ON THE COVER

In the wake of the media-stoked chaos ensuing from George Zimmerman being pronounced not guilty of the murder of Trayvon Martin, political opportunists are taking turns feeding the frenzy of racial tension, advancing careers and peddling policies, while we are distracted by the drama, stripping all colors of American people of their universal liberties in the process — the same people they have sworn to serve.

Social Engineering & Racial Division: The Trayvon Martin Tragedy

Contrived Selective Outrage Prevents Americans from Unifying Against National Security State.

The rights and wrongs of the confrontation between George Zimmerman and Trayvon Martin will continue to be debated, but what has emerged clearly from the relentless coverage of the story is a contrived agenda by the establishment to stir up racial animosity in America in order to undermine everybody's rights — a form of social engineering that ultimately hurts everybody, no matter what their color or creed.

One of the fundamental questions surrounding the Zimmerman trial is how the whole country was whipped up into a fervor of selective outrage over one black teenager being killed by a hispanic man, falsely labeled “white” by the media, when the problem of black-on-black violent crime completely dwarfs any notion that black people are being deliberately targeted by whites.

The likes of Al Sharpton, Jesse Jackson, Eric Holder, and even Barack Obama himself all inserted themselves into the Trayvon Martin controversy in order to hype the threat posed by violent hate crimes against blacks, manufacturing a kind of universal white guilt that demanded “justice for Trayvon” not based on the facts of the case, but on emotional manipulation focused around the erroneous presumption that America has declared “open season” on murdering young black men.

In reality, according to Justice Department figures, 94 percent of all blacks murdered in America every year are murdered by other black people, despite the fact that black Americans make up just 13 percent of the U.S. population. That's 7,000 blacks murdered every year by other black people. This statistic alone completely demolishes the narrative that the Zimmerman case represented a bellwether illustration of the threat posed to black people by racist hate crimes. If people like Sharpton, Jackson, Holder, and Obama really cared about black people being murdered, there would be a national conversation about these statistics. Instead, we have witnessed an 18 month obsession with one isolated incident in Florida.

The primary threat to black people clearly stems from violent gangs and other black people, but this has been completely ignored by the media in favor of ginning up a racial divide that is completely contrived. More blacks are killed by other blacks in Chicago every weekend than the Ku Klux Klan killed over a period of 50 years. The high murder rate of young black men has virtually nothing to do with the actions of white people, so why was the Zimmerman case hijacked by establishment black leaders and the media in order to insinuate this myth?

If the media wanted to initiate a national conversation about this issue, why did it fail to mention the 1,300 black babies who are killed every day in America through abortion? The simple answer is that the establishment isn't interested in focusing on anything that cannot be blamed on white people because this doesn't further their agenda of manufacturing racial division.

RACIAL DIVISION: DIVIDE AND CONQUER

Just as the state has sought to play groups against each other for their own benefit as part of a divide-and-conquer strategy throughout history, black people are also being targeted with aggressive programs of social engineering to keep them dependent on big government. Ever since infamous social engineers Clarence Gamble and Margaret

Sanger wrote about the need to hire black leaders in order to hoodwink blacks into voting for their own eventual “extermination,” black Americans have been the unwitting victims of a sustained program to keep them downtrodden and reliant on the system via government hand outs, cultural cannibalism, and societal manipulation.

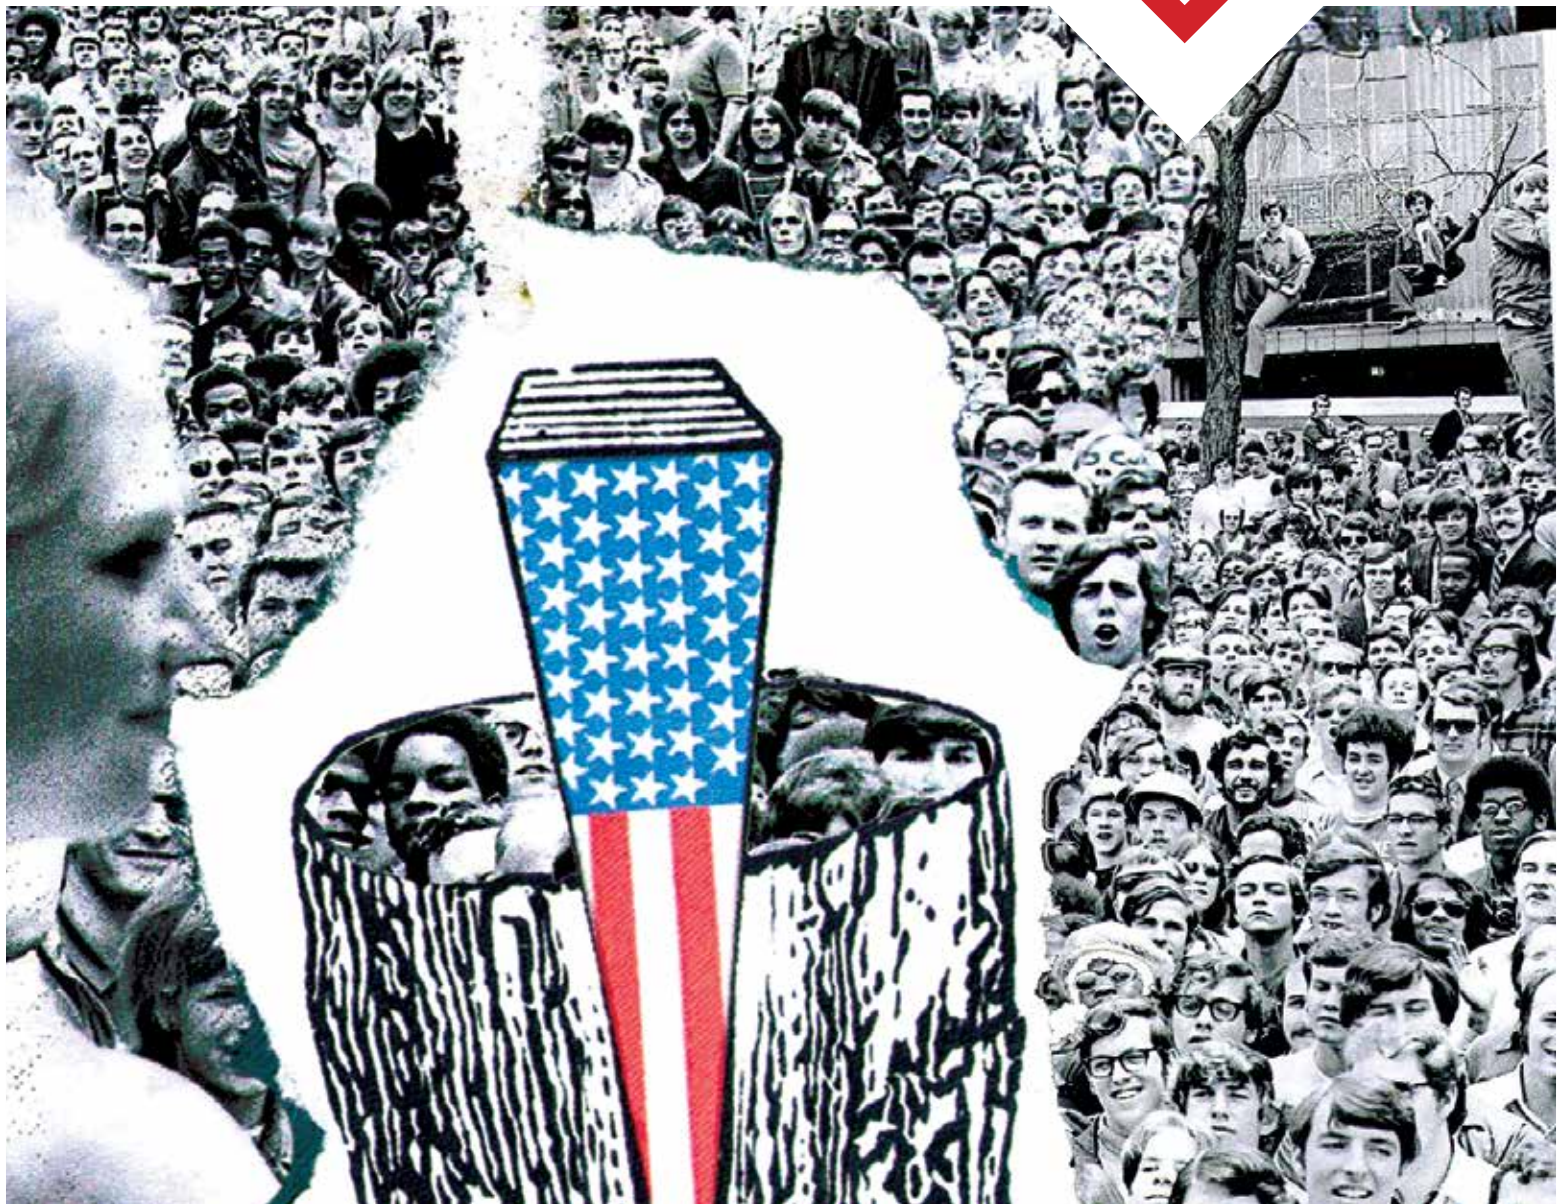

To achieve this con trick, the government found it necessary to create a common enemy against which blacks must appear to be defended by the state — racist white people. The Democrat Party, despite being responsible for founding the KKK, set themselves up as the representatives of black America while behind the scenes scheming to cynically exploit and manipulate them as a voting block through which to undermine constitutional rights, like the Second Amendment.

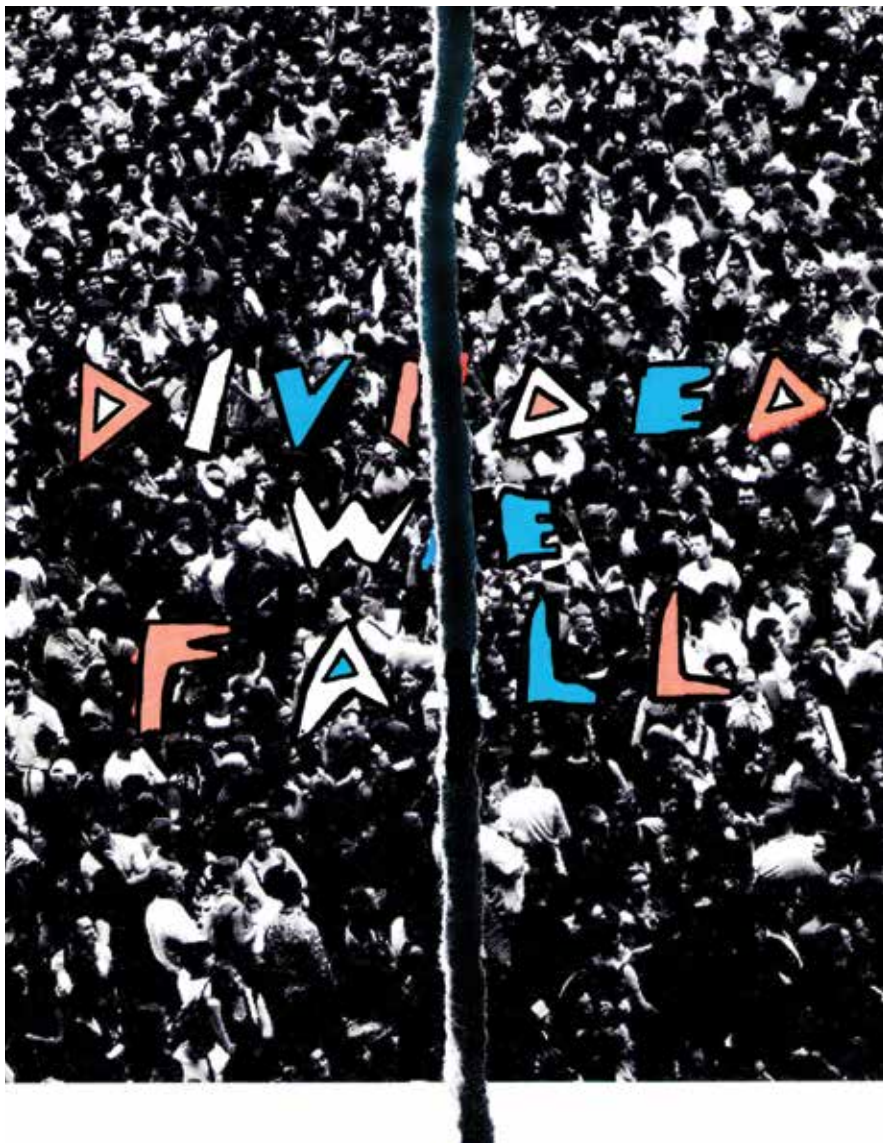

The likes of Sharpton and Jackson perpetuate racial division by promulgating the myth that racist white America continues to subjugate black people, when in reality such subjugation comes directly from law enforcement, the state, and an establishment pop-culture narrative that encourages black people to act like thuggish hip-hop stars. Meanwhile, true black leaders like Martin Luther King, Jr., who encourage racial harmony between blacks and whites, are murdered by the state.

SOCIAL ENGINEERING

It is very appropriate that Trayvon Martin's family attorney told Fox News that her first role was to act as a “social engineer,” given that social engineering lay at the core of the entire George Zimmerman controversy. The Obama administration seized control of the affair from the very beginning with the Justice Department funding pro-Tray-

WHAT HAS EMERGED CLEARLY FROM THE RELENTLESS COVERAGE OF THE STORY IS A CONTRIVED AGENDA BY THE ESTABLISHMENT TO STIR UP RACIAL ANIMOSITY IN AMERICA IN ORDER TO UNDERMINE EVERYBODY'S RIGHTS — A FORM OF SOCIAL ENGINEERING THAT ULTIMATELY HURTS EVERYBODY, NO MATTER WHAT THEIR COLOR OR CREED.

von protests last year in order to create public pressure that led to Zimmerman's arrest after local police had already concluded that Zimmerman had acted in self-defense and that no charges were necessary.

The ex-Sanford police chief Bill Lee also went public to reveal that the case had been hijacked "in a number of ways" by outside forces and that "he felt pressure from city officials to arrest Zimmerman to placate the public rather than as a matter of justice."

In one sense, the Zimmerman trial served as an extremely useful distraction from the myriad of scandals that plagued the Obama administration in the weeks before the case came to dominate U.S. television networks. The NSA PRISM controversy, the IRS targeting conservative groups, and the AP hacking probe all virtually disappeared from the headlines as the nation obsessed over every development in a Florida courtroom.

However, once the fix was in, and the Obama administration secured its show trial, it didn't really matter whether Zimmerman was found guilty or not. The political hijacking of the case was about contriving selective outrage and then channeling that outrage into the demonization of the right to self-defense, the right to own guns, and the sanctity of juries, while at the same time driving a further wedge between black and white America.

Instead of unifying around the universal liberties enshrined in the constitution and coming together to stand up to an out-of-control national security state that is spying on all Americans, stealing their financial future, and erecting a police state, the Trayvon Martin tragedy allowed Americans to be tricked into buying into the politics of racial division, while ignoring their true common enemy.

Domestic Spy Grid Designed Long Before 9/11

ENSLAVING AMERICAN'S PERSONAL DATA

The domestic spy grid enslaving Americans' personal data into perpetual, digital archives was planned well before 9/11 in a manner much like the early 2001 planning for the invasion of Iraq, as shown in declassified documents published at the National Security Archive.

A 42-page, declassified memo called "Transition 2001," published in December 2000 to brief newly elected President Bush on the National Security Agency, declares that the agency's mission demands "a powerful, permanent presence on a global telecommunications network that will host 'protected' communications of Americans as well as the targeted communications of adversaries."

The word "protected," surrounded by double quotations in the memo, refers to all of the personal, private data of Americans protected by the Fourth Amendment. Simply put, prior to the post-9/11 War on Terror, the NSA had every intention of ensnaring the phone conversations, e-mails, chat logs, Internet search history, etc. of all Americans into their wide net of domestic surveillance. Even the double quotations imply a veil of contempt towards our rights.

Predating the "Transition 2001" memo by three months, and 9/11 by an entire year, a report entitled "Rebuilding America's Defenses: Strategy, Forces and Resources for a New Century" calls for the U.S. Department of Defense to aggressively embrace information technologies, but warns of a slow implementation unless a "new Pearl Harbor" ushers in an era of high-tech intelligence gathering.

