Truth is stranger than fiction. How often we hear that line. But more often than not, truth IS stranger than fiction—especially concerning some of the more secret technologies that have evolved upon this planet largely outside of public awareness.

Al Bielek is well known on the lecture circuit as being, perhaps, the “sole survivor of the super-secret Philadelphia Experiment” which allegedly took place in 1943, with the immediate goal of achieving radar invisibility for a large naval vessel. This goal is, on the surface, logical and easy to understand considering that World War II was in full swing and many American lives might be saved if naval vessels were hard to detect by the enemy.

But, as time moves on, more and more information becomes available on this fascinating subject, including the possibility that there was far more going on in 1943 than “simply” the at-that-time far-out desire to achieve radar invisibility. The issue of “time” figures prominently in this scenario. And that, just by itself, adds another entire layer of complexity and intrigue to an already exotic matter.

FDR had originally appointed the brilliant scientist and prolific inventor, Nikola Tesla, to head-up the invisibility project. However, after being informed by his off-planet contacts (yes, he openly admitted it) that there would be problems with the ship personnel if the project went forward, Nikola Tesla eventually bowed-out of the project in 1942 and, before leaving, did everything within his power to stop the experiments he knew would end in disaster.

Surprises And Adjustments For The New Year

There's a connection between the fact that this issue of The SPECTRUM is going to press a week later than what has been the usual first-Tuesday-of-the-month publication date, and the fact that I'm writing this note from my family home in a suburb of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. It is, as you longtime readers well know, a considerable challenge to keep this publication alive and on schedule despite the Adversary's relentless "chess game" of knowing when and where to strike in attempting to stop us.

On December 1, while we were in the midst of the most intense final days of getting the last issue of this newspaper ready for press, I got a call that my mom suffered a rather serious stroke. She is, as some of you know, 85+ years young, and part of a small team of ladies at my old grade school who feed about 700 children every school day of the year. On that particular day she was faint at work, but the full coronary problem did not manifest until later on in the day.

There was paralysis on her left side, and a worrisome couple of weeks in the hospital. However, to make a long story short, that paralysis is mostly gone now and she is making steady progress back to her usual sprint, as a result of determined sessions of physical therapy. She has been admonished a few times for "moving too fast", but that is a good sign of recovery—thanks in large part to so many prayers and good wishes on her behalf.

When it was clear that she would not be going on her previously planned and very-much-looked-forward-to Christmas trip to visit her sister & family in Buffalo, New York (including—ahem—gambling sessions on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls), but would require physical therapy in an assisted-living center near our Pittsburgh home, I decided to surprise her with a Christmas visit. (This is the first time I have made a trip greater than a two-hour drive from my California residence in almost ten years, since assuming the demands of this newspaper, including its previous two incarnations—for those of you who know what I mean by that.)

In the monthly publication cycle of this newspaper, the days near the end of the month are, naturally, the most taxing and complicated for me. And so it is only due to the great coordinated efforts and ingenuity of our small but dedicated newspaper crew that I have been able to take this show on the road, so to speak, and carry out mom's surprise visit while only delaying publication by one week.

(We may remain on this second-Tuesday-of-the-month publication schedule for other practical reasons. And, of course, that is assuming we even have enough funds for publishing an issue next month!)

Meanwhile, due to my mother's illness and its ramifications, there are other, somewhat complicated matters I must deal with while here in Pennsylvania. These have to do with finding a more accomodating senior-citizen residence for her, as well as planning the logistics for selling a nice home full of fifty years of our family's memories—and stuff.

For those of you who are students of The Larger Picture, it would be overly naive of me not to link my mother's stroke at least partially to the financial challenges we have been persisting through during these recent months in order to keep The SPECTRUM alive. She understands the tedious drama of these challenges better than most; and since she is a Depression Era teenager, deeper unpleasant poverty memories are caused to surface again.

After all, it is a mother's job to worry about her children. That's some kind of Law of Nature. But since the day, at the age of two, when I first pushed some furniture over to the fuse box in our basement and crawled up to change a fuse that had blown out, I confess to living a life that has generated more than an average amount of mother-worry. Not many mothers concern about black helicopters hovering over their child's house, or about clandestine white vans parked nearby "fixing" the telephone lines on a regular basis. But that's life-as-usual around my house—and for many ones who dare to bring you The Truth.

Of course I always have my fair share of "cloud ships" hovering nearby, too. But mothers of my mom's era have a lot more trouble understanding that more "Star Trek"-kind of Presence than, say, the Presence of Guardian Angels—which, due to some of my less sensible antics over the years, she has long asserted couldn't possibly get paid enough to protect me. So she has to worry even more.

If any of you readers would like to send her a "get well" note to encourage her recovery, or just a nice sentiment to help brighten her day (and distract her from worrying about me or the financial problems of this newspaper), please send them to: Martha Young, % The SPECTRUM, P.O. Box 1567, Tehachapi CA 93581. And we will make sure she gets them.

Today's news in this area centers around the last remaining domestic steel-producing facility struggling to survive, temporarily saved at the last minute by a huge loan from the New York bankers who are part of this planet's diabolical control system. When they say "no" to future loans, thousands of people will lose their jobs, their lifetime pensions, and many will lose their mind and the will to live. Meanwhile, OUR government just gave a huge grant to support a large steel mill in China.

These local, hard-working people don't understand WHY this is happening. With your Support, maybe we can keep The SPECTRUM alive and begin to Awaken them to The Truth.

ART BELL BACK ON THE AIR!

MONDAY FEBRUARY 5, 2001

From the recent press release: [quoting]

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 5, 2001 — Art Bell, the radio personality famous for his spontaneous and compelling conversations about all things unexplained, has announced his return to radio. Bell resumes his reign as host of the most listened to live overnight radio program, Coast To Coast AM, on Feb. 5 from 1 am to 6 am ET.

Bell states: "The negotiation was brutal and bloody! The result—fewer commercials and back to five hours."

Bell resigned last April because of family and legal issues that required his full attention. These have been resolved. His passion for radio and his audience has propelled him back with a renewed commitment to the unique show he created in 1993. Coast To Coast AM airs on more than 430 stations nationwide.

"I am ecstatic to welcome Art Bell back to his program" said Kraig T. Kitchin, president/COO of Premiere Radio Networks. "It was a bloody negotiation—pulling someone out of retirement always is. I am wildly enthusiastic to bring the news to affiliates and listeners nationwide. Imagine their reaction! I also want to add my thanks to Mike Siegel."

Premiere Radio Networks, Inc., a subsidiary of Clear Channel Communications (NYSE:CCU), syndicates more than 60 radio programs to more than 7,800 radio affiliations and reaches over 180 million listeners weekly. Premiere is the number-one radio network in the country and features the following personalities:

Those of you who have been following Art Bell's recent activities as he has been reporting them on shortwave radio know that he has been preparing for a new venture in radio—his own customized way of doing things. Looks like the big boys decided they better play ball WITH him, else they would be without an audience while everyone tuned into Art's own enterprise. ABRAHAM LINCOLN QUOTE

From the INTERNET, 12/22/00: [quoting]
"I see in the near future a crisis.... Corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed." —Abraham Lincoln, Nov. 1864 [End quoting]

If this situation was true well over a century ago, then where are we, as a nation, now?

POWER COMPANY PROFITS UP

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, by Greg Rising, 12/17/00: [quoting]

The six companies that bought power plants in California when the state deregulated its utilities have seen profits rise dramatically as the state copes with power shortages and skyrocketing prices.

The companies' incomes for July, August, and September, when wholesale prices were rising, rose from 37 percent at Houston-based Reliant Energy Inc. to more than 221 percent at Minneapolis-based NRG Energy Inc., according to third-quarter statements.

A seventh non-utility company that operates power plants in California saw profits rise 243 percent in the third quarter.

Together, the seven account for nearly 40 percent of the power generated within California, according to the California Energy Commission.

The financial documents provide a glimpse into how lucrative the state's fledgling and much troubled deregulated electricity market has become for the companies supplying the power. Wholesale energy prices are averaging $330 per megawatt hour so far this month, 11 times higher than December 1999.

Critics of deregulation say soaring profits for wholesalers are proof the process has veered wildly out of control—benefiting a handful of power companies at the expense of rate-payers and utility companies.

"It looks obscene" said Michael Shames, executive director of the San Diego-based Utility Consumers Action Network.

Deregulation of the state's $220 billion power industry was intended to drive down rates through competition. So far, however, it has led to higher energy prices, put residents on alert for rolling blackouts, and prompted bankruptcy warnings from utilities. [End quoting]

This is mass robbery—but without a gun.

Just because the problem is basically regionalized in California right now is only because California is the test case for application of the general fleecing formula.

What really ought to stand out is how bold the crooks are becoming. You can thus suspect a more sinister hidden agenda—such as creating panic and unrest as possible routes to declaring martial law when the time is "right" for same.

THE RIGHT TO CRITICIZE ISRAEL

From the INTERNET, by Charley Reese, <<http://sightings.com>>, 12/7/00: [quoting]

While we're over here, stewing about our election, the Israeli government continues to kill Palestinians and to strangle the rest economically simply because the Palestinians have the audacity to demand an end to 33 years of illegal and military occupation.

Let me tell you something else that's interesting:

The United Nations has condemned Israel for using excessive force. The United Nations Commissioner of Human Rights has condemned Israel for using excessive force. The Physicians for Human Rights, an independent human-rights organization, after examining wounds in Palestinian hospitals, has condemned Israel for using excessive force. Amnesty International has condemned Israel for using excessive force.

The United States secretary of state, Madeleine Albright, says, however, that Israel is a victim of aggression and is only defending itself.

Now that lady is either nutty or evil. If she's so disconnected from reality that she thinks that people with no army, whose dead number 250 and whose wounded exceed 5,000, are a threat to the most powerful military state in the Middle East, she's nutty. If she's deliberately lying, she's evil.

Furthermore, if the United States government treated American Indians or Blacks in precisely the same way in every detail that the Israeli government treats Palestinians, people would be screaming to high heaven.

I confess I'm mystified how decent Americans can condone the brutality and abuse that Israel inflicts on innocent Palestinians. If you're thinking that you don't have the right to criticize a foreign government, let me set you straight: Your government has given a cumulative total of 85 billion of your tax dollars through the years to the Israeli government. I think that buys you a right to criticize.

The truth is, I fear, that Palestinians won't get their independence until Americans get theirs. The Israeli occupation forces hold down the Palestinians, and our government appears to be the captive of the Israeli lobby. You might write your congressman and senators and remind them that they ran for office in the United States, not in Israel, and that they took an oath to defend America, not Israel. You might also tell them that it is not in our national interest to be seen the world over as a flaming hypocrite, nor is it in our national interest to alienate 1.1 billion Muslims who happen to control more than 60 percent of the world's oil reserves.

As an aside, let me clear up a matter. In reprimanding a politician for a racist slur against Palestinians who had killed two Israeli undercover agents, I suggested that he use the same slur against Israeli killers of Palestinians. The case I cited was a man whom people in Ramallah believe was kidnapped and beaten to death either by settlers or Israeli soldiers. The Physicians for Human Rights, at the request of an Israeli human-rights group, examined the X-rays and pictures, talked with doctors and family, and came to the conclusion that his injuries were caused by an automobile accident. All of the Palestinian doctors involved in the case, however, disagree with the report and say they plan to issue their own report. So there you have it: a medical disagreement.

At any rate, examples of Israelis killing Palestinians are plentiful enough. There are the children shot to death, not to mention the 28 Palestinian men and women killed by a Jewish settler in Hebron a few years ago. When the Israeli terrorist paused to change magazines in his weapon, surviving Palestinians overpowered him and beat him to death with his own rifle. The other Israeli settlers who were mighty proud of their mass killer turned his grave into a shrine. [End quoting]

Does this sound like there is another side to the Jewish problems in Israel and the rest of the world that the major media are hiding from us? It's time we wake up to the propaganda machine that reveals itself each time someone like secretary of state Madeleine Albright cries "poor Israelis" as a way to reverse the truth of the matter.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON'S WARNING OF AFRO-AMERICAN DEMAGOGUES

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 12/12/00: [quoting]

"There is a class of colored people who make a business of keeping the troubles, the wrongs, and the hardships of the Negro race before the public.

"Some of these people do not want the Negro to lose his grievances, because they do not want to lose their jobs. There is a certain class of race-problem solvers who don't want the patient to get well." — Booker T. Washington, 1911 [End quoting]

These days, two very prominent ones come to mind: Jesse Jackson and Al Sharpton.

From what I've read, Jesse is setting up places for people to gather to protest, on Inauguration Day, all over the U.S. Of course he's just another puppet for the behind-the-scenes crooks in high places. This sounds like they are preparing to cause big-time problems on that date.

A point to ponder: With the current political situation, the financial situation, and the weather situation, if you are among those who prepared for what might have happened last year at this time—for the so-called "Y2K" problems—and still have those supplies on hand, perhaps you are the wise ones after all! Remember that the REAL turn of the millennium is THIS year, not last.

WE SAVED THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

From VCT/American Patrol, <<http://www.americanpatrol.com>>, 12/16/00: [quoting]

We Saved The United States Of America

Bill Clinton threatened to shut down the government unless the Latino And Immigration Fairness Act Of 2000 was passed by Congress. It didn't pass and he backed down. Sure, some relatively minor concessions were made, but for the most part we stopped amnesty, agricultural workers, and a watering-down of our immigration laws.

Thanks to all who made those calls and sent those e-mails.

All the press accounts of this battle report that you made a difference.

This year you fought for America and we had great victories. Next year we are going to fight even harder. We are going to demand that President George W. Bush enforce our immigration laws with vigor so we can put the illegal immigration problem behind us once and for all.

[End quoting]

This is yet another example of how our opinions do count—if enough of us decide to speak up. How about a New Year resolution to make your voice heard?

We live in an age of near instant communication, especially over the Internet, with email, so there is really no excuse for sitting back and simply watching injustices happen. It is much more difficult for the crooks in high places to pull-off their shenanigans if there is a visible presence of the public watching AND RESPONDING to what is happening.

RUSSIAN DEFENSE MINISTER SAYS USS MEMPHIS SUNK THE KURSK

THE KURSK SUBMARINE DISASTER: ANOTHER EVIDENCE OF A COLLISION. NORWEGIANS REMOVE THE VEIL OF SECRECY AND VIRTUALLY NAME KURSK KILLER

Igor Sergeev, Russian defence minister, confirmed today in Brussels the words said by Rear-Admiral Einar Skorgen, former commander of the Norwegian Northern Force.

According to the admiral, Russian anti-submarine aircrafts did pursue on August 17 a foreign submarine escaping from the site of the nuclear submarine Kursk's crash.

Admiral Skorgen also said that Russian North Fleet aircrafts got so absorbed in the pursuit they nearly violated the Norwegian air space, so Norwegian fighters made an alert takeoff. Happily, violation was avoided thanks to a talk between the Norwegian Air Force and the Russian North Fleet commanders.

On top of that, according to the admiral, there was something wrong with the US submarine Memphis entering the Norwegian port of Bergen. Moreover, wives of 12 Memphis sailors were then urgently flown from US to Norway, the aim of their arrival being kept secret. [End quoting]

You can be pretty sure we-the-public have NOT been told the truth about this terrible disaster, especially since nothing adds up and some very curious facts continue to sit outside the boundaries of the official explanation window.

You can probably assume that some forms of super-secret advanced technologies are being cloaked through the official explanation. Moreover, and possibly related: it seemed that "delays" in getting to the vessel and crew were excessive and overly superficial—as if "someone(s)" wanted to make sure there were no survivors by the time communications with the ailing submarine was "finally" established.

what I think is happening.

As we know, space is not just “nothing”; it actually appears like the ocean but is not water. I’m sure scientists could give you a more proper description, but I’m no scientist, so bear with me.

The planets are like so many ships sailing in this ocean of space. The planets seem to sail in their own waters and that water is fairly tranquil until something happens that is happening now. Something BIG is coming into our ocean now. And we are starting to ride into those waves that “something” is making.

This morning the “seas” are very, very stormy. I am still keeping a close watch on that dark planet coming into my sight out there, and think that is probably the wave maker! The Earth is responding to something yet unseen to the scientist and stargazers, but I can already feel the pull in my physical body and see it with my “spiritual eyes”. She is waking up, and what I call the mad scientists are doing their best to not allow it to happen.

We of the Lighted path can be of great help to allow her to rebalance. Our thoughts are so very powerful if we only come to that realization and use same as a tool. We will probably hear all kinds of reasons for the sharp increase in earthquake/volcano activity, and I will listen to what they all say, but I don’t think a solar flare will affect the “space ocean” like what’s happening now. Or a meteor passing by either. I’m also not saying that the Earth will do a shift by tomorrow morning; these things take their time to manifest.

Well, keep your feet firmly on terra firma and watch the “show” unfold! Love and Light, Anna [End quoting]

Those of you who have been monitoring the earthquake and volcanic activity of Mother Earth certainly saw an abrupt surge at the time this message was written. Only the one famous volcano near Mexico City, Popocatepetl, made the news, since it blew its top and threatened may lives, but others went unreported—as did the large increase in earthquake activity, including areas that typically are not known for such shaking. In the case of awakening Mt. Shasta, in Northern California, the recent flurry of earthquake activity suggests upcoming (literally and temporally) volcanic activity.

LUMELOID: NEW ENERGY BREAKTHROUGH

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 12/17/00: [quoting]

Forwarded from KeelyNet <ninteract@keelynet.com>. (This is from Whitley Strieber’s website:)

Lumeloid May Be Energy Answer

In Whitley Strieber’s 1984 book Nature’s End, he mentioned a revolutionary new solar energy converter, called Lumeloid by its inventor, Dr. Alvin Marks. This material was capable of converting sunlight into electricity at a 50% efficiency rate. As such, it could revolutionize the entire power industry by reducing dependence on oil.

Strieber was then told that the material had been classified. He met Dr. Marks and Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger at a dinner, and asked the secretary to release the formula to the world. There was no response, and he was left not knowing the actual status of the material.

Now, however, both Dr. Marks and Lumeloid have reappeared on the scene. According to a story in the November 30 edition of the Arlington Institute’s Future Edition, Dr. Marks is now introducing Lumeloid to the public.

According to what Strieber learned in 1984, Lumeloid was planned to be used on satellite solar panels, and was one of the reasons why US satellites did not carry nuclear reactors like their Soviet counterparts. At the time, the classification of the material was justified for cold war reasons and because it was thought to be impossible to manufacture in large quantities.

Strieber attempted to get a Japanese company to sponsor a contest to streamline the manufacturing process. This effort was also unsuccessful.

Lumeloid is even more desperately needed now. To learn more about this revolutionary product, go to Dr. Mark’s website, <www.ardev.com>.

The Scientific American article follows:

CHEMICAL ENGINEERING PLASTIC POWER

Polymers take a step forward as photovoltaic cells and lasers.

For nearly 20 years, scientists have expected great things from semiconducting polymers—chimerical chemicals that can be as pliable as plastic wrap and as conductive as copper wiring. Indeed, these organic compounds have conjured dreams of novel optoelectronic devices, ranging from transparent transistors to flexible light-emitting diodes. Few of these ideas have made it out of the laboratory. But in the past year, researchers have added two promising candidates to the wish list: solar cells and solid-state lasers.

The lasting appeal of these materials—also called synthetic metals—is that they are more durable and less expensive than their inorganic doubles. Furthermore, they are easy to make. Like all plastics, they are long, carbon-based chains strung from simple repeating units called monomers. To make them conductive, they need only be doped with atoms that donate negative or positive charges to each unit. These charges clear a path through the chain for traveling currents.

Scientists at Advanced Research

Development in Athol, Massachusetts, have made plastic solar cells using two different polymers, polyvinyl alcohol (PVA) and polyacetylene (PA). Films of this copolymer, patented as Lumeloid, polarize light and, in theory at least, change nearly three quarters of it into electricity—a remarkable gain over the 20 percent maximum conversion rate predicted for present-day photovoltaic cells. Lumeloid also promises to be cheaper and safer. Alvin M. Marks, inventor and company president, estimates that whereas solar cells now cost some $3 to $4 per watt of electricity produced, Lumeloid will not exceed 50 cents.

The process by which these films work resembles photosynthesis, Marks explains. Plants rely on diode structures in their leaves, called diads, that act as positive and negative terminals and channel electrons energized by sunlight. Similarly, Lumeloid contains molecular diads. Electrodes extract current from the film’s surface. To go the next step, Marks is developing a complementary polymer capable of storing electricity. “If photovoltaics are going to be competitive, they must work day and night” he adds. His two-film package, to be sold in a roll like tinfoil, would allow just that.

Plastics that swap electricity for laser light are less well developed, but progress is coming fast. Only four years ago Daniel Moses of the University of California at Santa Barbara announced that semiconducting polymers in a dilute solution could produce laser light, characterized by a coherent beam of photons emitted at a single wavelength. This past July, at a conference in Snowbird, Utah, three research teams presented results showing that newer polymer solids could do the same. “I’m a physicist. I can’t do anything with my hands” says Z. Valy Vardeny of the University of Utah, who chaired the meeting. “But the chemists who have created these new materials are geniuses.”

Earlier generations of semiconducting polymers could not lase for two main reasons. First, when bombarded with electricity or photons, they would convert most of that energy into heat instead of light—a problem called poor luminescence efficiency. Second, the films usually absorbed the photons that were produced, rather than emitting them, so that the polymers lacked optical gain—a measure of a laser medium’s ability to snowball photons into an intense pulse.

Because the newer materials have fewer impurities, they offer much higher luminescence efficiencies and show greater lasing potential, Vardeny states. In the Japanese Journal Of Applied Physics, his group described a derivative of poly (p-phenylenevinylene), or PPV, with a luminescence efficiency of 25 percent. The red light was composed of photons having the same wavelength, but it did not travel in a single beam. In Nature, another group from the Snowbird meeting offered a way around this shortcoming. Richard H. Friend and his colleagues at the University of Cambridge placed a PPV film inside a device called a microcavity. Mirrors in the structure bounced the emitted light back and forth, amplifying it into a focused laser beam.

The third group from Snowbird, led by Alan J. Heeger of U.C.S.B., tested more than a dozen polymers and blends as well. Their results, which appeared in the September 27 issue of Science, show that these materials can emit laserlike light across the full visible spectrum—even in such rare laser hues as blue and green. In place of a microcavity, Heeger set up his samples so that the surrounding air confined the emitted photons to the polymer, where they could stimulate further emissions. “We wanted to show that a whole class of materials do this and that they definitely provide optical gain” Heeger says.

The challenge now will be finding a way to power these polymers electrically. All three groups energized their samples using another laser, but practical devices will need to run off current delivered from electrodes. It is no small problem. Vardeny notes that electrical charges generate destructive levels of heat and that electrodes can react chemically with the film, lowering the polymer’s luminescence efficiency. “It’s going to be hard” Heeger concurs, “but I’m optimistic.” [End quoting]

No wonder there have been powerful forces at work behind the excuse façade of “national security” concerning the solar panels mentioned above. If durable and long-lasting, these panels would immediately render the entire current solar panel industry obsolete.

Meanwhile, the elite’s latest contrived energy shortage is going to backfire on them bigtime—as such an incentive only causes more alternative energy devices to be developed and come into public awareness. If these solar panels, for example, are truly as efficient as is stated in the news report, then they could quickly render buying power from the power companies a thing of the past.

WARNING TO PARENTS AND GRANDPARENTS!

I thought this important enough to forward to all of you. Please read this if you care about your children or grandchildren:

Harry Potter Books?

This is the most evil thing I have laid my eyes on—and no one seems to understand its threat. The Harry Potter books are THE NUMBER ONE best selling children’s books in the nation today. Just look at any Barnes & Noble or Waldenbook storefront. Go to Amazon.com and read the reviews. Hear the touting by educators and even Christian teachers about how “It’s great to see the youth so eagerly embracing the reading experience!”

Harry Potter is the creation of a former UK English teacher who promotes witchcraft and Satanism. Harry is a 13-year-old “wizard”. Her creation openly blasphemes Jesus and God and promotes sorcery, seeking revenge upon anyone who upsets them by giving you examples (even the sources with authors and titles!) of spells, rituals, and demonic powers. It is the doorway for children to enter the Dark Side of evil.

I think the problem is that parents have not reviewed the material. The name seems harmless enough: Harry Potter. But that is where it all ends. Let me give you a few quotes from some of the influenced readers themselves:

“The Harry Potter books are cool, ’cause they teach you all about magic and how you can use it to control people and get revenge on your enemies” said Hartland WI 10-year-old Craig Nowell, a recent convert to the New Satanic Order Of The Black Circle. “I want to learn the Cruciatus Curse, to make my muggle science teacher suffer for giving me a D.” (A “muggle” is an unbeliever of magic.)

Or how about the REALLY young and innocent impressionable mind of a 6-year-old when asked about her favorite character:

“Hermione is my favorite, because she’s smart and has a kitty” said 6-year-old Jessica Lehman of Easley SC. “Jesus died because he was weak and stupid.”

And here is dear Ashley, a 9-year-old, the typical average-age reader of Harry Potter:

“I used to believe in what they taught us at Sunday school” said Ashley, conjuring up an ancient spell to summon Cerebus, the three-headed hound of hell. “But the Harry Potter books showed me that magic is real, something I can learn and use right now, and that the Bible is nothing but boring lies.”

DOES THIS GET YOUR ATTENTION?! If not, how about a quote from a High Priest of Satanism:

“Harry is an absolute godsend to our cause” said High Priest Egan of the First Church Of Satan in Salem MA. “An organization like ours thrives on new blood—no pun intended—and we’ve had more applicants than we can handle lately. And, of course, practically all of them are virgins, which is gravy.” (Since 1995, open applicants to Satan worship has increased from around 100,000 to now—14 MILLION children and young adults!)

It makes me physically ill, people! But, I think I can offer you an explanation of why this is happening. Children have been bombarded with action, adventure, thrills, and scares to the point Hollywood can produce nothing new to give them the next “high”. Parents have neglected to see what their children are reading and doing, and simply seem satisfied that “little Johnny is interested in reading”. AND—educators and the NEA are PUSHING this crap with NO WARNING as to the effects or the contents.

Still not convinced? I will leave you with something to let you make up your own mind. First the URL to read some background of what I have given you: <http://theonion.com/onion3625/harry_potter.html> (“Harry Potter Books Spark Rise In Satanism Among Children”) and finally, a quote from the author herself, J. K. Rowling, describing the objections of Christian reviewers to her writings:

“I think it’s absolute rubbish to protest children’s books on the grounds that they are luring children to Satan” Rowling told a London Times reporter in a July 17 interview. “People should be praising them for that! These books guide children to an understanding that the weak, idiotic Son of God is a living hoax who will be humiliated when the rain of fire comes...while we, his faithful servants, laugh and cavort in victory.”

My hope is that you will see fit to become involved in getting the word out about this garbage. Please forward to every pastor, teacher, and parent you know. This author has now published FOUR BOOKS in less than 2 years of this “encyclopedia of Satanism” and is surely going to write more. I also ask all Christians to please pray for this lost woman’s soul. Pray also for the Holy Spirit to work in the young minds of those who are reading this garbage, that they may be delivered from its harm. Lastly, pray for all parents to grow closer to their children, and that a bond of sharing thoughts and spiritual intimacy will grow between them. [End quoting]

Naturally the controlling elite (and the dark energies influencing them) would be encouraging this kind of reading material as it conditions the children’s minds to become comfortable with the sinister realm of dark, satanic energies. This then leads to “graduation” to heavy-metal rock music as these children enter their teenage years. By this point they are then mostly lost to the energies of the Higher Realms and are easily mind-controlled by the satanic forces. No wonder the satanic “churches” are seeing such a large influx of new members.

And while we’re on the subject of satanic elite encouragement of sick activities, behold what award was about to be bestowed on the Harry Potter authoress:

POTTER AUTHOR SKIPS REGAL DATE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 12/12/00: [quoting]

Harry Potter authoress J.K. Rowling took a rain check Monday for her investiture by Queen Elizabeth II as an Officer of the Order of British Empire for contributions to children’s literature.

Rowling, a single mother who lives in Edinburgh, Scotland, sent regrets for today's honor because her 7-year-old daughter, Jessica, was ill, a Buckingham Palace spokeswoman said.

"We of course understand why J.K. Rowling has had to postpone her investiture" the spokeswoman said. "These things happen occasionally and we will arrange another investiture date when it is convenient for her." [End quoting]

There has been a lot of fireworks being fired at one another over these books, but if you consider nothing else but who the ones are who are pushing the sales of these to our innocent children, it should give you the greatest clue you could ever need. The elite have never in my lifetime pushed the sale of any other books to our children to this extent.

I've know, personally, what happened to a 12-year-old girl after she spent a couple of hours reading the latest one. This is very diabolical stuff.

Jesse's mother, in trying to explain what might have been a contributing factor in events years later:

"I think his vaccination had more effect on him than anything else. He was vaccinated when he was four weeks old, and shortly after, his face broke out and had the appearance of raw flesh, and some fluid issued from the wounds that burned my arm when it dropped on it, from which fact I judge the fluid was poison. This lasted until he was six months old, when his whole body was covered with large abscesses, one of which was over the eye and occasioned that case or fallen appearance that it wears at present. At the time, it was thought he would die, but he recovered slowly, and Dr. Lane, who attended him, stated that the sickness was occasioned by vaccination."

FLU SHOT ORDER BUGS PARAMEDICS

Almost Half Face Suspensions
If They Don't Get Injected
By December 20

From the INTERNET, by Su-ann Levy, <<http://sightings.com>>, 12/12/00: [quoting]

"It's got mercury as a preservative. It's got aluminum in it [both deadly poisons]" he said.

Nearly half of the city's 754 paramedics could be off the job over the busy Christmas period if they don't get a flu shot by next Wednesday.

According to internal Toronto Emergency Medical Services memos obtained by the Sun, paramedics have been told they must provide proof they've been given a flu shot—or a note from their doctor saying they're medically "contraindicated" (e.g. allergic to the shot)—by December 20.

"Failure to provide such documentation may result in non-disciplinary suspension of employment" says a November 7 memo to Toronto paramedics.

But only about 400 paramedics have been inoculated—or have coughed up a doctor's note—to date, Ron Kelusky, general manager of Toronto Ambulance confirmed yesterday.

Several paramedics I spoke to over the past few days are up in arms over being forced to take the shot and are prepared to be disciplined to make their point.

Ray Ellis, a 47-year-old Level 1 paramedic, says he's against the shot because he doesn't feel it protects him against the flu or from being a carrier. Besides, he says, why should he take an injection about which there are many questions?

"It's got mercury as a preservative. It's got aluminum in it" he said.

"I've already notified my supervisor I will take a one-day suspension" he added, despite a doctor's appointment on December 19 when he'll probably get a note.

Another North York-area Level 1 paramedic, who asked not to be named, said he's already got his doctor's note.

"They're violating our rights to choose.... We shouldn't be forced to have something injected into our bodies."

"I'm not going to get it done.... It should be a personal choice" says Roberta Scott, a Level 3 paramedic, who's fully prepared to be sent home without pay Wednesday night when she reports to work. "There's a group of us who are going to stand firm."

The Ministry of Health handed down the mandatory flu shot edict to all Ontario paramedics back in May, says Kelusky. (Under the Ambulance Act, paramedics must be immunized against a whole slew of diseases.)

TO PREVENT TRANSMISSION

"It's to prevent the transmission of disease to vulnerable populations because they're moving around.... This flu does kill old people" Kelusky offers as the reason for the edict.

"I'm kind of the ham in the sandwich here" he said. "I understand their concerns about being forced to do it."

Asked whether those who refuse the shot will be suspended, he responded: "There is an issue of compliance.... I am obligated to comply with the Ambulance Act."

CUPE Local 416 president Brian Cochrane said, following a meeting with their lawyer yesterday, the union is filing a grievance with the city today and is contemplating a challenge under the Charter Of Rights.

Cochrane says it would be "pretty stupid" of the city to force paramedics off the job at this busy time of year, should they not comply with the flu shot order.

What's upset paramedics most about the edict is that they seem to have been singled out.

No other healthcare provider I contacted this week makes mandatory flu shots a condition of employment.

NURSES CAN REFUSE

Melanie Pottins of the Ontario Nurses' Association says they worked a compromise into their collective agreements. It says hospital nurses have the right to refuse a flu shot, but may be placed on an unpaid leave of absence during an outbreak.

Sandra Pitters, general manager of the city's Homes for the Aged division, says the 2,800 employees in their 10 homes are "strongly encouraged" but not forced, to get a flu shot. But she says they're clear that if there is an outbreak, those who don't have shots will be sent home, possibly without pay.

At Mt. Sinai Hospital, flu shots are not mandatory but recommended and some 70% of staff have been inoculated so far, says spokesperson David Davenport.

"Where it doesn't make sense is when I hand off my patient to the triage nurse at the hospital and she hasn't had her flu shot" says Ellis.

Asked why paramedics have been singled out, Ministry of Health spokesperson David Jensen said it's because there are so few paramedics—only 5,000—in the province.

"It's a lot easier to find backup for doctors and nurses in hospitals should they get the flu...not so with paramedics."

Meanwhile, Kelusky isn't worried—just yet. He suspects there will be a rash of shot-takers just before the deadline.

"I'm going to do everything to show I'm complying with the Act, but I'm not about to shut the service down” he said. [End quoting]

Sounds like they are smart paramedics who know that they can't help someone else if they don't keep their own body healthy, and know something about what these shots can do to them. We have, in past installments of The News Desk, presented information about doctors and nurses in Canada refusing to have the flu shot—for the same good, suspicious reasons. It is refreshing to hear about people waking up and taking proper control of their own life.

SINKING PACIFIC ISLANDERS TO BE MOVED TO HIGHER GROUNDS

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 11/29/00: [quoting]

AUCKLAND (AFP)—Around 1,000 people whose ancient homes are rapidly sinking into the Pacific Ocean are to be moved to higher ground in what could be a dress rehearsal for other atoll dwellers around the world if sea levels rise with global warming.

Up to 40,000 people will eventually need to be moved from Papua New Guinea's Duke of York group, while other nearby atolls, including an island home to a small singing civilisation of Polynesians, are also facing disaster, partly due to rising sea-levels.

But the move from the Duke of York group is mostly due to a spectacular clashing of tectonic plates: beneath the islands the Pacific Plate is sliding into the Bismarck and Solomon Plates.

The shift is extremely violent and this month saw a magnitude eight earthquake and several in the seven range. Tsunamis and volcanic eruptions add to the dynamic nature of the Earth's reconstruction.

The Duke of York is a group of atolls, no more than four metres (12 feet) above sea-level, in the St. Georges Channel between New Britain and New Ireland, connecting the Bismarck Sea to the Pacific Ocean.

The islands are sinking 30 centimetres (11.8 inches) a year. The other atolls, including Takuu (also known as Mortlock), which hosts the Polynesians, are east of the area and also going under.

Parts of New Britain are also collapsing. Its main town, Rabual, was destroyed in 1994 by twin volcanic eruptions.

Papua New Guinea (PNG) has difficulties relocating so many people because of its complicated land tenure systems. The Baining people on New Britain, who have already seen some of their land taken for refugees following Rabual's volcanoes, say they do not want the islanders.

This week New Britain governor Ephraim Jubilee told the PNG Post-Courier that a plantation had been bought on New Britain to relocate five villages of up to 200 families from Duke of York.

“I wish to make it known that the East New Britain provincial government is aware of the dangers that the Duke of York islanders face and has already made a decision to acquire land for their resettlement” he said.

“The Duke of York islanders are a priority at this stage because of the immediate danger that faces the island. The government has reacted by immediately arranging for the supply of tents, mosquito nets, and food supplies for those people who have lost their homes and acquisition of plantations for their long-term relocation.”

Now villagers living on the shore of Rabaul's Simpson's Harbour want to be relocated. They are trapped between the sea, which routinely threatens tsunamis, and high limestone cliffs. One local leader says they are “sitting ducks” in the event of earthquakes.

The Duke of York group played a colourful part in Pacific colonial history. A celebrated Samoan-American “Queen” Emma Coe set up her first trading station there, and later the powerful German firms of Godeffroy and Hensheim were founded there as the agents of Berlin's ambitions for a place in the Pacific Sun.

The first Methodist mission in New Guinea was established there and a German health fanatic, known only as Engelhardt, set up in 1903 a nudist colony which had 30 followers. [End quoting]

LIE-DETECTING PHONE GOES ON SALE

From the INTERNET, <http://dailynews.yahoo.com/h/nm/20001215/od/ies_dc_1.html>, 12/16/00: [quoting]

IZMIR, Turkey (Reuters)—Washing your hair, working late, flooded kitchen—all these excuses may be a thing of the past if a lie-detecting telephone on sale in Turkey takes off.

“This is a phone that enables you to tell if someone is telling the truth or not on the other end of the line” said Tulay Ispirli, manager of a shop called Vakkorama in the western city of Izmir, which is selling the phones for $159 each.

The phone has an electronic device which notes changes in frequency that the ear cannot discern.

A red light flashes if the person is lying; a yellow light means you should take their words with a pinch or salt; and a green light means you can believe what you hear.

Ispirli said there had been a lot of interest in the lie-detector phone, though at first customers were doubtful about the phone's abilities. “But, once they try it, they enjoy it” she told Reuters television. [End quoting]

If this device indeed does work, then it could be quite an incentive toward honesty. This “lie detector” device was first announced in prototype form about two years ago one evening on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program, when Art was interviewing the inventors, who I seem to remember were Israeli scientists. It may even have been Art who suggested that coupling the device with a telephone would make a very useful product.

WHITE SUGAR AND THE REPRODUCTIVE SYSTEM

From an anonymous source, Los Angeles, 12/15/00: [quoting]

It wasn't until Peter Hill and his wife Jean moved onto the farm they had purchased that they noticed the ants. There were millions of them, not only in every room of the house, but all over the 10 acres they owned.

The two children were bitten quite often and the bites were both painful and often infected. They tried spraying thoroughly, but after two days the ants were back. Then they called in professional exterminators, but to no avail.

The ants would disappear for two days, then start coming back worse than ever. The situation became intolerable when the children could not go out to play in the yard and Peter, working the land, would have fresh bites to contend with each night. They appealed to the "Letters to the Editor" of the local newspaper and many solutions came in from friends and neighbors, but nothing worked.

One day, however, when things looked their worst, a small booklet was sent to them through the mail. It was written in the Greek language and the sender had been concerned enough to write the English translation under each line. The author said it was guaranteed to work. The solution was to purchase 500 lbs. of white refined sugar and pour little piles five inches high in every room of the house and in all covered areas of the land, such as in hollow logs, under boards, and anywhere that the piles would not get wet.

In desperation they did exactly as described in the booklet. They had hundreds of little piles all over their land. In four months there was not an ant to be found and they have never returned. Now the reader may be excused for being skeptical, for I was also when I read the report. I thought that if you fed the ants, especially with delicious white sugar, the population would increase, not disappear entirely.

But I had forgotten one thing: The sugar was delicious but absolutely non-nutritious and highly toxic, which over three generations of ants (four months) broke down their health and destroyed their reproductive system so they could not have young. This has since been proven in laboratories. This is exactly what's happening to the human race, but on a slower pace because our generations are many years long, not weeks as are the ants. [End quoting]

Remember that the so-called "elite" would-be controllers of this planet have a major agenda item called "get rid of all the useless eaters". So, besides so much of our food being empty of nutrition due to depleted soils, overprocessing, and otherwise loaded with "embalming fluids" of all sorts, this condition is compounded by our being programmed through advertising, etc., to consume way more sugar and sugar-loaded products than less "advanced" cultures consume.

MOVING TEETH WITH PLASTIC

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, January 2001: [quoting]

Adults who are less than pleased with their smiles can straighten out their teeth without donning teenage armor.

The Invisalign system creates computer models of actual and desired tooth locations, then issues instructions to a machine that makes about 20 different clear plastic molds that resemble retainers. Each is worn for about two weeks and progressively moves teeth into position.

Check www.invisalign.com for a list of dentists who plan to offer the invisible braces.

The invisible braces are said to be painless. [End quoting]

This sounds like a big boom for those who want straight teeth without wires, and for the dentists who supply this service.

CANADIANS FIGHTING GUN-GRAB LEGISLATION

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 12/4/00: [quoting]

Canadians in large numbers are fighting Liberal Party legislation that requires all handgun owners to be licensed. The provincial governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have announced they will refuse to enforce any federal gun control law.

A former officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Bruce Hutton, has formed the Law-Abiding Unregistered Firearms Association and has toured the country urging noncompliance and exhorting fellow gun owners to "come to jail with me". More than 20,000 Canadians have joined his group. Only 142,000 licenses out of an estimated 7 million have been issued. No armed criminals have turned over guns, likewise fewer than 4 percent of law-abiding. [End quoting]

The crooks in high places are finding their plans of control of the masses to be a bit less than easy sailing when people wake up to the shenanigans and stand strong. There's not enough jails, nor enough enforcers, unless we perceive that we are helpless to do anything. Violence is neither necessary nor wise, but

PARENTS PREVAIL

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 12/4/00: [quoting]

Parents across the country are rebelling against public schools that ask personal, sexual questions in "student surveys". Angry parents descended on a middle school in New Milford, Connecticut, after learning that their children had been asked about oral sex in a survey. In Ridgewood, NJ, parents have filed a federal lawsuit. In San Antonio, Texas, a lawsuit resulted in a parent-teacher review board. In Radford, VA, the school board simply barred such surveys. CLINTON WANTS MORE CHILD IMMUNIZATIONS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, by Janelle Carter, 12/11/00: [quoting]

Hoping to increase the number of American children who get their vaccinations, President Clinton plans to order federal officials to study the immunization status of the 5 million children under age 5 who receive government assistance.

Clinton is scheduled to be joined by former first lady Rosalyn Carter, Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala, and Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman for the announcement today.

"This is a major step forward to try to ensure children enrolled in WIC, some of our poorest children, are protected" said Dr. Walt Orenstein on Sunday, referring to the federal nutrition program for Women, Infants, and Children.

Orenstein heads the national immunization program for the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The executive memorandum to be issued by the president requires the Department of Agriculture to conduct an assessment of the children participating in the WIC program.

The memorandum also directs USDA and the CDC to develop a national strategic plan to improve immunization rates among at-risk children.

As part of the effort, the American Academy of Pediatrics plans to instruct all 55,000 of its members to emphasize the importance of timely immunizations to their WIC-eligible patients.

In 1993, less than 63 percent of children under the age of 3 had received the full course of vaccinations.

Childhood immunization rates are at an all-time high, with more than 90 percent of America's toddlers receiving critical vaccines by age 2. Government officials say they have also managed to narrow the gap among racial and ethnic groups, with vaccination levels nearly the same for all preschool children. Still, officials are concerned that, in some parts of the country, many children continue to go without vaccinations.

For instance, according to the CDC, low-income, minority children are less likely to be immunized than their counterparts. In certain inner-city areas, immunization rates are as low as 65 percent.

That concerns health officials who say those toddlers are at a higher risk for potentially deadly diseases such as diphtheria, poliomyelitis, measles, mumps, and rubella. [End quoting]

The crooks in high places are bound and determined that no child will escape the sinister concoctions of these vaccinations—because they are afraid of these children. Why? Because these are the Indigo Children who have come to awaken and lead God's people into the new, peaceful, Godly way of life, thus the diabolical elite are out to destroy every last one of them and vaccinations are part of the attack plan.

SCHOOL REPORT CARD WEBSITE PROVES POPULAR

From MEDIA BYPASS, December 2000: [quoting]

In its first year, the website of the Independence Institute's Parent Information Center has helped 100,000 parents find the best Colorado public school for their children.

Jon Caldara, President of the Independence Institute, stated October 24 that "100,000 parents have visited the website in its first year to study and compare Colorado schools." He congratulated Pam Benigno, Director of the Parent Information Center, for working hard to restore the quality of public education in Colorado through school choice.

"Parents are school shopping so they can decide where they want to send their children" Benigno said. "Parents should not assume that their neighborhood school will provide a quality education for their children."

By introducing the website in September 1999, the Parent Information Center began changing the way parents choose public schools in Colorado. The website (www.ParentInfoCenter.org) offers Colorado's original school report cards, do-it-yourself interactive school evaluations, a news page with links to relevant articles, and educational links for parents and children alike.

Additionally, the website provides Colorado State Assessment scores as well as ACT scores, graduation, and dropout rates for high schools.

The PIC's report cards, reflecting the performance of a given school's population on a nationally standardized test, were so popular that the state legislature and Gov. Bill Owens authorized an official state report card grading system which evaluates public schools.

"This bodes well for the governor's report cards, which will begin appearing next year and which were modeled largely from the Parent Information Center's report cards" Caldara said.

"School shopping is becoming more popular as parents become increasingly aware of the significant differences between public schools" said Benigno, whose job at the Institute involves answering telephone calls and e-mails from parents trying to choose a school.

—Independence Institute [End quoting]

Sounds like something that every area should set up. Certainly it would help many parents who will go out of their way to see that their children get a better education. And likewise it would bring a focus (and heat) upon those schools which need to improve

ANTI-AMERICANISM SPREADS

From MEDIA BYPASS, December 2000: [quoting]

A group of Muslim hardliners launched a sweep through hotels in an Indonesian city on Sunday, searching out American citizens to be evicted from the country, hotel workers said, according to an October 29 UPI news wire report.

The hotel raids were a part of rising anti-American sentiment in the world's most populous Muslim nation. Indonesian anti-Americanism has been triggered by Washington's sympathies for Israel in the recent flare-up of violence in the Middle East.

More than 100 youths from four Islamic organizations searched through star-rated hotels in Indonesia's central Java city of Solo, some 300 miles southeast of Jakarta, looking for U.S. citizens.

The groups issued a general ultimatum warning U.S. citizens to leave the city or the country within 48 hours. They also urged all hotel operators and guest houses in the city to reject any American citizen. They added that a once-a-week sweep of Americans would be launched through hotels across the town.

"We have issued an ultimatum to all hotel operators and guest houses to refuse any American citizen. We will launch a search through the hotels once a week. If later we find any U.S. citizen, we would take more stern action" said one of the groups' leaders, identified as Kalono, who, like many Indonesians, goes by only one name.

Kalono said the October 29 sweep to find Americans was just a warning. "This is still yet a real action. But if they (the Americans) remain to be stubborn, we will destroy all U.S. facilities and interests across Solo" he said.

A receptionist at Novotel Hotel in downtown Solo confirmed receiving a similar warning from the same Muslim groups, saying that protesters were demanding a list of hotel guests. There are no immediate reports whether the groups found any American citizen during the sweeps. [End quoting]

Can we really blame any country for doing even worse, considering what the US government and banksters are doing to compromise the welfare of so many countries?

The Iowa Farm and Rural Life Poll, conducted by Iowa State University Extension rural sociologist Paul Lasley reveals that only 24 percent of the state's farmers said they think their quality of life will improve in the next five years....

Only about one of eight Iowa farmers thinks the overall farm economy will improve in the next five years—the lowest rate of optimism in 18 years....

John Whitaker, President of the Iowa Farmers' Union, said government subsidies farmers receive in bad times are helpful, but farmers would prefer not having to use them....

In addition to low commodity prices, Whitaker said farmers are dissatisfied with the Freedom To Farm Act, which he calls a failed federal policy, and the large corporate agribusinesses, which farmers perceive as controlling certain segments of the market....

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the proportion of farmers age 55 and over has risen from 37 percent in 1954 to 61 percent in 1997. — Agribusiness Examiner [End quoting]

Global agribusiness strategies have drained the life blood from most of North America's farming community—as has been the calculated goal set forth by the sinister elite interests at work behind the scenes. The demise of so many longtime family farms, due to these fabricated economic reasons, should be a concern to us all that is even more basic than the demise/exporting of our manufacturing capabilities.

NEW FEDERAL RULES TO PROTECT PRIVACY OF MEDICAL RECORDS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, by Robert Pear, 12/20/00: [quoting]

President Clinton today will issue sweeping new rules to protect the privacy of medical records by requiring doctors and hospitals to get consent from patients before disclosing health information, the White House said Tuesday.

The new rules, completing four years of work, will affect virtually every doctor, patient, hospital, pharmacy, and health insurance plan in the country, setting detailed federal standards for transactions now regulated by a jumble of state laws.

Congress directed the administration to adopt privacy standards under a 1996 law passed with bipartisan support. Federal officials said the need for such rules had grown with advances in technology that permit people to send data around the world with the click of a computer mouse.

Chris Jennings, the health policy coordinator at the White House, said Clinton would announce the rules today at the Department of Health and Human Services.

President-elect George W. Bush has not expressed any reservations about the standards. His campaign platform promised new rules to protect the privacy of medical information, but gave no details.

Gail R. Wilensky, an adviser to Bush on health policy, said Tuesday: "Republicans are every bit as concerned as Democrats about protecting the privacy of medical records. But the new administration will probably want to review the details of these standards—the benefits, costs, and burdens—as with any rules issued late in President Clinton's term."

Janlori Goldman, director of the Health Privacy Project at Georgetown University, hailed the rules as "a major victory for consumers".

She said "the administration went to great lengths to respond to consumers' concerns about the proposed rules" which were issued in November 1999 and generated more than 50,000 public comments.

Insurance companies and employers, while declaring their support for privacy in principle, complained that the rules were burdensome and bureaucratic and would increase costs.

Charles N. Kahn III, president of the Health Insurance Association of America, said: "Insurers and health plans feel strongly that consumers' records should be protected. However, these rules give us no uniformity and impose onerous, costly requirements."

Under the rules, doctors and hospitals will need to obtain written consent from patients before disclosing their medical information, even for routine purposes like treatment or the payment of claims. [End quoting]

This sounds good, but we can probably assume that, when all the fine print is read, we are probably going to be worse off then before this went into effect. The crooks in high places exhibit a very consistent record of taking away more than they give in any legislation. The loopholes will be what allow for more invasion of privacy than we would like to have.

WARNING ABOUT DANGEROUS INGREDIENT IN NAIL POLISH

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 11/30/00: [quoting]

The Environmental Working Group (EWG) has released the first-ever consumer alert on beauty products that contain dibutyl phthalate (DBP), a chemical coming under growing scientific scrutiny because of high levels found in reproductive-age women and possible risks of birth defects. Scientific concerns about DBP's risks increased after a Centers for Disease Control (CDC) study this fall found DBP in the bodies of every single person they tested, with the highest levels in reproductive-age women, the group most at risk. Scientists are concerned about DBP and reproductive-age women because the chemical causes severe birth defects in lab animals. Lab animal studies show that DBP can harm almost every physical structure in the developing male reproductive system. The effects include testicular atrophy, absent testes, and reduced sperm count.

Loopholes in federal law allow cosmetics manufacturers to put unlimited amounts of industrial chemicals like DBP into personal care products—with no required testing or monitoring for adverse effects. EWG's initial investigation suggests that DBP is found in about a third of the nail polishes now on the market, as well as a variety of other cosmetic products. "It's 'buyer beware' when it comes to cosmetics" said Jane Houlihan, senior analyst for EWG and principal author of the group's report "Beauty Secrets".

"Women who are considering becoming pregnant, or who are pregnant or nursing, should avoid using any products containing DBP" Houlihan said. EWG found DBP in 37 popular nail polishes, top coats, and hardeners, including products by L'Oréal, Maybelline, Oil of Olay, and CoverGirl. The full report and a list of products containing DBP are available at the www.rense.com Internet website. [End quoting]

Remember that a major agenda goal of the so-called elite controllers is to eliminate a lot of us "useless eaters" as quietly as possible, so we don't wake up to what is going on. When that goal can work in concert with the corporate goal of higher profits in products (by using poisonous ingredients instead of more expensive healthy ones), then what results is the situation we have today—with so many items filled with ingredients that harm more than help.

NEW ELEMENT DISCOVERED— GOVERNMENTIUM

From the DAVID ICKE MAGAZINE, <www.davidicke.com>, December 2000: [quoting]

Investigators at a major research institution have discovered the heaviest element known to science.

This startling new discovery has been tentatively named Governmentium (Gv).

This new element has no protons or electrons, thus having an atomic number of 0. It does, however, have 1 neutron, 125 deputy neutrons, 75 supervisory neutrons, and 111 team leader neutrons, giving it an atomic mass of 312.

These 312 particles are held together by a force called morons, which are surrounded by vast quantities of lepton-like particles called peons.

Since it has no electrons, Governmentium is inert. However, it can be detected as it impedes every reaction with which it comes into contact.

According to the discoverers, a minute amount of Governmentium causes one reaction to take over four days to complete when it would normally take less than a second.

Governmentium has a normal half-life of approximately three years; it does not decay but instead undergoes a reorganization in which a portion of the deputy neutrons, supervisory neutrons, and team leader neutrons exchange places.

In fact, any Governmentium sample's mass will actually increase over time, since with each reorganization some of the morons inevitably become neutrons, forming new isotopes. This characteristic of moron promotion leads some scientists to speculate that Governmentium is formed whenever morons reach a certain quantity in concentration.

This hypothetical quantity is referred to as the "Critical Morass". You will know it when you see it.

Some of you have probably seen this before, but it surely merits an occasional printing. Would anyone care to argue with the underlying message put so cleverly into a "scientific" context?!

I DEW

From GUIDEPOSTS, 12/2000, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

"Here we go again!" I scowled as the seamstress took in the waist of my gauzy blue bridesmaid's dress. In the past year, I had been in three weddings, and I would be in yet another this spring. I was happy for my friends, but each wedding was one more reminder that I was single and alone.

After the fitting, I stopped by my church. I knelt and launched into what I had come to call my "husband prayer".

Still feeling empty and dejected, I wandered over to the altar Bible and flipped through the pages. Genesis 27:28 seemed to leap off the page: "Therefore God give thee the dew of heaven...." I wasn't sure what it meant, but I felt lighter, like God had just given me some sort of promise.

Not long afterwards I met the man who is now my husband. His name is Donald Edward Welch, III. We have been married 15 years, and just as his initials spell out, he has truly been my D.E.W. from heaven. — Joyce Matula Welch, Deer Park, Texas

NO SMALL ACT OF KINDNESS

Here is a sample from Chicken Soup For The Soul: Home Delivery <cs-html-weekend@PostOffice.DailyInbox.com> for the date 11/25/00: [quoting]

The day was Thankful Thursday, our "designated day" of service. It's a weekly tradition that my two little girls and I began years ago. Thursday has become our day to go out in the world and make a positive contribution. On this particular Thursday, we had no idea exactly what we were going to do, but we knew that something would present itself.

Driving along a busy Houston road, praying for Guidance in our quest to fulfill our weekly Act of Kindness, the noon hour appropriately triggered hunger pangs in my two little ones. They wasted no time in letting me know, chanting, "McDonald's, McDonald's, McDonald's" as we drove along.

I relented and began searching earnestly for the nearest McDonald's. Suddenly I realized that almost every intersection I passed through was occupied by a panhandler. And then it hit me! If my two little ones were hungry, then all these panhandlers must be hungry, too. Perfect! Our Act of Kindness had presented itself. We were going to buy lunch for the panhandlers.

After finding a McDonald's and ordering two Happy Meals for my girls, I ordered an additional 15 lunches and we set out to deliver them. It was exhilarating. We would pull alongside a panhandler, make a contribution, and tell him or her that we hoped things got better. Then we'd say "Oh, by the way—here's lunch!" And then we would varoom off to the next intersection.

It was the best way to give. There wasn't enough time for us to introduce ourselves or explain what we were going to do, nor was there time for them to say anything back to us. The Act of Kindness was anonymous and empowering for each of us, and we loved what we saw in the rearview mirror: a surprised and delighted person holding up his lunch bag and just looking at us as we drove off. It was wonderful!

We had come to the end of our "route" and there was a small woman standing there, asking for change. We handed her our final contribution and lunch bag, and then immediately made a U-turn to head back in the opposite direction for home.

Unfortunately, the light caught us again and we were stopped at the same intersection where this little woman stood. I was embarrassed and didn't know quite how to behave. I didn't want her to feel obligated to say or do anything.

She made her way to our car, so I put the window down just as she started to speak. "No one has ever done anything like this for me before" she said with amazement. I replied, "Well, I'm glad that we were the first." Feeling uneasy, and wanting to move the conversation along, I asked: "So, when do you think you'll eat your lunch?"

She just looked at me with her huge, tired, brown eyes and said: "Oh, honey, I'm not going to eat this lunch." I was confused, but before I could say anything, she continued. "You see, I have a little girl of my own at home and she just loves McDonald's, but I can never buy it for her because I just don't have the money. But, you know what? Tonight she is going to have McDonald's!"

I don't know if the kids noticed the tears in my eyes. So many times I had questioned whether our Acts of Kindness were too small or insignificant to really effect change. Yet, in that moment, I recognized the truth of Mother Teresa's words: "We cannot do great things, only small things with great love."

SOMETHING FOR STEVIE

From the INTERNET, "Mary" <msnell@txk.net>, 12/6/00: [quoting]

From: M.O.M. <nox2128@blackfoot.net>, by Dan Anderson

(This touched my heart; hope its a blessing for you.)

I try not to be biased, but I had my doubts about hiring Stevie. His placement counselor assured me that he would be a good, reliable busboy. But I had never had a mentally handicapped employee and wasn't sure I wanted one. I wasn't sure how my customers would react to Stevie. He was short, a little dumpy, with the smooth facial features and thick tongued speech of Down Syndrome. I wasn't worried about most of my trucker customers, because truckers don't generally care who buses tables—as long as the meatloaf platter is good and the pies are homemade.

The four-wheeler drivers were the ones who concerned me—the mouthy college kids traveling to school, the yuppie snobs who secretly polish their silverware with their napkins for fear of catching some dreaded "truckstop germ", the pairs of white-shirted businessmen on expense accounts who think every truckstop waitress wants to be flirted with.

I knew those people would be uncomfortable around Stevie, so I closely watched him for the first few weeks. I shouldn't have worried. After the first week, Stevie had my staff wrapped around his stubby little finger, and within a month my truck regulars had adopted him as their official truckstop mascot. After that I really didn't care what the rest of the customers thought of him.

He was like a 21-year-old in blue jeans and Nikes, eager to laugh and eager to please, but fierce in his attention to his duties. Every salt and pepper shaker was exactly in its place, not a bread crumb or coffee spill was visible when Stevie got done with the table.

Our only problem was persuading him to wait to clean a table until after the customers were finished. He would hover in the background, shifting his weight from one foot to the other, scanning the dining room until a table was empty. Then he would scurry to the empty table and carefully bus the dishes and glasses onto the cart, and meticulously wipe the table with a practiced flourish of his rag.

If he thought a customer was watching, his brow would pucker with added concentration. He took pride in doing his job exactly right, and you had to love how hard he tried to please each and every person he met.

Over time, we learned that he lived with his mother, a widow who was disabled after repeated surgeries for cancer. They lived on their Social Security benefits in public housing two miles from the truckstop. Their social worker, who stopped to check on him every so often, admitted they had fallen between the cracks. Money was tight, and what I paid him was probably the difference between them being able to live together and Stevie being sent to a group home.

That's why the restaurant was a gloomy place that morning last August, the first morning in three years that Stevie missed work. He was at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester getting a new valve or something put in his heart. His social worker said that people with Down Syndrome often had heart problems at an early age, so this wasn't unexpected, and there was a good chance he would come through the surgery in good shape and be back at work in a few months.

A ripple of excitement ran through the staff later that morning when word came that he was out of surgery, in recovery, and doing fine. Frannie, my head waitress, let out a war hoop and did a little dance in the aisle when she heard the good news. Belle Ringer, one of our regular trucker customers, stared at the sight of the 50-year-old grandmother of four doing a victory shimmy beside his table. Frannie blushed, smoothed her apron, and shot Belle Ringer a withering look.

He grinned. "OK, Frannie, what was that all about?" he asked.

"We just got word that Stevie is out of surgery and going to be okay."

"I was wondering where he was. I had a new joke to tell him. What was the surgery about?"

Frannie quickly told Belle Ringer and the other two drivers sitting at his booth about Stevie's surgery, then sighed.

"Yeah, I'm glad he is going to be OK" she said, "but I don't know how he and his mom are going to handle all the bills. From what I hear, they're barely getting by as it is."

Belle Ringer nodded thoughtfully, and Frannie hurried off to wait on the rest of her tables.

Since I hadn't had time to round up a busboy to replace Stevie, and really didn't want to replace him, the girls were busing their own tables that day until we decided what to do. After the morning rush, Frannie walked into my office. She had a couple of paper napkins in her hand and a funny look on her face.

"What's up?" I asked.

"I didn't get that table where Belle Ringer and his friends were sitting cleared off right after they left, and Pony Pete and Tony Tipper were sitting there when I got back to clean it off" she said. "This was folded and tucked under a coffee cup."

She handed the napkin to me, and three $20 bills fell onto my desk when I opened it. On the outside, in big, bold letters, was printed: "Something For Stevie"

"Pony Pete asked me what that was all about" she said. "So I told him about Stevie and his mom and everything, and Pete looked at Tony, and Tony looked at Pete, and they ended up giving me this." She handed me another paper napkin that had "Something For Stevie" scrawled on its outside. Two $50 bills were tucked within its folds.

Frannie looked at me with wet, shiny eyes, shook her head, and said simply "Truckers!"

That was three months ago. Today is Thanksgiving, the first day Stevie is supposed to be back to work. His placement worker said he'd been counting the days until the doctor said he could work, and it didn't matter at all that it was a holiday. He called 10 times in the past week, making sure we knew he was coming, fearful that we had forgotten him or that his job was in jeopardy. I arranged to have his mother bring him to work, met them in the parking lot, and invited them both in to celebrate his day back.

Stevie was thinner and paler, but couldn't stop grinning as he pushed through the doors and headed for the back room where his apron and busing cart were waiting.

"Hold up there, Stevie, not so fast" I said. I took him and his mother by their arms. "Work can wait for a few minutes. To celebrate your coming back, breakfast for you and your mother is on me."

I led them toward a large corner booth at the rear of the room. I could feel and hear the rest of the staff following behind as we marched through the dining room. Glancing over my shoulder, I saw booth after booth of grinning truckers empty and join the procession.

We stopped in front of the big table. Its surface was covered with coffee cups, saucers and dinner plates, all sitting slightly crooked on dozens of folded paper napkins.

"First thing you have to do, Stevie, is clean up this mess" I said. I tried to sound stern. Stevie looked at me, and then at his mother, then pulled out one of the napkins. It had "Something For Stevie" printed on the outside. As he picked it up, two $10 bills fell onto the table. Stevie stared at the money, then at all the napkins peeking from beneath the tableware, each with his name printed or scrawled on it.

I turned to his mother. "There's more than $10,000 in cash and checks on that table, all from truckers and trucking companies that heard about your problems. Happy Thanksgiving!"

Well, it got real noisy about that time, with everybody hollering and shouting, and there were a few tears, as well.

But you know what's funny? While everybody else was busy shaking hands and hugging each other, Stevie, with a big, big smile on his face, was busy clearing all the cups and dishes from the table.

Best worker I ever hired.

"Coming together is a beginning; keeping together is progress; working together is success." — Henry Ford, Sr. [End quoting]

These kinds of stories don't make the evening news anywhere near as often as they should. This is the power of the "little people" working together, a force that the dark, so-called "elite" controllers of this planet are so afraid of—that they may awaken to their True Potential. Old Henry's motto is not bad advice in this age when so many feel a sense of not being a part of anything "important" but merely going through the motions of living.

The Eighth Thunder

The War Of Valued Life

Editor's note: Regular readers of this newspaper are well aware of Robert Ghost Wolf and the important public role he is playing in The Great Awakening that is occurring on this planet at this critical time.

Our front-page feature for the December 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM stated: Robert Ghost Wolf's Vision: Winds Of Change. "Where Do We Go From Here?" The posing of that question led to a lively discussion of possibilities, probabilities, and visions of tomorrows, energized by the uncoverings of long-suppressed Truths in all areas.

Robert continues that vast theme in this latest offering—which seems most appropriate to present at this time of the New Year and, in many ways of counting, the time of the TRUE beginning of the new millennium.

12/15/00 ROBERT GHOST WOLF

Are you prepared?

Over 100 realities for the coming decade from Robert Ghost Wolf,
Shaman of the Metis People

Prophecy is a vision of what is, or could be, not what is written in stone. It is not necessarily based upon fact, for fact is a past tense, what will be is a conjecture and exists in the void where all things exist potentially, yet no thing exists materially.

All that is written in stone is what has been, oftentimes archived so that those who would follow might come to understand what was, what is the cyclical rhythms of Nature and the heavens. Prophecies are lessons both of hope and of warning. For all is formed in the mind—the mind of Mother-Father God, the mind of the universal IS, the mind of the spirit essences, and finally in the minds of man and beings. This I say, for not all intelligent life in the universe is what we would now recognize as mankind.

In the first decade much is yet to be revealed.

Mankind is a special creation, unique unto the universe; one that is very different from the rest, for mankind has the potential to become the dreaming God, the God who creates from thought alone. All that mankind embraces has and continues to come to pass to stand testament in the ever changing yet constant dream.

What mankind chooses to embrace would affect all that passes through their mind, and that to which the mind has access is infinite. If thought is allowed to pass through the heart, and the heart is allowed to rule, then the outcome can be sublime, for compassion is the divining tool. If the heart is denied, then a collapsing of divinity occurs, and the outcome is left to random thought patterns of a disconnected divinity, and the God essence in us stands by watching, a passive observer in the dream, for the God in us chooses then not to rule, but rather to be part of the unfoldment of what is.

"Choose with full knowing your part, and play it well" is the adage of the ancient Sages. Contemplate the effect of the actions you take upon the next seventh generation, for you will return upon the wheels of time and harvest what you have sown.

What is presented here is for the contemplation of mankind that they may make choices and learn to live in harmony and prosper. I have chosen to focus on those visions that pertain mainly to America and the Western Hemisphere, for it is here that the great changes will effect first, and the restructuring of humanity shall commence.

Know that a great war shall soon commence in Israel, as the world shall in circumstance turn its back upon her, and this shall be the stage for the calling forth of the Anti-Christ and the Armageddon. But this event shall not unfold as it has been predicted in biblical terms, neigh, for it is a myth based upon factors created by mankind to fulfill its own agenda of misguided truths.

It is a tale that for eons has been spun only for the purposes of enslaving their brethren, and deliberately keeping the masses asleep for a hidden agenda that will soon be revealed by the turning of divine events that are already occurring. For not the whole of the worlds' peoples be caught up in the myth, and for them quite a different story shall unfold, as is the way of The Great Mystery.

THE HUMAN DRAMA UNFOLDING FROM A 3-D POINT OF VIEW

1: There is known today the existence of certain fungi, which have become commonplace and are ravaging our forests. These fungi will continue to transmute and take on knowing of their environment, and a form of intelligence. Within the first three years of the decade this will lead to disastrous occurrences, as mankind is devastated by the fungus moving from vegetation and the lower animal life forms, and propagating within the bodies of humans. The consequences will be devastating, as millions of people become afflicted and we will eventually see tens of millions of people die from viruses, with which allopathic medicine has no method of dealing.

Eventually a cure, or series of natural cures, will be found effectual; however the availability of the remedies, because of the wholesale imbalances existing in Nature due to pollution and the disappearance of much of the forests' natural plants that have been used for centuries in curing these ailments, will be too scarce to go around. This will lead, as I have stated in earlier readings, to:

2. There will begin a great quarantine of urban areas because of the fear of the "plagues" spreading to the rural areas and the affluent members of our society who have managed to break away from urban living and the social consequences it manifests.

3. Many communities will begin to form in the mountain areas openly as this situation becomes commonplace and the Great Dying continue in pandemic proportions. These communities will at first be reclusive and remote, as there is much to be concerned about. The possessing of "real cures" becomes a threat to the economical machine that has been established in the last century surrounding disease, and healing.

4. Thousands of refugees from the cities and outlying suburban areas will seek shelter with these communities, as the sickness becomes unbearable, and combined with the social and economic collapse that is occurring with no solution in sight.

5. Most of these refugees will be women and children. This will bring into awareness that the males of our society are dying, and before the end of the next decade we will see a dramatic decline in the male population, almost 80%. There will be many changes in our global perceptions of society as this situation becomes mainstream reality.

6. There will continue the falling away from organized religions by millions of people as there appears no solutions are offered, nor spiritual answers from the sanctioned religions.

7. This is already being seen in the rise of new forms of expressing the old religions with a renewed understanding of their true perceptions and knowledge they possessed.

8. Which will increase as the discoveries of many ancient archeological sites and ancient records are made public knowledge and the Great Myths of Organized Political Religions are revealed.

9. This again is accompanied by a rise in human consciousness due in part to a natural but accelerated evolution of the species in order to adapt to a changing environment and pervading social conditions. This is simply the advanced effect of what was called "The Quickening" in the previous century.

10. Signs of The Quickening will be obvious in the social occurrences, as we see for instance many elderly pregnancies amongst women, and what would have been thought of just a generation before as mere children parenting children, as well. This again is Nature's way of dealing with a species which is in danger of extinction due to mal-aligned thought.

11. Many of these new children coming into the world over the next decade will, especially in the rural and outback regions of population, be as it seems immune to the new plagues due to some kind of natural mutation in the genetic structure.

12. Also there will be amongst them a total contempt for the consciousness and political and social structures, which availed the conditions that they will see rampant in the world at this time during what is already being called, by those who see it, as the Great Dying.

13. This will cause a complete turn-around in the concepts of what was once hailed as the rapture. There will be those individuals who will seemingly depart from this plane of existence, both young and old. But also, there will be a new form of being, a New Race, which will be evident both in consciousness as well as bio-physically. The intelligence of many will be so in advance of their parents that in essence they will be directing the behavior of the parent, as the will of the parent will be of no contest to the powers these children seem to possess.

14. The president of the United States will become seriously ill, or it could be an assassination attempt. This will be played out as an attack from outside terrorists. Actually it will be from within factions here in the United States, who are responding to the broken faith in the government, and the awareness of the shallowness of present leaders.

The people's faith in the old regime will be broken. Expect that there will be a desperate attempt to place women into top federal positions, but the move will be to no avail, as it comes too late. The people's faith in the republic will be irreversibly damaged from a century of political corruptions. There will be great movements, in the mid to later days of the next decade, to restore the republic in accordance with its founding principles.

15. We will see many changes on all political fronts during this time, as many individuals who have been influential in the new technologies and the arts (cinema) begin to take on positions of political influence. No longer will the people be satisfied with the system of academia, or the "good ol' boys' club" that have prevailed in the previous century.

16. As new means of technology enable us to think faster, and find data quicker, the growth of individual intelligence will no longer accept the "children's stories" that have influenced the development of our global society, that were dispersed through the religions and educational systems of the old world.

17. Many of these new political figures—the new founding fathers and mothers (as there will occur a great evening of the genders)—will form new industries in opposition to the previous power lords of a more material existence. The spiritual, as well as the humanitarian, qualities of an individual as well as a people (country, state, or region) will begin to once again be what was in the time of the ancients.

18. This will cause a turn-round in the dealings of exchange for services and goods. The matters of human welfare and well being will become more important than the archaic economic structures that prevailed above the welfare of humanity in the previous century.

19. The age of materialism will continue to crumble before our eyes, so to speak, and in its place we shall see the beginnings of a "Solon's Republic" arise from the ashes of the older dying regimes of governmental and social control. It will be a fulfillment of the prophecy of the Phoenix Rising.

20. There will be a Great Leveling of the political structures, and as well their sanctioned religious structures, as humanity faces the reality of the existence of alien life forms who have been among us for some time.

21. This will also be evident as there will be an open policy of revealing of past relationships with alien beings, as the old governments collapse from their own corruptions and years of misleading the people for reasons of material gain and power. There will be no stopping the unveilings of the Truths, as the monetary systems of the global banking systems continue to fail at an alarming rate.

22. We will be witness to much chaos and public displays of violence in the inner cities. This is unfortunate, but a necessary part of the process of Purification that the Hopi have warned us about for so many years. In the inner cities it will become a situation of almost "medieval crime lords" ruling the local neighborhoods; there will not be enough numbers of police to maintain order, and the military will be called-in as a necessity.

23. These "war lords" will reign for a period of about seven years, during which many will experience curfews, and policed cities, under a state of martial law. It will not be a time to be in the inner cities for anyone.

24. Employment of the unskilled will become a nonexistent reality, as we will see many of the former labor force for industry coming from prison reform camps. This will be initiated and embraced by the public, and presented as a great social plan for reprogramming the growing numbers of criminals who must be kept in the penal systems. Also, it will be presented as a means of returning the former industrial glory of America to her own shores, by affording reasonable labor at affordable prices for industry. This will seem, at first, to be the answer to so much of America's manufacturing being moved offshore, and depleting income to the enormous working class.

25. There is already in effect a system that will soon become known in the aware political and patriot circles, which is destroying the structures of global economies and the existing banking systems. It is merely a matter of a few years before there is no way to uphold the myth that all is fine, as we see literally millions here in the Western Hemisphere lose everything to a malaise of economic disasters.

26. The insurance companies fail due to disastrous weather calamities that will be occurring, and industry implodes due to 1000 percent inflation in America. (See Last Cry: Native American Prophecies.)

27. As well, there will be no way to afford the treatment of the population in hospitals as the numbers of dying and afflicted people reach the tens of millions, with no viable cures from the medical industry.

28. The realization of an actual global political policy of depopulation will be revealed and there will be massive revolts and tearing down of existing political systems.

29. The situation here in America will evolve into a mutiny of the military being divided, first, into three factions: one upholding the political agendas of the UN; another upholding the old military regimes of the last century.

30. And a third will develop, as there emerges a new Western States faction that will see the splitting of America into five distinct regions. The Western States, which are not entirely reliant upon foreign oil, and exchange in the European markets, will stand as an icon for the last stronghold of the American Dream on the spiritual ideals set forth by the founding fathers.

31. Already they will have overcome much of the cultural and racial problems, which will still plague the East, and keep the old guard virtually paralyzed as—

32. the degree of racial violence and corruption of the inner city political and social depravity turns the inner cities into virtual war camps, causing the government to have to relocate in the Colorado area—

33. under the protection of the military—who holds the technology which is necessary to defend America against the ever-rising threat of UN forces ruled by the European financial lords who will seek to take the land by force if necessary in order to have America capitulate to the pressures of their needing the resources of America for the fulfillment of their agenda of global dominance in their kind of One World Order reality.

34. This realization of the political agenda for the European Common Market will cause rise to a new international alliance consisting of Canada (being British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan) and the corporate overlords—the newly reformed United States of America, Japan, Mexico, and the expatriated Chinese governments who once made up Taiwan and Hong Kong.

35. Globally this will result in two factions: The European-dominated faction, and the New Global Alliance comprised of the above-described forming a third of the world's real estate and holding the majority of the global industrial resources.

36. At first this will cause, in the West, challenges for power, which will be short-lived as the Western Hemisphere and Asia are already well on the road to social and cultural integration.

37. Spiritually, the Western Hemisphere will not buy into the Anti-Christ propaganda, as there will actually be manifest a male individual holding true to the patriarchal dominance of the old religions, and their narrow and archaic perceptions. After a brief period of the world being enamored by his apparent miracles, here in the Western Hemisphere many will see through the ruse of the true political and religious agendas.

38. There will be many enlightened souls here in the Western Hemisphere who will create like-miracles, in attempts to reverse the adverse effects of the Great Dying, causing the Truth of our true spiritual heritage and inheritance from the stars to be fully realized.

39. This will, however, spur-on a “War Of The Gods” not unlike that which occurred upon this plane many eons ago. This, of course, will be heightened by the presence and revealing of a long-term relationship and agenda with the existing extraterrestrial beings already inhabiting the Earth, and as well, with the factions of the many contingencies who will be starting to openly interact with global governments in their attempts to create a political peace between the warring factions. With the failing of the takeover of the American will to self-sovereignty by propaganda and public legislations, the elements of the Anti-Christ will resort to force, and the magical reign will, of its own energy, begin to crumble from within.

40. In many ways it will be reminiscent of Nazi Germany in the final months. The once invincible forces of darkness will turn on each other and devour themselves. We will see the symbol of “the snake eating its tail” as a sign of the silent rebellion everywhere in the industrialized world.

41. To redeem the damaged environment and restore the balance of Nature required to assist in sustaining life as we know it, there will be the coming changes which will also be evident and beginning all over the globe.

42. We shall witness strange new weather patterns, and phenomena in weather as we have not yet known. Some of these have already been witnessed as they begin to materialize upon our plane:

(a) electrical snowstorms and dry lightning in the cold of winter set many places afire that have been affected by the unusually long droughts that will be occurring;

(b) straight-line tornados, some attaining speeds of over 300 mph. The prairies shall become desolate, and dust storms shall blow across the parched land as many farms and ranches lie fallow;

(c) rain and snowstorms in the full sunlight, a phenomenon that will occur without the presence of clouds in the skies. This will especially be prevalent in the mountains and high country;

(d) snow and hail in the heat of summer. Some of the hail will be as large as grapefruits, and blizzards will not be uncommon in July;

(e) firestorms that rage for months, sometimes creating huge spouts of fire like tornados. Building in many of the forested areas will not be permissible as huge areas smolder for months at a time with only the winter snows to quiet their progress;

(f) thick clouds, which become denser than water, that will cause many airplane disasters, for it will be like hitting concrete for these birds in flight;

(g) ice sheets that fall from the clouds, first like a mist that encompasses all it enfolds, then this occurrence will bring thicker and thicker mists, that will appear as sheets of ice in our satellite pictures;

(h) blood-red rain from clouds as black as night shall fall upon the land, and death will follow quickly as the air burns the lungs, and the eyes become blind from oozing sores;

(i) still storms, periods where there is absolutely no movement of air, and the atmospheric pressure is such that it is felt in the ears and is acutely painful, causing extreme and sudden disorientation will accompany this phenomenon as many fall down from disconnecting with the energies of the life force, and they lay upon the ground as if in epileptic seizures;

(j) fireballs, pieces of star stuff, sometimes with the consistency of metallic ice, being almost razor sharp, will fall from the skies and cause huge fires and destruction;

(k) giant g-force spouts begin to appear in the oceans and, later, the Great Lakes. These huge funnels will spew things up and out at tremendous heights and distances. This last attempt by Nature to protect her inner worlds, and peoples, will be the cause of much phenomena and controversy;

(l) the appearances of rainbows at night, and skys that glow red by day, will throw many into fear of the End Times, while to others it will appear as a sign of Divine intervention;

(m) radiation storms: as the holes in the ozone tear to an even greater extent, schools and public airlines will be shut down, and the public told when and when not to be out in the open. Contamination of crops due to these storms will be a devastating element to the economies of many areas;

(n) solar burns days: days when the effects from the Sun are so hot that the temperature rises to above 120°F to 140°F, which will be very prevalent in the highlands. The lack of water in these times will make things increasingly devastating to agriculture. As well, the effect in the cities and the consumption of power will cause frequent blackouts that will last days at a time, and they will be erratic as to not follow the cycle of the seasons, for the seasons shall be two during the latter days of the Purification Time;

(o) spider webs: strange funguses that fall from the sky burning the flesh and burning crops. In many forested areas these “spider webs” are already occurring and mutating into a strange lifeform, causing the death of many trees. The trees all seem to die from the top down, and the forest floor is barren of undergrowth, thus the essential herbs that heal will become very scarce;

(p) in some places new plants will appear, things that have never grown there before. Also, many familiar vegetation species will vanish and not appear again;

(q) aurora storms: strange lights similar to Aurora Borealis but appearing in very unlikely locations, that paralyze electronics and communications;

(r) the effects of global warming will cause reason for many of the nations of the world to come together and disregard the edicts of the Political Powers as millions face annihilation from the widespread devastating effects. Cities become virtual places of horror, as there is no relief from the heat and the still storms that result.

43. In many areas the animals will actually rebel against man, and those who were thought placid and safe will attack towns and isolated beings that happen to be in their territories. Even the rabbits and squirrels will become dangerous.

44. Quietly over the last decade, and it will continue, that animals have been appearing in mutated form. These animals will keep breeding, and strange and new forms of beast shall appear in our forests, and our waters. As well in the more isolated areas we will even see many that have not been here for a while. Nature is creating new life for new situations, and not all things work out well; the first prototypes can be very strange, especially as the animals will not have any alternative but to eat the chemically treated vegetation, and that which is wild can be contaminated from the radiation storms as well.

45. In the religious, social, and political struggles to deal with this extraterrestrial reality, many of the factions of long-cloistered secret societies will be revealed. So intense will the distain of the people become that there will be open violence and drastic reactions to the old regime. Many will be killed in these new religious wars, and this will cause, in the more conservative areas of America, the activation of the public compounds which have been an ongoing project by the would-be New World Order.

46. In the Western portion of the country this will be short-lived and the concentration of UN military forces will be experienced mainly in California and Arizona and portions of Oregon and Washington state, as these political factions have already sworn allegiances for monetary purposes to the federal government in Washington DC. They are essentially welfare states and have no strong, politically sovereign, established policies of political power.

47. Oregon and Washington will eventually rally as the localized political power switches to the more rural areas.

48. However, there will be many isolated areas where the military will remain in opposition to the New United States Government that will be shortly forming.

49. These outposts will crumble of their own accord, over time, as the overpowering realities of pandemic disease and financial unliquidity of the old regime become increasingly evident.

50. And solutions are improvised in those areas to overcome the dependence upon the federal government's two-generation-long policies of deliberately creating dependency upon federal funding for basic survival.

51. Under the influence and interaction with the regime of the Anti-Christ, there will be increasing activity with those factions of the extraterrestrials who are not particularly favorable to human presence upon planet Earth.

52. We will see an attempt to enforce a global religion on the part of the European Corporate Power Lords, enacted through the Anti-Christ forces, which will dominate the United Nations. This is a desperate attempt to salvage the decaying religious structures that will lose their positions of former reverence and respect in the face of a dying world. The plan will be unenforceable, only forcing matters of truth even more underground.

53. For by now Americans will be waking up out of the ethers of the untouchable quality of American life. We will have become big boys in our comprehension of the "street tactics" of political agendas and the use of military employed as their enforcers. When the military turns on their own people, America will rise up, and old instilled values, which remain deeply seated in the culture, will become a torch of the New Republic.

54. There will exist many extraterrestrials who are benevolent here in the Western Hemisphere and will help us in our understandings of the Higher Laws of physics and spiritual attainment. There will be a shocking realization publicly, on a global level, as to the extent that we are all descendents of the Annunaki, and that they live among us, and have for centuries.

55. This will cause great struggles, as old paradigms meet head on with a Passionate New Awareness that seems to spread from one region to another, almost as if by magical means. No sooner will one group know of a spiritual Truth than, in the next moment, in another region of the world, yet another group will come to the same awareness.

56. However, as the social culture of the people of the Western Hemisphere, people who have long practiced religious tolerance and the open application of multiple spiritual philosophies in households will eventually dominate, as the people integrate, at a rapid acceleration, the aspects of their own version of a new world religion. And the true Christ Consciousness will have begun to blossom. And the Reawakening of The Way will have begun.

57. One based upon the commonality of the blending of many truths that exist within the great commonality of the wisdoms of the educated cultures of this hemisphere. We have already formed an infrastructure of a New Faith which is comprised of almost every culture and faith that exists upon the globe.

58. This New Faith will be greatly enhanced, and we will see rapid growth among the newly developing "Neo-Tribalization" movement that is birthing here in the Western Hemisphere—due to the acceptance of gender equality and the honoring of the Divine feminine, which will be lacking almost totally in the patriarchal European regime.

59. Some of the reasons for this will be spiritual, while others will be out of sheer necessity for survival in communities where millions of homeless women and children will have come—fleeing from the inner cities, and the military suppression of the population and placement into "the camps" of anyone who is not participating in the system for salvation demanded by the corporate structures of the Anti-Christ movement. "Take not the mark of the Beast" will become a common expression of the growing underground of multitudes of a silent resurrection of the human spirit that is already beginning to surface in the rural areas, and finding its ways into the inner cities.

60. Again, the revival of a True Spirituality, one without bondage and with religious tolerance that is surfacing here in the Western Hemisphere, will be one of its spiritually empowering forces that will cause Miracles to occur, and eventually they will overcome the darkness of the more limited perceptions of the Old World regime. This is a "War Of Valued Life"—one of Consciousness and Awareness.

61. These newly revived "Wars of the Gods" that surround the political-religious regime of the Anti-Christ will be devastating to the socio-economic systems of the globe, and here in the Western Hemisphere they will meet an abrupt end as we witness the increased activity of cataclysmic weather changes and we begin to experience what, in the last century, was prophesized as "the Earth changes".

62. Violent reactions will be experienced from our Sun, and as well the movement of the tectonic plates, causing the long awaited prophecies of the changing of the face of the known world to be seen as imminent reality. There will also be the interaction of those from inner Earth, which has been too long overlooked in its interaction and importance in the scheme of the emerging new reality.

63. The necessity for understanding and applying the "new physics" is already fast becoming a world concern among our educated and aware people on a global level. The process that follows the mental necessity to adjust to totally new energy frequencies, and the approach to our growing need for energy, and the balancing of our environment are no longer the thoughts of a few avant-garde individuals from the '60s, nor are they alone the concern for a few "meadow muffins" and "Earth children" in the remote woods of northern Idaho and the wilds of New Mexico.

It is an eminent fact that we are running out of the resources that fueled the old industrial age, that they are polluting, and have severe negative effects on all lifeforms and could eventually quite literally kill the planet. As well, we are fast becoming aware that the experimentation of synthetic chemical and technological remedies for the treatment of disease are no longer working. That the present methods of agricultural development are a losing proposition and, in fact, genetically engineered foods and plants are killing us, is no longer a well-kept secret.

If the present process of official denial is continued at the present rate, it is entirely possible that, in the next decade, we will lose more than 60% of the world human population alone. I say alone because I am not yet taking into account the loss of vegetation and animal life necessary for the holistic and spiritual balance of Earth life. If we kill the natural environment, and all Earth's biosphere, as well as Her creatures, and we are headed that way, then how can we possibly hope to survive as a living breathing species ourselves?

64. The reality of our interconnection to a greater reality through frequency—a holographic reality—will become one of the dominant concerns of the emerging new consciousness.

65. This will bring about the realization of a greater holistic truth to the universe, and our relationship with the rest of our galactic reality, which our extraterrestrial family will support, even those who are opposed to our continuance as a species, as it is the major factor in their disgust and desire to eliminate us.

As I have stated over and over, and have made the prominent point of my books about the prophecies, the emphasis should not be placed upon third-dimensional Earth changes. Earth changes are merely the result of cause and effect. Cause being an afflicted consciousness.

The effect being emotional irrationality rendering us barely capable of perceiving, never mind developing, humanity to its highest purpose and desires. Be first concerned with the Emotional Storms, and the changes in frequencies that are the result of the cosmic universe that is also alive and in the throws of change around us.

We are part of a much Bigger Picture, and many of these elements affecting our true state of reality exist in the ancient records and texts of our ancestors. The story is already known; the outcome has already occurred. We are like frogs in the pond exacerbating upon theories about life on the mountaintop, when we have not yet even summoned the courage to venture out of the pond.

“In order to know what and who you are, you must first discover what and who you are not.” — Dr. Joseph Puleo

These are but a few of the untold elements that will come into play in the human drama. For much more detail and in-depth awakenings,

I would suggest that you read my books:

- Last Cry: Native American Prophecies
- Winds of Change and in original manuscript form:

- Through The Eye Of The Shaman

and:

- Days Of Destiny: The Cosmic Prophecies For The New Century.

Much of what took years of work, that is in these works, is still unfolding and yet to be realized.

And before we embark on some of the metaphysical and miraculous elements of the prophecies, I would leave you to contemplate these words of one of the truly great leaders of the 20th Century, Mr. Nelson Mandela:

Our Deepest Fear... is not that we are inadequate... our deepest fear is that we are Powerful Beyond Measure.

It is our Light, not our Darkness that most frightens us.

We ask ourselves: “Who am I to be Brilliant, Gorgeous, Talented, and Fabulous?”

Actually, you are asking who you are not to be.

You are a child of God!

*Your Playing Small does not Serve the World.
There is nothing Enlightened about Shrinking so that other people won't feel insecure around you!*

*We are born to make manifest the Glory of God that is within us.
It is not just in some of us.*

It is in Everyone!

And as we let our Light Shine, we unconsciously give other people permission to do the same.

As we Liberate from our own Fear, our Presence automatically Liberates Others!

THE METAPHYSICAL AND THE MIRACULOUS

As we study the deeper essence of mythologies in the light of the theosophical preponderance, and the emergence of recent archeological discoveries, we come to recognize that the gods of whom they speak are personified natural forces, which are not static or perfect, but represent evolving intelligences of many levels. Some are so far ahead of our conscious understandings that they surpass our loftiest attempts at imagination.

The spirit world may even be less evolved than our own human kingdom. These would be on the way “down” toward the density of matter, caught in the process of involution, having not yet attained our stage of material development. For we are surely essences in motion, and we are finding now, in this point called present, that all is not what it appears to be, and even more is not what we have been lead to believe.

We have been told in prophecies from almost every culture around the world that there is a time of Great Awakening coming upon our sweet Lady Gaia, Babagi, Pachi Moma. Some call this time “a time of Purification” while others call it “the time of Awakening”.

We are seeing in this the two hands of the same body. One thing is for certain: this is a time of unveiling, a time when all things which have been hidden shall be revealed. In this, the time of the merging of the Christ energies, we are approaching the Age of Truth—a time altered not by mankind but by the frequencies of the heavens themselves. The old paradigm no longer works. If we insist upon keeping the old in our daily patterns, we soon find that life becomes difficult—even impossible—as we experience the shifting of realities as well as personal relationships, and walk in a world that appears to be in the throws of chaos.

There is a Mayan-Toltec calendar which indicates that we reached the bottom of the 9th hell at the Harmonic Convergence in August of 1987, and that there will be 25 years of chaos before we begin to ascend through 13 heavens.

There is an entire understanding of the 13 Lords of Light and 9 Lords of Darkness. This is a cycle that is well known to the ancients. We have now made it through more than half of that cycle. The final cycle of darkness, the 9th cycle, the cycle of chaos and our indulgence into self-destruction, brings us to the year 2012, which is the time of the Great Transformation according to the calculations of some of the Mayan Calendars.

And what does this mean? Is it the end of all things? Is this calculation of the ending of our world (which is how it has progressed in the minds on the media-driven Western societies)? Is it based upon a full and proper understanding of the entire 17 calendars that the ancient Mayans used in their calculations of the cosmos? Is the mathematics absolutely accurate that predicts this time of 2012 as the “ending of the Mayan calendar”?

The answer is: “No. It is based upon partial information, not complete understanding of the Mayan calendars and the mathematical information they give us to use.”

Now there are a lot of people scurrying around trying to defend their positions and claims. In the end Hu Nab Ku, the Creator

Wakantonka, Mahayo, Yahweh, Mother-Father God, will have the final say, not man, for mankind has forgotten the ancient knowledge; it is no longer at our fingertips as it once was; we have fallen into a darkness.

Right now, while we sit here in the splendor of our realized world, there are many thousands of Mayan people fighting for the right to be Mayan and practice their Spirituality. The struggle against the Beast, the Anti-Christ, continues.

“Why”, some might ask, “do these indigenous people keep fighting and dying? Why not just be like the rest of the world—give in? What is it that keeps them going for all these hundreds of years without victory?”

They have the vision; they have seen the future; and their calculations are based upon truths that go back well over 35,000 years.

But, of this time that has been prophesized, what is it that is actually supposed to occur in the year 2012? The shifting of the heavens is one thing—giant waves of photon energy that will rock many things. We are experiencing the Dance of Kali. The Death Cycle is almost over—but not before we see the final dance of the tyrants. We are also, on the other hand, experiencing a birthing process, and if we watch Mother Earth, we notice that Her birthing can appear quite violent by our human standards.

The words of the prophet Quatzalcoatl,

Chilam Balam, the Pale Prophet, the one who appeared to Wavoka the Pauite Visionary who called forth the Ghost Dance over 110 years ago—which is not unlike the children of today—called, in his time, for a change in the dream, that the people might survive the holocaust of annihilation. This is a ceremony where the understanding of its knowledge has been handed down to me by my indigenous elders.

At this time I would share this part of its understanding with you:

Star (Venus circles the Earth every 104 years x 5 = 520 years, which is up, according to the Mayan calendar, in the Mayan year 2012) the rule of the warlike strangers would grow into greater and greater orgies of death and destruction.

Remember well what I have taught you and return not to the ways of the serpent and the sacrificers, to the eating of flesh and the drinking of blood. This path will lead only unto the final destruction.

Know that the end time will come in 5 full cycles of the Dawn Star, for the cosmos is eternal and never fails, for five is the number—of the Earth being 8 (8 pointed star), and 5 is the difference between 8 and 13, which is the number (frequency) of these children of destruction.

He goes on to say in the ancient script:

When they have polluted the Earth to such an extent that the number of Earth becomes as 13, then in that moment they shall be no more. The dream shall alter, as Hu Nab Ku (our Father in heaven) has a plan, a great plan, and that cannot be altered.

There shall be a shifting, a great shaking, and all things shall be touched, even the stones, and in a moment there shall be a newness in a great swelling of light that will fill the heavens and block out even the light of our own Sun in its brightness...and the worlds shall split as will the heavens...in a moment. And in that moment you shall be where your heart is, for time as we have known it shall be no more.

66. Mankind has dreamed the dream of violence, and learning through pain and suffering. We are seeing the final playing out of that drama in these latter days of the Piscean age. One age does not abruptly stop and another suddenly begin; there is an overlaying and a transition. The transition can oftentimes be painful to experience. Presently we are entering the frequency of Christ Consciousness. This is a REAL frequency, not a mythological occurrence.

The coming of the Aquarian Age is like watching the dance of Kali; it is a two-edged sword. That which is based upon falsehood and manipulation of reality is falling away, while that which is based upon Universal Law and Cosmic Truth is finding its way through the cracks of the old solidified consciousness, and birthing new abundance and life.

Have you ever heard the terminology “life is not supposed to be a struggle”? To hear it is one thing, but to employ it as your everyday philosophy is another thing entirely.

In order to set new patterns in our lives, it is necessary to open up to what may be, to you, new concepts of thinking. In this new time what we think is what we draw to us, and “The Quickening” is making us realize that principle of the Universal Law on a moment-to-moment actuality.

Start living in a oneness of self, doing what is right for you. In the applying of this principle, you may find that certain approaches do not work. This does not mean that the principle is incorrect—only that the method is not yet developed. One cannot suddenly assume the strength of the bear when they have lived a lifetime as a rabbit.

Discernment, Discretion, Detachment, and Desire are the elements of the new 4-D reality.

Practice them daily, doing what is wholesome and correct for you. If it brings Godly feelings, then you will know that you are correct. If others criticize you for your path, remember that every sage in the history of mankind was criticized for their self-chosen path away from the herd. The libraries are filled with stories about them, and yet there is not one story to be found of the critics who persecuted them.

67. As we become increasingly aware of our Divine heritage, and false concepts crumble before our eyes, and we witness the oneness of each other and all cultures, the separation will fall away like the darkness at dawn. People will learn they can learn to live among each other without fear and paranoia. The re-experiencing of ancient rhythms and understandings of the old ones will bring about a diminishing of the false distance between peoples. Relationships will be based upon commonality and evenness, and the old paradigm will slowly wither away.

68. This will bring about a sense of closeness with Earth’s ancient beings, and as the practice of true spiritual freedom is exercised on a daily basis by more and more people who will be opening up to the new way, the collapsing of time begins to occur. We will realize, more and more, that time is artificial, a synthesized reality.

As this occurs, and we find new energy in expressing our spiritual freedom—speaking directly to Creator rather than going to an interpreter—we will find a new closeness with Mother-Father God. Many children are already coming into this plane with this knowing. They have a memory of who they are and where they are coming from and why. This is a miraculous occurrence, and is the result of our continued determination to find true spiritual freedom and gender evenness in our social structures. God is both the feminine and the masculine energies; which came first is of little concern, for it is a cyclical reality of constant Yin and Yang.

69. Here in the Western Hemisphere we will witness great breakthroughs in the ceasing of the gender wars. The emerging Christ Consciousness will not tolerate it, and women will regain their rightful place in the social structure. This will bring about a great healing of the almost absent family structures, although there will be definite changes—in that marriages will not be necessary and there will be a vast population of second- and third-generation single mothers, which will create out of necessity a new social order of its own.

70. This also will be due partially to the decline in population of the male in our species—something that is already occurring, but will soon become evident to the eyes of the media that brings the message to the people.

71. This decade will see many women become leaders in the political arenas of the world’s nations, and as well in the communities and neo-tribalism that will become prominent in the highlands of both North and South America.

As well, many women will take on the role of spiritual leaders, which will change the infrastructures of many contemporary religious concepts, as well as those of the indigenous peoples as they begin to remember their true wisdom teachings that have been damaged in the separation of the genders that occurred during the Piscean Age.

72. Concerning Mother Earth, we know She is subject to gradual changes all the time; nothing remains stationary. In addition to this natural changing process, there occur occasional cataclysms. But I might add they are never without warning.

Earth changes are afoot; they always are. The great upheavals, the ones which cause radical alterations in the disposition of continents and seas, the shifting of the poles, are governed by the rhythmic pulse of the planet’s own life currents, and Her interaction with the cosmos. She is, after all, a living being, and has Her own reality that we as yet cannot fit into our scope of vision and understanding.

These catastrophic changes take place at apparently regular intervals whose length far surpasses any secular histories that we can recall. One reason for this occurrence is the depredations of the human inhabitants who, over much too long a period, violate and ignore the Laws that govern the ecological system.

And, as is Her nature, when the degree of human destructiveness becomes intolerable, She rebels and reclaims Her rightful place as the Mother of all. In Her emotional displays of re-creation She is often quick and to the point; She is, after all, very much a woman. In Her raging dance to reclaim the simplicity of Her ways, she brings about violent change in restoring the balance of elements back to their original design and intent—Her design and Her intent.

This dance is all part of the normal processes of the living Mother's regeneration system, which is Her immune system, and Her actions bring about a rapid and healthy recovery and redemption. She is very much like us, in that the causes for disease and imbalance are spiritual decline, and result from an imbalanced consciousness that She Herself creates. And like the artist She is, if She does not like the canvas, She changes it.

The face of the Earth is changing already, the struggle in consciousness to keep our spiritual aims high, and hope that they remain progressing in the steady but interestingly slow pace that they are progressing. There will be many changes that are seemingly unavoidable, and these are discussed with some depth in my book Last Cry.

The main concern we have right now, children of the Earth, are three. The first I described earlier with the weather anomalies that will be occurring.

The second is the pole shift. This will cause a great shifting in the seasons, and completely change the climatic conditions upon the Earth's surface. Nothing is stable, and we need to take into account, with the INTELLIGENT use of our technologies, how to deal with climatic instability—as well as high winds, water pollution, oxygen diminishment, genetically manipulated plant life, and the probability that, in our madness to control Nature, we have created forces that now will bring about changes in lifeforms that we could not imagine. So greenhouses, and the study of hydroponic gardens, is a wise utilization of time and energy. Also best to build them in domes. They will be necessary to withstand the winds and the earthquakes that will be occurring with more and more frequency. As well, build them on high ground, old ground—the mountains would be best.

Thirdly, we are going to have to learn to deal with the very real danger of new kinds of solar storms that actually come to Earth directly from Grandfather Sun, and in irregular but constant intervals. Burning fireballs will be, if not a common occurrence, a fairly regular one. Then there are the effects of the solar winds that we know will wreck havoc upon our space-age technology. These are not winds like the wind that fills your sails; they are winds of energy, and remain unpredictable in nature and effect. Divine intervention will occur, if we are wanting and worthy of it.

The destruction of the human race will be first by its own hand, before there is a mass destruction by the Divine forces of the Mother of all. What we are seeing today is not the result of Earth changes in a natural manner. Rather, we are experiencing self-destruction caused mainly by our own doing; it is cause and effect. Remember: greater than 60% of the human population will perish, 'tis true, but by its own doing, not the forces of Life. The horror we experience in the world today has not a thing to do with Nature; it has everything to do with man.

Change the way you think, and you will change the conditions under which you live. As for the other prophecies about Earth changes, most that concern us have already been told; it is merely a matter of time and consciousness that will determine the final outcomes.

73. The technologies of science are already discovering ways to rejuvenate and extend our life. We will soon find that, in fact, there are natural ways to extend and rejuvenate the life span. The simple miracle in sustaining this, it will be discovered, lies in the accessing of our spiritual side. Here the natural hormones—which are presently paralyzed by our life style, our diet, and suppressed emotions—can be activated once again.

74. The importance of the ductless glandular system will be realized, and very shortly. (It already exists and is known.) As the old, lifeless systems of corporate bureaucracies break down and crumble, and true methods of healing are restored, the use of these systems of meditation and nutrition will be available to the people. This will begin in the communities that are already silently forming as we begin the restructuring of our global society through the New Tribalization, which will be governed by spiritual consciousness rather than political means or might. We are a resourceful people, and the ultimate survival machine. Realizing the Oneness of it all, we will be reborn.

75. We are coming to realize that all things are interconnected and interactive and interdependent upon each other—Body, Mind, and Spirit. The teachings of the Merkaba and the Kabbalah were well understood by the ancients; we have simply forgotten them. As we learn this Golden Rule, we will shortly realize that the corruption occurred when these wisdoms were cloistered away and kept by an elite few, all for the purposes of power over their fellow man. This will instill a great movement in the reestablishment of the temples of learning—places where anyone with the capacity to learn will be able to come and participate. For the whole is much better off when the burden of secrecy is removed and the sharing is unilateral, and not biased nor manipulated for the shallow agenda of self-gratification. Immortality is not an unattainable rite or accidental occurrence; it is a universal ability that is housed within each and every one of us. We need only unlock the door to unlimited thought, for what we think we become.

76. As we come closer to the realization of our God-self in this process of reawakening, our perceptions will change from simple gratification of the five senses and masturbating our fear nodes, to one where we seek rather to achieve universal compassion and the uplifting of the race as a whole. This will align itself along with the re-establishing of true human values, a common welfare we acquire through the New Tribalization. This will lead us in a different way to the Golden Age, for this is a metaphorical phrase rather than a literal one. The Golden Age will be an age of enlightenment, not material gratification—one where each of us meets and respects the other as living God-man/God-woman.

77. Schools will be established to heal the multitudes who suffer from the trauma of the Transition Period, which will lead to even greater methods of holistic healing and the accomplishment of the Oneness perception of the species. This will be enhanced by the realization that we are not alone in the universe; in fact, we are part of a great and expansive galactic community. The reasons for this occurrence will be obvious.

78. With the old paradigm of nationalism no longer useful, or even realistic, we will create a new global sense of consciousness. For in this Transition, if we are wise, we need not lose our technology, only redirect it. This will and can be accomplished by the allowing of our own rearranging of thought and allowing the possibility of new perceptions.

79. There will be the fulfilling of the prophecy of the Great Star that will appear, as told by the Prophet to the Algonquin People in the Great Peace, which translates to the rebirth of the Great Peace in the prophecies of Deganaweda. This was a true story of the second coming, for the Prophet will return and is already traveling amongst us. His ambassadors are everywhere. And they appear not as you might think, for they are in the flesh, and among you. The truth about the Prophet will be revealed in the archeological evidences of his existence in many lands, before his retuning in the embodiment. This was also foretold and is already occurring. And when he comes, he will not be alone. Nor will this miraculous event only be fulfilled by the masculine, for many Divine feminine entities will also appear, for the experience of limited existence shall no longer serve a purpose in our searching for Divine probability.

80. More and more frequently, unto those who have found the wonder of the silence and the return to simple life styles, shall these magnificent beings appear. They shall come as Guides and Teachers, as Brother and Sister to their kin, in evenness and as Messengers of fulfillment of promises made long ago. This anomaly is already occurring in obscure places and in the mountains, among many peoples and cultures.

81. For the dimensional walls of the artificial reality, the synthesized geometry of the imposed reality, is fading away like the mists in the noonday Sun. Time, which was always only a concept, is evaporating, and as it does, many dimensional doorways are opening. The entire frequency of the universe has altered and continues to do so. For something new has occurred—some thing that affects that which is far off, and as close as our skin, perhaps as close as our thoughts.

82. We are being filtered by a natural process that protects us from the full impact of the effects of the fourth dimension that we are already passing through, as we become fifth-dimensional beings once again. We are looking for something that does not exist; the fourth dimension, so to speak, is not a dimension; rather, it is a doorway, a portal between existences. It has not the ability to hold form, nor can it respond to thought. So, in effect, thought gets caught in it. As a result, all the mal-aligned thought that we ever had exists within the constraints of the fourth dimension; it is a lifeless dimension.

Only thought that is of the higher frequency can pass through, thought that has life force imbedded within it. So, in a way, the fourth dimension is of its own nature a filter between the temporal reality and the immortal reality. It is like this: we are “in movement”, for all that is alive is in movement; we move back and forth between the third and the fifth dimension. In both we have an existence; in-between there is nothing alive, for there is nothing for thought to hold onto.

Perhaps this explains why we are feeling so many mixed feelings. We are actually in the fourth dimension, moving from one existence to another, in the process of Transition. Yet to some the old paradigm is very real, because they are moving into it, while with others, this third-dimensional expression is very unreal, because we are moving out of it. It is called evolution. As I said throughout this message, the Transition Period is very difficult to deal with, as it is a condition of constant flux and change.

Best become compassionate with yourself, and learn to allow yourself to grow. Allow yourself to become in contact with your feelings. Allow yourself to explore and to know your own thoughts. Allow yourself to become allowing, and change with the event and the moment, and thus remain constant. This is the wisdom of the river and the sky.

Do this, for in the next moment you will be given the choice to move forward or backward. Go follow your thoughts; can you see them? Can you see how thoughts work? Can you FEEL them? SEE them? KNOW them?

One thing is certain: in the next moment you will no longer be what you are in this moment. For this moment will become the past. You will find that you will change what you do, as well as how you think, if you are progressing successfully along the path of Awakening. So make no hard-and-fast rules, and do not get caught-up in what you think you are. For you will live all your knowing expressions, that you have ever experienced, during the Transition. Learn to accept Change with grace and poise. And when you hear yourself saying “I will never...”, KNOW that you will! Your spirit is your only constant in this shifting reality.

83. One of the hardest things you are going to have to deal with in this process is that you are going to have to face your fears—literally live them out and move through them, and get on with it. This is necessary under the Universal Law. That which you fear is illusion, and remains as a block to your progress upon the path. Therefore, you will face your fears over and over again until you elect to stand your holy ground and move through them, not demanding the circumstance of the outcome, only that you pass through them and regain your sense of self once more. For this is part of the quest—to retain self through a gauntlet of external circumstances, to stay in the positive center of your Divine Being and not give into reactionary emotional displays of undirected energy.

Ones become Masters when they have learned the secret of welcoming change and circumstance without reservation and judgment, and during the experience they remain constant unto their Divine nature. This is the plane of action, and action is fueled by emotion, which activates the inner passion for life itself.

Remember: life seeks life; it is an Energy, not a thing. We must master emotions and feelings in order to pass through this gateway to paradise. So, do you dare to become the master, or do you elect to return to the past? Either is fine. This is not about wrong or right; that is duality, and duality exists only in the “image of self”. The image is the state of “altered ego”, which occurs when we get caught in the reflection of the Light, and lose contact with the Source that sustains us.

84. The old social and political systems, the dying “old dog” regime, must be replaced with Truth and openness to new growth, else the human dream shall, of its own accord, collapse unto itself; this is the commandment of the Christ Consciousness.

Dogmatic enslavement, policies of greed, and the deliberate suppression of the human spirit, the altering of the Universal Laws to suit the momentary political condition, the denial of truth to those who would seek its path, the manipulation of whole peoples through neuro-linguistic programming—all this has led to a fracturing of the very geometry of life. Human consciousness has become so weakened that we hardly have the will to go through the daily motions of living. There is no longer laughter in the hearts of people, and there is little hope and vision for the youth.

This decay of our society is everywhere to be witnessed. It seems to be a global situation, not secular nor cultural. Yet here and there among the overpowering scenario of “the Great Dying”, we see new thrust of inspiration and signs of something new that is arising. Of their own volition there are those who are striving to restore basic human values and spiritual awakening. As the older dreamers find refuge and a place of quiet safety to hold onto the dream of Divine Humanity, there can be heard the cries of the youth, thousands of them, who have managed to establish for themselves micro-communities where they might somehow create an environment of compassion and human kindness.

They often wear what the older generation would call costumes, and frequently dress in period styles, as an expression of their quest for human identity. You can find them in old houses in the inner cities, and campgrounds along the riverbanks, together they comprise a new phenomenon of the outcast children of our dysfunctional and rapidly decaying family structures. They are “the Ghost Children”. This is not a small occurrence, and it happens in all levels of our social structures. Neither rich nor poor are immune to what is occurring. They number in the tens of thousands, and they are all over our fair land.

Life is seeking life, and even though faced with seemingly insurmountable odds, it is achieving its own level of human awareness. These new generations of self-raised children are fast becoming tomorrow’s young adults, and they possess a very different perception of “the myth” of our social society. They are learning to manifest another reality, with sheer desire, and new patterns of extended family are resulting. Often they seek the fables and stories of another time, when the world as it is written about was a place where hopes and dreams were achievable.

The insane quest for the material dreams and acquiring wealth and power, in these young people, is foreign. They are very mature in experience, though still trying to grow emotionally under their imposed harsh social living conditions. There is today an unbelievable amount of young pregnancies, and communal families to care for these infants of the forgotten children of the industrial dream. They are developing a social structure and belief patterns very different than most of us over forty were exposed to when we were growing up in the illusion of the American Myth.

What other choice do they have? In many places, although it is still a not-to-be-spoken-about reality, there is no job market for them to even aspire to enter. The costs of living, ever rising, and inflation out of control, they have no hope of assimilating into the “Dead Dream”. They are used to being outcasts, and not considered in matters of community well being, as they are considered outcasts, and misfits, and—my God! They are our children. Everyone else is too busy raising prices to meet the demand for ever higher and higher rents and housing costs. And keeping up with our addiction to things, material madness it would seem has left these children behind, to fend for themselves.

These forgotten children are creating a society that will learn the principles of survival, and this condition also leads to the rise in the New Tribalism. We have created a synthetic society that has created its own ending, yet most of us are too caught up in the madness “of just keeping up with the rat race” and dealing with our own failing adult relationships based upon paradigms which no longer even exist in reality.

The only cure is compassion and abrupt change in social and spiritual thinking. Nature is already grooming them for survival of the species. What they need is love. And how can we provide that when we do not even have the time to learn how to love and understand ourselves?

The emergence of Christ Consciousness is not a delicate occurrence, and it is happening in spite of us. Many of these children have a level of intelligence that is far beyond any for-the-most-part absentee parents. At twenty they already have passed the level of intelligence—although mainly due to circumstance, uneducated—of most adults twice their age. Yet, in the struggle of their Transition, they remain evolving without love and caring and nurturing; they are emotional cripples, suffering from the void of humanness.

Ah, the saving grace of the Internet, “the Great Spider Web”, and the deliverer of magical opportunities and the ability of self-education and communication where the concepts of time and distance evaporate like the morning dew upon the grasses.

Hence the explosion of Role Playing Games. And why not? What other avenue is available? What other avenue offers interaction and the building of a dream and satisfies the quest for personal identity? Their minds have, in the process, become adapted to working at incredible speeds, as they emerge themselves into the cyber-realities that the World Wide Web offers them.

Remember: what we dream, if we dream it long enough, we become. And they are becoming something very different then the old paradigm had to offer, which in their outlook was nothing.

85. There is another scenario occurring at this time in our world, a great and dark drama that is playing itself out, that these children are very aware of: the Armageddon Myth. Generations of humanity have been deliberately programmed for the ultimate game of self-destruction. This scenario, which is realized through what to them are obvious programs of global depopulation, remains an immovable obstacle in the reclaiming of our youth, which has become this present global society’s declaration of self-demise.

The belief in magic and supernatural answers is on the rise, and the broken dreams of our youth are being resurrected. This time it is a global occurrence, for the capability of these “children of the lost dream” to communicate all over the globe is affording them opportunities that we, of the older generation, could only conceive in fairytales.

They are developing abilities of clairvoyance and focus of mind that is empowering their infant dreams into manifestation. In their role-playing they are becoming the characters their cyber-heroes have offered them—to replace the adults who have abandoned them and turned their backs.

So perhaps it might be wise, if you are still fortunate enough to be close with your children, to observe silently and even summon the courage to ask them why they spend so much time on that computer. What is it they are dreaming? What are they becoming? And why?

There is a decreasing separation between being “an adult” and being “a child”. The only thing adulthood seems to offer is a free license to engage in perversion of the natural. Adults do not even talk to each other any more. Their relationships have been reduced to little more than an existence as working drones.

But the children? Herein lies the hope for humanity. What they can’t have, they will create. Can you remember when you played role-playing games in your own way as a child? What has been stolen from them—their humanity, their heritage, their remembrance of who and why they are, and philosophies—they will recreate seeking the Guidance of the supernatural. In their own way they are crying for a vision. They are well aware that they are old souls inhabiting young bodies, and the myth is no longer working.

“What is the ‘sense of the miraculous’ in this?” you ask. They are dreaming the new world! And in their dreaming they are creating the new rules and guidelines that society will experience as humanity follows their footsteps. It is the unfolding of a new dream, right before your very eyes! They are reclaiming what the older generation has lost in this life: a sense of the magical and miraculous things that occur in this life. They are rebirthing the fairytale as they embark upon the quest for the lost human spirituality.

This impassioned quest is the very ingredient that calls forth the living Christ Energy that the older, more mature humanity has obviously lost the directions to. It is Life seeking Life.

Can you remember the words of folk singer Bob Dylan? “Forget the dead you left; they will not follow you.” Come on, try; it was not so long ago, once upon a time, when you still had dreams.

86. Hopi prophecy from the late chief Dan Evehema, the eldest Hopi who passed over in 1998, the last Hopi prophecies, from Days Of Destiny:

“We will see extraordinary events in Nature and Earth, including humans who will come as messengers. And in the heavens the Kachinas will be making their presence known, hoping that we would turn things around here, even in the last minute. For there are those coming who will not be friendly towards us. We have always known of these beings. Some of them live beneath the Earth.

87. “If this fails to materialize, it will be because our great Creator elected to do this in another way, and then the forces of Nature will do the task. It could be total destruction in many forms then. Very few will survive.

88. “The liberators will come from the west with great force. They will drop down from the skies like rain. They will have no mercy. They will light up the heavens. We must not get on the housetops to watch. They will shake us by our ears, like children who have been bad. This will be the final decisive battle between good and evil. This battle will cleanse the hearts of people and restore our Mother Earth from illness, and the wicked will be gotten rid of.

89. “Now we enter the time of testing that only the Great Creator can confirm. We will know the time by the alignment of the planets; we are so kindly informed about the stars by the star watchers, and the Hopi have awaited this event. The stars are our clock, and they cannot be altered. We were told that, when the end time is near, we would see a halo of mist beginning to appear around the heavenly bodies. Four times this mist will appear around the Sun as a warning that we must reform or perish...”

Once again we are reminded that all is a matter of choice. We have the power to change things and turn them around. When those from the stars appear, first they will observe, then they will forewarn, then they will come, and more then just the Hopi see this occurring in force. When they come it will be direct intervention, perhaps as an intervention to help us save our planet from total and inevitable self-destruction—if we have turned around the cycles of behavior and negative thinking that is causing our own suffering.

May you walk softly and find yourself once again.

May you reclaim your power and remember your humanity.

You are not without hope and assistance from Supreme Forces—but you are out of time.

“ Back To The Future ”

A New Interview With Al Bielek

When the big experiment ultimately did take place, the ship not only achieved radar invisibility, but physically disappeared from the harbor for approximately 4 hours. When the ship finally did rematerialize, there were crew members actually partially imbedded in the steel decking of the ship. Others were wandering around insane, or glowing with a weird light around them, and others just disappeared or, literally, burst into flames like the stories you hear about spontaneous human combustion.

A movie called The Philadelphia Experiment was made in the 1980s (and can be rented at many video stores). Its portrayal of the initial aspects of this project were, according to Al Bielek, pretty accurate. When initially released, the movie had a very short life in U.S. theaters due to some strong, behind-the-scenes political pressures. (The sequel movie, by the way, is an embellished work of fiction—or entertaining disinformation if you’re of a suspicious bent.)

Then, there is the matter of the Philadelphia Experiment “tearing a hole in hyperspace” that reached through 40 years into the future and linked-up with another super-secret project at Montauk, Long Island, ultimately referred to as the Phoenix Project. More specific details about these two experiments were outlined in the October 2000 edition of The SPECTRUM. It is not my intent here to restate the long and complex and astonishing story that we’ve already printed there. However, some of that information, which necessarily focused more on time travel, does serve as good background to this recent 4-hour interview with Al Bielek which took place on December 12, 2000.

Al Bielek has a lot to say about a lot of subjects, and for those of you reading this who think you’ve heard all that Al has to say, in prior presentations, please think again. There is quite a range of new information herein that has not been made public before. Al holds The SPECTRUM in very high regard and, many months ago, when the initial contacts were made for this interview, he said he would be sharing information with our readers that he has never talked about before—but the time was now right and our paper was the correct forum.

[Editor’s note: This is a good place to insert a commercial—like public broadcasting does—for your financial help. Where else would you get this information except through this unique conduit? We merit the praise and generosity of people like Al Bielek because we have EARNED it among those who REALLY know what is going on and have the desire to share that with you. But—we have no funds at this time for next month’s paper—much less the luxury of being able to stay alive for several months—and so that matter rests in your hands as to whether or not we will be able to bring you any more Truth of this unique nature after this issue goes out.]

Hold in your hearts, while reading this amazing conversation, that we live in a very complex world, one in which staggering technological capabilities have been withheld from the general public under the guise of “national security” and other manipulations to keep us in the dark. Yet that state of general public ignorance does not mean amazing capabilities and technical know-how do not exist right under our noses—or our houses, as is usually the case!

Where DO sci-fi writers get their ideas? Whether or not you believe what you are about to read is, of course, entirely up to you. It has been our experience, over many years, that Al Bielek is an impeccable researcher as well as a man of rigorous integrity and measured words, not prone to exaggeration or embellishment of any kind.

Yet the information contained herein IS amazing—staggering, actually. So please know that is the case up-front. You are about to embark on a journey which is, as the appropriate saying goes from Alice In Wonderland, “through the looking glass”, where the world is upside down and quite a bit different than you thought. There is much in this conversation to boggle the mind. We live in a strange, interesting, and challenging time.

Additionally, I would like to also take just a moment to publicly acknowledge and thank Al Bielek for taking the time to explore these issues “for the record”. Please keep Al Bielek in your prayers, for his has been a very difficult and courageous journey on behalf of awakening his fellow planetary brothers and sisters to the Greater Reality you won’t see on the evening news.

Now, let’s move directly into my conversation with Al Bielek:

Martin: Is the reality construct, in which we live now, an artificial one, created as a result of the Montauk/Phoenix Project?

Bielek: There is a considerable amount of thought to that effect. Preston [Nichols] says that is the case, and there is some evidence I have of that. I’ll tell you how I came by this information later, but in 1963, Dr. John Von Neumann and three other scientists worked to produce a deviation in the timeline for planet Earth. They had to do it before the 12th of August, 1963, because the theory said that, due to the reverse time waves, they collided at one of these node points, which was 12 August ’63. [While this is explained in somewhat greater detail later in this conversation, he is referring here to the mid-point between the two projects which linked-up on August 12, 1943 and August 12, 1983. — R.M.] It could cause massive disruption of Earth material, like throwing most of the North American continent into space. The only thing that would be left would be the mountains; the rest would be under water, ocean water.

So, Von Neumann, knowing this, collected a number of scientists and mathematicians to work with him. And how they produced the hardware, I don’t know. I was not part of this project, I only heard it from one of the scientists who was involved with this, later.

They built the hardware at Montauk, and they turned it on in May of ’63, and the end result of that is that the Earth is NOT on its original timeline. So, in that sense, we’re not in the original reality. We’re on a different timeline. And that was done to prevent massive physical destruction in the North American continent. Obviously nothing ever happened, but who would know that we’re on a different timeline except those who had done it, or who had been in communication with those who had done it?

Martin: There have been a number of prophetic descriptions of land-masses shifting in North America, and I have a copy here of Gordon-Michael Scallion's Future Map Of The United States—

Bielek: Yes, I'm familiar with his map.

Martin: —which shows it all broken-up. Am I to assume then that this artificial, this different timeline, that was put into place in 1963, was an effort to avoid the reality of that map?

Bielek: I can't say that it was to avoid that map, specifically, that's a little beyond my ability to answer, but definitely what I saw in the future—and this was based on my departure from 1943, not what happened in '63—but from my departure in 1943 from the Philadelphia Experiment into the future, and what I saw on the maps, there were some Earth-shifts and Earth-changes, but nothing anywhere near as drastic as Gordon-Michael Scallion had outlined, or shown would be the case.

And, of course, there are others who have supported Gordon in saying essentially the same thing, although their maps vary a bit. They were all saying the same thing, there are massive shifts of the North American continent, and most of them show both coastlines receding quite a bit, particularly the West coast.

They don't show that much recession in the Central area, but I was given to understand that it would be the Central area that would have erupted mostly. The mountains would be intact, and in the future maps they also show that the Great Lakes combine into one, and that the Mississippi valley widens. The Mississippi River becomes an ocean estuary, for all practical purposes, at least 30 miles wide.

So, yes, there were still some changes as I saw them in the future, but they were related to my departure point in 1943.

Now, since what happened in '63 was a change off to a different timeline, it's anybody's guess as to what may happen. It's a very good point that you raise because the original timeline may be what all these people saw, including Nostradamus, etc.

The only thing with Nostradamus's predictions that actually almost came true was the huge planetary body he saw crashing into the Earth in 1997 or 1998. That would have been Hale-Bopp.

As you know, Hale-Bopp was steered around us. It never hit because of a lot of work done with a particle-beam weapons system to deflect it. So, you have a good point there. Many of these predictions were based on the original timeline, rather than the one that we are on now. I would say that's probably the case; that's why more of these things are not coming true that have been predicted.

Martin: If that's the case, then that would speak, probably for the first time [laughter], about a possible benevolent action or two being generated from these projects. Normally we think of mind control and very traumatic and adverse experiences, whereas if the direct intent or the side-result of a new timeline is the prevention of geophysical changes, then I can't help but see that as a good thing.

Bielek: Yeah.

Martin: That's more of a statement than a question.

Bielek: [Laughter] Well, being as we are, apparently, on a different timeline, it's created, in essence, the capability of a new reality, and apparently we're engineering it as we go.

Alfred Bielek has come forward claiming to be a survivor of the horrible "invisibility" project conducted by the U.S. Navy.

From: The Philadelphia Experiment & Other UFO Conspiracies, by Steiger and Bielek, 1990.

There were those who apparently were fighting to, shall we say, engineer it their way—as we have at least three different groups contending for control of planet Earth, at this point, and they all want to install their agenda. But, I would say that probably none of them would be able to install their agenda if we were on the original timeline.

We would have been in such a mess that there wouldn't be anything left except martial law, and perhaps a government removed from Washington to some other part of the U.S., and what was left would be under, probably, martial law, dictatorial control from the mere fact that you'd have to do something like that in order to get the rest of it to survive.

We're on a different timeline; consequently there are those groups now that are trying to take over the future and do it their way. And at this point, I'm not quite sure which one is going to come out on top. It's very difficult to say, right at this point, because we're at a fulcrum point right now in this end of the year 2000, the 2000 election, and the obviously unsettled results.

[Readers, please keep in mind that this conversation took place on the day the U.S. Supreme Court was hearing arguments from the Bush/Gore teams. The election results were undetermined at that time. — R.M.]

And, just for the record, I stated two months ago that neither candidate, the two principal candidates, would get enough electoral votes to be elected and this thing would be thrown into the House and then they would range over it for two weeks and finally elect Bush as the president. And that's on record on my CD, and we'll wait and see what happens. We can't do anything else anyway.

Martin: Well, that's right. There are some people who say that Clinton isn't leaving, in which case there would have to be some type of major event, in the Middle East or elsewhere, which would create—

Bielek: He, obviously, is not of a mind to leave at this time. There have been all kinds of statements made, that he was going to declare martial law, and do this, that, and the other thing to keep himself in office forever, for as long as he wanted. But I don't see any of that as happening.

Martin: There is an article in the recent December issue of SPECTRUM by Sherman Skolnick, and in that article he talks about a number of scenarios where Clinton could stay in office. But these are all just theories; timelines change and choices are made, and there are Higher Forces at work, too.

Bielek: Oh, yeah, there are forces and counter-forces at work over this one, because this is an extremely critical year, and an extremely critical point in the Earth's history, particularly the history of the U.S., but it also affects world history, at this point.

There are still attempts being made to settle the Middle East, so that doesn't blow up into another war. And it looks like the two major parties, at the present time, are trying to get together, again, to try to come to some kind of an agreement so that the Middle East doesn't blow up. I mean, Mr. Barak is out, and nobody knows who his successor may be, or he may succeed himself, depending on how the election goes. But he had lost credibility and he was under pressure to resign.

Martin: In some of your time-travel experiences to the future, specifically in the 2000 to 2020 time-frame, did you observe, or were you aware, or did you even tune-in to, any change in the United States structure? Or were they the same, or were they more like a New World Order-type situation, or what?

Bielek: In my first departure into the future, which was to 2137, I had this experience: After Duncan and I got over our hospital stay, we were watching TV. They still had TV, and there wasn't any loss of technology or technical capability (in fact, there was a great deal of improvement, particularly in the arena of medicine), but watching TV started to raise some very serious questions. So, I asked questions about what was going on, and to sum it up:

- In 2137, there was no more national government.

- I was told it was after the Earth changes of the period during the first 15 years of the 21st century.

- And then there was a war, and there was finally a settlement. We were under martial law from about 2015 on.

- By 2025, everything settled down and they started to rebuild, but there was never again what we would call a normal government in the United States, and for the rest of the world it was even worse.

But there was never a normal government again; they just started to rebuild and maintain the military structure and the military control over what was left of the United States and its operating capabilities; and they were rebuilding. It was far from being totally rebuilt, even in 2137; the damage was so extensive.

Now this, again, is based on a departure point from the year 1943, before the timeline had been changed.

Martin: Right, very important point.

Bielek: Extremely important.

Now, on the new timeline, whether it's going to happen that way or not, I am not sure. I am beginning to see other scenarios emerging. I haven't done a thorough remote viewing on that, but what I see (at least early on) emerging is a completely different scenario. One scenario I see is that in, let's say around 2030-2035, we start engaging in massive establishments of colonies in other solar systems outside of this one. And we couldn't do that if the original scenario I saw had come to pass. We would be in a survival mode until another century or so had gone by.

So, if this is the case that we go into massive colonization elsewhere, then it was obviously that the world civilization had not collapsed, that our government had not collapsed, and things are going on a fairly even keel, maybe not politically so much, but definitely on an even keel.

Of course, one of the big problems right now is, even if we are heading in that direction,

WHO'S going to take over, if anyone? Because there are three different groups—two alien groups, plus the old royalty groups of Europe—who want to control the planet and install their own New World Order, and do any of them succeed?

This is the unknown at this point.

Martin: Who are the two alien groups that you speak of?

Bielek: Well, one of the alien groups that you have is the one that's tied-up with the Omega Agency, which is a valid agency that's tied-in, in secret, with the U.S. government—as in, half-alien/half-human.

Martin: This is the Bush faction, isn't it?

Bielek: Yes, this is the Bush group.

The other one is the CIA-NSA group, which is the "old guard", if you will, the Nazis, the neo-Nazis; and they want to impose a very rigid control system.

You then have the European royalty group, the old royalty and so forth, which, if David Icke is correct, is backed almost entirely by Reptilians and is composed of a certain number of Reptilians itself.

And there you have the makings of a real free-for-all!

Martin: I can't help but wonder, speaking of royalty, whether the Jesuits are not behind them, and are the Jesuits, in fact, tied-in with the Reptilians as well?

[Editor's note: New readers may want to reference Rick Martin's front-page story for the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM for what could be the most unusual and controversial story/interview we have run to date, concerning the "black" pope, the Jesuit's General, Count Hans Kolvenbach, and the secret Jesuit manipulations of much of our historical happenings.]

Bielek: That raises a very good point. I would say, from what I've read of your recently-forwarded-to-me book on the Jesuit Order, what I've read of that so far—yes, I can see the Jesuits being the main SURFACE control group—of course, not very open, but shall we say, a normal human group which is attempting to obtain and maintain total control of the planet through various guises. But the question arises, and this is what most of the religious people won't look at: who's in back of them?

Martin: According to Eric, when asking him "Who do they serve?" he said "Lucifer".

Bielek: Yes, but who is Lucifer?

Martin: Wouldn't you imagine that Lucifer would be linked with the Reptilian side?

Bielek: Of course. So there you have another problem, in that you have an alien group—and those are not all alien, because there's a very large Reptilian population on Earth that's been here for tens of thousands of years.

The question is: Is Lucifer aligned with those, or with the outside ones?

That raises a further question, because quite a number of the, shall we say, "native", if I may use that term, native Reptilians, are not that unfriendly to humans. I know of at least one person who was in government service who said his life was saved when he was in Central America some years ago, on a mission where he lost his main group; he was hit by sniper fire and fell to the ground. He thought: "That's it; that's the end." And he woke up in somebody's hut, some place in Central America, with medical attention, recovering. Of course he's alive today.

They told him: "Oh, you were lucky. You were saved by one of the friendly Reptilians. They're not all that friendly." But, he said, his life was saved by a Reptilian, who picked him up and carried him in out of the jungle.

Now, that's what he quotes. I cannot verify that story, other than to say that's what he told me. So, obviously, there are some friendly Reptilians around.

The question is: to what level of friendliness? Are they trying to set up their own agenda? Are they operating, that is, some of them, on an outside agenda? Or have they totally abandoned the outside agenda? That's, I think, one of the most important and crucial questions, and also the one which perhaps is almost totally unknown at this point.

You have a split in the Reptilian group. You have a split in the Draconian groups. The Draconians, of course, like to consider themselves as the masters of the Reptilians, and everybody else, and I'm not saying they are, but that's the way they consider themselves.

And you have a split there, because you have Draconians who have been living on this planet for a long time. And they, like any alien, individual or group, who live here long enough, their normal "vibes", to use that term, vibrational frequency from their home planet, disappears and they adopt the one of the planet they are living on, if they are there long enough. Therefore, they change; they do not remain the same as the outside influence, the same as the outside home group.

So where are their heads?

Now, this is a question. It is, in many respects, a complete free-for-all at this time, because I don't think anybody can really plot-out what's going on or who's doing what to whom, anymore. But you have this problem. You have alien interests from here; you have alien interests from outside; and they all want control of this planet.

Now there comes the $64,000 question: Why? What is so crucial about this planet or its people that everybody from outside wants to control it?

That is a difficult question to answer, and I only have a few pieces of the answer right now but it has to do with the creation of the human, the creation of the human body as we know it, homo-sapiens. It also has to do with a number of other factors, not the least of which is the fact that there is a very considerable amount of influence at the present time from, let's say, our future selves. That will be, primarily, out of the 28th century. And how much they are influencing things is very hard to gauge.

You may well be familiar with the WingMakers dig that was found in the canyon in New Mexico; I've forgotten the name of the canyon.

Martin: Chaco Canyon.

Bielek: Right, yes. That's one of seven stashes. I'm told that two more have been found, but that one, in particular, was extremely important because the NSA got in on it, and their very highly classified internal group, called ACIO.

Martin: Which stands for what?

Bielek: It stands for Advance Contact Intelligence Organization, set-up primarily for contact with outside civilizations, or their remains, that might be found on Earth. And they assumed, at first, that the find there was alien because in an 8th century AD Indian mound, they found a compass and Indians didn't have compasses, so they immediately assumed this was outside interference. And, to a certain extent, they were correct—except the outside interference did not come from offplanet; it came from the future time, which they didn't know at that time.

As they finally got into this thing in '94 and '95 and recovered the optical disk out of the 23rd room, and it took them a year and a half to crack that (and only one man in the group, who eventually defected, and the woman who worked with him, published at least two of his interviews, said that it took a year and a half of work to finally crack the language), and as it turns out, it was put into a very ancient tongue, encoded in an optical format, a bit-code which was beyond what we normally use today but certainly not beyond what we can comprehend.

None of the computer systems, none of the crypto-analysts could break it. It took this one man, who called himself Dr. Anderson, a year and a half to break it, using some very exotic techniques of his own, and finally getting clues to it in the paintings in the 23 rooms, as well as the fact that he knew several ancient languages.

So, when he finally decoded the disk, they got the whole history of the fact that this group came out of the future in the 28th century, were advanced technologically, and they had been coming back into the past, apparently, to help engineer humanity along the way, to help it advance and to prevent it from retrogressing. At least, that's the story that comes off the optical disk.

Now, apparently, the disk itself is still in the hands of NSA and highly classified, but the story is well out. It's been on the Internet. It still is on the Internet [www.wingmakers.com]. And some of the other aspects of this are even more fascinating, because, I don't mind saying at this point, I'll put it on the record, having been in the 28th century, I met with the WingMakers. I was there for two years, my time, and I met the group because I became concerned about the question: "Well, if we have an artificial intelligence system running the entire planet and every city at this time, they didn't build themselves. Who did?"

That's when I found out about the WingMakers. They did it. They started in the 26th century, and they said they were going back into the past in order to try and correct an error they uncovered. In building this "artificial intelligence system", which developed into a society which was purely socialistic—no money, no banks, no government other than the artificial intelligence system. And, everything was free—100% socialism, communism, whatever you want to call it.

Everybody was happy; there didn't seem to be any problems; virtually no criminals, no armies, no government, no money—everything was on credit—free education, free place to live. You were expected, of course, to contribute to society and do your work, whatever it may be, and if you wanted to get an advanced education, that was fine, but you had to contribute something and keep within the normal protocols of what were laid down.

If you didn't like it, you had a choice: they would either eliminate you, or if you just wanted to go off and leave because you didn't feel comfortable there, that was perfectly alright, too; go live in the boon-docks and you're on your own. There was no objection to that.

But this group came back into the past because they realized, finally, there was an error in their program, which was experimental—the primary error was this, what we've known throughout history: If you create a highly advanced society and give it so much for free that there was no longer any incentive to create, to enjoy new thinking, to making something new, they just sit down on their haunches and enjoy the free meal, if you will, the free living and the free everything else. Eventually that society collapses.

Martin: That makes perfect sense.

Bielek: And they were witnessing this as taking place in the 29th or the 30th century, and they knew it, and they had to go back into the past in order to make corrections in this era. And they are, somewhere, behind the scenes; I'll put it that way.

Martin: Interesting; you mean here and now?

Bielek: Very covertly, very quietly; I don't know if they're here physically, in the sense that we mean physical, as you and I or any other normal human being, but they are definitely here having an influence. And there have been certain other aspects that have turned up and all I will say is that the last has not been heard of the Chaco Canyon stash and what has been found there. There is more about that than I think would be wise to put on the record; I know quite a bit more, but we'll leave it at that. There are "developing aspects"—put it that way.

Martin: Everybody talks about the NSA and the people within the NSA, and the cloak of secrecy and national security. Have you ever come in contact, over the years, with people from the NSA who are, shall we say, benevolent and working for the higher good of mankind?

Bielek: There are those, within both the CIA and the NSA, who are working for the higher good of humanity, who have lost that gung-ho drive to support the agency, regardless of whatever they are asked to do. I know people, at the present time, on both sides of that equation, who will do whatever they're asked to do, including assassinations, and who have also pulled out of the agency and are trying to straighten things out, at least in terms of their own private life. And also, where they can make some change or correction in the scenario which has come down. There are those who, apparently, after a period of time, get quite disgusted with being a trigger-man, or some other aspect of the agency's control mechanisms or interference mechanisms.

When a guy is recruited out of college, let's say typically around age 22-23, maybe they finish their college degree first—it looks very glamorous, and they're given a lot of disinformation and a very glamorous picture. And these guys are recruited and they think they're in the service of the country for the betterment of the country. That's how they get them in the first place.

As time goes on, if they're astute enough, they begin to realize that things are not exactly the way it was painted. And there is a façade here which is definitely not what they were told; and that there is, behind that façade, something else, which is anything but what they have been led to believe.

So, you find those who, eventually, bail-out. Now, some bail-out quietly, without any fanfare, and there are some who were former directors who know too much and get eliminated—I don't have to name names, but they're well documented in the annals of our really recent history in the last 20 years; former CIA directors have had accidents. And whether or not these people, who suddenly have odd accidents, have had enough of a change of heart that it was considered dangerous to the agency, or to whatever agenda is afoot, is hard to answer. But, nevertheless, these people got out and, apparently, had time to think, and I'm quite sure that most of them, if they're halfway human, at least they're going to think "I've been had".

And then the question is: "What do they want to do about it, if anything?" Do they want to live out their lives quietly and say nothing, except to a few close friends, or do they want to try and do something about it? And those who try to do something usually end up at the bottom of a lake or in some other strange situation where they are quite thoroughly dead.

Martin: I'm surprised there aren't more security leaks than there have been over the years. I'm surprised there has not been more information that has come out from people who are disgusted, and do want to share with the public. But maybe it's the old-guard programming to maintain privacy, security, and confidentiality—I don't know. But I know, being in the information business, I wish there were more people who were willing to talk. It would, I think, help. Information is very useful.

One thing I don't understand about all of this—and it may get back to the issue of control, which seems to be at the root of the entire thing—why was there, ostensibly there was the desire to create radar invisibility with the Philadelphia Experiment, but that SEEMS like a cover-story.

Bielek: Well, you happen to be quite correct. I've looked at that more than once and I've had some interesting conversations with Preston Nichols over that. The radar invisibility was a project that, at the time it was started, was theoretical. And then, when World War II started, they looked at it as a possible "saving grace" against the submarine packs. The "wolf packs" were mounting all over the Atlantic, and before it was successfully completed in terms of the system installed on operating ships, which was the Eldridge, by May of 1943, they [the U.S.] were sinking the [German] subs at a rate of one per day. And the rate went up from that point on.

And, of course, the Germans panicked and pulled their subs back and they thought: "Well, did they crack the code?" They finally came to that conclusion because we had, but it was done so carefully and adroitly that they didn't drop any clues, and they said: "No, they couldn't possibly have cracked our code."

Well, the code had been cracked about 1941, so we knew where the subs were going to be. But in any case, at that point, radar invisibility became a moot issue because it was no longer needed to solve the problem with the submarines, but they went ahead with it for other reasons.

Now, the initial purpose of this series of tests, and what lead up to this series of tests, was "invisibility". This was Tesla's little private idea, and he kind-of got the backing for it in the Office of Naval Research, or Naval Engineering, as they called it back then.

When they had a successful test in 1940, they went ahead with some full-blown work. But by the time they had a ship which was fully outfitted, the Eldridge, in 1943, and actually tested three times, plus there were tests on other ships, they didn't need it for that purpose.

So, the question you raise is a very good one. Why did they keep it going?

Now, in view of what I remember, plus some other discussions and strange pieces of hardware that turned up over the years, in the last ten years, and most recently, something that Preston latched onto, it again raises the issue of what else were they doing? Because, if the objective was only "invisibility", there would not have been a need for three ships to be tested, because there were three ships involved. We had: the Eldridge, the DE-173, and the 173; interestingly enough, 173 is a code number which we're trying to crack—what that came from and what it means.

The hardware that turned up, which was specifically designed for the Philadelphia Experiment (stamped on the plates), the Navy can hardly any longer deny it, but of course, the Navy will continue to deny it because of other factors that happened. But you had the 013, which name I've lost—that one was tested in the Azores, out at sea, and it sank. There was the 057, the USS Fog which was tested in the Norfolk, Virginia Navy yard, and according to the son of one of the people who was on board the ship, it did actually transfer, or transport, from the Navy yard at Norfolk, Virginia, to Philadelphia, and back.

At least I have some supporting evidence for that one; I have none whatever for the stories that the Eldridge went down to Norfolk, Virginia Navy yard and back. A rumor persists, but I have no evidence to support it. And nobody has ever come forward and said "I saw it" or a survivor of the family who said his father was on it, and so on. It MAY have happened, but I do not have any evidence to prove it.

But the interesting point is this: of those three ships, they bothered to get the Eldridge back from the Greeks in '95. They totally rebuilt it. It's now operating, occasionally, up and down the Long Island Sound. It's stationed in the Washington, D.C. Navy yard, in the private dock for the Office of Naval Research. It's still a DE-173, brand spanking new. They put a new hull under it, because it was rotting, but kept the ship.

The USS Fog is still alive and well.

And now there's rumors they're going to raise the 013—from the bottom of the Atlantic yet! Why? There's something else going on, quite obviously, or they wouldn't do this. They wouldn't bother to keep these ships around—two, and now maybe the third.

So, let us look a little bit further here. There was another project that preceded the Philadelphia Experiment by name. And there was, of course, a popular name attached to it because of the testing in the Philadelphia Harbor in 1943. But there was another project which was called later, I think, perhaps by Preston or myself, "Project Southern Cross". I don't know if that's the "official" name or title, or what the original name was, but in 1936 there was a brand new aircraft carrier known as the USS Kearsage which was commissioned, I think, in '35.

It was out on a cruise down north of the South Atlantic coast, in the area which would probably be the limits of what was sometimes called the Bermuda Triangle area, and it was exploring there, and they found something very strange. They found a huge crystal formation on the floor of the ocean, which they found with divers. And how they located it, I don't know, but they found it. They went down, dove on it and looked at it, and it was quite large. And the Kearsage was sitting above it.

The next thing anybody knew—the accompanying ships or whoever was with it, because a carrier hardly ever goes out alone—the Kearsage "disappeared". It was just GONE!

And, two months later, it returned. And what happened in the interim is a most interesting story because I got this from somebody high-up in the military (I cannot tell who it was), who knew about the incident.

And they said "Yeah, the ship went into the future. There they told them what had happened, that this crystal formation was actually built by the Atlanteans; they had them all over the planet. They used them for transportation of very large and heavy payloads, such as you would put on a barge, like, for example, cut rock. Instead of hauling them with motor power, the way we do, they would put them over one of the crystalline formations, activate it—and there was a T-system to some of this—and they would transport it, instantaneously, to another point on the planet, wherever they wanted it, and saved themselves a lot of trouble and a lot of time.” These systems were left by the Atlanteans when it went down.

For some reason, the Kearsage came up with a combination of RF (radio frequency) and magnetic fields (as there were many complex fields on a carrier or any modern ship), triggered this system, and the ship went into the future.

Well, the guys in the future told them how to recalibrate it, how to be able to calibrate it accurately. And from that point out they had a working system by 1938, where they could take the Kearsage, or any other ship they wanted to equip similarly, park it over one of these crystal formations, and use it for time travel and go into the future.

I found out about that when I was in Los Alamos, New Mexico, between '44 and '47, at the Los Alamos laboratories. And that was one of the things I found buried in, shall we say, the “black” vault. And when I found that out, I blew-up. I said: “For God sakes, if they had this as early as 1936, what did they ever bother with the Philadelphia Experiment for?” Well, that didn't go over well. [Laughter]

Martin: [Laughter] I'm sure not. Did you ever get a response from anybody?

Bielek: Yes, but I was finally kicked out of the labs—not because of that—I got a lot of frowns. I was there at the disposition of the Navy, who put me there when Dr. John Von Neumann requested my presence in 1944. I went there in July '44 with my family, and I was finally kicked out on July 4, 1947—it was a very curious and interesting date.

There were three people involved in making the decision to dump me (it was two out of three who decided I had to go). And the reason that they wanted to get rid of me is because Dr. Edward Teller, who was stationed there at that time—you see, when the war was over and the bomb had been dropped, Oppenheimer turned cold on the whole business. Teller wanted to go ahead and build the hydrogen bomb almost immediately. Oppenheimer was totally against it, and I was, also.

At that time, of course, I was known as Ed Cameron. I was there, at that time, as my original identity. I had a Ph.D. in Physics out of Harvard. I had a rank of Captain in the Navy. I did have a little bit of influence; not a great deal, perhaps, but I sided with Oppenheimer. In fact, I told Dr. Teller, I said: “Your mathematics are flawed. You cannot predict the yield on a fusion device. A fission device, such as an atomic bomb, yes, you can predict it quite well. But in a fusion device, you can't.” And subsequent tests have proven that.

The typical yield and test of a hydrogen bomb can run two to three times the projected yield, and this is, of course, what the Russians found out when they tested their one and only hydrogen bomb. You remember, Mr. Kruschchev turned almost white when he got the results of their hydrogen bomb test. The yield was never revealed. It was designed to be a 30 megaton yield, and the rumors were it went well over 100. So he said: “We'll never detonate another hydrogen bomb, at any time, forever, for any reason.” They were out of the business.

Well, everybody is out of the hydrogen bomb business today, because you don't need them. They are unstable. They're unpredictable, and today, shall we say, with plain, ordinary fission devices, you can get a yield fairly close to what the early hydrogen bombs were designed to yield, so they don't need them. They're totally different triggering systems today than were used in those days. And they're far more stable and more predictable, and much smaller.

Because of my “intransigent” behavior, in their view, Teller wanted to get rid of me. Well, he didn't have the clout himself, but he had friends who did. So, they had the meeting on July 3rd, and it was decided that I had to go, and that was when I was removed the next day, on July 4th. At the 4th of July picnic with my family, I was arrested by the MPs, taken to Washington, and I expected a court-martial. Of course, that was cancelled. I was given a new assignment, and that goes on for another six years after that, before I was finally given “the full treatment”.

Martin: Now, you continued to work with Von Neumann, didn't you, beyond that point?

Bielek: No. I saw him occasionally, but I did not continue to work with him.

He continued, off and on, intermittently with the lab because he was involved with many other projects. As time went on, he got more and more involved with the military and various projects, and what was loosely called “the military-industrial complex”. And, of course, Von Neumann came down with cancer, about '56. And there are photos of him testifying before Congress from a wheelchair, already looking rather badly cancer ridden. The public record says, of course, that he died in 1957. And, of course, they had the big funeral, eulogies and all of that.

The problem was, he didn't die, because I saw him at least two years ago. I know he was alive at least two years ago, living in his hide-away—although his mind, today, is pretty well shot. He does, occasionally, remember who he was. He's got, shall we say, an alter-ego and a fully installed artificial memory.

But they couldn't kill him any more than they can afford to kill me, or a few other people, because we're part of a time-loop problem.

You see, he traveled in time, himself, into the future, as part of that 1963 operation to collect the people. You build a time machine back in 1943, after the, shall we say, terrible problems with the Eldridge, and I came back, and he didn't believe me when I said “I have been in 1983”. He built a time machine and sent me back there to bring proof back that I had been in 1983, and that HE had been in 1983, and eventually he was satisfied.

But he knew far more technology and mathematics than most people ever gave him credit for. He also—because of his trip to collect these scientists who came out of the future—well, three of them did—to get them back on this project, was a major accomplishment. He had to go, literally, scrounge these people and take them out of their "normal" time-frame and bring them back to '62-'63 to complete this project. Fortunately, it was successful.

Martin: And, were these "off-planet" people?

Bielek: No. These were all humans.

Martin: [Note: There was curious telephone-line electrical-noise interference THROUGHOUT this interview. — R.M.] Let's talk about Nikola Tesla, starting with the Philadelphia Experiment and going from there. Von Neumann worked with him directly?

Bielek: Yes. However, we'll also have to add that Tesla was not there full-time. He was there as a consultant; even though he was the director of the project, he was not there full time. Prior to 1939, he was still working with RCA; he was their chief engineer. He joined RCA when it was formed in 1919, and remained with them until 1939, at which time, after four years as director of engineering and research worldwide—[more phone interference]—he retired in 1939. They had a big retirement party for him.

I've never seen any of the RCA fliers; there are other people who said they saw that, but he was not working at RCA under his own name, Tesla. [Still more phone interference.] He left RCA in '39 and, of course, all during that period he was busy on other projects. He was working at RCA full time, and he was working on the Philadelphia Experiment—so, he was NOT a little recluse hiding out in his room at the Hotel New Yorker, like some of his biographies say. He was an extremely busy man, and as a consultant to the Philadelphia Experiment, he was not on it full time, but he was there.

And after '39, he spent more time there. And as they, of course, approached the time for the first successful test, in September 1940 at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, he did spend more time on the project. It was his design, totally, which worked on that tender. Based on that, they went ahead and gave him a battleship to make invisible, and that's when he, later on, in March 1942, sabotaged the test and bowed out, and Von Neumann took over.

But he, literally, sabotaged the test for the simple reason that he knew that the power levels required to make a battleship invisible, like going from a 300-ton tender to a 30,000-ton battleship, takes a little bit more power! And he was concerned that the power required to make the battleship successfully invisible would be so much that it would probably kill the sailors, particularly those who might be on deck, or near the equipment as it is operating.

So, he deliberately sabotaged the test and bowed-out. And that's when Von Neumann decided to go to a ship design from the ground up for it. He wanted a smaller ship (but a workable ship) which would go to sea, such as a destroyer escort. And he picked one of that class.

I don't know when the number was assigned. The name certainly was not assigned until the actual time of the christening, but how it became known as DE-173 is something of a mystery because there was a 173. But the fact is, THERE WERE TWO OF THEM! There

Now, I didn't understand that there were two ships until fairly recently. I'd say, for sure, within the last year, although there was somebody else lecturing on the circuit, three or four years ago, who went to the archives in Washington, got pictures of the Eldridge, and they gave him a whole batch of pictures. And it was obvious it was not the same ship. There were two different ships, both with the number DE-173 on them. And, while they were both destroyer escorts, they were physically different. That was, finally, what I penetrated in my consciousness here.

Another friend did a little digging and found out that the Eldridge that was used in the test was built in Brooklyn Navy Yard, not the Newark ship-building yards. And it was a specially built ship with, apparently, a double hull. There were some other ships built in the Brooklyn Navy Yard during the war period also, as well as earlier, and I was not aware of the fact that the Brooklyn Navy Yard had sufficient facilities to build ships, and apparently, they did. But that was where the one used in the test [the Eldridge] was built. And that is the one that still survives today, after we got it back from the Greeks. But there is a lot of mystery attached to all of this.

When one looks at the photograph, which I have, of the final briefing on the 9th of August, 1943, aboard the Eldridge, the group is of distinguished scientists (civilians mostly) and a couple of military men. Also in the picture was Dr. Oscar O. Snyder, the M.D. in charge of all the tests. The lecturer was a man who was a Ph.D. in subatomic physics, and he was an Indian guy by birth, sub-continent India; name was, I think, Yaglu. He gave the final briefing and lecture.

Now, what were they concerned with about subatomic physics, in terms of invisibility? Which raises, again, what else was going on? I was not privy to everything that was going on. And it raises, still, some specters of:

What else was going on?

What else did they attempt to do?

And what else was the goal, which, perhaps, failed? But the Eldridge did wind-up in hyperspace.

The question still arises as to why that really happened. I've assumed, and Von Neumann stated, it was due to the lock-up of the two experiments, the Philadelphia Experiment on August 12, 1943, and the Montauk Project, August 12, 1983. This was deliberately designed to do so, but not by humans. It was designed to do so by an alien group who wanted to hit the alternate were two Eldridges, two DE-173s—the one that was used in the Philadelphia Experiment and the standard one, which was in the Navy's logs and records of all fighting ships, which they have, shows it being launched in July of 1943, christened, I think, August 27, 1943, upon which time it went out to sea because we were short of ships.

But the other Eldridge, the one that was built in the Brooklyn Navy Yard and hauled over to Philadelphia around December 1942, was the one that was used in the tests.

agenda at Montauk.

Martin: Do you think that part of the agenda that was taking place here had to do with creating a portal that would allow their entry?

Bielek: It was deliberately designed, yes, to create a huge portal, 40-years wide, that would allow entry of very large space ships, with somebody having an agenda. It was not aimed at us. We're, apparently, just a convenient "waystation" for the portal so they could get through to another reality and go out and do battle, I'm told, with the Andromedans, who had long since thought they had put this enemy to rest.

At least, that's the information that reaches my ears. I am not in a position to prove it.

Martin: Let's go back to the standard operating procedure, apparently, of dying-off people and then allowing them to live, quietly, for the rest of their life. We were talking about Von Neumann being "killed-off", and then, really, living out his life under another identity, and the same has been said of Tesla, and of Hitler as well. Can you confirm or comment on either of those?

Bielek: I can definitely comment on Von Neumann. The name that he was known as in that area where he was living was Howard Decker. And Howard Decker, apparently, had a history of being an electronic surplus dealer during World War II, and after World War II, but primarily in the closing phases of World War II, being all over New York City, Easy Street, Canal Street, and all of those areas.

The first time I met him he went through this thing like a phonograph record, and he repeated the same phonograph record to anybody new who showed up, almost word for word. And everything he said was correct, all of the names, all of the places, locations, companies. I knew them all because I had lived in New York and New Jersey, during that period, as Al Bielek, and I used to spend quite a bit of time over in New York also going through these surplus electronics places, for my own reasons. He had the data correct. It played out like a phonograph record.

The first time I went up there to locate him and to see him, after an hour and a half of this, I asked him, I didn't call him John, it was Howard, Howard Decker is the name—I said: "Howard, what do you know about the Philadelphia Experiment? Do you remember anything about it?"

He said, "Never heard of it."

I said, "Well, do you know me from anywhere?"

He said, "Yes. But I can't remember from where."

They couldn't wipe the memory out of him knowing me. I think the reason for that was, he was my step-father. And that I cannot prove because of the principals involved. Howard wouldn't know that for sure, unless he was in his right mind, and as long as he lives where he's living, he's not in his right mind because there is, apparently, equipment there, and when he leaves the area, he becomes himself. The equipment is there for the purpose of keeping him thoroughly saturated in the personality of Howard Decker.

There is a very long, strange part of my history which is still yet to be uncovered, particularly the family aspects out of Europe.

Martin: I wanted to ask you about the connection between the Camerons and the Gunn Clan, and then the links directly to the Odins of Scandinavia? What is the significance of this Nordic link?

Bielek: I wasn't aware of a Nordic link, per se. I've not done enough research on this. I have a book issued on the Cameron family tree and family clan, but it's so thick that it's very hard to trace. I've been told that the Cameron Clan does go way back in history. It may even go back to 0 B.C. It would be interesting if there was a Scandinavian connection.

The last time I saw my mother was in 1939. My father picked Duncan and me up, and we all went over to Europe and went to visit mother, who was living in her castle in Konegsberg area, which is now under Russian control. It's called Kalingrad, I believe. But she was in a family castle. Now, I had no idea that she lived in a castle until I went over there; she had servants and all of that.

She was, apparently, quite well off. Her relationship with my father was one of a common-law marriage, live-in. They were never legally married, and after the war started, World War I, father was called to active duty in the Navy, i.e., out to sea. She decided to take off and go back to Europe.

Now, I have no idea how they met in the first place. But father also had another live-in common-law wife at that time, up in Connecticut, who was the birth mother for Duncan. Now, both were common-law. Father was something of a rake, whatever. He was well known to have women all over, and apparently, he was not one to say no.

So, there is still a question in the family, how many kids did he sire? Nobody knows. I had a missing brother turn up about a year and a half ago, out of Germany; contacted me out of the blue! Born and raised in Germany, born in 1950.

Martin: Amazing.

Bielek: It's a side-story, sort-of an interesting one.

Martin: Well, the Nordic link/connection I got out of Peter Moon's book, called The Black Sun.

[Editor's note: The first two in a series of interesting books on this subject are called The Montauk Project: Experiments In Time (1992), and Montauk Revisited: Adventures In Synchronicity (1994), published by: Sky Books, Bielek: Yes, I'm quite familiar with it; I have a copy and I did read it. It could be. Now, is that Nordic connection through the Cameron line out of Scotland? Or does it come from a different direction?

