'a barrel' to agree with one Tanna entirely, I shall carry his clothes for him to the baths.[9] To revert to the main text:

---

(1) The Talmud discusses further on what is meant by unwittingly and unintentionally.

(2) In one state of unawareness, not being reminded in between that this fat is forbidden,

(3) And since he has never known of any prohibition, it is not only regarded as unwitting, but as unintentional too. Cf.

62a top.
(4) If one worked on the Sabbath, not knowing that there is any prohibition against it.
(5) Cutting or tearing out anything growing in the earth is a forbidden labour on the Sabbath. His offence was both unwitting and unintentional for (i) he had no intention of tearing out anything and (ii) he did not know that this was growing in the soil, Now, had he known that it was growing in the soil and deliberately uprooted it in ignorance of the forbidden nature of that action, his offence would have been unwitting but intentional. By analogy, had be intended to eat the melted fat, thinking that it was permitted, his offence would be regarded as unwitting but intentional. Since, however, he did not intend eating it at all, but accidentally swallowed it, thinking at the same time that it was spittle, his offence was both unwitting and unintentional.
(6) E.g., if he reached out for a permitted piece, and accidentally took the forbidden fat, or mistook his sister for his wife.
(7) Whether the other itself was forbidden or permitted. So Tosaf. Rashi, however, in Shebu. 19a explains it that he intended doing a permitted act, but mistakenly did a forbidden one, in accordance with the example given here.
(8) Hence the distinction drawn in the second clause between the Sabbath and other precepts is quite feasible.
(9) I.e., I would be his servant, The reference is to a Mishnah on B.M. 40b:If a barrel was entrusted to a man's keeping, a particular place being assigned to it, and this man moved it from the place where it was first set down, and it was broken. — Now, where it was broken whilst he was handling it, then if he was moving it for his own purposes (e.g., to stand on it), he must pay for it; if for its sake (e.g., if it was exposed to harm in the first place), he is not liable. But if it was broken after he had set it down, then in both cases he is not liable. If the owner, however, had assigned a place to it, and this man moved it, and it was broken, whether whilst in his hand or after he had set it down: if he moved it for his sake, he is liable; if for its own, he is not. The Talmud then proceeds to explain that the first clause is in accordance with R. Ishmael, who maintained that if one stole an article and returned it without informing its owner, he is free from all further liability in respect of it. Consequently, if he moved the barrel for his own purpose (which is like stealing), and set it down elsewhere, no particular place being assigned to it, his liabilities have ceased. But the second clause agrees with R. Akiba's ruling that if an article is stolen and returned, the liability remains until the owner is informed of its return. Consequently, if he moved it for his own purpose, he remains liable even after it is set down. But R. Johanan was dissatisfied with this explanation, holding that both clauses should agree with one Tanna. Now, the Talmud does actually explain that it can agree with one Tanna, viz., by assuming that in the first clause the barrel was subsequently returned to its original place, but that in the second clause it was not. Consequently, it concurs entirely with R. Ishmael, but his liability continues in the second instance because he did not return it to its first place. But R. Johanan rejects this explanation, not deeming it plausible to conceive of such different circumstances in the two clauses of the Mishnah. For the same reason, when R. Zakkai taught that sometimes the Sabbath is more stringent than other precepts, and sometimes it is the reverse, R. Johanan would not accept an interpretation whereby ‘other precepts’ in the first clause means idolatry, whilst in the second it referred to forbidden fat.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 63a

‘R. Ammi said: If one sacrificed burnt incense and made libations [to an idol] in one state of unawareness, Only one penalty is incurred.’ Abaye said: What is R. Ammi's reason?[1] — Scripture saith, [Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them] nor serve them . . .[2] thereby the Writ declares that all idolatrous deeds constitute one act of service. But did Abaye say thus? Did he not say: ‘Why is prostration forbidden three times?[3] Once to prohibit it when it is the normal mode of service, the second even if abnormal; and the third teaches separation’? — He explains R. Ammi's ruling, but disagrees with it himself.

To revert to the main text: Abaye said: Why is prostration forbidden three times? Once to prohibit it when it is the normal mode of service, the second even if abnormal, and the third teaches separation’ — But is not the normal mode of worship derived from [Take heed . . . that thou enquire not after their gods saying,] How did these nations serve their gods? [Even so will I do likewise]?[4] — But [amend thus:] one teaches that prostration is forbidden when it is the appropriate but unusual mode of worshipping that deity;[5] the second forbids it even if it is not the normal mode of service;[6] and the third teaches separation.

[WHETHER HE] ACCEPTS IT AS A GOD OR SAYS TO IT, THOU ART MY GOD.

R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha in Rab's name: As soon as he said, 'Thou art my God', he is liable, [Liable] to what? If to execution, this is stated [already] in the Mishnah? — Hence it means liable to a sacrifice. Now, is this so even in the view of the Rabbis? But it has been taught: He [the idolator] is liable [to a sacrifice] only for that which entails an action, e.g., sacrificing, burning incense, making libations, and prostration. Whereon Resh Lakish observed: Which Tanna maintains that a sacrifice is due for prostration? R. Akiba, who rules that a deed entailing [much] action is unnecessary.[7] Does this not prove that the Rabbis maintain that [much] action is necessary? [Consequently, in their opinion, the declaration 'Thou art my god' made unwittingly, does not involve a sacrifice]? — Rab's dictum is only in accordance with R. Akiba. But if so, is it not obvious; for it is just like blasphemy?[8] — I might think that only for blasphemy does R. Akiba rule that a sacrifice is incurred, since extinction is prescribed for it [if committed deliberately]; but not in this case, since extinction is not prescribed. Therefore Rab teaches that a sacrifice is due, because they [sc. the sacrificing to an idol and the declaring 'thou art my god'] are equalized for it is written, [They have made them a molten calf,] and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and have said, these be thy gods, O Israel [which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt].[9]

R. Johanan said: But for the waw in 'who have brought thee up', the wicked of Israel would have deserved extermination.[10] This is disputed by Tannaim: [It has been taught]: 'Others'[11] say, but for the wow in 'who have brought thee up', the wicked of Israel would have deserved extermination. Thereupon R. Simeon b. Yohai remarked; But whoever associates the Heavenly Name with anything else [as co-deities] is utterly destroyed [lit., 'eradicated from the world'], for it is written, He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord alone, he shall be utterly destroyed.[12] What then is intimated by [the plural in] 'who have brought thee up'? — That they lusted after many deities.[13]

BUT HE WHO EMBRACES, KISSES IT, SWEEPS OR SPRINKLES THE GROUND BEFORE IT, etc.[14]

When R. Dimi came,[15] he said in R. Eleazar's name: For all these offences he is flagellated, except for vowing or swearing by its name. Now, why for 'Vowing or Swearing by its name'; because it is a negative precept the transgression of which involves no action? But those others too are only forbidden by a negative precept stated in general terms,[16] and for such one is not flagellated? For it has been taught: Whence do we know that the eating of the flesh of an animal before it has expired[17] is forbidden by a negative precept? From the verse, Ye shall not eat anything with the blood.[18] Another meaning of Ye shall not eat anything with the blood is, Ye shall not eat the flesh [of sacrifices] whilst the blood is in the sprinkling bowl.[19] R. Dosa said: Whence do we know that the meal of comfort is not eaten for criminals executed by Beth din?[20] From the verse Ye shall not eat [i.e., observe the funeral meal] for one whose blood has been shed. R. Akiba said: Whence do we know that a Sanhedrin which executed a person must not eat anything on the day of the execution? From the verse, Ye shall not eat anything with the [shedding of] blood. R. Jonathan said: Whence do we derive a formal prohibition against a wayward and rebellious son? From the verse, Ye shall not do anything to cause bloodshed.[21] Now, R. Abin b. Hiyya, or, as others state, R. Abin b. Kahana said: For none of these offences is the offender flagellated, because it is a negative precept in general terms.[22] But when Rabin came, he said in R. Eleazar's name: For none of these [embracing, kissing, etc.] is the offender flagellated, excepting for vowing and swearing by its name. Now, why are these not punished by flagellation: because it is a negative command in general terms? But these too [should be exempt, since they] are forbidden by a negative precept involving no action? That is in accordance with R. Judah, who said: One is flagellated for a negative precept involving no action. For it has been taught: And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.[23] Now, the Scripture follows up a negative precept with a positive one,

(7) Even if little action is involved, as in, e.g., prostration, a sacrifice must be brought. The same will apply to a formal declaration of belief, in which the action is very slight. This excludes a mere mental affirmation.

thereby teaching that one is not flagellated for it. This is R. Judah's view.[1] R. Jacob said: This is not the real reason,[2] but because it is a negative precept involving no action, for which one is not flagellated. From this we infer that in R. Judah's opinion one is flagellated for such transgressions.

HE WHO VOWS OR SWEARS BY ITS NAME VIOLATES A NEGATIVE PRECEPT. Whence do we know this? — It has been taught: and make no mention of the name of other gods.[3] This means, one must not say to his neighbour ‘Wait for me at the side of that idol’; neither let it be heard out of thy mouth:[4] one should not vow or swear by its name nor cause others [sc. heathens] to swear by the name. Another interpretation: and neither let it be heard out of thy mouth, — this is a formal prohibition against a mesith and maddiah. But a mesith is explicitly forbidden: and all Israel shall hear and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this is among you?[5] — But it is a formal prohibition against a maddiah.[6]

'Nor cause others [sc. heathens] to vow or swear by its name.' This supports the dictum of Samuel's father. For the father of Samuel said: One may not enter into a business partnership with a heathen, lest the latter be obliged to take an oath [in connection with a business dispute], and he swear by his idol, whilst the Torah hath said, Neither let it be heard out through thy mouth.[7]

When 'Ulla came [to Babylonia] he lodged in Kalnebo.[8] Subsequently Raba asked him, 'Where did you stay the night?' He replied, 'In Kalnebo'. 'But,' said he, 'is it not written, And make no mention of the name of other gods.?' — He answered: Thus did R. Johanan say: The name of every idol written in the Torah may be mentioned. Now, where is this name written? — Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth.[9] But if the name is not written, may it then not be mentioned? To this R. Mesharshia objected: [We have learnt:] If one had a protracted issue of matter from his body, lasting as long as three normal issues, which is equivalent to the time of walking from Gadyawan to Shiloh, namely, as long as it takes to perform two ritual immersions, and dry oneself twice, he is a zab in all respects.[10] — Rabina answered: Also Gad is written in the Bible viz., That prepare a table for Gad.[11]

R. Nahman said: All scoffing is forbidden, excepting scoffing at idols, which is permitted, as it is written, Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth . . . they stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden.[12] And it is also written, They have spoken: The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of tho calves of Beth Aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and the priests thereof that rejoiced on it for the glory thereof, which is departed from it.[13] Read not Kebodo [its glory], but Kebedo [his weight].[14]

R. Isaac said, What is meant by, And now they sin more and more, and have made them molten images of their silver, and idols in their image?[15] — This teaches that each made a [small] image of his idol, put it in his pocket, and whenever he thought of it withdrew it from his bosom, and embraced and kissed it. What is meant by, Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves?[16] — R. Isaac, of the school of R. Ammi said: Whenever the idols' priests became envious of any wealthy men, they starved the calves [which were worshipped], made images of these men, and placed them at the side of the cribs. Then they loosed the calves, who recognising these men [from the images set before them] ran after them and pawed them. Thereupon the priests said, 'The idol desires thee; come and sacrifice thyself to them.[17] Raba said, If so, the verse should not be, They sacrifice men and kiss the calves, but, 'The calves kiss them [i.e., paw, and fawn upon them] that they should sacrifice themselves'. But Raba explained it thus: If one sacrificed his son to the idol, the priest said to him: You have offered a most precious gift to it; come and kiss it.

Rab Judah said in rab's name: And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth.[18] What is this? A fowl.[19] And the men of Cuth made Nergal:[20] What is it? — A cock. And the men of Hamath made Ashima:[21] What is that? — A bald buck. And the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak:[22] What are these? — A dog and an ass. And the Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim:[23] What are these? — The mule and the horse: Adrammelech meaning that it [the mule] honours its master[24] [lit., 'king'] with its load;[25] Anammellech meaning that the horse responds to its master in battle.[26] The father of Hezekiah King of judah wished to do likewise to him [i.e burn him in fire], but that his mother anointed him [with the blood of the] salamander.[27]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: The Israelites knew that the idols were nonentities, but they engaged in idolatry only that they might openly satisfy their incestuous lusts. R. Mesharshia objected: As those who remember their children, so they longed for their altars, and their graves by the green trees etc;[28] which R. Eleazar interpreted. As one who yearns for his son [so they yearned]?[29] — That was after they became addicted thereto.[30] Come and hear: And I will cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols.[31] It was related of Elijah the Righteous, that whilst searching for those who were languishing with hunger in Jerusalem, he once found a child faint with hunger lying upon a dungheap. On questioning him as to the family to which he belonged, he replied, 'I belong to such and such a family.' He asked: 'Are any of that family left,' and he answered, 'None, excepting myself.' Thereupon he asked: 'If I teach thee something by which thou wilt live, wilt thou learn?' He replied, 'Yes.' 'Then,' said he, 'recite every day, Hear O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is one.' But the child retorted,

The minimum overall period for the three combined is the time taken for the issues themselves, (if very short) plus the time necessary to perform two ritual immersions and dry oneself twice, i.e., between the first and second issue, and between the second and third. This is equivalent to the walking time from Gadyasvan to Shiloh. This Mishnah is quoted from Zabin i. 5. where, however, the reading is Gad Yawan (two separate words, lit , 'Greek Fortune') to Siloah. Gad Yawan is probably the name of a pool connected with the Siloah, perhaps Fount of the Virgin. Gad was the name of the god of fortune, but as such it is only mentioned in Isa. LXV, 2, though occurring in the compounds Ba'al Gad and Migdal Gad Dillman (on Isaiah a.l.) suggests that Gad and Meni may have been mere Hebrew appellatives of Babylonian idols otherwise named there. We See from the present passage that Gad was the name of a Deity in Talmudic times. During the Second Temple, Palestine became thickly populated with Greeks (Halevy, Dorah iii, P. 9), and many places bore Greek names; Gad Yawan is an example of such, R. Mesharshia's objection is based on the use of the word Gad, though the name of a deity, by the Tanna of this Mishnah. The Pool of Siloam (the same as Siloah and Shiloah of the Bible, Isa. VIII, 6, Neh. III, 15) is located at the south eastern extremity of the European valley, at the southern part of Ophel. Its source is the Fountain of the Virgin, with which it is connected by a subterranean channel or conduit. Probably to this conduit Isaiah alluded when he spoke of the waters of Shiloah that go softly. Though the direct distance is only 1,100 feet, the passage from one to the other, owing to its winding and Zigzagging nature, measures 1750 feet.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 64a

'Be silent, for one must not make mention of the name of the Lord.'[1] [He said this] because his father and mother had not taught him [to serve the Lord], and straightway he brought forth an idol from his bosom, embracing and kissing it, until his stomach burst, his idol fell to the earth, and he upon it, thus fulfilling the verse, And I shall cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols.[2] — That too was after they became addicted thereto.

Come and hear: And they cried with a loud voice unto the Lord their God.[3] Now what did they say? — Rab Judah, or as others maintain R. Jonathan said: [They cried this:] 'Woe, woe, it is that [sc. idolatry] which destroyed the Sanctuary, burnt the Temple, slew the righteous, and exiled Israel from their land; and still it sports amongst us! Hast Thou not set it before us that we might be rewarded [for withstanding its allurements]? But we desire neither temptation nor reward!'[4] — That too was after they were seduced by it. [Continuing Rab Judah's statement:] They fasted for three days, entreating for mercy; thereafter their sentence fell from Heaven, the word emeth [truth] written upon it. (R. Hanina said: This proves that the seal of the Holy One, blessed be He, is emeth.) The shape of a fiery lion's whelp issued from the Holy of Holies, and the Prophet said to Israel, That is the Tempter of Idolatry. Whilst they held it fast, a hair [of its body] fell out, and his roar of pain was heard for four hundred parasangs. [In perplexity] they cried: 'What shall we do? Maybe Heaven will pity him !' The prophet answered: Cast him into a lead cauldron, and cover it with lead to absorb his voice, as it is written, And he said, This is wickedness; and he cast it into the midst of the ephah: and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof.[5] Then they said, 'Since the time is propitious, let us pray that the Tempter of Sin [may likewise be delivered into our hands].' So they prayed and it was delivered into their hands. They imprisoned it for three days; after that they sought a new laid egg for an invalid in the whole of Palestine and could not find one.[6] Then they said, 'What shall we do? Shall we pray that his power be but partially destroyed?[7] Heaven will not grant it.' So they blinded it with rouge. This was so far effective that one does not lust for his forbidden relations.

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: A gentile woman once fell sick. She vowed, 'If I recover, I will go and serve every idol in the world.' She recovered, and proceeded to serve all idols. On reaching Peor, she asked its priests, 'How is this worshipped'? They replied, 'People eat beets, drink strong drink, and then uncover themselves before it.' She replied, 'I would rather fall sick again than serve an idol in such a manner.' But ye, O House of Israel,[8] were not so [as it is written, Slay ye every one his men) that were joined unto Baal Peor:[9] ye were attached to it like an air-tight lid.[10] Whereas, Whilst ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God,[11] implies merely like two dates sticking to each other.[12] In a Baraitha it has been taught: that were joined unto Baal Peor: [loosely] like a bracelet on the hands of a woman;[13] whereas Whilst ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God indicates that they were firmly attached.[14]

Our Rabbis taught: Sabta, a townsman of Avlas,[15] once hired an ass to a gentile woman. When she came to Peor, she said to him, 'Wait till I enter and come out again.' On her issuing, he said to her, 'Now do you wait for me too until I go in and come out again.' 'But,' said she, 'are you not a Jew?'

He replied, ‘What does it concern thee?’ He then entered, uncovered himself before it, and wiped himself on the idol's nose, whilst the acolytes praised him, saying, ‘No man has ever served this idol thus.’

He that uncovers himself before Baal Peor thereby serves it, even if his intention was to degrade it. He who casts a stone at Merculis thereby serves it, even if his intention was to bruise it.

R. Manasseh was going to Be Toratha.[16] On the way he was told, ‘An idol stands here.’ He took up a stone and threw it at the idol's statue. Thereupon they said to him: ‘It is Merculis’. He said to them, ‘But we have learned, HE WHO CASTS A STONE FOR MERCULIS[17] THEREBY SERVES IT.’ So he went and inquired at the Beth Hamidrash [whether he had done wrong, since his action was a gesture of contempt]. They informed him, We have learned, HE WHO CASTS A STONE AT MERCULIS[18] [thereby serves it] — that is to say even if it is merely to bruise it. He said to them, ‘Then I will go and remove it.’ But they replied, ‘Whether one casts a stone or removes it, he incurs guilt, because every stone thus removed leaves room for another.’

MISHNAH. HE WHO GIVES OF HIS SEED TO MOLECH INCURS NO PUNISHMENT UNLESS HE DELIVERS IT TO MOLECH AND CAUSES IT TO PASS THROUGH THE FIRE. IF HE GAVE IT TO MOLECH BUT DID NOT CAUSE IT TO PASS THROUGH THE FIRE, OR THE REVERSE, HE INCURS NO PENALTY, UNLESS HE DOES BOTH.

GEMARA. The Mishnah[19] teaches idolatry and giving to Molech.[20] R. Abin said: Our Mishnah is in accordance with the view that Molech worship is not idolatry. For it has been taught, [if one causes his seed to pass through the fire,] whether to Molech or to any other idol he is liable [to death]. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: If to Molech, he is liable; if to another idol, he is not.

Abaye said: R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon and R. Hanina b. Antigonus said the one and same thing. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, that which has just been stated. R. Hanina b. Antigonus — as it has been taught: R. Hanina b. Antigonus said: Why did the Torah employ the word Molech? To teach that the same law applies to whatever they proclaimed as their king, even a pebble or a splinter.[21] Rabina[22] said: The difference between them is in respect of a temporary Molech.[23]

But R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon holds that the law applies only to a permanent idol worshipped as Molech.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 64b

R. Jannai said: Punishment is not incurred unless one delivers his seed to the acolytes of Molech,[1] for it is said, And thou shalt not give of thy seed to pass through the fire to Molech.[2] It has been taught likewise: I might think, that if one caused his seed to pass through the fire to Molech, without first delivering it to the priests, he is liable: therefore the Writ teaches, Thou shalt not give. If he gave it to the priests, but did not cause it to pass through the fire, I might think that he is liable: therefore the Writ states, to pass through. If one delivered it [to the priests of Molech], but caused it to pass through to some other deity, I might think that he is punished: therefore the Writ teaches, to Molech. Now, if he delivered it to the priests and caused it to pass to Molech, but not through the fire, I might think that he is liable: but, as here is written, to pass through; and elsewhere it is stated, There shall not he found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire:[3] just as there, the reference is to fire, so here too; and just as here the reference is to Molech, so there too.

R. Aha the son of Raba said: If one caused all his seed to pass through [the fire] to Molech, he is exempt from punishment, because it is written, of thy seed implying, but not all thy seed.[4]

R. Ashi propounded: What if one caused his blind or sleeping son to pass through,[5] or if he caused his grandson by his son or daughter to pass through? — One at least of these you may solve. For it has been taught: [Any men . . . that giveth any of his seed unto Molech; he shall he put to death . . . And I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people;] because he hath given of his seed unto Molech.[6] Why is this stated?[7] — Because it is said, there shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire.[8] From this I know it only of his son or daughter. Whence do I know that it applies to his son's son or daughter's son too? From the verse, [And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man] when he giveth of his seed unto Molech [and kill him not: Then I will . . . cut him off.][9]

Now the Tanna commences with the verse, ‘because he hath given of his seed’, but concludes with ‘when he giveth of his seed’? — This is to intimate another deduction.[10] Thus: [because he hath given] of his seed: From this I know only that the law applies to legitimate seed [that being the normal meaning of the word]; whence do I know that it also applies to illegitimate seed?[11] — From the verse, when he giveth of his seed.[12]

Rab Judah said: He is only liable to punishment if he causes his seed to pass through in the normal way. How is that? — Abaye said: There was a loose pile of bricks in the middle, and fire on either side of it.[13] Raba said: It was like the children's leaping about on Purim.[14] It has been taught in support of Raba. Punishment is incurred only for causing one's seed to pass in the normal fashion; if he caused him to pass through on foot, he is exempt.[15] He is liable only for his own issue; e.g., for his son and daughter, he is punished; but for his father or mother, brother or sister, he is not. If he passed through himself, he is free from punishment.[16] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon ruled that he is liable. Further, whether to Molech or to any other idol, he is liable. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: If to Molech, he is liable; if to another idol, he is not.

'Ulla said: What is R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon s reason? — Scripture saith, There shall not be found among thee . . .[17] 'among thee' means in thyself.[18] And the Rabbis? Do they not interpret 'among thee' thus? Surely we have learnt: If one must search for a lost article of his own and of his father's, priority is given to his own. And we observed thereon: Why so? — To which Rab Judah replied: Scripture saith, Save that there shall be no poor among thee,[19] teaching that one's own loss has priority over that of any other man?[20] There the deduction follows from 'save that'.[21]

R. Jose, son of R. Hanina said: Why is extinction thrice threatened for idolatry?[22] — One teaches extinction for the normal worship of idols; one for abnormal; and one for the service of Molech.[23] But on the view that Molech worship is included in general idolatry, why is extinction mentioned in its case? — To amply to one who causes his son to pass through to an idol [not Molech], where such is not the normal mode of worship. Now, on the view that a megaddef[24] is a worshipper of idols,[22] why is extinction stated for it?[25] — Even as it has been taught[26] : That soul shall surely be cut off from among his people;[27] he shall be cut off in this world and in the next: this is R. Akiba's view.[28] R. Ishmael said: But the verse has previously stated 'that soul shall be cut off':[29] are there then three worlds?[30] But [interpret this:] 'and [that soul] shall be cut off' — in this world: 'he is to he cut off' — [of the following verse, and denoted by the infinitive][31] in the next; whilst as for the repetition [the finite form of the verb],[32] that is because the Torah employs human phraseology.[33]

---

(1) He explains this to be the meaning of the Mishnah UNLESS HE GIVES IT TO MOLECH.

(2) Lee. XVIII, 21. This proves that the offence consists of two parts; (i) formal delivery to the priests, and (ii) causing the seed to pass through the fire.

(3) Deut. XVIII, 10.

(4) Probably because this would not be accounted a normal mode of Molech worship: cp. pp. 438, 440.

(5) Is 'thou shalt not cause to pass' applicable only to a son who can naturally pass through himself, but not to a blind or sleeping son, who must be led or carried, or does it apply to all?

(6) Lev. XX, 2f.