The report is structured upon a demand for "national leadership that accepts the United States' global responsibilities." This report also calls on the U.S. armed forces to control cyberspace, in the same vein as navies controlling the high seas, in order to protect America's global political leadership in the "infosphere."

"Rebuilding America's Defenses" was published by the now-extinct Project for the New American Century, a think tank founded by former State Department staff member Robert Kagan and neoconservative William Kristol, the latter known for his statements suggesting the GOP would be better off without Ron Paul.

Kristol is now spinning the NSA's end run around the Fourth Amendment as targeting foreign terrorists with proper oversight, while Ron Paul speaks out against the dangers of an Orwellian surveillance state, ironically predicting this over a quarter-century ago in the year 1984.

Unfortunately Ron Paul's warning was completely ignored by our government. Not too long after the "Transition 2001" memo and the "Rebuilding America's Defenses" report, the U.S. Department of Defense moved towards integrating existing information on American citizens and aliens into a centralized, virtual database, as reported in a December 15, 2002 article in The New York Times by Jeffrey Rosen, entitled "Total Information Awareness." According to this article, the Total Information Awareness program sought to analyze Americans' criminal, financial, educational, medical, and travel records and could have included the development of "risk profile" technologies to determine "suspicious" patterns of behavior in individuals.

The current surveillance state was not born out of the post-9/11 world but simply thrived in it.

FEMA signs deal with Russian Emergency Situations Ministry to “exchange experts”

Russian Forces on American Soil

The Future of National Security

As part of a deal signed late June in Washington DC between the Russian Emergency Situations Ministry and the Federal Emergency Management Agency, (FEMA), Russian officials will provide “security at mass events” in the United States — a scenario that won’t sit well with Americans wary of foreign assets operating on U.S. soil. According to a press release by the Ministry of the Russian Federation for Civil Defense and Emergencies, U.S. and Russian officials met on June 25 at the 17th Joint U.S.-Russia Cooperation Committee on Emergency Situations.

In addition to agreeing with FEMA to “exchange experts during joint rescue operations in major disasters,” the Russian Emergency Situations Ministry will also be providing “security at mass events” in the United States. This suggests that events designated as “National Special Security Events” by the Department of Homeland Security, which include the Super Bowl, international summits such as G8, and presidential inaugurations, could now rely partly on Russian authorities to provide security. The meeting last week also agreed on the conclusion that U.S. and Russian emergency authorities will increase their co-operation, “in order to respond efficiently to all kinds of disasters.”

The use of foreign troops or other officials in a law enforcement capacity providing “security” inside the United States is illegal under the Posse Comitatus Act, the federal law passed in 1878 prohibiting military troops from enforcing local laws, the duty of a civilian police force. Capt. William Geddes of the U.S. Army Reserve acknowledged last year that it is against federal law to use U.S. troops to conduct police patrols, despite the fact that such occurrences are becoming increasingly common. The use of foreign troops is an even more clear cut violation of Posse Comitatus.

FEMA was forced to deny the report published by Infowars.com that cited the official Russian government press release, which can be found at the website for the EMERCOM of Russia. The state-run Russian news wire RIA Novosti claimed, “There will be ‘no exchange of security or military personnel’ under a recently renewed partnership between the U.S. Federal Emergency Management Agency and Russia’s Emergency Situations Ministry, a FEMA spokesman told RIA Novosti ... The agreement continues information-sharing meetings and observation opportunities with first responders and emergency managers.” The admission that FEMA and Russian authorities would “exchange experts” who would be active “during joint rescue operations in major disasters” clearly contradicts the claim that the deal was only about information sharing. Either the press release was inaccurate or FEMA is lying.

The federal agency’s denial of the report that suggested Russian forces would be operating inside the United States at “mass events” ignores the fact that Russian and other foreign troops have been training for at least two decades on American soil. Even if we accept FEMA’s denial that Russian forces will be in place at “mass events” in the U.S., the fact that Russian forces are already operating inside America is proven.

Concerns about foreign troops being used on U.S. soil have lingered ever since the 1961 publication of State Defense Publication 7277, entitled “Freedom from War: the United States Program for General and Complete Disarmament in a Peaceful World,” which is a blueprint for the harmonization of U.S. and Russian forces under a framework of United Nations-led global government. There are numerous documented occasions of both foreign troops on American soil, as well as militaristic violations of the Posse Comitatus Act, happening right in front of our faces, yet blatantly ignored by the mainstream media.

Alex Jones has documented foreign troops being trained on U.S. soil to deal with “insurgents” since the late 1990s as part of “urban warfare drills.” In addition, as Frank Drover details, “Troops and personnel under the command of the United Nations have been training all over the United States in joint exercises that include policing operations and terrorist suppression.” Drover cites a 1994 U.N. training mission named “Agile Provider,” during which 44,000 blue helmeted U.N. troops from nations such as France and the Netherlands trained in Georgia, North and South Carolina, Arkansas, and Tennessee.

In 2008, it was also reported that U.S. and Canadian authorities had signed an agreement that would pave the way to using each other’s militaries on both sides of the border “during an emergency.” During FEMA’s 2009 NLE exercise, foreign troops from Mexico, Canada, Australia and the United Kingdom were involved in a major exercise focused on “terrorism prevention and protection.”

Back in July 2010, our reporters covered the “Operation Vigilant Guard” exercises in Chicago, which involved Polish troops training alongside U.S. National Guard troops in drills focused around raiding terrorists and drug dealers. According to SFC Mark Ballard of the Illinois National Guard, the Polish forces were “integrating into some of the civil military units that are participating in this exercise” as part of Illinois’ partnership with the Republic of Poland, a relationship based around “integrative training” and blending military and civilian forces in the event of a national emergency, as well as making this process of integration with foreign troops more “visible.”

Only last month, foreign troops from Canada, New Zealand, and Japan, as well as observers from Australia, Chile, Colombia, Israel, Mexico, Peru, and Singapore took part in multi-lateral exercises with U.S. Marines under the banner of “Operation Dawn Blitz,” during which foreign soldiers staged a mock invasion of a beach in Southern California and then “moved inland for additional training ashore.”

Last year, we reported on how Russian troops were invited to the U.S. as part of a Fort Carson, Colorado, drill focused around anti-terror training. Aside from learning how to target terrorists in America, the Russian soldiers were also out in the local community attending a baseball game in Colorado Springs. The pictures printed are from the Fort Carson drills.

Exercises involving foreign troops on U.S. soil have become commonplace over the last 20 years as Americans become increasing acclimatized to seeing international forces prepared for involvement in domestic security operations, largely ignorant of the fact that this is a violation of the Posse Comitatus Act.

As Mac Slavo writes, “Rumors have circulated for years about the possibility of foreign troops being deployed on U.S. soil in the event of a widespread declaration of a national emergency. For quite some time, there have been anecdotal reports to support the claim that the U.N., Russia and other nations would be used in a policing capacity should some critical event befall our nation ... The fear should such a scenario take place has been that these soldiers would act under the banner of their own flags, ignoring the fundamental protections afforded to our citizens, leaving Americans under the jurisdiction of people who don’t speak our language or respect our fundamental rights to self-defense, to be secure in our homes, and to be presumed innocent in the eyes of the law.”

To read the press release, visit: <http://en.mchs.ru/news/item/434203/>

THE FEAR SHOULD SUCH A SCENARIO TAKE PLACE HAS BEEN THAT THESE SOLDIERS WOULD ACT UNDER THE BANNER OF THEIR OWN FLAGS, IGNORING THE FUNDAMENTAL PROTECTIONS AFFORDED TO OUR CITIZENS, LEAVING AMERICANS UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF PEOPLE WHO DON’T SPEAK OUR LANGUAGE OR RESPECT OUR FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS TO SELF-DEFENSE, TO BE SECURE IN OUR HOMES, AND TO BE PRESUMED INNOCENT IN THE EYES OF THE LAW.

Fluoride in the Water is a Chemical Weapon Attack on You & Your Family

written by:
Julie Wilson

THE EPA HAS REVISED THEIR RECOMMENDED FLUORIDE LEVELS FROM 0.7 TO 1.2 MILLIGRAMS PER LITER TO 0.7 MILLIGRAMS PER LITER.

For nearly 70 years, national controversy has surrounded the debate of water fluoridation. In 1945, Grand Rapids became the first American city to add fluoride to the public's drinking water in a supposed attempt to curb tooth decay in children. Before implementing the fluoridation, the city conducted a loose study testing whether fluoride exposure was safe and concluded that the benefits outweighed the risks.

A quick Google search will probably lead you to misinformation claiming that fluoride isn't just healthy, but necessary. Although, if you begin to dig a little deeper, you'll find plenty of information explaining how and why fluoride is not just unhealthy, but deadly.

In 1992, a former Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) scientist named Dr. Robert J. Carton said "Fluoridation is the greatest case of scientific fraud of this century. Fluoridation presents unacceptable risks to public health, and the government cannot prove its claims of safety. It is clear that fluoride is mutagenic, and that it may well cause cancer. The EPA has attempted to silence scientists who do not follow the party line."

HISTORY

Ian E. Stephen, author of "The Dickinson Statement: A Mind-Boggling Thesis," published by NEXUS Magazine in the August–September 1995 issue, discovered significant American bankers, including executives from Standard Oil, Ford Motor Company, the National City Bank of New York, and the chairman of the federal reserve were funding a German chemical company, which became I.G. Farben in 1925. I.G. Farben and multiple members were responsible for numerous war crimes in World War II.

A few years later the world's largest sodium fluoride producer, the American Aluminum Co. (ALCOA), and the Dow Chemical Co. transferred the technology to Germany. Numerous companies including Colgate, Kellogg, and Dupont signed cartel agreements with I.G. Farben, creating a powerful group designated "the fluoride mafia."

According to Steven's article, the U.S. government sent Charles E. Perkins, an expert scientist in chemistry, physiology, and pathology, to manage the Farben chemical plants in Germany. It was during this time, that Perkins learned of a plan to use water fluoridation to make people "stupid and docile." This plan was intended to be used as a weapon on captives held in war camps. Authoritarians believed the fluoridation caused slight damage to a particular part of the brain, causing people to become submissive and surrender themselves more easily.

The U.S. military continued the Nazi's research, attempting to build on it, and even admitted in a Rockefeller report at a CIA briefing that "the drug program was part of a much larger CIA program to study possible means of controlling human behavior."

PROPAGANDA

The myth that fluoride helps prevent tooth decay originated from a 1939 study by a scientist employed by ALCOA, the largest producer of sodium fluoride. During the time of the study, claims were on the rise that fluoride was damaging to the human brain, hence the need for a "substantiated" study to prove that fluoride wasn't just safe, but beneficial. To support this claim, ALCOA employee Gerald J. Cox fluoridated some lab rats and concluded that fluoride reduced cavities. Following the publication of his conclusion, Grand Rapids, Michigan, became the first city to fluoridate the water. 87 more cities would later follow.

These types of widely distributed studies passed off as fact are conducted by scientists working for the same entities attempting to prove their products safe. This type of biased, junk science continues today — Monsanto is a perfect example. Monsanto currently holds patents on genetically engineered (GE) crops prohibiting independent studies on their products. Currently, the only studies conducted on GE crops in the United States are studies performed by scientists who are direct employees of Monsanto.

In 1947, a veteran lawyer for ALCOA was appointed head of the Federal Security Agency, a position that put him in charge of the Public Health Service, which then approved fluoridation. This sounds eerily similar to President Obama appointing Michael Taylor, former Vice President of Monsanto, to Senior Advisor of the Food and Drug Administration in 2009.

Through clever re-education methods orchestrated by big chemical companies, fluoride, once a toxic, industrial waste by-product, became viewed as a beneficial necessity in the public's water supply. The same chemical is also used in fungicides, pesticides, rodenticides, tranquilizers, and in a number of domestic products like toothpaste. Even declassified military documents prove that fluoride was used in the making of the atomic bomb. During the production of the A-bomb, fluoride poisoning became the leading health hazard, not radiation poisoning.

SCIENTIFIC STUDIES

A Harvard University study published in the July 2012 issue of Environmental Health Perspectives, a U.S. National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences journal, claims, "children in high fluoride areas had significantly lower IQs than those who lived in low fluoride areas." The EPA says

DESPITE THE PROVEN DANGERS, FLUORIDE IS STILL ADDED TO 70% OF THE NATION'S DRINKING WATER.

A Harvard study, funded by the National Institute of Health (NIH) found that, "...rats exposed to 1 ppm (50 Smol/L) of water-fluoride for one year showed morphological alterations in the brain and increased levels of aluminum in brain tissue compared with controls..."

fluoride is a chemical "with substantial evidence of development neurotoxicity." The chemical isn't just dangerous to adults, but severely affects memory and cognitive development in children. The study also revealed that fluoride readily crosses the placenta, exposing the susceptible, developing brain of fetuses to toxicants, which can cause irreversible damage.

In 2005, The Guardian, a British news agency, released an article outlining American research that proved boys exposed to any amounts of fluoride between the ages of 5 to 10 suffer increased rates of osteosarcoma, a form of bone cancer. According to the research, "half of all fluoride ingested is stored in the body, accumulating in calcifying tissue such as in teeth, bones, and the pineal gland inside the brain."

Despite the massive amounts of information regarding fluoride as dangerous to humans, the U.S. Center for Disease Control and Prevention recognized water fluoridation as one of the ten greatest public health achievements of the 20th century.

Paul Beeber from the New York State Coalition Opposed to Fluoridation, Inc. says "It's senseless to keep subjecting our children to this ongoing fluoridation experiment to satisfy the political agenda of special interest groups. Even if fluoridation reduced cavities, is tooth health more important than brain health? It's time to put politics aside and stop artificial fluoridation everywhere."

If you're still not convinced, then maybe the EPA's own revisions to their policy on fluoridation will sway you. Following the release of the highly respected Harvard study and according to the U.S. National Library of Medicine, the Health and Human Services Department together with the EPA announced last year a "downwards revision in the recommended ratio of fluoride to water" in fluoridated communities. The new recommendation is 0.7 milligrams of fluoride per liter of water, which replaces the previous recommended range of 0.7 to 1.2 milligrams per liter.

Even a group of scientists working for the EPA headquarters strongly oppose using fluoride in the water. A report from the National Treasury Employees Union Chapter 280 says, "as the EPA was engaged in revising its drinking water standard for fluoride in 1985, an employee came to the union with a complaint: he said he was being forced to write into the regulation a statement to the effect that EPA thought it was alright for children to have 'funky' teeth. It was OK, the EPA said, because it considered that condition to be only a cosmetic effect, not an adverse health effect. The reason for this EPA position was that it was under political pressure to set its health-based standard for fluoride at 4 mg/liter. At that level, the EPA knew that a significant number of children develop moderate to severe dental fluorosis, but since it had deemed the effect as only cosmetic, the EPA didn't have to set its health-based standard at a lower level to prevent it."

According to WebMD.com, fluorosis is a condition caused by overexposure to fluoride during the first eight years of a child's life, when their permanent teeth are forming. This condition causes highly noticeable pits, yellow to dark brown stains, and surface irregularities in the teeth. Today, fluorosis affects one in every four Americans ages 6 to 49. The condition was first detected in the early 20th century in Colorado Springs, Colorado. Researchers discovered that numerous native-born residents displayed significant brown staining on their teeth and called it the "Colorado Brown Stain."

There is a substantial amount of evidence illustrating the dangers of fluoride. Even the regulatory agency itself admits that it's harmful to humans — children in particular.

The most disconcerting fact is that this evidence isn't new. The claims against fluoride have been around since its use began almost a century ago.