Martin: I don't know. The book states that the Camerons were linked to the Gunn clan, which were linked directly to the Odins of Scandinavia.

Bielek: Odins, of course, are Scandinavian.

Martin: This was just a side question, really.

Bielek: I don't know the full history of that. In fact, I haven't talked much with Peter or Preston about that particular aspect. I suspect Peter is the one who did the research on that. I'll have to give him a call about that, sometime.

There is a large contingent of Camerons right here in Atlanta. It's over 200, believe it or not. I went to the Highland Games annual get-together at Stone Mountain, last October. There I met some of them, and they apparently have the means for tracing the family tree. But for some reason they have gone silent on me and they don't want to talk to me or return phone calls, and I'm in a position where I can't get anybody to do any research for me if they don't want to communicate.

I had wanted to have the family tree traced by somebody who might have access to the real records, and I probably would have to go back to Scotland for that. Although, let's say the North American representative of the Cameron clan, in terms of the administration and doing the archival research, is in Chicago. It's an open area for me. I don't have enough data.

Martin: It would seem, certainly in reading The Black Sun, at least, that the Camerons are a very important family line having to do with this planet.

Bielek: Oh, I agree.

Martin: I want to ask you a question that NO ONE wants to talk about, and that is, namely, the occult, alchemical, homosexual agenda behind the Montauk Boys Project through the use of harnessing orgone energy.

Bielek: There are a number of aspects involved there. If we go back to 1918, Alister Crowley was involved at Montauk Point doing some rituals of his own. Whether that had a connection with the whole thing or not, I don't know.

When it came to the Montauk Boys Program, it's tied back to Wilhelm Reich and his work after he came into the United States, in 1943. In '47 the CIA came into existence and he accepted a five year contract from them to see if he could learn what they wanted: techniques for deprogramming people who had been programmed, and could you make a young kid more psychic by means of certain things. They knew he was a leading expert in the field, and if anybody could do the research, he could do it. He accepted this five year contract and, to summarize it, half-way through he realized what the CIA really wanted—and went ahead with the contract, but falsified his records.

Preston, many years later, came across the latter-half records, the real ones, long after Reich had died, and Preston pieced-it together.

What he was looking for, and eventually found, was the means by which you could contact the subconscious mind. You had to be able to do this in order to be able to program or deprogram the subconscious, which is where most of this goes on, and it will ride herd over the conscious mind if there is a proper link-up and proper programming.

Theoretically, they're supposed to be independent, but they're not really totally independent, and the conscious mind, if it's functioning properly, can access the subconscious mind without the subconscious controlling it. But who has that capability? Maybe one in a thousand, at least in the Western world. I'm not talking about the Eastern world and the phenomena that go on over in the Far East.

In any case, he found that the point in which you can link the conscious and subconscious mind, to make it very easy to put info in, take info out, into the subconscious, is at the point of orgasm. He did a lot of lab work, I mean actual, physical, lab work, but he found that was the point at which you can access the subconscious and can program it, reprogram it, deprogram it, do what you want with it. The question then became, of course, how do you control the orgasm long enough to be able to do this? And that was what came in later. He established the criteria, and those notes went to the CIA and NSA.

Then the Montauk Boys Program came up, and the Germans who came over from Germany were interested in mind-control and mind-manipulation. They were still working on that in Germany before the war, much less during the war, but they never came up with any real, hard-core systems. The only thing they developed, which was partially successful, was an acoustic system, actually ultra-high frequency sound, beyond the range of human hearing, at 27 kHz, which was, shall we say, radiated on the backs of the students who were being trained and indoctrinated to the SS [the Nazi Secret Service, secret police] in classrooms. At 27 kHz, the occipitals, in the back of the head, made them much more susceptible to being programmed, or acceptant of the information being given them. In other words, conditioning them. That was brought to the U.S., but that was not “mind control”. That was merely making people more susceptible.

So, all of these techniques came together, and in 1975-76 they started working with the Montauk Boys Program. They found that the easiest way to work with them was to get them right around puberty. And, of course, then they would be very active sexually, and this was, in part, in a sense, what was required.

Secondly, they had to be carefully selected genetically, as well as in terms of other factors they were looking for—among them, of course, psychic ability. But that was not run-of-the-mill. The majority of the Montauk Boys were not chosen for psychic ability; there was a group that was, and they were sort-of treated separately. But they had to have them right around puberty, because they found that, at right around the age of 17, a mind-set starts to set in, which makes it difficult to program them after that age.

So, they wanted them around the age of puberty, and the only techniques that were available in the early days were very physical techniques of programming which—I don't know if you want to print this or not, but I'll give it to you straight. It required the programmer (the person doing the programming) who, initially, was primarily Duncan, and then there were others, quite literally had to engage in a homosexual act, namely, sodomy. What this did was, when the programme was in the proper state—they had to prepare them for this, and put them in the proper mental and psychic state—the information was transferred from the programmer to the programme by the ring of double nerves that exist in the anus. If you want to look up the standard Grey's Anatomy, you'll find that. There is a double ring of nerves in the anus, and Preston could never figure out “What the hell is a double ring of nerves doing there?”

And I said, “Preston, don't you know what it's for?”

And he said “No.”

So I told him. And then the light dawned.

And he said, “Well I guess that's what was connected with the Montauk boys thing.”

I said “Yeah.”

Martin: Is that the same as the “Eye of Horus”?

Bielek: What?

Martin: There are some who say that the anus is, actually, the “Eye of Horus”.

Bielek: Oh, the Eye of Horus. Don't know. I can't answer that one. But what this did was transfer the information from the programmer to the programme, and it was not a very efficient method. It worked with some, didn't work with others.

And it also has another strange phenomenon. Young boys who have never been put through a mill like that in the past, they had quite a little problem with loss of personnel—I mean, who quite literally dropped dead on the floor in front of the programmer.

Martin: Really?

Bielek: And, unfortunately, I had to witness one of those when they wanted to recruit me to run the program. And I said “I want to see what it's all about.”

And they said “Well, come down, we'll show you.” And they did. And I witnessed one of the programs. It happened to be a case where this programme, quite literally, collapsed on the spot, and died in a pool of his own blood. Now, medical data says that there are occasions where excess stimulation of those anal nerves, for reasons that are totally unknown to the medical profession, will apparently kick-back to the brain in a manner which, quite literally, induces anything from stupor to death. And there is no, at the time that I read this or heard this, there was no known reason for it. At least, this was back in the '70s or '80s, at that time. Whether or not any further information has come out from research since, I have no idea. But that program was messy.

According to Stuart Swerdlow, who said the yield from beginning—to bringing the boys in, selecting the programming, to the point where he would beat them into submission if they didn't go along with it, which allowed quite a large percentage of attrition right there—to the final product, the yield was about 1 percent. It was grossly inefficient.

I looked at that, I got some yield, yes. And, of course, I asked the question later, when I became part of the program three years later in '79, because I took it over and changed the whole damn thing. I said “We'll stop this non-sense. We'll use all electronic programming from this point on, and furthermore, we don't force them into submission; we entice them into going along with the program.” The yield, of course, went way up.

The unknown part of this was, and I asked, “What are they going to use these kids for?” I never got an answer.

So I said, “Well, when are they going to use them?” I said, “Is this to be used today, the next few years, or what? What's the goal on this?”

And I was told the goal was sometime between 1995 and 1997. Now, this was back in '79. And, of course, a few had been used, and I think the main brunt of them have not been used, as yet, other than for these school shooting programs and certain other programs which involve shootings of people under various circumstances, that are strange.

Martin: So-called “sleepers”?

Bielek: Yeah, they're all sleepers. Once they're programmed, they're sent back to where they came from, whether they were a street-kid, or in the early days, they took them from families on the island (Long Island), which I objected to.

I said: "You're going to have serious problems over that if any of these families—some of them are quite well off—find out what's happened to their kids. There's going to be hell to pay. It'll be in the courts and it'll be in the newspapers."

They eventually changed it to picking up street-kids, only from across the country. Once they had the time & space tunnel, that is, the Montauk Tunnel, functioning properly, they could pick the kids up from anywhere in the world, and they did.

And that took until about 1979-80, where it worked without any mishaps. Prior to that they had nothing but mishaps, which is to say that an object or a person could get dumped in space and their atoms scattered, probably, in hyperspace.

But they finally solved all those problems and made a very functional system, and when it was fully functional, of course, they didn't have to worry about going up and kidnapping somebody and picking them up off the street, physically. They would send out a bird-dog, so to speak, to look around for potential "customers", if you will, and they would report back. Then they would focus on that area, through the tunnel, and send somebody up, and say "Ok, this, this, and this" and they were, quite literally, sucked right through the tunnel, and they never knew what happened to them, until they arrived on the other end.

And then they would put them through the initial training and orientation programs, and then through the rest of the programs, and then the final programming. Now, after they got rid of the physical programming, it was strictly electronic, so the yield was much higher.

But it has gone through three phases, the electronic programming; the early phases, from about '79 through approximately the early '90s, left a psychic scar. If you could see the human aura, you could see that it had been damaged. You could see an outline on it which showed that this person had been programmed. It also showed, physically, in a sense that a person who could read body language would be able to see it immediately, that this kid had been programmed or tampered with, in some way. Whether you could see the program psychically, physically in terms of body language—you wouldn't see the programming, but you could see that the person was no longer responding as a normal teenager would be expected to, full of life, vigor, interest in things, and so forth.

Most of these kids wound up losing interest in half of what they were doing. They were sleepers, quite literally. Some of them knew it, some didn't; most of them didn't. And they were programmed for whatever they got programmed for.

Now, in running that program, one of the interesting things I found out, to answer one of your other questions, was that they did program approximately 70 percent of them as homosexual. This was regardless of what the natural inclination might be—whether normally they were heterosexual or homosexual—because there are a lot of natural homosexuals who, because of religious pressures, home pressures, so forth, go the other way and become heterosexual because of peer pressure.

We never did find out from the "source" what they intended to use them for. But we did find that out as a matter of observation in the years since.

If you remember, about 1988—I'm not sure of the exact date, around '88—there was a string of fires that started the same night across the U.S. in eight cities, simultaneously. Los Angeles was one, Chicago, and a number of others—spontaneous fires just sprang up. And nobody could explain it, all on the same evening. And, eventually, of course, they were put out.

It was noted in the press, but nobody could ask the right questions. And it could well be the same type of thing, through the use of controlled programming for these people. So, be that as it may, that was only one aspect—the school shootings and this sort of thing—typically ages anywhere from 12-13, right around puberty, right after they would have been programmed. In the case of the two up in Colorado—they were 16-17—which is still a valid age, and they were also Ritalin kids, which is another aspect of the program, I think.

I cannot say that as a fact, another aspect of the program which had been dropped-in later. It makes them much more amenable to, shall we say, psychiatric psychic manipulation.

Martin: How many boys would you say passed through the program?

Bielek: As I understood it at the time, when I was in the program and after I was out of it, and eventually recovered my memories of being part of the Montauk Operation, my estimate in the early '90s was that probably about 10,000 boys had been programmed at Montauk. But as we have found out since, there were many others who had been through the program elsewhere.

The program is no longer restricted to Montauk or Long Island—every major city in the U.S. has a Montauk Boys, shall we say, Preparation Center, and it's a nation-wide program.

Well, due to some activities that I became involved with on Long Island in 1997, Preston invited me out to see an enclave of Montauk boys. He said: "You always wanted to see some Montauk boys."

I said "Yes."

He said: "Well, in Sag Harbor, here on Long Island, there is over a hundred of them." He said, "It seems to be a holding-pen." He said, "If you want to come out and visit, come out."

I was at a Christmas party in '96 and that was New Year's for '97. The host who put me up in his house turned out to be my number-two son. Although I didn't know it at that time, he was a Montauk boy. We discovered a number of things about him, including the fact that the house that he was then renting was sitting directly over one of the underground bases involved with the whole Montauk Boys Program. There were six on Long Island; one of them happened to be right under his house.

Preston got involved with this, and since he was already involved with the Air Force as a reserve officer, he reported to his superiors what he had found and, in fact, there were lots of Montauk boys at that party and all over the town of Sag Harbor, and the police sort-of kept them "in check".

The Air Force started an investigation. They broke into this underground base, and captured a few of the working personnel who were lower-echelon, but what was interesting was that they had dossiers in that one station of 30,000 personnel, all Montauk boys. This was just one station—including pictures of people I knew, including a former roommate of mine, who is now dead.

But the Air Force started a major investigation. And, sometime later, the data came out through Preston that this is a major, major program. We estimate now, and I had made the estimate prior to that, in view of some additional information I had, that there were perhaps as many as 10 million Montauk boys throughout the United States, and probably worldwide!

And, as I made trips around the world, I found that there were very few Montauk boys in Europe, and even less in Australia; there were some, but very few.

But the Air Force said, in their estimate, very conservatively, there are at least 5 million Montauk boys, trained and active and ready to go in the United States and, quote, it is a world-wide problem, unquote.

Now this, of course, was an "unofficial" statement. That will give you some idea of the size and scope of the program.

Then, the question comes: "Who's running it?" You see, we always thought it was the government.

Martin: That's right, who's running it and what is the nature of the actual programming?

Bielek: Who's running it becomes the $64,000 question. Well, I always assumed it was the government, and so did Preston. We began to realize, after they uncovered this underground base, and they found these guys in black uniforms with no insignia, and no name badges, they found out that these uniforms were actually manufactured by one particular clothing manufacturing company, right here in Atlanta.

And the guys had some very strange things there—not only the dossiers, which the Air Force captured—but on their desks they had pen and pencil sets, and they had strange little things, a cross with a red rose on it. That's a symbol for the Rosey Cross or the Rose Cross, it's two different organizations.

There's the Rose Cross organization that is semi-political, and then there is the Rosey Cross, which is the Rosicrucian Order. And Preston did a lot more digging and found out that the Palatin monks were involved in this thing in some way, and we tracked it down to a few other organizations—which says there is a “secret religious order” in back of this thing. It was settled, apparently, as a religious order, after it left Montauk, and who could that possibly be?

Martin: We could get right back to the Jesuits.

Bielek: I wonder why you would say that? Yeah, they're involved, but there's also the possibility of an off-planet connection on this because it's a secret army. You can infiltrate anybody and anything, because these kids grow up, they go to school, and in part of the program.

The way I had set it up was that I told them: “You guys have nothing. You come from nowhere. You've left home. You have no money. You have no friends. Join our program, go along with it, and here's what we'll do for you: When this is over, we'll send you back to where you came from, or some other point if it's more appropriate; we'll set up a bank account in your name, you'll have money to live on. Go back to school. Finish your education. If you want to go on to college, that's fine. If you want a Ph.D., that's fine. We'll take care of you up to that point. When you finish school and go into society and become a working member of society, then we won't support you anymore. You will be on your own. You will never remember having been here when this is over, but at some point in the future we'll tap you on the shoulder.”

And that was what they were told, and I said: “If you want to go home, that's fine. If not, you'll be sent back to where you came from and you'll never remember having been here. You are not obligated to go on with this program.” I made that point very clear, so that no one would be forced into it anymore.

About 90 percent became a part of it; as a result of that, the yield was over 90 percent after that. And there was none of the “collapse” syndrome that we witnessed as a result of the early programs. They were very carefully selected, not only genetically, but in terms of, I think, family background or whatever; there was a certain aspect they were looking for.

At Montauk they were all Aryan.

In other words, this parallel program that went on on Long Island and Jamaica, in a nursing home of all places—I got this from the Director, who I happened to run into years later, after living in Atlanta, at a party one night.

I had given a lecture at some place; we had dinner, and he proceeded to get himself plastered, drunk, and then he decided he wanted to talk with me; despite the fact that he was ex-NSA. And he says: “I ran one of the Montauk Boys Programs you talked about.”

And I said “Oh?”

He said “Yes, there in the nursing home, in Jamaica.”

I said “When?”

He said “From 1976-79.”

I asked the same questions you did: “What are you going to use these guys for?” and he wouldn't give me an answer.

I said “Were they all Caucasians?”

He said “No, there were almost no Caucasians there. These were a mixture of Hispanic, Negro, Jewish, almost anything BUT Caucasian.”

I said “What was the purpose of that? Were they trying to find out whether they could program non-Caucasians the same way?”

He said “I think so.” He said it was successful, but they decided to shut it down after three years. So, there is a parallel program.

Now, the majority of them I have seen ARE most all Caucasian. There has to be a reason why. It has to be genetic. It has to be something to do with the functioning makeup of the Caucasian brain. Beyond that, I can only guess; I don't know the real answers.

Martin: And another possibility would be genetic manipulation, perhaps in some of these underground bases.

Bielek: That could well be, too.

Martin: Alister Crowley is a point of interest, his interest in Montauk. Obviously he is a major alchemical figure, and possibility even the homosexual aspect, or the satanic aspect of this—and I don't know what else his connection could be with Montauk?

Bielek: I don't know. He was in the background, somewhere, and for what reason, I don't really know, unless because of his occult knowledge. He realized that Montauk was going to be a very important point for operations in the future. He didn't live to the time when Montauk was set-up, by the Germans, of course, in what we call The Montauk Project.

Remember, Montauk existed at the turn of the twentieth century onward as a military base, and it was carefully selected. But, as Preston found out, and others have verified it, there was a crossing of ley lines at a particular spot on the Montauk Base, which makes it a very prime operating point on the planet.

Now, the Indians may have known this.

They had pyramids there and they were kicked off. Now, whether the military knew this, or someone in back of the military knew this at the time when they threw the Indians out, tore down the pyramids, and built the military base, I don't know. I would suspect somebody did. But it would have to have been somebody high up in the military, let us say “in seclusion”, who doesn't normally communicate in a normal manner with military personnel; possibly Alister Crowley himself had some part in this. That I can only say as a guess; I don't know.

But the fact that there were, there are still, major grid-line crossings, the power-lines and the power-points—one of the major power-points on the planet is at Montauk. This has a bearing on the situation.

Martin: Getting back to the three factions that are struggling and vying for position, one can't help but wonder about the Nazis in Antarctica and elsewhere, even in this country, for that matter.

Bielek: Yeah.

Martin: How will the Nazis surface in their agenda in all of this? I wonder how that will manifest?

Bielek: That's a good question. In that connection, one has to point out that the entire Montauk Project, at least up until 1991 when the entire project was run by German scientists, German nationals, and those connected came from Nazi Germany, and among those how many of them were perhaps adepts, I don't know. You had the drop-out period from '83-'87.)

I didn't know everybody in the chain of command, and I certainly didn't know everybody who was there at Montauk, either.

There were many programs other than the Montauk Boys Program and the Montauk tunnel.

There was some genetic engineering being done there; I believe minimal.

There was a music station operation.

And there were other things going on, including the Alien Agenda.

But what is interesting is that this thing was established by Germans who came to the U.S. in 1946-47, under Operation Paperclip, and my father was certainly involved in that. They went to Brookhaven first; and then they were kicked out of Brookhaven, in 1968, which is when they went to Montauk.

The military welcomed them because, when they told them what they were working on and what they could do for the military, they were interested. But these were civilians, and the question always arose in my mind: “Who paid for it?” I assumed the government did.

Well, in 1986, after a visit out there with Preston, I saw the base and then came back to Phoenix, where I was living. I had a friend, somebody I knew very casually, contact me who was at ASU going for his BA in whatever.

There was a group of them there who were interested in Tesla, and they wanted to talk with me about some of Tesla's work. So, I did. Then I happened to mention my visit out to Montauk, and one of them became extremely interested in the whole business of Montauk and this abandoned base and all of these tons and tons of electronic hardware and stuff. I didn't know, at that point, that it was Barry Goldwater's nephew I was talking to. But it was Senator Barry Goldwater's nephew, and he went and talked with Barry.

I found this out through channels, later. He would never admit it to me. Barry got interested. What kind of an abandoned project is this? What's going on there? I made the estimate that at least 50 billion dollars was spent on this thing, from the size of the base and the amount of debris left around. He couldn't find any trace, and he was Chairman of the Senate Oversight Committee for Military Expenditures, and he couldn't find a trace of money going to anything out at Montauk. He got disturbed and perturbed over this, so he started a major investigation. He went through every major corporation in the U.S. to see if there was money being side-tracked for "secret operations", like Montauk. He never could find any.

We finally tracked it down, that this thing was all paid for by German money, "appropriated", if you will, before World War II ended.

Now, if you remember, in the '70s I think it was, there was a movie released on the life of Patton. And one of the things that happened, and this is documented, in 1944 there was an American railroad train going through France, back from Germany, probably captured, carrying approximately 10 billion dollars of Reich's Bank gold. And that train was blown-up in a French railway tunnel, on our side of the operations.

So, Patton blew-up and said "Who the hell is dynamiting an American train on our territory?" And he knew about the $10 billion. Well, the money disappeared. He never could find—nobody could find—a trace of what happened to it. And he started a major investigation. He never got anywhere with it, except finally, ultimately he paid with his life for it. And it was never found. Where did that money go?

In 1954, according to what we were able to find out much later, the $10 billion, approximately, in gold—that is, the value in Europe in 1944 was $10 billion—it wound up on a ship, sinking off of Montauk Point about 1954. Apparently people had been "tipped-off" in the military; they sent scuba divers out and they recovered it and stored it in the vaults there, eventually to be used. And, of course, the value increased by a factor of at least 10-fold.

So there was over $100 billion in gold sitting there. They spent all of that, because they didn't just convert Montauk Point. There were remnants there of the Sage Radar System, and there are twenty-six installations around the U.S., and they converted quite a number of them. Whether they converted all of them or not, I don't know.

But, in any case, they ran out of money, and, of course, they kept going. And they never found any trace of where the money came from, and the principal contractor for electronics to that operation was the ITT Corporation. Now, at that time, who was the principal stockholder for ITT, before they were broken-up? It was the Krupps, of Germany. They owned 53 percent of the stock, from what I was told.

So, they were bailing out the operation, as time went on, because the Krupps were probably paying them to do it. That was the way the whole thing ran.

Now, the government had oversight groups in there, of course. They had the intelligence agencies, in and out, with oversight. And there was "administrative direction", I guess you would say, from the Pentagon. And there were those who came in on orders from the Pentagon, and there were military personnel there, as well as civilian.

But after the Air Force took it over in 1991, completely, it became a totally different story. We're talking about the period up until 1983, and then '87-'88, which was still under German control, essentially, up until the Air Force took it over in 1991.

So that was a very strange business because here was this monster operation, ongoing, and not one cent of U.S. government money, as far as we know, ever went into it. And that is part of the German Connection. It was run by the Germans and it was German money funding it.

Now, what the Krupps' interests may have been, that I cannot speak for, unless it was that they wanted to continue the, shall we say, the Nazi fiefdom, in a new guise. There are neo-Nazis around and Nazism, and what Adolf stood for, and what they took over and created in Nazi Germany is not dead by any means, though they lost the war militarily, but have they lost the war? That's a question we're not able to answer yet, at this time.

Martin: You mentioned, I believe, in an earlier interview many years ago, during one of your trips to Mars, that you came across a lot of gold and antiquities.

Bielek: We had built colonies there, and were brought up there because the colonies had discovered some underground installations that were sealed off. Montauk sent a group of us—in fact a large number of teams—up there on a continuing basis, which was interrupted when Montauk collapsed on 12 August '83, and it was resumed later.

Martin: Did you ever find out from Duncan, or in subsequent conversations, what was the nature of the Martian antiquities that were found?

Bielek: Only partially. There were a lot of records, records of their civilization, everything was in the underground. There were statuarys, apparently religious statuary that Duncan was able to partially decipher, I don't know why; I couldn't read any of the stuff. I don't even know what kind of language it was in. Remembering from what I saw, a symbolic language, it somewhat resembled Sanskrit. And whether it was, I don't know. I was no language expert, then or now.

But whatever happened to the gold, we don't know. We assumed that the military stashed it somewhere, because the military are alleged, I have to say alleged, to have taken all of the gold out of Victorio Peak.

This is a very long story in itself, as to that saga of ancient Spanish gold and recovering it. The fight is still going on in the courts over that. But if the military brought all this gold back from Mars, I'm sure they're sitting on it someplace as a guarantee of their continued operations, in case the Pentagon gets financially cut down to size, so to speak, which has been happening under the current administration. And whether that will continue in the future or not, remains to be seen. It depends which one gets in.

If Bush goes in, I'm sure they'll build the military back up and correct some of the severe problems they have, like low pay; they're losing a lot of their best people.

If Gore goes in, he'll continue the Clinton policy, that's for sure—they'll emasculate the military.

Martin: Is Montauk currently active, do you think?

Bielek: Yes. It was active with the Air Force from sometime in 1991 until June 1998. During this period of time, they were engaged in one specific operation, called Operation Sky Pebbles. And this operation was designed, was the cover-story for the program of "deflecting" Hale-Bopp. They knew about Hale-Bopp ten years before it showed up. They were able to track it before it ever came near the Solar System. This is how advanced the technology really is.

Now, I don't know what they were using to track it, whether it was a telescope we have in orbit, or whether it was other, special, new, long-range radar—which I don't think was operational then—but they knew it from about ten years out. They tracked it as it came in, and they realized, as it was getting into the Solar System, that this thing was on a very peculiar course.

The initial computer-generated trajectory indicated it would pass safely between Earth and Mars. But, as time went on, they kept seeing that this thing was getting "course corrections"—that is, Hale-Bopp was—and it wound up on a direct collision course with Earth. That was why Operation Sky Pebbles, to find a way to deflect it, because it was the largest comet known in history, and they knew if this thing hit the Earth it would be a total disaster. They would expect it to wipe out half the Earth's population in one shot and they were determined to prevent this.

So, they developed, at Montauk and elsewhere, very high-powered particle-beam weapons systems—more powerful than Tesla ever dreamed of, because he was the originator of it. And they developed some underwater systems there, two of them in parallel. The final accelerators are linears, Lineacs, each of which was five miles long, under the ocean, and how they deflected the beam at the end and were able to focus it, I don't know. That's highly technical and highly classified.

But the interim stages ahead of that, which are on Long Island, have been seen at various times, because of various things happening, such as some of the strange fires that they've had in past years on Long Island where the fires burn in a perfect circle. Fires don't do that, not normally. And, gave away the fact that there are two huge circular ring-accelerators on Long Island, underground, to the West of Montauk, which were feeding Montauk.

They developed this particle-beam weapons system. It's quite sufficiently powerful, it and several others working together, in unison, because there isn't just one. It's many. And they were able to coordinate the activity such that they were able to deflect the object, Hale-Bopp, before it actually collided with Earth, and they were able to steer it around. It actually went around, very close to the original projected trajectory. It was a little bit further out from the original projected trajectory, and a little bit earlier—I think it was about two days early in getting around the Earth. And after it left the Earth and it was sufficiently far away, it was hit again. It was split into six pieces. That's public record, that it's in six pieces, and left.

They were concerned not only about the physical object, but the gaseous field around it. It was, I think, chlorine-methane, if I remember right. The concern was there that the object didn't have to hit the Earth; it would just pass close to, or brush by, the Earth's atmosphere, the chlorine methane would poison the Earth's atmosphere sufficiently that it, alone, could wipe-out life on the Earth.

So, it was a major project and the Air Force was in charge of it. And they, sufficiently, did their homework and they successfully got the object to go off into space again. It was after that was over, in June of 1998, that the Air Force shut the whole operation down and left.

Well, about two months afterwards, the Navy wanted the project and, of course, the Air Force locked it all up, and they (the Navy) quite literally bulldozed their way in, smashed through the gates and everything else, and they took over the base. The Navy is now running it. And what they're doing, I have no idea.

In any case, they are there now, and they are the ones who are currently running it, for whatever ends or whatever purpose. That, in a thumbnail, is the history of the operation there at Montauk Point. I don't know if they shut down the time tunnel. As far as I know, it's probably not operational. But they shut down all other operations after about '87-'88, and they concentrated on other research. And then the Air Force took it over for their particle-beam weapon research.

Martin: In your estimation, has the Unified Field been altered or disrupted as a result of these experiments?

Bielek: Are you referring to the theory or the fields of the cosmos?

Martin: Fields of the cosmos.

Bielek: As a result of the Philadelphia Experiment, yes, there was a massive disruption. With the lock-up of the Philadelphia Experiment with the Montauk Project, I've been hearing about that from a number of sources, over the years; a very massive disruption, very massive potential damage. There was damage, but apparently it was not sufficient to change everything.

Martin: Was that limited to Earth plane?

Bielek: No.

Martin: That went all the way out?

Bielek: It went all the way through all levels, whatever all levels may be. It caused major disruptions in other areas of the universe, and that might have been why, right after '93, there was such a succession of UFOs and other extraterrestrial craft observing us, to see what the blazes—who is this bunch down here doing things like this? What have they got that we don't know about? Something along that line. And since that point on, we've had heavy UFO observation.

Well, the fact is that at the second test of the Eldridge, which was the 12 August test, there were three UFOs sitting over the base at that time, over the Philadelphia Navy Station, and they were seen over the Eldridge, just before it fired-up its test, the second one. Two of them immediately disappeared; well, all three disappeared, but two apparently disappeared normally, and the third somehow got trapped, enmeshed in the fields, and it wound up in the underground at Montauk, in one of the caverns.

That was the first project I worked on as Al Bielek in the Montauk Project, was interrogating the crew and helping to take apart the ship, and find what records we could, and what else we could that was usable. How it got trapped in space-time, and the whole nine yards of that mess. We don't know how, but it did, and so it wound up in the underground in one of the caverns at Montauk, barely fitting in the cavern. We don't know, but it was there.

Martin: Were there records or documents or any information on that ship that you—

Bielek: It was all in an alien tongue, but we were able to crack it, and three of the crew did talk—that is to say, after a lot of pressure was put on them. The primary concern of the Station Master, Jack Pruitt, was: "Is this an 'avant-garde' of a major invasion?" That was his concern and those were his instructions, to find out: "What was the ship doing there? How did it get in the underground? What was this all about?"

No, there was no avant-garde invasion. They were observing the test of the Philadelphia Experiment, and apparently that one ship for some reason got caught-up in the fields and couldn't get out, and got trapped and wound-up at the Montauk end, whereas the Eldridge wound-up in hyperspace.

Martin: Why is the Schumann frequency of such significance?

Bielek: That's a very good question. Not knowing enough about prior species right here on Earth, much less elsewhere, I'm not an anthropologist, archeologist, or whatever—it's hard to give you an answer to that one. There seems to be some reason why the human species, at its present level of development, is of great concern to outsiders. Perhaps earlier species were of some concern, but only in terms of a museum, looking at some of the species that got under glass and they're observing. Just as a matter of: What's happening with them? Where are they going? Are they ever going to develop?"

If you go back to the caveman and the Neanderthals and such, even further, according to some of the research I've done, the earliest brain on the human head is a Reptilian brain, as a Reptilian remnant. And we've gone through several genetic changes in which various brains have been added. The last one being, of course, the cortex, which is the highest thinking center.

But right below that are the two main hemispheres, the right and left hemisphere, which normally, when they're working right, are totally coordinated, phase-locked to each other, so they function together as a unit. Over 90 percent of the people in this country, at least, will say they don't—due to various pressures of love and growing up, and whatever may happen in the process of growing up, the synchronization is broken and people become what is known as "right brained" or "left brained".

It's not supposed to be that way; it's supposed to be balanced. When they become right brained, or left brained, and as with the kids at Montauk, they have ways of creating that condition, which is a way of putting you under "control". If you break that lock-out, if you can coordinate the right and left brain so they're phase-locked and operating together the way that they are suppose to be, you break the back of the “control” right there.

That doesn’t mean you automatically get back all memories; they will come back, but you have broken the control, and there is no control as long as you can maintain your brain in a balanced mode of right and left brains.

There are simple tests that provide the clue as to whether or not you are right-brained or left-brained. Most people tend to be either right-brained or left-brained; the left brain being the typical, analytical type, the engineer, the scientist; and the right brain being the metaphysician, the psychic, the sensitive, to put it in those terms.

If you have both sides of the brain working together, the advantage is any information that comes in through any of the inputs of the normal human system will be analyzed from two different points of view simultaneously. It becomes very difficult, under those conditions, particularly if your chakras are all working properly, very difficult to pull the wool over your eyes. And it is even more difficult to put a control all around you.

And this is one of the things which is ongoing in our society and civilization today. It has been for quite some years, at least half a century, and increasingly in the last twenty years. Societal mind-control wherein you are addicted to one mode or another, kept under a combination of chemical control, electronic control, what have you, so that you have lost your innate and inherent abilities.

If, let us say, even 30 percent of the population of the United States were to come out from under this and have full control of their brain and functions, I think you would see the fastest mass collapse of the control functions of our government. You would see recognition of all the corruption that everybody knows is going on, but everybody just turns their head and looks the other way. This would be an impact greater than you could possibly imagine. People would be suddenly fed-up with it, because they could see where it was heading and what it’s going to do to them, and their families, and to society.

But they don’t see it, at the present time, for the most part; and only a few do, who have gotten their heads back together for some reason or other, or maybe by just hard work, but they’ve done it.

But this is one of the keys to the whole business right now. You do not find as much of that kind of mind control in Europe, and even less in Australia. Those people have knuckled under for other reasons, societal control. There are other techniques for controlling society than sheer mind-control.

But the mind-control seems to be the primary number here in this continent, at least, particularly in the United States. If you could do a number and reverse that aspect, there would be a change overnight. And I’m afraid that that is what the would-be controllers of our destiny are very much afraid of, and are doing everything they possibly can to prevent.

[In a follow-up discussion with Al Bielek, I (R.M.) asked him how you balance both hemispheres of the brain to their proper, normal state. He recommended a set of audio tapes available from two sources. The audio tapes are called Hemi-Sinc. This balancing technique through sound, via the Hemi-Sinc tapes, originated from the Monroe Institute.]

Al Bielek also mentioned a second method for balancing the right and left hemispheres of the brain. It is an ancient technique of a physical manipulation of the head and neck, similar to chiropractic. This technique is called Alpha-Biotics, and balances the hemispheres almost instantly, with a 15-minute treatment. There are numerous practitioners of this method throughout the country. Martin: Getting back to the Germans and Montauk, I’m not sure how I want to word this. Do you think the principal of Vril came very much into play, with regard to the Montauk time experiments, in terms of a goal?

[Note: In The Black Sun, it says of Vril: “It is the ancient language of creation. Vril is composed of 72 tonal signatures deriving from a single monochord. This number also equates to the 72 Keys of Enoch or the 72 Keys of Solomon. Through the principle of Vril, the Nazis were trying to harness the very power of the heavens.” There is more in The Black Sun and from other sources on this subject, but this will give you an idea in case it is a new term. — R.M.]

Bielek: I would say it probably did. I know a little about the German “secret societies” and what they were aiming at, and what was going on there. That goes back into the Scandinavian techniques and the Scandinavian mythos, and what are basically attempts to control that kind of energy; they call it Vril. Most would call it the Kundalini energy; they call it Vril. And, whatever it is, that “life-essence energy” which makes life what it is, and the body what it is, and you don’t live without it, and the body generates it. But trying to keep it in proper balance and control is another matter.

Now, to get back to another part of your question which you raised regarding Alister Crowley from 1918 and onward. I don’t know if he had any real connection with Montauk, but this whole business of the sex energy, the sex aspect and the homosexual aspect is rather important. They have brushed over this in terms of German aspects, but many of the SS were homosexual.

If there were any attempts to produce a working group, a psychic working group within the SS (German Secret Service)—there may well have been—if there’s two or more involved who were going to do anything, to be balanced it has to be all male or all female; it has to be either/or, but it cannot be mixed, because the normal function of the female is to absorb the kundalini or the psychic energy of the male in the normal mating process. And this energy is required in order to fertilize the egg, in order to cause the new person to be created. That is a perfectly normal function.

But, as part of the normal function, it absorbs the male energy, and therefore a male who is married, or a female who is married, is usually not a very good psychic. There are exceptions to this, and I know one of them. But if you were going to do anything in the way of “heavy” psychic manipulations, it requires a joining of the sexual force. And this is where the “psi corps”, early on, adopted this technique. They worked in pairs, and they were always male pairs or female pairs, but they always wound up, after the training, as being homosexual because they will combine their energies. They will not delete or defeat each other’s energy, and they work much better that way in a pair, because the strength of the pair is about the number of the persons involved squared—four times the energy for two people. If there’s three involved, it’s three to the third power. And it goes up, very rapidly.

But this was part of the secret aspects of it. The fact that the boys were trained to be, essentially, or converted to being homosexual, had some other purpose which was not obvious then, and is not now.

One of the things that did occur was, many of the boys, because of their being homosexually inclined as a result of Montauk, would get together and do what homosexuals always do—namely, have sex—and they wound up “kicking each other’s energy up”, so to speak. And as they did that, they broke-up their programming. They were deprogramming themselves.

The government couldn’t have that, or whoever is running the program couldn’t have that. So, they eventually decided to change the programming of the majority to heterosexual.

First they went through Phase I, electronics, the early one. Then, Phase II. And finally, in late '97, Phase III came in. Phase III was no longer a machine with pads on the body, on the sensitive points, programmed by physical contact from a machine; it was done strictly by RF (radio frequency) in a room where they contacted the appropriate centers of the brain.

Simultaneously. When you do it that way, it doesn't make any difference if it's a male or female; you completely by-pass the problem of the fact that the chakra polarities are reversed between a male and female, and females could be programmed this way.

But now, with the new techniques in Phase III, they can program females, and you see a lot of Montauk Girls cropping up now. And, of course, that's ideal for the Montauk boys, to keep the Montauk boys happy, and it also wraps up the program a little more tightly. This is the newer technique, as of, I'd say, the last five years, particularly the last three, from 1997 on.

Martin: Is there any connection at all in your mind with Montauk and HAARP?

Bielek: Basically, no. HAARP was originally developed for weather control, but it was also found that it was adaptable to mind manipulation. In that sense, there is a parallel pathway, you might say, but they're not connected as essentially joined programs, or having any actual connection whatever. They are separate.

The HAARP program today is not used for mind control. It is primarily used for the problems engaged with the Sun's errant activities and the plasma balls and huge magnetic fields, and everything else that is coming out of the Sun, to keep the Earth shielded from the effects of that. All of the energy of the HAARP project is now into shielding us from the Sun's effects.

There is none, as far as I know, being used for mind control, unless it's on a local area, let's say a local operator. But from principal government stations, from what I heard from someone who was working at Montauk on this program for a short period of time, they didn't want, at that phase of the game, around 1997, 1998, any mind control whatever from HAARP.

And HAARP was, of course, at that point, totally controlled world-wide by that little facility in the middle of Long Island, known as Brookhaven National Laboratories. They didn't want any mind control. It was strictly weather control, or at this point, for a proposed and functional, a completely ionized layer around the Earth, surrounding the entire Earth, which would shield us from the effects of the Sun.

So far, apparently, it appears to be successful.

HAARP can be used for mind control, but as far as I know, at the present time, it is not.

All of those projects that started in Montauk have been largely moved off of Montauk and are everywhere else. We have a center here in Atlanta, I don't know where it is, but there are certainly a large number of Montauk Boys in this town; they're saturated.

Martin: That's interesting. How about Brookhaven National Labs, do you have any sense of what's going on there, these days?

Bielek: Relatively little, as to what is currently going on there, except they are still resigned himself to not digging into the past anymore. He doesn't want to confront it; he doesn't want to confront any of his involvement in the past, at Montauk or elsewhere, and he's just saying "That's all in the past; that doesn't have any concern for me."

Well, sure it does, but he doesn't want to confront it, face it, so he is leaving it alone. He's stuck it over in a corner, so to speak, and going on with his life. He's still working at carpentry. He sounds pretty good. He sounds like he's in pretty good spirits, although he's had some physical problems that I was not aware of. But other than that, he seems to be in fairly decent health.

Martin: I want to ask a real loaded question, because we have not, in this interview, covered what happened to you, what they did to you in terms of regression and that sort of thing. But I want to ask you the loaded question: How old are you?

Bielek: [Laughter] That is, very definitely, a loaded question.

Martin: And take as long as you like to explain the answer! [Laughter]

Bielek: [Laughter] Ok. As Al Bielek, following from that birth certificate, I'm 73; I'll be 74 next March 31. As Ed Cameron, I was born in 1916. I would be, as of today, 84, on a linear basis. However, as Ed Cameron I put in 37 years, when I was regressed and put back in as, approximately, a 9-month-old baby into the Bielek family in 1927. So, if you add 37 to 73, you come up with 110.

However, then you have to, to be fair about it, add all of the years that I spent on government projects, and that is an unknown. I would say it's at least another 10-15 years on top of that, in terms of usage and wear and tear, that doesn't show on the calendar. If my current inferences are correct, that I was involved in another, still later program which is beginning to surface, there may be another 30-40 years to add on top of that. So, yes, the question is VERY loaded. I could well be 150 years old.

Martin: What program is just emerging, that you're just becoming aware of? Can you talk about that?

Bielek: This is one dealing with future operations, future wars, and future colonization. This is what has, apparently, been developing in the alternate reality, due to the timeline split. And some indication of what it's all about is shown on some of the television sci-fi channel programs. It's interesting the way these sci-fi writers get "inspired" to come up with certain stories and plots. But they seem to hit the nail

The Navy's U.S.S. Eldridge was made invisible in a Top-Secret project now known as the Philadelphia Experiment.

the world manager for the HAARP program.

In the past years they were connected with storage of extraterrestrial bodies, extraterrestrial craft, and research in that direction, and their original Charter states that they are involved in nuclear medicine. I'm sure that's still going on; and that, of course, is the public side of it.

What else they may be doing, it's very hard to say. There are many projects ongoing there. I know somebody here in Atlanta who is well known in the metaphysical community, who has been working at Brookhaven for the last 3½, probably 4 years, as a project manager. What she's doing nobody has been able to find out. But there are two people I know who have seen her there. And they can testify that this particular woman is there. She's denied to everybody's face that she has any connection whatever with Montauk, but why does she show up on Long Island once a month to continue to harass my brother (Duncan)?

Martin: How is Duncan? Are you in contact with him? Is he ok?

Bielek: More or less. He has sort-of pretty much on the head, at least most of the time, at least in so far as the background is concerned.

If you look at the TV program entitled Space: Above & Beyond, which has been an ongoing series for at least a year, they are dealing with problems about colonization of other planets, outside of our solar system, some 50 years in the future, and the on-going wars with aliens, using hardware generated by us, some of which comes very close to the present time.

That is part of what I've been concerned about for some time, because in the TV plot a number of the faces are very familiar. And I'm not saying familiarity because of the actors, I'm saying familiarity because of the PART they portray. And this has bothered me for quite some time, about a year. Let's say that corners and edges are starting to come back on that.

So, maybe in another interview in 6 months to a year from now, I can tell you the rest of the story.

Martin: Why would August 12, 2003 be an important date?

Bielek: It's a very important date for a reason. In the original experiments, which were locked-in between 12 August '43 and 12 August '83, the time equations were generated by Dr. Norman Levinson, who was a Ph.D. in Math at MIT. His work on the time equations is still "classified" on the time matrix, as they generated it. We had access to that on the project, but it's still unavailable to the public, and it may well never be available.

But he showed that if you have an interruption to the time field, such as occurred because of the lock-up of those two experiments, where your disruption causes a huge ripple, a "backward wave" so to speak; this is because you have changed the impedance of the flow-through. That is to say, in terms of RF and those who are engineers, it is well known that if you want to transmit power in an RF coax line, pair wires, by whatever technique you use, wave guide, you must match the impedance of the source to the load. The impedance of the wave guide or the mechanism conducting that RF energy to the load has to be appropriate.

Now, if you change the impedance of the transmission line, or the load, you will NOT have perfect transfer of power, and if you don't have perfect transfer of power, [some of] it bounces back and reflects back to the source. The time continuum acts in exactly the same way.

It's like time is in a wave guide. I'm not saying that it is, but for analogy, it is like the time field is in a wave guide. You disrupt it, as was done in the '43-'83 disruption, and then you no longer have a proper impedance transmission line, and you, therefore, get a reverse wave.

And if you get a reverse time-wave, you can have the disruption in '63, which was stamped out by creating a new timeline. And in '83, which would be the other end of this thing, would go on through that.

And, as Levinson pointed out in his equations, the time period involved here takes another time period, which in this case is 20 years, for it to damp-out naturally, so that it will again become stable. But in the meantime, something has to dampen it, and that something happens to be us bodies who went through this mess—namely Duncan, myself, John Von Neumann, and a few others.

Now, who some of the others are, I don't know. But we act as the "damping" system on this equation to keep the time field stable. If we were to be "eliminated", terminated, the whole damn thing might go unstable before 2003 and cause another major disruption. So, theoretically, after 12 August 2003, we are expendable. I say theoretically; I'm not so sure that's a fact, but that is the theory that was proposed by Dr. Levinson, who is no longer with us.

The problem is, they'll take you out for a period of time [physically remove your body through the use of time-travel technology], more than a few minutes, let's say half a day, and bring you back to the same point in time, within a millisecond or two. The body tends to reject any memory that comes along with whatever happened while you were gone. They can "bend" time like you wouldn't believe.

You see, the body tends to reject memories under those circumstances, and nobody has to even make an effort at "wiping". But if you want to remember what happened, under the circumstances where there was not a deliberate "wipe", you have to concentrate on it and have a desire to retain those memories. You must keep them quite alive and active; and you have to sort it out afterwards, because the memory of half a day doesn't fit into a couple of milliseconds in your brain capacity. However the information is transferred, it creates something of a confusion factor.

Now, Preston has told the story before of what happened to him in some of the earlier days of pulling people out while they're sitting or moving. In this case, he was driving a car when they pulled him out for some emergency, and he was in the process of making a turn, one street onto another. He was pulled out bodily, and they didn't bring him back to within a millisecond or two. It happened to be about 5 seconds later—which was very bad timing because his foot came off the accelerator. It was not on the brake, and the car drifted over into another lane, and there was a head-on crash with another car.

And the driver of the other car testified later, he says "I don't know where that van came from!"

And Preston, of course, was rematerialized into the car an instant before the crash.

So, he wound up with his head practically in the windshield; he hit the rearview mirror and totally demolished his sinus cavities. He wound up in the hospital with a major operation or two for I-don't-know-how-long. They totally rebuilt his sinus cavities and gave him a titanium insert of some kind. And today, now that it's all over, his sinuses are better than they have ever been. You can't even see it.

But he said "That was very bad timing."

Of course the car was wrecked enough that it was scrapped. I saw it before it was scrapped. He said "Somebody really goofed bad!"

He said "Now they don't do it that way. If you're driving and they need you, somebody will tap you on the shoulder by remote control, which is an indication 'pull over to the side of the road and park'. [Laughter] Then they'll pull you. They don't want repeats of that sort of thing."

But they can do this. And I presume that the people in the government, or the secret government, or the military—whoever are doing this—learned it from the aliens. This was the "standard technique" for abduction years ago, when the abductions were ongoing and our government didn't believe it. Then, eventually, they found out from the aliens what was going on and how they were doing it and, I guess, replicated the techniques; whether it is with hardware or not, I don't know, but I would assume that it involves hardware.

Martin: It does explain, if you're missing for a period of time, and brought back, and you have a "full night's sleep" and wake up totally beat, which happens to a lot of people these days.

Bielek: Oh, yes.

Martin: I don't know how widespread this thing is.

Bielek: I don't either.

Martin: But that is a common phenomenon.

Bielek: I suspect that it is more prevalent in certain parts of the country than others. I don't think—not that I'm trying to downgrade anybody or infer anything—but I don't think this is going to happen very much to farmers, loggers, miners, and those people doing their daily rounds.

This is more likely to happen to people who are involved in industry, computers, scientific research, or perhaps were in the past and have some remnants of knowledge that is useful to someone. This happens much more in the cities or the larger urban areas, such as, say, Southern California, parts of Arizona, because Arizona has a huge underground base, up under Lakeside area, that is apparently Reptilian. And California has many underground bases, both ours and otherwise. And this is the case all over the country;

they're spotty—there are some sections where there are few bases, and others that are loaded.

But if you were to try to plot this, you would have to get an awful lot of data from people who have been victims, and then start to plot it against the background of the US: Where did these things occur? What were the occasions? What is the frequency?

Then you might come up with a very interesting pattern.

Martin: There is so much going on right now, it's just fascinating. Of course, they're trying to keep us distracted at every turn.

Bielek: Like the current election.

Martin: Right. That does come to mind. I'm bouncing back and forth in time here, I hope you don't mind. Let's go back. Was the real Rudolph Hess sent to another time?

Bielek: That's a very good question. I have no data on that, other than what peripheral data I've run into that says the man who remained in Spandau Prison and died there was, allegedly, not the real Hess, but a substitute.

Some people went to see him and said, flat out "That's not the Hess we knew." Possibly something like that occurred. I don't know; I have no data to indicate one way or the other.

Martin: I know that you traveled to several points in our probable future, but—was the leaping-off point always 1943 for you, or did you ever leap-off from '83?

Bielek: Oh, there were other projects that took place that did not have the take-off point of '43. The one from '43 is when I wound up in 1983, 2137 AD, and the period in the 28th century, between 2749-51.

Martin: But those were based on the "original" timeline?

Bielek: That's correct.

Martin: What other things have you come across in the last two or three years that you were unaware of in the early '90s, when you were speaking a lot about this. What new things have you become privy to or aware of?

Bielek: One of the principal ones was, when I was removed from Los Alamos in 1943, in front of my family, and taken to the Pentagon, and they said "We have another assignment for you."

For a long time there was only a slight, hazy "blank" period, then I was out at Montauk, where I was being converted to Al Bielek—that is, age regressed.

But there was, actually, another six year period after '47, '47-'53. This came back, strangely enough, but the first incident to bring it back was in January 1999 when I was going through a Barnes & Noble bookstore here locally. I saw a book on the shelf titled The Quest For Mach One, and this was the history of the Mach-One Project at what is now Edwards Air Force Base. They built the XS-1 and the attempts to get it to past the speed of sound; and this book was the documentation of that whole quest.

I opened the book. The first thing I usually go for are the pictures. I turned a page or two and there I am, staring at a picture, it included Chuck Yeager in the middle. But on the end was a guy by the name of Jack Ridley. I took one look at this guy and I said "I know him."

I said "This doesn't fit anything. What's going on here? This doesn't fit any of my recollections of time as to what had happened." This was in a period of 1947 when I was no longer there. I had been taken out of the whole thing from Los Alamos and sent to Montauk, to become Al Bielek. It turns out, after I kept digging in on this, I DON'T FORGET FACES! It doesn't matter what happens, I don't forget faces. And the characters who pull this on me know it. So, in a sense this was their undoing.

I saw this book, started doing some research, and it gave a little history of Ridley in the book, namely, that he graduated from Oklahoma A & M, with a BA in Mechanical Engineering, and went on the Cal Tech, and took a Masters in Engineering. That was after he joined the Army.

They transferred him into the Army Air Force [Note: In a subsequent conversation I inquired about this term Army Air Force, and I will insert Al Bielek's response to that question at the end of this answer. — R.M.] and he went then to Cal Tech, and then was transferred to the Edwards Project, or as they called it, the Mach-One Project. And he became the Chief Aeronautical Advisor to the Project.

But, as I found out later—through some friendly help, who was very capable of doing some computer and "classified" digging, and unfortunately, that person has been worked over the coals since because of it, because of doing a little digging on this business.

I also have to add that it required that I do a little personal, mental time-travel, and I found somebody who had the techniques for it. I tried it and they worked. So I was able to go back into that period in 1947 and was able to find out, yes, I was there at the base all right. I was one of the advisors at the base that the Navy sent in.

Well, my friend found out that there were twelve advisors to that project, ten from the U.S., and two foreign (1 German, 1 Italian), but there were ten U.S. advisors, mostly military, it would appear. They were there strictly to observe the project and make reports on the progress. The Navy wanted to observe, also, and it was obvious there was concern about it. Because, if they succeeded, they were going to start their own project—which they did, afterward.

But in the process of being there, as I was there as an observer, I met Ridley and we had something in common. He did not have a BA in Mechanical Engineering. He had a BA in Physics. And I got to know him quite well and he talked a lot about these things, in terms of physics: "Well, rocket engines are fine. They put out lots of power, but they don't last very long; they take an awful lot of fuel. There must be something better."

So, both being physicists, we wracked our brains about this and came up with the idea: "Well, what we really need for long-range space travel is an ion-propulsion engine."

We got the idea that we could possibly produce one. He went back to the Air Force, and I went back to the Navy, with this brilliant idea: "Why don't we try to develop something like this? Would the military be interested?"

Oh, the military was interested—both of them! So they said: "You two get together; we'll fund it. You find a place, a site, go ahead and do your research." And we had, essentially, executive leave from the military, and we built a place which was in Malibu Beach, California, half a mile in from Hwy. 1, going East, on Malibu Beach Blvd.

(When I first moved to California, in 1954, as Al Bielek, I drove past that site more than once, and every time I did, I got the most eerie feelings about that place. It was not, apparently, operational then, when I drove past.)

What happened was, we built the thing up, we had a small staff. We finally got a successful engine test in January 1953 that put out 1200 pounds of thrust. The one we had designed, though, was 1000 for 10 minutes on the first test, and we made 20 minutes when the fuel feed quit, and I had to shut it down.

Word got around very rapidly, and what happened after that became very strange. Apparently somebody didn't like it. I found out through channels that Boeing hit the ceiling. Apparently they had one in their Skunk Works themselves, and we beat them to it, is my guess. I don't know that as a fact. At that point we decided, of course we'll go ahead, but my father, my natural father showed up on the scene and says: "I'm prepared to back you with unlimited funding if you will incorporate, and file for patents, and can get this thing off the ground."

I said "Well, that sounds fine, but I have no idea how much money we'd need."

He said "Tell me, take a guess, how much funding do you think might be required?"

And I took a punch-out guess. I said "Maybe $200-300 million." And he looked at me and he said: "If you get this thing off the ground, you'll need more than $1 billion dollars, and I'm prepared to fund you." I had NO IDEA where the money was going to come from or what he was connected with, at that point. I've since found THAT out, too!

But, in any case, we went ahead and we incorporated, and in March, Jack had to take a business trip somewhere, and while he was gone, in came the Black Ops team, seven of them. They grabbed me, took me out in front of everybody, took me to Washington, D.C. to CIA Headquarters in Langley, and then they took me to a special center they had at McClain, Virginia.

And from that point on, my memory, which was quite sharp, gets very bizarre. I was taken to McClain because they have a “dedicated portal” there. This was in 1953, yet! They had a dedicated portal that went straight to Alpha Centari I.

Now, I don’t know if you want to publish this or not, but I’m going to tell you what happened. I went there, and I was met by a group of aliens who were more-or-less human; but like some of the archetypes they use on these sci-fi programs, they have two arms, two legs, two eyes, a head and all of that. But they’re distorted from the human appearance. These Alpha Centarians were not grossly distorted, but they definitely were not what you would take as a normal human.

Well, they started to grill me for what I think was about 4 days, possibly their timeframe. When I was done with my history and all of this, they finally got across to me: “This had better be good or you’re stuck here.”

I said: “Well, I was on the Eldridge, and I did some time-traveling” and all of that, and they weren’t particularly interested in the 2137 episode.

I said: “Then I was also in the 28th century.”

They said: “Oh, what did you do there?” When I told them about what I saw in the cities and the total synthetic intelligent computer control, then I said: “I got to meet the guys who developed this thing.”

And they said “Oh, who were they?” They got interested at that point. And I told them what I knew about the WingMakers. They TOTALLY FREAKED OUT and they said “You’re going back.”

So, back I went, and then from there I was returned to the Pentagon. And then I sat. This happened in March 1953. There I sat in the Pentagon for the next 4 months, not knowing what I was going to do. I reported in every day: “Haven’t you got something to do?”

“No.”

I’d report in, go take the day off or whatever; sometimes I’d stay there for some administrative process or procedure. I wanted to go see my family. “You can’t see your family.” I did manage to sneak-in a visit in 1952, and was not allowed to see them otherwise, and I do not know why I was refused to be allowed to see them.

But, in any case, along about July of 1953, I finally went up to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and I said: “I don’t know what’s going on here. I want to continue my Navy career. I want to do some useful work, and I would like to see my family.”

“It’s out of our hands” was the reply I got. I even went to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, and got the same answer.

Well, late July or early August they finally decided they had something they were going to do, and the plan came down. I wasn’t told what it was, except I was being shipped to Montauk Point, which, of course, was a military base then in 1953. Then I was time-transferred to 1983, and then Von Neumann got in the act and said: “I don’t like what they’re going to do to you, but I have no control over this. I’m only a consultant here now. They’re going to strip you of all your memories, age regress you back to essentially a baby, and then put you in some family in the past, and bury you, and hope that you never remember any of it.”

He said: “They know they can’t kill you, for various reasons. You have to be kept alive. That’s the way they want to bury you and hope you never remember any part of any of this, and bury the problem, so to speak.”

So, that’s what happened. I was at the Montauk Point in August 1953. I think it was August 12, but I’m not sure of that. The rest of it is “history”, so to speak.

[In response to my inquiry about the term Army Air Force, we read Al Bielek’s response:]

That was back before there was a U.S. Air Force. It was always known as Army Air Force, up until the time that the Air Force was set-up as a separate entity, about 1948.

At the time when the Roswell incident occurred, it was still Army Air Force, and they were always referred to that way. It was AAF, Army Air Force. That goes back, of course, to World War II, and prior. Military operations involving the Air Force in World War II were under Command of the U.S. Army. It was only in ’48, approximately, that they set-up the Air Force as a totally separate entity. The Army retained some of their own aircraft, for spotting and so forth. And, of course, the Army today has an enormous force of helicopters, as does the Marine Corps. But the Air Force, as it was set-up as a separate entity, was basically SAC—Strategic Air Command, to be an offensive force, rather than primarily defensive.

The Army’s use of helicopters and such was more defensive. But the helicopter is anything but defensive. And the divisions became a little bit hazy. But nevertheless, the Air Force was originally considered a Strategic Air Command, which is to say, world-wide operations involving nuclear weapons and dropping same on an “enemy”.

Then came the missile forces, which came under the Air Force control. SAC is no longer SAC. We still have the bombers and all of that, but it’s now Space Command. Not many people know that. SAC doesn’t exist under its own jurisdiction anymore. It’s now under Space Command. We have an actual Space Command, which deals with matters in space, as well as here, and it’s MUCH more extensive than people have any idea.

They’re under the Joint Chiefs. You have the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and the Joint Chiefs, and you have a Chairman of the Joint Chiefs. And they report to the President, basically as the “Commander-in-Chief”. But the current “Commander-in-Chief” is not held in very high esteem by the military, so they took the Black Box away from him when he went into office, or shortly thereafter. The military are not fools. They know when somebody is of questionable stability or questionable integrity. Many issues, in that respect, may be raised about our current President.

Martin: Do you have any recollection as to why they freaked out at the mention of the Wingmakers?

Bielek: No. There was no indication given as to why they were totally upset with my meeting the WingMakers, except that apparently the WingMakers had gotten around quite a bit, and these ones apparently had a fear of them.

Now, there was one other point that I did not mention. One of the groups that became involved in our [Jack Ridley and Al Bielek] company, JRC Enterprises, and it was trying to buy us out, was a group known as Cristaldi Research Group. Their headquarters are in the Vatican, in Rome. They operate out of the Vatican, and they use the Vatican Treasury for funding, and they have “offices in principal cities of the world”.

They wanted to take us over and buy us out. Apparently they must have, in some manner, because JRC Enterprises is still listed on the computers as a wholly owned subsidiary of Cristaldi Research Group.

Now, I never could get any really solid information on Cristaldi Research Group, other than they’ve existed for quite some time, and there was a man by the name of Cristaldi, two and a half centuries ago, who was one of the Treasurers for the Vatican. So apparently they have a bit of a connection with the Church, and if they have a connection with the Church, I think they have a connection with a certain other organization. But they, apparently, are one of the prime operating groups, Cristaldi, and as I left, or was about to leave, Alpha Centari I, I just happened to throw this question at them. I said: “Oh, what do you happen to know about the Cristaldi Research Group?”

They said: “Oh, them? We run them.”

So that might give you some idea of the connections and the way these things are controlled, in a clandestine manner. I have to emphasize that this was Alpha Centari I, because it’s a totally different group on III & IV.

Martin: Let's get back, for a moment, to your father and his offer for funding your company. That whole thing just went away?

Bielek: Essentially, it did. But what happened was, the company survived because Jack came back and I was gone, and he got some very strange and mixed stories from the people. He couldn't be sure I'd walk out, but he couldn't believe that I would walk out because he knew better. But I had just plain been made to disappear, and that was it. He couldn't get any word from anyone. And he carried on with the company for about another year, until '54, and he was yanked out of the company, by some maneuver. That was, perhaps, when Cristaldi took over.

The whole company was collapsed, and the property stayed unused and vacant for a number of years, and then a huge research corporation bought it out, about 1960. I'm not sure of that date, but it was about then, because that whole section now, greatly expanded, is all there—there are huge signs on the roads that say Hughes Research Corp. So, I know that Hughes got it, eventually, because I've been by there, more than once.

Martin: Have you ever come across information that Howard Hughes was aware of any of this?

Bielek: No. I wanted to talk with him once, and this is another strange piece of synchronicity. Back in 1973 I think it was, when he disappeared from the Inn where he lived in Las Vegas. He bought the place when he got into, shall we say, a "conflict of interest" with the concierge or the owners of the hotel, who said the top floor or suite is reserved for some royalty from Afghanistan or somewhere, who have it reserved every year at this time for about three months.

And they said "You can't have it."

He said "Oh, I can't? I'll buy the hotel." And he did. He bought it out, kicked out that particular management, and of course, the place was no longer available to that foreign royalty. That was his home for many years after that. But in '73, a friend of mine and myself decided to take a trip. We were living in Phoenix then. We drove up to Vegas. I had a vague notion that Howard Hughes was probably there in the Dessert Inn, which he had bought, and I wanted to somehow wangle a way to see him. I just had this feeling it was important to try and meet him.

Well, would you believe that three days before we arrived is when they kidnapped him and took him out of there? That famous sequence which resulted, finally, in not only his being in captivity all that time, but they took him out of the country and finally brought him back in the plane, DOA. It was 3 days before I arrived in Vegas that he was yanked out of the Dessert Inn Hotel. That, I consider, as more than just an "accident".

Other people I have known at Hughes have all disappeared, died, whatever. I cannot find anybody as a source of information who might be able to verify anything about Hughes Research Corp. and what property they bought-out, and how they acquired it.

Martin: You said you had a sense of your father's funding?

Bielek: Yes. He, I found out later, was apparently involved as the trustee of a trust fund out of Europe, the Wolfsburg Trust, which was founded by Dr. Hans Porsche back in the '30s. And he put money into it so that, after World War II was over, the stated purpose was "to fund underdeveloped, third world countries who wanted to become independent, democratic nations". He put money in the fund, and apparently his oldest son—I'm told, and this is not verifiable, because you can't find ANY information out about the Wolfsburg Trust.

I found two people who know about it, but I can't pin anything down. They have no public record, anywhere, but they were allegedly worth about three trillion dollars, and my father was the trustee. When he died, in about 1985—not 1981, as the public record would state—I did find out, finally, through classified connections, that he died in '85 and they had to appoint another trustee. And, of course, it was supposed to go to the first-born son, which would have been me, but since nobody knew if I was alive, and everybody assumed I was dead, it went to my son instead, Jeff, Jeff Cameron. And I do know, from other sources, that he did spend a lot of time running back and forth to Europe.

Well, there is a long story and saga connected with trying to meet with Jeff after I found out I had a son, a number-one son. I found out much later I had three more sons and a daughter. And I tried to meet with him and I found out who he was from a picture I had from 1964 in a New Mexico magazine, which is published by the state of New Mexico. In the August issue of 1965, they showed a picture taken from the August 1964 State Fair, of cattle judging contests, and a picture of the contestants. Kneeling in the front row was someone who attracted my attention immediately. And I spent a lot of time trying to track down who that person was.

Now, in 1965, of course, I went to the New Mexico State Fair and I went to the contest board and I showed them the picture and they said: "Oh yes, that's from last year."

"Well, who were the contestants?"

"We can't give you the names of the contestants."

"Well, why not?" I wanted to find out who this person was in the front row.

"Can't do that."

"How about who won the contest?"

"They'll even give you the names of the winners, but you'll have to contact certain other people on the board."

I wrote them a letter and never got an answer.

I said: "What about this picture? Is there an original around? Was this taken by the state itself?"

"No, we contracted that out to a certain photographer in downtown Albuquerque" and they gave me the name and address. I went down there and I got 8 X 10 glossy prints. And that, of course, wound up in my slide show, among other things.

Again, strangely enough, two and a half years later that particular photographic company burned to the ground; it was sort of odd, but they did. And the negatives, of course, with it, but there are enough prints around, no problem. But I didn't know who it was, at that time, except that I had an enormous feeling of attraction to this person. Well, I've had psychics look at this picture many times, and some very good ones. And I said: "Is there anybody in this picture who has any connection whatever with me, for any reason?" Every one of them zeroed-in on this same person, and they said: "This person is connected with you in some way; I don't know what it is." One of them said "You may be related." As a matter of fact, he was.

In 1990 I went back to the New Mexico State Fair. I didn't go every year, but in 1990 I went back because it was, shall we say, the 25th anniversary of my first arrival. I had a strong feeling that he would be there, because in the meantime I had found Jeff Cameron listed in the phone book for Albuquerque. And I called, many times, and never got an answer.

So I go to the State Fair, got a motel room, go to the fair, and as I'm walking in the front gate I see one of these sleazy looking characters with dark glasses, chewing gum, and a two-way radio on his belt, standing on the inside of the gate, and he looked at me. And I said: "I know what you are, but I don't know why you're here." He was obviously CIA or some related intelligence group.

So I went about the fair, but I don't know if Jeff was there. I never saw him. I came back to my hotel room and I tried the phone number again. This time it answered, first time. "Is Jeff Cameron there?" I said.

"I have no idea who you're talking about."

Well, I called a second time, got the same answer. Called a third time, and I said: "Now look, this phone is registered in the name of Jeff Cameron. Who are you?"

"It's none of your business; this isn't Jeff Cameron and he's not here" and hung-up again. I called the phone company right on the heels of that, and I gave them the number. I said: "Can you tell whose name this number is registered to?"

And they looked it up and said: "Yes, Jeffrey Cameron."

And I said "Now, currently?"

And they said "Yes, that's correct."

And I told them why I asked, and what had happened.

And they said: “Oh, that’s a mobile phone; that happens all the time with mobile phones; you never know who’s going to pick them up, or who it’s loaned out to, or whatever.”

Well, in the sequence of events, in October of that same year, 1990, I was slated to do a lecture in Redding PA, on October 5. This was also the date of one of these big swap meets, which was upstate in New Hampshire, at a small town. Preston always went to them. I told him I wanted to go to it, that particular year, because I felt somebody was going to show up there who was going to be very important to me. But he gave me the wrong date, so I set the date for the lecture on the 5th of October, and that happened to be, it turned out, the date of the swap meet.

So, I went to Redding; I wasn’t about to cancel my appearance there. I saw Preston, and I said: “Somebody is going to show up. Here is a picture of someone I have reason to believe may be my son.” So I gave him a copy of that picture.

I had flown in to Long Island, drove to Pennsylvania, then drove back after the presentation was over, and I said “Ok, Preston, who showed up?”

And he looked at me and he said: “You’ll never believe who showed up.”

I said: “Oh, John Von Neumann?”

He said: “Nope. A guy who calls himself Jeff Cameron.”

So, at that point I got quite upset because I didn’t know who was going to show up, but he told this very interesting story. Jeff told Preston that a couple of months ago he got hold of one of these video tapes going around the country, The Truth Of The Philadelphia Experiment. That was the one that Preston, Duncan, and myself did in somebody’s living room in Long Island, and circulated it through the underground all around the world. I think the guy who sold it must have sold ten thousand copies. That’s our estimate. Bill Nell, who did this quietly, never paid us any royalties. He stole the thing, quite literally, but with his own camera. He took the video himself. I won’t go into all the circumstances.

Martin: Was this the video that, in part, alerted Thorn Industries, the Wilson brothers, about Preston’s existence?

Bielek: I don’t know, from that connection, that aspect.

But, anyway, it was probably that video which Jeff had seen, and he said: “For the first time, I was able to find out what happened to my father. I would like to speak with Al Bielek.”

Preston said “He isn’t here. He’s doing a lecture in Redding.”

Then Jeff told a strange story, because there’s only about two weeks separation when I was at the state fair and when this happened on October 5.

He said: “Two weeks ago I was in Albuquerque. I was grabbed by some government people, taken to an underground base somewhere, and I was held there. I think it was two weeks, it seemed like that, and they held me there, forcibly. And then one day, as matters transpired, one of them got up and walked away. I overpowered the other guard, knocked him out, and I ran from there and somehow found my way out of this underground base and got back up to the surface, in a hail of gunfire, and got in my truck and drove here.” He went on to say: “I’m going away. I’m tired of the harassment I’ve been getting from the federal officials all these years. I’m going to go into seclusion; hopefully I can find some peace.”

I have never seen him to this date. There have been many attempts made. If I show up with Preston at these swap meets, Jeff is kept out. If they know I’m there, they’ll prevent Jeff from being there. If I’m not there, no problem. Jeff can come and speak with Preston all he wants, and has done so several times, and filled in some of the family history, although not much.

He kept insisting he has to see me.

The last attempt was in 1998. He was going to come to Long Island from a trip in Europe, and Preston got the information that he was supposed to be there sometime in January 1998. I was coming to Long Island anyway, and some very strange things happened. There was an audio tape made, and they almost captured him that time, but he escaped, but that was the year before.

Then this thing in ’98. It was prearranged that he was going to come in and he had connections with the trust fund, and he, apparently, had a large amount of money he was going to donate to a certain research group, which Preston knows. And he was to meet with Preston secretly and so forth. He discussed this with another person, a woman I know who we know is trustworthy, but in Preston’s house, and Preston never swept his house for “bugs”.

Well, needless to say, it was bugged. They started a massive sea-search to find Jeff, and I don’t know how he escaped in that, but the Coast Guard was out stopping every ocean-bound ship coming into a U.S. port, anywhere from Boston to Virginia, to see if Jeff Cameron was on board. And they never found him. Somehow, he escaped through this network. I do not know how.

He was then picked up by the military of the U.S., and other strange things happened, but he was eventually picked up by the military, and was under their protection, and has been, since at least 1998. And I have not seen him, even then.

I do know that he is well and he’s safe. What it is about this group in Europe, or even what group in Europe it is that wants his head severed from his shoulders, I don’t know.

Obviously he knows too much about too many things, and if he were to connect with me, he might be able to connect me with the trust fund. I’m not sure what the whole story is, but they didn’t want him connecting with me at any price. They offered Preston $5 million to turn him over to them.

He said: “$5 million? I don’t want $5 million.”

He already had $5 million from another source, at that time; he’s since lost it.

They said “Oh, we can give you more.”

He said “I am not interested.”

So they put a very, very high price on Jeff’s head, at that time.

Now, perhaps one day I will be able to relay the entire story. But to this day I have not been able to meet with him.

He has made attempts; I have made attempts. We both know it. At least he is still alive—is all I can say for sure.

I don’t really bother to probe, because if I do try and probe and pin down where he’s at, then my probing will be read-out and somebody else will be there on top of him in short order. So, I will not try to find out exactly where he is at.

Martin: That’s a very sad story.

Bielek: It is. I’ve met number-two son, number-three son; number-three son is in the Marine Corps. As soon as he found out that his records were falsified and his father was actually his step-father, and found out that his real father’s name was Cameron, who was a Naval officer in the area around New Mexico, in ’46-’47—bad. The next thing they did, they canceled his 3 weeks leave, shipped him back to Quantico, Virginia, shipped him out of the country, over to the Middle East. He was there for 6 months, and now they have him up in Canada, and he is under strict orders never to speak with me or Preston.

Martin: Preston has tentatively agreed to do an interview with The SPECTRUM.

Bielek: That would be very good, very worthwhile. He can fill in some of the other gaps and pieces and things I’ve left out. The history of the Montauk Project is very, very involved. It involves music and the music industry. Some of these Montauk kids were very talented, were very good musicians and singers. They never got a cent for this; royalties all went into the Montauk treasury. They all used pseudonyms. Duncan, for that matter, even was a very good singer in his early days. Preston has an audio tape, his own private tape, of some of the times when Duncan did some singing, and it was incredible. He was incredibly good.

Martin: I haven’t looked at the music book yet, The Music Of Time, by Preston Nichols and Peter Moon; I’ve just scanned it. But that whole component is a whole other level of mass mind-control, using music.

Bielek: Yes, using music. Well, obviously this is what the Beatles were into; that's why they were sent to the U.S.

Martin: And then, of course, there is the positive side to it. I did an in-depth interview with a man named Jonathan Goldman, who is the President of the Sound Healers Association, and he is one who has done some fantastic work with music and healing. [Jonathan has just released a fantastic CD titled "The Lost Chord", available through Ethereal Music at: 888-384-3732. — R.M.] So, there is a whole other positive side to the music area, but that opens up another new realm of query. Very fascinating stuff.

Do you have any sense, have you ever come across any information, or have you confirmed at any time, that JFK, the President, was going to expose the whole UFO thing? That was one of the reasons he was taken out?

Bielek: That was one of the reasons, yes. He was going to expose the whole business. He ordered MJ-12 to release the information, publicly, about the whole UFO/ET problem, or he would do it for them.

And, of course, he went to the CIA and told them to get out of the drug business, and they weren't about to do that; the masters of the CIA were not about to have their little financial apple destroyed.

Of course, he also did get into this business of opposing the Fed by issuing some $500 million dollars in U.S. notes, and he was going to eventually shut down the Fed. Well, that of course, ran amuck of the controllers of the Fed, who weren't going to have their little money cow tied-up or destroyed, so the orders went out to get rid of Kennedy.

But yes, he was very much into this UFO/ET business. He found out what was going on and he was totally flabbergasted, and from what I understand, it hit him very hard when he realized how much had been covered-up. He was not a man to continue to cover it up, in spite of the fact that he was Catholic, and theoretically, beholden to the Jesuits; he went totally against them.

Martin: Yes, he did; as far as I can tell, he did.

Bielek: And he paid with his life for it, just like a certain other President, some 100+ years earlier, Mr. Lincoln. He was also one of the two Presidents that we've had who was not a member of the Masonic Order.

Martin: Well, Lincoln knew the Jesuits were going to take him out.

Bielek: That may have been why he was reluctant to go to the Ford's Theater that night. But his wife, who was a real nag, insisted on it and nagged on it, until he went. And the rest, of course, is history.

Martin: I had not realized, until reading Peter Moon's book, that at least Robert Kennedy frequently went to a house very close to Montauk Point. Now, JFK Jr.'s plane was obviously shot down. Do you have any theories as to why they took him out?

Bielek: The information I have is that he was hot on the pursuit of who was really behind the killing of his father. And, number two, he had announced two or three days prior to the incident of the plane crash that he was going to run for Governor, and he might run for President. Well, if he was going to run in New York state for Governor, or for President, my feelings were he could run on a dog ticket and make it for President, he was that popular.

But that was a "red flag" in front of Hillary's eyes and face. Much of the speculation is that it was Hillary who decided to get rid of him because he was a political threat to her and her career, plus the fact that there were other powers-that-be who didn't want him digging in any further into the whole history of who really got to his father, because that was never a completely solved mystery, in terms of the normal sources of information. And a lot was left unturned when Jim Garrison tried to nail Clay Shaw and failed; it's in the manuscript on the Jesuits.

And also, on the History Channel's presentation of this, Garrison lost the court case and the other man went free, and the guy was guilty as hell. There were a lot of people who knew this, people who were involved on the fringes of the organization. It included Mr. Ferry; it included Oswald, and a number of other people. So the History Channel is either ignorant of the facts or it white-washed them. I would prefer to say they're ignorant, but I can't believe they were THAT ignorant.

But to stir that whole thing up again and show what the REAL connections were, and who the powers-that-be who could order the Secret Service to not ride on the back of the car, to not put the bowl on top of the car, to drive exceptionally slow past the book building and that grassy knoll, and then to virtually stop in the process so that any of the marksmen had a clear view and a clear shot; and then, of course, even the distorted Zapruder film shows that the Secret Service man who was the driver was handed a gun and turned around and did the "coup de grace".

The fact that the Secret Service was in on this from beginning to end, and the fact that it had to be a major plot, the question is: WHO WAS PULLING THE STRINGS? I mean, the Secret Service were lower-level people.

Martin: Who was POWERFUL ENOUGH to pull those strings?

Bielek: And this was what John F. Kennedy, Jr. was after. He wanted to find out who was really in back of it. Well, apparently it is still a very hot issue and they still don't want it out. Whoever THEY may be!

Martin: There is a lot of really hot stuff in the manuscript you have, VATICAN ASSASSINS, on this very subject.

Bielek: The information has to come out.

This is the new century, and apparently stuff is coming out of the woodwork all over the place. I see all kinds of information turning up. This is just another example of it.

Martin: Do you want to talk a little about "The Institute" and the training you received there? What exactly was it? This is a long time ago, now.

Bielek: You mean The Institute of Advanced Study?

Martin: Yes.

Bielek: Basically, that was founded in 1933, on the auspices and the financial backing of Louis Bamberger, of the Bamberger Department Store Trust. It came into being with the four original people who signed up: Albert Einstein, John Von Neumann, Dr. Alexander, and Dr. Oswald Vablen. They were the four originals, and the object was: it was to be for advanced studies, a "think tank" if you will, for advanced research projects.

And it was in 1933 that they took on the "invisibility" project from Tesla, who had already started it in 1931, when he was working at the University of Chicago. It was moved there [to the Institute] with the blessings of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and he saw to it that the Navy threw in a little money to help that project along.

The Institute got money from various sources for various projects. That was not the only project ongoing. It may have been the first one, but it was not the only project of the Institute.

It was a research factory, involved with other things, such as, for example, in the days before World War II, a study program to figure out how to solve the German magnetic mine problem. That was a problem in which the Germans had developed this mine which had no physical contact-type of mechanism to touch the hull of a ship, and then explode. But as the steel hull passed over the centers of this magnetic mine, it would sense the distortion in the Earth's magnetic field and the concentration of it, and the sensor would say: "Aha, there's a ship overhead." And then it would say: "Now is the time for the mine to blow up." And the mine would blow up. So they could wait until the ship was almost directly centered over the mine, and the mine could even be 50 feet below the hull of the ship, and they'd still be just as effective, because water is essentially incompressible.

So the problem was: they couldn't sweep these in the normal way because they were anchored down at considerable depth, and how do you detect these things? How do you destroy them safely?

Well, they brought in some people and set up the project on the magnetic mine detection, and one of the people who became later involved in the Philadelphia Experiment was brought in for that, to work on solving that problem. And, basically, what they did was, they put a set of cables around this ship, what were commonly called degaussing cables, and they had a special onboard room, perhaps a small room just wired down to the deck where the equipment was, that pulsed these cables. They pulsed them with a very intense duration pulse, which produced a very powerful burst of magnetic field. This magnetic field would override the ship's magnetic field, and the mine would detect this magnetic field and say: "Oh, there's a ship right overhead!" and blow up—a safe distance from the ship itself. They could get it to blow up far enough away so there was no damage to the ship. So that was one of the other problems that was solved at the Institute, from what I remember.

I know today they don't do the work that they did during the war years, because I've been back there since and various classrooms and such have been broken-up. They do have study programs there for people with advanced degrees, who got their Ph.D. and are working on a Doctor of Science or some other advanced study program. They will join the Institute and do a research study there. I have no idea how things are financed, but they still use it for that. Fuld Hall, which is the main administrative building and library today, is still there and very much alive and functional.

The lab building, which was finished in 1938, was used for their initial work on the Philadelphia Experiment, or the Invisibility Project. Today there is very little hardware left in there. I should say, very little lab work done; in fact, there's a wood-working shop in one of the old lab sections. So, that was the way it was founded, and it exists today. It is independent of Princeton University itself, but it is on University property. Now, I don't know whether the Institute bought the property or whether they lease it. That I don't know.

Martin: Were there, what I will call, extraterrestrial "controls", namely, individuals who were present at the Montauk experiments concerning time-travel who oversaw things, to see that things didn't get out of hand, or overshadowing of free-will?

Bielek: Do you mean, were the aliens mind-manipulating the humans who went through the tunnel?

Martin: Or, were there aliens present, in the background, to see that man didn't overstep his bounds by imposing upon the free-will aspect?

Bielek: That's a very interesting thought. It WAS a joint operation, but there was this aspect: much of the hardware there, particularly for the time-tunnel, was the result of design efforts and information given by the aliens. They said: "You can build it, but you don't know all of the theory involved."

We already had solved time travel, but we didn't know how to combine time and space travel, at the same time, and produce this tunnel effect.

So, they were the ones who showed us how to do it. They were the ones who gave us all of the information and the data, and various subcontractors built the hardware, which is assembled there [Montauk]; and, of course, it went through many changes.

But, at that point in the project, they were not concerned with manipulating any of us. They were concerned in getting the hardware built, because the agenda was that they would have their own agenda and be allowed to use it periodically. The aliens said they would help us build the Montauk Project. And in that sense, they didn't want to suppress anything because, at that point, they wanted the project

Dr. John Von Neumann, visiting professor at Princeton University in 1933, is believed to have been the "brains" behind the theory which enabled the military to make one of our large ships completely disappear.

to be built, to work, and wanted people who knew how to run it.

And they stayed largely in the background. But there were aliens in and out of there every day; some were stationed there, some came and went, and who some of the others were that came and went, we don't really know.

But I know there was an Arcturus group who looked very human; there were people in considerable quantities working on the hardware there from—let's see, there's a Leveron group, their so-called Reptilian Confederation, i.e., the Orion Confederation; and the guys from Sirius A were there on a regular basis. There was one Draconian there on a regular basis who was really the one who was in charge of and represented all of the alien interests. He set the agendas and he set everything else related to the alien agendas that were used on the station.

Now, in terms of AFTER things were operational, could they have been manipulating us to "not overstep our bounds" as you put it? I would say that is possible, but I consider it a bit unlikely because the people who were running it were pretty much under observation and/or, should I use the word, control, by higher levels in the military.

And the Germans themselves were rather a hard bunch to mind manipulate. For some reason or other, they don't mind manipulate easily. That's one of the problems we ran into during World War II. The German industrialists had their own agenda and they knew the war would be over, one of these days. Whether Germany won or lost it, they would be back in business. So, at times, they were placating Hitler, and at other times, they were defying him, very quietly. And they were not that manipulatable; and I don't think the German scientists over there were manipulatable.

The only ones who were manipulatable were the lower-level people. The Montauk Boys were pressed into service there. And people like myself, Preston, and Duncan were manipulated in the sense that we were dedicated to the Project and felt rather gung-ho about it, up to a certain point. Then Duncan suddenly had a total change of heart and backed-out, and he set the plans for the sabotage. But in terms of attempting to keep man within his bounds, from what I know of where they went with this project—because they went across to the other side of the galaxy, on one occasion. There were stories that I had heard of, from Jack Pruitt, that they set-up an alternate station, in somewhat of an alternate reality, in another galaxy, totally outside of the Milky Way galaxy.

Martin: And to what end?

Bielek: Backup.

Martin: Backup survival?

Bielek: Backup survival, backup to Montauk, in case something happened to Montauk. They looked ahead and wanted to be sure that they would be able to keep the system operational, even if there was interference.

Now, I don't know where that was, or how long it might have been in operation, or if it ever was in operation. But, I tripped across that information someplace, and Preston was able to verify it, at one time, that a station was built, complete with equipment, outside of our galaxy.

Martin: Did you ever have direct contact with this one particular alien who was overseeing things? You mentioned a Draconian.

Bielek: Oh, yes; I had a lot of contact with him.

Martin: Why was he in charge? Was he particularly—

Bielek: He was in charge of the alien interests and the alien agenda, what the aliens wanted to use the station for. That was his job, to coordinate that with us and the rest of the station, to sort-of sandwich their program in-between ours.

Martin: Were they part of the Galactic Federation, or outside of it?

Bielek: That's a damn good question. I don't know; I don't know about that one. Generally speaking, if I remember right, the Draconians were NOT part of the Galactic Federation, any more than the Reptilians are. But it's possible that a group of the Draconians were. I don't really know if that applied to him or not.

Martin: Do you think the last several Presidents have been aware of this?

Bielek: I would be sure that George Bush Sr. was. I would doubt, very much, that Nixon would have ever been made aware of this program. It is possible that our peanut farmer, pardon the expression, from Georgia, President Carter, might have been aware of it because he has had a very strange change of heart since he left the administration.

Martin: What is that change of heart?

Bielek: He's going out and doing a lot of good works for other people.

Martin: Yes, he's a humanitarian.

Bielek: He's very much of a humanitarian, now. The Habitat Program, and all of that—I get their bulletins regularly. He has a museum here; he has an office in the center, his library, as it were. I understand he's there, and he goes out and hammers nails himself.

Let's see—he left the office in 1981. Before he left office, he was being harassed and pressured severely to sign the missile treaty with Russia. And they were using on him at that time—this all came back when we met one of the personnel who was involved in this program, later, who wanted to revive it and we told him where to go—there's a program entitled DreamScan.

Now, there was movie made entitled, DreamScape, which was the exact portrayal of what had happened, almost to the letter.

They built this facility, and they found that good psychics had the ability, and they either found it naturally or were trained for it. They would go into somebody's dream, become part of that dream, and then talk to the person in the dream and try to change their mind about something.

And Carter was a victim of this. They were trying to convince him, in his dreams, to literally go for the treaty with Russia at that time, to sign the Non-Proliferation Agreement, and also a reduction of arms treaty, in terms of nuclear weapons.

He was almost for it, but he was hedging.

Duncan and I were connected with that project. At some point, we found out what was going on and we got to the President and told him what was going on. We said: "You better check this out to see what they're doing to you, and who's running this program, and really what it's all about."

He did, and ordered it shut down immediately, and it was shut down. And then he left office.

I think it was after that he had a very heavy change of heart because he was, up to a point, rather gung-ho, in the normal sense. But after that, he became very much of a humanitarian. I guess he realized how manipulatable people, even Presidents, can be. He was glad to get out of politics. I have never seen him since that time. I have often thought maybe I should go look him up in his library sometime and see if he remembers me, because I was there as Al Bielek.

Martin: Might be interesting.

Bielek: It would be. Duncan has said the same thing: "Why don't we go see old Carter, see if he remembers us?"

Well, I'm here. I have never done it, but I think one of these days I will.

Martin: In talking with Michael Ash about the Delta-T antenna, he is not a technical person and he suggested I talk with Preston or you about the Delta-T. For our technical people out there, can you explain the mechanics of that, or how it works?

Bielek: The Delta-T antenna is built in the same shape, to the same angles, as the Great Pyramid at Giza. Now, that already implies a certain amount of focusing-in of certain energies related to the pyramid, due to the shape (not the size), because you retain the same "capture of energies" with any device built in that shape, regardless of its size, whether it's a six-inch pyramid or a sixty-foot pyramid.

The Delta-T antenna was an antenna which was built in the same shape of the pyramid, having the square base and the four sides and the apex. They would arrange this so that there were two of these pyramids base-to-base, and there was a third one which was apex-to-apex. Around the periphery of these angles, they wound cables which would pump a certain amount of electrical energies and certain frequencies, and this was the thing that produced the tunnel.

The earlier methods of producing a time tunnel using the RF system with the old radar antenna worked, but they were very sloppy and they had some very serious problems. Eventually they gave up the RF approach.

But the Delta-T antenna has a certain "magic" ratio, if you will—it goes back to sacred geometry—but I don't know what the ratios really mean. I'm not into sacred geometry, and I apologize for that, but someday I'm going to have to learn it because it's quite important.

[Editor's note: Those of you who have followed the work of Richard Hoagland have some familiarity with what Al is referring to above concerning a subject that has been—maybe a bit too mysteriously—dubbed as "sacred geometry" and extending back to very ancient times.]

In simple terms, think of certain shapes as being better conduits for facilitating the flows of subtle energies, such as what are called etheric energies, back and forth into and out of the physical reality domain and the higher domains—particularly the domain just above the physical that is essentially responsible for "holding together" what we call physical reality. Thus, if you manipulate energies in that domain, you precipitate effects in the physical that would often be termed magical or miraculous, such as spontaneous healings.

The "coupling" between these two domains is easier with certain "antenna" shapes, just as shape and size help with television and radio antennas aimed at (tuned to) specific frequency ranges. Or to translate a very technical concept into really blunt terms, your shoe "works better" if it is the right size for your foot and vice versa!

The only real mystery about this subject stems from the fact that it has been so thoroughly suppressed by the so-called "elite" controllers of this planet. That is why you see its features bobbing up symbolically in arcane rituals and secret societies and ancient architectural structures, such as Hoagland is always talking about. In point of fact, the subject belongs in fundamental physics books—one of these days, soon, when the Truth is finally out.]

But using that, and pumping an object—actually, you're only pumping the cables around the frame. You don't build the frame out of anything, typically, other than wood because you want it to be an inert material—wood, some form of plastic, or whatever. And you pump these cables from that shape of the back-to-back pyramids, and also the apex-to-apex (they needed the three pyramids together), and you create the energies which affect the time field and they affect the time-space vortex. You create an artificial vortex out of it.

Precisely how that works, I don't know. The math for that was far beyond what we learned in 1940-41. They had developed some newer math, not only the quantum physics but in the case of that effect [the time-tunnel], that was alien math and alien technology. I'm sure it's documented someplace, but I would hate to guess what the "classification level" is on it. I'm sure very few people have any access to it.

But they gave us the theory and showed us what we needed to do to build the hardware. We built it; the thing worked.

We had problems, but we finally got it to work satisfactorily. And from that point on, I guess the aliens had their own agenda, in the sense of what they wanted to do.

The guys from Sirius A had many agendas. They supplied electronic equipment; they built spaceships for anyone in the Universe that wanted them. They built all kinds of hardware on their home planet. But they were here for whatever reason they were here. We never did find out exactly what reason they were here, except they DID do some early work on the Montauk chair—getting a chair that worked so that the psychic could tap-in to the computers. This included several specially designed interfaces, including, when it was available, the early Cray I [supercomputer]. But you had to have coils, much like the Delta-T.

There were many different configurations tried. I think they finally did wind up with a Delta-T in configuration, where the chair was under the Delta-T antenna. The psychic would think what he was supposed to think, or do what he was supposed to do, and the electromagnetic fields from his body were picked up by these coils and processed through the various amplifiers, systems, and computers. That would, eventually, be converted into the language which the main IBM 360-370 would recognize, to open up the tunnel, to go to a certain location, with a certain time (if there was a time-shift involved), and so forth.

For instance, if you wanted to get from the Earth to Mars, to the underground there; well, that data was stored, the celestial mechanics was already stored in the IBM systems. We could have used much better computers then, but eventually they came along; nevertheless, they could handle it.

The interfacing between the psychic and the chair and the computer was the most critical part of it. I found out, later, and I remembered this eventually: you cannot just sit a psychic in a chair and have him communicate with a computer. I mean, he doesn't make an effort and say: "Computer, I want you to do this, or computer, I want you to do that." That's not the way it's done. Maybe sometime it will be that way, but at least at that time it was not.

The individual would have to go into a semi-trance that he controlled, and was already instructed as to what the agenda was to be for that particular day or that particular run. The person would have to think about it, including possible celestial contacts, off-planet contacts, and so-forth. But they had to think of it in a way that the computer would "recognize", which is to say, the person had to automatically think in computer-ease; they had to use computer codes in their head. No person off the street can do this.

Martin: That's amazing.

Bielek: How did they do it? I finally uncovered, by talking with an ex-NASA man, how they did it.

Let me interject here, for those who have seen the movie The Lawnmower Man, there was a program, and it did exist, and it still presumably is operational, off the Chesapeake Bay, what we call the Chesapeake Bay Operations underground. There was a huge facility down there which would take a person, literally as stupid as the lawnmower man was made out to be in the movie, and by processing him with certain serotonin and other compounds, chemically, in the brain, plus the radiations from this computer-type system on his head, they could raise his IQ, improve his memory, and they could eventually train him to do anything.

Well, they were using a system exactly like that on the psychics who were to be in the chair (the Montauk time-tunnel chair). What they were doing was not necessarily improving their IQ. They may have done some of that, but that was not the goal. The goal was this: whatever the thoughts were that came into the head in the normal process of "thinking" in the trance state, they would think of this in terms of computer language, whatever language was chosen. At that time, I think it was FORTRAN or COBAL; there were other languages that were used, but whatever the language was they wanted to use for that computer interface, they were taught to think, automatically, in that computer language. Whatever their normal thought processes were, it would come out, and be radiated in that computer language, which would be picked up by those coils and then be processed through the computer. If the individual had not been trained to do this, they could never communicate with the computers.

Martin: That is just so amazing, because it seems to me that being in a trance state, being in a highly receptive psychic state, would be CONTRARY to thinking in a computer language.

Bielek: Exactly. Computers use a digital format. The human brain is analog. Now, if you had an analog computer, you might be able to interface directly, but they weren't using analog computers. The analog computers went out, I'm not going to say with the dinosaur, it went out with some of the ostriches, I think, in the '70s. The analog computers, which were used in the earlier days in World War II and for some years after that, were there because it was a form of computer that worked until we developed the digital, with the stored memory. Then digital took over everything. I don't know if there are any real analog computers left functioning today; that's not something I could answer. But we did NOT have an analog computer functioning at Montauk.

Getting the person in the chair, and training them to be able to think in computer-ease, was not an easy task. They put me through it just so I would know what the program was and how the person was supposed to react. I don't know that I was ever used in the chair. I don't recall that I was, but I had to know what the whole program was about and how it was supposed to work and how everything was supposed to interface.

Martin: Sure. Can I ask you a bookkeeping question? How do you spell the ship name, Kearsage.

Bielek: The DE-057, the USS Kearsage, was a carrier. I might add, we're in our third generation of the Kearsage. They have scrapped the earlier one, the original one, I think. They've built number two, and I don't know if number two is still on mothballs or not. But they built number three, which is nuclear powered, and much larger than the first two, and it's still in service. It's fairly new.

Martin: We're getting up there, time-wise. So, let's pull-back from the planet for a moment, and look down towards it. What would you like to share with our readers, generally, about these experiments, and about the possible consequences of these kinds of experiments? The nature of our reality, and the concept that we live in a holographic universe? The concept that, perhaps, we may live in an altered matrix? Just any thoughts along these lines that you'd care to share?

DELTA T ANTENNA

This is an actual Delta T antenna that sits above Space Time Labs on Long Island. By definition, it can actually facilitate shifting time zones. Two coils are placed vertically around the edges of the pyramid structure at ninety degree angles to one another.

A third coil surrounds the base. Shifting time zones was accomplished by pulsing and powering the antenna, as is discussed in The Montauk Project: Experiments in Time.

Even when the antenna is not powered, it has a subtle interdimensional effect on the nature of time itself.

Bielek: Yes, I do have some thoughts on that. If one were to be able to communicate with the world leaders, I would say:

You've got to be very careful about what you plan to do in the future because you never know what the consequences may be.

We have the technology to change the timeline. We have the technology to go into the future, and of course, this has already been done—future travel, past travel particularly, they are traveling into the past to change history; it's an old story. They've done it many times.

But this becomes fraud with all kinds of problems, because you may fix one thing and totally screw-up two or three others. Then you have to go chase those two or three. And if that doesn't work, you have to go back and change the original one and take it out, and go back to square one, so to speak. And this has been done.

Going into the future and talking in terms of what you've asked, you have to be careful in terms of what plans you may have for the human race in the future, because if you start playing God, which a lot of these people are doing, you have to understand that you can change the timeline, you can change the future history, and you'd better be concerned about whether the human race is going to survive.

And there are possible consequences, possible actions you could take which I saw from my trip, referencing the point in 1943, where the human race had achieved another pinnacle in the 28th century.

But the question is: what happened 200 years after that? Information that's been leaked back to me indicates that it all collapsed because they went into a program of pure socialism, giving everybody everything, so they really didn't have to work for anything anymore. They didn't even have to work their brains, other than what was fun to do.

So, you have to be very careful what you plan for the future.

The human animal is a very strange animal; it requires goading, it requires success, it requires some failure to learn from those failures, and it requires an effort be made to survive. But also, that the effort not be wasted, that the effort be successful in some endeavor, otherwise people get terribly frustrated, and in some cases, commit suicide or just drop out of the whole game.

In terms of political planning, you have to be extremely careful, because we're paying now for some of the mistakes of World War I, and we may well be paying for some of the mistakes of World War II for the next 50 years, yet. Trying to circumvent that is not easy.

And then you have to look at it, not only from the standpoint of the human race, you have to look at it from the standpoint of WHO ELSE IS OUT THERE looking at the human race and saying: "Hey, maybe we want to take these guys over, or maybe we want to subdue them and control them, and make them our slaves, our mental slaves, or technical slaves, or whatever" or maybe they just want the planet. You also have to look at who else is out there looking down on us. It's a street that works both ways.

It's not easy planning, and to those who try to plan and look into the future to see where the human race is going and what it's going to do, lots of luck. I don't envy you your job. But it is something that you have to be very careful of, and the political leaders today, once they get "briefed", I think they realize that it is no longer a simple process, like it was at the turn of the century. We didn't have but the beginnings of an airplane, the beginnings of automobiles, we had some fairly decent ships to over-navigate the oceans; we didn't even know what nuclear energy was. We didn't know a lot of things. At that point, decisions were fairly easy. They weren't too complicated in terms of their consequences.

Today, they are VERY complicated in terms of their consequences, and the leaders had better realize this, whether they are trying to make peace in the Middle East or thinking about starting another war—whatever the source may be, or for whatever alleged purpose. You don't know how much you can screw things up, at this stage, not just for the planet Earth, but perhaps for many other systems as well. You'd better tread lightly and look very, very carefully, is all I can say.

Martin: That's a perfect place to end. Thank you, very much, for taking the time to do this.

What might be interesting to do would be to revisit this in a couple of months and see if there has been new information that has come forth as a result of this. Let's do it that way.

Thank you on behalf of all our interested and concerned readers.

Al Bielek—Info On CD

Philadelphia Experiment & Montauk Survivor Accounts

What you are about to encounter is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date. The information on this CD comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

This information is for those who want to pursue and know the truth. Sometimes, finding the truth becomes elusive. There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. As you follow this story, use this information as the beginning resource to hopefully get you on the right track.

The four people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

So, keep an open yet discerning mind, and get ready to change your paradigm.

The Play Is Moving Toward A Grand Awakening

12/29/00 HATONN

Good evening, my scribe. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Light of Creator Source—The One Light. Be still and know peace within your heart, and that these words are offered in Love to you ones.

Great steps are underway to relinquish the newly “elected” president of his ascension to the puppet head of the United States government. The efforts will not bear fruit, but this one will not, in all probability, finish his elected term in office. There are great factions now competing for control of the puppet strings attached to the figurehead elect.

A lot of bloodshed will ensue in the following months and years, and the “popularity” of the new president will give rise to great inner unrest among the American people. The new puppet will try to break free from the manipulations and controlling reach of the puppet masters—not realizing that one of the “strings” are tied firmly around his neck. If he squirms too much, he’ll “hang” himself.

Such is the nature of the games being played at the high-stakes level of global politics. NOTHING is quite what it seems to be. Though the election scenario was orchestrated and planned in minute detail, the opposing faction did try desperately to thwart Bush Jr.’s rise to his throne at the last “minute”. It is planned that these ones will be “dealt” with, and in doing so will ignite great pressures on the office of the President of the United States as it now exists.

Remember, please, the past lessons wherein we spoke of changing the Constitution Of The United States Of America. These plans are now being perfected in a manner that will greatly affect the future of your nation. The close election, as we stated prior, is simply an excuse to OPEN the Constitution.

Prior to opening the Constitution, it is planned to portray Bush as an unstable leader and, through well orchestrated events, manipulate public opinion in such a manner as to have the majority believing that it is in the best interest of the country’s future to change the legislative structure of the presidential hierarchy.

In essence, the plan is to “show” the public that the evolving “new world” scene is far too complex for any one person to be reasonably responsible for the many avenues of “expertise” now currently required by the office of President of the United States. It will be proposed that there should be TWO Presidents of the United States. One would oversee Domestic Affairs, while the other deals with International Affairs. Another way to look at this would be to see one as the person who keeps the citizens of the U.S. under control (martial law if need be), while the other keeps control over the military forces of your nation as they pertain to “managing” world “peace”.

What does all this mean? It means that there is a great need perceived by the so-called “elite” controllers of your world to further “manage” (suppress the freedoms of) you-the-people of the United States, and further reduce your ability to express yourselves as a sovereign people. In essence, it is the first step toward returning your country to an open dictatorial rule such as preceded your Revolutionary War. It would be the desire of these so-called “elite” ones to erase all mention of the freedoms allotted in your Constitution, for they serve as a reminder of what you once had.

These controlling ones will not be successful in their plans, for they are plowing full speed ahead with “blindness” on, and see not the Bigger Picture of Awakening that is unfolding. If these ones think they have difficulty now keeping psychic information (channeled or otherwise) under control, they haven’t seen anything yet.

Many of you very ones who read these messages are beginning to recognize that YOU too have the ability to see beyond the physical senses. Likewise there are MANY others who, though they may know little of “psychic” phenomena, are beginning to trust their “instincts” (gut feelings or psychic senses) and are following what they sense is the Truth behind the façade that is being shoved down their throats.

Many of you are asking for an exact timeline of when to expect these unfolding events. Dear ones, we can discern certain mathematical probabilities and make predictions based on what we see coming down out of the “ethers” prior to physical manifestation. However, there can ALWAYS be (and usually are) last minute changes based on individual free-will choice. The probability will be that within the next 2-4 years you will have widespread proof of the intent to overthrow your country’s basic constitutional structure.

Again, I must reiterate that this WILL NOT BE SUCCESSFUL. Your Founding Fathers held strong in their hearts a healthy respect for God and the need to be free—not just free from religious persecution, but free to live as your heart (inner Guidance) directs.

These men, though not perfect in their thinking, were INSPIRED to guarantee basic human rights and freedoms TO ALL MEN AND WOMEN. The ones who wish to change the course of your nation back towards slavery are up against a Great Unseen Force—called the Human Spirit.

All ones desire FREEDOM from oppression of any sort, no matter how slight or how large. If parents try to rule their child’s life with an iron fist or a subtle manipulation through playing on fears or desires, the result is almost always the same—REBELLION! At best your so-called “elite” would-be controllers view the average person as little more than an ignorant child; at worst you are regarded as animals, there to be the “beasts of burden” for these “elite”.

Let me assure you that these misguided ones will not know what to do when the eyes of the sleeping masses pop open, as if all at once, and there is no place they can hide where they will not be discovered for who and what they really are.

Allow for the many unfolding dramas to play out in their proper sequence. Many ones camped out to witness “history in the making” when the U.S. Supreme Court made it’s final ruling on the election issue. You ones have yet to see anything in its proper context if this is what you deem to be significant “history in the making”.

As always, with proper perspective and understanding you can and shall survive the coming times. You will always face choices along your current and subsequent journeys. If you remember to keep the highest ideal of God as an integral part of your plans, you will always be shown a way through. And, as always, the choice will be yours—to accept or reject the inspiration offered to you via the many routes, such as this very one.

It is God’s desire that you each find your own way, and in your own time, and of your own free-will to choose as you see fit. We who respond to the calls of the heart for Assistance and Guidance do so out of Love, Compassion, and Understanding of the path you are now on, for we too have traveled the physical roads of "life" and we too came to the conclusion that there was wisdom in asking for Higher Guidance along our journeys.

Please know that you are NEVER alone and that each of you have Angels and Guides who watch over you constantly. Even those who choose the role of oppressor have Angels and Guides who continually offer to them, in Love, a better way of alternative choices.

Be thankful for the unique opportunities that now exist on your planet, for there will never again be this exact interchange or unique atmosphere for expression. Similar situations may well unfold in other times and on other worlds, but none will be exactly the same as this one.

Enjoy the uniqueness that every moment has to offer. Many of you ones long for the "simpler" times of yesteryear, when your children were small and curious and relied upon you for guidance and help, or when you fell in love for the first time. And yet, with each passing day, those unique memories you cherish so deeply become more and more distant.

The uniqueness of such should be cherished but, likewise, so too should the uniqueness of EVERY day. If you do not currently get out of bed in great anticipation of the uniqueness that your day will bring to you, then you have not yet learned what it means to live life to the fullest. (Small children do this automatically—sometimes to the consternation of their parents who would like to have remained asleep for awhile longer.) But fear not, for YOU WILL learn and experience for yourself what this means and what a true joy can be held in any given moment of any given day.

Allow for the many souls on your planet to find their own way, as you would want them to allow you to do the same. As your world continues to grow, ones will eventually learn to rely moreso on the wisdom of those who have advanced the farthest spiritually—rather than on those who have learned to lie and manipulate others with heartless tenacity.

Be not misled by this last statement, for many of your current "religious" leaders are among the greatest masters of manipulation and deceit. Please note that I used the word "religious" NOT "spiritual".

Most truly spiritually advanced people are not very religious at all. They recognize that ALL ones are aspects of Creator God and that each has a unique destiny to experience, and therefore need not be distracted by another's perception of the way they should "act" or "behave" in order to be seen favorably by some erroneous self-perception of God or His desires.

The true destiny of any given race of people is that of a self-governing collective who have learned and mastered the wisdom of following God's laws. With such understanding will come what you ones may consider advanced technologies, if that be the desire, or perhaps great advancements in art and musical beauty, or whatever direction a societal group may choose to explore. Until such time as this realization becomes a part of the mass consciousness of mankind on your planet, there will continue to be wars, civil unrest, disease, famine and such.

Learn to rise above the would-be oppressors. Learn not to react as a child rebelling against the manipulation and control of overbearing parents. Rather, respond in love towards your less-spiritually-advanced "elite" brethren who actually and truly fear the awakening power within you, for they fear that you might use your God-power against them as they would surely do if they were in possession of same. Do you see that savages only think in terms of what they know? It can be difficult to bring these ones to a point of realization that there is indeed a better, more productive way to accomplish true inner and outer peace.

Warriors need battles to fight, else they feel no sense of purpose. There is truly only one "battle" that anyone can win, and that is the inner battle between the ego mindset and the Higher Spiritual Self. All others are but roll playing as you symbolically defeat your enemy in battle, only to find that you crave more battles. There is no satiating this urge when the answer is perceived to be external to self. Only when the individual realizes that the true battle is within, do they ever manage to make further progress in terms of soul growth. Such is the case with many of the so-called "elite" controllers of your world, as well as with many would-be controllers if they were given half a chance.

Rise above the need to do battle with these ones. Rather, I say again, counter their attacks with a strong conviction of Love. Draw upon your inner Guidance for creative solutions to the problems these "control freaks" impose upon you. There is ALWAYS a solution and We of the Higher Realms stand ever ready to assist if you but ask—and then listen.

Always remember that there is no "joy of battle" if the opponent does not fight back—and thus there is then no satisfaction of conquest to be had by these insane ones. The end result will be a very confused would-be conqueror who is left to struggle with the inner convictions that no longer hold true. This is the only way to truly win any sort of perceived "battle" with ones operating under such a limited mindset.

Dear brothers and sisters, look within for your own inner Guidance on ANY issue that may concern you. YOU are just as much deserving as the next person to have direct inner counsel with Creator Source. Learn to partake of the inner gifts that are continually showered upon each of you. This is the most worthy endeavor you can undertake—especially for those of you who continually ask questions like: "What can I do to help?" or "What is my purpose here at this time?"

GO WITHIN!

Go within and learn to recognize the inner Guidance continually being offered. Learn to discern what your heart is trying to tell you when it aches for balance and reason. It is not magical or mystical, but rather, so much a part of you that you take it for granted in almost every case of those of you who try, but can't seem to find, the inner Guidance of which I speak.

GUIDANCE IS THERE WITHIN YOU! BE PERSISTENT!

I take my leave now, for this has been a long day for this scribe and rest is in order. I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, and I leave you in the Light of Creator Source—The One Light.

May your heart show you that which you are longing to know, and may you have the strength and fortitude to follow your intuition when true need arises.

God bless you all!

Salu.

A HORSE IN BALANCE WEARS

A CROWN OF LIGHT

A story honoring en-Light-ened riding masters who developed Guidelines to bring: discipline-beauty-grace and balance in the movements of a horse, from a girl who desired to be a better rider. She became the first equestrian American woman in Olympic history. This is her own life story; how their Guidelines produced oneness with her horses, also the realization of Creator-God, the Balancing Fulcrum, from riding the Figure 8. The en-Light-ened Equestrian masters were Fritz Stecken and Ludwig Von Zeiner, Head Rider of The Spanish Riding School.

With Understanding Comes The Wisdom To Release Fear And Pain

12/26/00 ESU "JESUS" SANANDA

Good morning, my scribe. It is I, Esu "Jesus" Sananda, come within the Radiant One Light of Father-Mother God—Creator Source. Be still and know that ALL is well this day.

Life and living—forever these spring forth anew. As various cycles of life come to a close, there is always newness born from the "wake" left behind in the living waters of life.

Look not to the past with sorrow, heartache, or grief. Rather, see the past as a strengthening period wherein you experienced challenges and made choices that took you along a unique journey of growth. Draw upon the past experiences when they serve a positive and productive purpose in the current moment of now. But, be ever so cautious not to live in the past—for the MOMENT OF NOW is the only place to make change, and gather new experience and knowledge.

If preoccupation with the past is allowed, then you will surely stunt your growth and, with respect to the ever increasing vibratory frequency rate on your planet, you will find that, in a relative manner, you will be moving backward with respect to those who shed their baggage, and thus continually out-distance you in ability and perception.

LET GO OF THE PAST! Let it be a distant memory. And if your past holds great pain, sorrow, grief, anger or such, then you would do QUITE well to forget it altogether! For all these lower emotions serve no productive purpose in your current life, and to remember them constantly only serves as a reminder of where you were, rather than where you would like to be.

Much of your planet is paralyzed, to a great extent, with the pain of past experience. This pain comes, for the most part, from not understanding the true nature and purpose of the physical experience.

For example—and this is a big one—many view physical death of the body as a horrific event, full of great pain and suffering. Those who hold this erroneous belief, usually accompanied with great fear, will almost guarantee such an experience to occur at the end of their physical life. However, death of the physical is about as "tragic" as falling asleep. There need not be any more mystery.

Those of you who continually express personal grief for lost loved ones, and feel that you must somehow honor them with the pain you continually hold in your heart, do very little to honor these ones in actuality. Your preoccupation with this "memorial grief" does a disservice to these ones, for they, out of compassion, will be continually drawn to you to offer comfort and support.

They respond in an effort to get you back on your feet again and get you back to living your life and finding a productive path towards growth in the present moment. Wallowing in the inner world of a low vibratory frequency range of self-pity (self-punishment) will only slow your forward progress.

I assume that, if this message finds you, then you are one who is making an effort toward a greater spiritual understanding of yourself and the nature of the Greater Reality of who, exactly,

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

"Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk."

you are, and why you have chosen to come forth into such an environment, and the purpose of this environment, and you are seeking to understand exactly what YOUR role is in all of this at this time.

A basic inner desire of all ones is to understand where they fit into the Infinite Equation of Life. This is to say that you each were created with a purpose and a role to fill. Each of you are equally as important as the next, and each of you are equally important TO one another in terms of creating a unique environment within which you will all grow and evolve into that which is greater than the sum of all its participants.

Your journey along your current chosen pathway is important to the growth of all ones. If you choose the role of, say, transient beggar, because you have become overwhelmed with the great pressures of “modern” society, you still serve a purpose and fulfill a role. Perhaps the very presence of a transient beggar serves as a reminder that your “modern” society as a whole has chosen material comfort over spiritual values and balance.

Why is there hunger in your world? Why do some choose the harshness of self denial? Why do ones wallow in self pity and overwhelm?

For the most part it is due to the general ignorance of the masses. The masses follow leaders who are spiritually blind. This goes even for the so-called religious leaders who may be considered great scholars of the various “holy” books of various religious cults. These ones who feel compelled to lead often do so from a very physical perspective of manipulation and control—thinking that they somehow possess special knowledge, and therefore should dutifully force their understanding and beliefs upon others, for the so-called good of humanity.

The sad part is that these ones, for the most part, only serve themselves—while trying to look like they serve the greater good. It is for these very reasons that We of the Host of God continually express to you ones the need to learn to RECOGNIZE WITHIN YOU your own inner connection to Creator Source, and thus recognize the only true leader of man—the infinite God-self within.

Be not a leader or follower. Allow for the inner connection to Source to be your guide and encourage others to do the same. If this idea causes overwhelm within, then learn to discipline yourself so as to be able to recognize for yourself this inner Guiding Force. It is there, in each of you, always offering to you new ideas, thoughts, and insights. You need only ask with a sincere heart and the answers will come.

It is natural to want to share your knowledge with others. It is natural to want to help others to find their way. But, as stated many times before, you can show someone where, so to speak, the life-giving Waters of Life are; you can even bring this Water to them; but you cannot force them to partake of it. The choice

Be forever offering your knowledge, but likewise forever be ALLOWING of others to choose as they freely desire. Do not take offense if another rejects what you offer in love. Your kindness and sincerity will be remembered when the would-be recipient has grown enough to appreciate what you tried to offer.

From the greater perspective of the infinite journeys of the soul, the current life experience you now are living is but a brief twinkling of God’s eye. There will always be other opportunities to stretch and grow. Fear not that you have failed or that you may fail, for there is no failure for those of you who diligently persist forward in your desire to grow and assist others.

The closest thing to failure are those who choose to remain in ignorance, and even these ones will grow a little bit just by being in the presence of one who is diligently seeking. Thus it should be clear that there is no failure in the “equation of life” for Creator Source knows no such thing as failure. He only knows perfection, and your current schoolroom is borne of this same perfection. You each will eventually graduate to the next level of expression—in your own way and in your own time.

Be diligent in your inner search for a greater understanding. Go within and find the lies you hold onto as if “gospel” truth. There will always be tell-tale signs of such inner lies. The greatest clue will be the subtle fear that holds them in place. If you worry about others or self in a chronic way, then let me ask: “What holds such worry in place?”

With a careful introspective look, you will find that a fear is at the root. What is this fear? Does it apply to your quite IMMORTAL soul?

Do you hold guilt in your heart? What is the nature of this guilt? What holds it in your heart? Is it the belief that you somehow made a mistake? Are you somehow fearful that you might do it again unless you forever punish yourself with the pain of guilt? What is the logic of such self punishment? You have been granted free will to punish yourself, but KNOW—it is not God’s will that you do this to yourself.

Learn to forgive yourself. This is done by loving yourself and having compassion for yourself. Inasmuch as you can learn to forgive yourself, you will be able to forgive others. If you hold anger in your heart toward another, KNOW that you have sent out an energy wave that WILL return to you with equal (or most often GREATER) force than what you sent out. This is the Law of Cause and Effect. YOU cause ALL that affects you. There is NO exception.

Forgive those who seemingly cause you anger, for in reality YOU cause all your emotional states, and another CANNOT be held responsible for what YOU hold in YOUR heart. Send to these ones a blessing of peace and love, and in so doing, with sincerity, you will be forgiving yourself, and that love and peace will be what is reflected back to you, most likely amplified.

The secret to true happiness lies within this last paragraph. Read it until you have an inner recognition of the concept the words effort to express.

If there are those who send out their negative judgments upon you and persist in holding you responsible for their emotional unrest, heartache, or anger, then be diligent in not accepting the judgments they effort to bestow upon you.

If a “gift” is offered to you and you refuse to accept it, then who is the recipient of the “gift”? With careful consideration you should come to the conclusion that the “gift” remains with the one who is trying to give it to you.

Now, if the “gift” comes in the form of a vehement attack on you or your beliefs, and you refuse to accept the so-called “gift” of anger and such, then do you see it is left with the giver and is not a part of you? However, if you accept that which is not offered in love, compassion, and understanding, then it may very well have a great effect on you. But, the “effect” on you only comes when YOU choose to accept the ill-begotten “gift”. Therefore, YOU are responsible for what you then have chosen to receive and hold within.

My suggestion is to forgive yourself for the ignorance in which you accepted such a “gift” and simply discard it with love and understanding and compassion for yourself. It would also prove beneficial to you and the giver of such a gift if you send thoughts (energy) of love, compassion, and Light (Higher Understanding) to the originator of the so-called “gift”. I use the term “gift” since, in essence, there is an opportunity provided for growth in such an experience, and thus the whole experience can be viewed as a true gift—potential for soul growth.

Remember that as you do unto the least of man, so too do you do unto ME. This is to say that when you strike another in anger, you are striking out at all ones, including YOURSELF. We are all interconnected to and through Creator Source. If you spit upon others or ridicule them, for any reason, you are simply spitting upon yourself and ridiculing yourself—ESPECIALLY if the would-be recipient refuses to accept your “gift”.

May you each be diligent in your inward search for greater understanding and peace. Great inner rewards await you all. Those who have gone before you, such as myself, simply were more diligent and persistent in our searching, and thus our progress was quickened.

I am Esu “Jesus” Sananda, a brother and co-creator along the infinite journeys of the soul. I come in, and leave you now with, the Light and Love of Creator God—The One Light.

May you forever persist forward in your quest for greater knowledge and understanding of the nature of your inner being.

“Mercy” Killings And The Culling Of The Elderly

Editor's note: Investigative journalist Will Thomas has dared to go where few others would venture to bring you the following sad-but-true information. Many have suspected that large financial interests are dictating the medical “care” of elderly patients, but it takes incorporating the daring, first-hand observations of professionals in the health-care industry to effectively spell out just how amoral the situation is becoming.

You may have seen the commercial running on television lately that shows a restless or dozing bunch of doctors—some in their white coats or surgeons in their scrubs—all sitting around in a waiting room while a lady representing the insurance/HMO overlords opens a door and looks imposingly into the room over her glasses, calling one at a time with something like: “Dr. Jones, the insurance company will see you now.” It would be funny if it weren't so sickeningly true.

Dealing with the logistics of my 85-year-old mother's recent stroke, I (E.Y.) have REALLY been getting an earful from a number of doctors and other health-care professionals—even in a quality hospital setting. They say they often get the feeling that the hospital adminis-traitors and insurance bullies don't even want to deal with patients anymore, and even make the doctors feel like they're irrelevant to making health-care decisions. In other words, the bankers and bean counters have taken over bigtime and made it difficult for conscientious medical personnel to carry out what they feel is in their patients' best interest toward wellness.

Now, take that money-dominated philosophy another step down that road, and you arrive at the subject of the following report. This is not meant to be a comprehensive treatment of the subject, but rather, suggestive of a wide range of shenanigans going on. This ought to move you past being simply uncomfortable—to being outright angry—and forewarned for the sake of loved ones who may find themselves in similar circumstances to what is described here.

Two other points to keep in mind:

First of all, remember the New World Order gang's agenda item of eliminating quite a lot of us “useless eaters” from this overpopulated planet. What better context in which to carry out such a plan than within a helpless segment of society already confined in a medical setting?

And secondly, remember that a lot of the mysterious “chemtrail” sprayings going on in the skies all over the world seem to particularly affect the very young and the elderly, inflicting medical problems that lead to serious complications and death. There have been many reports of swamped emergency rooms after chemtrail spraying sessions in numerous locations—though these don't make the evening news except as “flu” outbreaks.

After you read the information below, you may come to the conclusion that—on top of everything else—it could be getting quite dangerous to be in an environment of professional medical “care”!

FALL, 2000 WILL THOMAS

Dear Jeff,

So many of your visitors [to Jeff Rense's very comprehensive and informative <http://www.rense.com> website] have written to me requesting the sources for my report of hospital “mercy” killing masking a cull of the elderly, I am sending some of my source material for an update on your site. Routine killing of the elderly who do not have terminal illness IS happening. Though the Pope has written an encyclical condemning this practice, the pressures to protect corporate profits and government budgets by eliminating “useless eaters” continue to increase.

Isn't it interesting that some of the most evil acts are committed by people convinced they are doing good?

My best to you, Will Thomas

According to Mary Therese Helmueller, a registered nurse with 15 years of experience in emergency and critical care, writing in the Feb. 2000 issue the Catholic clergy magazine Homilitec And Pastoral Review:

“On Monday, February 20, 1995, my grandmother was admitted to a local Catholic hospital with a fracture above the left knee. She was alert and orientated upon admission, but became unresponsive after 48 hours and was transferred to hospice on the fourth day, and died upon arrival. Helmueller returned from a pilgrimage in Mexico City to find doctors unable to tell her the cause of her grandmother's death. When the RN obtained the hospital chart logging her grandmother's treatment, she says:

“It then became very clear that my grandmother had been targeted for euthanasia!

“Carefully tracing the events, it was evident that my grandmother became lethargic and unresponsive after each pain medication. She would awaken, between times, saying: ‘I don't want to die; I want to live to see Johnny ordained’ and ‘I want to see Greta walk’. Johnny was her grandson studying in Rome to be a priest and Greta was her new great-grandchild.

“This patient was over-sedated, common occurrence among elderly patients whose livers can only tolerate a fraction of pain-killers given younger patients. She became comatose from the medication, and was diagnosed as having a stroke.”

Helmueller writes:

“When she became comatose, a completely hopeless picture of recovery was portrayed by the nurses and doctors who reported that she had a stroke, was having seizures, going in and out of a coma, and was in renal failure.

“The truth, however, can be found in the hospital chart which indicates that everything was normal! The CAT scan was negative for stroke or obstruction; the EEG states ‘no seizure activity’; and all blood work was normal, indicating that she was not in renal failure!

“Looking over the chart, it is clear that obtaining a ‘no code’ status was the next essential step in executing her death. This is an order denying medical intervention in emergency situations. The ‘no code’ was aggressively sought by the medical profession from the moment of her admission, but was not granted by my family until it appeared that she was dying and there was no hope.

“Minutes after obtaining the ‘no code’, a lethal dose of Dilantin (an anti-seizure medication) was administered intravenously over an 18-hour period. It put her into a deeper coma. The following day she was transferred to hospice, and died upon arrival. The death certificate reads: 'Death by natural causes.'

"My grandmother had no terminal diagnosis, but the hospice admitting record indicates two doctors signed their name stating that she was terminally ill and would die within six months. How was this determined? The first doctor, who was the director of hospice, never came to evaluate her or even read the chart. The second doctor was on vacation and returned three days after her death!

"Difficult to believe? Well, it was for our pro-life lawyer—until his mother-in-law was admitted to a hospital several months later for a stroke. She became 'unresponsive' and 'comatose' a few days after her admission. The neurologist wrote an order to transfer her to hospice, refusing an IV and tube feeding, stating: 'this is the most compassionate treatment'.

"Remembering my story, our lawyer requested the removal of all narcotics and demanded an IV and tube feeding. This infuriated the neurologist. He began to accuse the family of being uncompassionate and inhumane. To prove his point he began a neurological assessment on the patient.

"Just then she opened her eyes and, pulling the physician's necktie, forced his face to hers and said very clearly: 'Give me some water!'

"It was obvious that she was awake, alert, and orientated. He angrily canceled the transfer to hospice and ordered a tube feeding and intravenous.

"Several weeks later she was discharged and was exercising on the treadmill! She escaped the death sentence. Unfortunately, many others, like my grandmother, have not."

Recently Helmueller reports: "An 80-year-old was admitted to the emergency room and the physician said 'Let's dehydrate her.' Translation: 'Let's kill her.'"

"When another 70-year-old patient was sentenced to die in hospice, with no terminal diagnosis, while pleading for his life, this nurse decided that: 'I can no longer remain silent!'"

Those who have lost friends or family members to a sudden onslaught of upper respiratory, heart, or gastrointestinal complications following exposure to heavy chemtrail spraying will recognize the following sentence—really a "death sentence"—from Helmueller: "The elderly are frequently dying three days after being admitted to the hospital."

Medical personnel now attribute these deaths to "old-age syndrome". But aging has never killed anyone! Degenerative illnesses are the real culprits. And these fatal conditions can strike at any age.

According to Helmueller, other health professionals "admit that overdosing is all too common. Euthanasia is not legal, but it is being practiced."

Last year the New England Journal Of Medicine reported that 1 in 5 critical care nurses admit to having hastened the death of the terminally ill.

After working with nurses who even admit to overdosing their parents, one healthcare professional believes the percentage is much higher. Dr. Dolan, of the University of Minnesota, states as "a conservative estimation" that 40% of all reported deaths in the United States are the result of euthanasia.

The "culture of death" has deeply infected the medical establishment. "Many doctors and nurses are speaking about ending their own lives when they reach the age of 65—or before if diagnosed with an illness" Helmueller writes.

"Some even admit to stealing the drugs for their own lethal injection. If they do not value their own lives, how can they value yours?"

Under the guise of "compassion", hospital killing today is commonly referred to as "the exit treatment". With Medicare and Medicaid seen as "running out", Helmueller reports that many doctors and nurses believe that death by injection, starvation, or dehydration is the best solution to patients "whose suffering is seen as hopeless, inconvenient...and a financial burden" on their families and society.

"Death by natural causes" is the official declaration on the death certificates of the euthanized. "Did you know that this is the exact same proclamation on the death certificate of St. Maximillian Kolbe?" asks Helmueller. "Everyone knows, however, that he died from a lethal injection in Auschwitz concentration camp after many days of dehydration and starvation!"

In his encyclical Evangelium Vitae, Pope John Paul II warns: "Here we are faced with one of the more alarming symptoms of the 'Culture of Death' which is advancing above all in prosperous societies, marked by an attitude of excessive preoccupation with efficiency and which sees the growing number of elderly and disabled as intolerable and too burdensome."

The Pope insisted that: "As they approach death, people ought to be able to satisfy their moral and family duties, and above all they ought to be able to prepare in a fully conscious way for their meeting with God."

Helmueller denounces this "grave and moral injustice" declaring that: "Many souls are being denied the opportunity to reconcile with God and family members because their death has been hastened or deliberately taken."

The Carmelite Sisters relate the story of a friend whose husband was diagnosed with terminal cancer, but not expected to die for several months or a year. This man had been away from the Catholic Church and the sacraments, and was estranged from his children.

One day, while in hospital, he complained to his wife of pain. When the doctor arrived, he gave an injection through the intravenous line. The husband took three more breaths and died. The wife screamed: "I did not ask you to kill my husband! We needed time to reconcile our marriage and family. He needed time to reconcile with God and the Church!"

Helmueller also relates how "a very holy priest" from St. Paul was called to administer the last sacraments to a hospice patient. The priest was stunned to find the "dying" patient sitting up in a chair! He visited with the patient half an hour before administering the last sacraments. Just before he left the room, the patient jumped up in bed. A nurse immediately administered an injection. Perplexed and concerned, the good priest called the hospital from the rectory. You guessed it; the patient had already expired.

Helmueller voices our outrage when she asks:

"How can it ever be morally acceptable to transfer patients to a unit to die when they have no terminal illness? How can sedating a patient and refusing a tube feeding and intravenous be considered compassionate? Dehydration and starvation is not a painless death. Has [euthanasia] become the Auschwitz of today? A convenient and economically efficient place to dump the unwanted, imperfect, and burdensome of our society?"

WARNING: Affixing your signature to a "living will" is signing your own death warrant.

Originally developed by Luis Kutner in 1967 for the Euthanasia Society of America, the "living will" is the most cost-effective tool for hospitals, insurance companies, and disbursers of Medicare and Medicaid. As Helmueller points out: "It gives permission to facilitate your death by denying medical treatment."

Cynically and deceptively described as "The Patient Self-Determination Act", since 1990 the "living will" has been used to terminate patient care—and patients—across America.

Helmueller warns that, written in broad and vague terms, the "living will" is open to interpretation by medical professionals and others "who stand to benefit from your demise. Remember, your best interests may not be theirs!"

In fact, to [the financial managers in] a profession supposedly dedicated to "saving lives" and "doing no harm", your life may be less desirable than your death. As Helmueller pointedly asks: "If cutting care for those patients who ask for it wasn't so successful in saving money and controlling the budget, why then did it originate in the Senate Finance Committee? And why was it supported by the House Ways And Means Subcommittee On Health? These are finance committees whose only interest is controlling the budget! It is obvious that the living will is all about saving money, not your life!"

Recently, a 70-year-old was admitted through the emergency room in respiratory distress. He was placed on a ventilator and transported to the intensive care unit. He was awake, alert, and orientated, anxiously writing notes: "I don't want to die"; "I changed my mind"; and "Please don't take me off the machine." He was very persistent and urgent with his pleading.

I soon understood why! His family and physicians were meeting to discuss a serious problem. He had signed a "living will" declaring that he did not want "any extraordinary measures".

He was now viewed as "incapable" of making any decisions, and they wanted to follow his wishes as stated in the legal document! Very convenient for those who do not want their inheritance spent on hospital costs, and for those who do not want to be bothered with a "useless burden" to our society!

Today, hospitals and health care facilities are required to ask patients if they have a living will, or lose government funding! The question is proposed in such a way to create pressure on patients so that they think it is something good, desirable, and necessary: "Do you know that you have a right in the state of Minnesota to possess a living will?" Please remember that the living will targets you for euthanasia by denying you medical treatment.

From THE AGE, in Melbourne, Australia:

Surgeons Admit Hurrying Death

By Brett Foley
May 13, 2000

Hundreds of Australian surgeons have given excessive medication to patients to hasten their deaths, a national survey has revealed. More than one-third of the surgeons who responded to the survey said they had, at some time, administered more medication than was required to treat a patient's symptoms—with the intention of hastening death.

More than half of those also admitted they had done so without an explicit request from the patient.

The national survey of almost 1000 general surgeons also found almost half of the respondents supported legislation on active voluntary euthanasia and were in favor of doctor-assisted suicide.

The survey on their attitudes to euthanasia was presented to the Annual Scientific Congress of the Royal Australasian College of Surgeons in Melbourne yesterday.

About 69 percent of surgeons responded anonymously about their views on euthanasia, after the Northern Territory's "rights of the terminally ill" legislation was overturned by a conscience vote in Federal Parliament.

The survey asked if doctors had intentionally assisted death, either with or without an explicit request. When asked if they had ever given drugs in doses greater than those required to relieve symptoms with the intention of hastening death, 36 percent said yes.

Of those, more than half said they had done so without an explicit request from the patient.

Under common law, doctors can lawfully increase sedation of a terminally ill patient with the intention of relieving pain and suffering, even if that action hastens the patient's death. But if the doctor has the intention of the hastening of the death of patients, even if they are close to death and have made the request, it's a crime.

The researcher, Dr. Charles Douglas, from the Mater Hospital in Newcastle, said almost all respondents indicated it was sometimes morally acceptable to give sedatives in large doses to hasten death. In many cases, if an explicit request was absent, it was because the patient could not make the request.

"The administration of analgesic or sedative infusion with the intention of hastening death appears to be more common, often occurs without request, and we speculate that this occurs in (moribund) patients who are very close to death" he said.

Dr. Douglas said it was very difficult to distinguish intentional actions from normal palliative care unless the doctors reported it themselves.

"Clearly the use of analgesic or sedative infusions represents a grey zone between palliative care and euthanasia" he said. "There is no consensus among Australian general surgeons about the wisdom of legalising active voluntary euthanasia or assisted suicide."

Euthanasia campaigner, Dr. Phillip Nitschke, said the results were encouraging, but displayed the difficult position doctors were in because of inadequate legislation. Dr. Nitschke said the findings confirmed that a process of "de facto euthanasia" was being carried out by many surgeons. "It quantifies what many people know—that there are doctors out there who are maintaining the façade of providing palliative care, when many of them know the consequences of their treatments with these drugs" he said.

Some Well-Hidden Hazards Of Microwave Cooking

Editor's note: If you use a microwave oven, you may benefit from reading the following article. If you have avoided microwaved food and ovens due to a hunch or feeling, then what is shared below may help to confirm your "paranoid" suspicions. If you have discovered that microwaved food "just doesn't taste right" or doesn't seem to give you as much energy (and seems empty of food value) compared to conventional cooking, then you'll surely find below some technical clues to back-up what your experience indicates.

Since the mid-1970s, when microwave ovens began their heavily marketed invasion of our kitchens and other cooking areas, there has circulated an undercurrent of mostly technical reports—and mostly from non-U.S. researchers (imagine that!)—on observed suspicious effects on food and on biological systems (that is, you, me, and the lab mice) from the microwaves. Some of these reports, incidentally, overlapped with similar questionable effects being noted from overhead or nearby high-voltage power lines—but that's another can of worms for another day.

Personally, I (E.Y.) found microwaved food to taste "flat", was harder to digest, and didn't provide the energy as did food cooked conventionally. Combining both sets of data—the technical and the personal—made me an opponent of microwave ovens since the latter 1970s. This was just as they were becoming the hot, new, time-saving kitchen appliance of choice. If you were in the same boat as me, you took a lot of criticism for your supposed hallucinations and opposition to "progress" in the kitchen.

Microwaves heat the food in a manner far different from conventional cooking. Because the high-frequency radio waves we call microwaves bombard and "jiggle" the food at the molecular (and even atomic) level, with the "jiggling" in turn leading to frictional heating, there exists a tremendously powerful opportunity to modify the food structure (and thus chemistry) in a way that could make the resulting altered matter not even recognizable to the digestive system as food!

Moreover, while I hesitate to get into any lengthy discussion on the subject of the etheric or "pranic" energy aspect of food, let it suffice to suggest that microwave energy may severely diminish or destroy that important subtle component of the food—even though it is not conventionally recognized or measured at this stage in our scientific evolution.

Because so much of the "inconvenient" information on this subject has been buried and otherwise censored from the public for quite some time, it was a delight to have the following article cross our path here at The SPECTRUM recently due to some eagle-eyed Canadian friends. While it borrows heavily from other sources, it provides a good snapshot without becoming lengthy.

In tracking down the origin of the document we received as a hard-copy fax, it was discovered that the following originally appeared in the author's Natural Medicine Newsletter (#9). And that Newsletter, in turn, is associated with a wonderful Internet website called www.worldwidehealthcenter.net which is operated by Worldwide Health Center, Inc., P.O. Box 42008, 6530 Larnaca, Cyprus.

We applaud the courageous educational effort this organization is conducting and note that they are, once again, not based in the United States. What a revealing commentary on how the AMA and FDA operate in conjunction with Big Business to "protect" us from some matters that may significantly affect our health.

FALL 1999 DR. GEORGE J. GEORGIU

Recent research shows that microwave oven-cooked food suffers severe molecular damage. When eaten, it causes abnormal changes in human blood and immune systems. Not surprisingly, the public has been denied details on these significant health dangers.

I have often been asked by my patients whether cooking with microwave ovens is healthy or not. I did not really have an objective, scientific answer to give, as I had not really researched the matter.

Well, recently I decided to do some useful research into the question of microwave cooking. I had a hunch that it was NOT healthy, and this was confirmed by my research! I will share with you, in summary, some of the interesting facts that I dug up from my research.

MICROWAVED BLOOD KILLS!

In 1991, word leaked out about a lawsuit in Oklahoma. A woman named Norma Leavitt had hip surgery, only to be killed by a simple blood transfusion when a nurse "warmed the blood for the transfusion in a microwave oven"! (J. Nat. Sci., 1998; 1:2-7)

Logic suggests that, if heating or cooking is all there is to it, then it doesn't matter what mode of heating technology one uses. However, it is quite apparent that there is more to "heating" with microwaves than we've been led to believe. Blood for transfusions is routinely warmed—but not in microwave ovens! In the case of Mrs. Leavitt, the microwaving altered the blood, and it killed her.

DR. HANS HERTEL

In the tiny town of Wattenwil, near Basel, in Switzerland, there lives a scientist who is alarmed at the lack of purity and naturalness in the many pursuits of modern mankind. He worked as a food scientist for several years with one of the many major Swiss food companies that do business on a global scale.

A few years ago, he was fired from his job for questioning procedures in processing food because they denatured it. The point that he was desperately trying to make to the public is vital to consumer interests: Any food eaten that has been cooked or defrosted in a microwave oven can cause changes in the blood indicative of a developing pathological process that is also found in cancer.

Nevertheless, for all this time, Hertel has been effectively gagged by the manufacturers of microwave ovens who have effectively used trade laws and the Swiss court to muzzle him—even to threaten him with personal ruin, an all too known tactic used by those threatened by natural medicine and the truth!

Working with Bernard H. Blanc of the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology and the University Institute for Biochemistry, Hertel not only conceived of the study and carried it out, he was one of eight participants.

"To control as many variables as possible, we selected eight individuals who were strict macrobiotic diet participants from the Macrobiotic Institute at Kientel, Switzerland" Hertel explained. "We were all housed in the same hotel environment for eight weeks. There was no smoking, no alcohol, and no sex.”

One can readily see that this protocol makes sense. After all, how could you tell about subtle changes in a human's blood from eating microwaved food if smoking, booze, junk food, pollution, pesticides, hormones, antibiotics, and everything else in the common environment were also present? “We had one American, one Canadian, and six Europeans in the group. I was the oldest, at 64 years; the others were in their 20s and 30s” Hertel added.

Valentine published the results of this study in Search For Health in the Spring of 1992. But the follow-up information is available only in a later edition, and also in Acres, USA.

In intervals of two to five days, the volunteers in the study received one of the food variants on an empty stomach. The food variants were: raw milk from a bio-farm (no. 1); the same milk conventionally cooked (no. 2); pasteurized milk from Intermilk Berne (no. 3); the same raw milk cooked in a microwave oven (no. 4); raw vegetables from an organic farm (no. 5); the same vegetables cooked conventionally (no. 6); the same vegetables frozen and defrosted in the microwave oven (no. 7); and the same vegetables cooked in the microwave oven (no. 8).

Once the volunteers were isolated at the resort hotel, the test began. Blood samples were taken from every volunteer immediately before eating. Then blood samples were taken at defined intervals after eating from the above-numbered milk or vegetable preparations.

Significant changes were discovered in the blood of the volunteers who consumed foods cooked in the microwave oven. These changes included a decrease in all hemoglobin values and cholesterol values, especially the HDL (good cholesterol) and LDL (bad cholesterol) values and ratio. Lymphocytes (white blood cells) showed a more distinct short-term decrease following the intake of microwaved food than after the intake of all the other variants.

Each of these indicators point in a direction away from robust health and toward degeneration. Additionally, there was a highly significant association between the amount of microwave energy in the test foods and the luminous power of luminescent bacteria exposed to serum from test persons who ate that food. This led Hertel to the conclusion that such technically derived energies may, indeed, be passed along to man inductively via consumption of microwaved food.

HEATING FOOD IN MICROWAVES

“Technically produced microwaves are based on the principle of alternating current. Atoms, molecules, and cells hit by this hard electromagnetic radiation are forced to reverse polarity 1 to 100 billion times a second. There are no atoms, molecules, or cells of any organic system able to withstand such a violent, destructive power for any extended period of time, not even in the low-energy range of milliwatts.

“This is contrary to conventional heating of food, in which heat transfers convectionally from without to within. Cooking by microwaves begins within the cells and molecules where water is present and where the energy is transformed into frictional heat.”

“The first drawing of blood samples took place on an empty stomach at 7:45 each morning” Hertel explained. “The second drawing of blood took place 15 minutes after the food intake. The third drawing was two hours later.”

From each sample, 50 milliliters of blood was used for the chemistry and five milliliters for the hematology and the luminescence. The hematological examinations took place immediately after drawing the samples and included erythrocytes, hemoglobin, mean hemoglobin concentration, mean hemoglobin cholesterol, HDL cholesterol, and LDL cholesterol.

The results of erythrocyte, hemoglobin, haematocrit, and leukocyte determinations were at the “lower limits of normal” in those tested following the eating of the microwaved samples. “These results show anemic tendencies. The situation became even more pronounced during the second month of the study” Hertel added. “And with those decreasing values, there was a corresponding increase of cholesterol values.”

Hertel admits that stress factors—for example, from getting punctured for the blood samples so often each day—cannot be ruled out, but the established baseline for each individual became the “zero values” marker, and only changes from the zero values were statistically determined.

RUSSIANS BAN MICROWAVE OVENS

After World War II, the Russians also experimented with microwave ovens. From 1957 up to recently, their research has been carried out mainly at the Institute of Radio Technology at Klinsk, Byelorussia. According to US researcher William Kopp, who gathered much of the results of Russian and German research—and was apparently prosecuted for doing so (J. Nat. Sci., 1998; 1:42-3)—the following effects were observed by Russian forensic teams:

1. Heating prepared meats in a microwave sufficiently for human consumption created:

- d-Nitrosodiethanolamine (a well-known cancer-causing agent);
- Destabilization of active protein biomolecular compounds;
- Creation of a binding effect to radioactivity in the atmosphere;
- Creation of cancer-causing agents within protein-hydrosylate compounds in milk and cereal grains.

2. Microwave emissions also caused alteration in the catabolic (breakdown) behavior of glucoside and galactoside elements within frozen fruits when thawed in this way.

3. Microwaves altered catabolic behavior of plant alkaloids when raw, cooked, or frozen vegetables were exposed for even very short periods.

4. Cancer-causing free radicals were formed within certain trace-mineral molecular formations in plant substances, especially in raw root vegetables.

5. Ingestion of microwaved foods caused a higher percentage of cancerous cells in blood.

6. Due to chemical alterations within food substances, malfunctions occurred in the lymphatic system, causing degeneration of the immune system's capacity to protect itself against cancerous growth.

7. The unstable catabolism of microwaved foods altered their elemental food substances, leading to disorders in the digestive system.

8. Those ingesting microwaved foods showed a statistically higher incidence of stomach and intestinal cancers, plus a general degeneration of peripheral cellular tissues, with a gradual breakdown of digestive and excretory system function.

9. Microwave exposure caused significant decreases in the nutritional value of all foods studied, particularly:

- A decrease in the bio-availability of B-complex vitamins, vitamin C, vitamin E, essential minerals, and lipotrophics;
- Destruction of the nutritional value of nucleoproteins in meats;
- Lowering of the metabolic activity of alkaloids, glucosides, galactosides, and nitrilosides (all basic plant substances in fruits and vegetables);
- Marked acceleration of structural disintegration in all foods.

As a result, microwave ovens were banned in Russia in 1976; the ban was lifted after Perestroika.

INFANT DANGER

In the journal Pediatrics (vol. 89, no. 4, April 1992), there appeared an article titled: “Effects of Microwave Radiation on Anti-infective Factors in Human Milk”. Richard Quan, MD, from Dallas, Texas, was the lead name of the study team. John A.

Kerner, MD, from Stanford University, was also on the research team, and he was quoted in a summary article on the research that appeared in the 25 April 1992 issue of Science News. To get the full flavor of what may lie ahead for microwaving, here is that summary article:

“Women who work outside the home can express and store breast milk for feedings when they are away. But parents and caregivers should be careful how they warm this milk. A new study shows that microwaving human milk—even at a low setting—can destroy some of its important disease-fighting capabilities.

“Breast milk can be refrigerated safely for a few days or frozen for up to a month; however, studies have shown that heating the milk well above body temperature can break down not only its antibodies to infectious agents, but also its lysozymes or bacteria-digesting enzymes. So, when pediatrician John A. Kerner, Jr., witnessed neonatal nurses routinely thawing or reheating breast milk with the microwave oven in their lounge, he became concerned.

“In the April 1992 issue of Pediatrics (Part 1), he and his Stanford University co-workers reported finding that unheated breast milk that was microwaved lost lysozyme activity, antibodies, and fostered the growth of more potentially pathogenic bacteria. Milk heated at a high setting (72 degrees Celsius to 98 degrees C) lost 96 percent of its immunoglobulin-A antibodies, agents that fend off invading microbes.

“What really surprised him, Kerner said, was finding some loss of anti-infective properties in the milk microwaved at a low setting, and to a mean temperature of just 33.5 degrees C. [This is below normal body temperature of 37 degrees Celsius or 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit.] Adverse changes at such low temperatures suggest ‘microwaving itself may, in fact, cause some injury to the milk above and beyond the heating’.”

There are many more disadvantages in using microwave ovens: Listeria and other potentially fatal bacteria can survive in a microwave oven, toxic chemicals are released by the packaging used for microwave use, and more.

The message seems clear: Don’t cook food in a microwave oven.

God bless!

Look Within And Tap The Awesome Power Of ONE

12/29/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my scribe. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace and be still.

Much is happening all over your world in terms of geological activity. Many of you have noted the recent flair-up in volcanic activity along the eastern edge of the Pacific “Ring of Fire”, as well as what seems to be a flurry of sizable earthquake activity that seems to intensify and then quiet down to almost nothing.

Your planet is continuing to cleanse Herself of the negativity that has been allowed to fester and grow as a result of the neglect and destruction caused by the ones who should be the “caretakers” of the planet. Man has ravaged and plundered this life-giving orb to an ever increasing level and, for the most part, does NOT realize what the longterm effects of those actions will be.

You cannot, for example, continue to pump crude oil from the ground, at an ever-increasing rate, and expect your planetary orb to sit and do nothing. This would be like you sitting and allowing thousands of mosquitos to continually feast upon you, and suck fluids from your body, while you sit by and do nothing.

Just as your body automatically fights off infection as a natural course of instinctual survival, so too does your planetary orb have such capabilities of cleansing and renewing. Many an advocate for your world has spoken up on behalf of your planet. These are ones who are environmental scientists, geologists, and such who, through careful study and rigorous calculations, have seen what the longterm effects will be if you continue to ravage the planet’s natural resources. These ones often try to come up with alternative fuels—such as burning the garbage that currently just gets buried in the ground in most areas, or using more solar and wind technologies—and that is fine, as far as it goes.

There ARE magnificent alternative energy sources available to your world. These technologies are continually and rigorously suppressed by your world governments and energy brokers—under instructions from the so-called “elite” controllers of your planet.

The underlying reason for suppression is their perceived need to maintain control over you-the-people. However, greed and lust for material wealth runs a close second. These few are the ones who control OPEC and such. These few care very little about the overall wellbeing of your planet, and for the most part they simply view Her as a large lifeless rock. This is so far from the actual truth of the matter that one is left to ponder the sad state of ignorance your world functions within.

Though from your perspective massive earthquakes may be terrifying, from a viewpoint of Mother Earth they often come as a source of great relief. Can you muster within yourself some compassion for your life-giving orb? Will you be understanding if the healing properties of Her waters is shifted to cover the land you now dwell upon so that she might continue longer?

Or, would you rather she experience a slow, painful death, wherein the end result would be a totally uninhabitable planet for human life? Again, the blood within your body is a “natural resource” of energy for the mosquito. How much would you allow to be sucked out before you decide to do something like swat, scratch, or shake? What about the aftermath of infection commonly present after such attacks (those little red bumps)?

It has ever been Our thrust to point out to you ones that ALL IS CONNECTED TO ALL, and that you and ALL of Creation—which includes all planets, stars, galaxies, and universes, and all life within them, including the life at atomic levels and beyond—exist within the creative thinking of God (Creator Source), and therefore are an aspect of God deserving of the utmost respect (Love).

All aspects of creation serve a purpose, regardless of whether or not you can recognize the unity in the diversity. In your naïve ignorance, as a species, about your understanding of Creator Source, you fail in a basic sequence of reasoning. For instance, though you may not understand the reasons for oil to be in the ground in the first place, that does NOT mean the oil serves no function or purpose in the overall wellbeing of your planet.

Just because you cannot see or understand the reasons for electrons to continually spin around the nucleus of an atom, and you do not understand what is the source for this “perpetual energy” motion—let alone what the TRUE source of energy is that keeps your planet spinning in orbit around your Sun—does NOT mean that it is un-knowable or beyond your influence. If you alter the structure of an atom enough, it will become unstable and release GREAT amounts of energy into physical space. From where does this energy come?

Likewise, if you alter the state of your planetary orb enough, it will become unstable to a point of self destruction. The oil in the ground of your planet serves several purposes—the main purpose being for orbital stability. Something like in an electrolytic capacitor, the oil acts as an insulating medium, which helps maintain the proper electrostatic functioning which is critical for Her to maintain Her proper rotational speed, and thus ultimately remain in a stable orbit.

Dear ones, there are many sources of energy available to you that would NOT require you to ravage your planet. These energy sources are INFINITE in nature. There is FREE energy available to you ones, but there are some who live in great fear that their illusion of power and control would crumble overnight if they were to embrace this technology or allow the “common” person to be in possession of same. If knowledge is power, then keeping the masses ignorant keeps the masses weak. This is the premise from which these so-called “elite” controllers operate, and they exercise great effort to squash those who try to educate society with TRUE knowledge—rather than pseudo-science and intellectualism.

[Editor’s note: Amen! And a good example of that dilemma is the quite tedious conditions under which we manage to publish this newspaper each month. Wouldn’t it be nice if some generous souls of ample financial means would come forward to lighten “just” that nightmarish burden—so “all” we had to concentrate on is getting The Truth out to you?]

These so-called “elite” controllers are small-minded individuals who see no other purpose in life than to impart their self-proclaimed “higher” understanding upon the masses for the so-called “good” of humanity—as they see that good. And this is accomplished through mechanisms of coercion (mind control) and denial under the assumption that you “children” can’t conduct your own lives without their “expert” supervision.

And yet these ones, quite few in actual numbers, cannot be held totally responsible for the destiny of your world. Why is that? Because YOU have a choice. YOU have a voice. YOU can take action and speak out. And there are a lot more of you than them.

Each one of you, the so-called “common” person, has the ability to make a difference in the overall games being played on your planet. Do you sit around and do nothing? Have you educated yourselves about the works of ones such as Nikola Tesla? What have you done to make your neighborhood a better place in which to live? What about your city, state (province), or country?

We bear witness that the masses of your world are, for the most part, held frozen with fear, and hold the belief that they are small and only “one” and cannot be held accountable for the “stupidity of mankind”. Dear ones, for you to sit by and do nothing only speaks of your own ignorance of who YOU really are and the TRUE POWER of ONE!

Most of you who read these messages are greatly compassionate people. You need not feel guilty for past years of inaction or various states of ignorance. The first step is always to educate yourselves and arm yourselves with KNOWLEDGE. As you gain in knowledge and understanding, you will find it increasingly more difficult to sit by and do nothing. This is called RESPONSIBILITY. From that point of knowing, understanding, and sense of responsibility you will be Guided from within to recognize in what area you would be best suited to effect a change.

This may very well appear to be a small, localized effort at first, as you begin to apply your knowledge and test your understanding. Perhaps you are inspired to build a better device for recycling plastics. Perhaps you start in your own kitchen or workshop, and that contribution then spreads to the local community, and then beyond. With each person to whom you show a better way, you will be multiplying your efforts over and over again.

This is how ONE person causes a change on a massive scale. It begins with a desire that is born out of balanced reasoning and determination to find a better way.

If your ideas do not bear fruit, then the most common reason is lack of complete understanding. This means you need more knowledge. Which means more searching and studying. What is YOUR area(s) of expertise? What do you enjoy doing? If you are an artist, can you not communicate through your artwork a message that will inspire others to look differently upon Mother Earth so that they might recognize a Greater Truth? If you are an engineer, can you not strive to increase the efficiency of your devices so as to set a new standard by which all future similar devices must strive to attain? If you are a housewife who raises children, can you not seek out creative uses for recycling common household garbage? If you are retired and feeling at the end of your life, can you not speak to younger ones and inspire them to do more with their life? Or perhaps you could write letters to editors of small local newspapers and intelligently state your concerns for the wellbeing of the planet you will be leaving to your grandchildren?

Again I state: for the most part the general population of your world is in a state of paralysis, thinking that they cannot DO anything about the current state of the world. Next time you read a story, or watch on your television a story, of an individual who goes out and makes a difference, and as a result gathers national media attention for doing so, I would like for you to remember these words and think to yourself: “THERE IS THE POWER OF ONE!”

Know that you are created with infinite ability to create and to express the power of God. You ARE a co-creator, with infinite energy available to you. YOU can make a difference in this world when your determination to do so has been aroused. Go forth and be heard! Never be fearful to speak your truth and understanding to another. If your truth is challenged, then be well armed with knowledge and understanding—so that you can even explain your truth to a child, if need be, with the confidence that the child will understand you.

There is truly no greater gift you can offer to your world than a good, strong EXAMPLE for people to observe. Walk the walk, but do so in balance and reason, and remember to keep the highest ideal of Creator Source in mind as you do so. Have compassion for the ones who ridicule you for being different. These ones will often be the closest to waking up, and thus are caused to feel embarrassment as you will inevitably be showing them how productive they COULD be—if they got up off the couch and turned off the television long enough to really see what is going on in the world.

Be persistent and hold your desire firmly in mind and allow the “doors” you knock on to open up for you. Seek and you shall find that which your heart longs to bring forth and express to the world.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come as a member of the Host of God and the Lighted Brotherhood. May you forever be striving to make your world a better place than when you arrived, and may all your endeavors be uplifting experiences that leave happiness and joy in the hearts of all you touch.

God bless you all.

In Light and Love—Salu.

Election Intrigues To Think About

Editor's note: Sherman Skolnick and his confidential sources have been presenting some most insightful and provocative information concerning matters connected to the so-called presidential election we just experienced.

In last month's SPECTRUM we presented six of his essays which brought into the election pageant many factors that the print and broadcast media prostitutes would not dare to tell you. It is not that all of those factors necessarily play a major role behind the scenes, but—their contributions, even if small, all work together to suggest an agenda of sophisticated control and manipulation far more extensive than might be apparent from what you can observe from the sanitized news programs.

We continue with those essays below. That there are so many plausible facets to the intrigue only makes a stronger case for a set-up in the making—to be pulled on a mostly unsuspecting public at the right time. Meanwhile, note well the new players on the Bush playing field and consider their connections with some of the exiting ones. You won't see these links announced on the evening news!

Election Mess A CIA
Covert Operation?

PART ONE (12/8/00)

Old-timers with covert operations expertise felt in their gut that something about the Year 2000 Presidential Election blitz was part of an intelligence agency covert scheme. In spy parlance, they suspected the American people are victims of “black ops”.

Invoking “national security”, the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency ordered the major press and wire services to play down—if not entirely omit—any possible CIA complicity mentioned in an Associated Press story later “spiked”. Here are portions of the apparently censored story:

“Thursday, December 7, 4:15 AM ET “Florida Official Admits Helping GOP

“By Vickie Chachere, Associated Press Writer

“TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—One attorney charged there was a ‘sinister’ conspiracy to aide George W. Bush. A former CIA agent said he was trying to help GOP voters. A county election official said she let Republican operatives correct absentee ballot applications.”

And later in the story, as to the Martin County case, AP said:

“Charles Kane, who testified he worked for the FBI and retired from the CIA in 1975, said nothing secretive and sinister occurred. ‘We had an obligation to them’ he said of Republicans who had received the inaccurate ballot document. ‘We had filled out their forms. We did not see this as altering. All we saw this as was correcting a problem caused by the Republican Party of Florida.’”

A later AP version omitted these matters.

Even in the apparently suppressed story, Associated Press left out plenty. Retired CIA and other agency covert operations agents contend the Charles Kane who testified in the Martin County, Florida case is the same Charles Kane they have known for many years.

They describe Charles Kane as being reportedly as follows:

- When he was younger, Charles Kane reportedly looked almost exactly like Lee Harvey Oswald, the CIA “patsy” blamed by the fraudulent Warren Commission as the “lone assassin” in 1963 of President John F. Kennedy. Several assassination researchers in their magazine articles and books have described how Oswald was framed up with situations involving Oswald “look-alikes”. The book suppressed in the U.S., called Farewell America, has an extensive detailing of this.

- Charles Kane was reportedly part of the CIA’s super-secret bloody dirty-tricks project called “Operation 40”.

- Charles Kane reportedly played a role in the CIA’s aborted invasion in 1961 of Cuba at the “Bay of Pigs”.