(7) Since the passage commences by explicitly referring to this offence, why is it repeated?

(8) Deut. XVIII, 10.

(9) Lev. XX, 4. Hence the law applies also to grandsons.

(10) I.e., from the first verse, because etc. we learn that the law applies to one's grandsons too; when he giveth is stated in order that another law may be deduced.

(11) Not in the modern sense, but seed from a woman forbidden to him.

(12) This is superfluous, since it has already been stated twice in that passage that the reference is to this effect. Hence it indicates the application of the law to illegitimate seed.

(13) The victim walked along that pile to Moloch, but was not burnt. The statement that Hezekiah was smeared with the blood of the salamander to render him fireproof (63b), shewing that the victim was actually burnt, does not refer to Moloch, but to the divinities of Sepharvaim (Rashi).

(14) Probably referring to a game played on Purim when children jump over a fire lit in a pit. According to this, a pit was dug and a fire lit therein, and the victim leaped over it (So Rashi). Jast. translates: 'like the stirrup (a ring suspended from a frame) thrust over a bonfire on Purim;' cp. Aruch.

(15) This proves that the victim did not walk, but leaped to it.

(16) This too proves that the victim was not burnt in passing through the fire to Molech.

(17) Deut. XVIII, 10.

(18) Hence his view that one is liable if he passes through himself.

(19) Deut. XV, 4.

(20) The questioner understood this to be deduced from 'among thee' — in thyself. Since this is not taught in the name of any particular Tanna, it should agree with the Rabbis too.

(21) Heb. אפס efes, implying an admonition to avoid any action which may lead to poverty. Naturally, this is not to be interpreted as permitting dishonesty, but merely insists that poverty must not be courted.

(22) Twice in Lev. XX, 2-5: Whosoever be he . . . that giveth of his seeds to Molech . . . I will cut him off from among his people . . . And if the people of the land . . . kill him not: Then I will set my face against that man . . . and will cut him off. Once in Num. XV, 30f. But the soul that doeth aught presumptuously . . . the same reproacheth the Lord; and that soul shall be cut from among his people. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord. This refers to idolatry.
(23) Which is not included in general idolatry, as stated above.
(24) In Num. XV, 30, the Heb. for 'he reproacheth' is megaddef.
(25) The meaning of megaddef is disputed in Ker. 7b. By a 'worshipper of idols' is meant, e.g., one who sings hymns in a heathen Temple.
(26) Since, being a normal part of idolatry, it is understood.
(27) Num. XV, 31. Continuing the verses quoted in note 3. In the Heb, as usual, this emphasis is denoted by the repetition of the verb, הכרת תכרת
(28) He interprets the doubling of the verb as referring to two worlds.
(29) Ibid. 30.
(30) Rashi explains that this question is not put to R. Akiba, because he interprets megaddef in that previous verse as referring to blasphemy, not idolatry. But this question is rhetorically stated by R. Ishmael on his own assumption that megaddef means an idol worshipper.
(31) הכרת
(32) תכרת
(33) In ordinary human speech, such repetition is quite common.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 65a

MISHNAH. A BA'AL OB[1] IS THE PITHOM[2] WHO SPEAKS FROM HIS ARMPIT. THE YIDDE'ONI ['A WIZARD'] IS ONE WHO SPEAKS FROM HIS MOUTH.[3] THESE TWO ARE STONED; WHILST HE WHO ENQUIRES OF THEM TRANSGRESSES A FORMAL PROHIBITION.[4]

GEMARA. Why are both a Ba'al ob and Yidde'oni mentioned here [as being executed], whilst in the list of those who are punished by extinction only Ba'al ob is included, but Yidde'oni is omitted?[5] — R. Johanan said: Because both are stated in one negative precept.[6] Resh Lakish said: Yidde'oni is omitted [in Kerithoth], because it involves no action.[7] Now, according to R. Johanan, why is a Ba'al ob mentioned [rather than a Yidde'oni]? — Because it is written first in the Scripture. Now why does Resh Lakish reject R. Johanan's answer? — R. Papa said: They are stated separately in the verse decreeing death.[8] But R. Johanan maintains: Offences which are distinct in their injunctions [there being a different one for each], are held to be separate [in their atonement]; but if only in the decree of death, they are not regarded as separate.

Now, why does R. Johanan reject Resh Lakish's answer? — He can tell you: The Mishnah of Kerithoth is taught in accordance with R. Akiba's views, that action is unnecessary [for a sin offering to be incurred]. But Resh Lakish maintains: Granted that R. Akiba does not require a great action, but he requires at least a small one. But what action is there in blasphemy [which is included in the enumeration]? — The movement of the lips. But what action is done by a Ba'al ob? — The knocking of his arms.[9] Now, is this so even in the view of the Rabbis? But it has been taught: [The idolater] is liable [to a sacrifice] only for that which entails an action, e.g., sacrificing, burning incense, making libations and prostration. Whereon Resh Lakish observed: Which Tanna maintains that a sacrifice is due for prostration? R. Akiba, who rules that a deed entailing [much] action is unnecessary. But R. Johanan said: It even agrees with the Rabbis, for in bending his body, he performs an action. Now, since Resh Lakish maintains that in the view of the Rabbis bending one's body is not regarded as an action, surely the knocking of the arms is not one? — Well then Resh Lakish's statement [that the Ba'al ob performs an action] is made on the view only of R. Akiba, but not of the Rabbis. If so, should not the Mishnah there state, [But the Rabbis maintain that] the blasphemer and Ba'al ob are excluded?[10] — But 'Ulla answered: The Mishnah there refers to a Ba'al oh who burnt incense to a demon.[11] Raba asked him: But is not burning incense to a demon idolatry?[12] — But Raba said: It [i.e., the Ba'al ob in Kerithoth] refers to one who burns incense as a charm.[13] Abaye said to him: But burning incense as a charm is to act as a charmer, which is merely prohibited by a negative precept? — That is so, but the Torah decreed that such a charmer is stoned.[14]

Our Rabbis taught: [There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or daughter pass through to the fire . . .] Or a charmer.[15] This applies to one who charms large objects, and to one who charms small ones,[16] even snakes and scorpions. Abaye said: Therefore even to imprison wasps or scorpions [by charms], though the intention is to prevent them from doing harm, is forbidden.

Now, as for R. Johanan, why does he maintain that in the view of the Rabbis the bending of one's body [in prostration] is an action, whilst the movement of the lips is not? — Raba said: Blasphemy is different, since the offence lies in the intention.[17]

(1) Lev. XIX, 31. 'He that hath a familiar spirit'.

(2)  ventriloquist, necromancer.

(3) Both refer to making the dead speak thus.

(4) Lev. XIX, 31, lit., 'a warning', carrying with it no penalty.

(5) Ker. 2a.

(6) Lev. XIX, 31. Regard not them that have familiar spirits, and wizards. Now in Ker. 2a, where the Mishnah teaches that thirty six offences are punished by extinction, the Gemara explains that the number — 36 — intimates that if one committed them all in one state of unawareness, he is bound to offer 36 separate sacrifices. Since however, those two are forbidden by one injunction, only one atonement must be made for both. Consequently, the two cannot be taught there.

(7) The Mishnah there refers to transgressions, the deliberate committal of which is punished by extinction, whilst if unwitting, a sin offering is due; but this is brought only for an offence involving action.

(8) Ibid. XX, 27. A man also that hath a familiar spirit, or (not and) that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death. 'Or', או is a disjunctive particle. Since they are thus sharply distinguished, one would have to make two separate atonements for the unwitting transgression, if the offence of wizardry incurred a sin offering at all.

(9) By flapping his arms about the Ba'al ob made it appear that the dead was speaking from his armpits

(10) In Ker. 2a the Rabbis state that a blasphemer is exempted from a sin offering, since his offence involves no action. But according to Resh Lakish, that they regard a Ba'al ob as doing no action too, they should have stated that he also is exempted.

(11) I.e., to the spirit of necromancy. That of course is an action even in the view of the Rabbis. This answer is given on the basis of Resh Lakish's statement.

(12) And does not come under the heading of Ba'al ob at all. Idolatry is taught there separately.

(13) To exorcise the demons (Jast.). Rashi reverses the interpretation: to call up the demons, that they may assist him in his sorcery. This is not idolatry, for the demons are not thereby worshipped as divinities, but it comes under the heading of Ba'al 'ob.

(14) Consequently, for unwitting transgression a sin offering is due. But the charmer who is punished by lashes is one who charms animals by bringing them together.

(15) Deut. XVIII, 10f.

(16) Large objects, viz., cattle, and beasts; small objects, creeping things, insects, etc.

(17) For blasphemy is an indictable offence only if it is mentally directed against God. If however, one reviles the Divine Name, whilst mentally employing it to denote some other object, he is not punished. Consequently, since the essence of the offence is mental, the slight action is disregarded.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 65b

R. Zera objected: False witnesses[1] are excluded [from the necessity of a sin offering if they unwittingly offended], since their offence entails no action.[2] But why so; their offence does not depend on intention? — Raba answered: False witnesses are different, because their offence is caused by sound.[3] But does not R. Johanan regard sound as a [concrete] action? Has it not been stated: If one frightened [lit. 'muzzled'] off an animal by his voice, or drove animals by his voice,[4] R. Johanan ruled that he is liable to punishment, because the movement of his lips is an action; Resh Lakish ruled that he is not, because this is not an action?[5] — But Raba answered thus: False witnesses are different, because their offence is caused through vision.[6]

Our Rabbis taught: A Ba'al ob is one who speaks from between the joints of his body and his elbow joints. A yidde'oni is one who places the bone of a yidoa'[7] in his mouth and it speaks of itself. An objection is raised: And thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground:[8] surely that means that it speaks naturally?[9] — No. It ascends and seats itself between his joints and speaks. Come and hear: And the woman said unto Saul, I saw a god-like form ascending out of the earth: [And Samuel said to Saul . . .][10] surely that means that it spoke naturally? — No. It settled itself between her joints and spoke.

Our Rabbis taught: Ba'al ob denotes both him who conjures up the dead by means of soothsaying[11] and one who consults a skull. What is the difference between them? — The dead conjured up by soothsaying does not ascend naturally [but feet first], nor on the Sabbath; whilst if consulted by its skull it ascends naturally and on the Sabbath too. [You say,] it ascends: but whither — does not the skull lie before him? — But say thus: It answers naturally,[12] and on the Sabbath too. And this question wa¿ asked by Turnusrufus†[3] of R. Akiba: 'Wherein does this day [thelSabbath] differ from any other?' — He replied: Wherein does one man differ from another?'[14] — 'Because m Lord [the Emperor] wishes it.' 'The Sabbath too,' R. Akiba rejoined, 'then, is disti¥guished because the Lord w shes so.' He replied: 'I ask this: Who tells you that this day is the Sabbath?' — He answered: 'Let the river Sabbation[15] prove it; let the Ba'al ob prove it;[16] let th# father's grave, whence no smoke ascends on the Sabbath,[17] prove it.' He said to him: 'You have shamed, disgraced, and reviled him [by this proof].'

He who enquireth of an ob — is that not the same as one that consulteth the dead?[18] — As has been taught: Or that consulteth the dead: this means one who star"es himself and spends the night in a cemetery, so that an unc¿ean spirit [of a demon] may rest upon him [to enable him to foretell the future]. And when R. Akiba reached this verse, he wept: If one who starves himself that an u clean spirit may rest upon him has is wish granted, he who fasts that the pure spirit [the Divine Presence] may rest upon him — how much more should his desire be fulfilled! But alas![19] our sins have driven it away[20] from us, as it is written, But your iniquities have separated between you and your God.[21]

Raba said: If the righteous desired it, they could [by living a life of absolute purity] be creators, for it is writ en, But your iniquities have distinguished between etc. [22] Rabbah created a maî,[23] and sent him to R. ZeGa. R. Zera spoke to him, but received no answer. Thereupon he said unto him: 'Thou art a crea…ure of the magicians. Return to thy dust.'

R. Hanina and R. Oshaia spent every Sabbath eve in studying the 'Book of Creation',[24] by means of which they created a third-grown calf[25] and ate it.

Our Rabbis taught: Me'onen[26] — R. Simeon said: That is one who applies the semen of seven male species to his eyes [in order to perform witchcraft]. The Sages say: It is one who holds people's eyes.[27] R. Akiba said: It is one who calculates the times and hours, saying, To-day is propitious for setting forth; tomorrow for making purchases; the wheat ripening on the eve of the seventh year[28] is generally sound; let the beans be pulled up [instead of being harvested in the usual manner] to save them from becoming worthy.

Our Rabbis taught: A Menahesh[29] is one who says: So and so's bread has fallen out of his hand; his staff has fallen out of his hand; his son called after him; a raven screamed after him, a deer has crossed his path; a serpent came at his right hand or a fox at his left;[30]

(23) By means of the Sefer Yeziroh, Book of Creation. V. next note.

(24) The Book of Creation, Heb. Sefer Yeziroh, is the title of two esoteric books. The older, referred to here, was a thaumaturgical work popular in the Talmudic period. It was also known as Hilkoth Yezirah (Laws of Creation), and is so called in the same story quoted on 67b. Rashi there states that the creation was performed by means of mystic combinations of the Divine Name, which does not come under the ban of witchcraft. Its basic idea is that the Creation was accomplished by means of the power inherent in those letters (Cf. Rab's saying: 'Bezalel knew how to combine the letters by which heaven and earth were created'. Ber. 55a. Cf. also Enoch LXI, 3 et seq.; Prayer of Manasseh: Ecc. R. III, 11 on the magic power of the letters of the Divine Name), and that this same power could be utilised in further creation. The work was ascribed to Abraham, which fact indicates an old tradition, and the possible antiquity of the book itself. It has affinities with Babylonian, Egyptian, and Hellenic mysticism and its origin has been placed in the second century B.C.E., when such a combination of influences might be expected. It is noteworthy that Raba's statement above, though not mentioning the Sefer Yezirah, insists on freedom from sin as a prerequisite of creation by man, v. J.E., XII, 602.

(29) An enchanter, Deut. XVIII, 10.

(30) All these omens were regarded by the superstitious as generally bad.

do not commence with me;[1] it is morning; it is new moon; it is the conclusion of the Sabbath.[2]

Our Rabbis taught: Ye shall not use enchantments nor observe times.[3] This refers to those who practise enchantment by means of weasels, birds, and fish.[4]

MISHNAH. HE WHO DESECRATES THE SABBATH [IS STONED], PROVIDING THAT IT IS AN OFFENCE PUNISHED BY EXTINCTION IF DELIBERATE, AND BY A SIN-OFFERING IF UNWITTING.

GEMARA. This proves that there is a manner of desecrating the Sabbath for the deliberate committal of which there is no extinction, nor is a sin offering to be brought for its unwitting transgression. What is it? — The law of boundaries, according to R. Akiba,[5] and kindling a fire, according to R. Jose.[6]

MISHNAH. ONE WHO CURSES HIS FATHER OR HIS MOTHER IS NOT PUNISHED UNLESS HE CURSES THEM BY THE DIVINE NAME. IF HE CURSED THEM BY AN ATTRIBUTE,[7] R. MEIR HELD HIM LIABLE, BUT THE SAGES RULED THAT HE IS EXEMPT.

GEMARA. Who is meant here by the Sages?[8] — R. Menahem, son of R. Jose. For it has been taught: R. Menahem, son of R. Jose said, When he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall be put to death.[9] Why is 'the name' mentioned?[10] To teach that he who curses his father or his mother does not incur a penalty unless he employs the Divine Name.[11]

Our Rabbis taught: [For any man[12] that curseth his father or his mother shall surely be put to death: his father and his mother he hath cursed; his blood shall be upon him.[13] Now, the Scripture could have said,] A man [ish]; what is taught by any man [ish ish]? — The inclusion of a daughter, a tumtum,[14] and a hermaphrodite [as being subject to this law]. That curseth his father and his mother.' from this I know only [that he is punished for cursing] his father and his mother; whence do I know [the same] if he cursed his father without his mother or his mother without his father? — From the passage his father and his mother he hath cursed: his blood shall be upon him,[15] implying, a man that cursed his father; a man that cursed his mother. This is R. Joshiah's opinion. R. Jonathan said: The [beginning of the] verse alone implies either the two together or each separately unless the verse had explicitly stated 'together'.[16] He shall surely be put to death — by stoning. You say: By stoning. But perhaps it means by one of the other deaths decreed in the Torah? — Here it is written, his blood shall be upon him; and elsewhere it is written, [A man also or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death; they shall stone them with stones:] their blood shall be upon them:[17] just as there stoning is meant, so here too. From this we learn punishment: whence do we derive the prohibition? — From the verse, Thou shalt not revile the judges, nor curse the ruler of thy people.[18] Now, if his father is a judge, he is included in the Thou shalt not revile the judges; if a nasi,[19] in nor curse the ruler of they people. If neither a judge nor a ruler, whence do we know it? — You may construct a syllogism with these two as premises; the case of a nasi is not analogous to that of a judge, nor of a judge to that of a nasi. Now, the case of a judge is not analogous to that of a nasi, for you art commanded to obey the ruling of a judge, but not of a nasi; whilst the case of a nasi is not analogous to that of judge, for you are enjoined not to rebel against the decree of a nasi, but not of a judge.[20] Now, what is common to both, is that they are of 'thy people'[21] and you are forbidden to curse them: so I extend the law to thy father, who is of 'thy people', that thou art forbidden to curse him. No; their common characteristic is their greatness, which is the decisive factor. Hence Scripture writes, Thou shalt not curse the deaf;[22] thus applying the injunction even to the humblest of thy people. No; in the case of the deaf, his very deafness may be the cause [of the prohibition].[23] Then let the nasi and the judge prove otherwise. But in their case their greatness may be the cause: then let the deaf prove the reverse. And thus the argument proceeds in a circle: the particular characteristic of one is lacking in the other, and vice versa.[24] What is common to all is that they are of 'thy people', and you are forbidden to curse them: so I include thy father who is of thy people, and you are forbidden to curse him. No! What they have in common is that they are distinguished [from the average person].[25] But if so, Scripture should have written either the judge and the deaf or the nasi and the deaf.[26] Why then is the judge mentioned? — Since this is superfluous for itself, apply it to one's father. Now, this agrees with the view that elohim is profane; but on the view that it is holy, what canst thou say?[27] For it has been taught: Elohim is profane:[28] that is R. Ishmael's opinion. R. Akiba said: It is sacred.[29] And it has been taught thereon: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: Whence do we derive a formal prohibition against cursing God's name? From the verse, Thou shalt not revile god?[30] — On the view that elohim is profane, the sacred is derived from the profane,[31] hence, contrariwise, on the view that elohim is sacred, thou mayest derive the profane from the sacred.[32] Now, it is quite correct to say that on the view that elohim is profane, the sacred is derived from it. But on the view that elohim is holy, how canst thou derive the profane from it: perhaps the prohibition is only in respect of the sacred [i.e.. God], but not of the profane at all? — If so, Scripture should have written, elohim lo takel [Thou shalt not revile God],

(1) I.e., if a tax-collector comes to him, he asks him to collect first from someone else, as it is a bad omen to be the first to pay taxes.

(2) He declines to pay his debts on these occasions, regarding it as a bad omen to start the week or day or month by paying debts. — All these superstitions are forbidden under the term menahesh.

(3) Lev. XIX, 26.

(4) Var. lec.: 'and stars'.

(5) According to Biblical law, as deduced by the Rabbis, one was not to go more than 12 mil (a mil = 1,000 cubits) beyond the town boundaries on the Sabbath (the Rabbis reduced this to 2,000 cubits). R. Akiba maintained that if this law was violated the offender was liable neither to extinction nor to a sin offering.

(10) Since the beginning of the same verse explicitly states that the reference is to the Name: And he that blasphemeth the Name of the Lord shall surely be put to death.

(13) Lev. XX, 9.

(14) A person whose genitals are hidden or undeveloped, and hence of unknown sex.

(15) At the beginning of the sentence that curseth is in immediate proximity to his father; at the end, cursing is mentioned nearest to his mother, shewing that each is separate.

(16) I.e., the conjunctive waw implies both conjunction and separation. Hence, the first half of the sentence is sufficient to shew that the law applies to each separately. The second half is employed for a different purpose. V. infra 85b.

(17) Lev. XX, 27.

(18) Ex. XXII, 27.

(19) The Patriarch or chief of the great sanhedrin in Jerusalem and of its successors in Palestinian places. In earlier times, the princes of the tribes; v. Num. VII, 12-89.

(20) I.e., each has a measure of authority which the other lacks: the judge to give his verdict in disputes, the nasi make decrees. Now, considered separately, it might be argued that one is forbidden to curse either the nasi or the judge on account of the particular authority he enjoys. But when they are examined in conjunction, it is seen that the particular authority of each is not the decisive factor, since the other lacks it. Hence they must base something in common as the final factor, and the same law will apply to whomever shares it with them.

(21) This is taken to mean that they conform to the laws of Judaism (Yeb. 22b; B.B. 4a).

(22) Lev. XIX, 14.

(23) I.e., one may not take advantage of his infirmity.

(24) At this stage, the judge and the nasi are one proposition, the deaf another.

(25) The judge and the nasi by their greatness; the deaf by his infirmity.
(26) Had the Torah forbidden the cursing of the deaf and either a judge or a nasi, the other could have been deduced. For their common feature is that they are distinguished from other people; consequently, by analogy, the same law applies to either a judge or a nasi.
(27) Ex. XXII, 27: Thou shall not revile elohim (translated above 'the judges'); but that itself is the subject of a dispute.
(28) I.e., its meaning is 'judge', the root idea of elohim being power, authority.
(29) I.e., it means literally 'God'.
(30) Soferim IV, 5. On this latter view, elohim is not superfluous, to be applied to one's father, and the question remains, whence is derived the prohibition of cursing a father?
(31) Though elohim means judge, nevertheless the same law applies to God, by deriving the latter from the former. Such derivation is warranted, since Scripture expresses 'judge' by a word normally meaning God (Tosaf.).
(32) Thus, even if elohim means 'God', yet the same applies to a judge, by analogy. Now, since a nasi could have been deduced from a judge and the deaf, it is superfluous, and consequently must be applied to one's father. Hence, the general argument is as before, but the nasi, and not the judge, is now, regarded as unnecessary.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 66b

why [write] lo tekallel?[1] — That both [God and judge] may be understood therefrom.

MISHNAH. HE WHO HAS INTIMATE CONNECTION WITH A BETROTHED MAIDEN IS NOT PUNISHED UNTIL SHE IS A NA' ARAH,[2] A VIRGIN, BETROTHED, AND IN HER FATHER'S HOUSE.[3] IF TWO MEN VIOLATED HER,[4] THE FIRST IS STONED, BUT THE SECOND IS STRANGLED.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a na'arah [damsel] that is a virgin be betrothed unto an husband;[5] na'arah excludes a bogereth;[6] 'virgin' excludes one who is no longer a virgin; 'betrothed' excludes a nasu'ah; [because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore] in her father's house[7] — this excludes one whom her father has given over to her husband's messengers [to take to her new home].

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: This [our Mishnah] is R. Meir's view, but the Sages maintain that by a betrothed damsel even a minor[8] is understood.[9] R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: Whence do we know that the Mishnah is as R. Meir only, the term na'arah excluding a minor too; perhaps it agrees even with the Rabbis, whilst na'arah is intended to exclude a bogereth, but none else? — He replied: If so, instead of saying: HE IS NOT PUNISHED UNTIL SHE IS A NA'ARAH, A VIRGIN, AND BETROTHED, the Mishnah should have said: He is punished only for a na'arah, a virgin, and a betrothed.[10] No further argument is possible!

R. Jacob b. Ada asked of Rab: What if one has intimate connexion with a betrothed minor, according to R. Meir's view? Does he exclude a minor entirely,[11] or only from stoning?[12] — He replied: It is reasonable to assume that he excludes him only from stoning. But is it not written. [If a man be found lying with a woman married to a husband,] then they shall both of them die,[13] implying that they must both be equal?[14] Rab remained silent.[15] Samuel said: Why was Rab silent? He should have answered him: [It is written, But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field . . .] then the man only that lay with her shall die.[16]

This question is disputed by Tannaim: Then they shall both of them die: this teaches that they must both be equal. That is R. Joshiah's view. R. Jonathan said: Then the man only that lay with her shall die.[17] And the other [R. Jonathan] — what does he deduce from 'then they shall both die'? — Raba answered: It excludes the mere whetting of one's lust.[18] But the other?[19] — He regards such excitation as of no consequence.[20] And the other [R. Joshiah] — how does he interpret 'alone'? — Even as it has been taught: If ten men cohabited with her, yet leaving her a virgin,[21] they are all stoned. Rabbi said: The first is stoned, but the others are strangled.[22]

Our Rabbis taught: And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself [tehel][23] by playing the whore.[24] — Rabbi said: It implies the first,[25] and thus it is also written, Then the man only that lieth with her shall die. What does this mean? — R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: Rabbi agrees with R. Ishmael,[26] viz., that only in arusah, the daughter of a priest, is singled out for burning; but not a nesu'ah [who is strangled, just as an Israelite's daughter]. And this is what he says: If her first coition is adulterous [i.e., if she is an arusah at the time] she is burnt; otherwise she is stoned.[27] What is meant by 'and thus etc.'? — It is as there; just as there, Scripture refers to her first coition, so here too.[28]

R. Bibi b. Abaye said to him: The Master has not said thus (Who is it?[29] — R. Joseph), but that Rabbi agreed with R. Meir who held that if a priest's daughter married one who was unfit for her [and then committed adultery], she is strangled [instead of burnt],[30] and this is what Rabbi says: If her first profanation is through adultery, she is burnt; otherwise she is stoned.[31] Then what is meant by 'and thus etc.'?[32] —

(10) He is not punished until she is (Heb. עד שתהא the imperfect of the verb 'to be') definitely implies that she must reach the state of a na'arah.