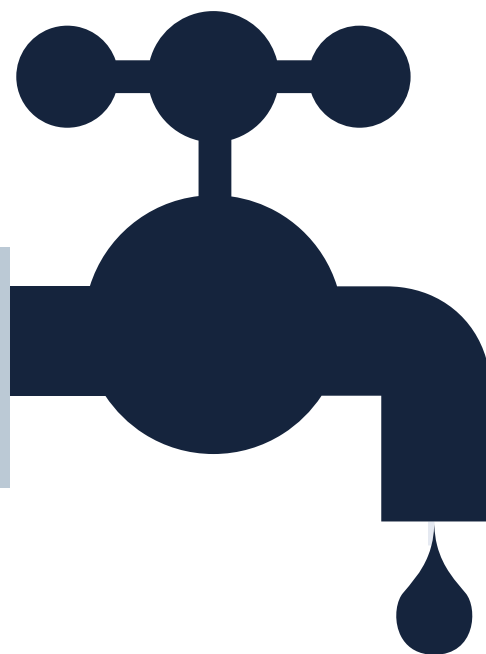

FLUORIDE BANS

The good news is that many cities around the nation are waking up to the dangers of fluoride. In some cities, relentless advocates for anti-fluoridation have proven enough to sway public officials into ridding their water of the toxic chemical. Portland, Oregon; Wichita, Kansas; Santa Fe, New Mexico; College Station, Texas; and Fairbanks, Alaska, have all banned fluoridation in their cities, just to name a few.

Portland gathered over 400,000 signatures to bring the decision to a public vote and won, despite the city council members meeting behind closed doors in an attempt to pass water fluoridation. The victory protects over half a million people from the toxic chemical.

Luckily with the invaluable tool of the world wide web, fluoride-free campaigns popping up across the nation, and people are able to educate themselves on the true dangers of fluoride. Groups like fluoridealert.org, Fluoride Free Austin, and Clean Water Portland are breeding grounds for anti-fluoride supporters that work to provide the public with education for fighting water fluoridation. Groups like these orchestrate campaigns against water fluoridation and lead the fight in their cities.

Although, fluoridation has been used for almost a century. As long as corporate entities continue to ride on their own interests and control government regulatory agencies like the EPA, it doesn't appear to be a fight that's ending anytime soon.

CIA Will Now Openly Propagandize Americans

SMITH-MUNDT ACT “RE-FORMED” ALLOWING CIA TO DISSEMINATE PROPAGANDA

A NETWORK ANCHORMAN IN TIME OF NATIONAL CRISIS IS AN INSTRUMENT OF PSYCHOLOGICAL WARFARE IN THE MOCKINGBIRD MEDIA. HE IS A CREATURE FROM THE NATIONAL SECURITY SECTOR’S CHAMBER OF HORRORS. FOR THIS REASON, CONSUMERS OF THE CORPORATE PRESS HAVE REASON TO EXAMINE THEIR BASIC BELIEFS ABOUT GOVERNMENT AND LIFE IN THE PARALLEL UNIVERSE OF THESE UNITED STATES.

Operation Mockingbird, the CIA’s long term effort to control the news, has shifted into overdrive. On July 2, a little noticed “reform” passed in January went into effect. The Smith-Mundt Modernization Act of 2012, passed as part of the 2013 National Defense Authorization Act, will allow the CIA to flood America with more government propaganda.

The Smith-Mundt Act, passed as the national security state was taking shape in 1948, authorized the State Department to unleash a tidal wave of propaganda outside the United States while supposedly forbidding its dissemination inside the country. The law set the stage for Frank Wisner, who headed up the CIA’s covert action division in the early 1950s, to build his “mighty Wurlitzer,” described by none other than The New York Times as “the means for orchestrating, in almost any language anywhere in the world whatever tune the CIA was in the mood to hear.”

In the years since, the establishment media has worked hand-in-glove with the CIA. This cozy relationship was revealed by Frank Church, the Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities in 1975, and (a few years later) by reporter Carl Bernstein.

“Among the chief executives who helped the CIA were William Paley of CBS, Henry Luce of Time, Arthur Sulzberger of The New York Times, Barry Bingham Sr. of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and James Copley of the Copley News Service,” write Amy Goodman and David Goodman in “Unreality TC, the Mighty Wurlitzer, Hijacking Public Media,” a chapter from the book Static: Government Liars, Media Cheerleaders, and the People Who Fight Back. “The leading TV networks, including ABC and NBC; and the wire services AP, UPI, Reuters; along with Hearst Newspapers, Scripps Howard, Newsweek, the Miami Herald, and the Saturday Evening Post all had dealings with the spy agency. The CIA’s most valuable associations were with the New York Times, CBS, and Time, Inc.”

This media penetration by the CIA is not merely a baseless conspiracy theory as some might argue, but is backed up by CIA office memos released under Freedom of Information Acts revealing the placement of “important assets” inside every major news organization in the country. “It was not until 1982 that the Agency openly admitted that reporters on the CIA payroll have acted as case officers to agents in the field,” writes investigative journalist Alex Constantine.

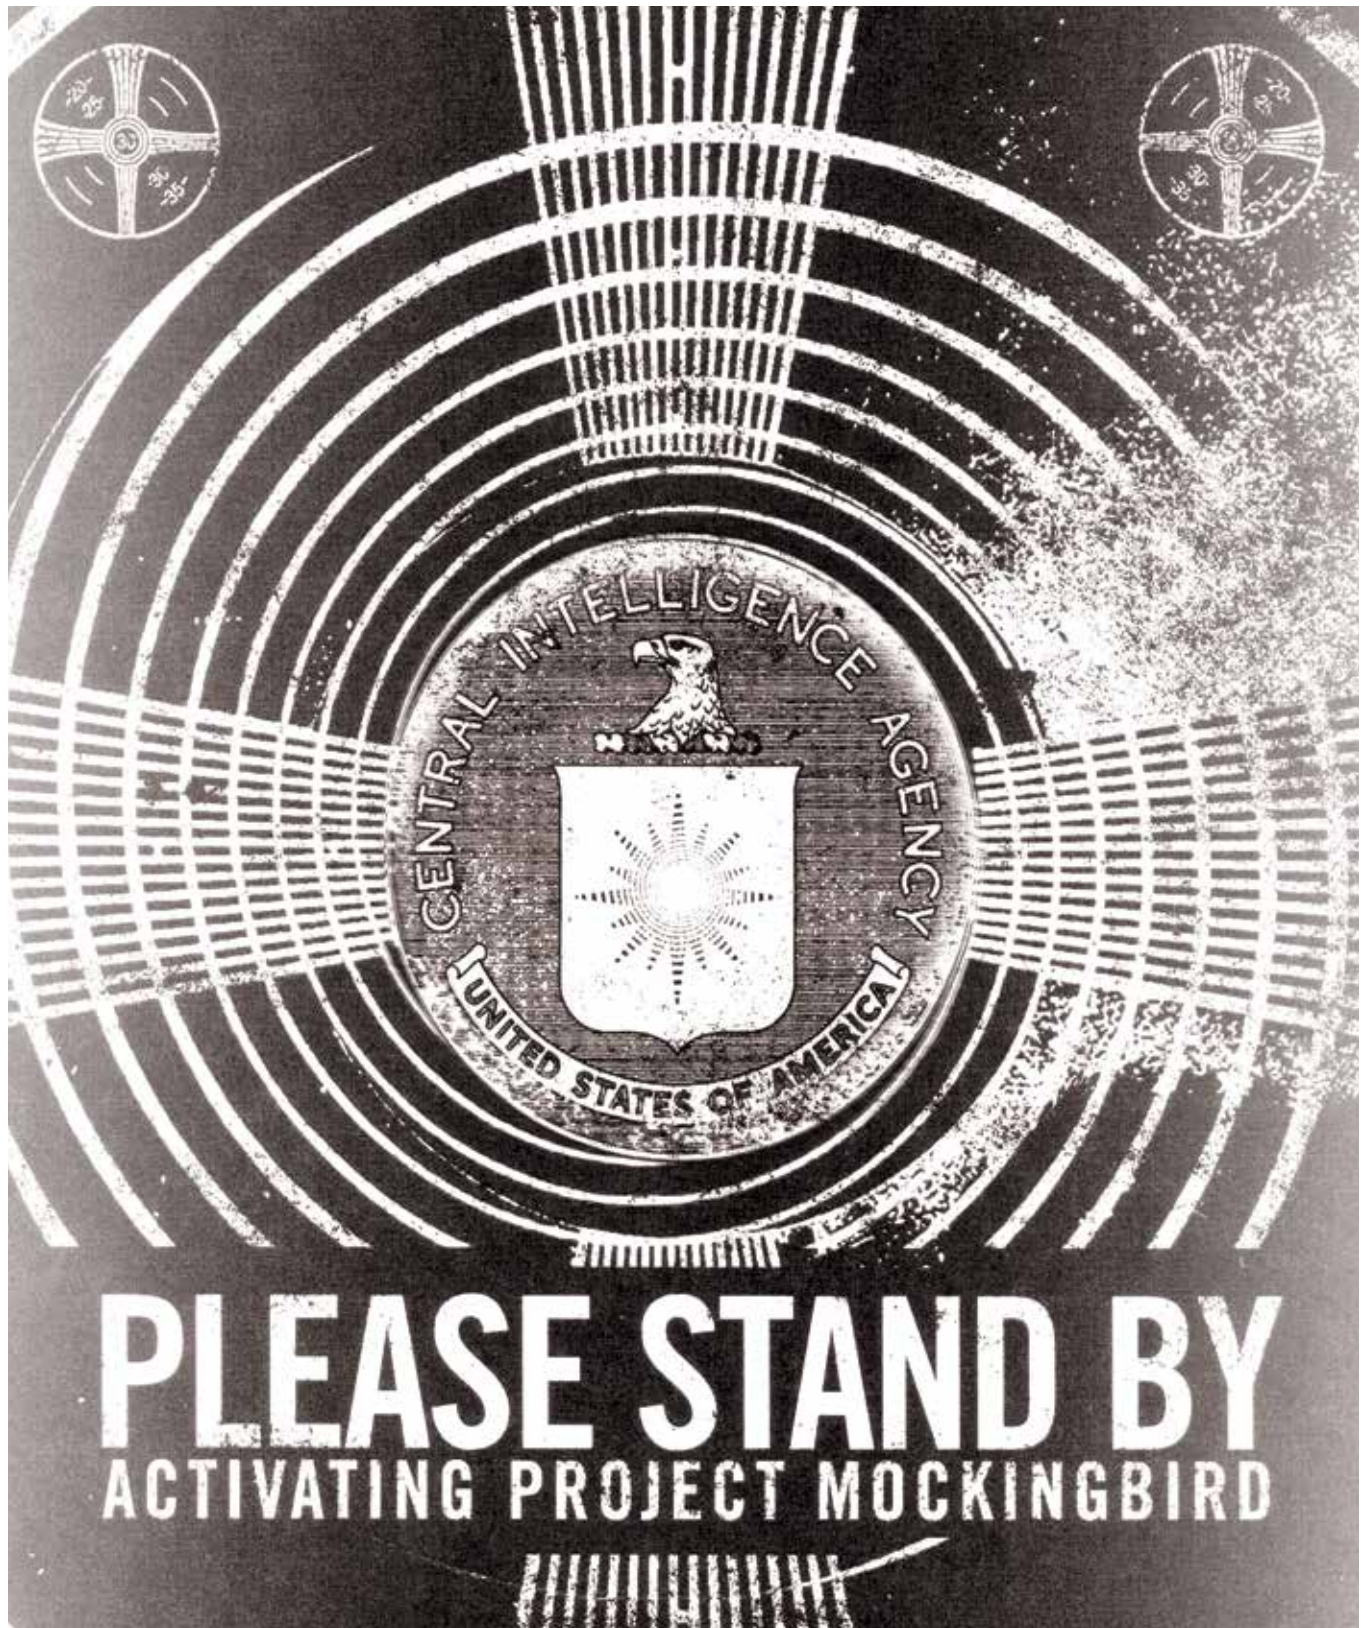

“Most consumers of the corporate media were — and are — unaware of the effect that the salting of public opinion has on their own beliefs,” Constantine continues. “A network anchorman in time of national crisis is an instrument of psychological warfare in the Mockingbird media. He is a creature from the national security sector’s chamber of horrors. For this reason, consumers of the corporate press have reason to examine their basic beliefs about government and life in the parallel universe of these United States.”

Despite the promise of the Smith-Mundt Act that a firewall stands between foreign and domestic propaganda, the CIA, the bastard child of Wall Street lawyers, has never honored its charter prohibiting domestic operation and has consistently utilized the corporate media as a propaganda machine.

Enactment of the Smith-Mundt Modernization Act underscores the fact the CIA no longer pretends to honor its charter and refrains from flooding the media with government propaganda. “The evaporation of Smith-Mundt and other provisions to safeguard U.S. citizens against government propaganda campaigns is part of a larger trend within the diplomatic and military establishment,” ace reporter Michael Hastings wrote in May, 2012, more than a year before his assassination.

In fact, this “larger trend” has been in effect since the imposition of the National Security Act in 1947 and the establishment of the National Security Council, the principal forum used by the financial elite and their intelligence apparatus to dictate policy to the president of the United States and the State Department.

Obama Conquers Internet Through Executive Orders

Presidential policies pave foundation for future federal takeover of the internet.

Obama's policies will allow for a future government takeover of the Internet, involving multiple agencies, including the Department of Homeland Security, under the guise of "national security needs" and "crisis management."

In July 2012, Obama quietly released an executive order entitled "Assignment of National Security and Emergency Preparedness Communications Functions."

The order created the National Security and Emergency Preparedness (NS/EP) Executive Committee consisting of federal agencies such as the Department of Defense, Department of Homeland Security, Department of State, Department of Justice, Department of Commerce, General Services Administration, Federal Communications Commission, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. It should be noted that the Director of National Intelligence is James Clapper, notorious for lying to Congress in March on the extent of the NSA's domestic surveillance.

Here are some highlights of the executive order, which is available in full at www.whitehouse.gov:

"Sec. 5.2. (Responsibilities of the DHS) (e) satisfy priority communications requirements through the use of commercial, Government, and privately owned communications resources, when appropriate; (f) maintain a joint industry-Government center that is capable of assisting in the initiation, coordination, restoration, and reconstitution of NS/EP communications services or facilities under all conditions of emerging threats, crisis, or emergency..."

This allows the DHS, working jointly and directly with private Internet Service Providers, to easily take over the Internet by claiming priority over private communication lines in the name of "national security." In the future, the DHS and other federal agencies can respond to whistleblower leaks, such as Edward's Snowden's revelation that the NSA has direct access to major internet servers, by claiming they are "emerging threats" and "violations of National Security communications."

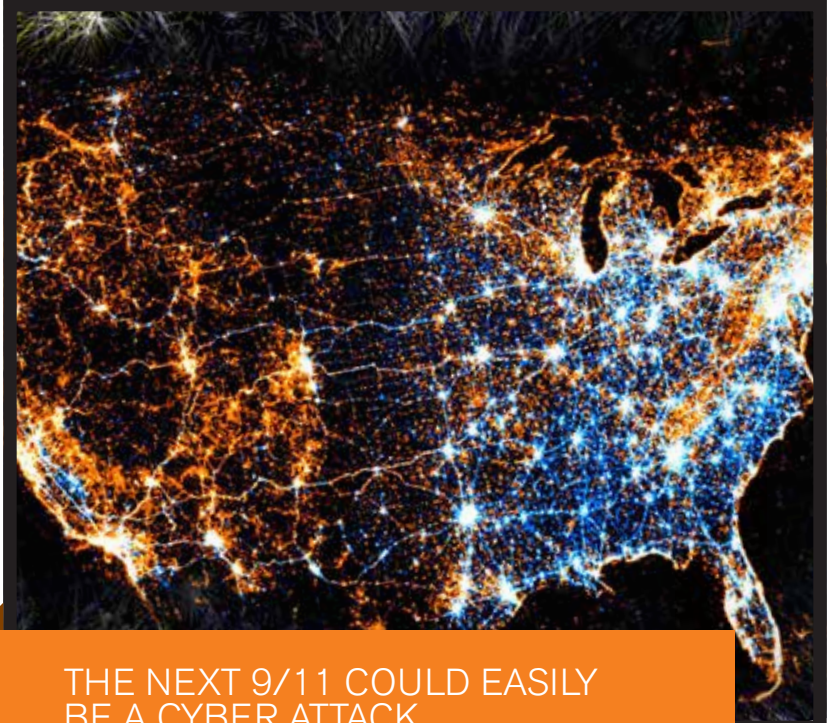

Unconstitutional abuses leaked to media outlets can be suppressed by the government with this framework created through Obama's executive orders. Internet censorship will be brought to you by "national security needs" and "crisis management."