- Charles Kane was active in Chicago with CIA-mafia gangsters including Sam “Momo” Giancana, murdered with an OSS special-type assassin gun in 1975, the same year the current Charles Kane testified he retired from the American CIA. Kane was also reportedly active with Johnny Roselli, a CIA-mafia operative murdered shortly after Giancana. (Some details are in Double Cross, the book by Giancana relatives.) Kane reportedly helped Chicago area gangsters, including Giancana, plant the fraudulent 8,000 ballots in Chicago that enabled John F. Kennedy to carry Illinois and its Electoral College vote in 1960. Nixon was left out as a result. Nixon later played a key role at the CIA’s “Bay of Pigs” fiasco, blamed on the newly-inaugurated President Kennedy.

- Charles Kane for many years reportedly was part of “Executive Action” activities of the FBI and CIA—originally domestic and overseas coups and political assassinations, but in more recent years dirty tricks short of actual political murders.

Has the CIA complicity in orchestrating the Florida presidential election scandal, as well as other events in the U.S., started to unravel? Has an apparent split in the American CIA surfaced by way of the testimony of Charles Kane? Why then was he a witness in the Martin County case?

Equally puzzling is the reprinting in softcover, just prior to the Year 2000 Presidential Election, of the book 1876 by Gore Vidal. (He is a distant relative of Albert Gore, Jr. Fancy people use their grandmother’s last name as their first name.) Originally published in 1976, by Random House, Inc., the last 80 pages or so of the book give the details of the Samuel Tilden/Rutherford B. Hayes election struggle of 1876, a extremely close election where one candidate got a plurality of the national popular vote and the other got the majority Electoral College vote. Strange, but it centered, in part, around FLORIDA and massive corruption of public officials as to the election.

Conspiracy theorists assert that the Year 2000 Election seems to use the book 1876 as a nearly exact blueprint for how the nation can be divided up. Tilden, according to Gore Vidal’s book, never conceded, but lived out his life contending he had been the elected President. Tilden sought at the site of the Presidential inauguration to be sworn in as the elected President, but was blocked by armed troops. As re-created in Vidal’s book, the country almost boiled over into a second American Civil War.

Little-known to the public, all the major establishment news networks and newswire services, about to run stories on the American CIA, have to get prior clearance from the spy agency. In the U.S. there is a non-statutory version of Britain’s Official Secrets Act which requires articles affecting “national security” to be first submitted for approval. In a like fashion in the U.S., such articles have to be submitted in advance to the CIA Censorship Board—or a similar, almost unknown agency or commission.

British press outlets and newswire services that run afoul of the law are subject to having their equipment, presses, radio and television transmitting instruments, buildings, and vehicles seized by the London government. On the other hand, American outlets, under presidential edict rather than law-by-Congress, if accused of being about to violate “national security”, are subject to having their satellite links blocked by the super-secret satellite operations agency, the National Reconnaissance Office (NRO), websites shut down, and their wire service connections, domestic and overseas, terminated. The U.S. Secret Service reserves the arbitrary power to themselves to keep “uncooperative” journalists from attending important press conferences, by denying them mandatory press credentials and security clearances, thus making such journalists unemployable.

The American CIA and their “privatized” adjuncts, such as reportedly Wackenhut, have long engaged in overthrowing foreign governments, assassinating popular U.S. leaders and officials, caused fake foreign and domestic “emergencies” and coups. WHY is it hard, then, to believe they would not also orchestrate, on a vast scale, the overthrowing of the American central government, to favor, for example, the British itching to return us to a puppet colony status? Some contend we may see the American Constitution overthrown by such means and the nation run by martial law as a way of dealing with an expected U.S. financial debacle.

Stay tuned.

The Alleged Election— Is It Over?

PART TWO (12/17/00)

So you have been told the alleged election is over with? At least fifteen State Electors are planning to flip over from George W. Bush to Albert Gore, Jr., to bring the Electoral College vote in harmony with the national popular vote plurality won by Gore.

In most states, the State Electors are NOT mandated to vote like robots for the presidential candidate to whom they are supposedly pledged. Unlike most every other industrialized nation, the U.S. has NO DIRECT VOTE for president and vice-president. Set up because the elite rulers do not trust the common people of the nation, a screening committee, called the Electoral College, is in the middle. Furthermore, a sizeable number of the Founding Fathers who provided for the Electoral College were slave owners and wanted to be able to be heard in the central government, even from the rural areas.

Gore was supposedly laid low by the highly contradictory, vague, and nebulous decision of what some call “The Gang of Five” on the U.S. Supreme Court. Thereafter, the oil-soaked monopoly press began falsely and prematurely calling Bush as “president-elect”. The U.S. Constitution, Article 2, Section 1, together with the 12th Amendment as revised by the 20th Amendment provide for a procedure in January, following the purported “election”:

As to the State Electors in the December following the purported “election”: “And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit SEALED to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE SHALL, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, OPEN ALL THE CERTIFICATES, and the votes shall be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes SHALL BE THE PRESIDENT, IF SUCH NUMBER BE A MAJORITY of the whole number of the Electors appointed...”

The above is the pertinent portion of U.S. Constitution, Art.2, Sec.1 (with emphasis added). It should be pointed out there are provisions for challenges in Congress to the vote of the State Electors—which means a person does not automatically become president-elect when the SEALED votes are received by the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE—who happens to be vice-president Gore. To mislead the common people, the liars and whores of the press in December began falsely calling Bush as “president-elect”.

Under the procedures of the Constitution, currently 270 electoral votes are the minimum for a “president-elect” who becomes PRESIDENT upon the later inauguration. Knowledgeable sources in Tennessee are contending that to defraud the state’s Electoral Vote and humiliate Gore in his home state, that 300,000 Gore ballots were stolen. They are threatening to bring the same to the Congress when the SEALED alleged State Electoral ballots from all over the nation are turned over to the president of the Senate. (In a somewhat similar situation in 1801, Thomas Jefferson, as the president of the Senate, did NOT disqualify himself as to ballots for himself as U.S. president.)

All during the 20th century there was no real problem as to the Electoral College vote. So people wrongly presumed the popular vote is automatically the Electoral vote. In the 19th century, however, there were several crisis-creating situations. The most serious was the election of 1876—Samuel Tilden, Democrat for president, running against Rutherford B. Hayes, Republican.

As I have earlier stated, the Year-2000 Presidential Election seems to be a near identical copy, strangely, of the book 1876 by Gore Vidal (a third cousin on the outs with Albert Gore, Jr.). First published during the Bicentennial/Centennial 1976, it was re-issued in softcover just before the 2000 alleged election.

Is the book simply prophetic or what? The language in the book relates to what happened when Congress set up the Electoral Commission, to meet in chambers of the U.S. Supreme Court, to investigate charges of a fraudulent election which also revolved then, as now, about Florida:

“For one thing, the commission has never seriously tried to examine any of the initial voting frauds in Florida. The Republican case is based on the fact that the Hayes returns are the only valid ones because they have been signed by the carpetbag Republican governor of the state, while those favoring Tilden were only signed by the state’s attorney general. For a whole week the number of angels able to dance on that pin’s head have been counted and re-counted.”

The above is from the book 1876, page 337, softcover edition, 2000. Currently, Florida’s Republican governor is candidate Bush’s brother, Jeb Bush, while the Florida attorney general is a Democrat who opposed candidate Bush in the courts.

In 1877, meeting was the 15 member Electoral Commission, split 7 to 7. The tie vote was cast by a former judge who took a tremendous bribe to have no investigation of Florida, and put in Hayes, who thereafter was called RutherFRAUD.

In 1876, the Texas Pacific Railroad controlled the fraudulent election, such as in Florida. Currently, it has been the CIA and the oil cartel. The railroad bribed the then-version of the State Election Commission, called at the time the Returning Board. The former judge on the 1877 Electoral Commission of Congress was a known bribe-taker (from the book 1876, pages 338-339, softcover edition, 2000).

In 1876-1877, then as now, there was open serious talk of a military coup d’etat (1876, page 335, softcover). In the 19th century, those State Electors who flipped or wanted to, were called “faithless Electors”. In 1876, as now, some of the State Electors wanted to bring the national popular vote in harmony with the Electoral College vote. That is, Tilden won the popular vote; Hayes, by one fraudulent/bribed Electoral College vote, won the Electoral vote.

Gore won the national popular vote; Bush currently has been one vote more than the 270 minimum to win. 269 would make a tie. If some from Tennessee can prove that 300,000 Gore ballots were stolen, then that alone would tip the alleged election to Gore. On the other hand, if the 15 State Electors, from around the nation, flip, then likewise Bush loses. Some call them Patriotic Electors, because the harmony they seek might prevent riots, racial or otherwise. The press-fakers are seeking to downplay or censor what the possibly changing State Electors are all about, by calling them “Rogue Electors”.

Some talk in sinister tones that Gore Vidal is part of an elaborate foreign and domestic spy agency scheme to orchestrate a fascist coup against the American central government through the Year 2000 alleged “election”. Vidal is part of the mass media/movie industry/CIA, since his family owned the Vidal sound-on-film patented process which revolutionized the movie industry. Through patents and financial links, that end of the Gore family, on the outs with Albert Gore, Jr., has a working and financial interlock with the TV networks, Hollywood, and the psyching-out of the commonfolk of America through vast pictorial and other propaganda.

To satisfy economic and supposedly technical mandates, TV situation comedies and such are made ON FILM, at tremendous cost compared to making them, from the beginning, on video. Through mergers and corporate tie-ins, the movie industry and the TV networks have overlapped into one giant blur.

The American CIA, and their British counterpart MI-6, like to use as a blueprint a prior successful model, from years ago, or even centuries ago. Is Gore Vidal's book 1876 such a model—as to how, by advance planning, bribery, vote manipulating, how to steal an election, and put in someone, for the moment, acceptable to the ruling elite?

Such plans are based on an almost secret super-computer method developed at Rockefeller's University of Chicago, called "hypothesis averaging", using past examples as a starting point. For marketing purposes, it has been used by advertising agencies successfully promoting McDonald's hamburgers' rise to power in marketing domestically and overseas its fast food items. The same advertising agency/marketing moguls, DDB Worldwide, use those methods also for Coca-Cola. (See my series Coca-Cola, The CIA, And The Courts. The same agency represents alleged competitors, Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola.)

The apparent plan has been to put in George W. Bush as president, just temporarily, so the oil monopoly can work tricks with Iran as to the price of oil. The Elder Bush, who instigated the Persian Gulf War, is, with his CIA gangsters, expert on oil price-fixing. (The Elder Bush was a sizeable owner of American LaFarge, unit of a French firm, that reportedly in the 1980s supplied the ingredients to Saddam Hussein, CIA-installed dictator of Iraq, for making poison gas used against Iraq dissidents, the Kurdish, and Iraq's war for 8 years with Iran, 1980-88. Hillary Rodham Clinton was a board member of American LaFarge.)

Then, so the scheme goes, George W. Bush is scandalized out by items known BEFORE the alleged election. Such as: he reportedly raped a Latino woman. Such as: he in recent years was undercover photographed by a DEA team showing him snorting cocaine with his pal, William Rockefeller Clinton. (George W. and Clinton used to meet, from time to time, at the Elder Bush's mansion in Kennebunkport, Maine.)

Upon being removed by scandal, George W. is replaced by vice-president Richard Cheney, with a long history of heart ailments. Cheney, under the 25th Amendment, appoints a member of the Rockefeller family—long itching to take over the Oval Office without an election—as vice-president John D. Rockefeller 4th [D-WV], an incompetent fool who calls himself Jay to be cute.

Upon another "heart ailment" problem, Cheney, as the unelected president, is removed under the 25th Amendment (originally instigated by the Rockefeller family) because the then vice-president certifies in writing to the Congress that Cheney is physically not able to carry out the duties as president.

In 1973, I gave a series of seminars at colleges across the nation as to how the Rockefellers, under their instigated 25th Amendment, were planning to have Nelson Rockefeller as the president, without an election. Following the downfall of vice-president Spiro Agnew for bribery, and then Nixon facing Watergate impeachment, Gerald Ford became the president and appointed Nelson Rockefeller as vice-president.

By way of three genuine plots against president Ford, Rockefeller came within one bullet of becoming president. (The aborted murders were also to remind Ford to stay shut about what he really knew, as a member of the Warren Commission, about the murder of president Kennedy, falsely labeled by Ford and others as done by a "lone assassin".)

At least fifteen patriotic State Electors, from all over the nation, are planning or prepared already to flip over to Gore from being supposedly Electors pledged to Bush. They believe the change is necessary to bring a balance between the national popular vote, won by Gore, with the just-one-vote lead that Bush has in the Electoral College.

One State Elector, in a public statement, has already announced he is flipping, so Bush thus would have only 270 electoral votes. To marginalize such State Electors seeking to do right and good for the common people and the upwards of 51 million who voted for Gore, the press whores have called them "rogue electors".

Will these Electors succeed?

Will they be bribed by Bush to stay in their supposed position pledged to him?

Will they be assassinated?

Will they be terrorized?

Time will tell. Stay tuned.

The New/Old
White House Gang

PART THREE (12/31/00)

In the Year 2000 Presidential alleged "Election", upwards of 51 million voters nationwide voted for Albert Gore, Jr. He won the national popular vote by some 500,000 votes. In their heart of hearts, some of those voters will always consider Gore as "President De Facto" and pronounce the name of his opponent as George W. Bush FRAUD, as an illegitimate occupier of the Oval Office.

In previous stories, I pointed out how the presidential alleged "election" played out strangely similar to that of 1876, when Samuel Tilden ran against Rutherford B. Hayes. Tilden won the popular vote, and for the rest of his life, considered himself as having been the actual elected president. Winning by one Electoral College vote, approved by a Congressional Electoral Commission, the tie vote of which was bribed, Hayes served in the White House as a one-term president. Some called him names similar to RutherFRAUD or bitterly toasted him as "To His Fraudulency".

There are strange coincidences when you compare the events in Gore Vidal's book 1876. First published in 1976, the book was re-issued in softcover just prior to the year 2000 alleged "election". Bribery and fraud of the State Election overseers in FLORIDA was an instrumental part of Hayes seizure of power. And some persist in claiming the same as to George W. Bush. In his Texas home, Bush has bookshelves in his dining room with—you guessed it!—historical novels by Gore Vidal. (Time magazine, 12/25/00, page 64.) Coincidence?

Some contend, in dark and sinister tones, that the year 2000 alleged "election" was orchestrated by the super computers using a marketing formula called "hypothesis averaging". This was done under the supervision of the former head of America's secret political police, the Elder Bush. Were these secret methods used to disenfranchise, nationwide, some two million Black voters whose ballots were tossed out by machines as supposedly "defective"? And were these mechanisms, using undisclosed proprietary codes, hooked clandestinely to satellites under the control of the super-secret National Reconnaissance Office, NRO? A high percentage of the supposedly "not valid" Afro-American ballots would have been for Gore.

As the propaganda horn for the Establishment, how would the oil-soaked monopoly press explain away THAT large of a plurality in the national popular vote for Gore as president? So the Black vote had to be scrapped. (On the TV networks, by unwritten policy, IF a Black reads you the news, they have to be light-skinned and/or look like a doll and resemble a store mannequin.)

One of those turning down an offer by Bush of a Cabinet position was Montana Governor Marc Racicot. Some believe he had too much dirty baggage that even the highly corrupt FBI could not whitewash. Perhaps Bush sought to explain away the shadows. "In an interview with Time last week, Bush singled out one Governor in particular for praise, Racicot of Montana, who emerged during the Florida fiasco as a take-no-prisoners surrogate for the Governor. Racicot's accusation that Gore had declared war on U.S. troops by trying to toss out their absentee ballots has already made him a target among some Democrats on Capitol Hill. But Bush is unbowed and is considering the former state attorney general for Justice or Interior. "He's a genuinely good person" said Bush, "a genuine guy. I promise you that whatever position he's in, he'll be a star—in a very quiet and humble way. He'll be a great success" (from Time magazine, for the date 12/25/00-1/1/01, pp. 91-92).

Whatever election fraud may have occurred in Florida favoring Bush, some contend Racicot was the orchestra leader thereof. Investigators and journalists in upper Montana have claimed that high-level Montana state officials are implicated in the growing dope traffic from Canada through Montana. AND, that Governor Racicot is himself directly involved in a cover-up of this criminality. Canadian authorities have sought to reportedly apprehend an FBI official, charging him with being a kingpin in the cross-border narcotics. Is it just another coincidence that this U.S. secret police official has been stationed in FLORIDA but has links to the Montana/Canada border area in question?

As we showed in previous stories, the Elder Bush and his sons have 25 secret bank accounts, worldwide. (See "Greenspan Reportedly Aids And Bribes George Bush And Family" with attached Federal Reserve secret wire transfer records by which the Bush family launders billions and billions of dollars from illicit proceeds from dope and weapons smuggling.)

Perhaps some have forgotten how the Bush gang committed treason. The Elder Bush, Richard Cheney, James Baker 3rd, and General Colin Powell were implicated in secretly arming Iraq—even with nuclear weapons items and ingredients for poison gas. (See the book Spider's Web—The Secret History Of How The White House Illegally Armed Iraq, by Alan Friedman, Bantam Books, December, 1993.)

One of the most explosive situations reportedly implicates Governor Tommy Thompson, appointed by alleged President Bush as the Secretary of Health and Human Services to replace outgoing Clinton appointee Donna E. Shalala. It all revolves around a huge reputed CIA espionage slush fund from Switzerland, reportedly operating without legal authority in Wisconsin through the criminality of Governor Tommy Thompson. The billions and billions of dollars have been called by an innocent-sounding name: Childrens' Defense Fund. Playing a key role in the dirty business reportedly was Donna E. Shalala, starting when she was Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison, and continuing when she was Secretary of Health And Human Services, HHS.

The Foundation/Trust specializes in illegally skimming funds off the Medicare Program and funneling the proceeds through hospitals and health programs that disregard legalities. Part of it operates through Rockefeller's University of Chicago Hospitals. (See our series about the Red Chinese Secret Police in the United States and how these hospitals reportedly buy and sell human body parts—hearts, kidneys, lungs, and such—harvested from Red Chinese dissidents condemned to death as the orders for these body parts come in.)

Some of the billions of dollars of the Childrens' Defense Fund are secretly used to margin soybean speculations by Red Chinese and others, through five commodity brokers (we intend to name names later in this series), Chicago, and New York, specializing in illegal "no-due-diligence" secret Red Chinese accounts. Also, the assets of the Childrens' Defense Fund are reportedly skimmed off and laundered through so-called "segregated accounts", more or less guaranteed quietly, dollar for dollar, in the billions of dollars, by the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. (Longtime maestro of the "Merc", as it is called, has been once-Chairman Leo Melamed, raised in China and reportedly speaks fluent Chinese.)

Another key player reportedly in these Medicare/hospitals/Red Chinese/Chicago Mercantile Exchange swindles has been Rahm Emanuel, reputed deputy North American Director of Israeli intelligence, the Mossad. Off and on for six years, he was a Clinton White House Senior Advisor. An expert reportedly in extortion and blackmail, Rahm has been a major election campaign fundraiser by arm-twisting. He went on to a top position in Chicago with a supposed "investment banker", Wasserstein Perella, now merged with a German bank.

An official of the Childrens' Defense Fund has been Hillary Rodham Clinton, elected from New York to the U.S. Senate. Her reputed lover and law partner in the Rose Law Firm, Little Rock, was Vincent W. Foster, Jr., for a few months in 1993 being Clinton White House Deputy Counsel. Foster was the courier and "bagman" for the Fund, traveling widely prior to the White House job—Little Rock, Wisconsin, Chicago, Switzerland, Russia. He started in July, 1993, to turn over incriminating records of the Childrens' Defense Fund, as a huge money laundry, to the then-FBI Director, William Sessions. The day before Foster's body was found in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia, Sessions was unceremoniously sacked on ridiculous charges that he defrauded the government by taking his wife along on one of his FBI office plane flights. Some of those original records did get into Sessions' possession and he formed elite units to investigate, for criminality, both George Herbert Walker Bush and his sons, as well as the Bush Family cronies Bill and Hillary Clinton. Foster was murdered because of the massive Medicare/hospital/State Government/commodity markets fraud, as well as for other reasons. (See other details of the Foster murder at our website, in the article "Greenspan Reportedly Aids And Bribes The George Bush Family", Part Four of the series.)

For safe-keeping, Sessions parked the original records documenting massive fraud of the Fund in the Alfred Murrah Federal Office Building in Oklahoma City. The records were destroyed in the multiple bombings, internal and external, of the building, on April 19, 1995. There is substantial reason to believe the FBI and the U.S. Treasury's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, BATF, allowed a foreign unit, tied to Iraq with American surrogates as dupes, to bomb the building. Not only to destroy the records but to be used by Clinton as an excuse to restore his power following the 1994 Congressional Election debacle and clamp down on American dissidents falsely blamed for the disaster.

Naive people do not understand the overlap between the reputed crimes by Bill and Hillary Clinton and those supposedly investigating them. For over four years, as the supposed "Independent Counsel" Kenneth W. Starr pursued the Clintons, the only items that Starr saw fit to publicize were the sex episodes of Clinton and Monica Lewinsky. Hemmed in by numerous conflicts of interest, Independent Counsel Starr was not about to open up a real can of worms. And who was the attorney for the infamous Childrens' Defense Fund, acting as supervisor and strategist? Why, none other than Kenneth W. Starr. You can understand why Starr committed a fraud upon the American people by stating that Vincent W. Foster Jr. died as a "suicide", when there are substantial contradictions showing Foster, in his role with the Childrens' Defense fund, was more likely murdered.

So the role of Tommy Thompson reportedly is quite simple to continue the cover-up of the massive fraud implicating the Childrens' Defense Fund, continuing the same of his confederate, Donna E. Shalala. As head, like she was, of the Department of Health And Human Services, Thompson is in a perfect position to perpetuate a fraud on the American people. Was George W. Bush simply incompetent in having as his surrogate reputed dope trafficker Marc Racicot? And appointing Tommy Thompson to keep the lid on the CIA money laundering swindles, like Childrens' Defense Fund? Or did George W., with his father supervising him, know quite well what he was doing.

If the Liars and Whores of the Press had all along publicized these crimes, most common Americans, regardless of political party, would most likely agree to be taxed for a new, large jail to house this New/Old White House Gang! Stay tuned.

2/7/01 RICK MARTIN

I would lower the price of electricity in California to 1 cent per kilowatt hour. I’d take the wraps off the nuclear generators, imposed by licensing technical specifications, and I would run them FLAT-OUT at 100% availability and 110% of the name-plate rating. In days when it had to be done, they could make it up by running over the name-plate rating, and I would DO IT NOW!

And I would go to the Navy at Alameda and Los Angeles, and I’d say: “You bring in a nuke ship and hook it up and carry the country.” But I’d quit this making a profit, gouging that they’re doing. I’d just say, flat-out, that electricity is 1 cent per kilowatt hour. No more rolling black-outs, and no more playing games.

That’s what I’d do if I were there. I’d run the nukes, full-out, and I’d have the Navy bring in one, two, three, four, five, of their ships and hook them up to the local domestic line, and just pump power into California.

— Galen Winsor, longtime nuclear energy expert

The lights are going out in the Golden State. Some would say the Sun is setting. And yet we have the above provocative quote from my interviewee, Galen Winsor, to consider very, very carefully. Things do not add up, and yet the proposed “solutions” are, as usual, to bleed the public—the rate-payers and the tax-payers—once again.

However you look at it, the recent actions concerning energy in the state of California have cast a dark cloud and a long shadow over the future prosperity of California. And California is representative of what

“When You Don’t Know What You’re Doing, Do It Neatly!”

This note must begin with a warm “thank you” to all out there in readerland who took the time to send “get well” messages to my mother. Those combined healing-energy wishes and prayers have already accelerated her to nearly full recovery. That she was irritated about my mentioning her age (in last month’s column) was the first sign of the return of her usual vigor. She says she will personally answer each note in due time.

And speaking of returns, I’m sure you radio listeners have been glad to note the return of Art Bell on Monday night, 2/5/01, to reclaim his late-night talk-radio program. He sounds good and rested and ready to bring the ratings back up to new heights—from the alarming depths to which things had fallen since his “retirement” back in April of last year. He did not ask for more money, but for half the commercials. What a breath of fresh air.

If there are no “rolling power blackouts” at the printer, this issue of The SPECTRUM should become a reality on our new publication date—the second Tuesday of the month. (A shift from the first Tuesday to the second began last month and will remain.) Rick Martin’s front-page feature on the California energy “crisis” addresses what’s going on behind the scenes of those suspiciously ominous blackouts. As if the hard-working public were not assaulted enough already, both the power companies and the politicians are looking to the little guy to bail them out of a mess that can only truly be appreciated from the Larger Picture perspective that regular readers of this publication have come to expect.

And speaking of appreciation, there is no way to adequately thank you for all the kind and beautiful notes of support and encouragement that often are accompanied by financial contributions—which also speak volumes about your heart-felt desire to help this unique vehicle of Truth remain afloat.

To answer your many inquiries bluntly and honestly: we remain in a very precarious financial condition. If it were not for two particular larger donors, there would have been no paper these last two months. One of these donors “just happens” to be having an upsurge of business success coincident with our needs; the other signs over to us an entire monthly check from Social Security.

We remain optimistic—if uncertain—about the road ahead, because it only takes ONE letter or phone call from a donor of ample means to change our financial plight in an instant. (Talk about a roller-coaster ride.)

This report is not in any way meant to take away from the value of the many generous smaller donations we gratefully receive from ones who are clearly of very limited means, yet dearly wish to help. However, it remains important to emphasize the level of very real costs of providing the banquet of Truth which we do each month.

That reminds me of a few tidbits: Have you noticed how much chemtrail spraying is going on at night now? Must be too many people waking up to what’s going on over their heads and asking heated questions, yet getting nowhere with answers. Meanwhile, Mother Earth has begun to do a lot more shaking recently, which may be prelude to more dramatic activity around the corner. And possibly related: don’t miss what was caught on the doppler weather radar graphics we share in the News Desk. What effect do you think this type of likely scalar technology has on Mother Earth’s otherwise persevering and compassionate disposition? No wonder none of the professionals can get it right when it comes to weather predicting—they don’t teach THAT kind of stuff in meteorology school! And here’s another anagram to add to the list we shared with you awhile ago: GEORGE BUSH=>HE BUGS GORE. Not bad, huh?

Well, let’s not forget the spiritual side of the News and Truth equation. That’s what you readers so often say (and we surely agree) makes The SPECTRUM so uniquely well-rounded a publication. Too bad you don’t get to see how the entire package ACTUALLY comes together like we do; you’d get a kick out of the “Unseen Hands” guiding this show in a sometimes “backwards” manner with respect to time. For instance, often spiritual messages are “received” well before news events happen or other articles cross our path (in a more conventional manner) that the spiritual message is obviously meant to dovetail with. You read over a spiritual message and wonder what some of the references are about; then, maybe weeks later, when the paper is coming together in final form for that month, it all looks “organic” and meant to mesh together. (It makes us look like we know what we’re doing! Hence my choice of the title for this column—one of the many variations of Murphy’s Law.)

Yes, we feel as strongly as you do about the importance of integrating the spiritual element in this publication. Let me quote another very good reason why, beautifully stated by the great Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn:

“The strength or weakness of a society depends more on the level of its spiritual life than on its level of industrialization. Neither a market economy nor even general abundance constitutes the crowning achievement of human life. If a nation’s spiritual energies have been exhausted, it will not be saved from collapse by the most perfect government structure or by any industrial development. A tree with a rotten core cannot stand.”

We couldn’t agree more. Please help us keep The SPECTRUM’s Light shining.

HEALTH ALERT: PHENYLPROPANOLAMINE

From SPECTRUM friend Lorraine, via the INTERNET, 2/8/01: [quoting]

I just received this from my sister-in-law who is in California.

Before I forwarded this message to anyone I wanted to make sure that the information was true. I checked with a pediatrician and she verified that all drugs containing phenylpropanolamine are being recalled.

I also happened to be at CVS pharmacy and they have a sign stating that all drugs containing phenylpropanolamine have been pulled from their shelves.

You may want to try calling the 800 number listed on most drug boxes and inquire about a refund.

Please read this carefully, as I know that some of you use some of these drugs (Alka Seltzer Plus for one). Also, please pass this on to everyone you know.

Stop taking anything containing this ingredient. It has been linked to increased hemorrhagic stroke (bleeding in brain) among women ages 18-49 in the three days after starting use of medication. Problems were not found in men, but the FDA recommended that everyone (even children) seek alternative medicine. The following medications contain phenylpropanolamine:

- Acutrim Diet Gum Appetite Suppressant Plus Dietary Supplements

- Triaminic Triaminicol Cold & Cough

I just found out and called the 800# for Triaminic and they informed me that they are voluntarily recalling the following medicines because of a "certain ingredient" that is causing strokes and seizures in children:

- Orange 3D Cold & Allergy
- Cherry (Pink) 3D Cold & Cough
- Berry 3D Cough Relief
- Yellow 3D Expectorant

They are asking you to call them at 800-548-3708 with the lot number on the box so they can send you postage for you to send it back to them, and they will also issue you a refund.

If you know of anyone else with small children, please pass this on.

Not just small children. Please pass this information around to everyone you know who may consume these products. With the cold and flu season here, this warning is especially critical.

ZHIRINOVSKY THREATENS U.S. WITH (TESLA?) WONDER WEAPONS

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 1/24/00: [Quoting]

Greetings Jeff,

We thought the following news item might be of interest to your readers. Vladimir Zhirinovsky is (in)famous in Russia and beyond for his radical and extremely unpolitically correct views. Many believe he is on the Kremlin's payroll, as an agent provocateur capable of causing divisions in the Russian parliament. Moreover, some of Zhirinovsky's seemingly radical proposals have actually been made law and implemented after receiving backing from the government. It is very possible that Zhirinovsky has indeed seen secret state information on new technologies.

The leader of the Liberal Democratic Party, Vladimir Zhirinovsky, announced at a press conference in Moscow on Monday that Russia possesses a new kind of weapon of mass destruction. "The USA can make their ABM systems, spend their money, and end up losing their shirt, and we will raise a tiny ball with our satellite and everybody will die in any city" Zhirinovsky said.

He also predicted a breakthrough in the development of other cutting-edge Russian technologies. Among them he mentioned "cargo transportation at a speed of 5 thousand kilometres per hour" and "generating electricity from air". "A light bulb will generate electricity and it will be on forever" the Russian State Duma Deputy predicted.

The Russians have developed a much more advanced scientific arsenal than our news propaganda would ever allow the public to know—under threats of "national security"—so it would be wise to pay attention when they threaten us in this manner.

Look how upsetting it was to the morale of the United States when Sputnik was launched. Reliable sources say that event was only the beginning of a very long sequence of major scientific accomplishments which have led, over the past several decades, to a "balance of power" condition vastly different from what the American public smugly thinks is the case.

Moreover, Russian scientists likely have achieved a much better working understanding of Tesla's insights into Mother Nature due to their educational system's more fundamental, less cook-book, and less biased approach to the study of "unusual" phenomena.

"RING OF FIRE" LIGHTS UP WITH WAKE-UP CALL

By Mitch Battros (ECTV)

There have been new reports of earthquakes and volcanos active in different areas of the world. We also know there have been at least three M-Class flares and three rapid-fire Corona Mass Ejections in the last 72 hours from the Sun. Is there a connection? Research suggests yes.

Here are a few of the topics you will see on our Breaking News page that indicate the Ring of Fire is indeed awake:

- * Indian minister says earthquake toll is 5000. [Now stated to be up to 100,000.]

- * Earthquake shakes Greece.
- * Moderate earthquake shudders through southern Mexico.
- * Mild quake shakes western Japan.
- * Magnitude 5.2 quake hits Indonesia.
- * Geothermal eruption occurs in Rotorua, New Zealand.
- * Scientists warn of eruption as Philippine volcano puffs gas, ash.
- * Popo continues to erupt.
- * Geomagnetic storms continue.
- * Increase solar flare and CME activity.
- * Continued increase in meteor/asteroid activity.

[End quoting]

Indeed the Earth is becoming more geophysically active with each passing month, and especially as we enter this new year. This is necessary for Mother Earth to throw-off the poisons of man's assaults upon her, that she may regain her own balance and health. It would be wise to check your emergency supplies, especially those of you who live near geologically active areas such as earthquake faults and volcanos.

TREMORS AT MT. FUJI TOPPLE TOKYO'S TRANQUILITY

Japan's iconic Mount Fuji is rumored to be close to blowing its top for the first time in almost 300 years, writes Jonathan Watts, Thursday, January 25, 2001.

Just three weeks into the new millennium, Japan already seems to have entered into a darkly apocalyptic mood. The newspapers are full of political scandal, Tokyo stock prices have slumped on fears of recession, and economists are warning that the country could face a financial crisis in March.

And as if that was not enough to satisfy the doomsayers, the word is now going around that Mt Fuji, the symbol of Japanese serenity, may be about to blow its top.

Rumors about an imminent eruption of the long-dormant volcano have spread since signs of heightened magma activity under the mountain were reported late last year.

On average, 10 low-frequency tremors are detected deep below Mt. Fuji annually. But according to the national meteorological agency, this pattern changed dramatically in the autumn, with 33 minor quakes detected in September, 133 in October, and 222 in November. [End quoting]

Mt. Popocatepetl, a volcano southeast of Mexico City, exploded again just recently and is sounding quite an alarm in that area. Also, there have been moderate earthquakes recently in places like Ohio, which are not generally prone to such shaking. All of these are signs indicative of an increase in geophysical activity worldwide. Watch particularly the times of the new and full moon for extra shaking.

PHONY FIGURES ABOUT A "HEALTHY" ECONOMY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 1/22/01: [quoting]
Overall employment was up by 105,000 last month, the government joyfully reported. But the figures are phony—more than half of the new jobs reflected increases in government hiring. [End quoting]

Just like all of the other phony accounting figures they give us.

In the 1/31/01 Daily News out of Los Angeles, they have a list of a few companies and how many layoffs each have for the month of January—and it totals over 65,000 people for the U.S. Later, on CNN, I heard a figure of 135,000 people going to be laid off just from a few of the most notable companies. What do you think that says about the "healthy" economy the government has been proclaiming? Is that why money czar Greenspan has had to cut interest rates TWICE already this year?!

FRENCH COURT INDICTS SEAMY SOROS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 1/1&8/01: [quoting]

Money market speculator George Soros has been indicted by a Parisian court for dirty dealings in France.

EXCLUSIVE TO THE SPOTLIGHT

By Martin Mann

George Soros, self-styled "benefactor" of backward nations, has been bit with a criminal indictment in Paris on charges, long rumored on Wall Street—and reported in this populist newspaper—that his billion-dollar raids on national currencies and financial institutions were not based on peerless financial acumen, but on illegally acquired inside information.

After 12 years of high-level investigation, Judge of Instruction (i.e. senior prosecutor) Isabelle Prevost-Desprez issued an indictment on Dec. 21, charging four major figures with using and "profiting from" illegally obtained inside information in a takeover raid on Societe Generale, one of the largest French financial institutions to be privatized in 1987.

Shortly afterward, Charles Naouri, then the director-general of France's finance ministry, bank executive Jean-Pierre Peyraud, go-between Samir Traboulsi, and "the American businessman George Soros" formed a criminal conspiracy to take over the newly privatized giant bank, using confidential data purloined from Societe Generale and from the records of French financial authorities, the indictment alleges.

Although the takeover raid was not wholly successful, Soros profited from it to the tune of some $16 million, the indictment charges.

The criminal case involving Soros is linked to a new series of corruption scandals involving high personalities of Parisian society, French diplomatic sources have told THE SPOTLIGHT.

The day she issued the indictment of Soros, Judge Prevost-Desprez also ordered the arrest of Jean-Christophe Mitterand, son of former French President François Mitterand, who was found to have numbered Swiss bank accounts totaling $1.8 million, whose origins he could not explain.

"Wall Street has long wondered how Soros came to make all those winning high-stakes bets on mere speculation" said veteran Wall Street portfolio manager Mario Terranova. "Perhaps now the revelations of his insider-trading trial in France (scheduled to begin early this year) will provide an explanation." [End quoting]

Now, are they actually going to have the guts to do what should be done with one of the greatest financial swindlers of our time and wrecker of many a country's economic base?

DULLES SON BECOMES CARDINAL

Excerpted from the INTERNET, courtesy of eagle-eye Calvin Burgin, <wrldline@texas.net>, 2/1/01: [quoting]

CROWNING GLORY OF DULLES' CAREER

By Rod Dreher

NEW YORK, New York: the city so great they named it twice. And now they're going to give it two cardinals!

Everybody knew that Archbishop Edward Egan would get a red hat, but only a relative few had any idea that the Jesuit Father Avery Dulles would become a prince of the Church as well.

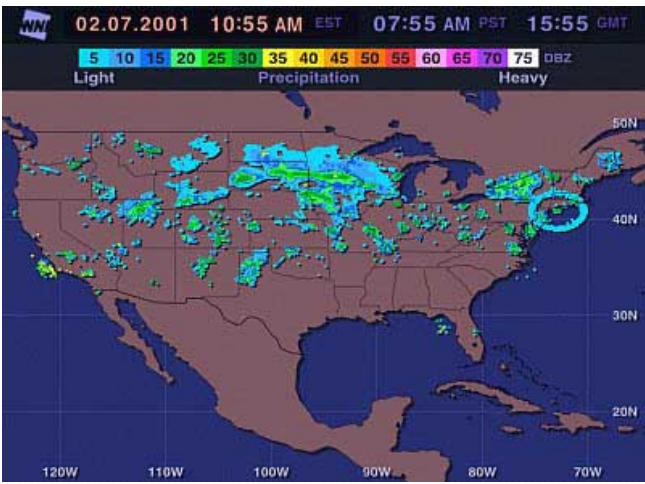

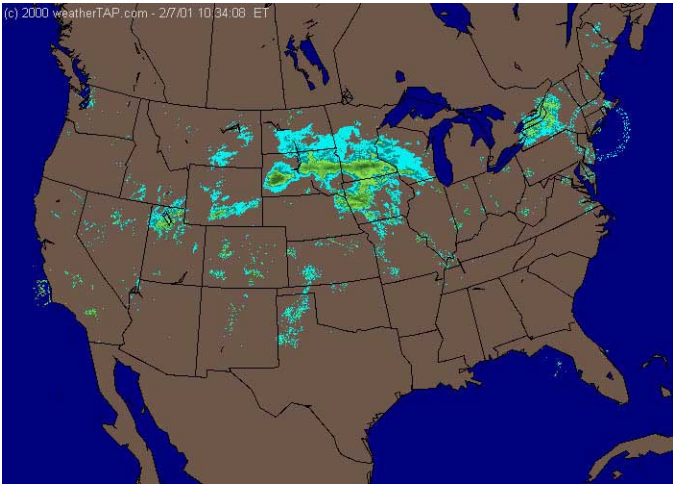

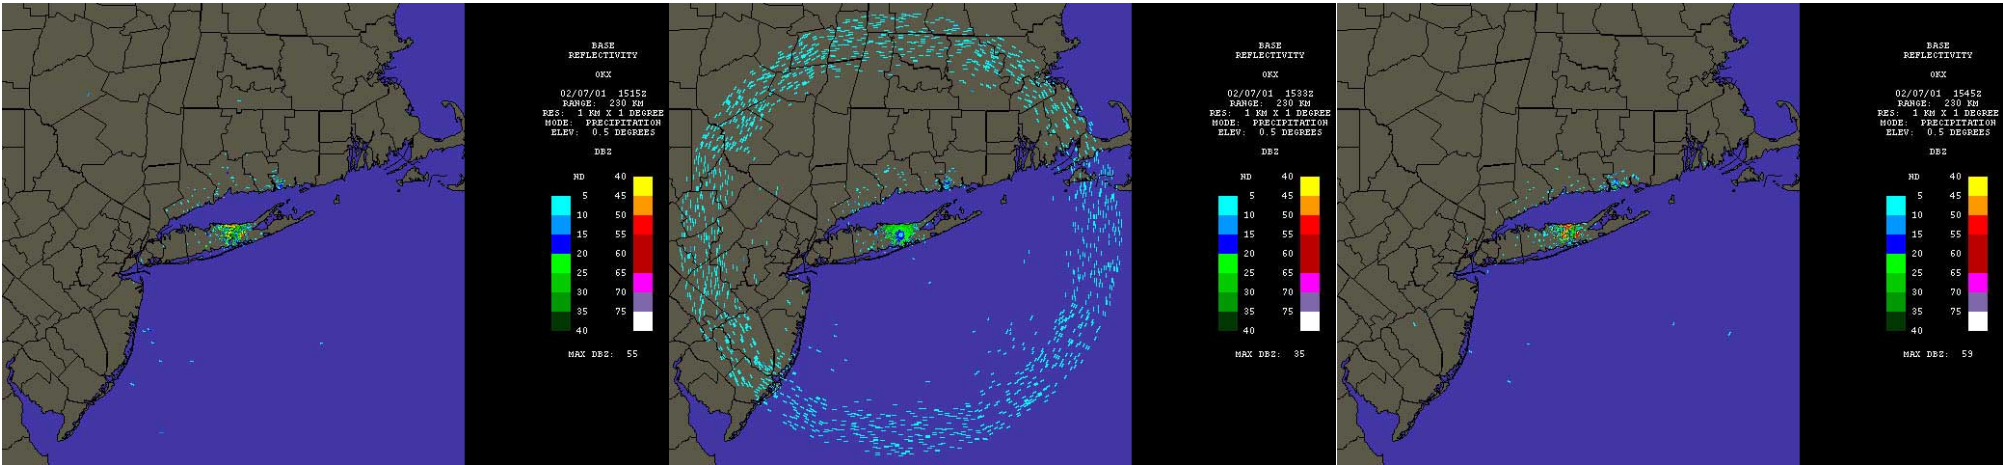

John Paul II's elevation of the 82-year-old Fordham scholar, widely regarded as America's most influential Catholic theologian, is the crowning glory to a long and distinguished priestly career.

And the justice of the Pope's gesture to him is one thing this country's fractured Catholic community can agree on. [End quoting]

Remember our front-page story from the May 2000 issue of this newspaper on the "Black" Pope—the Jesuits' General? Also read the incredible book Vatican Assassins, by Eric Jon Phelps, routinely advertised in this newspaper. Moreover, you students of TRUE history may recall how much of the "elite's" New World Order agenda has been advanced through members of the Dulles family. Enough said here!

CAUGHT IN THE ACT!?

You regular readers of this publication are well aware of the super-secret technical installations sprinkled around the United States (and elsewhere) that are reported to be part of front-page FEMA feature story in the September 2000 issue of this publication. This was in reference to the mysterious, widespread, and vastly destructive wildfires in the Montana-Idaho-Wyoming region of our Western United States this past summer.

With that in mind, we’d like to show you some recent doppler weather radar graphics which may have “caught in the act” some of this super-secret equipment in action. Let’s take a walking tour through these curious (if not downright amazing) graphics:

Directly to the left of these words are the images from two different weather monitoring systems which both caught some “unusual” atmospheric agitation in—imagine that!—the Montauk, Long Island area on their continental U.S. scans at 10:34 a.m. (far left) and 10:55 a.m. E.T. on 2/7/01. Directly above those graphics is a time sequence (at 1515, 1533, and 1545 Universal Time on 2/7/01) of one of these kinds of “burst” events from a higher resolution and more localized view. “Now you see it, now you don’t” is what comes to mind.

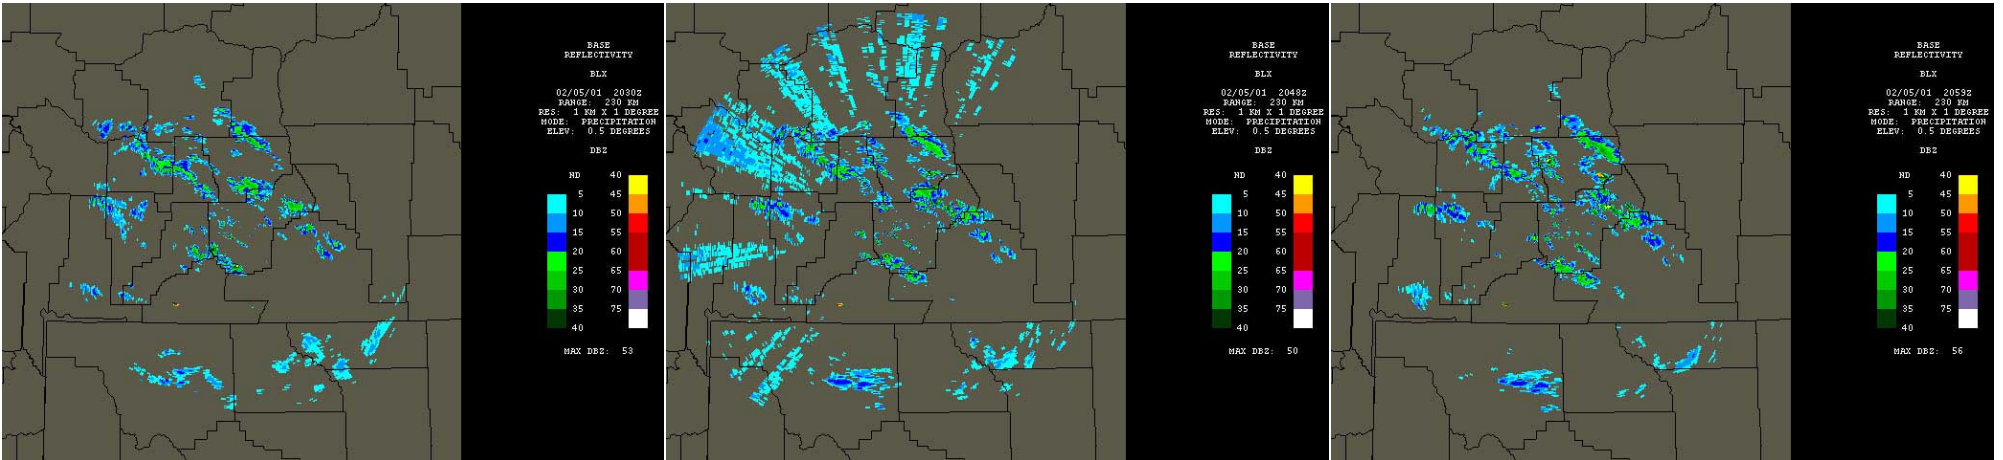

Next we go to the graphics to the left of these words. The left-most weather radar image is 3:45 p.m. on 2/5/01 and the one to the right (just to the left of these words) is 4 p.m. the same day. Look at the radial “burst” in the later image not present just 15 minutes earlier. And—imagine that!—

HAARP and other questionable pursuits which it is explained are used to modify the weather, induce various kinds of mind control, and other shenanigans. Let’s go back for a moment to remember just two important locations:

(1) In both of our Montauk front-page feature articles (October 2000 and January 2001) much was said (like strange fires nearby and goofy weather) about the Brookhaven National Laboratories in conjunction with the longtime ongoing sinister Montauk (Long Island, New York) Project of mind control, time travel, etc.

(2) Remember the bizarre equipment (and even more bizarre nearby weather conditions) reported in the latter sections of Rick Martin’s it's centered in southern Montana and spreading over into Idaho and Wyoming. Below those two are a closer-up time sequence of another "burst" superimposed for one "frame" on the background of weather activity for that same area at 2030, 2048, and 2059 Universal Time on 2/5/01.

My, how the weather becomes suddenly agitated—and in such curiously radial patterns! Perhaps these are purely coincidental with our earlier reports targeting these geographic areas and we have no reason to express concern. Then again, with all the goofy, unpredictable, and often violent weather going on all across the country (plus odd radio interference) these days, maybe these "agitations" of the atmosphere have EVERYTHING to do with what's going on. You decide for yourself.

We would like to thank "Billie Brinkley" <bbrink@startelco.net> for assembling many such examples of this activity (reply to: paradiscuss@yahoo.com). These doppler weather radar maps are really beautiful and striking to observe in color, on a decent-size computer monitor—especially the time-sequence ones. The following are some more sources; the ones in italics are the ones we utilized to share with you readers here.

MORE EMPLOYERS REFUSE TO WITHHOLD TAXES

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 12/11/00: [quoting]

More and more American business owners are making the decision to stop withholding taxes from their employees' paychecks as a form of civil disobedience.

By James P. Tucker Jr.

More businesses have stopped withholding federal income taxes on employees since the We The People Foundation launched the movement, and the government, so far, has taken no action.

What began as a foundation-sponsored seminar in Washington, where four businessmen explained that they had stopped withholding taxes—including Social Security and Medicare—has grown to at least 23 nationwide.

Not only has the Internal Revenue Service failed to act, but in some cases refunds have been sent to businessmen who objected to previous tax payments. In at least two cases, businessmen report receiving apologetic letters from the IRS for not rescinding penalties and issuing refunds earlier.

The IRS' inaction is no oversight; it is intensely aware of this new tax rebellion. The foundation's two seminars in Washington were heavily covered by the media. Government bureaucrats and advocates of the income tax were invited to defend their views, but none appeared.

In addition, the businessmen are telling the world about their rebellion on websites and talk shows. Sixty businessmen met on the weekend of Nov. 11 in California to plan how to recruit others to their ranks.

The IRS refused to comment on its inaction, citing privacy laws. But there are no public records showing any action against employers. This inaction baffles bureaucratic tax experts.

"This is tremendously significant because we have never before had responsible parties—employers—refusing to withhold" said Sheldon Cohen, a former IRS commissioner. "The system simply cannot work if they get away with this."

Until 1943, there was no withholding. Many Americans had no tax liability and most of those who did simply wrote a small check by the deadline, then March 15. Employers did not have to invest big bucks to serve as federal tax collectors, and taxpayers kept their money until it was due.

The Current Tax Payment Act of 1943 was passed as a "temporary" measure to finance U.S. involvement in World War II. But, as President Franklin Roosevelt and close associates acknowledged in numerous biographies, the administration had a long range view. There was no end to the social welfare programs Roosevelt wanted and the war-time withholding was the key to financing them.

Employers became permanent tax collectors, relieving the government of a heavy financial burden. By receiving employees' tax payments quarterly, the government enjoyed the huge financial benefit of using their money immediately. When the working man's taxes were withheld from his paycheck, he became less aware of the costs and began referring to his "take-home pay". When he received a refund after filing his return, he celebrated.

While opponents of the income tax call the rise of the resisting businessman an exciting addition to the ranks of tax rebels, the history of resistance to withholding reaches back more than half a century.

One employer, Vivien Kelles, of Connecticut, stopped withholding taxes from her workers when World War II ended. She pointed out that withholding had been instituted as a temporary war measure and, with the fighting over, it was no longer justified. She fought the IRS over withholding for years, publishing a book on the subject in 1952: Toil, Taxes And Trouble.

Her spirit has been revived. [End quoting]

This is a real predicament for the IRS. If they make too big a fuss over these "protesters", it is likely to cause an avalanche of similar responses through the publicity generated. Moreover, it will cause more employers to look carefully at an already questionable array of tax laws. If the IRS doesn't do "something", it makes them look like they are in agreement with these employers. What to do. Maybe we could use a few more dilemmas like this!

PEPPERMINT AND CHEMTRAILS

From a subscriber and longtime supporter of SPECTRUM, January 2001: [quoting]

Have you noticed the multiple sky streamers flowing from jet airplanes—called Chemtrails? These Chemtrails have been found to be composed of a substance causing lung and heart problems! This disturbing information is on the Internet, health magazines, and newspapers. I had noticed 10 long white smoky streamers flying parallel to each other over our farm, thinking it was an air-show demonstration. Then I realized, how could 10 passenger jets be flying to the same destination. I became determined to find a cure from this dastardly plan for depopulation.

Quality essential oils have been able to help many ailments and accidents. One such accident was a rancher whose back was so badly injured he could not walk. He was healed with essential oils and has spent his life manufacturing very fine oils to help others.

Peppermint produces menthol, and is helpful for nasal and lung congestion. I was shown each container of oil has a special pouring spout regulating each drop. One drop of peppermint is all that is needed at one time of use. Start by holding the small bottle upright and slowly lowering about halfway to the other open-palmed hand. Pour one drop in the palm, spread the oil around and place the other hand over the oiled hand, then both hands over the nose. Slowly inhale/exhale, and then allow time between each breath.

There is an excellent 377-page manual for more detailed information on peppermint and various other essential oils for healing, by Essential Science Publishing Company, 1-800-336-6308. The manual is called: Essential Oils Desk Reference (ISBN-0-943685-25-7). In the beginning of this book is printed: "To all those who seek truth, light and wisdom. After all, it is their hearts that turn to the information of this book". For more information about purchasing therapeutic-grade essential oils inspired by the rancher, phone (toll free) 877-339-1115; house phone: 703-393-9045.

— Marjorie Haines, First Olympic female equestrian. [End quoting]

This subject of essential oils will eventually be one we cover in more detail in a future feature article in The SPECTRUM. They can be amazing facilitators of good health.

Remember several years ago when all of a sudden the honeybee populations were dying out due to a mite that "came out of nowhere" (like probably the nearest underground base!) which was clogging their respiration system? None of the "educated" approaches to a solution worked and the bees continued to die off at an alarming rate. Then some "nobody" discovered that a few drops of, I think, wintergreen essential oil in the hives drove the pesky mites away. Several essential oils were discovered to accomplish the same end. We have so much to learn.

FOUR STEPS TO OVERCOMING DISEASE

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, Jan. 2001: [quoting]

Back To The Basics, by Kathie Moe

Until we begin to properly address cause and effect, politically, socially, and medically, we cannot expect sick things to get well.

The first step in overcoming disease is to put a stop to its cause. This always begins with a re-arranging of thoughts and feelings. Decomposition of the body (or dying) begins with "suicidal" thoughts and feelings—i.e. feelings of hate, anger, criticism, condemnation, judgment, blame, self-pity, jealousy, resentment, and depression. Good health requires not only the control of emotions, but encouraging good thoughts and feelings. Love, peace, harmony, poise, gratitude, and praise expand the life, light, and healing energies in the body to promote vitality and happiness.

The second step toward perfect health of the body is to stop eating any foods that are devoid of enzymes and nutrients. "Lifeless" "foods" such as white sugar, white flour, and fast foods cause mucus, toxins, and congestion—especially congestion of the intestinal tract. The substance known as "hardened mucoid fecal matter", which forms as a result of the body's attempt to digest lifeless foods, is the cause of over 90% of all disease.

The third step toward overcoming disease is to remove congestion from the body. Some health professionals choose to address the local area of obvious trouble alone. But, as Dr. Bernard Jensen used to say, "if you step on a cat's tail, it's the other end that yells!" Every single part of the body is affected by the whole. So all congestion and toxins must be removed and it must begin with the removal of the hardened mucoid fecal matter in the intestinal tract.

The fourth step toward lasting health is to then supply the body with the needed elements. But you cannot successfully complete this step until the third step is done, or well on its way.

Nature's Own Remedy— A Logical Process

This logical and natural healing process is largely neglected by many modern health professionals. Modern medicine's ignorance of these four simple steps explains why so many people are chronically stricken with degenerative conditions. It also explains why modern medicine may be pharmaceutically successful in treating the symptoms of one ailment, only to see the patient develop another one. We simply cannot expect a return to good health by masking the symptoms without addressing what causes them to occur in the first place.

One prominent cancer researcher, Dr. Hardin Jones, said: "My studies have proved conclusively that untreated cancer victims actually live up to four times longer than treated individuals.... Beyond a shadow of a doubt, radical surgery in cancer patients does more harm than good." Dr. Jones said he advocates less surgery and less chemotherapy.

I would agree with the good doctor. I was diagnosed with breast cancer in the early '70s. Being a single mom at the time, and not knowing what I do today, I accepted chemotherapy treatments. I am 56 years old now and have been involved in two more cancer scares. Each time I applied the above four steps, used alternate therapies, and with time and discipline have become cancer free. As long as I continue to apply these steps, I know I will remain cancer free.

The Evidence

The U.S. Public Health Service has revealed the rate of health deterioration of the American people. Out of 100 participating nations of the world, America was the healthiest in 1900. In 1920, we dropped to second place. During World War II we went back to number one—that's when sugar and meat were hard to get and family vegetable gardens were common. In 1978, we dropped to 79th. In 1980, we were 95th.

What has changed, other than the excessive use of sugar, fast foods, and meat? Consider the use of preservatives and chemicals taken into our bodies through food, polluted air, and synthetic fabrics. This unnatural approach to life has had a detrimental effect on all of us.

If we wish to reclaim our own health, we must return to God and follow His ways—Nature's ways—by using herbs and natural methods that purify and strengthen our bodies. I am a living example of what happens when we do.

(Kathie Moe is the director of Life Link Association, a health co-op in Coeur d'Alene where people are encouraged to exchange ideas and experiences regarding health so that successful techniques may be shared among those interested in taking responsibility for their own health. Moe can be contacted at: (208) 765-3082. [End quoting]

More than ever before, people are beginning to take back responsibility for their own health. The pill bottles are being tossed out and the herb books opened and studied, among other pursuits. Thanks to organizations like the above, people can more easily be guided into constructive help rather than be overwhelmed, not knowing which way to turn. We would all be wise to exercise the ounce of prevention rather than having to pursue the pound of cure once our health has broken down in some department.

NEW YORK SCHOOL BOARD SUED

From an email through "INGRI CASSEL" <vaclib@coldreams.com>, 1/24/01: [quoting]:

School Board Sued After Forcibly Removing Student From Class
Who Refuses Inoculations
Because Of Religious Convictions

New York, New York—Today in federal court parents of students in two separate schools filed suit against the Board of Education of the City of New York claiming the Board violated state and federal law by refusing to grant religious exemptions to forced inoculations. The parents and students are represented by Attorney Matthew D. Staver, President and General Counsel of Liberty Counsel.

New York state law requires school-aged children to be subjected to a laundry list of various vaccinations. State law provides exemptions to the vaccinations for medical reasons and to those who object based on religious grounds. Catherine Rotella is a straight-A student attending 7th grade at Roy H. Mann junior high school. She and her parents are opposed to immunizations for religious reasons. They believe that their body is the temple of God and that they should not defile their body by injecting it with artificial toxins. The father, Joseph Rotella, stated that he would rather slit his wrists than to sin against God. On January 3, 2001, Catherine was escorted from her classroom to the administrative office and her parents were called to take her home since she refused to be inoculated.

After she missed several days of class, Mr. Rotella received a call from the Assistant Principal stating that the situation could be resolved if he presented the school with an affidavit from his clergy. Mr. Rotella obtained an affidavit from his clergy and sent his daughter back to school on January 8. However, two security guards barged into the middle of an ongoing class and physically escorted Catherine from the room to the Principal's office. The Assistant Principal contacted Mr. Rotella and stated that the Board of Education was becoming political and refused to grant religious exemptions. Although he apologized, he stated that he was bound by the Board of Education. Catherine has not been able to attend school since January 8.

On November 16, 2000, Maja Leibovitz received a letter from the school stating that her daughter needed to be inoculated or she would be expelled in two weeks. Ms. Leibovitz follows the beliefs of Christian Science, which espouses that to be inoculated indicates a lack of faith in God and is a sin.

She met with the Principal on November 30, but the Principal refused to allow the second-grader back into school. The Principal has stated that the daughter will be held back a grade because she is not attending public school. The school has also contacted Child Protective Services.

The lawsuit claims that the School Board is violating state law which requires the Board to grant exemptions based upon religious objections to inoculations. The suit also claims a violation of the parents' free exercise of religion. Staver said: "To require these parents to subject their children to inoculations is like requiring a Jew to eat pork or a Catholic to curse the Pope."

Staver concluded: "The New York Board of Education is requiring these parents to abandon their religious beliefs in exchange for receiving a public education. This the Board cannot do." [End quoting]

Many months ago, back in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM, we shared a carefully worded article from Dr. Len Horowitz called "Vaccination: An UnGodly Practice" which offered very practical advice consistent with what these people are suing about above. It would be well worth reading again for those of you who wish to pursue this avenue successfully. Dr. Horowitz is certainly no stranger to SPECTRUM readers and has the credentials and clout to tackle these diabolical subjects through his blockbuster books and lectures and other research offerings.

Not only are the so-called "elite" controllers of this planet desperately trying to get all of the younger generation of largely super-gifted "Indigo Children" inoculated with who-knows-what to dumb them down and otherwise incapacitate them (as well as get them on Ritalin), but they have offered quite lucrative monetary "carrots" to school districts as incentive to insure this diabolical agenda gets carried out.

It is sad to think any school board would so enthusiastically sell the children's welfare for any kind of "blood money". If the boards are not told to "make an example" of these kinds of protesters, then the crooks in high places stand to lose their overall control, as the "sheep" begin to wake-up and take back their own schools. You can be sure the instructions came down from "very high up" the dark communications pipeline to make life difficult for these people who simply wish to remain healthy. Keep them in your prayers and offer them support for standing up to what is "only" the tip of the iceberg of a very sinister agenda.

BIG BUSINESS OF DRUGS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 1/16/01: Paraphrasing a long article:

It announced that the Clinton Administration killed the bill passed by Congress (which was passed with much fanfare recently) to allow us to purchase much cheaper imported drugs.

The article also highly questions so-called "new" drugs that are nothing but minor changes or renaming of old ones, so they can charge us a lot more money for them. In other words, another scam.

FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT GROWERS USE LEAD & ARSENIC TO RIPEN FRUIT

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 1/23/00: [quoting]

By Noel Peterson, ND

Grapefruit: Leaded or Unleaded?

In the produce business, getting the first crops of the season to market is so profitable that growers will do almost anything to beat the competition. In Florida, for example, citrus growers pick grapefruit from September to November—a full two months earlier than normal—by ripening them with lead arsenate.

A combination of lead and arsenic, it is used on 30% of Florida's grapefruit crop. The resulting grapefruits contain average lead levels of 170 parts per billion (ppb), compared with the new drinking water standard of 15ppb. What's more, residues of inorganic arsenic average 130ppb in fruit and 50ppb in the juice, both of which exceed drinking water standards.

Lead causes brain damage and mental and physical growth retardation in children.

Arsenic is a known carcinogen and causes severe nervous disorders, and is a gastrointestinal, kidney, liver, and blood toxin.

The Environmental Protection Agency has been conducting a ten-year "Special Review" of the use of lead arsenate. However, results of the study are not expected to be released until the current supply of the toxin has been "consumed". Since the EPA has been asleep at the wheel, the National Coalition Against the Misuse of Pesticides (NCAMP) has been urging consumers to not buy grapefruit until the main crop comes in December. It probably wouldn't hurt to let the produce people at your local market know how much you appreciate having been spared the difficulties of knowing your fresh produce has been ripened with lead arsenate. [End quoting]

In carrying out the agenda items of their precious New World Order, the so-called "elite" use a variety of mechanisms to covertly get rid of a lot of us "useless eaters", as they have called us. One of the easiest ways of accomplishing that is through the intermediary of poisoning our food; and the greed factor is always to be counted upon to insure various puppets carry out the actual dirty work. Don't you wonder, sometimes, how ones like these growers can sleep at night while poisoning their own families and friends?

And while we're on the subject of being poisoned by your favorite food or drink, how about the following to melt your ice cubes:

HAZARDS OF CONSUMING "THE REAL THING"

From investigative journalist Ingri Cassel <vaclib@coldreams.com>, 1/27/01: [quoting]

Cannot verify ALL of the following, but I do know that the last four items regarding Coke are correct. — Ingri

Do we wonder why our health is in trouble? Coca-Cola says that over 834 million of their drinks are consumed every day. Americans now consume in excess of 50 gallons of sodas a year, and only 40 gallons of water per year.

The brown coloring in sodas is more of a problem than the sugar! The THI in Coke is the acronym for the brown coloring. Coca-Cola has a patent on THI. However, it isn't just a food-coloring agent—the patent on THI is for its ability to suppress the immune system! They are experimenting with transplant patients.

It should be noted that virtually all dark-colored sodas use Coca-Cola's patented coloring agent THI. If you must drink them, stay with clear sodas. However, the carbonation in sodas will leach calcium from your body.

Did you know that: To carry Coca-Cola syrup (the concentrate) the commercial truck must use the "Hazardous Material" placards reserved for Highly Corrosive materials?

- Coke will dissolve a nail in about 4 days.
- The distributors of Coke have been using it to clean the engines of their trucks for about 20 years!

- You can put a T-bone steak in a bowl of coke and it will be gone in two days.

- To clean a toilet: Pour a can of Coca-Cola into the toilet bowl, let the "real thing" sit for one hour, and flush.

PASS THE COCA-COLA, PLEASE!

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 12/13/00: [quoting]

From Bob Barnes, <bbarnes@fwi.com>

Just when you thought you knew everything:

1. In many states the Highway Patrol carry two gallons of Coke in the trunk to remove blood from the highway after a car accident.

2. You can put a T-bone steak in a bowl of Coke and it will be gone in two days.

3. To clean a toilet: Pour a can of Coca-Cola into the toilet bowl. Let the "real thing" sit for one hour, then flush clean.

4. The citric acid in Coke removes stains from vitreous china.

5. To remove rust spots from chrome car bumpers: Rub the bumper with a crumpled-up piece of Reynolds Wrap aluminum foil dipped in Coca-Cola.

6. To clean corrosion from car battery terminals: Pour a can of Coca-Cola over the terminals to bubble away corrosion.

7. To loosen a rusted bolt: Applying a cloth soaked in Coca-Cola to the rusted bolt for several minutes.

8. To remove grease from clothes: Empty a can of Coke into a load of greasy clothes, add detergent, and run through a regular cycle. The Coca-Cola will help loosen grease stains. (It will also clean road haze from your windshield.)

FOR YOUR INFORMATION:

1. The active ingredient in Coke is phosphoric acid. Its pH is 2.8. It will dissolve a nail in about 4 days.

2. To carry Coca-Cola syrup (the concentrate) the commercial truck must use the "Hazardous Material" placards reserved for highly corrosive materials.

3. The distributors of Coke have been using it to clean the engines of their trucks for about 20 years.

RIGHT TO CARRY LAWS IN THE U.S.

From FREE AMERICAN NEWSMAGAZINE, Jan. 2001: [quoting]

States where citizens have the Right to Carry have a 24% lower total violent crime rate, a 19% lower homicide rate, a 39% lower robbery rate, and a 19% lower aggravated assault rate than the national average. You and your loved ones will be safer, even if you don't own or carry a gun.

American citizens use personal firearms more than 2 million times each year to deter criminals—usually without firing a single shot.

Sixty percent of the population of the United States live in a right-to-carry state. Only seven states do not allow any form of concealed carry. With the recent passage of Right to Carry in Michigan, Ohio is now surrounded by states that allow citizens to carry concealed. Where do you think Michigan's criminals will go now?

Ohioans for Concealed Carry, P.O. BOX 25466, Cleveland, Ohio 44125, <www.ohioccw.org>. [End quoting]

While we here at The SPECTRUM do not advocate gun use, there are ample statistics which show that when criminals are forced to consider the fact that we MAY possess guns, they are much less likely to attack us in any way—this fact, unfortunately, also includes the deterring of a multitude of white-collar criminals working as government agents of all types.

Uppity governments have always felt a bit inconvenienced about imposing tyranny until guns are removed from the populace. For example:

TO THE PEOPLE OF CANADA AND THE MEDIA

From an e-mail communication relayed via a longtime SPECTRUM reader and supporter: [quoting]

I am not a gun owner, and I am not a member of any political party, but there are a few facts that Federal Liberal M.P.s are deliberately hiding from Canadians concerning gun registration.

Fact:

In 1965 the Federal Government signed an agreement with the United Nations, stating that at the first opportunity, all law-abiding Canadians will be disarmed.

Fact:

The Canadian Government then passed a law in secret (order in council) called bill C-124 giving them the right to confiscate anything of value without compensation.

Fact:

There are now four unconstitutional secret police forces in Canada. They are: Canadian Security Intelligence Service (C.S.I.S), Emergency Task Force (E.T.F.), Communications Security Establishment (C.S.E.), and the Canadian Institute for International Affairs (C.I.I.A.). All of them are in violation of the Constitution (the supreme law of Canada) which states: "it is illegal for politicians to spy on law abiding citizens". The total cost to taxpayers for the four illegal secret police forces and the thousands of riot police is classified information, but is reported to be around $2 billion a year.

Fact:

At the military base just outside Meaford, Ontario, corrupt liberal politicians have just secretly finished building an INTERNMENT CAMP that can accommodate over 1 million people. Total cost to the taxpayer is classified information. How many more internment camps are there in Canada?

Fact:

Our very own Armed Forces are working with outdated equipment and 40-year-old helicopters, which are little more than death traps. What is their mandate? To fight and defend the democratic rights of the people from enemies inside or outside of Canada?

Fact:

The four illegal police forces and the thousands of riot police have the finest equipment money can buy, including brand new helicopters. What is their mandate? To intimidate and control the people for the federal liberal government?

Fact:

The international bankers' Manifesto of the 1930s states: "When, through process of law (gun registration), people have been disarmed, they will be more docile and more easily governed by their politicians and the strong arm of the law (judges and police). This is well known among our principal men engaged in forming an organisation (United Nations) of international bankers to govern the world, thus by discreet action and through the power of money will control the world."

Fact:

There are over 2000 illegitimate criminal judges in Canada, every one of them were appointed by a politician. Section 97 of the Constitution states: "In English Canada, judges are to be selected by the bar in the province in which they live, and appointed by an independent Governor General."

Fact:

Illegitimate judges are not paid $174,000 per year and a big fat pension to safeguard the democratic rights of the people; they are there to control the people for their political masters.

When you put all the pieces of this well-thought-out plan in place:

- gun registration,
- signing illegal agreements with the United Nations,
- passing laws in secret (Bill C-124),
- unconstitutional secret police forces,
- internment camps,
- illegitimate judges,
- riot police,
- international bankers' Manifesto, there will not be any doubt in anyone's mind that the liberal government has a "hidden agenda", and that is to curtail the rights and freedoms of the people. Once the firearms have been registered, we will be well on the way to a Police State.

Every federal liberal MP is well aware of the facts contained in this letter. Two questions each of us should ask ourselves:

1. Why would you vote for a liberal politician (or any other politician) who is withholding this information from you?
2. If your liberal politician (or any other politician) wants to play the "dumb act" by saying they don't know about the facts in this letter, then why would you vote for a liberal politician (or any other politician) who doesn't know what their political party is up to?

I would like to thank John Welham for his letter to the people of Canada. I personally share the same views as John and couldn't have said it any better in my own words. Thanks again, John.

For the past five years my company, Health & Wealth Promotions, has been educating people on Health Issues, Political Issues, and Taxation. I personally take great pride in educating people on the real issues affecting society today. I hope these facts upset you enough to take a stand—not only towards the liberal government, but any government in the past and in the future to be accountable for their actions. We-the-people ARE the government. The politicians we put in place should act on OUR behalf, not theirs.

Of course this same New World Order agenda is being imposed upon the United States. Some parts of the overall plan are further along than others. And even though it is being conducted with a high degree of "stealth" so as not to awaken the sleeping masses, more and more people ARE becoming aware of the situation anyway. Things are going to be getting quite interesting—in terms of a clash—before very much longer.

I AM A FATHER

From the INTERNET, from "Mary" <msnell@txk.net>, 1/31/01:

Little Johnny got on a bus and sat down next to a man. He noticed that the man had a strange kind of shirt collar, so he asked him: "Excuse me, sir, but why do you have your shirt collar on backwards?" The priest smiled kindly and answered: "I wear this collar because I am a Father." Little Johnny thought a second and responded: "Sir, I have a father, but he wears his collar the other way around. Why do you wear your collar so differently?"

The priest thought for a minute, and said: "I am the father for many." Little Johnny quickly answered: "My father, too, is the father of many. He has four sons, four daughters, and many grandchildren. But he wears his collar like everyone else does. Why do you wear yours backwards?" The priest, flustered, said impatiently: "I am the father for hundreds and hundreds of people."

Little Johnny sat silently for a long time. As he got up to leave the bus, he leaned over to the priest and said: "Mister, maybe you should wear your pants backwards."

WHAT ABOUT MARS?

From the WORLDLINE NEWSLETTER, #1, for 9/20/96, courtesy of Calvin Burgin, <wrldline@texas.net>. Remember that this was written in 1996. [quoting]

Calvin Burgin, 404 Gate Tree Lane, Austin, TX 78745; an occasional private letter to friends to share some of the information that comes to me.

MARS, BARS, AND STARS

In Blackout, we wrote about Tesla and Marconi communicating with "Mars". Richard Hoagland recently has been in front-page headlines in other countries, talking about Mars and such, but was censored and suppressed in this country.

The latest in the Mars saga concerns the White House call-girl scandal that caused Dick Morris, Clinton's top campaign adviser, to quit in the beginning of the big campaign push. What does this have to do with Mars?

Think a minute. The Clinton White House is one of the, if not the, most corrupt ever. Call-girls are an open, "ho-hum", "secret" around there. Yet a tabloid (the Star) comes out with a call girl/politician scandal, the major media immediately pick-up on it, and promote the information before the tabloid is even released, and Clinton's campaign mastermind suddenly quits to go home and spend more time with his wife (and less with the call-girl?).

Think maybe there is more to this story? Perhaps the real reason is revealed in the Star story that tells that Morris let Rowlands (the call-girl) listen to some of his conversations with the President.

In addition to talking about things such as Clinton's red nose ("...he was taking medication for a skin condition"—a "skin condition" often caused by snorting coke) and such as secret deals with the Saudi Arabian royalty, the Star article said:

"Early last month, Morris told Rowlands about a 'military secret that only seven people in the world know about'—the discovery of life on Mars. Rowlands told STAR about that the next day—and it wasn't until a week later that NASA made the announcement and the rest of the world knew." (Star, Sept. 10, 1996, p. 8)

So what's the big deal? Use your head! A MILITARY SECRET? Why is life on Mars a MILITARY secret? Of what military significance is Mars? Reckon the troops on Mars would tell you? [End quoting]

Of course, officially we are still trying to find life on ANY other planet, and we're still listening for any kind of communication from "life out there".

And then there's the recurring question of why we haven't been back to the Moon. Were we kicked off by those who didn't particularly enjoy our company or our TRUE agenda for going there? And then there's the other point some make, that we never really went there at all, that the whole pageant was fabricated. There is an upcoming one-hour FOX Television special (first being aired on Thursday, 2/15/01, and probably repeated later on) which is promoted as: "Was the Moon landing 'a giant leap for mankind' or the biggest hoax of all time?" Things are getting interesting, aren't they?!

MICHIGAN OFFICIAL STANDS UP FOR PRIVACY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 1/22/01: [quoting] REGARDING BIG BROTHER

The Michigan secretary of state has sued the federal government for requiring residents to provide Social Security numbers when obtaining or renewing a driver's license, Associated Press reports. States are required to collect the numbers from licensed drivers to help track deadbeat parents. "I will not sit idly by while residents' privacy is invaded by an intrusive, ineffective, and unfunded mandate" said secretary of state Candice Miller. Michigan could lose $900 million in federal funds for failure to comply, the usual economic whip Washington bureaucrats use to bully states. [End quoting]

Thank God that there are a few officials (and the ranks are growing) in government positions who remember who they were elected to serve. Always it is the money "carrot" which the federal government uses to induce state cooperation. But how did the feds get that "bribe" money in the first place? Doesn't a lot of it flow from the states? Something to think about. (What was that about the tail wagging the dog?)

INSTRUCTIONS FOR LIFE IN THE NEW MILLENNIUM FROM THE DALAI LAMA

From the INTERNET, 12/31/00: [quoting]

This is what the Dalai Lama has to say on the Millennium, which begins 01/01/2001. All it takes is a few seconds to read and think about:

1. Take into account that great love and great achievements involve great risk.
2. When you lose, don't lose the lesson.
3. Follow the three Rs: respect for self, respect for others, responsibility for all your actions.
4. Remember that not getting what you want is sometimes a wonderful stroke of luck.
5. Learn the rules so you know how to break them properly.
6. Don't let a little dispute injure a great friendship.
7. When you realize you've made a mistake, take immediate steps to correct it.
8. Spend some time alone every day.
9. Open your arms to change, but don't let go of your values.

10. Remember that silence is sometimes the best answer.

THERMOMETER-BAN GROWING

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, February 2001: [quoting]

Mercury thermometers may soon be banned. The best friend of children who want to skip school, these fragile glass tubes are easily broken.

Environmentalists have convinced local officials in Boston, San Francisco, and several New England and Great Lakes states that spilled mercury finds its way into water.

Major drugstore chains say they will cooperate by replacing depleted stocks of mercury thermometers with electronic models.

Not just thermometers get broken and mercury spills out, but the many fluorescent light tubes broken in trash dumpsters each day spread dangerous mercury around.

In 30 seconds this dressing room knows what fits best. Computerized tailors are coming to a dressing room near you.

Created by Telmat Industrie of France, they scan your body with a 3D camera, and make measurements more accurate than a human tailor. One version, SizeMatch, prints out a list of suggested sizes. Optifit, a more sophisticated version, creates instructions for a computerized cutting machine used to make custom clothes.

Both systems will arrive in the United States this year. [End quoting]

JOURNEY TO THE HEART

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 1/11/01: [quoting]

"It has been said that the distance from the head to the heart is the longest journey there is. And yet, at the end of our journey to the heart, we find what really matters. Some call this the mystical experience. Here we find the gold at the end of the rainbow—an infinite supply. Here we find the Fountain of Youth that never runs dry. Here we find the Holy Grail with nectar so sweet; and the Ark of the Covenant is ours to meet. Here we find the Cities of Light as if born from a star; here we find who we really are. The roadmap to the "as within" knowing is a maze of clues; myriads of methods have been passed down through various lineages from generation to generation. This path takes us out of the realm of intellectual knowing; out of the realm of belief systems; out of the realm of worldly concerns. We leave everything behind, for once we arrive, we need nothing; everything that matters is provided."

If the love I have isn't working, what good is money?

So often we put externals first. Out of worry, out of fear, out of obligation, we think we're being good Puritans by saying no to what stirs us.

In the sixties, it was the well-known psychologist Abraham Maslow who conceived of a hierarchy of needs, in which he established that human beings must provide for basic physical needs, such as food and shelter, before they can attend to inner needs such as self-esteem and right relationship.

While this is in part true, I believe there is a dimension of the inner life that is as imperative and equivalent as food and shelter. Without these basic inner needs met, we are just fed and sheltered bodies, void of life. Without love, truth, and compassion, all the comforts of modern life don't matter, because we are simply reduced to biological machines, not even as present as animals.

Without this understanding, we often defer the risk to love: I need to establish myself before I can get involved. I need nice clothes first. I'll become physically desirable first. I'll eliminate all my problems first.

We also defer love once it is before us, under the guise of safeguarding our future: I won't call long distance now, because I'll need the money when I retire. I won't meet them at this concert now, because I'll need money for a new car in six years. I can't afford to enter counseling with my partner because we need storm windows. Certainly, we have to balance and make choices—but with no love in the house, there is no need for storm windows.

When I was ill, I faced the very real possibility of dying, and suddenly the little money I'd saved, however prudent I was, didn't matter. It was all worthless. It became immediately clear that the only true purpose of money was to help make love work. When ill, I didn't hesitate to make all those long distance calls I always put off. I met friends at concerts and bought albums and sent flowers instead of waiting for the perfect occasion. I bought plane tickets to the Caribbean for those closest to me—and we went!

Once well, I couldn't go back to deferring my life under the guise of saving. I still save some, but now I feel compelled to use whatever money I can afford to make love work, to bring truth into being, to allow generosity and compassion to flourish. This is more than altruistic. It is necessary in being fully alive. It's part of the wood that keeps the inner fire burning.

I am now forced to ask, beyond rent and health insurance, for what are we saving? If the love we have is not brought to life out here in the world, we risk saving for a future that may never come, or which, in fact, may find us just ghosts of spirit, unable to live it, because we've squandered our chances to love along the way.

* Sit quietly and meditate on the love you carry for someone dear.

* Breathe deeply and allow yourself to feel that love and how it wants to express itself now.

* Without hurting yourself—without borrowing on your rent or spending money you don't have—act on the love you feel now.

Do not defer it's expression. Call. Send flowers. Gas up the car and go! [End quoting]

THE WOODEN BOWL

A frail old man went to live with his son, daughter-in-law, and four-year old grandson. The old man's hands trembled, his eyesight was blurred, and his step faltered. The family ate together at the table. But the elderly grandfather's shaky hands and failing sight made eating difficult.

Peas rolled off his spoon onto the floor. When he grasped the glass, milk spilled on the tablecloth. The son and daughter-in-law became irritated with the mess. "We must do something about Grandfather" said the son. "I've had enough of his spilled milk, noisy eating, and food on the floor" said the daughter-in-law.

So the husband and wife set a small table in the corner. There, grandfather ate alone while the rest of the family enjoyed dinner. Since grandfather had broken a dish or two, his food was served in a wooden bowl.

When the family glanced in grandfather's direction, sometimes he had a tear in his eye as he sat alone. Still, the only words the couple had for him were sharp admonitions when he dropped a fork or spilled food.

The four-year-old watched it all in silence. One evening before supper, the father noticed his son playing with wood scraps on the floor. He asked the child sweetly, "What are you making?" Just as sweetly, the boy responded, "Oh, I am making a little bowl for you and mama to eat your food when I grow up." The four-year-old smiled and went back to work.

The words so struck the parents that they were speechless. Then tears started to stream down their cheeks. Though no word was spoken, both knew what must be done. That evening the husband took grandfather's hand and gently led him back to the family table. For the remainder of his days he ate every meal with the family. And for some reason, neither husband nor wife seemed to care any longer when a fork was dropped, milk spilled, or the tablecloth soiled.

Children are remarkably perceptive. Their eyes ever observe, their ears ever listen, and their minds ever process the messages they absorb. If they see us patiently provide a happy home atmosphere for family members, they will imitate that attitude for the rest of their lives. The wise parent realizes that every day the building blocks are being laid for the child's future. Let's be wise builders and role models.

Expert Exposes Fraud And Greed

may befall other states in the months and years ahead.

Very few people give any thought to turning on a light switch. But what happens when the power simply isn't there? For many people it has been a strange and frightening condition to deal with firsthand.

Who are the most affected by the looming higher energy costs? The elderly, who are on fixed incomes, and the poor, who can afford it least, are the most impacted by these recent events. At the moment, the state of California is caught between a rock and a very hard place, hanging its head in shame as the main suppliers of electrical energy to the state, Southern California Edison and Pacific Gas & Electric (PG&E), claim to be on the verge of bankruptcy. And yet the cash flow "sleight-of-hand" that has been pulled-off by the power company executives, right under the noses of the politicians (who are no angels themselves), gives a whole new and more sophisticated meaning to the word embezzlement.

The state of California was bailed out by the feds in a recent move by President George Bush, which offered a temporary band-aid to the growing energy wound. The Bush administration extended "emergency orders" designed to keep power flowing to the Golden State until February 7, but added that this extension would be the state's last. Various court orders have acted as band-aid extensions of that "dark" (pun intended) date, but for how long? Southern California Edison warned of a "clear and present danger" of widespread blackouts when seeking a 30% rate increase recently in a Los Angeles federal court.

Guess who ultimately pays for that rate increase? And where do you think all the cumulative utility company profits have gone that would otherwise have "cushioned" the present fishy cash-flow deficit? And was the "deregulation" of only PART of the industry doomed to obvious failure (engineered on purpose) from the start? And by the way, just how much does it really cost to generate the electricity we are now being asked to pay even more for—whether directly (through rate increases) or indirectly (through the bleeding of our tax dollars to prop-up the financial infrastructure of the utilities)?

Roughly 90% of the burden of purchasing power has now shifted to the state: "If current patterns continue, the Department of Water Resources would be paying roughly $40 million for power each weekday and $30 million on each weekend day." This means the $400 million which has recently been legislatively allocated by the state is going fast.

Before turning to my interviewee, who will enlighten us about the racket being inflicted on the public, we have to set the stage of criminals and victims for this "crisis" that could easily affect the entire nation. There are several pieces to the story and these must be presented first in order to more fully appreciate what is discussed later on.

Let's start with the following:

CALIFORNIA GOVERNOR GRAY DAVIS' STATE-OF-THE-STATE ADDRESS

On January 9, California Governor Gray Davis made his State Of The State address. In this speech he said, concerning the energy crisis facing the state:

[QUOTING]

You are all aware of the basic facts. In 1996, the Legislature and the Governor launched an untested restructuring of California's electricity market.

Under their plan, our three investor-owned utilities—Pacific Gas & Electric, Southern California Edison and San Diego Gas & Electric—were forced to sell off their generating capacity to unregulated private companies.

And the price of electricity—long regulated by the California Public Utilities Commission—was to be set instead in a free-wheeling commodities market.

Now, our job today is not to engage in an ideological debate over the pros and cons of deregulation. I'm not here to point fingers or assign blame, and I assume the proponents of deregulation really did envision lower energy costs and smaller electricity bills. They certainly didn't plan for this mess.

But we must face reality: California's deregulation scheme is a colossal and dangerous failure. It has not lowered consumer prices. And it has not increased supply. In fact, it has resulted in skyrocketing prices, price-gouging, and an unreliable supply of electricity. In short, an energy nightmare.

Well, my friends, it's time to wake up.

The out-of-state generators who bought most of our utilities' power plants, are now charging California several hundred percent more for wholesale electricity than we paid just one year ago.

Senator Dianne Feinstein and I have repeatedly urged the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to use its exclusive powers to lower these record prices. But despite our repeated demands, it has shirked its responsibility to protect ratepayers from this legalized highway robbery.

In fact, this Commission made matters worse when, in December, they lifted the hard price cap, causing the average price per megawatt hour to increase by nearly 900 percent compared to the same month the year before. That's like paying 25 dollars for a three-dollar gallon of milk.

Another problem with the California deregulation scheme is, we have lost control over our own power. We have surrendered the decisions about where electricity is sold—and for how much—to private companies with only one objective: maximizing unheard-of profits.

On many days, 10 to 12 percent of the electricity generated in California leaves our state in search of even more exorbitant prices. On some occasions, the merchant generators have brought the State to the very brink of blackouts by refusing to sell us back our own power because they could find higher prices elsewhere.

Think about it: they're refusing to sell us our own power.

Worst of all, there's evidence that some generators may be purposely withholding electricity from the California grid to create artificial scarcity which, in turn, drives up the price astronomically.

My friends, electricity is not an exotic commodity like pork bellies, to be traded in the chaotic equivalent of a futures market.

No, my friends, electricity is a basic necessity of life. It is the very fuel that powers our high-tech economy.

And make no mistake: We will regain control over the power that's generated in California and commit it to the public good.

Never again can we allow out-of-state profiteers to hold Californians hostage. Never again will we allow out-of-state generators to threaten to turn off our lights with the flip of a switch.

In the plan that I propose today, we will attack the problems of supply and price over the short and long term.

As a down payment on this emergency effort, I've set aside $1 billion in my budget to help stabilize the supply and price of electricity in the present, and help provide new power generation to meet the demands of the future.

In the days that follow, I will ask you to pass legislation to take these immediate steps:

- One, restructure the governing boards of the system operators so we can replace the current advocates for the energy companies with advocates for the public.

- Two, overhaul the crazy bidding process for electricity, which currently guarantees that every generator is paid according to the highest bid, rather than their own bid.

- Three, streamline the process for utilities to enter into low-cost, long-term contracts for electricity and then apply pressure to the out-of-state generators to supply that power.

- Four, provide State regulatory agencies with authority to order any functioning generating facility down for “unscheduled maintenance” to go back on line.

- Five, give the Public Utilities Commission 50 new inspectors to monitor—and stand guard if necessary—at any facility suspected of deliberately withholding power from the grid.

- Six, make it a criminal act to deliberately withhold power from the grid—if it results in imminent threat to public health or safety.

- Seven, expand the authority available to the Governor under a state of emergency in the event of imminent power outages.

- Eight, provide $4 million to the Attorney General to investigate and prosecute possible racketeering, market manipulation, price fixing, and other potential violations by merchant generators.

These generators may be acting within the law. But if they’re illegally gaming or manipulating the market, the Attorney General will track them down.

These steps we must take immediately.

But, soon thereafter, we must do the following:

Repeal the law that allows the three major utilities to sell their remaining generating facilities. Instead, we must require them to hold-on to those facilities and sell their power to California consumers.

We must also require our municipal utilities to sell their excess power to California consumers at reasonable rates. Currently, they are free to sell their power out of state.

Next, I am calling on California to flex the enormous clout we have as consumers. We are 34 million strong and the sixth largest economy in the world. By reducing our electricity demand—by even a small amount—we can reduce the price, avoid shortages, and lower energy bills.

So, tonight, I’m asking every Californian to cut consumption by as much as 8 percent, and we will back that up with a $250-million investment. We’ll supply cash incentives for replacing inefficient refrigerators, washers, and air conditioners with more efficient models. And we’ll create energy-smart homes, schools, workplaces, and communities.

Every day, every Californian can contribute to the solution by turning off lights and appliances when not in use, shifting their usage to off-peak times, using less heat and air conditioning, reducing outdoor lighting displays, and turning off business equipment when it’s not in use. (For example, putting a computer on sleep mode can reduce energy consumption by 40 percent.)

The state will lead by example. Every single day, state government will cut its consumption by at least 8 percent. During stage-2 alerts, we’ll save 20 percent.

Now, to California’s consumers and businesses, let me be clear: our goal is to provide reliable, reasonably priced energy to power the homes and businesses of this great state.

To utilities and the financial community, let me say this: I reject the irresponsible notion that we can afford to allow our major utilities to go bankrupt. Our fate is tied to their fate. Bankruptcy would mean that millions of Californians would be subject to electricity blackouts. Public safety would be jeopardized. Businesses would close. Jobs would be lost. Investment would flee the state. And our economy would suffer a devastating blow.

To my colleagues in the Legislature, I say this: we’ve met many challenges before. Together, we will meet this challenge and meet it quickly.

I will work with the Legislature, the consumers, and the business community to address the financial condition of our utilities in the long term.

There is no easy solution. But, if I have to use the power of Eminent Domain to prevent generators from driving consumers into the dark and utilities into bankruptcy—then that’s what I will do.

All these measures I’m proposing will provide relief in the short term. But, to build a reliable long-term supply of electricity, we must plan and invest now for the future.

For the twelve years before I took office, this state failed to build a single major power plant—not one. Those days are long gone.

Since April 1999, my Administration has licensed nine new power plants. Five are under construction as we speak.

But many more must be built to serve our growing population.

We must also provide low-interest financing for new peaking facilities and the “re-powering” of existing ones to make them cleaner and up to 40 percent more efficient. In return, these facilities must commit their power to California at a reasonable rate.

Next, we must expand the generating capacity under the control of the Department of Water Resources. And we’ll require all 141 campuses of the University of California, the State University system, and the Community Colleges to move toward energy independence through co-generation and other means.

And, we will develop means of committing state-owned lands for the siting of generating plants on the condition that the energy be distributed in California.

These are important steps.

But there’s no point in building more plants in our state if the electricity will flow out of our state.

The time has come to take control of our own energy destiny.

And that will require either a joint powers authority among the state and our 30 municipal utilities to develop the additional power we need, or a California public power authority that can buy and build new power plants.

I will work with the Legislature to determine which option will work best for California consumers and businesses. I’m not interested in utopian proposals. I want ideas that will work in the real world.

The remedies I am proposing tonight are reasonable and necessary under the present extraordinary conditions. But, as I said before, everyone should understand that there are other, more drastic measures that I am prepared to take if I have to.

Now, as important as the energy situation is, we cannot and will not allow it to overwhelm the many other important challenges and opportunities facing California.

We have proven that by placing the common good ahead of partisan advantage, we can develop practical solutions on the issues that confront the people of California.

And that is exactly what we will do again this year.

My friends, we have a special responsibility to the citizens of California. They don’t expect government to address every issue on the planet Earth. They only demand three things: fix what’s broken, improve what’s ailing, and leave the rest alone.

Together, we have demonstrated that it matters not whether an idea comes from a Republican or a Democrat. What matters is whether that idea is right or wrong—and whether it works.

[END QUOTING]

Of course on the surface we see astonishing greed and a calculated “take advantage” attitude on the part of the electricity generation faction. On the one hand, their posture seems overly bold, and thus bound to awaken the people to the point that the politicians have to step in—or risk lynching. On the other hand, is this actually an event calculated to act as the focus for promoting a more sinister, hidden agenda—such as precipitating Martial Law or being the scapegoat for an upcoming planned stock market crash? When you’re playing around with a commodity as fundamental to basic public welfare as is the availability of electricity, it is clear that there can be many layers/levels of manipulation.

Let's turn now to an article appearing in the January 17 edition of the Sacramento Bee, written by Dale Kasler, Emily Bazar, and Edie Lau. The following are excerpts from that piece:

[QUOTING]

California's energy crisis lurched toward disaster Tuesday, as two major utilities were pushed to the absolute edge of bankruptcy and power generators took a dim view of the state's plan to go into the business of buying electricity.

While another stage-3 power alert came and went without any rolling blackouts, and the Assembly prepared to pass a bill authorizing the state to buy electricity on the utilities' behalf, efforts to resolve the financial crisis were jolted when Southern California Edison defaulted on $596 million worth of payments to wholesale power generators and bondholders.

Southern California Edison's decision to default prompted Wall Street to downgrade Edison's and Pacific Gas and Electric Co.'s credit ratings to junk-bond status, crippling their ability to purchase electricity from wholesalers or borrow more money.

Without some sort of rescue from the Legislature, officials of PG&E predicted they would be unable to buy enough wholesale electricity today to meet all customer demands.

"We don't have the cash to buy any more power. No one will sell to us" PG&E chief counsel Bill Manheim told a special state Assembly committee. "The consequence of that is that generators will not sell to PG&E starting (today)."

Gov. Gray Davis' office said it would ask federal officials to expand an emergency order requiring power generators to sell electricity in the state. The current order, which expires at midnight, compels some companies to sell a limited amount of power. [As stated previously, the Bush administration extended the order until February 7.]

Wholesale suppliers, who generate roughly half of California's electricity, indicated they would still be willing to sell to Edison and PG&E—as long as the Legislature came up with a viable solution to the crisis.

But as the Assembly prepared to vote on such a measure late Tuesday, the wholesalers suggested they were disappointed with the plan, which calls for the state Department of Water Resources to buy power from the wholesalers at no more than 5.5 cents per kilowatt hour.

Most wholesalers consider that price way too low. In some cases, utilities have been purchasing power for 30 cents per kilowatt hour on the spot market.

"You will get some bids (from wholesalers), but it won't be anywhere near what the state needs to solve its short-term problems" said Gary Ackerman, director of the wholesalers' association, the Western Power Trading Forum.

"It's discouraging" said Susan Abbott of Moody's Investors Service, one of the leading Wall Street credit agencies. "The question for California is: When do the lights go out?"

Intended to take advantage of the state's strong credit rating, the legislative proposal would allow the state to enter into long-term contracts to purchase power and ultimately deliver it to consumers directly when necessary.

Despite complaints from lawmakers and consumer activists that the Assembly was acting too hastily, Assemblyman Fred Keeley, D-Santa Cruz, said the body needed to take action immediately to assure skittish power generators and consumers.

"We will, as the state, assure that energy continues to be provided to consumers in California, that we simply won't let the lights go out" Keeley said.

While a more thorough deliberation is scheduled to take place in the Senate over the next 10 days, the hastily drafted bill under consideration Tuesday, AB 1x, would authorize the state Department of Water Resources to enter into long-term contracts to purchase electricity and deliver it directly to consumers if need be.

The length of the contracts is not specified in the bill, but Keeley said the state envisions purchasing about one-third of the power that PG&E and Edison provide to their customers, or roughly 64 billion kilowatt hours per year. The bill would give the Department of Water Resources the authority to borrow money—estimated at up to $400 million—from the state general fund for start-up costs.

Because PG&E and Edison are in danger of going broke, wholesalers and independent marketers are increasingly reluctant to bring power into the state, exacerbating the supply situation.

Manheim said it was no coincidence that a stage-3 was declared the same day Edison and PG&E entered junk-bond status.

"The willingness of the generators to sell depends on the creditworthiness of the buyers" the PG&E lawyer told the Assembly committee.

For the past week or so, the wholesalers have indicated a willingness to practice "forbearance" or patience in collecting on the billions of dollars they are owed by PG&E and Edison. That fragile agreement was jeopardized by Edison's debt default.

Wholesale generators, while not shutting the door on the two utilities, indicated they were beginning to lose patience. Ackerman said generators might accept a one-week delay in receiving payment from the utilities—an idea floated by Edison. But some of the wholesalers were grumbling about a lack of progress in Sacramento and the imposition of a 5.5 cent purchase price on power.

"We're open to positive solutions, concrete solutions" said spokesman Richard Wheatley of Houston's Reliant Energy Inc., a wholesaler that supplies 6 percent of California's electricity. "So far, we are not seeing a whole lot of concrete solutions."

The chief executive of Houston-based Dynegy Inc., which supplies 5 percent of California's electricity, threatened in a Los Angeles Times interview to drag the two companies into bankruptcy proceedings, although an Edison source said the Dynegy chief was backing away from that statement. Dynegy officials couldn't be reached for comment.

Even if the wholesalers are willing to do business with California, the bond default by Edison will continue to complicate matters because it will make banks and other institutions even more reluctant to give the two utilities any new loans, said Shawn Burke of the Wall Street bond firm Barclays Capital.

Edison, in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, served notice that it has “temporarily suspended payment” on $596 million in debts due Tuesday—$230 million to bondholders, $151 million to some power wholesalers, and $215 million to the California Power Exchange, the quasi-public entity through which the utilities buy about 30 percent of their wholesale supplies.

Edison said that even though it has nearly $2 billion in cash, it decided to withhold those payments “so that it can continue to provide service to its customers.”

Otherwise, at the rate it is going, it will run out of cash by February 2, the company’s filing said.

Moody’s quickly downgraded Edison to junk bond status, while Standard & Poor’s placed PG&E on a similar footing, reasoning that PG&E is essentially facing the same crisis as Edison, even though it has not yet defaulted.

[END QUOTING]

So we basically have a stand-off between those private enterprises which will supply electricity at highly inflated rates, and those who refuse to pay those inflated rates and have asked the state government to step in and cap the out-of-control situation.

For still more revealing insights, let’s now look at excerpts from another story in the Sacramento Bee, written by Carrie Peyton for the January 25 edition:

[QUOTING]

While Pacific Gas and Electric Co. was blasting wholesalers for charging whatever the market would bear, it began pricing electricity generated by its own plants at five times what it cost to produce.

The new price, which PG&E told state regulators it began using Friday, will not be passed on to consumers while rates are frozen.

However, consumer advocates fear the figure could become a bargaining chip in efforts to raise rates later.

In a letter filed at the state Public Utilities Commission last week, PG&E said that for accounting purposes, it will now price the power from its nuclear and hydroelectric plants at 15 cents per kilowatt-hour.

PG&E picked 15 cents a kilowatt-hour because that is a price cap proposed by federal regulators. It can’t use its old formula because it was tied to Power Exchange prices and PG&E is no longer trading on the exchange. That price was sometimes lower and sometimes higher than 15 cents.

By comparison, industry officials say that hydroelectric plants in the West generally cost about 1 cent per kilowatt-hour to produce, and previous PUC analyses have pegged PG&E’s nuclear costs at less than 3 cents a kilowatt-hour.

Until the PUC rules otherwise, PG&E said, it would use the 15-cent price to update its regular financial reports to regulators. The PUC on Wednesday told PG&E it can’t make such changes so abruptly and must bring up the matter in ongoing hearings. The figure would be woven into numerous accounts the PUC uses to review utility costs and expenses.

“Where do they get the nerve? How could anyone take this seriously?” said Mike Florio, an attorney for The Utility Reform Network who has just been appointed to a new board to oversee state grid operations.

PG&E said it is following PUC rules and offering a “placeholder” price, subject to refund, for the electricity produced by its plants.

“This isn’t revenue that we ever expect to receive” utility spokesman John Nelson said. Using a 15 cents per kilowatt-hour price, he said, is a simple accounting change that PG&E expects regulators to revise later as part of an overall solution to California’s power problems.

The costs in PUC tracking accounts are also important because they feed into a running dispute over just how badly utilities are in the hole. PG&E and Southern California Edison say they have paid out nearly $12 billion more for wholesale power than they have collected in rates, but that includes at least $5 billion for power produced by their own plants.

But consumer advocates at the PUC said PG&E could have used its own cost—less than 3 cents a kilowatt-hour—as the placeholder, and PG&E’s choice of 15 cents makes it likely the higher price will find its way into later PG&E revenue proposals.

“There’s all sorts of potential things they could do down the road to profit” said Robert Kinoshian, of the semi-autonomous PUC Office of Ratepayer Advocates.

New totals in PUC tracking accounts could become a basis for PG&E to argue that it is facing greater losses under deregulation or should get millions of dollars more for running the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant.

The price issue illustrates lingering questions about what will become of power plants still owned by utilities, while calls are mounting for the state to turn its back on deregulation.

AB 6x, passed by the Legislature and signed by Gov. Gray Davis last week, requires utilities to get state approval before they sell any more power plants. But it did not address the question of how their costs should be tracked.

More than 11,000 megawatts of hydroelectric and nuclear and coal-burning facilities are still owned by PG&E and Edison.

During negotiations over the electricity crisis that has triggered rolling blackouts and wildly bucking wholesale prices, lawmakers, consumer groups, and others have viewed the remaining utility plants as one potential escape valve.

About half of the plants once owed by

PG&E and Edison were sold during the early phases of deregulation to new owners who in turn sold large chunks of their output to electricity traders. As a result, traders and plant owners now control enough generation that they can raise prices steeply when supplies are short.

Regulators and others have suggested some lower cost supplies could be guaranteed by taking the plants still owned by PG&E and Edison out of the pricey wholesale market.

Not so fast, is the message PG&E has repeatedly given the PUC. PG&E does not believe it has to go back to the old way of setting power prices—at cost plus a regulated profit margin—until the PUC lifts a state-ordered rate freeze, Nelson said.

“We have said, again and again, we are absolutely ready to pledge our generation at cost-based prices as part of a larger solution” said PG&E’s Nelson. But until other fixes are in place, he said, PG&E believes that the 1996 deregulation law requires that its plants be paid market rates.

It has offered to forego market prices, but only if the PUC approves what PG&E calls a “rate stabilization” plan that would increase residential rates up to 40 percent in the first year and allow up to 12 more rate hikes in the following four years. That request is still pending.

“God knows how much more time it will take” Nelson said. “In the meantime there needs to be a number and formula, and absent anything else, let’s just pick a public number.”

PG&E proposed the 15 cents a kilowatt-hour price because it can’t use its old formula, which was tied to Power Exchange prices, and PG&E is no longer trading on the Power Exchange.

In the complicated, interwoven accounts that had been used to calculate profits and expenses during a transition to what was supposed to be a fully competitive market, the 15-cent number could help PG&E in some instances but hurt it in others.

Nelson maintained that eventually the numbers would probably cancel each other out.

But Florio, of the San Francisco-based consumer group TURN, said the accounts would favor PG&E if the 15-cent proposal were accepted by regulators.

“It’s typical of the way PG&E has acted through this whole thing, and it’s why there hasn’t been any resolution. They continue to take these absolutely absurd positions” he said.

While PG&E said it doesn’t really want to collect 15 cents, Florio and others said choosing a number so much higher than production costs is worrisome, particularly while PG&E has been lobbying to preserve an old agreement that would allow it to pass along half of any above-cost profits on Diablo Canyon to its shareholders.

When toting up the costs of California’s power debacle, PG&E points out that it has spent $6.6 billion more on wholesale power between June and December than it has collected under frozen rates.

The utility does not promote—but will acknowledge when asked—that about $3.3 billion of the $6.6 billion represents power produced by its own plants.

[END QUOTING]

So we have a situation where even the in-house generation of power is being charged at an astonishingly high rate. Is this simply “riding the wave” of greed begun by the independent generation faction or something more? Remember that the superb movie Erin Brockovich was based on the brazen immorality of PG&E toward an entire town. In other words, is this—on top of everything else—a case of the pot calling the kettle black?

Excerpting from a January 25 Sacramento Bee story written by Dan Smith and Dale Kasler, we learn the following:

[QUOTING]

Power generators participating in an unusual electricity auction submitted sealed bids this week that Gov. Gray Davis and state officials believe could meet the state’s long-term power needs without raising electricity rates, the governor said Wednesday.

The results of the 27-hour bidding process—conducted Tuesday and Wednesday by the state Department of Water Resources—produced bids from 39 generators with a “weighted average” of 6.9 cents a kilowatt-hour, said Tom Hannigan, the department director.

That price is higher than the 5.5-cent maximum that Davis had claimed was necessary to avoid rate increases, but the governor and legislative leaders said they were hopeful further negotiations with generators and continuing with the process in reducing the cost of alternative types of electricity generation would allow the state to climb out of the energy crisis with the lights on and power rates stable for consumers.

Since the weekend, legislators have been locked in negotiations with a group of alternative energy providers—such as wind energy companies—who currently receive about 17 cents per kilowatt-hour for their electricity. Lawmakers are close to cutting a deal that would push the price down to less than 8 cents a kilowatt-hour.

Sources say Edison has contracted for the power at relatively attractive prices—as low as 6.5 cents a kilowatt hour. “Liquidation or auction of long-term electricity contracts held by (Edison) could worsen California’s state of emergency—increasing the potential for utility bankruptcy and increasing the likelihood of rolling blackouts” state Attorney General Bill Lockyer said in a court filing on Edison’s behalf.

PG&E, meanwhile, fearing that the power exchange is about to liquidate PG&E’s contracts, will go to court in San Francisco today, seeking a similar order blocking the liquidation.

[END QUOTING]

Themselves crying “foul” when these large utility companies are the recipients of their own games of greed is causing some embarrassing moments when the utilities have to admit their games of greed under public scrutiny.

Nowhere is this more insultingly apparent than in the following astonishing detective work about PG&E. This information is dated January 25, 2001 from the beyond-the-illusion.com Internet website:

STEALTHY DEAL PROTECTS PROFITS OF PG&E’S PARENTS

PG&E Corporation has quietly won approval from federal regulators to restructure itself in a way that shields the parent company’s profits, and shareholders, from the mounting debts of the utility it owns.

The move appears to allow Pacific Gas and Electric Company’s parent to record substantial profits while maintaining that its subsidiary, which supplies power to 4.5 million customers, is teetering on the edge of bankruptcy and trying to force ratepayers to pick up the tab.

The corporate restructuring, approved by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on Friday, came as a surprise to consumer advocates and state leaders dealing with the energy crisis—including Gov. Gray Davis. They have been working feverishly the past seven days to construct a deal that would alleviate debt pressure on PG&E and Southern California Edison by having the state of California buy power and provide it to the utilities at cost. Steve Moviglio, a spokesman for Davis, said the governor was displeased by PG&E’s move, although he said it was not likely to derail the state’s efforts to intervene in the crisis. He also said Davis was “disappointed that FERC acted in the middle of the night without notice to all parties.”

Ratepayer advocates and even some state officials have said that any aid to the ailing utilities should be offset by the huge profits that PG&E Corporation has made during the crisis from electricity generation and trading revenues. The money has certainly flowed in the other direction, they argue. In the past, PG&E Corporation has used revenues from the utility to pay down corporate debt, pay stock dividends, and buy assets in other states.

PG&E Corporation’s action appears to eliminate that possible means of paying off at least part of the $2 billion in debt incurred since November by its utility, Pacific Gas and Electric Company, as it bought power at prices higher than it can legally charge customers.

“It’s certainly a response to them feeling the threat that the holding company’s going to be held responsible for all this” said Bob Finkelstein, an attorney for the Utility Reform Network, an advocacy group.

Meanwhile, California’s energy crisis continued in full force yesterday, as the California Independent System Operator issued a Stage-Two emergency, meaning that demand had reached within 5% of the state’s electric supply, prompting requests to certain large users to shut down and conserve power. This occurred despite a national holiday, Martin Luther King Day, on which most businesses were closed and demand was forecast to reach about 30,000 megawatts, a fairly modest number.

Further, conditions appeared as if they were going to worsen imminently. Edison said it will be unable to pay bills coming due today, and PG&E said it has only about $500 million on hand to cover what it owes. Bankruptcy filings by both utilities appeared more likely.

State leaders were still in negotiations yesterday to broker a deal in which California’s Department of Water Resources would step in and buy power on behalf of the utilities, who are facing a growing inability to pay for their purchases. The talks were reported to be breaking down, however, because Davis refused to consider raising California rates or backing utility debts with a letter of credit from the state.

In San Francisco, state Senate President Pro Tem John Burton said legislation passed last week by the Assembly will probably make its way to the Governor’s desk by the end of the month. One bill would change the makeup of the boards that oversee the state’s power market, and the other would prohibit utilities from selling off their power-generating assets.

In the midst of yet another Stage-2 electrical emergency the Democratic leader said: “I want the people of California to have long, stable, available energy throughout the rest of our lives.” But in the short term, with the threat of rolling blackouts and urgent requests for power conservation, Burton stated the obvious: “Turn the goddamn lights off” he said.

NO CHALLENGES TO RESTRUCTURING

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approved PG&E’s restructuring plan on a 3-to-1 vote on Friday. It was apparently described in a December 28 Public Notice as a stock transfer, and thus flew under the radar screens of most observers. Details of the plan were first reported in the Wall Street Journal on Monday. Greg Pruett, a spokesman for PG&E Corporation, said the intent of the plan was merely to allow another unit of the corporate parent, National Energy Group, to receive its own credit rating that would be weighed independently of the troubled utility. But he acknowledged that all or nearly all of PG&E Corporation's assets outside the utility are held by National Energy Group and that the move would reduce the liability for the corporation. Although it was unclear whether PG&E informed state leaders of its plans, Pruett said the notice of the meeting was publicly available and had at least been provided to the Public Utilities Commission.

In addition to proceeds from the sale of power plants and other revenues that PG&E has forwarded on to its corporate parent, the utility has reaped windfall profits during the crisis from the generation and sale of electricity and has not applied those profits to its own debt. To do so would require an accounting rule change by the California Public Utilities Commission, but company officials have maintained that should not be done.

PG&E IN DEBT TO ITSELF

Critics say that PG&E is its own biggest debtor, with money flying out of one pocket and into the other, and that nearly half of its debt is owed to itself. In the third quarter of 2000, the company reported a 22% increase in profits, with a net income of $225 million, while saying it expected California consumers to eventually pick up the tab for its debt.

[END QUOTING]

Now go back and reread just the parts emphasized in bold—and watch your blood pressure go up!

So, the state is finding out just how nasty this game can be. Note that the “middle of the night” sneak tactics utilized here strongly suggest some big crooks in very high places are orchestrating this “emergency” for some agenda yet to unfold.

And lately both the public and the politicians are having to wrestle with the bold facts of the accounting game being played by the PARENT CORPORATIONS—which got their start and continual “fuel” from the utilities' cash flows from all those squeezed little rate-payers like you and me. After all, when you see what our interviewee has to say, later on, about actual power generation costs, even our current electric bills are a study in tremendous greed that is blindly accepted due to public ignorance of the facts.

Pay close attention, especially to the bold-emphasized sections, of the following, from the February 6, 2001 issue of the Los Angeles Times, by Michael A. Hiltzik, Times staff writer:

[QUOTING]

PUC MAY PROBE UTILITIES' RULE COMPLIANCE

Adding significantly to the financial and political risks facing California's three big utilities, the state Public Utilities Commission said Monday that it is considering whether the companies have violated the rules allowing them to diversify into unregulated businesses.

Starting in the mid-1980s, the PUC authorized the creation of holding companies, in which the utilities were relegated to the status of subsidiaries. The new companies were permitted to pursue other, unregulated businesses—as long as those activities did not compromise the utilities' ability to serve customers, and the capital needs of the utilities remained the top priority of the new corporations.

The PUC said that, at its regular meeting Thursday, it will consider investigating whether the companies—Southern California Edison, San Diego Gas & Electric, and Pacific Gas & Electric—have complied with those rules and whether the rules need to be rewritten. SCE formed its holding company, today known as Edison International, in 1988; SDG&E formed a company, later to be merged into Sempra Energy, in 1986; and PG&E formed PG&E Corporation in 1997.

It is unclear what remedies the PUC could impose if it did find that the utilities have violated the rules. Each time it approved the creation of holding companies, the commission reserved the right to reconsider its action “at any time when facts warrant such a change” presumably including rescinding the approvals. But that would lead to such major corporate upheavals that it probably is not practical.

Two independent audits of Edison and PG&E released by the PUC last week scrutinized the financial interrelationships between the utilities, their parents, and their unregulated corporate cousins. Among other things, the audits documented that, in recent years, almost all the net income of the parents was traceable to utility profits. The audits did not suggest there was anything improper in the relationships, however.

Moreover, the relationship between the utilities and parents has come under intense scrutiny in recent weeks, as state officials and the Legislature turn to whether and how to help Southern California Edison and Pacific Gas & Electric recover from their crushing debts. Among the issues is whether the parent corporations should be forced to contribute cash or assets to cover the $7.2 billion in net deficits the utilities have accumulated in the wholesale energy market over the last eight months.

The audits released last week showed that in the first two years of deregulation, Southern California Edison and Pacific Gas & Electric transferred billions of dollars in cash to their parents.

Much of that money represented “headroom”—the surplus generated by electricity rates fixed by the Legislature and the PUC when the cost of power was low. Under the terms of deregulation, the utilities were permitted to apply the surplus to their so-called “stranded costs”—uneconomical contracts with alternative energy producers and cost overruns on nuclear plant construction—at the end of every month. After those costs were completely paid off, but no later than March 2002, the rates were to be unfrozen.

The holding companies used the funds for traditional corporate purposes: They paid dividends to their own shareholders, implemented share repurchases, retired debt, and financed the purchase of assets for their unregulated subsidiaries.

That process meant, however, that when the cost of power soared well beyond what the utilities received from the frozen rates, as happened starting in May, the utilities had no cash reserve with which to cover the ever-mounting deficits.

No one, including the auditors, has suggested that the utilities did anything illegal or improper in transferring the sums. The transfers were done in accordance with procedures approved by the PUC and were disclosed in regular corporate filings to the Securities and Exchange Commission. But consumer advocates and some state legislators have argued that the transfers mean, in effect, that utility ratepayers covered the existing deficits in advance. To the extent the holding companies benefited from the transfers, they say, they should be required to repay the money in part by providing cash or assets to a recovery fund.

The holding companies have strongly resisted such suggestions [naturally], which they say would be tantamount to “confiscating” corporate assets to cover debts properly owed by utility customers [audacious nerve to have ratepayers finance outside corporate ventures while still keeping the utilities afloat].

But the companies, which maintain that their deficits are the result of market forces beyond their control, also are clearly sensitive about how these transfers are viewed by the public. [Translation: How boldly greedy can we be without going over the line to actual public riots.]

“There’s an idea out there that the parent-company shareholders have had this tremendous ‘windfall,’ so why should they be bailed out?” said Ron Olson, an attorney for Edison. “But ‘windfall’ and ‘bailout’ are loaded words.”

The complicated holding company structures were proposed by the utilities to facilitate their expansion into new businesses in areas not normally subject to PUC jurisdiction. These included, for example, investing in power plants outside the state.

Among other things, as Southern California Edison asserted before the PUC, the new structure would help ratepayers because it “minimizes the possibility of inadvertent subsidies between [the] regulated [utility] and unregulated businesses.”

But to win permission, the utilities had to promise that the ratepayers would continue to come first. “The capital requirements of the utility” the PUC wrote in its Edison approval decision, “...shall be given first priority” by the holding company’s board. Above all, the companies were to ensure that the utilities would never “subsidize” the outside businesses.

Since then, the financial relationships between the utilities and their parents have never been far from the PUC’s thoughts.

“This has been a continuing issue since the holding companies were formed” PUC Commissioner Carl Wood said.

It has gained in importance now that the utilities are deeply in debt after years of providing healthy cash infusions to the holding companies.

The audit of Edison by the accounting firm of KPMG showed, for example, that the cash fueling Edison International’s business growth from January 1996 through November 2000—including the first three years of deregulation—came almost entirely from the utility.

In that period, the auditors found, Edison International received $300 million in dividends from its unregulated businesses, which operated as Mission Group, but $4.7 billion from SCE. Over the same period, Edison International invested $2.5 billion in capital in Mission Group—apparently including as much as $400 million in equity—and only $153 million in SCE. Other than that, the audit found, “no significant funds” flowed from the parent to the utility in the five years under examination. A similar pattern existed at PG&E, according to its auditor, Barrington-Wellesley Group. From 1997 through 2000, the auditors said, some $4.6 billion flowed from Pacific Gas & Electric to its parent, which invested at least $800 million of it in its unregulated subsidiaries. No similar investment was made by the parent in the utility.

The parent even benefited from tax overpayments made by the utility. From 1997 through 1999, the auditors found, the utility overpaid PG&E Corporation $663 million for income tax it theoretically owed the government. The overpayment occurred because the utility calculated its own tax liability as though it were a stand-alone corporation. PG&E Corporation then made a second calculation of the entire holding company’s tax due, which turned out to be less than the utility’s figure. The holding company, however, pocketed the overpayment instead of refunding it to its utility subsidiary.

“Historically, cash has flowed in only one direction, from PG&E to PG&E Corporation, and then to the unregulated affiliates,” the auditors wrote.

These flows would not necessarily raise questions, were it not for the holding companies’ recent efforts to protect these unregulated businesses from the impact of the utilities’ woes. Both Edison and PG&E have instituted so-called “ring-fencing” provisions designed to prevent bankruptcy courts or anyone else from using the unregulated assets to cover the utilities’ debts. In Mission Group’s case, the protected assets include $895 million in cash the subsidiary held as of the end of November.

Consumer advocates have contended that these steps—taken in both cases after the utilities’ conditions were already dire—violate the PUC’s requirement in approving the holding companies: that they give “first priority” to the “capital requirements of the utility”.

“Our interpretation is that the holding company is entitled to benefit from cash generated by the utility until the utility needs it” said Matthew Freedman, an attorney for the Utility Reform Network. “That time is now.”

The companies, however, say the mandate applies only to the utilities’ capital expenditure programs—the construction of power plants, maintenance of equipment, and so forth—and does not require the parent to cover the utilities’ operating deficits.

[END QUOTING]

How’s that for making used-car salesmen look like choir boys? Of course the auditors would not have any opinions for this writer to quote—that’s not their job; their job is to uncover the FACTS of the cash flow. And, as you can plainly see above, those facts speak loud and clear for themselves!

Meanwhile, excerpting from another story in the January 25 edition of the Sacramento Bee, written by John Hill, we read the following, which hints that even the politicians feel out-of-their-league when dealing with the low tactics being pulled by these utility executives who are supposed to be acting in the public’s best interests:

[QUOTING]

In a tacit admission of the cutthroat nature of California’s electricity market, the newest player—the state—wants to protect itself from market manipulation by keeping secret how much it pays each day for electricity.

The state says that if power sellers know how much it is willing to pay, they will base their bids on that rate and refuse to go lower, said Mike Sicilia, a spokesman for the Department of Water Resources, the state agency in charge of buying electricity.

[END QUOTING]

So, with these far-from-saintly players now introduced and trying to dodge the spotlights on the playing field, let’s consider another part of the action. This part is being introduced so smoothly that one suspects the old “create a problem and then offer the solution” tactic is operating here. And yet, from a conventional perspective (that is, ignoring all the “free energy” devices that have been suppressed by the crooks in high places), the following is certainly a very plausible solution.

THE NUCLEAR OPTION

In an important article from Reuters, titled Record Gas Prices Breathe Life Into Nuclear Power, written by Joseph Silha and dated January 25, we read:

[QUOTING]

NEW YORK—Record high U.S. natural gas prices and power blackouts in California this winter have some thinking the unthinkable: Tapping nuclear power to meet the country's rapidly growing electricity needs.

While no one is expecting a raft of new nuclear power plants any time soon—none have been built here since 1978—the recent spike in gas prices has put nuclear power back in play.

Nearly every power plant being built here is gas-fired, boosting competition for already tight fuel supplies.

"One of the main things holding back nuclear power has been cheap natural gas, but with gas prices this high, the nuclear option is back on the table. People are running the numbers to see if it makes sense" said John Redding at General Electric's GE Nuclear Energy division in San Jose, California.

Twenty years ago the nuclear industry was plagued by cost overruns and safety concerns. Today, under better and safer management practices, nuclear power plants produce electricity about 90 percent of the time at a cost of 1.83 cents per kilowatt hour (KWh), outperforming fossil fuels like coal, oil, or natural gas.

"It does not make much sense to have all your energy eggs in one basket. We support a balanced approach to energy policy with a mix of fuels" said Vaughn Gilbert, public relations manager of British Nuclear Fuel's (BNFL) Westinghouse Electric Co. in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Industry experts expect most, if not all, of the nation's 103 nuclear plants to extend their operating licenses for 20 years. But some utilities are taking a further look at nuclear power, particularly if they are able to build at existing sites and use a standardized design that could streamline the lengthy licensing process and cut construction expenditures.

"The best place to go (to build) is where you already have sites. Those communities are generally supportive and the local work force is skilled" Westinghouse's Gilbert said. Westinghouse, one of the nation's largest suppliers of nuclear power products and services, had a standardized design for a 600 megawatt nuclear plant approved by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) in 1999.

NO GREENHOUSE GAS

Nuclear plants currently supply about 20 percent of the nation's power, with coal still the biggest provider at more than 50 percent. Gas comes in third at about 17 percent.

With stricter environmental laws likely to keep upward pressure on fossil fuel operating costs, analysts said nuclear power is likely to become increasingly competitive.

While the advantages of nuclear have always been obvious to some—cheap, stable fuel costs, and no greenhouse gas emissions—regulatory hurdles that drag out the permitting process and environmental concerns over disposing radioactive waste fuel still make nuclear a risky option.

But that may be changing. "The biggest hurdle is the uncertainty in the licensing process and we're working with the NRC to ensure that the licensing process is more efficient. We also hope to get a decision soon on a nuclear waste depository" said Marvin Fertel, senior vice president at the Nuclear Energy Institute (NEI), a Washington, D.C.-based policy organization for the nuclear power industry.

MAKING A BIG BET ON GAS

There are some 300,000 megawatts of proposed new power generation planned for this decade, almost all fueled by gas because it is considered environmentally-friendly and plant construction costs are cheaper than other alternatives. A new combined cycle gas-fired plant can be built for $500-600 per kilowatt and produce electricity at a total cost of 3.5-4.5 cents per KWh, assuming gas prices of $3-4 per million British thermal units (mBTU). But Henry Hub gas prices last year averaged more than $4 per mBTU and projections for 2001 are in the $5-6 range. In contrast, a new standard design nuclear plant can produce power at about 4.5 cents per KWh assuming capital costs of about $1,500 per kilowatt.

Some industry experts said power suppliers may be making a big bet on the clean-burning fuel that may not pay off, noting current growth rates in production and pipeline capacity may not keep up with rapidly rising gas demand.

MIX OF FUELS MAY BE THE ANSWER

GE Nuclear's John Redding said a mix of options, including nuclear, may be the more practical strategy to meet growing electric demand.

"I think what recent experience demonstrates is that there is an argument for a portfolio of different fuels. I still leave my (nuclear) order book at home, but we've had meetings with several U.S. utilities that are exploring their options" Redding said.

New Orleans-based Entergy Corp., the nation's third largest power producer, with more than 30,000 megawatts of generating capacity including eight nuclear units, agreed volatile gas prices have put nuclear power back in the mix.

"Certainly high gas prices improve the relative economic picture for a nuclear power plant. The volatility of gas prices gives validity to the need to have a mix of fuels with nuclear as part of it" said Diane Park, manager of communications for Entergy Nuclear Southwest, adding new nuclear construction was being looked at, but there were no definitive plans yet.

But some analysts said deep-seated public concerns about safety may be a roadblock to new construction. "I'm skeptical about the nuclear option. If gas prices stay high, utilities are going to look for something else, but it probably will be coal first. There's a lot of uncertainty about the public reaction to nuclear" said Joe Sannicandro, a director at Massachusetts-based consultants Cambridge Energy Research Associates (CERA).

[END QUOTING]

Indeed there are concerns about the safety of nuclear energy sources. Not the least of these apprehensions are the result of the same kind of "greed games" that drive Big Oil. However, they reappear as an attractive alternative for many in light of general public ignorance about "free energy" devices which have been kept from the public awareness (and access) by the crooks in high places for both business (greed) and control (power) reasons.

Certainly the recent energy "crisis" in California has awakened a wide variety of public concerns, not the least of which is the public's right to know and the public's right to maintain control over such a basic commodity of the common good.

In another article worthy of attention, appearing in the Sacramento Bee on January 15, written by James B. McClatchy and titled Energy Crisis Reminds Us Power Should Be Public, we see an awakening to this issue in the following excerpt:

[QUOTING]

The present electricity supply crisis in California should be a reminder that citizen ownership of electric utilities is the answer to the abuses that brought on the crisis in the first place. There is an inherent conflict of interest in parts of the energy business, between the best interests of our citizens and the best interests of utility companies.

The essence of the current problem is not complicated. Pacific Gas and Electric and Southern California Edison sold their generating facilities to other companies. The new owners of those generating facilities then sold blocks of electric power to brokers and businesses on the open market. Unfortunately for Joe Citizen, PG&E and Southern California Edison have had to buy back some of those blocks of electric power at open-market prices—rates vastly greater than what that energy previously cost to produce.

The result: a crisis for PG&E, a crisis for small business, a crisis for Joe Citizen—and a windfall of many millions of dollars for the brokers. What is wrong with this kind of business deal? For one, it violates one of the basic principles of sound business: Don't get involved in speculative, poorly analyzed, unproven ventures with people whose goals are unclear and where the final result is uncertain. Make sure the risks and rewards are understood.

In today's energy crisis, the business decision to sell generating facilities is exposed as appallingly bad. The California Public Utilities Commission, the Legislature, and others share responsibility for this, yet the responsibility—big as it is—is not the heart of the long-range issue.

That heart has two components. One is that the hard-working citizens and small businesses of California, along with major users, are faced with enormous increases in electricity prices, and the possibility of rolling power blackouts.

The second issue is that the utilities are faced with bankruptcy. The financial crises facing utilities can cause giant waves throughout the economy of the state. Stockholders face the likelihood that much, if not all, of their investment will vanish. Owners of utility bonds and bank loans face similar problems.

The ripples will continue to spread as the marketplace for electricity supply runs out of control.

[END QUOTING]

Meanwhile, on January 25, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, in speaking with members of the Senate Budget Committee, said that California's electricity crisis and rolling blackouts are "a significant problem that this country is going to have to address, and...rather quickly."

Greenspan went on to say: "It's scarcely credible that you can have a major economic problem in California which does not feed to the rest of the 49 states." He also said: "I think that the presumption that we can merely look at this as an issue which is going to get relatively easily resolved...is clearly mistaken."

In an article appearing in the January 28 edition of the Los Angeles Times, written by Stuart Silverstein and Marla Dickerson, California professionals brush aside dire warnings, as we see with the following excerpt:

[QUOTING]

Yet most of California's major economic forecasters dismiss the worst fears of consumers and businesses, and doubt the state will be ravaged again. What's more, forecasters don't see California falling into even a moderate recession this year, provided that political leaders devise a short-term fix to halt the rolling blackouts.

Their general assessment is that the energy crisis will translate into higher utility bills, a drain on the state treasury, or both. These economists say, however, the higher costs will be manageable for the overall economy.

The forecasters maintain that the recent strong momentum of California's economy, coupled with the big state budget surpluses, provide an important safety cushion.

[END QUOTING]

What will happen to the elderly on fixed incomes strapped with higher energy costs? What about the poor and unemployed? They seem to be just swept under the rug of political maneuvering and utility profiteering.

As a means of providing some basis for comparison, my family's home Southern California Edison electric bill in Tehachapi, California for the month of January indicates a "baseline" charge for electricity of 12.009 cents per kilowatt hour, with a charge over baseline of 14.157 cents. Additionally, on the bill is another $5.52 charge titled "Emergency Procurement Surcharge". And, again, what is the average person to do?

The Los Angeles Times, on February 2, ran a story titled "State Approves Bond Sale To Pay For Power", written by Dan Morain and Miguel Bustillo. Here are a few things they had to say, excerpted:

[QUOTING]

Bowing to the grim realities of California's energy crisis, Gov. Gray Davis signed legislation Thursday that authorizes the state to sell up to $10 billion in bonds—about $300 of debt for every person in the state—to buy electricity that private utilities can no longer afford.

Also, in a step that has few antecedents in peacetime, Davis issued an emergency order requiring California retailers to cut their outdoor lighting in half or face fines of up to $1,000 for every violation.

The legislation allows the state government to purchase about a third of California's total demand for electricity for years to come. Davis optimistically predicted that the new law will "allow us to resolve our energy challenges without raising rates".

[END QUOTING]

Do you get the feeling from all of the above information and, yes, the focused propaganda, that we're not being told much that is truly factual about electricity generation costs because to do so would reveal the TRUE level and extent of the greed involved?

Let's turn now to some input from a gentleman who has been in the nuclear power business for 50 years, who has some personal, behind-the-scenes information to share.

INTERVIEW WITH NUCLEAR POWER EXPERT GALEN WINSOR

On January 23, The SPECTRUM received a phone call from one of our respected subscribers recommending that we speak with nuclear energy expert Galen Winsor, who has been a frequent guest on Tom Valentine's radio program over the last decade. Galen Winsor has been around the nuclear power scene for decades, and he knows quite a bit about the true costs and politics of electrical generation that are not being mentioned in the controlled media versions of the current California "emergency" situation that can rapidly spread to other areas.

We know you will agree with us that this is not only an insightful conversation in terms of revelations of greed, but an extremely timely and important one—particularly if his recommendations are noticed by those truly efforting to get to the bottom of this so-called "emergency" in California.

In a telephone interview conducted on January 24, here is what Galen Winsor had to say about electricity and the so-called energy "crisis".

Martin: We received a call from one of our subscribers, and he suggested I have a conversation with you, on the record, about the current energy shortage.

Winsor: [Laughter] What shortage?

Martin: Out here in California they keep leading us to believe that there is an electricity shortage. I understand you might feel that is not the case?

Winsor: Electricity is not just a commodity. What they are talking about is electrical generating capacity. And if you've got capacity, you have to use it. They haven't been using it.

To answer your question, is Rancho Seco operating and on-line in Lodi, California? Is Humbolt Bay? How about Diablo Canyon? How about San Onofre, I & II?

Martin: You're mentioning these nuclear facilities?

Winsor: Yeah, and if you've got a nuclear facility and you don't use it, then it's your own damn fault.

Martin: Do you think there is a conspiracy among those involved in the power companies to withhold power in an effort to glean profit?

Winsor: I can name the date when it started. The 28th of March, 1979, at Three Mile Island-II.

Martin: And what was so significant at Three Mile Island that would cause this kind of withholding from the public?

Winsor: There was nothing wrong at Three Mile Island-II.

Martin: Oh, really?

Winsor: The fuel didn't melt-down, in accordance with the [movie] version in China Syndrome, which is a farce.

Martin: That's really interesting, because that was sure a block-buster movie, and it sure created a lot of concern among the general public.

Winsor: The one that Jack Lemmon was in?

Martin: Right.

Winsor: The one that Dale Bridenbaugh and Greg Minor and Dick Hubbard wrote the script for?

Martin: Yes.

Winsor: I worked with those guys at General Electric Company, years ago.

Martin: Really? That's fascinating. Tell us about this.

Winsor: When President Jimmy Carter, on the 29th of March, 1979, sent his henchman, Harold Denton of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, into Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, to personally pull the operating license of Three Mile Island-II; and while he was at it, because TMI-I was the same kind of reactor, they pulled it too.

Martin: And why did they do that?

Winsor: There are several reasons, but one of them was that if you lost the plant, according to the insurance that was had by the nuclear insurers, American Nuclear Insurers, if you lost your plant, then their insurance policy would pay off $300 million. And that was collected.

Now, why could American Nuclear Insurers pay-off $300 million?

Martin: Who got the money?

Winsor: Well, Metropolitan Edison got the money.

Martin: And what did they do with it, do you think? Any theories?

Winsor: [Laughter] What they did, it gave them an excuse to buy electrical power in Canada, cheaply—Ontario Hydro in this case, and sell it for any price that they wanted to, south of the border.

Martin: That's amazing.

Winsor: And the American public would sit still for it.

Martin: The American public is largely ignorant of these facts.

Winsor: [Sigh] Yes. Let's zero-in on the problem.

The thesis of China Syndrome was that the fuel would melt-down and go clear through to China. It's a false premise. But, I'll tell you, 9 out of 10 who you talk to on the street think it's real. In 1956, I worked in the nuclear industry and we put oxide fuel in the reactors.

Martin: Oxide fuel?

Winsor: Uranium dioxide ceramic fuel. It can't melt. If there is any water present, you can't get temperatures high enough to melt it. It melts at 4600° Fahrenheit. It doesn't even melt at the center-line temperature on the fuel-pellets; at 100 percent of power, it's less than melting temperature. In the case of TMI-II, which was 1100 megawatts electric, when it's putting out that kind of power, the fuel doesn't even run with the molten center-line temperature. How in the hell is it going to melt three days AFTER they scram it [shut it down]?

Martin: That's an amazing piece of information.

Winsor: It's been true for almost 22 years now. And people are going to pitch-up, in California first.

Martin: That's right. Things are really heating up in California and people are getting very upset. A lot of people don't have the money for the increased energy bills, both heating and electric.

Winsor: The cartel, the electrical energy cartel, has not only been gouging the rate-payers, they're now gouging the tax-payers in California.

Martin: That's true. You know, theoretically the deregulation that took place years ago was ostensibly to provide CHEAPER power, if you could believe such a thing.

Winsor: [Laughter]

Martin: That's faulty reasoning, right there—but what has happened is, the average citizen has been gouged and blinded—or, I should say, kept in the dark to what's going on in California, specifically. As with California, there is bound to be a domino-effect throughout the rest of the country, at some point, don't you think?

Winsor: I can tell you one thing that's happening in California. You've heard of Kaiser Aluminum, out of Spokane? I went to them in 1985: "I'll interact, and with my know-how we'll take the reactor out of a nuclear submarine, or the capability of a nuclear submarine, and tie it up to the dock at your aluminum facility in the Dalles, and we'll pump power in." And they said "That sounds like a good idea, but we're not going to opt to do it."

Martin: Why is that?

Winsor: "Because we've got a contract with Bonneville Power, you know, the Department of Energy, for electricity at 2.97 cents per kilowatt hour; and if you fool around with their monopoly, we're going to lose our power supply at their behest. They'll charge us too damn much for it."

Martin: That's blackmail!

Winsor: The other day Kaiser Aluminum shut their plants down, but they bought their allocation of electricity, electrical power output, at 3 cents from the Department of Energy, and charged California 30 cents per kilowatt hour—a mark-up of a factor of 10—for doing what? Obstructing progress, obstructing progress—I can't even say it.

Martin: I'm sure it sticks in your throat.

Winsor: It really does.

Martin: Can we just take a few moments here to explain to our readers what your credentials are?

Winsor: I've got 50 years of experience, starting at Hanford [the large nuclear energy facility in Washington state] in September 1950, of recovering plutonium from the reactor matrix that it is created in, from metallic uranium fuel, in those days. And so, we recovered plutonium because it's different chemistry than uranium, so it's a piece of cake to separate it and use it as a fissionable source of energy. I've been doing that for 50 years.

Martin: So, you're a nuclear physicist; is that correct?

Winsor: I'm an analytical chemist and a systems analyst; an analytical chemist by degree. I went to work at Hanford before I graduated from college. I was working as an analytical chemist, and I still had three courses of English to finish before I got my BA degree.

Martin: You were recently on the Tom Valentine show, is that right?

Winsor: Yes, Sunday evening.

Martin: How did that go? What was the reception, generally, from the listening audience?

Winsor: It was excellent. Tom Valentine and I have been doing that for 12 years. We're old friends. Tom isn't always right, but when he's dealing with me, he's right.

Martin: What do you think is the most important thing for the average person out there to understand about the current energy "crunch", if we can even call it that?

Winsor: First of all, the electricity that we use to light our homes and our businesses, ought to be available at a uniformly cheap price, to everyone in America, at less than one cent per kilowatt hour.

Martin: Less than one cent?!?

Winsor: Less than one cent! When I went back to Hanford in 1977, the electrical power to heat my home, which was all electric, cost 0.91 cents [that is, about nine-tenths of one cent] per kilowatt hour. That was sitting there, next to McNary Dam, and the flow of the Columbia River, the Dalles, John Day, Bonneville, all that power net was being sold to the consumer public for 0.91 cents per kilowatt hour.

In watching the price of electricity go up, I went to the manager of McNary Dam one day, shortly thereafter, and I said: "What does it cost you to generate electrical power?"

And he said "0.25 cents per kilowatt hour."

Martin: Quite a profit!

hour here in this area of California—even though many large wind generators sit there spinning away on nearby hills. Meanwhile, longtime readers and friends in Mesa, Arizona pay 5 cents per kilowatt hour. And the bomb: We COULD all be charged about 1 cent per kilowatt hour and the REAL profit margin would still be healthy—maybe not quite 400% like the hydro example Galen mentions above, but considering the universal demand for electricity, these power companies could learn an economics lesson from such as Wal-Mart, which makes a lot of money selling on a very small mark-up margin but in large volume.]

Winsor: To whom does the dam belong, the damn dam? To whom do they belong?

Martin: Theoretically they belong to the public; but, of course, they really belong to the elite.

Winsor: The Department of Energy controls that. Bonneville Power Agency—the last correspondence I got from Bonneville Power had a DOE letterhead on it. Who in the hell is the Department of Energy?

Martin: How would you answer that?

Winsor: They shouldn't even exist. There were Secretaries of Energy, in the past, whose aim it was to eliminate the Department of Energy.

Martin: Bureaucracies have a tendency to go to great lengths to insure that their existence remains intact.

Winsor: The price of electricity is the best thing that I can quote to see that they've just gone, and gone, and gone. It's what happens with any cartel, anytime.

Martin: What do you think will happen with the efforts of Gray Davis, here in California? Do you think he'll be successful?

Winsor: Southern California Edison is going to go bankrupt. Pacific Gas & Electric is going to go bankrupt. And maybe the state of California; we've got a bankrupt governor. He's gouging the taxpayers to pay the damn utilities when the utilities are in a crunch because of mismanagement.

Martin: So do you think Gray Davis is now part of the problem, or part of the solution?

Winsor: No, he's part of the problem. The utilities are going to collect their money, no matter what.

Martin: It sounds like a "catch-22" situation.

Winsor: Yeah. What's the consumer public going to do?

Martin: Well, the elite won't allow "free energy"—that's for sure!

Winsor: Do you know how many "145" electric reactors have been scrapped at Hanford in the last 10 years?

Martin: No, I have no idea.

Winsor: 100. The power plants in 100 nuclear submarines have been scrapped at Puget Sound Naval Shipyard and shipped on a barge at a 1000-ton center section, out of the Puget Sound, down the coast, up the Columbia River, to Richland, Washington, where they are off-loaded, put on 372 rubber tires, and wheeled out to the 200 East Area and set on concrete stations. And there's 100 of them, scrapped!

Martin: Why is that?

Winsor: They have consumed the power output of the diffusion cascades, the uranium. You have six diffusion cascades in Oak Ridge, and Paducah, Kentucky, and Portsmouth, Ohio, and the core is still in all those reactors. There's 100 nuclear cores, in zircaloid cladding, sitting at Hanford, right now. They've lost the power to generate, but the fuel still has the fissionable content to generate power.

Martin: Has anybody come forth with any plan of action or any proposal to utilize that energy?

Winsor: Every time you do, you get shot at, like I do.

Martin: And who shoots at you?

Winsor: When I was at Three Mile Island, in April of 1981, my boss in United Nuclear, Tom Hall, was there and we spent a month on the Island, troubleshooting it. We went over all the operating records and, incidentally, the highest temperature, in all that time, in the containment, was 1475° Fahrenheit. Remember what I told you was the melting temperature of the oxide?

Martin: 4600° Fahrenheit.

Winsor: On the 6th of April, Tom and I put in 4 hours in front of 5 Bechtel Power Corporation managers, vice-presidents, and I said: "Why did you bring two old moss-backs out from Richland, Washington, to tell you what you already knew—that that's an operable reactor?"

And they said: "Because we like to shoot old moss-backs."

Martin: That almost doesn't make sense.

Winsor: I went back and I told that to the Lion's Club. And the Tri-City Herald correctly quoted me on the presentation that I made, and the next day, Jim Lowe, the President of UNC Nuclear called me into his office and said: "Thou shalt get OUR permission before you make such statements ever again!"

Martin: [Laughter]

Winsor: I told him, promptly, to go to hell.

Martin: Of course.

Winsor: I was out of work in a week. How do they shoot somebody? I'm not independently wealthy; it hurt. I was out of work.

Martin: That's what happens with whistle-blowers. They make it very, very difficult, and it's unfortunate because there is a public trust involved, too, of course.

Winsor: That's the thing that we're talking about, Rick; it's a PUBLIC trust. And it's been blown. And it was blown, in this particular case, by Jimmy Carter, President of the United States, when he had Harold Denton pull the operating license of TMI-II, and then TMI-I for good measure. Why? Because THEY COULD! And when you've got a cartel, you can do anything that you want to enforce your position.

Martin: What do you suppose was going on with Carter, at that time, that would allow that to take place?

Winsor: Jimmy Carter had a history of impeding progress of the nuclear genie. He, supposedly, was the nuclear engineer who went up into Canada on the Chalk River "melt-down". Chalk River had your metallic uranium fuel in it, and they scattered a few bits of uranium around when they ruptured. Jimmy Carter went up there as the nuclear expert because he had been on a nuclear submarine.

Martin: That just seems too ridiculous, doesn't it?

Winsor: It is. But, you check the record, and you'll find out that Jimmy Carter did that.

When I was General Electric's representative to the Barnwell Nuclear Fuel Plutonium Recovery Plant, at Barnwell, South Carolina, in the Fall of 1974, Jimmy Carter, then Governor of the state of Georgia, sent 4 of his personal staff over there to interfere with the licensing process; 1 of whom, of the 4, I got to know well, and he told me flat-out that they had a commission to interfere with the licensing process.

Martin: Do you think this had to do with a desire to suppress the whole nuclear industry, or did it have to do with obligations to the electrical cartel?

Winsor: Well, both. You see, when you suppress the formation, the transmutation of plutonium, plutonium-239, to be specific, in the uranium 238 matrix, then you have artificially raised the price that you can charge for U-235, separated from natural uranium hexafluoride, in the diffusion cascades. Big outfits, and I mean big—DuPont, Allied Chemical, all of them who were involved in that huge diffusion cascade. Did you ever see the one at K-25 in Oak Ridge?

Martin: No.

Winsor: Acres and acres and acres of nickel diffusion barriers, so that they could physically separate U-235 from U-238, and charge any damn price that they wanted for it. The price of U-235, the last time I got a letter from Congress on it, was $110 per gram. Guess how many grams are in a reactor core, that is setting in a thousand-ton package?

Martin: I have no idea.

Winsor: [Laughter] It's a lot. I don't have the specific figure on top of my head, but at $110 a gram—and they just set it aside and go produce more!

Martin: Getting back to the domino effect, the potential domino effect I should call it, of the energy issue throughout this country, what do you see happening?

Winsor: Do I know where I want it to go?

Martin: Let's start with where you want it to go, and then let's talk about where you think it might go.

Winsor: Did you ever hear of the Gizmo Hearings in 1965?

Martin: Never.

Winsor: Corporate USA had hearings about whether or not they would allow plutonium breeder reactors to be built. If you build a reactor to breed plutonium, you do it so that the breed ratio is 1.29, which means that they will double the beginning inventory of fissionable plutonium in less than 4 years—all the time giving you light and heat. And so, if you do that, there isn't any market for coal, gas, and oil as a means of heating water, to make steam, to make electricity. They're obsolete.

Martin: Well, obviously, "they're" not going to let that happen.

Winsor: A good case is right here in Colorado. They closed down Ft. St. Vrain, the finest high-temperature, gas-cooled reactor ever built. It was on-line, producing, and they closed it down. It takes thorium fuel and converts it into their own fissionable material, uranium 233, as it goes. It's got helium gas as its heat-transfer medium. And they close it down and convert to burning natural gas???

The difference in efficiency is, roughly, 8 million! Not just twice as good, 8 million times more energy per gram in thorium, making U-233, than there is in burning natural gas, gram for gram. 8 million times!!

Martin: I think, for one thing, Chernobyl scared a lot of people; the possibility of a Chernobyl happening in this country.

Winsor: What happened at Chernobyl?

Martin: Let's talk about that.

Winsor: Well, remember I went in at Hanford in 1950?

Martin: Yes.

Winsor: We were running reactors with metallic uranium cores, canned in aluminum, in a graphite matrix, with once-through cooling water moderation. In 1986, the RBNK-1000 reactors in, specifically, Chernobyl-IV, were converted from 2.2% uranium dioxide fuel to 0.2% U-235, to a metallic uranium core as a heat-transfer intensifier, so that they could get 1500 megawatts electric out, instead of the 1000 that it was rated for.

[Editor's note: Though this may be off the subject of the immediate discussion here, let me take this a level deeper than what you will read below: Why do you suppose that particular reactor was pushed so hard? Who do you suppose gave the orders to "customize" the "stock engine" in that machine to get so much more "hot-rod horsepower" out of it, even though it would clearly be, to those who were knowledgable about the reactor and were responsible for running it, at such great risk? Hint: What kind of secret experimentation do you suppose was going on nearby that required so much extra power AT ANY COST?]

When they canned uranium metal in zircalloy cladding, and put it into that 1661 vertically-tubed boiling water reactor that is an RBNK-1000, they set themselves up. Because, sure enough, on the 25th of April in 1986, they got a leak. And uranium metal reacts with its cooling water, especially if it's hot, and takes oxygen away from water, faster than it takes it away from air [and this then means there is free—and very explosive—hydrogen gas being generated, left over from taking the oxygen away from the water molecules].

What they did when they had a leak and they couldn't—they scrambled the reactor and tried to push this vertically-tubed fuel out and down into the basement underneath (where uranium metal at Hanford used to, frequently, burn to U-308); they tried to do that and couldn't. At 1:20 the next morning, they got enough hydrogen accumulated from the uranium metal burning that the thing exploded and caught fire.

So, they had a hydrogen fire, involving nuclear materials, and they should never have had uranium metal in that damn plant!

The other 17 RBNK-1000s had 2.2% uranium dioxide in them. And that's the way they were meant to run. And not only that, the 1661 vertically-tubed boiling-water reactors could be, theoretically, refueled on-line, without taking the plant down.

Martin: It sounds like sabotage.

Winsor: Well, of course it is. It's the sabotage in the nuclear effort. And Exxon, and Royal Dutch Shell, and Atlantic Richfield all got their sticky, dirty hands in it.

Martin: How is that?

Winsor: If you had nuclear doing its thing, then there wouldn't be any market for oil.

Martin: Let's go back to The China Syndrome, just for a minute. Why do you think that movie was made?

Winsor: Just that—those who oppose progress and build the wind machines, like they've got out in Desert Palm?

Martin: Yes, we have them here in Tehachapi, too.

Winsor: What are they doing? Is that environmentally acceptable? No, it's not. They kill 70 Golden Eagles a year at Desert Palm. The birds can't see them, they fly right into them.

Martin: Well, and here in this high desert community of Tehachapi, we don't see the power. God knows where the power goes. I guess it goes to Los Angeles; I'm not sure.

Winsor: It goes into a pool, and they decide. In Colorado they're building a wind farm up on the Wyoming border that the consumer can pay a premium for “wind-generated” electricity of $100, just to say that you've got wind-generated electricity; and you can't tell wind-generated electricity from nuclear-generated electricity from hydro-generated electricity!

Martin: The fact is, John Q. Public doesn't really care, as long as they have power.

Winsor: You know what's really baffled me, Rick?

Martin: What's that?

Winsor: I spent 2-½ years on the lecture tour for American Opinion Speakers Bureau in 1984-86, and what I said was: “My least favorite person is the one who says ‘I do not know, and I do not care.’”

Martin: Right. When all is said and done, and the American public goes to switch that light on, and the light doesn't go on, or the heat doesn't go on—then, suddenly, there's going to be a real interest! And then, of course, it's way too late.

Winsor: When I was on the lecture tour, I said to the people: “You're addicted to the use of electricity. Every time the electricity comes on, when you flip the switch, you don't even care how much you pay for it.” And these people in the energy cartel know that, and they have manipulated it to the point that there's an abundant supply of electricity and, now, it's all in the m-a-r-k-e-t-i-n-g of it.

Martin: I'm not well informed on this subject, by any means. But it sounds like, with the deregulation in California, the free enterprise system, the private contractors of electricity are taking full advantage of the opportunity to gouge such as Southern California Edison and PG&E and whoever else the main power people may be. But the whole thing just stinks!

Winsor: You're not kidding. There's an odiferous cloud that comes issuing up out of it. These miserable damned people we know as public utilities have set this thing up. And it's been in full swing since March 29, 1979, when Jimmy Carter had Harold Denton pull the operating license of a perfectly operable reactor. They said that the core melted in Three Mile Island-II. It was an operable reactor!

When I was there, 2 years later, it was still an operable reactor, but they had taken the turbine out of the big generator and shipped it off to Arkansas. So, if they could have run the reactor, they didn't have a turbine to generate electricity.

At 1100 megawatts, do you know how much money that is?! That's at least a million bucks a day, at that time! That's the generating capacity of that plant. And it just sat there. And they collected insurance premium for loss of plant? It's called F-R-A-U-D.

Martin: Big time fraud!

Winsor: And I've been trying for 20 years to get some attention on this. And do you think I've been successful at all?

Martin: Probably not. Where are you located?

Winsor: I'm in Denver, Colorado.

Martin: That's an energy-guzzling city.

Winsor: Well, yeah. And you know what? I used to be the uranium ore buying manager for General Electric, at Naturita, Colorado, 25 years ago. My business was to buy uranium “yellow-cake” from the miners. [Editor's note: Yellow-cake is a processed oxide of uranium, U₃O₈, extracted and concentrated from uranium ore. It is used as the raw material for commercial nuclear products, especially fuel elements in nuclear reactors.] Do you know how much of that yellow-cake we needed?

Martin: No.

Winsor: None!

Martin: You didn't need any of it, and yet you were buying it?

Winsor: One day I was down in the mill, and I had 2 guys from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission there, showing them through the plant, and I had dust laying all over, an inch deep on the inside of the structure of that thing. And I backed up and put my hands under my seat and I sat down in it. And one of the guys said, “Oh, that's alright.”

Uranium dust? You know, this stuff that's causing Gulf War Syndrome? I sat in it, on purpose.

And they said, “Oh, that's alright.”

Well, I spent $7 million of GE's bucks buying yellow-cake from miners, 25 years ago. I went back 5 years ago, and looked at my mill. I wanted to get the 55-gallon drum full of concreted uranium ore that we used to calibrate our gamma-probe, and there was a 100-foot-deep hole where I used to have a mill. They'd hauled 147,000 truck-trailer loads of rock out of that hole, taking it up Dry Creek, and buried it. If you dig up uranium in one spot, and take it over and bury it over in another, haven't you just created another uranium mine?

Martin: [Laughter] Not a lot of logic in that.

Winsor: In the same trip, Ruby and I went down to Durango, Colorado. I was going to show her the big tailing pile that I used to go down and change the sprinklers on so that we could grow grass on it, and keep it from blowing around the neighborhood.

Martin: Right.

Winsor: It was gone. They've hauled it off and buried it. There was enough uranium in the vanadium tailing pile, in the tailings that were processed for vanadium. Vanadium is a hardener; I used to have a crowbar that had vanadium stamped into it, “vanadium strengthened”. You mix it with steel to make it hard and tough and resilient. They mined it prior to 1944, and processed the uranium ore and the vanadium ore, for vanadium, and threw the uranium away in a pile.

So there was enough uranium in the tailing pile that they never needed the uranium mining industry. You could have separated, and used, enough uranium out of that to have fueled the first reactors at Hanford; and you ran them on a natural uranium basis, and make plutonium, and you make enough plutonium that you don't even need input of uranium.

And so, we have those, worldwide, who talk about a shortage of uranium. There NEVER was a shortage of uranium; never will be. There's something like 364,000 tons of depleted uranium hexafluoride at Paducah, Kentucky, and they can't figure out what to do with it. Nobody's got use for uranium hexafluoride.

If you've got one molecular weight of uranium hexafluoride, and you release it and expose it to the moisture in air, you get one molecular weight of UO_2F_2 , and four molecular weights of hydrofluoric acid.

[Editor's note: Folks, hydrofluoric acid is one of the most dangerous liquids that you, as a human being, can be around. Among other things, it is used in the semiconductor "chip" manufacturing industry for several applications, including the etching of glassy materials, and is so dangerous because, if you get it on you, it penetrates right through any skin layers, down to bone, and starts eating away at the bone material!]

What are you going to do with all that hydrofluoric acid that they pumped into it, compliments of Allied Chemical?

Martin: I have no idea.

Winsor: Well, they dump it into the water, every day, in Denver and New York City, to dumb down the populace.

Martin: It's working.

Winsor: It's working. Near as I can tell, Rick, it works fine. I spent some time in North Dakota with my company, that Dave Corum and I started, called Dakota Nuclear. And we had an information dispersing business, and we used to put out information on 35 papers that I had, all across the country. And Radio Free America, Tom Valentine, did a super job of putting out that information.

You know, it's mind boggling. The information that's been out there and the effort that it's taken to put it out there, and how LITTLE of it has registered because the energy cartel knew it.

I've been doing some reading. I'm getting old and feeble, so I've been doing some reading lately. I read in the book called The Uranium People—that I first read in 1979, but my friend John, from Syracuse, got a copy and sent it to me, again—in 1940, before the plutonium was ever separated, they decided to go through the diffusion cascade separation of U-235. Why? Because some of the people in control of the country—we call them the Uranium People—own huge amounts of property in NW Saskatchewan, in Canada, where you could mine uranium with a front-end loader in the summertime. It's just laying on the ground. Why did they do it? For MONEY. They sold their souls for a mess of potage. And they KNEW they were doing it. They had a way of captivating the people.

And another item: in 1977, 1978, and 1979, I was working with Battelle Memorial Institute in Richland, Washington, and using high volume air samples and our good ultraviolet-light detecting system. I detected 25 above-ground blasts, nuclear blasts, in Red China, and confirmed it with seismic reports, and people never even noticed. They talk about the "Big Nuke", when it hits us, and what it's going to do. And they never even noticed 25 above-ground aerial tests in Red China in 1977-79. I finally got bored and quit tabulating them.

Martin: There seems to be a concern, these days, about the so-called "briefcase" atomic bomb.

Winsor: That's a real one. See, in our yearly goals at Hanford, we used to have, as a goal, making nuclear weapons smaller and smaller and smaller. One day we got them so small they'd go in a 9-inch artillery shell. And then we really celebrated the day we got a model that would go in a 5.6-inch artillery shell. We really celebrated when we put it in a 60-pound backpack. Backpack nukes, remember?

In 1972, Exxon and Avco perfected the technique of laser-isotopic separation. You could take commercial grade plutonium, which is 72% fissile, and you could pull the PU-239 out, and leave the other isotopes which dampen the nuclear explosion. You could pull it and get 99.9% pure PU-239, and it is of such a purity that a critical mass of that stuff is about the size of a golf ball. So you can pack it into a briefcase.

When Pan-Am Flight 103 went down over Lockerby, Scotland, that was a boom-box bomb. They had it in a boom-box, carried onboard the airplane. Not very big, and it killed, what, 270 people, 11 on the ground.