(11) I.e., that the whole law of Deut XXII, 23f. decreeing death for intimate connexion with a betrothed maiden, does not apply if she is a minor.

(12) I.e., the seducer is not stoned, as he would be for a na'arah, but executed in another way.

(13) Ibid. 22.

(14) Both must be of a responsible age: but if one is not, as in this case, both are exempt.

(15) I.e., he could not answer this objection.

(16) Ibid. 25. Now, only is superfluous, for the next verse distinctly states, But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing. Hence it teaches that sometimes the man alone is punished, even when the betrothed consented, viz., if she was a minor.

(19) R. Joshiah — why does be reject that interpretation?

(20) It is not an offence at all in the sense that it should be necessary to teach that no punishment follows.

(21) The connections having been unnatural.

(22) That is deduced from 'alone': though all of them committed adultery with a virgin, 'alone' shows that only the first is stoned, stoning being ordained in that passage.

(27) And in each case, her paramour's punishment is the same.
(28) I.e., just as a betrothed maiden is excepted from the punishment of a nesu'ah, viz., strangulation, being stoned instead, which exception applies to her seducer too, and that only for the first coition (the word 'only' showing that her second paramour is strangled, even if she was still a virgin), so also, in the case of the priest's daughter, the exception is made only for her first coition, viz., if she is an arusah, but not if a nesu'ah.
(29) The Master referred to.
(30) V. supra 51b.
(31) I.e., if she was married to one who was fit for her, so that only though her adultery does she profane herself, the law of Lev. XXI 9, applies viz., that she is burnt. But if she first profaned herself not through adultery, but through marrying a person forbidden to her and then committed adultery, she is strangled.
(32) For the explanation given above will not fit in with this interpretation.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 67a

. That is merely a mnemonical sign.[1]

MISHNAH. A MESITH IS A [SEDUCING] LAYMAN;[2] AND HE WHO SEDUCES AN INDIVIDUAL[3] SAYING, 'THERE IS AN IDOL IN SUCH AND SUCH A PLACE; IT EATS THUS, IT DRINKS THUS, IT DOES SO MUCH GOOD AND SO MUCH HARM. FOR ALL WHOM THE TORAH CONDEMNS TO DEATH NO WITNESSES ARE HIDDEN TO ENTRAP THEM, EXCEPTING FOR THIS ONE. IF HE INCITED TWO [TO IDOLATRY], THEY THEMSELVES ARE WITNESSES AGAINST HIM, AND HE IS BROUGHT TO BETH DIN AND STONED. BUT IF HE ENTICED ONE, HE MUST REPLY, I HAVE FRIENDS WHO WISH TO DO SO LIKEWISE [COME AND PROPOSE IT TO THEM TOO].' BUT IF HE WAS CUNNING AND DECLINED TO SPEAK BEFORE THEM, WITNESSES ARE HIDDEN BEHIND A PARTITION, WHILST HE WHO WAS INCITED SAYS TO HIM, MAKE YOUR PROPOSAL TO ME NOW IN PRIVATE. WHEN THE MESITH DOES SO, THE OTHER REPLIES, HOW SHALL WE FORSAKE OUR GOD IN HEAVEN TO GO AND SERVE WOOD AND STONES?' SHOULD HE RETRACT, IT IS WELL. BUT IF HE ANSWERS, 'IT IS OUR DUTY [TO WORSHIP IDOLS], AND IS SEEMLY FOR US, THEN THE WITNESSES STATIONED BEHIND THE PARTITION TAKE HIM TO BETH DIN, AND HAVE HIM STONED. IF HE SAYS, 'I WILL WORSHIP IT', OR, 'I WILL GO AND WORSHIP', OR, 'LET US GO AND WORSHIP'; OR, 'I WILL SACRIFICE [TO IT]', 'I WILL GO AND SACRIFICE', 'LET US GO AND SACRIFICE'; 'I WILL BURN INCENSE, 'I WILL GO AND BURN INCENSE'. 'LET US GO AND BURN INCENSE'; 'I WILL MAKE LIBATIONS TO IT', 'I WILL GO AND MAKE LIBATIONS TO IT , LET US GO AND MAKE LIBATIONS, 'I WILL PROSTRATE MYSELF BEFORE IT', 'I WILL GO AND PROSTRATE MYSELF'. 'LET US GO AND PROSTRATE OURSELVES'. (GUILT IS INCURRED).[4]

GEMARA. A MESITH IS A LAYMAN. Thus, only because he is a layman [is he stoned]; but if a prophet, he is strangled. WHO SEDUCES AN INDIVIDUAL: thus, only if he seduces an individual; but if a community, he is strangled. Hence, who is [the Tanna of] the Mishnah? — R. Simeon. For it has been taught: A prophet who entices [people to idolatry] is stoned; R. Simeon said: He is strangled.[5] Then consider the second clause.[6] A maddiah[7] is one who says: 'Let us go and serve idols': whereon Rab Judah observed in Rab's name: This Mishnah teaches of those who lead astray a seduced city. Thus it agrees with the Rabbis [who maintain that these too are stoned, not strangled]. Hence, the first clause is taught according to R. Simeon; the second according to the Rabbis! — Rabina said: Both clauses are based on the Rabbis' ruling, but proceed from the universally admitted to the disputed.[8] R. Papa said: When the Mishnah states A MESITH IS A HEDYOT,[9] it is only in respect of hiding witnesses.[10] For it has been taught: And for all others for whom the Torah decrees death, witnesses are not hidden, excepting for this one. How is it done? — A light is lit in an inner chamber, the witnesses are hidden in an outer one [which is in darkness], so that they can see and hear him,[11] but he cannot see them. Then the person he wished to seduce says to him, 'Tell me privately what thou hast proposed to me'; and he does so. Then he remonstrates; 'But how shall we forsake our God in Heaven, and serve idols'? If he retracts, it is well. But if he answers: 'It is our duty and seemly for us', the witnesses who were listening outside bring him to the Beth din, and have him stoned.[12] MISHNAH. A MADDIAH IS ONE WHO SAYS, 'LET US GO AND SERVE IDOLS'. A SORCERER, IF HE ACTUALLY PERFORMS MAGIC, IS LIABLE [TO DEATH]. BUT NOT IF HE MERELY CREATES ILLUSIONS.[13] R. AKIBA SAID IN R. JOSHUA'S NAME: OF TWO WHO GATHER CUCUMBERS [BY MAGIC] ONE MAY BE PUNISHED AND THE OTHER EXEMPT: HE WHO REALLY GATHERS THEM IS PUNISHED: WHILST HE WHO PRODUCES AN ILLUSION IS EXEMPT.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in Rab's name: This Mishnah teaches of those who lead astray a seduced city.[14]

A SORCERER, IF HE ACTUALLY PERFORMS MAGIC etc. Our Rabbis taught: [Thou shalt not suffer] a witch [to live]:[15] this applies to both man and woman. If so, why is a [female] witch stated? — Because mostly women engage in witchcraft. How are they executed? — R. Jose the Galilean said: Here it is written, Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live; whilst elsewhere is written, Thou shalt not suffer anything that breatheth to live.[16] Just as there, the sword is meant, so here is the sword meant too. R. Akiba said: It is here stated, Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live; whilst elsewhere it is said, [There shall not a hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned, or shot through;] whether it be beast or man, it shall not live.[17] Just as there, death by stoning is meant, so here too. R. Jose said to him, I have drawn an analogy between 'Thou shalt not suffer to live' written in two verses, whilst you have made a comparison between 'Thou shalt not suffer to live', and 'It shall not live'. R. Akiba replied: I have drawn an analogy between two verses referring to Israelites, for whom the Writ hath decreed many modes of execution,[18] whilst you have compared Israelites to heathens, in whose case only

As to the meaning of the name, he connects it with  'seditious', and suggests (p. 345 n.1) that it riginally denoted 'that Egyptian' (Acts XXI 38, Josephus, Ant. XX, 8, 6) who claimed to be a prophet and led his followers to the Mount of Olives, where he was routed by the Procurator Felix, and that in later times he might have been confused with Jeshua ha-Notzri. This hypothesis, however, involves the disregard of the Talmudic data, for Pappos b. Judah lived a century after Jesus (Cit. 90a), though the mother's name, Miriam (Mary), would raise no difficulty, as מגדלא נשיא megaddla neshayia may be the result of a confusion with Mary Magdalene (v. also Box, The Virgin Birth of Jesus, pp. 201f, for other possible meanings of Ben Stada and Ben Pandira) Derenbourg (Essai note 9, pp. 465-471) rightly denies the identity of Ben Stada with Jesus, and regards him simäly as a false prophet executed during the second century at Lydda.

one death penalty is decreed.[1] Ben 'Azzai said:[2] It is here written, Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live, whilst [immediately after] it is said, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.[3] Now, this is placed in proximity, teaching that just as the latter is stoned, so is the former. Thereupon R. Judah said to him: Shall we, because of this proximity, exclude the former [from the easier death implied by an unspecified death sentence] changing it to stoning?[4] But [reason this:] The ob and yidde'oni were included among other sorcerers.[5] Why were they singled out?[6] That other sorcerers may be assimilated to them, and to teach thee, just as the ob and yidde'oni are stoned, so are all other sorcerers stoned. But even according to R. Judah, are not ob and yidde'oni two statements teaching the same thing, and two statements teaching the same thing cannot throw light upon anything else?[7] — R. Zechariah answered: For this very reason R. Judah is generally said to maintain that even two statements singled out for the same purpose illumine the proposition as a whole.[8]

R. Johanan said: Why are they [sorcerers] called Kashshafim?[9] — Because they lessen the power of the Divine agencies.[10]

There is none else besides Him:[11] R. Hanina said: Even by sorcery.[12] A woman once attempted to take earth from under R. Hanina's feet.[13] He said to her, 'If you succeed in your attempts, go and practise it [sc. sorcery]: it is written, however, There is none else beside him'. But that is not so, for did not R. Johanan say: Why are they called mekashshefim?[14] Because they lessen the power of the Divine agencies? — R. Hanina was in a different category, owing to his abundant merit.[15]

R. Abaye b. Nagri said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Abba: Belatehem refers to magic through the agency of demons, belahatehem to sorcery [without outside help].[16] And thus it is also said, And the flame [Heb. lahat] of the sword that turns of itself.[17]

Abaye said: The sorcerer who insists on exact paraphernalia[18] works through demons; he who does not works by pure enchantment.

Abaye said: The laws of sorcerers are like those of the Sabbath: certain actions are punished by stoning, some are exempt from punishment, yet forbidden, whilst others are entirely permitted. Thus:

if one actually performs magic, he is stoned; if he merely creates an illusion, he is exempt, yet it is forbidden; whilst what is entirely permitted? — Such as was performed by R. Hanina and R. Oshaia, who spent every Sabbath eve in studying the Laws of Creation, by means of which they created a third-grown calf and ate it.[19]

R. Ashi said: I saw Karna's father[20] blow his nose violently and streamers of silk issued from his nostrils.

Then the magicians said unto Pharoah, This is the finger of God:[21] R. Eleazar, said: This proves that a magician cannot produce a creature less than a barley corn in size. R. Papa said: By God! he cannot produce even something as large as a camel; but these [larger than a barley corn] he can [magically] collect [and so produce the illusion that he has magically created them], the others he cannot.

Rab said to R. Hiyya: 'I myself saw an Arabian traveller take a sword and cut up a camel; then he rang a bell, at which the camel arose.' He replied, 'After that, was there any blood or dung? But that was merely an illusion.'

Ze'iri happened to go to Alexandria in Egypt and bought an ass. When he was about to water it, it dissolved, and there stood before him a landing board.[22] The vendors then said to him; 'Were you not Ze'iri, we would net return you [your money]: does anyone buy anything here without first testing it by water?'[23]

Jannai[24] came to an inn. He said to them, 'Give me a drink of water,' and they offered him shattitha.[25] Seeing the lips of the woman [who brought him this] moving,[26] he [covertly] spilled a little thereof, which turned to snakes. Then he said, 'As I have drunk of yours, now do you come and drink of mine.' So he gave her to drink, and she was turned into an ass he then rode upon her into the market. But her friend came and broke the charm [changing her back into a human being], and so he was seen riding upon a woman in public.

And the frog came up, and covered the land of Egypt.[27] R. Eleazar said: It was one frog, which bred prolifically and filled the land. This is a matter disputed by Tannaim. R. Akiba said: There was one frog which filled the whole of Egypt [by breeding]. But R. Eleazar b. Azariah said to him, 'Akiba, What hast thou to do with Haggadah?[28] Cease thy words and devote thyself to 'Leprosies' and 'Tents.'[29] One frog croaked for the others, and they came'.

R. AKIBA SAID, etc.

(1) Viz., decapitation. Consequently, no true analogy is possible.

(2) His full name was Simeon b. 'Azzai. There were four companions each named Simeon, so for short they were referred to by their patronym (Rashi in Ab. IV, 1).

(3) Ex. XXII, 19.

(4) R. Judah does not regard the proximity of two subjects, ממכין as a method of exegesis.

(5) I.e., in the verse, Thou shalt not suffer a sorcerer to live.

(6) In Lev. XX, 27.

(7) This is in accordance with the exegetical principle that if a general proposition is stated, and then one part thereof is singled out for special mention, the latter illumines the former; but not if two are singled out. For if they were intended to convey a teaching with respect to the proposition as a whole, only one should have been singled out, from which the second (together with the rest of the general statement) would be derived.

(8) R. Judah does not agree with the limitation expressed above, and it is precisely from this verse that he deduces that even two statements may be singled out to convoy a teaching for the whole; v. Kid. 35a.

(9) כשפים

(10) I.e., making incantations of death against those for whom Heaven has decreed life (Rashi); and in general seeking to interfere with the course of events as decreed from above. The word is treated as an abbreviation, thus Keshafim, Kahash, Famalia, Ma'alah. (Lessens [the] Family on High).
(11) Deut. IV, 35.
(12) I.e., not even sorcerers have power to oppose His decree.
(13) To perform magic against him.
(14) מכשפים Hebrew form of Kashshafim.
(15) Therefore God should certainly not permit any sorcerer to harm him.
(16) In the references to Pharoah's magicians, two words are employed to denote their art: belatehem, (בלטיהם) e.g., Ex. VII, 22 (with their enchantments); and belahatehem (בלהטיהם v. להט) Ex. VII, 11.
(17) Gen. III, 24, thus lahat is referred to an action taking place of itself; similarly, belahatehem connotes sorcery performed without extraneous aid.
(18) Demanding particular properties for different kinds of magic.
(19) V. p 446, nn. 9, 10. It thus all depends as to whose help is invoked in performing the miraculous.
(20) He was a magician.
(21) Ex. VIII, 19; this refers to the plague of lice, which they could not imitate.
(22) The ass had been a product of sorcery, created out of a landing board. Things thus created reverted to their original form when brought into contact with water.
(23) The scholars of the first century referred frequently to Egypt as the original home of magic arts (Blau, Das aljudische Zauberwesen, pp. 37-49). Sorcery was very rife in Alexandria, and was practised by Jews too, who were more influenced by pagan ideas in this city than in any other place of their dispersion. Among the less intelligent, Jewish and pagan, witchcraft were freely indulged in (Schurer, Geschichte, 3rd ed., III, 294-304). It is not clear in this passage whether Ze'iri had bought the ass from a Jew or Gentile, but the fact that such particular respect was shewn to him would seem to indicate that the vendor was a Jew.
(24) Rashi observes that this is the reading, not R. Jannai; for a scholar would not practise witchcraft.
(25) A drink prepared of flour and water. Cf. Lat. ptisanarium, a decoction of barley groats
(26) By this he recognised her to be a witch, probably muttering a charm.
(27) Ex. VIII, 6.
(28) Haggadah, also aggadah, from Nagad, to narrate, denotes the narrative, and homiletical portions of the Talmud.
(29) [Nega'im and Ohaloth, two subjects in the Talmud and name of two tractates dealing respectively with uncleanliness of a corpse and leprosy, subjects of extreme difficulty and thus suited to R. Akiba's keen dialetics.]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 68a

But did R. Akiba learn this from R. Joshua? Surely it has been taught: When R. Eliezer fell sick, R. Akiba and his companions went to visit him. He was seated in his canopied four-poster, whilst they sat in his salon.[1] That day was Sabbath eve, and his son Hyrcanus went in to him to remove his phylacteries.[2] But his father rebuked him, and he retreated crestfallen. 'It seems to me,' said he to them, 'that my father's mind is deranged'.[3] But R. Akiba said to them, 'his mind is clear, but his mother's [sc. of Hyrcanus] is deranged:[4] how can one neglect a prohibition which is punished by death, and turn his attention to something which is merely forbidden as a shebuth?'[5] The Sages, seeing that his mind was clear, entered his chamber and sat down at a distance of four cubits.[6] 'Why have ye come?' said he to them. 'To study the Torah', they replied; 'And why did ye not come before now', he asked? They answered, 'We had no time'. He then said, 'I will be surprised if these die a natural death'. R. Akiba asked him, 'And what will my death be?' and he answered, 'Yours will be more cruel than theirs'. He then put his two arms over his heart, and bewailed them, saying, 'Woe to you, two arms of mine, that have been like two Scrolls of the Law that are wrapped up.[7] Much Torah have I studied, and much have I taught.[8] Much Torah have I learnt, yet have I but skimmed from the knowledge of my teachers as much as a dog lapping from the sea. Much Torah have I taught, yet my disciples have only drawn from me as much as a painting stick from its tube. Moreover, I have studied three hundred laws on the subject of a deep bright spot,[9] yet no man has ever asked me about them. Moreover, I have studied three hundred, (or, as others state, three thousand laws) about the planting of cucumbers [by magic] and no man, excepting Akiba b. Joseph, ever questioned me thereon. For it once happened that he and I were walking together on a road, when he said to me, "My master, teach me about the planting of cucumbers". I made one statement, and the whole field [about us] was filled with cucumbers. Then he said, "Master, you have taught me how to plant them, now teach me how to pluck them up". I said something and all the cucumbers gathered in one place'. His visitors then asked him, 'What is the law of a ball, a shoemaker's last , an amulet, a leather bag containing pearls, and a small weight?'[10] He replied, 'They can become unclean, and if unclean, they are restored to their uncleanliness just as they are.'[11] Then they asked him, 'What of a shoe that is on the last?'[12] He replied, 'It is clean;' and in pronouncing this word his soul departed. Then R. Joshua arose and exclaimed, 'The vow is annulled, the vow is annulled!'[13] On the conclusion of the Sabbath R. Akiba met his bier being carried from Caesarea to Lydda. [In his grief] he beat his flesh until the blood flowed down upon the earth — Then R. Akiba commenced his funeral address, the mourners being lined up about the coffin, and said: 'My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof;[14] I have many coins, but no money changer to accept them.'[15] Thus from this story we see that he learned this [sc. the producing of cucumbers by magic] from R. Eliezer? — He learned it from R. Eliezer, but did not grasp it, then he learned it from R. Joshua, who made it clear to him.

But how might R. Eliezer do so?[16] Did we not learn, IF HE ACTUALly PERFORMS MAGIC, HE IS LIABLE? — If it is only to teach, it is different. For it has been said, Thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of these nations:[17] thou mayest not learn in order to practise, but thou mayest learn in order to understand.[18] [

(1) טרקלין triclinium.

(2) For the Sabbath was drawing near, when the phylacteries are not to be worn.

(3) Since he would not let me remove his phylacteries.

(4) (So Bah in his marginal glosses: printed texts read 'His mind and that of his mother's etc.]

(5) An occupation forbidden only by the Rabbis, not by the Bible, because it does not harmonize with the nature of the the Sabbath. R. Eliezer had observed that his wife had not yet kindled the Sabbath lights, nor put away the Sabbath meal to keep it hot. Both of these, if done on the Sabbath, are punishable by stoning, whereas the wearing of phylacteries indoors are forbidden merely by a Rabbinical ordinance, lest one forget himself and go out in the street with them, which is biblically forbidden. Therefore he rebuked his son and wife.

(6) Because R. Eliezer had been placed under the ban; v. B.M. 59b.

(7) So that they cannot be read. So had his knowledge been, none learning from it, because he had been under a ban.

(8) Before the ban.

(10) All these were made of leather, stuffed with hair or cottonwool. No leathern utensil can become unclean unless it has a receptacle, i.e., a hollow in which something can be placed. Now, the Sages maintain that since the hollow in these is made in the first place in order to be filled up, it is not a receptacle, and hence cannot become unclean. But R. Eliezer held that as they do, in fact, contain a hollow, though now filled up, they can become unclean. There is another dispute, with respect to the first two, if their outer covering was torn. It is then admitted by all that they are liable to become unclean, but there is a conflict with respect to tebilah (i.e immersion in a ritual bath to restore them to cleanliness. It is a general law that when anything is put into a ritual bath, no foreign matter may adhere to it, lest it prevent the water from getting to it. Now the Sages maintain that the stuffing is to he regarded as such, and hence must be removed before the immersion, which is otherwise ritually invalid. But R. Eliezer ruled that in this respect the stuffing is regarded as integrally part of themselves, and hence does not render the immersion invalid. Now that he was on his death-bed, thy asked him whether he still adhered to his ruling. The amulet was a charm, containing some mystic verses, worn about the neck to prevent or cure illness. A leather bag containing pearls (probably imitation, or of a very cheap kind) was worn by cattle for the same purpose. Small weights were inclosed in leather, to prevent from becoming worn.

(11) I.e., the filling is not to be regarded as foreign matter, which must be removed. Thus he told them that he adhered to his views.

(12) No utensil or garment could become unclean until it was quite ready for use. R. Eliezer and the Sages dispute with reference to a new shoe, ready for wear, but not yet removed from the last upon which it was made. The Rabbis maintained that it was a completely finished article, and hence liable to uncleanliness: whilst R. Eliezer held that until removed from its last it was not regarded as completely finished.

(13) I.e., the ban is now lifted from him. This declaration was made on account of the funeral, for had it not been annulled, a stone would have been placed upon his coffin. v. 'Ed. V, 6.

(14) II Kings II, 12.

(15) I.e., I have many questions on Torah, but no one to answer them.

(16) Cause cucumbers to grow by magic.

(17) Deut. XVIII, 9. This introduces the prohibitions of necromancy and witchcraft.

(18) R. Eliezer's action was likewise merely in order to teach.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 68b

C H A P T E R V I I I

MISHNAH. 'A STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON'.[1] WHEN DOES HE BECOME LIABLE TO THE PENALTY OF A STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON'? FROM THE TIME THAT HE PRODUCES TWO HAIRS UNTIL HE GROWS A BEARD RIGHT ROUND (BY WHICH IS MEANT THE HAIR OF THE GENITALS, NOT THAT OF THE FACE, BUT THAT THE SAGES SPOKE IN POLITE TERMS), FOR IT IS WRITTEN, IF A MAN HAVE A STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON:[2] 'A SON', BUT NOT A DAUGHTER; 'A SON', BUT NOT A FULL-GROWN MAN. WHILST A MINOR IS EXEMPT, SINCE HE DOES NOT COME WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE COMMANDMENTS.[3]

GEMARA. Whence do we know that A MINOR IS EXEMPT? (Whence do we know? The Mishnah states the reason, viz that HE DOES NOT COME WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE COMMANDMENTS. Moreover, where else do we find that Scripture prescribed a penalty [for a minor], that a verse should be necessary here to exempt him? — This is our question: Now, is then a 'STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON' executed for his actual iniquity? Surely he is rather slain on account of his ultimate end;[4] and that being so, even a minor should be executed? Moreover, [the interpretation,] 'a son', but not a man, implies a minor?) Rab Judah said in Rab's name: Scripture saith, If a man have a son [that is stubborn and rebellious], implying, a son near to the strength of manhood.[5]

UNTIL HE GROWS A BEARD RIGHT ROUND, etc. R. Hiyya taught: Until he grows a beard round the corona. When R. Dimi came,[6] he explained it thus: It means, until the hair surrounds the membrane, but not until it grows round the testicles.[7]

R. Hisda said: If a minor begot a son, the latter does not come within the category of a stubborn and rebellious son, for it is written, If a man have a son, but not if a son [i.e., one who has not reached manhood] have a son. But is not that verse needed for the deduction made by Rab Judah in Rab's name?[8] — If so, the verse should read, If there be a son to a man: why state, If a man have a son? — To teach R. Hisda's dictum.[9] Then let us say that the entire verse teaches this?[10] — If so, Scripture should have said, 'If there be the son of a man who [sc. the son] is stubborn,' etc.: Why state, If a man have a son etc.? Hence both are deduced.[11]

Now, R. Hisda's statement conflicts with Rabbah's. For Rabbah said: A minor cannot beget children, for it is written, But if the man hath no kinsman [to recompense the trespass unto].[12] Now, is there any man in Israel that has no kinsman?[13] Hence the Writ must refer to the robbery of a proselyte,[14]

(6) V. p. 390, n. 1.