Earlier this year, Obama released another executive order entitled "Improving Critical Infrastructure Cybersecurity." This order created "essential" public-private partnerships with internet infrastructure owners and operators "to improve cybersecurity information sharing." Amusingly, the executive order has provisions to ensure privacy and civil liberties. Edward Snowden exposed this complete lie several months later with the PRISM slides — a great example of the doublespeak within these executive orders.

Under innocent-sounding guise, Obama dictates policies that are intended for more sinister purposes. The further involvement of DHS into Internet "security" could very well highlight this point. The next 9/11 could easily be a cyber attack, such as a massive financial collapse blamed on "foreign hackers." This is a very real possibility considering that the majority of the money supply is digital in our fractional reserve, fiat economy.

Could the DHS take advantage of a claimed cyber warfare attack by imposing a virtual TSA on the American people, requiring them to be identified and screened before using sections of cyberspace? We've already seen a New York bill trying to outlaw the on line use of anonymous screen names. Google and Yahoo are also now asking for telephone numbers upon registration of new user accounts. Between the NSA soaking up all the digital communications by the public and the DHS's increased involvement in cyber security, the freedom of anonymous expression is in great peril.

Ron Paul:

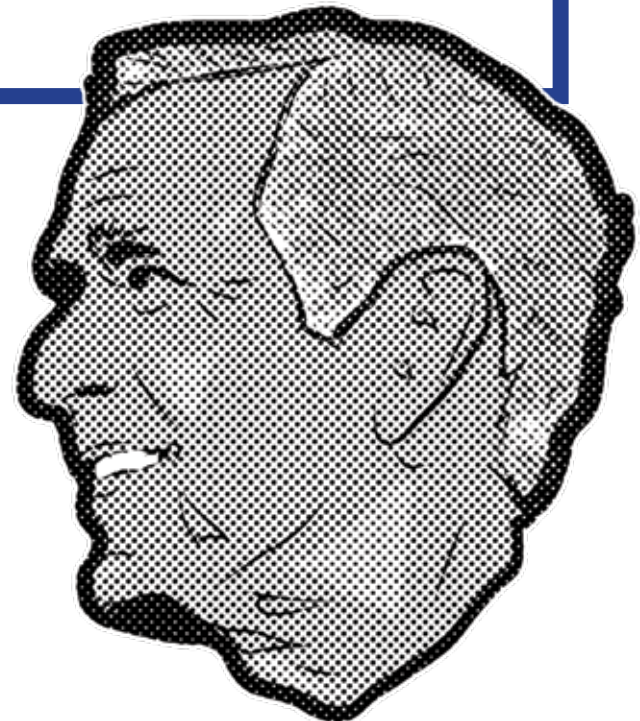

Obama's Syria Policy is Like Bush's Iraq Policy

"TODAY, WE'RE ALSO WORKING FOR A TRANSITION SO THE SYRIAN PEOPLE CAN HAVE A BETTER FUTURE, FREE OF THE ASSAD REGIME. AND GIVEN THE REGIME'S STOCKPILES OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS, WE WILL CONTINUE TO MAKE IT CLEAR TO ASSAD AND THOSE AROUND HIM THAT THE WORLD IS WATCHING, AND THAT THEY WILL BE HELD ACCOUNTABLE BY THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY AND THE UNITED STATES, SHOULD THEY MAKE THE TRAGIC MISTAKE OF USING THOSE WEAPONS."

"THE IRAQI REGIME ... POSSESSES AND PRODUCES CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS. IT IS SEEKING NUCLEAR WEAPONS. WE KNOW THAT THE REGIME HAS PRODUCED THOUSANDS OF TONS OF CHEMICAL AGENTS, INCLUDING MUSTARD GAS, SARIN NERVE GAS, VX NERVE GAS...

"... FOR THE SAKE OF PROTECTING OUR FRIENDS AND ALLIES, THE UNITED STATES WILL LEAD A MIGHTY COALITION OF FREEDOM-LOVING NATIONS AND DISARM SADDAM HUSSEIN."

President Obama announced in early June that the U.S. intelligence community had just determined that the Syrian government had used poison gas on a small scale, killing some 100 people in a civil conflict that has claimed an estimated 100,000 lives. Because of this use of gas, the president claimed, Syria had crossed his “red line,” and the U.S. must begin to arm the rebels fighting to overthrow the Syrian government.

Setting aside the question of why 100 killed by gas is somehow more important than 99,900 killed by other means, the fact is his above explanation is full of holes. The Washington Post reported that the decision to overtly arm the Syrian rebels was made “weeks ago” — in other words, it was made at a time when the intelligence community did not believe “with high confidence” that the Syrian government had used chemical weapons.

Further, this plan to transfer weapons to the Syrian rebels had become policy much earlier than that, as the Washington Post reported that the CIA had expanded its secret bases in Jordan over the past year to prepare for the transfer of weapons to the rebels in Syria.

The process was identical to the massive deception campaign that led us into the Iraq war. Remember the famous quote from the leaked “Downing Street Memo,” where representatives of British Prime Minister Tony Blair’s administration discussed Washington’s push for war on Iraq?

Here the head of British intelligence was reporting back to his government after a trip to Washington in the summer of 2002:

“Military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Saddam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD, but the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy.”

That is exactly what the Obama Administration is doing with Syria: fixing the intelligence and facts around the already determined policy, and Congress just goes along, just as they did the last time.

We found out shortly after the Iraq war started that the facts and intelligence being fixed around the policy were nothing but lies put forth by the neo-con warmongers and the paid informants, like the infamous and admitted liar known as “Curveball,” but we seem to have learned nothing from being fooled before.

So, Obama now plans to send even more weapons to the Syrian rebels even though his administration is aware that the main rebel factions have pledged their loyalty to al-Qaeda. Does anyone else see the irony? After 12 years of the “War on Terror” and the struggle against al-Qaeda, the U.S. decided to provide weapons to the allies of al-Qaeda. Does anyone really think this is a good idea?

The Obama administration promises us that this is to be a very limited operation, providing small arms only, with no plans for a no-fly zone or American boots on the ground. That sounds an awful lot like how Vietnam started. Just a few advisors. When these few small arms do not achieve the pre-determined U.S. policy of regime change in Syria what is the administration going to do? Admit failure and pull the troops out, or escalate? History suggests the answer, and it now appears to be repeating itself once again. The president has opened a can of worms that will destroy his presidency and possibly destroy this country. Another multi-billion dollar war has begun.

Former Congressman Paul's article first appeared at the-free-foundation.org.

“THE PRESIDENT HAS OPENED A CAN OF WORMS THAT WILL DESTROY HIS PRESIDENCY AND POSSIBLY DESTROY THIS COUNTRY. ANOTHER MULTI-BILLION DOLLAR WAR HAS BEGUN.”

“After 12 years of the “War on Terror” and the struggle against al-Qaeda, the U.S. decided to provide weapons to the allies of al-Qaeda. Does anyone really think this is a good idea?”

“THEY’RE FIXING THE INTELLIGENCE AND FACTS AROUND THE ALREADY DETERMINED POLICY”

Federal Government Plans to Persecute Zimmerman

written by:
Kurt Nimmo

The Trayvon Martin murder case is not about justice. It's an excuse for a lot of ignorant people to express their racist attitudes. Due to decades of political correctness promoted by the elite and inculcated through their cultural and educational programming system, emotionally charged racist violence is now acceptable and has been since at least the 1992 L.A. riots that claimed over 50 lives following the beating of Rodney King.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, one of the most powerful men in America, has taken up that torch, claiming it's not over. He said now that a jury of his peers has found George Zimmerman not guilty of murdering Trayvon Martin, it is time for the federal government to step in. Appearing on "Meet the Press" on July 14, Reid told host David Gregory the Justice Department will go after Zimmerman.

"And the president, does he have a role in speaking about it as he did after the shooting?" Gregory asked. "Yeah, of course," Reid responded. "And I think the Justice Department's going to take a look at this. You know, this isn't over with, and I think that's good, that's our system. It's gotten better, not worse."

In other words, if a jury reaches a verdict the federal government and the Obama administration think is not politically correct (or is contrary to their political agenda), they will move to "take a look" at it and take action to placate special interests and preferred minorities.

Soon after the verdict was reached on Saturday night, the NAACP called on the Justice Department to persecute George Zimmerman for the inexcusable crime of self-defense. President and CEO Benjamin Todd Jealous sent out the following petition:

"Attorney General Eric Holder, The Department of Justice has closely monitored the State of Florida's prosecution of the case against George Zimmerman in the Trayvon Martin murder since it began. Today, with the acquittal of George Zimmerman, it is time for the Department of Justice to act.

The most fundamental of civil rights – the right to life – was violated the night George Zimmerman stalked and then took the life of Trayvon Martin. We ask that the Department of Justice file civil rights charges against Mr. Zimmerman for this egregious violation.

Please address the travesties of the tragic death of Trayvon Martin by acting today.

Thank you."

Other "civil rights" organizations called for Zimmerman to be prosecuted. "We will be calling on the federal government to file criminal charges on the basis of civil rights violations," said C.D. Witherspoon of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference of Baltimore. "This was done immediately after the Rodney King verdict, and should be done if justice is not rendered by the Florida courts."

The NAACP has pledged to "fight for the removal of 'Stand Your Ground' laws in every state" and make racial profiling a primary consideration in self-defense cases. A number of liberal advocacy groups, including NAACP, the Urban League, Color of Change, Common Cause, People for the American Way, and MoveOn.org, have worked to eliminate the right of Americans to protect themselves.

"Florida's dangerous 'Shoot First' law allowed Trayvon's killer to walk free without charges for more than a month. Shoot First legalizes vigilante homicide, has demonstrated racial bias in its application, and has led to an increase in gun-related deaths in the more than two dozen states where it has been passed into law,” states Color of Change, as part of a campaign to eliminate “Stand Your Ground” laws.

Since 2009, Color of Change has received $550,000 from Soros’ Open Society Foundation and is closely connected to MoveOn.org, an organization perpetually engaged in peddling Obama’s globalist agenda and fundraises for establishment Democrats. MoveOn.org has also launched a petition demanding the Justice Department ignore the jury decision in Florida and further victimize George Zimmerman.

Color of Change is “an organization dedicated to shutting down free speech, free expression, free markets, and free enterprise,” writes Peter Bella at the Washington Times. “They are against capitalism and civil liberties. They want to repeal the Second Amendment, force people to be victims, and are against stopping voter fraud.”

Obama responded to the Zimmerman verdict on July 13 by calling for renewed legislation aimed at the Second Amendment. He did not attack the Bill of Rights directly, but instead admonished Americans for not doing enough “to stem the tide of gun violence that claims too many lives across this country on a daily basis.”

Here is the entire statement by Obama, posted July 14 on the White House website:

“The death of Trayvon Martin was a tragedy. Not just for his family, or for any one community, but for America. I know this case has elicited strong passions. And in the wake of the verdict, I know those passions may be running even higher. But we are a nation of laws, and a jury has spoken. I now ask every American to respect the call for calm reflection from two parents who lost their young son. And as we do, we should ask ourselves if we’re doing all we can to widen the circle of compassion and understanding in our own communities. We should ask ourselves if we’re doing all we can to stem the tide of gun violence that claims too many lives across this country on a daily basis. We should ask ourselves, as individuals and as a society, how we can prevent future tragedies like this. As citizens, that’s a job for all of us. That’s the way to honor Trayvon Martin.”

It appears Obama, in addition to instructing the Justice Department to prosecute George Zimmerman for violating the “civil rights” of Trayvon Martin, will attempt to revisit so-called “gun control,” an effort that failed dismally earlier this year in a Democrat-controlled Senate.

The characterization of self-defense as “vigilante homicide” when it contains “racial bias in its application” — in other words, when a white person defends himself against violence perpetrated by a black person or other government designated preferred minority — underscores the globalist agenda to disarm all Americans.

The Trayvon Martin case is not about racism, it is about destroying the Second Amendment and turning the American people into a defenseless herd no different than the Russians under Stalin or the Chinese under Mao. “Political power grows out of the barrel of a gun,” Mao famously said. He wasn’t talking about guns in the hands of citizens.

Racist polarization, promoted in theatrical fashion by the corporate media, distracts people from the real cause of class and racial division — an economic and social system designed for exploitation and predation by a hereditary elite. If we are feeding on each other, if we perpetually with the passing of each generation fall victim to class and racial warfare, we will never recognize the real criminal class victimizing us all.

DIVIDE AND CONQUER

World War III Brews as Nation Distracted by Trayvon Martin Case

written by:
Anthony Gucciardi

As the world reacts to the Trayvon Martin case, including prominent rappers calling out the media over its race baiting, reports detail around 160,000 Russian troops were called to “combat readiness” following an Israeli strike on Russian-made missiles in Syria.

Is the nation too distracted by the George Zimmerman trial’s 24/7 news cycle to even know about this developing situation that coincides with escalating tensions between Russian and U.S.-affiliated nations around the world?

First up is the new revelation that Israel was behind an attack on Syria that targeted Russian-made anti-ship missiles. According to the Israeli National News sources within the U.S., Israel recently launched an attack on Russian missiles that were apparently sold to Syria and stationed at a critical point within the country. Until now, it was unknown who had initiated the bombing that had rocked Latakia on July 5th.

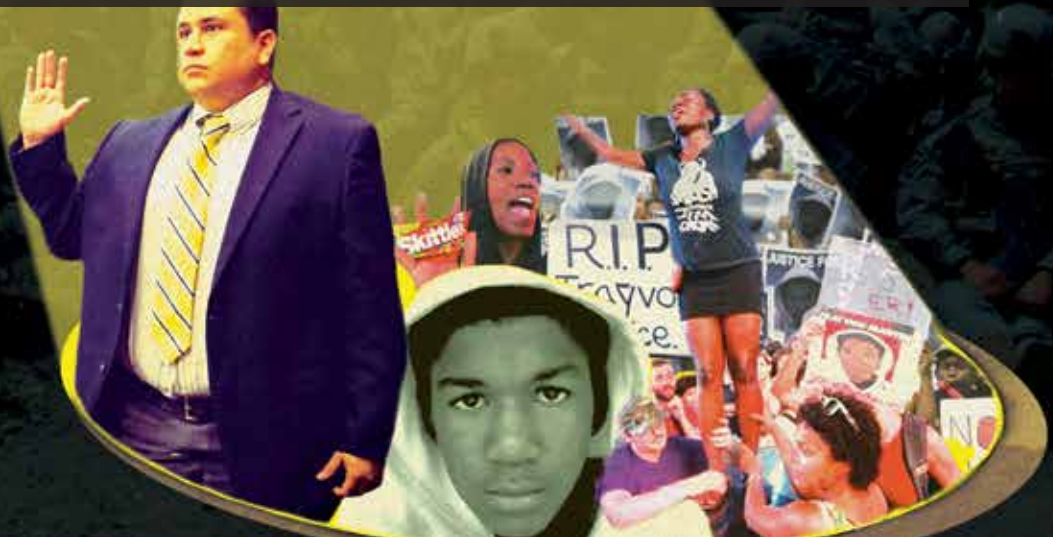

Ultimately, bombing the critical point holding the Russian’s Yakhont anti-ship missile, Israel is believed to have initiated the bombing via aircraft or a ship in the Mediterranean. According to the anonymous U.S. official who corresponded with CNN, “This attack was either by air raid or long-range missiles fired from boats in the Mediterranean.”

Now enter new reports surfacing from the Russian Defense Ministry on orders of Vladimir Putin that the largest military “state of full combat readiness” drill is taking place with around 160,000 troops ordered to report from all corners of the military. Specifically, the translated reports detail how Putin is calling together not just Armed Forces of Russia troops, but all forms of long-range aircraft, 70 naval ships, bomber and fighter aircraft, and so on.

According to a syndicated Russian announcement, “On Friday, during a meeting with Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu, Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered an unexpected military drill, urging all forces to enter a state of full combat readiness on the night of July 13.”

These reports say that Putin is essentially assembling the entire military in the largest such event since the Soviet Union. This is coming in from the Russian language version of Forbes and other Russian sources translated to English.

Is this massive “state of full combat readiness” initiated on July 13th just a training exercise with no further intention, or is it related to the attack by Israel on Russian-made missiles in Syria? Whether this is truly the initiation of a massive conflict between world powers or not, it’s certainly worth the attention of the media and general public. While it does take a lot of digging to sort through all of these Russian language announcements and get to the bottom of the story, it’s much more important than what George Zimmerman’s lawyers ate for breakfast this morning.