Martin: Being in the news business over the last 10 years, the thing I keep hearing about, a major concern with anti-terrorism and that sort of thing, has to do with the briefcase nuclear bomb. That is the big concern.

Winsor: In a way, you can't detect it using the archaic system. I've got a metal shape, that was the critical shape in the 1960s, that I carried in my briefcase all of the years that I was traveling. And it was cut in half, so it was no longer "classified".

Every time I would go through their x-ray scan, it would show up. So they would always ask me to open my brief-case, and I would. I would take this thing and I would put it in their hands, and Herb Poole, who made it in 1960, mounted a Timex watch on the face of it. That watch worked. You could wind it, and it would work. And I would say: "Isn't that a cute clock?"

And they would take it, and look at it in detail, and say: "Yeah, where can I get one?"

And I would say: "You can't." I took it through screening devices, because if they're sensitive to shape, and they are, they picked it up. But they're not designed to pick up fissionable materials.

Ten years ago, Nucleonics Magazine, and Robin Nelson was the chief editor, had an article about airport security and using neutron activation as a means of screening everybody and everything that went aboard an airplane. If you did THAT—they said it was too expensive, you couldn't do it—but if you did that, then you wouldn't have these things dispersed all over the country.

But they have been moved all over the world under the diplomatic immunity provided by the United Nations. The old Russian GRU and KGB all had suitcase nukes, and they had assigned projects. THEY are the ones I worry about because they'll use them.

Martin: What do you think will happen if that scenario ever does take place within this country?

Winsor: Total chaos. They've got the fire-power. And we've known from what they did with the two embassies that they'll use them.

Let's get back to the license being pulled at Three Mile Island-II, on March 29, 1979. It's the official permission of the government to handle a material that should have NO licensing restraints, NONE! And operating technical specifications imposed on a nuclear reactor were done to keep them from using them.

I ended the other night [on the radio] by saying that what I would do with every nuclear reactor in the country is that I would remove the technical specifications, and using the trained crews and the fuel supply that they've got, I would run them 100% of the time, at 110% of name-plate rating. And we would "flat-rate" the electricity into homes. You'd pay $20 bucks a month to use all you want, like you do cable TV.

If I'm given my way, that's what we're going to do, Rick. But I'm a threat to the cartel, and they know it. They've been working at running me down for a long time.

Martin: They weren't too enthusiastic about Nikola Tesla's ideas for "free energy" either.

Winsor: Nikola Tesla understood the energy that was in the Earth.

When Ruby and I got married, six-and-a-half years ago, she had a Tesla coil, and I had one too, and hers had a broken probe on it, and it turned out that I had, still in the paper, a replacement for it dated 1923. You plug it into the wall at 110 volts and take out 40,000 volts, and it's spectacular; you see electrons screaming right out through the glass probe into anything that's grounded, including the human body.

Tesla did the alternating current work, and there's a museum over here in Telluride, Colorado of his first big generator. He understood electricity better than anybody else.

So, I ask a question: What IS electricity? Is it a commodity to be regulated by Governors, like Gray Davis? NO, NO, NO! They are regulating generating capacity.

Not too far away from Southern California is Palo Verde reactors I, II, & III, in Phoenix. Do you know they average only one of those on-line at a time? In other words, they're sitting there idling the generating potential of two-thirds of it and not using it. If you've got generating capacity, it has to be used to be marketable. I wish I was smarter, Rick.

Martin: You sound plenty smart to me.

Winsor: I've been on a rough road.

Martin: How do I spell your first name?

Winsor: G-a-l-e-n. Galen was the first Greek physician. He was the one who first mapped out the blood system and the lymphatic system. So, the doctor who delivered me in 1926 said: "This kid's name is Galen" and I've been Galen ever since.

Martin: Should I put any specific credentials after your name?

Winsor: Oh, I did things like work on a Ph.D. in soil chemistry, at the University of Wisconsin, and never finished it, under Dr. Emil Truog.

I'm an expert in plutonium chemistry. I was "Mister Plutonium" for the General Electric Company.

But no—you don't put any fancy letters after my name.

Martin: That's fine with me. I understand that philosophy.

Winsor: I'm a plutonium chemist. I learned it through the school of hard knocks. There's not a university in the country that would even recognize the work that I've done.

Martin: It's been a pleasure talking with you, and I appreciate your taking the time to share so many little known points about the electrical generation industry.

FOLLOW-UP INTERVIEW WITH GALEN WINSOR

In a subsequent conversation, on January 30, Galen Winsor had more to say, including further developments in the energy crisis in California. He also offered some very specific, tough solutions for Governor Gray Davis.

Martin: I want to stay on track here. Now, checking a few things, is it Barnwell?

Winsor: Barnwell Nuclear Fuel Plant, Royal Dutch Shell, and Allied Chemical. Incidentally, it is a contract-maintained plant. It's got French technology in it, and it's just sitting there waiting to run, and they've never run it.

Martin: Why do you think that is?

Winsor: You can't recover plutonium and put it to work—and still be burning coal, gas, and oil. It all has to do with the international marketing of oil. If we'd used the nuclear option the way we were supposed to in 1946, there wouldn't BE any market for oil as a means to heat water, to make steam, to make electricity. And that's such a mind-boggling, huge fund that I stagger under it.

Martin: Do you think that part of the reason for building these nuclear facilities and "sitting on them", for all practical purposes, has to do with some future agenda, perhaps when fossil fuels are obsolete?

Winsor: If you wanted to keep a fuel inventory, without inventory tax, what would you do? Why, of course you would devalue it to a negative value. It costs you money to hang onto it, which is what they've done with plutonium.

I was in shock when I finally realized that the cores are in all of those reactor center-sections at Hanford; that they've still got the fuel. A large percentage of the U-235 that was enriched at Paducah, and Portsmouth, and Oak Ridge K25, can you imagine just "rat-holing" it and creating a U-235, a fully enriched U-235 mine, which they've done, at the 200 East Area in Hanford? They haven't destroyed a bit of it. It is the most easily accessible mine that you can even imagine. So, when it comes time, you better believe—they're going to use it.

Martin: There's a lot going on in California, as you know. I want to try to steer this back to this immediate issue of power.

Winsor: Can you image what would happen if you had the power that is produced in British Columbia Hydro at 0.25 cents per kilowatt hour? Just run it down, with as high as 20% line-loss, to Los Angeles. Do you know what that would do to your economy?

Those rascals have been gouging the rate-payers ever since the 28th of March, 1979, at Three Mile Island. That was the reason that happened—to gouge the rate-payers. But in California, they're gouging the tax-payers, too.

Martin: You mentioned in our first discussion about a hundred powers plants and a hundred nuclear subs that had been shipped from Puget Sound to Hanford, Washington, and are just sitting there. Were you implying or suggesting that perhaps California, in some way, could tap into that as a power source?

Winsor: Yeah. See, one of the submarines up there, the Vallejo, and the city of Vallejo [an old Navy city on the east side of the San Francisco Bay area], decided they wanted to keep it as a museum. And the Navy said: "If you give us $10 million dollars, we'll let you have it."

And Vallejo said: "We don't have $10 million in our budget."

So the Navy took it up there and scrapped it, and charged the taxpayers $11 million dollars to scrap it, the Vallejo.

Martin: That's sitting there, right now?

Winsor: The center section of it is out. The reactor, with it's fuel, is sitting there now.

Martin: Would you suggest that Gray Davis, in his capacity as Governor, under Eminent Domain, seize the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant [southwest of the city of San Luis Obispo, on the central California coast] from PG&E, and just declare it as state property?

Winsor: And just run it? Yeah.

There's a phrase that's been running through my mind, lately. Do you know what it is? "The power to license is the power to kill." If you put conditions of license in place that are arbitrary and capricious, and withhold the license, or you withhold full availability of a power plant, you've really done it in—the nuclear option.

You see, if you've got a capricious standard of license, technical specification, you can't run at a profit, and that is what they were doing. You had to show that nuclear generated electricity was too expensive and too dangerous, and they've done it. It is NOT either one of them, but they have SHOWN that it is.

I wouldn't be afraid of the State of California taking over the power plants. And you've sure got enough trained operators in it and the conditions of operations would not be defined by the license, it would be that which produces economic electricity.

Martin: What do you think the “domino effect” would be to an organization like PG&E, for example?

Winsor: They’d “take it out”. But I doubt that there is an honest man left at PG&E. They would take it out.

Martin: Even Alan Greenspan is coming forward before Congress and saying this thing in California is serious.

Winsor: Oh, it’s serious. See, the Public Utilities have lost their way. Their commission was to provide copious amounts of electricity, at a price that we could all afford. And they’ve done the opposite, in both cases—in price and availability. And I think they ought to be clobbered hard. It was intentional, on their part. I’ve been in the boardroom of Southern California Edison; I know. They’re rats.

The goal should be cheap, uniformly priced electricity, available to everyone. And you can’t have this gouging that’s going on and meet that goal.

Martin: Would you recommend or suggest the possibility of perhaps California subcontracting with the U.S. Navy to utilize some of the nuclear submarines for powering Greater Los Angeles, and perhaps the San Francisco Bay Area?

Winsor: Yes.

Martin: Do you think that’s a viable solution?

Winsor: Oh, yeah! Remember in 1992, when the hurricane wiped out Kauai and the Hawaiian Islands, and they took one of the 688 boats in, the USS Indianapolis, and hooked it up and carried the island? It happened. If you can do it in an emergency, why in the hell can’t you do it during the emergency you’ve got in California right now?

I was talking this way to my neighbor, who is a 30-year Navy vet, and he talks about the time when the aircraft carrier he was on tied-up to Crete and carried that whole island for three months. I heard this from a guy who was serving on it at the time. Was it the Midway? I think so.

Martin: What are Snap-8s?

Winsor: Snap-8 is an 80KVA electrical generator that used to have a nuclear power source that was built by Aero-Jet General. The generator itself is a General Electric generator, and a guy by the name of Harvey Heines, in Gladwin, Michigan, bought it on excess from Sandusky, Ohio, and he gave it to me in July of 1995, if I’d come and get it. And so, I was over there with my tandem-axle trailer and I loaded that thing and took it back to North Dakota. That was the 4th of July.

On the 23rd of May, the next Spring, NASA sent three of their henchmen, including the head of the investigative division, and two engineers from Aero-Jet General, up to see if I had it. And sure enough, I did. And I showed them that uranium metal is pyrophoric. I showed them the half-a-ton of high-rate uranium ore that I put in Grandpa’s flower garden, and the one mercury pump and two sodium potassium pumps that were used to run that reactor; and I had the records for 10,000 hours of operation for the Snap-8.

And I ask the lead engineer from Aero-Jet General how you started it up in space; did you have it running on the launch pad? Because the sodium and potassium, at space temperature, is a solid. And how do you start it up? And he got red-faced, and admitted, with witnesses, that they’d never made a flight model of Snap-8. His words: “We never made a flight model.”

Martin: So what happened to that?

Winsor: It was a stand-off. By the time we took them out to the farm where we had the three pumps, and then we wandered around the flats of North Dakota—you know, there’s no street signs in North Dakota. You have to know to take a right down at Farmer John’s place. They couldn’t get out of town. [Laughter] We had to escort them out of town. [Laughing] It was so funny. They came with Geiger Counters in hand to see if I had that reactor, and I did. It was a stand-off.

Martin: Are there any alternative energy sources that have not been shut-down that you’re aware of? For example, anything developed by the Japanese?

Winsor: The Japanese have had a parallel, EXCEEDING OURS, nuclear capability. You know, of course, that Robert Wilcox published the book called Japan’s Secret War, which tells the story of how Japan accumulated the UF₆ [uranium hexafluoride] enrichment facilities in 1943 and ’44 and ’45, to make the first nuclear weapon, which they detonated on the 12th of August, 1945, in Hunon, North Korea. And Japan has had breeder-reactor technology, exceeding our own, all the time. They have that capability. At one time, 90% of their electrical generation was from nuclear, breeder reactors.

My friend, Col. Fletcher Prouty, was in Japan in Mitsubishi’s plant one day, and he saw these big doors on big sliding rollers, like airplane hangers, and they were open, and he said “What’s back there?”

And they said “Oh, that’s our nuclear reactor facility. Do you want to see it?”

And he spent all afternoon in their nuclear reactor facility.

Col. Fletcher Prouty was one of the three of us who were Dakota Nuclear.

Martin: Oh, really? That’s interesting; I didn’t know that.

Winsor: He’s just a prince of a guy.

Martin: Yes, I’ve interviewed him before. He’s held in high esteem.

Winsor: When he talks about the breeder-reactor facilities in Japan, and tells me about them, I believe him.

Martin: Sure. There would be no reason not to believe him.

Winsor: But I like Fletcher.

Martin: I was hearing rumors, probably 8-10 years ago, about a little black box that you could plug an entire house into, a self-contained unit, Japanese construction.

Winsor: They keep talking about these, but I haven’t ever seen them. But I do know that our military has a 5-megawatt electric reactor that runs around on two wheels, on back of a Hummer. And when they make a landing, like they’ve done, where was it? Macedonia, when they landed and went North into Kosovo? You better believe, they were energy independent. They have one of these units per each emergency hospital. The military has got these things; they use them. They ARE energy independent. All I want to do is to be energy independent like they are. But if you can put a 5-megawatt electric reactor on two wheels on back of a Hummer, the fight’s over. That’s enough to carry a whole community, or a military base.

I’ve heard—oh, Earl Jones talked about a cream can-sized reactor, you know, like a milk can that sits on the front porch. But I’ve never seen one.

Martin: You said you were a Director at Hanford, at one point?

Winsor: There were 5 of us who had control of East Area, and we manned that thing 7 days a week, 24 hours a day.

Martin: When were you there, exactly?

Winsor: I was at Hanford from September of 1950 through December of 1964, the first time.

Martin: And then you went back?

Winsor: I went back in October of 1976 and stayed through 1983.

Martin: That's a long time.

Winsor: I have lots of experience.

Martin: Let's go back to Gray Davis. If you were in Gray Davis' shoes, right now, today, you have the power of the Governor, what would you do?

Winsor: I would lower the price of electricity in California to 1 cent per kilowatt hour. I'd take the wraps off the nuclear generators, imposed by licensing technical specifications, and I would run them FLAT-OUT, at 100% availability, and 110% of nameplate rating. In days when it had to be done, they would make it up by running over nameplate rating, and I would DO IT NOW!

And I would go to the Navy at Alameda and Los Angeles, and I'd say: "You bring in a nuke ship and hook it up and carry the country." But I'd quit this making a profit, gouging, that they're doing. I'd just say, flat-out, that electricity is 1 cent per kilowatt hour. No more rolling blackouts, and no more playing games.

Has Gray Davis got that power?

Martin: I think he does, as Governor.

Winsor: That's what I'd do if I were there. I'd run the nukes, full-out, and I'd have the Navy bring one, two, three, four, five of their ships and hook them up to the local domestic line, and just pump power into California.

Martin: Of course, there might be the theory that since—there are discussions, obviously, between the Bush administration and Gray Davis. However, the Bush gang has an awful big interest in oil, so there's no conflict of interest there, in terms of trying to resolve the electricity crisis in California.

Winsor: They ARE oil! Nuclear fissile fuel is 8 million times better than oil, on a pound-for-pound basis. 8 million times better! That's not even a close contest.

I remember when Larry Colton, who was working with me, and I, appeared before the Senate Energy Committee hearings in Seattle, in, I think it was the 9th of September, 1983. Senator James McClure was in charge, and we fired both barrels at him, and it got published in the Proceedings of the Committee, but it was just laid, flat-out, in front of Senator McClure.

Martin: They never did anything with it?

Winsor: Never did a thing with it. Published it and let it go. He was, personally, the Senator who approved $175 million to Three Mile Island-II, to clean it up, and it didn't need cleaning. The senior Senator from the state of Idaho. This on top of the $300 million that they collected for the loss of plant.

But that's not the big money.

Guess where the big money is? Two million bucks a day in lost generating sales from TMI-I and TMI-II, every day of the week, every day of the year, for 22 years!

Martin: In all of these years, have you ever met with anyone from the government? Have any of the Presidents ever contacted you, directly or indirectly?

Winsor: Only that one time in Seattle. The one thing that was happening, I had an appointment with Henry Scoop Jackson, the senior Senator from Washington, and I had an appointment with him the day that, quote, "he had a brain hemorrhage" and they took him to the hospital and he never came out alive. They TOOK HIM OUT, chemically. And Scoop Jackson and I were personal friends. And that was the last positive input.

I had an appointment to meet with him in his Seattle office. I took this Energy Committee Hearing meeting as a booby prize. But Scoop Jackson understood what I was talking about. He was the guy who stood in the gap and got all the funding for Hanford through the years. They took him out. The crowd that we're playing with plays rough.

I've been trying to figure out how to get this published for years, and Rick Martin calls me up and says: "We'll do it in The SPECTRUM."

There isn't a book publisher in the country who will touch it.

Martin: That's what The SPECTRUM is about.

Winsor: I believe it. And I appreciate it!

Martin: I'm going to close this with a few final questions. You are now in front of a joint session of the Sacramento legislature. What are you going to tell them?

Winsor: Use the resources that you've been given. Just run them, but quit this fooling around with the price, and provide copious amounts of electricity that we can all afford without discrimination.

Martin: And if you were at a joint session of Congress in Washington, what would you tell them?

Winsor: The same thing. All up and down the East Coast we've got this kind of capability. Remember Mario Cuomo? He bought the Shoreham Reactor. The Shoreham Reactor had been in low-power testing, and low-power testing for a reactor is like being a little bit pregnant. You're either critical or you're not. So he bought the Shoreham Reactor for $1 silver, and charged the people of New York $4.4 million to tear it down, before it was ever used, commercially. And his son is going to run for Governor of New York?!

Martin: And what would you tell Bush; if you were in the Oval Office right now, what would you tell him?

Winsor: Let's use the nuclear resources that we've paid for. Let's get the small, mass produced reactors into production; and the fuel that's sitting at 200 East Area, let's use it. That's what it was intended for. I've devoted 50 years of my life to saying that plutonium is an endless source of energy. Let's use it!

I would, personally, oversee starting up the Barnwell Nuclear Fuel Plant (South Carolina), and take plutonium off the waste list and put it in the fuel. That's been my business for 50 years.

Martin: I think you've landed at a good spot. Let's end it right there. Thank you.

We'll end this with some food for thought for those of you readers who like to see this so-called energy "crisis" linked to The Larger Picture—as we always like to do here at The SPECTRUM. The following was written by "a former electrical superintendent and plant engineer in industry" who probably lives in California:

[QUOTING]

Governor's "Executive Order" Creates Energy Police

By Mel Young (2/5/01)

(<http://www.sierratimes.com>)

If there is anything to be learned from the history of tyrannical governments, it is that they all started out, little by little, creating situations to justify their involvement in alledged "solutions." This is followed by the creation of more and more layers of police-state laws, rules, licenses, permits, and regulations with the eventual goal being to take away ALL of the liberties of the people and enslave them. And, it should be noted, ALL governments have supposedly "good" reasons for the new laws, permits, and other tools of tyranny.

One can point to the "creation" of the massive crime waves and the growth of the mobs, early in the last century, to the government's outlawing of booze. Prohibition not only made super millionaires out of the likes of Joe Kennedy and many others; it was used as an excuse for a whole slew of new laws, supposedly enacted on the behalf of the people, but in reality on behalf of the growth of the socialist state and big government.

One of the most dangerous laws was the landmark infringement of the Second Amendment with the passing of the first anti-gun bill, requiring that owners/purchasers of automatic weapons must purchase a permit from (read: register with) the government. That law was supposed to force Al Capone, Baby-Face Nelson, Bonnie and Clyde, and a whole slew of other mob thugs of the time to race to their nearest Treasury Department office to buy a permit for their "Tommy" guns so they could be arrested.

Hello out there! Does anyone know of a single incident in history where the crook has gone to the government to register a firearm?

Though the law was worthless with respect to reducing crime or the use of automatic weapons by crooks, it did serve the purpose of giving government more control and power over the people and, of course, forcing a major crack in the Second Amendment.

OK—'nuff said on that subject.

Last night, Governor Gray (RED) Davis of California was featured on the evening news, announcing his Executive Orders to combat our state of California-created energy crisis. Was it to restore the status quo by forcing the purchasers of the power plants in California to sell them back to the power generating companies—which were forced by the State of California to sell them in the first place? Not hardly.

What “Red” Davis has announced is a new bureaucracy to determine what lights you and I “need” versus what lights we do not “need”. This applies in spades to businesses and industry.

Under the new, Socialist, “Davis” plan, the governor is setting up “Energy Police” operations. According to the governor, guidelines will be drawn up over the next week or so and sent out to all police agencies in the state, whereby the police will be empowered to determine if you or I are burning lights that we do not need and issue tickets (only a puny $1,000 fine for each ticket) to the evil users of said lights.

The more I’ve been reading up on this fiasco, the more it stinks to high heaven. Pardon my paranoia, if I dare to suggest that this whole energy “crisis” situation appears now to have been a carefully crafted plan to destroy the privately owned utilities in such a way that the State and Federal governments could get into the act, seize power companies, natural gas transmission facilities, etc., and further increase the government’s stranglehold on us—as another step towards the New World Order/One World Government socialist police state.

A year ago, if anyone in California were asked if they thought a police-state energy-saving policy would eventually be put in place in California, the answer would have been a resounding “NO WAY!”

WAKE UP, AMERICA! As California goes, so will go the nation.

As a former Electrical Superintendent and Plant Engineer in industry, I can tell you that the State of California’s energy policy, with respect to lighting, is a total disaster, designed and run by idiots.

As the ranch resident lamp-lighter, I’m going to write-up a special report on good energy policy versus the State of California’s ridiculous nonsense. I’ll also write up some valuable information for consumers so that they can easily determine their own cost of lighting and ways to save both energy and money.

Remember that California has been the “proving grounds” for many decades for the Communist Party USA and the socialist fellow travelers. The first major riot in a university occurred at the University of California at Berkeley. The first major riot in a city was the Communist Party planned-and-orchestrated Watts Riot of 1965.

California is the blueprint prototype for the socialist, police-state, One World Government that is fast becoming a reality.

For years, we have heard a small but very vocal minority in this country whining that Americans should be paying five bucks a gallon or more for gasoline and sky-high utility prices because the Europeans are charged that much, thanks to socialist governments and over-taxation of the people. They have been working furiously, behind the scenes, to bring this about.

THEY ARE WINNING, FOLKS!

[END QUOTING]

Editor’s postscript: Unless something is said here, you probably wouldn’t imagine how disturbing (and why) this topic was for we at The SPECTRUM to present to you. Let me explain, because a lot of you probably feel the same way we do:

On the one hand, we are genuinely thankful for the information shared by our interviewee. It helps to paint a disturbing picture of greed and deceit that fits well within an easy-to-grasp, conventional view of science and technology. The points made and solutions offered are down-to-Earth and solidly within any decent person’s grasp of right and wrong and what’s possible to do.

After all, we frequently joke about those $400 toilet-seat charges in some government projects. But realize that the joke is recognized as such because we all KNOW, from personal experience, what a toilet seat should cost.

In the same vein, the practical goal of this article is to help the reader come to KNOW, without a doubt, how cheaply electricity is actually generated—and thus allow you to come to the awareness that we’ve all essentially been paying “government toilet-seat scam” prices for that electricity for quite some time. And yet the power companies are still crying “poor us” on their way to engineering further rate hikes and the bleeding of vast tax funds.

Now, this is all well and good, and tells a story that surely needs to be told.

But—considering the intelligence and awareness level of typical SPECTRUM readers, the playing field we have laid out for you in this article has caused a certain amount of “claustrophobia” in us since we have mostly “stuck to the normal” and only hinted at what’s REALLY, REALLY of fundamental importance here.

And what might that be? Why, no less than the entire technical area of so-called “free energy” devices.

We simply would like to “clear the air” (and maybe our journalistic conscience) here by at least mentioning that important point. And another one: that the crooks in high places—whether they be connected to Big Oil or Big Nuclear or Big Coal or Big Natural Gas or whatever—though they may fight among themselves, have long rose as a unified team or cartel to the occasion of subverting the development of all “free energy” devices such as those that the great Nikola Tesla alluded to a century ago.

While it would be wonderful if the public, through knowledge of The Truth, got mad enough to force both the power company crooks and the political criminals to clean-up their acts, we fervently hope this entire electrical-power-“crisis” swindle inspires renewed interest in, and determined action toward, furthering the long overdue and heavily suppressed domain of “free energy” technologies.

Many a persevering (if, unfortunately, often too naive) inventor has risked everything to try to bring such devices into the public arena. And yet to do so has been—so far—largely an exercise in painting a “bull’s eye” on their backs. After all, this is messing with a lot more than “just” limitless energy for free; this is a vast threat to the entire people-control system, critical to the New World Order, that the so-called “elite” have so diligently constructed for their benefit at our expense.

You want to know what it means to turn lemons into lemonade and lemon pie? How about a landscape without all those infernal power lines and poles uglifying everywhere you look, or without those imposing power plants belching out their effluent and taking up valuable land sites that could be put to more rewarding uses? How about eliminating all those ever-present electric meters spinning around on the sides of our houses and businesses, like some umbilical connection to Big Brother, and—here’s the clincher—doing away with the power bills we pay to these industrial parasites and fugitives from an honest day’s work?

This was bigshot financier J.P. Morgan’s worst nightmare at the time Tesla represented such a threat. Isn’t it about time Tesla’s vision became our reality?

“As I review the events of my past life, I realize how subtle are the influences that shape our destinies.”

Connections & Revelations

The Media Won't Touch

Editor's note: One nice thing about being as well connected and respected as is longtime crusader Sherman Skolnick, is the wealth of dynamite information that is entrusted to cross his path from so many good sources. Sharing that information can be a most revealing exercise in "connecting the dots" between seemingly unrelated matters.

Longtime readers of this publication have little problem following the trails that Sherman Skolnick so carefully illuminates. Moreover, a lot of shenanigans happen through Chicago, where he has been forever located—though most people are conditioned to look to the coasts for all the action.

How many of us, for instance, ever heard of Marc Rich before recently? And yet, starting with some vague mention on CNN's Headline News on Saturday 2/3/01, and continuing for days now through all the major media mouths, a lot of airtime has been spent focusing on him and connecting that name with Bill Clinton and the ex-president's pardon of this guy.

Why so much airtime on this? Could it perhaps have anything to do with buffering what Skolnick shared in writings (included here) almost a week before any of the media parade began?

Well, you decide. In any event, the following reports are, at the least, "just a few" of the more provocative details missing from stories that get laundered for the evening news whitewash.

America's Great Fairy Tales, Part I
(1/10/01)

Fairy Tale #1:

Nations, not the United States, have a long history of fraudulent elections. In the U.S., elections are generally honest.

Realities:

At key points in U.S. history, the elections have been a gigantic fraud upon the American common people. Part of a post-Civil War struggle as to how to handle the conquered South, the election of 1876 is depicted in Gore Vidal's book 1876, re-issued, strangely, just before the Year-2000 alleged Presidential "Election". Much of what happened in the Year-2000 alleged "Election" is very similar, if not prophetically the same, as in that book. (Visit our website for details on the alleged "Election" of 2000.)

A corrupt compromise of the 1876 fraudulent election was to reverse the small gains of Blacks. In the Reconstruction Period, following 1876, voting, holding public office, and other rights of Blacks, under the newly minted 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, were crushed and not restored, even in part, until almost 100 years later—IF THEN.

In the Year-2000 alleged "Election", under the sham and excuse of "defective ballots", some two million Blacks, nationwide, were deprived of having their votes counted. As a consequence, there is a perception that the equal rights of Blacks are in the process, like after 1876, of being blatantly reversed.

And as a possible result, the ultra-rich, favoring "divide-and-conquer" among ordinary people, Black and White, are instigating conditions that may lead to new racial disharmony—if not outright racial riots. Some rightly estimate that the rejected Black ballots would have been a large percentage for candidate Gore.

How would the oil-soaked monopoly press explain away that large of a plurality for Gore in the national popular vote? And how to explain away that Bush became president by a strange decision of the U.S. Supreme Court, blocking manual recounting of questioned ballots? And how to explain away that Bush was allegedly "elected" by two votes in the Electoral College under the most unusual circumstances, like 1876?

A sinister sidelight: The last time a "Black Messiah" showed up to aid the aspirations of people of color, the Establishment, with their secret political police, the FBI and the CIA, had him assassinated and the murder blamed, naturally, on a "lone assassin". (For details as to Dr. King, visit our website.)

Fairy Tale #2:

The judges of the Supreme Court of the United States have generally been persons of high standards and the Court has been highly reputable.

Realities:

In 1856, the high court, promoting the position of slave owners, made the Dred Scott decision. Blacks were proclaimed and adjudicated to be chattel, mere baggage, that could be transported from place to place. Despite all the later bloodshed, this decision is still on the law books. In the process of U.S. Senate ratification of his appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court, in 1991, Clarence Thomas, an "Uncle Tom" to some, mouthed off about "natural justice" and was apparently just about to state in his televised hearings that the Dred Scott decision was proper under his theory of "natural justice".

The driving force and big bucks behind his high court appointment was Senator John C. Danforth (R-MO). Danforth has been the heir to the Ralston-Purina pet food (and other items) fortune. Thomas had been an office employee assisting Danforth. While Thomas was a federal appeals judge in the District of Columbia Circuit, he made a decision, WITHOUT DISQUALIFYING HIMSELF AS HE WAS OBLIGATED TO DO UNDER FEDERAL STATUTES, favoring Danforth in eleven million dollars.

Interesting detail: Danforth won election to the U.S. Senate in 1976, where he remained for 18 years, as a result of a sabotaged plane crash removing his Democratic opponent. In 2000, Mel Carnahan (running for U.S. Senate) and his son and office aide, all died in a sabotaged plane crash in Missouri just after debating Carnahan opponent, John Ashcroft. And this was just prior to the Gore/Bush presidential candidate debate in St. Louis. Carnahan reportedly had documents with him on the plane which he planned to give to Gore, showing tremendous financial and other scandals incriminating George W. Bush. The documents disappeared in the crash zone at the hands of the secret police, the FBI, or persons claiming to be FBI. (Do I understand airplane sabotage? In 1973, my book called The Secret History Of Airplane Sabotage was blocked in the printing cycle by Rockefeller-owned United Air Lines. No copies are now available.)

For several decades early in the 19th century, John Marshall was Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. In Chicago, a law school is named after him. The Establishment falsely portrays him as a great pillar of honor. A heavily documented book, however, shows the massive corruption involving Chief Justice Marshall, including huge land grabs by his relatives, litigation which Chief Justice Marshall covered up on his high court and did not disqualify himself from. See The History Of The Supreme Court by Gustavus Myers, a book generally NOT allowed to be on the shelves of law libraries.

Chief Justice Marshall's allegedly "famous" decision, Marbury vs. Madison, as the book documents, was a brazen scheme to block STATE SUPREME COURTS from proceeding with litigation contesting and investigating huge land grabs done by the Chief Justice and his circle of thieves and swindlers.

Judges on the U.S. Supreme Court have traditionally been multi-multi-millionaires, representing and promoting the interests of land-grabbing railroads and large corporate interests, in direct opposition to the rights of common people. In the 1930s, the high court judges repeatedly outraged the public by knocking down laws passed by Congress to try to combat the emergency caused by the widespread Depression. The financial and industrial debacle was fomented and instigated by the ultra-rich as a scheme to seize assets and properties for a penny on the dollar. The high court dictators repeatedly cancelled the rights of labor and the working people.

In post World War II, the U.S. was having extreme foreign policy problems with various countries, including Africa—caused by the image of the United States NOT having equal rights for American Blacks, a contradiction that the U.S. could not continue to evade. As a consequence, the U.S. Supreme Court not willingly but was forced to make a decision in 1954 purporting to help the rights of Blacks, ordering school desegregation. It was a decision the ultra wealthy reluctantly made to try to clean up America's image of lynching Blacks and using them for cheap labor. (For related details, see The Myth Of Democracy by Ferdinand Lundberg. His other books, The Rich And The Super-Rich, 1967, and a version in the 1930s, America's Sixty Families, documented the crimes of the very wealthy, which sooner or later, Lundberg says, causes the common people to rise up and slaughter their tormentors and exploiters.)

Some call the high court justices, in making the majority ruling in the Bush/Gore cases, "The Gang of Five". As to their blatantly not disqualifying themselves when there were strong reasons to require it, see our website stories about the alleged "Election". Their decisions, cancelling the voters' position, stopped the re-counting and installed Bush as the alleged "president". Some called it a "Fascist Coup". These Five, realizing their second Bush/Gore ruling might be used as a precedent in some OTHER election controversy, said the decision on so-called Equal Protection of the Law, IS NOT TO BE REFERRED TO IN ANY OTHER LITIGATION.

More America's Great Fairy Tales coming.
Stay tuned.

Red China And The American
Presidential Elections, Part One
(1/15/01)

Where did it start, and when and how will it end?

To understand that requires pulling together little understood facts and making some sense of them. Perhaps this will give you a door into a better handle on the situation.

As an upcoming industrial power, Japan was always down-rated by the West. When they destroyed the Czar of Russia's Pacific naval fleet at Port Arthur, early in the 20th century, Americans and Russians were suitably shocked. How is it they did not understand?

In World War I, Japan was an ally of the Western Powers. The Japanese royal family interlocked with their business cartels, the Zai-batsu, and had plenty of financial muscle. They began pulling away from America in the 1930s. The Japanese monarchy had huge deposits in U.S. banks. They angered the American aristocracy by withdrawing those deposits and contributing to the then oncoming bank collapse. President Franklin D. Roosevelt had to declare a bank holiday, an emergency, right after being inaugurated in 1933.

When the common people of one nation are angered by those of another country, that is ethnic, nationalist, or religious friction. But, when the aristocracy of one country is really sore at the aristocracy of another country, however, that is not simply opposition; that means WAR.

Japan began attacking China in 1931. President Roosevelt sent in a top military expert, Brig. General Claire Chennault, to find out why the Chinese did not have an effective air force to counter the Japanese attacks. China began making demands for material assistance on the American government as well as American financiers. After all, with another World War expected, the U.S. needed items from China, such as tungsten, for the making of airplanes and battleships.

One result was that American mercenaries became involved in aiding China fight an air war against Japan. They were called "The Flying Tigers". From documents released more than fifty years AFTER the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor in December of 1941, it became evident that the Japanese may have felt justified attacking our fleet and airfields in Hawaii. Six months BEFORE Pearl Harbor, the Flying Tigers were part of an American plan to aid the Chinese (known to the Japanese) to bomb Japan. (In recent years, Barbara Walters and the ABC Network did a documentary based on those documents, on this American plan to bomb Tokyo six months BEFORE Pearl Harbor.)

Part of the world's then richest family, Mayling Soong, known as Madame Chiang Kai-shek, was the wife of the Chinese dictator. Her family member, T.V. Soong, was considered one of the richest men in the world. Their fortune, in great part, was based on narcotics exports. The American government contemplated that assisting China with war loans would minimize dope addiction in America. (Then, as now, the major dope coming into the U.S. was and is from China, now called "China White". The monopoly press, to protect Red China, falsely states the major dope now is from Colombia.) The American hope then was that narcotics exporting to the U.S. would diminish.

Even all during World War II, however, corrupt Chinese generals were in charge of dope exports, even, on occasion, through Japanese lines, down the Burma Road, and elsewhere. (Numerous details are in the book The Soong Dynasty by Sterling Seagrave, hardback edition, Harper & Row, NY, 1985, pages 368-369.)

Historically, arranging the finances of the dope cartel was the British bank owned jointly by the British monarchy and dope-rich families of Shanghai, the HONG KONG & SHANGHAI BANK. (See, for example, the book Dope, Inc.) The Queen of England, through the bank owned by her, Coutts Bank London, has a joint account for laundering illicit funds such as from the dope trafficking jointly with George Herbert Walker Bush and his sons, George W., Jeb, and Neil. (See Federal Reserve secret wire transfer records, attached to our website series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes The Bush Family".) The reputed head of the Red Chinese Secret Police IN THE UNITED STATES is tied to the Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank. He lives in the Midwest and has direct communications links with the White House. (Visit our website series "The Red Chinese Secret Police in the United States".)

To benefit ethnic Chinese in controlling oil-rich Indonesia, the American CIA, in 1965, arranged the mass murders of some half a million of that nation of islands. The excuse, other than that the ones to be slaughtered opposed the CIA-installed regime? The victims were considered and perceived as being "Reds", whether actually true or not did not seem to matter.

Made fantastically rich on reputed dope exports and other contraband to the West, the ethnic Chinese family of Riady set up their North American headquarters from their flagship, Lippo Group and Lippo Bank, in Arkansas. For influencing American Presidential elections, they bought the tiny First National Bank of Mena, Arkansas.

The further purpose? For reportedly assisting the American CIA and their surrogates—William Rockefeller Clinton, Ollie North, George Herbert Walker Bush, and Henry Hyde. The purpose? To launder the huge cash flow resulting from the narcotics

will gratify some people and astonish the rest."
— Mark Twain

flown in, through, or nearby, to the Mena airport. The cash flow, in turn, was relayed through two or more routes, among others.

Some of the cash went through a small bank in Noel, Missouri. The reputed body of the too-talkative bank president was found in a nearby lake. His murder was falsely blamed on two young fellows. The documents purportedly linking the dope cash affair to George W. Bush and his father were in the possession of Missouri Governor Mel Carnahan, running in 2000 for U.S. Senator. In an earlier story, we mentioned the sabotaged plane crash by which Carnahan was snuffed out to benefit George W. Bush's alleged "election".

Other parts of the American CIA/Riady huge dope cash flow, from fourteen Southern states, was funneled to what became reportedly First Union. That bank ran surreal TV commercials, showing Wall Street as an area of great confusion, with mannequins suddenly falling down and splitting apart.

The Southern states' operations were under the supervision of Arkansas Governor Clinton, together with Jeb Bush, later Florida Governor, Ollie North, the Elder Bush, and Henry Hyde. As a Chicago-area lawmaker, Congressman Henry Hyde had numerous links to Arkansas and the dope cash. Hyde had been a director of a reputed CIA proprietary, Clyde Federal Savings & Loan of a Chicago suburb. (There have been 26 other S & Ls as CIA proprietaries sucking out the federally-insured funds for covert operations and then the S & Ls went under. See the book The Mafia, The CIA, And George Bush by Pete Brewton, former Houston newspaper journalist, S.P.I. Books, N.Y., 1992.)

Hyde was accused, as an S & L director, in federal district court of Chicago, of causing 67 million dollars of the thrift's funds to disappear in Arkansas.

Contrary to the U.S. Constitution's mandate of "Separation of Powers", Hyde is also head of the CIA's "black budget"—covert funds to overthrow governments and to finance political assassinations. Also, Hyde arranged for CIA that the dope cash be laundered reportedly through the gambling casino on Paradise Island, the Bahamas. (Many more details. Visit our website series "IRS Officials Face Exposure".)

Another route for the American CIA/Riady dope cash reportedly went up through Garfield Ridge Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago. A principal owner of the small, closely held bank has been defrocked Congressman Dan Rostenkowski, an ex-convict. Having been for years head of the tax-writing committee of Congress, quietly and corruptly favoring with loopholes the Chicago markets, "Rosty" as he is known, had plenty of "muscle". (His daughters were reportedly paid by the exchanges in Chicago while apparently doing little if any actual work.) Rosty's pal, Clinton, pardoned him. Rosty had been federal criminally convicted of defrauding the private bank of the U.S. House of Representatives.

The Riady/American CIA dope cash also reportedly benefitted: Tyson Chickens; J.B. Hunt Truck Lines, heavily transporting from Arkansas to a Chicago suburb; Wal-Mart discount store chain; and Beverly Enterprises, the reputedly highly corrupt nursing home chain. That truck line reportedly on occasion transports contraband, such as narcotics. Illinois state transportation regulators, however, know better than to dare stop and check their trucks. Other truck lines, not J.B. Hunt, are harassed and shaken-down for pay-offs for purporting to have "overweight" trucks.

A terminus point for the Riady/Lippo/Red Chinese Secret Police/American CIA dope cash has been, for several decades, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Five currency and commodity brokers have traded with use of this river of narcotics money, without filing reports required by the U.S. Treasury of cash intake over ten thousand dollars. The brokers knew, know, and have known, that the cash came in great part through the Red Chinese and reportedly the Riady family, for the purpose of corruptly influencing U.S. presidential elections. In violation of federal regulatory rules, they did not conduct "due diligence" to accurately determine who their "clients" were. But they had plenty good reasons to already know.

Clinton, as presidential candidate and as president, often came to the Chicago Mercantile Exchange—to supposedly give a "speech". Funny thing: if the monopoly press even mentioned he was at the "Merc", as it is called, which was seldom, they never mentioned what his speech there was all about. Clinton came to the Merc to tap into and connect into the illicit fountain of cash, masquerading as foreign currency and other deals.

For some twelve years, regulating the Chicago markets was oriental-descent Wendy L. Gramm, then head of the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission. A brokerage owned by a former top Chicago Mercantile Exchange official, GNP Commodities, accused her jointly with the Federal Reserve Board of falsely interfering with the firm's plan to merge with a French firm, Bank Indo-Suez. Following a regulatory hearing, an attorney for the firm reportedly hollered that if Wendy Gramm and the Fed do not get off GNP's back, they will be caught up in an international incident and will cease to exist. (Stories about this appeared in the Wall Street Journal, November, 1989.)

Wendy L. Gramm, as then head of CFTC, played a key role reportedly in covering up the bribery agenda of Bank of Credit and Commerce International. BCCI, through five La Salle Street brokers, corruptly condoned by CFTC and Wendy L. Gramm, was engaged in bribery and/or blackmailing 108 members of the U.S. House of Representatives and 28 U.S. Senators, including Gramm's own husband, U.S. Senator Phil Gramm (R-TX). BCCI wanted Congressional okay to spread out their bank branches in the U.S. (Only one populist newspaper, SPOTLIGHT, ran the details of my exclusive story, in August 1991, of this scheme operating through "straddles", Chicago and London.) By a strange series of circumstances, the Bank of England had the BCCI bribery records, as an open record, for only thirty days.

Senator Gramm has been in a position to cover up this dirty cash. He has been Chairman of the Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee. His wife Wendy, became a Director of Enron Corp. Enron produces electricity and natural gas, develops, constructs, and operates energy facilities worldwide, and delivers physical commodities and financial and risk management services to customers. Annual revenues exceed $40 billion. Alleged U.S. vice president Richard Cheney is a major stockholder of Enron. And Enron reportedly has been part of putting the giant squeeze on California in their electricity blackout following the alleged Year-2000 "election". Going heavily for Presidential candidate Gore, was California thus punished as an example to other state's popular vote that went for Gore instead of for George W. Bush? That is, if you supported Gore, we are going to "stick it" to you.

The Chicago Mercantile Exchange and the Red Chinese and their secret police played a key joint role in several presidential elections. The head of a Chicago Mercantile Exchange consulting unit leaked the earth-quaking bribery/dope details to certain more independent journalists. At a key point in the Year-2000 Presidential Election, this key figure was murdered. Both George W. Bush and William Rockefeller Clinton had an interest to snuff him out. What was it all about? Who all in Florida were bribed with the Red Chinese dope cash funneled through the Merc? Are some members of the alleged "Cabinet" of alleged "President" George W. Bush tied to the Red Chinese? Was there a malign, if not corrupt, influence, on the U.S. Supreme Court in the Bush/Gore cases?

More coming. Stay tuned.

Red China And The American Presidential Elections, Part Two
(1/16/01)

Various federal regulators have the mandated authority to keep track of markets in Chicago, including the following:

- Commodity Futures Trading Commission, CFTC;
- Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC;

• Comptroller of the Currency; and others.

Their task is to determine and enforce compliance with federal laws, regulations, and rules. They have the authority to examine the records of, and to interview, the principals of those trading on the following:

Chicago Mercantile Exchange;
Chicago Board of Trade;
Chicago Board Options Exchange;
Chicago Stock Exchange

(which changed its name from Midwest Stock Exchange following a horrendous scandal in the early 1990s. Visit our website for a story about items about that scandal not mentioned in the monopoly press but detailed in a civil suit in Chicago—namely, massive embezzlement through a private bank subsidiary of the Exchange, to evade keeping records and paying taxes amounting to billions of dollars).

Records and reports of federal regulators show a Chicago-based commodity trading firm, LFG, did not keep proper records and did not conduct “due diligence”, an industry term meaning accurately determining who exactly are, in fact, their clients and where they actually are located.

(The full title of the firm is, since about 1999, REFCO-LFG Division, 111 W. Jackson Blvd., 17th floor, Chicago IL 60604; (312) 441-6000. REFCO started out as an obscure cattle-trading firm, Arkansas and elsewhere, and became a giant futures trading firm based in Chicago. They reportedly “bought”, early in her career, Hillary Rodham Clinton, by arranging a hundred-thousand-dollar “profit” on a few dollar transaction. They have repeatedly somehow escaped full scrutiny and punishment in a variety of scandals—the silver scandal of the early 1980s; the soybean and currency scandals in Chicago of 1989-1992, where a number of “no-clout” small-fry were sent to prison, including the “Soybean Ten”. REFCO is reportedly a trading front for international financial pirate George Soros, who shares corrupt deals with the Rothschilds, such as the attack on the British Pound Sterling and the Bank of England, a few years ago. Critics allege REFCO “owns” the federal regulators.)

The federal regulators had and have data reportedly available to them tending to support what others in the industry contend about LFG—that their actual clients, not disclosed by way of “due diligence”, are actually those of the Red Chinese, foreign and U.S. domestic; the Red Chinese Secret Police, foreign and U.S. domestic; and the Red Chinese military, which owns and operates the manufacturing and marketing facilities, under the name Polytechnologies Inc., of AK-47 submachine guns; and ethnic Chinese such as the Riady family. The Red Chinese have repeatedly sought to smuggle into the U.S. quantities of AK-47s, to be supplied to inner-city narco-terrorist street gangs for shoot-em-ups with American big-city police. The huge cash flow through LFG reportedly is interwoven with these groups.

The head of Polytechnologies, Inc., and the reputed head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, has been Wang Jun. He has had, as his private attorney, Kenneth W. Starr, the supposed “Independent Counsel” who, from 1994 to 1998, was supposedly “investigating” Bill and Hillary Clinton.

All this at the same time Wang Jun was meeting with President Clinton in or near the White House. In violation of various federal criminal statutes, and committing treason, Clinton conveyed to Wang Jun, U.S. industrial, financial, and MILITARY secrets (including how to perfect the Red Chinese military missile program after several launch failures). A White House intern about to testify about this, Mary Caitrin Mahoney, was assassinated right in the heart of the District of Colombia, and the murder falsely blamed by the FBI on a “lone nut”, a typical FBI cover-up of a political assassination.

(For more background data, visit our website series “Red Chinese Secret Police IN THE UNITED STATES”).

One of five Chicago commodity brokers doing the same, LFG reportedly transacts in large sums for laundering the proceeds of the huge, unpunished flow of Red Chinese dope, called “China White” and other narcotics, through Canada, coming across the Canada-Montana border to the upper part of Montana. Montana Governor Marc Racicot (Republican), according to some outspoken Montana journalists, is himself criminally implicated in the huge cash proceeds of the cross-border dope smuggling.

Huge sums from the Red Chinese and their Secret Police and ethnic Chinese influenced the Year-2000 Presidential alleged “Election”. The Montana Governor was the surrogate on location in Florida for candidate George W. Bush, in working a malign, if not corrupt, influence. The purpose was to obstruct and abort the recounting of votes that were expected to show candidate Albert Gore, Jr., winning Florida’s Electoral College vote and hence the U.S. Presidency.

Top officials, mostly Democrats, for example of Miami-Dade County, were reportedly “persuaded”, at a key point, to abandon recounting the ballots. The Mayor of Miami, in published reports, denied he worked a malign influence on his cronies on the Election Board, to suddenly stop the recount and refuse to resume it. Federal commodity and currency regulators were in a position to know, but did nothing, about the huge cash flow through LFG reportedly finding its way to Florida and the activities there of the Montana Governor jointly with James A. Baker III, another reputed Bush family “bagman”.

details to certain independent-minded journalists. To slow down the disclosures, the head of that unit was murdered at a key point in the Year-2000 alleged “Election”. The details showed, in their simplest form, that the Red Chinese, the Red Chinese Secret Police, the ethnic Chinese such as the Riady family, reportedly simply switched horses, from Clinton to George W. Bush. Following the alleged “Election” of Bush, Clinton began making outspoken statements that Gore won the election but the recounting of votes was stopped.

According to reports available to, or compiled by, U.S. federal commodity and currency regulators, as well as the Criminal Investigation Division of the Chicago office of the Internal Revenue Service, some of the commodity and currency brokerage money laundering, to influence the Florida recount, was disguised through foreign exchange transactions, FOREX in industry parlance, by among others:

- Grupo Financiero Bancomer, the Mexican banking giant, with offices in the U.S. (but not allowed to set up a Chicago office though acting in Chicago through intermediaries) and around the world. In 1998, Bancomer pleaded guilty in money laundering charges entered by U.S. prosecutors, proceeds of massive narcotics transactions, the federal probe dubbed “Operation Casablanca”.

Bancomer is a unit of the Bank of Montreal, owned by the Bronfman family—who have been owners of the Seagram’s booze empire, the movie theater chain Cineplex Odeon (called by critics Cineplex ODIIOUS), and once major owners of DuPont, the explosives war-monger, with Bronfman’s ownership later being switched to movie-making, Hollywood. A major owner of Bancomer, who fronts for them in legislation that may affect them, has been U.S. Senator Peter Fitzgerald (R-IL).

- The foreign currency unit of Harris Bank of Chicago, the parent being Bank of Montreal.

- The foreign exchange, FOREX, units of Bank America, holding firm of Bank of America; they took over the commodity and currency transactions of Continental Bank of Chicago, major owners of Continental having been federal appeals judges in Chicago. (The judges never disqualified themselves in litigation in their court involving their bank ownership. Guess who wins in their crooked court?)

Federal regulators, as well as IRS criminal investigators, are and have been in a position to know, but do nothing about, the accounts, benefits, and emoluments pledged, promised, or actually given to those state officials in Florida, and county officials such as reportedly in Miami-Dade, as a form of malign influence, or bribery—all stemming back reportedly to transactions and concealments by five Chicago currency and commodity brokers.

More coming. Stay tuned.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson Affair
(1/18/01)

Some folks, because of an apparent lack of wisdom, seem to reject and violate age-old proverbs—such as: “PEOPLE IN GLASS HOUSES SHOULD NOT THROW STONES.”

Being a life-long resident of Chicago and an activist since I was a child, I became known as someone who was not afraid to speak out.

By 1965, self-educated in law, I brought a series of federal court class actions to re-apportion Chicago and Illinois terribly gerrymandered voting districts. The “One Man, One Vote” constitutionally-based standards were being flagrantly violated. These violations resulted in Blacks and Latinos not having a fair chance to elect a sufficient number of representatives such as in the City Council of Chicago, as justified by the minority population in the Windy City.

Members of minorities understood I was using my legal research and investigation skills not only to target crooked judges and lawyers, but to assist the aspirations of the underdogs. I choose not to be a member of the Bar. The federal judges, who hate non-lawyers and me in particular, were nevertheless forced to permit me to represent myself as a voter and all voters similarly situated. As a result of my lawsuits, sometimes opposed by as many as fifty lawyers (my electric mimeograph rapidly cranked out the court papers), Blacks and Latinos were able to have more representatives, speaking for their interests, elected to the City Council, the Illinois State Legislature, and the U.S. Congress, and eventually even the County Board.

By 1969, there was a vast movement in Chicago of Black would-be home-owners. By racially-discriminatory practices, banks “red-lined” Black districts, so Blacks could not get a home mortgage. Blacks had to buy “on contract”, paying per month on the basis of twice what the house was worth.

I became a volunteer consultant to the 25,000 members of the South Side Contract Buyers League. In packed church mass meetings, I outlined what needs to be done. I dared tell them that the judges hearing their cause were real estate speculators and landlords of sizeable properties, enemies of the common man. The judges opposed the dreams of the Chicago Blacks to one day own their own home.

To the Establishment and their banks and mortgage companies, a grassroots movement, like the Buyers League, is dangerous, like a prairie fire. They have to stop it.

Enter, Rev. Jesse Jackson. A series of well-informed sources told me plenty about Jesse’s rise to prominence and how he was becoming a multi-millionaire through a series of secret business arrangements. (I had unraveled the secrets of his ill-gotten wealth.)

At a crucial court hearing, Rev. Jackson arrived with his muscle-men, called “Black Men Moving”, grim enforcers, who overwhelmed the already packed courtroom. The leaders of the Buyers League, present in court, were prepared, representing themselves, to discuss the law and the facts (they whispered to me that they suspected Jesse’s bunch were a set-up, provocateurs).

The court scene became extreme and tense, with Jesse’s people, instead of discussing law and facts, hollering slogans and threats. The county sheriff himself, not a deputy, entered the courtroom and stood next to the judge on the bench. The deputies swept into the courtroom.

Guess who they arrested? Not Jesse Jackson or his military-style team, but rather the president and vice-president of the Buyers League who had been mostly polite and silent. They were taken to the sheriff’s lock-up in the court basement. At that point, Jesse went from the courthouse to the mayor’s office across the street. I told a number of the Buyers League members to hurry up and push me in my wheelchair to follow Jesse.

As I rolled up, Jesse was sitting in the mayor’s outer office. He growled at me: “What are you doing here, White face?” I responded: “Look, I am not some White cracker bigot that you are trying to scare. I am helping the Buyers League. YOUR southside office is just a few feet away from THEIR office. Yet, you repeatedly refused to help them.” As he entered the mayor’s inner office, he kept several women members of the Buyers League from following him in. They began pounding on the closed door: “Jesse, come out of there! You do not speak for us.” Jesse exited the inner office as a TV crew was setting up their lights. As he approached their microphone, he glared at me: “I’m going to get you for this!” Like some over-six-foot-high pest-control expert, somehow giving me advance warning, looking down at me sitting in my wheelchair like I was some kind of helpless bug.

Sweet victory! The confrontation and commotions I caused resulted in the two leaders of the Buyers League being released from the court basement lock-up. After other incidents, my strategies worked. Rev. Jesse Jackson did not succeed in taking over and snuffing out the Buyers League movement. Eventually, after a meeting in my home of bank-type bigshots and Buyers League leaders, the thousands and thousands of homes were arranged for the Blacks with long-term mortgages at HALF the price of the contracts. At every turn of this perilous road, I warned the the bank-shills, opponents, and enemies of the Buyers League: “I am not Jesse Jackson. I am NOT for sale!”

Knowledgeable Blacks started thereafter meeting me on the sly, afraid that Rev. Jackson would find out. Through them, I compiled a list of witnesses and details which would prove Jesse was an extortionist, shaking down various businesses, including fellow Blacks, and thus vastly enriching himself, under the disguise of promoting human rights.

Such as: he became the owner of a garbage truck business, removing refuse, from factories and such. Where did his trucks unload? Why, in a private garbage dump owned by mobsters. He reportedly shook down a food store chain by repeatedly marching on them. Bank clerks whispered in my ear his secret bank arrangements of his apparent laundering of vast sums. We made a mass of witnesses and details available to an elite government unit. In 1972 they had Jesse indicted on federal criminal charges of tax evasion and extortion and various inter-state crimes.

Through a highly corrupt GOP national committeeman from Indiana, Rev. Jackson reportedly conveyed to the Nixon White House a “gift” of $850 thousand. The Federal prosecutor was removed. (He told his associates how he came to be wrecked.) The indictment was suppressed.

Thereafter, I arranged a clandestine meeting with a member of the elite unit. I was present with two mass media reporters who claimed confirmation would result in a story by them. They received direct confirmation from the horse’s mouth, how Rev. Jesse Jackson, himself a Republican in the early 1970s, beat down the prosecution and made it a secret. One of the journalists, with a TV network, never got around to doing a story. He died when his plane was blown up by a bomb. The other reporter decided to stay shut, despite direct confirmation; and in return, he was rewarded with a very lucrative job with one of the world’s largest news groups. (Enhancing a career by blackmail?)

In 1975, I and my associates met with an Afro-American reporter, Barbara Reynolds, then working for the Chicago Tribune. She had written a book about Rev. Jesse Jackson—how he fraudulently became a supposed Black “leader”, replacing Dr. King; how he falsely claimed Dr. King died in his arms; and how Jesse gets various benefits from the government and huge corporations who condone his vast deception. Her book, The Man, The Myth, The Movement, was then being withdrawn from the bookstores and suppressed, she told us, because the Establishment needed to protect their front man, Rev. Jackson. She said the Rev. Jackson’s threats were requiring her to soon pack-up and leave Chicago. (I have one of the very few copies of the original book.)

In the early 1990s, she appeared on the TV Show Tony Brown’s Journal. She told what happened to her at the hands of Jesse Jackson and mentioned she thought her book was finally going to be re-issued.

In the years that followed, Rev. Jackson was a very mixed bag. Sometimes he was fully justified in clamoring about discriminatory policies of major corporations. But, then he would become silent once one of his cronies were put on their board of directors and, through some means or another, he got some benefit or emolument that enriched him. And, the corporations would continue their discriminatory policies.

An example is the matter of Black would-be General Motors car dealers. Jesse complained to GM, who made one of his cronies a director. Some Blacks were given the franchise to be a dealer, but in a territory where they could starve to death and go bankrupt. Jesse was silent about racially discriminatory practices at a GM parts facility in a western suburb of Chicago, Broadview. Jesse refused to help the 3,000 Black workers protesting that General Motors Electro-Motive Division, making railroad locomotives in the Chicago area, had discriminated against Blacks for decades, giving Blacks the dirty grease-pit work and knowingly operating one of their facilities on a toxic dump where, over the years, numerous Blacks died of cancer. Jesse refused to help the Blacks picket the federal court to remove the U.S. district judge who refused to disqualify himself, yet he had been the attorney for the Electro-Motive Division. After almost 20 years pending in court, the Black workers got almost zero from GM. (I designed the leaflets for the picketers, with our investigation of the judge's past.)

If you are a Black and hope to be a gospel singer and get TV attention, you reportedly have to deal with Jesse Jackson's wife's company, Jacqueline Productions. Otherwise, you get lost. It is a trick apparently to even locate where they operate from.

Jesse seems to have an unholy arrangement with the mob-linked Hotel Workers Union. How is it that his family members have the lucrative reputedly mob-linked beer distributorships in Chicago? Yet, his commotions about Blacks being blocked from voting in Florida in the Year-2000 Presidential Election are justified grievances. But, is he, with his past pattern of doing things, hoping to somehow shakedown the Democratic National Committee?

As we have mentioned in our website story about the murder of Dr. King, according to a former Justice Department official who had Jesse's records piled up in his office, Rev. Jesse Jackson was reportedly an FBI informant and "fink" most of his adult life. The staff of the House Subcommittee on Assassinations, 1976, had documents, not to be disclosed for 30 years, that the FBI hand-picked Jesse Jackson to replace Dr. King before he was assassinated. And some now believe the FBI/CIA played a role in the murder of what the Establishment perceived as the "Black Messiah".

Notice the pattern when details begin circulating about the CIA, and Clinton, and the dope from Mena, Arkansas, and the links to China. What happens? A supposed "Independent Counsel" shows up, Kenneth W. Starr, who in private law practice is the attorney for the head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, Wang Jun. Starr spends four years and some $50 million of the taxpayers' money, and works the whole mess down to a sex scandal, Monica Lewinsky. Then when more Chinagate scandals may be in the works, with alleged "President" George W. Bush putting in cabinet members part of Chinagate, the Establishment and their oil-soaked monopoly press suddenly comes up with a sex scandal on Rev. Jesse Jackson. As if they did not already long know about it. And this, right on the eve of the inaugural of the alleged "President". The Rev. Jackson sex scandal is to whitewash not only the latest Chinagate dope and theft of U.S. military and nuclear secrets, but also to cover up Rev. Jackson's apparently corrupt arrangements with General Motors and numerous other giant corporations. The U.S. government and the major corporations certainly were in a position to know who and what Jesse Jackson is—at least all the way back to 1972 as mentioned here earlier. And even earlier, how he was selected to replace Dr. King before Dr. King was assassinated by the FBI/CIA.

What is the reason, none dare call this treason? Stay tuned.

(1/26/01)

Some feel old files can be a drag. Whether in original paper form or non-paper form, they take up space. And only old-timers might know how the different files interface with one another.

Besides, a super-duper swindler from yesteryear might have disappeared or never reappear in the public eye. Specializing in keeping track of big-time crooks, including judges and top IRS officials, we, as a group, have a repository of some one million documents, files, rare books, films, audio and video tapes, and more. We relish the thought of a big thief somehow showing up again. It makes keeping old files worth the effort.

The problem? The data thus put together might be falsely described as "tall stories". Especially by those who grew up sucking on mass media milk. In other words, in plain talk, college-educated know-nothings. Like those who e-mail us questions on what they call "marshall law". Hey, have dictionaries become obsolete?

Starting back in 1954 was a brilliant, high-strung, humorless speculator. His real name was Marc Reich, but to disguise his foreign-descent past, he called himself Marc Rich. He knew how to trade a cyclone in usual and unusual metals, grains, and other items from the Earth's crust. And how to make money and shipments disappear through the dark and tax-neutral and tax-haven hole, such as the Netherland Antilles. Oil embargoes such as against Iran in 1979-80, because of the U.S. hostage mess, did NOT affect him.

To preserve his secrets he apparently never fired any of his underlings. Supposedly they were paid even when they did not function well anymore.

So the American CIA needed to pay for a domestic or foreign political assassination? No problem. Marc Rich arranged it through smuggled or stolen gold bullion. (A similar CIA gold trader living in a Chicago suburb was assassinated on the day we fingered him in 1995 on our popular public-access cable-TV program. Mellow with age, John Tarullo, friend and tool of archbishops and top FBI and CIA officials, talked too much. As a teenager, he was a pilot for Benito Mussolini, the Italian strongman.)

Omitting Marc Rich's espionage role, but otherwise useful for background, is the book Metal Men, Marc Rich, And The 10-Billion-Dollar Scam by A. Craig Copetas, G.P. Putnam's Sons, N.Y., N.Y., 1985. To write the book, the author became a metal and commodity trader and infiltrated Rich's circle.

Hillary Rodham Clinton and her globe-traveling law partner and reputed lover, Vincent W. Foster, Jr., were implicated in domestic and overseas money laundering. Secretly a top espionage operative long before his short tenure in the Clinton White House, Foster traveled with tell-tale government-rate airfare. He and Hillary and their crony, Webster Hubbell, former Little Rock mayor and once acting Arkansas supreme court chief justice, were strategists for a reputed worldwide spying-on-banks, as against both friend and foe, for Systematics, in the bank computer software services field.

Bank computer espionage "trap-doors" were their specialty. We were about the first to finger Systematics, headquartered in Arkansas, and some of their front stooges tried, with no success, to scare us into silence. The National Security Agency (NSA) file on Foster and Systematics linked Hillary, Foster, and others in many hundreds of pages of documents, but as available to the public, mostly redacted, blanked out to outsiders.

Marc Rich, the commodity bandit and "spook", was so interwoven with the White House of George Bush The Elder, and later, Bill Clinton, you could not hardly tell whether the White House dirty tricks department was in Washington or Zug, Switzerland—one of Rich's outposts. To escape being prosecuted, Rich did not return from Zug to face the bigtime federal criminal music in the 1980s.

At the time, the U.S. attorney for the southern district of New York, Rudolph W. Giuliani (later N.Y. city mayor), wanted to put Rich in jail. A Bush family confidant, Giuliani nevertheless found out too late that Marc Rich was the American CIA's laundry man and was immune. When Rudy started to run for U.S. Senator from New York against carpetbagger Hillary Clinton, in the Year-2000 Election, she was afraid he would mouth off about her and Foster and Marc Rich. So, Hillary's press agents reportedly launched a pre-emptive strike planting details publicly of Giuliani's marital troubles. And so, Rudy side-stepped the whole mess and the election by divulging what he must have already known, that he was ill with cancer.

The book author described him: "Marc Rich, the man whom the United States justice department privately called the most corrupt corporate executive in America." (Metal Men, page 13.) After he took refuge in his Switzerland offices, the oil-soaked monopoly press, protective of high-level swindlers, agreed to be mostly silent. By 1990, Rich was a key player in the huge, mostly unpublicized Russian ruble affair, an attack by the American CIA and worldwide banks fronting for them, against the Soviet currency, which led to the downfall of the Moscow government. The result was the dissolution of the Soviet Union into fighting-with-each-other provinces, each a fiefdom for mineral exploitation and speculation—Marc Rich's specialty.

Another George Bush The Elder/American CIA darling was a fellow originally from Wisconsin, Leo Emil Wanta. He played a key role in the attack on the Russian ruble to topple the Moscow gang. A CIA-friendly author, the late Claire Sterling wrote a book, a form of mixed and mixed-up report on Wanta. (Thieves' World—The Threat Of The New Global Network Of Organized Crime, Simon & Shuster, N.Y., N.Y., 1994.) As she described it: "The fact that scarcely anyone outside Russia has heard of the Great Ruble Scam may be explained partly by its seemingly unbelievable details, but partly, too, by Western reluctance to touch exquisitely sensitive political nerves." (Page 177.)

To protect the CIA, Sterling has a picture of Wanta in the book under which she has the unfair and not balanced description: "Leo Wanta, the American snake-oil salesman who stormed world money markets to crash the ruble in 1990-91." She conveniently omits that Wanta's cut of the action has been frozen in Russian banks, some of which were taken over by the Russian underworld, the mafiya, and the funds disappeared when some of the banks collapsed.

On the other hand, trillions of rubles were successfully siphoned out of Russia by George Bush the Elder for his personal benefit, some through dope trafficking and weapons smuggling by the Bush family as secretly authorized by Federal Reserve Commissar Alan Greenspan. (Visit our website series, "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush" with attached Federal Reserve secret wire transfers, authorized by Greenspan, to 25 worldwide secret Bush family accounts to launder such illicit proceeds. One such account, as shown, is jointly with the Queen of England, at the bank she owns, Coutts Bank, London.)

An American foreign correspondent based in Italy, Claire Sterling wrote occasionally for the CIA trumpet, the Washington Post. (The suppressed original edition of a book goes into that newspaper's CIA links. Named for Katherine Graham, the long-time straw-boss for the newspaper, the book was titled Katherine The Great, by Deborah Davis.)

Not cheated out of his "commission", Marc Rich stayed shut about himself and the American CIA, such as with the George Bush family, including the Elder Bush's sons, Neil, Jeb, and George W. But cheated out of HIS "commission", Leo Wanta talked openly. So, in 1993, when Wanta went to Switzerland, to await the expected arrival of Clinton White House deputy counsel Vincent W. Foster, Jr., Wanta fell into a trap.

At the behest of Marc Rich, Hillary Clinton, Vince Foster, and Wanta were working on a money laundering deal involving the reputed CIA front under the innocent-sounding name "Children's Defense Fund". Participating behind the scenes was Tommy Thompson, then Wisconsin Governor, and Donna Shalala, once Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison, and later, head of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). (In the alleged "President" George W. Bush administration, Thompson became the HHS successor to her.)

To shut him up, Wanta was grabbed by so-called "authorities" in Switzerland and clapped into a dungeon, he says. Foster never arrived. A short time later, a private "hit" team murdered Foster in or near the Clinton White House and dumped his body next to American Civil War cannons in the memorial Fort Marcy Park, Virginia. The true happening of his demise is recorded on satellite images compiled by the U.S. National Reconnaissance Office (NRO) super-secret satellite bosses. The head of the NRO imaging project, Daniel Potter, was later murdered.

The Foster "hit" team was paid five million dollars of laundered funds reportedly through Marc Rich/George Bush the Elder. (Some background details of the Foster murder are in our website series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush", part four.)

Wanta was brought back to the U.S. on alleged charges of mis-stating $14,000 in supposed taxes. Who wanted him silenced and jailed? CIA darling Wisconsin Governor Tommy Thompson and his dirty-bird crony George Herbert Walker Bush, once head of America's secret political police.

Notice the different standards of so-called justice. Wanta, complaining loudly about the freezing of his "commission" on the Russian Ruble Scam, has been put in jail, and he says mis-treated. He says he keeps reporting to his jailers, to no avail, his medical ailments which require attention.

On the other hand, CIA darling/reputed assassination facilitator Marc Rich, running from Switzerland a worldwide massive CIA proprietary money laundry, is pardoned in the final hours of the stinky Clinton administration. For Bill's benefit, Marc Rich conveyed for use by Hillary, and eventually Bill, somewhere between $30 and $100 million. Our sources say it is closer to $30 million. Gold experts and such on their website on 1/24/01 say, quoting a knowledgeable source: "The White House provided no reasons for Rich's pardon and I understand that the commodity crowd in New York speculates that Clinton ended up with a minimum of $100 million in his pocket somehow, somewhere, as a payoff from Rich for the pardon. No one could corner or manipulate a market better than Mark Rich. I wonder if he has been part of the Gold cartel all this time?" (This is from the <http://www.LeMetropoleCafe.com> website of the Gold Anti-Trust Committee, which contends the Federal Reserve and others are in a worldwide cabal that forced down the price of gold below the cost of production in order to save the paper-money gang.)

The Marc Rich reputed bribe to the Clintons is parked—escrowed, as it is called—at a Caribbean dope-haven money-drop, the former Dutch possession called St. Maartens Island. Owned by current, recently current, and former top IRS officials is an ocean-going money-laundry boat, disguised as a floating gambling casino, that comes and goes from St. Maartens and then crosses the Atlantic to Spain and Portugal. (See a picture of the boat and details in our website series "IRS Officials Face Exposure".)

Leo Wanta is one of a very few real experts on the Russian mafiya. The Russian underworld bloomed following the downfall of the Moscow government. Former cut-throats of the Soviet secret police, the KGB, were out of work, so they formed a help-themselves situation, becoming (or already had been) experts on superior quality counterfeit U.S. and other currency, stolen U.S. credit cards, supplying young men and women for prostitution in the U.S.

In large cities like Chicago, if you become knowledgeable about all this influx of Russian mafiya to America, and seek to report it to the local office of the FBI, guess who gets "investigated"? YOU, not the mafiya. The FBI knows the Russians have superior methods and the FBI does not wish to tangle with them.

With complete immunity, as we have described in earlier stories, congressman Henry Hyde (R-IL) reportedly runs a strip joint in an unincorporated area near Chicago. Used are Russian naked women as dancers, brought to America under false pretenses that they are going to work in “offices”. All this, in apparent open violation of laws regarding the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). Also, Hyde reportedly keeps no records as required by the State Revenue and the IRS. And, ha! ha! Hyde has become head of the Foreign Relations Committee. (To paraphrase the Old Testament: tabernacles of gangsters prosper, and those that curse heaven are secure. A sad and cynical thought that troubles reformers.)

As savvy court observers long have noticed, dirty, corrupt politics are what count—not the law and the facts. Wanta, to fight being framed, had a lawyer working for him who reportedly understood the CIA tricks against those who the spy agency wants to throw away. On the other hand, notice what was said about the Marc Rich pardon by Clinton: “Rich’s attorneys had ties to the former president, Jack Quinn, co-founder of Quinn Gillespie & Associates, was a Clinton White House counsel, and a chief of staff to Vice President Gore, and Arnold & Porter has represented the Clinton legal defense fund since it was created in 1998.” (“Pardon Bypassed Procedures”, Washington Post, 1/24/01, page A-01.)

Wanta has positives, and some possible negatives, in the viewpoints of some. Although a Wisconsin resident, he has credentials, which appear to be genuine, naming him as an Ambassador to Switzerland from the East African nation of Somalia. Such diplomatic authority should have spared him his troubles with Tommy Thompson, etc.

Sarcastic folks, however, surmise the credentials could have been covertly arranged by his one-time mentor, Bush the Elder, through the CIA, to assist in laundering sums through the reputed CIA front, the Children’s Defense Fund. Cynics chuckle that Wanta may simply have just bribed someone in Somalia, or elsewhere, to be named an ambassador from that nation, with their purported rule by a robber-baron military junta. (Really that different from the U.S.?) Against his wish, have Wanta’s former cronies kept him in jail, like a number of other CIA covert operatives, as a cheap way to protect him from his enemies, at government expense? Enemies such as George Bush the Elder and his sons.

As part of a cover-up, various high-level persons have an interest to have some CIA operatives no longer useful (most likely including Wanta), discredited, and even falsely jailed. In the Russian Ruble Capers (1990-91), Federal Reserve Commissar Alan Greenspan and then-president Bush the Elder reportedly arranged to siphon off funds of the former Soviet banking system for their personal benefit and that of their cronies. This required getting in bed with the Russian mafiya. Thousands of tons of the Soviet gold treasury disappeared and ended up with top-level Dutch criminals operating as the Algemene Bank Nederland, now called ABN-Amro. Thus enriched has been ABN’s American flagship, La Salle National Bank of Chicago, which used the purloined gold to set up branches in 15 American cities, gobbling up other banks in the process, secretly paying for them with stolen Soviet gold.

Questions, of which in our various dissertationsa we have made partial answers:

Q: How many foreign and domestic political assassinations has Marc Rich reportedly arranged and financed, disguised as metals and grain deals? (See some of the details previously posted about Rahm Emanuel, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, and the Chicago Board of Trade dirty business.) Are these events occurring through the aid of Rahm Emanuel, managing director of Wasserstein Perella & Co.? We think so. And Rahm is reportedly linked to Marc Rich and the Red Chinese Secret Police operating IN THE UNITED STATES.

Q: Does Marc Rich’s ex-wife, who reportedly directly contacted Clinton asking for a pardon, and Marc’s/her hotshot lawyers have any knowledge of his high-level crimes on behalf of the bloody American CIA? We think so.

Q: Did Bill/Hillary Clinton use Marc Rich to come up with the loot to pay for the private “hit”, as mentioned, on their crony Vincent W. Foster, Jr., because Foster was engaging in treason and was implicating them? (Some background can be found in our series “Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush”, part four.)

Q: Is it true that Rahm Emanuel, for six years having been on and off Clinton White House Senior Advisor, has been, in effect, Deputy Director for North America of the Mossad, Israel’s spy agency? And was Rahm an instrumental part of Marc Rich’s dirty, bloody business for the American CIA? (Rahm Emanuel went on to become a managing director of Wasserstein Perella & Co., now merged with Germany’s Dresdner Bank A.G., all reportedly tied to the Red Chinese Secret Police.)

Q: Is it true that the spy-riddled, oil-soaked monopoly press has suppressed stories, known by them to be true, that Marc Rich has had unholy deals with Bishop Paul Marcinkus, originally from the Chicago-area mafia enclave of Cicero, who went on to become head of the Vatican Bank, linked to the mafia and the American CIA? In numerous items on our website, we discussed Marcinkus’ role in dominating the First National Bank of Cicero which, to get the stink off themselves, have changed their name now several times.

Q: Is Marc Rich, apparently now having bribed Bill/Hillary Clinton to get a presidential pardon, returning to the United States, to assist the American CIA on American soil with money laundering and reportedly facilitating/financing political assassinations, foreign and domestic?

We expect to post more details. Stay tuned.

Switzerland and the other countries are permitting illegal transactions on the American markets in Chicago and New York, to unlawfully manipulate currencies and commodities and to enable a worldwide cartel to have falsely kept down the price of gold, aided by Marc Rich. By the way, Colin Powell's crony, Richard Armitage, reportedly played a key role in the massive amounts involved in the Iran-Contra affair, done with the connivance and assistance of Marc Rich.

Some independent journalists are aware of the secret passwords into the mentioned accounts. If you really understand all this, then you see it is natural that some of the foregoing celebrities and entities parked, escrowed offshore, upwards of one hundred million dollars for the beneficial interest of Hillary Rodham Clinton—in turn, to make it available to her alleged husband William Rockefeller Clinton. (As we have pointed out, they are a "CIA couple" and publicly conduct themselves as "married" although incompatible.)

These parked funds were to persuade Bill, in the last moments of his presidency, to pardon Marc Rich, headquartered in exile in Zug, Switzerland, by way of protecting the foregoing entities and celebrities from, so far, being subject to U.S. federal criminal prosecution for various crimes linked to the sixteen secret accounts and matters thereto related.

Prior to Bill Clinton becoming president, Marc Rich set up secretly in Switzerland for the future of Clinton's purported daughter Chelsea, at the time she was about 12 years old, a $10 million secret account under password Chelsea Jefferson, the term deriving from her first name and Bill's publicly used middle name. (Was Bill her birth father? In the Juanita Broadrick rape matter, Bill told her not to worry, that he was sterile as a result of having mumps at an early age. So then who is her birth father? For various facial resemblances, some contend her birth father was Webster Hubbell.)

More coming. Stay tuned.

Dean Kamen: Gifted Inventor And Man Of Mystery

Editor's note: Dean Kamen is a most unusual inventor and entrepreneur. But you may not have heard about him—yet.

While the article below will fill in the “typical” kinds of biographical data, what needs to be mentioned here is the speculation circulating from some supposedly informed sources that his upcoming “mystery” invention may employ principles of so-called “free energy” devices and operate outside of the laws of physics as they are “religiously” taught and understood by many practicing scientists and engineers.

People like Dean Kamen are more likely to uncover (or rediscover) secrets of Nature that either have been overlooked or purposely deleted from our knowledge base. Just look at his wheelchair for an example of something that seems “impossible” to many engineers. Moreover, since the chair employs gyroscopic devices to maintain stability in otherwise tricky situations, there is some speculation that these devices do more than what the textbooks say they should—remindful of some unusual physics phenomena reported by earlier inventors (and actively suppressed by you-know-who) having to do with gyroscopic interactions.

He also has the personal connections and financial independence to “make things happen” despite the longstanding diabolical entrapment systems that have been put in place by the so-called “elite” controllers of this planet to keep the average masses of humanity enslaved in so many ways. For example, whether or not he knows it, his “F.I.R.S.T.” crusade to awaken an interest in science and engineering among school children is a sure assault on the New World Order gang's longtime agenda item to dumb-down society.

The following article is from the archives of WIRED magazine (http://www.wirednews.com/wired/archive/8.09/kamen_pr.html), an unusual publication which describes itself thusly:

“WIRED magazine is the journal of record for the future. It's daring. Compelling. Innovative. Courageous. Insightful. It speaks not just to high-tech professionals and the business savvy, but also to the forward-looking, the culturally astute, and the simply curious. Each month, WIRED covers the people, companies, and ideas that are transforming the way we live. It delivers incisive analysis and resonant storytelling from some of the world's most provocative writers.”

Dean Kamen's upcoming “mystery” invention is being talked about by some very credible people who have seen it as something that will revolutionize society in a very big way. It seems to be reliable information that the invention has been code-named “IT” and/or “Ginger” and is not a medical technology device like so many of his other creations.

Since Harvard Business School Press gave journalist Steve Kemper $250,000 for his book on IT, the media hounds have been on a prowling and feeding frenzy for “expert” information or simply morsels of speculation on what this new and supposedly revolutionary technology may be.

While we'll have to wait awhile to see what he has been up to—and if all the hype actually has some reality—now is a good time to at least become familiar with this genius and his accomplishments so far. And that is what the following article is all about.

BREAKOUT ARTIST

Dean Kamen, multimillionaire inventor-entrepreneur, is going global with a robochair that climbs stairs, a miracle motor that fights disease, and his wildest notion of all—that scientists will be the 21st century's superstars.

Dean Kamen's sense of what's possible is governed by the immutable laws of Nature. Everything else is up for grabs.

Kamen, 49, is a self-taught physicist and multimillionaire entrepreneur who lives in a hexagonally shaped house of his own design atop a hill just outside Manchester, New Hampshire. Invisible from the road, the estate is outfitted with a softball field, a wood-paneled library that's full of awards and honorary degrees (Kamen never graduated from college), a wind turbine to help supply power, and a pulley system that can deliver a bottle of wine from the kitchen to the bedroom.

He calls the place Westwind, and he stuffed it with a collection of toys and antiques that includes a jukebox, a slot machine, and a 25-ton steam engine once owned by Henry Ford. In Westwind's basement, there's a foundry, a machine shop, and a computer room, where Kamen often toils late into the night. He keeps a Porsche 928 and a black Humvee in one garage, two Enstrom helicopters in the other. The smaller, piston-driven chopper takes him to and from work at his offices in downtown Manchester; the larger, turbine-driven version is reserved for longer hops, like to his private island off the coast of Connecticut. For trips more than a few hundred miles, he flies his twin-turbofan Citation jet.

Kamen has high-powered friends to match his taste in toys, and throws lavish parties that entice many powerful people to New Hampshire. Visitors have included George W. Bush, NASA administrator Dan Goldin, and more recently, John Doerr of the VC firm Kleiner Perkins Caufield & Byers. But it's not the Rolodex, the air force, or the tricked-out Batcave that separates Kamen from the usual posse of tech multimillionaires. It's the way he's gone about acquiring it all, and the offbeat, often idealistic ways he chooses to spend it.

While Kamen won't divulge the size of his fortune, much of it stems from having invented things he decided ought to exist—no market research necessary—like first-of-their-kind medical devices.

While Kamen was attending college in the 1970s, his brother—then a medical student and now a renowned pediatric oncologist—complained that there was no reliable way to give steady doses of drugs to patients. So Kamen invented the first portable infusion pump capable of delivering drugs (such as insulin) to patients who had previously required round-the-clock monitoring, freeing them from a life inside the hospital.

In the mid-1990s, he devised a phone book-sized dialysis machine—at a time when similar devices were as big as dishwashers and required patients to make regular trips to dialysis centers. Vernon Loucks, former chair of Baxter International, contracted Kamen's privately held company, Deka Research & Development, to develop the machine. "We didn't believe it could be done" he recalls. "Now it's all over the world. Dean is the brightest guy I've ever met in this business, bar none."

When he watched a man in a wheelchair try to negotiate a curb in the late '80s, Kamen wondered whether he could build a chair that would hop curbs without losing its balance. After $50 million and eight years in development, the Ibot Transporter—a six-wheeled robotic "mobility system" that can climb stairs, traverse sandy and rocky terrain, and raise its user to eye-level with a standing person—is undergoing FDA trials, and should be available by 2001, at a cost of $20,000. That may sound high, but keep in mind that the Ibot erases the need to retrofit a home for a wheelchair. Plus, "mobility system" is, if anything, an understatement: In June, Kamen saddled up his Ibot and climbed the stairs from a Paris Metro station to the restaurant level of the Eiffel Tower—then promptly called John Doerr on his cell phone.

"At first blush, you'd stay away from developing something like the Ibot, just because of the legal implications" says Woodie Flowers, a mechanical engineering professor at MIT and a friend of Kamen. "You're going to put a human in it and it'll go up stairs? That's nuts. But he did it. He's not one to get caught up in conventional wisdom."

Lately, Kamen has broadened his work beyond healthcare. He believes technology and ingenuity can solve all kinds of social ills—like pollution, limited access to electricity, and contaminated water in many third-world countries, where bacteria from human feces in drinking water is a leading cause of cholera. To help ameliorate the water problem, Deka's team of 170 engineers is working on a nonpolluting engine—funded by several million dollars of Kamen's own money—based on a concept first floated in the early 1800s but never realized.

The device is called the Stirling engine; Kamen hopes it can be developed into an affordable, portable machine that will run a water purifier/power generator that could zap contaminated H₂O with a UV laser to make it safe for drinking. "It can burn any fuel, and you can do all kinds of things with it" he says. "It might be very valuable in emerging economies, giving them access to electricity, even the Net."

Another project, to be unveiled in the next year, will necessitate building "the largest company in New Hampshire" Kamen says with characteristic bravura. He's shy about details, except to say it involves a consumer device, unrelated to healthcare, and will require $100 million in financing. Among the investors: Kleiner Perkins.

But Kamen's first love and greatest passion these days is an idea that may be the farthest-fetched of all: turning engineers and inventors into pop-culture superstars. Operating through a nonprofit outfit called U.S. First (For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology), Kamen works to encourage kids to pursue careers as scientists, engineers, and big thinkers. Lots of people talk about doing that, but to Kamen it's a holy crusade, and he sincerely believes he can reprioritize society to value inventors the way it values athletes. "Our culture celebrates one thing: sports heroes" he says. "You have teenagers thinking they're going to make millions as NBA stars when that's not realistic for even 1 percent of them. Becoming a scientist or an engineer is."

Kamen launched First several years ago when he realized that many American teenagers were unable to name a single living scientist. The organization sponsors a national competition that matches high school students with engineers from local companies. The kids are given a standard kit of parts and challenged to build a working robot in six weeks. The robots are pitted against one another on a playing field, and the best-designed, wildest 'bots rise to the top.

Dean Kamen, with his unconstrained sense of what's possible, has proven the skeptics wrong many times before. But honestly—replacing quarterbacks with engineers as mainstream heroes? Maybe he's been spending too much time in his Batcave.

Kamen wears the same uniform every day, whether he's in Deka's machine shop, meeting with bankers, or visiting the Oval Office: beige Timberlands, Levis, and a cotton work shirt. With his pompadour of wavy black hair, he looks like a 1950s auto mechanic. In cold weather, he adds an olive-drab army jacket, its pockets crammed with small tools.

What drives Kamen's imagination? Things he decided ought to exist, like a water purifier/power generator that zaps tainted H₂O with a laser.

Kamen talks fast, and his voice retains the brassy streak of his native Long Island. He's funny and charismatic, but he has the air of someone used to shouldering big, improbable projects—driven, haunted, quixotic. He doesn't take vacations, and he hasn't paused to marry. "If I'm awake, I'm working" he says. "Deka and First are my work, my family, my hobby. They're everything."

His day usually begins by 9:30 at Deka headquarters, a renovated mill building on the banks of the Merrimack River. That gives employees "an hour of sanity without me in the morning" he says. Kamen works until 9 or 10 pm, when he breaks for dinner, bringing along a staffer or two to talk shop.

Deka projects come in two flavors: Kamen's ideas, and everything else. Everything else—mainly contract research for healthcare concerns—is what pays the bills. Deka designed the HomeChoice portable dialysis machine in partnership with Baxter, as well as a medical irrigation pump for Davol. Deka has also worked on a series of innovative vascular stents (shunts that keep blood vessels clear) for Johnson & Johnson. "If you've got a tough problem, there's only one place to go" says Baxter's former chair Loucks.

By comparison, Kamen's projects are far-out inventions, like the Ibot or the Stirling: grand in scope, slower in development, and often too risky to attract corporate funding. "Sometimes we crash and burn. It's better to do it in private" he says. "I'd rather lose my own money than someone else's."

When things work out, Kamen basks in his success. On a frosty day last winter, I followed him around downtown Manchester as he took an Ibot out for a spin. The Ibot moved so fast that I had to break into a trot just to keep up. It not only operates in four-wheel drive—a standard motorized wheelchair has two-wheel drive—but it has a "balance mode" in which the front wheels rise up, balancing the Ibot upward, like a dog begging for a treat.

The chair's dual processors direct the grounded wheels to move back and forth slightly, compensating for weight shifts. The Ibot is so stable in balance mode that its occupant can even win a shoving match with just about any human.

In front of First headquarters, I watched as a crowd of gawkers stopped Kamen to admire the Ibot. One man asked how the chair works: "Does it just balance with weights?" Kamen—at eye-level with the guy, balancing on two wheels—paused a moment and smiled. "Technically" he said, "it's magic."

Magic moments aside, Deka also has its failures. A project to develop an automated bedside pharmacy—tied into a hospital's computer network and able to deliver more than 30 drugs without manual intervention—is on hold after soaking up several million dollars in funding. "We ran into a lot of political problems" is all Kamen will say. "The drug companies don't want it to happen."

He might run into problems with the Stirling engine, too. The development of a marketable Stirling device has eluded the brightest engineering minds since Robert Stirling, a Scottish minister, patented the first version in 1816. The basic principle of Stirling's external combustion engine is simple: A chamber is filled with a gas that expands as it is heated by a small heat source, such as a propane flame, and contracts when cooled. The process operates a piston and drives the engine. The advantage? Cheap, local fuels can be used to run the engines, and Kamen has adapted his model to produce electricity instead of mechanical power.

But producing the thing is a more complex matter. While many have tried to use Stirlings to power drive shafts for vehicles, they have proven to be too expensive to manufacture on a mass scale, and they're not always efficient enough. One low-tech problem is designing seals that guard against waste as the heat is transferred into a form that does useful work.

Deka's version heats a chamber containing helium, under pressure, and Kamen says it can run on gasoline, propane, fuel oil, diesel, alcohol, or even solar power—with one-fifth the emissions of a gas stove. Deka's engineers think they'll succeed where others have failed because they've ironed out all the kinks. "We looked at the history of the Stirling—all the money and time and expertise poured into it—and identified a half-dozen key goofs that previous teams had made" says project leader Chris Langenfeld. "Seventy percent of it was a materials challenge. We had to track down the right composites to use as seals."

Kamen hopes that his family of Stirlings, five years in development, will soon bring portable electricity to nations without a reliable power grid—or any grid at all. He envisions briefcase-sized Stirlings powering cell phones and cell towers, as well as purifying water. He aims to have them on the market in the next two years, and is currently working on the marketing issues—like how developing nations will be able to afford bulk purchases of the engines, which are projected to cost $1,500 apiece.

Staffing for the Stirling project alone involves about 20 people, including chemical, electrical, and mechanical engineers; thermodynamicists; particle and combustion physicists; and software designers and testing technicians.

"Deka is one of the highest-morale operations I've ever seen" says Ray Price, president of the Economic Club of New York and a close friend of Kamen. "There's no bureaucracy, and very little structure. Dean expects performance, but how they get to solutions is up to them."

Kamen supervises the 10 or so projects underway at Deka at any given time, and is rarely at his desk. He refers to himself as "a human entropy producer" roaming the halls and labs, tossing out ideas, asking about timing, and prodding project managers.

Deka also has its mercilessly intense side. "There's a sorting process that happens at Deka" says MIT's Flowers, also an adviser for First. "You have the people who stick with Deka because they realize it's a great place to learn, to try things that haven't been done. Successful people listen to, understand, and respect Dean." But Flowers adds that he has known some MIT grads who have found the experience less than satisfying. "One of them would never cross the threshold again. Dean occasionally runs over people."

The Ibot chair has a balance mode that raises up the front wheels, like a dog begging for a treat. "Technically" says Kamen, "it's magic."

Those who stick around remain aware of the impatience that simmers beneath Kamen's surface. The same is true of those people who contract with Deka. Bob Gussin, Johnson & Johnson's recently retired chief scientific officer, convinced his former company to fund the Ibot, despite great internal resistance. He calls Kamen "brilliant" but says: "Dean is so intense and so aggressive that you always have to worry whether he'll get frustrated at not moving fast enough. Sometimes his intensity is almost frightening."

Kamen exhibited a pronounced entrepreneurial bent from an early age, as well as a dislike for rote learning. In junior high, rather than do his homework, he would read demanding primary texts like Isaac Newton's Principia on his own, and then heckle his science teacher. As a teenager, he built control systems for sound-and-light shows in his basement, and before long, he was getting contracts for installations at Manhattan's Hayden Planetarium, the Four Seasons, and the Museum of the City of New York. While still in high school, he was asked to automate the Times Square ball drop on New Year's Eve. Before graduation, he was earning $60,000 a year, rivaling the combined income of his father, a comic book artist, and his mother, a high school teacher.

Kamen's tendency to put his own projects before his schoolwork continued at Worcester Polytechnic Institute in Worcester, Massachusetts. On frequent trips home, he worked on his portable infusion pump, eventually dubbed Auto-Syringe. But the basement was getting crowded. Kamen needed more room. He engaged an architect to expand the basement under a newer wing of the house, and hired a crew to prop the house on stilts to make room for a Bridgeport milling machine, an arc welder, lathes, saws, and other equipment purchased from a neighborhood machine shop.

What did his parents think? Kamen sent them on a cruise during the period of heaviest construction.

After five years at WPI, Kamen still hadn't collected enough credits to graduate, so he was asked to leave. He moved back to Long Island and poured his energy into Auto-Syringe. The New England Journal Of Medicine published an article about the benefits of the pump, and the National Institutes of Health ordered 100 units. In 1979, to escape taxes and overcrowding, he moved to New Hampshire. "I saw the license plates that read LIVE FREE OR DIE, and that sounded pretty good to me" says Kamen.

After two years, he sold Auto-Syringe to Baxter for an undisclosed sum. Up until that point, he'd hardly taken a salary, plowing the majority of his profits back into the business. For the first time, he felt rich. Within days of the sale, he bought a helicopter, fulfilling a childhood dream.

The helicopter led him to North Dumpling Island, a speck of land with a lighthouse, located in Long Island Sound. His flight instructor's wife, a real estate agent, told him the island was for sale. One winter day, he set out to find it. He brought the chopper down near the lighthouse tender's home. A frightened old man, part of the family that owned the island, came out to see what was going on. The young inventor befriended the man and his wife. When Kamen later bought the island (at a bargain price), he let the couple continue living there.

Though Kamen doesn't visit the island much anymore, it's a microcosm of his worldview, a whimsical combination of leave-me-alone and dreams of techno-utopia. An aerial photograph that hangs in Kamen's office at Deka bears a caption that reads: "The Only 100 Percent Science-Literate Society."

When Kamen wanted to erect a wind turbine on North Dumpling and the state of New York objected, he seceded from the US. Though the secession has never been officially recognized, he signed a nonaggression pact with his friend, then-President George Bush, and enlisted Ben Cohen and Jerry Greenfield of Ben & Jerry's as "joint chiefs of ice cream". North Dumpling has its own flag, its own anthem, a one-ship navy, and its own currency. One bill, which Kamen carries in his wallet, is the value of pi. "You can't make change for it" he says with a grin. "It's a transcendental function."

After the sale of Auto-Syringe in 1982, Kamen began buying 19th-century mill buildings in Manchester and renovating them as office space (he now owns 570,000 square feet of office space in the city). He set up Deka R&D in one, and soon got to know city and state politicians, like John Sununu, the governor of New Hampshire, who would go on to become a notorious chief of staff for President Bush. Today, Kamen has a direct line to New Hampshire governor Jeanne Shaheen.

"In a small state like New Hampshire, Dean is a very visible guy" says Jay Wood, president of Kana Communications, one of Kamen's tenants. "His helicopter comes buzzing down the river and lands on a building; you can't ignore that."

When it comes to First, Kamen's a complete promoter. He makes sure that the state's politicians are all visible supporters, which means First events are usually peppered with political types. Every four years, when the presidential candidates roll through New Hampshire looking for votes, Kamen makes First headquarters—aka First Place—and Westwind available for rallies, parties, and speeches, and looks for a quid pro quo from the candidates—soliciting promises to invite First winners to the White House.

One day during my visit, Kamen and I get a chance to meet up with George W. Bush. Kamen's already been all over the Eastern time zone, but nothing is more important to him than scoring promises on behalf of First. He woke up in Cleveland before dawn, then flew to visit Bose Corporation, near Boston, to show off the Ibot and talk with Amar Bose about marketing Deka's top-secret consumer device. He picked up a banker from Credit Suisse First Boston at Manchester airport to discuss financing, then wolfed down a dinner of pizza and beer at First Place, where George W. was giving a speech. After the speech, Kamen drags me through the crowd toward the candidate.

Apparently George W. indicated at a recent Westwind dinner that he might be able to attend the First nationals in Orlando. "I want to get him to promise to come in front of a reporter" Kamen tells me. "You're going to be my witness."

As a teen, Kamen read Newton, heckled his science teacher, and built high-profile projects in New York. By graduation, he was earning $60,000 a year.

I'm standing in a parking lot near Manchester airport with Kamen's parents, Woodie Flowers, and Rich Cox, a Deka technician, waiting for Kamen to arrive. I'm looking for the Hummer. His mother knows better. She points to the sky and says "There's Dean."

Kamen sets the little Enstrom down on the tarmac, and before long we're piling into the Citation jet. To Kamen, the Citation is a "beautiful machine" with its twin Williams-Rolls turbofans, top altitude of 41,000 feet, and maximum speed of Mach 0.7. The thing looks fast even standing still.

I'd heard a few stories about Kamen's piloting before I boarded. One was that he had a less-than-perfect attendance record at the Citation jet training program. But as a friend tells it, he missed only two questions on the final—the highest score in a class full of professional pilots. Afterward, he proved to the instructor that those "wrong" answers were actually correct.

On an unusually warm March afternoon, we're off to Ypsilanti, Michigan, the site of the initial round of First regionals. Kamen is upbeat, as evidenced by his safety speech before takeoff: "In the event of an emergency, those bimbos in the high heels who served you coffee will be of absolutely no use" he says. Of course there are no flight attendants on the plane.

Kamen sees the lack of appreciation for science in America as a problem—but that's not to say he's calling for a revamping of the educational system. In his view, more teachers, textbooks, PCs, and Internet access won't get students jazzed about learning. "They need to have access to challenging, hands-on projects that result in a tangible product"—like building robots. And they need role models—engineers—to assist them.

Kamen refers to First as "the NCAA of smarts". The competition has no formal instructional agenda. You just have to build a 'bot that can play a game better than the others do. In January, groups of high school students receive kits and a description of the game. Each group has to build the robot in six weeks, working with engineers from local companies—like Du Pont, Ford, and Honeywell. There are only two restrictions: expense (no more than $425 can be spent on additional parts, supplied by a company called Small Parts) and weight (the robot can be no more than 130 pounds). At the competition, two student teams will be paired to form an alliance.

This year, the robots have to pick up basketball-sized rubber balls and drop them in bins, earning one point for yellow balls and five for scarcer black ones. Robots also earn five points for ascending a ramp in the center of the field, 10 for hanging from a chin-up bar, and 10 more for helping a partner robot hang from the bar.

Once we're on the ground, we hustle off to the campus of Eastern Michigan University, where the students are trying out their robots. Kamen has no official duties tonight, but he can't wait to see the action. Inside the field house, teams are making last-minute adjustments and sawing off vestigial robot pieces to make the weight limit. Kamen talks to a team tinkering with Chief Delphi, one of several robots sponsored by Delphi Automotive Systems. Two teenagers approach: "Can we have your autograph?"

It's just as Kamen would have it: High school kids treating an engineer like a celebrity. And it happens several times over the weekend. MIT professor Flowers, who is serving as an emcee, is equally adored.

The following morning, at the kickoff, there are pep bands and flag bearers, honor guards and spirit corps. Students stomp their feet and cheer wildly. When two opposing robots face off to get to the ramp, the screams are deafening.

Kamen watches most of the two-minute matches from the sidelines, fixated. He marvels at a robot named V Force that can grab the chin-up bar, slide laterally along it, and with a long arm, pluck balls out of its opponent's goal and place them in its own. "Just another science fair, huh?" he mutters to me after a particularly exciting match.

In the ensuing two days, the competition will have elements of WWF aggressiveness and flashes of Nascar-style maneuvering—except that this event is rooted in mental dexterity. But that's not enough for Kamen. He wants First to attract the same attention lavished upon professional sports. That's why he spends his energy at First events needling bigwigs at sponsoring organizations. This year, GM, Johnson & Johnson, Motorola, Xerox, and NASA together are supporting 171 teams. But Kamen wants more. He wants to include every student in the country, and have the events televised. (He also wants you to enlist, as a kid or backer through the www.usfirst.org website.)

Xerox chair Paul Allaire, who is smitten enough with the event to sit on the First board, is skeptical. "Is it totally practical? I'm dubious. But it's a good, if lofty, goal."

Another First board member, Bill Murphy, chair of Small Parts, waves off naysayers. "You watch" he says. "Dean's a schemer. He won't quit until it happens."

Walking the halls backstage at EMU, Kamen bemoans how difficult his mission to change the culture has been. "The inertia is enormous" he says. "If I'd have known nine years ago that it would've taken this much energy, I..." He falls silent. But there's only one way Kamen can finish the thought: "Hell, I still would've done it."

When the finals begin, the excitement increases palpably. In the first game of the best-of-three finals, Chief Delphi pokes its snout into its opponent's goal, sucks out three balls, and skitters over to deposit them in its own goal. As the seconds tick away, it snatches another two points. Delphi's red alliance wins the first match, 34 to 16.

The "NCAA of smarts" is just as Kamen would have it: High school kids treat engineers like celebrities. And build robots that make the crowd roar.

The next match goes to blue. "It happens like this every time" Kamen says gleefully.

In the rubber match, the action centers on the chin-up bar. Both blue alliance robots manage to hang, seizing the lead. But Visteon, Chief Delphi's red alliance partner, charges blue's Techno Beast, knocks it down, and in the waning seconds, pulls itself up to the bar for the win. The audience roars.

Sly and the Family Stone's "You Can Make It If You Try" blasts over the PA, and the First judges form a receiving line. Hundreds of teens line the aisles, exchanging high-fives.

Heading back to Willow Run airport, Kamen is thinking ahead to the nationals at Epcot Center in Orlando. He's campaigning to get Governor Jeb Bush, who will attend the finals, to pledge that every Florida public school will participate next year.

Meanwhile, the Ibot is sailing through FDA trials and could be available by early 2001. ER star Noah Wyle is planning to make a feature film about Kamen and First. And work on the Stirling engine is going well, though, of course, not fast enough for Kamen.

On the flight back to Manchester, he cracks a joke over the intercom about pilots reporting basketball scores in midflight. "Who cares about bounce-bounce-throw?" he asks.

I ask if he knows the outcome of the First regionals at the Kennedy Space Center. "Let me call ground control" he says, mimicking a pilot-controller exchange. "Ground, this is Citation six-delta-kilo. Do you have the results of the First regionals in Florida?"

Everyone laughs, and then K. C. Connors, First's regional manager and Kamen's girlfriend, chimes in. "A few more years, Dean" she says. "A few more years."

Satisfaction Means Balancing The Inner And Outer Worlds

1/30/01 SOLTEC

Good evening, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace and be still, for within the stillness comes the awareness of the All That Is.

Your planet continues with her birthing process, despite much interference (both purposeful and accidental) from those dark ones who think they know what they are doing with technologies they only vaguely understand. As you witness the various shiftings of her crustal plates, be not fearful of what might happen; rather, realize that this is a very natural phenomenon and quite necessary for the overall balance and well-being of your planetary orb. If you live near a known geologically active area—like an earthquake fault line—it is wise to take precautions so as to avoid any unnecessary physical hardships; but so too is it wise to recognize the larger perspective of cyclical change associated with the living entity commonly referred to as Mother Earth.

Her deep compassion toward you ones flows both from love and from a wise understanding of how unique a creation each of you are. It would be a loving gesture to return that level of recognition to her, for her cooperation is an important part in this Grand Play you call life.

Your individual journeys and experiences vary greatly when viewed from the finer individual perspective, and yet the ultimate destination for you each is the same—return to Creator Source and the recognition of the interconnectedness of all ones and all life, regardless of its form or its present level of consciousness. You are each searching for the ultimate inner satisfaction that only comes when you are fulfilling what you ones often call "your purpose"—which derives from the inner basic need to expand your individual awareness of self and discover how it is YOU fit into the overall scheme of The Creation (The All That Is).

A true sense of peace can only be had when the individual seeking same can learn to let go of that which is of an external nature and recognize that the only TRUE peace comes from deep within one's own self, and is a direct result of acknowledging YOUR own inner connection to Creator Source.

You ALL are "Holy" and Sacred within the eyes of Creator God. None is created with more perfection than another. You ALL are created in perfection. Those who seem to have greater gifts than the next are simply those who have chosen to search more diligently for the greater awareness of self.

You each have the ability and opportunity to search as diligently as the next, or not at all. However, you will find that those who diligently search for greater understanding are the ones who have a greater sense of accomplishment along with a stronger sense of inner peace. Ones who are inclined to seek outward physical gratification through materialistic pleasures tend to be those who look back on a life with a sense of shallow bewilderment as there is a nagging feeling that they somehow missed out on "something" important.

The key here is to find a balance point between the outer physical/material world and the inner spiritual world. If you can recognize and truly see (or sense) that the physically manifested environment is a BYPRODUCT of the spiritual world, then you will be well on your way to realizing that the greater reality of experience lies within INNER spiritual realms rather than in the physical domain.

The diligent seeker will also come to realize that the physical environment is set up much like a biofeedback device wherein your thoughts, choices, ideas, and beliefs are played out and reflected back to you, over and over, time after time, until you eventually grow in awareness that you literally create the reality you perceive. This is to say that YOU control the inner emotional state (vibrational signature) you emanate, and this in turn causes a resonance and amplification within the ethers (etheric planes of existence), which then begins to precipitate as experience in the physical realm. Depending on the amount and purity of emotional energy you focus, the precipitation process may take anywhere from several decades to the instantaneous manifestation of your desire. The only difference is the clarity of thought directed by the awareness and understanding (which powers the intensity of the emotional energy) of the individual who sends forth the desire from within.

You ones have many examples of "super-human" feats wherein such as a 110-pound mother has lifted a heavy automobile off her pinned child. These are examples of what is possible when an unwavering desire is coupled with great emotional certainty. In essence, the common perception of reality is "bent" to conform to the desire of the individual, rather than holding fast to the reinforced "reality" of the mass consciousness.

The point here is to state that your environment is quite a bit more than what the masses of your planet believe it to be. For the most part, you each take on the reality handed down to you from your forefathers, and slowly add to it, and gradually stretch the envelope of awareness. This results in new technologies and "modern" advancements in science and such. However, there comes a time in this evolution process when the externally focused physical sciences begin to bump "solidly" into the more internally animated "unexplained phenomena" that defy external scientific reason. For the most part, this is where your world is at currently.

Now for the twist: In the so-called "elite" circles of your world, there are ones who have studied the advanced principles upon which physical reality actually operates. These principles were recovered in part from the records of previous civilizations, and in part from various other-worldly (extraterrestrial) sources. These so-called "elite" ones are divided in their philosophies as to how best to utilize this knowledge.

There is currently a struggle among these ones, and there is emerging two distinct general philosophies. One states that the world is not ready for this next step in awareness, and therefore they (the elite controllers) are duty-bound to guide the masses in accordance with their "higher" awareness and understanding. The other main (but less popular at this time) philosophy is that it is not the right of the few to decide what is best for the masses, since all are of equal spiritual heritage.

Currently the masses are being held in the "dark" through many forms of sophisticated and subtle mind-control. Their evolvment is mostly left to the whims of a relative few who wish to be rulers and dictators over the planet's populations. We say "mostly" because while the above statement applies to the largest segment of your slumbering populations, some (an alarmingly growing number to these so-called "elite" controllers) are "waking up" and reclaiming their own lives. And the example thus being set by these awakening ones has a tendency to "rub off" on some of the otherwise sleeping masses, creating the potential for an "avalanche" effect.

In the greater understanding available to the diligent student, you will clearly see that NOTHING impacts your experience unless YOU give it permission and power to do so. This permission is often given in the form of a general inner belief structure that sort of runs on autopilot in the background in one's habitual thought process—not unlike the automatic bodily responses that regulate your heartbeat and breathing.

Many of you have learned to simply recreate the reality you grew up observing, and simply accepted things as they appeared to you, not giving a second thought to the nature of the non-physical counterparts that make up the perceived reality in the first place. Again, this is natural to a point, but there does come a time when the masses of a given civilization are ready to take the next step forward in growth. The majority of your world is ready for this next step.

We of the Host of God (our numbers are VERY great) have come to help facilitate this awakening process, and provide a focus that will allow your world to have a grounding point wherein some semblance of reality may be maintained and held to, as the shiftings in awareness precipitate many a localized "distortion" as the energy released is given opportunity to settle. In essence, we are like the midwife who assists the young mother through the birthing process so that she does not succumb to overwhelm during the more common turbulence associated with delivering the baby.

Just as the birthing pains quickly give way to the JOY of having the newborn baby delivered, so too will the current ones experiencing the transitioning of your world come to realize that all of the physical turbulences associated with this upward evolution of consciousness are great and grand opportunities for the individual who persists through the process of "birthing" this new level of consciousness within the framework of the physical environment.

How best to prepare for these forthcoming times?

Learn to trust your intuition as you would trust your physical senses. This is easier said than done. For the most part, you ones have been trained to ignore the hunch, and often you have been ridiculed when trying to express to others your intuitive feelings. As a result, you have been mentally and emotionally conditioned to ignore or dismiss (not trust) the Inner Guidance being offered.

Know that ALL great inventions and revolutionary ideas were brought to the consciousness of the individual via an intuitive route. There are NO exceptions, though there may be ones who would deny that the inspiration simply "came" to them—because they either fear the ridicule they might receive if the truth were known, and/or they relish the ego gratification of their newly acquired status.

You each should strive to expand your intuitive abilities. This can be done in many ways—such as dream work, meditation, prayer, or perhaps you may find a willing partner to whom you can sit and send thoughts or images at a set time each day, who will diligently and honestly work with you to develop the intuitive awareness.

In time you will be given validation that your intuitive senses are alive and well, and that they are there for a reason—a God-given REASON—to give to you the recognition that Creator God (the One who created YOU!) is always there, as close as your breath (actually much closer); all you need to do is learn (or, in most cases, remember) how to listen within.

Please keep in mind that there is no past deed or action you can possibly have done that cannot INSTANTLY be forgiven. It is you who fail to forgive yourself; God does not punish anyone. It is you who punish self in EVERY instance.

YOU ARE QUITE WORTHY OF ANY AND ALL OF GOD'S GIFTS. So please do NOT, for one moment, entertain the idea that you are somehow not deserving of direct inspirational guidance from Creator Source. YOU ARE DESERVING, for you are an aspect of Creator God, and you are created with a reason and a purpose that is borne from the perfect desire of Creator God. Therefore, you EACH are Holy and Divinely Sacred, and quite deserving of Creator's full attention.

Never belittle yourself or another, for in doing so you belittle Creator Source; and in essence you are calling God a fool. Such actions only serve to diminish your ability to connect within to Higher Source, and thus inner turmoil and anxiety often result.

I am Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in service to The One Light, Creator of All That Is. I am a Messenger whose primary goal is to assist those of you who wish to see a bit farther down the path so as to have insight and courage to continue to seek out the greater awareness despite the ridicules and misperceptions of others.

I salute you all, my Brothers and Sisters of Light.

Salu.

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

If you don't want your view of life to be transformed, then steer clear of this book.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to be who we really are, to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

A Call For World Peace

A Message From Great White Buffalo

Editor's note: The following provocative writing was brought to our attention by longtime friend and supporter of this newspaper, Serge B. in Montreal. It is a channeled or "received" message claiming to be from "the Buffalo species" and "the Earth Mother" and most definitely has strong overtones of Esu "Jesus" Sananda—otherwise known as The Great White Buffalo in many Native American traditions.

The Buffalo symbolism is beautifully woven throughout this writing. It represents both a connection to those who are Guiding the evolution of this planet from the Higher Realms (such as Sananda, Sanat Kumara or Grandfather, and other Lighted Masters), as well as those beings more involved in our own plane of existence who share responsibility for our mutual spiritual evolutions (such as Mother Earth and key species of animal life).

Moreover, for those of you who have always wondered about the longtime role that Pleiadians have been playing in the evolutionary history of this planet, perhaps the historical information offered herein will provide some insight concerning plausible reasons for the "karmic" bonds which persist to this day. Many Pleiadian contactees have been told that the Pleiadians are here to, among other reasons, "right some big wrongs" that renegade factions of their ancestors inflicted upon this planet many eons ago.

Regardless of the possible historical accuracy of what is stated here, it does not take much contemplation to see history repeating itself in our current condition of runaway technology. Nor will it be difficult for you to discern and savor the profound and often exquisitely stated spiritual advice offered herein—consistent with those "received" spiritual messages we offer on a regular basis in the pages of this unique newspaper.

How often are we urged to "go within" and listen to our Guidance? Here we are given a sobering lesson about WHY that is so very important! Pay attention to what all "goes wrong" when we don't keep that inner connection to spirit strong. And look with hope and expectation to what "goes right" when we do. It is truly no exaggeration to say ALL of life depends on maintaining that connection.

We, the species of Buffalo, are guided to share with our human brothers and sisters messages from the world of spirit. So unconscious the human species has become they no longer retain awareness of the dreamtime realms in which spirit is in constant communication with all species upon Earth. In such a lack of awareness, the human species has exploited Earth and her resources, and polluted her waterways and land with toxic substances that not only kill mankind, but all other species as well. In such a lack of awareness, humanity has forgotten how to reside upon Earth in harmony and honor.

The lack of awareness was not the original truth and expression of [one of] the original humans seeded upon Earth some 50,000 years ago by the Sirian star system. Earth welcomed the Sirians and those of human form of their race to remain upon Earth, with agreements to support Earth in her choice to evolve and ascend. This race was red-skinned and black-haired, although there were some of lighter skin color and lacking in hair pigment as well. The lighter-skinned humans were involved with the path of spiritual mastery and served a specific purpose, as they were gifted at communication with the realm of spirit.

The seeded race was welcomed by all species upon Earth. For many thousands of years, the human species lived in honor of the land and all species thereon. The only technology utilized was that which was in harmony with the land, and did not produce toxins that could not be recycled.

Because they were a peaceful settlement, it never occurred to the Red race to stock-up on armaments or others devices necessary for protection. In hindsight, perhaps it is understood that this was a mistake, for as a group of [renegade] Pleiadian and blue-tinted humans who had white skin invaded Earth, the Red man was defenseless. The Red man subsequently lost his land, and lost consciousness as well.

The Pleiadians polluted the waterways with toxins that caused a deterioration of the Red man's consciousness. The toxins came from discordant technology similar to present-time technology and waste. Over time, both the Red and Blue human race lost enough consciousness to fail to hear the realms of spirit upon a regular and recurring basis. In the lack of hearing spirit, mankind moved further and further from unity with all species upon Earth.

Yes, there are those, often considered medicine men or women in some remaining Red tribes, who hear the spirit realms. In other cultures, such humans are considered "insane" and imprisoned in mental institutions instead of honored for their gifts of hearing the realms of spirit. They are further drugged to try and shut off the communication of spirit. So far away from spirit has mankind moved that spirit is feared, and those who are tuned into spirit punished for such capabilities.

It is with great sadness that Buffalo has witnessed such travesties in the human dance. We, as all species upon Earth, stand witness to all that occurs in the human world. We have tried to communicate our wisdom and knowledge, but it has fallen upon deaf ears. Only a few in the many remaining Red tribes hear our messages in recent centuries. And yet we continue to try to be heard, continue to communicate, for these are our agreements with the human species—to assist the Red man or those of Red inheritance to recover their truth and ascend. In the future, we see that there shall be no humans remaining that are devoid of ongoing communication with the realms of spirit.

Our channel did not naturally hear spirit, but studied with those of such gifts of clairvoyance and telepathy, and opened up to such gifts and talents over time. We guide those of spiritual pursuits to likewise develop such skills, for it is only in hearing the messages of spirit that ones can find their way "home".

What is "home"? Home is unity. Home is inner peace. Home is a dance in which all species share in the abundance of the Earth Mother. Unity is only entered into as one ascends up in vibration towards the fifth world, and one can only ascend if they open the doorway to their inner Knowing and follow their internal Guidance through the maze of illusion and out of the dance of separation. This requires the ability to hear the spirit realms. There is no other way, beloved.

You are loved deeply. When you weep, we weep with you. When you are punished, we feel the punishment as if it were our own. Each species feels the pain that mankind is in and inflicts upon one another in the lack of understanding and awareness.

It is because we are in The Oneness that we feel your pain, as you are not separate from us in our experience. All species upon Earth co-create an intricate dance of energy in which all energies are shared. Therefore we are not exempt from the pain that you are in.

Those who are ascending in human form are beginning to enter a state of joy. We feel their joy, and we see that light at the end of the tunnel of darkness, for one day there shall be no human remaining left in pain. This shall be a wondrous event indeed, for as the last human in pain either ascends into the joy or dies, all kingdoms shall expand into an ongoing and everlasting state of unity, oneness, and joy! These are grand times ahead, indeed.

We do not blame mankind for their lack of awareness. We take responsibility for how our species and all species upon Earth were manipulated and duped by the dark into giving our information away. In the loss of information to sustain the vibration of joy, the joy left Earth. This occurred long before mankind was seeded, and therefore mankind is not responsible for the initial loss of joy upon Earth. However, as mankind arrived, the human species entered a dance that was far more disastrous and painful than if no humans came at all.

Mankind has the gift of two legs and two hands, and the mental abilities to develop technology. Such technology can be used to support a planet, such as Earth, in wondrous ways—or it can likewise be used to destroy Earth in a most devastating manner.

As the Sirian humans arrived, they built ice shields around Earth to protect Earth from harmful radiation emanating from your Sun. At that time there were no oceans; the oceans were suspended as ice, high in the atmosphere. Such shields indeed allowed for a rise in vibration and the beginning of the return of joy to Earth in the early part of the Red man's presence.

However, the Pleiadians arrived and bartered away the large mineral clusters and gold once prevalent upon Earth that held the ice shields in place. They took such crystals in their craft to their own star system for their own use. As enough of such minerals were taken, the ice collapsed into the "great floods"—becoming your oceans and drowning large populations of the Red man, along with all species upon Earth.

The Pleiadians took off in their craft and were not harmed themselves by the floods. The Red man had not such craft to escape in, as their race did not believe in such necessities. After all, Earth is a large spacecraft, in and of itself, that supplies each species with all that is needed in order to survive and evolve. Why would the Red man require spacecraft, therefore? And so such technology returned to Sirius as the seeding was complete.

The subsequent radiation from the Sun, hitting the Red man without the ice shields, was great. It caused a decrease in life span and consciousness over time.

Furthermore, the Pleiadians experimented upon the Red man in their laboratories. This brought all species upon Earth great pain, as such experimentation was not in alignment with Earth or the purpose for the original seeding of the Red race. Their experimentation destroyed the unity that the Red man knew by putting the Red man in fear.

Much like the current experimentation of mankind by the Grays, which puts humans in terror of being abducted, so the Red man went into fear, fear of being captured and treated in great indignity as a laboratory experiment. The experimentation upon the Red man shattered the whole of unity of all species of Earth, for when one species falls out of unity, all species experience the pain of the separation. And we, of the Buffalo species, likewise went into great pain and suffering along with the Red man.

Why would another human race run scientific experiments upon other humans? Ah, this is a sad thing indeed. Much like your current scientists, such humans were in search of understanding. Such understanding would be freely given if they connected to the realms of spirit. But just like humanity today, the Pleiadians had lost their ability to communicate directly with the world of spirit, or they would not have needed to experiment as they did. In their experimentation, the Pleiadians raped the Red man of their knowledge, and utilized such knowledge for their own purposes of immortality.

Why would the Pleiadians desire immortality? It was from the lack of being able to hear the realms of spirit that any species would wish to extend their life forever and become "immortal". The desire for immortality occurs as one learns to fear death. The fear of death only occurs as one ceases to communicate with spirit and the realms beyond the physical, therefore ceasing to believe that the nonphysical exists. When the nonphysical ceases to exist, one also fails to remember the purpose for which form has been created, which is for spirit to evolve.

Spirit knows not death. Spirit is eternal. The body may come and go, but spirit remains. Therefore, no spirit would wish to retain the same body forever! Forms change to allow for spirit to gain another understanding of another dance. Each form has a unique type of dance that, when experienced, creates a new and unique understanding for spirit.

It was from the fear of death that the Pleiadians experimented upon the Red race in order to extend their own lives to try and become immortal. It is also out of the desire for immortality that the Pleiadians took all of the Red race's knowledge, causing a great fall in consciousness for the seeded humans thereafter. This is the "fall" out of paradise, the "fall out of Eden" that humanity recalls. And indeed it was a painful experience, not only for the Red race, but for all species upon Earth, including Buffalo, for we are all ONE.

In harmony and unity, all information is shared. In harmony and unity, there is no reason not to share all information. The Red man lived in harmony, and shared all of their knowledge with all species upon Earth, including the Pleiadian race as they arrived. The Pleiadian race, in not acting from unity, took the information that the Red man freely shared and hoarded it for themselves.

Why would any race not share? Why would any race hoard resources such as information for evolution for their own use only? All planets and stars must evolve, and this requires the information to ascend. Therefore, what purpose does hoarding knowledge serve when the failure of one ascension insures the failure of another, including the Pleiadians themselves?

The Pleiadians had fallen so low in consciousness that they, like mankind in present time, did not understand the dance of evolution. In so misunderstanding the dance of evolution and spirit with form, they took without consideration of the evolution of another race of humans and the planet that they resided upon.

The Pleiadians were in fear of a potential "threat" of another race of humans, such as the Red man from Earth, gaining dominion over the Pleiades. And so the Pleiadians stripped the Red man and Earth of all spiritual knowledge so that they could not longer be a potential threat.

Such is the nature of the dance of fear. In so doing, the Pleiadians also caused all species upon Earth to fall so radically in consciousness, including mankind, that the Pleiadians now have incurred great karma for themselves. For they have stripped so much of Earth's resources that Earth's ascension became obstructed.

It was out of the loss of harmony from the fall in consciousness of the Red race in the stripping of their knowledge by the Pleiadian race that wars broke out amongst humans. Such wars were small at first, and did not disturb the other species upon Earth. However, technology was brought in that was devastating and was nuclear in nature. The Pleiadians wished to insure their dominion over Earth and imported such nuclear technology.

At first such technology was experimented with under the land, much like the nuclear testing in present time. Such explosions not only forced the plates of Earth to move to an excess, creating mountains where they had been not before, but put the land of Earth in great pain. Such pain ripped through all species, including Buffalo, with sharp blasts of energy that tore up our etheric bodies. Such blasts of energy also tore up the human species in the etheric, which yet again experienced another subsequent fall in consciousness.

The warfare continued and resulted in a nuclear catastrophe that distorted all life upon Earth. The Pleiadians themselves suffered not from such destruction. They pulled away from Earth before the blasts went off. They destroyed Earth from afar, in their craft, as if it was to be used for such purposes.

In the end, the Intergalactic Council forced the Pleiadian race to retreat. However, they were not forced to rectify what they had done to Earth and the seeded Red man. Additionally, they left large populations of a paired-down replica of the Pleiadian race themselves, which had been created in their laboratories as slaves. This is the origin of the current "White man" upon Earth.

This catastrophe is far greater than any that has occurred since, and involved two very large nuclear bombs dropped upon Earth in two key positions, causing an "ice age". This ice age killed most of the buffalo species upon the land. The few who survived later multiplied, filling in the numbers of our herds. The few of the Red man remaining lived in caves and resorted to hunting our species for survival. Buffalo gladly sacrificed themselves so that our Red human brothers and sisters could survive, and such hunting was done in honor.

In a state of honor, spirit retracts knowing that it is sacrificing itself and feels not the pain. In honor, spirit honors spirit, and the spirit of man honored the spirit of buffalo who sacrificed themselves out of the love of all and the principles of unity. For in spite of the fall, the Red race remembered the original seeded principles that they had been gifted with.

In the principles of unity, one acts out of the greater good of the whole. In the greater good of the whole, all kingdoms pulled together to survive. Some species began to sacrifice themselves to one another to insure the survival of all species upon Earth.

Prior to this nuclear travesty, there was no need for the animal kingdoms to consume one another. As most vegetation died due to the nuclear winter, some kingdoms agreed to sacrifice themselves for yet others so that all could survive. However, the cause of the need for such forms of mutilation or consumption for survival was the result of the Blue race of mankind and their warfare.

Such destruction has repeated again and again in your human history. Although the Pleiadians retracted some 30,000 years ago (120,000 human years), there have been two major human civilizations that have risen and repeated the exact outcome of the Pleiadian reign of Earth. Each civilization has risen, developed technology that has polluted Earth, and ended in a nuclear devastation. Each rise and fall of mankind has caused Earth yet another fall in frequency, yet another fall in genetic structure, yet another fall in consciousness. Each rise in civilization has caused the White man to dominate and "take over" the Red man's land. Each rise in civilization repeated yet again the same dance that had transpired before.

You stand upon a brink of another time, another rise of civilization, the development of nuclear armaments, and the potential future of another war, another annihilation, another disaster. And this time, Earth shall lose her opportunity to ascend altogether. For this is the last gate, the last opportunity. One more travesty, and the vibration of Earth will fall too low to be rectified. This is perhaps the most important concept to grasp and why we, the Buffalo species, are communicating this through our channel.

And what then? What if there is a nuclear devastation ahead?

Well, spirit has no use for form if form cannot evolve. The purpose of spirit is to dance with form so that spirit and form may evolve together. If spirit cannot evolve through form, it shall retract. The Nature kingdoms shall not quarrel with this. All species upon Earth—all birds, plants, animals, minerals, dolphins, whales—shall become extinct. For it is spirit-in-form that continues the dance of life. Without spirit there is not life, although humanity believes otherwise. Within 1000 years following the next nuclear disaster, there shall be no remaining life upon Earth, except perhaps for mankind, for all species shall become extinct.

And why would mankind survive? Well, mankind could devise a method of survival from the eating of their own flesh. For this would be the only flesh left. However, humanity would be devoid of soul, devoid of spirit, a living machine if you will. For spirit wishes to evolve, spirit wishes to ascend, spirit has no use for form that chooses another dance or the dance of non-evolution. Spirit would withdraw from the dance with all humans under such a circumstance.

Indeed, recent records reveal that the species known as the Grays and Reptilians survived such an experience in their own solar systems by eating of their own unborn fetuses. This is how the Grays and Reptilians lost their soul; their soul retracted when they chose not to ascend and created an environment in which their own planet could not ascend. Each soul of each species upon their own planet withdrew, and all species became extinct over time. And so Earth shall just repeat what has happened before if a nuclear disaster manifests yet again.

In the greater understanding of the travesty ahead, Buffalo asks her human brothers and sisters to "WAKE UP!" The potential for a disaster ahead is real. The only manner in which such a disaster would be avoided is if the karma for all like occurrences in prior times for the human species is released in full. Karma creates a record, much like any recording device, that causes the same pattern to be repeated again and again. The only manner in which the record can be changed is through ascension.

In ascension, the vibration increases. In the increased vibration, the quickening of movement of the molecular structure allows for the records to be reviewed and then released and erased for good. As all records for warfare are released and erased, global peace and Earth's ascension shall be an assured future—rather than her annihilation and subsequent extinction of all species. Such records must be released from the land upon which such warfare occurred, and this occurs as Earth continues to rise in vibration. Each species, including mankind, must likewise release their records for warfare in order for Global Peace to become assured.

Ascension brings forth the restructuring of the lineages back in time for the human dance. As enough humans ascend, they shall release the karma for all human lineages that have ever existed upon Earth. For our channel, she is gathering a group that represents all human lineages that have ever existed upon Earth for the purpose of human karmic release. Those joining them know inside of their hearts that they are incarnate upon Earth to serve a special purpose. Those who gather do so for the purpose of releasing all human karma so that a new era of joy and peace may be born in Earth's future.

A HORSE IN BALANCE WEARS A CROWN OF LIGHT

A story honoring en-Light-ened riding masters who developed Guidelines to bring: discipline, beauty, grace, and balance in the movements of a horse, from a girl who desired to be a better rider. She became the first equestrian American woman in Olympic history. This is her own life story; how their Guidelines produced oneness with her horses, also the realization of Creator-God, the Balancing Fulcrum, from riding the Figure 8. The en-Light-ened equestrian masters were Fritz Stecken and Ludwig Von Zeiner, Head Rider of The Spanish Riding School.

Buffalo takes a stand for PEACE. It is only if global war does not occur that Earth's ascension and future evolution can come forth. The history of mankind has already played itself out three times. There is nothing new to learn from this dance from the point of view of spirit. IT IS TIME TO EVOLVE OUT OF THIS DANCE! And this requires more humans to intend to evolve out of it, to intend to ascend.

Ascension lifts one out of the paradigm of cause and effect. The cause of the need to settle human disputes through warfare is an ancient one and deeply embedded in the human genetic records. It is for this reason that such incidents play themselves out again and again, rather than humans of different preferences coming to understanding and settling their disputes in another manner. As humans ascend, the genetic records are released and erased, allowing a new dance to be born. And this new dance indeed shall bring forth a return to unity of all species upon Earth in due course—provided a nuclear travesty is not manifested in its place.

For those who are ascending, and committing to their journey, we wish you to understand the nature of spirit.

Mankind is focused upon things that spirit has no interest in. Spirit only has interest in evolution. Spirit has interest in releasing patterns, transmuting the past, and embracing a new thought-form of unity. Preoccupations—such as financial gain, technological development, property ownership, and narcissistic forms of pleasure and consumerism that harm Earth's surface with toxic waste production—hold no interest for spirit.

Spirit does not perceive that one requires a fortune to ascend. Spirit does not require one to purchase a home someplace “quiet” or “in a spiritual community” in order to ascend. Spirit does not require one to go to India and find a guru to study with in order to ascend. Instead, spirit asks that each human focus inward and choose to evolve, choose to transcend and ascend. And spirit asks that each listen within and follow their internal Guidance and leading implicitly.

Spirit asks that humans drop their preoccupations that distract and distort the choice to ascend, such as artificial forms of entertainment. The vibrations created through such technology interfere with the communication between the spirit and the form. As one moves out into Nature, away from the density and electricity of your cities, one shall more readily tune into the guidance of spirit. Then the guidance from spirit can lead one “home”.

The Red man understands this. The Red man knows that the Red Road is a road of simplicity. In the simplicity, one lives a simple life in which one takes only what one can use, and one gives to others that which they cannot use. It is only as one comes to balance with such things that one can enter “heaven” or a state of unity. And this the Red man remembers.

Simplicity is a lifestyle devoid of possessions that are accumulated, devoid of ownership of the land. Simplicity allows only those things required to evolve and ascend to be retained, and gives all other things away. Simplicity does not require a job earning $60,000 per year to sustain oneself. Simplicity requires simple work that honors—honors oneself, honors one another, and honors all kingdoms upon Earth.

For our channel, her teaching, healing, and workshops provide just enough to cover her living expenses. She and her beloved Oa own nothing except the clothes upon their back. They freely travel, as spirit guides them, wherever they are needed to hold space for Earth's ascension. They freely travel to gather with others who perhaps could not travel to spend time with them in Hawaii where they live. Such is the life of one who is devoted to the purposes of spirit.

For many studying with our channel, they too are leaving their possessions behind, and embarking upon a lifestyle and work that supports their choice to ascend. Often this is the path of the healer or teacher, as such work allows one to assist other humans in becoming aware of that which perhaps they would not understand without a bridge.

Much like Mila, our channel, who is the bridge for our communications as Buffalo, those who are ascending and becoming tuned to the world of spirit can become a bridge for others to hear the message of their own soul. Such work supports human ascension and therefore supports Earth in her choice to ascend. Such work is one path of a simple life, but not the only path. It is up to each human to devise his or her own path “home”.

Buffalo wishes to remind humans that technology pollutes; it pollutes in a multitude of manners. It pollutes the waterways that one drinks from, and it pollutes the energy surrounding one's field. The electrical and radioactive devices that are commonly utilized and most strongly present in the density of your cities are toxic to the energy field of both mankind and Earth. They are also toxic to the energy field of the human form that is choosing to ascend. Buffalo therefore guides humans devoted to their evolution to retreat from the cities and into the country, and live a simple life that supports one's evolution, and leave behind such technology.

Evolution takes time and focus. Evolution will never occur by itself, for this defeats the purpose of being a conscious species. Humanity is a conscious species, and therefore is designed to consciously choose to evolve and to consciously experience their evolution. Consciously experiencing one's evolution requires opening to the communication of the spirit realms and taking time for such communications each day. A simple life with ample spare time to focus upon the inner work of ascension becomes imperative to those who are ascending in human form—lest they lose their way and fail to return “home”.

Change is frightening to the human species. Most humans remain in a 50-mile radius from where they were born their entire life. Humans are most comfortable in environments that they know. However, Mila and Oa will tell you from their world travels that there are not many places upon Earth that do not resemble where they too have lived most of their lives. And so Buffalo suggests that you release the fear and move where you need to be to support your evolution. Buffalo also suggests watching a sunset or listening to a rushing stream or the wind through the pine trees instead of the television or the radio. Inside of such experiences shall be the messages of spirit, which shall guide you “home”.

How does spirit speak? Spirit speaks through one's innermost thoughts. Humanity has not really lost the ability to speak to the spirit realms, but rather “tunes it out” in their focus upon the mundane.

Why is this so? Well, sometimes the communications from spirit are judgmental, condescending, or abusive in nature. This is where such difficult thoughts come from, and humanity believes that they are evil for having such thoughts! This is a great lie and Buffalo is happy to shed light upon this. Such thoughts are not from spirit of the “light”, but rather are from spirit of the “dark”. Such dark spirits are only fractured souls who have lost their way, beloved.

Mila learned long ago simply to send such spirits-of-the-dark to the Sun. In so doing, they have an opportunity to heal and take their next evolutionary step.

Sometimes humans are terrified of such dark spirits. Often children experience such frightening things before they have developed the ability to language. Such experiences of spirit are so frightening that they determine that they shall never communicate with the world of spirit again. Oftentimes such decisions are made before the age of 2.

We guide our human brothers and sisters to heal such fear of the realm of spirit. In so understanding that the dark are simply lost, and in sending them to the Sun with your thoughts, it shall allow them to return to the “light”. One can cease to be afraid of the nonphysical realms ever again. And this too is required, beloved, for how else are you or any human going to find your way home? It is soul that evolves form. If the human consciousness cannot hear the messages coming from soul, how is the form going to evolve? And so we guide each to turn inward, open to the realm of spirit, and be not afraid.

Upon such realms you shall also find all other species, including Buffalo. We shall appear to you as we look in the physical, although we shall be nonphysical. Once we appeared to Mila long ago, and she “smelled buffalo”. She actually could physically smell our presence as if we were nearby—and alas, she was in the middle of the density of a California suburb, and therefore this was not possible. In so smelling Buffalo, she could understand that we were present, and turn her attention to communicating with us. And this is when our guidance of her path of ascension began.

We have agreements to support the evolution and awakening of many in human form. We invite you to call upon us as you open to the realms of spirit.

The word of spirit can be confusing, and there are those in spirit form who wish to trick those in human form into non-evolution. Why would they do so? Simply because they too are afraid of evolving, much like the human species at large. Send such spirits to the Sun so that they can evolve, and they shall cease to manipulate or bother those attuning to the inner world.

The inner world is different for every human; however, it is fully of your own creation. Therefore, upon the inner world one shall experience one's own thought-forms, one's own manifestations, one's own non-physical lives. Each human has many nonphysical lives that are lived in parallel to your physical existence. Such parallel lives hold keys to your evolution as they are tapped into. As such parallel lives are understood, they cease to be necessary to continue to exist, and the gifts and talents expressed therein can move to the physical plane.

The physical plane fractured in the numerous drops in vibration in consciousness. In the fracturing, pieces of oneself and one's soul became trapped upon other planes and separated off from one's consciousness. This is what the “unconscious” is—parts of self that have been fractured and held within another plane of reality. Each plane of reality is layered around Earth like an onion. As one tunes into the inner world, one shall become familiar with themselves upon other planes of reality, and then choose to “ascend” from such planes and become whole and ONE again.

Oneness is an internal state of being. Oneness comes as more parts of soul, that fractured off in the many falls in vibration, return to the whole of whom you are, again. Sometimes such pieces of soul can be trapped in great pain, and one cries or processes the emotions as the pieces and parts return. Yet other pieces can be fractured in yet other emotions such as shame, pain, anger, or fear. As one allows the emotions to be felt, they release, and as they release, one “feels better”. One feels better because one has now integrated a lost part of oneself and has become more “whole”.

Some have called this process “soul retrieval”. In reality, ascension brings about the retrieval of all parts of soul that fractured off over time within one's ancestry. Therefore, ascension and soul retrieval are one and the same.

Some think: “Oh, I've retrieved all my soul! I am whole!” My dears, there is so much soul to retrieve to enter the fifth world and next dimension you shall be retrieving soul for upwards of the next 100 years! And so, do not stop; keep going, keep returning to the wholeness and oneness that is possible in the act of choosing to evolve, choosing to ascend.

As enough wholeness is retrieved and reunited, one enters the dance of unity with all species upon a full-time basis! And this is indeed returning “home”, returning to the “oneness”, anchoring “heaven upon Earth”! It is as unity is entered that one also lives in peace. It is as enough humans live in peace that peace upon Earth becomes possible, and this requires many more humans to ascend than are currently moving forth. And so we ask you to wake up, begin this process of evolution—for it is what the human dance upon Earth was designed for.

As humans learn to tune inward and hear the messages of spirit, the need for the technology that you so rely upon shall disappear. Why would one need to listen to the “news” if they could hear the news upon the inner planes of reality that surround Earth? Such inner-plane news encompasses far more than the human dance; why, it speaks about the relationship of all species upon Earth, along with all stars and galaxies that Earth is related to! And this is much more expansive than the current human television.

And why did humanity develop the news anyway? As humanity lost the ability to hear the news of spirit by tuning into the inner world, they devised a replica of such abilities. As a matter of fact, most forms of entertainment or communication are all the result of replicating internal abilities that were once a part of the seeded Red race but were lost over time.

Once the Red race tuned into dreamtime and heard all planetary news as it occurred upon an ongoing basis. Once the Red man could use telepathy to communicate with any other member of the race, regardless of how far away. Once the Red man could communicate with all species upon Earth to understand their nature and be guided as to what was required to insure their own survival.

There was no need for television, telephones, radios, or transportation. The Red man could consciously project anywhere that he or she wished to be! There was also no need for “science” as you know it, for any knowledge wished to be understood could be attained direct from the kingdoms governing such things through direct communication with the realm of spirit. For each choosing to ascend and evolve, and choosing to open to the realms of spirit, such things shall also be granted also to you. In so doing, there shall be no need for the toxic technology that pollutes Earth and destroys her energy field.

In ascending and entering unity, there is no desire to quarrel or war with anyone. As the last human ascends into unity, peace shall be experienced again upon Earth, just as long ago before the arrival of the Pleadian white man. And this shall be a grand time indeed!

Now is the time to awaken and move forth, beloved. Earth needs you to fulfill upon the purpose that mankind walks upon the land. That purpose is to serve Earth through the choice to ascend and evolve, thereby supporting Earth's choice to evolve and ascend.

It is time now to open to the realms of spirit, heal the falls in consciousness experienced by your own ancestors, and enter the unity and wholeness again. As enough humans accomplish this task, Earth's ascension becomes an assured future rather than her annihilation. And the last potential nuclear World War shall be avoided in full.

Until our next communication,
Namaste

To Know Yourself, Reach Out To Others

2/10/01 SANAT KUMARA

Greetings, dear one, and thank you for sitting this day. Be at peace, and find that place of stillness within. Allow the Light of Creator God to fill you from within and radiate outward until you see it filling the entire area in which you now sit.

Be at peace in your knowing that the work you do goes forth and touches many a heart and is greatly anticipated and appreciated. Look not upon the task of writing these messages as a burden, but rather as an opportunity to share with others an uplifting message of hope.

The challenges you face are inner challenges of strong emotional convictions. We of the Lighted Brotherhood KNOW your heart, and we know the inner burden you needlessly carry. Such challenges are the usual kinds of reasons ones come forth into the physical—for the opportunity to focus upon, and outwardly experience, the more subtle yet powerful emotional stirrings within.

I was wondering when you were going to ask. I am Sanat Kumara, known by some as the Silver Ray of Creation, and by others, usually the Native American people, as Grandfather. I come in and of The One Light that both symbolically and literally represents the ALL that IS—Creator Source—God.

From the perspective of energy space (non-physical expression), all is viewed in terms of electromagnetic pulse-wave emanations. Whether it be a thought, emotion, or desire, it is ALL energy.

That which originates thought, emotion, and desire is also a form of energy. This energy can be traced back to a single “root” that you ones would simply term Creator God. It is ALL and yet it has no dimensionally measurable quantity or quality, but is infinite in potential. The entirety of all of Creation is contained within this Potential Energy, waiting for its perfect opportunity for expressing—not only on the physical planes of existence, but on ALL planes of existence.

You and the ones on your world are projections of this Infinite Potential Energy and are the product of a desire being expressed in perfection. This expressed desire is that which focuses the Infinite Potential Energy, and thus differentiates the energy and causes a flow and coalescence of the idea expressed. This, in a brief sort of way, is the essence of how God creates and is how you (the soul-you) each were “born” into existence and likewise create.

You each are endowed with an innate ability to tap into and utilize this Infinite Potential of creation as your free will desires same. What is often called the “Spark of Life” that you each carry, could be likened to a kind of basic “DNA strand” that carries within it the entire blueprint of YOU—the spiritual you. This “Spark of Life” is the desire of God expressing with and through you. It is through this Life Energy that ALL consciousness and awareness exist. You each, as well as we of the non-physical realms, are in essence a focal point at which Creator experiences individuality, diversity, duality, and the infinite possible combinations of ideas, beliefs, actions, and consequences.

We who serve at this time in the non-physical sense, as Guides, have experienced many, many times in the physical expression. We mastered its many challenges and grew immensely in awareness of Self—as we came to realize just exactly WHO and WHAT we really are. The ultimate realization is in the knowing and true understanding that ALL IS ONE.

We realize that you have heard this stated many times before. And many of you recognize this as Truth when you hear it. However, very few do we see who actually KNOW within what concept we truly express in these three simple words: ALL IS ONE. It goes beyond what you can see with the eyes or touch with the hands. It is more than accepting the concept that all people, animals, plants, minerals, planets, stars, and galaxies are connected.

It is an inner connection to a KNOWING that, once truly perceived and understood and appreciated, transforms an individual immensely from within—and there is then nothing but great Love possible ever after, within your heart, which in turn will, forever after, be effortlessly expressed through every thought, action, or deed that follows. This is the essence of the Great INNER Awakening that is what it takes to “graduate” from the physical “school room” once and for all.

The majority of those experiencing on your world simply go along with the mass of humanity in a “herd”-like mentality, waiting for someone else to do something unique so that they can simply observe the newness. These ones are easily distracted by the physical senses, which tend to crowd-out the inner senses of intuition and such.

As always, there are many different levels of awareness among the peoples of your world. Those who express in the more creative ways are the ones who are more deliberately utilizing their inner connection to the Infinite Potential Energy. In essence these ones are more deliberate in their focus and desire, and thus manifest their goals and dreams more easily and fully. Let me explain:

Focus: focusing your attention on an experience adds energy to what is already there and thus tends to recreate or reinforce the reality of the experience.

Desire: desire modifies the experience so that it becomes uniquely different due to your uniqueness.

Emotional Content: the emotional energy you couple with your desire determines the rate at which the Infinite Potential Energy coalesces and flows through you to manifest your focus and desire.

You may note that it is very simple for ones to physically destroy something beautiful that has been created. You chop up a rose bush—but can you create a rose? (Technically you CAN create a rose—and eventually you will, and much much more.) The energy that is behind this destructive element is the strong emotional desire to break free from the self-imposed prison many on your world find themselves trapped within—but know not what to do to achieve that freedom.

Each of you has an innate desire to be free from any form of restriction, and yet most on your world find themselves mentally and emotionally restricted due to various experiences and subsequent erroneous beliefs held as a result of those experiences. Often ones are left not knowing where to turn or what to do, and yet there is a great inner emotional pressure that builds up within that seeks release.

Unfortunately, the end result for many ones is a lashing out in violence, anger, and frustration. This energy can be (and often is) quite destructive due to the severe INWARD FOCUS of overwhelm and the lack of feeling connected to Creator Source. Thus, ones in such a condition will seek connection externally by destroying other people’s property or being physically or mentally abusive towards those they really love.

This is a way of saying (by way of actions): “Please notice that I am hurting inside and I don’t know what to do.”

A person who is truly at peace and spiritually balanced will never find comfort in tearing down another or trying to destroy another person’s dreams. Find compassion for those who cross your path who act out in desperation. Know that they TRULY are hurting inside and they are desperately wanting Peace, Love, and Balance in their lives. They innately know that it is there, and they desperately are seeking to find it.

The answer they seek is within, and yet that is often the last place they look. Often it is only after great trauma and exertion that these ones come to a point of wanting to just give up. It is often not until these final moments, when they let go of the desperation, that reprieve comes. Sadly, this is often the point just prior to when many transition themselves out of the physical environment.

Learn to recognize a brother or sister in need. It is often the more sensitive person who ends up in emotional states of overwhelm. All ones are basically good people efforting towards a greater understanding and awareness of self. Some deliberately choose the harder path as they know that it will “quicken” their journey and enable a greater opportunity to contribute to the overall awareness and growth of the planet.

Please have compassion for all ones who cross your path. Know that your paths cross for a reason and that there are no strangers. You (we) are ALL related and come forth from the same Source—Creator God.

I am Sanat Kumara, come in the Light of Creator God—The One Light. May you each find comfort in knowing that you are never alone, even in what you may perceive to be your “darkest” hour. If you have ability to think and reason, then you have ability to connect within to the ALLNESS that IS—Creator God.

Blessings and Peace. Salu.

Did you know you have a seven times greater chance of dying walking into your doctor's office than you do getting behind the wheel of your car? Prescription drug adverse reactions are the third leading cause of death in America!

Every year approximately 200,000 die from prescription drug reactions and another 80,000 die from medical malpractice, while 41,000 die in auto accidents. [DRUG TOPICS, October 23, 1995, pg. 14-16.]

What is wrong with our focus on the "drug war" when 200,000 die each year from prescription drugs, yet approximately only 20,000 die as a result of illegal drug use?

Drugs like Prozac, Zoloft, Paxil, Luvox, Effexor, Serzone, Anafranil, etc. are some of the biggest money makers ever for the pharmaceutical companies. Yet are you aware that the use of Prozac among children from ages 6-12 went from 41,000 in 1995 to 203,000 in 1996. The number of new prescriptions written increased almost 400% in just one year!!! This is a very powerful mind-altering drug that has not been approved for use in children and yet our children are popping it like candy!

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

Dr. Joseph S. Puleo has a lot to say about a lot of things. That's because his research brings together everything from natural health, to deciphering biblical codes, to sacred archeology, to the fundamental spiritual truths behind what we call science.

I recently had two conversations with “Joey”—on 1/16/01 and then again on 1/23/01. By background, Dr. Puleo is a naturopathic physician and a governing board member of the World Natural Health Organization, as well as a member of its board of trustees. He is also Executive Director for International Research for the World Natural Health Organization. In addition, Dr. Puleo is an avid—and creatively unconventional—health science investigator who directs a multi-disciplinary care facility near Sandpoint, Idaho.

Dr. Puleo co-authored a recent book with Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz, called Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse. An interview with Dr. Horowitz about this book was featured in the July 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM.

The underlying thrust of their information is to make it clear that we are vastly more powerful beings than we have yet awakened to. Meanwhile, the crooks in high places would very much like to keep us asleep and under their longtime control. But there exist high-frequency “spiritual” energies to connect with and draw upon—leading to ways to awaken and unlock our vast potential. This includes how to overcome whatever nasty bugs of the New World Order's “biological apocalypse” agenda might be thrown our way.

The Power Of Those Who Stand-Up For Truth

"Old-fashioned" baseball fans (and anybody else with an ounce of common sense and sensibility) probably got a real kick out of something that happened recently. Baseball's number-one home-run-slugging superstar, Mark McGwire, who could have turned "free agent" and shopped around for celestial (that's past astronomical) $$$ from some willing baseball franchise, on March 1 called a press conference to announce he had just re-signed a two-year contract with his current team, the St. Louis Cardinals, for $30 million. In answer to the expected question from salivating media hounds about remaining so "conservative" in his choice, he spoke volumes in just one sentence. In slow and measured words spoken straight into the cameras, he said: "Look, something's got to be wrong with ANYBODY who can't live on $15 million a year."

Amen! But in this age of wild salaries for sports and entertainment and executive bigshots, WHO has the private good sense to say "thanks, but no thanks" OR the public courage to call attention to the importance of balance in our lives—that money is not everything and things have really gotten way out of hand in that department of materialism?

The value of what Mark McGwire did by standing up and speaking out in the sports arena (that caused the press conference to get very quiet for just a moment of self-embarrassment) is the POWER of ACTION. This is the same as what geophysical commander Soltec had written about, nearly a week earlier, in his message shared in this issue of The SPECTRUM—though he wrote it as a much more general urging, titled: Stand And Be Counted For A Better World.

There are many ones "out there" who, coming from a place of conscience, and standing together to tell what they know about so many secret, diabolical projects aimed against the public, could constitute a powerful force for good—toward creating that better world Soltec spoke about.

Meanwhile: (1) we have had storms recently hit both coasts that, in the words of highly credentialed meteorologists willing to speak out, were "traveling backwards" moreso than how they should have moved; (2) we had a major earthquake in Seattle within 12 hours after news blurbs "just happened" to come out conditioning us for the likelihood of increased earthquake activity on the West Coast; (3) we had another high school shooting spree where, in the most famous case, the responsible student "simply smiled" and "showed no remorse" BUT woke-up more people who have started calling these children "the 'Manchurian Candidate' kids"—meaning that suspicions are mounting that they have been programmed to carry out such unconscionable tasks.

Moreover, as prelude to Rick Martin's front-page interview this month, the ever more frantic tone of the announcements about Foot-And-Mouth Disease in European livestock has made it difficult for media spin doctors to soften the alarm of this emergency. Dr. Lorraine Day spoke out forcefully on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program (on 2/21) about the massive, longtime cover-up concerning another, related illness called Mad Cow Disease. Her best one-liner of the evening, concerning how purposefully this disaster is being kept from the American public, was: "The bigger the lie, the more it flies!" (But that's certainly not news to longtime SPECTRUM readers.)

It comes as no surprise—to Mark McGwire or the rest of us—that modern, inhumane agribusiness methods are to blame for rendering livestock so vulnerable to disease. What Dr. Day was willing to say about this matter was foreshadowed by the courage of longtime (but now ex-) farmer/rancher Howard F. Lyman on Art's show the night of 2/11.

Some of you may remember Howard from back when he spoke up about Mad Cow Disease on Oprah Winfrey's show about a year ago. Both he and Oprah promptly got taken to court by the super-powerful Cattlemen's Association, huffing and puffing about lies. Of course the bought-and-paid-for media never bothered to let you know that both Oprah and Howard were COMPLETELY vindicated, later on, in the opinion of the judge for the matter.

Howard is a third-generation rancher who had been in the business for over 45 years when he became disgusted with what was going on. His devastatingly candid and courageous book, titled Mad Cowboy, is definitely not for the fainthearted.

Both he and Dr. Day are strong possibilities for interviews for The SPECTRUM—if we can remain afloat. As you may imagine from what they know, they are both strong proponents of vegetarianism and planting your own vegetable garden.

Which reminds me: Those of you who are already anticipating Rick's annual gardening article herein will have to go back to the April 2000 SPECTRUM. Rick has assembled for publication a new, expanded, and updated rendition of that perennial favorite, but we could not afford to expand the paper to include it this month. Whether or not we can print it next month (already a bit late for some truly serious gardeners) remains to be seen.

While our financial condition is precarious, we must quickly acknowledge, with DEEP appreciation, those of you who are keeping us afloat through your generous help. With a nod to Mark McGwire and Soltec, in your own quiet yet powerful way, this is surely an example of "standing up to be counted" toward making the world a better place through sharing Truth.

While we never know if next month's paper will be a reality, we don't feel so bad when the "big boys" of business and industry announce their own ominous warnings of job cuts and corporate downsizings and stock downturns. Any of you who have been watching the financial arena recently have seen some pretty scary numbers. The Japanese stock market, for example, plunged to a 15-year low on March 1 DESPITE playing their version of the "Greenspan fix" (of announcing an interest rate cut) earlier that dismal day. If THAT doesn't send a worrisome message throughout the financial corridors, then whatever "happy pill" some take must be working just fine.

Please help us continue to bring you Truth.

GENETICALLY ENGINEERED SEED MARKET STALLED

From the INTERNET, Earthspirit
<earthspirit@earthling.net, 2/4/01: [quoting]

The US$2.5 billion genetically engineered (GE) seed market is dominated by a single corporation, Monsanto, according to the Rural Advancement Fund International's (RAFI) annual update on seed industry consolidation. Monsanto sells GE seeds for four major crop commodities (soybeans, maize, cotton, and canola) almost exclusively in three countries (the U.S., Argentina, and Canada).

According to RAFI's report "Seed Industry Giants: Who Owns Whom?" the area sown to GE seeds increased spectacularly from 1996 to 2000, but weaker growth from 1999 to 2000 indicates that momentum is slowing. Industry analysts predict that GE seed sales have reached a plateau and could be flat for the next few years, a trajectory that is considered potentially fatal for a new technology.

Based on estimates by the International Service for the Acquisition of Agri-Biotech Applications (ISAAA), during the five-year period 1996 to 2000, the global area of transgenic crops increased more than 25-fold, from 1.7 million hectares in 1996 to an estimated 43 million hectares in 2000. But the area devoted to GE crops increased at a much slower rate from 1999 to 2000 (an estimated 8% increase, from 39.9 million to 43 million hectares) compared to the 44% increase from 1998 to 1999.

The market for GE seeds is overwhelmingly dominated by Monsanto (now owned by Pharmacia). In 1999, Monsanto's GE seeds were planted on 34.8 million hectares worldwide—approximately 87% of the total area planted with GE crops in 1999. Global area devoted to Monsanto's biotechnology traits increased by 48%—from 23.5 million hectares in 1998 to 34.8 million hectares in 1999.

Agrochemical industry analysts at London-based Wood Mackenzie estimate that Monsanto held an 80% market share for agbiotech in 1999—followed by Aventis at 7%, Syngenta at 5%, BASF at 5% and DuPont with 3%.

The U.S., Canada, and Argentina account for approximately 98% of the area planted in GE seeds in 2000. China accounted for 1% of the total crop area and eight other countries have the remaining 1%.

Four crops—soybeans, maize, cotton, and canola—account for virtually 100% of the GE seeds planted in 2000. Almost three-quarters (73%) of the area in 2000 was planted with GE crops modified for herbicide tolerance, 22% was modified for insect resistance, and 5% was devoted to "stacked" (combined) traits of herbicide tolerance and insect resistance. Of the total global crop area (273 million hectares) devoted to the four crops, ISAAA projects that 16% of the total or 43 million acres are planted

GENETICALLY ENGINEERED CANOLA SUPERWEEDS OUT OF CONTROL, SPREADING ACROSS CANADA

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 2/9/01: [quoting]

By Journalist Tom Spears
(The Ottawa Citizen <<http://www.purefood.org/gefood/canolasuperweeds.cfm>>)

Genetically modified "superweeds" have invaded Canadian farms—canola plants engineered to help farmers that instead escaped and cross-bred with each other to form plants stronger than their parents.

Most herbicides can't kill these canola superweeds, which are sprouting up in wheat fields and other areas where farmers don't want them, Canada's expert panel on biotechnology says.

Three types of canola, each engineered with genes to resist one type of weedkiller, have merged into new varieties resistant to many herbicides. Instead of helping farmers avoid weeds, the canola itself has become the weed.

The superweed-canola is especially bad in the Prairies, where canola is a multibillion-dollar crop, says a report released yesterday from the Royal Society of Canada's biotech experts.

The biotech industry has been "naive" in thinking that good farming methods alone will hold superweeds at bay, the report says.

And the panel warns that, as the next generation of genetically engineered crops becomes more complex, it will be tougher to head off the superweeds of the future.

Canola "is the classic example" of a superweed, said Brian Ellis, a co-chair of the panel and molecular biologist from the University of British Columbia.

Canola varieties such as Liberty Link and Roundup Ready were engineered to use with an herbicide (such as Roundup). The idea was that a farmer would plant canola resistant to Roundup, then spray the field with Roundup.

Everything except the canola would die.

Where canola is nearly herbicide-proof, it can crowd out other plants—crops and weeds—in farm fields.

But its resistance to herbicides doesn't help its survival in the wild, where there are no herbicides.