(7) The other occurs much later. But once the former has taken place, he is a man, and no longer liable.

(8) v. supra.

(9) For if the verse merely teaches that the son must be just before the age of manhood, son should have immediately preceded man. By reversing the order, the manhood of the father (when begetting the son) is emphasized: only if a man beget a son but not if a minor beget one, though he is already a man when his son transgresses.

(10) Hence, how is Rab's dictum deduced?

(11) For if the verse wished to intimate only the manhood of the father, 'son' should have been in the weak, construct form (i c) so that the entire emphasis should be upon 'man'. By putting son in the absolute form (i c) and in immediate proximity to 'man', the manhood of both is emphasised, as taught in the dicta of Rab and b. Hisda.

and the Divine Law states, But if the man etc.,[1] teaching that only in the case of a man must thou seek whether he has kinsmen or not, but not in the case of a minor, for it is obvious that he can have none.

Abaye objected. [It has been taught: And If any man lieth carnally with a woman that is a bondmaid].[2] 'A man': from this I know the law only with respect to a man: whence do I know it of one aged nine years and a day who is capable of intercourse? From the verse, And 'if a man'?[3] — He replied: Such a minor can produce semen, but cannot beget therewith; for it is like the seed of cereals less than a third grown.[4]

The School of Hezekiah taught: But if a man came presumptuously [yazid] upon his neighbour to slay him with guile:[5] a man can inflame [his genital] and emit semen, but not a minor.[6] R. Mordechai asked of R. Ashi: Whence do we know that mezid denotes heating? — From the verse, And Jacob sod [wa-yazed] pottage.[7]

But this is not so.[8] For the School of Ishmael[9] taught: If a man have a son:[10] implying, a son but not a father.[11] Now, how is this possible? Shall we say that he impregnated [his wife] after producing two hairs, and begot before the hair was fully grown[12] — but can there be such a long interval [between these, as to allow for complete gestation]? Did not R. Keruspedai say: The extreme limits of a 'stubborn and rebellious' son are only three months?[13] Hence he must have caused conception before producing two hairs, and begot the child before the hair was fully grown; [and in that case he is excluded from the operation of the law] thus proving that a minor can beget children! — No. In truth, this refers to one who impregnated [his wife] after the appearance of two hairs, and begot [the child] after his hair was fully grown. But as for the difficulty raised by R. Keruspedai's dictum, — when R. Dimi came, he said: In the West [i.e.. Palestine], they explain [the deduction of the School of Ishmael] thus; a son, but not one who is fit to be called a father.[14]

To revert to the above text: 'R. Keruspedai said in R. Shabbethai's name: The extreme limit of a "stubborn and rebellious son is only three months'. But did we not learn, FROM THE TIME THAT HE PRODUCES TWO HAIRS UNTIL HE GROWS A BEARD RIGHT ROUND? — If he grew a beard, even if three months have elapsed, or if three months elapsed, even if he did not grow a beard [he is no longer liable].[15]

R. Jacob of Nehar Pekod[16] sat before Rabina, and said thus in the name of R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: From the dictum of R. Keruspedai in R. Shabbethai's name one may deduce that if a woman bears at seven months, her pregnancy is not discernible at a third of its course; for if it is, why three months: two and a third are sufficient?[17] He demurred: In truth, it may be that her pregnancy becomes manifest at a third of its course, but we must regard the majority.[18] Now, this was repeated before R. Huna the son of R. Joshua, whereupon he remarked: But can we consider the majority [only, disregarding the majority entirely] in capital charges; did not the Torah say, Then the congregation shall judge . . . and the congregation shall deliver the slayer?[19] Yet you say, regard the majority! This was reported back to Rabina. He replied: Do we then not follow the majority in capital charges? But we learnt: If one witness testified that the crime was committed on the second day of the month, and one on the third, their testimony is valid; for one knew that the past month had been full, and the other did not.[20] But if you maintain that we do not follow the majority, should we not say that these witnesses testify exactly,[21] and thus contradict each other? Hence it surely must be that we follow the majority who are wont to err with respect to the fulness of the month.

R. Jeremiah of Difti said: We also learnt the following: A maiden aged three years and a day may be acquired in marriage by coition, and if her deceased husband's brother cohabited with her, she becomes his. The penalty of adultery may be incurred through her; [if a niddah,] she defiles him who has connection with her, so that he in turn defiles that upon which he lies, as a garment which has lain upon [a person afflicted with gonorrhoea]. If she married a priest, she may eat of terumah; if any unfit person cohabits with her, he disqualifies her from the priesthood. If any of the forbidden degrees had intercourse with her, they are executed on her account, but she is exempt.[22]

But why s□: may she not prove [1] to be barren, her husband not having married her zn such a condition?[2] Hence it must be that we take into account only the majority, and the majority of women are not constitutionally barren! No. The penalty incurred on her account is a sacrifice, [but not death]. But it is explicitly stated, 'They are executed on her account?' — That refers to incest by her father. But the statement is, If any of the forbidden degrees had intercourse with her?[3] — Hence this [Mishnah] refers to a husband who explicitly accepted her under all conditions.

Our Rabbis taught: If a woman sported lewdly with her young son [a minor], and he committed the first stage of cohabitation with her, — Beth Shammai say, he thereby renders her unfit to the priesthood.[4] Beth Hillel declare her fit. R. Hiyya the son of Rabbah b. Nahmani said in R. Hisda's name; others state, R. Hisda said in Ze'iri's name: All agree that the connection of a boy aged nine years and a day is a real connection; whilst that of one less than eight years is not:[5] their dispute refers only to one who is eight years old, Beth Shammai maintaining, We must base our ruling on the earlier generations, but[6] Beth Hillel hold that we do not.

Now, whence do we know that in the earlier generations [a boy of eight years] could beget children? Shall we say since it is written: [i] [And David sent and inquired after the woman, And one said:] Is not this Bath Sheba, the daughter of Eliam, the wife of Uriah the Hittite?[7] And it is written, [ii] Eliam, the son of Ahitophel the Gilonite;[8] and it is written, [iii] And he sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet; and he called his name Jedidiah [afterwards Solomon] because of the Lord;[9] and it is written, [iv] And it came to pass, after two full years [after Solomon's birth], that Absalom had sheepshearers;[10] and it is written, [v] So Absalom fled and went to Geshur and was there three years;[11] and it is written [vi] So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face;[12] and it is written, [vii] And it came to pass after forty years, that Absalom said unto the king, I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the Lord in Hebron; and it is written,[13] [viii] And when Ahitophel saw that his counsel was not followed, he saddled his ass, and arose, and got him home to his house, to his city and put his household in order, and hanged himself;[14] and it is written, [ix] Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days.[15] And it has been taught: Doeg lived but thirty-four years, and Ahitophel thirty-three. Hence deduct seven years, Solomon's age when [Ahitophel] committed suicide,[16] which leaves [Ahitophel] twenty-six years old at his birth. Now deduct two years for the three pregnancies, leaving each eight years old when he begot a child.[17] But why so? Perhaps both [Ahitophel and Eliam] were nine years old [at conception], Bath Sheba being only six years when she conceived, because a woman has more [generative] vitality; the proof being that she bore a child before Solomon?[18] — But it is deduced from the following: Now these are the generations of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor and Haran.[19]

Now Abraham must have been [at least] one year older than Nahor, and Nahor one year older than Haran;[20] hence Abraham was two years older that Haran. And it is written, And Abram and Nahor took them wives: the name of Abram's wife was Sarai,' and the name of Nahor's wife Milcah, the daughter of Horan, the father of Milcah, and the father of Iscah.[21] Whereon R. Isaac observed: Iscah was Sarai, and why was she called Iscah? Because she foresaw [the future] by holy inspiration;[22] hence it is written, In all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice.[23] Another reason is, that all gazed at her beauty. It is also written. Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed and said in his heart, shall a child be born unto him that is on hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old bear?[24] Hence, Abraham was ten years older than Sarah, and two years older than her father [Haran]. Therefore, Sarah must have been born when Haran was eight years old. But why so: perhaps Abram was the youngest of the brethren, the Writ giving them in order of wisdom? In proof of this contention, it is written, And Noah was five hundred years old, and Noah begat Shem, Ham and Japheth; hence [if the order is according to age], Shem was at least a year older than Ham, and Ham a year older than Japheth, so that Shem was two years older than Japheth. Now, it is written, And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of water was upon the earth;[25] and it is written, These are the generations of Shem. Shem was a hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood.[26] But was he a hundred years old? He must have been a hundred and two years old?[27] Hence thou must say that they are enumerated in order of wisdom [not age];[28] then here too [in the case of Terah's sons], they are stated in order of wisdom.

R. Kahana said: I repeated this discussion before R. Zebid of Nahardea. Thereupon he said to me: You deduce [that the order is according to wisdom] from these verses, but we deduce it from the following: Unto Shem also, the father of all the children of Eber, the brother of Japheth the elder, even unto him were children born;[29] this means that he was the eldest of the brothers.

Then [the difficulty remains,] whence do we know it?[30] — From this; [i] And Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah;[31] and it is written, [ii] And when Azubah [Caleb's wife] was dead, Caleb took unto him Ephrath, which bore him Hur.[32] Now, how old was Bezaleel when he made the Tabernacle? Thirteen years, for it is written, [iii] And all the wise men, that wrought all the work of the Sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made.[33] And it has been taught: [iv] In the first year after the Exodus, Moses made the Tabernacle; in the second, he erected it and sent out the spies. And it is written, [v] [And Caleb . . . said . . .] Forty years old was I when Moses the servant of the Lord sent me from Kadesh-barnea to espy out the land,[34] . . . and now lo, I am this day fourscore and five years old.[35] Now, how old was he when sent as a spy? Forty. Deduct fourteen, Bezaleel's age at the time,[36] this leaves twenty-six [as Caleb's age at Bezaleel's birth]. Now, deduct two years for the three pregnancies; hence each must have begotten at the age of eight.[37]

A SON', BUT NOT A DAUGHTER. It has been taught: R. Simeon said, Logically, a daughter should come within the scope of a 'stubborn and rebellious child',

(15) Ps. LV, 24. This is quoted in support of the next statement that Ahitopel did not reach thirty-five, half the normal span.
(16) This is arrived at by comparing verses iv, v and vi: Absalom slew Amnon two years after Solomon's birth (iv); he was exiled for three years (v); he then lived two years in Jerusalem before his rebellion (vi), in consequence of which Ahitophel hanged himself soon after (viii). Hence, Solomon was seven years old at the time.
(17) For Ahitopel begat Eliam (ii), Eliam begat Bath Sheba (i), and Bath Sheba begat Jedidiah, i.e., Solomon (iii). Now even allowing only seven months for each pregnancy, these three must have taken nearly two years (Rashi tries to prove that it would take exactly two years, by allowing an additional month in each case for pre-conception menstruation and purification; but this is difficult, and it is preferable to assume with Tosaf. that the two years are approximate). Thus twenty four years are left for the three generations, giving eight years for each: Ahitopel must have been eight years at the conception of Eliam; Eliam eight years at the conception of Bath Sheba; Bath Sheba eight years at the conception of Solomon.
(18) So that in any ease we are bound to assume a lower age for her conception.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 70a

since many frequent her in sin,[1] but that it is a divine decree: ‘a son’, but not a daughter.

MISHNAH. WHEN DOES HE BECOME LIABLE? — WHEN HE EATS A TARTEMAR[2] OF MEAT AND DRINKS HALF A LOG[3] OF ITALIAN WINE.[4] R. JOSE SAID: A MINA[5] OF FLESH AND A LOG OF WINE. IF HE ATE IT IN A COMPANY [CELEBRATING] A RELIGIOUS ACT, OR GATHERED FOR THE PURPOSE OF INTERCALATING THE MONTH;[6] IF HE ATE THE SECOND TITHE[7] IN JERUSALEM;[8] IF HE ATE THE NEBELOTH[9] OR TEREFOTH,[10] ABOMINABLE AND CREEPING THINGS,[11] OR TEBEL,[12] OR THE FIRST TITHE FROM WHICH TERUMAH HAD NOT BEEN SEPARATED,[13] OR UNREDEEMED SECOND TITHE,[14] OR UNREDEEMED SACRED FOOD;[15] IF HIS EATING INVOLVED A RELIGIOUS ACT OR A TRANSGRESSION;[16] IF HE ATE ANY FOOD BUT MEAT OR DRANK

ANY DRINK BUT WINE, HE DOES NOT BECOME A 'STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON THEREBY, UNLESS HE EATS MEAT AND DRINKS WINE, FOR IT IS WRITTEN, [THIS OUR SON IS STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS, HE WILL NOT OBEY OUR VOICE;] HE IS A GLUTTON [ZOLEL] AND A DRUNKARD [WE-SOBE].[17] AND THOUGH THERE IS NO ABSOLUTE PROOF, THERE IS A SUGGESTION FOR THIS, AS IT IS WRITTEN, BE NOT AMONG WINEBIBBERS [BE-SOBE]; AMONG GLUTTONOUS EATERS OF FLESH [BE-ZOLELE].[18] GEMARA. R. Zera said: I do not know what is this tartemar; but since R. Jose doubled the measure of wine, he must have doubled that of meat too; hence the tartemar is half a mina.

R. Hanan b. Moladah said in R. Huna's name: He is not liable unless he buys meat and wine cheaply and consumes them,[19] for it is written. He is a Zolel.[20] R. Hanan b. Moladah also said in R. Huna's name: He is not liable unless he eats raw meat and drinks undiluted wine.[21] But that is not so, for did not Rabbah and R. Joseph both say: If he ate raw meat or drank undiluted wine, he does not become a 'stubborn and rebellious son'? — Rabina answered, by 'undiluted wine' insufficiently diluted wine is meant, and raw meat means only partially cooked, like charred meat eaten by thieves.[22] Rabbah and R. Joseph both said: If he eats pickled meat or drinks 'wine from the vat', [i. e., new wine before it has matured], he does not become a stubborn and rebellious son'.[23]

We learnt elsewhere: On the eve of the ninth of Ab[24] one must not partake of two courses, neither eat meat nor drink wine.[25] And a Tanna taught: But he may eat pickled meat and drink new wine.[26] Now, what length of time must elapse before it is regarded as pickled meat [as opposed to fresh meat]? — R. Hanina b. Kahana said: As long as the flesh of the peace offering may be eaten.[27] And how long is it called new wine? — As lone as it is in its first stage of fermentation; and it has been taught: wine in the first stage of fermentation does not come within the prohibition against uncovered liquid:[28] and how long is this first stage? — Three days. Now, what is the law here? — There [the prohibition of eating meat on the eve on the month of Ab] is on account of joy: as long as it is as the flesh of a peace offering, it yields the joy of meat eating. Here, however, it is on account of its seductiveness, and when a short period has passed, it no longer attracts, whilst wine is unattractive until it is forty days old.[29]

R. Hanan said: The only purpose for which wine was created was to comfort mourners and requite the wicked,[30] for it is written, Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish [i.e., the wicked], and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts.[31] R. Isaac said: what is meant by, Look not thou upon the wine when it is red?[32] — Look not upon the wine, which reddens the faces of the wicked in this world and makes them pale [with shame] in the next. Raba said: Look not thou upon the wine ki yith'addam: look not upon it, for it leads to bloodshed [dam][33] .

R. Kahana raised a difficulty; The Bible writes tirash [for wine], but the word is read tirosh.[34] — If one has merit, he becomes a leader, if not, he becomes impoverished. Raba raised a difficulty: The Bible writes, [and wine] yeshammah [the heart of man], but it is read yesammah.[35] — If one has merit, it gladdens him; if not, it saddens him.[36] And thus Raba said: wine and spices have made me wise.

R. Amram the son of R. Simeon b. Abba said in R. Hanina's name: What is meant by, Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine?[37] — When R. Dimi came,[38] he said: In the West it is said, In these verses, the second may be interpreted as explanatory of the first, or vice versa.[39]

'Ubar the Galilean gave the following exposition: The letter waw [and][40] occurs thirteen times in the passage dealing with wine: And Noah began to be an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard:

And he drank of the wine and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent. And Ham the father of Canaan, saw the nakedness of his father, and told his two brethren without. And Shem and Japheth took a garment, and laid it upon their shoulders, and went backward and covered the nakedness of their father, and their faces were backward, and they saw not their father's nakedness. And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him.[41] [With respect to the last verse] Rab and Samuel [differ,] one maintaining that he castrated him, whilst the other says that he sexually abused him. He who maintains that he castrated him, [reasons thus;] Since he cursed him by his fourth son,[42] he must have injured him with respect to a fourth son.[43] But he who says that he sexually abused him, draws an analogy between 'and he saw' written twice. Here it is written, And Ham the father of Canaan saw the nakedness of his father; whilst elsewhere it is written, And when Shechem the son of Hamor saw her [he took her and lay with her and defiled her].[44] Now, on the view that he emasculated him, it is right that he cursed him by his fourth son; but on the view that he abused him, why did he curse his fourth son; he should have cursed him himself? — Both indignities were perpetrated.[45]

And Noah began to be a husbandman, and he planted a vineyard, — R. Hisda said in R. 'Ukba's name, and others state, Mar 'Ukba said in R. Zakkai's name: The Holy One, blessed be He, said unto Noah: 'Noah, shouldst thou not have taken a warning from Adam, whose transgression was caused by wine?' This agrees with the view that the [forbidden] tree from which Adam ate was a vine. For it has been taught: R. Meir said: That [forbidden] tree from which Adam ate was a vine,

(2) , a weight; v. note 11.

(3) A liquid measure equal to the contents (or space occupied by) six eggs.

(4) Italian wine was particularly choice (and strong) and drinking such a quantity thereof, might lead him to drunkenness and its consequent vices. But this measure of any other (inferior) wine would be neither so potent nor seductive.

(5) The mina, sometimes called the Italian mina, was he equivalent of 1 1/2 Roman pounds. The Roman pound contained 288 scruples, the mina 300 scruples = 12 1/2 ounces. According to the Gemara below, the tartemar was half a mina. The word really means a third, and probably indicated 1/3 Alexandrian mina, which contained 150 denarii, whilst the Hebrew mina (maneh) was only 100 denarii. Cf. Zuckermann: Ueber Talmudische Gewichte und Munzen, p. 8.

(13) The Levite, to whom the first tithe was given, had to separate a tithe thereof, called the terumah of the tithe, for the priest.

(14) If one lived at a distance from Jerusalem, he redeemed the second tithe by setting aside its value, plus a fifth, to be expended in Jerusalem. The second tithe then lost its sanctity and might be eaten anywhere.

(20) זולל glutton; by a play on words, this is connected with זול cheap. This does not really prove the point, but is merely adduced as a support.

(21) This is discussed below.
(22) Thieves, always fleeing, have no time for properly cooked meat, so they place it hastily on a very hot fire, with the result that it is partly burnt and partly raw. Eating such meat and drinking strong drink is a sign of a voraciousness and drunkenness which justifies fear for his future.

(28) For whilst it thus bubbles, it repels snakes. The prohibition of drinking liquid left overnight uncovered was through the fear that a snake might have drunk thereof and in so doing injected some of its poison into it.
(29) Since his sin lies not in that he actually eats and drinks, but because he is thereby drawn into evil ways, he is liable only for eating and drinking such food as can have a strong attraction for him. Meat more than a day, and wine less than forty days old, lack that attraction.

for nothing else but wine brings woe to man. R. Judah said: It was the wheat plant,[1] for an infant cannot say 'father' and 'mother' until it has tasted of wheat.[2] R. Nehemiah said: It was the fig tree, for whereby they transgressed, they were taught to make amends, as it is written, And they sewed fig leaves together.[3]

The words of King Lemuel, the burden wherewith his mother admonished him.[4] R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: This teaches that his mother thrust him against a post[5] and said to him, What my son? and what, the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows? 'What my son?' All know that thy father was a God-fearing man, and therefore they will say that thou inheritest [thy sinfulness] from thy mother.[6] 'And what, the son of my womb?' All the women of thy father's harem, as soon as they conceived, no longer saw the king, but I forced myself in, so that my child might be vigorous and fair-skinned.[7] 'And what, the son of my vows?' All the women of thy father's household made vows [praying] that they might bear a son fit for the throne, but I vowed praying that I might bear a son zealous and filled with the knowledge of the Torah and fit for prophecy. It is not for Kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes [to say,] Where is strong drink?[8] She spoke thus to him: What hast thou to do with kings who drink wine and say, 'What need have we of God?'[9] R. Isaac said: whence do we know that Solomon repented and confessed to his mother [the justice of her rebukes]? — From the verse, Surely, 'I am more brutish than man, and' have not the understanding of a man.[10] I am more brutish than a man [ish].[11] — that is, than Noah, of whom it is written, And Noah began to be an husbandman [ish];[11] 'and have not the understanding of a man' [adam][12] — of Adam.[13]

IF HE ATE IT IN A COMPANY [CELEBRATING] A RELIGIOUS ACT. R. Abbahu said: He is not liable unless he eats in a company consisting entirely of good-for-nothings. But did we not learn, IF HE ATE IT IN A COMPANY [CELEBRATING] A RELIGIOUS ACT,. . . HE DOES NOT BECOME A REBELLIOUS SON THEREBY. Hence, it is only because they were celebrating a religious act, but otherwise, [he becomes a rebellious son] even if they are not all wastrels? — The Mishnah teaches that even if they were all wastrels, yet if they were celebrating a precept, he is not punished.[14]

OR GATHERED FOR THE PURPOSE OF INTERCALATING THE MONTH.

Shall we say that they ate[15] meat and wine [on such occasions]? But it has been taught: They ascended[16] for it with a meal consisting only of wheat bread and beans. — The Mishnah teaches thus; Though they normally ascended only with wheat nread and beans, whilst he brought up meat and wine and ate, Yet since they were engagçd in a religious act, he would not be led astray.

Our Rabbis taught; Not less than¢ten ascend f□r the purpose of proclaiming the month a full one,[17] nor do they ascend for it except with a meal consisting of wheat bread and beans; they ascend only on tfe evening fo»lowing the intercalated day, and at night, not by day.[18] But has it not been taught: They may not ascend for it by night, but only by day? — It is even as R. Hiyya b. Abba said to his sons: 'Go up there early, and come out early, so that the peop□e may learn of your celebration.'[1]±9

he is punished.[1]

HE DOES NOT BECOME A ‘STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON,’ UNLESS HE EATS MEAT AND DRINKS WINE.

Our Rabbis taught: If he ate any food but meat, and drank any drink but wine, he does not become a stubborn and rebellious son’ — unless he eats meat and drinks wine, for it is written. He is a glutton and a drunkard; and though there is no absolute proof, there is a suggestion for this, as it is written, Be not among the winebibbers, among gluttonous eaters of flesh.[2] And it is also said, For the drunkard and glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags.[3] R. Zera said: whoever sleeps in the Beth Hamidrash,[4] his knowledge shall be reduced to tatters,[5] for it is written, and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags. MISHNAH. IF HE STOLE OF HIS FATHER'S AND ATE IT IN HIS FATHER'S DOMAIN, OR OF STRANGERS AND ATE IT IN THE DOMAIN OF THE STRANGERS, OR OF STRANGERS AND ATE IN HIS FATHER'S DOMAIN, HE DOES NOT BECOME A ‘STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON,’ — UNTIL HE STEALS OF HIS FATHER'S AND EATS IN THE DOMAIN OF STRANGERS. R. JOSE, SON OF R. JUDAH SAID: UNTIL HE STEALS OF HIS FATHER'S AND MOTHER'S.