THE LIES ABOUT THE BOMBER

It's another example of why you should never trust the government.

Back in April federal officialdom told us Boston bombing suspect Dzhokar Tsarnaev was shot in the throat and unable to talk. The government trotted out Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick to confirm this fantasy story. He said Tsarnaev was in "serious but stable condition" and "not yet able to communicate yet."

Then we were fed a more theatric version. The young Tsarnaev, we were told, attempted to take his own life when supposedly trapped in a boat. "It is thought the teenager placed a gun in his mouth and pulled the trigger in a desperate bid to avoid capture and a possible death penalty," claimed The Mirror, Britain's version of the National Enquirer. "Reports say the bullet passed through his throat, just missing his spinal cord, and came out the back of his neck."

This Hollywood-esque version dovetailed nicely with the story that the evil Brothers Tsarnaev were engaged in a running gun battle with the cops, flinging home-made pressure cooker bombs at their brave pursuers as the pair attempted to escape the long arm of the law. Then we were told Dzhokar was being treated by Israeli doctors who "have abundant past experience treating victims of terror ... because they're from Israel." The Blaze reported, "Tsarnaev is in stable condition, but that because of wounds to his throat, he may never be able to speak again," feeding the fantasy.

In May, the story changed again. It was said Tsarnaev didn't have a bullet wound in his throat, but was cut. "I did see a throat injury. To me it looked more like a knife wound," said Officer Jeff Campbell of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority Transit Police SWAT Unit. "It wasn't a puncture hole. It was a slice where it was spread open, possibly a piece of shrapnel from one of the explosives that they were using the night before. It didn't look like a bullet wound to me. It looked like a cut of some kind." Campbell was supposedly part of the team that apprehended Tsarnaev, so if anybody knew about his wounds, it would be Campbell and his fellow SWAT officers. CNN later edited out Campbell's comment about the throat wound.

Now we have a photo of Tsarnaev allegedly surrendering. It was taken by a Massachusetts State Police photographer. CBS Boston reported on Thursday the photographer, Sgt. Sean Murphy, gave the photos to the Boston Magazine because he was upset by the Rolling Stone's recent "glamorized" cover photo of the suspected terrorist. Murphy is under investigation for releasing photos to the magazine.

Note the absence of a throat wound in the photo. The photo highlights the fact the government lied about Tsarnaev's throat wound, as the photo clearly shows. Is there anything else the government is lying about? Is it possible the entire event is a government contrived fiction?

The government no longer cares about the quality of its deception. In late July, a man we are told was Dzhokar appeared in court to plead not guilty to terrorism charges. However, according to a former wrestling teammate interviewed by the Boston Globe, the man in court "didn't look like" Tsarnaev. Moreover, the man brought into court had a thick accent and Tsarnaev does not, as a cell phone video of him interacting with a child reveals.

OFFICIAL BOSTON BOMBING NARRATIVE: A CAVALCADE OF LIES AND DISTORTION

From the outset, the official version of events surrounding the Boston bombing event consisted of a sketchy amalgamation of lies and fabrications that, like early versions of the 9/11 fairy tale, represented a work in progress.

The FBI first claimed the Brothers Tsarnaev were off the government's radar, a claim that was quickly refuted by the mother of Tamerlan and Dzhokhar Tsarnaev. Following interviews with Zubeidat Tsarnaev, the FBI was forced to concede it had talked with the suspects two years before the bombing at the Boston Marathon. The accusations against her sons, Zubeidat told the media, are "all lies and hypocrisy." She said of her eldest son, Tamerlan, that the CIA and the FBI were "controlling his every step."

Next, the government said Tamerlan was killed after the robbery of a 7-Eleven, a lie parroted faithfully by the establishment media. "With a bomb strapped to his chest, one of the Boston Marathon suspects was killed early Friday after he and his accomplice brother robbed a 7-Eleven, shot a police officer to death, carjacked an SUV, and hurled explosives in an extraordinary firefight with law enforcement," NBC News reported on April 19.

This fable is turned on its head by CNN footage of a naked Tamerlan in police custody.

Tamerlan's aunt said the man in the video was her nephew. A report by the Boston Globe also said the older Tsarnaev was in custody. Hours later, it was reported that Tamerlan was dead, leading to the inescapable conclusion that he was assassinated. Witnesses to the "shoot out" described it like something out of a Hollywood movie.

7-Eleven confirmed that the Brothers Tsarnaev did not rob the convenience store. "Margaret Chabris, the director of corporate communication at 7-Eleven, says the surveillance video of the crime was not taken at a 7-Eleven, and the suspect that did rob the 7-Eleven does not look like Tamerlan or Dzhokhar Tsarnaev," USA Today reported on April 19, 2013. "The suspect in the photos for that particular 7-Eleven robbery looks nothing like the suspects," Chabris told the newspaper. "The police or someone made a mistake. Someone was confused."

A mistake, or a shoddy attempt to fabricate a cover story for public consumption painting the brothers as ruthless and criminal terrorists? Following the purported attack, the corporate media has done somersaults to convince the public that the brothers are guilty, an effort recently underscored by a sensationalistic Rolling Stone magazine cover declaring Dzhokhar guilty prior to his day in court. "The overarching principle here should be that Dzhokhar Tsarnaev is entitled to a presumption of innocence until he is actually proven guilty," Glenn Greenwald wrote for The Guardian on April 22:

"As so many cases have proven — from accused (but exonerated) anthrax attacker Stephen Hatfill to accused (but exonerated) Atlanta Olympic bomber Richard Jewell to dozens, if not hundreds, of Guantanamo detainees accused of being the 'worst of the worst,' but who were guilty of nothing — people who appear to be guilty based on government accusations and trials-by-media are often completely innocent. Media-presented evidence is no substitute for due process and an adversarial trial."

Now that the official version has more or less gelled, and previous versions have found the Orwellian memory hole, the government will continue to use the suspicious event as another crucial milestone in its war on terror — a manufactured war now gone domestic, and therefore more pernicious than ever, requiring additional degradation of the Bill of Rights. Researchers who insist on pointing out the early inconsistencies and storyline alterations will be pegged as scurrilous conspiracy theorists little different from those who insisted the government's version of what happened on September 11, 2001, amounted to a not-too-carefully contrived tissue of lies.

Presidential Destruction of Political Opposition

On July 7, Rep. Mike Kelly, a Pennsylvania Republican, told Breitbart News that additional details forthcoming in the IRS scandal will reveal how the Obama administration used the tax agency as a political tool against its political enemies. "I think what we're going to find out and I think that the deeper part is not so much the Tea Party and the 'Patriot' and those people who were targeted, but the information that has been leaked," Kelly, who is a member of the House Ways and Means Committee currently investigating the scandal, told Breitbart in a telephone interview.

"The information that the IRS has on file on people goes pretty deep into personal lives. It is being leaked out and given to people for very specific political reasons. I think this is something that should be the most chilling thing for Americans to understand," Kelly explained. "This is a branch of government, and it is under the executive branch that can be used for a lot of different intimidation elements. Think of what these people have, think of what they have on everybody. If they leak that out to the right person at the right time in the right movement that's looking to do something, they can completely destroy individuals."

The Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration released in early May an audit report confirming the IRS used on behalf of the Obama Administration inappropriate criteria to target political enemies. Despite efforts by President Obama to distance himself from the accusations and limit damage arising from the revelations, Republicans have exploited the scandal for partisan advantage. In fact, both Democrats and Republicans routinely use not only the IRS, but a number of other federal agencies to engage in sundry witch hunts targeting their political opposition.

IRS as Political Truncheon

History demonstrates that using the IRS as a weapon against political enemies has proved irresistible for presidents, both Democrat and Republican. Democrat Franklin Roosevelt used the agency to go after newspapers opposed to his socialist New Deal. FDR had the IRS target Huey Long, Father Coughlin, and Republicans, such as former Treasury Secretary Andrew Mellon.

President Kennedy used the IRS to target the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, the American Enterprise Institute, the Foundation for Economic Education, and other groups.

"By directing tax audits at individuals and groups solely because of their political beliefs, [Kennedy's] Ideological Organizations Audit Project established a precedent for a far more elaborate program of targeting 'dissidents,'" states a 1976 report by the Senate Select Committee on Government Intelligence.

Richard Nixon created a Special Services Staff to go after "all IRS activities involving ideological, militant, subversive, radical, and similar type organizations." Nixon went so far as to pass his notorious enemies list on to the IRS in an effort to "use the available federal machinery to screw our political enemies," according to former White House counsel John Dean. Nixon's 1974 impeachment charged him with trying to gain "confidential information contained in income tax returns for purposes not authorized by law, and to cause, in violation of the constitutional rights of citizens, income tax audits, or other income tax investigations to be initiated or conducted in a discriminatory manner."

Following a report issued by the Democratic National Committee in 1995 attacking Bill Clinton's political enemies, the IRS went after the Heritage Foundation and The American Spectator magazine. Clinton accusers, including Paula Jones and Gennifer Flowers, were targeted with IRS audits.

In 1999, the Associated Press reported that "officials in the Democratic White House and members of both parties in Congress have prompted hundreds of audits of political opponents in the 1990s." Requests from Congress to audit political enemies were expedited, thus underscoring the fact the agency serves as a political weapon not only for presidents, but the entire political class. "Permitting congressmen to secretly and effortlessly sic G-men on whomever they pleased epitomized official Washington's contempt for average Americans and fair play. But because the abuse was bipartisan, there was little enthusiasm on Capitol Hill for an investigation," writes James Bovard for the Wall Street Journal.

FBI Terrorism Unleashed

In addition to the Internal Revenue Service, the government has used the Justice Department's criminal investigative body, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to attack political enemies. While the FBI has targeted political foes since its inception in 1908, known then simply as the Bureau of Investigation, the effort did not reach its apex until 1956 with the establishment of COINTELPRO, an acronym for Counter Intelligence Program.

Then director J. Edgar Hoover instructed the secret and illegal operation to "expose, disrupt, misdirect, discredit, or otherwise neutralize" the activities of largely legal political organizations, targeting at first socialists and communists, but in later years the so-called "New Left," anti-war, and "national liberation" activists, and the civil rights movement, notably the activities of Nobel Peace Prize recipient and founder of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Martin Luther King Jr.

"J. Edgar Hoover had decided to destroy the civil rights movement as it was considered a threat to the status quo," writes D.S. Wright. "As a result the FBI conducted surveillance on King looking for dirt to destroy his credibility. The FBI had a divide and conquer campaign within the civil rights movement and tried to sow division by false flag operations and anonymous communications to bring terror and paranoia to the activists."

Brian Glick, in his book War at Home, describes the methods used by the FBI to destroy the establishment's political adversaries. "When congressional investigations, political trials, and other traditional legal modes of repression failed to counter the growing movements, and even helped to fuel them, the FBI and police moved outside the law," writes Glick. "They resorted to the secret and systematic use of fraud and force to sabotage constitutionally protected political activity. Their methods ranged far beyond surveillance, amounting to a home front version of the covert action for which the CIA has become infamous throughout the world."

Glick summarizes techniques used by the FBI:

1) Infiltration: Agents and informers did not merely spy on political activists. Their main purpose was to discredit and disrupt. Their very presence served to undermine trust and scare off potential supporters. The FBI and police exploited this fear to smear genuine activists as agents.

2) Psychological Warfare from the Outside: The FBI and police used a myriad of other "dirty tricks" to undermine progressive movements. They planted false media stories and published bogus leaflets and other publications in the name of targeted groups. They forged correspondence, sent anonymous letters, and made anonymous telephone calls. They spread misinformation about meetings and events, set up pseudo movement groups run by government agents, and manipulated or strong-armed parents, employers, landlords, school officials, and others to cause trouble for activists.

3) Harassment through the Legal System: The FBI and police abused the legal system to harass dissidents and make them appear to be criminals. Officers of the law gave perjured testimony and presented fabricated evidence as a pretext for false arrests and wrongful imprisonment. They discriminatorily enforced tax laws and other government regulations and used conspicuous surveillance, "investigative" interviews, and grand jury subpoenas in an effort to intimidate activists and silence their supporters.

4) Extralegal Force and Violence: The FBI and police threatened, instigated, and conducted break-ins, vandalism, assaults, and beatings. The object was to frighten dissidents and disrupt their movements. In the case of radical Black and Puerto Rican activists (and later Native Americans), these attacks — including political assassinations — were so extensive, vicious, and calculated that they can accurately be termed a form of official "terrorism."

In 2012, documents received by the Partnership for Civil Justice Fund through a Freedom of Information Act request revealed the FBI had not terminated the program, as it claimed to have done in 1971. The documents detail a concerted effort by the FBI and the Department of Homeland Security, the latter ostensibly created to combat terrorism, to destroy and render politically ineffective the Occupy Wall Street movement. The documents released through the FOIA paint a picture of close collaboration between the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Forces, fusion centers, and state and local law enforcement around the country.

In addition to massive surveillance, the FBI considered assassinating Occupy Wall Street activists, a plan that harks back to the darkest days of COINTELPRO when members of the Black Panthers and the American Indian Movement were targeted for elimination.

"Most disturbing of all, there is talk of the government being ready to 'engage in sniper attacks against protesters in Houston, Texas, if deemed necessary' and perhaps needing to formulate a plan 'to kill the leadership [of the protest groups] via suppressed sniper rifles,'" writes Tom McNamara for Counterpunch.

CIA Violates Its Charter

Although the CIA's charter states it cannot operate within the United States, the agency has done so on numerous occasions, most notably under Operation CHAOS. As a result of the CIA's work with émigré organizations in the 1950s under President Eisenhower, a number of proprietary companies, fronts, and covers were established for the purpose of conducting illegal intelligence activity within the United States.

"So widespread did they become that President Johnson allowed the then CIA Director, John McCone, to create in 1964 a new super-secret branch called the Domestic Operations Division (DOD), the very title of which mocked the explicit intent of Congress to prohibit CIA operations inside the U.S. This disdain for Congress permeated the upper echelons of the CIA," writes Verne Lyon, a former CIA undercover operative.

"With the DCS, the DOD, the old boy network, and the CIA Office of Security operating without congressional oversight or public knowledge, all that was needed to bring it together was a perceived threat to the national security and a presidential directive unleashing the dogs," Lyon explains. "That happened in 1965 when President Johnson instructed McCone to provide an independent analysis of the growing problem of student protest against the war in Vietnam. Prior to this, Johnson had to rely on information provided by the FBI, intelligence that he perceived to be slanted by Hoover's personal views, which often ignored the facts."

Two sub programs under Operation CHAOS, Project RESISTANCE and Project MERRIMAC, subverted the anti-war movement from within by inserting moles and agents provocateur.

"Under both Projects, the CIA infiltrated agents into domestic groups of all types and activities," Lyon continues. "It used its contacts with local police departments and their intelligence units to pick up its 'police skills' and began in earnest to pull off burglaries, illegal entries, use of explosives, criminal frame-ups, shared interrogations, and disinformation. CIA teams purchased sophisticated equipment for many starved police departments, and in return got to see arrest records, suspect lists, and intelligence reports. Many large police departments, in conjunction with the CIA, carried out illegal, warrantless searches of private properties."

The Surveillance and Subversion State

These are only the most egregious and publicly known efforts by the government to kill off political activism the establishment considers a threat to maintaining the political status quo and to continue to expand the national security state. Doubtlessly, there are more we do not know about.

Whistleblower Edward Snowden has demonstrated that the government is interested in nothing short of creating a nightmarish Stasi surveillance state capable of monitoring and cataloguing not only the financial and social activity of the American people, but their political behavior as well. In fact, undermining potential adversaries and destroying their ability to organize politically is the primary goal of Prism and other such programs.

The IRS scandal pales in comparison when stacked up against COINTELPRO, Operation CHAOS, and other lesser-known programs run out of the Pentagon and intelligence operations attached to any number of federal agencies, including the Department of Energy (the Office of Intelligence and Counterintelligence) and the Treasury Department (Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence).

The overblown IRS scandal represents a small and basically feeble attempt to sidetrack the Tea Party movement, which is now more or less a subsidiary of the Republican Party and, beyond partisan politics, does not pose a serious threat to the establishment. The so-called scandal is a manifestation of the False Left-Right Paradigm and its endless internal, sectarian warfare designed to sidetrack meaningful political change. Leaders of the Tea Party movement should be thankful the FBI did not decide to assassinate its leaders as it apparently did with the Occupy Wall Street movement.