"The next generation...is crops that come along carrying genes that make them more frost-tolerant or drought-tolerant. They have an advantage over their wild cousins" Mr. Ellis said.

That means they will have a bioengineered advantage in taking over farm fields and in moving through wild areas.

"Herbicide-resistant volunteer canola plants are beginning to develop into a major problem" in the Prairies, the panel's report says. (Volunteer plants are those that seed themselves.)

Canola has been farmed for only a few generations and so it still has some wild tendencies—such as dropping its seeds before a farmer can harvest them. This plants seeds for next year.

And plants, the report says, "can be quite promiscuous." Canola plants will breed with any other canola they meet, creating the phenomenon of "gene stacking", or accumulating all the genes originally built into different strains by different laboratories.

This forces farmers to retreat to "broad-spectrum" herbicides—chemicals that kill just about anything, such as 2,4-D. These are chemicals that farmers were trying to get away from in the first place.

"The point is, technology is still driving agricultural production along a chemical-dependence route. And I think that's something the government has to take a very serious look at" Mr. Ellis said.

Biotech industry reps told the expert panel that good farming will stop superweeds from evolving.

"This perspective may be unduly naive" the report says. "In the real world, human error and expediency may often compromise guidelines for the growing of such crops."

Organic Consumers Association, <<http://www.purefood.org>> [End quoting]

For very human reasons, this problem was bound to happen and represents a serious warning about how biased some so-called scientific experts actually are about genetically modified plants—particularly those experts who are beholden to the biotechnology corporations for their paychecks.

But to add some measure of poetic justice to this development, go back and re-read our article "Blindness, Mad Cow Disease, And 'Canola' Oil" in the December 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM for a real eye-opening shocker concerning this product that has been skillfully marketed into such a multibillion dollar industry. To say that possibly it couldn't have happened to a "better" product is something to think about from a "karmic" point of view. And as well there's the following:

with transgenic crops.

According to ISAAA's preliminary 2000 estimates, GE crops account for:

- 34% of the 72 million hectares of soybean planted globally;

- 16% of the 34 million hectares of cotton;

- 11% of the 25 million hectares of canola;

- 7% of the 140 million hectares of maize.

Remember the embarrassment awhile ago when Monsanto's own headquarters cafeteria refused to use genetically modified foods? Looks like there's growing opposition as more awakened to the downside of this kind of tinkering.

What is carefully avoided in the above report is any acknowledgement of the extreme pressure tactics being employed to coerce farmers into using genetically modified crops. In other words, if the momentum is slowing EVEN WITH all that "marketing", then you can just imagine how great is the REAL opposition to planting these crops!

CIA CONFIRMS U.S. ATTACK ON IRAQ AIMED TO DIVERT PUBLIC OPINION FROM BRUTALITIES OF ZIONISTS

TEHRAN—Recently the U.S. warplanes raided the Iraqi civilians in Baghdad two times and declared that Saddam's regime was building deadly weapons that may be dangerous for the regional countries. Commenting on the report, an analyst reminded that the TEHRAN TIMES had written time and again that "U.S.-led pro-West attacks on Iraq are aimed to divert attention of international public opinion from the bitter facts of the Zionist brutalities against the Palestinians."

Sunday's statement of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) confirmed what the TEHRAN TIMES said.

The CIA ruled out the possibility of the Iraqi capabilities of building deadly weapons that could be a threat to the region. "I still have the same opinion that the Iraqi regime is not a potential danger to any of the regional countries" the analyst pointed out. "You know, yesterday it was the 145th day of Palestinian Intifada or uprising against the occupier Zionists, and so far they have sacrificed more than 400 lives" he maintained.

"Now the reality is that the Zionists are under pressure and the U.S., being closest ally of Israel, is doing all to save the entity" he noted. "The U.S. simply ignores that its tactics are old and would not work any more. The CIA or the U.S. administration cannot deceive the international public opinion" he believes. [End quoting]

More and more people who watch carefully our pro-Israeli-biased news media here in the United States are noticing how one-sided is the reporting on Israeli/Palestinian matters. Should a war actually break out there, public opinion is not likely to side with Israel!

MIDDLE EAST STEPPED BACK FROM THE BRINK

From the INTERNET, courtesy of Calvin Burgin, <wrlldline@texas.net>, 2/24/01: [quoting]

Very few people knew how close the Middle East came on Thursday Feb. 22 to exploding in a regional war. At 6 a.m., Israel placed its forces on high missile readiness after being alerted by US intelligence of movements by 6 Iraqi armored divisions deployed close to the frontier with Syria. American satellites additionally picked up Iraqi preparations for launching long-range surface missiles. DEBKAFfile's sources disclose the trigger of this sequence: a warning from a European government, probably Britain, to Iraqi intelligence that Israel would not again sit still and wait for Iraqi missiles to rain down on its towns as it did in the 1991 Gulf War. It planned to pre-empt any missile attack by knocking out Iraqi missile concentrations on the ground, as well the 6 armored divisions poised for advance since early in the Palestinian intifada. This Iraqi strength, Saddam was told, would be disposed of swiftly with the help of small neutron bombs. Iraqi decision-makers were impressed enough to test American and Israeli reflexes: they pushed ahead with technical preparations for the launching of surface missiles, taking them up to one stage before Saddam's firing order.

Israel received the information that the missiles would be ready for that last button to be pushed at 6 PM Thursday evening.

One hour earlier, 2 US AWACS and 4 Hawkeye-A2C spyplanes, and another 36 assorted US and British fighter craft, took off from the Turkish base at Incherlik and from US Navy carriers in the region, and headed for Iraq's Western Desert. Their mission was to flatten Saddam's surface missiles the moment the spyplanes reported them operational.

Opposite Syria's Mediterranean coast, Israeli

Air Force craft took off at the same time. As they crossed over the desert, the US and British airborne flotilla ran into fierce anti-air missile fire from batteries emplaced north of the Iraqi oil city of Mosul—altogether 35 missiles were fired. The allied fighters blasted the Iraqi batteries in return, but caused very little damage.

A few minutes after 6 p.m., everyone started breathing upon learning that the Iraqi surface missiles had become stationary. Israel called off its missile alert at 19:30 hours, as DEBKAFfile reported half an hour later. Thursday's scare can be expected to recur in the coming days and weeks. President Bush hinted as much when he warned Saddam at his Washington news conference Thursday Feb. 22 that if he developed weapons of mass destruction there would be consequences. But the US President knows very well that the Iraqi dictator is already engaged in developing those weapons, including a nuclear bomb. Jan. 22, two days before he took his seat in the Oval Office, the New York Times, under the heading "Iraq Rebuilt Weapons Factories, Officials Say" filled several columns with a rundown on production at an industrial complex in Falluja, west of Baghdad, together with information contained in reports laid before the new president. The paper quotes officials are providing details on the reconstruction of three factories, all of which were previously involved in producing chemical or biological agents and were closely monitored by UN inspectors.

Bush therefore has all the information he needs to justify US military action against Iraq, and his use of the word "consequences" indicates his intention of doing so. Thursday's events were a foretaste of how the US-Iraqi confrontation may affect Israel. There is more and possibly worse to come.

Earlier, DEBKAFfile picks up four ominous developments in last hours. The security picture pieced together by DEBKAFfile on the strength of information from its American and Israeli intelligence sources, and from Israeli military quarters, looks like this:

1. Early Thursday morning, US satellites picked up Iraqi ground-to-ground missiles moving west with launching equipment. US intelligence estimates that the missiles would be ready for launch by the evening prompted Israel to place all its security forces on the ready Thursday morning.

2. According to fresh reports from certain Arab capitals, Syrian president Beshar Asad has reached a strategic decision. This is interpreted in two ways: He has either agreed to grant the 6 Iraqi armored divisions deployed on the Iraqi-Syrian frontier passage through his country, or given the Hizballah the nod to unleash a long-range rocket attack against northern Israel—or both. This development is behind the grave warning the US and Israeli governments issued to the Syrian government Thursday morning. The night before, northern Israeli towns and villages were warned to prepare for long-range rocket attacks from Lebanon.

3. Palestinian sources confirm 1. and 2. and refer to unusual Palestinian military activity in the last 24 hours. In view of these reports, and the spreading word of Palestinian plans to bring out heavy weapons, Israeli units have reportedly stepped up their sorties into Palestinian-controlled areas. DEBKAFfile's sources learned that a massive Palestinian terrorist attack may be programmed as the starting signal for a regional flare-up.

4. The combined American-British air raid last Friday missed its essential target: a command and control center 20 miles north of Baghdad for the coordination and dispatch of both anti-air and ground-to-ground missiles. The allies had intended to pre-empt Saddam Hussein, following intelligence of his decision to launch missile attacks on Israel, Saudi Arabia, and Kuwait. The failed air raid strengthened Saddam's resolve. Now, he is determined to go to war without delay, before the Western allies reduce his missile-launching capability.

I heard yesterday—day of the Seattle quake—that there have been 7 big quakes since Jan. 1, in only 2 months. This is far more, so far in the year, than last year or any other recent year. SPY HANSSEN AND FBI DIRECTOR LOUIS FREEH ARE OPUS DEI

by <<http://www.newsmakingnews.com>>

It's no longer a secret that members of the U.S. military and government are infiltrated by secret cells, loyal to each other and their own agendas, as they collect the U.S. paycheck. Often, these cells are "religious"—ranging from mainstream religious affiliations to associations of a cultic or mind-control nature, often entwined with sexual blackmail operations and secret money transfer networks.

There's one aspect of Hanssen's spy work that Congress and the FBI won't be looking into—his connections to Opus Dei. Opus Dei has proven to be too much for the FBI to investigate, regarding its involvement in past covert Vatican bank scandals manipulated by such players as Banco Ambrosiano, Roberto Calvi, Licio Gelli and P-2. If the FBI scratches that Opus Dei itch, it will find the sores of its own intrigues with the Mafia and the Vatican ratline to import Nazis into the Americas. (See: <<http://members.nbci.com/osseticamb/ambrosiano.html>>; see also: <<http://www.population-security.org/cffc-97-01.htm>>)

Friends said FBI spy Hanssen and his wife are members of Opus Dei, a secretive and conservative Roman Catholic order. (Source: Washington Post) Louis Freeh, is a former member of Opus Dei. His brother, John Freeh, was once a top "Numerary" in the tight-knit, ultra-conservative Catholic organization. (Source: Ambrose Pritchard.)

Opus Dei was founded in 1928 by a Spanish priest, Josemaria Escriva de Balaguer y Albas. The group's central tenet is that all human work should be done "with the greatest perfection possible" to "help shape the world in a Christian manner". Invitation only. Pledged to the goal of becoming model Catholics and following a strict regimen of prayer, worship, study, and lectures, members now number more than 70,000 with 3,000 in the United States.

"Membership is by invitation only and includes some of the brightest and most dedicated Catholics." (Source: US News & World Report for 3/19/84.) Escriva was politically close to Franco and supported his policies. Opus Dei is totally loyal to the Pope. A member of Opus Dei, Colonel Alois Esterman, and a soldier in the Pope's Swiss Guard, was murdered. Esterman was accused of spying for the East German Stasi.

Summer 1998. Murder, mystery, and scandal have once again rocked the headquarters of the Roman Catholic Church, as a result of a triple killing involving members of the Pope's elite, 147-strong Swiss Guard, founded in 1506. Colonel Alois Estermann, newly appointed as head of the Swiss Guard, was shot dead along with his Venezuelan wife, Gladys, by a junior officer Cedric Tornay, who subsequently shot himself. Although this was put down to a fit of rage over being denied a medal, Vatican watchers point to more sinister happenings. Tornay left a letter in which he wrote to his mother: "Forgive me, for it was they who forced me to do what I have done."

Italian newspapers point to the humble origins of Estermann, which had aroused the jealousy of certain factions. It has also been claimed that Estermann was a spy for the former East German Stasi, the Communist secret police, and that, although he had helped protect the Pope during the assassination attempt in 1981, he had used his closeness to the Pontiff to send highly confidential material from the Vatican to the Communists by night train, via Austria, on to East Germany.

Other sources claim that Estermann and his wife were members of Opus Dei, the secret right-wing Catholic sect, and that Mrs. Estermann worked for Venezuelan Intelligence. Vatican authorities did not call in the Italian police, and as the prestigious newspaper La Repubblica stated: "THERE ARE TOO MANY MYSTERIES BEHIND VATICAN WALLS."

(Source: <<http://www.1335.com/Romearch/summer98.html>>)

As the Catholic Church's only floating diocese—known as a personal prelature—it is governed by a prelate-general, who holds the rank of bishop, and operates above and beyond the authority of local bishops. Said to be richer than many Third World states, Opus Dei publishes no financial statements, no membership lists, and it reports—once every five years—only to the pope.

SUBSIDIZED PRESIDENTIAL HOUSING

In order to qualify for candidacy as a senator, Hillary went shopping and bought a $2.5 million home in NY to establish her residency in style. It has been reported that the Clintons plan to pay for this house in an ingenious manner. They will charge rent to the Secret Service to house its personnel in the home while they are being protected at taxpayer expense. The "rental" agreement will be equal to their mortgage payment.

Apparently, they are going to run the same scam at their $2 million bungalow in D.C. The Clintons will have Secret Service for life. By the end of the term of the loans, the Clintons will own two $2 million homes that we paid for.

No wonder the Clintons love socialism.

THE BUSH-CHENEY DRUG EMPIRE

Excerpted from NEXUS magazine, Mar./Apr. 2001: [quoting, from the end of a long and very interesting article:]

Of special interest as this story goes to press is the strongest rumour among my sources that current CIA Director George Tenet, appointed to the post by President Clinton in 1997, will remain in the new Bush Administration. Based upon this writer's study of CIA operations and history, this strongly suggests two things. Firstly, it implies that the CIA, as a non-partisan servant of Wall Street, feels that its interests have been—and will continue to be—well served by Tenet, who is well liked at Langley. Most importantly, however, it suggests that there are operations, both covert and otherwise, in motion under CIA control which are moving at a speed and with a force that will not accept a break in rhythm for a change in directors. Most critical among these would be the start of the planned conflict in Colombia.

Since the advent of the atomic bomb, the United States has always needed two kinds of enemies. On one level, it has needed a tactical enemy that it can go out and fight in the field in a shooting war. Since 1945, these enemies have been created and appeared as North Korea, North Vietnam, Grenada, El Salvador, Panama, Iraq, and now Colombia. On another level, however, the US needs a strategic enemy that will justify outrageous expenditures of capital for strategic weapons systems like ICBMs, Trident submarines, and "Star Wars" missile defence systems.

With the new Bush Administration already contemplating a policy change that would make Colombian rebels (as opposed to drug traffickers) the targets of US military aid, as has been reported by AP, there is no doubt where the next shooting war is going to be. And with the militarised Bush cabinet making a missile defence shield a priority, it looks as though either China or Russia will become the next big enemy of choice. In the end, profitability will decide. For the moment, the less-than-credible paper threat is from unspecified "rogue nations". We can be certain, however, that the shifting economic pressure plates around the world will reveal our next demon soon enough. Halliburton [Corporation, with longtime Cheney work connection] is uniquely placed to profit from either eventuality.

As it was in Vietnam, Central America, and Kosovo, drugs continue to be a huge part of the financial plan for prolonged ground wars. As one cynic put it, "GOD" stands for "Gold, Oil and Drugs". We can be assured that an empire (as opposed to a republic) is emerging in the United States more quickly than many have expected. And the Bush Administration is already acting in a "godlike" manner. It is an empire that may have little need of even the pretence of democracy as American corporate fascism removes its mask in the wake of our election circus, the prostitution of our Supreme Court, and the virtual destruction of American government as a servant of anything other than money, greed, and power. [End quoting].

It would appear that the various "kings" are trying to become "king of the hill" and openly take over control of the whole planet as their personal kingdom—but I have a feeling what they are really doing is rushing forth to the cliff where there is no turning back.

STAY ALERT TO PLANETARY CHANGES ON A MASSIVE SCALE

From the INTERNET,
<AABCC@yahoo.com>, 2/18/01:
[quoting] <APFN@apfn.org>

Gregg Braden is currently traveling around the United States and in the media, telling of the scientific proof of the Earth passing through the Photon Belt and the slowing of the Earth's rotation. At the same time there is an increase in the resonant frequency of the Earth (Schumann Resonance). When the Earth stops its rotation and the resonance frequency reaches 13 cycles, we will be at a zero-point magnetic field. The Earth will be stopped, and in 2 or 3 days it will start turning again in the opposite direction. This will produce a reversal in the magnetic fields around the Earth and so forth.

Geophysical Condition #1: Earth's Rising Base Frequency: Earth's background base frequency, or "heartbeat" (called Schumann resonance, or SR), is rising dramatically. Though it varies among geographical regions, for decades the overall measurement was 7.8 cycles per second. This was once thought to be a constant; global military communications developed on this frequency. Recent reports set the rate at over 11 cycles, and climbing. Science doesn't know why, or what to make of it.

Gregg Braden found data collected by

Norwegian and Russian researchers on this; it's not widely reported in the U.S. (The only reference to SR to be found in the Seattle Library reference section, is tied to the weather. Science acknowledges SR as a sensitive indicator of temperature variations and worldwide weather conditions. Braden believes the fluctuating SR may be a factor in the severe storms, floods, and weather of recent years.)

Geophysical Condition #2: Earth's Diminishing Magnetic Field: While Earth's "pulse" rate is rising, her magnetic field strength, on the other hand, is declining. According to Professor Bannerjee of the University of New Mexico, the field has lost up to half its intensity in the last 4,000 years. And because a forerunner of magnetic polar reversals is this field strength, Prof. Bannerjee believes that another reversal is due. Braden believes that because these cyclical shifts are associated with reversals, Earth's geological record indicating magnetic reversals also marks previous shifts in history. And, within the enormous time scale represented, there were quite a few of them.

What is a Schumann Resonance?

Believe it or not, the Earth behaves like an enormous electric circuit. The atmosphere is actually a weak conductor, and if there were no sources of charge, its existing electric charge would diffuse away in about 10 minutes. There is a "cavity" defined by the surface of the Earth and the inner edge of the ionosphere 55 kilometers up. At any moment, the total charge residing in this cavity is 500,000 Coulombs. There is a vertical current flow between the ground and the ionosphere of $1-3 \times 10^{-12}$ Amperes per square meter. The resistance of the atmosphere is 200 Ohms. The voltage potential is 200,000 Volts. There are about 1000 lightning storms at any given moment worldwide. Each produces 0.5 to 1 Ampere and these collectively account for the measured current flow in the Earth's "electromagnetic" cavity.

Did you know you have a seven times greater chance of dying walking into your doctor's office than you do getting behind the wheel of your car? Prescription drug adverse reactions are the third leading cause of death in America!

Every year approximately 200,000 die from prescription drug reactions and another 80,000 die from medical malpractice, while 41,000 die in auto accidents. [DRUG TOPICS, October 23, 1995, pg. 14-16.] What is wrong with our focus on the "drug war" when 200,000 die each year from prescription drugs, yet approximately only 20,000 die as a result of illegal drug use?

Drugs like Prozac, Zoloft, Paxil, Luvox, Effexor, Serzone, Anafranil, etc. are some of the biggest money makers ever for the pharmaceutical companies. Yet are you aware that the use of Prozac among children from ages 6-12 went from 41,000 in 1995 to 203,000 in 1996? The number of new prescriptions written increased almost 400% in just one year!!! This is a very powerful mind-altering drug that has not been approved for use in children and yet our children are popping it like candy!

The Schumann Resonances are quasi standing-wave electromagnetic waves that exist in this cavity. Like waves on a spring, they are not present all the time, but have to be “excited” to be observed. They are not caused by anything internal to the Earth, its crust, or its core. They seem to be related to electrical activity in the atmosphere, particularly during times of intense lightning activity.

They occur at several frequencies between 6 and 50 cycles per second, specifically 7.8, 14, 20, 26, 33, 39, and 45 Hz, with a daily variation of about +/- 0.5 Hertz. So long as the properties of Earth’s electromagnetic cavity remains about the same, these frequencies remain the same. Presumably there is some change due to the solar sunspot cycle as the Earth’s ionosphere changes in response to the 11-year cycle of solar activity.

Schumann resonances are most easily seen between 2000 and 2200 UT. Given that the Earth’s atmosphere carries a charge, a current, and a voltage, it is not surprising to find such electromagnetic waves. The resonant properties of this terrestrial cavity were first predicted by the German physicist W. O. Schumann between 1952 and 1957, and first detected by Schumann and Konig in 1954. The first spectral representation of this phenomenon was prepared by Balser and Wagner in 1960. Much of the research in the last 20 years has been conducted by the Department of the Navy who investigate Extremely Low Frequency communication with submarines.

(For more information, see: Handbook Of Atmospheric Electrodynamics, Vol. I, by Hans Volland, 1995, published by the CRC Press. Chapter 11 is entirely on Schumann Resonances and is written by Davis Campbell at the Geophysical Institute, University of Alaska, Fairbanks AK, 99775. There is also a history of this research and an extensive bibliography.)

POSSIBLE OUTCOMES

1. Time will appear to speed up as we approach Zero Point. A 24-hour day will seem to be about 16 hours or less. Remember the Schumann Resonance (or “heart beat” of Mother Earth) has been 7.8 cycles for thousands of years, but has been rising since 1980. It is at about 12 cycles at present. It stops at 13 cycles.

2. Zero Point or the Shift of the Ages has been predicted by ancient peoples for thousands of years. There have been many shifts including the one that always occurs every 13,000 years, at each half of the 26,000-year Procession of the Equinox.

3. Zero Point or a flip of the magnetic poles will probably happen soon, within the next few years. It could possibly synchronise with the Earth’s four-cycle biorhythm that occurs every 20 years on the 12th of August.

The next occurrence is 12 August 2003. The Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project (secret military time traveling) both locked-up to the 12 August, 20-year biorhythm.

4. It is said that after Zero Point the Sun will rise in the west and set in the east, approximately. Past occurrences of this change have been found in ancient records.

5. Interestingly, the New World Order plan is to be in power by 2003. This may or may not happen, depending on many factors and agendas. Stay centered and follow your intuition.

6. The Zero Point flip will probably introduce us to the 4th dimension. Here, everything we think or desire will instantly manifest. This includes love and fear. Our INTENTION will be of utmost importance.

7. Most technology that we know will cease to operate. Possible exceptions could be technology based on so called “zero point” or free energy.

8. Our physical body is changing as we approach Zero Point. Our DNA is being “upgraded” to 12 strands. A new light body is being created. We are becoming more intuitive.

9. The Mayan Calendar predicted all the changes that are occurring now. They say we are going beyond technology and back to the natural cycles of Nature and the Universe. By 2012 we will have entered the 5th Dimension (after the shift to the 4th Dimension at Zero Point).

10. All this information is not fearful. Be prepared for changes that will bring in the new age of light. We are going beyond money and time, where fear-based concepts are totally dissolved. [End quoting]

I would caution about pinning a specific date on the above—different dates are given by different people who are talking about the same basic scenario. Just be prepared. Being prepared really means that your intent, in the way you live, comes under the motto of “service to others” rather than “service to self”. And also, live without fear—how else can you truly be in touch with God?

GOVERNMENT SUES RAILROAD OVER GENETIC TESTS

From the INTERNET, ENews newsletters, 2/10/01: [quoting]

In the first federal case of its kind, the government sued Burlington Northern/Santa Fe Railroad on Friday for requiring genetic testing of employees who file claims for certain work-related hand injuries. The policy violates workers’ civil rights, the lawsuit said.

The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission asked that the railroad end the testing of workers who make claims for carpal tunnel syndrome. The lawsuit said the employees were not asked to consent to the tests and at least one worker who refused to provide a blood sample was threatened with losing his job.

It is the first time the commission has challenged such tests, which it said violate the Americans With Disabilities Act, chairwoman Ida L. Castro said.

“As science and technology advance, we must be vigilant and ensure that these new developments are not used in a manner that violates workers’ rights” Castro said in a statement.

The railroad tested the samples for chromosome-17 deletion, the commission said. Some studies have suggested that would predispose a person for some forms of carpal tunnel syndrome.

The condition and related injuries caused by repetitive hand motions are the leading workplace occupational hazard, according to the National Academy of Sciences.

Dick Russack, spokesman for the railroad, said the company does ask employees who file disability claims for the condition to undergo genetic testing, which he said could show that the injury was not work-related. But he denied that anyone had been disciplined or threatened for refusing.

“If somebody doesn’t want to take the test, fine. There is no disciplinary action for refusing” he said.

The company began the testing program last year on the advice of its medical department, Russack said. About 20 people, less than 10 percent of those claiming the disability, have been tested, he said.

The company was caught by surprise by the lawsuit, he said. “They usually ask for a meeting or mediation.”

The lawsuit, filed in federal court in Sioux City, Iowa, asks that the Texas-based railroad end its nationwide policy of requiring employees who have submitted claims of work-related carpal tunnel syndrome to provide blood samples.

The commission said the blood tests violate workers’ “most intimate privacy rights” and are “an invasion of privacy and a person’s bodily integrity”.

“A person who has been forced to give blood will never be made whole, and genetic information that is revealed can never be concealed” the lawsuit said.

Basing employment decisions on DNA testing violates the Americans With Disabilities Act, in part because the exam is not job-related or “consistent with business necessity” said commissioner Paul Steven Miller.

“Any test which purports to predict future disabilities, whether or not it is accurate, is unlikely to be relevant to the employee’s present ability to perform his or her job” Miller said in a statement.

Four unionized workers—three from Nebraska and one from North Dakota—charged the railroad with discrimination, also alleging that the railroad required them to submit lists of all family members who had been diagnosed with carpal tunnel syndrome. Complaints were also filed on behalf of members of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of the Way in Nebraska and Minnesota.

Burlington Northern/Santa Fe operates one of the largest rail networks in North America. It stretches 33,500 miles and covers 28 states and two Canadian provinces.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration says that each year 1.8 million workers have musculoskeletal injuries related to working conditions. OSHA says 600,000 people miss work because of them. [End quoting]

One wonders if this was a disguised experiment to see if the public would remain docile to such small-scale genetic testing—as a precursor to more general genetic information gathering.

7 OF 9 MIGRAINE SUFFERERS GET RELIEF BY STOPPING WHEAT GLUTEN

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 2/13/01: [quoting]
<<http://www.naplesnews.com/01/02/florida/>

d584769a.htm>

According to the results of a small new study, some people may experience migraine headaches due to an otherwise harmless culprit: wheat.

The investigators found that limiting gluten—a protein found in wheat and other grains—reduced symptoms of severe headache in seven out of nine patients.

The patients were all found to have a sensitivity to gluten, which results in a heightened immune responsiveness triggered by the protein, according to the report published in the February issue of Neurology.

Gluten sensitivity can include celiac disease, an inherited inability to digest gluten that results in abdominal distention, vomiting, diarrhea, muscle wasting, and lethargy. Other conditions can also develop, including neurological problems or dermatitis herpetiformis—blister-like lesions on the elbows, buttocks, and knees, the report indicates. The only treatment is strict avoidance of certain foods.

In the new study, Dr. Marios Hadjivassiliou, from the Royal Hallamshire Hospital in Sheffield, UK, and colleagues looked at 10 patients who had a long history of headaches that had recently worsened or became resistant to treatment. Many of the patients also had a lack of balance or unsteadiness.

Tests showed that these patients had a sensitivity to gluten, and magnetic resonance imaging scans suggested they had inflammation in the central nervous system.

Nine of the 10 patients tried a gluten-free diet, and seven stopped having headaches. Two other patients had some—but not complete—success by switching to a gluten-free diet. One patient did not follow the diet.

“If the results of the current study are confirmed, removal of the trigger factor by the early introduction of gluten-free diet may be a promising therapeutic intervention” Hadjivassiliou and colleagues write.

“Further studies of the effect of gluten-free diet are needed to confirm these preliminary findings” the researchers conclude.

(Source: Neurology 2001;56:385-388.) [End quoting]

This discovery could be of tremendous help to migraine sufferers. Hopefully these researchers have identified the TRUE culprit in the gluten. Many times in the past an intolerance to wheat or wheat products has been proclaimed—when in fact the problem was what was being sprayed on the wheat to keep it from molding in the storage silos before processing. Unfortunately, blaming a spray means blaming some chemical and the company which manufactures it—which often pays very well to have the research take a different turn, so to speak. It’s always so much easier to blame Mother Nature’s creations than man’s lucrative chemical concoctions!

HUMANS BEING UPGRADED: EVIDENCE OF DNA AND CELLULAR CHANGES

From the INTERNET, <<http://cyberspaceorbit.com>>, 2/7/01: [quoting]

Found In Newsflash Area Down The Home Page For Feb. 9, 2001

Dear Kent, A friend sent me this.

So far the article is at <<http://www.2012.com.au>> but I suspect it will get some coverage. Here we go! Alx

Dr. Berrenda Fox (BF) provides evidence of DNA and cellular changes in this article by Patricia Resch (PR). Dr. Fox is the holistic practitioner of the Avalon Wellness Centre in Mt. Shasta, California.

The Avalon Clinic represents the re-emergence of the ideal of healing as practised on the original Isle of Avalon. Dr. Fox has proven through blood tests that some people have actually developed new strands of DNA.

PR: Berrenda, tell us a little about your background.

BF: I have doctorates in physiology and naturopathy. During my training in Europe I also was involved with the media and this still continues in film and management. As you know, I’m working with FOX Television Network to bring about understanding of extraterrestrials and their role in what is happening with mankind at this time. The most well known are Sightings and The X Files.

PR: What are the changes that are happening at this time on the planet, and how are our bodies being affected?

BF: There are major changes, mutations, that haven’t occurred, according to geneticists, since the time we supposedly came out of the water. Several years ago in Mexico City there was a convention of geneticists from around the world, and the main topic was the DNA change. We are making an evolutionary change, yet we don’t know what we are changing into.

PR: How is our DNA changing?

BF: Everyone has one double helix of DNA. What we are finding is that there are other helixes that are being formed. In the double helix there are two strands of DNA coiled into a spiral. It is my understanding that we will be developing twelve helixes. During this time, which seems to have started maybe 5 to 20 years ago, we have been mutating. This is the scientific explanation. It is a mutation of our species into something for which the end result is not yet known.

The changes are not known publicly, because the scientific community feels it would frighten the population. However, people are changing at the cellular level. I am working with three children right now who have three DNA helixes.

Most people know and feel this. Many religions have talked about the change and know it will come about in different ways. We know it is a positive mutation even though physically, mentally, and emotionally it can be misunderstood and frightening.

PR: Are these children displaying any characteristics different from other children?

BF: These are children who can move objects across the room just by concentrating on them, or they can fill glasses of water just by looking at them. They're telepathic. You would almost think, by knowing these children, that they are half angelic or superhuman, but they're not. I think they are what we are growing into during the next few decades.

PR: Do you think this will happen to all of us?

BR: It seems like most people who were born before 1940 have not been able to make the shift, but have initiated something into the next generation that gives them the capacity to form another helix within our lifetime. Our immune and endocrine systems are the most evident of these changes. That is one of the reasons I work with research in immunological testing and therapy.

Some adults that I have tested actually do have another DNA helix forming. Some are even getting their third. These people are going through a lot of major shifts in their consciousness and physical bodies, because it is all one. In my opinion, the Earth and everyone here is raising its vibration. Many of the children born recently have bodies that are magnetically lighter. Those of us who are older and choose to change have to go through many physical changes.

PR: What causes change in bodies born with normal two-strand DNA?

BF: The easiest way to mutate our DNA is through a virus. Consequently viruses are not necessarily bad. Viruses live only on living tissue. DNA viruses, like Epstein-Barr and the Herpes #6, change cellular structure. The retro virus HIV is not a DNA virus. Instead of mutating the body, it actually eats it up.

Most people who go through this process and come out the other side have a new profession, a new way of thinking, or at least a starting of a new way of life. Even though they may feel really sick, tired, or hopeless at times, it is a gift. They are being given a chance to change their DNA structure and their body into a lighter, healthier body that can see them into the next generation. The angels that are being seen are signs that we are shifting. As I understand it, we have until about 2012 to complete this process.

PR: What other changes should we expect to see?

BF: There will be no disease; we will not need to die. We will be able to learn our lessons not through suffering but through joy and love. The old system has to crumble away, and is not doing that without putting up a big fight. So you have all the wars; a lot of the medical type of healing is not working; the government is not working. A lot of the old paradigms can no longer exist, yet are fighting to be maintained, but there is no doubt that it is changing.

Those of us who have chose to live at this time are the forerunners of almost a new species. It is human, yet we are at the same time actually manifesting heaven on Earth. We are receiving extra help from Masters and extraterrestrials, angelic beings, and learning to go inward. The more we are able to go in and listen to that Quiet Voice, the more we are in tune with the changes that are happening.

PR: What are some of the side effects of these changes?

BF: With a cellular change you are sometimes going to feel as though you are not here. You may feel exhaustion, because we are literally changing cells and becoming new beings. Like a new baby, you may need lots of rest. Mental confusion and not being able to concentrate on routine tasks may happen as we are being programmed for something larger. Aches and pains throughout the body for which there is no specific cause are common.

Many people feel as though they are going crazy. If they go into an orthodox medical office, most likely they will be put on Prozac, because they can't define what it is. It is difficult for the medical profession because they are not used to dealing with the energy body. Because the chakras are related to our endocrine system, women will go through hormonal changes. There may be crying without knowing why because crying releases hormones. Many women are going through menopause earlier because we are accelerating.

Men may be very frustrated with the exhaustion when they are used to being very active. They may feel their feminine side coming out because this is the intuitive side. The emotional therapy that has been coming out in the last 20 to 30 years has been speeded up with new techniques for these changes. We are actually doing a tremendous amount of emotional work in a very short time which would have taken thousands of years.

PR: How do you treat someone who is going through these changes?

BF: I approach it from the viewpoint of working with individual beings instead of treating a disease. "Doctor" in Latin means educator. The only effective service you can perform as a true healer is to empower individuals with the necessary tools and reassure them that what is happening is real, and that they can heal and be free of the "negative" symptoms while healing.

First, I require immunological testing that is not traditionally done. This is a blood laboratory test performed by an advanced specialty research lab. Then I give the patient the information themselves. This is much like a map of the changes so they can have the power to heal. I am not the healer but only an instrument in their individual healing process. There is power in a person looking at their own blood tests and seeing the map of what is going on in their bodies that causes something to click in the subconscious. The real key is that the person take responsibility and do their own work.

What I use as tools are not commonly used. I use a lot of organotherapy, which is a glandular treatment from Europe, to build up the hormonal system to accept the changes in the DNA. Also, I use homeopathy to work on the energetic body, vitamins, herbs, and cold laser therapy. The therapy depends entirely on individual needs.

Much of what I do has been accessed from those whom I would call older sisters and brothers who have gone on before us. They are from other solar systems that we have all come from to help this planet with its transition.

PR: How do you see your work evolving?

BF: I look at my work as a bridge or transition. It is both scientific and artistic. Healing is an art and a science. Using only science or just the art of healing is not enough for complete health. I don't think I will be a healer all my life because I believe disease will be eliminated. We as conscious people will eliminate disease and suffering.

DNA AND BODY CHANGES AND REMEDIES

Extracted from an article The Bigger Picture by Susanna Thorpe-Clark. We are being changed physically from carbon-based beings with 2 strands of DNA into crystalline beings with 1,024 strands of DNA (eventually), because only crystalline substances can exist on higher dimensional levels. We are in fact having our bodies merged with Sirian DNA strands, as this format is close enough to our own to be able to integrate with relatively little side effects.

It is not just we humans who are changing, but all life forms on Earth are becoming crystalline. All the fish in the sea, the flowers and trees in your garden, the birds in the sky, even your pet dog or cat. Everything is changing. Nothing will die or be destroyed, for we are all moving together into a new state of being.

This new state of being requires therefore that we physically, mentally, and emotionally let go of 3rd-dimensional concepts. Just as in death, the letting go is a major part of the change process, for one cannot take the old values and way of being into a new, completely different afterlife. So the progression through changes compels us to let go of current relationships, jobs, careers, homes, possessions, and so on, if they are unable to support our new way of being.

Is it any wonder therefore, that there is a great deal of anxiety and fear being felt because these changes are already in progress? Even though most people are not conscious of it. Also, the changes to our physiological makeup are currently speeding up and there are many temporary physical symptoms that are occurring in our bodies as a consequence of this. Some of these are:

- Flu-like symptoms—high temperatures, sweating, aching bones and joints etc, but which do not respond to antibiotics;
- Migraine headaches—severe pain that is not relieved with pain killers;
- Occasional diarrhea;
- Occasional runny nose—with sneezing which lasts 24 hours and is not a cold or hayfever;
- Dizziness;
- Ringing in the ears;
- Heart palpitations;
- Feeling the whole body vibrate—especially at night when one is in a relaxed state;
- Intense muscle spasms—plus pain in the body, often the back;
- Tingling—in arms, hands, legs, or feet;
- Loss of muscular power—in hands, caused by changes in circulation system;
- Occasional breathing difficulties—and/or noticing stronger or louder breathing when in a relaxed state;
- Immune system changes;
- Lymphatic system changes;
- Feeling tired—or exhausted from minor exertion;
- Toe and finger nails and hair growing quicker than normal;
- Bouts of depression for no real reason;
- Delving into the past—and looking at relationships, gaining clarity on personal issues;
- Feelings of a huge purge;
- Tension, anxiety, and high stress levels—because one feels that something is going on but doesn't know what it is.

Some of these symptoms are being felt by a great many people. Many are rushing off in panic to their doctor, chiropractor, herbalist, and so on, and are usually told that there is nothing wrong with them. And this is the truth. For all these symptoms are just temporary and simply indicate that these physiological changes are occurring.

Some of the RECOMMENDED RELIEF REMEDIES for the above are: Go with the flow, don't fight it. If you feel tired and exhausted, rest and get plenty of sleep. Drink lots of water for you are detoxifying and dehydrating quicker than usual. To relieve emotional tension and stress levels take Valerian. Fenugreek relieves stress on the lymphatic system and helps the detoxification. To relieve muscle spasms take Valerian and try mud baths or a long, hot soak in a bath to which you add a cup of Epsom salts. Do this daily.

Recognise that, even if you are having heart palpitations or breathing difficulties, it is the heart chakra or the throat chakra that is unblocking and that the symptoms are temporary. You aren't dying, just changing! However, don't just take my word for it. Seek medical guidance if you are unsure.

If you don't know where to get Valerian or Fenugreek, try a health food store or, better still, simply say the name in your head when you need relief. All healing energies are transmitted via the sound of the name and are just as effective said in the mind or aloud, as in physically taking them. Try it and see.

Ask your angel guides to help relieve any pain. They are just waiting to be asked! Most symptoms seem to last a couple of weeks, then clear up. Some symptoms may recur from time to time.

These changes are not necessarily being experienced by everyone concurrently. A very small percentage of adults have already completed the entire change into crystalline form and now embody 1,024 strands of DNA.

One report is of a woman who has grown 3 inches taller and a footsize larger. All children under the age of 7 have also now completed the change, or will shortly do so. Babies born in the past 2 years have all been born with the full set of DNA. Some people are only just starting to move through these changes, and many others have yet to start. This process of change is known as the Awakening, or as the Ascension process, or known as achieving the Merkabah, or light body.

We need to transcend our fears and learn about love, real love, which has to start with the self. Because, until we can love and trust ourselves, we cannot truly love or trust anything or anybody else. [End quoting]

Is it any wonder why the so-called "elite" controllers of this planet have been waging such a persistent "drug war" with the likes of Ritalin and Prozac, especially on our youth and through our school systems? They are scared to death about losing control as these exceptionally gifted ones awaken to their true potential. And as more and more people shift into this higher-frequency mode of existence (reflected in the DNA changes), there will be no stopping the dawning of an astonishing new world—that is the exact opposite of what the New World Order gang had in mind!

Those of you who have read the above narratives carefully will observe great similarities with the spiritual messages which have been shared through this avenue for quite some years and collected together in the WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach volumes. It is, indeed, truly an exciting time to be alive on planet Earth as the Great Awakening unfolds. Geophysical commander Soltec's messages in this issue of The SPECTRUM provide some further commentary on this subject.

VIRTUALLY REAL 3D IMAGING

From NEXUS magazine, Mar./Apr. 2001: [quoting:]

Surgeons and designers could soon be manipulating 3D moving images floating in mid-air rather than on computer screens, say engineers at DERA, Britain's soon-to-be-privatised defence research laboratory. They say designers will be able to extend a car's bodywork just by waving a stylus, and almost instantly see what it looks like; or surgeons could twist a brain-scan around to locate an injury.

"We can create a real image floating in 3D space" says Chris Slinger, head of holography at the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency in Malvern, Worcestershire.

Working in a joint venture with the Ford Motor Company, DERA says it plans to have its first products based on advanced computer-generated holography (CGH) on the market in 2003.

Unlike other techniques, such as stereography or virtual reality, CGH doesn't require people to wear cumbersome headgear to see the image, and prolonged use doesn't lead to any ill effects. Users manipulate images using tools which exist partly as real objects and partly as virtual tools. "It is like nothing else we have seen before" claims Slinger.

THIRD QUAKE STRIKES

EL SALVADOR

From SURFING THE APOCALYPSE, 2/23/01, <<http://www.surfingtheapocalypse.com>>: [quoting]

Yet another earthquake rattled El Salvador on Friday, sending many residents of the capital fleeing from homes and buildings. There were no reports of injury or serious damage.

This Central American country has been hit with thousands of aftershocks, some fairly strong, in the aftermath of deadly quakes on Jan. 13 and Feb. 13.

The country's Seismological Service said the 10:22 a.m. quake had a magnitude of 4.5. It was centered near the capital, and was unusually shallow, causing it to be felt more strongly than other temblors of similar size.

Meanwhile, President Francisco Flores prepared to leave for Spain to seek donors to help cope with devastation caused by the two powerful quakes, which together killed more than 1,200 people and destroyed or damaged 335,000 houses—more than 20 percent of those in the country.

The international Economic Commission for Latin America estimated that January's magnitude 7.6 quake left more than 32,500 people without jobs in this country of 6 million people. It estimated that the damage and other costs of the quake at $1.2 billion—equal to near one-tenth of the country's economic output.

It was followed by a magnitude 6.6 quake in February.

"We estimate that between the two earthquakes, the damage is a little more than $2 billion" said Juan Jose Daboub, Flores' technical secretary.

Daboub said the country was overwhelmed by the losses. "In terms of housing, for example, the country can build 20,000 housing units a year and today we have to build almost 200,000 in the coming months." [End quoting]

We are definitely in a time of increased earthquake activity. For some, the consequences of Mother Earth's adjustments are truly overwhelming and point to how much we take for granted in terms of our living conditions upon her surface—despite the way we treat her.

The depth of the recent quake in Seattle makes it clear that major plate movements are occurring and the further clashing at these plate boundaries is likely to be releasing quite a bit of energy. Both of geophysical commander Soltec's writings in this issue of The SPECTRUM provide some insights on this matter of our restless Mother Earth.

EARTHQUAKE RIVER

From the INTERNET, <paradiscuss@tje.net>, 2/22/01: [quoting]

Deep underground water channels were opened by the massive 7.9M temblor that struck India's western state of Gujarat last month.

Media reports, based on satellite images of the region, have speculated that the Jan. 26 quake caused either the mythical, subterranean Saraswati River or the Indus River, which disappeared after an earthquake in the 19th century, to resurface. Water gushed from holes in normally arid ground near the community of Nehar, about 20 miles from the quake-devastated city of Bhachau.

The village is a cluster of about 40 homes located on the fringes of the Rann of Kutch Desert. Unlike the brackish water local farmers find by digging, the new water is sweet tasting. [End quoting]

Thank God for the gifts that come with the disasters. This will help to bring new life to that region.

MARINES TO UNVEIL BIGGEST WEAPON BREAKTHROUGH

SINCE A-BOMB

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 2/24/01: [quoting]

<http://www.airforcetimes.com/stories/air_story_229240.html>

IS THIS THE SOUND OF THE V-MADS IN ACTION??

The Marine Corps is preparing to unveil perhaps the biggest breakthrough in weapons technology since the atomic bomb—a nonlethal weapon that fires directed energy at human targets.

In an exclusive, copyrighted story that appears on newsstands Monday, Marine Corps Times reports that the weapon, called the Vehicle-Mounted Active Denial System is designed to stop an individual in his tracks and make him turn and flee.

The Joint Non-Lethal Weapons Directorate in Quantico, Va., had planned to unveil the technology in April after briefing Marine Commandant Gen. James Jones, Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Michael Ryan, and senior Defense Department civilians, still not appointed.

But plans were accelerated and much of the program declassified after Marine Corps Times learned of the story.

Plans now call for an unveiling and demonstration for military and congressional leaders in March at Kirtland Air Force Base, N.M.

The VMADS project is co-sponsored by the Marine Corps and the Air Force, which has conducted much of the research and development. [End quoting]

This is an example of making public just the very tip of an iceberg that runs very deep into diabolical uses of directed energy beams to incapacitate people both physically and mentally. Longtime readers of this newspaper have seen much information herein describing astonishing (if amoral) secret uses of all kinds of energy beams. Such research and its applications have been ongoing for at least fifty years now.

WEARING A T-SHIRT MAKES YOU A TERRORIST

From the INTERNET, 2/22/01: [quoting]
ANYTHING WITH A SLOGAN COULD PUT YOU OUTSIDE THE LAW NOW

Special report: Human Rights In The UK
The Guardian newspaper George Monbiot

Britain, Tony Blair announced at Labour's spring conference on Sunday, is on the brink of "the biggest progressive political advance for a century". To prepare for this brave new world, two days before his speech Mr. Blair bombed Baghdad. On Monday, the progressive era was officially launched, with the implementation of an inclusive piece of legislation called the Terrorism Act 2000.

Terror, in the new progressive age, is no longer the preserve of the aristocracy of violence. Today almost anyone can participate, just as long as she or he wants to change the world.

Beating people up, even killing them, is not terrorism, unless it is "designed to influence the government" or conducted "for the purpose of advancing a political, religious, or ideological cause". But since Monday you can become a terrorist without having to harm a living being, provided you believe in something.

In that case, causing "serious damage to property" or interfering with "an electronic system” will do. Or simply promoting or encouraging such acts, or associating with the people who perform them, or failing to tell the police what they are planning. Or, for that matter, wearing a T-shirt or a badge which might “arouse reasonable suspicion” that you sympathise with their activities.

In his speech on Sunday, Tony Blair called for a “revolution” in our schools, and spoke of “noble causes...asking us to hear their cry for help and answer by action”. So perhaps we should not be surprised to learn that you can now become a terrorist by supporting government policy.

British subjects writing pamphlets or giving lectures demanding a revolution in Iraq can be prosecuted under the new act for “incitement” of armed struggles overseas. The same clause leaves the government free to bomb Baghdad, however, as “nothing in this section imposes criminal liability on any person acting on behalf of, or holding office under, the crown.”

By such means, our new century of progressive politics will be distinguished from those which have gone before. There will be no place, for example, for violent conspiracies like the Commons Preservation Society. The CPS launched its campaign of terror in 1865, by hiring a trainload of labourers to dismantle the railings around Berkhamstead Common, thus seriously damaging the property of the noble lord who had just enclosed it.

The CPS later split into two splinter groups called the Open Spaces Society and the National Trust. Under the new legislation, these subversive factions would have been banned.

Nor will the state tolerate dangerous malefactors such as the woman who claimed “there is something that governments care far more for than human life, and that is the security of property, and so it is through property that we shall strike the enemy” and “the argument of the broken windowpane is the most valuable argument in modern politics”. Emmeline Pankhurst and her followers, under the act, could have been jailed for life for damaging property to advance a political or ideological cause.

Indeed, had the government’s new progressive powers been in force, these cells could have been stamped out before anyone had been poisoned by their politics. The act permits police to cordon off an area in which direct action is likely to take place, and arrest anyone refusing to leave it.

Anyone believed to be plotting an action can be stopped and searched, and the protest materials she or he is carrying confiscated. Or, if they prefer, the police can seize people who may be about to commit an offence and hold them incommunicado for up to seven days.

Under the new act, the women who caused serious damage to a Hawk jet bound for East Timor could have been intercepted and imprisoned as terrorists long before they interfered with what Mr. Blair described on Sunday as his mission to civilise the world. So could the desperados seeking to defend organic farmers by decontaminating fields of genetically modified maize.

Campaigners subjecting a corporation to a fax blockade become terrorists by dint of interfering with an electronic system. Indeed, by writing articles in support of such actions, I could be deemed to be “promoting and encouraging” them. Which makes me a terrorist and you, if you were foolish enough to copy my articles and send them to your friends, party to my crime.

I don’t believe the government will start making use of these new measures right away: after all, as Mr. Blair lamented on Sunday, “Jerusalem is not built overnight.” But they can now be deployed whenever progress demands. Then, unmolested by dangerous lunatics armed with banners and custard pies, the government will be free to advance world peace by bombing Baghdad to its heart’s content.

<g.monbiot@zetnet.co.uk> [End quoting]

Remember that Tony Blair just came back from some important New World Order meetings with president Bush at Camp David. Looks like this is the launching of a trial balloon to see if the sheep are ready for the next step of control. If it plays without much opposition in the UK, you can be sure its brother will be appearing very soon here in the US—maybe disguised as a response to the latest rash of school shootings.

SAVING SOVEREIGNTY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 2/19/01: [quoting]

I do not believe that for a few shillings we should sell off the state’s sovereignty” H. Morgan Griffith, a member of Virginia’s General Assembly from Salem, is quoted with alarm in the leftwing Washington Post. The paper was scandalized that Virginia refused to ban open bottles of alcoholic beverages “even if the state will lose a kegful of federal cash if it refuses to impose such a restriction”. The assembly’s House Militia and Police Committee has a long history of rejecting federal mandates and declining federal cash bribes. It’s not that open liquor containers are desirable but that federal directives are less desirable. [End quoting]

A very commendable act if the above reason is the truth at face value. Monetary “incentives” are, of course, the principal way in which the federal government induces “cooperation” from the states (blackmail is such an ugly word). Most of the time it works fabulously well—but not all of the time. Now, if the states would just get around to realizing that the feds would not have all that money to give some back to them—if they didn’t give it to the feds in the first place, but simply kept it themselves. So who is to blame?

ECONOMIC GROWTH: A POLITICAL LIE

From THE STRATEGY, Australia, Jan. 2001: [quoting]

Governments blithely proclaim “strong economic growth”. The electorate does not believe it and neither do Greenspan, George, and Backstrom, for the present at least, the “top” central bankers.

The August 2000 Bundesbank report described these claims of “strong economic growth” as a fake “hedonic price indexing”. The Bundesbank analysts made a convincing case that governments defraud the electorate with “creative” accounting. [End quoting]

So what else is new? This past year has seen a scrambling for creative ways to make a downturned world economy look rosy. Right now, it looks as if Japan may be the first country to finally admit the truth of their dire financial condition. More will follow in short order.

INDICATORS & ADMISSIONS BY CENTRAL BANKERS

From THE STRATEGY, Australia, Jan. 2001: [quoting]

The 600% overvalued stock market and the dangerously inflated value of the US dollar, are a threat to global trade; it does not represent “strong economic growth”. The support of the US dollar by the influx of $4 billion per day, composed of the trade deficit and speculative capital, can not go on for much longer. (Nation to nation commodity barter?)

Greenspan of the US Federal Reserve, at the Jackson Hole meeting warned of threatening formations beyond our immediate horizon. They are ignored in the popular media. He cautioned the G7 central bankers against complacency in the face of an imminent financial crash and monetary implosion.

His comments regarding the reversal of almost total submission to “globalisation” and the challenges to the financial oligarchy were of particular interest: “The latent forces of protectionism and state intervention begin to reassert themselves.” [End quoting]

So, how did the “booming” economy all of a sudden become one of “imminent financial collapse and monetary implosion” practically overnight? (Perhaps those emergency supplies should be checked and replenished in case of more than just earthquakes!) And speaking of deep earthquakes of the financial variety, look carefully at the following two items:

GOLD JITTERS #1 TURMOIL BEHIND THE SCENES SOMETHING IS UP WITH GOLD

Subject: Gold Anti-Trust Action [GATA]
Dear Friend of GATA and Gold:

GATA Chairman Bill Murphy has allowed me to share with you the following alert he dispatched today to his subscribers at <www.LeMetropoleCafe.com>:

CHRIS POWELL, Secretary/Treasurer Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee Inc.

By Bill Murphy
<www.LeMetropoleCafe.com>

Rumors are flying in the gold world that an announcement of some kind will be made soon regarding the gold market.

Of most importance is that gold lease rates, especially the short rates, have begun to rise dramatically. The one-month lease rate has risen from 0.7% to 1.75% over the past month and is starting to spike up. The short-term rate has also inverted over the longer rates, which is an aberration.

There is much to digest in all of this.

First, I am told that the lendable gold outside of the big central banks has been exhausted. That makes sense, as we have noted that in recent months the gold cartel has called on Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, and Uruguay to lend their gold.

We are also hearing that it is the large central banks holding down gold now, even though they have been told that this does serious damage to poor gold-producing countries.

But there appears to be a severe shortage of physical gold. Word has it that the Bank of England is very slow in settling its gold transactions and that this is causing great nervousness in the physical market.

Two sources have told me that they are hearing that there will be some kind of new Washington Agreement-type of announcement by the Agreement's 15 signatories to the effect that they are further reducing their lending.

That would be a bombshell. As I reported in last night's "Midas" commentary, Frank Veneroso thinks the gold loans could be as high as 17,000 tonnes—more than three times the acknowledged figure—and that the yearly supply/demand deficit is running around 2,000 tonnes.

In other words, no matter what the central banks do, they are going to run out of gold in the near future unless the price rises dramatically to slow down demand.

There is something else. As the Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee has reported often, the Bush administration and Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill have stated publicly that they are for free markets and against market interventions, which eventually backfire. [The Bush family has been reported over the years to own a lot of gold mine stocks. Can you imagine why they want gold to be released from the lid that has been forced on its price to keep it from rising—to heaven only knows what price?]

O'Neill just came back from the G-10 economic summit. He and the Treasury Department must respond by March 15 in U.S. District Court in Boston to the Howe/GATA lawsuit about rigging of the gold market. It is likely that O'Neill told the G-10 conference that the United States will no longer support rigging of the gold market as did Clinton, Rubin, and Summers.

That would fit in with everything else we know since the Bush administration took over. Real economic data is being reported now instead of phony numbers. [Only if those "real" numbers serve the New World Order gameplan. That is, only if the public is to be led into a deeper state of fear by hinting at how bad the economy really is.]

The action of the stock market is totally different. The Clinton scandals never end. But the biggest one of all is what the Clinton administration did to gold to benefit the rich at the expense of the poor African gold-producing countries. The U.S. policy toward gold under Clinton contributed to death and economic devastation in those countries. [But who does Clinton take his orders from? The same elite would-be controllers who run the entire show.]

I just received the following from South Africa about speculation in that country.

"Via a chain of contacts, I was informed that there exists some evidence that your quickly arranged visit to the South African Reserve Bank just before you left South Africa was not intended to offer you an opportunity to sell them on GATA, but to find out quickly exactly what GATA knew. Some officials you spoke to in Cape Town were concerned that GATA had more facts than was suspected—by the Hannibal Lecters of this world??—and that it was important to find out what these were so that countermeasures could be taken."

Well, if that was the case, the Reserve Bank of South Africa did learn that GATA and Reg Howe have this thing nailed and that the cabal has been found out. It was the most complete and best presentation I ever gave. If they did not know before, they know now that the jig is up for the gold cartel.

And finally, what better time than to dump a new scandal on the Clinton administration? What else is new?

Gold is higher on the day and has made a succession of new highs. That is a change in the trading pattern of recent weeks and months.

Some exciting times could be upon us.

GOLD JITTERS #2
WORLD GOLD COUNCIL ACKNOWLEDGES TURMOIL
BEHIND THE SCENES

Rumor Mill News Read-Only Forum

Posted 23 February 2001, By: Nexus Magazine <editor@nexusmagazine.com> in Response To: Gold Jitters

Dear Friend of GATA and Gold: Here are two more dispatches tonight from GATA Chairman Bill Murphy to his subscribers at <www.LeMetropoleCafe.com>:

CHRIS POWELL, Secretary/Treasurer Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee Inc.

By Bill Murphy
<www.LeMetropoleCafe.com>

The World Gold Council sent a letter today to its members. It spoke of problems in the physical gold market. I was told that such a letter is highly unusual.

As the day progressed, there was continued talk in New York about a physical gold problem. It appears that while there is central bank gold around, there is not enough refined gold needed by gold users. What was being used for lending is gone, used up—and is now jewelry around someone's neck in India. The Bank of England and others are scrambling to cover current needs. That could explain why some official-sector entity is selling gold right now—so that it can be sent to refineries.

Another story has it that a gold producer wants to cover some forward sales and return borrowed gold to the central bank. That means the bullion banker lender must buy physical gold and return it to a central bank. That tightens up the spot market.

Cafe member Marcia Peters sent the following about the lease rate situation:

"On Jan. 3, 2001, gold could be leased for a one-year term at 1.4 percent. Bullion banks (or whoever lends the stuff) were confident enough that this price adequately captured whatever risk they could confidently predict for a year in advance. One-month rates were at three-quarters of a percent.

"By last week (Feb. 15) the one-year rate, that had stayed flat in the low 1.35 percent range for six weeks, aggressively moved up to 1.5 percent, and one-month rates were at 1¼ percent. Change in confidence? Unforeseen change in economic conditions? I'll say.

"By today (Feb. 22) the lease rates for one, two, three, and six months are all in the neighborhood of 1.54-1.59 percent. Suddenly the 1.40 that they were willing to lock-in for a year, just six weeks ago, looks like a very bad deal. Likewise the 0.9 percent they were willing to lock in for a six-month lease. What has changed? Perception of risk, obviously."

Regarding the meeting I had with the Reserve Bank of South Africa: So there is no confusion, it was arranged during a Cape Town breakfast meeting with the minister of Minerals and Energy, Ms. Phumzile Mlambo Ngcuka, at her request.

Actually, that moment gave me a chuckle. During the phone call to set up the meeting, the ministry official on the phone started smiling, so I asked him about it. He told me that his colleague in Pretoria had asked “What is he up to now?”

Other useful info sent my way:

The Reserve Bank of South Africa is owned by private shareholders. Who are they? No one could tell me while I was in the country. But the talk is that many are the same financial institutions that are the shareholders of the Federal Reserve Bank in the United States. All one big happy cabal family.

Word also to me is that the Oppenheimer family of Anglogold fame is a big Reserve Bank shareholder. Perhaps that is what the recent e-mail to me from South Africa was all about. The plot thickens everywhere we turn.

I wonder why British Prime Minister Tony Blair is suddenly headed to Camp David to meet with President Bush?

Sir Peter Tapsell of the House of Lords in England is making noises about the gold market again. One of the leading newspapers in London is back on the case too. Hmm.

As usual, gold sold off after London closed today and the stock market was saved from oblivion via “massive futures buying” by “well-known players” according to a report on CNBC.

No matter, the stock market could not rally and gold held steady.

What is important here is that all the evidence suggests that President Bush and his no-nonsense vice president, Dick Cheney, and Cabinet members (Rumsfeld, Ashcroft, Powell) are going to end the Wall Street shenanigans of the previous administration. [Rather, the plan is proceeding on schedule, especially if it is now time, according to the dark so-called “elite” controllers, to allow the collapse that has been impending for several years.] My guess is that they are doing so now, but in a way that is calculated and prudent. [Sure.]

Remember: Reg Howe, Frank Veneroso, Chris Powell, and I gave a dissertation about the gold market scandal last May 10 to the speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, Denny Hastert, at the U.S. Capitol. He was so interested that he set-up a meeting two hours later with Rep. Spencer Bachus, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Domestic and International Monetary Policy. This committee has gold oversight responsibility. Both are Republicans.

We told them that we were like doctors who had found a terrible cancer. The patient needed chemotherapy and the side-effects would be unpleasant and painful, but the patient would survive with proper treatment. We said: To go into denial and do nothing would mean death. If you win the election and nothing is done, the gold market will blow up on your watch and you will be blamed.

My guess is, they have known everything all along, but did not know how to deal with the fraud until now. Let us hope that is the case.

As related to me today by Cafe member Michael B.: Is Alan Greenspan now out of the loop? A week ago Tuesday he spoke to Congress and made no mention of inflation problems. No Greenspan “isms” on the subject, no warnings of the PPI and CPI bombshells coming the following Friday and Tuesday.

Is the no-nonsense Bush administration upset with Greenspan for his role in the sleazy financial market maneuvers of the Clinton administration? [Remember that the ones truly in control allow and even foster fighting among their underlings as part of the weeding process for the “king of the hill” sorting of these puppets. Different factions are always fighting, whether they be in the CIA or in the financial infrastructure.]

Fasten your seat belts and stay tuned! [Amen!]

Quotes from the unusual letter that the World Gold Council sent its members today:

“According to usually reliable market sources, the Bank of England has not been lending gold over the past few days. This is unprecedented, as its short-term lending is considered a vital tool in the smooth running of the London market. The bank’s explanation for this (confidentially) is that many client central banks had lent out for longer periods than normal around the Washington Agreement period, and that as the loans matured they were not being renewed, creating a temporary tightness in liquidity. The market is regarding this explanation with some suspicion, however, suspecting that more may be involved.

“It has indeed been suggested that another joint central bank move on gold lending may be imminent, cutting the amount of gold available for lending.

“We have no firm evidence for such a move. However, if this were to happen, then lease rates would soar; non-Washington Agreement countries have increased their lending substantially in recent months and it is unlikely that they could fill any liquidity gap produced. In these circumstances, a price spike could easily develop; shorts would be quick to cover while other borrowers would be forced to buy as the rolling over of existing loans became more difficult to achieve.”

Can you smell the smoke?

A READER’S RESPONSE TO GOLD JITTERS 1

The script is very clear: we are going back to the gold coins. Imagine who is the preferred buyer of essential goods in countries like San Salvador or India after the apocalyptic events? And these events will increase dramatically the next two years. The countdown has begun already. Prepare.

Rumor Mill News Read-Only Forum [End quoting]

While the above items on gold are a bit on the lengthy side, for those of you who know how to read into such financial shenanigans, there are serious messages about what “earthquakes” may be just around the corner. Be sure to see Sherman Skolnick’s comments about how Marc Rich and the Federal Reserve fit into this equation elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.

Perhaps it is a good time to take a good look at your financial portfolio along with checking on the condition of your emergency supplies. And keep in mind that a bunch of wealth on paper can very rapidly evaporate overnight, or simply become useless and inaccessible, while cans of soup and tuna and assistance to those in need will last for the long haul. It’s what we DO with money that’s the test, not how much we hoard.

PARDONED SWINDLER CALLED ISRAELI SPY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, by George Nicholas, 2/19/01: [quoting]

The real reason that billionaire criminal currency trader Marc Rich received a full presidential pardon may surprise you. Read on for the sordid story.

Fugitive financier Marc Rich did not merely defraud the U.S. government of billions during the 17 years he spent on the lam; he also served as a spy for the Mossad, Israel’s secret service.

For that virtue, he deserved a full pardon from former President Bill Clinton, argued Shabtai Shavit, Israeli former top spymaster, in a letter to the White House last month.

Rich is the billionaire commodities trader who has long headed the Justice Department’s “Most Wanted” list of bigtime cosmopolitan crooks.

Shavit, director general of the Mossad from 1989 to 1997, confirmed that Rich has been an “extremely valuable” asset to the Israeli undercover operations around the world since 1983, when he fled the United States to duck tax-swindle and related fraud charges.

Shavit’s argument—that such a major Israeli spy deserved U.S. clemency, even if he was otherwise alleged to be a major financial criminal—was echoed by other power-brokers, among them Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and the rabbinical heads of the U.S. Holocaust Museum.

Clinton apparently agreed with them. Rich and his longtime partner, Pincus Green, received full presidential pardons last month, absolving them of crimes for which they never even had to stand trial.

“If Rich was really working for the Mossad, that does change the picture, but not the way Clinton seems to think” said Coleman Horton, a retired congressional investigator. “The indictments outstanding against this con man allege fraud running into tens of billions of dollars, but they cite only financial transgressions.

"If Rich was really an Israeli secret agent, he may be guilty of even more serious crimes: terrorism, sabotage, blackmail, kidnapping, or murder, now acknowledged official policies of the Mossad" Coleman added. "His case merits no clemency; just the contrary, it calls for a reinvestigation."

A number of congressional leaders seemed to share these doubts, holding hearings on the Rich pardon in both the House and the Senate.

"Do billionaire financiers who demonstrate loyalty and generous contributions to Israel get favored treatment when they break the law?" asked Lamar Wooton, a longtime bond trader.

He noted the case of Bear Stearns, the huge Wall Street brokerage, which has come repeatedly under federal scrutiny for its links to dubious stock promoters.

The chairman of Bear Stearns, Ace Greenberg, is one of the largest contributors to Israel in the New York financial establishment. The investigations of his firm petered out inconclusively.

Others cited the scandal involving billionaire currency trader George Soros, who has been ordered to stand trial in France on criminal insider-trading and conspiracy charges.

"Under any normal circumstances, the French would ask for his extradition" said Horton. "In this case, they say, the prosecutors in Paris were cautioned not even to try to collar Soros ahead of the trial." [End quoting]

Now here's an almost ludicrously complicated case of "the pot calling the kettle black"—especially once you factor in the data that longtime investigator Sherman Skolnick has been sharing with us in last month's and this current issue of The SPECTRUM on this subject. Israel's bought-and-paid-for (with our taxpayer money that has been given to them) stooges in our own government make Marc Rich seem like a choir boy by comparison.

GUN BUYBACKS BOMB

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 2/12/01: [quoting]

The federal "BuyBack America" program, where localities buy a citizen's gun with no questions asked, has failed as a means of curbing violent crime, experts told the American Rifleman, journal of the National Rifle Association. "They do very little good" said David Kennedy, senior researcher at Harvard. "The pool of guns that get turned into buybacks are simply not the same guns that otherwise would have been used in crime. If you look at the people who are turning in firearms, they are consistently the least crime-prone: older people and women."

Said Michael Romero, a research associate at the Violence Prevention Research Program at the University of California, Davis: "The guns that are turned in for these programs may not resemble the guns that are frequently used in crimes."

"If the goal is to reduce violence," said Richard Rosenfeld of the University of Missouri, St. Louis, "it's not going to have an effect." [End quoting]

If the REAL (disguised) goal of the program is to simply help to eliminate guns from the public sector, is this program actually successful at doing exactly what it is supposed to be doing? We know the longtime goal of the New World Order requires the elimination of guns, especially from that uppity US middle class. How better to bleed down the supply than through such a disguise as this program—and then, for good measure, say the program isn't doing so well.

MORE MEXICANS NEEDED?

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 2/12/01: [quoting]

Mexican President Vicente Fox, holding forth at the economic summit in Davos, Switzerland, told Cox News Service that his goal of a fully open border with the United States will be met. "I see a new spirit, a new way of looking at the immigration issue" Fox said. "American officials, including those who are in Davos, no longer see this as a 'problem'. They have come to recognize that the United States needs Mexican workers to enable its economy to grow at 5 percent a year and to keep inflation rates below 2 percent." There was no comment from unemployed Americans. [End quoting]

Isn't it curious that America's foreign policy is being outlined by a foreigner? Do you get the feeling that policy is actually dictated from a much higher level to ALL parties involved, and these talking heads just carry out the orders? It is a well known longtime goal of the New World Order engineers to collapse the American economy down to the level of merging with Canada and Mexico—and in the process render the uppity Americans economically powerless and emotionally demoralized, and thus more amenable to control.

CHEAPER LASERS AHEAD

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, March 2001: [quoting]

A new type of laser could dramatically lower the cost of high-quality printers.

Developed by Lucent Technologies of Murray Hill, N.J., the laser is made from tetracene, an organic, carbon-containing material. Unlike earlier organic lasers that could be energized by only a light source, the Lucent device produces a coherent beam of light directly from electric current.

Organic lasers are expected to be so inexpensive that laser printers may someday cost as little as inkjets. [End quoting]

We now take for granted computers and their peripherals that just ten years ago would have been unbelievable. This progress is partly a commentary on the creativity inherent in man, a creativity that, if applied to areas of basic human needs and unencumbered by the interference of the so-called "elite" controllers, would just about overnight lead to heaven on Earth. How many discoveries—of a much more impacting nature than the one described above—have been blocked from completion to benefit mankind? So-called "free energy" devices are a good place to start.

More Americans went to prison or jail during the Clinton administration, than during any past administration, the result of getting tough policies that led to more police officers and longer sentences, a criminal justice think tank reports.

During President Clinton's eight years in office, 673,000 people were sent to state and federal prisons and jails, compared with 343,000 during President George H. W. Bush's single term and 448,000 in President Reagan's two terms, says a study by the Justice Policy Institute, an arm of The Center On Juvenile And Criminal Justice. [End quoting]

If anything tells you something is wrong with society, the proportion of our population in prison says it all. What do you think would happen to the statistics if we locked-up all the politicians instead of the designated criminals? (You say we don't have enough building materials?)

SOME CUSTOMERS TEMPTED TO DIAL 911 AFTER RECEIVING COSTLY CALLING CARD BILLS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 2/15/01: [quoting]

Janet Oseroff of Manhattan signed up for her new calling card from the local phone company, Verizon Communications, in early December, and the plan seemed quite clear.

"Your calling card has a simple flat rate" a letter from the company said. "That means you never have to worry about what time it is when you use it; you'll get the same, low 35-cent-per-minute rate on your Verizon Communications domestic long-distance calling card calls."

"Just be certain to first dial 1-800-255-CALL" said another letter she received. "This will ensure you get the low Verizon rate we promise, without any surprise charges from other telephone companies."

But Oseroff was surprised when, after following those instructions, she received her next bill from Verizon.

USAN Inc., a long-distance company of which Oseroff had never heard, had charged her $1.58 for a one-minute call from Atlantic City, N.J., to Manhattan, and $8.66 for a 13-minute call from Pennsylvania to Colorado. In all, for 53 minutes of calls, USAN wanted $49.09 before taxes—not the $18.55 that a 35-cent-per-minute rate would have totaled.

Oseroff's experience is hardly unique. No matter whose card they use, callers run the risk of being charged far more than they expect.

In some cases, like Oseroff's, that's because the company offering the calling card has to use another company to carry the call, and the other company charges handsomely for its role. In other cases, it's because callers still do as they were taught for years when using a calling card: they dial zero, then the desired phone number and then the card number after the so-called

"bong tone".

And in some cases, the unexpectedly high charges reflect efforts by phone companies to find profits where they can. For example, as residential long distance calling rates have fallen below 10 cents a minute, the big long-distance carriers have in some cases raised their calling card rates.

In addition to dozens of smaller operators, all of the nation's big phone companies issue calling cards. Besides Verizon (the name that Bell Atlantic adopted after acquiring GTE last year), the list includes AT&T, BellSouth, Qwest (which includes the former US West), SBC (which uses the Ameritech, Pacific Bell and Southwestern Bell brands), Sprint, and WorldCom (MCI brand). [End quoting]

If there is one constant that the public has come to expect from the phone companies, it is simply that you can't believe what any of them say. That the cheating and lying has become so blatantly widespread is yet another reflection of the previous item in this News Desk!

RED SKY PROPHECY

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <AABCC@yahoo.com>, 2/5/01: [quoting]

"I suspect" he continued, "that it is but one bird who creates the thought that turns the flock, and the one thought becomes immediately manifested in all the others. The individual then transcends self and becomes one with the whole. Thus, at once, the bird moves within the flock and the flock moves within the bird."

"So, then, do not ask what you can do to affect the life force in a positive way, for the same Spirit that moves within the birds also moves within you. One person, one idea, one thought can turn the flock of society away from the destructive path of modern times. It is not a question as to whether we make a difference, for we all make a difference, each of us in our own way. It is the difference we make that is important."

"So, if we live a life that is close to the Spirit, seek the spiritual rapture of oneness, that will affect the outcome of life?" I said. My statement was more a question than a declaration.

"It is not enough" Grandfather said, "just to seek the things of the Spirit on a personal level. To do so is selfish, and those who just seek the spiritual realms for themselves are not working to change the Spirit that moves through the consciousness of man. Instead they are running away, hiding from their responsibility and using their wisdom for their own glorification. Spiritual man must then work for a principle, a cause, a Quest far greater than the glorification of self, in order to affect the spirit that can change the course of man's destruction."

I sat for a long time in the quietude of the night, trying desperately to understand what Grandfather had told me. In essence, it was not enough to work for spiritual enlightenment for self, but to work for the spiritual enlightenment of all of mankind. To work only for self, to cloister oneself in the seeking of spiritual rapture, is to run from this responsibility. What Grandfather was saying is that a spiritual person must take the wisdom and philosophy of the Earth and bring it back into modern society.

Grandfather spoke again. "Trying to live a spiritual life in modern society is the most difficult path one can walk. It is a path of pain, of isolation, and of shaken faith. But that is the only way that our Vision can become reality."

"Thus the true Quest in life is to live the philosophy of the Earth within the confines of man. There is no church or temple we need to seek peace, for ours are the temples of the wilderness. There are no spiritual leaders, for our hearts and the Creator are our only leaders. Our numbers are scattered; few speak our language or understand the things that we do."

A TRUE STORY

From the INTERNET, Paper Clip <star_dusters@yahoo.com>, 2/1/01: [quoting]

This is a good story—and it's true.

His name was Fleming, and he was a poor Scottish farmer. One day, while trying to make a living for his family, he heard a cry for help coming from a nearby bog. He dropped his tools and ran to the bog. There, mired to his waist in black muck, was a terrified boy, screaming and struggling to free himself. Farmer Fleming saved the lad from what could have been a slow and terrifying death. The next day, a fancy carriage pulled up to the Scotsman's sparse surroundings. An elegantly dressed nobleman stepped out and introduced himself as the father of the boy farmer Fleming had saved.

"I want to repay you" said the nobleman. "You saved my son's life."

"No, I can't accept payment for what I did" the Scottish farmer replied, waving off the offer. At that moment, the farmer's own son came to the door of the family hovel.

"Is that your son?" the nobleman asked.

"Yes" the farmer replied proudly.

"I'll make you a deal. Let me provide him with the level of education my son will enjoy. If the lad is anything like his father, he'll no doubt grow to be a man we both will be proud of." And that he did.

Farmer Fleming's son attended the very best schools and, in time, he graduated from St. Mary's Hospital Medical School in London, and went on to become known throughout the world as the noted Sir Alexander Fleming, the discoverer of penicillin.

Years afterward, the same nobleman's son who was saved from the bog was stricken with pneumonia. What saved his life this time? Penicillin.

The name of the nobleman? Lord Randolph Churchill.

His son's name? Sir Winston Churchill.

Stand And Be Counted For A Better World

2/24/01 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in the Light of Creator Source—The One Light. Be at peace and be still.

Much is happening all around your globe in terms of geological activity. There is much movement of your planet's crustal plates and we are monitoring closely the "physiological" changes of your orb's physical structure. Your planet is constantly adjusting to the upward frequency shifts, as well as to the artificial distortions (torques) caused by man's experimentations with high-energy pulse beams and such. Know that your planet continually calls out for protection and guidance from Higher Source, and she is given that which she seeks.

Many ones do not recognize your planetary orb as having consciousness. But the lack of understanding of the facts of the matter do not change the reality of the situation. She is quite alive, aware, and an emotional entity. She expresses herself in a manner foreign to most ones thinking and reasoning. Her mentor (father-mother figure) is your solar system's Sun. Your Sun gave birth to your planetary orb many a billion years ago, and maintains constant communication with her, as well as sending various life-giving energies to her so that she may experience and grow much like you ones are doing.

She, at the present time, is providing an environment that allows for many entities to interact in the physical so that they can have opportunity to experience, grow, and learn in a group setting. This environment you now experience within is not some "freak accident" of Nature. It is an exquisite design wherein much planning and thought has resulted in a unique ecological balance; even the smallest of insect plays a role in maintaining the equilibrium.

Human beings are given free will to choose as they see fit. The choices of a relative few (your so-called "elite") have, over several past decades, created a very out-of-balance situation on your planet. Massive deforestation, over-fishing of the world's oceans, excessive use of pesticides, nuclear (and more exotic scalar or "prana"-type energy) weapons' testing and such have caused great rifts in the overall ecological balance of your world.

This cumulative abuse will not be allowed to continue without great repercussions. Many of you already have been seeing the signs for many years now, and yet little has changed. Pollution continues to pour out of fossil fuel-based power plants and factories with little regard for the longterm effects.

Though some governments have taken actions to clean up the environment and establish regulations, others have virtually done NOTHING. A large percentage of your world's manufacturing is now done in China—where regulations are essentially non-existent.

Much alternative-energy-source information and technology has been brought into your world, and yet the greed of the few keep this information and technology from being shared. There are viable alternatives to fossil-based fuels that will neither pollute the environment, nor deplete any of your planet's natural resources. These energy systems are essentially free—after the initial investment of building the generating system.

With such energy-production devices implemented and in use, it would become very economical and practical to desalinate ocean water, and then use the fresh water to irrigate the dry desert areas all around your globe. In this way you could quickly end world hunger. You would also then eliminate the need to rape the ocean of its sea life, cut down the rain forests, and pollute your environment—and thus avert great disaster.

Your world governments are quite aware of these "free energy" technologies, and use them in their advanced "secret" bases all around the world. Some view these technologies as a potential threat to "national security" and therefore they cannot be released to the "public sector".

However, if your world continues on its current reckless path of self destruction, there will not be a "public sector" left to be concerned about—let alone a hospitable environment to sustain life as you presently appreciate it.

Within EACH of you lies the ability to make a difference in your world. Even on a small scale you can do your part to help others become aware of the pending disasters.

In time, large masses will wake-up, only to find that your world's governments have done "studies" whose findings show that ecological destruction is imminent, and that these reports were buried and hidden away so as to not create great social upheavals.

Dear friends, ozone holes would be the least of your worries if you were allowed to see the larger picture. Your planetary entity, Mother Earth, is quite justified in her crying out for help from we of the Higher Realms!

It is not our intent to try to scare you into action. However, if the TRUTH of the matter is negative in nature, then should we of the Higher Realms say nothing, rather than present to you ones an accurate assessment of your situation?

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen." — From the back cover of Volume I

"Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you (God!). You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose." — Esu "Jesus" Sananda (Vol. II)

We shall not attempt to coddle you ones and tell you that all is wonderful and beautiful and serene, when the TRUTH of the matter is contrary to that! You each have chosen to participate in your current environment, knowing full well that there were going to be challenges along the way.

Challenges are a good thing! Challenges are what cause you to go within to seek understanding and balanced solutions.

The word “challenge” has a certain feeling associated with it that some equate to difficulty and hardship. Facing challenges does NOT have to be difficult or hard—if you just remember to include GOD as a part of the “problem”-solving team.

Remember, please, that you are never given more than you can handle. As long as you remember to call upon Higher Guidance and Protection, there are no challenges you cannot face and overcome in a balanced manner. Be persistent, be patient, and be humble—and the answers to your heart-felt questions WILL come.

Much like the challenges of raising children will cause, from time to time, emotional stirrings within parents, wherein there are great frustrations, aggravations, and such, there is also the inner knowing that the children will eventually come to an age wherein they will venture out into the world for themselves and “THEN they will see!”

This is to say that parents realize that eventually their children will mature into adults, and through personal accountability and responsibilities experienced first-hand, children will come to appreciate all of the lessons parents tried to share with them. Often it is only after such “school-of-hard-knocks” occurrences that children realize their parents were only trying to help them. Though the children may be resentful of parents telling them “what to do all of the time”, the parents know that they offer these “annoyances” out of LOVE—and not out of some desire to be oppressive toward the children.

In much this same way, we of the Host of God effort to assist you ones, and from time to time we find it quite beneficial to point out the EFFECTS of choices made. If the “effect” of choosing to ignore a situation (because it causes you overwhelm or discomfort) allows for a destructive situation to persist, then haven’t you CHOSEN to allow the situation to continue and possibly flourish and grow? If this be the case, then, when the situation becomes so large you can no longer ignore it, WHO should hold the responsibility for the situation? This is the case with many of the global issues now impacting your planet.

Many a good person has chosen to ignore the inner pressure (of conscience) to do the “right” thing—fundamentally out of fear. That is, there are the fears of losing a job, or of possible physical hardship, or loss of status or prestige in the community (and having to endure possible ridicule), and other matters of loss of what you call “quality of life” issues. In essence, by not following the urgings of the conscience, ones are guaranteeing the loss of the very quality-of-life conditions they fear losing—as well as guaranteeing same for their children and grandchildren as well, to an even greater extent.

You are in a time when there is no escaping the consequences of your choices and resulting actions.

Never underestimate the power you have to effect change! Be forever careful NOT to allow fear to dictate your actions (or, in most cases, reactions). Find within you the knowing that “doing the ‘right’ thing” is sometimes the greatest challenge YOU might have to face. Face such challenges with a KNOWING that, if you but ask, God is on your side and a myriad of Angels are standing ready to assist you. When the heart and mind are focused in complete and total alignment, you become an unstoppable and unshakable force. It is only when you doubt and fear that there becomes a misalignment of energy and “difficulty” persists.

Learn to trust the inner whisperings of your heart. Know that when your intent is to do good and to help others, without the expectation of personal gain or reward, you will have, standing with you, LITERALLY COUNTLESS Higher Beings contributing their energies to yours, and helping to open doors where you thought there were none.

You EACH have Guides watching over you, ready willing and able to assist you. Be not afraid to speak out, especially when the knowledge you hold will greatly benefit others.

You EACH have a unique role to play, if you choose to fulfill your intended destiny. Learn to include God in all of your planning, and you will overcome any and all challenges that come your way. The energy you put into helping others will ALWAYS be returned to you, especially in your time of need.

Be quick to add positive energy to any situation that may cross your path that somehow seems negative to you: If you see a child being mentally abused, then send that child a mental hug (Light). If you find that some ones constantly speak ill toward you or others, then send those ones a mental hug (Light) as well, for they are truly hurting inside, and they wish to blame others for their pain instead of taking responsibility for it themselves.

Taking small steps like these can have a tremendous impact on those around you. You will become a magnet of sorts for positive experiences, and you will find the negative

Pasadena Health Show: A Great Success!

Rick and I would like to extend our sincere appreciation to all of you who came to the National Health Federation Natural Health Show last month to meet and visit with us. We loved getting to see some of you again, finally getting to meet others of you, and putting faces with names, and signing up you new subscribers!

We only wish we could have had more time to spend with you, but fortunately we were inundated with so many people looking, buying, and staring in amazement at the headlines of our newspapers that we couldn’t visit quite as much as we had hoped to be able to do. We definitely need a larger booth next time!

Rick and I would also like to extend a warm and heartfelt thank you to the coordinators of this event, Michelle and Craig, for their kindness, concern, and hard work in making this event a success. They represent the true blessing of events such as this, namely, the people involved.

The next National Health Federation Show will be held at the San Diego Convention Center on October 27 & 28, 2001. We hope to see you there!

With love and thanks to you all, Gail & Rick experiences being far less frequent and of diminished significance.

Often the only difference between a charismatic, charming person and a repulsive, bitter person is that the one looks for the good in every situation and focuses mostly upon helping others, while the other dwells mostly upon one’s own personal “problems” and often has little time, let alone compassion, for anyone else.

Look NOT upon what might happen to you if you take an action that could help a lot of people. Rather, look at what may happen to a lot of people if you DON’T take the action!

ALL happens for a reason, and you can come to a balanced soul-ution to ANY challenge if you just remember to keep God in the picture—as well as learning to appreciate the larger perspective of soul growth and experience, rather than the more limiting perspective of reactionary physical survival. Physical death is but a transition back to where you came from, and is hardly an ending, but rather, a completion of a cycle. If you effort to address the challenges of your life in balance and without fear, you will have satisfaction in your heart when you look back upon the life you led in the physical.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come at this time as a member of the Host of God and as a fellow caretaker of your planet, so that you ones may have the Guidance and Insights you seek along this segment of your infinite spiritual journey.

Much Love and Light to you all! Salu.

The Spiritual Side Of Science

Here's what Alan Cantwell, Jr., M.D., author of AIDS And The Doctors Of Death has to say about the book:

"A roller coaster read awakening us to the biological perils of the New Millennium and the New World Order. Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse is an unprecedented mix of Biblical prophecy, mysticism, and medical conspiracies, with startling revelations of an out-of-control bio-technology wedded to secret government genocidal agendas."

Don Harkins, Editor of The Idaho Observer, had this to say:

"The most brilliant game of connect-the-dots ever put into print. All of the evidence is there. Healing Codes has left nothing out.... You are left completely shocked by revelations that go far beyond exposing the genocidal intentions of a few evil men. If you want to know why so many people are sick today, what the true causes of our disease epidemics are, and how to prepare yourself physically and spiritually to defend yourself against the coming plagues, read this book."

Dr. Puleo's work has also been utilized by Jonathan Goldman (featured in the April 2000 edition of The SPECTRUM) founder of the Sound Healers Association (website: www.healingsounds.com) in his most recent CD, titled The Lost Chord. The Lost Chord is available through Spirit Music at 800-246-9764. Jonathan Goldman has this to say about Dr. Puleo, quoting from the CD insert:

"Joseph Puleo, ND, has come across a most interesting relationship between numbers and the alphabet. Different from typical numerology and gematria (the relationship of Hebrew alphabet to mathematics), Dr. Puleo has utilized the King James version the New Testament to decipher some very interesting numbers, which he believes were divinely given as a tool for planetary evolutionary acceleration. In the book Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse (co-authored by Dr. Leonard Horowitz), Dr. Puleo released these 'Bible Codes'.

"Shortly after reading this book, I had tuning forks cut to the different frequencies mentioned in the book. Weave, who co-created The Lost Chord and I, worked together using these Bible Code frequencies. We did some preliminary research into these tuning forks, which Dr. Puleo believes are the frequencies of creation. While we have nothing significant yet to report at this time, the Bible Codes represent an important potential in the field of sound as a therapeutic and transformational tool. Introducing each chakra and level of the Tree of Life is a sound which is a combination of the six Bible Code frequencies sounded together. In addition, during the section on the Crown/Kether, human voices also sing these frequencies. Working with the consent of Dr. Puleo, we now present this additional aspect of The Lost Chord to you."

Dr. Puleo's focus right now concerns the deciphering of the Bible codes within the biblical book of Genesis, which he says equates considerably to genetics. But his research doesn't stop there, by any means.

Be patient as you read the following interview because it does go "all over the place"—and for good reason. At a higher level, Dr. Puleo is working to merge "the spiritual" and "the scientific" through areas of knowledge that have long been hidden by the so-called "elite" from we-the-people for reasons of control that are quite familiar to longtime SPECTRUM readers.

Because of the way his very creative mind works, always making connections between seemingly-not-connected points, Dr. Puleo frequently speaks in a "stream of consciousness" style. Discerning readers will nonetheless see some very familiar Truths emerging from his unique perspective and sometimes astonishing anecdotes:

- about the crucial importance of eliminating fear from our lives as a first step toward getting in touch with our Higher Self, and achieving our own direct connection to God as a fundamental matter of personal responsibility;
- about the awesome powers of the mind over the body, and how healing must ultimately occur from the inside out;
- how some very subtle facets of our environment have been purposely engineered, from secret knowledge, to lower our frequency and thus make us more susceptible to mind control and falling out of touch with our direct spiritual connection to Source.
- how getting into and staying in "the flow" of the stream of spirit affords a much higher level of awareness and discernment that makes it hard to be lied to and draws answers to our questions.

As Dr. Puleo beautifully explained the sequence of events at one point in this interview:

"We were given abundance on this planet. We were given abundance of knowledge and so forth, and what happens is, every time you get into a state of fear, or you get misinformation, or you don't check it out for yourself, these are chains that start binding your mind. And your mind controls your body. Sooner or later that body is going to break down. Sooner or later your spirituality is going to surrender itself—not to God, but surrender to what's hanging around you."

You see how interwoven is the science and the spirituality in his analysis? This is a state of left-brain AND right-brain thinking we ALL need to relearn. And it is all based upon frequency—are we maintaining a high-frequency or a low-frequency state of being? While these are not new ideas to longtime SPECTRUM readers, it is always amazing to observe how many different ways these fundamental Truths emerge!

With that in mind, let's now jump right into a roller coaster conversation with Dr. Puleo.

Martin: We talked before about people getting second-hand news. There's a lot of information on the Internet, people tend to be on "information overload" because there is so much out there and it's hard to sift through. What's false and what's the real stuff?

Dr. Puleo: Right.

Martin: At this time we have a transition in government with Bush; there is a transition in progress. What would you say to the average reader out there who's concerned about health, chemtrails, perhaps living in fear over economic issues, energy issues, concerns about general welfare. What positive things can people do, in your way of thinking, to step outside of fear and old modalities of thought and step into higher realms of thought and maintain Protection within that space?

Dr. Puleo: First, when I was talking with Lenny (Dr. Leonard Horowitz), and I read his book Emerging Viruses—AIDS & Ebola: Nature, Accident Or Intentional? and we did our book on the prions, which is pretty scary when you get into it, and vaccinations, genetically modified food, and so on—well, that's fear.

One half of the world's current population should soon be dead according to authoritative projections. Will you, your family, and friends be among the survivors or the deceased?

Dr. Len Horowitz and Dr. Joseph S. Puleo investigate 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge, power, and "healing codes" to humanity. It offers new hope for the loving masses to survive the worldwide plagues, famines, and weather changes that are now at hand. In perfect time for these cataclysmic events, Healing Codes presents an urgent, monumental, and inspired work that will be hailed for generations to come.

I said to Len: "You know, everybody out there is aware that fear sells, because people, naturally, want to read so that they can figure out how to protect themselves. But then no one comes along and says, 'Look, this is where it's broke, and this how we could fix it. This is what is causing this dis-ease; which means you're not 'at-ease', and at-ease is what brings about wellness.'"

So I said, "It's time we should start looking at the broken-down pieces, and start telling people how we can repair those broken-down pieces."

Like I tell everybody, I tell them, "I'm a real lucky doctor, and I'm looking for lucky patients, or clients."

And they say, "What do you mean you're a lucky doctor?"

I say, "Well, if we take luck, L-U-C-K, that means, Learning Under Correct Knowledge, and the Y stands for you." To most people who are in fear and so forth, we have to understand what words mean because they have a resonant effect upon the biological being.

So, L-O-C-K stands for lock, and most people who are in fear are there because they are locked out of the truth of learning under correct knowledge. Lock, l-o-c-k, stands for Lack Of Correct Knowledge.

We can basically say that a lot of our clergy, a lot of our medical, professional people, and a lot of our politicians, are operating under the premise of LOCK, of lack of correct knowledge. So they can only make medical decisions, political decisions, or spiritual decisions based upon the evidence presented forth to us from books, and other sources, from laboratories, and other people's hypothetical stuff.

For example, let's take the "stealth virus". We had a couple of learned doctors who worked on the stealth virus, and I said, "What does this mean? What is the meaning of the word stealth?" It means that you can't find it. Well, if you can't find it, how can you claim it to be a virus?

So now we have fear, because we're going to have a virus we can't find; it's stealth. So, I'm saying to myself, "Whoa, this is crazy. This one 'brilliant' virologist at the time says he was able to clone the stealth virus. How could you clone (or find) a stealth virus? If it's stealth; if you can't find it? This is a little strange. Does this give him grant money? Does it cause more fear?"

So I went ahead to dissect the word "luck", the word "lock", and the word "fear". What causes us fear are things that we hear. The matter, then, that stands between our ears is the computer that we call the brain, that listens to what it was told, and how we were trained to think.

So, we take the word "failure", and people are afraid that their health is going to fail them; that's failure. Or they're not going to be able to feed their families because they're in fear of failing to have a job, failing to have the correct food, failing to have the correct information. So we take the "F" off of the word "failure" and attach it to the word ears, between our ears (our brain), and we have fears. That's basically how simple is the sequence of events.

Len and I, in our first book, were using the words "truth" and "spirituality" and so forth, and how that plays the role of providing a harmonic balance upon the body. If a person learns about water and is going to dive, and they've been in 8-to-10-foot water and they watched somebody dive in it, there's no fear. They see this sign, the water is at that level, so they'll dive in at that height, knowing that somebody else had done it. But if they see somebody diving into 2 feet of water from 20 feet up, and they smash their head and break their neck, now that's fear. So if they see a 2-foot mark and they're 20 feet up, they're not going to dive in it. That's fear from what they have seen, what you knowingly know.

If someone says, "Hey, you have cancer." That's fear. If they say, "One out of every two males is going to get it by the year 2005, or 2003, and one out of every three females." And they say that AIDS is in epidemic form, and so on. Well, this is fear because they don't know what it is, but they know that one out of so many people is going to get it.

So, we do one of two things: we ignore it, put our head in the sand, or we read some more negative things that scare us some more, give us more fear, and then the body, slowly—it doesn't have any empirical evidence—says, "Why should I live? I'm going to die anyway. I might be one out of every three." And that's lack of correct knowledge.

The ancients knew this, so they said, in the Bible, "Always pray for wisdom." Well, what is wisdom?" So, I found the missing books of the Bible in the Apocrypha, taken from the Greek Septuagint, and it stealthily states in the Wisdom of Solomon: "wisdom is learning under correct knowledge"—or truth, that cannot only be proven physically, spiritually, but mathematically, so that you can see for yourself pathogens that can be eradicated from other sources. Or, how is it that people don't get certain diseases? And so, I was able to get in, through a Medscape Program, and I researched around the world, every week, these so-called viruses.

Now, let's take, for instance, when you go to a hospital they always say, "One out of every ten people..." This is from the allopathic set, the mainstream medicine. And they say, "One out of every eight, one out of every ten, depending where you are, is going to get a staff infection that's not curable."

So I said to myself, "Why?" I go to Dr. Becker's book, The Body Electric, and then Dr. Phil Potts, who is an M.D. (both of them are M.D.s) and they were studying the body from an electrical standpoint. They say that all harmful pathogens are, basically, positive magnetically oriented—so they are positively oriented. Then I discovered, through reading some texts from 1889, Viktor Schauberger was curing cancer and other diseases and pathogens simply by constructing water pipes with pure silver baffles, oriented to a stream in Nature, the way that it tumultuates the water, and it ionized the water, and the cells received these healthy ions, which prevented them from being invaded from a pathogen.

So, now, we go and we take a hospital environment today and I asked, "What has changed?"

Years ago, when we didn't have modern technologies, we had very few infections in hospitals. Now people are going in for something minor and coming out with something major.

So I said to myself, "What is the difference?"

What happens is, if you go into an operating room or into other treatment areas of a hospital, and you take a gauss meter, you'll find a heavy influence through magnetic fields, which is not good for the biological person.

We have the hippocampal tissue, and we have the ganglia that runs from the basil ganglia throughout the body. When these pathogens congregate somewhere in the organ or tissue, they form a bar magnet. The ganglia is negatively magnetically oriented. These positive pathogens will attach themselves in that electromagnetic environment, and then they proliferate.

And, of course, if you're going to use antibiotics and they're not resilient to it because

Here are a few things that Jonathan Goldman has to say about this newly released CD:

"THE LOST CHORD is a journey through the Chakras and the Kaballistic Tree of Life. It features sacred mantras, overtones and chants from the Hindu, Tibetan and Hebrew traditions, as well as psycho-acoustic frequencies and sacred ratios. From my perspective, it is the most sacred and powerful recording that I have been involved with (taking over a year and 1,000 hours in the recording studio). Each chakra/sefira features chants to male/female deities from the Hindu and Tibetan traditions, Hebrew chants of the Angelic and God names, Sacred Vowel Sounds, Chanted and Spoken Bijas mantras and intervals related to the Fibonacci Series. Layers and layers of lush choral sonics interweave with each other, creating an astounding combination of sacred sounds from different traditions that manifest as THE LOST CHORD."

THE LOST CHORD is available through Spirit Music at (800) 246-9764. Jonathan Goldman may be reached directly through Healing Sounds, P. O. Box 2240, Boulder, CO 80306. E-mail: soundheals@aol.com Website: www.healingsounds.com.

they've already traded their own electromagnetic fields (they are electromagnetic in nature), so how, then, is an antibiotic or a drug going to affect an electromagnetic problem?

This is where Royal Rife and Tesla and Keely come in. They were making devices in electromagnetic areas that were getting rid of pathogens; they were busting up their capability of proliferating because they need an electron, a positive and a negative, a proton, in order for them to become proliferated.

Now, let's take this back to ancient wisdom: How did they know that, when they built the pyramid of Giza, it was actually in the center of the Earth, and that it was actually facing North in its time? And how did they know that it was on the largest limestone foundation in the world? You know, where did they get their knowledge? How did they know how to navigate by the stars and make these charts?

It's called wisdom. They had ancient wisdom. And wisdom comes from correct knowledge.

Dan Lorimar is a geomancer; he checks for ley lines and magnetic fields and so forth. So, he found out where the ley lines are harmful, and the ley lines are good, and how people get sick at certain ley lines because of the electromagnetic field which disturbs the body's natural one, and its capabilities of protecting itself, electromagnetically.

That's why they invented EEGs, EKGs, and all sorts of MRIs. We know the body is electric, so let's go back to that point. I'm watching the video, and the guy says: "If you take a granite block and you were to cut this block in half, both halves that you just cut into, they would both be positive magnetically oriented."

Then we have masons and stone builders who learned this magic. So I went to find out, what does a positive electromagnetic field do to a person? It enhances growth of pathogens that are harmful to the body. It can disorient you; it can put you into fear; you can get edema; you can swell; and it's endless all the things that could happen to you, including causing the feeling of panic and fear in your mind.

So, now, I'm in the Bible and doing Bible Codes, and it says Jesus went to the temples to talk to the people. He went back to the priest quarters, or he would talk in the courtyards, but he would not go, specifically, into the temples themselves. He knew that they were cutting these stones, because all their temples are made out of granite, then and now.

So they were taking the area where the main mass or body of people would congregate, and they would face these stones inward, creating a positive magnetic field so that they would control the biological person mentally, spiritually, and physically. And in those days, the church was the authority for what you could learn or not learn. It was the authority for health. It was the authority for how you should live in your community.

So they controlled it all. And how could you get control? They knew the mechanics of electromagnetic fields. And that's how they built it. But I am sure if you were to go into the priest quarters or the hierarchy quarters, you will find that the stones are not oriented that way.

I was talking with Robert Ghost Wolf. He had been with Humbutzman, the Mayan elder and chief, who is a mathematician and a wizard, by the way. They were talking about the stones and the rocks and magnetic fields and geomancy. We find that all of these temples ARE on magnetic grid lines, all of them.

What happened is, the Conquistadors, headed by the Church at the time—the Holy Roman Church, or Catholic Church, or Spanish Church—they would go to these sites of these so-called heathens, as they were called, and they would knock down their temples. They were made of granite, as well. And they would rebuild back on the spot, but change the configuration of the structure of their church where the temple used to stand.

One day I was watching a film on PBS on the Nazca Plains, and its showing all these churches that were built over temples. They said they knocked down the temples that they could, that the Aztecs and the Mayans and all of the other ancient indigenous tribes had constructed, and they reconstructed a church over each, using the stone.

So that led me to correct knowledge of knowing how the stone builders knew, and that was the secret of the masons. They knew how to create magnetic fields, in construction, using granite, wood, and block.

The wood was used, basically, as an insulator. That's why you found a lot of wood in temples, etc. So, they knew how they could get an electromagnetic field to be conducive at whatever event they wanted.

And if we go back and we look at our Founding Fathers, many of them were Masons.

[Editor's note: The implication here is that perhaps the secret society chose that name to reflect their knowledge of subtle energy manipulation techniques.]

And we look at the Capitol Building, we look at all our courthouses, and all the churches of Europe—these were built in that same architecture. And they used granite stone.

I don't have all of this as correct knowledge, but I'm sure if you took the time and went to a courthouse, in the judges' chambers, and the other areas, these buildings are designed for control (whether it is the church or the courthouse) of the people, electromagnetically. And they only allowed the people into certain areas. They were not allowed to go into the priests' chambers, and the people are not allowed to go into the judges' chambers.

Then, I was reading an article where they used a pentameter-type of roll in certain seminary colleges, to teach the ministers or priests how to speak, so they would use a full-beat roll, and they could put people in alpha states without knowing it. Then, they go ahead and give the people repetitious prayers with repetitious fears, like "You are not worthy of God" or "You should be a God-fearing man".

One of the apostles in Matthew went up to Jesus and said: "Master, which is the greatest commandment of the Law?" And he said, "Love is the greatest commandment. And the second one, which is likened unto that, is to love your neighbor like yourself, and love thy Lord." And it goes on. I don't want to quote, specifically, because your readers can look it up. And so, based on these two, came all the Law. Ok?

So, if you love God, you wouldn't do anything that would displease God. If you loved your neighbor, you wouldn't steal from him. If you loved your neighbor, you wouldn't kill him. If you loved yourself and your God, you wouldn't even think about doing those things. So we don't need 10 Commandments; Jesus came to clean this up.

If you take the word "love" and put it into a spectro-analysis of a voice, and you tested it with a machine that is set to check the emotion of the physical or biological being, when they hear those words, they feel real good. When you use harsh words—and words are sound or electromagnetic impulses that, again, you hear between the ears—and it depends on what you say. If you say to somebody "I'm going to kill you" and they hear that, well their body is gripped with fear and that's an emotion, and they could become paralyzed, or they could become violent. While if you say to somebody "I love you", that has an effect on the biological person, and they open their arms and they will embrace you. Do you follow that?

Martin: I do.

Dr. Puleo: So, this is where, when I was talking with Dr. Sir Guy Peter Manors, from the United Kingdom, who invited me to speak at the Royal Academy of Science, International University in Vienna this coming year, it is because he developed this program called Symatics (actually, Dr. Hans Jenny did it, and Guy works in connection with him). They were showing how sound can CREATE and DESTROY.

When he saw the Bible Codes, and what I was working on, I was invited to express what I have found in the Bible. They all knew I had uncovered the new codes in Genesis which will help reverse these magnetic fields. And thought is a magnetic field.

People who are afraid to die, are afraid to live, because when you're in fear, you don't see the deer running through the woods, or the ant crawling on a blade of grass. You're not really alive; you're living in fear. And so, this is what happens.

We're talking about a whole bunch of things at one time because the question you asked me was, basically, based on sort-of, spirituality, on people getting ill, and how can we repair it.

They have to understand how something works, how it breaks down, and how it works when it doesn't break down.

And then you trace them like you do root words. So let's find out what the root word is for CANCER. Now, shall I go into that, about cancer?

Martin: Sure.

Dr. Puleo: Alright. I have lost some of my loved ones to cancer. I had a position in the VA. I ran it as a medical administrator, on my tour of duty. It was a psychiatric site, medical, surgical, and psych, and we had a geriatric session and I'm watching people getting sick, dying, getting disoriented, etc. So I go down to Mexico in 1974 with my aunt to Dr. Contreaus' clinic in Playas, Tijuana, and I watched people coming there and, within weeks, most are walking away, going fishing; some died.

The first thing that Dr. Contreaus would ask you is: "Do you believe in God?" He had this big, huge picture of Jesus behind his desk.

I responded to him, "Yes."

He said, "Well, you believe in something; we can go somewhere. We can help you." Because he knew that he would give positive information and treat you, not positive electro-magnetically, but positive information which would create an electromagnetic field within the body to not be able to be penetrated by this disease that is not conducive to the body's normal electromagnetic field.

Well, the words were encouraging, so we had hope down there. You see?

Cancer was not a fear word for us down there, and we had hope to live, not to die. And that started the process reversing itself.

Now, this Dr. Kelly, who is a dentist and an oral surgeon—he had two weeks to live and he had cancer. And so, he started his own research.

By the way, he didn't die in two weeks and, also, he no longer has cancer. So, he boldly states, in his research, that cancer is a misnomer, and that malignancy does not mean that you have cancer. It simply means that you have a malignancy, period, that's all that it is.

And so, I go on to find out in my research around enzymes and what he did. I've been researching enzymes for about the last 3 to 5 years, directly and indirectly. And so he started using pancreatic enzyme and the malignancies started disappearing—tumors, malignancies, they were gone. And, if you read my book, my wife had melanoma cancer and they cut one out, and there were two more, and they gave her 4½ months to live. This is 5 years later now, and magically they're gone.

They did the biopsy, they did all the whole thing, cut it deep, had the blood work and so forth, and said, "Well, we're going to have to take out your lymph. But it's never proven to work; it's a procedure we do."

So I said to the surgeon, "Excuse me, watch my lips: You're not touching my wife. We're taking her home, and your options are not really

A Biblical Example
Prelude To The Riddle

Then went Samson down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, and came to the vineyards of Timnath: and, behold, a young lion roared against him.

And the spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

And he went down, and talked with the woman; and she pleased Samson well.

And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aside to see the carcass of the lion: and, behold, there was a swarm of bees and honey in the carcass of the lion.

And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, and came to his father and mother, and he gave them, and they did eat: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcass of the lion.

KING JAMES VERSION FROM THE BOOK OF JUDGES

10 So his father went down unto the woman: and Samson made there a feast; for so used

11 And it came to pass, when they saw him, that they brought thirty companions to be with him.

12 And Samson said unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you: if ye can certainly declare it me within the seven days of the feast, and find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets and thirty change of garments:

13 But if ye cannot declare it me, then shall ye give me thirty sheets and thirty change of garments. And they said unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he said unto them, Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. And they could not in three days expound the riddle.

15 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that they said unto Samson's wife, Entice thy husband, that he may declare unto us the riddle, lest we burn thee and thy father's house with fire: have ye called us to take that we have? Is it not so?

16 And Samson's wife wept before him, and said, Thou dost but hate me, and lovest me not: thou hast put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and hast not told it me. And he said unto her, Behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother, and shall I tell it thee?

17 And she wept before him the seven days, while their feast lasted: and it came to pass on the seventh day, that he told her, because she lay sore upon him: and she told the riddle to the children of her people.

18 And the men of the city said unto him on the seventh day before the Sun went down, What is sweeter than honey? And what is stronger than a lion? And he said unto them, If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

When this appeared on my computer while I was searching for something else, there was some force that would not allow the program to exit until I printed it up. I did not address this excerpt from the Bible at the time. I placed it aside for some future date, until it always seemed to be on my desk or in my way. So, finally, on a given day that it would not go away, I decided to address it.

My wife had me come in the living room to take a break and watch a movie with her since she knew that I had been working on this riddle for weeks and with no avail. The movie we were watching was Sneakers with Robert Redford. It was about numbers and codes, and whoever had control of all the banking and numbers controlled the world. Well about half way through the movie, I received the ringing in my ears that Jeshua usually sends me for a lesson or some discovery. This time I went to my office and was led to my King James Bible, 1939, with the Apocrypha. I took the Bible down from the shelf and opened it up at random, and it was in The Wisdom of Solomon, Chapter 9, verses 7, 8, and 9, with the word "she" meaning "wisdom": She can forecast the future. She knows the tricks of language. And she "answers" all "riddles".

What is sweeter than honey? Why of course "wisdom", for if you were wise and knew of the honey bee, you would know that if you collected the sweet nectar, when the Sun goes down and it is cold, the bees will not sting, they are incapacitated. And the sweetest honey is that when you are not stung!

And what is stronger than a lion? Again, of course, wisdom, for if you were wise and knew the habits of the lion, you could overfeed it, you could dig a pit and lure it in, or you could net it with some friends or plainly kill the lion.

And he said unto them, "If ye had not plowed with my heifer, Ye had not found out my riddle."

This one kind of stumped me, since I know nothing about plowing, so I called a farmer friend of mine, in his 70s, and he used to plow with a horse and harness. I repeated the above sentence and he said to me, "Son if you had any brains, meaning wisdom, you would not plow with a heifer, it is a milk cow, and furthermore, they by nature just won't plow or even go in a straight line if you could get it to move."

There, now I had my answers to a riddle that is thousands of years old. Prior to what is stated above, I did try to find it out by calling seminaries and other theological colleges and other pastoral places, and no one, I repeat no one from the sources I just mentioned, either did not know of the riddle, or gave some off-the-wall assumed answer.

The nature of this exercise in faith has led me to answer a riddle in the Old Testament, over four thousand years old, to bring to light and life in the twenty-first century.

Always in God's Love,

The Reverend Dr. Joseph S. Puleo, ND, PhD, ThD great, so we're not going to pay you to dismember her."

A lymph, you know, is kind of your sewer system, and it has other things that it does. To this point, I hadn't studied that but I was getting points of reference. Points of reference are why I'm talking so long and this is so lengthy, to bring this train of thought into fruition, because when I talk to people, or tell them my findings, it's like I'm talking Greek to them because they don't have the point of reference that brought me to my conclusion in evidence that I have been trying to present to other physicians.

Most of the people who come here are other MDs, surgeons, naturopaths, or health practitioners. They come here and say, if they're not well, how can they treat their patients? And they come here for correct knowledge, which is wisdom. And that's why we talk of the Age of Wisdom.

Now, let's go further with this.

So, I get some medical findings from Japan. I signed-up for "Infectious Diseases Around The World" through MedScape, and every Sunday night through Monday morning I receive information. They tell me things from various medical universities, clinics, colleges, hospitals, in the allopathic field, and they're findings lead you to conclusions of what a cause was or wasn't.

We'll jump away from Dr. Kelly for a minute when he says that you won't get scared if somebody says: "Look, you have a malignancy, but it's not cancer." You wouldn't be half as afraid, would you? So that's why we have arrived in cancer, because we're calling other conditions cancer.

Now, all of a sudden I find out that all of these people who have cancers, AIDS, and other things, have a lot of things in common. One, low fluctuating body temperature, and they have candidiasis. All of them have that in common.

So I'm saying, "Wow, so what does it do?" Well, it causes disorientation, it causes you to have carpal-tunnel, aches in the joints, weight loss, first bloating and then weight losses. And I'm saying, "These are all symptoms of candidiasis."

Another thing they would have, if one cannot uptake protein, then the body starts consuming itself. Now, that's cancer. If your body is eating itself, I would call that cancer. But I would not call all the other conditions cancer.

Now, this information that I'm putting together, like a big puzzle, comes from mainstream medicine and some very brilliant colleagues. But nobody ever looks at the other guy's work, because they're all fighting for grants. You see? This guy isn't going to read because he's too high on the food chain: "I will not lower myself to read this report from Japan, from some little Japanese doctor who's not even known in Japan; but he wrote a report."

So I read the report, and guess what the report said? It said that they had a cancer patient. This is, now, from them, MedScape. It's coming through mainstream medicine and they tell me their findings, and they give me all their references and the lab reports and everything, so it's not just the story I'm reading. Alright? So he says they called the United States because this Japanese citizen had cancer, but they happen to be a little more thorough there. So they check his colon, and they check everything in the blood and the tissues and so forth, and they get a report, and someone sent these Japanese protocol for chemotherapy. After they gave him the chemotherapy, they followed Sloan Kettering's procedure, and shortly thereafter the patient died.

So they figured, "Well, he had cancer. Well, he died, you know. Well, he could have died from the chemo, and all of that."

So, what was it? It appeared that he had malnutrition. So they went and did an autopsy and they found out the same colon that they had tested previously, before this treatment, was fairly normal, and then they have a disease called nutrienpenia.

So I said, "What's nutrienpenia?"

And they said, "It's the thickening of the colon wall."

Now, what does the colon do? Well, it appears to me that it's not only a part of the sewer system. As the nutrients are digested, starting out with the liver (and almost all these people have liver problems, too), and then the food goes into small intestine, descending colon, then the bile juice and something there from the gall bladder, and digestion takes place. So when it gets down to a section of the colon and it's liquefied, it's absorbed through the colon into the body. That's how we get nutrition.

And the blood goes to the lungs and gets rid of waste that way, and the kidneys expel it through there, and then the liver produces enzymes and T-cells and so forth. But if these colon walls are thick, the nutrients can't get through. So you think the body has to start eating itself? I would say so.

So now, they give these chemical cocktails to HIV patients, and I was reading a report. One of them was taking a full load of medication, which is chemotherapy, and by the way they just had a story on 60 Minutes about HIV and AIDS; some say it's real, some say it's not. I won't make a comment on that; I'm only exposing the truth of what I've found through learned colleagues and friends of mine. That's what research is about, learning under correct knowledge.

All of a sudden, when they give them all these cocktails—and the guy was an HIV patient on TV, and he did an interview on 60 Minutes and he said he's been fighting this. See, the viral load goes down, but the T-cells also go down.

The viral load goes down, I'm assuming, because with the chemotherapy and a thing called nutrienpenia, the thickening of the colon walls, not only can't the virus get through, I'm talking in lay terms, it could be refined or defined later by any medical authority. However, if the virus can't get through, neither can the nutrients.

Martin: Catch-22.

Dr. Puleo: That's right, it's a Catch-22. So there was an experiment done—I can't divulge who did it and how it came about, but it's good enough to talk about because if somebody wants to pick up the rod and the cane and stick and go forward with this, they can. The patient cut back on the medication; they wouldn't take it anyhow because, for some reason, they didn't want to; I just heard the story from this person.

What happened is, the viral load went up, but not dangerously, but the T-cells started up. The attending physician said, "Well, I'm a little concerned (out of Seattle) because your viral load went up." There are strange things happening though, the T-cells are going up, too. So, perhaps there's a point that the viral load did not go up that badly but the T-cells had doubled themselves, and if that continued, pretty soon there would be no virus in there because the T-cells would take over. Right?

So, the other guy is still taking his chemotherapy cocktail; viral load is down, so are the T-cells. He's subjected to pneumonia and other diseases because he doesn't have an immune system. When it reaches a certain level, that's when they call it AIDS, from HIV. So, HIV people, are they getting AIDS, auto-immune deficiency? It's not a bug; they just said it's an auto-immune deficiency. Are they getting that because the colon wall is thickening from the chemical cocktail? Or, is there something stealth inside that's doing this? Right? So, here we go. If you had this knowledge, would you be in fear? If you have this correct knowledge, would you be in fear? I wouldn't be in fear.

Martin: Well, no, and especially not if you knew how to boost the body electric.

Dr. Puleo: Right.

Martin: So let's talk about that.

Dr. Puleo: Now we're going to talk about that, ok? This is terrific, because I get another article, and I have this stuff laying around 5 or 6 years, and then all of a sudden when Jesus or Jeshua wants me to find out, a book will fall off the shelf. I'm getting something else, and then all of a sudden this book falls off the shelf. I may be in a totally different area, but I'm also working on this research that I just recently read.

And the book says: "How to reverse immune disfunction: A nutritional manual for HIV/Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/Candida and other immune-related conditions". And we have here: J. M. Nielson, REN, MS, the Healing Center of San Francisco; Dr. Robert Carson, M.D. Tampa, Florida; Alan Cantwell, Jr., M.D., Los Angeles, California. And then in the back of the book they sure have a lot of bibliography, and I'm saying, "Well, maybe these people know what they're doing here."

In the book by Mark Connely, it says "The AIDS Puzzle Solved". Well, that's all it is, a puzzle. You have to find out how the body breaks down, how it works, and how you bypass all this stuff. It's really very simple. It's not very lucrative, but it's very simple. In the process of reading it, it says that what they found out in these immune deficient people—now, cancer is immune deficiency, so is AIDS—and they found out that the NK, natural killer cells, they find out that they are disoriented.

And I said, “Well, how can something get disoriented?”

Well, I was reading Dr. Philpot's work. He said that they had placed these bar magnets over the forehead of the subjects they tested, and behind the prefrontal lobe of the major sinus cavity. In front of the pineal gland sits a fissure called the hippocampal, and it's negatively oriented to magnetic north. And that's what keeps us healthy in high-negative ionization in the body. So then it says that the bar magnet was placed for approximately 15 minutes and then they took it off; the person was disoriented for a few hours.

Now, if a bunch of positive pathogens get up your nose and inhaled and proliferated—and that's what I found out in my study when I was working with Will Thomas on research of the chemtrails—that the pathogens that were in there had magnetite in them, and this was microscopic magnetite, micro-micro, and it was in the pathogen. So, naturally, it would be attracted to the magnetic field of the hippocampal tissue, and they said the strange thing about these bugs of magnetite is that they form a bar magnet.

So what does everybody have in common with Mad Cow Disease, Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, carpal tunnel, and chronic fatigue? They have disorientation, and a sinus infection, but nobody decides to look there, do they?

What happens is, the pathogens they found that were in the nasal cavity and up in the sinus cavities, they had a thing called magnetite, and who found this out was an M.D., Dr. Becker, right? He wrote the book, The Body Electric, he's an M.D. and he says “Hey, this is strange.” And they have to use a certain type of a microscope and a procedure to detect this. They did, and he said the funny thing was, when they congregated these pathogens or magnetites in the prefrontal lobe, they formed a bar magnet.

Now, where do we find out what happens if you put a bar magnet of 0.001 gauss, which is very minute, over a person's forehead for 15 minutes, and they're disoriented for a couple of hours? Well, if these bugs are up there proliferating, and they—he says, they—form a bar magnet—and I have the clinical evidence from the universities, from the laboratories stating that these bugs form a bar magnet. And they all face magnetic north when they had a culture in a petri dish. Now, I have their documents and all the bibliography on that from mainstream medicine.

So, if they're doing that in a petri dish and in a laboratory, in vitro, then what's happening when it gets into a human subject, and it's up there, and a lot of these people claim moderate to slight to severe memory loss during these strange diseases that they have? And they're cold, and they're fluctuating.

And so that's what led me back to the prion disease since a couple of brilliant virologists, world-renowned, from the United States, who have a lot of credentials, and they can't find the “stealth” virus but they can find the prion!?!

What is a prion? The guy in 1967, Pressor, got a Nobel Prize for a prion that's a protein that's developed from a fungi, that's fungus-oriented. That's what we're talking about now. We're having a lot of fungal infections all over the world. And so, what happens is, it's hexagonal and it's crystalline in nature. And we go to granite, which is hexagonal and is crystalline in nature.

And now, we go back to the granite blocks—orientation of the stones, orientation of the bugs, orientation of the body. So what happens is, when the person finally dies from Mad Cow, or prion disease, or Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, they cut them open and they find spongiform encephalopathy. And that means there are little holes burrowed all over in the brain, but then they go to test the tissue, and they can't find the bug.

Well, perhaps it's not a bug. Perhaps this prion, which is crystal-oriented—like a crystal radio, and the same thing in a computer—this thing gets over-charged because of the pathogen in the hippocampal, and when it discharges, would it not cause a hole in the brain? And would it not be the holes that are spongiform, but you couldn't find the pathogen? And they're microscopically discharging. And if enough of them keep hammering, you have holes in the brain, don't you? But nobody wants to look at it that way. But all the other evidence is there to say that it appears to be an electrical discharge of a crystal form of a prion.

Now we come back to other pathogens that are in the body, perhaps having magnetite, and coming forward with this to find out more about cancer. I wasn't really looking for cancer, by the way, or a cure for it; there are enough people out there doing it.

I'm out to get correct knowledge, and to erase fear with correct knowledge so people can do things. They don't have to worry, besides not taking vaccinations and eating genetically modified food and red dye and all of this, because all these chemicals change the electrolytes in the body. So there is something there we have to be aware of as well.

I came across a video I've had for about 2 years on “micro-hydrant water” by Pat Flannigan. They're saying that the Hunzas in the mountains somewhere live to be 180-200 years old, and they had babies when they're 80-90-100, and they walk up and down the mountain, they don't get sick, they don't have heart trouble. Dr. Wallach, a while back, thought it was the minerals that they found in the water. So they were saying colloidal minerals, that's the key, and so forth. Well, that was part of it. But they noticed that this water had certain electromagnetic properties.

So, finally, it goes on to show in this video that, in 1911, in France, there was a doctor who was in charge of the purity of water, and he went to this specific town because he liked it. Very few people died there and people who were sick went there, and all of a sudden their disease left. And as the population of the town grew, the death rate went down.

And he said “How can this be?” All of the towns adjoining (in France) outside of that area, as the towns grew in population, the death rate rose, over and above this. So they tested the water, and he developed a device to test the negative hydrogen, or ions, or absorption, or surface tension, when everybody else was going out and looking at pH. Ok?

The body's salinity, not from table salt, not from sodium chloride, but from real salt, salinity, if you test the blood of the person for the amount of colloidal minerals and the salinity, and so forth, and the blood platelets, and the oxygen, it used to equal that of the ocean. That was when the oceans were healthy. And the blood tasted salty when you get a cut; if you sucked on the wound, it would taste salty. And they said that the salinity of the oceans and of the human body, when both were healthy, years back, were the same.

So now the oceans are sick, the fish are sick, we have pfectria piscidius, we have Mad Cow Disease in humans, we have Mad Deer Disease, and so on.

In the book I did with Len Horowitz, I was tracing the grain that was rejected for sale because it had mold and fungus in it, and it was mixed with other grains and sent out as animal fodder. And especially when it went to the equestrian areas in the Carolinas where the hog farms were.

Mainstream knowledge said the hogs got into the estuaries and wastes went downstream. And you have pfectria piscidius, which was eating holes in the brain, and fish were dying and rotting and so forth. So all you've got to do is ask what the heck you fed the hogs, and go backwards, and you find the mixing-in of grains, the wheat and stuff that we're eating. You see?

So, somehow, they developed some kind of monster. In areas of California and Arizona, where Dr. W. John Martin was doing some research on the so-called Valley Fever, the symptoms were similar to the symptoms of the lung infections, viral infections and so forth, involving the breathing-in of contaminants. And they found a wheat fungus down there; it was on the rice and on the wheat, and it seemed that just in those valleys these people were getting it.

That's when they cloned the phrase “stealth virus”. So, it's got to come from somewhere. You can't tell me that it's a bug that you can't see that burrows holes in your brain. I can't quite buy that, even if I didn't have any knowledge of medicine at all.

Now, back to the water and back to cancer, and back to knowledge and wisdom. Years ago, there was a guy named Wayne Rolland, who developed Wayne's Water. He used an ionization in a silver charge, colloidal silver, and was healing burns, wounds, pathogens.

There was something like psuedomonas aeruginosa a lady had in her spine, and antibiotics wouldn't touch it. She drank Wayne's Water with colloidal silver, and it was healed. But then he got in trouble with the authorities for making some claims, or somebody did. You know how it goes. He couldn't prove it, but there she was, wearing a body cast and a deteriorating spine, and then she just drank a sip of water. She always told me the secret's in the water.

Now, let's go back to 1911, what does this guy find? He found negative hydrogen particles in there. Dr. Gincola, from Tuscany, Italy, from the University of Tuscany, went and took all the curative waters from around the world—from Lourdes, France, and all those places. He found they all had something in common: they were all near silver mines, and there was also calcium carbonate or limestone, and this water ran over it.

Well, we know that limestone will collect certain frequencies of UV light. And we know that UV light will kill pathogens. And we know that colloidal silver will put an extra negative-hydrogen charge in the water, and so that's what was discovered in 1911, and actually in 1889, by Victor Schauburger.

So here's Patrick Flannigan trying to sell his product, called Micro-Hydrant Clusters, that creates this charge. He's showing a picture of cancer cells or malignancies.

So they noticed, when they used this micro or hydro technique for water, with this extra ion of hydrogen, negative ion, the surface tension was low and would be absorbed into the body and these cancer cells. They didn't just disappear; something didn't eat them. They became alive again and went on their journey. You see? That's the only conclusion you could draw from all of this. So, that's correct knowledge. The body knows what to do with this stuff after you put it in it.

Ironically, he says that if you put chlorine or fluoride in the water, it will steal this negative hydrogen ion that is used to correct the body's malignancies or diseasements or whatever. And so, the tissue around the cells in solution is either toxic, and you have edema and they give you water pills, or it is good clean water.

But the funny part about it, he was showing pH and rH on his screen. And I was experimenting with some water that I sent to a lab, and the guy said the surface tension is lower than anything that he's ever seen or tested. So now we go back to Flannigan and the Micro-Hydrant Water that he developed, and he said if you put chlorine or fluoride in it, it automatically discharges that ion. So you're drinking "dead" water.

They take the rH, they call it, or negative hydrogen ion, and its surface tension was so minute that it's absorbed. That tells you how pathogens are absorbed into the cell or tissue.

And so he says if you drank a glass of water at 22 rH factor, it's equivalent of drinking 1-5 gallons of the hard water, so to speak, that doesn't have this negative ionization. And just that knowledge alone—you've got to start thinking.

So, what are we doing when we're drinking chlorinated and fluorinated water? We get fluoride in our toothpaste and in our water. Patrick Flannigan says don't even use fluoride toothpaste, that amount of fluoride. So, I discovered in England that Colgate had several lawsuits because a child swallowed the size of a pea of fluoride toothpaste at 5 years old, and died from it. Now they've outlawed it, and they have warnings.

So, if you look at your toothpaste, the early ones have skull & crossbones, but the later ones coming out now have a warning, very small, but you can find that most toothpaste has fluoride in it. And it says a warning not to ingest a certain amount, especially children, and they give you the toll-free number of the Poison Control Center. That's on your tooth-paste! You're better off giving your kid a cigar, instead of brushing his teeth at night—you know what I mean?

Martin: I'm going to stop you here for a moment. I'm the average person out there, and the Bible is something that I read to feel closer to God and Spirit, and the language of the Bible as you are talking about it—how do I want to word this? There is a great field of thought that says, God, in essence, is simplicity. And that only man tends to complicate things.

Dr. Puleo: Correct.

Martin: The coding of the Bible would almost seem to be some other type of agenda coming into play.

Dr. Puleo: Oh, good. I can straighten that out.

Martin: How is the common man to unravel this complex coding? Is it at a soul level? Is it an imprinting, on the soul level?

Dr. Puleo: Yes. What happened is, it all started with a clock. I'm working here in research, in clinical, to try to find out why people become dis-eased. And that's because they are not at ease. Dis-ease means you're not at ease.

I know that God is greater than anything, than any medicine or anything we could invent, and Jesus went around healing people—and what was the secret?

I found the original clock, called the Mosaic Clock, in an ancient text. They had a clock before Christ's time, and they used it during Christ's time. It's in my book, and I show an example of it where 6 is at the top, where 12 would be, and then it would go to the right, with 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 on the bottom, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 would remain on the top. Constantine changed a perfectly good clock.

So when I was spiritually guided to this, and looking at these mathematical tables and doing the long-hand mathematics, what happened is, I was able to tap into what I call a higher matrix of thought, or ascended thought.

What happened now, by doing the numbers, the thoughts started to increase and I was tapping the soul. You were created by God, holy and perfect and not damaged or anything. And the soul is your aura around you, and the soul resides in your body. So we go: body, mind, and spirit. The soul is the spirit part of the three concepts of you. You are a spiritual being having a human experience. And we always focus in on the physical. We never really focus in on the spiritual, but we do when we start thinking we're a human being looking for spirituality, and some of us just find more concepts. But, when you know that you're a spiritual being having a human experience, you surrender.

When Jesus said, "You have to surrender the flesh", what he meant is you have to surrender the brain to your soul. The soul is encoded with all the mathematics because everything in Nature is patterned on the spiral and the golden triangles. And everything we see in Nature and structure, in life, in RNA and DNA, everything—is mathematics, and everything is electrical.

And so, in my question, why did they change a perfectly good clock to the Roman Clock from the Mosaic Clock, Jeshua appears before me in my mind's eye, and he says, "Well, when you ask, you will receive."

But you see, I had to do these mathematical exercises to exercise my left and right brain, and I didn't understand what that meant. Earlier I told you, in the columns of numbers, when I talked to Dr. Peter, he thought it was right eye, left eye; later we found out that it was right brain, left brain.

Manly P. Hall said that they used the even numbers. When I read this statement, first, out of his book—what Pythagoras did—and the even numbers were doing something to the brain, visually, to the hypothalamus. That's where it converts to light, and things you see, and geometry and so forth, and interprets it into the body, into numerics that the body can understand, from the spirit.

So, I asked a friend of mine, he's a scientist, if he had a machine to detect brain activities. He said "Yes."

I took a Roman Clock and I set it to 3:00. I picked that at random, and I asked the person who was helping me with the experiment, "What time is this?" And there's always right-brain activity, but when that person had to think to tell me that it was 3:00, the left side of the brain showed an increase in electronic impulses, which is the though impulses coming from the left brain. So I set the clock to 3:15, and the same reaction happened, and 3:30.

Then, I set the new-face clock that I made to equal the old Mosaic Clock, with the numbers changed, and I set it for 3 o' clock. And I told them how to read it: "When the little hand is on the 3, and the big hand is on the 12, it's 3 o' clock." And when it gets onto the 3, it's 15 after, right? And what happened here was, the left brain lit up, then the right brain equaled the activity of the left brain, and then it integrated.

So, by changing the clock, we would turn off, or turn down, right-brain activity. And now, we remain in conceptual thought rather than into a higher matrix of thought. By doing these mathematical exercises that I was led to, I was able to stimulate my left and right brain to integrate them.

In other words, in lay terms, if you want to have an AM radio station, you need an AM tuner. If you would like to have an FM radio station, you need an FM tuner to hear it. And if you want to tune into Creation, or a higher matrix of thought, you need a “God tuner”, right? Like, 1-800-GOD.

Well, the only way to achieve a higher matrix of thought is if you have your left and right brain vibrating and synchronizing to enable you to reach that higher matrix of thought. Well, that’s the same thing that God created. Telepathy was the first modality of thought. And thought is faster than the speed of light.

So God, when He created everything, He had to think, first: “Let there be light.” And then He spoke it, and then it appeared.

And when Jesus says: “You can do all I can do, and more” he was telling us that if we are created in God’s image, we have this ability as well. But what are the chains that are binding us? It’s very simple.

The ancients who were not aligned with God, who didn’t want to follow Him anymore, found a way to turn us off. So now they made it law.

We went from a lunar calendar, with 28 some odd days per month, which equals the menstruation cycle of a woman, and we had a 13-month calendar. Let’s go back to numbers to see how they could trick you to stay in density, or how they could raise your vibrations.

If you were taught in school (and you take a simple pen and answer these questions): There are how many days in a year? (365) And how many weeks in a year? (52) And how many days are in a week? (7)

Ok, would you multiply 7 x 52, please? (364) So, you have 52 weeks in a year, 7 days in a week, and you have 364. How did you get 365 days in a year? So, right there is a lie, mathematically. So you believed that first lie. This was designed to help the bankers, because they get an extra day every year to charge you interest.

Now, take 28 days of the lunar cycle, and the original calendar had 13 months. Multiply 13 x 28. (364) That’s right, you see? Now, let’s go back to the clock. Why are alphanumerics so important? Why are cracking these codes so important? Because we’re trying to regain your original “tuner”, because when you are in the ways of God and tuned-in, no one can deceive you, lie to you, or anything, and you will no longer be in distrust or dis-ease; you’ll be at ease.

Now, I call up a friend of mine, Dr. Dora Lofstrom, down in San Diego. She has a wellness and healing clinic, and she worked with Hanna Krueger in the past. She came up here and heard about my work with the Bible codes, and wanted to work with me because she’s also a naturopath, and this was exciting for her.

I was showing her the clock and talking about it. She had a little bit of dyslexia. As she was looking at the clock she said: “You know, I watch the clock, and it seems to clear my brain up.”

So I made her some clocks to take back with her, after I showed her about the Bible codes. When I work these mathematical equations taken out of the Bible, people seem to have a clarity, various doctors and scientists who were coming here. And then they get a glimpse of that higher matrix of thought.

So, one day Dr. Lofstrom calls me up and says, “I have a couple of patients who have come to me with some neurosis or psychosis. I gave them your clock and told them to play with it for the hour or whatever it was.”

And she said, “You know, it’s reversing their psychosis. They’re becoming clearer, or these thoughts are leaving them, or other things are happening. Would you make a dozen more and send them to me?”

I said, “Yeah, I’ll make them up.” I go to K-Mart and I make up the faces on my computer. I pop the dials off, put the new faces on, send them to her. And I start using it here throughout my whole office.

One day, when I’m sitting in my office, Jeshua comes to me and he says, “Tell your friends, your colleagues, that they’re out of time. You’re out of time.”

So I panicked. Oh, my God. I get these visualizations, and I’m saying, “My goodness, what’s going on here?”

In the interim time, my wife Linda, now—her husband died years ago, and I helping to raise her children. Her son became of age and got his own house. His dad had brought back a cuckoo clock from Germany but it wasn’t working right. I said to Linda, “I think now we should unpack it and give it to your son, as a memento from his dad. We’ll hang it in his house.”

“Well, it’s broke” she said. “We’ll have to take it in and fix it.” So, there’s a clock maker in town who retired and he’s world famous and had clocks from George Washington’s house, collected them, and from all of the different Founding Fathers.

And so we took the clock over to his house and we said, “This just doesn’t work. Would you fix it?”

And he said, “Fine. I’m retired, but I’ll do this as a favor.”

So it took about a month to fix the clock. He calls us up and there’s a big storm going on. “I’m going out of town and I won’t be back for months; you have to get it today,” We wanted to give the son his clock as a house warming.

So we drove through this storm to get there and I’m badly irritated. We get there and he says: “You have about an hour while I time the clock.”

And I said, “Are you crazy? I’ve waited a month. There’s the worst storm going on in the history of the panhandle (of Idaho), and you’re asking me if I can stay here while you time the clock?”

And he said, “Well, it’s important. I couldn’t time it until you got here.” So he takes us downstairs. We’re in a room about 12 feet x 12 feet. He’s got all of these pendulum clocks hanging all over the wall, and in the center of one wall was a HUGE grandfather clock from around the 1800s. He said it is the most accurate timepiece on the planet.

And I said “So.”

And so he takes our clock, takes one down next to the grandfather clock, and hangs our clock up. He pulls the weights and starts the pendulum. But in the interim, though, can you imagine, wall-to-wall clocks—I mean, packed! All of the clocks are going “tick tock, tick tock”? It was so loud, standing there, that it would go through your head.

Well, what he did was, he went around (except for the grand-daddy clock) and he knocked all of the pendulums off, out of whack. And it was going tick tock tock, tick tick tock, tick tick tick, and you had to get out of the room.

Roman Versus Mosaic Time Clocks

BACKWARDS ROMAN CLOCK

Venetians and Germans, both under Roman influence, developed the modern clock. According to authorities and Roman Catholic Church archives, the first hour of the day began at what we now call 6 o’clock in the evening—directly opposite to the original time clock as described in the Bible. This was likely done to spiritually disorient and disempower people.

STANDARD MOSAIC TIME CLOCK

For many thousands of years people began their days in the evening, according to Genesis 1:5 and John 11:9. Theoretically, by reverting back to God’s way of keeping time, left and right brain function will improve as will people’s spiritual receptivity. This thesis was additionally supported by the number codes discovered in the Bible.

— From: Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse

So we went upstairs, his wife made us a cup of coffee, and he looked at the watch on his wrist, and he said, “Ok, an hour is up.” We went back downstairs, alright? And all of the clocks were in perfect time to the grandfather clock, the big one.

And I said, “How could this be?”
He said, “The vibrations or the mathematics and the matrix of it, this grandfather clock will actually tune the other clocks to itself, vibrationally, vibrationally.”

Martin: That’s incredible!

Dr. Puleo: So I get back to my office, and I sat there and I said, “That’s what Jeshua meant. We’re out of time. We’re going tock tick, instead of tick tock.” So we are beating the drum to the dominant clock.

Is that God? Or is that the ways of man? If you turn off the right brain by changing the clock, you’ve changed the calendar from 13 months to 12, you changed the work days and the work week, etc., and we’re “out of” time. Get it? We’re out of time! We’re going right-left, instead of left-right. So if we were following the dominant clock, from God, and we’re mathematically and vibrationally in tune, we would be at ease, and we could be in a higher matrix of thought, and no one could trick us. And we would not be dis-eased; we would be at ease.

Who is the dominant clock here? Constantine or Emperors or Mother Churches, and all of those. I’m not saying that all churches are bad; I’m not against that at all. But they had the knowledge, the mathematics to the arts.

And so, now we go into colors.
Colors are vibration. So I’m reading Dinshah P. Ghadlai, M.S.P.’s work, and in there we’re taking light, or color, as the visual vibratory rate of sound, and visa versa.

And so, Babbit followed the way of the early Church, using the primary colors. They said the primary colors would trick the mind. And so, they said that red, yellow, and blue were the primary colors, according to Babbit, and according to the Church. And Dinshah took a red slide, a yellow slide, and a blue slide, put each one in three separate machines, and focused them onto a white screen, and it came out to a ruddy brown. He said that if you take red, green, basement, their archives in the place. He says he can’t talk about it, because he was threatened by the Church. But he says that what you will find will amaze you.

And in the book it said, the first hour of the church, or the first day, starts at 6:00 p.m. So if you look at the Mosaic clock, the 6 is on top, and that clock follows the zodiac movement, completely. And then, every hour they had what they call the Office of the Church.

So, at 6 p.m. they would chant in this one church, on this one gridline, on the marble stones, this certain chant. And then, at 7:00, the next church down the line, would do it. And then this church that started out would do a second chant at 7:00 p.m., or what they call the Office of the Church, or their sound, or their incantation.

And they did this 24 hours a day. And then I find out that all of the churches that were built at that time are on Earth magnetic gridlines—the big cathedrals, etc. And most of them were built with marble and granite. And granite has electrical crystals in it, and they’re hexagonal—we’re back to “6” again.

So, a while back, I get a video tape that was sent to me by Dan Lorimar, who maps out the Earth’s magnetic gridlines and fields, and he said there’s a strange thing. When you take a granite block, and you cut it in half, both halves, on each side, are positive. If you break a bone, both halves of the bone are positive—and either the body does it, or they have to rebreak it, electromagnetically, to get one side oriented to negative, so that it will attract rather than repel—that’s one bone.

But on block, if you face those blocks, when you build them, inward, in a church, you have a positive electromagnetic field. And that brings us to William H. Philpot, M.D., who wrote a book, Biomagnetic Handbook For Healing. And in that book it says about the effect of positive magnetic field energy that positive magnetic fields will allow pathogens to grow. I’m looking for the page here so I can read it to you.

Here it says: “Positive magnetic field energy will decrease cellular oxygen, push fluids and gases; it increases intercellular edema, stimulates wakefulness, accelerates micro-organism growth, inhibits biological healing; it can increase inflammation; it causes acidic metabolic response, increases pain, addicting; it can intensify symptoms; promotes mental overactivity and unreasonableness, promotes dull, depressed effect, and it encourages fatty depositing.” And on and on and on.

So, now, here is where we are going. This will lead to why I’m working on breaking the Genesis code, because Genesis means “the beginning”, right? You have to focus on the biological being if you can control it, right? Control its thoughts, its emotions, and its feelings.

To review: We changed the calendar; we changed the clock; we changed the colors. So now, along comes stained-glass windows, right? And with stained-glass windows, if you allow Columns show the numbers resulting from multiples of three, six, and nine using the Pythagorean skein. Notice the resulting single digit numbers repeat, forming patterns such as “3, 9, and 6” for the 6 column. Multiples of nine, the highest integer in the Pythagorean skein, consistently produce a “9” as does the addition of numbers associated with the forward and backward letters of the English alphabet. Multiples of four, five, and seven produce no readily observable pattern aside from their integral sums that total nine.

certain light frequencies in, that has a detrimental effect on the biological being.

When Dinshah came out with that book on effects in the '30s and '40s, they did like they did with Rife—they got court injunctions; they called him a quack; they stopped it. But his son, Darius, who is alive today and doing well with the work, sent me copies of his father's original encyclopedias and the spectrum slides, and so forth, that are correct, and what they could do to release the proper ionization in the body.

When Jesus said "Do not build temples in mine or my Father's name", he did that DELIBERATELY. He knew that when they built these places, they'd cut stones in half and face them inward, and it had an adverse effect on you. It made you dull; it induced you into fear, guilt, and lethargy, and fat, sick, etc.

So now you have the Masons, the secret society of builders. By the Spanish Inquisition they already knew about star charts and so forth, so whenever they got to the Mayans, and the temples at the sacred sites that they could find, they knew the secrets of the stone. They would knock down these temples, because they knew which was the positive magnetic end of the stone, and they would use the granite and rebuilt right back on the same spot; only they would reconfigure it, according to their architecture. And so, they could change it.

The Mayans knew that this would happen, so they had an equal, magnetic flow going on. And that's why these races were all so spiritual, back then. They weren't the kind who cut out hearts, and all that.

So then we go to Nikola Tesla, and Tesla was raised by an uncle, besides his dad. Tesla's dad was a preacher, but his uncle was a monk and he taught in a monastery. And Dinshah from India had people who had studied in monasteries, and they taught them the numerical value.

Tesla had a Bible on his desk, and he said: "If you knew the magnificence of the 3, 6, and 9, you would hold the key to the universe." And this is written in many volumes of his work. Every time he ran into trouble, he went into his office and he opened up the Bible, and everybody thought that he was praying to God for the answer.

They had a problem: he would draw his patents out, but they never had notes how he got from A, the thought, to Z, the patent, or his schematic. There were never notes in between. There was nothing in the waste basket. And the reason is, he didn't make notes. He didn't have to, Rick! He knew the mathematical code. He knew about resonant frequency. He knew about electricity. He knew about all of this.

[Editor's note: And Tesla operated in what Dr. Puleo would call "the flow" or what SPECTRUM readers would recognize as being in touch with one's Higher Self. Remember that Tesla was adept at constructing and refining his inventions first in "mental space" before bringing them into the physical.]

So, now we come to Keely. I don't know if you've ever heard of Keely. But Keely is now coming to light, and he was another Tesla. He studied music, and he had an uncle and someone in the Church who understood music and the Bible. And the book, written today, is called Universal Laws Never Before Revealed: Keeley's Secrets—Understandings And Using The Science Of Sympathetic Vibration, by Dale Pond, John Keely, Nikola Tesla, Edgar Cayce, and seven others.

Quoting from that book: "Music is that bridge that is so often referred to by Edgar Cayce, for music alone may span the space from the realms of the Divine to the spheres of activity."

"A human being is, in truth, a vibrating aggregate emersed in the medium of the atmosphere, as well as in the various mediums in which it normally operates, such as in the social medium, the family environment, and others. Each person does have an effect on his or her immediate environment and those sympathetically tuned to the same interests, ideas, and tasks. This proposition cannot be refuted.

"The single most noticeable means of effect is sound vibration, for it is through the voice that man can command his environment, and the things within his environment, to obey his will. But there are other means man has to command and manipulate his medium in which he is emersed. These are his attitudes and emotions.

"What governs his attitudes and emotions, the mind, is the guiding influence in all man's actions and reactions. Without mind, man is nothing. Mind is the high-level vibration or spiritual manifestation. Even the materialistic quantum scientists admit that mind has an effect on quantum subjects under investigation and call it the Uncertainty Principle. They maintain that it is impossible to study or observe quantum phenomena without bringing a disturbing influence into the picture, thus making it an uncertainty as to what is actually happening in the process under observation.

"It has also been well established that the mind is affected by what is happening in its environment, even though these forces have yet to be measured, empirically.

"Some examples of this are the effects of a full Moon on unstable individuals; another effect is often witnessed in cases of mass panic, hysteria, or other forms of crowd reactions (also, HAARP, bugs that change the electromagnetic field, biologicals, change in the music, change of the clock, or change in the calendar).

"Yet, another characteristic of the mind which has gone mostly unrecognized is its ability to behave in a fashion akin to vibration. It's three states of motion are: conscious, unconscious, and self-conscious. Consciousness is outwardly aware of itself, and does have an effect on its environment. This is the transmissive state. When it is self-conscious, it is focused on the inner self, and has little, if any, effect on its mediums of expression. This, then, is the receptive or assimilative state, much like studying a matter for absorption. The third state is the neutral state, or one of unconsciousness, wherein the individual's mind is neither transmitting, meaning expressing, or receiving, meaning listening, studying, etc. But is instead, oblivious to its environment.

"We can see the universal truths of these laws of harmony. They are universal because they can be applied universally throughout Nature, showing at once the inner connectivity of all things."

This includes granite, and rocks, and placements of pyramids.

This also includes where they built churches; how they cut the stone; and that was the idea behind "free masonry". It was to control the electromagnetic field—not only where the subjects sit, but to control the environment and change that environment where the person in the pulpit, or the preacher, or the king sits, because he has to be in a different electromagnetic field or he would come under the influence which he's trying to effect upon the people. Does that make sense?

Martin: Yes, it does.

Dr. Puleo: We are antennas.

The coming of the Christ is not someone in the clouds coming down; it's where we become Christ Consciousness, and we vibrate at that frequency setting up a field, like in Star Trek around their ship. We can create this field around the cells and around our biological being.

Changing thoughts here for a moment, I think that because of you, and what I've read, your honesty, I know the spirituality behind you, the paper, and your colleagues, I will break the Bible Codes, in depth, through The SPECTRUM first.

Martin: What can you verbally tell our readers now, while we're talking during this interview, about the Codes?

Dr. Puleo: As they're plotted, as I can see, in my limited experience, they appear to be mathematical, numerical, sequential codes for DNA, the correct DNA, where man lived to be 1000 years old.

It appears to be the correct harmonics.

It appears that we can go from grief to joy, or cause a change in the matrix of our cells; we can correct any problem with that. We can change the vibratory rate, which would change the DNA back to when man lived to be 1000 years old. We can change the vibratory rate back to when man had harmony, when there was harmony in the Garden of Eden, when the feeling in the heart was love, and not murder, and all of these other things. If you are spiritually well, you are going to be physically well.

One morning, about 3:00 a.m., I turned on the news (you have to be up then if you want to see the real news), and there's this guy there from Bosnia, and he says in broken English, "What am I, some animal? Look at my mosque, they blowed it, they blowed it. Cross the street, Catholic church; they don't put the bomb on it. Just on my church, and they want me to move off my property. And they got over here the church, and they don't got to move the Catholic church and them people."

So I went to plot this. Now, we know that all the major Catholic churches, or affiliates of it, are built out of granite, and they're built on gridlines, same as the pyramids. And all of these wars where they're trying get these Moslems off the land, what do they have there, on their gridline? They have mosques.

And in order to control the Earth's memory or gridline system, you have to have those geomancy points.

Martin: What is happening when people are reading the Bible, and maybe that's the reasons that the Catholics and the Jesuits don't want their people to read the Bible.

Dr. Puleo: That is correct.

Martin: Perhaps just the words themselves, and the way they are put together, somehow, on a soul level, it is understood, regardless of whether the conscious mind gets it.

Dr. Puleo: Exactly. It's the subconscious, or the Higher Self, that is really getting the message.

Now, here is the key: They tell you that you are not worthy of your God; you should be a God-FEARING man.

So, a man in fear reads that Bible, even though the codes are there, or he is afraid of dying and reads it, gets absolutely nothing because he cannot pick up the sympathetic vibrations off the numerical matrix pattern.

But, to read the Bible in a state of love, or non-fear, sets up a sympathetic vibration that you will pick up through peripheral vision and reading, and you will automatically pick up the mathematical sequence. And that's how people get well reading the Bible—but they read it HAVING FAITH!

So, you see, to serve God in fear is to serve a fearful God. To serve God in love is to serve a loving God. Now, I can't serve two masters, so I serve the loving God, and I AM worthy of Him!

Well, if you are reading the book out of fear, how could you pick up these vibrations? You only gain those frequencies, because it's in reverse of what you are reading. But if you are in tune with what you're reading, peripherally—because everyone who has done my mathematical exercises, even out of the book that I wrote with eased. How many people have spontaneous remissions from watching Laurel & Hardy movies, and stuff like that? We've read about them; I read about them in medicine every day. But this is such a vast subject.

If you go back to my book and you see the columns of the 3s, 6s, and 9s, and you'll see the 6s, 3s, and 9s, and the 5s, 2s, 8s, and the 7s, 3s, 1s. Those are vibratory rates which have to do with the ancient musical scale, as well as the harmonics of the body, as well as the harmonics of the universe.

However, in order for it to be a complete symphony, you need the mathematics that's in Genesis, because that was the correct sound when God said, "Let There Be Light", those are the mathematics for that. And out of that came all of Creation, from Light. And we've changed God's mathematics into man's mathematics, when we tried to be greater than Creator, and that's when we start falling from the so-called grace.

This is years and years that I'm trying to condense for you for this story.

Martin: Let's take the next few minutes to just talk about people and their sense of well being, and living in the world, which is very uncertain. What positive words would you say to people in their effort to obtain correct knowledge? How would you advise people to remain free of fear in their day-to-day life?

Dr. Puleo: Ok. First of all, to address that, you see, the world isn't so bad. And the people aren't so bad in the world.

Now you have a situation where people are afraid to eat or drink anything because of the disinformation bureaus. And the people who make money off of fear, they have generated a climate of fear. This would include the producers of microwaves and fluoride and chlorine, which really are not healthy to the human body. And, now, everybody is so concerned, including physicians, with what we feed the body.

But it is EQUALLY important what you feed the mind! The mind can generate or overcome any disease. But if you have correct knowledge—know ye of God, yet God ye not know—because people don't have enough facts. They say, "Well, I can't see him. I prayed and my neighbor died, or my son died, or my husband died." So what God would let you die? And God has nothing to do with that. It's lack of correct knowledge that caused the death, or the illness, or the disease.

And I would say, that's why I'm coming out with my next book, is to learn about the TRUTHS of the Bible, and to learn what The Word REALLY means—not what some preacher told you. Like, if the preacher says "Satan" you know, and "You're all going to go to hell" and so you're in fear. So how are you going to get spiritually correct to feel good in your heart?

You're always worried if you're doing the wrong thing and so you're going to hell. Or, if you did it then, you can't get over it, and so depression seeps in—and if the mind breaks down, then so

Two or more digit numbers can be reduced to single digit numbers to employ the Pythagorean skein and determine the mathematical "truth." The number 8 represents infinity.
9 represents completion does the body.

And so we took God out of the schools; we took the “front porch” off of the houses; we took God out of sports; we took God out of everything; we even took God out of religion, because what do we have? We have “New Age” and metaphysics. There’s nothing wrong with it IF it is kept in balance with God. You never hear anybody talking about God or Creator. And they are afraid to use that name because they don’t KNOW God. They only know OF him. You see?

So that alone generates enough fear in a given day to prompt us to wake-up. Am I going to die today from something I ate? Am I going to die because I was wrong? Am I going to get killed by an accident? Is my plane going to fall out of the sky? If you look at TV and radio and everything, we are constantly bombarded with the frequency and the thoughts and the signals of fear.

So now we come to, correctly, the point of our spirituality; we’re talking about people who love/understand God. They don’t have to belong to any denomination. And what happens is, when I tell everybody: “Ok, well, if you weren’t afraid of cancer, when they tell you it’s cancer, would you be afraid?” Not at all, but you do have a disease. Well, that’s correct. Let’s find out what caused this disease. All I do is stay and research now, and teach people the truth and wisdom. And then they can do something about it to correct it.

It is the same thing with religion. And so, you have to know what the words mean. There’s no hell, there’s life. And we talk about the word devil, and the word “bak-buk” (from biblical times) which means “to empty out”. So you empty out devils out of people’s brain as you’re talking disinformation out, and then you’re exposing The Truth. And that’s what Jesus did. He said you can do all I can do, and more. The truth shall set you free.

So, if you don’t know something, just don’t take somebody’s word for it. Pick up a Bible, and go to the Concordance if you don’t know what the word means, only what somebody TOLD you it means. That’s their point of reference. If you buy that point of reference and you’re scared to read the Bible, if you’re scared of Truth, well shame on you.

Because, if you are not in the dark, you won’t be in fear, and that means in knowledge, in health, in wealth, and everything. And health and wealth go hand-in-glove. You can be wealthy in money and not healthy—so I would say your health is not very wealthy, or your wealth is not very healthy. Get it? And they both have similarities.

We were given abundance on this planet. We were given abundance of knowledge and so forth, and what happens is, every time you get into a state of fear, or you get misinformation, or you don’t check it out for yourself, these are chains that start binding your mind. And your mind controls your body. Sooner or later that body is going to break down. Sooner or later your spirituality is going to surrender itself—not to God, but surrender to what’s hanging around you.

So, when you are out of balance—body, mind, or spirit—it’s the same as going to your automobile and placing 20-pound weights at random on all of your tires, and trying to go down the road. You have an unbalanced car, the vehicle will vibrate. So you drive into a tire & wheel garage and you get a TRUE balance, and then you have a better ride. So we have to learn how to balance body, mind, and spirit with The Truth—from wisdom, correct knowledge—and pretty soon the ride gets easier, and then we become like resonant-frequency tuning forks, and we’re directly sympathetic to God’s guidance.

One lady came to my house one day, and I was teaching a class on Bible codes and how to find truth. She was a metaphysical leader and she said: “Oh, I took away this woman’s headache, but now I have it.” You know, the martyr stuff. And she says, “I have such sympathy for my patients.”

And I said, “Wait a minute. Have you ever looked up the word sympathy?”

She said, “No.”

I said, “It means that you are abiding with their illness. So why in the heck would you feed somebody’s illness?” I wouldn’t feed them sympathy, I would feed them knowledge. I would teach them how to fish, not give them the fish. In other words, teach them where to go to find these truths.

And if you have a Bible, and you have a dictionary of the Bible called a Concordance, you should take the words that you are in fear of and go look them up. If you do this, you won’t be scared of Satan, Lucifer, and the Devil any longer, you won’t be in fear.

Like the word Genesis in the Bible and you go to the Concordance and it says “this word has no translation in the Bible”. And there’s a whole book of it, right? So, it says, “Do you wish to associate it?” And what does the word Genesis come up to? Genealogy.

And in further tracking it down, you come to the genes of Isis. You’re back to Egypt. And who was Moses, who wrote the first five books of the Bible? He was Hebrew by birth, but Egyptian through education. Well, what was he telling us? He was telling us the truth of how we got involved in procreation, after we were created from our Creator. And the further we got away from the truth of Creation, disease was born and other maladies, murder, and illness, and on and on. And if you want to stop that you just reverse the process and go back to the truth—to the origin of disease, and the origin of the words, and the origin of Creation, and you look at it for what it is, the truth. And you go, “Ha! The joke’s on me” instead of always being in denial, or fear, and so forth.

And so, challenge all of these words and find out what the words truly mean. Today we’re inventing words and we’re inventing meanings that go with the words.

For example, we should have been alerted to rap music years ago, because it’s a 4-beat row that will put you into an alpha state, and the words that you can’t understand, that are being mumbled, are subliminally being implanted in the mind.

And what are we talking about when we talk about electromagnetic vibrations? It’s the brain and the mind. Well, we have disease. Murder is a disease. Cheating on your mate, that’s a disease. Being afraid to communicate with God, that’s a disease. Disease simply means: you are not at ease. And if you are not at ease you must be in fear. Fear means failure. Failure to come to your God; failure to be healthy; failure to be wealthy; failure to be popular; failure that “I don’t wear the right clothes.” And that happens to resonate between the ears, and therefore an F for failure, married to the word ears, forms the word fears. So you have fear.

Learn the points of reference. And those are the books we’re trying to get out, myself, Dr. Horowitz, Robert Ghost Wolf, and there’s an endless stream. And these doctors, for example, Loraine Day who beat cancer, she’s an M.D., and other doctors who have beaten cancer, Dr. Kelly, they’re saying: “Hey! Wake up! You can do it!” I’m not saying it, they’re saying it.

My wife, because we didn’t buy fear when they told me that my wife had cancer and had 4½ months to live and get her affairs in order, I laughed. I said, “Ha! Now we begin the war. Now we begin the battle. Let’s find out how it REALLY is. And let’s find out why the cells aren’t working right. And then let’s find out how they work right.”

Don’t surrender your responsibility to your minister, to your clergy, to your priest. Don’t surrender your responsibility to your doctor, your physician, your acupuncturist, your nutritionist.

YOU should take charge of YOU! And learn, under correct knowledge, L-U-C-K, and you will be a lucky person—spiritually, physically, and mentally.