GEMARA. IF HE STOLE OF HIS FATHER'S AND ATE IT IN HIS FATHER'S DOMAIN: though this is easily within his reach, he is afraid;[6] OR OF STRANGERS AND ATE IT IN THE DOMAIN OF STRANGERS: though he is not afraid, yet it is not easily within his reach; how much more so IF HE STOLE OF STRANGERS AND ATE IN HIS FATHER'S DOMAIN, this not being easily attainable, and he, in addition, is afraid. UNTIL HE STEALS OF HIS FATHER'S AND EATS IT IN THE DOMAIN OF STRANGERS, which is easily within his reach and does not cause him fear.

R. JOSE, SON OF R. JUDAH SAID: UNTIL HE STEALS OF HIS FATHER'S AND MOTHER'S.

But how can his mother possess aught, seeing that whatever a woman acquires belongs to her husband? — R. Jose. son of R. Hanina answered: It means that he steals from a meal prepared for his father and mother. But did not R. Hanan b. Molad say in R. Huna's name: He is not liable unless he buys meat and wine cheaply and consumes them? — But say thus: from the money set aside for a meal for his father and mother.[7] An alternative answer is this: a stranger had given her something and said to her, ‘I stipulate that your husband shall have no rights therein.’

MISHNAH. IF HIS FATHER DESIRES [TO HAVE HIM PUNISHED], BUT NOT HIS MOTHER; OR THE REVERSE, HE IS NOT TREATED AS A ‘STUBBORN A REBELLIOUS SON', UNLESS THEY BOTH DESIRE IT. R. JUDAH SAID: IF HIS MOTHER IS NOT FIT FOR HIS FATHER, HE DOES NOT BECOME A 'STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON'.

GEMARA. What is meant by 'NOT FIT'? Shall we say that she is forbidden to him under penalty of extinction or capital punishment at the hand of Beth din;[8] but after all, his father is his father, and his mother is his mother? — But he means not physically like his father. It has been taught likewise: R. Judah said: If his mother is not like his father in voice, appearance and stature, he does not become a rebellious son. Why so? — The Writ saith,he will not obey our voice,[9] and since they must be alike in voice, they must be also in appearance and stature. With whom does the following Baraitha agree: There never has been a 'stubborn and rebellious son',[10] and never will be. Why then was the law written? That you may study it and receive reward. — This agrees with R. Judah.[11] Alternatively, you may say it will agree with R. Simeon. For it has been taught: R. Simeon said: Because one eats a tartemar of meat and drinks half a log of Italian wine, shall his father and mother have him stoned? But it never happened and never will happen. Why then was this law written? — That you may study it and receive reward. R. Jonathan said: 'I saw him[12] and sat on his grave'.

With whom does the following agree? Viz.,It has been taught: 'There never was a condemned city, and never will be.' — It agrees with R. Eliezer. For it has been taught, R. Eliezer said: No city containing even a single mezuzah[13] can be condemned. Why so? Because the Bible saith [in reference thereto], And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it in the midst of the street thereof and shalt burn [them].[14] But if it contains a single mezuzah, this is impossible, because it is written, [And ye shall destroy the names of them — i.e., the idols — . .] Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God.[15] R. Jonathan said: I saw it, [a condemned city] and sat upon its ruins.

With whom does the following agree: There never was a leprous house [to need destruction], and never will be?[16] Then why was its law written? — That you may study it and receive reward. With whom does it agree? — With R. Eliezer son of R Simeon. For we learnt: R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon said: A house never becomes unclean unless a plague spot appears, the size of two beans, on two stones in two walls, and at the angle of the walls; It must be two beans in length, and one in breadth. Why so? Because the Bible refers to the walls [of the house][17] and also to the wall:[18] where is one wall as two? At its angle.[19]

It has been taught: R. Eliezer son of R. Zadok said: There was a place within a Sabbath's walk[20] of Gaza, which was called the leprous ruins. R. Simeon of Kefar Acco[21] said: I once went to Galilee and saw a place, which was marked off, and was told that leprous stones were thrown there!

MISHNAH. IF ONE OF THEM [HIS FATHER OR HIS MOTHER] HAD A HAND OR FINGERS CUT OFF, OR WAS LAME, DUMB, BLIND OR DEAF, HE DOES NOT BECOME A 'STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON', BECAUSE IT IS WRITTEN ,'THEN SHALL HIS FATHER AND HIS MOTHER LAY HOLD ON HIM', — THIS EXCLUDES THOSE WITH HANDS OR FINGERS CUT OFF; 'AND BRING HIM OUT', EXCLUDING LAME PARENTS; 'AND THEY SHALL SAY', EXCLUDING THE DUMB; 'THIS OUR SON', EXCLUDING THE BLIND;[22] 'HE WILL NOT OBEY OUR VOICE, EXCLUDING THE DEAF.[23] HE IS ADMONISHED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE AND FLAGELLATED. IF HE TRANSGRESSES AGAIN AFTER THIS, HE IS TRIED BY A COURT OF TWENTY THREE, AND CANNOT BE SENTENCED TO STONING UNLESS THE FIRST THREE ARE PRESENT, BECAUSE IT IS WRITTEN, 'THIS OUR SON', IMPLYING, 'THIS ONE WHO WAS WHIPPED IN YOUR PRESENCE'.

GEMARA. This proves that the Bible must be taken literally as it is written![24] — [No; for] here it is different,

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 71b

since the entire verse is superfluous.[1]

HE IS ADMONISHED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE.

Why so? Are not two sufficient? — Abaye answered: The Mishnah means this: He is admonished in the presence of two,[2] and ordered lashes by a court of three.[3]

Where are lashes stated for a stubborn and rebellious son? — As in R. Abbahu's exegesis. For R. Abbahu said: we draw an analogy between and they shall chastise him, written twice;[4] and [the meaning of] and they shall chastise him is deduced from [the fact that] ben[5] [occurs in this passage], and then a further analogy is drawn between the word ben written here and in And it shall be if the wicked man be worthy[6] to be beaten.[7]

IF HE TRANSGRESSES AGAIN AFTER THIS, HE IS TRIED BY A COURT OF TWENTY THREE etc.

But is not this verse [sc. This our son] needed to teach, 'This', excluding blind parents?[8] — if so, the Bible should have written, 'He is[9] our son'. Why state, This our son?[10] [Hence] deduce there from both.

MISHNAH. IF HE [THE REBELLIOUS SON] FLED BEFORE HIS TRIAL WAS COMPLETED, AND THEN HIS NETHER HAIR GREW ROUND,[11] HE IS FREE. BUT IF HE FLED AFTER HIS TRIAL WAS COMPLETED, AND THEN HIS NETHER HAIR GREW ROUND, HE REMAINS LIABLE.

GEMARA. R. Hanina said: A Noachide who blasphemed the Divine Name and then became a proselyte, escapes punishment, since the judicial procedure and death are [thereby] changed.[12] Shall we say that [the Mishnah] supports him? IF HE FLED BEFORE HIS TRIAL WAS COMPLETED AND THEN HIS NETHER HAIR GREW ROUND, HE IS FREE. Why so? Surely because since he has changed [in age] he has [also] changed [in liability]![13] — No, here [in the Mishnah] it is different, for should he transgress now, he is not liable at all.[14]

Come and hear: BUT IF HE FLED AFTER HIS TRIAL WAS COMPLETED, AND THEN HIS NETHER HAIR GREW ROUND, HE REMAINS LIABLE.[15] — You speak of one who is actually sentenced! But once sentenced, he is [already] as dead.[16]

Come and hear: A Noachide who slew his neighbour [likewise a gentile] or violated his wife, and then became converted, is exempt. But if he did this to an Israelite, he is punished. But why so? Should we not say: Since he is changed [in respect of judicial procedure] he is changed [in respect of liability too]? — The change must be in respect of both the judicial procedure and the death penalty: but this Noachide's status has altered only in respect of the former, but not of the latter. Granted that this is true of a murderer: before [conversion] his penalty was decapitation, and it is so now too. But [the violation of] a married woman was punishable before [conversion] by decapitation, but now by strangulation? — [This refers to] the violation of a betrothed maiden, for which stoning is decreed in both cases. But 'if he did this to an Israelite' is parallel to 'or violated his neighbour's wife!'[17] — The lesser [punishment] is included in the greater.[18] Now this agrees with the view of the Rabbis that decapitation is severer [than stoning]; but on the view of R. Simeon that stoning is the greater punishment, what can you say? — R. Simeon concurs with the Tanna of the School of Manasseh, who says that wherever death is decreed for the Noachide, it is by strangulation. Now, this is true of adultery, the penalty for which both before and after [conversion] is strangulation.[19] But murder was punishable before by strangulation; now by decapitation! — The lesser is included in the greater.[20]

Shall we say that the following supports him? [For it was taught:] If she [sc. a betrothed maiden] sinned [by committing adultery], and then attained puberty [becoming a bogereth], she is strangled.[21] Now, why not stoned?[22] Surely, because since she is changed [physiologically], she is likewise changed [in respect of punishment];[23] how much more so in this case,[24] where a complete change has taken place? — [This does not support him,] for R. Johanan said to the tanna:[25] Read, she is stoned.

MISHNAH. A 'STUBBORN AND REBELLIOUS SON' IS TRIED ON ACCOUNT OF HIS ULTIMATE DESTINY: LET HIM DIE INNOCENT AND LET HIM NOT DIE GUILTY. FOR THE DEATH OF THE WICKED BENEFITS THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD;[26] OF THE RIGHTEOUS, INJURES THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD. WINE AND SLEEP OF THE WICKED BENEFIT THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD;[27] OF THE RIGHTEOUS, INJURE THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD.[28] THE SCATTERING OF THE WICKED BENEFITS THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD;[29] OF THE RIGHTEOUS, INJURES THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD. THE ASSEMBLING OF THE WICKED INJURES THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD; OF THE RIGHTEOUS, BENEFITS THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD. THE TRANQUILLITY OF THE WICKED INJURES THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD;[30] OF THE RIGHTEOUS, BENEFITS THEMSELVES AND THE WORLD.

(1) For the Bible could have written, 'And ye shall bring him out unto the gate of that city, and stone him.' Hence, the rest must have been inserted as limiting clauses. But if a verse is not superfluous in itself, it may be that it need not be literally interpreted.

(2) So that they may be witnesses thereof since he cannot be executed on his parents' testimony alone.
(3) As all who are sentenced to lashes; v. supra 2a.
(4) R. Abbahu said this in reference to the slanderer of a woman's honour: whence do we know that he is punished by lashes? Because the Bible writes, And they (the elders) shall chastise him. Deut. XXII, 18. By analogy with And they shall chastise him, said with reference to a rebellious son (ibid. XXI, 18), we learn that the same treatment is meted out to both.
(5) בֵּן 'son'.
(6) בֵּן Heb. bin — the letters do not differ from ben, the meaning is the same.
(7) Deut. XXV, 2. There, flagellation is explicitly prescribed. By analogy, the same applies to a rebellious son, and by a further analogy, to the slanderer.
(8) V. Mishnah.
(9) That would imply, 'he who was lashed in your presence.'
(10) Which implies that they actually point to him (Rashi). [Yad Ramah reverses the interpretation].
(11) So that he is beyond the age limit; v. supra 68b.
(12) A Noachide is tried by one judge, and on the testimony of one witness only, and is executed even if no formal admonition preceded his offence; a Jew is tried by a court of twenty three, on the testimony of at least two, and only after formal admonition. Moreover, a gentile is decapitated, whereas a Jew is stoned.
(13) Hence, the same principle holds good here.
(14) But in the case under discussion, blasphemy after conversion is also punishable, though the procedure differs.
(15) In spite of his changed status. This refutes R. Hanina's dictum.
(16) Therefore his altered status does not free him.
(17) 'His neighbour's wife' must refer to a nesu'ah, since the sacredness of betrothal alone is not recognised by heathens. Consequently, 'if he did this to an Israelite must also refer to a nesu'ah.
(18) I.e., this does refer to a nesu'ah, whose violation before conversion is punished by decapitation; after conversion, by stoning. But the latter being more lenient than the former, it is regarded as included therein; hence his death has not changed. But in blasphemy, the change is from decapitation to stoning. Which is the reverse.
(19) According to the last answer.
(20) Decapitation being more lenient than strangulation.
(21) V. Keth. 45a.
(22) In accordance with the penalty of a na'arah.
(23) Though here it does not exempt her entirely, since strangulation, to which a bogereth is liable, is included in stoning, the punishment of a na'arah.
(24) Of blasphemy.
(25) [R. Shila, who recited the Baraitha, Keth. 45a.]
(26) It benefits them, in that they sin no more.
(27) For whilst drinking and sleeping they can do no evil.
(28) Because their time can be better spent, with greater advantage to themselves and to others.
(29) Being scattered, they cannot take counsel together for evil.
(30) As it gives them the opportunity of devising evil.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 72a

GEMARA. It has been taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: Did the Torah decree that the rebellious son shall be brought before Beth din and stoned merely because he ate a tartemar of meat and drank a log of Italian wine? But the Torah foresaw his ultimate destiny. For at the end, after dissipating his father's wealth, he would [still] seek to satisfy his accustomed [gluttonous] wants but being unable to do so, go forth at the cross roads and rob.[1] Therefore the Torah said, 'Let him die while yet innocent, and let him, not die guilty.' For the death of the wicked benefits themselves and the world; of the righteous, injures themselves and the world. Sleep and wine of the wicked benefit themselves and the world; of the righteous, injure themselves and the world. The tranquillity of the wicked injures themselves and the world; of the righteous, benefits themselves and the world. The scattering of the wicked benefits themselves and the world; of the righteous, injures themselves and the world.

MISHNAH. [THE THIEF] WHO BURROWS HIS WAY IN[2] IS JUDGED ON ACCOUNT OF ITS PROBABLE OUTCOME. IF HE BROKE THROUGH AND BROKE A JUG, SHOULD THERE BE 'BLOOD-GUILTINESS FOR HIM,[3] HE MUST PAY [FOR THE JUG], BUT IF THERE IS NO 'BLOOD-GUILTINESS FOR HIM,[4] HE IS NOT LIABLE.[5]

GEMARA. Raba said: what is the reason for the law of breaking in? Because it is certain that no man is inactive where his property is concerned; therefore this one [the thief] must have reasoned, 'If I go there, he [the owner] will oppose me and prevent me; but if he does I will kill him.' Hence the Torah decreed, 'If he come to slay thee, forestall by slaying him'.

Rab said: If one broke into a house, and stole some utensils and departed, he is free [from making restitution] — Why? Because he has purchased them with his blood.[6] Raba[7] said: It would logically appear that Rab's dictum holds good only if he broke the utensils, so that they are not in existence; but not if he merely took them [and they are still intact]. But in truth,[8] Rab's dictum applies even if he merely took them. For [even] where there is 'blood-guiltiness for him', if the utensils are injured, he is liable. This proves that they stand under his [the thief's] ownership; so here too, they are under the thief's ownership.[9] But it is not so.[10] The Divine Law placed it under the thief's control only in respect of injury;[11] but as to ownership, it remains the property of the first owner,[12] just as in the case of a borrower.[13]

We learnt: IF HE BROKE THROUGH AND BROKE A JUG, SHOULD THERE BE BLOOD-GUILTINESS FOR HIM', HE MUST PAY [FOR THE JUG]; BUT IF THERE IS 'NO BLOOD-GUILTINESS FOR HIM', HE IS NOT LIABLE. Thus, it is only because he broke it that he is exempt when there is no blood-guiltiness for him, but if he only took it, he is not exempt?[14] — The same law [of exemption] applies even if he merely took it, and the reason it states, 'AND BROKE A JUG' is to show that if there is blood-guiltiness for him, he is liable even if he broke it. But is this not obvious, since he damaged it? — We are thereby informed that [he is liable] even if he broke it unintentionally. What does this teach us? That a man is always regarded as forewarned?[15] But we have already learnt this: A man is always regarded as forewarned, whether [he did damage] unwittingly or wittingly accidently or deliberately. This is a difficulty![16]

R. Bibi b. Abaye objected: [We learnt:] If one steals a purse on the Sabbath, he is bound to make restitution, since the liability for theft arose before the desecration of the Sabbath. But if he drags it out of the house, he is exempt, since they are simultaneous![17] — [No]. This ruling holds good only, if he threw it into the river.[18]

Raba was robbed of some rams through a thief breaking in. Subsequently they [the thieves] returned them, but he refused to accept them, saying. 'Since Rab has thus ruled,[19] [I abide by his decision]'.

Our Rabbis taught: [If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die], there shall no blood be shed for him, if the sun be risen upon him.[20] Now, did the sun rise upon him only? But [this is the meaning: 'If it is as clear to thee as the sun that his intentions are not peaceable, slay him; if not, do not slay him.' Another [Baraitha] taught: If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him. Now, did the sun rise upon him alone? But if it is as clear to thee as the sun that his intentions are peaceable, do not slay him; otherwise, slay him. These two unnamed [Baraithas] contradict each other.[21] — This is no difficulty:

---

(1) Evil habits, even if not actually sinful, very rapidly lead to sin. 'For precept draws precept in its train, and transgression, transgression; for the recompense of a precept is a precept, and the recompense of a transgression, a transgression' (Aboth IV. 2).

(2) V. Ex. XXII, 1. He may be killed by the occupier of the house with impunity.
(3) I.e., if his death is punishable.
(4) I.e., if he may be killed with impunity.
(5) V. infra. Not in every circumstance was the house owner allowed to kill him.
(6) Since he risked his life, which the owner could have taken with impunity.
(7) The Rashal reads 'Rabbah'.
(8) Lit., 'Oh God!' — an oath.
(9) The reasoning is as follows: when something is stolen, it loses its first ownership, and passes into that of the thief, who is therefore liable for having removed it from its owner's control as for an ordinary debt. Consequently, he is liable even if it is broken. For if it theoretically remained in its first ownership, the thief would not be liable for any injury to it. Hence in this case, since the thief, by his act of breaking in, became liable to death, restoration cannot be demanded even if it is intact, for liability to monetary restoration is cancelled in the face of the greater liability to death.
(10) Raba (or Rabbah), having proved that Rab's dictum holds good even if the utensils are intact, now demolishes the theory upon which it is based.
(11) As explained in note 1.
(12) And if intact, the thief cannot retain the stolen article and offer the value instead.
(13) If one borrows (not hires) an article, and it is damaged in his possession, he must make it good, though it really remains the property of the first owner, who can claim the return of it intact, ifüavailable. So herÝ too.
(14) This contradicts Rab's ruling.
(15) I.e.,lack of intentionw or an accident, does not free him from his full liabilities.
(16) Nevertheless, it does not altogether refute R>b's ruling, since the Mishnah can be int¾rpreted as holding good even if he look it, though a! shown -bove, such interpretati²n is n„t very plau¶ible (Rashi).
i17) Lit., 'The prohibition of stealin and the proh'biÅion involvŠng stoning came together'. B< 'stealing' is meant that he took it in hi@ îŠnd, thereby lifting it up from it's place. Lifting up is a method of fı al acquisition, and as soon as he doe thisªwith felonious iìtent he has stolen it, and hence is liable for theft. But the (abbath is not viˆ´ated until he takes 7t in¦o the street, 0/e viola¸ion consisting of theÜcarrying of the purse from a private domain(the house) into a public domain (the street). But if he draás it along the floor of the house, not lifting it uq, the act åf t*eft is committed only when it leaves thü house; simultaneously with this, the Sabbath is d6secra7ed. Since he is l„able to stoning for the latterˆ he is exempt on account of the form`r, it being a principle that if a person simultaneou]lÍ commits two wrongs, the greater only is punishedÆ Hence weæsee that though the purse is still in Ðxistence,whe is not bound to return it. This refutes Rab's ruling.÷ñ18) I.e., destroyed it. But if it i intact, he s bound to return it.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 72b

he first [Baraitha] refers to a Øather [robbing]¦his Ãon, the second to a sjn [robbi«g] hishfather. [1]

? Rab saAd: 'Any man that broke into my house, I would kill, excepting R. Hanina b. Shila.' Why? Shall we say because he is righteous [and therefore certain not to kill me]? Surely he has broken in![2] — But because I am assured that he would have pity upon me, like a father for his son.

Our Rabbis taught: [If the sun beUrisen upon him,] there shall be blood [damim] shed for him: both on a week day, and on the Sabbath. [If the thief be found breaking up, . . .] there shall no blood [damim] be shed for him:[3] neither on week days, nor on the Sabbath. Now, granted that the exegesis of 'there shallÂno blood be shed for him', as including both week days and the ªabbath,is necessary, for I might think that this case is similar to that of those who are executed by Beth din, who may not be executed on the Sabbath:[4] we are therefore told that [tue thief] †ay be slain [even on the Sabbath].[5] But why deduce 'there shall be blood s{ed for him', neither on a week day nor on the Sabbath? If he may not be slain on a week day, he may surely not be slain on the Sabbath? — R.

Shesheth replied: This is necessary only to teach that a pile [of debris] must be removed for his sake.[6]

Our Rabbis taug“t: [If a thief be found breaking up,] and be smitten, — by any man; that he die, — by any death wherewith you can slay him. Now, [the exegesis] ‘And be smitten, — by any man’ is rightly necessary; for I might think that only the owner may be assumed not to remain passive.ÍWhilst his money is bein` stolen, but not a stranger:[7] it is therefore taught that hÆ is regarded as a potential murderer[8] , whom even a stranger may kill [in defence of the owner]. But what nee\ of ‘that he die’, — by any death wherewith you can slay him’; can this not be deduced from a murderer? For it has been taught: He that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer.[9] I only know that he may be executed with the death that is decreed for him; whence do I know that if you cannot execute him with that death, that you may execute him with any other death? From the verse: He that smote him shall surely be put to death, implying in any manner possible![10] — There it is different, because Scripture writes, He shall surely be put to death. Then why not derive this from it? Because the murderer and the avenging kinsman are two verses with the same object, and the teaching of such two verses does not extend to anything else.[11]

Our Rabbis taught: If a thief be found breaking in:[12] from this I know that law only for breaking in [through the wall]: whence do we know it if he be found on the roof, in the court, or in an enclosure [attached to the house]? — From the verse, If the thief be found, implying, wherever he is [found as thief].[13] If so, why state ‘breaking in’? — Because most thieves enter by breaking in.

Another [Baraitha] taught: if a thief be found breaking in: from this I know the law only for breaking in: whence do l know it if he be found on the roof, in the court, or an enclosure? From the verse, ‘If the thief be found,’ implying. Wherever he is found as thief. If so, why state ‘breaking in’? — Because his breaking in constitutes a formal warning.[14]

R. Huna said: A minor in pursuit may be slain to save the pursued.[15] Thus he maintains that a pursuer, whether an adult or a minor, need not be formally warned. R. Hisda asked R. Huna: we learnt: Once his head has come forth, he may not be harmed, because one life may not be taken to save another.[16] But why so? Is he not a pursuer?[17] — There it is different, for she is pursued by heaven.[18]

Shall we say that the following supports him? [Viz.,] If a man was pursuing after his fellow to slay him, he (observer) says to him, ‘See, he is an Israelite, and a son of the covenant, whilst the Torah hath said, Whosoever would shed the blood of a man, [to save] that man shall his own blood be shed,[19] meaning, save the blood of the pursued by the blood of the pursuer’![20] — That is based on the ruling of R. Jose son of R. Judah. For it has been taught; R. Jose son of R. Judah said: A haber[21] need not be warned, because a warning is necessary only to distinguish between ignorance and presumption.[22]

Come and hear: If a man was pursuing his neighbour to slay him, the observer says to him ‘See he is an Israelite, and a son of the Covenant, whilst the Torah hath taught, Whosoever would shed the blood of a man, to save that man, shall his blood be shed’. If he [the pursuer] replied. ‘I know that it is so’, he is not liable to be slain; but if he replied. ‘I do it even on such a condition’,[23] he is liable![24] — This is only if they are standing on two opposite sides of the river, so that he cannot save him. Hence what is [to be done]? To bring him before Beth din! But [punishment] by Beth din must be preceded by a warning. An alternative answer if you wish is this: R. Huna can tell you: My ruling agrees with the Tanna of ‘breaking in’, who held that his breaking in constitutes a formal warning.[25]

(1) A father has more compassion for his son than a son for his father. Hence, if a father robs his son, the latter must assume that he will not go to extremes if he defends his property. Consequently, he may kill him only if he is certain thereof. But if a son robs his father (and even more so, when he robs a stranger), he may assume that he is prepared to kill him, unless certain that he will not. Therefore, if he has any doubt, he may take his life.

(2) Which disposes of his righteousness.

(3) Ex. XXII,1-2. Damim is plural, teaching that this law holds good on more than one occasion and is therefore interpreted as referring to Sabbaths and week days.