FBI Planned to Kill Occupy Leaders

Murdering Political Activists is Business as Usual for Ruthless Ruling Elite.

According to journalist David Lindorff, the FBI had plans to assassinate the leaders of the now moribund Occupy movement. Lindorff cites a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request filed by the Washington, DC-based Partnership for Civil Justice Fund.

The redacted document obtained from the FBI in Houston states:

"An identified [DELETED] as of October planned to engage in sniper attacks against protestors (sic) in Houston, Texas if deemed necessary. An identified [DELETED] had received intelligence that indicated the protestors in New York and Seattle planned similar protests in Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Austin, Texas. [DELETED] planned to gather intelligence against the leaders of the protest groups and obtain photographs, then formulate a plan to kill the leadership via suppressed sniper rifles."

The FBI confirmed that the document is legitimate.

For the astute student of history — real history, not the massaged version proffered by the ruling elite — news of an FBI plot to murder political activists does not come as a surprise. Recent history provides numerous examples, most notably during the 1960s and 1970s when the FBI's COINTELPRO was in full swing.

"When congressional investigations, political trials, and other traditional legal modes of repression failed to counter the growing movements, and even helped to fuel them, the FBI and police moved outside the law," writes Brian Glick in his book, War at Home. "They resorted to the secret and systematic use of fraud and force to sabotage constitutionally protected political activity. Their methods ranged far beyond surveillance, amounting to a home front version of the covert action for which the CIA has become infamous throughout the world."

In addition to psychological warfare and dirty tricks, the government engaged in extralegal force and violence. "The FBI and police threatened, instigated, and themselves conducted break-ins, vandalism, assaults, and beatings," Glick writes. "The object was to frighten dissidents and disrupt their movements. In the case of radical Black and Puerto Rican activists (and later Native Americans), these attacks, including political assassinations, were so extensive, vicious, and calculated that they can accurately be termed a form of official 'terrorism.'"

"The FBI's techniques were often extreme, with the agency being complicit in the murder and assassination of political dissidents, or having people sent away to prison for life," adds Tom MacNamara.

COINTELPRO terrorism "enabled the FBI and police to eliminate the leaders of mass movements without undermining the image of the United States as a democracy, complete with free speech and the rule of law," Glick continues. "Charismatic orators and dynamic organizers were covertly attacked and 'neutralized' before their skills could be transferred to others and stable structures established to carry on their work. Malcolm X was killed in a 'factional dispute' which the FBI took credit for having 'developed' in the Nation of Islam. Martin Luther King, Jr. was the target of an elaborate FBI plot to drive him to suicide and replace him 'in his role of the leadership of the Negro people' with conservative Black lawyer Samuel Pierce (later named to Reagan's cabinet). Many have come to view King's eventual assassination (and Malcolm's as well) as itself a domestic covert operation." According to the official narrative, COINTELPRO was terminated in 1971, but this is obviously not the case.

In regard to the Occupy Wall Street movement, the Partnership for Civil Justice Fund, FOIA documents reveal the program is alive and well. The "FBI was treating the Occupy Wall Street movement, from its inception, as a potential criminal and domestic terrorist threat," writes McNamara. The close collaboration between the Department of Homeland Security and officials in 40 different cities — first disclosed by Oakland mayor Jean Quan — in the determined (and ultimately successful) effort to destroy the largely peaceful movement demonstrates how serious the federal government is about deflecting any challenge to its monopoly on political power.

The assassination of Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, Fred Hampton, and other activists, journalists, and political figures considered threats to the status quo demonstrate the viability of murder as a political tool for the elite. As Brian Glick notes, the CIA has used assassination abroad for decades and its importation into the United States simply reveals how serious they are to control any effective political opposition, especially when activism has the potential to effectuate political change or, as in the case of Occupy Wall Street, result in a political awakening of millions of people.

Peter Santa-Maria, an artist, high school teacher, and Infowarrior, crossed our path in the middle of July as a caller on the Alex Jones Show. He impressed us with his energy and talent, along with his steadily growing momentum, due in part to a film by independent news and activist website WeAreChange.org featuring Santa-Maria's artwork. His work successfully melds his passion for freedom and expression with a challenge to action by way of combining pop-culture references with themes of our current degenerative society and political system. It is simultaneously playfully irreverent, visually intriguing, and mentally stimulating. His work can be found at attacktheplanet.com, a website he shares with friend and fellow artist Brian Reedy.

Artist Profile

INFOWARS MAGAZINE: HOW DID YOU GET STARTED IN PRODUCING ART?

Peter Santa-Maria: I grew up reading comics and watching cartoons like most kids. I always knew I wanted to be involved in producing them one day. As I got older, I became involved in the music industry, and I saw the reality behind all of the glitz and glam. It wasn't something I wanted to be a part of long term, and it gave me a perspective on people that I did not have before. I needed to succeed or fail on my own merits, so I rediscovered my love for visual art and started drawing, painting, and sculpting 24/7 until I felt like I had the chops to exhibit.

WHERE DO YOU FIND INSPIRATION FOR YOUR WORK?

In terms of style, my biggest influences are comic book illustrators like Mike Mignola, Frank Miller, Eric Powell, Ryan Ottley, James Jean, and Scott Morse. Those are the guys that I look at over and over again. Other contemporary artists that inspire me are Dan McCall and Brian Reedy. Historically, I love Honore Daumier, who was imprisoned for his depiction of King Louis Philippe in a print titled Gargantua. Everyone look him up.

In terms of theme, I just look around at what's going on. I feel a responsibility to use my skills for fighting corruption and injustice. Until I create an image that communicates my thoughts on an issue, I can't do or think about anything else, but I always look to satirize and poke fun at authority in the process. I ask myself, "How can I get people who are apathetic or opposed to my point of view to see where I am coming from, especially when what I am trying to say has been labeled extreme by others?" Humor is the answer. When everyone is laughing, everyone is experiencing commonality, and therefore, more likely to listen to what each other has to say. It works almost every single time.

HOW DID YOU GET INVOLVED WITH WOODCUT PRINTING FROM CARTOONING AND ILLUSTRATION?

I pick the technique based on the image and my plan for it, but I love working in different media. I started woodcuts after meeting Brian Reedy. Watching him work makes you want to do the same. It also turned out to be a relatively cheap way to make many reproductions all by hand. Woodcuts lend themselves to political art I make because you can see the artist's hand in the work. We are in a time where people want to go back to the organic, the hand-made, the down-to-earth. These prints meet that desire.

A VIDEO OF YOURS SHOWCASING YOUR WORK WAS RECENTLY FEATURED ON WE ARE CHANGE. HOW DID YOU GET INVOLVED WITH WE ARE CHANGE, AND WHAT DO YOU HOPE TO COME FROM THE EXPOSURE?

I am incredibly grateful to Luke Rudkowski and We Are Change. I've always been a fan of their work. My friend and filmmaker Christopher Delamo of RedPillPhilosophy.com was working with We Are Change prior, so he told me there was a chance they'd launch the video. He's another example of just getting active in your own capacity to affect change. The only thing I hope that will come of this video and the attention my work has been receiving is that others will start doing whatever it is they do well to bring awareness to the issues we all feel are important. It's amazing how powerful we all are.

WHAT RESPONSES ARE YOU GETTING FROM YOUR ARTWORK?

It has been incredible! We sold out of a small 'zine I made with Brian Reedy illustrating crazy current event articles. I stuck to my guns and sold a painting to a big-time art collector. It was of a fat kid with tumor creatures and scientists talking to Donald Rumsfeld about how aspartame is dangerous. Rumsfeld says something about how that's perfect for killing some kids. Abrasive and offensive, but that is what makes me laugh and it's based in reality. That collector gave me a highly coveted space in the Wynwood Art District here in Miami, and I had my first solo exhibition. Sold a ton of controversial political paintings with large price tags and I haven't looked back. One guy told me he wanted to set my prints on fire. I told him to buy them first.

WHAT CAUSED YOU TO PRODUCE POLITICALLY FUELED ARTWORK?

My grandfather had to flee his home and journalism career in Cuba with his wife and two young daughters in the bottom of a ship after Fidel Castro took over. My stepfather was in prison for over a year because he made artwork and films protesting the Castro regime and showing the truth about life in Cuba under the despot. Since I can remember, I have had a disdain for tyrants and unlawful authority in general. I was disconnected from current events and politics for a long time, thinking that there was nothing someone like me could do. I watched the Ron Paul debates in 2007, and instantly, everything came into focus. This was the first time anyone from the government was saying something that made sense to me. After that, a group of friends and I attended political happenings to hand out literature on Ron Paul. I was at a famous Cuban restaurant in Miami called Versailles for a Rudy Giuliani event. I sat down in the café and had just ordered some food near where Giuliani was going to pander when I felt two giant hands grab me by the back of my shirt collar and rip me out of my seat. The voice with a thick New York accent said, "You can eat later!" Before I could blink, I was thrown out of the restaurant's side entrance and locked out by some enormous, plain-clothes goon. I was wearing a t-shirt that simply said, "Listen to Ron Paul," which I'm sure was what got me tossed. By the time I was able to get back in through a bunch of rented security guards, they had escorted that nerdy ghoul Giuliani out of there. It was just like the stories I had heard growing up about Cuba, but here in the free country. It's a constant source of motivation. There are Giuliani's everywhere. Disgusting.

YOU TEACH ADVANCED ART CLASSES FOR HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS. DO YOU ENCOURAGE YOUR STUDENTS TO QUESTION AUTHORITY?

Of course, though I try to be clever about it. I look for the moments when lessons can be taught organically, so I can help them interpret a situation in their own way, as opposed to telling them that they have to rebel. Some kids are dealing with things that are much more immediate than geo-political events. They tend to disconnect themselves from the outside world because their smaller world is much more pressing. Most are still searching for their identity, and I try to help them find at least a part of it. I would say, however, that most of them are skeptical of anyone who would tell them what to do. The first thing they see in my classroom when they walk in everyday is a giant poster of Gandhi's head that says "DISOBEY."

SINCE YOU NOTICE THAT MANY STUDENTS HAVE MORE IMMEDIATELY PRESSING CONCERNS, IS THERE HOPE IN YOUR HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS FOR BROADER POLITICAL AND SOCIETAL CHANGES?

Yes! They are brilliant, creative, energetic, and cannot wait to get out into the world. They are empowered through their craft and skill. They aren't going to take crap from anyone. The world is going to come at them fast when they graduate and they will be ready. My students question everything. My school is in a rough neighborhood, but these kids have their heads up and are making great work and winning awards. I know that more than a few are going to make great artwork and blow people's minds! They will affect change through their intelligence, kindness, courage and ability. I love them.

WHAT IS THE POLITICAL CLIMATE IN MIAMI THAT YOU ARE TRYING TO COUNTER?

I love Miami. I don't think I could live anywhere else. There is so much culture and diversity. The art in Miami is world famous. Every year, the Art Basel show brings people from the four corners of the Earth. The weather is great; the food is great; the only thing that ruins Miami are the corrupt local politicians. We meet a lot of great people who were doing everything in their power to improve things locally, but it is obvious that the local mafia are using the people's resources to climb to higher positions in politics. Everyone is dirty, I'm telling you. The thing with the local politics is they have a lot of money behind the corruption here. When you try and go up against them they start to rage like creatures from a horror film. They're just a bunch of dorks though. We have no money and no history and have affected a lot of change, turning a lot of people's heads in different directions. I feel that I affect more positive change now through my interactions with my students and my artwork, which allows me to meet new people outside of politics that are where I once was — apathetic. I encourage people to get active, and I am teaching young people the skills. I feel like I am helping to build an army of good people.

SINCE I CAN REMEMBER, I HAVE HAD A DISDAIN FOR TYRANTS AND UNLAWFUL AUTHORITY IN GENERAL. I WAS DISCONNECTED FROM CURRENT EVENTS AND POLITICS FOR A LONG TIME, THINKING THAT THERE WAS NOTHING SOMEONE LIKE ME COULD DO.

Imagine a family member or loved one faced with a Hurricane, Flood, Earthquake, fire, man made destruction or some other emergency situation. Wouldn't it be reassuring to know that you would have a place for them to stay. Now imagine if you had a disaster in your own area and it was time to G.O.O.D (get out of dodge). Do you have a place to go? Are you prepared to leave if things get bad enough? People around the country are realizing that these and other scenarios are more and more likely to happen. What if these things were to happen in unbearable conditions like, extreme cold, or extreme heat. You would need something reliable that can handle extreme conditions. Your solution needs to be self contained and fully functional off the grid.

We introduce you to Timberline Range Camps. The Survivalist Housing Solution! While many types of "bug out" and survival shelters (like underground "bunkers") are becoming increasingly popular, many are recognizing the value in making a range camp their primary investment for emergency shelter.

Explosive New Documentary Uncovers the Secrets of Mind Control

EDITORIAL PICK

From Free Mind Films, the creators of “A Noble Lie: Oklahoma City 1995,” comes State of Mind: the Psychology of Control. The film delves into the shocking agendas at work, dragging to light suppressed historical and current programs meant to control human behavior. From the ancient roots of manipulation to its maturity in the psychological experiments of government intelligence agencies, “State of Mind” reveals much of what we believe to be true as deliberate deception. Driving home the dreadful price of our ignorance, the film exposes the global elite’s systematic plan to implant lies into our consciousness and erect a tyranny over the minds of men.

Intensely researched and brimming with captivating interviews, “State of Mind” tells the story of how we have been manipulated, conned, and subjugated since the beginning of man’s recorded history. From cradle to grave our parents, peers, institutions and society inform our values and behaviors but, this process has been hijacked. “State of Mind” examines the science of control that has evolved over generations to keep us firmly in place so that dictators, power brokers, and corporate puppeteers may profit from our ignorance and slavery. From the anvil of compulsory schooling to media and entertainment, we are kept in perpetual bondage to the ideas that shape our actions.

“State of Mind” features interviews with some of the nation’s most recognizable and knowledgeable writers, filmmakers, and activists, including Alex Jones, Jon Rappoport, G. Edward Griffin, Charlotte Iserbyt, Dr. Colin Ross, Dr. Eldon Taylor, Richard Grove, Craig Roberts, Doug Valentine, Kurt Haskell, Bruce Levine, and Anthony Schaeffer.

Are we prepared for a new paradigm? Will we choose our own paths or have one selected for us? “State of Mind” unveils the answers that may decide whether humankind will fulfill its destiny or be forever shackled to its own creation.

America's Artificial Rift: The Two Party System

On any given day, you can find a news story that focuses on the conflict between Democrats and Republicans, or Group A and Group B. These groups could be anything, but as long as they are touted as being the opposite of each other, they will clash. When one party supports a bill, the other tends to oppose it. This holds true for both sides, creating a never-ceasing battle over political parties, as opposed to policy.

The change in each party's fundamental policies has been warped into an infinitesimally minute amount of distinction from one another. When one does not agree with the "Republican" stance, they generally lean towards a "Democratic" stance. The guise of the two parties creates a false sense of freedom and liberation from a structured ideal. The Soviet Union's single party system was a failure due to its inability to withstand a dissident attack. The United States two-party system is simply the post-beta form of the Soviet-style political spectrum, with the guise of liberty upon its aging fangs.

The word paradigm (paradigma), compounded from its Greek root word δείχνω "to show," accurately describes the dimension between the left and right party. This paradigm requires a vice grip of social ideology held together for stability. A single party's influence can break without a backboard to cater towards any dissidence. Two parties can stand up against one another to create a more powerful structure, both geometrically and intellectually, that can withstand intense dissidence from each party for one reason: the rebellion of the first party's ideals are reciprocated by the second.

The war between Left and Right diminishes the focus on real issues. A frighteningly large number of people will make all their decisions based upon their party leaders. The debate turns into Left versus Right, instead of what is best for the country. The mainstream media loves to turn everything into a matter of "party wars," instead of discussing the actual issue at its core.