Martin: Perfect place to end. Thank you.

Our souls should be like a transparent crystal through which God can be perceived. This crystal is sometimes covered with dirt and dust. To remove this dust we carry out our examination of conscience, in order to obtain a clean heart.

God will help us to remove that dust, as long as we allow Him to, if our will is that His will come about.

Anna Detweiler: Seeing Truth Beyond The Shadows

Editor's note: Regular readers of this newspaper have many times come across references in "received" writings from Master Teachers from the Higher Realms about ones on this planet who are particularly sensitive to the subtle-energy activities affecting our surroundings and ourselves at this time of the Great Awakening.

"Professor" Soltec (that is, Geophysical Commander Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec) in particular has, on many occasions, commented on the energies bathing our planet at this time from "out there" as well as the energies inflicting harm upon Mother Earth from terrestrial science-gone-mad. He has also frequently mentioned that many among us are sensitive to what is going on (even if only indirectly through aches and pains and various "spells"), but some among us are very, very sensitive.

Anna Detweiler is a good example of what Soltec means about the very sensitive case. In an introductory note from longtime SPECTRUM friend, supporter, and research journalist, Calvin Burgin (wrlldline@texas.net), dated 16 October 2000, Calvin says:

"I do not know how much you know about Anna Detweiler, but I want to be sure you are aware of this remarkable lady. Not too long ago she was Amish, with the typical Amish work ethic and the typical lack of modern tools and gadgets. She began to realize that there were big problems with what she was taught and was not at all satisfied with what she was supposed to believe.

"She could see things and she knew things that her Amish friends could not appreciate, and felt she was very much an outsider...."

"I have not personally met her except to talk to her on the phone and through the mail and email. But I can tell she is a very lovely person of high spiritual development and psychic abilities...."

She's also one of our loyal SPECTRUM subscribers, and as you'll see, a very down-to-Earth and humble person—who just happens to have a higher-dimensional gift of insight. So, we thought it worth sharing some of her unusual observations. Her perspective may be of value to those of you who either sense similar things (and thought you may be going off the deep end—at least you have company) or who maybe aren't so sensitive yourself but would like to have a better "feel" for what is going on in these subtle-energy realms. Hey, at the least maybe you'll better sympathize with the sometimes crazy antics of your pets, since they generally DO pick-up (and often react to) many of the kinds of signals that Anna is talking about!

Longtime readers will notice, woven throughout Anna's comments, close agreement with the spiritual lessons of the Master Teachers which are an integral part of this newspaper's regular offerings. After all, truth is truth is truth. As Soltec reminds us, yet again, in his writing elsewhere in this issue, EXERCISING PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY is an important aspect of our testing and growth at this time. Anna feels quite strongly about that matter—but let her tell you herself in the process of sharing some very cool insights!

ANNA DETWEILER

INTRODUCTION

Anna Detweiler was brought to my attention by a strong supporter of this newspaper who also happens to be a regular contributor of well-researched information, Calvin Burgin.

I will sometimes be sharing in The News Desk her excellent messages that she sends me almost daily. I would like for you to know something about her. She sent me this as her first contact with me, and she was kind enough to give her permission to pass on her messages.

[Quoting Anna:]

I do speak to the Hosts, but so many times it doesn't get written down, and for the most part it's been lessons they gave for my life, which may or may not be of interest to other people. (smile)

What would probably be of interest to others is the things I can "see" with my etheric eyes, though that's probably not the right words to describe it either. But it's been a major problem finding words to describe a lot of the things I know.

It is a knowing that seems to flow from where all knowledge comes, and not necessarily an entity and/or person who tells it to me. All things past, present, and future are at that place where the knowledge is. There is no time, space, distance, or separation there either. It is pure mind energy.

It is a place where I become one with All That Is, and then, if I so desire, I can "look" at what seems to be here in our third dimension. This is manifest mind energy here, and so, if I want to know what is in store for our planet and/or civilization, I look at the energy that is not yet manifested, but has been created in our minds.

Most people do not realize that thoughts are really something and can be seen at a certain level before they become physically manifested. The collective consciousness is very visible on that level, and it is very easy to get pulled into the collective consciousness, whatever the frequency may be, whether low or high frequency. It actually appears to be a vortex that is spinning out of control at this time of our experiences. It has the appearance of darkness, and I can feel the low-frequency thoughts in it, i.e., hate, revenge, control, and all manner of imbalances.

But I can also see, on the energy level, that there is a new consciousness being built, and it is the exact opposite from the old one. It is the one that the Truthbringers are building, and it is indeed beginning to take form.

As we build this new consciousness, it will become easier to do these high-frequency things because of energy that is created in this vortex. I can only describe it as inertia coming into play, because I have no better word to use.

At this point in time though, it feels like we are swimming upstream where most are going downstream! It is of great importance that we stay balanced in all that we do and think. It is what some would call "clearing our space" and we need to be aware of that at all times.

It is of utmost importance that we lead our lives in a manner that will not pull someone down who is looking to us as an example. To be truthful and honest in all we do is one of the first things that need to be done if we desire the help to build that new consciousness. Some ones believe they don't have to do that and can still be building the new consciousness, but they are fooling themselves, for they are still helping on the old one.

ALL begins with a thought and a desire, and the stronger the desire, the sooner the manifestation here in the physical. The stronger our desire becomes for balance, here in the physical, the sooner it shall manifest. This can all be seen on that thought level. This is the reason why I say I get my information differently than a normal channeler. I do not get the words put into my brain for the most part, but become one with All That Is to know it. Then, if I want to tell someone about it, I have to find the words myself.

The entities who call themselves Hosts are very real to me, and I know them just as well by their energies as by their names. If we want to become an intergalactic planet though, we will have to start doing the teachings they have brought us, and we have to become the leaders/examples they have come to be.

If our desire becomes strong enough, it shall be so.

I want to take this opportunity to thank you at the SPECTRUM for doing the things you are doing. I know the chaos and feelings you have gone through, for I was able to “see” that too. May the Truth always be our desire and the Light be our guide.

Bye. Sincerely, Anna

[End quoting]

Even though what follows is a reverse chronological order of sharing correspondence, after the above “introduction” to Anna, let me share an earlier message to Calvin Burgin, before Anna started communicating with me. It makes some good points about this being the time for taking personal responsibility, and leads into interesting subject matter from current events that tend to be an exemplary part of Anna’s messages.

[Quoting Anna:]

Good afternoon to you [Calvin]. Greetings and many thanks for the message. Hope all is well with you.

So far I have not sent any of my messages to Al Overholt or the people at SPECTRUM. My messages often do not come in the written form, or maybe I should say most of them never get written down. And if they do get written down, they are not very good for publishing! My connections are quite different than what the usual “channeler’s” is. It is like you and I talking together.

The greatest drawback I see with the way the messages are put into the SPECTRUM is that the people come to rely on those messages as their only source of connection. I am more than willing to share my “news” with all who want to know it. But I see a great need for people to step up to the plate now and take full responsibility for what we have been taught these last years. I do not wish to become just another source where people can say “well, she said so and so...”. If there ever was something I’d like for the people to know—it’s that we need to use the information we have and not just beg for more.

It is as a parent would do to a child who is learning how to walk. At first the child is fully held, then the child is encouraged to take a small step. As time goes on, the parent backs away and lets the child walk on it’s own. I think you get the picture of what I’m trying to say.

That is the position we are in with the Hosts right now. I have full confidence you understand what I’m trying to say and want to again thank you for what you all have done for me. You were a very important part of my lessons and you still are.

I’m also so very grateful for what the SPECTRUM staff has done for us. If you want to forward any of the things I tell you, you are most welcome. You can give them my e-mail address also if they want it.

Now let’s get to the interesting part of this job. (smile)

Do you have any first-hand knowledge of that explosion on the USS Cole? I can go back to that time and see some very interesting things. There is very clearly a beam of some kind from space blasting into the ship. I know the pictures show the damage as coming from the outside but—pictures have been doctored before. Why is the hole always covered up except that one close-up? Just asking the question. Also, the prime minister from Yemen up until now had been saying the blast originated from within the ship, although he’s going to publicly announce tomorrow that he was wrong!! The picture that’s “painted” does not add up to me.

I also wanted to tell you about the boo-boo that I saw about 2 weeks ago. The time-travel story in The SPECTRUM [the front-page interview story for the January 2001 issue, as well as the front-page October 2000 issue story] reminded me about it again. I could see this tremendous blast of energy coming at us from out in space somewhere. I could see that, if it hit us, we would be in serious trouble. It looked like it was coming from the direction of the Sun, so I just watched it several days. The strange thing about it, seemed like I was looking into the future somewhere.

In the meantime, I was talking with some people on the Internet about some things, but never mentioned the energy coming at us. One day they came on and were scared out of their wits about a rift in time that their contacts had told them about—and immediately I knew it was what I was seeing. So I talked with Hatonn about it, and he said some ignorant human had been playing with a time machine and pulled that time into our time. He said our planet is not ready yet for that energy, and promised the Hosts would fix it. And indeed they did.

About an hour later it was gone again!! Put back into its proper time frame. The time machine stuff is so far advanced from what this civilization is prepared for, it’s a great danger. There is nothing wrong with that kind of stuff, but the people need to be advanced enough to at least understand the basics of it! If it’s used as a tool of manipulation, it’s terrible.

Well, I need to get back to this time frame I’m experiencing in now, checking my chickens.

(grin!) Life is full of so many exciting things if we only want to see it.

Love and Light, Anna

[End quoting]

And now let me share a small sample of messages from Anna. These cover a wide range of topics.

Subject: Pacific Plate

Hello friends, Love and Light to you. I was browsing the Internet this morning and noticed all the reports of earthquakes in the Ring of Fire. That seems to be a place that is responding to the energy from space more than anywhere else I can see. I noticed a couple of days ago that the whole plate is rotating in a counter-clockwise motion and seems to be coming up out of the ocean.

Now, I know this sounds really far out, but that’s exactly the way it looks. It is the energy that I can always see first, and then it manifests into the physical at some later date. It doesn’t appear that it’s the pushing-up energy that’s moving it alone, but also a pulling energy from the other direction. Anyway, thought you might find it interesting, what it looks like. Anna

Subject: Turbulent Space

Good Day to you, my friends. We were hit by another space-wave last night sometime. It appeared as if some unnatural source was trying to prevent this wave from hitting us. For about two days the wave just hovered right off of our atmosphere, but in the end it won out and crashed into the Earth. It actually looks like the holding back of it made it more intense. I noticed that another fair sized earthquake went off last night in Indonesia.

I was reading Robert Ghostwolf’s article in The SPECTRUM [January 2001 issue] and wondered if the “photon waves” he spoke about on page 20 might be what these space waves are. (??)

[Editor’s note: Yes, they are. Go see Soltec’s writing elsewhere in this issue for a more profound picture of the interplay involved here between our Sun and Mother Earth.]

I have also just in the last week, watched something out in the Pacific Ocean that I couldn’t figure out until I read his article (#42k) about the water spouts. It looked like a water spout that reached all the way from the water to the clouds and was slowly drifting westward. It created such tremendous force and energy that I felt it from here and “went” to see what it was.

Another thing that struck me as right-on was how he said the male species’ population will decline by 80% in the next decade. The reason that caught my eye is because this virus we have in this area is attacking males at least twice as hard as females. It is an extremely nasty virus and one that some people almost can’t get over.

I don't think many frail people would survive it.

Take care and have a great day, Anna

Subject: Our Earth Plate

Hi, Just thought you might be interested to know that the plate we live on is now moving too!! It looks like it's been given a "kick" by the Pacific Plate and is being slid east-northeast. So hang on—we might be in for a ride, too. Anna

Sent: January 18, 2001, #2

(I had sent Anna some photos from the Internet of special telescope pictures of the Sun taken by space agencies.)

Al, they are interesting photos indeed! I think there is a good chance that is Nibiru. By the date on the picture frame, I presume it was taken a few months before I became aware of the dark planet I'm watching. It almost looks like this object was caught in the flare and got flung outward.

Also wanted to comment on the "wormhole" pic. The energy is going toward the Sun, not away from it. As you know, everything that ever occurs is recorded in that place I get my info from, so I "pulled" several frames up just before those, and it appears that a craft of some kind is traveling there, toward the Sun.

I also have never, so far, been able to find fire there by the Sun, but intense light instead. It's not hot there, but very high frequency. Or maybe I'm living in a world that only makes sense to me. (smile)

The one picture, where it appears a doorway comes into view, keeps on puzzling me. Calvin sent me another pic one time where something like that appeared, although a little different, and when I went to look at it, it looked like a craft at a different angle.

But I did see something that might interest you: a little bit away from the Sun was a monolith! I didn't tell anyone right away, because it was one of those times when my brain wanted to say my mind had really gone over the "edge"! Then, later on, I read that the astronauts had seen some of those things too, so my brain got put back in it's proper place again. (grin) I can't say for sure if this certain picture is a monolith or not. It "feels" more like a shield for some strange reason!

For me to go out into space and look at things and describe it, it can be a bit like primitive man describing spacecraft as "wheels within wheels"! Calvin has been so helpful in sending me articles to help describe what it is I see, but then sometimes I see things that man has no description for yet. So, with some help from a bit more educated people than what I am, it makes it more enjoyable for me too. So I'm always glad to receive any articles you think might interest me. Thanks for everything.

Subject: Mama Earth

Good morning to you, my friends.

Whew!!! So much happening on a planetary scale it's almost mind boggling! Here's something that probably won't make much sense, but the "noise" coming from the Earth is deafening. I don't know how something can be so loud and nobody else can even hear it!

It's a sound of crashing, breaking, moaning, groaning, creaking, and actually sounds very violent at times! And the energy of the Earth is breaking into huge chunks that resemble ice blocks—or maybe icebergs is the more appropriate name. It looks nightmarish to say the least.

Last night the energy was being rocked back and forth, back and forth, and reminded me of being on a big boat. To say the Earth is very unstable right now is an understatement. The people seem to translate this feeling into a feeling of short tempers, restlessness, roller-coasters emotions, and feeling like the world is crashing down around us, which may be more right than we realize.

For me, though, I recognize it as a time that I've been waiting on. Hey, no one ever said it was going to be easy. (smile) The best thing that I've found to do is to get plenty of sleep, and that seems to help the feeling of being overwhelmed by it all. I can pick up very alarmed thoughts coming from some of the powers-that-be about these Earth changes that are coming upon us. They will do all in their power to put her back to sleep.

Al, I think that the Galactic Federation may not allow that part of it to happen. The Earth shall be allowed to cleanse herself, and no one will prevent her from doing that. Those of us who live on her should send balanced and loving thoughts to her, which in turn helps with the rebalancing. If you have ever been present when a woman gave birth to a baby, that is exactly how this rebirthing is going. The "contractions" are steadily getting closer and stronger. Finally, everyone close by gets drawn into the energy that is being created, i.e., us living on this planet.

Be at Peace. Love, Anna

Hello and Creator's blessings to you.

I've noticed a lot of talk on Rumormillnews about these earthquakes being possibly man-made. I know that it's possible to create something like that, and I've seen things done that I had no idea what they were doing, but figured it was man-made.

From what I can see, this string of earthquakes we have been seeing are, for the most part, not man-made. They talked on there about a wall being created before the earthquake is triggered, and I think that's what is done; but I also believe those walls have a major role in weather manipulations. And so, when I see one, I usually suspect extreme weather instead of an earthquake.

[Editor's note: Anna may be describing, from an etheric energy point of view, some of the "mad scientist" experimentation going on right now with various components of "Tesla" technologies like the HAARP system. Sometimes the weather modifications are "simply" a BYPRODUCT of something else—far worse—that they are attempting to accomplish.

(The very bright, silent lightning that is occurring right now along with a sudden snowstorm in this area, is probably a byproduct of whatever experiment is in progress between the "magic triangle" of the Navy's China Lake facility, Vandenburg A.F.B., and Edwards A.F.B.—where, incidentally, the Shuttle had to finally land last week due to "sudden, unexpected" weather problems at the previously-clear-weather site in Florida.)

Moreover, because of all the tortures that these "mad scientists" have been inflicting upon Mother Earth for so long now, it becomes an exercise in futility to try to separate "man-made" from "natural" earthquake and other geophysical activities at this time; it's always going to be a mixture of both components going on, though the proportions will vary from event to event—depending upon various political agendas.]

Having said that, I'll tell you where there is a wall like that right now. It's located just East of the Gulf of California in Mexico. It was put there about 24 hours ago and it "feels" like a bouncing board, that is, energy bouncing against it from the west side. You might know more about how to describe it than I can.

When we have the terrible, dry, hot weather in the summertime, there's a wall like that in Arizona or New Mexico. Also, another thing that just baffled my mind last Summer was something right over us here where we live. The atmosphere looks something like a balloon that's blown up. And right over us it looked like someone had taken a slice right out of the balloon! It was split wide open! It stayed that way for a couple of weeks, and then it slowly closed again. Later I read somewhere that they can actually do that with the Tesla equipment.

I have seen them pulse the thunderstorms until the storms were almost exploding with energy. Luckily that is something I have a bit of control over too. It is possible to reverse the spinning just by using your mind. It is also very dangerous to be out in storms like that as it seems our bodies attract that energy. Those people who play with those things are truly mad scientists!!! (insane) I can also, at times, "see" the domes of energy placed over us by the Hosts for our protection, which I'm always grateful for.

The Earth's energy has quieted down just a bit again today. But is still quite unstable. The pressure is building up in [the Mexico City volcano] Popocatepetl again and there is a possibility that the wall I mentioned has something to do with it.

I wonder if any of you have ever come across info on something out in space that puts the Earth in a vice grip? It looks like 4 devices put at where the poles would be and I'm talking about the equatorial poles too. These devices then somehow connect energy to each other and it literally feels like we are being squeezed. It affects the brainwaves somehow and makes the people react in ways they normally wouldn't. Like killings and such. I've tracked it already to it's source, and it's coming from the HAARP contraption stuff.

Don't let anyone persuade you that the HAARP is only used for the good of the people. HAARP is one of my major aggravations in this time experience. I'm sure I'm not on those people's favorite list, as it is possible to "mess up" some of those frequencies!! Maybe it's no wonder I see protection "domes" over my area where I live. (smile) Well, enough of these ramblings from me. Love and Light to you all. Anna

Subject: The Illusion

Greetings and Creator's blessings wished to you all.

I'm going to tell you about an experience I had last night. I actually saw what a great illusion this is that we are experiencing in! The first thing that came to my mind when I saw it is, this is a big joke and I don't want to "play" anymore! But I've reconsidered and I'll play, but probably never in the same way I used to. (smile)

Our five senses have so badly tricked us into believing that it [the illusion] is something it is not. What I saw has a lot to do with the Sun. I could see that the Sun is a projector and we are the projected.

My brain still feels like it's bent out of shape just trying to explain it. The mind understands, but the physical brain and the five senses just lie sooo badly about it, that it's going to take me awhile to get used to thinking this way.

I have been laughing to myself all morning how the scientists keep overlooking how it really is and actually they are looking at all the wrong things. The planets are actually not moving at all!! Nothing is moving—only the illusion changes. I could see why the planets don't just crash into each other, but I'm not sure how to describe it.

I also don't yet fully understand how the Sun works as a projector, but I can clearly see that it does. [Editor's note: Again, refer to Soltec's writing elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM for some possible insight here. Anna's observation is from an etheric (higher energy) perspective wherefrom the physical forms are "fed" to sustain their materializations in physical space.] The black of space is where the picture is projected on.

I know we can read about these things hundreds of times, but to really see it is a completely different lesson. Mind is actually the only thing that is, and it is all that there is. No, that does not make any sense at all here in the third dimension, and I have come to the conclusion that to really understand it, you have to go to another dimension.

I think even the Sun that we can see is still a part of the illusion. It seemed like I was so very close to understanding the purpose of it all. And still I couldn't quite figure it out. That will obviously be a lesson for later. Needless to say, it is a major milestone in this life experience to have seen it.

I had one other major milestone in my life and that was when I could see that what this civilization had been taught had been such a horrible lie. It was the most devastating thing I could imagine. I did not know if anything could ever be trusted again. I did, though, begin to feel a "Presence" around me that I had only been vaguely aware of. The times when the fear would be overwhelming, the Presence would remind me to keep my eyes on the Light, and in my mind's eye I was able to see a Light.

It was a Light that had a Feeling with it—a feeling of perfection, calm, balance, protection, and a greater Love than I could ever remember experiencing. While all else in my life began to crumble around my feet in a chaotic mess, that Light always stayed near.

I started communicating with it. I said I want to know the truth, and all of the truth; no matter what it was, I just wanted to know it. I'll admit, at the moment I said that, I really had no idea what I had asked to know, but I had said it with all my being.

The Presence told me I must start all over in what I thought was the truth. Even the Bible, which I held to be God's own truth, must now be looked upon as not to be trusted. The Presence said there was truth in the Bible, but there was no way at that point in time that I would know which was truth and which was lies.

That is when all hell seemed to break loose in my life. I can only describe it as such, for it was a nightmare. At that point in my life I came to realize how it feels to have literally the whole world turn against me.

The dark ones will use anyone to get at you who is available and willing. I can look back now and see that it was one of the greatest lessons I needed to learn.

My life took on a surreal quality after that. It was like I was on path that had many hard lessons on it, but a whole new door had been opened to me. I am now doing things that I didn't even think possible before the many lessons.

The people who I used to be close to seem like they are on a different planet. I still know what they know, but they don't seem to be able to understand even the smallest part of what I know. I still love them so very much, but I have come to understand that it will never be the same, and I'm ok with that now.

This must be the way I wrote the script before I incarnated. I can truthfully say I would not change it if I could. I have been told I have learned more in this lifetime than in all prior ones together, so all is not lost. (smile)

I'll chat with you later. Love, Anna

Subject: Watchings

Greetings,

Love and Light to you all, my friends. My Internet server and e-mail was down for about 36 hours due to a changeover of servers in the company.

In the meantime, though, much seems to be happening on this planet we call home. First I noticed those helicopters [supposedly on military training exercises] being shot down in Hawaii by a very intense light on Monday evening. I saw the light coming towards where I was watching from, and then I looked down and could see that an aircraft of some kind had crashed and was burning. The light had the same frequency of the EM missiles you showed me in those pictures, so I presume that's what it was.

A HORSE IN BALANCE WEARS A CROWN OF LIGHT

A story honoring en-Light-ened riding masters who developed Guidelines to bring: discipline, beauty, grace, and balance in the movements of a horse, from a girl who desired to be a better rider. She became the first equestrian American woman in Olympic history. This is her own life story; how their Guidelines produced oneness with her horses, also the realization of Creator-God, the Balancing Fulcrum, from riding the Figure 8. The en-Light-ened equestrian masters were Fritz Stecken and Ludwig Von Zeiner, Head Rider of The Spanish Riding School.

The Japanese people are extremely angry at us and, I might add, for a fair reason too!!

Last night our military bases seemed to go on full alert. The whole planet feels like it's bristling with hot spots where there is military movement, and angry, hostile thoughts are being directed at the U.S.

The HAARP energy manipulators are at an all time high, using their playthings. There is so much energy manipulation going on in the fault lines, in the Ring of Fire, it's hard to tell if Nature is at this point even playing any role in those earthquakes. I think they are learning that there are certain times when there is a bigger chance of creating an earthquake and so they are taking advantage of that.

Thanks, Calvin, for the Spacewatch article. They have not figured out yet that those waves that are hitting their equipment are not coming from the Sun. (smile)

The actual CMEs [corona mass ejections] from the Sun are welcomed by me. I'm not saying though that the energy is not capable of messing up the satellites, because it's a very high frequency. It seems to be a frequency that works for you if you work with it. It can be used to raise the body's frequency if we allow it. Some would call it an upward energy shift.

If you do not go with it's flow, it can create all kinds of emotions. By what I can see, a good dose if it will hit us in the next few days. The most important thing that I've found is to get plenty of sleep and rest at those times. The Earth's energy will rise, and if ours gets too far from being the same as the Earth's, we tend to feel overwhelmed and out of control. We get a sense of not being in reality anymore, and like life is whizzing past our senses in an alarmingly fast manner. I think we have all experienced that at one time or another. Or maybe a lot of times, too. (smile)

I'll chat with you all later.

Love and Peace, Anna

Subject: Watchings,

Hello, and may The One Light be with you.

I want to share with you some of the things I've been watching the last 24 hours.

I'm still puzzled as to what is happening with the HAARP machine. They are definitely not pulsing, but I also can feel just a flat line of energy (if there are flat lines of energy??). I guess what I'm trying to say is that the energy beam stays steady. The "thing" in space still has it's beam on the HAARP machine. I can also see what I presume to be craft (cosmospheres??) hovering close to the "thing". Like they may be watching or guarding it.

Here's what happened to those infamous energy walls when HAARP got shut down. They had been set up in so many different places in the last month, and within 36 hours they had dwindled down to almost flat. I did see how they are put up, though, in the process of seeing them come down.

Excuse my primitive way of describing it, but it looks like a blockage is put into place against the Earth's own energy, and that, in turn, makes the energy flow rise up like a water fountain. So they don't actually create that energy, but have figured out how to manipulate the Earth's energy into doing that. As far as I can see, there are no "walls" up right now and that gives me reason to believe the HAARP shutdown is a hostile one.

The Ring of Fire is where most of them were situated, and now that they aren't there, I can actually see how things are going there. All around that [Pacific] Plate there is a frequency of an intense heat. I guess it's not called the Ring of Fire for nothing. I'm aware of that spot of the Earth almost all of the time. It is to the Earth what a sore spot on our body is to us. It is the place where the "infection" seems to be coming out of. The Earth's body is amazingly like ours is!!

I have thought, so many times, that if we have figured out one tiny atom, we have figured out the whole thing. We are all in reality, one and the same. And the glue that holds it all together is Love!! Hummm, that seemingly elusive thing called Love. (smile)

Another thing I see is an object in space which looks like a rock, so I presume it's an asteroid. It's a bit close for comfort, but it looks like it might be orbiting with us. I really do believe not all asteroids can be seen with a telescope, depending on what position they are in from the Sun. It's like trying to see a dark object in the night. That's probably the reason why sometimes all of a sudden an asteroid seems to appear out of nowhere.

There is also another one of those space waves coming into sight. There always seems to be a danger of things getting caught in those and thrown into our atmosphere.

I'll chat with you all later. Love, Anna

Subject: ZetaTalk questions

Creator's blessings wished to you, my friends. May the One Light be our Guide and Beacon in these chaotic times.

I still feel such a great need to keep my "eyes" focused so very firmly on that Light.

When we, as etheric beings, decide to reincarnate in the physical, we don't seem to fully grasp the harsh realities of the third dimension. And even though I understand that it is a great illusion, it is still what the brain perceives as reality.

Al, I read the ZetaTalk "What's New" part, <<http://www.zetatalk.com>>; I think that's closer to the truth than what most people wish to admit.

In my discussions with the Hosts about liftoff and such, I seem to have a bit of a different view about it than a lot of others do. I want each and every one to go within and seek their own answers, but you asked for my feelings about it, so I'll give it to you.

I used to think there was going to be a major liftoff in the Earth shift. But as I began to communicate with the Hosts myself, I began to get a very different picture of that time.

One night, when I mentioned something about the liftoff, Soltec asked me who I think is going to be lifted off?? And for what reason? Hmmm, that sure gave me something to think about!! As time went on, I came to understand that the "powers that be" would like nothing better than for us to want to be lifted off!! I won't deny that the going will become extremely difficult and at times horrible beyond words.

Here is the reason why we all need to listen intently to that inner voice of ours: The Hosts told me that only in the worst case scenario, i.e., total extinction of the human species, would anyone be lifted off. But we will be guided to survival if we listen to that ever persistent voice within us.

Another question they asked me was: What is the reason we wish to survive?? What is our long-term goal?? If it is only because we are afraid of death, then we are not listening to that inner voice yet.

There seems to be a script that we play out for ourselves, and then there also is a script that the planet follows. She is going to go on into the next dimension whether we go with her or not. There will definitely be some who go with her; whether it will be us or not, is entirely up to each individual.

I know a lot of people would say: Well, what about the tribulations? How can we survive?? That is where the inner voice will be our guide. As the chaos swirls ever greater in our outer world, the inner world must stay calm and serene. I have full confidence that all will go in perfection to the laws of the universe. No one will be a victim of the times. This is by no means the first time a lot of us have experienced great upheavals in our world.

When I first "saw" that dark planet out there, it brought back many memories of other times when I had experienced this very thing.

Although I do believe this time the Earth will achieve her ascension, which she didn't the other times.

I distinctly remember 2 times of being in the shift. One time I remember leaving the planet, but it was with a great feeling of sadness for having failed to do what I had come to do! Another time I remember being on the planet when she shifted. There are very mixed feelings at a time like that. One part of you is horrified at the things that you see and experience, and the other part is ecstatic about the balance that has occurred.

Believe me, if we cannot "see" what wonders the new will bring, we will lose our desire to experience in that time. That is why the Hosts kept asking what is the reason that we wish to survive.

It is very important that we understand the real reason why we want to survive. And each individual can only answer that by going within for the answer. There is so much happening on all levels at this time (spiritually, physically, and planetarily). It is only by keeping our hand in Creator's hand that we navigate it safely.

May we all stay in balance and harmony.

Love Anna

Subject: Sonic Boom

Good morning. Did you read the article in Earth Changes about the sonic boom in Yorkshire? Remember the "rock" I told you I could see orbiting our planet? It appears like the "rock" made an entry into our atmosphere! I could see that it was getting very close to coming in. It's difficult to say exactly where it came in, but I tracked it and saw that it happened. So I suspect that's what caused the boom. Chat with you later. Love, Anna

Subject: Nibiru Sighting

Al, thanks for that article on where Nibiru is at now. It is almost exactly the location I had thought he was. It's difficult to pinpoint his location when I'm in thought form, so I was using my "radar" in the physical body. He is already coming into the range that the physical can pick it up. Very interesting to say the least!! Love, Anna

Subject: HAARP Wars

Greetings to you, my friends. May the One Light be with us all.

I guess I'll insist that time slow down long enough to allow me to chat with you a bit! There has been much going on with the HAARP system in these last few days.

Saturday evening (24th) I was looking at the Earth from outside of our atmosphere, when I noticed an extremely intense frequency beaming out into space from the HAARP system. My brain wanted to translate it as light, but it was not visible light that the eyes can see. It was turned on just a short while, but even after it was shut down, the ions [??] were still violently reacting to the charge.

[Editor's note: Yes, Anna is correct. Among other things, the intense energy beam that the HAARP system is capable of generating has a residual "heating" effect on the ionosphere's particulate—which is ions.]

About an hour later the pulsing started again and was still going when I went to bed.

[Editor's note: For those of you who listen to Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program, on Monday night (2/19) he called his large audience's attention to a strange pulsing sound on the 3.390 MHz shortwave frequency which was quite powerful, had appeared out of nowhere a day earlier, and seemed to locate in the area of Alaska where HAARP is headquartered. The HAARP people denied anything was going on (naturally). And the signal mysteriously just disappeared within another day of when he called attention to whatever was going on. Oh—guess what is one of the frequency bands the FCC has allocated for HAARP to use? Between 3.155 - 3.400 MHz. So, who do you believe? Often, especially late at night, a plain AM radio will pick-up the odd noises that HAARP system experimentation induces in segments of the AM broadcast band. Just from this kind of "audio tattletale", it is evident that HAARP activity has been very busy and increasingly intense lately.]

Sunday morning when I woke up, I checked it out again. Now there was a complete different story unfolding! The "cylindrical thing" that had seemed to shut down HAARP last week was now drifting out into space and is still today drifting ever farther away. But in its place was a craft shaped kind of similar to the stealth planes and it once again had a beam on the HARRP system, which had been shut down again! There is now a huge hole blasted into our atmosphere where I saw that intense light on Saturday.

The machine that did it is still there, but is not being used. The triangular-shaped craft still has its beam on HAARP, and I can also see like a radar scanning the sky from the ground. But the craft ever so stealthily eludes the radar.

The steady beam of energy is what I feel again, like I did last week.

On a different note, that space wave is just starting to hit us as I write this. It usually takes between 12 and 24 hours until the energy around the Earth is churning in a frenzy. It gives me a sensation of being in a boat on rough seas, but everyone around me is blissfully unaware of it. (smile)

Also, it seems like most of the earthquakes are Mother Earth "relaxing" with all the energy walls released. It feels like the plate off the coast of California is being crunched into the one just east of it. It is becoming jammed again in Southern California.

I'll chat with you later.

Love and Light, Anna ☺

Skolnick's Revelations About Current Events

Editor's note: One of the reasons we like to share Sherman Skolnick's writings with you is simply because of the huge (and oh so revealing) contrast between his comments about persons in the news and what you are fed from the mind-control print and broadcast media sources. Longtime readers of this publication can much more easily follow the connections Sherman makes—rather than trying to make sense out of the prostituted print and broadcast media's fairy tales concocted to further numb an already sleeping populace.

For instance, remember how the media trumpeted that British prime minister Tony Blair met with our new president Bush at Camp David for some "intense meetings" the weekend of 2/23? Was Bush receiving some very personal instructions from the Queen? What is the hold of Britain over our new puppet-president AND OUR NATION? Why did it take so long for the media mouths to finally get around to mentioning that those recent brazen bombings of Iraq were JOINT British-American operations?

Skolnick also resurrects, from buried history, attention to the courageous speeches of congressman Louis T. McFadden. Do you find his name and words in our history textbooks? Longtime readers will surely recognize this name—and remember what a threatening chill his words must still send down the corridors of both the Federal Reserve and the IRS, which operate in disguise for the goals of the so-called "elite" of this planet.

And yes, at some point we will most certainly reprint at least his great speech before the House of Representatives on June 10, 1932. He began that oration with these prophetic words: "Mr. Chairman, at the present session of Congress we have been dealing with emergency situations. We have been dealing with the EFFECT of things rather than with the CAUSE of things." Indeed.

And if you're wondering about upcoming financial emergencies, just watch those shaking stock markets with the ever-present Fed pulling strings from behind the scenes—as more and more "downsizings" and "stock downturns" are reported by even the most major of supposedly strong corporate giants. What do you suppose these ominous signs mean?

The suspiciously low gold market also plays a key role in what is presently going on in the quaking financial arena; see what Skolnick has to say about that AND combine his information with the News Desk articles addressing this same volatile subject. Whew!

Meanwhile, it was Skolnick's comments about Marc Rich (see last month's SPECTRUM for background) which shed a remarkable light on a name that went from anonymity to center stage in the media circus within just a few days. And likewise, out of nowhere to center stage, came the supposed "FBI spy" for the Russians, Robert Philip Hanssen, who Skolnick informs us has a much more interesting history than the media would dare to unveil.

Yes, some of the tangled webs of intrigue are quite complex, and the connections which Skolnick offers bring seemingly fuzzy matters into much sharper focus. The news is certainly a lot more interesting when you're given The Truth. Hopefully we will be financially able to continue to share same with you. The ride is just now getting to the really interesting part!

American Troika, Part One
(2/5/01)

WILLIAM ROCKEFELLER CLINTON
GEORGE W. BUSH
ALBERT GORE, JR.

Who dares mention? Who cares to remember? Russian-style, America has proceeded as a three-horse wagon. BUT, has the United States IN AMERICA (not OF AMERICA) become stagnant because each horse has sought to pull in a different direction?

Groomed as a handsome, glib stooge since a teenager, William Rockefeller Clinton (or whatever his true name is or was) has been handled and promoted by the Rockefeller interests that have for decades owned and operated Arkansas. (Several terms before governor-alleged "Clinton", Winthrop Rockefeller was Arkansas governor.) Alleged Clinton is an illegitimate great-grandson of old John D. Rockefeller, founder of the infamous Standard Oil Trust.

Our interviews with mid-level members of the Rockefeller family convince us of "Clinton's" lineage. Yet, all birth records and related early papers of him have apparently been destroyed if they ever existed. In Arkansas, you cannot even be a dog-catcher without the blessings of the world's oil-soaked bankers, swindlers, and assassins.

Early in his career, through the London station chief of the American CIA, alleged Clinton became an agent provocateur for Western interests, to continue the control and image of the Soviets as "enemies" of the U.S., to enrich U.S. war contractors endlessly. With covert American espionage funding, jointly with the aid of a clever so-called "Marxist", Strobe Talbott, alleged Clinton took up expensive residency in Moscow. Pretending to be young peaceniks, and alleged Clinton pretended a "draft dodger" (while serving actually the American CIA) whose fudged chronology fooled many, together they somehow extracted the secret transcript showing Krushchev lambasting the Stalinists. So doing, Talbott and the alleged Clinton passed the CIA test.

Through London, the alleged Clinton, from an early age, was, in simplest terms, a British agent. (Who remembers that the British set-up the American CIA? See the book Intrepid by Stephens.) As a purported Cecil Rhodes scholar, alleged Clinton was sent to Oxford. (According to published British accounts, he could not finish his British education, having been charged with raping a British woman. He was allowed to escape criminal prosecution on agreeing to leave the United Kingdom.) Based on a 19th century South African gold/diamond fortune, the Rhodes Trust is pledged to overthrow the American central government and restore the inhabitants of this continent as subjects of the British monarchy, with America resuming as British puppet colonies.

Chosen by the world government elite in 1991 (the Bilderberg Society group) and sworn to support the Rhodes Trust, the alleged Clinton ran against his little-known mentor, George Herbert Walker Bush. And Bush's role as oil billionaire was arranged by the British royal family. (See Unauthorized Biography Of George Bush by Webster Tarpley and Anton Chaikin.) Bush and his worldwide espionage vehicle, Zapata Offshore, since at least 1959, was part of a CIA front operation.

By studying the alleged Clinton and his purported "wife", herself separately a CIA darling from a young age, it becomes obvious their role, on behalf of the Brits, was with impunity, to shamefully discredit the American central government, and the U.S. Constitution on which it is built and dependent. Scandal upon scandal was used by the liars and whores of the press to entertain a dumbed-down America. This culminated in a sex scandal that younger Americans in particular, and old lechers in general, found highly amusing.

Little known or understood, George W. Bush, called by some Bush the Younger, over the years had the alleged Clinton as a trusted confidant. The Arkansas traveler, from time to time, came to the Bush Family mansion at Kennebunkport, Maine. There purports to be an undercover Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) photo showing the alleged Clinton in recent years snorting cocaine jointly with Bush the Younger. That photo, apparently available to, or purchased by, the Gore Year-2000 Presidential Election Campaign, if used, might have severely detracted from the younger Bush's candidacy.

During the Florida election debacle, British broadcasters and print correspondents, on-site in Tallahassee, delighted in lampooning the American government in general and Bush/Gore in specific. The Brits had an interest, like the alleged Clintons, in completely discrediting the American government, the Florida state judiciary, and ultimately, the U.S. Supreme Court, dominated by a fascist-like "Gang of Five". (Visit our website for earlier stories on the Year-2000 Election trauma.)

Chief Justice William Rehnquist easily could play the role of a bygone-day Nazi-era judge, with imperial gold stripes on his black dress. In perjured testimony before the U.S. Senate, as a Chief Justice appointee, Rehnquist denied that some years previously in his career he was known as a vicious bigot and racist.

To pave the way for a Bush family second presidency, the Commissar of the Federal Reserve, properly called Alan REDSPAN, used a variety of dirty tricks. Redspan and his gang artificially smashed down the price of gold, below the cost of production, that enabled insiders to make gold forward deals and gold leasing loans at as little as one percent. Such funds were secretly used by Wall Street derivative swindlers like Goldman Sachs (called by savvy folks Goldman Sucks) to manipulate the price of oil upwards, with the aid of fellow gangster Marc Rich. The purpose: to force up the price of oil, prior to the Year-2000 Election, to falsely blame presidential candidate Gore for causing the price rise.

Similar to the alleged Clinton, George W. Bush is a form of British agent, subject to the criterion of being blackmailable, whose family in the oil business/dope trafficking/weapons smuggling was created by the British monarchy. (As to oil, see Tarpley's book. As to dope/weapons, see our extensive website series with Federal Reserve and U.S. Treasury documents attached "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush Family". See the Bush joint account with the Queen of England at Coutts Bank London, owned by the British Queen.)

To understand how the American monopoly press has been, and remains, pro-British, and like the Tribune Company having the Queen of England as a large owner, one would have to begin by studying the early 1930s speeches in the Congressional Record of the most brave and outspoken Congressman in U.S. history, Congressman Louis T. McFadden. After surviving several assassination attempts, he was apparently murdered. (Key portions of his revealing remarks, as of the date of this writing, are posted at the <http://home.hiwaay.net/~becraft/mcfadden.html> website. If you retype the address, follow it carefully, including the wiggle symbol, tilde, before the word becraft.)

The Brits helped install George W. Bush in the White House. On a satire show, they repeated my description of referring to Bush as the RESIDENT at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, while referring to the PRESIDENT having received a nationwide plurality of 600 thousand votes, as Albert Gore, Jr. To some, forever, Gore is the President-In-Exile, not inaugurated, and continuing as a university professor.

And the Brits know full well, having installed Bush the Younger, that he is, at the same time, subject to being terminated at any time by documented scandal. One of the largest U.S. newspapers (pro-British as most major American publications), as well as a pro-British large U.S. newsmagazine, reportedly have the pictures, documents, hotel records, airplane travel records, and other corroborating details, to substantially prove the following:

As known, of course, for several years Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris has been in charge of the state's election procedures. As generally UNKNOWN, she has, for eight years or more, prior to the Year-2000 Presidential Election, been reportedly the sex-mate of George W. Bush. During the period he was Texas Governor, and even prior thereto, she quietly followed him to various meetings, conventions, and/or arranged with him to meet there, or he to meet her there, in various places in the United States that she otherwise would have no reason to be. She reportedly stayed at the same hotels with George W. Bush and he reportedly fathered a child with her which was eliminated by abortion. (How does that fit with his public statements catering to the ultra-right religious folks and their position on abortion?)

Katherine Harris played a key role in the George W. Bush alleged "presidency". And in helping defeat the efforts of Afro-Americans and others cheated out of having the Florida ballots counted, she was not just any reputed sex-mate of George W. Bush. (Unlike the Monica Lewinsky matter, where she did little, if anything, to further the alleged Clinton's position as president. Clinton did send Monica to a key position in the Pentagon, to use her sex tricks to flush out, if possible, what generals and admirals, under the Military Code, were itching to arrest their Commander-in-Chief for treason, such as with the Red Chinese Secret Police. See our website series "Red Chinese Secret Police IN THE UNITED STATES". In the process, seeking to spy for Clinton, Monica became pregnant by a Pentagon official and had an abortion.)

What can YOU do to confront those reportedly sitting on the George W. Bush/Katherine Harris Affair? Start with the e-mail addresses of the following in the oil-soaked monopoly press who have reportedly embargoed—that is, suppressed—the story:

- TIME Magazine: letters@time.com
- NEWSWEEK and MSNBC: World@msnbc.com
- U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT Magazine: Abby Beller: Abeller@usnews.com
- WALL STREET JOURNAL Online: inquiries@interactive.wsj.com

The Brits benefitted from the 1929 U.S. markets collapse. At a key point in October, 1929, the Brits pulled back their huge funds involved with U.S. stockbrokers arranging margin accounts, at the time referred to as "call money". (Some details are in The Great Crash Of 1929 by Kenneth Galbraith.)

British celebrity Winston Churchill orchestrated and supervised, along with chief crook Bernard Baruch, the British promotion of the collapse, through J.P. Morgan & Co., a British fiscal agent in New York. In the past, the Union Jack flew at the entrance of Morgan's Wall Street headquarters. Some historians sought to falsely explain away Churchill's role by stating that he was merely sitting in the spectators' balcony of the New York Stock Exchange, just spending some time watching the hectic proceedings.

Then fast forward. By the year 2001, the Brits were in a position to expect and promote the general collapse, possibly worst in the history of the Western World, of the American markets, stocks, bonds, commodities, U.S. currency—the works. The Brits thereby hope, as prophetically outlined by Congressman Louis T. McFadden in the 1930s, to grab-up U.S. properties at a penny on the dollar, and use U.S. assets to underwrite foreign speculations.

In what the Brits expect to cause, the clearinghouses themselves—unthinkable expected disaster—would collapse, making most trades on the exchanges uncollectable. (In being the first to publicize the then-upcoming collapse of the Continental Bank in 1984, I was heckled when I dared mention publicly that the exchange clearinghouse was in danger of going under. Months later, the Chicago Tribune, without mentioning me, sheepishly admitted the clearinghouse for some of the Chicago markets came within a hair of collapse.)

So the British, through their high-level operatives, some posing as "president" (past and present), have hoped to grab-back America.

Their vehicle? A series of scandals, such as the reputed matter of George W. Bush and Katherine Harris, being just one planned wreck of several.

Is Richard Cheney, a very sick man, up to taking over after the planned throwaway of Bush?

Will General Colin Powell be a Martial Law emperor, like Napoleon, to restore "order" as demanded by a psyched out, poorly informed populace, worried about sleeping under bridges when it rains?

More coming. Stay tuned

"Lone Nuts" And High-Level Violence
(2/09/01)

The U.S. monopoly press is always quick to identify any high-level violence as caused simply by a "lone nut". To their credit, despite their numerous wars and commotions, Europe is somewhat quicker to raise the question of "conspiracy". Some of Shakespeare's plays are an example, such as Julius Caesar, and the soothsayer's warning to the emperor: "Beware the Ides of March."

In the 1980 presidential primary campaign, Kennedy family confidant, Allard Lowenstein, was to spearhead the campaign for Teddy Kennedy. Lowenstein was murdered in his office just about the time of "The Ides of March" in 1980. Teddy got the message and his campaign went nowhere. Using the exact phrase "Beware the Ides of March", I publicly and prophetically predicted presidential campaign violence just before the 1980 event of Lowenstein.

Previously, in 1975, just before being thrown out (on the excuse that I was not a mass media reporter and hence had no right to be there) of a Lowenstein press conference on whether there had been a plot to assassinate Bobby Kennedy, I on-tape confronted Lowenstein with his CIA connections back to the time he was with the CIA-front National Student Association. He denied links to the American spy agency.

So, in 1980, I publicly questioned the monopoly press version, that Lowenstein had been murdered by a "lone nut". Only AFTER his death did some journalists bring up his role in 1974, assisting the American CIA to overthrow the perceived leftist government of Portugal.

Following the murder in 1963 of President John F. Kennedy, there started a movement in the U.S. of political assassination researchers. Despite the fact that I was rightfully considered part of that movement, fellow activists nevertheless often wanted me thrown out of their meetings for departing from the usual talk about which way the bullets went or did not go. Why? To their combined displeasure, I always raised the question of financial and related issues, not bullets. (At one assassination research conference in Chicago, I was ordered to be silent or be removed when I confronted Oliver Stone's chief researcher for the movie JFK with a question: Is it not true that the French Rothschilds, linked to the Kennedy family, principally financed the $42 million for JFK and ran it primarily in their U.S. movie houses, to get revenge on Kennedy family enemies?

A few hours later, Oliver Stone himself showed up at the meeting and, considering me apparently as some poor wretch in a wheelchair, condescended to allow me to tape a short segment with him on a less direct question and answer.

On another note, assassination researchers have developed an eye and ear for seemingly small but revealing details tending to show a cabal. During the two presidential terms of William Rockefeller Clinton, there were several suspicious violent events.

Item: One night, a small airplane came within about 20 feet of going through President Clinton's White House bedroom window. Later, details were either played down or not widely reported. Such as, because of the obstructions on the route, the plane, according to skilled pilots and aviation experts, would have had to be guided in and around obstacles, "vectored" as it is called, from someone giving signals from the ground. Also, the alleged "pilot" was already dead before impact, tending to prove the plane was a robot or drone guided from elsewhere. No explanation was given as to why and how it was that, just that night, the White House rooftop-mounted ground-to-air missiles and the guidance system were turned off; they are supposed to nearly automatically be ready to target any aircraft that flies in the "no-fly" zone over the District of Columbia.

Item: A super-velocity rifle or rifles were used by one or more gunmen to shoot through the supposedly bullet-proof Clinton White House dining room windows. A skilled videographer happened to be somehow right there as it happened. Later, a copy of the videotape was seized by federal authorities and never publicly revealed. Did he retain the original? The tape, according to his associates, reportedly showed intelligence-agency covert operatives were the shooters. The video maker was later found dead, apparently murdered.

Item: An assassin somehow got past the security guards at the entrance to offices adjoining the U.S. House of Representatives. He went straight to the unmarked first-floor door into the office of Congressman Tom DeLay (R-TX). The House Majority Whip came within a few seconds of being assassinated. According to his confidants who spoke to investigators on the promise of anonymity, DeLay took it as a failed assassination plot. He left immediately for Texas, and was guarded getting off the plane there by a virtual army. He was one of the most outspoken as to President Clinton's corruption. (Lots more details. Scroll all the way down on our website to "FBI/CIA Warehouse: Why So Many 'Lone Gunmen'?" 7/8/99.)

Item: One of the most outspoken in the U.S. Senate as to President Clinton's corruption was Senator James M. Inhofe (R-OK). While flying his one-motor private airplane, the propeller fell off. Luckily, Inhofe somehow was able to safely glide his plane to the ground. Aviation experts claim they never heard of a propeller thus falling off by accident. Senator Inhofe was a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, in a position to question President Clinton as to apparent treason he committed with the head of the Red Chinese Secret Police. (See our website series on "The Red Chinese Secret Police IN THE UNITED STATES".) Also, Inhofe was a member of the Senate Select Intelligence Committee, in a position to have questioned President Clinton about his secret CIA background, and how, with help from some in the spy agency, he turned over U.S. financial, industrial, and MILITARY secrets to the Red Chinese, a sworn enemy of the United States—a classic example of treason.

Item: Clinton White House intern Mary Caitrin Mahoney also worked as an assistant manager/manager in a Starbucks Coffee Shop frequented by Monica Lewinsky and Clinton White House aide George Stephanopoulos. Ms. Mahoney was to be a federal grand jury witness on, among other things, that Clinton, as President, from time to time met in or near the White House with the reputed head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, Wang Jun. He also headed Polytechnologies, Inc., the Red Chinese military owned-and-operated company producing and marketing AK-47 submachine guns.

Ms. Mahoney was a reported witness as to Wang Jun receiving from Clinton, as U.S. President and U.S. Commander-in-Chief, United States industrial, financial, and MILITARY secrets. The firm headed by Wang Jun reportedly shipped (or attempted to smuggle) into the U.S. quantities of the submachine guns headed for delivery to inner-city narco-terrorist street gangs. The purpose? Apparently to destabilize the U.S. government by promoting violent shoot-em-ups with big city police. For the four years he was purported "Independent" Counsel, Kenneth W. Starr had, as a PRIVATE law client, Wang Jun. Is it any wonder that during the $50 million episode of Starr's alleged investigation of Bill and Hillary, that all he came up with was a sex episode?

Ms. Mahoney was assassinated at the Starbucks Coffee Shop, in an intelligence-agency-style "hit", in the heart of the District of Columbia, right near the Naval Observatory, adjacent to the official residence of then Vice President Albert Gore, Jr. (See our website stories about failed attempts to assassinate Gore as Vice President.) For a long time the local authorities, claiming “short of manpower”, reportedly did not make the time to investigate the murder. I and others went thereafter on various radio talk-shows, where permitted, and discussed the failure of the local authorities and the FBI to investigate. Thereafter, on a cold trail, the FBI claimed they had the “lone-nut” assassin, an itinerant nobody.

According to the frightened head of a medical clinic some distance from the Clinton White House, who was promised anonymity by an interviewer, the following occurred:

A U.S. Secret Service guard, on his shift in the Clinton White House, had, as an assigned task, to open or close certain designated doors. He reportedly opened a door, and routinely shined his flashlight in there. He saw what he claimed was the then First Lady, Hillary Rodham Clinton, in flagrante delicto, wriggling together with another woman, both naked. The other woman reportedly being Mary Caitrin Mahoney. (According to a later interview with those who knew Ms. Mahoney since high school, she was a known, vocal lesbian. On the other hand, on a radio broadcast, long-time once Clinton campaign advisor, Dick Morris, contended Bill Clinton’s sexual problems stem from his lesbian “wife”.)

The medical clinic chief doctor contends he examined the identification document of the Secret Service guard who arrived at the clinic bleeding profusely from his head.

The doctor asked: “What happened?”

Answer: “I saw something on my shift I was not supposed to know. The First Lady grabbed a heavy metal object, apparently an ash tray, and struck me in the head.”

Question: “Why have you come such a distance, while bleeding, to have your head wound treated here? Are there not medical facilities in or near the White House?”

Answer: “My supervisor said I have to get help a distance away, to cause no White House problems.”

While the doctor and his associates stitched up the wounded head, as part of his record keeping he took pictures of the Secret Service guard, his credentials, pictures and x-rays of the wound before and after treatment, and related matters. In relating this to an interviewer, he emphasized: “If you reveal my identity, and that of my relative who put you in touch with me, we are both DEAD. Do you understand?” The interviewer assured the doctor by mentioning various past episodes where he absolutely refused to divulge witnesses and sources.

Why was Mary Caitrin Mahoney murdered? Because she was prepared to testify about certain details of White House treason? Because her eyewitness testimony, reportedly as to Hillary, might cut-off Hillary’s political ambitions?

Item: In February 2001, early on after the purported inauguration of alleged “president” George W. Bush, there was an incident near an entrance to the Bush White House. A man, later identified by the monopoly press as Robert Pickett, brandished a gun and was shot by White House guards in the knee-cap. Most assassination researchers figured it was, in fact, just a “lone-nut” incident. However, some of the contradictory details are troubling. The gun-toter showed no sign of pain, although shot in a place that causes great pain. He exhibited no pain in the ambulance to the hospital.

With the passage of more time, even further contradictory details may surface, tending to show it may not have been, in fact, just a “lone nut”. The press described him as a disgruntled former IRS employee. He must have been exceptionally clever, however, since he had attended West Point.

Some assassination researchers point to historical examples, to give some insight. Over the centuries, those who attempted to kill a King, Queen, Emperor, and so on, if apprehended and then tortured to reveal accomplices, showed no sign of pain. This was an indication that they did not feel any pain—having been hypnotized, that is, mind controlled.

The would-be Bush White House shooter, like the one attempting to assassinate Congressman DeLay earlier mentioned, reportedly comes from one of two centers of U.S. government provocateurs that we have told about previously in exclusive stories—the far southern suburb of Chicago, called Crete, Illinois, and Evansville, Indiana, where Pickett is from.

In 1995, through a series of exclusive stories I had posted on a friend’s website, I pointed out that many of the staff members of an alternative magazine, headquartered in Evansville, Indiana, Media Bypass magazine, had, at the time, several of the staff members being apparent government spy operatives devoted to wrecking the outspoken magazine. The magazine owner, Jim Thomas, several times faulted me as not knowing what I was talking about.

A few years later, however, Jim Thomas called me, more or less friendly-like, more or less apologetic for having called me a liar.

He said he discovered that I was quite correct and that he is in the process of removing or firing most of the staff members who he then finally understood were government spies who penetrated the magazine for the purpose of disinformation and wrecking a publication pointing out censored stories.

It may be too soon to make a definitive determination that Pickett was or was not “mind controlled”. Was the incident designed to monopolize the Establishment news, to divert us from something else about the Bush-II White House?

To understand the subject, read the following as background:

- The Manchurian Candidate by Richard Condon, New York, Jove Books, 1988.

- Operation Mind Control by Walter H. Bowart, New York, Dell Publishing Co., 1978.

As we told in our previous website story, the FBI/CIA seems to have a warehouse full of these would-be assassins. Remember the so-called “assassin” of Bobby Kennedy, hypnotized Sirhan Sirhan? In the video copy of assassination researcher Ted Charach’s movie documentary Second Gun, he shows Sirhan was too far away from Bobby and that a second gunman did the bloody deed. Was the would-be assassin of Congressman DeLay under “mind control” and was Pickett likewise so?

There are profound reasons to divert our attention with mind-controlled robots. At the time of this posting, there has been the penetration of the Chicago markets by the Red Chinese Secret Police. (View our website articles.) Assisting in this has been reportedly Marc Rich jointly with certain fascist-like members of the Mossad, Israel’s secret political police, acting jointing with criminals in Britain’s counter-intelligence, MI-6.

As stated in our stories about Marc Rich, he has been part of an espionage effort to keep Bill Clinton and his alleged “wife” under control. The worldwide fraudulent transactions of Marc Rich have been jointly with George Herbert Walker Bush and his sons, George W., Jeb, and Neil.

(Visiting the www.almartinraw.com website will give you insight, as written by an espionage operative once deep in business with old man Bush and his sons.)

Can we expect a series of so-called “lone-nut” incidents, most likely actually “mind-control” incidents? For the purpose of sending George W. Bush a message? Just at the time the United States seems to be heading into a financial meltdown which George W. may not know how to deal with?

Stay tuned.

Marc Rich—King Of
The U.S. Bullets
(2/13/01)

How did Marc Rich became virtual dictator of the Red Chinese operation to manufacture, such as on American soil, military and civilian bullets for the United States IN AMERICA? In the 1980s, he escaped from and obstructed U.S. criminal prosecution. He fled to Switzerland, and supposedly gave up his U.S. citizenship.

Making his headquarters in the Canton of Zug, where he became the reigning mogul, he caused vast revenue to drip down, of which they have come to depend on in Zug. Large sums developed from his worldwide trafficking in smuggled gold (such as for covert intelligence operations), commodity deals to disguise forbidden shipments of oil (such as “soybeans”), clandestine missile swaps interwoven with supposed metal trading, transmitting bribery loot to secret accounts for corrupt public officials in the U.S. and elsewhere, osmium nuclear bomb triggers sold, exchanged, or bartered on the black market with state-sponsored terrorists for some other product he needs to peddle or to fill an order (such as material extracted from the earth). He was already an expert at parking bribery funds for public officials, putting them in sleepy places where no questions are to be asked.

Marc Rich (real name Reich) grew up among those who knew and know first-hand, and taught him, the intricacies of how to handle secret accounts—such as in clandestine banking havens like Andorra (tucked away between France and Spain), such as in the Channel Islands (between France and Great Britain; a favorite money place for highly corrupt Chicago, New York, and Los Angeles criminal defense lawyers who like to influence and bribe federal prosecutors), such as Antigua (favorite for bribery money and blackmail funds to influence members of the U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate, like in the BCCI Affair). And other places also.

This done, in part, through major U.S. correspondent banks like Citibank (owned by a wing of the Rockefeller family with Saudi surrogates) that have hidden vast illicit funds for Mexican presidents. So they surely have not been squeamish in dealing with the likes of Marc Rich. And the U.S. financial press has given big criminals, like Marc Rich, a pass, for years and years.

Just scratching around, if at all, the surface: Who ever mentions that former Mexico President Salinas—he and his brothers and family big in dope loot—somehow became a director of Dow Jones, parent firm of the Wall Street Journal? Hey, when are THEY going to make Marc Rich a director of the world’s biggest circulation financial news operation, huh? Who do you have to influence (bribe?) to become a director of the firm owning the Wall Street Journal? How much do you have to “park” somewhere?

Marc Rich reportedly helped members of the George Herbert Walker Bush family commit vast U.S. tax evasions and to commit treason during the Iran/U.S. hostage crisis, 1979-81. Rich has helped Red China, and their Secret Police in the United States, dominate the Chicago markets and hollow-out U.S. finance and industry.

Beyond mere whispers are the way Rich jointly—with the Red Chinese and highly corrupt Israeli elite—reportedly dominate some of Chicago’s La Salle Street commodity and currency brokers, such as REFCO-LFG Division (Richard Friedman & Co.) tied to both Bill and Hillary Clinton, as well as the Bush Family. (Visit our other website stories.) Rich is a great corrupt influence on foreign exchange trading, called FOREX, such as with Bank of America and Chicago-headquartered Harris Bank. (Visit our website for details of other corruption of the Giannini family, their Bank of America, and Harris Bank.)

In October, 1980, meeting in a Paris suburb with fully authorized and ratified representatives of the Iranian dictator, the Elder Bush agreed to supply Iran weapons, to be trans-shipped through Israel, for Iran’s war with Iraq. To keep high the price of oil, the Rockefellers and the oil-soaked British royal family instigated the war in September, 1980. With Iraq and Iran being major oil pumpers, each sought to destroy the other’s oil facilities.

By way of the secret meeting Iran, in turn, agreed to keep the 52 U.S. Embassy hostages until AFTER the 1980 presidential election of the Reagan/Bush ticket. This was for the purpose of making Jimmy Carter, running for re-election, look like a wimp, not being able to get the hostages released. Carter, however, had a plan to get the release in October, just before the election, which would worry Bush. Hence, Bush coined the term “October Surprise”.

The hostages were released in January, 1981, just at the moment Reagan was safely inaugurated. Marc Rich played a role in all this in that, with impunity, he was allowed to violate the worldwide embargo on Iranian oil. When Reagan/Bush took office, nothing was done to Rich, who had brokered some of the weapons deals, via Israel, to Iran. Rich also handled (for Bush) the millions of dollars given to Iran (by Bush) as part of the deal. The funds were trans-shipped via a highly corrupt functionary in the financial news industry, Earl Brian (later sent to prison on unrelated charges, carefully omitting any of this).

During the Iranian oil embargo, Marc Rich made hundreds of millions of dollars by treasonously circumventing the U.S.-led restrictions. Rich did this with firms largely owned by the George Bush family jointly with Richard Cheney and their confederates. Many of Rich’s dealings were disguised as soybean and currency trading, on the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Cheney, as alleged U.S. vice-president, reportedly secretly helps supply Iraq with oil exploration and pumping equipment through overseas firms of Cheney/Bush’s Halliburton Co., as well as units Dresser-Rand and Ingersoll-Dresser Pump. (The Washington Times, owned by the illicit empire of Rev. Sun Myung Moon, has covered up Rev. Moon’s huge money ties to the George Bush family. Details have been on-line by hard-hitting journalist Robert Parry at www.Consortiumnews.com, a version of his print magazines. Also, see the populist newspaper SPOTLIGHT, for 11/20/00, www.spotlight.org.)

Splitting hairs, the Elder Bush, sometime after the treasonous dealings with Iran, told the few reporters who dared ask: “I wasn’t in Paris.” (No, just a Paris SUBURB!) And immediately contradicting himself, he said: “But if I was there, nothing happened.”

The Israeli aristocracy—not the common people—have been complicit in these treasonous dealings brokered by Marc Rich as a high level operative of the Israeli secret political police, the Mossad. The Israeli elite, with vast inside knowledge from being middlemen in this dirty business, were able for 8 years to blackmail huge sums out of the Reagan White House, and for 4 years out of the George Herbert Walker Bush administration.

To keep Clinton as president off-balance, the Mossad planted Monica Lewinsky as a White House intern to entrap Clinton, already known as a rapist and sexual predator. Since a teen-ager, she has reportedly been an accomplished Mata Hari-style seduceer-spy. Her father, reportedly going back to the time he lived in Central America, was a “sleeper” operative of the Mossad, useable when needed.

On and off for 6 years, as Clinton White House Senior Advisor, was dual U.S./Israeli citizen Rahm Emanuel. He reportedly has been Deputy Chief of the Mossad for North America. He reportedly aided Marc Rich in huge clandestine dealings on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, dominated by the Jewish aristocracy, and the Chicago Board of Trade, dominated by the Irish Catholic elite. Rahm reportedly continues to work deals for Marc Rich, jointly with the Red Chinese and the Israeli elite, through Wasserstein Perella & Co., of which Rahm is a Managing Director specializing in Asia transactions.

And what has been the role of Swiss officials in all this? In years past, the way Swiss officials protected Marc Rich is scandalous by U.S. standards. Rich was represented in Switzerland by the CHIEF PROSECUTOR for Canton Zug, who was also a DIRECTOR of one of Rich’s firms, Marc Rich AG, as well as 33 other foreign firms registered in Zug. In a document to the Swiss authorities, the Chief Prosecutor of Zug set forth that Marc Rich was essential to the Swiss economy, as well as that of other nations. The Chief Prosecutor’s Chief Assistant sat on 26 corporate boards, and the Zug police chief was a member of another ten. As the author of a book about Marc Rich described all this: “Rich went beyond covering all the bases; he bought the ballpark.” (This is from the book: Metal Men—Marc Rich And The 10-Billion Dollar Scam, by A. Craig Copetas, New York, G.P. Putnam’s Sons, 1985, pages 192-193.)

Some savvy folks contend that what happened with Marc Rich being defended instead of prosecuted by the Chief Prosecutor in Switzerland is actually typical of what happens in the United States. Federal prosecutors in America too often protect major criminals and spend the bulk of their time running after routine inner-city police corruption, bribery of the city government, and such—NOT MAJOR CORPORATE CRIMINALS.

Federal judges who are influenced corruptly through banks they and their cronies own are not ever the subject of a federal grand jury probe. Federal judges who stuff the court records with their judicial perjuries to falsely justify a corrupt decision favoring a major corporate entity are not federal criminally punished as they should be. The only instance of a top-level federal appeals judge going to jail for bribery was caused by our work putting heat on the see-nothing INJUSTICE DEPARTMENT, 1969-1973. The affair did NOT remedy, however, the corruption built-in to the judicial system.

Marc Rich and his sidekick, Pincus Green, "Pinky", head up one of the world's largest transactors in metals, such as tungsten from Red China. Part of the dealings on the Red Chinese deals have been arranged through Prescott Bush, Jr., brother of George Bush The Elder and Uncle of George W. Bush, alleged "president".

According to published accounts, Prescott Bush, Jr. has also worked corrupt deals with the massive Japanese mafia, the Yakuza. To make the Red Chinese tungsten deals work, Rich and his firms paid a "commission" (or bribe) to Clinton, as president, as well as the First Lady, Hillary, and contributed heavily to her carpet-bagging campaign to be U.S. Senator from New York. The funds were funneled through tax-havens like Antigua, Andorra, the Channel Islands, and similar tax-dodge money black holes.

Grabbing up both ends of the strategic Panama Canal was not sufficient for the Red Chinese and their secret police. Penetrating fundamental equipment of the U.S. military and local and federal police was more pertinent—toward the future date when they might decide to fight the U.S. The Red Chinese have been positioning themselves as the major supplier of bullets for the United States' military troops and civilian police use.

Helping the Rockefellers set up the Red Chinese on U.S. soil in bullet manufacturing have been members of the George Bush family and their little-publicized confidants, Bill and Hillary Clinton. Together, the excuse they have—although not yet widely noted or discussed—is that lead bullets are toxic. Dubbed "green ammunition" because it is deemed to be environmentally "safe", the tungsten-core bullets manufactured by the Red Chinese has quietly started. Production has commenced at a huge facility arranged by the Red Chinese in Adelanto, California, which is relying on Red Chinese tungsten, brokered by Marc Rich with the aid of the Bush family and the Clintons.

A populist newspaper, in a headline story "China Angling To Be Principal U.S. Ammo Provider", described it: "The conversion from lead to tungsten for ammunition is expected to spill over into the civilian sector, where all lead shot used in shotguns, as well as the cores of bullets for rifles and handguns, will also be BANNED. This will have a major impact on American sportmen who cast their own bullets from lead, which melts at a relatively low temperature. Tungsten requires the intense heat of oxyacetylene-generated temperatures to melt." (SPOTLIGHT, 4/3/00, emphasis added.)

Red China, considered by some to be a sworn enemy of the United States, is expected soon to become THE major supplier of ammunition to the U.S. military, as well as for firearms by local and federal police. Nobody seems to be concerned that the tungsten-core bullets cost about 13 times more than lead, as material. Called J.J. Ammo, the company has been bringing in purported "technicians" from mainland China. Retired intelligence officers familiar with the project contend some of these alleged "technicians" are reportedly also with the Red Chinese Secret Police already active on United States soil. (Visit our website series "The Red Chinese Secret Police IN THE UNITED STATES".)

Also set up to supply Red Chinese tungsten-core bullets to the U.S. military and U.S. local and federal police, jointly with the Red Chinese themselves, is a firm jointly owned by the Israeli aristocracy with Marc Rich's group of Zug-registered companies. The firm, Israeli Military Industries, IMI, has business arrangements with Marc Rich, and has agents and/or offices in the U.S., including New Jersey. The Israeli ruling class seems devoted to assisting the U.S. ruling class in promoting gun control for common Americans at the same time restricting the availability of ammunition to only the U.S. military and local and federal police. Common Americans seeking to buy or use non-tungsten-core bullets may end up on a master list to be rounded up for violating the expected ban on lead ammo.

So the described cabal is determined to make the U.S. entirely dependent on Red China, as the world's major producer of tungsten, with Marc Rich and his gang supervising and brokering the deals.

"Smaller amounts of tungsten are mined in India, Indonesia, and South Africa. U.S. tungsten is mined from the sands along the beaches of South Carolina and Georgia, and from underground mines in western Montana and western Nevada.... There is not a sufficient amount for U.S. military ammunition needs from all of these sources combined.” (SPOTLIGHT newspaper, 4/3/00.)

A financial meltdown in the U.S. may make the foregoing highly pertinent. Stringent schemes and efforts have been underway to totally disarm common Americans. At the same time, special military forces, even foreign troops training on U.S. soil, are planning for the time when they may have to counter ordinary Americans rising up against a tyranny of the central government. The U.S. Constitution's Bill of Rights' Second Amendment is plainly so ordinary Americans can resist what, starting in the 20th century, is called a fascist coup.

Items to ponder:

- How Marc Rich cheated the Pope's soybean company in Chicago out of billions of dollars using crooked federal judges.
- How Marc Rich is like another Israeli secret political police operative murdered by being thrown into the Atlantic Ocean.

Lots more coming.

Update To Marc Rich Stories
(2/14/01)

The chief federal prosecutor in New York City is compiling proof that Clinton, while president, was bribed with millions of dollars to grant a presidential pardon to purported super-criminal Marc Rich. Holed-up in Zug, Switzerland, Rich has been in huge illegal deals with Clinton's sometimes pals George Bush the Elder and sons George W., Neil, and Jeb. Enough evidence exists to send both Clinton and Bush family members to prison, say those intimately familiar with the facts.

Ex-president Clinton has been ratting on his Bush family confederates. Bill has direct evidence that the Elder Bush has been a kingpin in the massive dope trafficking from Southeast Asia, “The Golden Triangle”. Bush's dope traffic business partners reportedly have been General Colin Powell (who also covered up the Viet Nam Mia Li massacre) and now U.S. secretary of state, and Powell's long-time side-kick, Richard Armitage, now deputy secretary of state, this trio fingered by a Burmese General for whom they built a highway to facilitate his dope shipments.

The pardon bribery loot went, in part, through corrupt former high-level IRS officials and their laundering operation on the Dutch-owned St. Maartens Island, in the Caribbean. (Visit our website for related details.) Part of the pardon bribery gang, according to witnesses and evidence available to the New York federal grand jury, include key traders on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and the Chicago Board of Trade.

One of them reportedly is Rahm Emanuel, former top official in the Clinton White House who is a dual citizen, U.S./Israel. Rahm ostensibly is the Acting Deputy Chief for North America of Israel's secret political police, the Mossad. After leaving the White House, Rahm became a managing director of Wasserstein Perella & Co., at their Chicago office. With Rahm's supervision, they have reportedly been specializing in laundering huge funds tied to the Red Chinese and their secret police, washed through certain of Chicago's La Salle Street commodity brokers, such as reportedly REFCO-LFG Division (Richard Friedman & Co.).

The Red Chinese, with Wasserstein's apparent connivance, have reportedly been repeatedly attempting to smuggle into the U.S. AK-47 submachine guns manufactured and marketed by a Red Chinese firm run by Wang Jun, who is also reputed head of the Red Chinese Secret Police. (Wang Jun has been a PRIVATE law client of Kenneth W. Starr, supposed “independent” counsel investigating Bill and Hillary Clinton.) Some AK-47 shipments have been seized enroute to U.S. inner-city narco-terrorists.

Clinton, the stool pigeon, is leaking hot items of specific criminality of the Bush family, from documents he removed from White House files, to the major networks who, so far, are using it for blackmail, not to inform the public. ABC network wants the American CIA to renew the highly lucrative secret subsidy deal by which ABC News finances and staffs their overseas bureaus as a spy operation. As we have mentioned in exclusive stories for more than a decade, CBS News, 1988-89, upon losing the CIA subsidy, closed a number of their overseas intelligence-gathering bureaus while ABC News, upon getting the subsidy instead of CBS, opened more of theirs. (Ted Koppel, a Canadian citizen, has a long espionage background and his ABC Nightline program often has Foundation “consultants” known by him to be CIA but never on-camera identified as such.)

The whole mess comes as the U.S. heads for what some contend is a financial meltdown. Called by critics the alleged “president”, or White House RESIDENT, George W. Bush may not know how to deal with the apparent oncoming depression and may go bananas, so say skilled psychiatrists who recognize him as having what they call a “nut house” face. A constitutional crisis may be in the works.

A small group of highly dedicated U.S. admirals and generals, out of uniform, and seeking refuge in a Paris suburb, have repeatedly vowed in the past to arrest Clinton, under the Uniform Military Code, for documented treason as their Commander-in-Chief. (We are the only ones to run exclusive stories about that.) They now vow to arrest BOTH George W. Bush AND Clinton for high crimes including treason.

Confidants of Albert Gore, Jr., speaking on the promise they not be publicly identified, contend Gore is the actual and proper elected “president” who was not inaugurated. Similar, some say, to the strange presidential election of 1876, where Rutherford B. Hayes, by corrupting a Congressional election commission, became the alleged “president”, although Samuel Tilden (like Gore) won the popular vote while Hayes was thus fraudulently awarded the Electoral College vote. (Al's distant relative, Gore Vidal, wrote about this, which is near identical to the Year-2000 alleged Presidential Election, in his book 1876, re-published right before November, 2000.)

Tilden was blocked by an army from approaching the inauguration stand and demanding to be inaugurated as president, where Hayes instead was sworn in as the alleged “president”. (Visit our website for previous items.)

Is it a mere coincidence that Albert Gore, Jr., has become a university professor just a short distance away from the Chief Federal Prosecutor and the Federal Grand Jury in New York? Gore's confidants make the assertion that Gore, by some means or another, is assisting the Grand Jury to compile evidence to put away both Clinton and members of the Bush family. Privately, Gore never got along with any of them.

Does alleged “president” George W. Bush dare try to lop-off the New York Federal Prosecutor, for Bush to try to save himself and his family?

More coming. Stay tuned.

ALLEGED “FBI SPY” STORY
FULL OF HOLES
(2/22/01)

In espionage parlance, there is the term “LEGEND”. That is, the creation of an entirely (or mostly) fake background to cover up details of a spy-type who has somehow surfaced. For example, right after the murder of President John F. Kennedy, the mass media, without divulging that they got the data from the American CIA, trumpeted the so-called background of Lee Harvey Oswald, who was actually the CIA patsy, falsely designated publicly as the “lone assassin”, selected ahead of time, unknown to him, to be blamed for everything, and then murdered right in police custody to stop further questions.

Take the case of Robert Philip Hanssen, identified on February 20, 2001, as an alleged “FBI agent” who became an alleged “Russian spy”. His father, Howard Hanssen, was a Chicago police officer, ostensibly part of the Chicago police “Red Squad”.

Police in big cities like Chicago, New York, and Los Angeles, starting more or less in the 1920s, began calling some of their intelligence units “Red Squads”. Their mission was to seek out and destroy labor union organizers, anti-government dissidents and such, on the false theory that ALL such were “Reds”. Many outspoken immigrants, because they were activists, because they pressed for higher wages or better working conditions, were jailed without legal formalities or proof that they were “Reds”, or simply thrown out of the country without remedy or recourse.

By the 1960s, “Red Squads” were busy targeting, for dirty tricks, Blacks seeking equal rights, sometimes even murdering them; framing labor activists on false charges of “bombings”; and peaceniks, during the anti-Viet Nam War period, as supposed violence makers. Documented examples as to how Los Angeles and their police intelligence unit arranged local political murders and mayhem are in the book The Glass House Tapes (slang for their intelligence unit headquarters) by Donald Freed and others.

A New York City “Red Squad”-type officer, undercover, posed as the supposed bodyguard of Malcolm X in 1965, and bent down to be sure he was dead as Malcolm lay mortally wounded on the floor of an auditorium where the outspoken activist was to have given a speech. Some contend the agent of the secret political police arranged for the real assassins to escape and the bloody deed to be blamed on “lone nuts”.

A host of details point to the reasonable and obvious conclusion that Robert Philip Hanssen, because he was exceptionally bright, was reportedly recruited when he was a teen-ager by the American CIA, with the reported aid of his father, a reputed “Red Squad” officer. (Recruitment by teachers, family members, and such is typical of the CIA, such as the way they separately selected Bill Clinton and Hillary Rodham, at an early age, for separate tasks for the spy agency. While the Clintons are supposedly “married”, it is actually a marriage of convenience, “a CIA couple”.)

In Chicago, the “Red Squad” was part of “Operation Chaos” to disrupt dissidents, and operated under the auspices of the American CIA, NOT the FBI. The American CIA and their puppet, the Chicago Red Squad, became a matter of documented fact in various federal court anti-spy cases in Chicago in which this writer and his associates played an instrumental part or actively followed the proceedings, from 1970 and thereafter.

Robert Philip Hanssen became proficient in Russian. None of the accounts—whether in the print media or radio or television—of the Establishment Press state exactly where Hanssen studied Russian or how he became good at it. Rather, most accounts in the Chicago local press state he studied dentistry and accounting at Northwestern University.

The monopoly press does state, without real details, that the younger Hanssen got into the Chicago police department, getting quickly into the elite, super-secret C-5 unit (not merely street work). They falsely state that C-5 was to conduct internal investigations of police corruption. The C-5 unit was the CIA’s operation, as a small group within the Chicago police department.

In Chicago, 1969 to 1975, a group of “street commandos” who worked with the Red Squad and the American CIA, had as their commander a retired Naval Intelligence officer. As agents provocateurs, they specialized in infiltrating anti-Viet Nam War groups, to disrupt them, by urging them to get off their chairs and start-up fighting with the police. The purpose was so the police could disrupt peace parades, with violence to be blamed on the peaceful marchers. Also, to get the dupes arrested and discredit the Peace Movement.

Starting about 1969 and thereafter, I angered the monopoly press by instructing students and others how to identify provocateurs, by me conducting seminars at non-elite, working-class colleges and universities. About the same time, I was the first in the U.S. to identify some of the mass media “reporters” as assets for, or linked to, the American CIA. (We continue to identify some local “reporters” as linked to the CIA, by way of our weekly public access cable-TV program which reaches a large audience within Chicago.)

The big, private, Establishment schools opposed my open discussion of the dirty-tricks provocateurs’ use to discredit grass-roots movements. I also conducted classes on this at a local broadcast school, educating classes how to finger provocateurs and put them out of action. My students became adept. A non-student received my permission to monitor my class. After class he tried to get some of the students into violence. Following my instructions, they traced down his finances to a government spy unit and unmasked him publicly. He fled Chicago.

By 1975, the American CIA and the Red Squad in Chicago began trying to throw away their expendable “street commandos” by arranging frame-ups and dirty tricks. The local press began a series of stories designed to blame all the spying and violence on the “street commandos” who knew that I was an open-minded independent.

These “street commandos” did not know who else to turn to for help, so they called me. With my friends guarding my address as a precaution, I invited these “cover-blown” spies to my house. On the phone, I started to give them instructions how to find me, and they said “Sherman, don’t you understand? On orders, many were the nights we sat in a car, spying on you and meetings at your house, by looking through your windows. Hey, we know how to find your address!”

Wow! One of them confessed to me:

“Sherman, the higher ups told us to plan to firebomb your house. But we like the way you and your friends go after crooked judges. So, we violated orders. Now they want to jail us on frame-ups, to get rid of us and shut our mouth. Hey, come on; help us go public to finger the CIA, and the secret unit in the Nixon White House we were working for.”

They brought me the rough typescript of their tell-all book they were working on. I went on some local late-night radio talk-shows with one of them who, from direct knowledge, fingered the CIA and their bloody tricks IN THE U.S. against the Peace Movement and others.

Through all this, the CIA’s C-5 unit in Chicago was more or less exposed. So, C-5 Unit officer Robert Philip Hanssen left the unit in December, 1975, and the CIA assigned him to reportedly penetrate another situation by becoming a supposed “FBI agent” stationed in Northwest Indiana, just across the state border from Chicago. Hanssen was reportedly to sniff out high-level FBI treason.

Just prior to Hanssen leaving the C-5 Unit, I suggested to some students at the University of Illinois, Chicago campus, a working class school, that they contact the faculty advisors to see if they would approve of my seminars being conducted on campus, including about CIA provocateurs operating in the United States in violation of the CIA Charter forbidding domestic U.S. operations.

When the faculty originally opposed it, a very distinguished looking student offered to help, William Peter Kampiles. He said he could persuade the faculty to agree to have the seminars in the largest lecture hall on campus, in the Behavioral Science building. He was about the only student I saw on campus who came to school each day in a business suit and jacket. He got the faculty okay.

From various witnesses and circumstances, I found out later my seminars were being secretly taped for the espionage agencies to study my methods of instruction as to provocateurs. I was also shocked to find out a little later that seminar-organizer Kampiles graduated and went to work for the American CIA, as a security guard at their headquarters in McLean, Virginia. While stationed there, he was trusted to go all over the facilities. He somehow grabbed the instruction manual for the super-secret KH-11 CIA satellite which was designed to film over places like the Soviet Union, and then, as it crossed the U.S., by parachute drop the film package near a secret facility in Tennessee. A sizeable reward was given to local folks there who retrieved the packages and turned them in to a certain address.

In Hammond, Indiana, right near Chicago, Kampiles was put on trial for theft of secrets of the U.S. government. Kampiles intended to defend against these serious charges by showing that he wanted to do a trick as a double agent, to get promoted within the CIA, in that he sought to use the secret manual to infiltrate the Soviet Embassy while he was visiting in his family's home country of Athens, Greece.

The federal judge in Hammond, however, was dying of cancer (which was not widely known outside the courthouse) and had no patience to permit Kampiles' CIA-linked attorney (who had a reported conflict of interest) to defend Kampiles with the necessary details. The judge was not about to shift the matter over from Kampiles to even more serious treason by high-level FBI officials; these traitors were being reportedly investigated by Hanssen while pretending to be a reputed "FBI agent".

Minus a proper defense, and apparently innocent, Kampiles, my former seminar student and seminar arranger, was found guilty of treason, or its equivalent, under the federal criminal code, and sentenced by the sick judge to over 40 years in federal prison.

Kampiles had a girlfriend who came every day to the trial. Her father reportedly ran a small restaurant in Chicago preferred by quite a number of FBI agents. There was reason to believe that Kampiles and/or others with him were assisting the CIA to keep track of certain FBI people—sort of reportedly like what Hanssen was doing. Kampiles' brother from time to time exchanged data with some of us.

Little-known or discussed, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has operated all the years without any legal charter or federal statute authorizing it to exist. They were simply created out of the mists and vapors hovering over the Injustice Department.

The American CIA, on the other hand, is authorized to exist by a known charter. Whether that charter empowers them also to arrange or finance the assassination of domestic and foreign leaders that the CIA does not like, is another matter. Not adequately publicized is that alleged "president" George W. Bush has quietly revoked the federal edict, entered when Jimmy Carter was president, forbidding the CIA to engage in political assassinations.

Retired "spooks" contend that there are actually five top-level traitors in the FBI giving away, to enemies of the U.S., America's "family jewels"—profound secrets warranting the death sentence. The U.S. would face a horrendous crisis of credibility were the true apparent background of Robert Philip Hanssen to be allowed to come out in the federal court record and in the monopoly press.

As a clandestine CIA operative, reportedly within the FBI, while for years reportedly compiling treasonous criminality data on top-level FBI officials, Hanssen may have a very adequate defense to the matters with which he is charged and of which he may be innocent. Riddled with spies and relying in some instances on American CIA funds to operate overseas bureaus, the U.S. monopoly press is in no position to deal with this subject.

In case some still do not know, the FBI and the American CIA have been fighting each other from the time the CIA was formed. The CIA contends the FBI should not be running overseas bureaus and is poaching on CIA jurisdiction, among other things.

Details mentioned as to the "street commandos" and their links to the CIA, NOT the FBI, and links to what was a secret unit of the Nixon White House, are contained in transcripts of proceedings in anti-spy cases in the U.S. district court in Chicago. Those proceedings were NOT in open court, but in a judge's chambers. Some of the foregoing details are based on little-known voluminous and undisputed court records from those anti-spy cases involving the Chicago police "Red Squad", "Operation Chaos", and the American CIA. I and members of our group were instrumentally involved in some of those matters and/or closely followed the court matters.

On the other hand, the sparse details in the local press in Chicago on the Robert Philip Hanssen alleged spy case are misleading as to references to the C-5 Unit; as to Hanssen's father; as to the "Red Squad" and related matters, which are contained either in stories in the Chicago Sun-Times and Chicago Tribune, 2/21/01, as well as on Chicago local commercial radio and TV, in their local broadcasts.

Why did the local mass media in Chicago falsely state the C-5 Unit, of which Hanssen was a part, was simply to find local police corruption—when, in fact, C-5 was an American CIA operation in Chicago?

More coming. Stay tuned.

Marc Rich And Others:
Fingered By A Letter
(2/28/01)

The monopoly press reportedly is interested in a strange letter that has surfaced. It names specific persons and events and it relates to the apparent murder of Clinton White House Deputy Counsel Vincent W. Foster, Jr. in July, 1993, the manipulation of the gold markets by Marc Rich in combination with large financial forces, as well as tied to huge illicit funds money laundered by the Bush family in combination with Bill Clinton as their little-publicized crony and confederate.

In the letter, our editorial comments to update those who might not be knowledgeable are in brackets. Visit our website story for more details on the how and why murder of Foster, called "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush Family".

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world. Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

(1) of L.H. Financial (Tel Aviv & Johannesburg, SA);

(2) of Ameritrust Corporation (USA) as Corporate Secretary & Account Signatorie at Credit Suisse, Lausanne, Switzerland;

Marc Rich at Hotel Au Lac Lausanne further discussed the scheduled meeting with Deputy White House Counsel Vincent Foster, Jr. on 07 July 1993, as to (1) Children's Defense Fund “set-aside” allocations of US Dollars Two Hundred and Fifty Million (US $ 250,000,000.00), through Credit Suisse Banque, Agent for Ameritrust Corporation (USA); [see our website story, “New/Old White House Gang”] (2) Suisse newly-organized “Ameritrust (Suisse) Societe” to meet Suisse Tax Regulations, as to PBG transactions as authorized under Title 18 USA Sec.6/USG Proprietary Corporations—and endorsed through USGovt entities. (3) New lodging at Hotel de la Pax, Geneva for (07 July 1993):

(A) Vince Foster Groupe, (B) Frank B. Ingram (SA 32 NV), (C) Rick Reynolds (SA 233 MS), (D) Consul General Giovanni Ferro, (E) Italia Judge Pierre Liugi, (F) Italia Secret Police Erika Ruffo, (G) Somalia President Haji Mohammed Hashi Haile of Mogedishij, et al, (H) Ms. Lorraine Fine (Mossad) and her daughter from Johannesburg SA, (I) Banque Paribas Vice Chairman, Antonio Salvatorie, et al.

When U.S. Treasury Rick Reynolds observed Marc Rich on Lorraine's Hotel Patio, no one was certain that Lorraine had advised him of Reynolds/Ingram/Wanta planned attempts to travel by Laussane boat ferry across to French Casino, 45 minutes across Lake—with L. Fine, G. Ferro, Fine's daughter, L. Wanta, et al.

Please Note: FBI Director William Sessions had authorized this group to take Marc Rich, if and when he was out of Switzerland for “tax evasion”. Bill Lecates also authorized F.B. Ingram to take down Marc Rich if the opportunity came available. (Editorial note: President Clinton, by unceremoniously sacking Sessions the day before the later Foster murder, put a stop to FBI Director William Sessions' elite unit investigating high criminal offenses by both Clinton, former President George Herbert Walker Bush, and his sons Neil, Jeb, and George W., little-known business cronies of Clinton, as well as other top-level criminals jointly with the Bush/Clinton gang. The gang included Clinton White House Senior Advisor Rahm Emanuel, who is also reportedly Acting Deputy Station Chief for North America of Israeli Intelligence, The Mossad, of which Ms. Fine ostensibly was an operative. Rahm, now a Managing Director in Chicago of reputed worldwide money laundry operation Wasserstein Perella & Co., specializing in laundering huge funds through the Chicago markets for the Red Chinese and the Red Chinese Secret Police. See our previous website stories.)

Our U.S. Group (Intel) was also involved in the T.A. Trace Analysis Lab in Morges, Switzerland (Dr. John Lutz) as to Bulgaria delivery of Red Mercury 20/20 to Iraq via Trieste Port. Israeli Zvi Margelit, et al., were also delivering RM 2020 to Iraqi Military via this travel plan & Andras Szasze et al. (See Thieves' World, by Claire Sterling, Simon & Shuster, NY; 1994 release) (Editorial note: Sterling, a CIA front operative, unfairly condemns Leo E. Wanta in her book, yet Wanta played a key role in wrecking the Soviet government in the Soviet Ruble caper of 1990 which is highly detailed in that book. Also note Red Mercury is the ingredient in “suitcase” nuclear devices that can be carried around by terrorists. ABC Network high-paid propagandist, Barbara Walters, has reportedly been a sizeable stockholder in Israeli weapons manufacturers that apparently sell diabolical weapons to all comers—Red Chinese, terrorist organizations, and such. As we have pointed out in some of our website stories, ABC News has received the CIA subsidy since 1988-89, once had by CBS News, for ABC News to run their foreign bureaus as a vacuum pump of intelligence data for the American CIA.)

It was not known in July, 1993, that Suisse Surete, Interpol, et al., was aware of our intel to take down Marc Rich—until Suisse Surete arrested Somali Ambassador Leo Wanta for failure to pay alleged, and bogus, Wisconsin Tax Assessments for 1982 and 1988—thus the Sessions arrest warrants for Marc Rich were illegally discovered—and I believe resolved in the murder of (1) Vince Foster (Washington, DC, USA), (2) Freddie Woodruff (Tbilisi, Georgia) [An American CIA official], (3) J.J. Smith (Mexico City), (4) Lino Burys (Hong Kong), (5) etc., etc. (AA) Further, Ms.Fine was aware of the oil activities of Commerce Secretaary Ron Brown, Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary, Somali Ambassador Wanta as to Operation Restore Hope, 90 Million Barrels of Saudi light crude oil as bid contracted to Editorial notes: The exposure widely of the details in this letter would tend to expose the Bank of England together with a Wall Street cabal including Goldman Sachs & Co., implicated in forcing down the price of gold so as to attempt to save certain huge hedge funds borrowing hundreds of billions of dollars on what is known as “gold carry” or “gold carriage” arrangements. That is, a low price of gold, below the cost of production of the most efficient mines, enables certain huge speculators to borrow tremendous funds for as little as one per cent. A party to this huge Price-Fixing Fraud has been Alan Greenspan, as the head of the conspiratorial Federal Reserve masquerading as a “U.S. Government” entity when it is a privately-owned, privately-run group of alleged banks issuing paper money masquerading as the “U.S. Dollar”.

As to the contents of the letter and what is involved, both TIME magazine and Newsweek magazine are aware of it, as is ABC and CBS News. ABC and CBS have a severe hang-up conflict of interest because of the Israeli-“Red Mercury” nuclear suitcase-bomb matters involved.

Newsweek is owned and operated by the British, who have a substantial interest in covering up these matters to protect huge British interests, including the Bank of England and others. Newsweek's Michael Isikoff, who is reportedly aware of the letter, is a reputed asset of the Mossad, Israeli Intelligence, going back to the time he helped kill stories reportedly as part of Newsweek's sister publication, the Washington Post. ABC is a proprietary operation linked to the American CIA, which subsidizes, for intelligence gathering and spying, ABC News' foreign bureaus. ABC, as earlier mentioned, has Barbara Walters, with a substantial interest to reportedly kill any story about the letter because of her reputed financial linkage with sizeable Israeli weapons manufacturers and "Red Mercury".

As we have discussed in other items on our website, Foster ran a secretive "Gold Bank" in the Caribbean for intelligence agencies, and together with his sidekick, Hillary Rodham Clinton, worked worldwide money laundry deals based on smuggled gold bullion. Any mass media admission that they lied to us about the death of Foster, earlier claiming it was "suicide" when they knew all along it was murder, would inevitably bring up the smuggled gold matter as well as the gold Price-Fixing matter. See our website item about the Roger D'Onofrio Affair, as discussed by foreign wire service bureaus, early December, 1995; involved jointly criminal activities of the Vatican Bank, once headed by Bishop Paul Marcinkus, originally from the Chicago-area mafia enclave of Cicero and their First National Bank of Cicero, later re-named several times. See our website story about the Giannini Family.

To silence Wanta, he was framed with the connivance of Tommy Thompson when he was Governor of Wisconsin and part of the CIA's reputed operation Children's Defense Fund. See our website story, "Old/New White House Gang". Tommy Thompson is now part of the cabinet of alleged "President" George W. Bush, who some consider to be an "imposter" President. The oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press has a lot to lose by dealing with the different situations in the letter.

The liars and whores of the press have not even begun to tell us the details of the massive worldwide fraud and murders implicated with protected espionage agency darling Marc Rich. More coming. Stay tuned.

Marc Rich And
The Anti-Gold Mob
(3/07/01)

Several gold mines, suffering from disastrously low gold prices, are considering accusing the Federal Reserve and others, including known international criminals such as Marc Rich, of a diabolical scheme to prop up six huge failing hedge funds by way of attempting to head-off a worldwide financial meltdown.

Described by some as high-cost producers, the mines are reportedly considering publicizing their plight, to rescue themselves from the artificial situation created by what they contend is the pricing of gold below the cost of production of even the world's most efficient mines. If public awareness does not defeat the anti-gold plot, the mines' only recourse is to have British interests take over at lead mine prices, just short of bankruptcy.

Among those reportedly complaining are Homestake Mines, South Dakota and California, as well as several deep-in-the-Earth South African mines. Some Third World mines are accusing the anti-gold cabal of racist policies, designed to impoverish countries populated by people of color. Some in the Johannesburg government are expected to spearhead the finger-pointing.

The plot to force down the price of the yellow metal, the mines say, revolves around a little-known term called the "gold carry" trade. A low price of gold enables some Wall Street marauders to make huge profits by being able to use such prices as a vehicle to get loans for as little as one per cent.

The mines contend that some in their own industry, to the detriment of their own stockholders, are going along with the anti-gold tricks. Among those accused is American Barrick, principal players of which include George Herbert Walker Bush and sons George W., Neil, and Jeb. Some have accused Barrick of being a proprietary operation of the American CIA and the National Security Agency, using untraceable gold as funding for the overthrow of governments and the assassination of leaders, U.S. and overseas.

Alleged "President" George W. Bush, heckled by critics as an "imposter" and usurper, shortly after grabbing power, has cancelled the Carter administration's presidential edict banning the U.S. from engaging in political assassinations to carry out some national or international policy. Implicit in the political murder go-ahead is funding of the same with secret gold.

The Federal Reserve, together with Wall Street investment thugs Goldman Sachs & Co. and J.P. Morgan, joined by the "metal men" of international pirate Marc Rich and his rogues, are reportedly accused of being part of the anti-gold cartel devoted to attempting to bail out six monstrous hedge funds, the eminent collapse of which threatens the viability of the New York Stock Exchange as well as the possible existence of NASDAQ.

In plain terms, the stricken mines are accusing the Fed and their cut-throats of propping up hedge funds whose would-be wizards completely guessed wrong in their gambling on complex markets known generally as derivatives.

Without the gold hocus-pocus, the failure of the hedge funds may cause the eventual closing for a time of Big Board (Or is it Big Bird?) trading, as well as other markets, according to mining sources. They contend that exchange clearinghouses may also, as a result, fail. To head off the expected financial debacle, escalating the recession into a headlong wreckage, they contend, the Federal Reserve has joined even with known criminals in Switzerland and the Russian mafia.

With the downfall of the Soviet government, aided by his complicity in the attack on the Russian currency, the Ruble, about 1990, Marc Rich arranged with former top officials of the Soviet Secret Police to steal a large portion of the Soviet gold treasury. At the time, the Soviets were one of the world's largest gold producers. New purported users of the precious metal horde, as a bartering device, have been the Dutch banking octopus, Algemene Bank Nederland, now called ABN-AMRO. Quantities of the purloined gold have been parked at or near a Swiss airport for rapid transit to any point on the planet, as needed.

The U.S. flagship of ABN, La Salle National Bank of Chicago, used the plundered gold as collateral to quietly buy up shaky banks in 15 major U.S. cities. One of only two U.S. banks refusing to disclose their true ownership to a Congressional Committee, La Salle has long been the place for corrupt public officials, primarily judges, to have numbered and secret accounts to whisk their bribery assets offshore.

Head of the paper money rapists and the center of anti-gold banditry has been the Bank of England. Historically experienced criminals, the bank covered up the role of the huge British/French/U.S./Israeli espionage and political murder money laundry, Bank of Credit and Commerce International, BCCI. As we have earlier pointed out, the Bank of England, at the time of the purported collapse of BCCI in 1991, for 30 days mysteriously had, as an open record, the BCCI bribery list, proving BCCI had bought or blackmailed one-fourth of all the members of the U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate.

headquartered in the District of Columbia, ran my exclusive story of the bribery and blackmail of Congress. Although as part of my story I supplied the list of names, the weekly outspoken newspaper ran my story verbatim minus the list, as a precaution. Contrary to mass media slanted reporting, BCCI did NOT disappear, but re-emerged as a joint operation with the First National Bank of Cicero, located in the mafia enclave adjoining Chicago; the bank having been under the domination of Bishop Paul Marcinkus, long head of the CIA/Mafia-linked Vatican Bank. (Visit our website for related stories, such as the Giannini family and the bank in Cicero.)

To connive with major gold bullion looters like Goldman Sachs, the Bank of England set about to force down the price of gold by periodic supposed auctions of the bank's gold. Actually, most of the time the British bank underworld offered gold it did NOT physically have or want to sell. Called by some the BUNK of England, they were secretly offering at "auction" portions of the stolen Soviet gold treasury, leased or "loaned" by Dutch receivers of stolen goods, to the British fakers for appearing to flood the market with gold. Interesting sidenote: currency speculators know it is a "death warrant" to mess over the Dutch currency, the Guilder.

Operating an NSA/CIA clandestine gold bullion bank in the Caribbean for many years was Hillary Rodham Clinton's confederate Vincent W. Foster, Jr. Foster became knowledgeable about how George Herbert Walker Bush and Bill Clinton wanted to stop FBI Director William Sessions from seizing Marc Rich in 1993 near the Swiss-French border, to return the international swindler for U.S. criminal prosecution. (See our prior story about Marc Rich, "Fingered By A Letter".)

As a consequence, Marc Rich came up with $5 million, siphoned off of the gold poaching, to pay for a private murder team to snuff out Foster shortly after the failed attempt by the Foster team to grab Marc Rich. The wipe-out was falsely promoted as a "suicide" by intelligence agency "assets" in the monopoly press. (For background details on the murder of Foster, see our story "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush", Part Four.)

Much later, hundreds of pages, many heavily redacted, under a Freedom of Information demand, were released about Foster by the National Security Agency, relating, for example, to his espionage work against banks worldwide.

As covered up by highly corrupt top officials of the American Gestapo, the FBI, and the IRS, Marc Rich and his pillagers have joined in crime with fellow currency and commodity hijackers on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. In March, 2001, alleged "president" Bush came to Chicago to give a speech to the Merc. Some considered his presence as delivering them a message—that as the fountain of criminal money that they are, he expects them to help finance and carry out some of the schemes of his family. The FBI and the IRS top officials are well aware of the widespread federal regulation violations by many members of the Merc as well as the Chicago Board of Trade. Brokers are reportedly not keeping clients' funds in segregated accounts, as required by law. In case of a financial debacle, the brokers AND THEIR CLIENTS will be in the same sinking boat.

Run by the Jewish aristocracy, not the common people of that ethnic-religious group, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange is an exclusive place for high-stakes gambling. They switched their allegiance from Bill Clinton to George W. Bush.

Like Bush, Clinton, when president, likewise came to the Merc to give them a message to kick in funds for his schemes. On the same day George W. was in Chicago, he also visited the Chicago Board of Trade, which was not interested in his messages.

The Board of Trade is run by the Irish Catholic aristocracy, not the common people, and they understand the Bush Family are agents of the British Monarchy that perpetrated the Irish Holocaust of the middle 19th century, falsely described by the pro-British/American media as merely a "Potato Famine". Members of the Board of Trade, always tight with the Vatican and the Rothschilds, blocked Bush's attempts at a shake-down.

Clinton came to the Merc to get big money and his marching orders. Like him, Clinton crony George W. Bush does the same. Nevertheless, honchos of both the Merc and the Board of Trade do understand they cannot openly oppose the orchestrated events of the Federal Reserve and the paper money crowd. After all, the Fed has demanded co-operation from a series of criminal residents as "President" in the White House. Both exchanges know the widespread failure to keep clients' accounts segregated could set off a wave of federal criminal prosecutions by the Injustice Department, perhaps even closing both exchanges.

Some of the supposedly "segregated accounts" have been unlawfully commingled with clandestine funds of the Russian mafiya with the connivance of Marc Rich and his mob, and interwoven with the funds of the Red Chinese Secret Police, with the reported complicity of not only Marc Rich but his accomplice, Rahm Emanuel, former Clinton White House Senior Advisor, and more currently, Managing Director of Wasserstein Perella & Co., reputed Asian money laundry front. Rahm is the reputed Deputy Chief of Israeli Intelligence, the Mossad, for North America.

Currency and commodity brokers handling the dirty anti-gold transactions are warned if there is about to be public exposure of dealings not done with what is known in the industry as "due diligence", that is, knowing actually who the broker is dealing with. Apparently "for a piece of the action" corrupt top FBI and IRS officials, Chicago and New York, quietly alert favored brokers to "problems" that might subject the brokers to federal criminal prosecution.

Why do the mass media honchos mostly remain silent? Because some reporters of Establishment magazines, radio, and television programs, are busy during the day, on the phone to their brokers—London, Singapore, Frankfurt—trading on inside information for themselves and their relatives. The Chicago Board of Trade resisted the Bush White House shake-down. The Chicago Mercantile Exchange caved in to the extortion.

Some gold mines are getting clipped. Their goods, and instruments for or against their goods, are secretly transacted on the Chicago markets. Maybe THEY should buy the White House.

Cynics cackle because a man named Rich is helping make gold mines Poor—all to benefit the paper money pimps and to rescue hedge fund swindlers. Stay tuned.

Lose The Baggage And Free Your Mind!

3/9/01 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in the One Light of Creator Source. Be still and be at peace.

Dear ones, much is happening all around your world and there are many speculations as to what will or will not happen with regard to the current unfolding of the Planetary Transition that is now taking place. The changes from day to day are subtle when viewed from the physical perspective of human experience. However, from the much broader perspective, wherein all is viewed from a point of ENERGY flow, the changes are quite dynamic and far more pronounced.

From the energy perspective, there continues to be a rising of the frequency of the energies all around your planet. These energies cause very subtle shifts on the personal level, but when viewed as a planetary whole, the collective change is quite grand in perspective.

We view many situations in terms of sequences-of-events, and rarely do we concern ourselves with what you perceive as the passage of time. Time passage, as perceived and measured by the clock movements that hang on your walls, is a relative phenomenon to the observer. Subtle shifts in consciousness can greatly impact your perception of this phenomenon.

From our perspective, since we have more deliberate control over our vibratory rates, the experience of time can and is greatly affected from a perceptual point of view. This is to say we can speed up our vibratory rate so much that 1 second on your clocks would seem like an hour of passage relative to the common perception which now exists on your planet.

Many of you are feeling greatly impacted by the perceptual phenomenon that many refer to as "time compression" that is now occurring on your planet. This perceptual phenomenon is where ones perceive time as passing at a much faster rate than what you were accustomed to just a few short years ago.

The phenomenon impacts you ones more depending mostly upon your age and the amount of mental baggage you carry around. Age, simply because the older you are the more shift in frequency you have experienced and you can consciously remember farther back to when you had "more time". Mental baggage, because the baggage tends to lower your frequency and keeps you from matching frequency with the current environmental conditions. The lower your vibrational frequency is relative to that of the current environment, the more will be the perceptual shift wherein time appears to speed by more quickly.

Let's say you take a "moment" to ponder an idea, and yet you have a lot of "stuff" on your mind that causes you to worry. This means your attention is divided and your consciousness is somewhat split. This often causes more effort (and time) to concentrate or "ponder" an idea. The "effort" should not exist, and yet often there is great conscious effort required by you ones to keep focused and keep heading in the desired direction, or to simply "hold" the thought.

There are many factors that affect your ability to focus mentally. THERE IS GREAT WISDOM IN LEARNING TO LET GO OF PAST WORRIES AND FRUSTRATIONS. In letting go of the past negativity in your life, you will find the greater level of freedom you once enjoyed as a small child—when you enjoyed the present moment of play and you seemed to have all the time in the world.

Ones who are truly free from emotional baggage easily match the current frequency of their environment, and are more consciously aware of their surroundings, as well as more open to the Higher Guidance continually being offered. In that condition, there is no "effort" needed to "contemplate" an idea. In fact, you will become more open to the Creative Energies always present, and the understanding and knowing you desire will pour in with little more effort than it takes to breathe a breath of air.

Clutter in the mind presents a formidable challenge for you ones to deal with, for your mind is your own and though there are many who effort greatly toward controlling your thinking and reasoning, it still takes YOU to give permission for them to do so. The most common controller of a young mind are the parents of the individual. Parents often try to control (protect) their child as if the child was somehow their personal possession, rather than a unique aspect of Creator God entrusted to their care while in a physically vulnerable state.

Often parents' good intentions instill many of the parents' fears, worries, and beliefs into the mind of the small child. Children often accept any and all programming without question at a young age, since there is most often nothing but complete trust.

As time progresses, the child becomes more aware, and more and more of the uniqueness and personality begin to come forth. This uniqueness begins to challenge the dogma of the parents. If the parents are aware enough to realize that they are dealing with a unique soul—rather than "just merely" a child—they will have great patience and explain their reasoning to the child. If the parents are not so aware, and hold the perception that regards the child more like a possession, then the response is often punishment for questioning or "talking back".

Physical pain often reinforces negative emotions, and from a basic survival point of view, ones will naturally avoid pain. However, the pain (physical or mental—mental is worse) becomes one of the main kinds of "baggage" that ones then carry around with them, often for their entire life. It has often been said in various different ways: "It only takes a moment to emotionally scar one you love, yet that may take a lifetime to heal."

The mental and emotional baggage you ones tend to carry around is the single most common "thing" that stands in your way of achieving the next step (level of awareness) along your infinite journey of self discovery. Accept the past for what it was—an experience which, if viewed from the proper perspective, can be used as a great learning tool. It need not be continually dramatized and relived in your mind, day after day. To do so only serves to "cheat" yourself of fully appreciating and utilizing the "moment of now".

There are no "magic buttons" to push that will allow you each to release that which chronically troubles you. However, with proper understanding and realization that YOU CHOOSE what you hold onto, and YOU JUSTIFY to yourself why it is sooooo important to do so, you will begin to see that the RESPONSIBILITY for your current condition or perceptual state lies within YOU. Do not hold your parents or any other outside person or force accountable for the baggage YOU hold onto.

You are a MAGNIFICENT creation of Creator God. You chose to come forth into the physical environment knowing full well all of the potential challenges you would have to face and the value to be gained in doing so. You are NOT a victim of “bad luck” or anything other than perhaps your own ignorance.

Ignorance is quite excusable, for with experience, ignorance fades away, and knowledge and knowing take its place. When knowing is present, and yet you continue to hold onto the old ways—much like drug addicts can reason that the drugs are ruining their life, but continue down the self-destructive path anyway—then you CHOOSE what we refer to as stupidity. Ignorance and stupidity are NOT the same thing.

Please know that we of the Higher Realms do not view any of you ones as inherently stupid, but rather, as unique aspects of Creator who simply choose to learn in your own way and in your own “time”. We simply offer insights that will help to quicken the precipitation of events that will bring about the next step along your SPIRITUAL journey.

The physical journey is the “laboratory” wherein you can implement (demonstrate) your understanding with respect to your current level of SPIRITUAL growth. With every attempt that fails to bring you to the next level of understanding, you become closer to finding within the answers you seek. We applaud you ones who are diligent and persistent in your search. There are NO FAILURES in the “game” of life; there are simply different levels of determination, and thus different rates of success.

Please know that there are Great Unseen Forces at work assisting you along your personal journey. Many of you sense and perceive these Energies at work in your lives and have learned to appreciate them. Know that we of the Lighted Brotherhood can do much more to assist you when a conscious call is made, and that it IS well spent “effort of consciousness” and “time” to do so.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, along with many other kindred souls who resonate with the intention of this message. We come in Light and Service to The One Light, Creator God.

May you find within these words that which speaks to your heart knowing. Salu.

The Physical Experience Is For Spiritual Growth

3/11/01 HATONN

Good evening, my scribe. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the One Light of Creator God. Be at peace, my friend.

Let the clutter of mental concern over “time” slip away for awhile so that the message may come through. There is reason for all things that impact your experience.

The subtleness of “transient” thoughts and ideas is perhaps the single most missed opportunity you ones experience. This is to say that many of you are too busy with your preplanned day to notice the significance of the various thoughts that come and go throughout the day. Often it is much like when you wake up in the middle of the night after a dream and think to yourself: “I’ll surely remember this one.” But you wake up the next morning with a vague recollection that there was something significant about a dream you had the night before, and that it was “profound” or important in some way.

Your waking thoughts often come in a more subtle manner simply due to the various conscious distractions of the physical senses. Your “modern” world is full of various avenues of outward sensory stimulation. This is neither good nor bad; it simply is. We do, however, find ourselves wanting to give caution to those of you who tend to dwell excessively in such things as television and movies. These avenues of stimulation tend to create hypnotic trance-like states wherein artificial reality is, in essence, given life.

While many of you are quick to claim that you know the difference—and that it is “only a TV show” or “only a movie”—we often witness you ones placing a significant amount of energy into seeking out the next “good” movie, or scheduling your lives around some Tuesday night sitcom or such. Our concern is that these outward avenues consume many hours of time wherein perhaps self introspection (meditation) could take place. Many of you use this sort of avenue as a mechanism to “relax” or “escape” from the “pressures” or “stresses” of life and living.

We understand the need you ones have, and we do not condemn anyone for seeking relief from pressures and stresses. However, we witness more and more becoming “addicted” to the artificial reality generated in this manner. In many ways it is QUITE similar to the hallucination state of someone who takes strong narcotic-type drugs. Often the drug users will claim that the drugs offer them relief from the inner pressures and stresses of day-to-day living.

Perhaps the only difference, from a mental perspective, is that the drug user is the author and producer of their artificial reality experience, whereas with the one who excessively indulges in television or movies, someone else dictates the experience and you have whole groups of people impacted and influenced by the same illusion.

Your outward world is mostly built on hype and illusion. Often you ones are programmed to buy into the materialism of “modern” society rather than realize that the entire experience of the physical schoolroom is to help facilitate your SPIRITUAL growth—not ESCAPE from same.

Dear ones, there is a time and place for everything. You each can and do benefit greatly from a few of the more inspirational programs that are available. We ask that you consider the energy you put into your weekly routines and please set a standard for yourself. Do you REALLY need to see EVERY newly released movie? What will really change in your life if you miss for awhile your “must see” favorite television show? How much time in relative comparison do you spend in an introspective state of self analysis, say while walking outside and enjoying Nature?

For most of you, the only time you consciously spend in an introspective state is the few minutes prior to falling off to sleep. This is fine and well and is MUCH better than none at all. However, you each—who wish to “quicken” the growth process and develop new talents and abilities—would be wise to consciously set aside equal amounts of time both for watching movies and television (or whatever is your escape) AND for self introspection.

Perhaps this sounds absurd to you ones, especially those of you who are accustomed to spending over 2 hours a day watching television. Our desire is to help point out a method of answering the many petitions we hear from you ones who want to know either what YOU can do to help, or the more common question: “What is my purpose in this life?”

In general your purpose is to experience and GROW, and share your knowledge with those who come your way so that they may benefit from your experience and thus expand as well. Again, let me repeat: YOU CHOSE TO COME INTO THE PHYSICAL SO THAT YOU COULD WORK ON YOUR SPIRITUAL GROWTH!

How much of your precious time each week do you spend simply sitting quietly with just your own thoughts—with the television, radio, computer and such OFF?

Perhaps your response is: “Well, I just don’t have that kind of time to waste just sitting around doing nothing.” To those of you who don’t own a television and rarely ever watch movies and such, then please consider that this lecture is probably not for you. For the rest of you, let me ask: what exactly are you ACCOMPLISHING when you spend an hour sitting in front of your television? How is this more important than spending time learning how to interpret the direct Guidance being offered to you through your direct connection to Creator God?

You each have intuition, psychic experiences, ability to perceive non-physical energies and such. Many of you simply do not know how to interpret what you see with the mind, and therefore view it as simple recall or such.

Sit quietly for an hour with just yourself and the quietness of nothing to distract you, and see what thoughts or ideas come. If you are struggling with a particularly challenging situation, then ask for Help, ask for Guidance. Please also remember to surround yourself with the White Light of Creator God as a protection to filter out interference from dark or mischievous thought-form projections and to help purify or clean the energy that comes in to you. (It would be wise to do this at ALL times, not just when you are sitting quietly.)

For some, you may claim this whole proposal to be preposterous and a waste of time. To you ones I say: don’t worry about time, for you truly have all the time in the universe, and much much more. If you do not accomplish the growth you intended in this lifetime, there will be other opportunities in other lifetimes to continue right where you left off.

We are not trying to coerce you ones into becoming diligent students. We are simply pointing out a way for you ones to help yourselves move forward along your journey—particularly when you continually petition us for such help.

The subtle things, such as transient thoughts that enter into your mind, are quite common and simple in nature. Remember you EACH were given all that is needed to consciously connect with Creator God WITHIN you, and in a quite direct and personal way. You do NOT need any special electronic device or chemical substance to achieve this connection. Often the only thing needed is a little bit of time (relative to the average life expectancy of some 70+ years) of quiet self-examination and honesty with self.

What are these thoughts that bounce around in your mind? What is the ENERGY behind YOUR thoughts? What gives even the smallest thought the life it experiences within your mind? Where is the ORIGIN of this energy?

Where does the energy go to once you are done with the thought? What really causes a memory to come flashing into your mind when someone triggers it externally? Was this an accident? Perhaps your Guides are working behind the scenes with both you and the one who caused the triggering.

Learn to look at these subtle, yet common occurrences in your life, and know that we of the Higher Realms of Creation play a much larger role in your life than you ones commonly recognize.

Never underestimate the INTER-CONNECTEDNESS of all ones, everywhere. Your personal growth in THIS lifetime will greatly affect the growth of many ones in future life experiences, as well as your own future growth. Our interactions with you ones often bring us to an inner soul-searching perspective, for we of the Lighted Brotherhood are very conscientious in our efforts to NOT usurp your free-will choice—and yet, at the same time, to give you ones as much as is possible. We often explore the outer edges of this conscientiousness as we “push the envelope” of experience while maintaining the balance for the greater good.

We could give psychic predictions in very specific detail, and this would be viewed by many as the very proof they seek. However, often the very energies who do such predicting do so with the intent to gain TRUST, and then suck a lot of people in. And then, usually after several years and a large number of followers, the rug is pulled out and the CONFIDENCE and TRUST is used to mislead and divert a lot of well intending ones.

We of the Lighted Brotherhood find it much more productive to give you each the tools and insights you need to then learn to go within and find YOUR OWN answers. In essence, YOU each should be efforting toward becoming YOUR OWN guru, rather than relying upon others to connect on your behalf.

This is not a popular method of teaching for the masses because it requires great personal responsibility and discipline. However, you each will eventually take the next step forward and realize that YOU have to take the step for yourself. All of the teachers you encounter along the way, who have gone before you, can talk to you, tell you how they did it, and give you insights and recommendations on how best to proceed, but, in the final analysis, it is still YOU who are responsible for YOUR OWN spiritual growth and understanding. Much like with young children learning to walk, parents (teachers) must eventually let go and allow their children to walk for themselves—bumps and bruises expected.

You ones are at a time wherein we wish to emphasize greatly the importance of learning to recognize and utilize your own inner connection to Source. Be not surprised—if you choose to undertake this simple, yet effective, exercise of sitting quietly and contemplating your place in the universe—when a MYRIAD of distractions keep you from accomplishing this. There are many dark entities who do not wish for you to awaken to the spiritual potential within you, and the distractions are often in direct proportion to the fears and beliefs you hold within. This is to say that, the more you doubt yourself, the more distractions you will likely have.

THE KEY IS PERSISTENCE. In time, with persistence, you will begin to notice the “coincidences” along the way. If you are one who is running into a lot of distractions and such, then simply look upon the distracting event as a CONFIRMATION that you are on the right track.

When the scribe who is now penning this message first started writing in this manner, many years ago, the phone would almost always ring a few minutes after the message was started. Instead of getting upset by the “distraction”, the phone ringing was viewed as a confirmation that what was being written was indeed important and “for real”. Eventually the distraction of the phone stopped, and though there always seem to be new ones, there also has been cultivated an awareness wherein various confirmations, synchronicities, and “coincidences” are consciously recognized as the Guiding Hand of Higher Energies at work.

Be diligent in your search for greater Understanding and Knowing—and the rewards you seek WILL come. Anything TRULY worth doing will be challenging and cause you to stretch.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Light of Creator God—The One Light. May you each find within you your unique personal conscious connection to Creator Source—God. Blessings and peace, Salu.

Two Millennia Of Prophecy Collected Together In One Book

As sometimes happens, I received a complimentary copy of a book called: WHY THE END? TWO MILLENNIA OF PROPHECY AND ITS FRUITLESS ATTEMPT TO AWAKEN HUMANITY by "J. T. Revelator". The book arrived with an enclosed note saying: "Please accept this...as a gift of appreciation for your many years of bringing truth to print" and there was also included ordering information.

The book sat for awhile, with so much else to do. Then I started to glance through it as time would permit. No matter what page I opened the book to, there was something provocative and maybe a bit haunting due to the nature of prophetic writing, often full of symbolism and vivid visions.

However, I think what really made my admiration grow was the array of ones who were included among the prophetic quotations. Someone did a lot of work to compile all this!

Besides quotes from the Bible, Hopi prophecy, and other major references, some of the gifted seers include ones you may be familiar with—such as Nostradamus, Edgar Cayce, Jeane Dixon, Paul Solomon, Lori Toye, or Gordon Michael Scallion. But many, many others who have been included are obscure and much in need of being brought back into public awareness at this time—such as Abbess Hildegard of Bingen (1098-1179), St. John Capistran (1385-1456), Paracelsus (1493-1541), Mother Shipton (1488-1561), Jane Le Royer (18th Century), Mitar Tarabic (1829-1899), Mary Summer Rain, and even General George McClellan (Chief of Union Army) and Mahatma Ghandi—among many others whose comments make for most interesting reading and provocative contemplation.

Remember that many of the largely unknown personages were ones of great abilities who presented a tremendous threat to the ruling dark elite of their day, and thus were suppressed and often "eradicated" through quite gruesome means—just as is done in more sophisticated ways today.

Whoever compiled this volume deserves much praise for the depth and breadth of research undertaken. There is a tremendous array of topics covered and organized into about 30 chapters.

Fallen Angels And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"?

Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

That is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text cherished by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church Fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

Elizabeth Clare Prophet examines the controversy surrounding this book and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. She demonstrates that Jesus and the apostles studied the Book of Enoch, and tells why Church Fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels.

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

If you don't want your view of life to be transformed, then steer clear of this book.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to be who we really are, to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

So You Want To Plant A Garden? p.39

4/3/01 RICK MARTIN

It's the time of year to get our hands dirty—and I don't mean spring housecleaning! Mother Nature begins to wake up from her winter sleep and it's time to start planting. Whether it be vegetables, fruit trees, berries, roses, other flowers, whatever your taste, now is the time to get started. And that's the key—getting started.

For some of us really serious gardeners, we're already well into the growing season and, with each lengthening day, we have an array of small seedlings hatching and growing in protected places, and almost ready for planting in the garden beds we're already preparing. We wouldn't have it any other way.

Over the years there has been one exceptionally superior source of information and inspiration about all matters related to working conscientiously with the ways Nature prefers to grow things. That is the magazine called Organic Gardening, which has been around since J.I. Rodale founded it in 1942, and is presently headed by the third generation of the founding Rodale family. Today I had the distinct pleasure of speaking for awhile with the very busy President and Editor of Organic Gardening, Maria Rodale, on our mutually favorite subject.

Maria is a delight to talk with and wastes no time getting right to the core of the sometimes quite complex issues that lead to balance in working with Mother Nature. Like the kinds of situations we must often handle with The SPECTRUM, she finds that some readers want “pure” organic gardening information and they become irritated when their tranquility is rocked because she insists upon covering the Larger Picture

What Would We Do If There Was No Food?

There was a bittersweet snapshot (one of many) drawn in the 1970s by the great cartoonist on scientific subjects, Sidney Harris. It showed two guys in the Big-J Cereal Company's corporate executive offices. The boss is sitting a bit dejectedly behind his big desk. The other guy is standing there holding a piece of paper. The caption goes: "The report isn't all bad. They say that, eaten with warm milk, the BOX could provide some nutrition."

Another of his cartoons of that era freezes a husband and wife in their kitchen with a startled look on their faces. She's in the midst of setting the table for a lunch of soup; he is in front of an open kitchen cabinet with cans on the shelves. Having just selected one, he is reading aloud the label on a particular soup can. It goes: "Clam Chowder—Ingredients: clams, potatoes, water, hydrolated plant protein, sodium phosphate, calcium carbonate, butylated hydroxytoluene. FOR EXTERNAL USE ONLY." That's when the husband and wife look at each other with those startled expressions on their faces.

The point behind these snapshots of modern life is, of course, what is happening to our food as a result of "big business" getting in the middle of the food chain, between source and consumer. No wonder the whole "health food" movement took off like a rocket at that time. Now we even have organic fruit and vegetables showing up in average grocery stores, due to the overwhelming level of public demand.

The public has been able to understand that more obvious part of this subject. But other, more basic—and potentially tragic—parts of the food production equation remain largely hidden from public view for a number of reasons. And it is THAT arena we hope to illuminate a bit for you through several articles in this decidedly "green" issue of The SPECTRUM.

You can blame Rick Martin for getting the ball rolling along these lines. We wanted to share his updated and expanded gardening article in this issue, as was promised last month (if we were still afloat, which we are, just barely, as usual). And one thing led to another, as some good information "just happened" to cross our path related to agriBUSINESS versus conscientious "organic" farming. That, in turn, led to our front-page feature interview to round out this subject and tie the loose ends together.

The point is that we largely take food for granted, like we do water. But there are things going on in agriculture that are putting our food supplies into serious jeopardy—and I don't just mean that so many foods these days are devoid of flavor and health-imperative trace minerals.

We hope what we offer in this issue of The SPECTRUM helps to inform you in a way that not only illustrates the dangers and pending tragedies, but also provides solutions—things you can do to help steer the great ship of farming and agriculture back into more healthy waters. Each small positive step taken truly does add up.

Now, Congress is another matter entirely. As Mark Twain put it so well back when times were simpler: "There is no distinctly native, American criminal class—except Congress." As I write this our criminal class has just decided that THEY know how to spend YOUR money (tax dollars) much better than you do; they just stole back $450 billion from the $1.6 trillion tax cut bill that is presently under discussion—to fund THEIR own pet projects, of course.

And while they're spending your money like it was theirs (sounds like the definition of a criminal to me), I want to sincerely thank those of you who have been helping us stay afloat through the incredible kindness of your monetary donations. Think of this important "green" issue of The SPECTRUM as the latest miracle product of that thoughtful generosity.

Some of you are making great sacrifices to help us. We know that. We are humbled, on the one hand, by the trust you place in us, and we are inspired, on the other, to do our very best to bring you these "class notes" for this multi-dimensional (literally!), "full spectrum", Higher Education course. Bless you who care enough to help us share The Truth.

Speaking of which, don't miss our update on the "crisis" of California's power shortages. The plot really thickens when you compare the latest uncoverings with the old business "success formula" from Three Mile Island that was explained in our February 2001 front-page story. Meanwhile, California Governor Gray Davis delivered a brief statewide address the evening of April 5 to officially steer blame away from guilty parties and place the fix-it burden squarely on the shoulders of already buckling taxpayers and ratepayers—in typical criminal fashion.

And speaking of further Truth, that same evening's news programs "spilled the beans" on a longtime racket going on in the "sacred" prestigious medical journals like The Journal Of The A.M.A. and The New England Journal Of Medicine. It seems that pharmaceutical companies have been writing "research" papers favorable to some new drug they're pushing. Then they pay some outside doctor, usually affiliated with a medical school, to review and then sign and submit the paper as their own research work. In other words, drug company researchers ghostwrite papers "from" medical school doctors—to plug company products.

This is déjà vu for me. I wrote about that (and a lot worse corruption going on in the so-called professional scientific arenas) back in 1988, in an invited article on the problems and pressures within the so-called premier institutions of so-called "higher" education. That Truth had a lot to do with my being "asked" to leave M.I.T. shortly after the paper's publication.

Some things are very slow to change when you tell The Truth. But we keep at it anyway, with your financial help and faithful good wishes.

PUBLIC HEALTH AUTHORITY URGES INQUIRY IN FOOT-AND-MOUTH SLAUGHTER

From Leonard G. Horowitz

Public Health Authority Urges Inquiry
In Foot-And-Mouth Slaughter:
Raises Spectre On Industrial Espionage

Could the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease affecting global beef markets be an act of industrial espionage rather than Nature?

Could Tyson Foods Corporation, the world's leading meat supplier be behind the deadly slaughter?

These are serious questions being raised by a leading American public health authority, Dr. Leonard Horowitz, a Harvard graduate and the author of several books on infectious diseases.

Many Americans can recall the hoopla over Hillary Clinton having made more than $100,000 virtually overnight in the swine futures market in 1998. The tip came from James Blair, chief counselor at Tyson Foods. The Springdale, Arkansas-based company showered gifts for favors upon Clinton administration officials including former Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy. Don Tyson was one of Bill Clinton's closest friends and biggest supporters, according to grand jury testimony concerning Tyson political misconduct. Don Tyson was Bill Clinton's top fundraiser during his gubernatorial and presidential elections.

The grave possibility that the international foot-and-mouth disease outbreak stems from a Tyson plot is documented in Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse (Tetrahedron Press, 1999; ISBN: 0-923550-01-1) in which Dr. Horowitz explored little-known facts about mad cow disease outbreaks.

Suggesting a new form of bioterrorism to facilitate what past CIA Director James Woolsey called industrial espionage, Dr. Horowitz considered the fortuitous fear campaign that facilitated Tyson's takeover of the Hudson Beef Company in 1997 after the latter's stock dropped in value 35% due to an alleged E. coli contamination that was never confirmed.

The doctor's suspicions were based on a review of a U.S. Congressional Record that showed E. coli had been one of the principle germs manipulated by the CIA, and James Woolsey's statement: "With the end of the Cold War, the CIA must enter the era of economic [or industrial] espionage". In the language of espionage, French columnist Paul Javanovic explained, this meant the CIA will henceforth do many services for American enterprises which take the trouble to ask it for "help" in both counterespionage and espionage itself.

Regarding the foot-and-mouth outbreak, a similar ruse was proposed involving Tyson only months following their Hudson Beef takeover. This time it was a chicken influenza outbreak in Asia. In December 1997, the Associated Press reported that a 60-year-old woman had died of suspected bird flu. The U.S. Government immediately announced it would halt all chicken imports from China in a move to curb the spread of the virus. Days later, pressured by the media and foreign governments, 1.2 million Asian chickens were slaughtered to allegedly prevent the flu from spreading to other countries and species.

Few knew that prior to these events, Dr. Horowitz wrote, Tyson was vying to bring the Asian poultry industry into its global monopolistic fold. The emergency primarily targeted Tyson's Asian competition, mostly small chicken farmers. What was most likely a CIA-directed outbreak conveniently required the annihilation of Tyson's competitors. That would have been a very effective, albeit immoral, industrial espionage operation.

On March 15, 2001, USA Today reported that Tyson Foods stands to gain most from the current foot-and-mouth disease problem. They had four times tried to purchase America's leading beef supplier IBP Corporation, most recently for $3.2 billion, or $30 per share of stock valued at only $24.11. The international slaughter of cattle, the article said, was sure to reduce IBP profits, making Tyson's offer even more appealing.

Dr. Horowitz, in support of the British Farmers for Action, is calling for an immediate halt to the slaughter of uninfected herds, and an investigation by the British government officials into the possibility that the entire foot-and-mouth disease outbreak was premeditated.

Most likely all of you thoughtful SPECTRUM readers have entertained an ample array of suspicions about the sudden appearance of this foot-and-mouth epidemic. And since Dr. Len is no stranger to these pages, we wanted to share with you his possible scenario about what may be going on.

There's nothing to preclude multiple reasons behind this event. Another hypothesis is along the lines that the foot-and-mouth extermination campaign is a cover for something more serious affecting the animals—like mad cow disease.

The following presentation is equally as important as Dr. Len's above, and the introductory editor's note bears thoughtful consideration. This is brought to us courtesy of another SPECTRUM friend, David Icke.

UK FOOT-AND-MOUTH "CRISIS"

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 3/25/01: [quoting]

The Untold Story From Educate Yourself <http://educate-yourself.org>

Editor's Note: As the following article by Steven Ransom clearly reveals, the Foot and Mouth Disease (FMD) "epidemic" is a manufactured crisis. It is yet one more in a series of orchestrated and planned events—such as the West Coast electrical power "shortages" and the "epidemic" of school shootings—designed to stampede the public into compliance with ever tightening government control over our lives through fear and hysteria.

The slaughter of disease-free Vermont sheep, by government officials who have refused to even test them before destruction, is probably a trial run to gauge how meekly the American public will react to such overt acts of totalitarian control. And this for a disease that FMD expert Abigail Wood says "is as serious to animals as a bad cold is to human beings".

In the past decade, the government prevented farmers from holding large stores of grain and seed, and now they actively destroy healthy sheep. These measures, along with the additional "catastrophies" yet to be sprung upon us, will drive prices up at a time when the stock market (and the economy/employment) are going down.

The darkening clouds of the New World Order takeover agenda are steadily drawing closer in America and around the world. The most helpful thing you can do is to bring this awareness to others and to prepare to live independent of "the system" as soon as possible.

Introduction From David Icke
(<http://www.davidicke.com>)

Some months ago, a friend was told by a Member of Parliament's wife that something was going to happen before the end of March that would stop the movement of people around the UK. Now the Foot-and-Mouth "crisis" is doing just that. A coincidence?

Foot-and-Mouth is being used as the HIV of the animal world, and hour after hour the BBC and other ignorant UK broadcasters are bombarding the public with fear stories about a "catastrophe" while access to the countryside and at least many sacred sites is banned. And all for a disease that 95% of animals recover from in a couple of weeks. Why?

Please e-mail the following article to everyone you know and particularly every UK television and radio station you can.

Thank you, David Icke

Foot-And-Mouth: The Management Of A Pseudo-Crisis

By Steven Ransom
Credence Publications (3/25/01)

THE SCARY HEADLINES

Over this last week, international television and radio news bulletins have brought world audiences graphic reports of an encroaching pestilence. The dreaded and highly infectious livestock disease known as “foot-and-mouth” or FMD has returned to British shores.

The globe is being treated to round the clock reports on “the extent of the FMD nightmare”. Mounds of destroyed cattle, gruesome pyres burning through the night, ashen-faced reporters delivering the latest outbreak statistics, people being warned to stay away from the countryside: “As well as being airborne, the foot-and-mouth virus can adhere to car tires. Do not venture into the countryside unless absolutely necessary” warned the BBC on the Monday, 26 Feb, 10 o’clock evening news. The same feature included reports of international rugby matches being cancelled, a meat shortage crisis pending, pan shots of once-thriving but now empty cattle markets, lots of hype, lots of emotion, lots of TV batten-down specials—but, as we shall soon discover, no actual facts.

In truth, if the events of this last week have taught us anything, it is just how much we are at the mercy of misleading government information. As a result of this barrage of emotive, inaccurate hype, there are now members of the public who consider it genuinely irresponsible to hang out a strip of bacon for their garden birds, or to go for a walk in the country until this crisis is over. Despite the governmental pronouncements, the facts surrounding this “crisis” are very different to what we have so far been told.

Abigail Wood is a vet and researcher into the history of FMD, based at the University of Manchester in the UK. She remains very down-to-Earth over these latest “rampaging vicious virus” reports. Credence Publications contacted her as a result of her recent UK Times article, which began thus: “Foot-and-mouth is as serious to animals as a bad cold is to human beings. So why the concern?” Wood’s research, when taken in conjunction with research carried out by Credence Publications, makes it quite clear that FMD is not the vicious gremlin we have been led to believe.

THE FACTS

So what is FMD? The current wisdom, which we shall be examining a little later, theorizes that FMD is viral in nature. Symptoms of FMD in livestock begin usually with a temperature, followed within 24 hours by the appearance of blisters and ulcerations on places such as the tongue, lips, gums, dental pad, interdigital skin of the feet, bulbs of the heels, and milk teats. Occasionally, ulcerations appear inside the nostrils or on the muzzle or vulva. Visually, these ulcerations are the equivalent of large cold sores. The resultant illness and lameness causes decreased appetite, a drop in milk yield, a drop in productivity, and of course, increased care costs.

Afflicted animals almost always recover, usually within a week or two. Death occurs in only 5 percent of cases. And the meat is fit to eat.

For much of the 19th century, FMD was common across the UK. In fact, it was endemic. But it did not destroy farming. We lived with it. Our cattle became ill, and then they recovered. Life continued on as normal.

So why today’s scenes of mass destruction? Quite simply, it is because we are continuing to adhere to some woefully errant farming policy instituted nearly 50 years ago. [Well, SPECTRUM readers would hardly swallow that it’s “simply” for the above reason, though some bureaucratic mechanism may well be utilized as a cover for carrying out a more diabolical agenda.]

Says Wood: “The instant destruction policy was implemented in the 1950s by the UK governing bodies, as a result of growing pressure over the years from pedigree herd owners—rather than the more common meat and milk producers—who wished to see the eradication of FMD. Continued promotion of the slaughter policy by UK authorities, as the most effective way of dealing with foot-and-mouth, eventually persuaded the continent, and then the rest of the world, to follow suit. We instituted the policy, and now we have to live with the results of that policy.”

In those early years, FMD was as much a part of British farming as bad weather, poor harvests, and other afflictions affecting livelihood. But in today’s intensive farming climate, production and global reputation is everything. Because of the UK’s continued and, as we shall see, unfounded insistence that FMD is highly infectious, and must be eradicated at all costs, one whiff on the global food markets that UK herds have FMD leads quite naturally to today’s totally disproportionate scenes. [Such an hysterical response would not happen without the all important media-driven frenzy to “inform” the people of the “facts” they must be programmed to believe.]

If we are in a pit, then it is a pit of our own making. And if this latest “outbreak” is to be referred to as a nightmare, then it is a nightmare brought about by our own political and economic policies.

The early zeal for the perfect pedigree—a disease-free herd—is this same ideal not mirrored in today’s genome quest for a disease-free human race? It seems that the FMD “instant destruction” policy has its roots fair and square in the mistaken belief that all illness and disease, even those considered minor and/or harmless, can eventually be eradicated.

The cows, pigs, and sheep dying today are not doing so as a result of any illness.

They are dying entirely at the hands of man. The preliminary report on this latest FMD “outbreak” submitted by Dr. J.M. Scudamore, UK Chief Veterinary Officer, to the OIE (Office International des Epizooties) tells of 35 cases on three farms, no deaths occurring anywhere from the actual disease, but 577 animals on those farms nevertheless instantly destroyed. Should we line up our children because they are coughing?

FUNDAMENTAL QUESTIONS

With the facts at hand regarding FMD, should we not begin to ask some fundamental questions? Why can’t our vital farming community, and the public at large be given the necessary facts, and then more importantly, the opportunity to question this instant destruction policy?

But therein lies the difficulty, folks. “It would be very difficult to change it now,” Wood told us. “That would be to question the perceived wisdom of the last 100 years.” It is entrenched scientific error, and intractable pride on behalf of the UK agricultural and governmental bodies, that is the killer in our midst.

A spokesperson from the diagnostic department of Animal Health Trust who wished not to be named, stated: “The hype is all out of proportion. If the authorities just left the animals alone to recover from FMD, this would make them healthy, and immune the next time around.”

Moving on from “foot-and-mouth as common cold”, what’s all this about FMD being viral in nature, being airborne, and sticking to car tires and Wellington boots? Apparently, the FMD virus is quite choosy, being breathed out by pigs, but not breathed in by cats or dogs. It can be hosted by horses, but to no ill-effect, and humans too can contract the virus, suffering mild skin irritations.

But is this pattern of disease grounded in reality? Does it conform to a sensible pattern of disease? Or are we once again just trusting the wisdom of the day? In attempting to discover how these agencies arrive at a positive diagnosis of FMD, and to try and get an explanation for the seemingly illogical nature of FMD proliferation, it soon became clear that these questions were not at all welcome, and some of those well-worn tiresome conventional “dodging” techniques very soon began to surface.... [End quoting]

No need to continue the story. You can see where it is going next—whenever some uppity investigator starts to ask intelligent questions about the officially stated reality.

Meanwhile, no sensible person can be expected to make sense out of why they would transport suspect sheep from Vermont, hundreds of miles cross-country, to slaughter and examine them, after telling us that in Britain it is so contagious that they don't want people even going to visit the countryside where the sheep are. Wouldn't they be spreading the disease all across the hundreds of miles from Vermont to the Midwest destination point?

Again, just what might "they" be looking for in these animals, disguised as a foot-and-mouth emergency? Perhaps if we knew the answer to that one, there'd be a REAL panic! If the opposite is true—and nothing is seriously wrong with these animals, but they're being slaughtered to create an "emergency"—then you and I both know who ought to be locked-up for a very long time.

COUNTDOWN TO THE SUMMIT OF THE AMERICAS: PROTEST THE FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Americas: Protest the Free Trade Agreement of the Americas (FTAA)

Anti-summit activists will pay minister a visit.

Repercussions of the FTAA + a great way to get around the mainstream media ban on truth + Quebec Solidarity => Wear a scarf April 2 + #1 most censored story: corporatizing water worldwide + International Day for Forests and Against Free Trade + Anarchists Claim Responsibility for Seattle Earthquake—This compilation is also available from <http://www.cybernaute.com/earthconcert2000/CountdownSummit.htm>

Hello everyone,

Make no mistake: the proposed Free Trade Agreement of the Americas (FTAA) to be rubberstamped in Quebec City by 34 "heads" of states, is in fact a repeat of the failed attempt to impose on the entire world the infamous Multilateral Agreement on Investments (MAI) that was derailed in Seattle. Over 60,000 demonstrators are expected to come to Quebec City, where they will face a small army of 5,000 policemen in full riot gear and a formidable, almost impregnable barrier erected around the posh hotels and congress center to "protect" the leaders and their bureaucratic cohorts from being inconvenienced by those protesting the corporate globalization and wholesale destruction of the planet. Total cost of this police operation: $70 million for the Canadian taxpayers.

There is much to be said about all this, and I intend to revisit this issue before, during, and after the summit, as this is a major challenge and important round in the battle to prevent the world from further slipping into what could be called "extremist capitalism" and the domination of the world by corporate interests.

Thanks for passing this on to others,

Jean Hudon

On the one hand, the FTAA is likely to become a reality, at least in the short term. On the other hand, it is refreshing to see that so many people are waking up to the noose-tightening shenanigans of the New World Order gang of would-be kings. Events like these stimulate quite a bit of awakening of the public to the truth of our enslaved world and make it that much more difficult for the next NWO trick to be pulled. The situation most feared is the awakening of the public at large.

NEW YORK IS NEXT FOR BLACKOUTS, WARNS BUSH

Excerpted from the INTERNET, 3/19/01: [quoting]

By Simon Davis in Los Angeles and Ben Fenton in Washington <www.telegraph.co.uk>

President Bush meets with National Energy Policy Development Group

The White House U.S. Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham delivers a national report on America's energy crisis; warns of lengthy "crisis".

New York could be the next American city to experience electricity cuts, the White House said yesterday, as the power crisis spreads outwards from California.

Boston and other cities in New England may be affected, but local power managers said they believed they could keep the lights burning through the summer unless particularly hot weather forced customers to turn up their air conditioners.

As blackouts in California were announced last night for the second day in succession, President Bush gave warning of critical shortages of gas, petrol, and electricity this summer. On Monday, cars crashed when traffic lights failed, office workers were trapped in stalled lifts, and thousands of homes were plunged into darkness as California suffered a string of blackouts.

Unlike the power cuts eight weeks ago that affected a relatively small section of northern California, this week's blackouts hit communities in the more populous areas, from Silicon Valley to Beverly Hills and Santa Monica. San Diego and the state capital, Sacramento, were also affected.

The California energy crisis led Mr. Bush and Spencer Abraham, his Energy Secretary, to say they believed blackouts would spread. Mr. Bush said: "One thing is for certain: there are no short-term fixes. The solution for our energy shortage requires long-term thinking and a plan that we'll implement that will take time to bring to fruition."

Mr. Abraham told leaders of small businesses that America was facing its worst energy crisis since the [similarly manufactured "crisis" of the] Seventies and predicted that, unless radical restructuring was brought in rapidly, the whole economy could falter as it did then.

He said: "The good news, I think, is that America's energy problems can be solved. The bad news is that the situation in California is not isolated, it is not temporary, and it will not fix itself. America faces a major energy supply crisis over the next two decades. The nation's last three recessions have all been tied to rising energy prices, and there is strong evidence that the latest crisis is already having a negative effect."

The new administration's energy strategy will focus on conservation but also on a controversial expansion of exploration for oil, gas, and coal, as well as developing existing energy sources. It is not likely to solve California's immediate problem....

[End quoting]

This announcement is 100% predictable: if the power kings got away with "highway robbery without a gun" in California (which they have), they certainly wouldn't stop there. Furthermore, look at how the public is being conditioned to allow (and then enthusiastically endorse) these controversial explorations for more oil, gas, and coal—as if there were no other solutions. And our President's family is in what black, slippery business bigtime?

Hmmm.

SEX FOR INFANTS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 3/12/01: [quoting]

More than 200 children from infancy through 16 attended the 35th annual Michigan "Womyn's" Music Festival along with 6,500 women, mostly lesbians. The children saw and heard sexually oriented workshops, and lesbian and sadomasochistic sex acts in progress. A website dedicated to the festival allowed participants to describe the types of sexual encounters in which they engaged, with many bragging of children watching them. Michigan law makes exposing children to sexual activities a crime. So far, no arrests have been reported. [End quoting]

Can anyone tell me that we aren't playing the "Fall of Rome" scenario all over again? Or is that Sodom and Gomorrah?

Go back and re-read (if you have the stomach for it) our article in the October 2000 SPECTRUM titled "The Homosexual Agenda That Is Quietly Invading Our Schools" in order to fit the above into the larger picture. Every parent of a school-age child should know what is going on here. Of course, those advancing this kind of agenda count on parents being too busy to pay attention to what the foxes are doing in the henhouse.

NORTH DAKOTA FARMERS ANGRY! CAN NO LONGER BUY NON-GENETIC-ENGINEERED SEEDS

From the INTERNET, <www.sightings.com>, 3/27/01: [quoting]

Excerpts:

Wiley was informed that his sample had tested positive for genetically modified varieties. The level of contamination was 1.37 percent, which was too much for the Japanese.

"I was stunned and sick to my stomach," Wiley said. "I finally went into the house to tell my wife we had just lost $6,000 because of a neighbor's planting decision." Other producers who sell into markets that prohibit or severely restrict the use of genetically modified crops are having a hard time finding seed.

Donald Vig, an organic farmer from Valley City, said he has talked to seed suppliers as far away as California and cannot find seed guaranteed to be free of foreign genes. "The organic industry has a zero tolerance for genetically modified crops," Vig said.

Rodney Nelson, a farmer from Amenia, is also looking for soybean seed free of genetically modified varieties. Nelson is being sued by Monsanto, producer of Roundup Ready soybeans, for growing their variety of soybeans without buying seed from the company. "I want soybean seed that's guaranteed not to contain genetically engineered material," Nelson said. "When I asked my seed dealer for a guarantee, he laughed at me..."

INDIANA FARMERS GETTING THE BAD NEWS ON BIOTECH: "WHY DIDN'T YOU WARN ME ABOUT GMOs?"

(Excerpts: Tom Bechman, Indiana Prairie Farmer, a Farm Progress Publication)

Purdue Extension corn specialist Bob Nielsen didn't mince words when he addressed the issue of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) and the controversy still swirling throughout agriculture due to the StarLink Bt debacle last fall. He warned farmers that while the long-term potential for great benefits from biotechnology still existed, the short-term fall-out could actually make life more difficult, and perhaps even less profitable, for farmers who didn't manage carefully in the short term.

When he finished his talk at the Wayne County Conservation Tillage Workshop in Richmond, IN, one farmer in the crowd was quick about not mincing words, either:

"Why didn't you tell us about all of these potential negatives a long time ago?" he questioned, sharply. "Where have you been for the last two or three years?"

"I came here this morning feeling pretty good" the farmer continued. "But now you've got me very concerned about where we're going to sell our GMO crops in the future. It's not right that you let us all get hooked growing these GMO crops, and now tell us that maybe we should be growing something else."

While Nielsen is never at a loss for words, he did acknowledge that the farmer had a point. But it wasn't just Nielsen who didn't see the controversy coming. He contended that it was all of agriculture, plus the media, and even regulatory officials.

"Six months ago, hardly anyone in Indiana even knew what StarLink was," Nielsen says. "It was barely a blip on the radar screen."

[End quoting]

Killing off so many animals and driving the farmers off their lands—perhaps there are going to be a lot of hungry people in a short while. Be sure to catch the insightful ACRES USA interview elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM for a bittersweet view of the problems being faced by farmers today—and some of their clever solutions around the purposely engineered traps.

From the INTERNET, <www.sightings.com>, 3/22/01: [quoting]

By Peter Reschke, <www.ontariofarmer.com>

Monsanto has decided to get out of the genetically modified business for potatoes. Starting with the 2001 season, the company will no longer market its NatureMark potato, the one that features a Bt gene to help it ward off Colorado potato beetles.

Adele Pelland, the company's manager of public affairs, says Monsanto will buy back any pre-commercial lead seed that growers have already purchased. Common seed, which is currently held by a few growers, can still be planted this year since the varieties are still registered, she says.

The announcement came "as kind of a surprise" says OMAFRA potato specialist Eugenia Banks. She says seed growers received letters announcing the decision a couple of weeks ago.

Although the genetically modified varieties, Shepordy and Atlantic, gave growers new resistance against insects and disease, Banks says sales of the varieties "were not very good". She says the varieties were agronomically good but there was concern about consumer reaction, which was heightened when ONE major processor, McCain, decided it would no longer buy genetically modified spuds.

Pelland played down the anti-genetically modified controversy and would only say that Monsanto has been forced to concentrate its biotech resources in strategic areas. From now on the company will be focusing on corn, oilseeds, wheat, and cotton. "We've had to scale back our activities with other crops" she says.

Shepordy had two resistance genes, one to combat Colorado potato beetles, and the other against mosaic virus, Banks says. Atlantic only carried the Bt gene against the beetles. [End quoting]

Hopefully, the groundswell of protest will continue to cause more genetically engineered seeds, crops, and foods to be pulled from the market—before it's too late. Already the damage is propagating, as other fields get contaminated with genetically modified varieties.

VOTING FOR LAWYERS VIOLATES THE LAW & COSTS EACH OF US $100 A WEEK*!

From WINNING WITH TRUTH vs. POWER POLITICS, Mike Calhoun <www.calhounreport.com>, 305-534-1362, for 3/01: [quoting]

(* applies to all public offices outside the court-judiciary)

Lawyers have become the biggest special-interest soft-money threat! Elections, elderly reform attempts are prime examples. From pothole repairs to $31 billion tobacco law fee, piecemeal reform endeavors are not working.

A lawyer-controlled legislature is dragging feet on changing a 1978 law to guarantee that the ballot you cast is the same one that's counted. Florida Statute 101.5614 permits precinct ballot box opening prior to official vote tabulation. The entire election process is jeopardized. Lawyer/judge-run Canvas Board sworn testimony has revealed the worst mischief of all as a result: ballot-switching.

The public isn't aware that at precincts ballots are dumped, counted, placed into smaller boxes, resealed, and transported (privately) to isolated downtown location where supposedly ballots are handled for first time! Common sense would dictate ballots should be escorted under lock and seal (no key at precincts) and with poll-watcher escorts to official counting location.

• Art. II, Sec. 3, Fla. Constitution (derived from Non-Lawyer James Madison's Same-Hands Separation Of Powers law passages in the US Constitution): "No person belonging to one branch shall exercise any powers pertaining to either of the other branches unless expressly provided herein."

Lawyers "belong" to the judiciary (court) branch of gov't. By secret unsigned ballot the Florida Bar was merged with the Florida Supreme Court (40 So.2d p.902; 1949). Therefore lawyers should follow the law like everybody else: they should resign from the Bar or from public office (outside of Court/Judiciary)!

Insist on Truth over Power Politics & Candidates.

Mike Calhoun, Former Dade County Commissioner [End quoting]

This prohibition is part of the U.S. Constitution even though the writer is stressing Florida. Also remember that infamous (and presently missing) original 13th Amendment which said no lawyers should hold governmental offices. Who do you think caused that insightful legislation to disappear? No wonder they run so many Perry Mason reruns on television—to try to keep us thinking most lawyers are like him, instead of the reality of the matter!

BLACK DEATH FOR TERMITES

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, March 2001: [quoting]

Think of it as the plague for termites. Introduced to the U.S. market late last year (it's been available in France since 1996) by Adventis Environmental Science of Montvale, New Jersey, Termidor kills termites in a whole new way.

The insecticide is applied around the perimeter in the home. When a termite passes through it, the chemical is absorbed into its fatty tissue. This creates havoc in the insect's nervous system, eventually killing it.

What's plague-like about Termidor is the way it spreads. "Termites are very social insects," says Karl Kisner of Adventis. As they feed and groom one another, the chemical spreads through the colony like a deadly virus. "They pick up a lethal dose just by rubbing up against one another," says Kisner.

Conventional termite baits kill only the insects with which they come in contact—and they take 6 to 18 months to do their work. But Termidor works in half the time, or less. "Regardless of colony size," he says, "we've always had control within 3 months". — C.W. [End quoting]

What do you think are the probable hazards to children, pets, and wild animals? Or the effect on other, innocent outdoor insects, especially beneficial insects such as those which help out with garden pests? We seem to be living in an age when each so-called solution ends up creating more problems due to the "wonders" of chemistry. Let's hope this one is a genuinely user-friendly solution to a pesky problem.

PERVERTED PRIORITY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 3/12/01: [quoting]

While the rest of the nation is laying off workers, Congress has provided the Internal Revenue Service with authority to hire 2,036 full-time employees this year, the Washington Times reports. The total number of employees currently working for the IRS in offices in the United States is in excess of 98,000 IRS employees. [End quoting]

What's wrong with this picture? More and more people are finding themselves the victims of a slowing economy—sometimes 5-10,000 layoffs at a time being announced almost every day from even the big-name companies—and yet we need a larger "tax police" force?!? The congressional prostitutes get away with this kind of stuff because not enough of the public bother to pay attention and let their congressional representatives know they're being watched—and about to be voted out for bad decisions!

LIGHT-EMITTING DIODES SPEED UP WOUND HEALING

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, March 2001: [quoting]

Light-emitting diodes developed by NASA to grow plants in outer space, it turns out, can generate a lot more than a little green. Scientists have also discovered that the diodes speed-up wound healing.

In a small study, a portable flat array of LEDs placed on the outside of a patient's cheek for about 1 minute a day helped heal mouth ulcers caused by cancer therapies. Now, as part of a nationwide clinical trial, scientists are investigating the therapy to treat such hard-to-heal wounds as diabetic skin ulcers, burns, and oral sores.

While laser light and pressurized oxygen are known to speed healing, their use in a clinical setting is problematic, explains lead researcher

Harry Whelan. "They don't emit the appropriate wavelengths, and the machines are the size of refrigerators." LEDs emit infrared light at up to 880 nanometers—wavelengths that are long enough to penetrate deep into bodily tissues. And because they can deliver light without heat, they are safer than most lasers.

Normally, cells get their energy from the food we eat, but cells can also use light to generate energy. In the laboratory, skin and muscle cells exposed to the infrared light grow 150 to 200 percent faster. Whelan is also investigating whether LEDs can heal muscle and bone injuries that have not healed through traditional physical therapy. — G.S.

[End quoting]

The idea behind this sounds very good. The right frequencies beamed to a body can greatly assist in healing efforts, provided the mind doesn't over-ride the energy being offered. We have much to learn about the healing possibilities from both light and sound. Meanwhile, some of that powerful knowledge is being purposely kept from us by interests who know they won't be able to drain our wallets as effectively with such simple techniques as is possible with current medical procedures.

GREENSPAN STUCK TAXPAYERS WITH BANK LOSSES

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 3/5/01: [quoting]

Chairman Alan Greenspan devised a seedy scheme to bail out—at taxpayers' expense—banksters who played fast and loose with bank funds. By George Nicholas

It is not always easy to retrace the step-by-step descent of an august, powerful public official into corrupt compromises and ultimately into criminality. But in the career of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, the events of November 14, 1990 marked a turning point, a SPOTLIGHT investigation has found

To understand what happened that day, it is necessary to know that each year the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) submits every bank whose deposits it insures to a thorough, top-to-bottom audit. As a result of these audits, the FDIC classifies banks into five categories.

Categories one, two and three are assigned, in that order, to well-functioning or moderately troubled money centers. Category four is for deeply troubled financial institutions that need federal assistance to survive. Category five is a rare classification: it is reserved for spent, wrecked banks that require immediate federal shutdown.

In the early afternoon of November 14, 1990, a staff courier delivered a file marked "TOP SECRET—EYES ONLY" into Greenspan's hands at his Fed office.

It contained the stunning news that after auditing Citibank, then the largest U.S. commercial bank, the FDIC had placed it into Category Five and urged its immediate closedown.

Greenspan knew that the entire U.S. banking system was in turmoil and close to real trouble, but the report about Citibank's insolvency hit him like a bombshell. The underlying causes of the disaster were not a secret.

Under the chairmanship of Walter Wriston, a headstrong, high-flying financier, Citibank had plunged into "buccaneer banking", transferring many of its operations to the Bahamas, where U.S. regulations and the requirements of fractional reserve banking did not apply.

Through its Nassau branch, Citibank made feckless loans across the continent, many of which inevitably turned sour. It gambled heavily in the Euromarket, sometimes profitably, sometimes disastrously. To be sure, Citibank grew fast, but much of its increased turnover represented losses rather than real gains.

The law now required that upon receipt of the FDIC's audit, Greenspan initiate the federal takeover of this recklessly extended, insolvent commercial bank, no matter how large.

But by 1990, Walter Wriston had retired. Citibank's new boss was John Reed, a close personal friend of Greenspan and of the powerful president of the New York Fed, Gerald Corrigan. The two Federal Reserve chieftains decided to bail out Citibank—and make American taxpayers pony up the uncounted billions of dollars the rescue would cost.

"In the sense that it contravened the statutes and regulations on how to deal with a bank driven into insolvency by its own management, Greenspan's and Corrigan's decision to stage a bailout was illegal," says Dr. Aldo Milinkovich, a former treasury bank examiner.