(4) For this is really execution, the house owner standing in lieu of Beth din: hence, just as the latter may not execute on the Sabbath, so the former too.

(5) Since it is self-defence.

(6) If, in burrowing his way in, he dislodged a pile of masonry, which fell upon him, it must be removed even on the Sabbath, and if the owner does not, he is guilty of bloodshed.

(7) For it is only because of that assumption that his death is regarded as self-defence. But a stranger might not be assumed (by the thief) actively to interfere; therefore the thief is not likely to slay him, and hence his death at the hands of a stranger is not in self-defence.

(8) Lit., 'pursuer'.

(9) Num. XXXV, 21.

(10) V. p. 358, n. 2.

(11) V. supra 45b. Hence the need of a special verse here.

(12) Ex. XXII, 1.

(13) Since the writ does not state, If he be found, etc., but if the thief be found, which is superfluous, being understood from the context, it shows that if he is at all seen to be a thief, no matter what his position, the law applies.

(14) I.e., the owner need not warn him before killing him, as in the case elsewhere.

(15) Lit 'the pursued is to be saved by his (the pursuer's) blood'.

(16) This refers to a woman giving birth, whose life is endangered. Now, if the fetus put forth any limb but the head, it may be cut off, so as to facilitate delivery, and save the mother. But if his head issued, it is regarded as alive, and the mother may not be saved at his expense.

(17) I.e., in seeking to be born, he is as a pursuer. endangering his mother's life.

(18) I.e. it is an 'act of God'.

(19) Gen, IX, 6.

(20) Though the pursuer did not accept the warning, as is normally necessary in a formal admonition, he may be slain, which proves that a warning is unnecessary in his case.

(21) Lit., 'associate', fellow student; it was also a scholar's title (Fellow), and is employed in this sense here.

(22) Hence a scholar who knows what is forbidden need not be warned, even if his crime is punished by Beth din. Likewise, the above Baraitha is on the same basis. But on the opposing view that all transgressors, including scholars, must be formally warned, and the warning accepted, it may be that the same applies to a pursuer. Therefore this does not support R. Huna.

(23) I.e., even if I am to be slain for it.

(24) The latter formula is the acceptance of a warning. This proves that the pursuer must be formally warned, and thus refutes R. Huna.

(25) V. p. 494, n. 1. Because by breaking in he is really a pursuer, needing no warning.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 73a

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING MUST BE SAVED [FROM SINNING] EVEN AT THE COST OF THEIR LIVES: HE WHO PURSUES AFTER HIS NEIGHBOUR TO SLAY HIM, [OR] AFTER A MALE [FOR PEDERASTY]. [OR] AFTER A BETROTHED MAIDEN [TO DISHONOUR HER].[1] BUT HE WHO PURSUES AFTER AN ANIMAL [TO ABUSE IT]. OR WOULD DESECRATE THE SABBATH, OR COMMIT IDOLATRY, MUST NOT BE SAVED [FROM SINNING] AT THE COST OF HIS LIFE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: whence do we know that he who pursues after his neighbour to slay him must be saved [from sin] at the cost of his own life? From the verse, Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbour.[2] But does it come to teach this? Is it not employed for the following [Baraitha] that has been taught: Whence do we know that if a man sees his fellow drowning, mauled by beasts, or attacked by robbers, he is bound to save him? From the verse, Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbor! — That in truth is so. Then whence do we know that [the pursuer] must be saved at the cost of his own life? — It is inferred by an ad majus reasoning from a betrothed maiden. If a betrothed maiden, whom he wishes merely to dishonour, yet the Torah decreed that she may be saved by the life of her ravisher, how much more so does this hold good for one who pursues his neighbour to slay him. But can punishment be inflicted as a result of an ad majus conclusion?[3] — The School of Rabbi taught, It is derived by analogy:[4] For as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so in this matter.[5] But what do we learn from this analogy of a murderer?[6] Thus, this comes to throw light, and is itself illumined.[7] The murderer is compared to a betrothed maiden; just as a betrothed maiden must be saved [from dishonour] at the cost of his [her violater's] life, so in the case of a murderer, he [the victim] must be saved at the cost of his [the attacker's] life. And whence do we know this of betrothed maiden? — As was taught by the School of R. Ishmael. For the School of R. Ishmael taught; [The betrothed damsel cried]; and there was none to save her,[8] but, if there was a rescuer, he must save her by all possible means [including the death of her ravisher].

[To revert to] the above text: 'Whence do we know that if a man sees his neighbour drowning, mauled by beasts, or attacked by robbers, he is bound to save him? From the verse, Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbour.' But is it derived from this verse? Is it not rather from elsewhere? Viz., Whence do we know [that one must save his neighbour from] the loss of himself? From the verse, And thou shalt restore him to himself![9] — From that verse I might think that it is only a personal obligation,[10] but that he is not bound to take the trouble of hiring men [if he cannot deliver him himself]: therefore, this verse teaches that he must.

Our Rabbis taught: He who pursues after his neighbour to slay him, he who pursues a male [for sexual abuse], or a betrothed maiden, a woman forbidden to him on pain of death at the hands of Beth din, or one forbidden on pain of extinction[11] — these are saved [from sin] at the cost of their own lives. But a High Priest in pursuit of a widow, and an ordinary priest in pursuit of a divorcee or a haluzah, may not be saved at the cost of their lives. If [the betrothed maiden] has been ravished previously, she may not be saved by her pursuer's death, likewise, if she can be otherwise rescued. R. Judah said: This applies also if she said [to her rescuers]. 'Let him be,' lest he slay her.[12]

Whence do we know all this? — But unto the damsel na'ar[ah] thou shalt do nothing there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death.[13] Na'ar refers to a male, na'arah to a betrothed maiden;[14] sin — to women forbidden on pain of extinction; death — to those forbidden on pain of death at the hands of Beth din.[15] Why are all these needed?[16] — They are necessary. For had the Divine Law written na'ar [a youth], I would have thought that he must thus be saved because it is unnatural lust; but since connection with a maiden is natural, I would think that she may not be saved thus. Whilst if na'arah [damsel] were written, I would think that the law applies only to her, because he destroys her virginity; but not to a youth, who is not thus injured. And had these [only] been stated,

---

(1) These must be slain, rather than be allowed to carry out their intention.

(2) Lev. XIX, 16. Stand not idly by, but save him from committing such a great sin.

(3) v. supra 54a.

(4) A hekkesh, v. Glos.,

(5) Deut. XXII, 26. This refers to the ravishing of a betrothed maiden.

(6) For the simile itself is superfluous, since the Torah explicitly states that the maiden is not punished. Hence it implies that a certain feature of the law of a murderer holds good here too, and vice versa.

(7) I.e., the verse shows that the case of a murderer throws light upon that of a betrothed maiden (v. infra 74a), but is it itself also illumined thereby.

(8) Ibid. 27.

(9) Ibid. 2. The passage refers to restoring a neighbour's lost property. This interpretation extends it to his own person. e.g if he has lost himself, he must be helped to find his way again. Hence it also applies to the rescuing of one from danger.

(10) Because, 'thou shalt restore'. . . implies thou in person.

(11) To commit incest or adultery.

(12) Before they reach her.

(13) Ibid. 26.

(14) The second half of the verse is superfluous, since the first half states, 'but unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing'. Hence each part thereof is separately interpreted. Though the verse as read (Kre) is na'arah, (נערה damsel). the written text (Kethib) is na'ar, (נער a youth). Hence both the written and the read word are interpreted.

(15) And those deduced from the verse must be saved at the cost of their pursuer's life.

(16) Could not the Torah have taught it of one, from which the others might be deduced?

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 73b

I would think that it is because the one is unnatural, and the other is deprived of her virginity; but other consanguineous relations, cohabitation with whom is both natural and does not inflict a great loss,[1] might not be thus saved: therefore the Divine Law writes 'sin'.[2] Now, had the Divine Law written 'sin' [only], I would have thought it applies even to those who are forbidden merely by a negative precept: therefore the Divine Law wrote 'death'. And had the the Divine Law written 'death' [only], I would have thought the law applies only to those forbidden on pain of death by Beth din, but not on pain of extinction: therefore the Divine Law writes 'sin'. Then why did the Divine Law not write merely there is no sin worthy of death, na'ar [youth] and na'arah [a damsel] being superfluous?[3] — That is so. But as for na'ar and na'arah, one teaches the exclusion of an idolater, and the other, the exclusion of bestiality and the [desecration of the] Sabbath.[4] But on the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai that an idolater must be saved [from sin] at the cost of his life, why are these verses necessary? — One excludes bestiality, and the other excludes the [desecration of the] Sabbath; for I would [otherwise] think, that the Sabbath is included through an analogy with idolatry, since 'profanation' is written in both.[5] But on the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, that he who desecrates the Sabbath must be saved [from sin] by death, because an analogy is drawn with idolatry, on account of profanation being written in both, what can you say? — One excludes bestiality; and as for the other, since the Divine Law wrote na'ar, it also wrote na'arah.[6]

'R. Judah said: The same applies if she said [to her rescuer] "Let him be", lest he slay her.'[7]

In which case do they[8] differ?-Raba said: when she objects to dishonour, yet permits him, so that he should not slay her. The Rabbis maintain, The Divine Law was insistent for her honour, and since she too is particular about it. [her pursuer may be slain]. But R. Judah maintains that the reason that the Divine Law decreed that he should be slain is because she is prepared to give her own life [rather than be violated]; but this one is not prepared to do so.

R. Papa said to Abaye: But does not a High Priest dishonour a widow?[9] — He replied, The Divine Law sought to protect her from great dishonour, but not from little dishonour.[10]

'Sin — refers to women forbidden on pain of extinction.

The Scholars objected: [We learnt,] Fine is imposed for the violation of the following maidens:[11] he who outrages his sister.[12] — The Rabbis explained this before R. Hisda: Once he has committed the first stage, thereby dishonouring her, he may no longer be slain;[13] whereas monetary liability is not contracted until the completion of cohabitation.[14] Now, this agrees with the view that the first stage [which dishonours her] is contact with her sexual organ; but on the view that the first stage is the insertion of the membrum, what can you say?[15] But R. Hisda answered thus: This refers to unnatural followed by natural cohabitation.[16] Raba said: This applies where she allows him [to have his will] so that he shall not slay her, and is based on the ruling of R. Judah.[17]

---

(1) For if they are unbetrothed, there is no arus (a betrothed husband) in whom the loss of virginity will rankle deeply; whilst if they are married, her virginity has already gone.

(2) Teaching that it applies to those who are forbidden on pain of execution.

(3) Since the violation of a betrothed maiden and the abuse of a male are punishable by death, they are included in the exegesis of 'death'.

(4) That one must not he prevented from sinning in respect of these by killing him.

(5) v. Infra 74b.

(6) In fact, it is not a double redundancy, for though na'ar is written, the context demands that na'arah be read, since the entire passage refers to a maiden.

(7) In the Baraitha quoted above,

(8) R. Judah and the Rabbis.

(9) By violating her he disqualifies her from marrying a priest; why then should she not be saved at the cost of his life?

(10) I.e, the Torah authorised the extreme measure of slaying the ravisher only when he would inflict great dishonour, e.g.. in the case of incest forbidden on pain of extinction, as a result of which she becomes a harlot (zonah) and the child a bastard. But here (a widow, violated by a High Priest), she is merely profaned (halalah).

(11) The reference is to Deut. XXII, 28f. The fifty shekels are regarded as a fine.

(12) Keth. 29a. I.e., even his sister, though and she shall be his wife is inapplicable. But if she might be saved by his life, he should not be fined, in accordance with the principle stated on p, 490, n. 1. In the case of the death penalty, this principle holds good even if the offender is not actually executed, or, as in this case, slain by the rescuers,

(13) By her rescuers in order to save her, for the extreme measure is permitted only if she is as yet untarnished,

(14) Consequently, the two penalties are not incurred simultaneously, and the principle is inoperative. By 'completion' the destruction of her virginity is meant,

(15) Since then dishonour and destruction of virginity are simultaneous.

(16) Since she has been unnaturally violated before, whether by her brother or another, she may not be saved now by his life. Therefore he is fined for destroying her virginity.

(17) V. supra 73a.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 74a

R. Papa said: This refers to seduction [not outrage], and therefore agrees with all.[1] Abaye said: This applies where she could have been saved at the cost of one of the limbs [of the violator].[2] and agrees with R. Jonathan b. Saul. For it has been taught: If one was pursuing his fellow to slay him, and he could have been saved[3] by maiming a limb [of the pursuer] but did not thus save himself [killing him instead], he is executed on his account.[4]

What is R. Jonathan b. Saul's reason? — Because it is written, if men strive [and hurt a woman . . .] he shall be surely punished . . . and pay as the judges determine. And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life.[5] Whereon R. Eleazar said: The verse refers to attempted murder,[6] for it is written, And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life[7] and yet the Divine Law states, If no mischief follows, he shall surely be punished. Now this is correct if you say that where the pursued can be saved at the cost of one limb [of the pursuer] the latter may not be slain: hence it is conceivable that he shall be punished [by paying monetary compensation]. But if you maintain that he may be slain, how is it possible for him to be punished![8] Perhaps it is different here, because his liability to death is incurred on account of one person, but his monetary obligation on account of another?[9] — That makes no difference. For Raba[10] said: If a man was pursuing after his fellow [to slay him]. and broke some utensils, whether of the pursued or of some other person. he is free from liability. Why so? Because he is liable to be killed. If the pursued broke some articles: if they belonged to the pursuer, he is not liable for them; if to someone else, he is. 'If they belonged to the pursuer he is not liable', — because his property is not more precious than his own person.[11] But 'if to someone else, he is' , — because he saved himself at his neighbour's expense. But if one pursuer was pursuing another pursuer to save him [the latter's victim] and broke some utensils, whether of the pursuer. or the pursued. or of any other person, he is not liable for them. This should not be so in equity[12] but if thou wilt not rule thus, no man will save his neighbour from a pursuer.[13]

BUT HE WHO PURSUES AN ANIMAL [TO ABUSE IT].

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai said: An idolater may be saved [from sin] at the cost of his own life. This is deduced by reasoning from the minor to the major: If the dishonouring of a human[14] being must be averted even at the cost of [the violator's] life, how much more so the dishonouring of the All-Highest.[15] But can we punish[16] as a result of an ad majus conclusion? — He maintains that we can.

It has been taught: R. Eliezer, son of R. Simeon, said: He who desecrates the Sabbath may be saved [from sin] by his own life. He agrees with his father, that punishment is imposed as a result of an ad majus conclusion, and then he deduces the Sabbath from idolatry by [a gezerah shawah based on the use of] 'profanation' in connection with the Sabbath and idolatry.[17]

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: By a majority vote, it was resolved in the upper chambers of the house of Nithza in Lydda[18] that in every [other] law of the Torah, if a man is commanded: 'Transgress and suffer not death' he may transgress and not suffer death, excepting idolatry, incest, [which includes adultery] and murder.[19] Now may not idolatry be practised [in these circumstances]? Has it not been taught: R. Ishmael said: whence do we know that if a man was bidden, 'Engage in idolatry and save your life', that he should do so, and not be slain? From the verse, [Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgements,' which if a man do] he shall live in them:[20] but not die by them. I might think that it may even be openly practised. but Scripture teaches, Neither shall ye profane my holy name; but I will be hallowed?'[21] — They[22] ruled as R. Eliezer. For it has been taught, R. Eliezer said: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.[23] Since 'with all thy soul' is stated, why is 'with all thy might' stated? Or if 'with all thy might' be written, why also write 'with all thy soul'? For the man to whom life is more precious than wealth, 'with all thy soul' is written;[24] whilst he to whom wealth is more precious than life is bidden, 'with all thy might' [i.e., substance].[25]

Incest and murder [may not be practised to save one's life], — even as Rabbi's dictum. For it has been taught: Rabbi said, For as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter.[26] But what do we learn from this analogy of a murderer? Thus, this comes to throw light and is itself illumined. The murderer is compared to a betrothed maiden: just as a betrothed maiden must be saved [from dishonour] at the cost of his [the ravisher's] life, so in the case of a murderer, he [the victim] must be saved at the cost of his [the attacker's] life. Conversely, a betrothed maiden is compared to a murderer: just as one must rather be slain than commit murder, so also must the betrothed maiden rather be slain than allow her violation. And how do we know this of murder itself? — It is common sense. Even as one who came before Raba[27] and said to him, 'The governor of my town has ordered me, "Go and kill so and so; if not, I will slay thee"'. He answered him, 'Let him rather slay you than that you should commit murder; who knows that your blood is redder? Perhaps his blood is redder.'[28]

When R. Dimi came,[29] he said: This was taught only if there is no royal decree,[30] but if there is a royal decree, one must incur martyrdom rather than transgress even a minor precept. When Rabin came, he said in R. Johanan's name: Even without a royal decree, it was only permitted in private; but in public one mÖst be martyred even for a minor precept rather than violate it. What is meant by a 'minor precept'? — Raba son of R. Isaac said in Rab's name:

(1) For if she is seduced of her own consent, she may not be saved at the cost of her seducer's life, nevertheless, the fine is imposed.
(2) without killing him.
(3) Here Rashi esplains, either by the pursued, or by another person. On 57a he states, ‘by the pursued’.
(4) Hence, in such circumstances the violator is not liable to death, and consequently liable to the fine.
(5) Ex. XXI. 22ff.
»6) I.e, he who injured the woman was striving to kill his opponent.
(7) Ibid. The extreme penalty, though the murder of the woman is unintentional, is explicable only on the above assumption.
(8) V. p. 490, n, 1.
(9) I.e., he is liable to be slain because he seeks to slay his combatant; but the monetary liability arises through his injury to the woman. Where, however, these liabilities are incurred on account of two different persons it may bepthat Èhe one does not cancel the /ther.
(10) In B.K. 117b the text is RabbaÆ.

(12) For if he who saves himself at another's expense is liable «or the damage, how much more so when one s›ves another at a thir0 party's ÷xpense¢
(13) Lest in doing so he causes damage for which he will have to pay. Hence reverting to the subject under discussion, in the cLse of one man striving to kill another and injuring a woman, it must be assumed that he was not liable to be•slain, and this is only possible if his opponent could be saved by a limb of the murderer, which proves R. Jonathún b. Saul's assertion.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 74b

Even to change one's shoe strap.[1] And how many make it public? — R. Jacob said in R. Johanan's name: The minimum for publicity is ten.

It is obvious that Jews are required [for this publicity], for it is written. But I will be hallowed among the children of Israel.[2] R. Jeremiah propounded: What of nine Jews and one Gentile? — Come and hear: For R. Jannai, the brother of R. Hiyya b. Abba learned: An analogy is drawn from the use of tok [‘among’] in two passages. Here is written, But I will be hallowed among [be-tok] the children of Israel; and elsewhere, separate yourselves from among [mi-tok] this congregation:[3] just as there the reference is to ten, all Jews, so here too — ten, all Jews.[4] But did not Esther transgress publicly?[5] — Abaye answered; Esther was merely natural soil.[6] Raba said: When they [sc. the persecutors] demand it for their personal pleasure. it is different.[7] For otherwise, how dare we yield to them’ [sc. the Parsees or fire worshippers] our braziers [or fire bellows] and coal shovels?[8] But their personal pleasure is different;[9] so here too [in Esther's case].[10] This [answer] concurs with Raba's view expressed elsewhere. For Raba said: If a Gentile said to a Jew. ‘Cut grass on the Sabbath for the cattle, and if not I will slay thee’, he must rather be killed than cut it; ‘Cut it and throw it into the river, he should rather be slain than cut it. Why so? — Because his intention is to force him to violate his religion.

It was asked of R. Ammi: Is a Noachide bound to sanctify the Divine Name or not? — Abaye said, Come and hear: The Noachides were commanded to keep seven precepts.[11] Now, if they were commanded to sanctify the Divine Name, they are eight. Raba said to him: Them, and an pertaining thereto.[12]

What is the decision?-The disciples of Rab[13] said: It is written, In this thing, the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon.[14] And it is written, And he said unto him, Go in peace.[15]

(1) When religion itself is persecuted even the most insignificant religious custom or habit must be defended at all costs, having regard to the higher principle at stake. [The shoe latchets worn by Jews were white, those worn by heathens black. v. Nacht. JQR, (N.S.) VI, p. 12.]

(2) Lev. XXII, 23.

(3) Num. XVI, 21.; v. Meg. 23b. A further analogy is there drawn from the use of congregation (‘edah עדה) in two passages; one, just quoted, and the second, How long shall I bear with this evil congregation. (‘edah) Ibid. XIV, 27. ‘Congregation’ there refers to the Spies sent out by Moses. As Joshua and Caleb had dissociated themselves from their evil report, ten were left, all Israelites, cf. Supra Mishnah I.i.

(4) Therefore one is not called upon to suffer martyrdom if bidden to transgress in the presence of nine Jews and one Gentile.

(5) By permitting a Gentile — Ahasuerus — to take her to wife.

(6) Which is tilled, i.e., she was only the passive object of his embraces.

(7) And not as a measure of religious persecution.

(8) The passage is obscure. The interpretation here is that of Levy. Who adopts the reading הני קווקי ורימונקי היכי יהבינן להו . This refers to the Guebres, who permitted no fires in private dwellings on the festival days, and forced the Jews to give up to them their brazers (or bellows) and coal shovels, and themselves sit in darkness. On this interpretation קווקי is derived from קוק, the sound made by blowing up a fire. The Munich edition reads דומניקי תהני קיואקי ודימוניקי היכי יהבינן להו נורא or דימוניקי (another reading), bears a strong resemblance to dominica: now, dies dominica (the Lord's Day) signifies Sunday, and aedes dominica signifies church; קווקאי, for which an alternative reading is קורקי, may be a Greek word () also meaning church. In Raba's time there were Christian communities in Persia, observing their Sunday as strictly as the Jews observed the Sabbath, who therefore arranged for the Jews to heat their churches on that day, as they probably did a similar service for the Jews on the Sabbath (M. Jast. in REJ 1884, pp. 277ff.)

(9) I.e., They do not demand the fire as a religious act, whereby the Jew shall associate himself in idolatrous worship, but merely desire its warmth in their churches.

(10) Ahasuerus made her transgress for his personal pleasure, not because he desired her to violate her religion.

(11) V. supra 56a.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 75a

Now, if it be so [that a Noachide is bidden to sanctify the Divine Name], he should not have said this?[1] — The one is private, the other public.[2]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: A man once conceived a passion for a certain woman,[3] and his heart was consumed by his burning desire [his life being endangered thereby]. When the doctors were consulted, they said, 'His only cure is that she shall submit.' Thereupon the Sages said: 'Let him die rather than that she should yield.' Then [said the doctors]; 'let her stand nude before him;' [they answered] 'sooner let him die'. 'Then', said the doctors, 'let her converse with him from behind a fence'. 'Let him die,' the Sages replied 'rather than she should converse with him from behind a fence.' Now R. Jacob b. Idi and R. Samuel b. Nahmani dispute therein. One said that she was a married woman; the other that she was unmarried. Now, this is intelligible on the view, that she was a married woman, but on the latter, that she was unmarried, why such severity? — R. Papa said: Because of the disgrace to her family. R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: That the daughters of Israel may not be immorally dissolute. Then why not marry her? — Marriage would not assuage his passion, even as R. Isaac said: Since the destruction of the Temple, sexual pleasure has been taken [from those who practise it lawfully] and given to sinners, as it is written. Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant.[4]

C H A P T E R I X

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING ARE BURNT: HE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER, AND A PRIEST'S ADULTEROUS DAUGHTER. THERE IS INCLUDED IN A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER' HIS OWN DAUGHTER, HIS DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER, HIS SON'S DAUGHTER, HIS WIFE'S DAUGHTER AND THE DAUGHTER OF HER DAUGHTER OR SON, HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, HER MOTHER, AND HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER.

GEMARA. The Mishnah does not state, 'He who commits incest with a woman whose daughter he has married', but 'HE WHO COMMITS INCEST WITH A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER'; this proves that both are forbidden. Who are they then? His mother-in-law and her mother. Then the Mishnah further states, THERE IS INCLUDED IN 'A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER'; this proves that the first are explicit and the others derived.[5] Now this agrees with Abaye,[6] who maintains that they[7] differ as to the text from which the law is derived; hence the Mishnah is taught in accordance with R. Akiba's view.[8] But on Raba's view, that they differ about his mother-in-law after [his wife's] death,[9] with whom does the Mishnah agree? — Raba can answer you: Read [in the Mishnah] He who commits incest with a woman whose daughter he has married.

THERE IS INCLUDED IN 'A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, HER MOTHER, AND HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER.

In Abaye's view,[10] since the Mishnah desires to state — HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER, It adds HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW AND HER MOTHER. On Raba's view,[11] because the Mishnah must teach HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER', and 'HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER', 'HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW' too is mentioned.