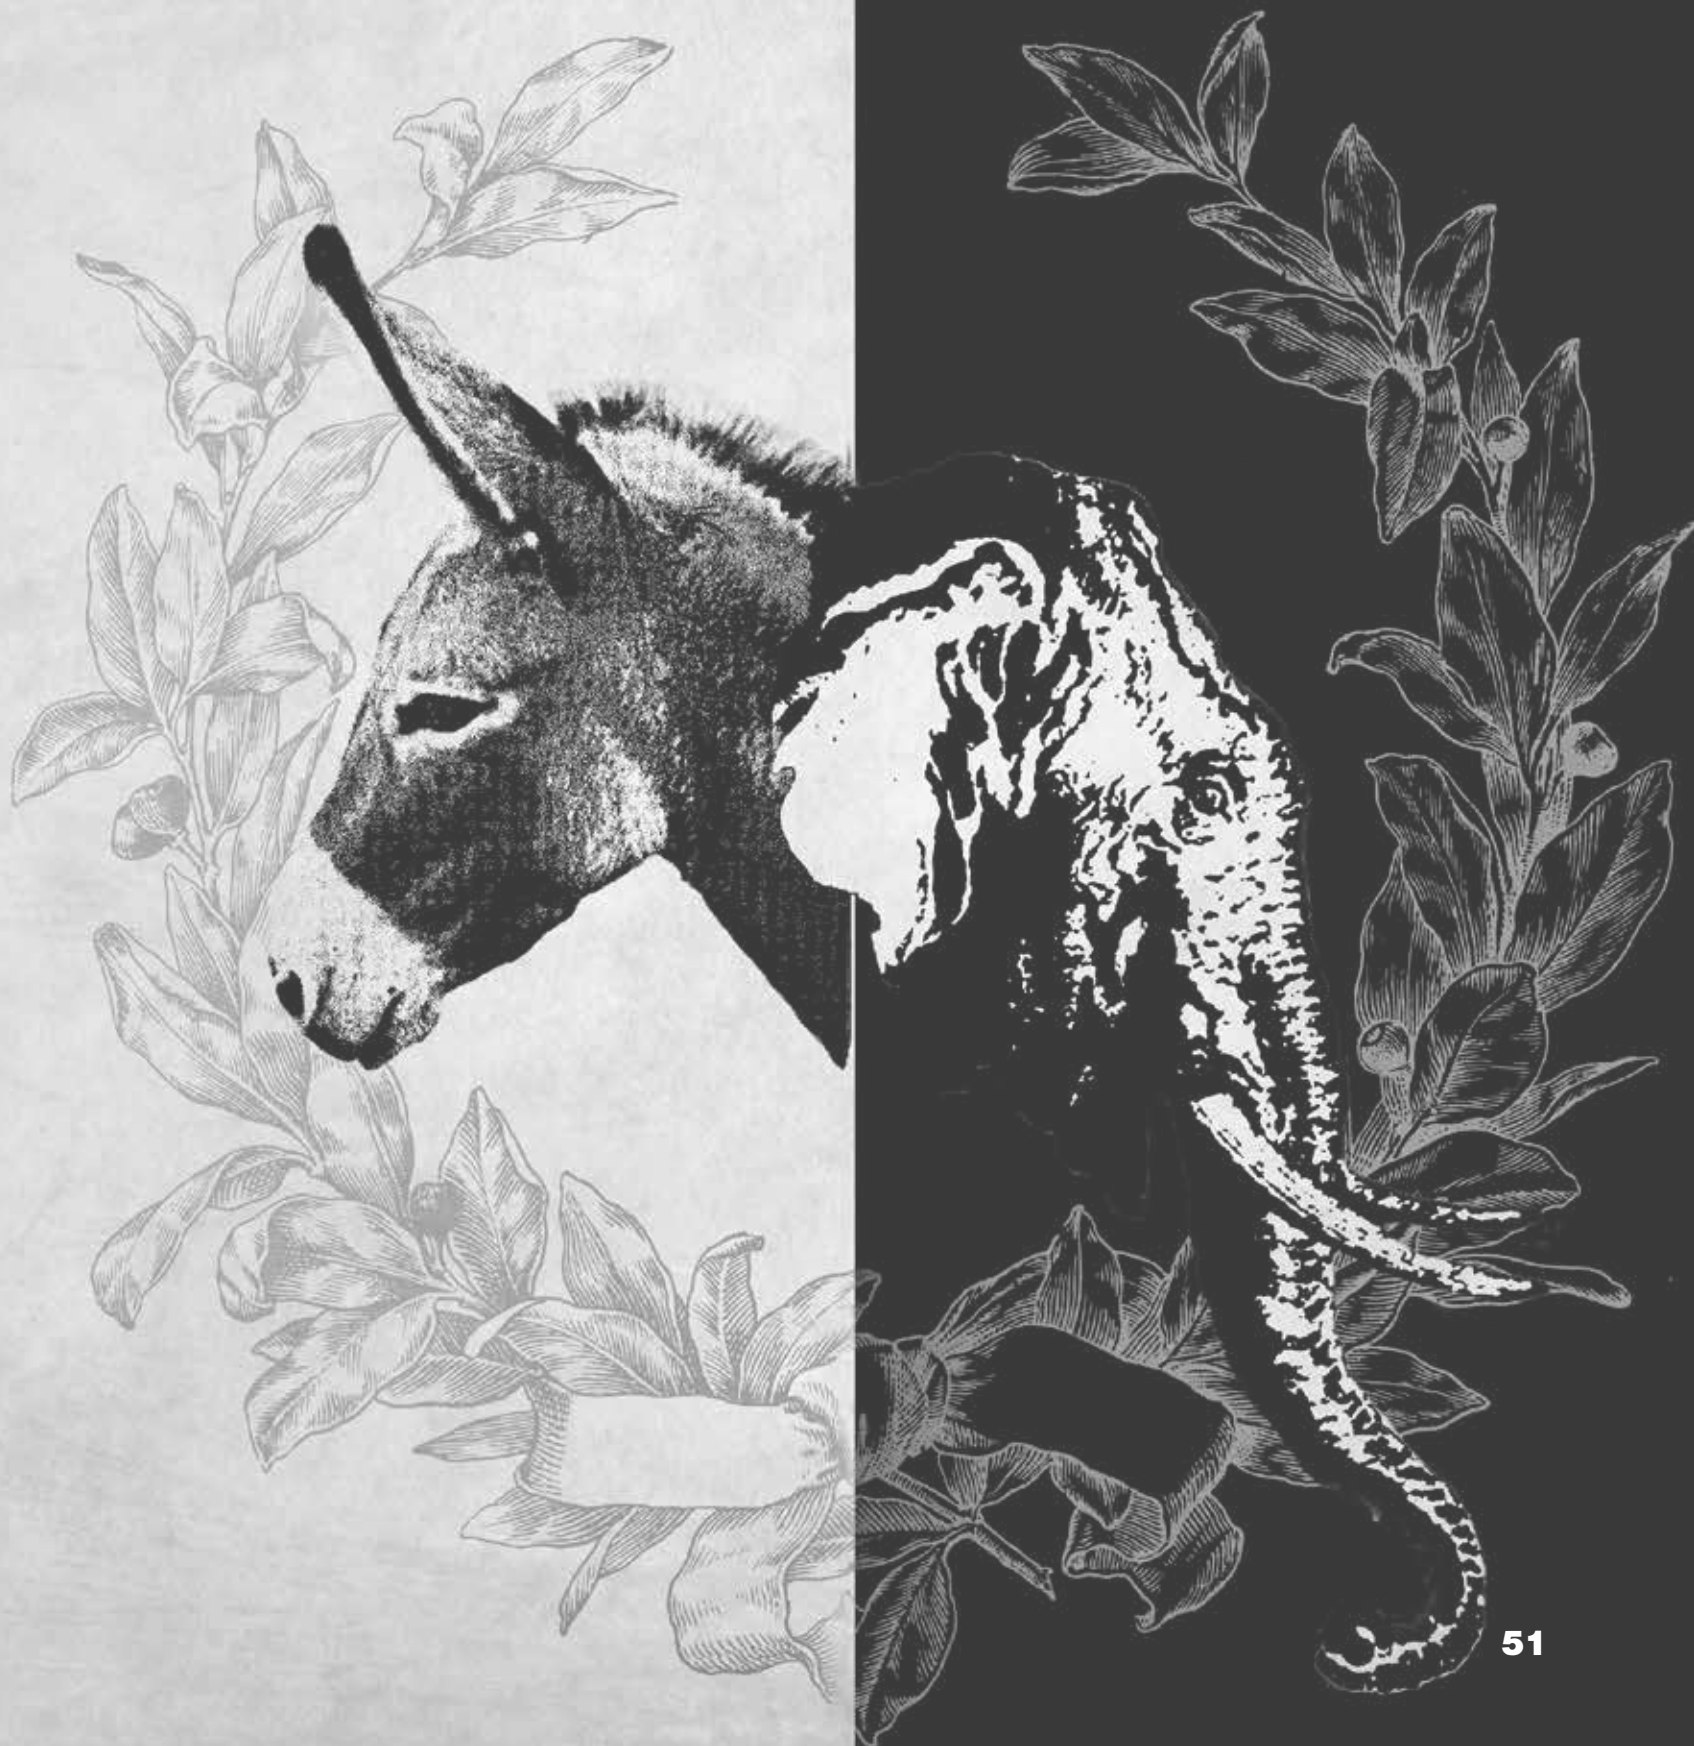

Instead of thinking "Left" or "Right," think about it from a human perspective. What will this do to our country? How will it affect me? How will it affect my neighbors? Imagine for a moment that you go to a used car dealership and search around for a nice car. You find a car in decent condition you like. You ask about the price, and the salesman says it will cost you $95,000.

In this case, most people would first investigate the true value of the car before purchasing it. While it seems completely logical to find the true value of the car, many do not take this metaphorical step when it comes down to Left versus Right. Placing blind trust in the leaders of a political party is just like trusting the used-car salesman to give you the best price. Find out the truth for yourself, as it's the only way to truly find out what's going on.

The mainstream media loves to take legitimate topics and turn them into a battle between political parties. A perfect example is the healthcare bill. Even though it has ridiculous policy changes, and a eugenics-based provision system, it is still turned into a Left-versus-Right issue by the media. Luckily people are beginning to see through this false two-party system. The mainstream media's deception is wearing off quite rapidly as the public begins to realize that they are being duped.

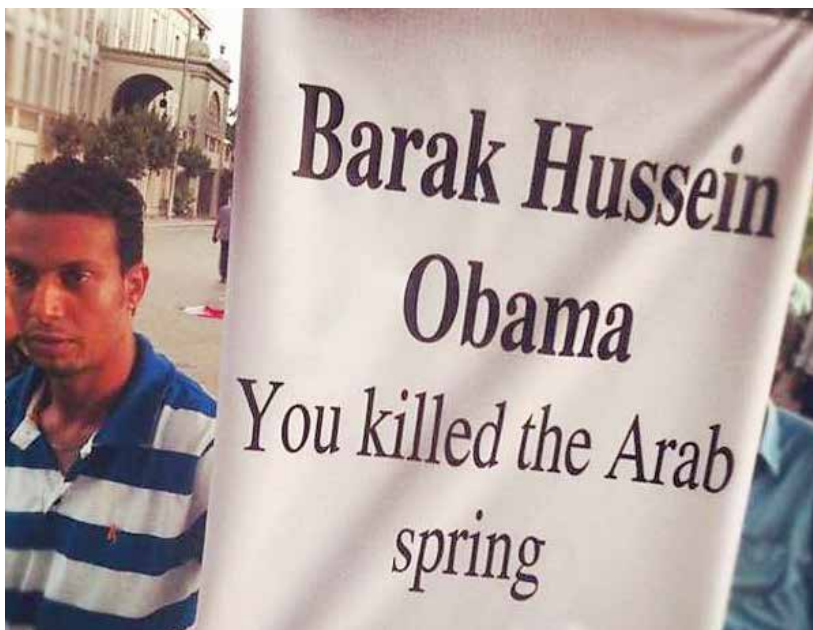

You do not have time to waste on petty arguments that center around the false "party wars." Use your time to get real information out, like the implications of the healthcare bill or the shocking dangers of vaccinations. True patriotism is to have thoughts that do not derive from the structured and targeting news media, or the most famous political puppet in your region. Realize that regardless of which party the current political figurehead is affiliating himself with, he is still the same as the previous leader. It is a vicious cycle that continues to this day. The difference is that now the people are waking up to this cycle and opposing it.

EGYPT IS AWAKE

U.S. Media Ignored Anti- Obama Fervor

UNLIKE IN SYRIA, WHERE A MILITANT-LED INSURRECTION WAS HYPED AS A DEMOCRATIC UPRISING, THE LARGEST MASS PROTEST IN HUMAN HISTORY WAS MET WITH DEAFENING SILENCE FROM THE WHITE HOUSE

Images seldom broadcast on mainstream media networks revealed a wave of anti-Obama fervor throughout Egypt as demonstrators blamed the White House for helping to install Mohamed Morsi, the Muslim Brotherhood leader who was toppled by the Egyptian military on July 3. The protests in Egypt before Morsi was deposed were largely characterized by the media as representing an even split between pro-government Muslim Brotherhood advocates and the anti-Morsi opposition movement, despite the fact that the anti-Morsi demonstrations have been far larger. However, one aspect of the demonstrations that has been almost completely ignored is the fact that Egyptians firmly lay the blame for Morsi's calamitous year in office at the feet of the White House.

Egyptians are fully cognizant of the fact that the Obama administration played a key role in contriving the revolution that toppled former President Mubarak. Their signs also condemn the role of Anne Patterson, the U.S. Ambassador to Egypt. As Infowars.com previously covered, the 2011 revolution in Egypt was far from a grass roots uprising, given that its organization was aided by establishment NGOs like Freedom House (linked to the CIA) and National Endowment for Democracy (NED). Despite supporting Mubarak for decades, the U.S. abandoned him and threw its support behind the Muslim Brotherhood when Mubarak rejected U.S. attempts to establish military bases inside the country and seize control of Egypt's communications networks.

Mohamed Morsi oversaw the implementation of a dictatorship in Egypt that rivaled that crafted by his autocratic predecessor. After enshrining Shariah law in the newly drafted constitution, Morsi granted himself sweeping powers to introduce any law and made himself immune from judicial oversight. Eric Trager, a fellow at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, told CBC News that Morsi was "on paper the most powerful Egyptian leader since the pharaoh."

Unlike in Syria, where a militant-led insurrection was hyped as a democratic uprising, the largest mass protest in human history was met with deafening silence from the White House. The only official reference to Egypt came from Secretary of State John Kerry, whose statement failed to address what was actually happening and instead centered on the weather conditions in Tahrir Square.

The Hidden Horrors of Genetically-Modified Foods

TOXIC TASTE

Public knowledge and awareness of genetically-engineered (GE) foods or genetically-modified organisms (GMO) has been steadily building for years now, but California's Proposition 37 introduced last year left even more people wondering what GMOs were and why it was such a big deal they be labeled. Proposition 37 made the ballot last November through a petition of signatures from California residents.

If passed, according to voterguide.com, the proposition would have required labeling on "food sold to consumers made from plants or animals with genetic material changed in specific ways." This would have prohibited marketing such foods as "natural."

Even though polls showed that Californians overwhelmingly supported Prop 37, the legislation still failed by 6 percent of the vote. The failure was due in part to massive campaign dollars raised and used by giant corporations like Coca-Cola, PepsiCo, Kraft Foods, and Kellogg, who helped raise over $43 million dollars, while the grassroots campaign raised a mere $9 million.

The campaign waged against Prop 37 spread a slew of ugly deceptive lies attempting to persuade the public into voting against the proposition. One of the major lies told by the big lobbyists was that Californians would see their grocery bills increase by at least $600 a month. Another deceitful tactic included a mailer sent out to voters using a Food and Drug Administration (FDA) seal that fooled the recipients into thinking the FDA was against the measure.

Despite the fail of Prop 37, many states, like Connecticut and Maine, have since moved towards enacting their own regulations on labeling GMOs. However, there's a catch. The states can't move forward with the law until four neighboring states pass similar laws. Clearly this puts a damper on the victories.

Americans took another blow on March 26 when President Obama surreptitiously signed the Farmer Assurance Provision, commonly referred to as the Monsanto Protection Act, into law while the public was conveniently fixated on other distracting publicized controversial topics.