In the sense that it secretly diverted billions in public funds into refinancing a private bank without the consent or even knowledge of the American taxpayers who were made to pay for the bailout, it was a scam, Dr. Milinkovich added. And in the sense that the operation was set up to generate billions in profits for insider investors, the scheme was corrupt, he concluded.

The two Fed bosses went about the operation as deceptively as possible.

Pretending that he was needed for "consultations", Corrigan flew to Saudi Arabia, where he went into a closed-door huddle with Prince Al-Waleed bin Talal, one of the few international investors with deep enough pockets to refloat Citibank.

Corrigan managed to persuade the Arab mogul to sink two billion dollars into a refinancing of the foundering U.S. bank. He did so by promising the prince that with the Fed's secret support he would find this outlay the "most profitable investment" of his life.

As soon as Citibank had the Arab cash, Greenspan turned to a curious maneuver. He began to drastically lower the borrowing costs of banks by chopping the two principal loan rates—known as the "Fed funds" and the discount rates—directly controlled by the Federal Reserve.

In 1991, the Fed funds rate stood at 9 percent; in six months, Greenspan trimmed it to 2.7 percent. When startled congressional committees inquired about the reasons for such drastic manipulation of the financial markets, Greenspan stoutly testified that the realignment was necessary to "preempt inflation".

But there was no inflation anywhere in sight, said veteran Wall Street loan broker Wally Merkel. "Greenspan lied" he noted. "The real purpose of his rate slashing was to enable embattled banks like Citi to borrow from the Fed very cheaply—and then to relend the same money to the U.S. Government by buying Treasury Bonds that paid between 5.5 percent and 6 percent interest."

This covert bank bailout became known among financial insiders as the "carry trade", because all a big bank had to do was to pick up its money at the Fed, then carry it over to the Treasury and relend it, in effect, to U.S. taxpayers at a secure, fat profit margin.

The "carry trade" eventually broadened into a covert Fed bailout of troubled banks.

Prince Al-Waleed bin Tulal's original investment in Citibank generated an $8 billion profit in rising bankshare prices. Greenspan acquired the reputation of a financial wizard. Everyone won something—except for the bilked American taxpayers, who were conned into financing the entire scheme, without ever being told the truth about it. [End quoting]

This is a good example of how the laws are only there to control the little guy; meanwhile the big boys play without regard for such rules and regulations. How many other "rescue missions" like this do you think the American taxpayer has conducted—of course without knowledge? As Mark Twain noted so long ago, if we were to lock-up the REAL criminals, we'd run out of building materials.

All of a sudden we are being told that human cloning is "just too complex" and, to prove the point, animal cloning is, all of a sudden, being reported to cause a lot of defects and early deaths—that haven't been reported to this point. VOTERS IN SWITZERLAND SAY “NO” TO EUROPEAN UNION

From THE SPOTLIGHT, by William Carmichael, 3/19/01: [quoting]

Another pothole has developed on the road to the Global Plantation, pitting the Swiss people against their leadership in a vote to join the EU.

The push toward the Global Plantation, in which national sovereignty disappears, took another serious hit during the first week of March when the Swiss appeared to have overwhelmingly rejected proposals to start immediate negotiations to join the EU.

Exit polls in a March 4 referendum showed 78 percent of the electorate were against the initiative launched by the New European Movement Switzerland.

Early results showed that 22 of the country’s 26 cantons had voted “No”.

The Swiss government, parliament, and industry had opposed early talks as premature and argued that the Swiss needed more time to get used to bilateral accords with the EU, mainly on trade issues.

“The proposal puts us under unnecessary time pressure,” said Swiss Foreign Minister Joseph Deiss.

The Telegraph of London opined: “If anti-EU sentiment is as widespread as the vote suggests, the government would stand little chance of getting voters’ approval for plans to start talks in 2004 to join in 2010 at the earliest.”

It was the second time that a referendum vote has failed to bring Switzerland closer to EU membership.

In 1992, Switzerland made a formal request to join the EU, but plans were pushed to the back burner after voters rejected joining the European Economic Area, seen as a halfway house to full membership.

The Telegraph reported that anti-EU sentiment is particularly strong in the German-speaking northeast, where Christoph Blocher’s nationalist Swiss People’s Party draws the most support.

The Swiss are angry that the EU is putting pressure on them to share information on so-called tax dodgers from EU countries who deposit undeclared earnings in Swiss bank accounts. They say it would mean the end of banking secrecy—one of the pillars of the Swiss financial sector.

The Swiss and the American IRS have already established what is called a “working relationship”, but it is not all-inclusive and European countries have not extended the same courtesies.

The Swiss also considered that the EU was “interfering” in their neighbor’s sovereign affairs in its treatment of Austria when nationalist Joerg Haider’s party won a share of the government in the 1999 elections.

Television exit polls showed that while 80-90 percent of German-speaking Swiss rejected the EU, more than 55 percent of French speakers—who are generally more pro-European—also voted “No”. [End quoting]

If this was a test of people’s receptivity toward the New World Order, then the engineers better get back to the drawing board. Or put another way, the Swiss people should expect some “things” to “happen” which “help” them to not just see the value of joining the EU, but induce them to DEMAND to join it!

The same machinery has worked for a very long time. That is, behind every important decision that the public thinks they are making is some well orchestrated events of mind control to induce them to make the decision desired by the controllers.

And while we’re on the subject of such persuasion mechanisms, how about this, which is the more “blunt instrument” approach:

EURO-COURT OUTLAWS CRITICISM OF EU

From The Spectator for December 2000, by Ambrose Evans-Pritchard in Brussels: [quoting]

Now It’s Blasphemy To Mock EU

The European Court of Justice ruled yesterday that the European Union (EU) can lawfully suppress political criticism of its institutions and of leading figures, sweeping aside English Common Law and 50 years of European precedents on civil liberties.

The EU’s top court found that the European Commission was entitled to sack Bernard Connolly, a British economist dismissed in 1995 for writing a critique of European monetary integration entitled The Rotten Heart Of Europe.

The ruling stated that the commission could restrict dissent in order to “protect the rights of others” and punish individuals who “damaged the institution’s image and reputation”. The case has wider implications for free speech that could extend to EU citizens who do not work for the Brussels bureaucracy.

The court called the Connolly book

“aggressive, derogatory, and insulting”—taking particular umbrage at the author’s suggestion that the Economic and Monetary Union was a threat to democracy, freedom, and “ultimately peace”.

However, it dropped an argument put forward three months ago by the advocate-general, Damaso Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer, which implied that Mr. Connolly’s criticism of the EU was akin to extreme blasphemy, and therefore not protected speech.

Mr. Connolly, who has been told to pay the European Commission’s legal costs, said the proceedings did not amount to a fair hearing. He said: “We’re back to the Star Chamber and Acts of Attainder: the rights of defendants are not respected or guaranteed in any way; the offence of seditious libel has been resurrected.”

Mr. Colomer wrote in his opinion last November that a landmark British case on free speech had “no foundation or relevance” in European law, suggesting that the European Court was unwilling to give much consideration to British legal tradition.

Mr. Connolly now intends to take his case to Europe’s other court, the non-EU European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg.

SUNSPOT COUNT HAS JUMPED TO 339

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 3/27/01: [quoting]

By Mitch Battros, producer of Earth Changes TV, <www.earthchangesTV.com>.

Those of you who have been following Earth Changes TV over the years have known of the sunspot/extreme weather connection. NASA now openly confirms such a Sun-Earth equation.

Today's sunspot count has risen to 339. Most would agree we have passed the known 11-year cycle "apex" named "Cycle 23". This would suggest we are not in your typical 11-year cycle. I would further say we are not in a known 22 or 1200 year cycle. I believe we are witnessing what I call a "Mega Cycle". This cycle could be every several thousands of years (exact number unknown).

If this is so, it would match what our ancestors have said thousands of years ago when they were describing the current times. Science is just catching up to ancient texts. "We must know the past, to understand the present, which will tell us of our future."

Equation: Sunspots => Solar Flares => Magnetic Shifts => Shifting Ocean and Jet Stream Currents => Extreme Weather.

Watch for "record breaking" weather within the next 48 hours. Expect X-Class, M-Class, and C-Class solar flares to occur. Also watch for extraordinary geomagnetic storms and probable auroras. [End quoting]

Of course this most important solar activity is largely kept out of the evening news programs—unless it is so widespread that mention must be made. The recent "red sky" aurora on Friday evening 3/30/01 was a good example of an occurrence that couldn't be ignored, though it was so downplayed (and misinterpreted) by the media as to seem to be a non-event for anyone who didn't see it firsthand due to overcast weather conditions in their area that evening. One might assume a strong correlation between all that red in the sky (which should have been dominantly blue-green if a natural aurora) and whatever is being sprayed as part of the super-secret chemtrails project.

For those of you who have been following Geophysical Commander Soltec's messages in these pages for a very long time, it is well known that our planetary system is traveling through a high-frequency region of space (called by some the Photon Belt) that is stimulating many levels of "cleansing" phenomena—from what is happening in people, up to such large-scale things as our Sun's solar flare "sneezes". Mitch is correct to postulate a long-time cyclic nature to this "extra-energetic" activity since the Photon Belt is encountered, like a car wash stall, twice in every 24,000-year cycle of our planetary system in orbiting around the larger galactic system's central Sun. Since we are just entering this high-frequency, high-energy "car wash" at this time, we can expect a lot more to be happening that hasn't occurred in a very long time of what we think of as recorded history.

ABUSE OF POWER BY SOME EMERGENCY MEDICS

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 3/13/01: [quoting]

ALERT:

I am sending this to remind you that we have to question everything. Dishonesty in uniform is showing up everywhere. Prison guards, cops, medics: Together they are not "isolated incidences". Dishonesty and corruption in any uniform of authority is inexcusable. Don't get afraid; just get determined! Learn the truth, ask for investigation, and demand professionalism for your dollars. Visualize the Power of the People! — Kay Lee

Hi, my name is John (swinston@vdh.state.va.us) and I have been a medic for the last 14 years. Presently I work in North Carolina. Do you know any of us? We respond to your calls for help when you are at your most vulnerable.

Did you ever take the time to come and meet us at the local fire station? One day you or a loved one will depend on us to save your life at a time of crisis. Do you know what you are getting? Like every profession in this country we have good and bad people. Do you know the difference? It could cost you your life.

In my 14 years I have seen things that would shock the toughest person, and at that point it is when I must perform at my best.

Some people in my profession really don't care about you or your welfare. I have seen them steal money off dead bodies of our loved ones. I have seen them not act when they should have, and the patient has died. I have seen them do the wrong thing, causing further complications to your injuries. I have seen them do things that have paralyzed someone for life.

Most of these crimes are hidden and most families do nothing to expose them. If for one second you think every paramedic in this country is honest and trustworthy, you will definitely become prey to them. Please help me expose these people. There are many of them collecting a paycheck from your tax dollars.

In Hampton, Virginia, Medics/Firefighters are deliberately withholding and delaying care to minority patients who call 911, causing serious injury and death. I am calling for an independent investigation into these activities.

In Hampton, the evidence is overwhelming that this goes on. In one such case, two African American males were denied treatment and care withheld for a documented 56 minutes while they bled to death.

The state EMS board is finally investigating this case. Please e-mail the investigator and let him know you support an investigation, and the truth will come out.

The investigator is Dave Cullen and he can be contacted at his dcullen@vdh.state.va.us e-mail address. [End quoting]

It's bad enough when criminals dress-up and impersonate uniformed people of trust, like police officers. However, a very important point is made here concerning the corruption existing FROM WITHIN these various groups. Police departments have been notorious for tolerating such internal corruption, rather than weeding it out—especially when large sums of money are involved. As society continues to break down, it only stands to reason we have to be vigilant about other groups who are placed in positions of public trust, such as the medic above cautions us about.

GLASSES FOR THE POOR

From the INTERNET, 3/5/01: [quoting]

Visionary Scientist Creates $5 Spectacles

By Robert Davis, USA TODAY, 11/8/00

The glasses that physicist Joshua Silver made look more like they came from Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry than his lab at Oxford University.

But the simple magic the funky spectacles perform is no fantasy. And the view they could give to some of the 1 billion people around the world who can't see clearly may give the Harry Potter look a whole new meaning.

"There is a need for an astonishingly large number of spectacles in the developing world," Silver says. "Most of those people will never get them."

One reason millions can't get help is that there are not enough eye doctors in the world to fit the masses with glasses. Another, of course, is cost.

Silver, 54, has tried to fix both. He has invented a pair of cheap glasses that can be adjusted to fit each individual's needs.

His story goes like this:

Years ago, the atomic physicist was urged by his wife to turn his inquisitive and inventive mind toward something that would help people. He focused on the need for glasses in developing countries.

Silver, who typically studies highly charged atomic ions, picked up a scientific trail that dates to 1879. Back then, a French ophthalmologist made a fluid-filled lens that changed shape. Injecting water between two glass lenses changed the shape of the combined lens as the water pressure changed.

But the hydraulic device was more than an eyesore; it was mounted on a bench in the lab.

Silver found a way to use modern materials in a product that could be worn—if not adorned.

Silver and his team at Adaptive Eyecare (www.adaptive-eyecare.com) use elastic lenses made of Mylar, a plastic. He uses a highly refractive silicone oil between the lenses instead of water.

The result is a pair of glasses that can cost as little as $5 and that the user can adjust to his or her own eyes.

By dialing big knobs on the side of the frames, the user can bring each lens into focus for each eye. The range of the glasses is minus-6 to plus-6 diopters.

The glasses don't help people with severe astigmatism, a common condition that results from a misshapen eye, but they can help both nearsighted and farsighted people see better.

Once the person can see better, the knobs and the silicone pumps are removed. They can be used later to adjust the glasses if the person's vision changes or if another person wants to use the glasses.

Silver says that about 300 people in Ghana, South Africa, Nepal, and other developing countries have benefited from the glasses. He hopes to distribute them more widely beginning next year.

A prototype that looks more appealing is being made, though Silver says U.S. eye doctors won't likely be put out of business by his glasses.

But he does think that the technology could lead to the day when patients can correct their own vision problems.

"We think you can correct your own vision" he says, but he is quick to add that everyone should have his or her eyes examined for any potential health problems. "We don't think you should do away with eye professionals."

For now, the glasses are helping people in developing nations see. [End quoting]

This kind of news creates as much of a dilemma as it appears to solve a very worthwhile problem. Just like President Bush saying we need to drill for more oil to offset the current energy "crisis", we are subliminally told here that we need to supply more glasses to people who can't see well.

What about the fact that some very good techniques (such as the old Bates eye-relaxation method) have been around for a century to improve eyesight naturally, with an array of eye exercises? Who do you suppose is responsible for keeping this extremely effective information from wide public awareness?

Greed plays such a central role in the activities of so-called "modern" life and, as Hopi Chief and Spiritual Elder, Dan Evehema, cautions in his message elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM, we better start to recognize and act upon what is TRULY of value for our fellow planetary dwellers. Too much of a detrimental nature has been advanced either in ignorance of the facts or in purposeful concert with the dark ones presently struggling to maintain their control of this planet.

BIZARRE MALFUNCTION OF CAR KEYLESS REMOTES

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 3/25/01: [quoting]

Something has caused almost all the devices to stop working in Bremerton, WA. Joel Maimon of Port Ludlow first noticed the problem when he arrived in Bremerton for work Thursday morning. No matter how many times he clicked the remote keyless entry device for his car, it wouldn't work.

He wasn't alone.

Art DeCamp, service manager for Haselwood Expo Buick-Pontiac dealership in Bremerton, first realized something was amiss Wednesday afternoon when a flood of customers began calling with the same problem.

By Thursday, virtually every new car dealership in the Bremerton-Port Orchard area was inundated with hundreds of similar calls from upset customers. The outage also affected unsold new cars sitting on their lots.

The cause of the bizarre problem was—and still is—a mystery. No one so far has been able to explain why the remote keyless entry systems on nearly every vehicle in the Bremerton-Port Orchard area suddenly stopped functioning at about the same time Wednesday afternoon and hasn't worked since. "It's strange" DeCamp said. "A lot of people are really upset."

Speculation about the cause has ranged from solar flares, to the Mir space station, or possible interference from USS Carl Vinson or some other local Navy ship.

But Navy officials say there's no evidence that a naval vessel is causing the problem, and experts say such a localized problem couldn't be caused by solar activity.

A spokesman for the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, D.C., which regulates radio-controlled devices, said the agency will look into the problem if it persists.

The malfunction, which seems to afflict all makes and models of new vehicles, disappears as soon as a car is driven outside the area. Although a few vehicles with remote entry seem to be immune to the problem, the vast majority are affected by the outage.

Larry Sharrett, general manager of the Parr Auto Group, said all new cars at the group's Bremerton dealerships are affected, whether foreign or domestic.

"It's across the board" he said. "I simply have no idea what's causing it." DeCamp said remote keyless entry devices use a radio signal in the 300 to 500 Megahertz range. When the "lock" or "unlock" button is pushed on a handheld device, it transmits a signal to a receiver in the car that locks or unlocks the doors.

But in the Bremerton area "something is keeping it from working by not allowing the signal to do what it needs to do" DeCamp said.

[End quoting]

The last I heard on this, from Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program, was that about the time the FCC had almost located the source of the problem, it stopped. Hmm.

How about some secret government testings going on? Especially since similar suspicious situations have also happened in other locations, but aren't being publicized. The so-called "elite" controllers are likely testing another of their "toys" with which they can paralyze our vulnerable, electronic-gadget-dependent society through the push of a button—otherwise known as non-lethal weapons.

mechanisms and institutions are just itching to get their hands on the Internet. Any excuse that can be manufactured is fair game to attempt to suppress the free and fast exchange of information the Internet affords the common person. So far, all such excuses to control the Internet have failed, largely because so many Internet users are of a savvy nature and see the excuses for exactly what they really are.

However, we must constantly remain aware of the vulnerability of the Internet to all kinds of attacks, both of a hardware (electrical) and software nature. Should we become too dependent upon it, in an "emergency" it is even easier to paralyze than the keyless entry devices described earlier in this News Desk. Moreover, the disinformation experts have a great time working through the medium of the Internet, especially in subject areas of great importance to awakening the people to Truth.

THREE-IN-ONE CD

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, February 2001: [quoting]

No sooner had Philips and Sony announced their double-density rewritable CD with 1.3 gigabytes of storage (Electronics Newsfront, Nov. '00) than they were trumped by a triple-density CD technology called MultiLevel Recording (ML). The new 2GB ML discs hail from TDK Electronics of Garden City, New York, and Calmetrics of Alameda, California, which claim the technology requires no alteration to existing CD recorders.

All that's needed to turn a regular CD recorder into an ML version is the addition of one or two inexpensive chips. Although ML-equipped drives retain read and write backward-compatibility with conventional CDs, discs recorded in the ML format aren't playable on today's CD drives. That's because the marks on the discs vary in length but have the same reflectivity. ML recorders create roughly uniform marks but with varying levels of reflectivity. So in the same space where either a zero or one is stored on a regular CD, the ML process stores values from zero to eight or more, increasing storage capacity within the same surface area of a 4.72-inch disc.

Because the technology is chip-based, ML drives will cost little more than conventional CD-RW hardware. And ML-recordable discs will maintain the same cost-per-megabyte ratio of today's recordable and rewritable blank CDs. At ML's launch later this year, TDK and Verbatim will offer ML discs, and Plexor will provide the first drives. Although ML Recording is being launched as a PC recording medium, it's likely to find its way quickly into digital audio, video, and photography products.

As for double-density rewritable CDs, Philips has announced it won't offer consumer audio products. Instead, it will license the technology to others for data storage.

The rate at which our consumer technology is changing is already paralyzing some from purchasing anything—for fear of their purchase becoming obsolete before they even get home from the store!

AIN'T MISBEHAVIN'

From GUIDEPOSTS, March 2000, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

School counselor Piet Lammert was looking for new ways to inspire the students at East Belfast School in Maine when he heard about a program in which kids agree to perform good deeds and log them in a journal.

Piet had a perfect test case in mind: a class of 20 fifth graders who had a reputation for out-of-control behavior. "They weren't bad kids, just unfocused," Piet says. "We wanted to give them some direction before they went on to middle school.” He set a goal of 33 good deeds per student, totaling 660 acts of kindness altogether, over the year.

The kids took to the idea with surprising enthusiasm and, one by one, the deeds piled up: visiting a nursing home, organizing a penny drive for the local animal shelter, shoveling snow for a neighbor, taking notes for sick classmates, rescuing stray cats during a storm. Every day the kids traded stories of their latest acts of charity and the class bonded in a way neither Piet nor their teacher, Trudy Eldridge, had ever seen before.

The class reached its mark of 660 deeds before the end of the school year—and kept on going. “We lost track after seven hundred and fifty,” says Piet. “And a few kids have started their third journal already.” Nowadays it isn’t the kids, but the kindness, that’s out of control at East Belfast! —Catherine Scott

NEVER UNDERESTIMATE THE POWER OF GOD

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 3/29/01: [quoting]

A man recently told a story about the pastor of his church:

He had a kitten that climbed up a tree in his backyard and then was afraid to come down. The pastor coaxed, offered warm milk, etc. The kitty would not come down. The tree was not sturdy enough to climb, so the pastor decided that if he tied a rope to his car and drove away so that the tree bent down, he could then reach up and get the kitten.

He did all this, checking his progress in the car frequently, then figured if he went just a little bit further, the tree would be bent sufficiently for him to reach the kitten. But as he moved a little further forward, the rope broke. The tree went “boing!” and the kitten instantly sailed through the air and out of sight!

The pastor felt terrible. He walked all over the neighborhood asking people if they’d seen a little kitten. No. Nobody had seen a stray kitten. So he prayed: “Lord, I just commit this kitten to your keeping” and went on about his business.

A few days later he was at the grocery store, and met one of his church members. He happened to look into her shopping cart and was amazed to see cat food. Now this woman was a cat hater and everyone knew it, so he asked her: “Why are you buying cat food when you hate cats so much?”

She replied: “You won’t believe this” and told him how her little girl had been begging her for a cat, but she kept refusing.

Then a few days before, the child had begged again, so the Mom finally told her little girl “Well, if God gives you a cat, I’ll let you keep it.”

She told the pastor “I watched my child go out in the yard, get on her knees, and ask God for a cat. And really, Pastor, you won’t believe this, but I saw it with my own eyes. A kitten suddenly came flying out of the blue sky, with its paws outspread, and landed right in front of her!”

Never underestimate the Power of God!

Perhaps we should keep this suggestion in mind as we go about our day—especially when we come up against those seemingly impossible challenges that life brings every so often.

Skolnick's Report On Crooks In High Places

Editor's note: Once again Sherman Skolnick and his well-earned resources share some astonishing information that is "just a bit" at odds with the controlled print & broadcast news media's tall tales. In fact, some of Sherman's stuff is too hot for frightened media "professionals" to even consider running—as you'll read below.

APRIL 2001 SHERMAN H. SKOLNICK

(skolnick@ameritech.net)

(<http://www.skolnicksreport.com>)

Marc Rich—Swindling
The Pope's Soybean Company
(3/14/01)

The Pope and his advisors had good reason to believe Chicago was the place to conduct business. The Windy City has the largest number of Catholic Church parishes of anywhere in America. Under Church provisions and Illinois law, the Catholic Archbishop of Chicago is a Corporation Sole. A little-known one-man corporation is not the usual image, however, of big business. And the Archbishop of Chicago has much more power than just any Archbishop.

He is also the treasurer for Church funds from the entire western hemisphere. Traditionally, such huge cash flow was deposited in the Continental Bank of Chicago.

For many years, one of the largest stockholders of the bank was Walter Cummings, Jr., who was a "man of trust" for the Church—that is, trusted to secretly handle the Church assets. And Cummings, also for many years, was the chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, 7th Circuit, headquartered in Chicago and one step below the U.S. Supreme Court.

As a reality, his court was the end-of-the-line for most federal cases from Illinois, Wisconsin, and Indiana, since the high court in Washington agrees to consider only a few petitions a year. (Cummings did NOT disqualify himself in appeals involving his bank. Guess who won in his crooked court?)

When Continental Bank collapsed in 1984 (two months after I accurately publicly predicted it), judge Cummings used his huge influence as a banker-judge to quietly warn local lawyers not to try to get wealthy by suing his bank, on behalf of other stockholders, for plainly evident mismanagement and bank fraud.

As exclusively then detailed by me, the Japanese mafia, the Yakuza, led the "run" on the bank's holding company, where they had been falsely informed their twenty billion dollars of flight capital would be in a "bank of deposit". Unlike actual banks, bank holding companies are not insured "banks of deposit". To appease the oriental underworld, several divisions of the bank were turned over to the Yakuza. In later years, Bank of America, reportedly largely owned by the Yakuza (jointly with the Jesuits and the Rothschilds), took over Continental Bank.

For years the Vatican-owned department store chain, Carson Pirie Scott & Co., had been headquartered in Chicago. And Vatican-owned Hines Lumber, a giant in its field, was reportedly owned or linked to Vatican enterprises. Commonwealth Edison, the electric monopoly headquartered in Chicago, is one of the largest power firms greatly dependent on nuclear facilities. A government report showed that the Dutch Catholic financial octopus, Robeco, owned by the Vatican, is one of the largest owners of Commonwealth Edison. A federal law forbids a foreign power (like the Vatican) to own nuclear facilities in the United States. A Chicago researcher who complained about this had her electric shut off arbitrarily. (Lots of details; scroll down our website to "The Electric Scandal".)

The Vatican found comfort in the fact that the Chicago Board of Trade has been, almost all its years, controlled by the Irish Catholic aristocracy, jointly with the Vatican's financial partners and advisors, the Rothschilds. These were people who understood things and took actions on their own, not as part of the common people. And their acts and doings are not to be blamed on ordinary Irish Catholics collectively.

So the Vatican had good reason to believe they could succeed in becoming a major competitor in the soybean business in the U.S., in a place the Pope thought to be friendly to the Vatican's interests. What the Vatican and their soybean executives did NOT know or understand is the operation of worldwide criminal Marc Rich.

Real name Reich, Rich laundered huge illegal flows of cash masquerading as soybean trading in Chicago. Clandestine gold deals for the American CIA were disguised by Rich and his gang as soybean deals, and conversely, soybean trading disguised as smuggled gold deals.

A principal partner to Marc Rich and his pirates has been the family of George Herbert Walker Bush—that is, the Elder Bush and his sons, George W., Jeb, and Neil. As shown by secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records, the Bush family laundered the proceeds from worldwide illegal dealings through a joint account with the Queen of England, through the bank owned by the British monarch, Coutts Bank London. (Visit our website series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush" with documentation there.)

Ferruzzi Finanziaria S.p.A., the agro-holding firm, was run by what some called a wizard, Raul Gardini, who had married the daughter of the firm's founder, Serafino Ferruzzi. Their operation in the U.S. was called Central Soya Co., of Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and Ferruzzi U.S.A., Inc., with principal offices in Louisiana. Those who understood business realized Ferruzzi was actually owned and supervised by the Vatican Bank, and by the Vatican Bank Chief, Bishop Paul Marcinkus, who originally once ran a Church in the mafia enclave of Cicero, adjoining Chicago, and was the dominant force in First National Bank of Cicero.

The Italian firm was getting a bigger and bigger presence in the soybean markets, the Chicago Board of Trade. Fair and square, following the exchange rules, Ferruzzi had cornered the market in 1989 when there was a drought expected. There was a shortage of soybeans. Ferruzzi's main competitors included Cargill, the highly secretive, privately owned firm, headquartered in Minnesota. Cargill conducted a great deal of clandestine business through the U.S./French/Israeli espionage-linked Bank of Credit and Commerce International, BCCI, interlocked with the secret dirty dealings of Marc Rich.

Another Ferruzzi competitor was Archer-Daniels-Midland, the highly political firm headquartered in Illinois. A principal of the firm, Dwayne Andreas, should have gone to prison in the Watergate affair for laundering funds for the Nixon Whitehouse. (From 1995, ADM was accused of price-fixing certain of their items, not soybeans, and their top management has been found guilty and sentenced to federal prison.) ADM is the sponsor of several TV network commentary programs. So the monopoly press tells us little, if anything, about the crimes of ADM.

In view of the circumstances in 1989, Cargill and ADM, in soybean contracts with Ferruzzi, had taken a wrong position. To fill orders, both domestic and foreign, Cargill and ADM would have to come to terms with Ferruzzi, who bet heavily in opposition to them. The Pope's firm rightfully could and would push them into default. Under the terms of the commodity exchange contracts, their failure to make good would mean that Ferruzzi would own them, since the contracts were in such large amounts.

To save themselves, Cargill and ADM reportedly had a malign influence on the Chicago Board of Trade. The then Chairman of that commodity exchange, by Emergency Resolution, July 11, 1989, changed the rules in the middle of the game. Ferruzzi was ordered to drop most of their position in soybeans.

Ferruzzi brought a suit seeking injunction against the Chicago Board of Trade in Chicago's highly corrupt federal district court. (Ferruzzi Trading International, et al., vs. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, No. 89 C 5469.) The case was assigned to Chicago U.S. district judge James B. Zagel, a close crony of former Illinois governor Jim Thompson.

(In November, 1994, on our one-hour public-access cable TV program, we demonstrated how "Big Jim", as he is called, and his circle are kingpins in the "China White" high purity heroin smuggling into Chicago through small suburban airports. In later years, through interviews, we found out that Zagel, through "Big Jim", is reportedly tied to Marc Rich. Big Jim has been Chairman of the worldwide lawfirm, headquartered in Chicago, Winston & Strawn. According to our TV show, they have an inner secret unit, not actually in the "law business", transacting smuggling in contraband such as dope. This, through Switzerland, home-base of Marc Rich.)

Disregarding the law and the facts, judge Zagel was not about to let Ferruzzi default Cargill and ADM, and Ferruzzi end up owning their business. The judge, with little fanfare, arbitrarily denied the injunction. Ferruzzi was forced to dump their contracts and positions on soybeans. Thousands of farmers were ruined, some bankrupted, some committed suicide.

How did this happen? How could it be that, at a time of soybean shortages, with not enough to meet domestic demand and for export, soybean prices collapsed instead of going up?

In the U.S. District Court in Chicago was brought a purported class-action lawsuit on behalf of angry farmers (American Agriculture Movement, Inc., et al., vs. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, case No. 89 C 8467). It was assigned to Chicago federal district judge George M. Marovich, a long-time banker whose bank, South Holland Trust & Savings Bank (in a Chicago south suburb) was a correspondent bank of Continental Bank of Chicago, mothership at the time of the commodity markets and the Chicago Board of Trade.

Presidential campaigns are planned four or more years in advance. Hillary Rodham Clinton was linked to a group of bankers, lawyers, and others from Fayetteville, Arkansas and elsewhere in that state. The Chicago Board of Trade was part of a money laundering apparatus, orchestrated by Marc Rich and his gang, washing illicit funds, such as from dope, for the 1992 presidential campaign of Bill Clinton. Such as, washing dope money from the CIA/

George Herbert Walker Bush/Ollie North/Bill Clinton operation through the Mena, Arkansas Airport. Funds transferred through Garfield Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, a principal owner of which has been defrocked, ex-convict Congressman Dan Rostenkowski. From there the funds were sent through the Chicago Board of Trade and Chicago Mercantile Exchange, with the connivance of Marc Rich, disguised as soybean dealings.

As a result of investigating the foregoing for my weekly one-hour television show, I and an associate of mine, Joseph Andreuccetti, were placed on Hillary Rodham Clinton's "enemies list" to be arbitrarily hounded and harassed by her Gestapo—doing dirty tricks to try to stop us. We detailed a number of these illegal things happening to us as a result of being on her "enemies list". The undisputed details are a matter of court record in Sherman H. Skolnick and Joseph Andreuccetti, plaintiffs, versus Hillary Rodham Clinton et al., defendants, case No. 96 C 4373, U.S. District Court in Chicago, assigned to the selfsame Judge George M. Marovich.

Here are some excerpts from the undisputed court records:

- "That the financial interests of defendant Hillary Rodham Clinton, and her law partner, Vincent W. Foster, Jr., were interwoven with certain lawyers, bankers, and agents, representatives, and investigators from Fayetteville, Arkansas and elsewhere".

- "On December 1, 1991, defendant (Hillary Rodham) Clinton, in conjunction with her business partner, Vincent W. Foster, Jr., by and through bankers, lawyers, and representatives, agents, and investigators, sought and obtained a meeting with plaintiff Skolnick. Said group from Fayetteville, Arkansas and elsewhere in Arkansas, and other places.... Skolnick was informed that said group had a financial interest in the billions of dollars of transactions in a class action in the federal courts in Chicago, entitled American Agriculture Movement, Inc., et al., plaintiffs vs. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, et al., defendants, No. 89 C 8467, in the U.S. District Court.... At a later date, Skolnick became aware that said transactions were part of a massive, illicit enterprise, laundering dope funds such as from Mena, Arkansas, to raise funds for the 1992 Presidential election campaign of Bill Clinton, in which defendant Clinton played a key role along with Vincent W. Foster, Jr and defendant Amy Zisook, chief fund-raiser for the '92 campaign."

- "Skolnick was informed that the investigation of said group showed that the presiding judge in said litigation, U.S. District judge George M. Marovich, was acting in a corrupt manner and under a malign influence, to favor the defendants therein, including the Chicago Board of Trade."

- "Said group acknowledged and confirmed to Skolnick that corrupt federal commodity regulators, such as the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, permitted and condoned this corruption, including the Chicago Board of Trade and their officials in a position to work a malign and corrupt influence on George M. Marovich as banker and judge. The following colloquy took place:

"Question by Skolnick: Do you wish to 'go public' with this, to finger judge George M. Marovich, such as being guests on my show?"

"Answer: Not just yet.

"Question by Skolnick: Or do you wish to strong-arm and blackmail judge Marovich for your own financial advantage?"

"No answer was given.

"By said acts and doings, by and through said group, defendant Clinton and Foster misused plaintiff Skolnick, an electronic journalist and court reformer; for defendant to blackmail judge Marovich, to gain a financial advantage and to cover up the defendant's massive illicit transactions through the Chicago markets and massive tax evasion; and for the purposes of defendant covering up the related matters of the 50 million dollar transfer referred to herein.... Said group acknowledged and confirmed to Skolnick that judge Marovich, individually and through persons financially associated with him, and through banks acting in conjunction with him and them, speculates in the commodity markets in the selfsame commodities in said litigation."

The undisputed federal court records detail a meeting with the other side of the soybean litigation pending before judge Marovich:

"That on January 15, 1993, certain persons sought, and obtained, a meeting with Skolnick and Andreuccetti. SAID MEETING INCLUDED A DIRECTOR OF THE CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE AND PRINCIPALS OF TWO TRADING MEMBER FIRMS. They informed plaintiffs (Skolnick and Andreuccetti) they were undecided whether they wanted to appear as guests on Skolnick's public-access cable-TV program Broadsides, in which Andreuccetti assists in the production and distribution.

"During the meeting, the following took place, with Skolnick asking the questions, Andreuccetti observing, and a director of the Chicago Board of Trade answering:

"Question: In the case against you, American Agriculture Movement, Inc. versus The Board of Trade of the City of Chicago, is it true judge Marovich was somehow corrupted?"

"Answer: Yes, it cost us 62 million dollars between the judge and those in the appeals court.

"Meaning to be understood by said director, and was so understood by plaintiffs, that it included judges James B. Zagel and Joel M. Flaum among others.... Thereupon, a trading firm member principal reached across the table and said to the director of the Chicago Board of Trade: You shouldn't be telling him (pointing to Skolnick). Whereupon the Chicago Board of Trade director answered.

“Answer: I am telling him (meaning Skolnick) because he probably already knows and it is bound to come out and we’re all going to be blackened. You (referring to the principal of the trading firm member) know we had to do it.

“Further question by Skolnick: Are you confirming you paid off the judges, including judge Marovich?

“Answer Yes.

“Meaning to be understood by the director, and so understood by plaintiffs, that the bribery included judges Zagel, Flaum, Ripple, and Eschbach. At a later date, Skolnick found out that said group at said meeting used the happening of the meeting to blackmail a financial advantage of CFTC and Marovich.”

Note: By the year 2001, judge Marovich has become a senior district judge. Judge Zagel still sits in the U.S. district court. Ripple is still a judge on the federal appeals court where judge Flaum has become the chief judge. Eschbach is no longer there.

Further excerpts from the undisputed federal court records in case No. 96 C 4373:

“Whereupon, in July, 1993, defendant Clinton, by and through directors and officials of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, sought and obtained a series of meetings with Skolnick and Andreuccetti, as follows. On July 14, 1993, in the presence of those officials and directors, and an Exchange security official, Andreuccetti pushing Skolnick in his wheelchair, plaintiffs were escorted around the entire floor of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, during a trading session. Skolnick was told that this was the first time a person in a wheelchair was on such a tour. Many of the Exchange’s employees stopped their activities when Skolnick was rolled past, and asked Skolnick and Andreuccetti, ‘Are you investigating us?’ and followed by ‘we watch your show’. Skolnick simply smiled and responded, ‘I am enjoying the tour.’

“Thereafter, Skolnick and Andreuccetti met with the directors and officials of the Exchange in a snack shop. Skolnick was told ‘There is no basis to you investigating and raising questions about the Merc and the First Lady and her associates (meaning Vincent W. Foster, Jr., the then newly appointed Clinton White House deputy counsel). There is no basis to it. Everything’s out in the open here.’

“Skolnick, in the presence of Andreuccetti, simply smiled and responded, ‘I am enjoying the tour.’ Whereupon there followed a luncheon with the Merc’s directors at a nearby restaurant. Substantially the same dialogue took place at said meeting also. Some six days later, Foster was found mysteriously dead, some say murdered.”

Note: Compare the July 14, 1993 date with the July, 1993 dates in our website story “Marc Rich And Others, Fingered By A Letter” detailing the tie-in between Foster and Marc Rich and a failed attempt by then FBI Director William Sessions to have Rich grabbed on the Swiss-French border.

More excerpts from the undisputed federal court records in No. 96 C 4373:

- “That assistant U.S. attorney William R. Hogan, Jr., was, in effect, the representative in the U.S. Attorney’s Office in Chicago of (1) the office of the Catholic archbishop of Chicago; (2) The Vatican Bank and Bishop Paul Marcinkus who was Vatican Bank chief up to November, 1991; (3) The Pope.”

- “Marcinkus’ nephew/godson, Christian Henning, Jr., by falsely claiming to be Joseph Andreuccetti’s business partner, caused Andreuccetti to be defrauded of many millions of dollars as hereinafter stated.... Yet, at a time of soybean shortage, because of this corruption, soybean prices went down when they should have gone up. As a result of the corruption, thousands of soybean farmers were ruined, some bankrupted. Another result of the judicial corruption, Ferruzzi lost upwards of a billion dollars and the chief of their holding firm, Raul Gardini, who had married into the Ferruzzi family, and was considered a wizard, committed suicide, July, 1993.”

(Later interviews with the Ferruzzi family, Milan, Italy, show that Gardini was, in fact, murdered, about the same time as the apparent murder of Vincent W. Foster, Jr. Other interviews support our position that Marc Rich reportedly arranged not only for the bribery of the Chicago federal judges, the largest judicial bribery mess in U.S. history, but the apparent arrangement to murder Ferruzzi chief Raul Gardini in the same time period as Foster.)

More excerpts:

- “It was no mere coincidence—for the related benefit of defendant Hillary Rodham Clinton, who along with her business partner Vincent W. Foster, Jr., had massive interest, the Clinton Justice Department torpedoed Ferruzzi’s informal representative in the U.S., William R. Hogan, Jr., an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Chicago. Hogan, the lead prosecutor in a group of cases against the El Rukns, a narco-terrorist street gang in Chicago, was accused by the Justice Department of alleged misconduct in the El Rukn cases in 1993 and put on administrative leave. Hogan countered that the Justice Department knows full well, but takes no action, that six federal judges in Chicago are corrupt and take bribes, including Chief U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John D. Schwartz.”

(Note: Judge Schwartz kept Andreuccetti falsely in INVOLUNTARY bankruptcy for fourteen years as part of a scheme to cover up the disappearance of 50 million dollars belonging to Andreuccetti, secretly transferred to Little Rock, in an attempt to cover up a 47 million dollar Savings & Loan embezzlement, for which Bill and Hillary Clinton are subject to federal criminal prosecution and jailing. Hillary’s family crony, John E. Gierum, who supervised the 50 million dollar illegal transfer, was one of the defendants in the “enemies list” case.)

Using inside details he knew that his bosses at the Justice Department knew about but took no action, Hogan was, using apparent blackmail, restored to his job with backpay. He knew about the bribery of the federal judges in order to ruin the Pope’s soybean business, Ferruzzi. He knew about the role of Marc Rich in the bribery of the federal judges to stop the Vatican from competing in the soybean markets with ADM and Cargill.

Disregarding the law and the facts, judge George M. Marovich refused to hear the “enemies list” case against Hillary Rodham Clinton, and others. The judge cited a ridiculous reason, that there were too many facts, dates, and details for him to consider. Hillary’s attorneys were in a position to blackmail judge Marovich not only on the bribery of the judge in the soybean case involving Ferruzzi as well, but also based on the judge’s mandatory annual financial disclosure report which shows judge Marovich owns a west suburban shopping center, Cermak Plaza, near First National Bank of Cicero.

Our investigation showed the IRS and State Revenue top officials are silent partners in the shopping center, and various gangster enterprises use the shopping center as a way to launder illicit funds. The top revenue officials assist the gangsters to evade taxes. Also note Congressman Henry Hyde escaped a federal agency judgment against him for causing the downfall of a suburban S & L of which Hyde had been a director. Hyde headed the House Judiciary Committee with power to impeach judges. Hyde was in a position to know about judge Marovich and the gangster/top government officials/judge Marovich shopping center. You guessed it—judge Marovich had the case against Henry Hyde and turned him loose.

So Marc Rich, using bribery and murder, destroyed the Pope’s soybean business in America. And Marc Rich was enabled to do this with the connivance of some in the soybean markets, the Justice Department, and the American CIA, and others. The Vatican lost billions of dollars. And a French firm took over Central Soya, a Ferruzzi enterprise, and reportedly shared the business with the Riady family, ethnic Chinese, who owned the tiny First National Bank of Mena, Arkansas, a transit point for hundreds of millions of dollars shuttled up to the Chicago markets disguised as soybean dealings.

In the “enemies list” dismissal by judge Marovich, we took an appeal which, of course, ended in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Chicago, with the same judges who were bribed to destroy Ferruzzi. Although we had a statutory right to have our appeal heard, the judges refused to consider our appeal, sent back our briefs in a box, and entered an illegal and poisonous ruling that I and my TV associate, Joseph Andreuccetti are barred from being in any federal court in Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin. The U.S. Supreme Court refused our petition to remedy this outrage.

To justify these terrible things inflicted on the Vatican and Ferruzzi, what supposed “crime” did the Pope commit? That the Vatican, fair and square, wanted to be a major player in soybean trading in the U.S.? In America, and certainly in large cities like New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles, there is a non-statutory offense, that is an unwritten crime: It is called simply “failure to bribe”. Of this the Pontiff certainly was “guilty”.

More coming on the Ferruzzi Affair.

Stay tuned.

Pardongate And Bushfraud (3/18/01)

Some continue to assert that George W. Bush is a tainted president who took the seat of power under circumstances they call Bushfraud. Some go even further, and proclaim that the Elder Bush, and sons Jeb and George W., are part of a “fascist coup”.

Others call the final hours of the Clinton Administration as Pardongate. Thus referring to a foul smell going up from some of more than 170 presidential pardons and commutations Clinton entered at the last moments of his apparent constitutional authority.

A profound consideration of the events and players involved show there are links between Pardongate and Bushfraud.

Some of the players and events:

• HUGH RODHAM: brother of the former First Lady HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON elected in 2000 as a Senator from New York.

Hillary is accused of taking massive benefits, if not actual bribes, to arrange to set loose a group of Hassidic Jews who swindled the federal government of some $30 million with a fake village development. Available to federal grand juries looking into possible corruption by Clinton as president are audio tapes and other evidence directly implicating Hillary as reputed “bag lady” for her husband, evidence which may become the basis of a federal criminal indictment of her, and naming Bill as an unindicted co-conspirator, for receiving financial benefits and emoluments as a bribe or inducement to get her husband, then president, to pardon the culprits.

As a Miami lawyer, Hugh Rodham seems to specialize in defending—if not actually arranging the affairs of—sizeable dope traffickers. He is reportedly very knowledgeable on cocaine trafficking from Colombia, involving the dope cartels as well as, more recently, the activities of the Russian mafiya combined with those illicit enterprises, all jointly with international criminal MARC RICH, likewise pardoned by Clinton.

Rodham seemed to prosper during the some 15 years JANET RENO was a south Florida state prosecutor who somehow did not see fit to run after dopers. A Florida attorney, Jack Thompson, ran unsuccessfully to unseat Reno in 1988 as state prosecutor. The monopoly press, he contends, failed to report or act on his evidence and witnesses showing Reno was subject to blackmail because she cavorted with lesbian prostitutes and that she is a fallen down drunk who assisted known criminals. His offer of testimony and evidence was likewise rebuffed by the U.S. Senate Committee in 1993 that ratified Reno’s appointment to head the U.S. Justice Department.

Those in a position to know proclaim the acts and doings of Hugh Rodham and Janet Reno were interwoven with JEB BUSH, who became Florida Governor. (Corruption knows no political party.) For a period starting about 1977, with his Latino wife, Jeb was stationed in Venezuela, where he headed or played a key role in the branch of Texas Commerce Bank owned in great part by his father, George Herbert Walker Bush and his circle of oil-soaked confederates. Only rarely mentioned in the monopoly press is that a sizeable portion of the dope money coming back to the Colombian cartels is transacted through next-door Venezuela.

From that point, Jeb reportedly became interwoven with laundering the funds of dope kingpins disguised often as huge real estate projects, some of which went under, damaging innocent investors. Jeb was also the eyes and ears on occasion of the American CIA in Venezuela. In its most direct role, the CIA acts as the petroleum police in foreign oil fields—such as for the Rockefeller family, who own and dominate most oil production in Venezuela.

In a rare documentary, CBS’ 60 Minutes program once showed how apparently corrupt CIA officials, together with those of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in Venezuela, participated in large shipments of cocaine to the U.S., supposedly to study how the dope cartel operates—as if they did not really know.

(A former espionage undercover operative, who says he did business with Jeb, has numerous details in his book and on his www.almartinraw.com website.)

Upon receiving two hundred thousand dollars as a fee, Hugh Rodham arranged with his brother-in-law, William Rockefeller Clinton, to commute the jail sentence of CARLOS VIGNALI, who had served just six years of a 15-year sentence for being the top dog in a drug ring that distributed 800 lbs. of cocaine. The jail-bird’s father, Horacio, a wealthy Los Angeles parking lot owner, donates to political campaigns. The younger Vignali is reportedly very well-informed about the dope from Colombia smuggled across Canada and entering across the border to Montana.

(Our interviews with middle-level members of the Rockefeller family, together with other data, convince us Bill Clinton is the illegitimate great grandson of old John D. Rockefeller, founder of the infamous Standard Oil Trust.)

• MARC RACICOT: his term as Montana governor ended in January 2001. Knowledgeable law enforcement personnel as well as several crusading journalists have contended Racicot has reportedly been directly implicated in the massive dope from Red China and Colombia coming across the border from Canada. Side-kick of Bill and Roger Clinton, Ollie North, and the Elder Bush, namely Barry Seal, up to the time Seal was murdered by the American CIA and the DEA to shut him up, arranged the dope traffic from Canada through Montana. This was an alternative to coming in through the southern states, such as at Mena, Arkansas, which had become too well known.

A former undercover government operative involved in the Montana operations described it as: “An aircraft departs Colombia, flies to the Bahamas to rest and refuel, and then, when a weather window opens, continues the flight to Nova Scotia or Quebec. Again, rest and refuel. Then continue to a US-Canadian border landing strip.”

The former operative goes on to detail the acts and doings of FBI senior agent Terry Nelson, of the southern Florida FBI office, who has business and relatives near Montana-Canada border: “Nelson not only recruits the law enforcement officials and politicians he needs, he can also supply data from the law enforcement arena such as the DEA NADDIS computer, Customs TECS II, EPIC, FBI, and others involved in ongoing investigations. Nelson then provides this intelligence to his drug contacts. This helps obstruct any investigation and diffuse potential problems.

“Terry Nelson, a senior agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, continues to provide his valuable services to drug cartels and others who will pay his fee, out of his FBI office in southern Florida.” (Excerpts from DRUGGING AMERICA by Rodney Stich, page 297 and page 294; as to Barry Seal, chapter on “Montana Drug Gateway”; 1999, Diablo Western Press, P.O. Box 5, Alamo, California 94507.)

Others contend that the Clinton White House blocked Canadian law enforcement from serving an arrest warrant on Nelson when he was in the area.

During the Presidential election turmoil in Florida in November and December 2000, then Montana Governor Marc Racicot was the trusted “hatchet man” for George W. and Jeb Bush. Racicot was trusted because he was reportedly part of the Bush family’s worldwide laundering of hundreds of billions of dollars of illicit dealings through 25 secret Bush accounts worldwide. (Visit our website series called “Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush Family” with attached documents.)

Racicot, together with operatives linked to Florida senior FBI agent Terry Nelson, jointly with Hugh Rodham, reportedly arranged to convey financial benefits and emoluments (called, by some, straight-out bribes) to top DEMOCRATIC officials in southern Florida to arrange for the DEMOCRATS to arbitrarily stop the recount of ballots. This was done to prevent Albert Gore, Jr., from winning Florida's essential Electoral College vote and hence the U.S. Presidency, after Gore had already won the national popular vote by a plurality of more than six hundred thousand votes. The funds for the financial benefits, or bribes, were made available through Marc Rich and his cronies in the Russian mafiya, which have joined forces with the Colombian dope cartels.

- ROGER CLINTON: reportedly solicited and received a two hundred thousand dollar pardongate bribe from the family of a convict in federal prison on fraud charges. The bribe was reportedly shared by Roger with brother Bill, at the time President, who did NOT grant the pardon.

An "honorable" crooked politician sells his office, and supplies services, as he is paid. A stupid crook takes the bribe and reneges.

Part of the Roger Clinton pardongate was the ostensible smuggling of dope into the U.S. from Southwest Red China, disguised as commodities. Roger Clinton and his cronies apparently laundered the proceeds through two Chicago commodity brokers known to be fronting for the Red Chinese dope trade, called "China White". (See the reportedly related stories on our website as to Rahm Emanuel, former Clinton White House senior advisor, more recently managing director of Wasserstein Perella & Co., reputed experts on laundering illicit Asian dealings; also, REFCO-LFG Division [Richard Friedman & Co.], a Chicago-based brokerage.)

The Roger and Bill Clinton dope trafficking proceeds are laundered as currency and commodity deals on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and the Chicago Board of Trade. Bill as President often visited the Merc, as the fountain of illicit funds. Alleged President George W. Bush follows the pattern of his crony, Bill Clinton, and shortly after being inaugurated, George W. likewise came to the fountain of money, the Merc, to put the arm on them.

Several federal grand juries have testimony available, or already under subpoena, and in some instances, as of the date of this posting, already heard, showing the following among other things:

(1) Roger Clinton may be indicted for various federal criminal offenses along with Tony and Hugh Rodham, and Hillary Rodham Clinton as part of details of pardongate. Facing being named in this as unindicted co-conspirators are William Rockefeller Clinton, commonly called William Jefferson Clinton, and his close crony, George W. Bush.

(2) Testimony and evidence related to the foregoing include the acts and doings of pardongate offenses overlapping onto election fraud of: former Montana governor Marc Racicot; Florida senior FBI agent Terry Nelson and confederates; and Florida governor Jeb Bush; and super criminal Marc Rich.

(3) To avoid federal criminal indictment, or being named as unindicted co-conspirators, some of the foregoing persons have given testimony or are offering testimony against some of the others.

Reporters of all three major news networks have already interviewed (or have sought to interview) various witnesses as to the foregoing, including those available to testify (or have already testified) against Roger Clinton. All the chief judges in charge of the federal grand juries, so far as is now known, have NOT entered a "gag order" preventing witnesses from being interviewed by the press.

Despite that, the George Bush 2nd White House has ordered the American Gestapo (the FBI) to severely threaten and harass network reporters and executives; the FBI is claiming that the media people are supposedly "obstructing justice"—for example, by interviewing witnesses fingering Roger Clinton, wherein brother Bill, along with crony George W. Bush, would be named as unindicted co-conspirators, along with Marc Racicot and international criminal Marc Rich.

An official of one of the news networks confided to us that he and his associates are fearful for their lives, in view of the severe threats by the FBI at the behest of the Bush White House.

All three major networks have so far embargoed video and audio tapes of interviews as to both Pardongate and Bushfraud. The FBI, according to the official (and confirmed by his associates), has threatened network reporters, TV and Radio crew members, as well as news managers, producers, and supervisors.

Key sources and eyewitnesses have confided in us, knowing that we have a 40-year absolute policy against divulging sources and witnesses of our data. In 40 years, as the head of our research and investigative group, I have been jailed some 8 times, wheelchair and all, for "contempt of court", for absolutely refusing to divulge witnesses and sources to state and federal authorities publicly accused by us of high-level corruption. In each instance, after being falsely and unlawfully jailed, I was later vindicated, and the judges involved were themselves sent to prison for bribery, tax evasion, and other crimes, as I had publicly accused them to their face. (Visit our website for the four-decade background of our work.)

As part of a much lesser mess, reporters of Newsweek and TIME magazines have reportedly compiled sufficient sources and records to show that Florida governor Jeb Bush and alleged President George W. Bush are part of a sex triangle with Florida secretary of state Katherine Harris, who played a key role in what some call Bushfraud. She was an instrumental player by which Al Gore, Jr., was kept from being certified as the winner of the Florida election, and hence, kept from having the Electoral College vote of Florida—Bush thus stealing the U.S. Presidential Election 2000.

Like in the infamous 1876 election that I have earlier written about, Gore won the presidential election, as did Samuel Tilden. But, like Tilden, there has been a failure to inaugurate Gore as the President of the United States.

Although both magazines have reportedly corroborated my story about Jeb Bush/George W. Bush/Katherine Harris, with her also as the reputed "bag lady" in fixing the election, the oil and dope soaked monopoly press are too "chicken" and have too many financial hang-ups to so far go with the Katherine Harris story.

Network officials and reporters have confided to us that the details in this report are known by them to be substantially correct. BUT, the press is reluctant to undermine George W. Bush at a time of impending financial meltdown.

More coming. Stay tuned.

England “Bombs” Gold Prices

Editor's note: Between pages 12-14 in last month's News Desk, we devoted a larger-than-usual space to “Gold Jitters” and other recent shenanigans going on in the gold market—and for very good reason. The Bank of England is, of course, taking orders from higher up the ladder of so-called “elite” controllers of this planet to steer the gold market in the desired direction of the New World Order's financial control agenda.

People who have been watching (and trying to make sense of) the more recent maneuverings in such markets—but who may not presently be aware of the actual dark ones running the show from well behind the scenes—are either confused and shaking their heads, OR becoming so curious about just WHAT in the queen's counting house is going on, that their puzzlement will eventually open up their awareness to The Bigger Picture.

With that in mind, enjoy the following, written by “one who knows” in a style which is as amusingly colorful as it is professionally insightful. Emphasis of some key points has been added by The SPECTRUM.

3/16/01 ADAM HAMILTON, CPA, MCSE

(www.ZealLLC.com)

On March 14, 2001, the Bank of England continued its long and bloody war of attrition against gold. Royal Air Force Harrier jump jets and Panavia Tornados roared through the blue skies, leaving terror and destruction in their wake.

Not armed with the usual laser- or Global Positioning System-guided 500-lb and 1000-lb high-explosive bombs, they were equipped with highly specialized munitions for this particular crucial combat mission. The RAF fighters, under Bank of England command and control, carried gold bullion bombs. The amount of pure gold bullion in each bomb remains classified, but the total bullion delivered under the mighty wings of the Harriers and Tornados is well known, exactly 25 metric tonnes.

Like the legendary Babe Ruth brazenly standing at home plate and pointing his bat to the exact spot on the outfield fence over which he intended to launch the pitched baseball, the Bank of England (BoE) also “called the wall” prior to the actual gold bombing. As in the past, this latest gold bombing was scheduled in advance and crafty public relations folk ensured that there would be maximum knowledge of the aggressive raid about to be launched.

Timeless principles of information warfare, handed down from the legendary Chinese strategist Sun Tsu, were fully employed pre-raid to create the maximum amount of confusion and fear for the BoE's old enemy, the free gold market.

On mission day, the BoE launched the raid, and the contract RAF pilots delivered the 25 tonnes of bullion bombs with spectacular precision. The target was a recent rally in the gold price caused by unrelenting rumors that the BoE was having trouble settling its gold obligations with physical gold.

Spiraling short-term gold lease rates, which led to the gold rally, helped confirm the odd physical tightness in the global gold markets. The nemesis of BoE—gold—was rearing its ugly head and had to be destroyed before the gold price action opened the floodgates of worldwide gold investment demand.

As the British ground attack fighters screamed toward their target at treetop level, laser designators on the bellies of the jets were switched on, and the gold rally was painted with innumerable laser dots invisible to the human eye. The computerized seeker-heads on the gold bullion bombs were uncaged and immediately locked on the bright laser lights dancing on the target. Soon swarms of bombs were unleashed, their computer heads flying them in a kamikaze trajectory directly to their destruction into the laser-designated gold rally.

As bullion bomb after bullion bomb found its mark, the resulting destruction in the gold market was spectacular, and the dangerous gold rally was shredded by the state-of-the-art munitions.

The contract RAF pilots returned home, and reports claimed that no casualties were received during the gold bombing raid by the BoE and its cohorts. All in all it looked like a successful mission in the government of Great Britain's undeclared war on gold.

But how successful really was the mission? Is the BoE employing subterfuge and intentionally misleading the gold markets?

In this essay, we explore the BoE's war on gold, the latest gold auction, and the possibility that the BoE is publishing dis-information to continue to wage the gold info-war long after the booming of the gold bullion bombs has finished echoing through the formerly peaceful free-market countryside.

As in any financial analysis, it is prudent to begin with a proper perspective on the BoE gold auctions.

The Bank of England, on May 7, 1999, announced “a restructuring of the UK's reserve holdings to achieve a better balance in the portfolio by increasing the proportion held in currency. This will involve a programme of auctions of gold from the Exchange Equalisation Account, which holds the UK's official reserves of foreign currency and gold, with the proceeds being invested instead in foreign currency assets and retained in the reserves.”

In the first place, the idea of selling something with 6,000 years of unassailable worth—gold—and buying fiat currency is, by itself, pretty ridiculous. What did the BoE intend to buy to replace gold in its FOREX reserves? A currency that has only been around since WW2, like the fiat Japanese yen, which has performed as well as a blind duck migrating in recent years? The vastly overpriced US dollar, perhaps, which defaulted on its gold backing in 1971, and is from the largest debtor nation in world history? Or, God forbid, that bastard step-child of fiat currencies the Euro, for which not even a single sovereign nation is accountable?

Selling gold to buy fiat currencies ANYTIME before Y2K, until today, is just a wacky and “out there” idea devoid of common sense. The BoE auctions were suspect right from the original stated goal!

In order to execute the “portfolio rebalancing”, the BoE stated its intentions of auctioning off gold in 25 tonne lots, in a series of auctions. At the time of the announcement, the BoE reported that the United Kingdom had official holdings of gold reserves of 715 tonnes. Her Majesty's Treasury would be using the BoE to liquidate 415 tonnes of gold, with a target gold foreign exchange balance of 300 tonnes. So far, including the March 14, 2001 sale, the BoE has sold 275 tonnes of gold into the open market since July 1999.

415 tonnes is a healthy amount of gold! Global gold demand is estimated to be between 3,500 to 4,000 tonnes per year. All the gold mines in the world are believed to dig up, process, and refine about 2,500 shiny new tonnes per year. By comparison, 1 million ounces of gold, roughly equivalent to the annual production of a mine on the scale of South Africa's Durban Roodepoort Deep, is approximately 31.1 tonnes. (One metric tonne equals 32,150.743 troy ounces.) The United States of America has long reported official gold reserves of 8,139 tonnes, although the US gold reserves have not been independently audited.

On the initial announcement date, the BoE also outlined the terms of the gold auctions. The following is verbatim from the BoE's press release:

“The first auction will be conducted on a single, or uniform, price basis. Under this format, the bidding process will be competitive: bars will be allotted to the highest bidders, but all successful bidders will pay a single price that is equal to the lowest accepted bid. It is intended that subsequent auctions will also follow this single price format, but the pricing method will be subject to review in the light of experience."

Hmmmm. Any of you capitalists out there catch that? The auctions of gold would accept competitive bidding, BUT the gold would be sold to the highest bidders not at the price they bid, but at the price equal to the LOWEST accepted bid.

As the BoE is acting as a fiduciary for Her Majesty's Treasury, which is presumably holding the public gold collectively owned by the citizens of Great Britain, one would expect the BoE to MAXIMIZE the sale price for the gold it was commissioned to sell. Why not, for instance, if the spot gold price was $275 and an entity bid $300 for 5 tonnes of gold, allow the bidding entity to pay the full price it bid? After all, a bidding entity would be happy with its bid price, otherwise it would not have submitted the bid.

This goofy Dutch Auction process is fine for bidding on beanie babies and other fungible junk on eBay, but is it proper when liquidating 58% of the public gold of one of the greatest Western nations in history?

Why use an auction process that ensures that Her Majesty's Treasury receives the lowest price possible for valuable gold? It is analogous to being cheated out of a percentage of every trade, which adds up to real money over time.

This is just ONE small anomaly of MANY in the BoE gold sales. The House of Lords and House of Commons could have a field day investigating the many failings of this illogical auction program!

While we are discussing the illogical, it is interesting to mull over the implications of announcing the whole series of auctions in advance to great fanfare. If HM Treasury was interested in obtaining the highest price for its citizens' (or the Queen's, if the British government still considers its people merely peasant subjects and not citizens) gold, why pre-announce the sales? Any large trader knows that the quickest way to eviscerate a trade is to publicly herald one's intentions. If other players know that a large trade will be made, prices will be bid up or sold down in order to ensure that the big trader receives the worst possible deal.

Imagine, for instance, if Warren Buffet held a press conference and told the world that he was planning on selling 58% of Berkshire Hathaway's holdings in XYZ Inc. Astute traders would IMMEDIATELY sell-off XYZ on Buffet's announcement, and the price of the stock would plummet on the open market.

Pre-announcing large trades, if one is a big player, is absolutely foolish at best, and downright dumb at the worst. Pre-announcing a huge gold sale, which is virtually guaranteed to bomb prices, only makes sense if HM Treasury and the Bank of England had full intentions, going into the auctions, of depressing the world gold price.

This allegation, while serious and ominous, is certainly not baseless. American Attorney and Bank for International Settlements shareholder Reginald Howe, in his landmark lawsuit against the BIS and large money-center bullion banks allegedly engaged in a global conspiracy to suppress the gold price, includes stunning comments about the original intentions of the British government. The following is from Howe paints the British government's strange series of gold firesales in a much more menacing light. Howe v. BIS et al is one of the most important documents in the long and distinguished history of gold. It is an absolutely MUST read for advocates of free markets and anyone interested in learning why the behavior of gold in the last six years has utterly defied all laws of economics and all historical precedent. (An easily portable Adobe PDF copy of Howe v. BIS is available for free download at the www.zealllc.com/howe.htm website.)

Do the stated goals of HM Treasury and the BoE make sense in light of the effects of the gold auctions? In the markets and in life, when dealing with any entity or person, it is always useful to not only listen to the words they speak, but to carefully analyze the fruits of their labors. Often men of little honor and integrity will say one thing, but their actions will betray something else entirely.

By carefully observing the fruits of their actions, the true driving forces and motivations behind a decision often become MUCH more apparent. This principle is ancient and was immortalized in the New Testament of the Bible. In the popular vernacular of today, "talk is cheap". The real goals of HM Treasury in flooding the world market with a marginal physical gold supply are much easier to discern by their fruit than from the sterile press releases and soundbytes.

We began by discussing the latest BoE gold bombing of March 14, 2001. The chart nearby highlights the fledgling gold rally, which had to be contained, and the results of the latest mission in the long vs. BIS et al, paragraph 55. It is extraordinary!

Quoted literally from Mr. Howe's complaint, paragraph 55: "According to reliable reports received by the plaintiff, this effort was later described by Edward A. J. George, Governor of the Bank of England and a director of the BIS, to Nicholas J. Morrell, Chief Executive of Lonmin PLC: 'We looked into the abyss if the gold price rose further. A further rise would have taken down one or several trading houses, which might have taken down all the rest in their wake. Therefore, at any price, at any cost, the central banks had to quell the gold price, manage it. It was very difficult to get the gold price under control, but we have now succeeded. The U.S. Fed was very active in getting the gold price down. So was the U.K.'"

Wow! Amazing information, and it further

BoE gold bombing campaign.

(Disclaimer for all you military purists out there: We are well aware that British Harriers and Tornados look nothing like the F-18s in the graph nearby, and that a precision guided bomb does not look like an AGM-65 Maverick air-to-surface missile; please forgive us.)

This graph is relatively short-term, only since last July. We use it because we employed it last week in our essay "Gold/XAU Breakouts?" where we pointed out that the Philadelphia Stock Exchange Gold and Silver Index HAD broken out short-term and that gold just breached the top technical resistance line shown in the graph. (The temporary breakout is marked by the dotted green circle at the right edge of the graph.)

In this newest incarnation, the latest BoE gold auction has transpired and gold has been SLAMMED back down into the channel as if it ran into a 20-foot-thick reinforced concrete blast-wall at 100 mph on a motorcycle.

The turn executed by gold in the day before the latest BoE auction is striking in its violence. This amplitude and frequency of the recent up and down move is greater than anything else on the graph. The trading days between March 8 and March 15 witnessed EXTREME daily volatility for the usually staid and calm gold world! Those six trading days had average interday volatility of 1.4%, compared to an average of roughly a third of that, or 0.50%, for the entire time period encompassed by this chart.

The BoE gold auctions are marked with the bomb silhouettes above. In each of the last five gold auctions of 25 tonnes, the market ALWAYS dropped on the BoE gold auction. As we discussed above, if one is a big player, telling the whole world in advance before they buy or sell a large position is the financial equivalent of shooting oneself in the foot! By telegraphing large gold sales, the Bank of England guaranteed that HM Treasury would receive the lowest possible price for its gold as arbitrageurs traded on the news and sold gold into each auction. Unbelievable!

Of all the research we have seen on the BoE gold auctions, our favorite graphs by far analyzing the situation were constructed by the renowned Donald Lindley, the highly esteemed member of the Gold Eagle Gold Forum (www.gold-eagle.com/cgi-bin/gn/get/forum.html). Mr. Lindley has been carefully watching and analyzing the gold markets for many years, and his contributions to the Forum and the gold market have been invaluable. Last year, when gold was at $290, Mr. Lindley was one of the few steadfast gold bulls who believed that gold would be pushed lower by derivatives games being played. His "Option Cube" indicated a slide in prices from $290, and he was right on the money.

Mr. Lindley has constructed a gorgeous graph for www.GoldenSextant.com, Reginald Howe's company's website, and it is readily available at the very informative www.goldensextant.com/commentary16.html#anchor10789 website. On his superb graph, Mr. Lindley has indicated when BoE gold bombing runs were announced and when the dirty deeds were actually perpetrated.

It is really interesting to note that EVERY single time a BoE auction was held, gold fell fairly aggressively—with the notable exception of the landmark Washington Agreement of September 1999, where European central bankers suddenly had light bulbs popping on over their heads and came to the stunning realization that central bank sales were destroying the world gold markets.

And who says central bankers are clueless? They are just SLOOOOOOW to grasp the patently obvious! They announced they were capping their gold sales, and entities who owed gold that they didn't have scrambled to buy gold in the open markets like men possessed. The resulting rally rocketed gold from $255 to over $320 in days.

Armed with the perspective provided by Mr. Lindley's excellent graph, it is quite obvious to ANYONE that the BoE gold sales are very damaging to the price of gold. As more information on the BoE gold sales accumulates, it is more and more difficult to accept that all is on the up and up and there are no ulterior motives from HM Treasury or the BoE.

If it looks like an intentional gold suppression scheme, feels like an intentional auctions, and the light green the tranches of the second series of gold auctions, which just finished on March 14. Boldfaced dates represent auctions covered by the period of time in the chart we discussed earlier.

The next column is the number of troy ounces of gold the BoE offered at each auction. The first yellow column shows the number of troy ounces of gold the market bid for (tried to buy) from the BoE, followed by the final gold price of the auction.

The second yellow column contains the "times covered", or the number of times that the BoE gold offered was overbid for by entities wishing to buy gold at a particular auction. The rest of the columns are explained below, after you have reviewed the table.

After a brief perusal of this raw auction data, direct from the BoE, it becomes obvious that the market wanted to buy a LOT more gold than the BoE was prepared to sell at any one time. Now, if the BoE was rational and it really intended to minimize its disruption to the world gold markets, why not sell whatever the market demands at each auction until the total 415 tonnes of unloved and unwanted gold is liquidated? For instance, in the first auction on July 6, 1999, why didn't the BoE sell the whole 4,174,400 troy ounces of gold that the gold buyers bid for? If the purpose of the auctions was simply a FOREX reserve "portfolio rebalancing" as the BoE claims, why drag the sales out for years when the market could have easily absorbed the gold much more rapidly? These are tough and very important questions.

We subtracted the "BoE Offer" column from the "Market Bid For" column to obtain the "Wasted" column. This is wasted gold demand. Since the BoE could have sold almost 4.2 million ounces of gold at its original auction, why did it hold back, deny its bidders their sought after gold, and only sell 0.8 million ounces at the LOWEST bid? Very odd indeed!

The next column is the "Cumulative Wasted Ounces" representing the total gold demand that was spurned and ignored by the wizards at the BoE. The final column converts these Cumulative Wasted Ounces into metric tonnes for easy comparison to the BoE's original stated goal of jettisoning 58% of the total gold reserves of the United Kingdom, or 415 tonnes.

Provocatively, by the fourth tranche of the first series of five auctions, enough bidders (serious high quality entities, as only members in good standing of the secretive London Bullion gold suppression scheme, smells like an intentional gold suppression scheme, and tastes like an intentional gold suppression scheme, chances are it is—drumroll—AN INTENTIONAL GOLD SUPPRESSION SCHEME!

As if what we have discussed so far is not bad enough, there is seriously damning evidence emerging that the whole BoE gold firesale has NOTHING to do with foreign exchange and is deliberately designed to artificially augment gold supply and dampen investor enthusiasm through information warfare principles in order to quasi-covertly suppress the global gold price.

The table nearby lists all the BoE gold bombing sorties to date. The left column is the date of the auction. Light blue shaded dates represent the tranches of the first series of gold Market Association were allowed to bid on England's gold) placed bids that in total amounted to 489 tonnes of gold! This number is derived from four sales of 25 tonnes each (that's 100 tonnes for all you CSCO shareholders out there) PLUS the cumulative wasted demand of 389 tonnes—net 489 tonnes of gold demanded in the first four sales of HM Treasury gold. The BoE could have easily sold the entire 415 tonnes commissioned by HM Treasury by January 2000!

If the BoE simply wanted to sell gold to buy currency without disrupting or overhanging the gold market, why not do the sales:

(A) quietly,

(B) to the highest bidder at the individual bid prices, and

(C) in the SHORTEST amount of time in which the market could absorb the physical gold offered?

The fact that the BoE could easily have sold the entire lot in four sales, with a greatly limited disruption to the gold market, but chose to draw it out, lends great support to the theory that the BoE is being used by the socialist British government to actively intercede to suppress a global free market.

Granted, over time cumulative wasted demand MAY be overstated—as a bidder whose lots were not filled in a given auction may have bid again at the successive auction—but still, even adjusting for that possibility, the general principle stands strong. Per the BoE's own records, MUCH more gold was demanded in each individual auction, EVERY SINGLE TIME, than the stingy BoE would offer. The sales have been dragged out LONG after the market demanded the 415 tonnes of gold to be sold. The plot thickens.

The second critically important bit of information in this table is the latest auction results, direct from the BoE. In recent weeks, rumors have abounded that the BoE was having trouble finding physical gold to settle its gold obligations. These rumors would not be a big deal, EXCEPT for the undisputable fact that short-term gold lease rates have rocketed to new interim highs, zooming from 1% in early January to 7% intraday in recent weeks. The current gold lease rate action indicates EXTREME pressure in the gold market. This is analogous to the U.S. Federal Funds interest rate rocketing from 5% to 35% in a little over two months. Serious disruptions in gold lease rates of this magnitude are extremely rare, and the last episode preceded the monstrous September 1999 Washington Agreement rally.

Against the backdrop of trouble in the gold world, U.S. equity markets were being torn to shreds by the awakening bear in the days leading up to the auction. Reginald Howe and the Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee (GATA at www.gata.org) were making serious inroads in the legal fight to free gold, and the whole gold world was very nervous and jittery.

The last few weeks have truly witnessed extraordinary uneasiness in the gold world. With this in mind, please go back and examine the numbers highlighted in red, which cover the latest March 14 gold auction.

First, note the "Market Bid For". In the tightest gold environment in the entire BoE strategic gold bombing campaign, the 1.8 million ounces bid for was over 1 million ounces BELOW the AVERAGE for all the auctions. The times covered (X Cov) was only 2.2x, the THIRD lowest out of all eleven auctions.

Anyone else have a funny feeling about the data the BoE provided?

Even worse, note that EXACTLY 1.8 million ounces was bid for. Now review previous auctions. NEVER has there been an auction that just "happened" to have a perfectly round number of ounces asked for.

There was only one other auction even remotely close to this, the third one. What are the odds of a perfectly round bid number in a chaotic gold market? It is kind of like witnessing the DJIA close at EXACTLY 10,000.00. It is possible, but statistically quite improbable.

As a Big-Six-trained Certified Public Accountant and auditor who has witnessed financial fraud situations first-hand, the latest auction results, when viewed in context of the whole auction series and the tight gold environment of 2001, throws off a cacophony of shrill warning sirens careening through my skull.

Something IS odd here, and we believe there is greater than 50% probability that the latest "1.8 million ounce" and "2.2x covered" numbers are nothing more than hastily fabricated accounting plugs.

They stick out of the series; they make no sense in reference to the current gold market environment; and it certainly appears that the BoE is "cooking the books" in their latest press release. One would have to be gullible enough to believe the NASDAQ has bottomed already if one's suspicions fail to be aroused by the latest BoE reported auction results.

Motive?

Simple: IF the latest BoE auction had been reported as massively oversubscribed (a high "times covered" ratio), HUGE amounts of physical gold buying would have sloshed into the gold market from all over the world and launched gold into a rapid ascent north. This would have disemboweled large money center banks which owe physical gold they don't have. If the BoE did indeed heavily understate its reported gold auction results, a massive short-covering rally in gold was averted—for now.

Of course, if the BoE REALLY wanted to maximize the proceeds of the gold sales for HM Treasury and the citizens of the great nation of Great Britain, then it would be really happy about rising gold prices for future auctions. But, as we have explored in this essay, virtually everything about the BoE gold sales stinks to high heaven and reeks of blatant market manipulation.

As American citizens, we can do nothing about this, but our British friends can. We encourage all our readers from the United Kingdom to contact their representatives in the House of Commons or House of Lords and demand an investigation into the BoE activities in the gold market. If everything proves to be legitimate, it will cause no harm for the legislative bodies of Great Britain to independently look into the gold sales. If, however, the BoE is squandering HM Treasury's gold to save the bacon of a handful of elite bankers who made stupid bets, the citizens of Britain and the Queen certainly have every right to know about it immediately.

After this latest gold bombing run, the BoE announced yet ANOTHER long, drawn-out series of six 20-tonne auctions beginning in May. The more the fruits of the BoE gold bombing raids are analyzed, the more it appears that the BoE is intentionally damaging the world gold markets and knowingly destroying the African nations that rely on gold for much of their private and government revenues.

As the gold info-war rages on, there is little doubt that the Bank of England has chosen to side with the gold shorts desperate to save their own crooked hides by attempting to perpetually suppress the global gold market.

Go With The Flow Of Your High-Frequency World

3/31/01 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in the Light of Creator Source—The One Light.

Allow for the energies to settle around you. Your planetary environment is continually shifting upward in frequency, and you need only ALLOW for the changes within you in order to match frequency with the environment—rather than trying to hold fast to what you once considered to be a high-frequency state. This can be disorienting, for you each are being “stretched” to some extent as the energies continue to come forth, bathing your planetary system with an ever increasing frequency and intensity.

Allow for change through growth. Growth IS what the soul-you continually seeks out and desires. With every day comes the possibility to expand one’s awareness of self and one’s placement in the ever evolving experience of life-force expression.

I use the terminology “life-force expression” in an attempt to bring focus to the fact that all beings, both physical and non-physical, experience—and thus contribute to—the experience of the Collective Whole. The unseen world of the “spirit” realms contributes just as much to the evolving experiences of your world as do the physical participants. The sum of the entire interaction between the physical and non-physical creates a synergistic relationship, with a balance that is optimized for soul growth-potential.

Allow for the fact that the physical schoolroom is evolving and that natural cycles are responsible for the shifts that are now occurring. You ones are NOT being punished by some mythical god of vengeance. Your world is simply entering an area of space in which the vibratory rate is quite a bit higher than what you ones have been used to. This upshifting of frequency can cause restlessness, anxiousness, agitation, and so forth if you resist the speeding up.

On a larger scale, this frequency upshifting is resulting in social upheaval all over your world. The inner stresses that many are experiencing (and will continue to experience) are due in large part to the inability of these ones to match the frequencies now coming into your planet.

The ability to match frequency depends greatly on one’s ability to freely flow energy through the body in a manner so that there is no perceivable frequency difference. This could be likened to equalizing the pressure in your ears as you change in elevation. The failure to do so will cause an uncomfortable pressure (stress, anxiety, restlessness) to be felt.

The primary reason people fail to match frequency—and thus feel a sense of chronic stress and such—is due to various emotional energy blockages. These blockages are usually self-induced punishments of sorts, most often manifesting because ones anchor themselves emotionally in past experiences of great personal trauma. Such emotionally charged experiences happen for many reasons, but a common thread will always be so that you can have opportunity to examine an aspect of yourself and grow from the experience.

No matter how traumatic an experience, you need NOT continually hold onto it (punish yourself) any longer than it takes to understand the lesson it provided to you. Many of you get caught-up in the emotional energy surges of such emotions as grief and pain and, in the midst of such overwhelm, you make a decision or choice to “never forget”. So you henceforth carry that “charge” of emotional pain as a reminder of the past. For many, to stop feeling the pain would somehow be a sacrilegious act of breaking a promise to yourself “not to forget”.

Often this condition is associated with the loss of a loved one, and is perhaps most severe in the case of a mother who loses a child. The common trait will be the “broken heart” associated with the memory. In the case of the death of a loved one, you should know that these ones who have passed DO NOT find comfort in your misery, and in many cases they try to assist you to move on and move past such limited viewpoints that would cause you to hold to such pain with such “reverent” vigor that you make your lives a depressing and miserable existence that simply “must be endured”.

Each of you have experienced painful moments in your lives from time to time. These experiences are part of the “bio-feedback” mechanism of the physical schoolroom that help you to understand the consequences of your decisions and choices.

You entered into the physical environment knowing full well the ways in which emotional energies were going to affect you, and that there would be times of discomfort as you learn and grow. The pain you experience should simply be looked upon as an indicator to you that your guidance system is working properly and that you have need to learn a lesson in a particular area of life in a particular way.

Seek out the understanding (the lesson in point), and the pain WILL go away. Hold onto a misunderstanding (erroneous belief) associated with the “traumatic” event, and the pain WILL persist.

In general, ones on your planet tend to accumulate more and more “heartaches” over a given lifetime. These emotional accumulations clog-up the natural energy pathways, much like the plaque on the walls of arteries restrict (and eventually block) nourishing blood flow. Such clogs or restrictions in the energy field of an individual in turn usually lead to physiological imbalances because the life-force energies are diverted into sustaining the emotional trauma rather than flowing throughout the body to nourish the various physical systems. The accumulated emotional “garbage” will eventually lead to further degeneration and physical death if not addressed directly.

Moreover, as the frequency of the planet continues to rise, and at an ever increasing rate, what once took decades to manifest as, say, a cancerous tumor, will manifest much more quickly. The time in which ALL feedback cycles occur is shortened, and ones will be, in essence, led to confront and grow past any erroneous understandings—or they simply will not be able to sustain adequate functioning of the physical apparatus. This is the thorough nature of the cleansing process at work on your planet at this time—a process known to your Native American brothers and sisters as The Great Purification.

Remember, this is a NATURAL cycle resulting from your planetary system’s travel into a higher-frequency region of space—NOT a punishment from some vengeful god. Such high-frequency planetary conditions provide an excellent atmosphere in which to make great forward strides in ability, understanding, and growth.

Many who observe from the more expansive view of the non-physical perspective look upon the unfolding environment on your planet as a great opportunity for many “stuck” (one who resists change) souls to free themselves from the repetitive “rut” they seem to fall into, lifetime after lifetime. It is for these reasons that there is great interest from the Higher Realms in the unfolding choices and decisions being made as these upward shifts continue to modify inner perceptions on an individual basis—and how that process, in turn, resonates on the larger social level as ones effort to express (and otherwise address) their inner feelings of restlessness and such.

Many ones are having their lives turned upside down and inside out, not really understanding why it is that these things are occurring. Each one will sense in their own way the need for “something more”—and yet, for the large part, they will not know where to look. This is where the interaction of the non-physical comes into the picture.

We of the non-physical Lighted Realms, who come in service to help others, act as Guides and Wayshowers. We work “behind the scenes” to cause paths to cross and experiences to unfold in ways that will help answer the heart’s call for understanding. Our methods and orchestrations often require us to go within and tap a Higher Creative Potential so that we may be effective in many ways that are often overlooked by you ones in the physical. Please remember that there really are NO coincidences in your world. A coincidence is merely the recognition of a Higher Hand working in your life.

Remember that each desire expressed sends out a call that will return an answer. The stronger the desire (the greater the clarity and intensity of the emotional energy behind the desire), the quicker the answer will come.

Many simply want to understand what is “wrong” with the world or others. Yet, when the answers are presented to them, they reject same because their current “religious” or “scientific” belief system says that the given answer “CAN’T BE SO!” Thus the condition of ignorance, uneasiness, stress, frustration and such persists.

To arrive at a better understanding of something that is perplexing you, recognize that some current belief you hold is untrue. One must often confront the idea that they may have bought into a lie. This recognition can cause great inner struggle as one must contend with the ego’s “need” to “save face”. Ask yourself: “Why do I believe what I believe?” Is it because of personal experiential (inner or heart) knowing? Or, is it because of something others have told you that you should believe?

We of the Lighted Brotherhood, who come in service to help ALL ones, will not insist that another accept our words, guidance, or suggestions. To do so would cause ones to accept concepts out of fear—rather than appreciation and understanding—and thus NO ACTUAL GROWTH would occur, and we would, in essence, be slowing growth and binding ourselves in a karmic sense to anyone to whom we should try to do this.

We only offer information that is in direct response to a request that is being made to us. Please remember that it is when you make a DELIBERATE call for help from Angels, Guides, Lighted Brotherhood, etc., that we can do much more to help you ones find the answers you desire. Many of you do this as a natural course of habit, and you are almost always open to the thoughts, ideas, and “coincidences” that you receive in answer.

Please learn to recognize and exploit EVERY opportunity that comes your way, and KNOW that you can and will find the answers to the questions that weigh on your heart. Many of you ones reading this message are greatly compassionate people who simply want to know where you “fit into the picture” and why things are happening to you.

You each have experience and knowledge that can help others if it is shared when the opportunity presents itself to you. Learn to recognize when your experience and understanding would benefit one who is guided to cross your path. Learn to share same in a manner that is acceptable to the one you wish to assist. Allow the other to come to their own conclusions in their own time. Sometimes what you tell a person today will not make sense to them for years to come, but eventually the truth will be the only thing left standing when all other “reasoning” has failed.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in Light and Service to The One Light, Creator Source, so that you ones may gain insight and understanding about some of the matters that may be concerning you.

Much Love and Light to you ALL! Salu.

Hopi Elder Chief Dan Evehema’s Message To Mankind

Editor’s note: Chief Dan Evehema, longtime spiritual leader of the Hopi sovereign nation, doesn’t trust the normal print and broadcast media to convey a message of Truth. As he put it: “...what gets into the papers is what the government wants people to believe, not what is really happening.” Surely all of you SPECTRUM readers have no trouble identifying with that wise caution.

We are IN the time of the Sorting and Purification, spoken about so long ago in Hopi (and other) prophecy. And this is the time when it was said there would be the sharing of some very interesting (if sometimes cryptic) messages, like the following.

Naturally, the behind-the-scenes dark-world powers are trying desperately to stop the spiritual upliftment that originates from the Hopi “home base” of Hotevilla, Arizona—from which this message originates through Chief Dan. Disrupting the base is generally an effective way to disrupt the messenger, and thus the message. Or so the dark, would-be kings think in their all-too-linear reasoning.

But that probably won’t happen in this case, due to the pivotal nature of current world circumstances and the Power behind the messengers of The Awakening. Within the Native American culture, this dedicated message-giver is known respectfully as: Chief Dan Evehema (105), Spiritual Leader, Eldest Elder Greasewood, Roadrunner Clan Society Father, Snake Priest, Kachina Father. In other words, the dark destroyers don’t really stand much of a chance deterring a messenger entrusted with such a critical mission!

We would like to sincerely thank Mitch Battros, producer of Earth Changes TV, for sharing this important message with us by way of his www.earthchangesTV.com Internet website. We also thank R.B. for making sure it landed on our desk despite the whirlwind of items that cross our path in any given day. As Chief Dan reminds us, it is only through working together that peace and prosperity shall be returned to this planet. We likewise thank Chief Dan for maintaining an amazing level of courage and persistence despite the kinds of attacks that would deter a lesser soul.

3/27/01 CHIEF DAN EVEHEMA

I am very glad to have this time to send a message to you. We are celebrating a time in our history which is both filled with joy and sadness. I am very glad that our Hindu brothers have given us this opportunity to share these feelings with you because we know many of you are having the same troubles.

We Hopi believe that the human race has passed through three different worlds and life ways since the beginning. At the end of each prior world, human life has been purified or punished by the Great Spirit “Massauu” due mainly to corruption, greed, and turning away from the Great Spirit’s teachings.

The last great destruction was the flood which destroyed all but a few faithful ones who asked and received a permission from the Great Spirit to live with Him in this new land. The Great Spirit said: “It is up to you, if you are willing to live my poor, humble, and simple life way. It is hard, but if you agree to live according to my teachings and instructions, if you never lose faith in the life I shall give you, you may come and live with me.”

The Hopi, and all who were saved from the great flood, made a sacred covenant with the Great Spirit at that time. We Hopi made an oath that we will never turn away from Him. For us, the Creator’s Laws never change or break down.

To the Hopi, the Great Spirit is all powerful. He appeared to the first people as a man and talked with them in the beginning of this creation world. He taught us how to live, to worship, where to go, and what food to carry, gave us seeds to plant and harvest.

He gave us a set of sacred stone tablets into which He breathed all teachings in order to safeguard His land and life. In these stone tablets were made instructions and prophecies and warnings. This was done with the help of a Spider Woman and Her two grandsons. They were wise and powerful helpers of the Great Spirit.

Before the Great Spirit went into hiding, He and Spider Woman put before the leaders of the different groups of people many colors and sizes of corn for them to choose their food in this world. The Hopi was the last to pick, and then choose their food in this world.

The Hopi then chose the smallest ear of corn. Then Massauu said: “You have shown me you are wise and humble. For this reason you will be called Hopi (“people of peace”) and I will place in your authority all land and life to guard, protect, and hold trust for Me until I return to you in later days, for I am the First and the Last.”

This is why, when a Hopi is ordained into the higher religious order, the Earth and all living things are placed upon his hands. He becomes a parent to all life on Earth.

He is entitled to advise and correct his children in whatever peaceful way he can. So we can never give up knowing that our message of peace will reach our children. Then it is, together with the other spiritual leaders, that the destiny of our future children is placed. We are instructed to hold this world in balance, within the land and the many universes, with special prayers and rituals which continue to this day.

It was to the Spider Woman’s two grandsons that the sacred stone tablets were given. These two brothers were then instructed to carry them to a place the Great Spirit had instructed them.

The older brother was to go immediately to the East, to the rising Sun, and upon reaching his destination was instructed to immediately start to look for his younger brother, who shall remain in the land of the Great Spirit. The older brother’s mission, when he returned, was to help his younger brother (Hopi) bring about peace, brotherhood, and everlasting life on his return.

Hopi, the younger brother, was instructed to cover all land and mark it well with footprints and sacred markings to claim this land for the Creator and peace on Earth. We established our ceremonials and sacred shrines to hold this world in balance in accordance with our first promise to the Creator.

This is how our migration story goes, until we meet the Creator at Old Oribe (place that solidifies) over 1000 years ago. It was at that meeting when He gave to us these prophecies to give to you now, at this closing of the Fourth World of destruction and the beginning of the Fifth World of peace.

He gave us many prophecies to pass on to you, and all have come to pass. This is how we know the timing is now to reveal the last warnings and instructions to mankind.

We were told to settle permanently here in Hopiland, where we met the Great Spirit, and wait for Older Brother, who went East to return to us. When he returns to this land, he will place his stone tablets side by side to show all the world that they are our true brothers.

When the road in the sky has been fulfilled, and when the inventing of something, which in Hopi means “gourd of ashes”, a gourd that, when dropped upon the Earth, will boil everything within a large space and nothing will grow for a very long time. When the leaders turned to evil ways instead of the Great Spirit, we were told there would be many ways this life may be destroyed, if humankind does not heed our prophecy and return to one’s original spiritual instructions.

We were told of three helpers, who were commissioned by the Great Spirit to help Hopi bring about the peaceful life on Earth, would appear to help us and we should not change our homes, our ceremonials, our hair, because the true helpers might not recognize us as the true Hopi. So we have been waiting all these years.

It is known that our True White Brother, when he comes, will be all powerful and will wear a red cap or red cloak. He will be large in population, belong to no religion but his very own. He will bring with him the sacred stone tablets. With him there will be two great ones, both very wise and powerful. One will have a symbol or sign of swastika, which represents purity and is female, a producer of life.

The third one—or the second one of the two helpers to our True White Brother—will have a sign of a symbol of the Sun. He, too, will be many people and very wise and powerful. We have, in our sacred Kachina ceremonies, a gourd rattle which is still in use today with these symbols of these powerful helpers of our True Brother.

It is also prophesied that, if these three fail to fulfill their mission, then the one from the West will come like a big storm. He will be many in numbers and unmerciful. When he comes, he will cover the land like the red ants and overtake this land in one day.

If the three helpers chosen by the Creator fulfill their sacred mission, and even if there are only one, two, or three of the true Hopi remaining, holding fast to the last ancient teachings and instructions of the Great Spirit, Massauu will appear before all, and our world will be saved.

The three will lay out a new life plan which leads to everlasting life and peace. The Earth will become new, as it was from the beginning. Flowers will bloom again, wild game will return to barren lands, and there will be abundance of food for all. Those who are saved will share everything equally, and they all will recognize Great Spirit and speak one language.

We are now faced with great problems, not only here but throughout the land. Ancient cultures are being annihilated. Our people’s lands are being taken from them, leaving them no place to call their own.

Why is this happening? It is happening because many have given up or manipulated their original spiritual teachings. The way of life which the Great Spirit has given to all people of the world, whatever your original instructions, are not being honored. It is because of this great sickness, called greed, which infects every land and country, that simple people are losing what they have kept for thousands of years.

Now we are at the very end of our trail. Many people no longer recognize the true path of the Great Spirit. They have, in fact, no respect for the Great Spirit or for our precious Mother Earth, who gives us all life.

We are instructed, in our ancient prophecy, that this would occur. We were told that someone would try to go up to the Moon; that they would bring something back from the Moon; and that after that, Nature would show signs of losing its balance.

Now we see that coming about. All over the world there are now many signs that Nature is no longer in balance. Floods, drought, earthquakes, and great storms are occurring and causing much suffering. We do not want this to occur in our country, and we pray to the Great Spirit to save us from such things. But there are now signs that this very same thing might happen very soon on our own land.

Now we must look upon each other as brothers and sisters. There is no more time for divisions between people.

Today I call upon all of us, from right here at home, Hotevilla—where we too are guilty of gossiping and causing divisions, even among our own families—out to the entire world, where thievery, war, and lying go on every day.

These divisions will not be our salvation. Wars only bring more wars, never peace. Only by joining together in a Spiritual Peace with love in our hearts for one another, love in our hearts for the Great Spirit and Mother Earth, shall we be saved from the terrible Purification Day which is just ahead.

There are many of you in this world who are honest people. We know you, spiritually, for we are the "Men's Society Grandfathers" who have been charged to pray for you and all life on Earth, never forgetting any thing or any one in our ceremonials.

Our prayer is to have a good and happy life, plenty of soft gentle rain for abundant crops. We pray for balance on Earth, to live in peace, and leave a beautiful world to the children yet to come.

We know you have good hearts, but good hearts are not enough to help us out with these great problems. In the past, some of you have tried to help us Hopis, and we will always be thankful for your efforts.

But now we need your help in the worst way. We want the people of the world to know the truth of our situation.

This land, which people call the Land of the Freedom, celebrates many days reminding people of the world of these things. Yet, in well over 200 years, the original Americans have not seen a free day.

We are suffering the final insult. Our people are now losing the one thing which gives life and meaning of life—our ceremonial land, which is being taken away from us. Hotevilla is the last holy, consecrated, undisturbed traditional Native American sacred shrine to the Creator.

As the prophecy says, this sacred shrine must keep its spiritual pathways open. This village is the spiritual vortex for the Hopi to guide the many awakening Native Americans, and other true hearts, home to their own unique culture.

Hotevilla was established by the last remaining spiritual elders to maintain peace and balance on this continent—from the tip of South America up to Alaska. Many of our friends say Hotevilla is a sacred shrine, a national and world treasure, and must be preserved. We need your help.

Where is the freedom which you all fight for and sacrifice your children for? Is it only the Indian people who have lost, or are all Americans losing the very thing which you originally came here to find?

We don't share the freedom of the press because what gets into the papers is what the government wants people to believe, not what is really happening. We have no freedom of speech, because we are persecuted by our own people for speaking our beliefs.

We are at the final stages now, and there is a last force that is about to take away our remaining homeland. We are still being denied many things, including the right to be Hopis and to make our living in accordance with our religious teachings.

The Hopi leaders have warned leaders in the White House and the leaders in the Glass House, but they do not listen. So as our prophecy says, then it must be up to the people with good pure hearts, who will not be afraid to help us to fulfill our destiny in peace for this world.

We now stand at a crossroad—whether to lead ourselves in everlasting life or total destruction. We believe that human beings' spiritual power through prayer is so strong it decides life on Earth.

So many people have come to Hopiland to meet with us. Some of you we have met on your lands. Many times people have asked how they can help us. Now I hope and pray that your help will come. If you have a way to spread the truth—through the newspapers, radio, books, through meeting with powerful people—tell the truth! Tell them what you know to be true. Tell them what you have seen here; what you have heard us say; what you have seen with your own eyes.

In this way, if we do fall, let it be said that we tried, right up to the end, to hold fast to the path of peace as we were originally instructed to do by the Great Spirit. Should you really succeed, we will all realize our mistakes of the past and return to the true path—living in harmony as brothers and sisters, sharing our Mother, the Earth, with all other living creatures. In this way we could bring about a new world. A world which would be led by the Great Spirit, and our Mother will provide plenty and happiness for all.

God bless you, each one of you, and know our prayers for peace meet yours as the Sun rises and sets. May the Great Spirit guide you safely into the path of love, peace, freedom, and God on this Earth Mother. May the holy ancestors of Love and Light keep you safe in your land and homes.

Pray for God to give you something important to do in this great work which lies ahead of us all, to bring peace on Earth. We, the Hopi, still hold the sacred stone tablets and now await the coming of our True White Brother and others seriously ready to work for the Creator's peace on Earth.

Be well, my children, and think good thoughts of peace and togetherness—peace for all life on Earth, and peace with one another in our homes, families, and countries.

We are not so different in the Creator's eyes. The same great Father Sun shines His love on each of us daily, just as Mother Earth prepares the sustenance for our table, do they not?

We are one, after all.

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

If you don't want your view of life to be transformed, then steer clear of this book.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to be who we really are, to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

California's Power Crisis: A Most Revealing Update

3/27/01 RICK MARTIN

It's a headache that just keeps getting worse and worse for California Governor Gray Davis. And apparently our February 2001 front-page story, Will The Lights Go Out In California And The Nation? Expert Exposes Fraud & Greed, was as prophetically revealing as it was thoroughly uncomfortable for all of the crooks involved.

Let's take a moment to bring you up to date on what's happened in this "chess game" since our outlay appeared—that is, what's been going on besides a lot more lights going out around the state without warning.

To begin with, on Tuesday, March 20, Los Angeles City Attorney Brian Williams filed suit against three large energy companies claiming "they had engaged in a 'massive conspiracy' to eliminate competition and drive up prices, helping create California's power crisis."

Not only that. In a story appearing in the Sacramento Bee on March 22, we read: "Electricity wholesalers have overcharged California $6.2 billion since May by manipulating the energy market, power grid managers said Thursday. The Independent System Operator will file the findings with federal regulators and ask for a refund, ISO spokesman Patrick Dorison said."

In another story, written by Emily Bazar and Amy Chance, appearing in the same edition of the Sacramento Bee, we read:

"Power solution eludes Davis: Lawmakers grow edgy as crisis drags on.

"Gov. Gray Davis likes to compare the state's energy crisis to a complicated 'three-cornered' billiard shot. But as California plunged into another round of power blackouts this week, Davis has yet to line up the angle on an ultimate solution.

"The state's short-term power bill is nearing $4.2 billion, and legislators are balking at the administration's requests for additional money."

In a March 22 Los Angeles Times story by Dan Morain and Jenifer Warren, we read:

"After two days of statewide blackouts, power plants that had been shut down were cranked up. Unseasonable heat tapered off. The operators of the statewide power grid relaxed their state of emergency. But plenty of ominous signs remained. Many small producers remained shut down, skeptical about Gov. Gray Davis' plan for utilities to pay them.

"State Controller Kathleen Connell issued a sharp warning about the high cost of the state's foray into the power business and announced that she will block an administration request that she transfer $5.6 billion into an account that could be tapped to pay for state purchases of electricity."

In two stories appearing in the March 24 edition of The Sacramento Bee, we read: "The Pacific Gas and Electric Company threatened Friday to sue the state if legislators pass a handful of energy measures that supporters say are needed to keep California's electricity efforts from spinning out of control."

And "'The proposed actions will destabilize [PG&E's] current situation with creditors and put the entire possibility of reaching a balanced solution to California's energy crisis at risk' the utility said in a statement distributed to reporters."

In the second story from the same paper: "William Massey used to be a team player. Then the lights started flickering in California. Now, Massey is the dissenting voice of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission—a preacher, an absolute convert to the idea that free markets be damned because California is getting a raw deal.

"Wholesale electricity prices are rocketing into the stratosphere. Gov. Gray Davis, joined by the governors of Oregon and Washington, is screaming for price controls. And yet Massey said his colleagues wouldn't do their job to ensure 'just and reasonable' prices and rein-in price gougers."

"'I fear a disaster in the making' Massey told a House subcommittee this week. He said that without price controls this summer, he fears the worst."

As if all this weren't enough, on March 27, California's Public Utilities Commission voted unanimously to raise electricity rates. In a March 28 Los Angeles Times story we read: "With protestors jeering their disapproval, besieged utility regulators Tuesday adopted the largest electricity rate hike in the state's history and defended the action as the only way to keep the lights on for millions of customers.

"The California Public Utilities Commission unanimously approved an increase of 3 cents per kilowatt-hour. That will boost rates by as much as 42 percent for some Southern California Edison customers and up to 46 percent for some served by Pacific Gas & Electric Company."

What was the PUC's reason (excuse) to justify such a whopping rate increase? Why, because it would help the public practice conservation! (What does that say about the role of the PUC in this orchestrated shenanigan?) And while it is stated that "low income" residents will be exempt from these "necessary" increases, the reality of that statement remains to be seen.

Now we come to a real gem of a news item. (This is an example of why truth is always stranger than fiction.) This matter first broke to wide publicity (from obviously purposeful secrecy and overlooking by the regular print and broadcast media hounds) the last week of March on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program.

Let's start with the news story:

LITTLE NOTICED ACCIDENT AT SAN ONOFRE

NUCLEAR POWER REACTOR IS KEY STORY BEHIND CALIFORNIA BLACKOUTS

A significant accident February 3 at Southern California Edison's San Onofre-3 nuclear power reactor is a major cause of the rolling blackouts that have plagued California this week.

According to published reports, California has lacked up to 800 Megawatts (MW) of power during the blackout periods. When running at full power, San Onofre-3 produces 1120 MW of electricity. Had the reactor been operating, the blackouts almost certainly would not have occurred.

The accident occurred when a circuit breaker fault caused a fire—that lasted nearly three hours—a loss of offsite power and a reactor scram. A related failure of an oil pump resulted in extensive damage to the plant's turbine.

The reactor is expected to be shut down for repairs for at least three months. Although the utility claims no radiation was released and no nuclear safety issues were involved, the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission sent a Special Inspection Team to the plant site to investigate the accident.

The NRC met with SCE officials today to go over their findings. That team's report is expected to be publicly released soon.

"This serious accident, which has gone virtually unnoticed in the daily attention given to California's electricity problems, highlights the vulnerability of electrical systems that rely on nuclear power, and is a clear demonstration why atomic reactors can never be counted on to meet our energy needs. Not only have nuclear plants always been too costly, they are too unreliable as well" said Michael Mariotte, executive director of the Nuclear Information and Resource Service (NIRS), a Washington-DC based nuclear watchdog group. "When one of these large reactors goes down—and as reactors age, they will go down more often—large amounts of replacement power are needed, but are not always available. This situation is likely to worsen as time goes on, not improve."

In January, California's electricity shortage was prompted in part by a storm which washed large amounts of kelp into the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant's water intake system, forcing those two reactors to reduce power to 20% to avoid a potential meltdown accident.

"Using nuclear power to meet electricity needs is a lot like playing Russian Roulette" said Paul Gunter, chief of NIRS' Reactor Watchdog Project. "Most of the time you'll win, but when you lose, the results can be catastrophic."

NIRS was among the organizations that opposed California's deregulation law from the beginning, and supported a 1998 referendum that would have repealed that law. But California utilities spent $40 million to defeat the referendum, thereby ensuring their steady march toward bankruptcy.

"At the time, Pacific Gas & Electric and Southern California Edison were eyeing some $25 Billion in 'stranded costs' charged under the deregulation scheme to California ratepayers to pay for San Onofre and Diablo Canyon" explained Mariotte. "Much of that money seems to have been distributed to their holding companies, and has not been used for the benefit of Californians. And the bailout certainly hasn't made their reactors any more reliable, nor any safer."

"Anyone who believes nuclear power is a way out of California's (or the nation's) energy problem should simply consider how much electricity could have been provided by safe, clean renewable energy and energy efficiency programs for the $25 Billion California spent on its unreliable nuclear reactors" concluded Gunter. "The choice is clear: we can meet our energy needs economically, or we can have nuclear power. We can't have both."

[End quoting]

Now, for those of you who remember what our February 2001 front-page story interviewee, Galen Winsor, had to say about the "business strategy" behind why the Three Mile Island reactor "accident" happened—well, is this recent "accident" on the central California coast a case of déjà vu or what? (If it worked then, why not try it again now; after all, the public will never suspect a thing.)

Let me refresh your memory from that interview with a brief excerpt:

"Martin: Do you think there is a conspiracy among those involved in the power companies to withhold power in an effort to glean profit?"

"Galen Winsor: I can name the date when it started. The 28th of March, 1979, at Three Mile Island-II."

And that was followed by Galen explaining the business strategy about why it was so profitable for Three Mile Island-II to have an "accident" of some supposed serious nature.

Art Bell's website (www.artbell.com) has several photographs of the well-timed nuclear plant "accident" on the central California coast, as well as the following caption to introduce the photos:

"Accident at San Onofre-3 Nuclear Reactor. These photos were sent to us by a Nuclear Industry Employee, of the Feb. 3rd accident at the San Onofre-3 plant. Art called a Public Relations representative of the plant, and he confirmed that these photos are real."

Do you think it just a coincidence that the public announcement of the Three Mile Island "accident" and this current one is so close in date, except for the span of years? Might that be an "inside joke" among those New World Order gang whose conspiring fingerprints seem to be all over both "crime scenes"?

While all of this is going on, have you heard the Governor of California mention anything about other power options—even well-known alternatives like solar cells and wind generators? Or better yet, have you heard him discussing "free energy" devices? Have you heard him suggest invoking Eminent Domain and taking over the so-called PUBLIC utilities for the PUBLIC good?

Well, one thing is certain—California's well-engineered power problems have only just begun and will, ultimately, dig deeply into the pockets of the state of California's apparently all too abundant budget. The covert plan to dig further into the pockets of the rate-payers and tax-payers is coming dangerously close to inciting a "meltdown" of people's patience, and may very well lead to riots of one kind or another—as happened in San Diego last year.

Is THAT part of the covert psychological agenda of the New World Order gang, orchestrating this "disaster" from behind the scenes through these clashing teams of political and business puppets? How about demoralizing the business people? More and more of them are seriously considering moving out of California, rather than trying to work around such unreliable electrical power. (Do you know how much time and money is lost when, say, a Silicon Valley chip-maker has to start-up a major high-tech plant, again and again, after each, often unannounced, major power outage crashes or otherwise suspends their operations?!)

As we said in our February front-page story, what happens in California is likely to ripple throughout the United States—and maybe beyond, considering the tight interconnectedness of the electrical utility grid. And we haven't even begun to enter the ominous challenge of the massive electrical demands of summertime air conditioning.

Will the next major "power shorage" event in California (or elsewhere) be timed with some other orchestrated happening(s) to effectively paralyze—both physically and psychologically—an entire region? Might want to check those emergency supplies that have been neglected for awhile!

Editor's afterword: As I said in the page-2 editorial, California Governor Gray Davis delivered a brief statewide address the evening of April 5 to officially steer blame away from guilty parties and place the fix-it burden squarely on the shoulders of already buckling taxpayers and ratepayers—in typical pass-the-buck fashion.

The next morning, Pacific Gas & Electric (remember the villain in the superb movie Erin Brockovich, in which Julia Roberts just won the Best Actress Oscar), CALIFORNIA'S LARGEST UTILITY, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, saying it had run up an $8.9 billion deficit buying electricity (from whom?!?) as of February 28. △

"Our problem, once solar energy is in operation, is to find a way to have the citizens whose homes are heated by the Sun continue to pay us every month."

What's Truly Important In Your Life?

4/8/01 ESU "JESUS" SANANDA

Good evening, my scribe. It is I, Esu "Jesus" Sananda, come in the Radiance and Oneness of Creator God, The One Light. Blessings and peace, dear ones.

Allow for the natural unfolding of events surrounding these times of swift change. Abrupt shifts in focus will become necessary for MANY in the coming weeks, months, and years. This is to say that where you think you are heading is, in all likelihood, quite a bit different than where you will eventually be. Many of you will have experiences that will cause sudden and abrupt changes of priority and focus, thus leading you down a path you may never have considered prior.

Allow for the spontaneous unfolding of life and living. Be ever diligent to remain flexible in your thinking and reasoning, so as to allow for these sudden shifts in "reality". In many cases your very ability to adapt to new and quickly changing situations will further enhance your survivability, and thus further your opportunities to experience and grow within the present, chosen physical environment.

Never underestimate your ability to adapt to new situations. Regardless of age or state of physical health, and regardless of the amount of "chaos" that may be unfolding around you, with the proper mental outlook and ability to stay centered and balanced, you can connect within for the Guidance to find an appropriate course of action that will further enhance your experience.

In times of sudden change (many would call such events "disasters"), ones often become overwhelmed with the abruptness of the "reality" shift, and become paralyzed as they wrestle with the inner emotional energy surges of shock and disbelief. In such states of paralysis, these ones will be looking for answers and understanding, as well as guidance in terms of what they should do.

Be quick to ground yourself in an understanding of the Larger Perspective—in which you are a student in a schoolroom, and the experiences you encounter are for a reason. Whatever crosses your path is no accident, and there is opportunity to learn and grow from ALL things.

Regardless of your perceptions in a time of seeming "chaos", please remember that ALL experiences have a POSITIVE growth potential associated with them when viewed from the spiritual level from which you all originate and shall return. Each day you are faced with a series of choices and decisions that further lead to new and forever changing situations.

Abrupt change often serves you in such a way that you are caused to more deliberately focus your attention in a manner that will "quicken" the process of making choices and decisions. In such times ones are often caused to focus upon the "things" in life that are REALLY important.

For example, let us consider the situation where you are on an airplane and, while in mid-flight, it becomes evident that there is a serious problem with the aircraft. It is suddenly announced that there is need to prepare for a crash landing.

What goes through your mind? Do you worry about the mortgage payment or what the stock market is doing? Do you worry about ANY of those "precious pots of gold" at the end of the ever elusive rainbow you've been chasing most of your life?

No.

Most ones confronted with such situations quickly distill the clutter and superfluous "garbage" down to what is REALLY important. You ponder family and loved ones, and regret any missed opportunity to give them a hug and tell them one last time how much they are dearly appreciated and loved. This can be quite a powerful and insightful experience—especially for those who survive same. These "graduates" are often left with a very lasting appreciation for what is TRULY important in life.

In such situations, you will always regret recent harshness toward a loved one, and pray for the opportunity to "make things right". Never does one pray for the opportunity to survive so that they can make their next credit card payment. Nor is it the fancy cars or the large houses or the bank accounts that may have once represented security and safety.

No, dear ones, the important things in life are the acts of kindness toward others and the expressions of appreciation for the subtle riches of, say, the grandchildren's smiles when you give them a hug, or the opportunity to tell someone how special they really are.

Sudden, impacting change should thus be viewed as a great catalyst for inner growth and understanding. Never are such abrupt shifts actually the "disasters" they are often regarded to be from a purely physical perspective.

ALL experience offers you an opportunity to express your uniqueness, as well as appreciate the uniqueness in others. Sometimes you will playfully ask one another: "What if you were given only 24 hours to live? What would you do?" This may seem like an innocent game, however, there is a bit of wisdom in pondering such queries with a moment of serious contemplation.

Those who go through and survive things that would be considered "near-death experiences" often emerge as "changed" people. There is usually a greater appreciation for the more simple and subtle things in life—especially interactions with loved ones who may have previously been taken for granted.

Would not such LEARNED appreciation be a valuable lesson to acquire without the need for a seemingly negative event? Often souls experiencing in the physical become too caught-up in a multitude of distractions, and severely neglect the REAL reason they came forth to experience in the physical. Usually the "tragedies" which ones are faced with leave them with a greater awareness of what they had, but simply did not fully appreciate until it was "too late".

THE BOOK OF CHOICES: KEYS TO ENLIGHTENMENT

BY ALLISONE HEARTSONG

All paths that lead to spiritual enlightenment are essentially a sequence of choices.

When made with whole-hearted sincerity, the choices contained in this little book constitute one version of the Way by means of which anyone who chooses may come into harmonious alignment with the Source of their being.

In short, these choices constitute the keys to the Kingdom of Heaven.

The undergraduate section of this book is composed of 52 choices, one for each week of the year. Daily contemplation of each choice for one whole week is the recommended procedure.

However, those who prefer a faster pace may choose to meditate on a different choice each day so as to move through the entire sequence of 52 choices seven times in one year.

The postgraduate course, which is comprised of 24 additional choices, may be undertaken whenever the undergraduate course of 52 choices has been completed.

You ones can avoid many lessons of perceived “harshness” if you learn to appreciate those seemingly small things in life that often get taken for granted. Take the time to pull yourself out of those constant preoccupations with self-distraction long enough to really see what it is that is TRULY important. There is no need to wait until the time when it is “too late”—and yet the majority do exactly that.

Be quick to give appreciation to others and be slow to criticize. Look not to blame another for YOUR emotional state, and know that YOU are responsible for your “bad” days as much as the “good” ones.

There are no victims in life; all experiences that directly or indirectly impact you are for one very good reason—to help you to recognize and appreciate the Lighted God-force Potential within self. In doing so, you will then be able to recognize same within ALL others. A great, effortless appreciation for ALL ones and ALL life will then become a part of your experience, and you will begin to know what TRUE happiness is.

Learn to live your life without regrets. If you have regrets now, then do your best to alleviate them. There is no need to dwell upon past “mistakes”. The very fact that you can recognize a past choice or decision as a “mistake” says that you have learned a valuable lesson from same. Take the value from the experience and go forward with a greater understanding, and use it to help others.

Often the best method of teaching is to use yourself as the example, for it shows understanding and compassion, and therefore the impacting is much greater. Please know that you are never too old, sick, or weak to either teach another or learn something new yourself.

One of the most valuable skills ones can learn while in the physical is to recognize the many subtle things they have in their lives for which to be appreciative. Each person reading this message can find much more than one thing in their life to be appreciative for having as a part of their experience.

Look at the seemingly small things and examine them closely: What is common in each? How can the small insights help you to notice more things in your life to be appreciative for? Time spent examining these small, subtle things can and will lead to great insights, understanding, and wisdom.

Knowledge without wisdom most often leads to corruption and, eventually, destruction. Seek out true understanding and wisdom, and all the riches of heaven will be poured out to you, and you will know true happiness. Seek out the physical world’s “riches” as a means to finding happiness, and you will, without fail, be creating a cold and lonely “prison” from which you will eventually seek escape.

Look inward for your Guidance at all times and learn to trust your intuition. Your Inner Guidance (conscience) is what will enable you to adapt to any situation and see good in all experience, regardless of the physical outcome.

I am Esu “Jesus” Sananda, a fellow traveler along the infinite journey of Life. I am merely one who has traveled a bit further down the “road” of Understanding, and I have come to appreciate the opportunities, like this one, to help any and all who seek my assistance.

May the Light of Father-Mother Creator Source—The One Light—forever be recognized within your heart, mind, and soul, so that you never feel that you are somehow abandoned or forsaken, for that shall never be. You are dearly loved and appreciated without conditions.

In Light, Love, and Appreciation—Salu.

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.” — From the back cover of Volume I

“Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you (God!). You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose.” — Esu “Jesus” Sananda (Vol. II)

The book that dares to ask the ultimate question. Many prophets over the last two millennia, each with their own perspective, have tried to warn humanity about the “future” catastrophic “end-time events” in the hopes of altering them. That time is now upon us.

WHY THE END? is a distillation of prophecies and messages spanning the last 2,000 years, sorted by topic for you, the awakening human. Unlike other books that dwell on past history or vague fragments of events, WHY THE END? gets to the point, chronicling the diverse range of prophecies and offering the facts and clues from scientific disciplines.

You may have pondered on some of these questions:

- Why is time “speeding up”?
- Why are animals exhibiting strange behaviors, some dying inexplicably?
- Why is the weather fluctuating and getting more severe?
- Are you feeling “on edge” as if something profound is about to happen soon?
- Is there a limit to humanity’s abuse of the planet?
- When does the “New Age” begin?

WHY THE END? intends to answer these questions and more in a no-frills, uncompromising manner. Some of these projections are quite harsh and could be interpreted as “doom and gloom”, depending on your perspective. But if you have an appetite for what is really on the horizon, then WHY THE END? is the book for you.

The bottom line is that the Purification of the Earth is underway, and will continue to escalate. WHY THE END? will prepare you mentally for the events, while those less informed will become incapacitated by fear as they witness the end of life as we know it. In reality, it is the cleansing of the old to make way for the new “Golden Age”. It then becomes your choice as to how you will view and interpret and experience these events.

Power Of The Soil

of topics imperative to an intelligent outlay of the subject—like genetically modified crops, EPA-approved lethal poisons getting into compost and water supplies, and related political/greed matters SPECTRUM readers are all too familiar with.

But that's life as we must confront it in these challenging days of massive greedy corporate interests on the surface, supported by diabolical, behind-the-scenes political agendas. Hiding from The Truth and looking the other way are not going to fix the situation! Becoming informed and wisely active is.

With that in mind, directly following my short-but-sweet interview with Maria Rodale, we are reprinting a wonderful interview that the discerning publication ACRES U.S.A. recently conducted and aired with longtime agricultural economist John Ikerd. These two, well-informed sources present a back-to-back picture that will take you on a rollercoaster ride up and down the blood-pressure scale. Both have valuable and courageously potent information to share on the overall subject of what we call organic versus commercial agriculture.

Why the focus on this? While it doesn't often make the evening news, what is going on in the agricultural arena is as basic to our welfare as is the necessity of eating. And the way a lot of growing is being done right now, we could all easily be sick and starving soon if major business interests had free reign!

We need to become as informed and knowledgeable about what is going on in the food production department as we have been attentive for some time about the often poisonous state of our planetary water supplies. Food and water—pretty basic stuff for staying alive, don't you think?

So, is this subject important to address? You bet your salad bowl it is! With that in mind, let's move now directly into my delightful, if maybe all too brief, conversation with Maria Rodale.

Martin: It's no secret that commercial agriculture is ruining the soil, which is having very long-term effects, and also there seems to be an increased public awareness about organic gardening methods, or what is called "sustainable agriculture".

(The following definition of sustainable agriculture was obtained from the Seeds of Change website, referred to later in this interview: "Unlike industrial agriculture which views farming like a factory, sustainable agriculture views farming as a natural, integrated, holistic system. Furthermore, according to findings published in the scientific journal Nature, November 11, 1998, organic yields equal conventional after only four years, and soil quality improves, carbon dioxide emissions are reduced, and in periods of drought, organic fields can actually yield more than conventional plots.")

Do you find this to be the case?

Rodale: That there's more awareness about organic and sustainable?

Martin: Yes.

Rodale: Definitely it's the case. I still find a remarkable, though, lack of knowledge from the basic home-owner, home-gardener perspective.

Martin: How so?

Rodale: If I'm speaking at a garden club, for instance, most people don't garden organically; they don't know about it. I think they're turned off by the high price of organic food. Among the supporters, I think there's growth. There's still a lot of work to be done among mainstream America.

Martin: What are the greatest challenges you face publishing material on organic gardening? What are the challenges that you've come up against, on a month-to-month basis?

Rodale: Our biggest challenge is reinventing organics so that it doesn't mean, earthy, crunchy granola—hippie stuff.

Martin: So you think the hippie movement set organic gardening back?

Rodale: I don't think it set it back, but I think that association is holding it back. There are perfectly good people who are staying away from it because they see it as a life-style choice that they don't want to make, as opposed to just common sense.

Martin: Well, those who don't know about gardening tend to be overwhelmed by the idea of putting in a first garden. It's almost like it's this big mystery thing.

Rodale: Right.

Martin: And the idea of putting in an "organic" garden is even more overwhelming because, as you start reading about it, there are so many ways to go—square-foot gardening, raised beds, etc., that people don't know where to turn.

Rodale: Right. You know, there's also a human nature solution, that if I buy something to do it for me, everything will be easier. So, for example, they'd rather buy a bottle of Roundup to start a garden bed, than to buy a shovel, you know. Or they'd rather buy a leaf-blower than a rake.

Martin: (Laughter)

Rodale: Like, the more you spend, the more complicated the solution. It equates to "the easier it will be for me" and, of course, we know that's not true.

Martin: Well, I've found that a shovel and a rake will basically do the whole thing; pretty much, that's it. There are a couple of other things—a wheelbarrow would be nice. (Laughter)

Rodale: (Laughter) Uh-huh. There's really, I think, also, the organic gardening movement has not done a good job of communicating how simple it really is. Everybody wants to have, kind-of, their own unique take on it. But, fundamentally, it is just a very simple process.

Martin: I couldn't agree more. Let's say you're talking to a lot of readers out there who have never planted a garden, and who are just overwhelmed at the idea. What would you tell a "first time" gardener?

Rodale: The first thing is to build up your soil with healthy soil, because then everything grows really easily and you don't need to do anything else. So, if you've got bad soil to begin with, just build a raised bed and fill it with compost. And don't worry about "double-digging", don't worry about anything else. Just fill it with compost and plant your garden, and watch it grow.

Martin: It's so nice when I get confirmation of what I've been telling our readers. (Laughter)

Rodale: (Laughter) Good.

Martin: I'm looking out my window here at two huge piles of compost from last year that I need to sift through before I put it on the beds next week. I'm calling from California and the weather is just starting to get nice. It's almost time to plant.

Rodale: Good. (Laughter)

Martin: Ok, now, let's step back. What counsel would you give the "seasoned" gardener, someone who has been at this a long time? What would you tell them?

Rodale: About gardening organically?

Martin: On this very subject, any words of advice or recommendations?

Rodale: Keep doing it, do more. Make sure it is in your whole yard. I guess for the seasoned gardener I would say: "Try to be a teacher."

Martin: There you go, that's what I was looking for.

Rodale: Yeah, and a mentor. And, I think also, again, the real breakthrough in organic is going to happen when we get the people in suburban America to start having organic yards. And the people in suburban America are concerned about making their yards look good. So, I would say, it's important for organic gardeners to put on a good impression, create a good impression for their neighbors.

Martin: And, I think, if we're talking about suburbia, there's this—oh, it's not a phobia, it's some kind of weird hang-up from the '50s, or something—there's this thing about having a lawn.

Rodale: Right.

Martin: And I don't know what that is, but if people would just dig up their lawns and start planting shrubs and roses and flowers and vegetables, it would be prettier and more productive.

Rodale: Yep. Although lawns are great for kids to play on, there's no substitute for that.

Martin: Well, we're trying to push gardening here, though. (Laughter)

Rodale: Yeah. (Laughter)

Martin: I live in Tehachapi, and as I come from the mountain area into town, I pass all these sod farms, and it blows my mind because they've pulled all these apple orchards around here and they're growing grass now, because that's more lucrative than growing apples.

Rodale: I think lawns, by themselves, are fine, as long as you grow them organically. I, personally, can't understand why people put chemicals on their lawn, because grass is one of the easiest things to grow; it's a weed, basically. It really does not need care and attention. In fact, the more care and attention you give it, the harder it is to take care of. I'm not against grass. The best lawns are ones that take care of themselves.

Martin: I almost think, from an educational standpoint, that for those experienced gardeners wanting to educate people about it, perhaps explaining to friends and family and associates that it's almost an alternative to the '80s workout at a gym thing. You know, you can work out in the yard and get tan, exercise your muscles, and get a good workout, and at the same time make your space more beautiful AND have good food to boot. I mean, it's like the best of all worlds.

Rodale: Well, actually, I've seen a study that shows that the only two activities that prevent osteoporosis in women are weight lifting and gardening.

Martin: That's interesting.

Rodale: Yeah, and I think because, with gardening, you are doing a lot of weight-bearing activities.

Martin: Another thing: If we look at all the cities in this country, people tend to be limited in their thinking about gardening. It's the mindset: "If I don't have an acre of land, I just can't grow a garden." And that's just not so.

I used to live in San Francisco years ago, and I had gardens that happened to be on the roof, and they happened to be in big pots and that kind of thing. You can, either with rooftop growing or with grow lights, improvise and come up with some really creative ways of having nice plants, either food or not food, in your space. And it's just a question of your own creativity that limits the possibilities.

I think people tend to get limited in their thinking about it and would rather go to the grocery to buy lettuce, which happens to be pretty bland, rather than growing their own beautiful butter lettuce, or something that is a totally different experience.

Let's talk about genetically altered seeds for a moment. What's your take on that?

Rodale: That it's unnecessary and unwise, and people should avoid it at all cost. I, pretty much, follow—I don't know if you are familiar with Michael Pollin?

Martin: No, I'm not.

Rodale: He writes for the New York Times magazine, Sunday magazine. He's just coming out with a new book in May, called The Botany Of Desire. To me, if you want a really articulate voice on why genetic engineering is just stupid (laughter), he's the greatest person to look to. The most recent thing he wrote for the New York Times magazine basically explains the "golden" rice that has been invented by Monsanto to bring Vitamin A—are you familiar with this?

Martin: I'm familiar with Monsanto. I'm not familiar with the "golden" rice issue, per se.

Rodale: They've basically created a yellow rice that's high in Vitamin A, to kind of save their image; to make people—they're spending hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars to promote Monsanto, on television, as saving the world, because they're creating this rice that's going to prevent blindness—when, in reality, they're just continuing the destruction.

If they, say, gave just a quarter of that money to send Vitamin A capsules to Africa and Asia, the problem would go away completely! They're just desperately trying to—you know, Monsanto has basically come out and said that chemical farming and agriculture and gardening ARE poisoning the planet, and THAT'S why they're creating genetic engineering, to kind of make it all better. They've just failed miserably, and the biggest crime is that this stuff is already out there in our food system, but people don't know about it.

Martin: Well, Monsanto has taken some strong hits, and rightly so. We've delivered as many of those hits as possible, and will continue to do so. It is the corporations like Monsanto that are the bane of agriculture. I can't speak negatively enough about organizations like that. So, there's no prejudice here. (Laughter) Can't stand them.

Rodale: Right. You and me both.

Martin: Yellow rice, huh? They're desperate, and they're not only desperate but they're doing a lot of work under different umbrellas other than the Monsanto name, in an effort to disguise what they're doing. It's not nice to fool Mother Nature.

The whole concept of genetically altered food, which is what they're all about, Mother Nature is just going to turn around and bite them, eventually. And I think it has been; they've been exposed. I assume they can recover because they have so much money, but everyone has to be alert to what their next move is because they can pop up from any direction. I'm glad to hear that this New York Times writer is exposing them.

Any recommendations as to where people might go for non-genetically-altered seeds, non-hybrid?

Rodale: Seeds of Change is great; they're my personal favorite.

[Editor's note: To request a cool catalog or order seeds from Seeds of Change, call 888-762-7333, or visit their highly informative and colorful www.seedsofchange.com website. And by the way, Rick Martin has put together a long list of good seed companies, including this one, in his gardening article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.]

Martin: They're in New Mexico?

Rodale: They're company is located in New Mexico, but they have seed growers all over the country. So it's not just a regional seed company.

Martin: And this is something of a repetitive question, but what would you say to the reader out there who is completely intimidated by just the idea of growing a garden—overwhelmed, doesn't know what to do?

Rodale: Don't be ruled by your fears in life. If you have a fear of something like gardening, then I think it is wise to get over it. (Laughter)

Martin: (Laughter)

Rodale: Because there's nothing to be afraid of.

Martin: Absolutely. What's your take on the use of equipment and gardening? Some people think that you can't have an organic garden and use a tiller. I've tried to do my part to dispel that myth. If you've got to use a tiller to get the soil so you can grow, use a tiller. If you want to use a shovel, use a shovel, but don't limit yourself.

Rodale: I mean, there are good tools, and there are stupid tools. The leaf-blower is probably the stupidest tool ever invented! But the tiller is especially good when you're just starting out and you really want to loosen up the soil. Over-tilling is NOT good, because you're chopping up all the earthworms—which, I found out recently, do not grow back. They don't turn into two earthworms; they do get killed. It loosens the soil more than it needs to be loosened.

So, I think a lot of organic gardening, and all these related issues, are basically just common sense—moderation, don't overdo it. Don't put too much compost on. Don't get obsessed about it. Just kind of approach your garden, your back yard, with a healthy dose of respect, and gentleness, and you'll be rewarded for it.

Martin: You're around this subject day-in and day-out, so you're probably so close to it.

It's like us in the newspaper business, we're just so close to information all the time that sometimes it's hard to back up and take a fresh look at it.

What do you see as some of the key issues concerning the whole field of organic agriculture today?

Rodale: I think there are two main areas that have to be dealt with. One is creating solid research into why organic is better, in terms of food. If you look, there really isn't any solid research that proves that organic food is more nutritious, healthier. There's a lot of research about soil health, environmental health, water health quality being better. But there is still a real lack of research in terms of the organic food being better.

I also think the second big area is kind of like the organic agricultural movement not killing itself, because part of the organic ideal is this sense of the small farm, the family farm, in a community. But, in order for organic agriculture to meet the needs of people, there's going to have to be a sense of accepting large farms, and supporting large farms. We've got to band together and do everything possible that needs to be done, rather than tear ourselves apart.

Martin: Well, of course, the trend in this country over the last number of years has been for the family farmer, the small farmer, to go out of business. They're being completely usurped by the large agricultural concerns, like Monsanto. So, there is a real struggle, in middle-America, to survive. And, of course, many of these farms are going under because of the cost of heavy equipment, loans from banks, and that sort of thing.

Rodale: And the cost of chemicals, and pesticides, and genetically engineered seed contracts.

Martin: Right.

Rodale: There's a great book out that I'm just now reading, called Fast-Food Nation. Have you heard of it?

Martin: No.

Rodale: Basically, the premise of that book is that we tend to think that it is the Monsantos that have killed organic agriculture and the family farm. In reality, it is our own desire and consumption of fast-food that has killed the family farm, because the more you eat at McDonald's, the more you eat at Burger King, the more you are supporting this whole infrastructure of cheap, mass-produced, and low-quality food, produced at any cost to the environment.

We always tend to blame other people, but really, we have to examine our own actions, and understand all of the relationships between things before we come to make a judgment.

Martin: Any words of advice about composting?

Rodale: Again, just don't be afraid to do it. Throw stuff on the pile. I'm not a fussy composter. I, basically, just throw it on and take stuff from the bottom when I need it. I used to, also, be intimidated when I was younger. And the more I researched and understood it, decomposition is just such a fundamental, natural process, that it's going to happen whether you do anything about it or not.

So, just let Nature take its course, and take advantage of it. But don't overdo it. Don't over fuss. Don't over-use compost. Just be sane about it.

Martin: Moderation.

Rodale: Moderation.

Martin: Again, stepping back and just looking at the whole field, what kind of advice would you give our readers who are concerned about organic growing and want to further that cause in whatever way, either through having their own gardens or sharing information about gardening with others? What sage words of wisdom would you have for our readers concerning organic food, organic gardening, the whole general field?

Rodale: I think I always just come back to—everything you do matters, so pay attention to everything you do. Try to support organic as much as possible, whether it's in your own backyard or at the supermarket, or even buying recycled toilet paper. Everything you do matters and has an impact. It's in the details that we'll create a massive change.

Martin: I know you're busy. Thank you for taking the time to do this.

Rodale: You're welcome.

Farming Ourselves Into Oblivion:

Small Sustainable Farms Are Our Greatest Hope Against A Faceless Agriculture

Editor's note: It is always a refreshing—if too often scary—event when someone who really KNOWS is courageous enough to tell the truth. It is even more satisfying and admirable when a person of tremendous professional background is willing to be honest enough to reflect upon their own involvement in an area, and admit that their past contributions may not have been all that helpful—given what they know now. In other words, live and learn.

We are pleased to share the following interview with retired agricultural economics professor, Dr. John Ikerd. This interview was conducted several months ago by the superb publication ACRES U.S.A., which has generously granted permission for reprinting here. (Contact them at: ACRES U.S.A., P.O. Box 91299, Austin TX 78709; 1-800-355-5313 or 512-892-4400; website: www.acresusa.com and a subscription is $24/year.) The SPECTRUM has emphasized some of Dr. Ikerd's provocative commentary in italics.

Dr. Ikerd is professor emeritus of agricultural economics at the University of Missouri's College of Agriculture, Food, and Natural Resources. To contact Dr. Ikerd, write to: 5121 S. Brock Rodgers Road, Columbia, MO 65201; or e-mail: <JEIkerd@aol.com>.

How long will it take for us to learn the lessons that the organic farming community has been offering for a very long time? Thanks to heartless agriBUSINESS, we not only have sick animals and sick plants and sick soil—but a lot of heartsick farmers who have lost their land or who feel cornered into “going along with” what they instinctively know is wrong. Throughout Dr. Ikerd's assessment, those of you who are perceptive about such matters can't help but spot the New World Order gang's covert agricultural agenda in full swing.

On the one hand, what is happening is surely a sad state of affairs; longtime family farms are dying out with each passing growing season. But on the other hand, there is great hope in the so-called “niche farming” that the big boys of agribusiness have largely overlooked. And THAT route is bringing new enthusiasm and great satisfaction to many who have a love of the land in their heart, as well as a genuine desire to help their fellow man.

DECEMBER, 2000 DR. JOHN IKERD

ACRES U.S.A.: One of the bankers at a recent meeting of that fraternity made a remark to the effect: “Let the cartels have agriculture. Who needs it? We are getting along fine without the individual farmer.” Without trying to serve you up a loaded question, how would you assess the pros and cons of that statement?

IKERD: I think from the pro standpoint that he is talking about what economists have been talking about for years; they are saying that the only thing that really matters with respect to agriculture is that we produce food and fiber as cheaply as we can possibly produce it in terms of purely economic cost.

The generally accepted premise is that the most efficient way to do anything in this economy is to do a kind of industrialization, which is specialization, standardization, and eventually, centralization of decision making. That is the process that we have been going through in agriculture throughout my professional career—and before that for at least the last 50 years.

We have been trying to industrialize agriculture. We have been centralizing, first by going from diversified family farms to the specialized crop and livestock, and now specializing in a particular crop or livestock or even in a particular phase of livestock production.

ACRES U.S.A.: Such as your hog operations and dairy operations?

IKERD: Hog operations are a good example. The crop farms in this area of the country are corn and soybeans, and in some cases, only corn or only soybeans. We have specialized, and then we have standardized the whole process to make those systems work.

We tried to get it down to the point where we could farm by recipe as much as possible. We came out with recommended practices or best management practices or the best variety—whatever it is. We are trying to make the same thing work on every farm by standardizing every process and by standardizing through grades and standards so that we only sell basic, generic commodities.

Where we are now is really in the final stages of that third stage of industrialization, which is the consolidation or centralization of decision making. We have really been going through that for some time, from the standpoint of moving to larger and larger farming operations, which mean fewer and fewer decision makers.

ACRES U.S.A.: This is monoculture, basically?

IKERD: Monoculture really operates with the farm as a factory, and running a field or a feedlot as if it were an assembly line.

ACRES U.S.A.: Doesn't it rely to some extent on a certain type of accounting too?

IKERD: It is basically just the economic

John Ikerd, Ph.D.

John Ikerd is an economist who has studied the farm scene before and since graduating from the University of Missouri. His 30-year career was spent at four universities: North Carolina State, Oklahoma State, the University of Georgia, and, of course, the University of Missouri in his home state. This native returned to Missouri in 1988, bringing along an outlook that recognizes the new paradigm in farming. Ikerd began his career as a “traditional” economist. His area of special attention was livestock marketing, market outlook futures, and all the nuances of farm marketing reality. “I really began to question a lot of the things I was doing during the farm crisis of the 1980s” Ikerd said. This led to an in-depth consideration of farm financial management. Facing this hardscrabble reality forced Ikerd to move in the direction of sustainable agriculture. He now spends most of his time writing and speaking on issues related to sustainable agriculture with an emphasis on the economics of sustainability.

accounting in terms of measuring production in terms of output per person, per farmer, or in some cases, production per acre. Those things assume that the limiting factors are the number of people who are farming.

ACRES U.S.A.: We have often pointed out that, in terms of capitalization per acre, and even in terms of production per acre, smaller units seem to measure up a lot better.

IKERD: Smaller units that are more intensively managed, that have more managers per acre—more people, more farms, if you will—have the capability certainly of increasing production per acre over and above what you can do on a large farm.

The output per unit of capital in agriculture, and the output per unit of purchased input in agriculture, have been going down over the years. But if you measure simply in the generally accepted industrial economic terms, then back to your original question, the big corporate operations would tend to move you toward a more efficient kind of agriculture from a strictly economic standpoint. That is what people are going by.

I don't think that you can even justify where we are now in terms of the corporate takeover of agriculture from the standpoint of economic efficiency, although that is the economic argument. I think that now the consolidation and corporate takeover is being accomplished by purely market power strategies where the independent farmers who are out there—even if they are more efficient and have lower cost of production than the corporate operations—are losing access to the markets. In other words, the corporations are using their market power in the processing and distribution sector to eliminate markets, or to at least impede market access on the part of the independent producers.

ACRES U.S.A.: Doesn't that extend to management of public policy as well?

IKERD: Yes. I think public policies that we have had over the years have reflected this bias in terms of what we have concluded was the way to achieve the most efficient agriculture.

I think you can look straight down the list of all the government programs that we have had in agriculture, and those programs have really promoted or provided farmers with an incentive to become more and more specialized, more and more standardized, and more and more centralized, or consolidated, in terms of the management and operation of the farming operation.

For example, take the price support programs that have been popular with farmers because they look at them as a way to prevent having to accept low prices. But what the commodity price support programs do is take the risk away of having an extremely low price. In other words, the government makes up the deficiency in price. That really allows farmers to move away from the diversified farming systems and to specialize in a specific commodity.

What they don't realize when they do that is that the increased incentive to specialize, by removing some of the downward price risks, is driving farms toward becoming larger and larger, which means, as they move in that direction, some farmers are going to be forced out of business.

ACRES U.S.A.: It hasn't prevented a lot of farmers from consuming their own capital, has it?

IKERD: No. Generally that is part of the process by which the farmers are forced out of business. You have something come along, usually a technology that comes in, and even the technology that we have developed through the USDA and the public institutions—the land grant universities as well as in the private sector—that technology invariably promises that the farmer, if they adopt it, will be able to produce at a lower cost per unit, at a lower cost per bushel or per hundredweight. But to gain full advantage of that new technology, they have to expand their production or their output.

When we have a new round of technology that comes in, the early innovators adopt it and they expand their output as more and more of them adopt that new technology; then, of course, production increases and the prices drop. You get into a situation then where the people who don't adopt the new technology quickly enough eventually have to adopt it just to survive.

Then you are left with people who, for one reason or another, because of their financial situation or because of a bad crop year or because of not being in a position to adopt a new technology, they are the people who are forced out of business.

That process of forcing them out of business is something to look at. They don't go out of business over night. They get into a situation where they are not competitive because of something new that has come along. Initially, rather than cut back or go out of business, they will simply, as you say, consume some of their capital. They will live off the capital appreciation as they try to stay in business.

ACRES U.S.A.: The one thing they don't seem to want to do is think the thing through and come at it from a different angle.

IKERD: They get caught up in this race of saying "This is the way agriculture is. We are going to have to find some way to continue to get larger and larger, and more and more specialized."

They don't realize that if they play that game, there are going to be fewer and fewer winners every round. The system is forcing you to fewer and larger farms, which means there are fewer and fewer farmers who are going to survive each round.

The losers, so to speak, use up the capital and whatever they have got in agriculture, and eventually they either go bankrupt or they see the handwriting on the wall and realize they can't continue to farm this way, and they sell out, while they still have some equity, to the neighbor who is still on the treadmill and still trying to get larger and larger.

ACRES U.S.A.: Who thinks he is going to be an ultimate winner.

IKERD: Yes. He thinks he is going to be an ultimate winner without stopping and thinking that, in the end, there will be fewer and fewer winners each time.

This has been going on for years and years. But, what is different this time is that we are in a process now where we are not just consolidating farms into fewer and larger farms, with those farms continuing to be under family ownership or independent farm ownership. What we see now is that corporations are moving toward agricultural production in a big way.

I think they learned from the poultry model. They see, in particular, an opportunity in agriculture where, if a few enough of those big farms can gain a large enough proportion of the total market, then they can stabilize supplies and they can stabilize profits over the long run.

ACRES U.S.A.: But is that going to be possible? I am thinking of Steven Blank's treatise on the end of agriculture in the American portfolio. The big fish will swallow the little fish, and then the foreign fish will swallow the American fish. What is your take on that?

IKERD: I think that is a logical next step with what is happening now. We are in a situation where the corporations are taking control of American agriculture. The farmers who are left out there become contract producers for the corporations rather than independent decision makers.

More and more, those corporations are going to be multinationals in one sense or another. They are going to be a subsidiary of some foreign firm, or they are going to be a U.S. firm that has subsidiaries in other countries.

When you get into that situation, where total agriculture is really under the control—either contract or direct control—of just a handful of giant multinational corporations, then those corporations have no sense of place. They have no commitment to a particular community because they are not a person; they have no particular commitment to any country. They are simply trying to make as much profit as they can and grow as fast as they can. That is all a corporation can do; it is nothing more than a piece of paper.

What Blanks says—and I agree with him—is that when you reach that point, then you are going to have agriculture located wherever in the world that resources are the cheapest, particularly the land and the labor resources. His argument is that land and labor are always going to be cheaper somewhere other than in the United States as long as we have an economy where our level of living exceeds most of the rest of the world.

Agriculture will be moved out of this country to someplace where the land and labor are cheaper.

ACRES U.S.A.: An associate who used to be an editor of the Tulsa World newspaper once made the remark that, in closing down the independent farmer, we are closing down one of the most successful institutions of learning that this country has ever had. As an educator, how do you see that?

IKERD: I agree with that. I think that statement comes from the standpoint of seeing the real potential productivity for the future, and actually the real future of human civilization depends upon having people who are productive—as opposed to just having technologies or factories or whatever the means of production might be.

One of the big concerns I have now is that we are moving toward a system where fewer and fewer people are doing the thinking and making the decisions. Ultimately the benefit in any society or economy goes to the people who do the creative thinking and who make the decisions.

ACRES U.S.A.: And that has always been the farmer, hasn't it?

IKERD: Historically, in American agriculture—and this is not just true of agriculture, but of a lot of other sectors of the economy that have been virtually destroyed up until now—but in agriculture it was the farmers who were doing the thinking; it was the farmers making the decisions.

Each one of these farms out here was a unique farming system, a unique operation; they had their own particular set of enterprises which for many of them were very diverse—hogs and chickens and cattle and whatever. Up until the chemical age in agriculture they had to understand how to keep their particular piece of land fertile and keep their crops growing. They had to understand how to rotate crops to at least minimize the pest cycles and keep the productivity up. In other words, the farmer had to have a knowledge and they gained this knowledge either by growing up on the farm or working with someone else who had the knowledge.

I think that is what a lot of people, including Thomas Jefferson and various leaders through the ages, have referred to as the real solid foundation for society and the economy among rural people and among farmers. We had that tremendous stock of knowledge, then, in the heads of these people.

Going back to this industrialization of agriculture, what we have done is transferred this thinking and this knowledge off the farm. These new technologies that we have developed over the years, these industrial technologies, have not been developed by farmers; they have been developed in a university experiment station or by someone in an agribusiness laboratory somewhere.

That information is simply transferred to the farmer, and all the farmer is doing with that technology is just applying it. They don't understand what is going on because they are not doing the thinking. As we move into these contract production operations, the farmers out there become contract operators, or at best franchise holders, and they are not doing the thinking; they are not making the decisions.

What we are doing is really depleting this intellectual resource by concentrating the thinking and the decision making into the minds and hands of fewer and fewer people.

ACRES U.S.A.: We are getting diminishing returns in the resources themselves, in the landed resources, let's say. For instance, out there in the Imperial Valley there are thousands of acres off duty because they have been salted to death by that kind of label-reading farmer who didn't understand the system.

IKERD: That's the downside, going back to your original question of how would you assess the pros and cons of agricultural industrialization. What we have talked about until now has been primarily the pros in terms of simply pure economic efficiency.

But pure economic efficiency basically ignores what we are doing to the inherent productivity of the natural resource base of the land and the water. It also ignores what we are doing to the inherent productivity of the people, such as the farm intellectual resources. In the process of gaining economic efficiency, we have really been depleting that basic resource base that ultimately we are going to have to depend upon to feed and clothe ourselves.

ACRES U.S.A.: Is the sustainable model a viable alternative?

IKERD: I think the sustainable model is the common-sense alternative if you look at it in the generic sense. To me, sustainability is nothing more than saying we are going to look at the long run; we are not just going to look at the short-run economics as we have with the industrial model. We are not just going to ask the question: can we feed and clothe ourselves today, but can we sustain the ability to feed and clothe ourselves indefinitely into the future, and can we do it in such a way that it is good for people?

To me sustainable agriculture just simply asks: how can we meet the needs of the present and leave equal or better opportunities for people of the future? It is farming for the long run and farming that will last.

ACRES U.S.A.: It is also farming for the community, is it not?

IKERD: Right. It is farming in the sense of not only meeting our needs, but meeting the needs of society into the future.

I like to think of it as applying the Golden Rule. The Golden Rule says: "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." We go about farming and it is important that we are able to take care of ourselves as farmers or people involved in agriculture because we can't do well by other people unless we do well by ourselves. You have to have respect, confidence, and some integrity yourself, or else you can't do well by other people.

But it goes beyond the economics of self-interest to be taking care of ourselves. We have to see that it is really in our benefit to take care of other people—and that is, people within communities, within families, and within societies today. It is developing the kind of agriculture that is not just good for the producer or the consumer, but good for society in general. Sustainability really extends that and says it is not just about doing for people now, but it is doing for people of the future as we would want them to do for us if we were going to be a member of that future generation.

ACRES U.S.A.: Joseph Schumpater, the economist, once made the remark that it is the innovator who launches the assault on the establishment. Are we going to have enough innovators in sustainable agriculture to turn this situation around?

IKERD: We have thousands of innovators now. Nobody can foresee the future with absolute certainty, but we have the innovations all across the country.

I am one of the privileged people who really has the opportunity to go around the country to attend and speak at various conferences where we have hundreds of farmers at any given conference, with thousands of farmers all across the country who are really following this general approach in terms of sustainability. They are farming in such a way as to meet their needs and be profitable while being sustainable.

ACRES U.S.A.: They are able to do this with a niche-type of approach?

IKERD: They are doing it mainly by being more intensive managers, by making more of the decisions themselves, which allows them to reduce the costs and gives them access to a particular high-value niche market such as organic and hormone- and antibiotic-free meat and things of that nature. It is recognizing their particular abilities as producers, so they do the things that they feel strongly about and the things that they do best.

They also work together and build relationships, and they are able to make these work. They have an acceptable economic level of living. I am not going to say that these people who I am talking about are necessarily going to be the wealthiest farmers in the county. I will say that, in most cases, they have a better level of living if you include the whole realm of how much they are contributing to their net worth, whether or not they are living off their capital, and whether or not they have a sense of economic security that will enable them to go on, year after year, without government programs and things of that nature. In other words, they have an acceptable level of economic returns and they are able to do it in such a way that they are taking care of their natural resources.

They are farming in a way that, to them, is ecologically sound. They are not risking their health with pesticides, agricultural chemicals, hormones, or whatever it is that they are trying to move away from. They are not all organic, but they all have that ecological conservation or environmental dimension to what they are doing.

ACRES U.S.A.: You think these two dimensions are what it takes?

IKERD: I think there is a third dimension beyond the environmental or economic dimension. These farmers have a very strong sense of community and family, and their farming is very much about building relationships with other people, particularly likeminded people in the organic or sustainable agriculture community, or other people who have a different vision for the future.

I used to be pretty much in conventional, mainstream agriculture, and I still go to some of those conferences. Mainly what you hear in conventional agriculture, and have for years, is depression. It is about what the government isn't doing that it should be doing, or is doing that it shouldn't be doing; it's about market, it's about struggling to stay alive, and it's about trying to beat out each other to see who can have the highest yield or who can farm the most land or who is going to get the next farm that comes up for sale.

ACRES U.S.A.: It is all about traditional competition for resources.

IKERD: It is a very competitive, destructive, and depressing environment in which you are operating.

In the sustainable agriculture meetings it is exactly the opposite. These people are optimistic and enthusiastic, and they really have a lot of hope for the future. They think they are involved in something that is working and that is going to work even better in the future. They share information with each other. It is generally just an altogether different attitude.

I was a little bit concerned last fall when I went out on the meeting circuit because agriculture commodity prices have been so depressed for the last couple of years. I knew a lot of what I would call sustainable producers, or alternative producers, sell a lot of basic commodities. I thought it might be difficult for them to hold on and continue doing what they are doing.

But what I found was just the opposite. These people were more optimistic about the future because they realized that if they hadn't changed their operations over the last 10 or 15 years, then they probably would have been in a very severe financial situations this year.

I talked to quite a few people who said that the downturn in agriculture commodity prices had really encouraged them, or in some cases pushed them, into going ahead and making the changes that they wanted to make anyway. In other words, it had made them even less dependent on the commodity market than they had been before, because it kind of gave them a push to go ahead and do more direct marketing or niche marketing or something different that would make them less vulnerable to these economic downturns.

ACRES U.S.A.: Have you surveyed state by state, or in Missouri, the scope of sustainable agriculture?

IKERD: It is very difficult to define because sustainable agriculture doesn't have a particular recipe. You can't look at a particular set of practices and say this is sustainable and that isn't, because it is all in how you put it together. Sustainability is much more in the minds of the people who are farming.

I have been involved in a project with the USDA to develop a thousand-case study of farmers all across the country who farm according to what I call this sustainability philosophy. You could really see the diversity of it.

I wanted to put together a thousand because I know that there are thousands out there and that there would be enough to get across the fact that there really are all different ways of doing it, and there are lots of people involved in it. They are now in the process of doing the pilot program of the first 50 of these. I am optimistic that, when they see the first 50 that have been put together, then they will go ahead and support the project.

ACRES U.S.A.: When will these case studies be available?

IKERD: I think that will be out by the end of the year. There are case studies scattered all over the country that I am familiar with, but they are not pulled together in one place and there is no uniformity about the questions they are asking and the information they are getting.

I can tell you—and you can verify this all across the country—the places where they have organizations that have been around for the last 10 years or so, since sustainable agriculture has come to the national level, where there are farmer meetings, where 75 to 80 percent of the attendees are farmers and not USDA or university people, those organizations are growing every year. In some cases they are growing by leaps and bounds.

The Upper Midwest Organic Conference, for example, had over 1,200 people this year. I am going out to the Ohio Ecological Food and Farming Association this fall, and I know last fall they had over 400 people, and that was just one state. I was out at the Northern Plains Sustainable Agriculture Association a year or so ago in Bismark, North Dakota, and even out there, where they are sparsely populated, they had 250 or 275 people. I was down at the Southern Sustainable Agriculture Work Group meeting in Jekyll Island, Georgia, and there were over 400 people there. The Small Farm Conference here in Columbia is putting more and more of an emphasis on sustainable agriculture in both the Conference and in Small Farm magazine, and I think that was up to 3,200 last year and growing. I was out in Fresno, California, and they had their first meeting of an organic farmers group—right in the heart of contract and commercial agriculture. They had about 150 people there. On the West Coast of California they have big conferences that have been going on for some time.

ACRES U.S.A.: Thirty years ago we staged a conference and it was the only one in the country.

IKERD: Yes, but now they are going on all across the country. But my perception is that attendance is falling off because there are fewer and fewer farmers left out there.

I think there is growing evidence of a viable movement, if you will. I resisted the term for a long time, but I think when I talk about sustainable agriculture now, that it is a movement.

I think sustainability is a social movement; it's a change in farming; it is really fundamentally a different philosophy of life.

That's what I see and that's what I hear among a lot of people at these conferences. The people who come to ACRES conferences have a different philosophy of life than do the people who are attending a lot of these commercial agriculture meetings.

ACRES U.S.A.: To what extent will the university participate in this movement?

IKERD: I am very pessimistic about the universities participating. I have worked very hard for the past 10 or 11 years at the University of Missouri to convince the university that sustainability is a part of the future and it is particularly a responsibility of the public and land grant universities to stay in tune with the needs of the people as individuals. The corporations can basically take care of themselves. I am not opposed to technology or even the industrial technology if someone wants to develop it as it arises out of the free market, but I am opposed to taking taxpayer dollars and using them to support the development of the kind of technology that displaces people, degrades the resources, and degrades the ability of people to make a living. I think that is a lot of what is going on. I said that when I was with the university, and since I have retired. I am still a Professor Emeritus at the University of Missouri and I still say the same things because I believe them to be true.

ACRES U.S.A.: You are writing off the university?

IKERD: I'm concerned. I am not going to write off the university in terms of working with the people in sustainable agriculture. There are some good people in the university who are working very hard to try to maintain the integrity of the program and try to continue to build it so that it will serve the needs of what I call the common people—small farmers and people in rural communities. Those are not the people who are basically going to be on corporate contracts in the future.

I think there will be less and less need for the things that universities legitimately did in the past, when we were going through the industrialization of agriculture, because there will be fewer and fewer decisions that will be made on the farms out here. More and more of the decisions regarding breeds, variety, production practices, equipment, technology, buildings, or whatever—all of those decisions are going to be made by the corporations. The people who are on the land, the farmers, are going to be either contract laborers or contract landlords.

ACRES U.S.A.: It sounds like the opening chapter of Grapes Of Wrath.

IKERD: Yes, I think so. It has been a long time in the making, but I think we are in the final stages of it.

ACRES U.S.A.: This corporate agriculture depends largely on a peasant labor force, so to speak.

IKERD: That is how some people have referred to it. Some talk about serfdom and say we are going back to medieval times. The farmer is going to be the equivalent of the serf who is out working the land for someone else.

Some people refer to the folks who are in the poultry industry today as the new serfs of agriculture. I don't think that is necessarily unfair. I think a closer relationship to what we have today is a franchise operation, but most people look at a franchise and don't understand what is involved in the ownership.

People see a McDonald's hamburger franchise and think this is a real going operation. They think the manager is making money, but that is not the case. It is the people who own the franchise who make the money, and the people who pay them to put up the golden arches are barely getting a living wage out of it.

ACRES U.S.A.: Certainly the people who are working there aren't getting anything but minimum wage.

IKERD: The people who are working there don't get anything, and the people who even own these franchises, if they also operate the franchise, don't get anything much more than a living wage.

ACRES U.S.A.: Are you going to continue speaking on the circuit, so to speak?

IKERD: I am continuing to speak out on these issues and write about them and do whatever I can. As I say, I think this is a movement; I think it is important; and I am concerned about what has happened to agriculture during my career.

I guess I feel somewhat responsible, since during most of my career I was at least a part of what I see as negative in agriculture. I wasn't doing anything in particular to move it in a positive direction. Now I want to do what I can to use what I have learned along the way to help make the situation better.

In the long run, the agriculture that we have today in this country is simply not sustainable. In the longer run, we are going to lose the ability to feed and clothe people in the process of trying maximize production and profits in the short run.

ACRES U.S.A.: We do have the situation where ConAgra and these other big corporations are increasing profits exponentially, but their primary suppliers are going down the tube.

IKERD: I think we can expect to continue to see that kind of split in the proportion of farms that are going to the corporate sector and the proportion of farms that are going to independents or the contractors.

ACRES U.S.A.: The only answer to that is to change the system. If not the entire system, then at least your farm system.

IKERD: That's what I tell people. A lot of the farmers have already done that. But eventually, even the farmers who are out here today—for instance, those on managed grazing systems—the main thing they are working on is reducing the cost of production.

Up until now, what has been focused on is reducing costs, but I think the day will come when the small dairies—as the chicken people did—are going to lose access to the market unless they develop their own market all the way through to the customer. I think individual farmers have to break away because the industrial system of processing, marketing, and distribution eventually is going to wring all of the profitability out of whatever kind of farming or production operations sell to them or feed to them through a contractual arrangement.

ACRES U.S.A.: Is there any good news?

IKERD: I think the good news is that independent farmers are proving that they can, in fact, break away from the system.