Whence do we know this? — For our Rabbis taught: And if a man take a woman and her mother [it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they.][12] This law refers only to a woman and her mother. Whence do I derive it for a woman and her daughter, or her daughter's daughter, or her son's daughter? The word zimmah [wickedness] occurs here, and is also written elsewhere:[13] Just as there, her daughter, her daughter's daughter and her son's daughter [are meant by zimmah], so here too her daughter, her daughter's daughter, and her son's daughter [are included in the punishment of burning decreed for incest with them]. Whence do we know that males are as females? 'Wickedness' [zimmah] is stated here, and also elsewhere; just as there, males are as females, so here too. Whence do we know that the lower is as the upper? 'Wickedness' [zimmah] is stated here, and also elsewhere: just as there, the lower is as the upper, so here too; and just as here the upper is as the lower, so there too.[14]

The Master said: 'Whence do we know that males are as females?' What is meant by this? Shall we say that her son's daughter is equally forbidden as her daughter's daughter?[15] But these are simultaneously derived![16] Again, if it means that his father-in-law's mother is as his mother-in-law's mother:[17] but seeing that the latter is as yet unproven, why demonstrate that the former is equal thereto?[18]

---

(1) For thereby he tacitly concurred in Naaman's proposal.

(2) Naaman was to simulate idolatry in the Temple of Rimmon, where no Jews were present. This, according to the statement on 74b, is transgression in private. The problem however is whether he must publicly sanctify the Divine Name, i.e. in the presence of Jews.

(3) Lit 'set his eyes on a certain woman.'

(4) Prov. IX, 17.

(5) The statement that a number of other women are included in the first cannot be literal, for in fact the meaning of 'a woman and her daughter' cannot be extended to include, e.g., his own daughter or his son's daughter. Hence it must mean that 'a woman and her daughter' are explicitly stated in the Bible, whilst the others are included as derivations from these two. Now since the wording of the Mishnah shows that both the first two are forbidden and that the only relation explicitly forbidden on pain of burning is his mother-in-law, it follows that 'a woman and her daughter' must mean his mother-in-law ('daughter') and her mother. And these are regarded as explicitly forbidden.

(6) V. infra 76b.

(7) R. Akiba and R. Ishmael.

(8) Who holds that the mother of his mother-in-law is explicitly prohibited.

(9) But as to his mother-in-law's mother there is a common agreement that the prohibition is only derived and not explicitly stated.

(10) That burning for the first two is explicitly decreed, so that they cannot be included in 'a woman etc.' but are identical therewith.

(11) That only his mother-in-law is explicitly forbidden on pain of death by fire, but not her mother.

(12) Lev. XX, 14.

(13) Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they are her near kinswomen; it is wickedness, זמה (Lev. XVIII, 17).

(14) This is explained in the Gemara.

(15) The meaning being, the issue of males is prohibited just as that of females.

(16) From the gezarah shawah of zimmah.

(17) Thus teaching that incest with both is punished by fire.

(18) At this stage, nothing has been adduced to shew that incest with his mother-in-law's mother is thus punished, for 'a woman' has been translated literally. Consequently, only his mother-in-law is forbidden in this verse.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 75b

— Abaye said, This is what is meant: Whence do we know that his issue is as hers?[1] The word 'zimmah' occurs here, and is also written elsewhere etc. But 'zimmah' is not written in connection with his issue?[2] Raba answered: R. Isaac b. Abudimi said unto me: We learn identity of law from the fact that 'hennah' [they] occurs in two related passages, and likewise 'zimmah' [wickedness] in two.[3]

The Master said: 'Whence do we know that the lower is as the upper?' What is meant by 'lower' and 'upper'? Shall we say that her son's daughter and her daughter's daughter ['lower'] are as her own daughter ['upper']?[4] But are not [all three] simultaneously derived?[5] Again, if it means that his father-in-law's mother and his mother-in-law's mother are as his mother-in-law: then instead of 'the lower is as the upper', the Tanna should have said 'the upper is as the lower'?[6] — Read, 'the upper is as the lower'. If so, [how explain] wickedness [zimmah] is stated here, and also elsewhere'; seeing that their very prohibition is as yet unknown, how can 'zimmah' be written in connection therewith?[7] Abaye answered: This is its meaning: Whence do we know that the third generation above is treated as the third below?[8] — The word 'zimmah' is written in connection with both the lower generation[9] and the upper;[10] just as in the lower, the third generation is forbidden also,[11] so in the upper too;[12] and just as the lower is assimilated to the upper in respect of punishment, so is the upper to the lower in respect of formal prohibition.[13] R. Ashi said: After all, it is as taught:[14] What then is the meaning of 'lower'? Lower in [gravity of the] prohibition.[15]

Now, if so,[16] then just as her [i.e. his wife's] maternal grandmother is forbidden [to him], so is his maternal grandmother?[17] — Abaye answered: The Writ sayeth, [The nakedness of thy father, or the nakedness of thy mother, shalt thou not uncover'] she is thy mother —[18] teaching: thou canst punish for [incest with] his mother, but not with his mother's mother.

Raba said: Whether we maintain, 'judge from it in its entirety', or[19] 'judge from it, and place it on its own basis', this could not be deduced.[20] For on the view, 'judge from it in its entirety', [the deduction would proceed thus:] Just as her [his wife's] maternal grandmother is forbidden [to him], so is his maternal grandmother forbidden. [Then carrying the analogy] to its uttermost, just as in her case [i.e.,incest with the former] is punished by fire so in his case [i.e.,incest with the latter] is punished by fire. But on the view[21] that burning is severer [than stoning]. This analogy can be refuted. [Thus:] Why is her case [forbidden]?[22] Because her [his wife's] mother is similarly forbidden.[23] But can you say the same in his case, seeing that his mother is forbidden [only] on pain of stoning![24] Moreover, his mother is forbidden on pain of stoning: shall his mother's mother be forbidden on pain of burning![25] Further, just as in her [his wife's] case, you have drawn no distinction between her mother and her mother's mother [both being forbidden on pain of burning], so in his, no distinction must be drawn between his mother and his mother's mother.[26] And on the view that stoning is severer,the analogy cannot be deduced because of this last difficulty.[27] Whilst on the view, 'judge from it and place it on its own basis,' [the deduction would proceed thus:] Just as her [his wife's] maternal grandmother is forbidden [to him], so is his maternal grandmother forbidden. But 'place it on its own basis', thus: in the former case the punishment is burning; but in the latter, stoning, the penalty which we find prescribed for incest with his mother. Now, on the view that burning is severer, this can be refuted,

(1) I.e., that his daughter, his son's daughter, or daughter's daughter by a mistress are forbidden to him on pain of burning just as wife's daughter, her son's daughter, and her daughter's daughter. For Lev. XVIII, 17 (cited on p. 508 n. 5) refers to the offspring of marriage, not of seduction or outrage. On this interpretation, 'male' refers to his issue, 'female' to his wife's.

(2) For that his issue is at all forbidden is derived not from Lev. XVIII, 17, but from Lev. XVIII, 10: The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover: for their's (hennah הנה) is thine own nakedness

(3) Supra 51a. In Lev. XVIII, 10 it is stated. The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover; for they (hennah) are thine own nakedness. Further, it is written (ibid. XVIII, 17): Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they (hennah) are her near kinswomen; it is wickedness (zimmah, זמה). Since hennah occurs in these two passages, they are identified with each other, and zimmah in the second passage, referring to her issue, is understood to be implicit in the first too, which refers to his issue. Then the first passage is further identified with Lev. XX, 14: And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness (zimmah): They shalt be burnt with fire: thus we derive burning for incest with his issue.

(4) So that 'lower' and 'upper' refer to the order of generations: 'lower', the third generation in the downward direction, viz. her son's daughter and her daughter's daughter; 'upper', one generation above them, viz., her daughter.

(5) As explained in that very passage.

(6) For the older generation is always referred to as the upper.

(7) Cf. p. 509 n. 4. At this stage, no verse has been adduced at all to show that his father-in-law's mother or his mother-in-law's mother are forbidden.

(8) I.e., just as his daughter's daughter and his son's daughter (the third generation below) are forbidden, so likewise his father-in-law's mother and mother-in-law's mother, the third generation above.

(9) Lev. XVIII, 17.

(10) lbid. XX, 14.

(11) I.e., his son's daughter and daughter.

(12) I.e., though only the second generation is explicitly interdicted, viz., his mother-in-law, the third is included too, viz., his mother-in-law's mother and his father-in-law's mother.

(13) For in Lev. XVIII, 10, where the third lower generation is forbidden, nothing is said about punishment, which is derived from Lev. XX, 14, as stated above. On the other hand, in Lev. XX, 14, which is made to include the third generation above, though only explicitly stating the second, no formal prohibition is given. This in turn is derived from Lev. XVIII, 10. (Both are derived through the medium of Lev. XVIII, 17, the connecting link between the other two.) On Abaye's interpretation it is necessary to amend the Baraitha from 'and the lower is as the upper', to 'that the upper is as the lower etc.'

(14) I.e., no emendation is necessary.

(15) I.e., 'the upper' or higher prohibition is that of his mother-in-law, his more immediate relation, whilst the prohibition of her mother, as also of his father-in-law's mother, is regarded as 'lower', i.e., weaker, as they are a generation further removed. Hence this is its meaning: Whence do we know that his mother-in-law's mother and his father-in-law's mother, whose relationships are lower (i.e., further removed, and consequently weaker) than his mother-in-law's, are treated as his mother-in-law? — It is derived from his wife's daughter: just as in the latter case, the 'lower' relation is as the 'upper' (stronger), i.e., his wife's daughter's daughter is as his wife's daughter, though more distant; so here too, his mother-in-law's mother is as she herself. This deduction is in respect of equal punishment. The second clause is explained by R. Ashi as Abaye, as referring to the prohibition.

(16) This reverts to the explanation of 'whence do we know that males are regarded as females', as meaning, 'whence do we know that his relations are regarded as hers?'

(17) Whereas in Yeb. 21a the prohibition of the latter is regarded as Rabbinical only, whilst the former is Biblical.

(18) Lev. XVIII, 7.

(19) Lit., 'whether according to the one (Tanna) who says . . . or whether according to the one who says etc.'

(20) A verse is unnecessary, because his maternal grandmother could not be deduced from the gezerah shawah based on zimmah, whatever view be held on the scope of a gezerah shawah. There are two views on this. One is that the identity of law taught by a gezerah shawah must hold good in all respects, so that the case deduced is equal to the premise in all points; this is called 'judge from it and from (all) of it'. An opposing view is that the analogy holds good only in respect of the main question at issue, but that thereafter, the case deduced may diverge from its premise. This is called, 'judge from it, but place it on its own basis', i.e., confine the analogy to the main question, not to the subsidiary points.

(21) Lit., 'but according to the one Tanna who says that, etc.'

(22) I.e., the reason that his wife's maternal grandmother is forbidden on pain of burning.

(23) Hence, since the prohibition of his wife's mother is so severe, it is natural that it should extend to her maternal grandmother too.

(24) Surely not! Since the prohibition is weaker, its punishment being more lenient, its extent too may be more limited, and not include his maternal grandmother.

(25) Surely there cannot be a severer punishment for the latter, a more distant relative, than for the former. Yet if the latter be derived at all by this gezerah shawah, the punishment must be burning, on this view that the analogy must be carried through on all points.

(26) Just as incest with his mother is punished by stoning, so with his mother's mother. But making the analogy from another angle, the latter should be punished by burning, as has already been shewn. Hence, by a reductio ad absurdum, we are forced to dismiss the entire analogy.

(27) Though the former two do not arise.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 76a

[Thus]: Why is her case [i.e., his wife's maternal grandmother forbidden]? Because her mother is [forbidden] on pain of death by fire. But can you say the same in his case, seeing that his mother is forbidden on pain of stoning [only]? Further, his maternal grandmother is like her's: just as in the latter case no distinction is drawn between his wife's maternal grandmother and her [his wife's] daughter,[1] so in the former, no distinction should be allowed between his own maternal grandmother and his daughter.[2] Whilst on the view that stoning is severer, the analogy cannot be made on account of this last difficulty.[3]

But if so,[4] just as his daughter-in-law is forbidden him, so is his wife's daughter-in-law forbidden him?[5] Abaye answered: The Writ saith, [Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law:] she is thy son's wife;[6] teaching, you can punish only for incest with his son's wife, but not with her [his wife's] son's wife. Raba said: Whether it be maintained, 'judge from it in its entirety,' or 'judge from it and place it on its own basis', this could not be deduced. For on the first view, [the deduction would proceed thus:] just as his daughter-in-law is forbidden him, so is her's forbidden him. [Then carrying through the analogy] 'in its entirety,'just as in his case [the penalty] is stoning,[7] so in her case is the penalty stoning. But if we regard stoning severer, this analogy can be refuted. [Thus]: Why is his [daughter-in-law forbidden]? Because his mother is forbidden him on pain of stoning: Can you then say the same of her daughter-in-law, seeing that incest with her mother incurs only death by fire?[8] Moreover, her daughter is forbidden on pain of burning: shall her daughter-in-law be forbidden on pain of stoning?[9] [This is no difficulty, for] let his own case prove it: his own daughter is forbidden by fire, yet his daughter-in-law by stoning. But [refute the analogy thus:] just as in his case, thou drawest no distinction between his mother and his daughter-in-law, so in her's [his wife's], you can draw no distinction between her mother and her daughter-in-law.[10] And on the view that burning is considered more severe, the analogy cannot be made because of this last difficulty.[11] Whilst on the view, 'judge from it and place it on its own basis,' [the deduction would proceed thus:] just as his daughter-in-law is forbidden him, so is her daughter-in-law forbidden; and place it on its own basis, thus: in the former case, [his daughter-in-law] the punishment is stoning; but in the latter, burning, the punishment we find for incest with her mother. But if stoning is severer, this can be refuted. [Thus]: Why is his daughter-in-law forbidden? Because his mother is forbidden him on pain of stoning. But can you say the same of her daughter-in-law, seeing that her mother is forbidden only on pain of burning! Moreover, just as in his case, you draw a distinction between his daughter [punished by burning] and his daughter-in-law [by stoning], so in her case, you should draw a distinction between her daughter and her daughter-in-law.[12] And even on the view that burning is severer, the analogy cannot be made on account of this last difficulty.

Whence do we know that his daughter by a seduced woman [not his wife] is forbidden him?[13] — Abaye said:[14] This may be proved by arguing from the minor to the major; if he is punished for incest with his daughtzr's daughter, surely he is punished for his own daughter![15] But can punishment be imposed as the result of an ad majus conclusion? — The argument merely illumines the prohibition.[16] Raba answered: R. Isaac b. Abudimi said unto me; we learn identity of law from the fact that 'hennah' [they] occurs in two related passages, and likewise 'zimmah' in two.[17]

The father of R. Abin learned: Because we have no express sanction [from Scripture that incest] with an illegitimate daughter [is punished by burning], therefore the Writ must say, And the daughter of a man [and] a priest, if she profane herself through her father, she profaneth him; she shall burnt with fire.[18] If so, just a| in the case of a priest's [adulterous] daughter, only she is burnt, but not her paramour, so for incest with an illegitimate daughter, only she should be burnt, but not her paramour?[19] — Abaye answered: The Writ sayeth, she profaneth her father,‖teachingž that this applies only to a case where she profaneth her father, excluded thus is this case,[20] since her father profanes her,[21] Raba answered, In the former case[22] you ©ightly exclude him from the penalty of a priest's daughter, and assimilate him to an Israelite's daughter.[23] But in this case,[24] to whom will you assimilate him? to an unmarried woman?[25]

Now, whence do we derive a formal prohibithon of incest with an illegitimate daughter? This is in order according to Abaye and Raba: from the verJe from which they deduce punishment, they also learn the prohibition.[26] But what of the deduction made by R. Abin's father?[27] — R. Elai answered: The Writ sayeth, Do not profane thy daughter to cause her to be whore.[28] R. Jacob, the brother of R. Aha b. Jacob objected: Is this verse, Do not profane thy daughter to cause her to be a whore, employed for this purpose? But it is needed for that which has been taught: 'Do not profane thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore' I might think that this prohibits[29] a priest from marrying his daughter to a Levite or an Israelite:[30] therefore Scripture states, 'to cause her to be a whore', shewing that the reference is only to profanation by harlotry, thus prohibiting the giving over of one's daughter for sex purposes without marriage intention'? If so, Scripture should have said al tahel; why al tehallel? — That both may be deduced from it.[31]

Now, how do Abaye and Raba utilize the verse, Do not profane thy daughter to cause her to be a whore? — R. Mani said: [According to them] this refers to one who marries his [young] daughter to an old man.[32] As it has been taught: Do not profane thy daughter to cause her to be a whore; R. Eliezer said: This refers to marrying one's [young] daughter to an old man. R. Akiba said: This refers to the delay in marrying off a daughter who is already a bogereth.[33]

R. Kahana said on R. Akiba's authority: The only poor in Israel is the subtly wicked and he who delays in marrying off his daughter, a bogereth.[34] But is not one who thus delays himself subtly wicked?[35] Abaye answered:

---

(1) Incest with both being punishable by fire.

(2) So that incest with the former should be punished by burning, as with the latter. This however is impossible, for incest with one's grandmother cannot be more severely punished than with his mother, the penalty for which is only stoning, which on the present hypothesis is more lenient than burning.

(3) Since according to this comparison incest with his maternal grandmother is punished by burning. But his maternal grandmother should also be compared to his mother, the punishment for which is stoning; hence the entire analogy falls to the ground.

(4) This raises a new difficulty, reverting to the statement (75b) that his relatives are compared to hers.

(5) I.e., the wife of her son by a previous husband. But this is not so.

(6) Lev. XVIII, 15.

(7) v. supra 53a.

(8) Hence, since the prohibition of his relative, viz., his mother, is so severe, it is natural that it should extend in a downward direction too, whereas the prohibition of her relation, viz., her mother, being punished only by burning and consequently weaker, its extent may be more limited, and not embrace her daughter-in-law.

(9) Surely not!

(10) Hence, incest with the latter should he punished by burning. But as has already been proved, stoning is the proper punishment; therefore the entire analogy is impossible.

(11) Though the former two do not arise.

(12) I.e., Just as the punishment for his daughter-in-law is severer than for his daughter, viz., stoning instead of burning, so her daughter-in-law should be more stringently interdicted than her daughter, viz., by stoning, instead of burning. But if we compare her daughter-in-law to her mother, the punishment is burning. Hence the entire deduction is impossible.

(13) As explained by Abaye supra 75b. q.v. The difficulty arises because in Lev. XVIII, 10 q.v., which has been interpreted as referring to his illegitimate offspring, no mention is made of his own daughter.

(14) V. next note.
(15) [Thus Tosaf.; var lec., Did not Abaye say etc. i.e 'what is the question'-surely Abaye has solved it.']
(16) I.e., does not add the prohibition of another person, but shews that when Scripture (in Lev. XVIII, 10) interdicted his daughter's daughter, it meant that the daughter relationship in general is forbidden.
(17) V. p. 342, n. 1; just as in Lev. XVIII, 17 the daughter is forbidden equally with the daughter's daughter, so in XVIII, 10. The punishment of burning is then deduced from Lev. XX, 14.
(18) Lev. XXI, 9. 'A man' Is superfluous, and therefore teaches that even if she is only his daughter, not his wife's, this law holds good. By translating the rest of the verse as in the text, we deduce that an illegitimate daughter is burnt for incest with her father; and by regarding 'a man' as distinct from "priest' (the latter being attached to the former with the copula 'and'), the deduction is made to refer to any illegitimate daughter, not only a priest's (v. Tosef. Sanh. XII).
(19) Seeing that the former is deduced from 'she shall be burnt with fire', whilst the verse is made to refer to incest too.
(20) Incest with one's illegitimate daughter.
(21) Her case is excluded from the limitation implied in, she (and not her paramour) 'shall be burnt with fire': hence her paramour is likewise punished.
(22) The seducer of a priest's adulterous daughter.
(23) I.e., punishing him by stoning instead of burning. For the limitation of 'she', though teaching that the special law of a priest's daughter does not apply to him, yet leaves him to be punished as the seducer of a married woman in general.
(24) Incest with an illegitimate daughter.
(25) For if an incestuous paramour be excluded from the punishment of an adulterous woman, whether the daughter of a priest or an Israelite (since relationship is independent of these), his law can only be assimilated to that of an unmarried woman, whose unchastity is not punished at all. But surely it cannot be maintained that an illegitimate daughter is burnt for incest with her father, though her offence is a passive one, and less than the man's (v. supra 74b), whilst he goes scot free! Hence the limitation of 'she' cannot apply to this.
(26) Both being stated in the verses they employ for this purpose.
(27) Lev. XXI, 9 speaks only of punishment, but contains no prohibition.
(28) Lev. XIX, 29. This includes incest, and since 'daughter' in general is mentioned, it applies to an illegitimate one too.
(29) Lit., 'the Writ speaks of a priest etc.'
(30) Since he thereby 'profanes her', in that she is not permitted to eat of terumah (v. GIos) thereafter.
(31) The latter אל תחלל is a heavier form, yet with the same meaning אל תחל the former. Being heavier, it has a wider application.
(32) Since she cannot willingly accept him, she may be led to adultery.
(33) Having attained puberty, she may become unchaste if not married. Marriage, of course, was then at a far earlier age than now.
(34) This is explained further on.
(35) Why 'and he who delays etc.': the two are identical. His wickedness consists in that he keeps her unmarried, that he may profit by her labour whilst endangering her chastity.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 76b

This is its meaning: Which poor man is subtly wicked? He who delays marrying off his daughter, a bogereth.[1]

R. Kahana also said on R. Akiba's authority: Beware of one who counsels thee for his own benefit.[2]

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: One who marries his daughter to an old man or takes a wife for his infant son, or returns a lost article to a Cuthean,[3] — concerning him Scripture sayeth, [that he bless himself in his heart saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart] to add drunkedness to thirst: The Lord will not spare him.[4]

An objection was raised: He who loves his wife as himself and honours her more than himself,[5] and leads his children in the right path, and marries them just before they attain puberty — of him Scripture saith, And thou shalt know that thy tabernacle shall be in peace and thou shalt visit thy habitation, and shalt not sin.[6] — If just before puberty, it is different.

Our Rabbis taught: He who loves his neighbour, displays friendly intimacy towards his relatives, and marries his sister's daughter and lends a sela' to the poor man in time of his need — of him Scripture saith, Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer.[7]

Our Rabbis taught: [And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire,] both he and they [ethe'en].[8] [This means], he and one of them. That is R. Ishmael's opinion. R. Akiba said: [It means], he and both of them. Wherein do they differ?[9] — Abaye said: They differ as to the text from which the law is derived: R. Ishmael maintains that 'he and ethe'en' means 'he and one of them', for in Greek 'one' is hello.[10] Hence [incest with] his mother-in-law's mother [as a punishable offence] is arrived at [only] by [Biblical] interpretation. But R. Akiba maintained, 'he and ethe'en' means 'he and both of them', hence his mother-in-law's mother is explicitly interdicted in this verse.[11] Raba said: They differ about his mother-in-law after [his wife's] death: R. Ishmael holds that [incest with] his mother-in-law after [his wife's] death is punished by burning; whilst R. Akiba's view is that it is merely forbidden.[12]

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING ARE DECAPITATED: A MURDERER, AND THE INHABITANTS OF A SEDUCED CITY. A MURDERER WHO SLEW HIS FELLOW WITH A STONE OR AN IRON, OR KEPT HIM DOWN UNDER WATER OR IN FIRE, SO THAT HE COULD NOT ASCEND THENCE, IS EXECUTED. IF HE PUSHED HIM INTO WATER OR FIRE, BUT SO THAT HE COULD ASCEND, YET HE DIED, HE IS FREE [FROM DEATH]. IF HE SET ON A DOG OR A SNAKE AGAINST HIM [AND THEY KILLED HIM], HE IS FREE FROM DEATH. BUT IF HE CAUSED A SNAKE TO BITE HIM [BY PUTTING HIS JAWS AGAINST HIM] — R. JUDAH RULED THAT HE IS EXECUTED; THE SAGES, THAT HE IS NOT.

GEMARA. Samuel said: why is 'hand' not mentioned in connection with iron?[13] — Because iron can kill no matter what its size. It has been taught likewise: Rabbi said; It was well known to Him who spake and the world came into being that iron, no matter how small, can kill; therefore the Torah prescribed no size for it. This however, is only if one pierced therewith:[14]

OR KEPT HIM DOWN UNDER WATER. The first clause teaches the extreme limit of the law, and so does the last. Thus, the first clause teaches the extreme limit of the law, that though he himself did not push him [into the water], yet since he could not ascend, [through being held down], and so died, he is executed. The last clause likewise teaches the extreme limit, that though he actually pushed him into the water, yet since he could have ascended, but died, he is free from death.