The Monsanto Protection Act bars federal courts from being able to halt the sale or planting of GE seeds. Food Democracy Now!, a grassroots movement of 650,000 farmers and citizens, claims, "it's basically an ATM machine and a corporate handout to Monsanto that puts every farmer and consumer at risk."

WHY ALL THE FUSS OVER THE RIGHT TO HAVE OUR FOODS LABELED?

Well, to start, cancer has gone from the tenth cause of death to the second in just over fifteen years. Other health problems such as infertility, obesity, diabetes, food allergies, and autism have all seen massive increases since GMOs entered the market.

Biotech companies like Monsanto, Dupont, and Dow claim that GM seeds are better because they withstand extreme weather conditions, offer increased yield and are more nutritious. However, these are blatant lies, and in all actuality, they have been found to perform worse than conventional seeds, and are not only unhealthy, but deadly for humans and animals alike.

When genetically-modified plants produce their own insecticide, the same poison gets passed on to the consumer. These poisons are then ingested into the blood stream and do not only stay present for lengths of time, but have the capability of reproducing inside you. This means that your own body can become an insecticide-producing factory.

In addition, the plants are also sprayed with heavy doses of harsh chemicals. Roundup, one of the main chemicals used, has been proven to cause hormone disruption, DNA damage, cancer, birth defects, and neurological disorders. Instead of warding off weeds, it has actually caused super-weeds and super-bugs to develop that are resistant to herbicides and pesticides and are still destroying crops.

Ingesting the poisons found in GM foods causes your cells to lose their identity and fail to recall their function. Once cells lose their functionality, they can no longer provide your organs with the instructions needed to operate. These frightening side-effects are the reason many states are finally rushing to, at the very least, label GMOs, so that people have the freedom to make a choice regarding food that won't cause cancer, infertility, or any other horrifying disease.

Not to worry though because Monsanto swears their products are safe. How do they know? Well, they've employed their own scientists to conduct their own short term studies that say GM foods are completely safe. To the contrary, studies done independently (and outside of the U.S., because Monsanto has made it illegal for anyone else in the country to test their products) have had quite different results.

For example, the longest running study, totaling two years of experimentation, was conducted in France and published last year. The results were scarier than you can imagine.

The French study involved 200 rats with a life span of two years. Researchers investigated how a diet of Monsanto's Roundup Ready corn affected their health. According to Mother Earth News, the study separated the rats into ten groups, of which "three had part of their standard diet replaced at varying levels with Roundup Ready corn that had been treated with Roundup in the field; three received the same feed protocol, but with untreated Roundup-Ready corn; three ate no GM corn, but had tiny amounts of Roundup herbicide in their drinking water; and one control group ate two-thirds standard rat chow and one-third non-GM corn. Each group contained ten females and ten males."

The results revealed disturbing "severe adverse health effects," including the development of mammary tumors, as well as kidney and liver damage, which led to premature death. Most of the side-effects only became apparent after 90 days. Conveniently, Monsanto's longest study of side-effects concluded at 90 days.

Towards the end of the study, researchers found that "50 to 80 percent of the female rats had developed large tumors, compared with only 30 percent developing tumors in the control group. In males, liver congestion and necrosis were 2.5 to 5.5 times higher than in the control group, and there were 1.3 to 2.3 times more instances of kidney disease. Overall, among the rats receiving GM corn and/or Roundup, up to 50 percent of males and 70 percent of females died prematurely, compared with only 30 percent and 20 percent in the control group."

Some professionals argue that rats aren't suitable test subjects because humans are simply too different biologically and far more complex. However, nearly every product we use today is either first tested on rats or some other type of mammal before granted approval for humans. Humans aren't the only ones adversely affected by GM food though. Recently, farmers have been understandably upset about mass die-offs and infertility occurring in their livestock.

Livestock news source Cattle Network says Iowa farmer Jerry Rosman started giving his pigs "GMO corn in feed in 1997 without trouble, but things changed in 2000 when he switched to a different company's genetics with a new genetically modified trait. Starting in 2000, most of Rosman's animals were unable to reproduce with a low sperm count in males and females showing false pregnancies. The pigs that were reproducing had smaller litters. By adjusting the type of corn used, Rosman concluded the corn with the genetically modified trait he started using in 2000 was causing the problem. Continued losses and his shrinking herd forced him to close his farm two years later." Some of Rosman's pigs even gave birth to empty bags of water.

THESE FRIGHTENING SIDE-EFFECTS ARE THE REASON MANY STATES ARE FINALLY RUSHING TO, AT THE VERY LEAST, LABEL GMOS, SO THAT PEOPLE HAVE THE FREEDOM TO MAKE A CHOICE REGARDING FOOD THAT WON'T CAUSE CANCER, INFERTILITY, OR ANY OTHER HORRIFYING DISEASE.

A 2006 publication from the International Service for Acquisition of Agri-Biotech Applications (ISAAA) assures that GM corn grain used for feeding livestock has received extensive testing and undergoes a long approval process. "Feeding trials have been conducted to examine the safety and efficacy of GM feeds for farm livestock. Based on these studies, there is no evidence of significantly altered nutritional composition, deleterious effects, or the occurrence of transgenic DNA or protein in animal products derived from animals fed with GM feed ingredients." However, a second study conducted by a group of scientists lead by Dr. Judy Carman of the Institute of Health and Environmental Research in Australia has proved that "GMO is anything but safe."

Since the U.S. Department of Agriculture approved GMO soy and corn for livestock feed in 1996, livestock in the UK have been consuming it ever since. Dr. Carman explains "at a commercial piggery in the U.S., we took 168 just-weaned pigs and fed them a typical diet for the piggery, containing soy and corn, for 5 months until the pigs were slaughtered at their usual slaughter age. Half of the pigs were fed widely-used varieties of GM soy and GM corn for this whole period, and the other half of the pigs were fed an equivalent non-GM diet as a control group. The GM diet contained three GM genes and therefore three GM proteins. One protein made the plant resistant to a herbicide, and two proteins were insecticides."

The study concluded that GMO foods led to a toxic mix in the digestive tract of the animals causing complications, including reproductive failure. All of the pigs studied displayed adverse health affects and females in particular showed carcinoma, endometriosis, inflammation, enlarged fluid-filled uteruses, stomach ulcers, thinning of the intestinal walls, and an increase in hemorrhaging bowels.

Jerry Rosman's pigs exhibited many of the same complications as the GMO-fed pigs in the Australia study, which is frightening considering the fact that pigs and humans have very similar digestive tracts. Shockingly, none of these results have been reported in the biochemistry tests performed by Monsanto and other companies in the GM industry.

Thankfully, research performed by other countries has steadily exposed the horrors of genetically engineered foods, but here in America, the biotech lobbies prevent us from even having a label on our food products. Shouldn't we at least have the right to know what is in our food and to make the choice ourselves about what to purchase? The consumption of GMOs is systematically changing the human DNA sequence, endangering not only individual health, but our species as a whole. If the biotech companies continue to control our food supply, it won't be long before our genetic composition is destroyed completely.

Media Spin

The Ins & Outs of Propaganda

Edward Snowden is a heroic patriot. He will be remembered for adding another stepping stone to the path towards liberty. By leaking information on the massive extent of the NSA's illegal surveillance, he showed just how firm the shackles are on the American people. Snowden sacrificed himself to build barriers to tyranny, yet several media outlets are downplaying Snowden and his exploits as they match their spin with Obama's rhetoric that Snowden is simply a common hacker unworthy of exceptional pursuit by U.S. forces.

These media outlets are trying to select your opinions for you. This process of mass conditioning in place of independent thought is nothing new. For decades, the CIA used mass media to brainwash the public on an extensive, international scale. In 1948, the newly founded spy agency created a covert psychological and paramilitary division called the Office of Policy Coordination (OPC), headed by Wall Street lawyer and Navy veteran Frank Wisner.

According to "A Timeline of CIA Atrocities" by Steve Kangas, the OPC specialized in propaganda, economic warfare, sabotage, subversion of "hostile" governments, and additional covert actions. To support these actions, Wisner started Operation Mockingbird, a secret program to push political propaganda through mass media in order to manipulate the public at whim.

Operation Mockingbird recruited American journalists, published magazines as fronts, and funded college organizations in an enormous undertaking. Journalists wrote news stories based on CIA-written "press releases," and were bribed to write with a particular slant. As other writers would cite the original stories, the CIA lies easily propagated throughout the news without any indication of their true origins.

Through this method of opinion engineering, Wisner controlled publishers, owners, and press members at Newsweek, The New York Times, CBS, and other large publications, according to Deborah Davis, author of Katharine the Great: Katharine Graham and The Washington Post, the unauthorized biography of the Washington Post owner Katharine Graham. Wisner's media accomplices even included Graham's husband and co-owner of The Washington Times, Phil Graham.

The CIA's dominance on mass media was not limited to major news outlets. This intentional dumbing down of the public also included wire services which provided news to small town newspapers. Rural audiences were not safe from the "official" narratives advocated by the agency. Operation Mockingbird allowed the CIA to turn press members into perpetual puppets, ooohing and aahing the public into supporting the agency's sinister agendas.

Around 1953, Wisner took over another department, and CIA Director Allen Dulles and CIA official Cord Meyer joined Operation Mockingbird. Dulles honed his intelligence experience as a career diplomat in Europe. He became the CIA director in early 1953 during the Eisenhower Administration. Meyer served as a platoon leader in World War II and suffered severe injuries during the Battle of Guam. After the war, he promoted the idea of one-world government, and in 1947, he funded and headed the United World Federalists, now known as Citizens for Global Solutions.

When they joined the mass brainwashing program, Operation Mockingbird commanded over 24 news outlets. Throughout the 1950s, the program involved at least 3,000 CIA employees writing, coordinating, and releasing propaganda to mass media, according to Mockingbird: The Subversion of the Free Press by the CIA by Alex Constantine. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover noticed the CIA's power and grew jealous. Hoover told Senator Joseph McCarthy, then at the peak of his notoriety, that Meyer had leftist connections. McCarthy used this allegation to publicly attack Meyer and the entire CIA.

Operation Mockingbird responded, inciting the media to attack McCarthy. Two Spring 1954 episodes of the documentary series "See It Now" hosted by journalist Edward R. Murrow reveal the ferocity of this onslaught. These episodes were meticulously edited to only show McCarthy at his worst behavior, even picking his nose at one point. The episodes never portrayed McCarthy as calm or professional. This turned the public against him. Later that year, the U.S. Senate censured McCarthy, and he died of alcoholism three years later.

Operation Mockingbird also contributed to the downfall of President Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán in the CIA-orchestrated 1954 Guatemalan coup d'état. The CIA prevented American journalists not favored by the agency from entering Guatemala during the overthrow. However, the propaganda program began to unravel in the 1960s. Dulles' successor, John A. McCone, failed trying to censor NBC from releasing a documentary on the CIA. As media outlets became more competitive, they published reports based on the hottest news tips, some of which inadvertently exposed the CIA's activities.

This trend continued well into the 1970s, hitting an apex in 1976 when Senator Frank Church's investigations lead to the "Final Report of the Select Committee to Study Government Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities," which stated, "The CIA currently maintains a network of several hundred foreign individuals around the world who provide intelligence for the CIA and at times attempt to influence opinion through the use of covert propaganda. These individuals provide the CIA with direct access to a large number of newspapers and periodicals, scores of press services and news agencies, radio and television stations, commercial book publishers, and other foreign media outlets.”

Then CIA Director George H.W. Bush stated that the CIA would no longer pay or contract media correspondents for cooperation with the agency. However, Jim Marrs, New York Times best-selling author and award-winning journalist, revealed during a filmed conversation with Alex Jones that the CIA did not relinquish media control entirely.

Marrs used to work for the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, which was then owned by Capital Cities Communications, a nationwide publishing and radio broadcasting company, also known as CapCities. He said that the newspaper’s employee newsletter contained a major article approving the latest appointment by newly elected President Reagan.

“They were so proud that Reagan had appointed William Casey as the head of the CIA,” Marrs said. “William Casey was the majority stockholder and the guy that controlled the company that owned the Star-Telegram... So my newspaper was controlled and owned by the head of the CIA, and that was in the employee newsletter, but never made the newspaper.”

It is interesting to note that the 1983 Invasion of Grenada occurred during Casey’s tenure as CIA director. The Reagan Administration launched the invasion of the tiny Caribbean island under “news management” — more severe than the 1954 Guatemalan coup d’état. It was a complete media blackout. American officials did not allow reporters full access to the island until over three weeks after the invasion. By then, military footage and eyewitness accounts served as their only sources of information, which was perhaps “sanitized.”

Immediately after the invasion, the Reagan Administration pushed for the CIA’s exemption from responding to Freedom of Information Act requests. It could very well be that the media blackout hid covert CIA operations on the island. Casey died in 1987 prior to testifying before Congress on his knowledge of the Iran-Contra scandal.

Regardless of CIA control, mass media holds a strong influence on the population, keeping the public chained to the claimed “official story.” In reporting the shooting death of Trayvon Martin by George Zimmerman, the media used a headshot of Martin at age 12, portraying him as a “baby-faced” boy. Martin was 17 at the time of his death. The media also used an older photo of a heavy-set Zimmerman. Zimmerman lost a lot of weight prior to the shooting and his mug shot taken that night reveals a much slimmer face.

The media-created contrast of a heavy-set man shooting a baby-faced kid to death could not be more clear or more inaccurate. Undoubtedly, the lopsided photo comparison fueled public rage against Zimmerman in the days after the shooting.

A month later, NBC edited their own version of Zimmerman’s recorded 911 call. The network isolated and rearranged segments of the recording into a completely different order and played their version on the air. This alteration possibly made Zimmerman sound more predatory and racist to the public.

Media control will continue as a method of mass manipulation, giving merely the illusion of truth through propaganda disguised as knowledge. We are programmed to grovel to self-serving authority figures, but by being aware of the conditioning, you empower yourself as an individual capable of independent thought. Engage yourself into the revolution of mass awakening.

FORMER PRESIDENT JIMMY CARTER

Congress Finally Decides NSA Surveillance Violates the Law

Congress has finally decided that massive, unprecedented and unwarranted surveillance of the American people conducted by the National Security Agency is against the law. Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which has broad jurisdiction over matters related to federal criminal law, arrived at the conclusion months after the American people reached a similar conclusion.

“We never, at any point in this debate, have approved the type of unchecked, sweeping surveillance of United States citizens employed by our government,” said House fixture John Conyers, a Michigan Democrat, during a hearing on the NSA. “If the government cannot provide a clear, public explanation for how its program is consistent with the statute, it must stop collecting this information immediately.”

Other committee members have promised to amend the unconstitutional PATRIOT Act and force the NSA to stop its surveillance. Representative Jim Sensenbrenner, a Wisconsin Republican and author of the original PATRIOT Act, said it is not likely Congress will reauthorize the business-records collection provision of the act when the law expires in 2015.

FOURTH AMENDMENT, WHAT FOURTH AMENDMENT?

James Cole, deputy attorney general at the Department of Justice, insists the NSA's vacuum cleaner approach to electronic surveillance does not violate the Fourth Amendment. In 1979, Cole argues, the Supreme Court ruled that telephone records are not private information covered by the Fourth Amendment. Besides, there is a special court for this sort of thing, the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court. It was approved by Congress, so bureaucrats believe it is legal.

Congress originally created the FISA and a secret court in response to embarrassing revelations uncovered by the Church Committee investigating intelligence abuses. FISA's special court is “almost a parallel Supreme Court,” according to David B. Wells and John Wilson Wells, authors of American National Security and Civil Liberties in an Era of Terrorism.

Former President Jimmy Carter has come out against NSA surveillance as well. He characterized Edward Snowden's leak as “beneficial” for the country. “I think that the secrecy that has been surrounding this invasion of privacy has been excessive, so I think that the bringing of it to the public notice has probably been, in the long term, beneficial,” Carter said. “America has no functioning democracy at this moment,” the former president also said at a meeting in Atlanta, according to German news source Der Spiegel.

Indeed, the United States does not have a functioning democracy. There is plenty of evidence that national elections are rigged and the two-party system — which is actually a one party system lorded over by a cabal of globalist banksters and fascist corporatists — has a monopoly on political power. NSA surveillance is merely another tool designed to guarantee they stay in power. But then again, the United States is not supposed to be a democracy. It was intended to be a constitutional republic.