Whence do we know that [he is liable to death] for keeping him down?-Samuel answered: The Writ sayeth, Or if with enmity he smote him with his hand:[15] this extends the law to one who keeps his neighbour fast [e.g., in water, thus causing his death].

A certain man confined his neighbour's animal in a place exposed to the sun, so that it died [of sunstroke]. Rabina held him liable: R. Aha b. Rab ruled that he was not. Rabina held him liable by an ad majus argument from a murderer. If a murderer, in whose case unwitting murder is not treated as deliberate, nor an accident as intention, is nevertheless executed for confining [his neighbour in a place where he must die];

(9) For obviously R. Akiba cannot mean that a man's wife must be burnt because her husband committed incest with his daughter.
(11) Since R. Ishmael maintains that only ‘one of them’ is denoted by אתהן, It must mean his mother-in-law. Consequently, her mother is not directly referred to, and has to be deduced. But R. Akiba, translating אתהן ‘both of them’ (which cannot possibly include his wife), regards the verse as referring to his mother-in-law and her mother; hence death by fire for the latter is explicitly taught in this verse.
(12) R. Ishmael interprets the verse, ‘he and one of them’ i.e., even if only one of them is alive (viz., his mother-in-law), the penalty for incest is burning, whilst R. Akiba maintains, ‘he and both of them’ i.e., only during the lifetime of both is incest with his mother-in-law punished by fire. Otherwise, there is no penalty, though it is forbidden.
(13) In Num. XXXV, 16-18, dealing with murder, iron, stone, and wooden weapons are enumerated: ‘hand’ is used in connection with the latter two, implying that they must be large enough to afford a hold to the hand, but not in connection with the first.
(14) But if used to strike therewith, it must be of a certain minimum size before the murderer is executed.

then with respect to damages, wherein unwitting damage is treated as deliberate, and an accident as intention,[1] surely he is liable for confining [the animal].

'R. Aha b. Rab ruled that he is not liable.' Said R. Mesharshia: Why does my grandfather[2] rule him not liable? — Because of the verse, [Or in enmity he smite him with his hand, that he die:] He that smote him shall surely be put to death: for he is a murderer:[3] only a murderer has the law made liable for confining, but not one who causes damage thereby.

Raba said: If one bound his neighbour and he died of starvation, he is not liable to execution. Raba also said: If he bound him in the sun, and he died, or in a place of intense cold and he died, he is liable; but if the sun was yet to appear, or the cold to make itself felt, he is not.[4] Raba also said: If he bound him before a lion, he is not liable:[5] before mosquitoes, [who stung him to death] he is. R. Ashi said: Even before mosquitoes, he is not liable, because these go and others come.[6]

It has been stated: If one overturned a vat upon a man [who then died of suffocation], or broke open a ceiling above him,[7] — Raba and R. Zera [differ]: One ruled that he is liable, the other that he is not. It can be proved that it was Raba who ruled that he is not liable, for he said: If one bound his neighbour and he dies of starvation, he is not liable.[8] On the contrary. it can be shewn that R. Zera ruled that he is not liable. For R. Zera said: If one led his neighbour in to an alabaster chamber[9] and lit a candle therein, so that he died [of the fumes]. he is liable. Now, the reason is only that he lit a candle that he is liable;[10] but had he not lit a candle [and the prisoner died of the natural heat and lack of air], he would be exempt![11] — I will tell you: In that case, without a candle, the heat would not have commenced [its effects]

(1) It being a general principle that a man is liable for any damage he does, no matter how, B.K. 26b.

(2) R. Aba b. Rab was a Babylonian amora of the fourth century, and the grandfather of R. Mesharshia.

(3) Ibid. The first half of the verse extends the law to confining one's neighbour in a place of death, (p. 519).

(4) I.e., he is liable only if the place was already exposed to heat or cold. But if it was merely destined to become hot, the sun not yet having risen, he is not liable. In the first case, he is regarded as a direct murderer, in the second, as an indirect cause. That is the general reason for the exemptions taught in this passage.

(5) Because he could not have saved himself in any case. [Raba probably refers to a prisoner thrown into an arena to be torn by lions.]

(6) I.e., the mosquitoes before which the prisoner was bound do not kill him entirely. as there is a continuous coming and going, Hence it is similar to binding one in a place where the sun will appear, but has not yet done so.

(7) So that the cold entering therein, killed him.

(8) This is similar: he did not kill him but indirectly caused his death.

(9) Which was then hermetically sealed, so that no fumes could escape.

(10) This being considered active murder under the circumstances.

(11) Thus R. Zera maintains that no penalty is incurred for indirectly causing one's death.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 77b

immediately [he placed him therein];[1] but in this case [of placing the upturned vat over him] the heat commences immediately.

(Mnemonic: Ladder, shield, balsam, in a wall.)

Raba said: If one thrust his neighbour into a pit, in which there was a ladder [so that he could have climbed out], and then another came and removed it, or even if himself hastened to remove it, he is not liable [for the victim's death], because when he threw him in he could have climbed out. Raba also said: If one shot an arrow at his neighbour, who was holding a shield, but another came and snatched it away, or even if he himself [the thrower] hastened to do so, he is not liable, because when he shot the arrow its force was spent.[2]

Raba also said: If one shot an arrow at his neighbour. who had balsam in his hand [wherewith he could have healed the wound], but another dashed it out of his hand, or even if he himself [the thrower] did so, he is not liable, because when he did it he could have been healed. R. Ashi said: Therefore this holds good even if there was balsam in the market.[3] R. Aha the son of Raba asked R. Ashi: What if he came across the balsam by chance?[4] — He replied: Behold, he has left Beth din a free man.[5]

Raba also said: If one threw a stone at a wall, which rebounded and killed his neighbour,[6] he is liable. And a Tanna teaches [in support of this]: If murder is committed by a man playing, for example. with a ball,[7] if intentional, the thrower is executed; if unintentional, he is sentenced to the refuge cities.[8] 'If unintentional, he is sentenced to the refuge cities:' but is that not obvious? — It is necessary to teach that if intentional, he is executed, [the second half being added to complete it]; for I might say, this is a case of 'a doubtful warning', for who knows that it will rebound?[9] We are therefore taught otherwise.

R. Tahlifa of the West[10] recited before R. Abbahu [the following]: If [unintentional] murder is committed by a man playing, for example, with a ball, if [the victim] was within four cubits [of the wall]. the thrower is exempt; if beyond four cubits, he is liable [to exile]. Rabina objected to R. Ashi: How is this? If he desired it [to rebound], he should be liable even for a short distance;[11] whilst if not, he should be liable even for a greater distance? — He replied: The greater the rebound, the more is the average player pleased.[12]

Are we to say that [a murder] so committed is regarded as by his direct action?[13] But the following contradicts it: If one was sanctifying [the water], and the ashes[14] fell upon his hand or upon the side of the utensil, whence it fell into the trough, it is unfit?[15] — The reference here is to a dripping down.[16]

Come and hear! If an [unclean] needle was lying upon a shard, and the [purifying] water was sprinkled thereon, but it is doubtful whether upon the needle or upon the shard, and then it spurted [miza] upon the needle, the sprinkling is invalid.[17] — R. Hinena b. R. Judah said in Rab's name: We have learnt, It was found [maza].[18]

R. Papa said: If one bound his neighbour and then caused a column of water to inundate him, it is as his arrows, and he is liable [for his death]. But that is only if [he was drowned] by his direct agency; but if through his indirect agency,[19] he is merely regarded as a subsidiary cause.[20]

R. Papa also said: If one threw a stone upwards, and it returned in a slanting direction and killed a man, he is liable. Mar son of R. Ashi asked R. Papa. Why so? Because it is by his agency! But if so it should go upwards;[21]

(1) [By consuming the oxygen, the fire immediately produces effects of asphyxiation, but without fire such effects are not immediately felt.]

(2) Lit., 'broken', as at the time it was released there was a shield to prevent its killing.

(3) I. e., if when the arrow was thrown, a healing ointment could have been procured sufficiently quickly to prevent death, the attacker is not liable, even if for some reason the ointment became subsequently unavailable.

(4) When smitten, he neither possessed nor could procure it. But by some happy chance, he subsequently obtained it, and though he could have healed himself therewith, did not. Do we say, since when the attack was made, murder was its probable outcome, he is liable; or since he could have healed himself, he is not.

(5) I.e., he is not liable: in spite of the fact that the balsam was unavailable when he threw the arrow.
(6) And this was his intention.
(7) Children play by throwing a ball at a wall and catching or striking it on the rebound, thus here, one threw something at a wall, which, rebounding, struck his neighbour and killed him.
(8) V. Num. XXXV, 15.
(9) V. supra 72b. In this case, however, it might be thought that no true warning can be given, since the murder is doubtful.
(10) I.e., a Palestinian amora.
(11) I.e., even if it did not rebound so far, and struck a man standing within four cubits
(12) Therefore it may be presumed that he intended it to rebound at least four cubits; hence if less, he is not liable.
(13) Lit., 'force'.
(14) Lit., 'the sanctifier'.
(15) The reference is to the law of the red heifer: Num. XIX. The ashes thereof, when mixed with running water, are said to sanctify, the ashes themselves being denominated 'the sanctifier'. These had to be placed by a person into the water, not merely fall therein. Now, if one was engaged in sanctifying the water, and instead of pouring the ashes straight in, permitted them to fall upon his hand or on the side of a utensil, whence they fell into the trough containing the sanctified water, the water is unfit for its purpose, because the mixing had not been done directly by the person. This proves that a rebound is not regarded as a person's direct action, and this contradicts the law of murder.
(16) The ashes did not fall with force from the side of the utensil into the trough, but merely dripped down; therefore it is not regarded as man's direct agency. Had they fallen with force, however, the fall would be regarded as part of the man's action in dropping them on to the utensil, and the water would accordingly be fit. In the case of murder, the rebound is with force, and directly caused by the strength of the throw.
(17) Because the sprinkling, as the mixing. must be done by man. Thus we see that the rebound is not regarded as direct action.
(18) I.e., the text is corrupt, and instead of miza מיצא, miza מצא is to be read. Thus, the water was found upon the needle, but how it came there is not known, whether sprinkled direct thereon, or it had rebounded from the shard, which, on the present hypothesis would also be valid, or flowed of itself from the shard on to the needle, in which case it was not due at all to man's action.
(19) If the victim was lying immediately in front of the burst, where the strength of the water's flow is still due to the man's action, the drowning is by his direct agency. But if he was lying at some distance, he is held to be an indirect or secondary cause.
(20) Not the actual murderer.
(21) For he had exerted himself to cause it to go up, not down.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 78a

whilst if it is not by his agency, it should fall [vertically] down?[1] — But it is through his agency, though weakened.[2]

Our Rabbis taught: If ten men smote a man with ten staves, whether simultaneously or successively, and he died, they are exempt. R. Judah b. Bathyra said: If successively, the last is liable, because he struck the actual death blow.[3] R. Johanan said: Both derive [their rulings] from the same verse, And he that killeth kol nefesh[4] [lit., 'all life'] of man shall surely be put to death.[5] The Rabbis maintain that kol nefesh implies the whole life;[6] but R. Judah b. Bathyra holds that kol nefesh implies whatever there is of life.[7]

Raba said: Both agree that if he killed a terefah,[8] he is exempt; if he slew one who was dying through an act of God,[9] he is liable; their dispute refers only to one who was dying through man's act:[10] the one likens him to a terefah,[11] the other to a person dying naturally. Now, he who likens him to a terefah, why does he not liken him to a person dying naturally? — Because no injury has been done to the latter; but an injury has been done to this one. Whilst he who likens him to a person dying naturally, why does he not liken him to a terefah? — A terefah has his vital organs affected[12] , but this one has not.[13]

A tanna recited before R. Shesheth: And he that k®lleth all life of man: this includes one who smote his fellow, but there was not in his blow enough [force] to kill, and then a second came and killed him, [teaching] the latter is executed — But if the first man's blow was insufficient to kill, is it not o¸vious [that the second is liable]? — But [say thus: the first smote him] with sufficient force to kill, [but before he expired] a second came and slew him,; then the second is liable. This anonymous Baraitha agrees with R. Judah b. Bathyra.[14]

Raba said: If one kills a terefah, he is exempt; whilst if a terefah committed murder: if in the presence of a Beth din, he is liable; otherwise he is exempt. Why is he liable if in the presence of a Beth din? — Because it is written, so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee.[15] But if not, he is exempt, because the law of confuted testimony is inapplicable, and testimony which cannot be so confuted is inadmissible.[16]

Raba also said: He who commits pederasty with a terefah is liable to punishment; but if a terefah committed it, if in the presence of a Beth din, he is liable; otherwise he is not. 'If in the presence of a Beth din, he is liable', because it is written, So shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee. 'Otherwise he is not', because the law of confuted testimony is inapplicable. Why state this second [law]; is it not identical with the first? — It is necessary to teach concerning one who commits pederasty with a terefah: for I might think that he is as one who abuses a dead person, and hence exempt. Therefore he teaches that [punishment is generally imposed] because of the [forbidden] pleasure derived, and in this case too pleasure is derived.[17]

Raba also said: if witnesses testified [to murder] against a terefah and were then confuted,[18] they are not executed.[19] But if witnesses, themselves terefah, were confuted, they are executed. R. Ashi said : Even these are not slain , because those who disprove their evidence are not liable if their own is subsequently confuted.[20]

Raba also said: If an ox, a terefah, killed [a man], it is liable [to be stoned]; but if an ox belonging to a terefah [person] killed, it is exempt. Why so? — Because the Writ saith, The ox shall be stoned, and his owner shall also be put to death;[21] wherever it is possible to read, 'and his owner shall also be put to death,' we also read, 'the ox shall be stoned;'but where we cannot apply, 'and his owner shall also be put to death,'[22] we do not read, 'the ox shall be stoned.' R. Ashi said: Even an ox, a terefah is exempt. Why so? — Since the owner in a similar condition would be exempt, the ox too is exempt.[23]

IF HE SET ON A DOG OR A SNAKE AGAINST HIM, etc.

R. Aha b. Jacob said: If you will investigate [the grounds of the dispute, you will learn that] in R. Judah's opinion the snake's poison is lodged in its fangs, therefore, one who causes it to bite [by placing its fangs against the victim's flesh] is decapitated, whilst the snake itself is exempt. But in the view of the Sages the snake emits the poison of its own accord; therefore the snake is stoned, whilst he who caused it to bite is exempt.[24] MISHNAH. IF A MAN SMOTE HIS FELLOW, WHETHER WITH A STONE OR WITH HIS FIST, AND THEY [THE EXPERTS] DECLARED THAT DEATH WOULD ENSUE; BUT THEN ITS EFFECT LESSENED [SO THAT IT WAS THOUGHT THAT HE WOULD LIVE], ONLY TO INCREASE SUBSEQUENTLY, SO THAT HE DIED. — HE IS LIABLE. R. NEHEMIAH SAID THAT HE IS EXEMPT, SINCE THERE IS EVIDENCE[25] [THAT HE DID NOT DIE AS A RESULT OF HIS INJURIES, AS HE HAD ALREADY BEEN ON THE MEND.]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: R. Nehemiah gave the following exposition: If he rise again, and walk abroad

---

(1) Not in a slanting direction.
(2) I.e., most of the force with which he threw it was already expended, but sufficient was left to impel it in the direction in which it fell.
(3) Lit., 'brought his death near'; v. B.K. 26b.
(4) כל נפש
(5) Lev. XXIV, 17.
(6) Hence, if ten men assailed him successively, he was already nearly dead when the last smote him: therefore the last too is exempt.
(7) I.e., however little life the man has, even if he is nearly dead, the man who actually kills him is liable.
(8) V. Glos. When used of a person, it means that he was suffering from some fatal organic disease, recovery from which is impossible.
(9) l.e., naturally, through age or weakness, but without an organic disease or wound.
(10) As here: nine men had smitten him, and though not actually a trefah, he was already at the point of death.
(11) Hence his slayer is exempt.
(12) Lit., 'cut'.
(13) Although suffering very much from the successive blows, and on the point of death, no vital organ, e.g., the heart or lungs, is injured, as in the case of a trefah.
(14) That the last of the ten is liable for hastening his death, though the cumulative effect of the preceding nine would have caused his death in any case, if not so soon.
(15) Deut. XIII, 6.
(16) Ibid. XIX, 16-19. Since the murder was not committed in the presence of a Beth din, witnesses must testify thereto. But should they subsequently be proved false (Zomemim, v. Glos.) they could not be executed in accordance with Deut. XIX, 16-19, because they had sought the execution of one who is already regarded as dead, a terefah being thus considered, and testimony to which this law is inapplicable is not valid. But if the murder was committed in the presence of a Beth din, so that no testimony at all is required, the ordinary law of a murderer applies.
(17) Whereas there is no sexual gratification in abusing the dead.
(18) It being proved they they were absent from the scene of the alleged murder.
(19) V. p. 523, n. 3.
(20) If A and B's testimony is disproved by C and D, who testify that they were with them elsewhere than at the scene of the alleged crime, and then the latter themselves are similarly refuted, the law of Deut. XIX, 16-19 is applicable to C and D, since they had sought to impose punishment upon the first two. But if A and B were terefah, this law would not apply to C and D; consequently, the entire law does not apply, and hence they are not executed.
(21) Ex. XXI, 29.
(22) As here, since the owner, being a terefah, is regarded as already dead.
(23) For this verse puts the two on an equal basis. It should be observed that in practice the owner was never killed, but ransomed, in accordance with Ex. XXI, 30 (v. supra 2a).
(24) On R. Judah's view, the fangs themselves are poisonous. Consequently, the snake does nothing, the murder being committed by the person. But the Sages maintain that even when its fangs are embedded in the flesh, they are not poisonous, unless it voluntarily emits poison. Consequently the murder is committed by the snake, not the man. The law of Ex. XXI, 30 applies to all animals and reptiles.
(25) Lit., 'there are feet', 'there is a basis, a reason for it'.

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 78b

upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit.[1] Now, could you have thought that whilst he walks in the market place his assailant is executed! But it must refer to one who, it was judged, would die [of his injuries], but then their effect lessened, only to increase subsequently so that he died, [the Torah thus teaching that his assailant] is quit. But how do the Rabbis[2] explain 'then shall he that smote him be quit'? — This teaches that he is incarcerated [until the result is known]. Whence does R. Nehemiah know this? — From the 'gatherer [of sticks]'.[3] Then let the Rabbis also deduce it thence? — The 'gatherer' was certainly liable to death, Moses merely not knowing by which death;[4] that excludes our case, where we do not know whether he is liable to death at all.[5] But R. Nehemiah maintains that it can be deduced from the 'blasphemer': though not knowing whether he was liable to death, they imprisoned him.[6] But the Rabbis say that in case of the blasphemer, [his incarceration] was an ad hoc decision.[7]

[The preceding discussion agrees with what] has been taught: Moses knew that the 'gatherer' was to be executed, for it is written, Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death;[8] but he did not know by which death, as it is written, [And they put him in ward,] because it was not declared what should be done to him.[9] But in the case of the blasphemer, it is only said, [And they put him in ward,] that the mind of the Lord might be shewed them;[10] implying that Moses did not know whether he was at all liable to death or not.

Now, on R. Nehemiah's view, it is right that two phrases bearing on judicial assessment are written;[11] one teaching that if his injury was declared to be fatal, but yet he survived; the other, that if it was judged that he would die, and then the effect of the blow was lightened, [yet he subsequently died — that in both cases he is quit]. But according to the Rabbis [who maintain that in the latter case he is executed], why are two such clauses necessary? — One teaches that if his injuries were declared fatal, yet he survived, and the other, that if they were declared non-fatal, yet he died, — [that in both cases the assailant is free]. But R. Nehemiah maintains that no verse is necessary for the latter case, since he left Beth din a free man.[12]

Our Rabbis taught: If a man smite his neighbour and the blow was assessed to be fatal, yet he survived, he is dismissed.[13] If the injury was declared fatal, but subsequently lightened, a second assessment of the financial damage is made.[14] If thereafter he grew worse and died, the second assessment is followed.[15] This is R. Nehemiah's view. The Sages maintain: There can be no second assessment after the first.[16]

Another [Baraitha] taught: If his injuries were declared fatal, they may subsequently be declared non-fatal.[17] But once his injuries are declared non-fatal, they cannot subsequently be declared fatal.[18] If the blow was assessed to be fatal, but then he became better, a second assessment of the financial damage is made, and if he subsequently died, he must make compensation for the damage, pain [etc.][19] to the heirs. From when must compensation be made? — From when he smote him.[20] And thus this anonymous [Baraitha] agrees with R. Nehemiah.[21]

MISHNAH. IF HE INTENDED KILLING AN ANIMAL BUT SLEW A MAN, OR A HEATHEN AND HE KILLED AN ISRAELITE, OR A PREMATURELY BORN AND HE KILLED A VIABLE CHILD, HE IS NOT LIABLE.[22] IF HE INTENDED TO STRIKE HIM ON HIS LOINS, WHERE THE BLOW WAS INSUFFICIENT TO KILL, BUT SMOTE THE HEART INSTEAD, WHERE IT WAS SUFFICIENT TO KILL, AND HE DIED; OR IF HE INTENDED SMITING HIM ON THE HEART,

(1) Ex. XXI, 19.

(2) The representatives of the anonymous opinion in the Mishnah.

(3) V. Num. XV, 32-36. Pending a decision, 'they put him in ward'.

(4) Hence it is obvious that he had to be incarcerated. On this view, Moses knew that he had to be executed. This is discussed below.

(5) I.e., this case could not be deduced from the other.

(6) Lev. XXIV, 10-14.

(7) Lit., 'a decision for the moment'. For, death not having been previously prescribed for blasphemy, there was no reason for his incarceration, but that it seemed expedient. But a special ad hoc decision cannot be taken as precedent for normal procedure.

(8) Ex. XXXI, 14.
(9) Num. XV, 34.
(10) Lev. XXIV, 12. This implies that the entire law was unknown, whilst 'what should be done to him' indicates that only the details, i.e. mode of death, were unknown.
(11) V. Ex. XXI, 18f: And if men strive together, and one smite another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed: If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed. Two phrases are superfluous, viz., 'and he die not', and 'If he rise again and walk abroad upon his staff', for it is self-evident that the assailant cannot be executed under such circumstances: hence they must refer to a judicial calculation that he would not die, which was, however, subsequently falsified.
(12) A favourable verdict cannot be reversed (v. supra 33b). Therefore in the latter case it is obvious that 'he is quit'.
(13) [I.e., exempt from death, but liable to pay damages.]
(14) I.e., the probable period that he would be incapacitated and the cost of medical assistance, for both of which he is liable.
(15) I.e., he is liable for the financial damage, as it was computed, but not to death.
(16) I.e., since on the first computation the injuries were declared fatal, when he subsequently grew better, and financial damages were awarded, we do not regard him as having left Beth din a free man (in respect of the capital penalty), but judge him according to the ultimate issue, and hence he is executed.
(17) If he grew better, and the assailant is thus freed from death.
(18) If he grew worse and died, the culprit is not executed.
(19) [On the payments for injuries, v. B.K. VIII, 1.]
(20) In assessing the victim's worth, his value before being smitten is taken. But we do not say, since his injuries were first declared fatal, and then not fatal, subsequent to which he died, his value should be assessed on the basis of his health at the time of the second computation.
(21) That financial compensation must be made, but there is no liability to death.
(22) [A prematurely born child for the first thirty days is not considered viable.]

Talmud - Mas. Sanhedrin 79a

WHERE IT WAS ENOUGH TO KILL, BUT STRUCK HIM ON THE LOINS, WHERE IT WAS NOT, AND YET HE DIED, HE IS NOT LIABLE. IF HE AIMED A BLOW AT AN ADULT, WHOM IT WAS INSUFFICIENT TO KILL, BUT CAUGHT A CHILD,[1] WHOM IT WAS ENOUGH TO KILL, AND HE DIED, HE IS NOT LIABLE. IF HE STRUCK AT A CHILD WITH SUFFICIENT FORCE TO KILL HIM, BUT IT CAUGHT AN ADULT, FOR WHOM IT WAS INSUFFICIENT, AND YET HE DIED, HE IS NOT LIABLE. BUT IF HE INTENDED TO STRIKE HIS LOINS WITH SUFFICIENT FORCE TO KILL, BUT CAUGHT THE HEART INSTEAD, HE IS LIABLE. IF HE AIMED A BLOW AT AN ADULT HARD ENOUGH TO KILL, BUT STRUCK A CHILD INSTEAD, AND HE DIED, HE IS LIABLE.R. SIMEON SAID: EVEN IF HE INTENDED KILLING ONE BUT KILLED ANOTHER, HE IS NOT LIABLE.