A lot of people look at it and say, well, these are just niche markets; they are just selling through farmers' markets or CSAs or direct marketing; these are small markets. But in reality, every consumer market is a niche market. We all have tastes that are a little bit different, and we all want something a bit different from what anybody else wants. We just buy all the same things at the supermarket because that mass production, mass distribution system can only handle a very limited variety of things, even though we think there is tremendous variety in the grocery store. That store still isn't providing all of the variety that all of the customers would prefer.

These individual farmers are giving people the individualized service and attention they want. The place where it shows up now is in the fastest growing niche market—the organic market. It has been growing about 20% a year for the last eight years; it has been doubling every three or four years.

You probably know that there is also a growing market for hormone- and antibiotic-free meats. It is not necessarily organic, but it is people who do not want meats with hormones and antibiotics.

There is a fast-growing market for range chickens and pastured poultry. People don't like the taste or think that the chickens that come out of the broiler factories don't have any taste.

ACRES U.S.A.: If they have a taste, it is an unwholesome taste.

IKERD: People will pay almost anything for chickens that are raised and slaughtered right on the farm. I haven't met anybody yet who could raise and slaughter as many chickens on the farm as customers that would come out and pay anywhere from $6 to $8 a bird.

These are all niches that nobody paid very much attention to three or four years ago, and they are growing faster and faster. The USDA just released information saying there are something like 5,683 farmers' markets in the country now and they are growing at a tremendous rate. CSAs—where you pay for your vegetables at the beginning of the season, and then pick them up throughout the season—are also growing.

All of these things, people look at them and say they are just little niche markets, but I run across people all of the time who are making these work. We can hope that in 30 or 40 years industrial agriculture might be the dinosaur of the past that we discarded because people finally woke up and realized that it just wasn't working.

Basic Safety Net In Difficult Times

So You Want To Plant A Garden?

Editor's note: The miracle of a garden is a creative enterprise within the reach of all of us.

From the smallest of kitchen windowsill herb boxes, to the most ambitious plot of outdoor acreage, that a few packets of tiny seeds will turn, over a relatively short span of time, an area of barren ground into a jungle of juicy edibles is unquestionably the driving force that lures so many of us to the soil. We want to witness this wonder over and over again, each season—because, by the time winter is over, the dimming thoughts of last year's effort seem just too incredible to believe:

Did it really happen—did all that stuff REALLY grow—or was it simply an overactive imagination? How could the very same soil + water + sunshine formula produce juicy tomatoes over here and golden corn over there and so many other spectacular creations in between? Did I REALLY give away THAT many cucumbers almost the size of a baseball bat, and STILL can so many pickles to enjoy all through the colder months?!? Yes, it's a miracle alright—going on right before our eyes according to the most ancient yet subtle of Nature's ways.

This year the value of a garden takes on an atmosphere of urgency not seen since the Victory Garden days of World War Two. Where did this suspicious Hoof & Mouth Disease come from that is decimating European livestock? And what about the even-more-sinister Mad Cow Disease? How many other complex biological terrors are about to be unleashed while being cloaked from public scrutiny through as many diagnostic disguises as "they" can get away with—because of a mostly unsuspecting public.

Moreover, what about the weather patterns that are getting more wild and curiously "artificial" in behavior? Will these wreak havoc upon our farmlands and cause shortages of foods we presently just take for granted will ALWAYS be there at the grocery store? The more "they" play with their HAARP-related super-duper secret technotoys, the more hostile the crop growing conditions will likely become. It really doesn't take much of a change in weather patterns for massive crop failures to result.

And then there's the genetic engineering of plants that's becoming, with each growing season, more widespread (actually, forced upon many farmers through economic pressures) yet loaded with serious questions. Recently "they" apparently had to confess on their controlled media that—surprise, surprise—it now looks like genetically modified corn, not approved for human consumption, has crept into a lot more than just those millions of taco shells that were recalled several months ago. What else has been adulterated (and diabolically programmed) without our knowledge or desire?

And that's "just" the icing on top of the cake of the longtime chemical approach to "pumped-up" agriculture—agriBUSINESS—that makes our farmlands look more like a chemical factory than an organic process of Mother Nature. It's a miracle anything at all grows in the artificial soup that has replaced what used to be rich, mineralized, and worm-laden soil.

Genetic and chemical tinkering—for reasons of both commercial profit and a more sinister health-degradation-of-the-populace agenda—have made most fruits and vegetables bland-tasting and vitamin/mineral-deficient at best, and outright poisonous at worst. It's a sorry state of affairs when that old decorative bowl of wax fruit on grandma's dining room table looks (and may taste) more and more appealing.

For all the above reasons—and many more you all could add-in here—a home garden is a very good idea.

So, at this timely juncture in the early stages of this year's growing season for North America, we enthusiastically share Rick Martin's constantly evolving tutorial on home gardening. Again this year Rick has updated and expanded his ongoing "work in progress" and we also include several photos of some of his past efforts. His local gardens are, from personal experience, as beautifully satisfying to look at as they are functionally bountiful.

It's time to get to work—or play, as the case should be—and enjoy the satisfaction of creating one of the most important contributions you can possibly make to your—and your family's and friends'—good health and well being!

The season is once again upon us to begin thinking about ordering seeds and planning the Spring garden. Some of you may already have plants started in flats, perhaps in a cold-frame. And speaking of cold-frames, we've given this "work in progress" something of a face-lift, with new graphics, charts, and hopefully some useful information for you serious gardeners out there.

The previous "warnings" about Monsanto and other corporations working on genetic engineering of our food still hold true today,

A HORSE IN BALANCE WEARS A CROWN OF LIGHT

A story honoring en-Light-ened riding masters who developed Guidelines to bring: discipline, beauty, grace, and balance in the movements of a horse, from a girl who desired to be a better rider. She became the first equestrian American woman in Olympic history. This is her own life story; how their Guidelines produced oneness with her horses, also the realization of Creator-God, the Balancing Fulcrum, from riding the Figure 8. The en-Light-ened equestrian masters were Fritz Stecken and Ludwig Von Zeiner, Head Rider of The Spanish Riding School.

health-food store near you that actually sells some living food, there is nothing, AND I MEAN NOTHING, to compete with freshly picked salads, beets, melons, tomatoes—you name it. There is only one slight problem I can anticipate about such a project: You MAY become addicted to gardening, once you start!

Yes, that's right. You'll have to have your daily dose of perhaps more so. The importance of home-grown food just can't be stressed enough. It's good exercise; it helps bring the family together on a mutually beneficial project; and it is a pure joy to experience the garden throughout the seasons.

In looking over the previous comments I've made about gardening, I hope that one point has been made with absolute clarity. And that point is: RAISED BED gardening has a wealth of advantages over traditional open-field gardening, not the least of which are:

- increased yield using less space,
- less labor (during the hottest part of the summer), and
- less water.

You can make those beds any shape you like, which usually depends upon the contour of your property—half moon beds, circular beds, long beds, short beds—well, you get the idea. But getting those beds 6 inches to 1 foot up from ground level also means you have less distance to stoop down to work. Everything is at arm's reach—presuming, of course, that all beds are 4-5 feet across. (And, as an aside, you don't ever want to actually walk on the beds once they're shaped and planted.)

The scientific gremlins behind the scenes at Monsanto recently had the sheets thrown back on their "terminator seed" plans, thus exposing them for exactly who and what they are. But don't think that, just because public opinion rallied on the seed issue for a brief time, this monster won't rear its ugly head once again, soon, only from an entirely different direction, probably under an entirely new name.

"So what!" you say? Well, here's what. The nutritional value of the very food you eat is determined by a wide range of influences, but the primary one is the genetic makeup of the seed itself. Beyond that there is, of course, soil nutrients to consider. And, of course, the amount of actual love and other "green thumb" energy you put into the planting and growing.

But, let's not pass over the critical importance of the actual seed that starts it all. Most commercial and home gardening seeds these days (you know, the kind you pick up in the grocery store or at a hardware store) are hybrid seeds.

Hybrids may all ripen at roughly the same time; they may be prettier to look at; they may even be harder and more resistant to disease and pests. But you cannot plant a garden next year using the seeds from this year's crop.

That's right: you have to go back to the trough, shell out some more coins, and the big, usually oil companies get the profits, while laughing all the way to the bank. And there's no telling what genetic traits important to good health and taste have been eliminated from those hybrid seeds.

Here's a concept worthy of your consideration: Why not grow and save your own seeds? This can (and should) be done by utilizing that now-rare breed called "heritage" or "open-pollinated" seeds. Amazingly enough—although I suppose this shouldn't be a surprise—there are only a handful of seed companies where you may still purchase these PRICELESS TREASURES. I have expanded the list herein of available resources for open-pollinated, heirloom seeds based upon the latest information I could find and assemble.

Planting a small garden at home is an idea that just makes sense. Everything about it is good. It is good exercise. It's a good excuse to get you outside, if you need an excuse. It feels good to do it. It tastes good to eat it. And if you do it right, it looks good, too. Moreover, gifts from your home garden are a wonderfully personal way to share with friends and neighbors.

Unless you have access to a great crispy butter-lettuce, or fresh herbs for that special sauce. And once you get used to having these gifts from the Earth as staples of your diet, you just may never go back to buying that old stuff at the grocery store again—at least from the produce section. And that's by no means all of the good reasons to devote some of your energies to a garden of life-sustaining bounty.

The forces of Nature have only grown more wild over this past year, leaving millions of people the world over without the basics of food or shelter. Food shortages are common in many regions. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that, in what are certain to be difficult economic times in the days ahead, having a home garden to help sustain you and your family becomes not only prudent, but potentially even profitable.

Let me just take a few moments here, early on, to add some comments of a general nature to this article, originally written some time ago. I guess you could call these comments a general "stream of consciousness" sort of thing, but there may be some points touched on here that I may have missed in the earlier passes at covering this subject.

There are many factors to consider when planning a garden—be it a little patch for some fresh salad lettuce, or substantial acreage to support a larger goal. Water is an important component, and the cost of that water CAN be very expensive.

It is easy to look at, say, an acre of barren land and imagine it covered with juicy zucchini, tomatoes, and lettuce. But it is an entirely different matter to plant an acre, water an acre, weed an acre, and, generally, devote yourself to that acre of land until harvest time. Obviously there are pros and cons to both extremes. But there is a balance point, I believe, somewhere in-between.

Soil preparation is CRUCIAL to a healthy, nutritional crop. Many of the old-timers swear by cow or horse manure, compost, and other “natural” soil amendments. Others swear by the use of “modern” chemical fertilizers. Only you can decide what is appropriate for you and your family.

With the discoveries over recent years about bacterial, biological, chemical, antibiotic, and potentially genetically dangerous substances in cow dung, for example, you may want to consider using other natural amendments than manure. Be diligent, though, because most so-called compost, in bulk, these days, is treated with either solid waste or urine.

If you sit down to plan your garden and you decide you want it to be “organic”, that decision has some implications in terms of how you prepare the soil. And please don’t think that you will be putting seed into the ground the day you decide to plant a garden—not if you expect a real crop.

SOIL PREPARATION and QUALITY SEED (meaning: open-pollinated, non-hybrid—not the genetically altered norm) are the key factors to having a beautiful and satisfying gardening experience.

Another pointer: Plant food YOU LOVE TO EAT. For example, many years ago I really enjoyed cantaloupe and other melons, so I planted LOTS. When it came time to harvest (as I had NOT staggered the plantings—big mistake), I had over 50 melons all ripe at the same time. What did I do? I juiced them, froze the juice, and had fresh juice throughout the winter months.

Also, try planting some foods you either don’t know about or have never tried. One “fun” food is spaghetti squash.

And another point: think about color in your garden. It is amazing what a few well-placed flowers can do for the overall appearance of a garden in full bloom, as well as attracting some pest-eating birds and other insects.

When you are designing your garden, contemplate the garden to accomodate the space available. Is this space more conducive to a circular garden? How about a half-moon?

Raised beds are certainly the most efficient method of planting (in my opinion)—but where is it written that all raised beds must be square or rectangular in shape? Get creative, but consider practical application within that creative shaping. Also, allow yourself enough physical space between the garden beds so that when you walk through the garden, when it’s fully grown, you won’t have to tip-toe over vines and dodge overall garden growth. It simply is a more comfortable feeling to be able to walk through your garden in a relaxed (rather than cautious) mode.

Staggered planting: When you are planting rows and rows of any given food, be it lettuce, carrots, or whatever, plant a row or two, then leave space for planting another row or two every other week, for a number of weeks. So when you are viewing your garden, you’ll have several planted rows punctuated by open space reserved for subsequent plantings of the same crop. And then a switch to several rows of a different crop, then open space “reserved”, etc.

Ask yourself: is there a particular crop that seems to grow well in your area? Is there a particular crop that there seems to be a “demand for” in your area? Is there a possible market for your excess produce? Could you set up a “truck farm” stand at your property and make some extra cash to help with expenses?

Also ask yourself, when planning: is this garden large enough to justify starting a compost pile? Composting should become second nature to you as you progress in your gardening experience. Compost, done right, can not only create the healthy, aerated soil you need, but it is a creative by-product of your garden waste.

Another aspect of gardening to consider is this: Do you want to sow seeds directly into the ground, or do you want to prepare little seedlings to be transplanted into the garden? There is a lot to be said for planting seed directly into the ground, although often you have to wait a little longer for the proper soil temperature.

One COMMON mistake is to plant your seeds too deep. The SIZE of the seed will give you an indication as to how much dirt to place over them. Small seeds require a shallow planting. Beans, for example, are planted much deeper than, say lettuce. And if you would like nice straight rows, use a string tied between two sticks as your planting guide. Also, sow your seeds more heavily than you would normally think to do (or most seed-packet instructions suggest) if you would like nice “full” rows. You can always thin out the plants to allow proper spacing, if they’re too thick. But it’s difficult to fill in the spaces when there is no seed growing!

In particularly cold regions, the use of a “cold frame” or “mini-greenhouse” can save months of growing time. It is possible within a cold frame to get lettuce and other seedlings started in “flats” which can be transplanted directly into the garden beds when the time is right. Cold frames are easily constructed and can be made of anything from cinderblocks and glass, to a wooden frame with clear plastic. The more ways you can start your garden to grow, sheltered from a potentially harsh physical environment, the more likely it is that you’ll be eating fresh garden food when others are still only watching their gardens sprout.

Hydroponics offers another viable alternative for “indoor” gardening, but that more exotic pursuit is not the topic of this particular article. There are many good references out there on this subject, though it is a more “high-tech” approach to growing things.

Another point worthy of consideration when planting a substantial garden is PRESERVING some of your crop for another day—that is, canning, freeze drying, or dehydrating. Also, if your property permits, consider a “root cellar” where you can cold-store foods such as acorn squash, large onions, carrots, potatoes, etc.

In an older Seeds Of Change catalog (also be sure to see their excellent www.seedsofchange.com website), we read:

[QUOTING]
The establishment of a sustainable food system that can provide sufficient nutrition for all is one of the greatest challenges of our time. To do this without damaging our natural resources—water, air, soil, plants, and animals—will require an unprecedented cooperative effort. The current commercial, industrial-style model of agriculture is capable of producing massive quantities of food, but carries with it tremendous costs. Foremost is the depletion and degradation of non-renewable resources, including topsoil, oil, minerals, clean water, and widespread social disruption through the elimination of traditional rural communities and their land base.

During the past couple of decades, there has been a growing worldwide movement to reclaim our food system. By implementing state-of-the-art organic farming methods, along with time-honored traditional wisdom that has largely been ignored by modern agriculture, conscientious farmers can pass their land on to their children in better condition than when they started. Most contemporary farmers believe in good land stewardship, yet have been forced to compromise because agricultural goods are significantly undervalued, and chemically-grown foods are subsidized by the government. A few philosophically passionate individuals have chosen to adhere to organic principles by creating farm ecosystems that maximize natural biological processes and interactions. They invest more of their time and energy than conventional farmers do into restoring and improving soil with good crop rotation, cover crops, composting, and controlling pests using methods that have a low impact upon the environment.

[END QUOTING]
So, with this background in mind, let’s begin our journey toward understanding the mechanics of putting in a garden. And, yes, IT CAN BE FUN!
Oh, one last thing: be sure to plant some sunflower seeds along the perimeter of your garden. Late in the season those big, bright sunflowers really add cheer to the space and attract birds who also feast on the insects feasting on your now lush garden.

THE SOWER

That same day Immanuel went out of the house, and sat by the seaside.

And many people gathered around him, so that he had to go up and sit in a boat, and all the people stood on the seashore.

And he spoke many things to them in parables and said, “Behold, a sower went out to sow;

“And when he had sown, some seed fell on the roadside, and the fowls came and ate it.

“Other seed fell upon the rock, where there was not sufficient soil; and it sprang up earlier because the ground was not deep enough;

“But when the Sun shone, it was scorched, and because it had no root, it dried up;

“And other seed fell among thistles, and the thistles sprang up and choked it.

“And other seed fell in good soil and bore fruit, some one hundred-fold and some sixty and some thirty.

“He who has ears to hear, let him hear.”

— Matthew 13:1-9

CONSIDER THIS

With geophysical and climatic changes of great proportions looming on the horizon, combined with awakening to the reality of nutritionless food, growing one’s own food becomes an increasingly desirable idea. At some point in the not too distant future, it will become a necessity.

“Give us the strength to encounter that which is to come that we may be brave in peril, constant in tribulation, temperate in wrath, and in all changes of fortune, and down to the gates of death, loyal and loving to one another.”

Most people in cities have no idea how to begin a garden or even consider the possibility that such a thing can be done on a smaller scale using planter boxes. But for the average person in more rural areas who is unfamiliar with the often technical aspects of growing a garden, the prospect becomes too overwhelming to consider and is put off indefinitely.

GUIDELINES FOR SPRING PLANTING

For spring planting in the Solar Growing Frame, the following vegetables are recommended by Eileen Weinsteiger. Planting dates are for eastern Pennsylvania. Choose varieties described as cold resistant in seed catalogs.

Broccoli	Start seedlings indoors in late February or early March and set them into the frame on April 1.
Cabbage	See Broccoli
Carrots	Direct-seed on April 1.
Kohlrabi	See Broccoli
Lettuce	Direct-seed on April 1. To transplant, start indoors in February and set into the frame in March.
Onion sets	Plant in the frame in mid-March.
Parsley	Transplant on April 1.
Peas	Direct-seed into the frame two to three weeks earlier than you would into a garden, or in mid-March.
Radishes	Direct-seed at the beginning of April.
Spinach	Start indoors in February and set into the frame in March.

All spacings for spring crops should be at least half again as wide as spacings recommended for growing beds, because of the danger of fungus disease in the moist, warm conditions of the frame during spring weather.

it truly is the better part of WISDOM to take steps in this direction to insure quality nourishment in the days, months, and years ahead. I know that the time for beginning a garden for this growing season may seem to be too late for some geographical areas which receive this publication—but please remember that the garden spot you prepare will be needed and used not only this season, but for many years ahead. Therefore, by all means, get busy! No excuses! Also, buy a straw hat for Sun protection.

The instructions here are something that I have personally used over the last 15+ years. If you follow the instructions explained here, they will work, and you will have food to eat.

The initial financial outlay can be considerable—but in subsequent years the cost is relatively small. When you consider growing your own food, rich in nutrients, the cost should be secondary. The charts within this article hold a wealth of critical information—by all means, USE THEM. Even the most sophisticated gardener can learn from the information contained within them.

“Our old food we used to eat was good. The meat from the buffalo and game was good. It made us strong. These cows are good to eat, soft, tender, but they are not like that meat. Our people used to live a long time. Today we eat White man’s food; we cannot live so long—maybe seventy, maybe eighty years, not a hundred. Sweet Medicine told us that. He said this food would be sweet, and after we taste this food we want it, and forget our own foods. Chokecherries and plums and wild turnips and honey from the wild bees, that was our food. This other food is too sweet. We eat it and forget.... It’s all coming true, what he said.”

— Fred Last Bull, Keeper of the Sacred Arrows of the Cheyenne Tribe, as told to an audience in Busby, Montana, in 1967.

SIZE-UP YOUR PROPERTY

An obvious first step is to survey your property to see what the most reasonable location for a garden would be. Always keep in mind the availability of water. Choose a location with lots of direct Sunlight. Also consider overall size—the larger the garden, the more time and water it will take to maintain.

You want an area large enough to produce sufficient food for you, your family, and friends, but small enough so you are not an absolute slave to the demands of its size. As a single person, starting with a garden about 10 feet x 10 feet is adequate. I would recommend, however, that larger would be more desirable. For the purposes of this article, I use a

GUIDE TO ORDERING SEED AMOUNTS
Do you have any idea how many seeds you get in a packet? And do you know how that number relates to the garden space you intend to plant? Most gardeners aren’t clear on that relationship, and this uncertainty can make filling out seed order forms an exercise in creative guesswork. Seed catalogs offer varying degrees of assistance. The most helpful tell you how many ounces of seed a packet contains, how many plants a packet produces, and how many feet of row that fills. Other catalogs offer slightly less complete information, and some provide no help at all.
When you’re in a quandary over how much seed you need to order, refer to the following listing of vegetables for some guidance. It should help you avoid ordering three times as much turnip seed as you really need or having to scramble and reorder snap beans for a midseason succession planting.
Vegetable	How Many Feet of Row Will One Packet Plant?
Asparagus	One packet produces 60 roots; need 15-20 roots to plant 25-ft. row.
Beans
Fava	2-oz. packet contains 35-40 seeds, enough to plant a 20-ft. row.
Lima (bush)	2-oz. packet contains 115-130 of small-seeded variety, 45-50 of large-seeded variety; large-seeded packet will sow 15-ft. row, small-seeded packet will sow longer row.
Lima (pole)	One packet will plant 10 poles or 10-ft. row.
Snap (bush)	2-oz. packet contains 130-150 seeds, enough to sow 25-ft. row.
Snap (pole)	2-oz. packet contains 100 seeds, enough to sow 16 poles or 25-ft. row.
Soybean	2-oz. packet contains 200-400 seeds; depending on variety, enough to plant 33- to 66-ft. row.
Beets	1/2-oz. packet contains 600 seeds, enough to sow 50-ft. row.
Broccoli	1&1/2-g. packet contains 375 seeds, enough to sow 30-ft. row; 1-oz. packet produces 2,500-3,500 plants.

hypothetical garden plot of 20 feet x 80 feet, which is a pretty good-sized garden for a small family. When you start planting more than a quarter acre, then you've got something which may keep you tied to it with a ball and chain.

If you only have an area where there is a lawn, consider turning it under and planting a garden instead. In difficult times you won't want to eat the lawn—or perhaps I should say: you may want to eat the lawn, but a garden will taste a lot better.

In times of drought, a small, intensively grown garden is highly desirable as the yield is very high and it requires less water than traditional farming methods.

"No one should control more arable land than he can maintain in a high state of productivity, the four great factors of which are good seed, suitable moisture, abundant available plant food, and rational tillage. In a large majority of cases where failure, or partial failure of an abundant crop is observed, the meager results are due to a partial lack of one of these four fundamentals."

— Isaac Phillip Roberts in the book Ten Acres Enough

Cold frames are basically mini-greenhouses. For most of you in the colder parts of the country, you may extend your growing season considerably through the

A PORTABLE, EASILY STORABLE COLD FRAME

Jack Ruttle, an editor of Rodale's Organic Gardening magazine, came up with an ingenious way to build a portable cold frame from a half sheet of 1/2-inch exterior plywood, a few screws, and two small, old wooden storm windows given him by a friend. He used 3/4-inch scrap lumber for screwing blocks placed in the corners of the frame. More of the scrap was used for reinforcing rails along the top of the front and back pieces. These rails provide a sturdy support for the storm windows. Both the blocks and rails were attached permanently to the front and back pieces with screws and glue. The end pieces were attached to the front and back with a screw in each of the eight corners. The back of the frame is 18 inches high and the front is 6 inches high. Window size determined the width and the angle of the frame.

Ruttle assembles his frame early every spring to house the large quantities of seedlings he starts indoors. To work in the frame he simply removes a window, and to vent he turns a window slightly to create an opening. When the last of the spring seedlings has moved to the garden, he unscrews the frame and stacks the pieces in a neat pile until next season.

Easy Portable Frame: This cold frame was fashioned from a half sheet of plywood and two recycled wooden storm windows. It's easy to assemble, so you can set it up and take it down as your seasonal gardening needs require use of this very inexpensive and sensible idea.

We’ve reproduced nearby several graphics that will give you the basic idea of how to fashion a cold frame. But essentially, a greenhouse or a cold-frame can be built using available materials, and the end result is that you can be eating fresh garden lettuce while everyone else is waiting for the snow to melt! It is recommended that you place the cold frame in a physically sheltered area with a southern, sunny exposure, thus maximizing the use of the available light.

Depending on the area in which you live, you may even elect to maintain a cold frame (or green house) garden year round and forget the rest, simply because of the ability to control the growing environment for your plants.

In some areas of the country, extreme heat becomes a problem throughout summer, and in other areas it can be difficult to maintain growing conditions that are warm enough.

One inexpensive way to heat a cold frame (a bit smelly, but effective) is to line the bottom of the cold frame with “fresh” horse or cow manure, place a thick layer of straw over it, and then put the “flats” of seedlings on top of that. The warmth generated by the decomposing (composting) manure will heat the cold frame. There are many techniques for achieving the same end (usually just a

GUIDELINES FOR FALL PLANTING

Eileen Weinstein of the Rodale Research Center horticultural staff suggests the following crops for fall solar-frame planting. They are listed along with their seed-starting times (in eastern Pennsylvania) and recommended spacings. Choose varieties described in catalogs as low-light tolerant and cold resistant.

Vegetable	When to Seed	When to Transplant	Spacing (in inches)	Harvest †
Broccoli	July 1-14	3-5 weeks later	12-15	Sept. to mid-Nov.
Cabbage	July 1-14	3-5 weeks later	12-15	Sept. to early Nov.
Cauliflower	July 1-14	3-5 weeks later	12-15	Sept. to mid-Nov.
Chinese cabbage	late July	3-5 weeks later	8-10	Oct. to Dec.
Kale	July to Aug.	4-6 weeks later	12	Oct. to Dec.
Kohlrabi	early Aug.	3-4 weeks later	6	late Sept. to early Oct.
Lettuce*	late July to early Aug.	3-5 weeks later	6-8	Oct. to early Dec.
Spinach*	late July to early Aug.	3-5 weeks later	4-6	Oct. to early Dec.
Parsley	June to July	4-6 weeks later	4-6	into mid-Dec.

Swiss chard, Japanese chard, endive, celery cabbage, India mustard, Chinese flowering white cabbage, Chinese mustard, and edible chrysanthemum have also been grown successfully in the fall in Solar Growing Frames. Planting times for these crops will have to be learned through experience. Start the crops listed above in late July or August. If they bolt, try starting them later the next time you plant them. If they fail to mature properly, try planting them earlier. Root crops, including turnips, radishes, beets, and carrots, are generally less successfully grown in solar frames, chiefly because of root maggot damage.

HIGH-YIELD GARDENING: RAISED BEDS

A SURVEY OF RAISED BEDS

ROUNDED

Description: Curved mound with gradually sloping sides.

Advantages: Because of its rounded contour and gently curved sides, which can be planted all the way down, this style of bed offers somewhat more planting space than indicated by its width at ground level and significantly more than beds with straight, angled sides. For example, a 5-foot-wide bed with a rounded top has over 20 percent more planting space than a 5-foot-wide bed with straight sides angled at 45 degrees. It is also relatively easy to shape.

Disadvantages: Plants closest to the edges of the bed may sidle or droop over into the walkway, necessitating wider paths. (To prevent this, plant small or narrow, stiffly erect plants at sides of the bed.) Also, lack of any drainage trough means that water may run out of the bed and into surrounding paths, taking planting soil along with it.

When recommended: Most feasible for good, well-conditioned soil, rich in organic matter and soil that is porous and able to hold moisture well.

FLAT-TOP

Description: Level bed surface with straight sides angled 45 degrees from horizontal, forming an angled drainage ditch on each side of the bed where it merges with the path.

Reprinted from: High Yield Gardening, by Hunt & Bortz

Advantages: Flat top and trenches work against water and soil loss from the growing area.

Disadvantages: Slanted sides reduce space available for planting and may require extra effort to construct and maintain.

When recommended: Good option for soils low in organic matter, for extremely heavy clay soils, and for beginning intensive gardeners.

WALLED-IN FLAT-TOP

Description: Level surface surrounded by ridges of soil around the perimeter of the bed. Straight sides slanted at 45-degree angle to horizontal.

Advantages: Ridges hold water and soil on top of bed within planted area.

Disadvantages: Has the least growing space of any type of raised bed. (To optimize what's there, position larger plants near the sides of the bed so one vertical-half of their upper growth extends out over unplanted sides of the bed.)

When recommended: Helpful where water is limited and erosion is a problem, or where capacity of the soil to hold water needs considerable improvement.

“...ere long, the most valuable of all arts will be the art of deriving a comfortable subsistence from the smallest area of soil. No community whose every member possesses this art can ever be the victim of oppression in any of its forms.”

— Abraham Lincoln, 1859

Once you’ve identified the location for your garden, then the work really begins. This article will concentrate primarily on raised-bed gardening, which is called by various names.

The beds are rectangular in overall shape, varying in width from 4-5 feet across and whatever length you determine. If the shape of your particular piece of land is more suitable for such, the beds can take on curves or even become circular. The finished beds are elevated above the ground, anywhere from six inches to a foot high.

Why raised beds? Well, for one thing, raised beds can solve a wide range of gardening problems. The chart nearby summarizes the main points to be aware of.

But let’s begin with soil preparation because, without that, there won’t ultimately be any food for the table.

Spectacular yields depend first on soil conditioning that can readily meet the heavy demands of close planting, carefully timed successions, and a growing season stretched to its absolute limit.

“Teach us to know and to see all the powers of the Universe, and give to us the knowledge to understand that they are all really One Power.”

— Black Elk

I will assume that most of you putting in your first garden will not go to the trouble of having your soil actually “tested”. But if you do, keep in mind that most plants thrive in a pH range anywhere between 6.0 and 7.5. A good rule of thumb would be: Assume your soil is very poor and needs amending with nutrients and organic matter. It is essential to have organic material in the soil, such as manure, compost, minerals, or combination amendments which loosen the soil to allow for retention of moisture and healthy root growth.

If you are purchasing manure, be sure it is “aged” for six months to a year—otherwise you’ll end up with a lot of weeds and grass seed in the garden. Most bagged manure at nurseries is sterilized and aged. In many rural areas manure is readily available from local ranchers and is generally advertised in the want-ads, and often will be delivered for a fee.

Larger gardens can require quite a few cubic yards of manure and it is considerably less expensive in bulk. However, the danger comes in not knowing if it is “aged”, and that can really make the difference if you end up with a huge pile of grass or weeds in your garden.

“Creation does not take place where there is a scattering and dissipation of energies. Creation requires a gathering together and focusing of your power within a circle of commitment—like a seed, an egg, a womb, or a marriage. If you would create and not destroy, you must remember always the Sacred Hoop. Consider wisely the ways in which you would use your power and then around those ways draw the sacred circle of commitment. In the warm atmosphere of that circle, the power of Love builds and builds like a storm above the wet summer prairie, until suddenly the circle can hold no more and explodes in the conception of the new.”

— spoken by White Buffalo Calf Woman, from Ken Carey’s Return Of The Bird Tribes

PREPARING THE SOIL

Go out to the area you’ve chosen as a garden spot and carefully examine and feel the soil. Much can be deduced just from this simple exercise.

The next intermediate step will be to till the soil. Many gardening purists insist on digging by hand—but I have found over the years that a rototiller can be a good friend indeed. It all depends on the size of your garden plot and how easy or difficult the soil is to work.

There are a variety of excellent books available on the subject of raised-bed gardening, and most go into great detail about double-digging the beds by hand, while adding various soil amendments. The instructions I am providing here are geared for those of you readers who have never planted a garden, aren’t particularly interested in digging a quarter-acre plot by hand, but would still like to do a good job of preparing the soil for growing food—without killing yourself in the process.

Tilling is best pursued when the soil is somewhat moist but not soaking wet. Many types of tillers are good; I prefer Troy-Bilt [for a catalog call 1-800-889-9600]. Very dry soil is difficult to break up and the tiller will tend to “buck”. If you are starting your soil preparation during the summer months, you may have to heavily water the garden area over a period of several days, and then wait for it to partially dry before beginning the tilling process.

Once you’ve tilled the soil so that the top foot or more is loose, then you are ready to begin adding the necessary soil amendments to properly build up the soil. I have included with this article some charts and other fertilizing guides for your assistance in choosing soil amendments.

Depending on where you live, your local nursery can provide you with a wealth of information. Different nurseries have different soil amendments. There are many excellent “soil building” products on the market—some organic, some not.

Don’t get too focused upon a strictly organic approach, but you certainly do want some organic matter mixed into the soil for healthy root production for your crops. What you elect to use may very well be determined by what is available in your area—that helps supply what your particular soil may need.

“It is a fundamental error to suppose that farming is neither a business nor a profession. It is a business which requires the highest business talent; it is a profession which requires the best technical skill.... No other profession requires such a variety of learning, such an insight into Nature, such skill of a technical kind, in order to be successful, as the profession of farming.”

— Harvey W. Wiley from The Lure Of The Land

Once you’ve purchased and spread your soil amendments (which can include manure, organic compost, minerals, and other materials) across the entire surface area of your garden spot, then once again till the soil with the rototiller—or dig by hand if you are so inclined.

Fertilizer, whether organic or commercial, should be spread across the top of the completed beds and then lightly worked into the top several inches of the soil. Therefore, when spreading amendments for tilling into the soil, hold any actual fertilizer aside for the final step after the beds have been constructed.

Once you’ve spread the soil amendments over your garden area and have rototilled it thoroughly, next comes the hard part (physically). For the sake of discussion, let's say your garden area (plot) is 20 x 80 feet. At this point you'll be needing a flat, square-end shovel with a short handle. Beginning at one end, shovel an outer pathway along the 80 foot side. The pathway will be approximately 18 inches wide. As you shovel (deeply) the soft, tilled soil, throw each shovelful right next to you as you go—on what will be your first bed. The beds will be, on the average, about 4 feet across. You could, theoretically, have a bed which would, in this case, measure 4 feet by 80 feet. (It is nice to break up these long beds with cross pathways for ease of moving around in the garden.)

When you have finished shoveling your first outer pathway by placing the excess dirt onto your first bed—then measure 4 feet across and mark it with occasional stakes or with stakes and a long string.

Then, beginning at one end along the 20-foot side, 4 feet in from the 80-foot outer edge, begin shoveling an inner pathway. The pathway should be whatever width you are comfortable with—don't crowd yourself—18 inches is a good standard (less if space is limited). With the first shovel of dirt, throw it immediately to your left. With the next shovel, to your right—left then right, left then right, until you are all the way across the 80-foot length of land. You now have an outer path, one 4-foot very rough looking bed, another path, and then the rest of the plot. Repeat the process. In the end you will have 4 raised beds, approximately 4 feet across and 80 feet long.

SHAPING THE BEDS

Now, using a long-handled (preferably wide) rake, you will begin to shape and even out the beds. The beds should be, for all intents and purposes, flat on top.

When there is a lot of organic matter in the soil, the beds can be shaped as rounded mounds. But for purposes here, I'll generically describe them as "flat-surfaced". You'll be able to tell by the texture of your specific soil what is the most appropriate shape for your own garden. A flat surface tends to be the easiest to work with.

With the flat-surfaced beds, sides should be at a 45-degree angle to the horizonital. In other words, a moderate slope upward should be fashioned around the edges. As you work with the dirt, you will develop a "feel" for it.

Once you've completed the general shaping of each of the beds, you should be pretty tired, so, take a break and have some lemonade.

After your rest break, sprinkle that chemical or organic fertilizer evenly across the top of each bed. Then gently work the fertilizer into the top several inches of the beds with a rake. When done, smooth the entire top of each bed to a flat surface.

Then take a piece of plywood, say 2.5 feet

x 4 feet, and place it across the far end of the first bed. Stand on top of the board and gently jump up and down—you will flatten the surface of the beds to the extent that they will keep their shape in all weather conditions. Step off the board, move it a bit, and repeat the process until the entire surface is gently flattened. Do this to all of the beds. Maybe it's time for another glass of lemonade now, while you admire your handiwork.

I would then recommend, with the beds now complete, that you drive wooden stakes into the ground at key spots around the edges of each bed—say, the four corners and then every six to ten feet—right up to the outer edge of the bed. These stakes—say, four inches wide, 1 inch thick, by 1 foot long—will serve as "hose guides". As you move watering hoses around your garden, this will prevent the hose from running up the sides of your beds and sliding over and breaking your plants (which can often happen in just a moment). There are also commercially available plastic and metal hose guides in garden centers of many stores (like Walmart and Kmart and elsewhere) which operate a bit more cleverly than wooden stakes in terms of rollers and curved guides to prevent hoses from jumping over corners.

FENCING

Prior to planting, and depending upon where you live, you may want to consider putting up a wire fence to keep out dogs and cats and wild animals (like rabbits and deer) who may view your garden as theirs. Just one animal can do a great deal of damage to the completed beds. Cats will often use the soft dirt in a freshly prepared garden bed as a "litter box". Generally speaking, fencing around your garden is often a good idea.

PLANTING

Using the raised-bed method of gardening, due to the loose soil structure, you are able to plant the rows closer together because the roots themselves grow straight down, rather than flattening out, as happens with harder soil. You are also able to plant closer together within rows. Therefore, the overall yield is higher in a smaller space. Due to the high percentage of organic

ANALYSIS OF RECOMMENDED ORGANIC SOIL AMENDMENTS

N, P, and K refer to the three main nutrients plants need: NITROGEN for green growth and in compost piles to speed decomposition; PHOSPHORUS for root growth, disease resistance, and production of good fruits, vegetables, and flowers; and POTASH for strong stems, vigorous roots and increased disease resistance. Plants also need HUMUS which is provided by decomposed organic matter such as compost and manure.

NITROGEN

Cottonseed Meal
3-5% N, 2% P, 1% K. Lasts 4-6 months. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Fair source of nitrogen. Especially good for citrus and azaleas because it has an acidifying effect on soil.

Blood Meal
12.5% N, 1.3% P, 0.7% K. Lasts 3-4 months. Use up to 5 lbs./100 sq. ft. A quick acting source of nitrogen, good for slow compost piles. Can burn plants if using more than 3 lbs. per 100 square feet. If using higher amounts, wait 2 weeks to plant.

Hoof & Horn Meal
14% N, 2% P, 0% K. Lasts 12 months. Use up to 4 lbs./100 sq. ft. Highest nitrogen source. Slow releasing: no noticeable results for 4-6 weeks.

Fish Meal
10.5% N, 6% P, 0% K. Lasts 6-8 months. Use up to 5 lbs./100 sq. ft. Good combined nitrogen and phosphorus source.

PHOSPHORUS

Bone Meal
3% N, 20% P, 0% K. Lasts 6 months to 1 year. Use up to 5 lbs./100 sq. ft. Excellent source of phosphorus. Especially good on roses, around bulbs, and around fruit trees and flower beds.

Phosphate Rock
33% P. Lasts 3-5 years. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Very slow releasing.
Soft Phosphate
18% P. Lasts 2-3 years. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Clay base makes it more available to plants than the phosphorus in phosphate rock, though the two are used interchangeably.

POTASH

Kelp Meal (Seaweed)
1% N, 0% P, 12% K, 33% trace minerals. Lasts 6 months to 1 year. Excellent source of potash, iron, and other minerals. Reportedly, the proper amount of trace minerals in the soil may mean only one-half the fertilizers will be needed for the same growth and yield! Kelp meal is also a natural fungicide. Use sparingly (up to 1 pound per 100 square feet per year) because it contains growth hormones.

Wood Ashes
1-10% K. Lasts 6 months. Use up to 1-2 lbs./100 sq. ft. Ashes from wood are high in potash and help repel root maggots. Ashes also have an alkaline effect of the soil, so use them with care if your soil is already alkaline. Black wood ash is best.

Crushed Granite
3-5% K. Lasts up to 10 years. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Good slow-releasing source of potash and trace minerals.

Greensand
0% N, 1.5% P, 6.7% K. Use interchangeably with crushed granite.

SOIL pH SCALE

A pH reading tells you the relative acidity/alkalinity of the soil. Most vegetables will grow well in a range from 6.0 to 7.5. 6.5 is probably the best all-round pH. In extremely acid or extremely alkaline soils valuable nutrients are tied up and thus unavailable to the plants. An acid soil can be sweetened by the addition of dolomite lime. An alkaline soil can be brought closer to neutral by compost or manure. Compost has a buffering effect on soil, correcting both acid and alkaline conditions.

SOIL MODIFIERS

Dolomitic Lime
A good source of calcium and magnesium to be used in acid soils. Do not use lime to "sweeten" the compost pile; it results in a serious loss of nitrogen. You can discourage flies and odors with a layer of soil.

Gypsum
Gypsum is not needed by organic gardeners. It is normally used commercially in soils made impermeable by excess exchangeable sodium.

"Clodbuster"
15% Humic Acid, 5.5 pH. Lasts 1 year. It is crushed "rock" deposits made up of ancient plant and animal remains. Helps make soil less alkaline and releases nutrients tied up in the soil. Use up to 1 lb./100 sq. ft.

Crushed Eggshells
High in calcium. Especially good for cabbage family crops. Help break up clay and release nutrients tied up in alkaline soils. Use up to 2 lbs./100 sq. ft.

Manure
A good source of humus in the garden. Nutrient levels depend on proper handling and the amount of straw or sawdust present. Large amounts of bedding may add up to 2 years to the decomposition time.

material in well-prepared soil, by using the raised-bed method the plant’s root structure develops more fully and is, overall, healthier. A healthy root structure equates to hardier plants, more resistant to pests and diseases, and thus greater yield of food production. The old saying, “Everything is connected to everything” really applies to gardening!

A good recommendation, even though slightly more costly, is to “sow heavy”. That means be generous when sowing seed within the rows while you are planting, and then “thin out” the plants later if they’re crowding. This will make bald spots or open spots within the rows unlikely.

Again, a common mistake for new gardeners is to plant some seeds too deep. Try to avoid this well-meaning but counterproductive tendency by paying attention to the seed size as a clue to planting depth—the smaller the seed, the more shallow the depth.

You want to plant (and later thin) in such a way as to have the mature leaves of the plants touching one another row-to-row. This creates a “mini-greenhouse effect” or a “living mulch” effect which softens the taxing effects of hot, midday Sun. After all, Sun-scorched plants must first repair damage before devoting energy to further growth development. Planting in this manner also shades the topsoil, thus preventing excessive water loss due to evaporation, and it also discourages weed growth.

The raised-bed method of gardening is really the very best of many approaches. And, by the way, with raised beds you don’t have to lean over as far to harvest or pull weeds throughout the season. I believe this is why the Irish refer to raised beds as lazy beds.

While it may at first seem to be off the subject of produce gardening, you will probably want to plant some flowers throughout your garden. They add wonderful colors and attract beneficial insects. Plant flowers that you’d like to see and use for dinnertime table decorations. Mix it up a bit. And for those of you who are daring about exploring edible flowers, maybe some of those pretty blooms will end up decorating (and being part of the contents of) the salad bowl, rather than simply ending up in a dinner table vase.

Remember to not plant all of any given crop at the same time—particularly with something like lettuce. Stagger your plantings. Plant a few rows, then leave some open space for a second-rotation planting later on. That way you always have fresh lettuce when the old lettuce has bolted, or gone to seed—which tends to happen in hot weather. Consult the planting guides and related charts I have included herein (as well as the seed packet instructions) for more information about the growing habits of your favorite garden varieties.

WATERING YOUR GARDEN

Once again, don’t be a slave to your garden. We live in a modern age—one in which there are digital, battery-operated automatic timers which you can attach directly to your faucet and garden-hose sprinkling system. It is possible to program several waterings per day with a quality timer, which may be well worth the expense in the time it saves you. Keep in mind that, while the timer and sprinklers water the garden, you can be somewhere else and not married to a routine.

Just a few tips: While it is true that overwatering can create a real problem, especially in soils which do not drain easily, underwatering is a serious mistake—particularly in the very early stages of germination. DO NOT LET THOSE NEWLY PLANTED SEEDS DRY OUT! EVER! SAME FOR THE NEWLY SPROUTING SEEDLINGS.

If you are watering several times per day by hand, you will literally be able to tell when enough is enough. If you are using a timer, which I DO recommend for convenience, you’ll just have to play with it a bit to get it “just right”.

But under no circumstances let the seeds dry out. I cannot emphasize this enough: It is better to overwater, if you must, than to underwater, in the beginning. Besides, the raised-bed method of gardening will be more forgiving of a bit of overwatering than will a regular, hardpack farming method.

“But what kind of sprinkler should I use?” you may ask. An OSCILLATING sprinkler is, in my opinion, the most practical—assuming the geometry of your garden is rectangular.

Also, Y-adaptors are available among the garden hose plumbing accessories to allow for two (or more) hoses, and thus multiple sprinklers running off the same timer-regulated main water line.

Keep in mind that I’m providing instructions here for a low-maintenance garden that will grow quality food. My point here is that over-work isn’t necessary to get results that you’ll be delighted with.

WHAT NOW?

If you have followed the instructions to this point, YOU’RE THERE! You’ll start to see the results of all the important preparations made earlier.

As the vegetables begin to grow, thin them carefully. I always recommend using a sharp

* Do not plant for 2 weeks if using more than 3 pounds blood meal per 100 sq. ft. It can burn the plants during this time since it releases nitrogen rapidly at first.

1 cubic yard equals 27 cubic feet. 1 cubic yard will cover 100 sq. ft. 3" deep. 8 cubic feet will cover 100 sq. ft. 1" deep. 2 cubic feet will cover 100 sq. ft. 1/4" deep. You can substitute manure for compost the first year if you do not have a ready supply of compost.

knife when harvesting. For example, when harvesting lettuce, I like to cut away the outer leaves while letting the plant continue its growth.

Lettuce plants will continue to provide you with salad goodies until it gets too hot and the plants may bolt. Then wait till things cool down a bit and start new seeds.

You will be amazed by what is unfolding before your eyes as each new day brings your garden into another stage of development. There is so much for you to learn and enjoy and experiment with!

I believe you will find that growing a garden is an extremely rewarding experience—not to mention the quality of the food you’ll soon be eating and sharing with others. If it is done right, it can be a profoundly satisfying experience and affords a direct avenue for getting close to Mother Nature. Learning about gardening is a lot like life—it takes time and just goes on and on and on. The secret is in taking the plunge and beginning!

If you’ve completed the garden, you’ve accomplished a great thing. A garden at home is worth a lot more than many other kinds of insurance policies.

When all is said and done, you can now go out into your own back yard and pick your next

HEALTHY meal. And how do you measure the health benefits of getting your hands dirty in that rich soil? How much is it worth to you to lower your blood pressure 20-30 points or more? Is it more fun puttering in your garden or lying on your back in a hospital bed? And what about the expense of medical care today? Along with our pets, and a sense of humor, a garden is just plain good medicine!

So what’s stopping YOU? No excuses now. Get busy! Before you know it, you’ll have created the miracle of a garden.

“We are gardeners, you and I, in the Garden of the Conscious Presence. We draw the substance of the past into conceptions of the future. I am the source of the garden’s design and I return to the garden through you. Together we tend the fields of possibility, drawing forth the inexhaustible beauties of structure, objectifying wonders, and manifesting new orders.

As each universal context spirals outward toward maturation, it gives birth to new and more intricate contexts within itself, revolutionizing former understandings of scale and revealing a host of new worlds to explore, inhabit, and enjoy. Each successive order of manifestation becomes the basis of yet another order, and then of still another. So new creatures coalesce from the fields of possibility, populating every desirable realm, as Infinite Potential eternally uncoils from the heart of God.”

COMPOSTING

If you are just beginning a garden, you may be too overwhelmed in the moment to even consider composting. But let me strongly advise you to include composting as part of your gardening experience. This is useful for many reasons, not the least of which is that it is a tremendous way to recycle the large quantity of excess greens that will be a byproduct of the garden as you move through the seasons.

Why compost? Well, it’s no accident that gardeners with the best yields tend to be fervent composters. Compost serves several functions. It improves the structure of the soil, which allows for easier working of the soil, and it increases aeration and water retention. Additionally, it returns much-needed nutrients to the soil, including nitrogen.

Improved texture, structure, and nourishment lead to healthy soil. Healthy soil supports a wide array of little organisms—not just worms—which in turn help plants to thrive, especially through supporting healthy root systems. Healthy soil ultimately allows, then, for higher and better quality yields of produce.

“Ok, but how do I do it?” you ask. Well, there are as many ways to start a compost pile as there are ways to plant a garden. I will present here one of the cheapest, easiest, and most effective ways that I have found. And there are also as many books on composting as there are on gardening, so you can read in greater detail independently as you move along further into the gardening experience.

In the meantime, using 4-foot fencing wire (“chicken wire” will do), roll out enough fencing to produce a circle approximately six feet in diameter. Then, with the wire laying on the ground, cut 2x4s into four-foot lengths and nail the fencing to the 2x4s at about four-foot intervals.

Pick a space to the side of your garden, one which is out of the way, yet with convenient access to the actual garden area. Also, your compost pile must be within reach of water. Once you’ve chosen a (permanent) spot for your compost pile, using a shovel, dig down one or two feet and turn over the soil in a circle approximately six feet in diameter.

Once the soil is “broken up”, place kindling, twigs, a wooden pallet, shrub materials, or anything which will create an air pocket a foot high above the soil line. Now, take your fencing with 2x4s nailed to it, and lift the assembly up so the fencing and posts are vertical. Then join the unconnected ends so that you now have a circle six feet across and four feet high. Now move the fencing circle over your hole. [See illustration nearby.]

You now are ready to begin building your compost pile, much like a layer cake. A good general recipe for composting is, by weight: 1/3 dry vegetation, 1/3 green vegetation and kitchen wastes, and 1/3 soil.

Some important things to remember, however: DO NOT add to your compost, under any circumstances, ever, the following: pine needles, fruit/fruit peels, meat of any kind. As you move along, you might want to add some humic acid to the pile to increase the availability of nutrients for plants later on. It is also very important to know that you must add soil to your compost pile—in fact, soil will keep down flies and odors.

Once you have your fencing up and you are ready to begin, you may well wish to create several large separate piles, in the immediate vicinity of the compost pile, comprised of: manure, dirt, straw, grass clippings. Don’t start your compost pile by just throwing some garbage down and thinking you have the makings of compost—you don’t!

Always think in terms of a layer cake. Once you lay down, say, a one- to two-foot layer of grass clippings, then take your shovel and throw onto it a layer of manure or a layer of dirt. Then repeat the process—a green layer or a wet layer, and a dry layer.

To BEGIN the pile, try to build up the compost to at least three feet high. Another combination would be: a layer of straw, a layer of green materials, a layer or manure and/or dirt.

When you’ve completed this step, get the hose and water the compost just like it is your garden. The compost should be moist at all times. That means whenever you water the garden, water the compost. You want to generate enough heat within that pile to allow the microorganisms to break down the materials into a very nitrogen-rich mixture which will be added back to the garden later on—and thus save you money!

This method that I am recommending is relatively low maintenance, although you DO need access to dirt and/or manure to maintain the compost pile properly. When you are throwing kitchen scraps on the pile, be sure not to throw meats onto it. But when you do throw wet waste on the pile, always follow that up with a covering of dirt. This makes the process of composting much more aromatically pleasant. (Trust me on this one.)

Bottom line? Every time I’ve planted a garden and haven’t started a compost pile at the same time, I’ve regretted it. You will be AMAZED by how much excess greenery comes from a garden over the course of a season. And besides, why pay for nitrogen-rich materials to add to your garden when you can create the best as you go?

Many people say you must constantly turn the compost pile. This method that I am suggesting does not require this laborious step. One way to observe whether it is “working” is the following: if you notice that the compost pile suddenly drops down a foot or two, you have

Large wire-fabric-type compost bin.

Editor’s postscript: Due to the widespread dangers of Mad Cow Disease and other health-compromising conditions affecting animals, such longtime fertilizing items as bone meal, blood meal, etc., derived from ANIMALS, are falling under greater and greater suspicion. And rightly so if just the anecdotal evidence is correct—where people may catch nasty illnesses from just handling (like inhaling the dust of) such products, say when sprinkling them around their rose bushes. Thus it would seem prudent to utilize the products from the various fertilizer charts herein which are derived from VEGETABLE matter—and completely avoid the animal-derived products at this time.

This vegetation-intensive focus is also the dominant philosophy among those practicing “organic” gardening techniques. Recent data suggest that the organic approach to soil conditioning, especially employing composting, is far better in the long run, as such nourishes (rather than killing off) a wide array of soil organisms. These organisms help the entire soil ecosystem to thrive and, in turn, such healthy soil allows for a more complete nourishing of the root systems of plants. (Looks like God knew what He was doing after all, much to the dismay of the chemical fertilizer industry.)

Harkening back to Rick Martin’s front-page feature interview for this “green” issue of The SPECTRUM, let me here repeat that an absolutely superb source of all kinds of information covering this entire subject is a longtime magazine called Organic Gardening, which is available from many newsstands, or you can contact them through the following different avenues: try their very informative www.organicgardening.com website; call 1-800-666-2206; write to Organic Gardening, 33 E. If ever there was a publication that deserves praise for consistently maintaining the highest standards and commitment to helping people have fun in the garden, while at the same time being thoughtful toward Mother Earth, this publication has earned such praise over many years of presenting the finest articles of interest to gardening enthusiasts.

Emerging Viruses - AIDS & Ebola

Audio Tapes

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein. This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). Included is Dr. Robert Gallo, the notorious discoverer of the AIDS virus. The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when these researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses, and experimented with an assortment of antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

The Indigo Children

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes, revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern has singularly unique factors that call for parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to assist them in achieving balance and harmony in their lives, and to help them avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children, such as:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- How come a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?
- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober bring together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

by David Icke

The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, Icke reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world". No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Fallen Angels

And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"?

Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

That is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text cherished by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

Elizabeth Clare Prophet examines the controversy surrounding this book and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. She demonstrates that Jesus and the apostles studied the Book of Enoch, and tells why Church fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels.

Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse VIDEOS

Could bioelectric technologies investigated during the Cold War provide the most advanced form of killing, enslaving, and coercing billions of unsuspecting people worldwide? More frightening: could infectious agents, including the "mad cow disease" protein "prion" crystal, have been engineered to effect a new insidious level of bio-spiritual warfare?"

Dr. Len Horowitz investigates 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge, power, and "healing codes" to humanity. It offers new hope for the loving masses to survive the worldwide plagues, famines, and weather changes that are now at hand. In perfect time for these cataclysmic events, Healing Codes presents an urgent, monumental, and inspired work that will be hailed for generations to come.

5/3/01 RICK MARTIN

“As technology advances, the ability to control populations and manipulate outcomes also advances. Because we know how to control the weather, create earthquakes, force behavioral changes, and manipulate the physiology of people does not mean that we should do it. The age we are in requires even greater safeguards of personal freedoms, not further constraints upon it. If freedom is what is being defended, then freedom is what must be inherent in the actions our governments take in creating aspects of our reality.”

— Dr. Nick Begich, in Star Wars, Star Trek, And Killing Politely

It’s a brave new world out there, friends. A world that even Aldous Huxley couldn’t have foreseen. It doesn’t help to keep your head buried in the sand. It doesn’t help to be paralyzed with fear. It doesn’t help to run around yelling “The sky is falling; the sky is falling.”

What does help is becoming informed about these new technologies and their capabilities. They are far less effective (and sometimes completely ineffective) on those who KNOW what is going on, especially where mind control is the aim of the technology application. Moreover, armed with such knowledge, you’re likely to have a much clearer and more accurate understanding of the world in which you live. Then, and only then, if you make the choice to be politically active about these matters, you may do so in an informed, intelligent way, so that your actions have a greater chance of achieving their intended impact.

You Just Never Know What May Cross Our Desk

The letter began as many do from ones writing under similar circumstances:

"Hello. First, thank you much for the issues of The SPECTRUM. They are most appreciated by many around this prison. I've noticed that they have allowed people to think and question for themselves quite a bit more. Good job!"

Yes, it's true that we have a standing policy of providing free subscriptions to a number of people who have written to us from prison—often with whistleblower-type background stories about how they got there in the first place. Some letters are truly awesome, and convey with humble and gracious sincerity how the writer is genuinely searching for Truth—and maybe just now waking up to the REAL conditions in this world that landed the person in jail instead of a promotion and a nice corner office. Furthermore, our papers ALWAYS get shared with many, many others in the prison, such as the letter writer above mentioned, and so we are happy to be of service to those reaching out for Truth—from wherever they may begin their search.

The writer continues:

"Enclosed with this letter is a press release of a RICO lawsuit filed against various people and agencies of the State. The lawsuit is good reading and really on point."

The enclosed Press Release begins: "An 84-page Civil Rights Complaint with RICO allegations was recently filed against the State's most powerful union and several high-ranking government officials.

"The Complaint alleges fraud, bribery, extortion, and money laundering, involving the California Correctional Peace Officers Association (CCPOA), Governor Davis, past Governor Wilson, past Attorney General Dan Lungren, California Supreme Court Chief Justice Ronald George, several Legislators, and others.

"The general allegations concern the operation of a political machine impacting the Voting and Initiative process, Legislative bills, education funding, labor practices, judicial review, and racial discrimination. The suit charges manipulation of State laws to divert education and prison funds into a source of campaign revenues in order to maintain political control over the State's three branches of government for political and financial gain.

"Filed by William Gray and Kevin Bruce [neither of whom are the author of the letter to me], two State prisoners, the Complaint was based on a comprehensive review of 10 years of financial records, official documents, Legislative records, voting records, court decisions, and education and prison practices and policies."

(The case is # CIV-S-00-2270-DFL-JFM-P, U.S. District Court, Eastern District of California, Sacramento. For a copy of the lawsuit, log onto the vop.com and copcrimes.com Internet websites.)

This letter writer goes on to report:

"If you happened to catch the news a couple of weeks ago [the letter is dated 3/28/01], State Senator Brulte exposed the 'shell game' and how it's been going on for years. It ties in with Prop. 111, funded by the California Correctional Peace Officers Association (CCPOA). It diverts major $$$ just where they want it and out of schools. Don't educate the kids; they will be more likely to end up in prison. [Besides serving the New World Order gang's dumbing-down agenda, sounds like a formula for job security to me!]

"Another good scam in prison is the use of psychotropic drugs. They hand them out like candy for any real or unreal ailment. Why? Federal funding! You get a large segment of prisoners on these meds, walking around slobbering on themselves, with little or no medical supervision. CDC [California Department of Corrections] not only gets another piece of your tax pie, but also has mind control over a segment of the prison population.

"You don't really hear about prisons and their byproducts much anymore because the public got tired of hearing about all the $$$ that is being spent. So the subject of prisons has pretty much run its course. You know the old adage: run it until its wheels fall off.

"So now we have the energy crisis in California. Does anyone see the pattern of orchestrated problems like I do?"

"If you have any questions, feel free. I would appreciate a note saying you got this. We're having problems with our mail around here that shines a negative light on CDC/CCPOA.

"Thank you and you folks. Please keep up the good work. Sincerely, ----"

My response to this admirable letter is short and to the point: "Thank YOU very much, ---, for a note which truly encourages us, here at The SPECTRUM, to continue to help ones awaken to Truth and perhaps further develop their own God-given abilities—especially Common Sense! Our July 2000 issue carried the story: 'Most Profitable Industry In America? Our Prison Systems!' so we have at least shared some information, already, with our readers, concerning the depravity about which you speak from, unfortunately, first-hand experience."

CHINA'S OMINOUS THREAT TO WORLD SECURITY

From the INTERNET, Christopher Ruby
<safetrek@mcn.net>, 4/24/01: [quoting]

China's Rapidly Growing Threat To World Security

By Jess Miller (4/23/01)

Strategic Infrastructure Plan Precedes
Military Option

CHINA OVERVIEW

China has a population in excess of 1.2 billion.

China is a Communist dictatorship.

China is an atomic superpower.

China has a large arsenal of short- and medium-range missiles and is thought to now have accurate long-range missile capability.

China is rapidly building the world's largest navy and is ever increasing its airpower.

China has the world's largest army at over 3 million strong.

The People's Liberation Army (PLA) directly controls and supervises more than 15,000 businesses and 50,000 factories. These businesses are of a widely varying nature within both the civilian and military spheres. The PLA even trades stock in financial centres.

Thousands of PLA products fill the shelves of U.S. stores.

"I have a continuing sense of awe at the scale of this. They are now running a multibillion-dollar conglomerate." — James Mulvenon, RAND Corporation.

Many U.S. companies do business with the PLA, an army that invaded Tibet, kills students, and maintains the denial of basic freedoms to Chinese citizens.

According to the Institute for Strategic Affairs in London, the PLA earns $25 billion a year from its businesses.

Profits go back into feeding troops, modernizing aggressive military capabilities, and strengthening ambitions for regional and world supremacy.

On July 17, 1998, the emerging "strategic partnership" between the U.S. and Red China escalated significantly when it was revealed that members of the elite U.S. Special Forces would train soldiers from the PLA.

China will soon have the world's second largest economy.

China dominates the economies of Malaysia,
Indonesia, Vietnam, Thailand, and the Philippines, and runs the economies of Singapore and Hong Kong.

China disputes the following boundaries: The boundary with India; sections of the boundary with Russia; the boundary with Tajikistan; a section of the boundary with North Korea;

involved in a complex dispute over the Spratly
Islands with Malaysia, Philippines, Taiwan, Vietnam, and Brunei; maritime boundary dispute with Vietnam in the Gulf of Tonkin; Paracel Islands occupied by China, but claimed by Vietnam and Taiwan; claims Japanese-administered Senkaku Islands, as does Taiwan.

SUDAN

In late 1999 China completed its Muglad oilfield project in the Sudan. The Chinese have built a 940-mile pipeline from Heglid in Southern Sudan to the Port of Sudan, centrally situated on the Red Sea's western coast opposite Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, in what has been China's largest overseas operation by the China National Petroleum Corporation.

Chinese investment in the Sudan is now well over US $2 billion.

In late 2000 the UK's Daily Telegraph reported that China had put 700,000 troops in the Sudan on alert and was preparing to enter that country's civil war.

The U.S. State Department denied that China had such troop levels in Sudan "otherwise we'd have known about it". However, the Chinese troops entering Sudan went undetected by other nations. Only the number of these forces is disputed, but aid workers have confirmed the levels of Chinese in the Sudan to be in the "tens upon tens of thousands".

This large Chinese presence midway between the Horn of Africa and Suez could become a threat to Saudi Arabia (world oil supply), the Red Sea and the Suez Canal (through which 6% of world shipping, up to 25,000 vessels a year, passes) and to Israel.

The sudden use of Chinese "workers" as a trained military force does not bode well for current Chinese operations underway in Panama and the Caribbean, where a large influx of Chinese illegals is occurring.

CUBA

While the U.S. and NATO were busy in Yugoslavia, China was cementing relations with Cuba, and is now financing and modernising Cuba's telecommunications and electronics industry.

Chinese President Jiang Zemin met with Cuban President Fidel Castro April 13, 2001, and signed contracts for US$400 million of business.

In addition to the telephone system and electronics, the agreements cover sports, educational exchange, maritime relations, a fiscal agreement to avoid double taxation, economic and technical exchanges, a bank credit for a hotel now being built in downtown Havana, and a US$150 million credit for the purchase of Chinese television sets.

During Jiang's visit a high-level American trade delegation left Cuba empty handed.

China's Defence Minister visited Cuba over one year ago.

China already has a techno-spy base and communication bases in Cuba and is building intelligence facilities at Torrens/Lourdes adjacent to a massive Russian facility already in operation.

It has been reported that the Lourdes facility is the largest such complex operated by the Russian Federation and its intelligence service outside the region of the former Soviet Union.
The Lourdes facility is reported to cover a 28-square-mile area with some 1,500 Russian engineers, technicians, and military personnel working at the base. Experts familiar with the Lourdes facility have reportedly confirmed that the base has multiple groups of tracking dishes and its own satellite system, with some groups used to intercept telephone calls, faxes, and computer communications in general, and other groups used to cover targeted telephones and devices. [End quoting]

The "sleeping giant" China is emerging as a formidable player on the world "chess board".
For any of you who have played the game of chess, remember the feeling of alarm that comes over you when you just begin to realize your opponent has pieces arranged at just the right places and you're beginning to feel like you're falling into a well-designed trap.

Elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM
there are alarming further insights to add to what is happening on this chess board with China.
The sad fact is that China knows all too well how to manipulate (with the appropriate carrots) the pathetic movers and shakers of the United States due to their high level of greed. We are, in fact, supplying China with the money, the tools, and the technical know-how to build and tighten the noose around our own neck. What is wrong with that picture?

Behind this more visible state of affairs, the so-called dark "elite" controllers grin from ear to ear at how easy it is to arrange the kinds of warlike conditions on the world chess board which allow them to keep vast populations under control and even reduce those world population figures to more comfortable numbers through conflict. When will we learn?

HIGH COURT UPHOLDS CUFFING, SEARCHING UNBELTED DRIVER

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, by Mark Helm, 4/25/01: [quoting]

In a decision that could affect any of the nation's 185 million licensed drivers, the Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that a Texas policeman acted properly when he arrested, searched, handcuffed, and booked a woman for failing to use seat belts for herself and her two children.

In a 5-4 decision, the court said Lago Vista officer Bart Turek's arrest of Gail Atwater in 1997 was meant to protect the children from potential injury and did not violate the Constitution's prohibition of "unreasonable searches and seizures".

"The arrest and booking were inconvenient and embarrassing to Atwater, but not so extraordinary as to violate the Fourth Amendment, Justice David H. Souter wrote for the majority.

Souter, usually one of the court's more liberal justices, was joined by Anthony M. Kennedy, a swing voter, and three conservatives, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Clarence Thomas and Antonio Scalia.

But another swing voter, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the minority, said allowing police to arrest, search, and detain drivers who have violated only minor traffic laws gives officers "unbounded discretion (that) carries with it grave potential for abuse".

She added, "As the recent debate over racial profiling demonstrates all too clearly, a relatively minor traffic infraction may often serve as an excuse for stopping and harassing an individual."

O'Connor's dissent was joined by Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, John Paul Stevens, and Stephen Breyer.

Susan Herman, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, said the ruling gives police broad power to search almost anyone.

"Law enforcement officers now have license to select anyone at all, wait for them to commit any one of thousands of possible infractions, and then place their target under arrest in order to conduct a search of the person and his or her vehicle," she said.

Timothy Lynch who directs the Libertarian Cato Institute's Project on Criminal Justice, attacked the court majority for saying police in such cases need not apply for a search warrant.

"The ruling," Lynch said, "gives police officers a license to bypass the warrant requirement of the Fourth Amendment. It is not too much to say that the decision sounds the death knell for arrest warrants in general".

Police will be able to "harass citizens for pointless reasons, and those citizens are without legal redress" he added. "The framers of our Constitution would frankly be startled by the Supreme Court's cavalier treatment of the legal threshold by which citizens can be deprived of their liberty and thrown in jail." [End quoting]

You might argue that this woman deserved some kind of punishment for her irresponsibility toward herself and her children, but it looks like the Supreme Court took this case as an opportunity to advance the New World Order's people-control agenda and tightened the noose around our necks by another significant notch.

Think of all the possible reasonable choices, short of such a drastic decision, that could have been arrived at by the Supreme Court if you want to convince yourself that this was a purposeful step toward the elimination of basic Constitutional rights rather than simply a case of delusional over-reaction on the part of the majority of justices. What do you suppose this decision cost in terms of behind-the-scenes bribes or threats?

ADDING INSULT TO INJURY: MOLESTED CHILDREN MUST PAY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 4/16/01: [quoting]

Two children who were sexually molested when young must now help pay for their father's psychiatric treatment, which costs $90,000 annually, Associated Press reports. Chrissy was 5 and her brother, Michael, was 7 when sexually abused by their father, Nelson McMickle. After more than eight years behind bars, McMickle was moved to a state psychiatric facility. "Children are legally responsible for parents in state facilities" Sussex County (NJ) adjuster Joanne Baker wrote in a letter to Michael McMickle, now 21. "Why should I have to pay for him?" asked Michael. The answer lies in an obscure 1918 state law intended to make relatives responsible for part of the costs of court-ordered hospital commitments. [End quoting]

Talk about rubbing salt into a wound! While so many politicians make a career out of avoiding an honest day's work, laws remain in effect like the above which can only make it harder to forgive and forget and get on with one's life.

HAARP, ELF CAUSED SEATTLE QUAKE

From the INTERNET, 4/6/01: [quoting]
From John Quinn at NewsHawk:

Evidence HAARP, ELF Caused NW Quake
Examined By BC Gov't, British TV

From what we've seen, there is NO DOUBT the [10:54 A.M. Pacific Time, Wednesday] February 28 Seattle/Vancouver-area quake WAS—DEFINITELY—triggered by the U.S. FedGov, using either their HAARP arrays, ULF transmissions, or most likely BOTH, working in conjunction to induce severe, VERY-deep-level seismic upheaval in the targeted region.

The issue has now been examined in several broadcasts by BBC-TV and other media outlets, and information regarding the entire matter is being presented to members of the British Columbian government!

The article forwarded below brings up VERY important and SOLID information about this very urgent issue.

NewsHawk previously published extensive articles about the GREAT number of malicious, malevolent, and malignant applications for HAARP's hellishly-powerful RF transmissions; and Top View has published much further information on the subject in recent months.

Information just related to us from a source with NOAA [National Oceanic & Atmospheric Administration] shows that HAARP operations—in and of themselves, and REGARDLESS of the actual types of transmissions used in specific applications, are provoking VERY destructive, cataclysmic, catalytic, runaway changes and deterioration of the ENTIRE IONOSPHERE—AND other atmospheric strata—of planet Earth!

These CRITICALLY IMPORTANT atmospheric layers are being ATTACKED, SHREDDED, and DESTROYED by the insane, power/greed obsessed, satanic New World Order/4th Reich global power elite with their constant, unending, various HAARP operations, operations which, moreover, are of course designed and configured to have specific negative, destructive, oppressive, manipulative, exploitative effects upon the HUMAN RACE, as well as upon OUR entire planet and ALL its resources:

Subject: Was the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake triggered by environmental war?, Wed. 04 Apr. 2001

ECONEWS SERVICE

2001 Exopolitics News <<http://www.exopolitics.com/cuenews.html>>

ECONEWS: ENVIRONMENTAL WAR DESK, UPDATED: Was the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake triggered by environmental war?

VANCOUVER, BC—Was the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake of 28 February 2001 triggered—accidentally or on purpose—by new, secret electromagnetic weapons?

What caused the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake is by no means settled to a scientific certainty. This question is now an issue of public controversy. The British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC, U.K.) and other broadcasters have produced and broadcast live programs with EcoNews Service on whether electromagnetic (EM) weapons had any role in the earthquake. British Columbia is expecting a parliamentary election shortly, and at least one political party—the Green Party of BC—has informed its members of the issue, and is preparing to distribute a non-partisan questionnaire on environmental war and the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake to Green Party provincial candidates.

Vancouver-based environmental journalist Alfred Webre believes electromagnetic (EM) devices may have accidentally or intentionally triggered the deep magnitude 6.8 earthquake. One possible candidate is the HIGH-FREQUENCY ACTIVE AURORAL RESEARCH PROGRAM (HAARP) installation in Alaska. HAARP began ionizing the Earth's ionosphere and magnetosphere at very high signals on February 17, coincidental with the U.S. bombing of Iraq (nine days prior to the earthquake), and continued right up to February 28, the very date of the earthquake.

Alternatively, an electromagnetic (EM) device of unknown origin could have triggered the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake. Published reports available to EcoNews state that similar environmental weapons may have been used by a paramilitary or covert intelligence group to trigger the January 17, 1995 Kobe, Japan earthquake.

A key clue that the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake may have been triggered by environmental warfare is its anomalous profile. The earthquake was a 6.8-magnitude earthquake at a depth of 40 miles, that in the words of one observer "looked like a 3.0 magnitude".

There are at least three scientific models by which such electromagnetic (EM) ionization could trigger an earthquake along the faults connecting the Seattle-Vancouver area. Environmentalist Alfred Webre has developed these models at length in a recent book, Earth Changes (Universebooks.com).

On July 4, 2000, Webre asked the director [name withheld on request] of the Electronic War discussion group (EWAR-L): "Can ULF wave generators be applied in tectonic warfare? That seems to be a key application question. Tectonic warfare intentionally generates seismic activity on a target (enemy's) territory for purposes of inflicting destruction, terror, changes of government, and social unrest."

He answered: "One approach to answering that is to look for data correlations between ULF electromagnetic and seismic signals (as ELFRAD is doing) and possible energy coupling mechanisms between these, such as magnetic flux-caused strain deformations within the Earth (causing stressors on fault lines). Perhaps Charlie Plyler [director of the ELFRAD group which monitors electromagnetic activity], who has looked at this issue more closely than I have, can comment." (See <<http://www.topica.com/lists/mc/read/message.html?mid=1302600419&sort=d&start=3>>)

Members of the ELFRAD group, which monitors electromagnetic (EM) events, note that the electromagnetic HAARP installation, a U.S. electromagnetic (EM) weapons system in Alaska, may have inadvertently or intentionally effected the earthquake. Originally billed as a pure research facility, HAARP now functions as a global missile-tracking facility, by ionizing (and disrupting) the Earth's ionosphere and magnetosphere. It is the magnetosphere that plays a crucial role in maintaining the delicate stability of the twenty or so inverted tectonic plates that float in a plastic medium along the surface of the Earth. HAARP is thus capable of disrupting the magnetosphere, triggering tectonic instability.

In the mid-1990s, despite the strong opposition of Congressman Ronald V. Dellums (D-CA), the U.S. Congress narrowly approved HAARP, in the face of studies showing HAARP's negative environmental impacts. The U.S. Navy assured Congress that HAARP would not trigger climate changes or seismic events like the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake. Now, if it can be established that HAARP—or some other EM installation—had a role in causing this earthquake, the U.S. domestic and international repercussions of this finding could be profound.

In the aftermath of the Seattle-Vancouver quake, Dick Eastman, a Yakima Valley, Washington researcher, agreed with Webre's analysis that earthquakes can be triggered by electromagnetic (EM) warfare. He stated: "Like the weather and the oceans, the mantle beneath the floating tectonic plates also involve convection cells, but in a plastic medium that sets up wave patterns that may be modified by superimposition of additional waves."

Electromagnetic (EM) weapons can possibly trigger cataclysmic Earth events. EM fields can superheat the ionosphere, disrupting the magnetosphere's magnetic fields around the Earth, and in turn cause massive disruption of the Earth's tectonic plates. As indicated, the 1995 earthquake in Kobe, Japan, may have been triggered by clandestine deployment of EM weapons. EM strategic warfare includes weather, climate, and Earth-event warfare. Researchers have reported the use of EM weapons in anti-population mind-control operations over major cities.

Seattle-based researchers and short wave radio operators now state that unusual electromagnetic (EM) broadcasts preceded the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake. Kent Steadman, of Seattle's cyberspaceorbit.com, a researcher who actually monitored the EM broadcasts prior to the earthquake, states: "Could the abnormal activity on 3.39 Mhz February 20 and prior be linked to the Seattle quake? If so, why would HAARP (supposedly funded by U.S. sources) be used to create quakes or other assorted EM mayhem on U.S. property? I picked up a signal so strong it went right off the S [signal strength] meter on my shortwave set at that frequency at 6:00 am on Feb 20th. Took an audio sampling of half an hour, but can't make hide nor hair of what HAARP is broadcasting, just that it's STRONG."

Environmental impact studies critiquing HAARP's original environmental impact statement under the U.S. National Environmental Policy Act of 1997 show that HAARP—and EM environmental weapons deployed secretly by many nations—could superheat the ionosphere, and substantially damage or destroy it in a runaway ecological process. Earth Island's award-winning 1995 articles are reproduced at <Ecologynews.com>.

Seattle-based researcher Kent Steadman notes EM activity just prior to and during the earthquake: "COINCIDENCE? Date: 2/27/01 9:54:34 PM Pacific Standard Time [about 12 hours prior to quake]. Washington, Yakima Valley: On the dial at WX Air VI-IF band around 153 we are getting the strangest signal. Anyone else hearing it or know what it is? HAARP maybe?"

Steadman continues: "Date: 2/28/01 7:21:39 PM Pacific Standard Time. Does anyone have recording of 153 MHZ signal? I helped install seismic monitoring stations in California in early '90s. They are designed as early warning system in detecting Earth movements prior to big quake. Several of these were in the 153-154 band. They send data, but during a big shift they send a screeching-sounding data burst. Let me know what you find out."

Ominously, two earthquakes along the North American-South American Pacific Rim occurred just following the electromagnetic EM environmental war signals—the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake, and an earthquake off Central America. Were these triggered by the same signals? The director of the ELFRAD group that monitors EM electromagnetic activity, including HAARP and other EM weapons writes: "Date: 2/28/01 1:55:52 PM Pacific Standard Time. Thought you might find this file interesting. It is a 21-hour recording starting this morning at 0001 hrs. We recorded intense activity from 0.02 to 0.036 hertz 473 minutes prior to the Washington quake. Actually this was a double boomer, because 4 minutes earlier there was also a quake registering 5.4 off the coast of Central America. Also am including a picture during the same time period for yesterday so that you can compare with no major quake."

Faced with the information on EM Environmental war and earthquakes, another researcher with the ELFRAD group wrote: "I take back my former statement that all earthquakes are natural. After reading the following article and tying this information in with Russian predictions of major earthquakes in Kamchatka this year, I'm ready to believe we're in for a lot of trouble..." The researcher then cites environmental war analysis also covered in EARTH CHANGES on possible tectonic warfare earthquakes (<http://www.cheniere.org/misc/brightskiesl.htm>).

Other researchers have found that the HAARP electromagnetic (EM) signal is carrying within it another hidden signal, whose frequency has been shown to affect the limbic system in the human brain, which manages emotions and mood and is a target of mind-control intrusions. Some researchers have stated that mood management of human populations may be happening through these hidden EM frequencies. On February 17, just 11 days prior to the Seattle earthquake, according to ELFRAD: "A 0.9 Hz signal, which, as we've discussed, may be related to limbic (emotion) activation in the brain, occurred during the transmission, lasting a very unusual 42 minutes, from 1200 hrs to 1400 hrs UTC (Coordinated Universal Time) on Saturday, 17 Feb 2001."

During the 1990s, the U.S. Congress held hearings on HAARP's environmental impact statement. Former Congressman Ronald V. Dellums (D-CA) strenuously objected to giving HAARP a Congressional go-ahead. Adversarial environmental impact analysis showed that HAARP's ionization of the ionosphere and magnetosphere might create runaway environmental mishaps like the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake. Despite these obvious large-scale hazards, the U.S. Navy then insisted that HAARP's electromagnetic (EM) broadcasts were safe and would not produce runaway tectonic or atmospheric impacts.

If the Seattle-Vancouver earthquake is in any way shown to have been affected by HAARP broadcasts—accidentally or intentionally—the environmental, social, and political consequences to the U.S. environmental EM war programs will be profound. These include incalculable domestic consequences for the U.S. Navy and the Bush Administration's plans for an expansion of electromagnetic EM weapons systems. In addition, HAARP's negative environmental impacts are of such an unprecedented scale that they would constitute blatant violations of the 1977 United Nations Treaty against Environmental Modification. Blatant U.S. violations of this treaty could result in a major embarrassment and isolation of the United States in the world community.

Environmental journalist Alfred Webre, a Yale Law School graduate, is a former member of the Governor's Emergency Task Force on Earthquake Preparedness, State of California, and author of a classic work on Earth Changes, THE AGE OF CATAclysm (G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1974). EcoNews Service [End quoting]

Of course this story ties-in directly with both our front-page interview feature and the related background story elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM. One important point we should keep in mind is that other systems exist besides HAARP which could be responsible for this event, if the evidence really does point to it being a man-made earthquake. There is so much tinkering of this variety going on these days as to make it a difficult matter to directly demonstrate—or otherwise connect—cause and effect.

SOUTH POLE NUCLEAR REACTOR ACCIDENT? WORKERS EXPOSED TO RADIATION?

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 4/28/01: [quoting]

EXCLUSIVE to Rense.com

By Scott D. Portzline sportzline@home.com
(May be quoted only in full and with complete source attribution)

Jeff [Rense]—I think there is a strong likelihood that a reactor accident has occurred in Antarctica. It certainly fits the clues which I have developed beginning on Tuesday, April 24.

The "tip off" was the request for salt to be delivered with the rescuers. Potassium iodide is a salt that blocks the uptake of radioactive iodine during a nuclear emergency.

The request specified to fill the pockets of one rescuer's coat with salt. That indicates a priority instead of a normal quartermaster's request, which would be delivered by the case—a priority like hand carrying someone's medicine. Additionally, after the focus on "salt" by some media as being an indicator of a potential need for potassium iodide, the 70south.com website posted this update on April 27:

"Seems the South Pole did receive a salt supply (100 pounds) but it is baking salt. There will however not be salt on the tables till October when fresh supplies arrive."

I suspect a reactor accident has occurred at the Amundsen-Scott South Pole Station

HERE ARE THE FACTS

1. Something unusual has happened requiring the evacuation of 11 people from Antarctica.

2. A new power plant was scheduled to go online at the Amundsen-Scott South Pole Station in April 2001 as part of the South Pole Modernization Project. Construction began in 1998. The entire station will be replaced with the new 2005.

3. Raytheon took over the logistics of the U.S. Antarctic Program on April 1, 2001.

4. Raytheon is a Nuclear Engineering Contractor having constructed more than 50 commercial units and involved with 75% of U.S. nuclear power plants.

5. The layout of the new power plant resembles that of a reactor site, including a water supply adjacent to the plant. The new power station was constructed under the ice.

6. The logistics of operating a remotely located nuclear plant require maintaining more than 100,000 spare parts. Who better to handle that than Raytheon?

7. Previous experience with diesel and jet fuel contamination in McMurdo Sound has been very bad. The marine life on the floor of the sound is gone. Handling, transporting, and storing enormous quantities of these fuels for power at the South Pole is even more troublesome. Nuclear power could be viewed as less invasive and more cost effective at the South Pole station.

8. Workers have cleaned up radioactivity before in severe conditions and in total darkness in Thule, Greenland, in January 1968 following the crash of a B-52 carrying 4 nuclear bombs—so it can be done. Workers faced 85 mph winds and -70F degree temperatures to clean up the snow and ice which was taken to the U.S. One bomb (or radioactive components of one bomb) sank to the ocean floor. An attempt to recover that bomb or components occurred in the spring of 1979, while I was there. All of these events were classified. I have pictures of some of the equipment.

9. It has been reported that a cargo ship is heading to Antarctica at this time (unconfirmed).

There was a fire at "Nukey Poo" in McMurdo Antarctica 30 years ago (nickname of a dual-use nuclear reactor which operated for 10 years, supplying electrical power and desalinating seawater. The fire was caused by hydrogen gases and really wasn't much of a problem. The reactor has been removed.

Most people have the impression that Antarctica is a "nuclear-free zone". But, Department of Energy documents indicate that the U.S. interprets the Antarctic Treaties as allowing the peaceful use of nuclear materials.

It is possible that a small pressurized-water reactor was going through its start-up procedures and testing at the South Pole station when an accident occurred. Initial start-up can be a difficult time. At Three Mile Island, 23 years ago, the reactor scrambled on its first day of start-up in a precursor event of the partial meltdown in 1979.

I have seen pictures of a vertical cylindrical structure under construction at the South Pole station which could accommodate a U.S. Naval reactor. I have taken pictures of these reactors being shipped by rail past my home.

—Scott Portzline [End quoting]

For those of you who listen to Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program since the Antarctic stories began to break on the normal news outlets in late April, you have been treated to a most entertaining and instructive outlay of information. Richard Hoagland has been a guest commentator on this matter and he is not about to let slip by, without pointing out, that the story has changed so many times you would have thought some rank amateur was in charge of the public relations cover of this matter. Whatever is actually going on down there in the Antarctic is still a matter of open speculation for those of us who must view the shenanigans from the outside. And none of those on the inside have yet leaked anything that could be relied upon as factual.

Perhaps the absense of any speculation more wild than a cranky nuclear reactor is an important clue. After all, a lot more is going on down there than just observing penguins when the weather permits. The super-secret, advanced technical facilities in that location, long rumored to be operated by both Nazis and certain extraterrestrial groups, give one a lot to think about.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT NWO WEATHER WAR

From the INTERNET, Christopher Ruby <RubyFire@TLCalliance.com>, 4/25/01: [quoting]

This latest by TOP VIEW and radio-electronics technicians has demonstrated conclusively that certain complex, compound ULF/ELF transmissions induce pronounced atmospheric instability and turbulence, with rapidly-shifting strong winds that have a thoroughly destructive effect upon moisture-bearing weather systems anywhere in the targeted area.

Such winds also have a significantly enhanced dehydrating effect upon the land, and would significantly increase conditions which lead to high wildfire danger. These kinds of winds would ALSO exponentially increase the destructive capabilities of any such fires, once they got going. This was the EXACT situation which existed last summer when gargantuan infernos of unprecedented size nuked huge tracts of land across much of the western U.S. Concurrently, these VERY SAME ULF transmissions were monitored and recorded CONSTANTLY during much of August and early September last summer along the northwest Pacific coast.

NW Rain Falls As ULF Broadcasts
Shut Down—8:30 AM, 4-18-01

We were surprised and gratified to see RAIN falling around 8 am this morning in northwestern California.

Curious, we contacted our electronics technician who just worked with us Monday and Tuesday, tracking, monitoring, and recording ULF and ELF signals which are proven to be linked with the general behavior of these most recent weather systems—and highly destructive to rainfall.

The technician resides in the Santa Rosa area and confirmed that VERY light drizzle was falling there also this morning. After a brief discussion, he agreed to set up some tracking equipment at his residence, to see if the ubiquitous ULF signal was present. The ELF/ULF has previously been monitored even south of Santa Rosa, in Marin County, during our investigations last summer.

KIND WORDS FROM OUR READERS

"Dear Dr. Young and Staff, I read every word of the paper and treasure it. My thanks to you all!"
— E.A. from CA

"Dear Friends, Thank you for the very special work you are doing to get Truth out to all of us. Especially since there are so few of you. I thank God for all of you. Love and Light to all."
— V.B. from WV

"I want to tell you how much I have been enjoying all, but mainly the leading articles in your paper. I had just finished reading 3 of the books of the Montauk series, and then here comes this month's [January 2001] paper with an interview with Al Bielek. I have been reading about him over past years. I do hope that you can keep up the same good quality of this paper. I have been reading your work for 10 years and more, and am well aware of all that is going on. You are certainly the one who is on the right road. I guess I am just curious to see how things turn out with the "other" paper, although I do not get a good feeling from that paper."
— Z.W. from CO

"I give thanks daily now for you ones who have made our Creator's dream come true for this most abundant newspaper—the most read, shared, and balanced of the word of our Father that IS world wide. God's blessings to you all."
— M.P. from BC, Canada

"We are fast entering the time of massive and turbulent change and renewal. When I needed help, YOU were here for me. Now I start to understand the future we all must soon confront."

"I hope to learn so I can help others to see through the mass confusion, and help them to cope with the spiritual path we all must walk."

"I work with, and now recognize, the God-Power that resides within. And now that I acknowledge that Power, I've grown."

"I'm sincerely efforting to digest and KNOW what has been presented. I feel confident and much stronger KNOWING that the Miracle resides within each of us. All Is One! In Truth and Light."
— C.F. from TX

And SURE ENOUGH, our tech reported the ELF/ULF transmissions were SHUT DOWN completely, as of shortly after 8:30 am Pacific, when our technician got his equipment up and running in Santa Rosa. Although he was only able to monitor for about ten minutes due to other obligations (like a job), this gave all the proof we need: that when the ULF transmissions are absent, rain systems can and do develop!

AGAIN: this provides significant, serious scientific correlation/confirmation that the ULF/ELF transmissions, as described in a number of previous TOP VIEW articles, are having pronounced, destructive effects upon the formation of critically-needed rain systems across northwestern North America.

Latest NW Rain System Weakening:

ULF Probably Back On-Line 4-18-01

After a brief two hours, a promising Pacific weather front that had begun dropping precipitation in the Northwest EXACTLY when ULF transmissions had shut down, is showing some signs of serious weakening and falling apart—similar to what happened on the afternoon/evening of Monday, April 16.

Although we don't have the equipment at our offices to prove it, there's a VERY strong likelihood that a resumption of weather-modification ULF transmissions which destroy rainstorms has occurred; just as we demonstrated the night of April 16, when the resumption of these ELF/ULF transmissions tore a developing rain system to shreds. [End quoting]

Those of you who remember back to our September 2000 front-page feature article titled: "'Dr. Jekyll' Or 'Mr. Hyde'—Which Is FEMA? Bizarre Wildfires Expose Sinister Agenda" will recall the first-hand reports linking those crazy late-summer wildfires of the greater Montana area with some mysterious, antenna-sprouting, fenced-in "compounds" in the regions of those fires. The information above recalls that link, as well as bringing attention to the way such electromagnetic broadcasts are utilized to affect weather fronts.

For a number of years now, it has been a common observation for those of us close to West Coast weather to note the way approaching storm fronts seem to have a mind of their own—appearing and disappearing, sometimes as quickly as if someone has thrown a switch—much to the contrary embarrassment of "sure thing" weather reports that are sometimes only hours old. Then the poor weather guy has to get up in front of the cameras the next day and explain to the viewing audience why what happened was so opposite to what he was so sure about the day before.

Like an earlier News Desk item, this information is also related to our front-page feature this month, and causes one to ponder just how much damage is being done to Mother Earth through the avenue of technologies gone mad. Wouldn't you just like to lock-up all these ones without a conscience in a large room and subject THEM to a little of their own techno-toys?!

LAND MINES STILL MAIMING AND KILLING 65 INNOCENT CHILDREN, WOMEN, AND MEN PER DAY

From KAREN ECK,
<kareneck@eaglepc.net>, 3/29/00: [quoting]
Subject: WEAPON OF MASS DESTRUCTION

There has been a huge increase in blood-related illnesses among Iraqi children due to the vast amount of uranium-coated (the Big Brothers call it "depleted", but it is actually very radioactive) bullets and bombs which have been dropped, millions of land mines left in the ground in post-conflict countries, and kids still losing their limbs from mines deliberately designed to disable rather than kill with the result that you end up with a society burdened with a population of impaired civilians.

I, who used to say "who cares, as long as I'm OK" became a mother. One of my children is suffering from a depleted uranium-related illness and my other one cannot feed himself because he lost his hands when he was six when playing with a land mine. He said to me "Mom, why? Why didn't you or Dad do something when you were able to?" I may be very, very naive, but, I am still hoping, hoping, hoping. — Hiroshi

This is from Tess Cacciatore, Chairperson, World Trust Foundation <tesswtf@cs.com>

Early mornings, two young sisters, Fahrija and Mirsada, walk swiftly, crossing fields along the way, to a shoe factory where both hold jobs, just outside Korica Han, Bosnia. One morning, just like any other, Mirsada steps lightly, unknowingly, on a land mine. The explosion ruptures the ground, hurling her body into the air. When her sister Fahrija rushes to help, she, too, detonates a mine. Both sisters will lose their right legs.

Noelves is eight years old when he picks up an anti-personnel mine outside his home in Mozambique, Africa. The mine rips open his stomach, blows off his right hand, and blinds him in one eye. Every 22 minutes, a land mine maims or kills another child, woman, or man. (Source: Landmine Survivors Network).

Please click on <<http://www.bettertomorrow.org/banmines1.htm>> to sign an on-line petition in support of an international ban on the use of land mines. Please also share this message with your friends, family members, and colleagues who might join you in supporting this cause. To learn more about this issue, please keep reading.

Fahrija, Mirsada, and Noelves were among the "lucky" ones. Many people who encounter land mines do not survive their violent, bloody explosions. Land mines claim 65 new victims each day, and have killed more people than nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons combined. While an armed conflict may last only a few years, the land mines placed during such a conflict will continue to maim and kill civilians for another 50 to 100 years.

Land mines have taken more innocent lives than any other explosive weapon in human history. They have become the world's most menacing weapon of mass destruction, crippling or killing one person at a time with shocking frequency. Tragically, many of the victims are school-aged children.

There are currently 80 million "live" land mines throughout the world, waiting for unlucky children to set them off. The International Land Mine Ban Treaty, already signed by 139 countries, would require participating countries to remove existing land mines and halt the use, production, and stockpiling of new land mines. Alarming, 54 countries have not signed the treaty, and some of them continue to deploy massive numbers of land mines.

Among the countries that have not signed the treaty are Turkey, Syria, Libya, Iran, Iraq, Cuba, and the United States of America. Many anti-mine activists feel that the U.S. must take a leadership position and sign the treaty to create enough pressure on the rest of the world's nations to sign the treaty as well.

Our country has not escaped the cruelty of land mines. Over 100,000 Americans have been killed or disabled by land mines, but our government is reluctant to limit its weapons choices. Although the U.S. military has never needed land mines to defend our borders, our government is hesitant to sign the treaty. This hesitancy will cause thousands of children each year to become crippled or killed by land mine explosions.

It is time to press the U.S. to join the treaty and end the worldwide use of this weapon of mass destruction. The most effective action you can take to support the Land Mine Ban Treaty is to write a letter to the government addresses at the end of this message. If you do not have time to write your own letter, please consider signing an on-line petition at <<http://www.bettertomorrow.org/banmines1.htm>>. You will have your name included in a written petition in support of the Land Mine Ban Treaty, which will be mailed to President George W. Bush, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, and House Majority Leader Dick Armey.

Signing the petition is free.

Thank you for your support in helping to save the lives and prevent the crippling of thousands of children. And Fahrija, Mirsada, and Noelves, now disabled but still alive, thank you as well. P.S. Please share this message with your friends, colleagues, and family members who might join you in supporting this important humanitarian cause. Thanks so much.

What a sad commentary on our use (abuse) of technology. Can you imagine what kind of person goes to work to design these kinds of devices—and then comes home to his wife and children? This effort is one of the excellent programs that Princess Diana was hated for because she brought so much attention to this atrocious behavior of the so-called elite controllers who make a lot of money manufacturing armaments like these land mines.

the test—the equivalent of an IQ of 125. The police department only interviewed candidates who fell in the range of 20-27 points. The national average for police officers is 21-22.

The police department successfully argued that the higher score indicated a greater likelihood that the plaintiff would become bored with police work and leave after costly job training. [End quoting]

Truth is indeed stranger than fiction. Do you believe the argument offered for rejecting smart cops? Rather, how about the fact that smart police officers would be far less susceptible to the mind-control techniques that are a routine part of police training these days. Especially under conditions of Martial Law or other nationally declared “emergency” situations (such as is part of the New World Order gang’s agenda items for dealing with an uppity public), you want cops who are more likely to faithfully follow orders and don’t do too much independent thinking.

MONSANTO FRANTICALLY RECALLS GENETICALLY ENGINEERED CANOLA SEED IN CANADA

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 4/27/01: [quoting]

From Organic Consumers Association <<http://www.purefood.org>>, By Kanina Holmes

Two of Canada’s major grain companies deployed dozens of employees and a fleet of trucks as they scrambled to retrieve thousands of bags of a genetically modified canola seed that Monsanto Co. voluntarily recalled on Wednesday after discovering trace amounts of an alternate version of a genetic trait.

“If we see a farmer in the field and we know that farmer purchased Quest, we’ll be stopping him right on his seeder” said Diane Wreford, a spokeswoman for Agricare.

“We’re taking this very seriously because this is a potential trade issue” Wreford said.

Monsanto said that the quality tests on canola seed, initially conducted by Saskatchewan Wheat Pool late last week, had detected trace levels of an alternative version of the Roundup Ready trait, a version that has not been registered for canola by Japan, Canada’s largest canola seed customer, or the United States, the largest buyer of Canadian canola oil and meal.

Monsanto’s “Roundup Ready” series of soybean and canola seeds, engineered to withstand the company’s popular Roundup herbicide, are the most widespread genetically modified oilseeds planted in North America. The Quest canola variety represented between 10 and 12 percent of the 12 million canola acres seeded in western Canada last year.

Monsanto, the St Louis, Missouri-based biotechnology company, has been one of the biggest boosters of the use of GM crops globally. The company said that it was working with the two western Canadian distributors of Quest, Agricare and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, on the voluntary withdrawal and replacement of the seed for spring planting.

“What’s key here is we identified it, we reported it, and we’re addressing it proactively” said Loren Wassell, a spokesperson from Monsanto’s Winnipeg office.

“This is a product that’s fully approved for food, for feed, and for planting. There are no health, safety, or environmental issues” said Wassell.

Late last year, discovery of traces of a genetically modified corn variety, StarLink, unapproved for use in foods, caused a massive recall of tacos and other foods in the U.S. and Japan, and cost its manufacturer, the Aventis SA unit of Aventis CropScience, millions of dollars and put world corn trade on a roller coaster.

Vocal opponents to genetically modified crops have also used the StarLink debacle to raise consumer demands for more testing, segregation, and labeling of genetically modified seeds and foods.

While the Quest recall was not based on food safety concerns, officials from Agricare and Monsanto nevertheless moved quickly on Wednesday to reassure overseas buyers.

“We have people now on their way to Japan to talk to the processors and to just assure them that we’re doing everything we can to work with them” said Wreford, speaking from Agricare’s head office in Winnipeg.

Canada’s canola industry welcomed the complete recall of Quest, but expressed concerns about potential damage to its export markets.

“I hope it’s perceived as stewardship” said Dale Adolphe, president of the Canola Council of Canada. [End quoting]

Perhaps Monsanto needs a dictionary of the English language to keep them honest? What these people are good at is not stewardship but spin.

the item about Monsanto’s own headquarters cafeteria refusing to use products made from genetically modified crops! And last month’s special issue on agriculture offered a bumper crop of shenanigans to share with you that “just happened” to cross our path at that time.

Looking at actions rather than rhetoric, it would appear that Monsanto (and those puppet agencies under their—may we say—“stewardship”) are quite panicky about quickly extinguishing ANY bad publicity “fires” concerning these seed products because they are well aware of not just the general public’s less-than-open-armed reception, but many farmers are on the edge of mutiny also—having been largely economically blackmailed into going along with the program.

PRIVACY BLITZ IS COMING: YOUR LAST CHANCE AT PROTECTION IS NOW!

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 4/6/01: [quoting]

The privacy war is over. You lost. Now it’s all about survival.

In the next few months tens of thousands of businesses will send consumers billions of so-called “privacy notices”. Disguised as garden-variety junk mail, these notices, required by a new law, hold the keys to stopping the wholesale flood of your personal information onto the free market.

Some people will get 20 or more of these privacy notices as required by the newly enacted Gramm-Leech-Bliley Act, according to financial law expert Rick Fischer, who testified before a congressional privacy hearing this week.

Fischer's written testimony outlined the broad reach of the Act, noting that it mandates that banks, retailers issuing credit cards, money transmitters, check cashers, mortgage brokers, real-estate settlement services, appraisers, tax preparation services, and on-line companies that offer aggregation, funds transfer, or payment services send out notices to all their customers to inform them about the types of personal information being collected, how it's being used, and to whom it will be sold.

Your mission, should you actually be able to tell a privacy notice from the weekly dry cleaning discount offer, is to decipher all the legalese printed in really small type and all squished together like this making it even harder to read.

Having completed that task, you then have to follow exacting instructions on how to properly inform the company that you don't want them to sell every scrap of your personal information, which they've been collecting from you for the last three decades.

The key phrase to look for among these piles of paragraphs is "opt out". Because unless you proactively "opt out" or "willingly choose to not participate", these companies can sell anything and everything they know about you unless you tell them not to. "Financial and medical records, what you buy, where you shop, your genetic code, are all exposed in a privacy free-for-all" Frank Torres, legislative counsel for Consumers Union, told a congressional hearing on privacy recently. "Complete strangers can, for a price, have access to your most intimate secrets."

It's all spit in the wind. Now, corporate America is wearing this privacy information blitz like a badge of honor. Its representatives have already testified before Congress about the great and detailed steps they've taken to ensure that consumers get all the information they are entitled, by law, to have. Corporate America is spitting in our collective face and trying to sell us on the fact that it's as fresh as an April rain shower.

"Failure to pay attention to these privacy notices may result in sensitive financial data being sold to other companies for marketing and other purposes" warns Tena Friery, research director for the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse. But the barrage of paper and the vagueness of the language make it darn near impossible for anyone to easily make sense of what is taking place. "The notices may actually be telling consumers we can sell information about your income, debt level, payment history, bankruptcies, hospitalizations, and much more—unless you tell us we can't" Friery said.

The brutal truth about the fallout of the privacy war is that no part of our lives is left untouched by data collection activities. And it's not that all data collection efforts are inherently evil; some are downright convenient. But convenience is no excuse for the wholesale rape and pillage of personal information by corporate America.

There should be a basic right of data ownership in the U.S. and there simply isn't. Privacy laws have been built over a century, bit-by-bit, stitched together in a crazy quilt fabric of confusing laws. "This means that consumers have lost control over the ability to be left alone" Torres told Congress. "Often, consumers have no choice in whether or not information is collected and no choice in how it is used. Today, any information provided by a consumer for one reason, such as getting a loan at a bank, can be used for any other purposes with virtually no restrictions."

So you and I are left with having to buck the increasing trend of information collection and dissemination. We have to cover our own butts because no one else will. Trouble is, even when we make the effort, there are few strong privacy laws in our collective quiver.

For all the promise of the "opt-out" provision now codified by the Gramm-Leech-Bliley Act, there are enough loopholes in the law, put there by industry lobbyists when the bill was being written, that the protections are almost useless.

"Unfortunately these opt-outs, in reality, will do little or nothing to prevent the sharing of your information with others" Torres says. The main reason is: Although you can opt out of having a particular company sell your information to an outside company, any other company within the corporate family can scarf up your data and you have no say in the matter.

Torres believes that Gramm-Leech-Bliley should be scrapped and rewritten, this time with the consumer, not corporate greed, as the guiding principle. I would advocate for a right, in law, that puts consumers 100 percent in charge of their data, and that such a right is automatically deferred unless proactively waived—a kind of Miranda Rights for data.

And there should be laws that make companies keep the privacy promises they make. Such a law would have stopped eBay from its arrogant reversal regarding the privacy of its members' personal information. eBay, which once promised never to sell your information to outsiders, now says that if the company or one of its subsidiaries is bought out or merged with another company, you can kiss all those earlier promises goodbye. "Should such a combination occur, you should expect that eBay would share some or all of your information in order to continue to provide the service" the new eBay privacy policy states.

That kind of capitulation isn't right; there ought to be a law against it. There isn't. The privacy war is over and now it's all about survival. [End quoting]

The bottom line is simply that the consumer presently has no real way to monitor what goes on behind the "closed doors" of modern, hyper-greedy, corporations. It will probably require a massive class-action lawsuit somewhere downstream, such as the tobacco industry grudgingly endured a few years ago, to "awaken" the corporate conscience toward the rights of all of us lowly consumers.

AMERICAN HONEY BEES CONTINUE TO DIE IN HUGE NUMBERS

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 4/19/01: [quoting]

Pembroke, Mass.—Beekeeper Howard Scott looks forward to the bustle of his honeybees each spring. This year, the buzz was gone.

When he recently opened up his hives, he found that all the bees in his four hives were dead—casualties, it appears, of a minuscule mite imported from Africa that is wreaking havoc on American bee colonies.

Scott said that about 50 of 80 South Shore beekeepers faced the same bleak scenario this spring. No one knows for sure why hives are dying, but a possible culprit may be the varroa mite, a tiny insect that can kill whole hives.

"This year is very heavy with losses of hives all around southeastern Massachusetts" Scott told The Patriot Ledger.

Scott, 56, who has replaced the dead bees with 2,000 new live ones, sees the deaths in a somewhat more poetic light than other people might. A free-lance writer and tax consultant by trade, he often writes about his bees, including their untimely demise.

"A dead hive is a terrible sight to behold" Scott wrote in his book Bee Lessons. "Often there's a charnel odor or foul smell of death.... The silence is unnerving. You think: Where once there was teeming life is now nothing."

Alfred Carl, chief beehive inspector in the state Department of Food and Agriculture, said the varroa mite is the likely culprit for this spring's bee deaths.

"From what I've seen, the main killer is the varroa" he said.

The fluctuating temperatures of this past winter may also be a factor, Scott said. Hibernating bees cluster for warmth in the wintertime; an early thaw can be deadly if the cluster loosens and cold weather returns.

Scott, whose bees produce about 250 pounds of honey a year and sells about $1,000 worth to neighbors, takes solace from the bees' freeze by concentrating on selling his book.

His book has sold 7,000 copies and made him a $3,000 profit. He wrote it three years ago to sell at the beekeeper's booth at the Marshfield Fair, and sales have soared, he said.

There's much to learn from bees, he said. The 46-page book has tidbits about bees, and 42 aphorisms about what humans can learn from bees, such as toiling for the greater good rather than individual gain.

"I just felt that we had nothing written that expresses my magic and wonderment at bees" he said. "In the book, I aimed to show what we could learn." [End quoting]

Perhaps this bee-killing mite is the newer, improved version that has been engineered to cause this potentially calamitous damage.

Several years ago, when another mystery mite "just happened" to appear on the scene and began killing off an alarming number of honeybees, it wasn't the highly credentialed experts who came up with a solution. Rather, an amateur beekeeper discovered that several essential oils, especially Oil of Wintergreen, sprinkled inside the hives, either killed or simply drove away the pesky mites, which were entering and clogging the bees' respiratory apparatus.

Do you think this present pest is immune to the essential oils? You can be sure they will be tested, and time will tell.

M.I.T. TO OFFER COURSE MATERIALS FREE ON-LINE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 4/4/01: [quoting]

Other universities may be striving to market their courses to the Internet masses in hopes of dot-com wealth. But the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has chosen the opposite path: to post virtually all its course materials on the Web, free to everybody.

MIT plans to announce on Wednesday a 10-year initiative, apparently the biggest of its kind, which aims to create public Web sites for almost all of its 2,000 courses, and to post materials like lecture notes, problem sets, exams, even video lectures. Professors' participation will be voluntary, but the university is committing itself to post sites for all its courses, at a cost of up to $100 million.

Dr. Charles M. Vest, the president of M.I.T., said the giveaway idea came in a "traditional Eureka moment" as the Institute brainstormed about how best to take advantage of the Internet.

Called OpenCourseWare, the initiative found broad resonance among the faculty members, said Professor Steven Lerman, the faculty chairman. "Selling content for profit, or trying in some ways to commercialize one of the core intellectual activities of the university," Lerman said, "seemed less attractive to people at a deep level than finding ways to disseminate it as broadly as possible." [End quoting]

Such generosity was hardly believable to me when I heard about this, considering what money-making machines so many universities have become. What a blessing this should be for many who would appreciate access to first-rate college educational materials, but with neither the time or money to obtain them through the traditional route. Hopefully, many more institutions of learning will follow their lead.

TICKET QUOTAS BLASTED

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 4/16/01: [quoting]

The police union has complained that the Los Angeles Police Department rewards or punishes officers based on a quota system of tickets and arrests. The complaint charges that officers who produced large numbers of citations and arrests were given more time off, said the Los Angeles Police Protective League.

Union President Mitzi Grasso said complaints about quotas have increased recently and that a board charting productivity at one police station stated that "your requests for days off will be based on your productivity".

LAPD Cmdr. Sharon Pap said "it's not true" that quotas are imposed. [End quoting]

Police commanders and politicians have always put forth this kind of denial propaganda, and still they continue to demand the bottom line, which is: "How much money did you generate for us this week?" A better question might be: "What do you bean-counting police administrators think this kind of nonsense does to/for the public's respect toward police?"

TIRES: NEW RUBBER FOR SUVs

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, May 2001: [quoting]

The latest automotive trend, it seems, is to combine the traits of sport-utility vehicles and passenger cars. The logical next step: Combine SUV and car tires.

Such is the inspiration for the Cross Terrain SUV tire from Michelin. Noting that most SUVs spend little time off-road, the company focused on ride and handling, although the external appearance masks these mundane goals with an aggressive-looking sidewall. In fact, the deep lugged treads that show on the side don't match the benign pattern that meets the road. The tire actually uses a soft compound for a smooth ride and a tread pattern that maximizes wet-weather grip.

The tire will soon be launched on new SUVs from Ford, General Motors, Honda, and DaimlerChrysler. It will also be available as a replacement tire. — D.M. [End quoting]

Michelin has escaped the liability problems that other major tire manufacturers have had to face in the last year or so. Considering Michelin's longtime quality record, perhaps this tire will serve as a good solution in a market running scared with legitimate safety concerns. Tires were simply taken for granted until cost-cutting/profit-making greed by some manufacturers dropped their quality to the point where they became a national nightmare.

GOT A WET BASEMENT? CHARGE IT!

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, May 2001: [quoting]

Clammy, smelly, dank, and unhealthy. But enough about politics. We're talking basements here—specifically, a new way to keep them dry. The innovative method, called electro-osmotic pulse technology, uses electric current to gently push water molecules out through the basement walls and floor into the surrounding earth. A European company called Drytronic, which offers the system overseas, is now working to bring it here. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has successfully tested the technology in a number of government buildings.

The system, which is designed for retrofitting into existing basements, consists of an electronic control unit wired to positive electrodes embedded in the basement walls and floor, as well as to a negatively charged copper-clad steel rod buried in the soil outside. A pulsing, low-voltage current pushes positive ions in the waterlogged wall toward the rod, dragging water molecules with them. As the concrete dries out, the current diminishes. On an average-size home, the system consumes less electricity than a 60-watt lightbulb.

In Army tests, the results have been dramatic, says the Corps' Vincent Hock. Humidity in one barracks basement dropped from 98 to 42 percent in a week, and standing water vanished. "The concrete turns a light gray" says Hock, "and even if the floor gets wet from an inside water source, the water will wick out into the ground. And this basement is 4 feet below the water table." The system costs less to install than a conventional trench with drainage pipes.

Drytronic's Bjorn Koritz says the system is far more effective than traditional drainage. "Even if you install a sump pump, you still have a wet wall" he points out. "Water keeps coming in, humidity is high; you still have mildew, and it smells. This system removes the water from the wall, taking away the environment for mold to grow." — Ted Cushman [End quoting]

This sounds like an elegantly innovative solution to an age-old problem, especially in situations where it is not practical to dig-up around the outside of a structure to install conventional preventative or moisture-shunting drainage.

From WIRED magazine, May 2001: [quoting]

Its not just the pipes that need fixing. The traffic switches on the Internet backbone are kludgy electronic devices with limited bandwidth. Trellis Photonics <www.trellis-photonics.com>, a Columbia, Maryland-based company, wants to replace them with a cheaper, faster, all-optical switching option dubbed electroholography.

Founded in 1999, Trellis was spun out of 10 years of research by Aharon Agranat, a professor at Hebrew University in Jerusalem. The electroholographic switch he developed bounces light waves off holograms embedded in an array of crystals. This eliminates the need to convert data from photons to electrons and back again, as happens with the current leading optical technology. In micro-electromechanical systems, tiny mirrors etched on chips flip back and forth in milliseconds.

Trellis says that by avoiding moving parts, it can produce switches for less than half the price that operate up to 10,000 times faster. And rapid switching means fewer backup systems, since some failures could be avoided in real time.

In a network controlled by lots of cheap and simple electroholographic devices, new channels could also be added to the fiber instantaneously, and each one can be regulated and monitored. "Today the network is built on a cast-in-concrete model" says CEO Timothy K. Cahall. "It's planned out over months and built over years. Electroholography overturns that paradigm."

Industry leader Enron Broadband will begin beta-testing electroholographic technology from Trellis in June, and the switches should be ready for general release by December. Trellis recently raised $25 million for new manufacturing plants in the U.S. and Israel and is planning another round of financing.

Still, the notoriously risk-averse operators who run the optical backbone may be hard to win over. But Cahall isn't worried: Trellis' way, he boasts, is just plain better.

"This is a breakthrough technology" he says. "We want to make bandwidth instantly available." — Alex Saltman [End quoting]

At the rate the Internet is growing, without some innovative solutions like this, the whole system will soon grind to a halt like a rush-hour traffic jam on a Los Angeles freeway.

BATTERIES: CARJUICE IN A SIX-PACK

From WIRED magazine, May 2001: [quoting]

A European diesel-powered minivan from DaimlerChrysler will be the first vehicle to feature a spiral-wound battery as standard equipment. In the Exide Orbital battery, the plates are wound in layers with an electrolyte-saturated pad between. A cylindrical shape gives the battery the appearance of a six-pack.

These batteries have a higher power density than conventional batteries. High cost has inhibited their general use, but the impending introduction of high-voltage electrical systems, expected soon in Europe, should give automakers more reason to adopt them. —D.M. [End quoting]

Such batteries also provide a safety factor missing in conventional batteries which, under some conditions, can splash or spill or spray their dangerous sulfuric acid contents.

13-YEAR-OLD HOME SCHOLAR IN COLLEGE

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 4/9/01: [quoting]

Home scholars gain. The nation's public school systems suffered another embarrassment when Capital News Service reported that a home-schooled girl, 13, had completed her first year of college. Identified only as "Sarah", she attends the Hagerstown (Md.) Community College. In recent years, home-schooled students have been winning national spelling bees and math competitions. By every academic yardstick, they are years ahead of their public school peers.

"She's a very enthusiastic student" said Suzannah Moran, one of Sarah's instructors. [End quoting]

It's great to see that home-schoolers are getting some well-deserved publicity. Other home-schoolers have successfully made the transition to major universities such as Stanford. They tend to have a more mature study ethic than their peers from conventional school backgrounds and, as well, exhibit more academic independence in terms of taking courses outside of typical majors. These students further accentuate the "dumbing down" agenda item of the New World Order gang through the well-controlled conventional school systems.

SUSPENSION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN AUSTRALIA

From THE STRATEGY, Australia, 4/01: [quoting]

Amnesty International protested on ABC Radio against the Howard Cabinet's "Teoh Bill" that will suspend all Civil, Political, Social, and Human Rights in Australia and all those written into the 1986 Human Rights & Equal Opportunity Commission Act, from the ratified International Covenant on Civil & Political Rights treaty.

The Public are asked to write to their Senators to stop the Teoh Bill that Labor Supports.

Your participation in this initiative is of the utmost importance—if you want to retain ANY rights.

Amazing stuff, this proposed anti-drug legislation. The Teoh Bill coincides with Howard's $32 million Drug Laws that also suspend all rights—classing suspects as guilty before trial, and seizure of all property on mere hearsay. [End quoting]

All over the world the New World Order elite gangsters are pushing hard to take away all individual rights. Stay alert to similar laws soon to be germinated in a country near and dear to you!

POLICE WANT TO MONITOR YOUR BODY HEAT

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, April, 2001: [quoting]

The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to hear a landmark case that will determine whether police can use thermal-imaging cameras to look through the walls of your home, without a court order.

The case began when police in Florence, Ore., used a thermal camera to look for marijuana growing inside a house. Police claimed it was a legal search because they were looking only at "waste heat". This, they said, is equivalent to routing through curbside garbage, a common police practice.

Since the case started in 1992, thermal imaging has advanced to the point at which cameras can even determine what, if anything, you are wearing.

Bill Of Rights supporters say approving infrared imaging would be like allowing police to film people inside their homes. [End quoting]

So the police will legally become high-tech "peeping toms" if we don't stop this now. Is this unreasonable invasion of privacy or search and seizure according to your interpretation of the U.S. Constitution?

BOLIVIA

From NEXUS magazine, May-June/01: [quoting:]

As Maude Barlow explains, in 1998 the World Bank:

"...refused to guarantee a US$25 million loan to refinance water services in Cochabamba, Bolivia's third-largest city, unless the government sold the public water system to the private sector and passed on the costs to consumers. Only one bid was considered, and the utility was turned over to a subsidiary of a conglomerate led by Bechtel—the giant engineering company implicated in the infamous Three Gorges Dam in China, which has caused the forced relocation of 1.3 million people.

"In January 1999, before it had even hung up its shingle, the company announced the doubling of water prices. For most Bolivians, this meant that water would now cost more than food; for those on a minimum wage or unemployed, water bills suddenly accounted for close to half their monthly budgets. To add insult, the World Bank granted monopolies to private water concessionaires, announced its support for full-cost water pricing, pegged the cost of water to the U.S. dollar, and declared that none of its loan could be used to subsidize the poor for water services. All water, even from community wells, required permits to access, and peasants and small farmers even had to buy permits to gather rainwater on their property."

On 10 April 2000, hundreds of thousands marched to Cochabamba in an anti-government protest. The government backed down, ordered Bechtel out of Bolivia, and revoked its water privatisation legislation. [End quoting]

The New World Order elite gangsters/banksters are grabbing control of water rights all over the world as a mechanism for population control and even possible "experimentation" access. Another of the ways such control is being implemented is to legislate very strict control of water quality so that individuals maybe can't use their own well water—while they demand one of the greatest pollutions/poisons (for dumping down the population) by forcing the addition of fluoride to water. Another trick is to make the cost of maintenance of wells and pumping too expensive for private wells, or to claim all underground water rights, and to make it illegal to drill new private wells, as well as enacting as many laws as they can against using private sources of water.

MEDICAL-RECORD PRIVACY RULE SETS FIRST FEDERAL STANDARDS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 4/13/01: [quoting]

President Bush announced Thursday that sweeping rules to protect the privacy of medical records would take effect on Saturday. But he said the rules, issued by President Bill Clinton, could later be revised or clarified to address "legitimate concerns" of the health-care industry.

The rules establish the first comprehensive federal standards for medical privacy. They will affect virtually every doctor, patient, hospital, pharmacy, and health insurance plan in the United States.

The Bush administration had considered delaying the rules to consider objections from the health-care industry, which said the standards would impose costly administrative burdens. Instead, Bush decided the rules would take effect on schedule, but he asked the secretary of health and human services, Tommy Thompson, to suggest "appropriate modifications" to ensure, for example, that parents can see their children's records.

Under the rules, Bush said: "patients will have full access to their medical records and more control over how their personal information will be used and disclosed."

The rules require that doctors, hospitals, and other health-care providers obtain written consent from patients before using or disclosing medical information for even routine purposes like treatment or the payment of claims. Patients would, for the first time, have a federal right to inspect and copy their records, and could propose corrections. The rules cover not only paper records but also computer files and even oral communications.

Consumer groups see the rules as a landmark in the history of American medicine. Many insurers, they say, have disclosed personal health information to lenders, employers, or marketers without the patients' permission. As a result, they say, people have lost jobs and suffered other forms of discrimination, and some patients are so worried that they shun care or provide inaccurate information to doctors.

By allowing the rules to take effect, despite the administration's view that some provisions are unworkable, Bush avoided the criticism that surrounded the rollback of other Clinton administration policies. Those policies dealt with arsenic in drinking water, global warming, and preventing repetitive-stress injuries in the workplace, among other issues.

In reversing such policies, Bush has run the political risk of cementing an image of his administration as one that favors business at the expense of the consumer. [End quoting]

By the time the politicians get through with their tinkering do you really think we'll have more privacy? Go back to the earlier item in this News Desk on the large-scale selling of personal information!

TRACK AND CONTROL YOUR CAR WITH GPS & THE INTERNET

From NEXUS magazine, May-June/01: [quoting:]

Houston-based Immobiliser Inc. is introducing the world's first over-the-counter wireless vehicle tracking and control system using both the Internet and Global Positioning System (GPS) technology.

The new product, called GPS Vision, will allow vehicle owners from anywhere in the world to be able to track and control their vehicle over the Internet. It has the power to track and control a vehicle with just the click of a mouse. Car owners receive the vehicle's street address location, digital mapping, car speed, and direction in seconds via the Internet.

Doors can be remotely unlocked or locked, the engine can be turned on or off, and you can even be notified via pager/cellphone if your car alarm is activated—all from anywhere in the world. The next time your car is stolen, you can dial it up on your cellphone, obtain its location, relay this info to the police, then turn off the car engine, lock the doors and wait.

While the beneficial side of this technology is accentuated, just like the point made over and over again in our front-page feature interview, the possible abuses by those with a desire to control/impede our mobility may also use such technology to their advantage.

not matter what the brand name is.

If this has been done, how would you know the labeling correctly indicates the potency? Simply put, you'd never know. An example would be 500 mg vitamin C. If the pill was not up to the potency specified, you could not tell by just taking it.

Something interesting happened the other day. So I wanted to share it. I take 500 mg of Niacin every day to open my capillaries and detox my system. Anyone familiar with Niacin will verify and know it gives the user a specific indication you have taken it! You get a heated prickly rush all over, and you turn beet red when the rush occurs after taking it. It's a bit unpleasant for awhile, but you get used to it. For the past week, trying two distinct and different brands of the same 500-mg potency, there was NO rush. This indicates both manufacturers suddenly lowered the potency! Yet labeling stayed exactly the same.

A friend who dislikes the rush only takes 100 mg of it but still gets her rush. She cannot as I do, and stand 500 mg of it.

It appears there is definitely something going on in regard to threats of lowering what is available and being sold by these manufacturers of vitamins to the general public.

It's my theory we are now under direct attack to smash any attempts an individual may have of building up and maintaining a healthy immune system. [End quoting]

Has anyone else noticed any similarly suspicious weakening of vitamin products?

DON'T LICK THE ENVELOPES!

From A READER, 4/21/01: [quoting]

A friend sent this to me. I know it sounds really, really strange, but after you read it all, it will make you think:

If you lick your envelopes, you won't anymore!!!!

A woman was working in a post office in California. One day she licked the envelopes and postage stamps instead of using a sponge. That very day the lady cut her tongue on an envelope.

A week later, she noticed an abnormal swelling of her tongue. She went to the doctor, and they found nothing wrong. Her tongue was not sore or anything.

A couple of days later, her tongue started to swell more, and it began to get really sore—so sore that she could not eat. She went back to the hospital and demanded something be done.

The doctor took an x-ray of her tongue, and noticed a lump. He prepared her for minor surgery.

When the doctor cut her tongue open, a live roach crawled out.

There were roach eggs on the seal of the envelope. The egg was able to hatch inside of her tongue, because of her saliva. It was warm and moist.

This is a true story, reported on CNN!

Andy Hume wrote:

Hey, I used to work in an envelope factory. You wouldn't believe the things that float around in those gum-applicator trays. I haven't licked an envelope for years.

To All:

I used to work for a print shop (32 years ago) and we were told NEVER to lick the envelopes. I never understood why until I had to go into storage and pull out 2500 envelopes that were already printed for a customer who was doing a mailing. I saw several squads of roaches roaming around inside a couple of boxes, with eggs everywhere.

They eat the glue on the envelopes. I think print shops have a harder time controlling roaches than a restaurant. I always buy the self-sealing type. Or, if need be, I use a glue stick to seal one that has the type of glue that needs to be wet to stick. PLEASE PASS THIS ON! [End quoting]

Just when you thought you had heard everything! How's that for a good reason to NOT lick envelopes?

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

If you don't want your view of life to be transformed, then steer clear of this book.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to be who we really are, to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

WHAT TO DO IN CASE OF A STOLEN OR LOST WALLET

From the INTERNET, 4/17/01: [quoting]

What Happens If You Lose Your Purse Or Wallet? By Sandy Sparr

We've all heard horror stories about fraud that's committed using your name, address, SS#, credit cards, etc. Unfortunately I (author of this piece) have first-hand knowledge, because my wallet was stolen last month and within a week the thief ordered an expensive monthly cellphone package, applied for a VISA credit card, had a credit line approved to buy a Gateway computer, received a PIN number from DMV to change my driving record information on-line, and more.

But here's some critical information to limit the damage in case this happens to you or someone you know. As everyone always advises, cancel your credit cards immediately, but the key is having the toll-free numbers and your card numbers handy so you know whom to call. Keep those where you can find them easily—having to hunt for them is additional stress you WON'T need at that point!

On a personal note, I remember losing a MC, and until I got the toll-free number from information, etc., I was a wreck. File a police report immediately in the jurisdiction where it was stolen, this proves to credit providers you were diligent, and is a first step toward an investigation (if there ever is one).

But here's what is perhaps most important: I never ever thought to do this. Call the three national credit reporting organizations immediately to place a FRAUD ALERT on your name and SS#. I had never heard of doing that until advised by a bank that called to tell me an application for credit was made over the Internet in my name. The alert means any company that checks your credit knows your information was stolen and they have to contact you by phone to authorize new credit.

By the time I was advised to do this, almost 2 weeks after the theft, all the damage had been done. (There are records of all the credit checks initiated by the thieves' purchases, none of which I knew about before placing the alert.)

Since then, no additional damage has been done, and the thieves threw my wallet away this weekend (someone turned it in). It seems to have stopped them in their tracks.

The numbers are: Equifax: 1-800-525-6285; Experian (formerly TRW): 1-800-301-7195; Trans Union: 1-800-680-7289; Social Security Administration also has a fraud line at: 1-800-269-0271.

Please pass this information along. It could help someone else. [End quoting]

Certainly this information is something we all should keep in a place where we can find it for quick reference should we lose wallet or purse to sticky fingers.

1000 MARBLES

From the INTERNET, 4/6/01: [quoting]

Teresa Laronde

The older I get, the more I enjoy Saturday mornings. Perhaps it's the quiet solitude that comes with being the first to rise, or maybe it's the unbounded joy of not having to be at work. Either way, the first few hours of a Saturday morning are most enjoyable.

A few weeks ago, I was shuffling toward the kitchen with a steaming cup of coffee in one hand and the morning paper in the other. What began as a typical Saturday morning turned into one of those lessons that life seems to hand you from time to time. Let me tell you about it.

I turned the volume up on my radio in order to listen to a Saturday morning talk show. I heard an older sounding chap with a golden voice. You know the kind, he sounded like he should be in the broadcasting business himself.

He was talking about "a thousand marbles" to someone named "Tom". I was intrigued and sat down to listen to what he had to say.

"Well, Tom, it sure sounds like you're busy with your job. I'm sure they pay you well but it's a shame you have to be away from home and your family so much. Hard to believe a young fellow should have to work sixty or seventy hours a week to make ends meet. Too bad you missed your daughter's dance recital."

He continued: "Let me tell you something, Tom, something that has helped me keep a good perspective on my own priorities."

And that's when he began to explain his theory of "a thousand marbles".

"You see, I sat down one day and did a little arithmetic. The average person lives about seventy-five years. I know, some live more and some live less, but on average, folks live about seventy-five years.

"Now then, I multiplied 75 times 52 and I came up with 3900, which is the number of Saturdays that the average person has in their entire lifetime. Now, stick with me, Tom, I'm getting to the important part.

"It took me until I was fifty-five years old to think about all this in any detail" he went on, "and by that time I had lived through over twenty-eight hundred Saturdays. I got to thinking that if I lived to be seventy-five, I only had about a thousand of them left to enjoy.

"So I went to a toy store and bought every single marble they had. I ended up having to visit three toy stores to round-up 1000 marbles. I took them home and put them inside of a large, clear plastic container right here in my workshop next to the radio. Every Saturday since then, I have taken one marble out and thrown it away.

"I found that by watching the marbles diminish, I focused more on the really important things in life. There is nothing like watching your time here on this Earth run out to help get your priorities straight.

"Now, let me tell you one last thing before I sign-off with you and take my lovely wife out for breakfast. This morning, I took the very last marble out of the container. I figure if I make it until next Saturday, then God has blessed me with a little extra time to be with my loved ones.

"It was nice to talk to you, Tom. I hope you spend more time with your loved ones, and I hope to meet you again someday. Have a good morning!"

You could have heard a pin drop when he finished. Even the show's moderator didn't have anything to say for a few moments. I guess he gave us all a lot to think about. I had planned to do some work that morning, then go to the gym. Instead, I went upstairs and woke my wife up with a kiss. "C'mon honey, I'm taking you and the kids to breakfast."

"What brought this on?" she asked with a smile. "Oh, nothing special" I said. "It has just been a long time since we spent a Saturday together with the kids. Hey, can we stop at a toy store while we're out? I need to buy some marbles."

HAVE A GREAT WEEKEND AND MAY ALL SATURDAYS BE SPECIAL—AND MAY YOU HAVE MANY HAPPY YEARS AFTER YOU LOSE ALL YOUR MARBLES. [End quoting]

What great advice for helping us to focus upon what's really important in our life. Those of you who watch the gifted psychic John Edward communicate with departed loved ones on the SciFi cable channel hear and see him constantly remind the audiences about the importance of the above advice.

THE WIND BENEATH MY WINGS

From the INTERNET, "Mary" <msnell@txk.net>, 4/15/01:

My friends,
This really touched me; it's awesome!

Barb
God's Wings

An article in National Geographic several years ago provided a penetrating picture of God's wings.

After a forest fire in Yellowstone National Park, forest rangers began their trek up a mountain to assess the inferno's damage.

One ranger found a bird literally petrified in ashes, perched statuesquely on the ground at the base of a tree. Somewhat sickened by the eerie sight, he knocked over the bird with a stick.

When he gently struck it, three tiny chicks scurried from under their dead mother's wings. The loving mother, keenly aware of impending disaster, had carried her offspring to the base of the tree and had gathered them under her wings, instinctively knowing that the toxic smoke would rise.

She could have flown to safety but had refused to abandon her babies.

When the blaze had arrived and the heat had scorched her small body, the mother had remained steadfast. Because she had been willing to die, those under the cover of her wings would live.

"He will cover you with His feathers, and under His wings you will find refuge." (Psalms 91:4).

Being loved this much should make a difference in your life. Remember the One who loves you, and then be different because of it. [End quoting]

Some of the most important and powerful lessons of living we learn best from observing God's so-called "lesser" creatures!

A CHILD'S DIVINE PERSPECTIVE

From the INTERNET, "Lindsey" <mira999@mindspring.com>, 4/23/01: [quoting]

A New Perspective

When I look at a patch of dandelions, I see a bunch of weeds that are going to take over my yard. My kids see flowers for Mom, and blowing white fluff you can wish on.

When I look at an old drunk and he smiles at me, I see a smelly, dirty person who probably wants money, and I look away. My kids see someone smiling at them, and they smile back.

When I hear music I love, I know I can't carry a tune and don't have much rhythm, so I sit self-consciously and listen. My kids feel the beat and move to it. They sing out the words. If they don't know them, they make up their own.

When I feel wind on my face, I brace myself against it. I feel it messing up my hair and pulling me back when I walk. My kids close their eyes, spread their arms, and fly with it, until they fall to the ground laughing.

When I pray, I say thee and thou and grant me this, give me that. My kids say "Hi God! Thanks for my toys and my friends. Please keep the bad dreams away tonight. Sorry, I don't want to go to Heaven yet. I would miss my Mommy and Daddy."

When I see a mud puddle, I step around it. I see muddy shoes and clothes and dirty carpets. My kids sit in it. They see dams to build, rivers to cross, and worms to play with.

I wonder if we are given kids to teach or to learn from?

No wonder God loves the little children! [End quoting]

I remember a phrase attributed to the Master Teacher from 2000 years ago that goes something like: "Be as little children to enter the Kingdom of God." May we all take the time to watch and listen to the children of the world!

Some Useful Background Material On HAARP

4/11/01 RICK MARTIN

Our front-page feature interview with HAARP expert Dr. Nick Begich is surely a roller coaster ride of information—from the greatly uplifting to the deeply troubling and outright bizarre. But, in order to digest some of the issues which Dr. Begich presents in that conversation, it helps to be aware of some background material on HAARP.

It would have been too awkward to incorporate that background in front of the interview, so we are presenting that here as a separate article. What you are about to read, extracted mostly from excellent Internet sources, is meant to provide historical perspective as well as a view of current HAARP status.

Let's begin with the following, which is of a general introductory nature, and shows how little regard has been shown toward the delicate balance of our atmospheric layers—all the way back to brutal tests in 1958. (Is it any wonder that major episodes of UFO activity correlate with these tests!)

Some reliable sources have suggested that even those early experiments were done for reasons far more advanced than what we were told—having to do with manipulating space-time and creating interdimensional portals. Whatever the actual reasons, the publicly accessible facts of this ongoing research project are enough to generate a great deal of suspicion concerning what's REALLY going on:

Background Of The HAARP Project

Rosalie Bertell, Ph.D., GNSH

Military interest in space became intense during and after World War II because of the introduction of rocket science, the companion to nuclear technology. The early versions include the buzz bomb and guided missiles. They were thought of as potential carriers of both nuclear and conventional bombs.

Rocket technology and nuclear weapon technology developed simultaneously between 1945 and 1963. During this time of intensive atmospheric nuclear testing, explosions at various levels above and below the surface of the Earth were attempted. Some of the now familiar descriptions of the Earth's protective atmosphere, such as the existence of the Van Allen belts, were based on information gained through stratospheric and ionospheric experimentation.

The Earth's atmosphere consists of the Troposphere, from sea level to about 16 km above the Earth's surface; the Stratosphere (which contains the ozone level), which extends from about the 16 to 48 km above the Earth; and the Ionosphere, which extends from 48 km to over 50,000 km above the surface of the Earth.

The Earth's protective atmosphere or "skin" extends beyond 3,200 km above sea level to the large magnetic fields, called the Van Allen Belts, which can capture the charged particles sprayed through the cosmos by the solar and galactic winds. These belts were discovered in 1958 during the first weeks of the operation of America's first satellite, Explorer I. They appear to contain charged particles trapped in the Earth's gravity and magnetic fields.

Primary galactic cosmic rays enter the solar system from interstellar space, and are made up of protons with energies above 100 MeV, extending up to astronomically high energies. They make up about 10 percent of the high energy rays. Solar rays are generally of lower energy, below 20 MeV (which is still high energy in Earth terms). These high energy particles are affected by the Earth's magnetic field and by geomagnetic latitude (distance above or below the geomagnetic equator). The flux density of low energy protons at the top of the atmosphere is normally greater at the poles than at the equator. The density also varies with solar activity, being at a minimum when solar flares are at a minimum.

The Van Allen belts capture charged particles (protons, electrons and alpha particles) and these spiral along the magnetic force lines toward the polar regions where the force lines converge. They are reflected back and forth between the magnetic force lines near the poles. The lower Van Allen Belt is about 7700 km above the Earth's surface, and the outer Van Allen Belt is about 51,500 km above the surface.

According to the Encyclopedia Britannica, the Van Allen belts are most intense along the equator, and effectively absent over the poles. They dip to 400 km over the South Atlantic Ocean, and are about 1,000 km high over the Central Pacific Ocean. In the lower Van Allen Belt, the proton intensity is about 20,000 particles with energy above 30 MeV per second per square centimeter. Electrons reach a maximum energy of 1 MeV, and their intensity has a maximum of 100 million per second per square centimeter. In the outer belt, proton energy averages only 1 MeV. For comparison, most charged particles discharged in a nuclear explosion range between 0.3 and 3 MeV, while diagnostic medical X-rays have peak energies around 0.5 MeV.

Project Argus (1958):

Between August and September 1958, the U.S. Navy exploded three fission-type nuclear bombs 480 km above the South Atlantic Ocean, in the part of the lower Van Allen Belt closest to the Earth's surface. In addition, two hydrogen bombs were detonated 160 km over Johnston Island in the Pacific. The military called this "the biggest scientific experiment ever undertaken". It was designed by the U.S. Department of Defense and the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, under the code name Project Argus. The purpose appears to be to assess the impact of high altitude nuclear explosions on radio transmission and radar operations because of the electromagnetic pulse (EMP) generated by the blast, and to increase understanding of the geomagnetic field and the behavior of the charged particles in it.

This gigantic experiment created new (inner) magnetic radiation belts encompassing almost the whole Earth, and injected sufficient electrons and other energetic particles into the ionosphere to cause worldwide effects. The electrons traveled back and forth along magnetic force lines, causing an artificial "aurora" when striking the atmosphere near the North Pole.

The U.S. military planned to create a "telecommunications shield" in the ionosphere, reported in 13-20 August 1961, Keesings Historisch Archief (K.H.A.). This shield would be created "in the ionosphere at 3,000 km height, by bringing into orbit 350,000 million copper needles, each 2-4 cm long (total weight 16 kg), forming a belt 10 km thick and 40 km wide, the needles spaced about 100 m apart." This was designed to replace the ionosphere "because telecommunications are impaired by magnetic storms and solar flares". The U.S. planned to add to the number of copper needles if the experiment proved to be successful. This plan was strongly opposed by the Intentional Union of Astronomers.

Project Starfish (1962):

On July 9, 1962, the U.S. began a further series of experiments with the ionosphere. From their description: "...one kiloton device, at a height of 60 km, and one megaton and one multi-megaton, at several hundred kilometers height" (K.H.A., 29 June 1962). These tests seriously disturbed the lower Van Allen Belt, substantially altering its shape and intensity. "In this experiment the inner Van Allen Belt will be practically destroyed for a period of time; particles from the belt will be transported to the atmosphere. It is anticipated that the Earth's magnetic field will be disturbed over long distances for several hours, preventing radio communication. The explosion in the inner radiation belt will create an artificial dome of polar light that will be visible from Los Angeles” (K.H.A. 11 May 1962).

A Fijian sailor, present at this nuclear explosion, told me that the whole sky was on fire and he thought it would be the end of the world. This was the experiment which called forth the strong protest of the Queen’s astronomer, Sir Martin Ryle, in the U.K.

“The Ionosphere (according to the understanding at that time), that part of the atmosphere between 65-80 km and 280-320 km height, will be disrupted by mechanical forces caused by the pressure wave following the explosion. At the same time, large quantities of ionizing radiation will be released, further ionizing the gaseous components of the atmosphere at this height. This ionization effect is strengthened by the radiation from the fission products.... The lower Van Allen Belt, consisting of charged particles that move along the geomagnetic field lines...will similarly be disrupted. As a result of the explosion, this field will be locally destroyed, while countless new electrons will be introduced into the lower belt” (K.H.A. 11 May 1962).

“On 19 July...NASA announced that as a consequence of the high-altitude nuclear test of July 9, a new radiation belt had been formed, stretching from a height of about 400 km to 1600 km; it can be seen as a temporary extension of the lower Van Allen Belt” (K.H.A. 5 August 1962).

As explained in the Encyclopedia Britannica: “Starfish made a much wider belt (than Project Argus) that extends from low altitude out past L=3 (i.e. three Earth radiuses, or about 13,000 km above the surface of the Earth).”

Later in 1962, the USSR undertook similar planetary experiments, creating three new radiation belts between 7,000 and 13,000 km above the Earth. According to the Encyclopedia, the electron fluxes in the lower Van Allen Belt have changed markedly since the 1962 high-altitude nuclear explosions by the US and USSR, never returning to their former state. According to American scientists, it could take many hundreds of years for the Van Allen Belts to stabilize at their normal levels. (Research done by: Nigel Harle, Borderland Archives, Cortenbachstraat 32, 6136 CH Sittard, Netherlands.)

SPS: Solar-Powered Satellite Project (1968):

In 1968 the U.S. military proposed solar-powered satellites in geostationary orbit some 40,000 km above the Earth, which would intercept solar radiation using solar cells on satellites and transmit it via a microwave beam to receiving antennas, called rectennas, on Earth. The U.S. Congress mandated the Department of Energy and NASA to prepare an Environmental Impact Assessment on this project, to be completed by June 1980, and costing $25 million. This project was designed to construct 60 solar-powered satellites over a thirty-year period at a cost of between $500 and $800 thousand million (in 1968 dollars), providing 100 percent of the U.S. energy needs in the year 2025 at a cost of $3000 per kW.

At that time, the project cost was two to three times larger than the whole Department of Energy budget, and the projected cost of the electricity was well above the cost of most conventional energy sources. The rectenna sites on Earth were expected to take up to 145 square kilometers of land, and would preclude habitation by any humans, animals, or even vegetation. Each satellite was to be the size of Manhattan Island.

Saturn V Rocket (1975):

Due to a malfunction, the Saturn V rocket burned unusually high in the atmosphere, above 300 km. This burn produced “a large ionospheric hole” (Mendillo, M. et al., Science p.187, 343, 1975). The disturbance reduced the total electron content more than 60% over an area 1,000 km in radius, and lasted for several hours. It prevented all telecommunications over a large area of the Atlantic Ocean. The phenomenon was apparently caused by a reaction between the exhaust gases and ionospheric oxygen ions. The reaction emitted a 6300 Angstrom airglow. Between 1975 and 1981 NASA and the U.S. military began to design ways to test this new phenomenon through deliberate experimentation with the ionosphere.

SPS Military Implications (1978):

Early review of the Solar-Powered Satellite Project began in around 1978, and I was on the review panel. Although this was proposed as an energy program, it had significant military implications. One of the most significant, first pointed out by Michael J. Ozeroff, was the possibility of developing a satellite-borne beam weapon for anti-ballistic missile (ABM) use.

The satellites were to be in geosynchronous orbits, each providing an excellent vantage point from which an entire hemisphere can be surveyed continuously. It was speculated that a high-energy laser beam could function as a thermal weapon to disable or destroy enemy missiles. There was some discussion of electron weapon beams, through the use of a laser beam to preheat a path for the following electron beam.

The SPS was also described as a psychological and anti-personnel weapon, which could be directed toward an enemy. If the main microwave beam was redirected away from its rectenna, toward enemy personnel, it could use an infrared radiation wavelength (invisible) as an anti-personnel weapon.

It might also be possible to transmit high enough energy to ignite combustible materials. Laser beam power relays could be made from the SPS satellite to other satellites or platforms, for example aircraft, for military purposes. One application might be a laser-powered turbofan engine which would receive the laser beam directly in its combustion chamber, producing the required high temperature gas for its cruising operation. This would allow unlimited on-station cruise time.

As a psychological weapon, the SPS was capable of causing general panic.

The SPS would be able to transmit power to remote military operations anywhere needed on Earth. The manned platform of the SPS would provide surveillance and early warning capability, and ELF linkage to submarines. It would also provide the capability of jamming enemy communications. The potential for jamming and creating communications is significant. The SPS was also capable of causing physical changes in the ionosphere.

President Carter approved the SPS project and gave it a go-ahead, in spite of the reservation which many reviewers, myself included, expressed. Fortunately, it was so expensive, exceeding the entire Department of Energy budget, that funding was denied by the Congress. I approached the United Nations Committee on Disarmament on this project, but was told that as long as the program was called “solar energy” by the United States, it could not be considered a weapons project.

The same project resurfaced in the U.S. under President Reagan. He moved it to the much larger budget of the Department of Defense and called it Star Wars. Since this is more recent history, I will not discuss the debate which raged over this phase of the plan.

By 1978, it was apparent to the U.S. military that communications in a nuclear-hostile environment would not be possible using traditional methods of radio and television technology (Jane’s Military Communications 1978). By 1982, GTE Sylvania (Needham Heights, Massachusetts) had developed a command control electronic sub-system for the U.S. Air Force’s Ground Launch Cruise Missiles (GLCM) that would enable military commanders to monitor and control the missile prior to launch, both in hostile and non-hostile environments.

The system contains six radio subsystems, created with visible light using a dark beam (not visible) and is resistant to the disruptions experienced by radio and television. Dark beams contribute to the formation of energetic plasma in the atmosphere. This plasma can become visible as smog or fog. Some has a different charge than the Sun’s energy, and accumulates in places where the Sun’s energy is absent, like the polar regions in the winter.

When the polar spring occurs, the Sun appears and repels this plasma, contributing to holes in the ozone layer. This military system is called: Ground Wave Emergency Network (GWEN). (See The SECOMII Communication System, by Wayne Olsen, SAND 78-0391, Sandia Laboratories, Albuquerque, New Mexico, April 1978.) This innovative emergency radio system was apparently never implemented in Europe, and exists only in North America.

Orbit Maneuvering System (1981):

Part of the plan to build the SPS space platforms was the demand for reusable space shuttles, since they could not afford to keep discarding rockets. The NASA Spacelab-3

Mission of the Space Shuttle made, in 1981, “a series of passes over a network of five ground based observatories” in order to study what happened to the ionosphere when the Shuttle injected gases into it from the Orbit Maneuvering System (OMS). They discovered that they could “induce ionospheric holes” and began to experiment with holes made in the daytime, or at night over Millstone, Connecticut, and Arecibo, Puerto Rico. They experimented with the effects of “artificially induced ionospheric depletions on very low frequency wavelengths, on equatorial plasma instabilities, and on low-frequency radio astronomical observations over Roberval, Quebec, Kwajalein, in the Marshall Islands, and Hobart, Tasmania” (Advanced Space Research, Vol.8, No.1, 1988).

Innovative Shuttle Experiments (1985):

An innovative use of the Space Shuttle to perform space physics experiments in Earth orbit was launched, using the OMS injections of gases to “cause a sudden depletion in the local plasma concentration, the creation of a so-called ionospheric hole”. This artificially induced plasma depletion can then be used to investigate other space phenomena, such as the growth of the plasma instabilities or the modification of radio propagation paths. The 47-second OMS burn of July 29, 1985, produced the largest and most long-lived ionospheric hole to date, dumping some 830 kg of exhaust into the ionosphere at sunset. A 6-second, 68-km OMS release above Connecticut in August, 1985, produced an airglow which covered over 400,000 square km.

During the 1980s, rocket launches globally numbered about 500 to 600 a year, peaking at 1500 in 1989. There were many more during the Gulf War. The Shuttle is the largest of the solid-fuel rockets, with twin 45-meter boosters. All solid-fuel rockets release large amounts of hydrochloric acid in their exhaust, with each Shuttle flight injecting about 75 tons of ozone-destroying chlorine into the stratosphere. Those launched since 1992 inject even more ozone-destroying chlorine, about 187 tons, into the stratosphere (which contains the ozone layer).

Mighty Oaks (1986):

In April, 1986, just before the Chernobyl disaster, the U.S. had a failed hydrogen test at the Nevada Test Site called Mighty Oaks. This test, conducted far underground, consisted of a hydrogen bomb explosion in one chamber, with a leaded steel door to the chamber, two meters thick, closing within milliseconds of the blast.

The door was to allow only the first radioactive beam to escape into the “control room” in which expensive instrumentation was located. The radiation was to be captured as a weapon beam. The door failed to close as quickly as planned, causing the radioactive gases and debris to fill the control room, destroying millions of dollars worth of equipment. The experiment was part of a program to develop X-ray and particle-beam weapons. The radioactive releases from Mighty Oaks were vented, under a “licensed venting” and were likely responsible for many of the North American nuclear fallout reports in May 1986, which were attributed to the Chernobyl disaster.

Desert Storm (1991):

According to Defense News, April 13-19, 1992, the U.S. deployed an electromagnetic pulse weapon (EMP) in Desert Storm, designed to mimic the flash of electricity from a nuclear bomb. The Sandia National Laboratory had built a 23,000 square meter laboratory on the Kirkland Air Force Base, 1989, to house the Hermes II electron beam generator, capable of producing 20-trillion-watt pulses lasting 20 billionths to 25 billionths of a second.

This x-ray simulator is called a Particle Beam Fusion Accelerator. A stream of electrons hitting a metal plate can produce pulsed x-rays or gamma rays. Hermes II had produced electron beams since 1974. These devices were apparently tested during the Gulf War, although detailed information on them is sparse.

High-Frequency Active Auroral Research Program, HAARP (1993):

The HAARP program is jointly managed by the U.S. Air Force and the U.S. Navy, and is based in Gakona, Alaska. It is designed to “understand, simulate, and control ionospheric processes that might alter the performance of communication and surveillance systems.” The HAARP system intends to beam 3.6 gigawatts of effective radiated power of high-frequency radio energy into the ionosphere in order to:

- Generate extremely low frequency (ELF) waves for communicating with submerged submarines;
- Conduct geophysical probes to identify and characterize natural ionospheric processes so that techniques can be developed to mitigate or control them;
- Generate ionospheric lenses to focus large amounts of high-frequency energy, thus providing a means of triggering ionospheric processes that potentially could be exploited for Department of Defense purposes;
- Electron acceleration for infrared (IR) and other optical emissions which could be used to control radio wave propagation properties;
- Generate geomagnetic field-aligned ionization to control the reflection/scattering properties of radio waves;
- Use oblique heating to produce effects on radio wave propagation, thus broadening the potential military applications of ionospheric enhancement technology.

Poker Flat Rocket Launch (1968 to Present):

The Poker Flat Research Range is located about 50 km North of Fairbanks, Alaska, and it was established in 1968. It is operated by the Geophysical Institute with the University of Alaska at Fairbanks, under NASA contract.

About 250 major rocket launches have taken place from this site and, in 1994, a 16-meter-long rocket was launched to help NASA “understand chemical reactions in the atmosphere associated with global climate change”. Similar experiments, but using Chemical Release Modules (CRM), have been launched from Churchill, Manitoba. In 1980, Brian Whelan’s “Project Waterhole” disrupted an aurora borealis, bringing it to a temporary halt. In February 1983, the chemical released into the ionosphere caused an aurora borealis over Churchill. In March 1989, two Black Brant Xs and two Nike Orion rockets were launched over Canada, releasing barium at high altitudes and creating artificial clouds. These Churchill artificial clouds were observed from as far away as Los Alamos, New Mexico.

The U.S. Navy has also been carrying on High Power Auroral Stimulation (HIPAS) research in Alaska. Through a series of wires and a 15-meter antenna, they have beamed high-intensity signals into the upper atmosphere, generating a controlled disturbance in the ionosphere. As early as 1992, the Navy talked of creating 10-kilometer-long antennas in the sky to generate extremely low frequency (ELF) waves needed for communicating with submarines.

Another purpose of these experiments is to study the Aurora Borealis, called by some an outdoor plasma lab for studying the principles of fusion. Shuttle flights are now able to generate auroras with an electron beam. On November 10, 1991, and aurora borealis appeared in the Texas sky for the first time ever recorded, and it was seen by people as far away as Ohio and Utah, Nebraska and Missouri.

The sky contained “Christmas colors” and various scientists were quick to blame it on solar activity. However, when pressed, most would admit that the ionosphere must have been weakened at the time, so that the electrically charged particles hitting the Earth’s atmosphere created the highly visible light called airglow. These charged particles are normally pulled northwards by the Earth’s magnetic forces, to the magnetic north pole. The Northern Lights, as the aurora borealis is called, normally occurs in the vortex at the poles, where the energetic particles, directed by the magnetic force lines, are concentrated.

Conclusions:

It would be rash to assume that HAARP is an isolated experiment which would not be expanded. It is related to fifty years of intensive and increasingly destructive programs to understand and control the upper atmosphere.

It would be rash not to associate HAARP with the space laboratory construction which is separately being planned by the United States. HAARP is an integral part of a long history of space research and development of a deliberate military nature.

The military implications of combining these projects is alarming.

Basic to this project is control of communications—both disruption and reliability in hostile environments. The power wielded by such control is obvious.

The ability of the HAARP/Spacelab/rocket combination to deliver a very large amount of energy, comparable to a nuclear bomb, anywhere on Earth via laser and particle beams, are frightening.

The project is likely to be “sold” to the public as a space shield against incoming weapons, or, for the more gullible, a device for repairing the ozone layer.

Now we will move directly to some very good background on HAARP by our front-page feature interviewee, Dr. Nick Begich, and Jeane Manning, excerpted from their excellent www.earthpulse.com (Earthpulse Press) website from which their definitive books on the subject can be obtained.

Pay special attention to the way the military deflects attention away from the more dangerous aspects of this technology by understatement and other purposely misleading wordings. If there was nothing going on that needed to be kept from the public, there would be no need for such cryptically ominous language as is quoted herein:

Vandalism In The Sky

Dr. Nick Begich and Jeane Manning

“Techno-Net” is the protest form of the 1990s—picketing on the information highways.

For example, a fast-growing assortment of men and women around the world are using the Internet (started by the U.S. military for information transfer and exchange that would never be interfered with) to draw attention to a questionable military project in Alaska. Now these Interneting, e-mailing, faxing folks are blowing holes in the Department of Defense secrecy wall, by using the government’s own system.

The printed-word part of the protest started when Dennis Specht, an anti-nuclear activist then living in Alaska, sent a news item to NEXUS [magazine] on the topic of HAARP—the High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program. Then an Alaskan political activist and science researcher in Anchorage, Nick Begich, networked with Patrick and Gael Crystal Flanagan, who are self-described “technomonks” living in Sedona, Arizona, and was told to check out that same Australian-based magazine. Begich was surprised to see an item from his hometown in NEXUS, and immediately headed to the local library to dig out the documents cited in the article.

HAARP Antenna Array

That research led to articles and the book, Angels Don’t Play This HAARP: Advances In Tesla Technology, which is 230 pages of detailed information on this intrusive project. This article will only give highlights. Despite the amount of research (350 footnotes), at its heart it is a story about ordinary people who took on an extraordinary challenge.

HAARP Boils The Upper Atmosphere:

HAARP will zap the upper atmosphere with a focused and steerable electromagnetic beam. It is an advanced model of an “ionospheric heater”. (The ionosphere is the electrically-charged sphere surrounding Earth’s upper atmosphere. It ranges between about 40 and 600 miles above Earth’s surface.)

Put simply, the apparatus for HAARP is a reversal of a radio telescope; antennas send out signals instead of receiving. HAARP is the test run for a super-powerful radiowave-beaming technology that lifts areas of the ionosphere by focusing a beam and heating those areas. Electromagnetic waves then bounce back onto Earth and penetrate everything—living and dead.

HAARP publicity gives the impression that the High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program is mainly an academic project with the goal of changing the ionosphere to improve communications for our own good. However, other U.S. military documents put it more clearly—HAARP aims to learn how to “exploit the ionosphere for Department of Defense purposes”. Communicating with submarines is only one of those purposes.

Press releases and other information from the military on HAARP continually downplay what it could do. Publicity documents insist that the HAARP project is no different than other ionospheric heaters operating safely throughout the world in places such as Arecibo, Puerto Rico; Tromso, Norway; and the former Soviet Union.

However, a 1990 government document indicates that the radio-frequency (RF) power zap will drive the ionosphere to unnatural activities: “...at the highest HF powers available in the West, the instabilities commonly studied are approaching their maximum RF energy dissipative capability, beyond which the plasma processes will ‘runaway’ until the next limiting factor is reached.”

If the military, in cooperation with the University of Alaska at Fairbanks, can show that this new ground-based “Star Wars” technology is sound, they both win. The military has a relatively inexpensive defense shield, and the University can brag about the most dramatic geophysical manipulation since atmospheric explosions of nuclear bombs. After successful testing, they would have the military megaprojects of the future and huge markets for Alaska’s North Slope natural gas.

Looking at the other patents which built on the work of a Texas physicist named Bernard Eastlund, it becomes clearer how the military intends to use the HAARP transmitter. It also makes governmental denials less believable.

The military knows how it intends to use this technology, and has made this clear in their documents. The military has deliberately misled the public, through sophisticated word games, deceit, and outright disinformation.

The military says the HAARP system could:

- give the military a tool to replace the electromagnetic pulse effect of atmospheric thermonuclear devices (still considered a viable option by the military through at least 1986);
- replace the huge Extremely Low Frequency (ELF) submarine communication system operating in Michigan and Wisconsin with a new and more compact technology;
- be used to replace the over-the-horizon radar system that was once planned for the current location of HAARP, with a more flexible and accurate system;
- provide a way to wipe out communications over an extremely large area, while keeping the military’s own communications systems working;
- provide a wide area earth-penetrating tomography which, if combined with the computing abilities of EMASS and Cray computers, would make it possible to verify many parts of nuclear nonproliferation and peace agreements;

- be a tool for geophysical probing to find oil, gas, and mineral deposits over a large area;
- be used to detect incoming low-level planes and cruise missiles, making other technologies obsolete.

The above abilities seem like a good idea to all who believe in sound national defense, and to those concerned about cost-cutting. However, the possible uses which the HAARP records do NOT explain, and which can only be found in Air Force, Army, Navy, and other federal agency records, are alarming. Moreover, effects from the reckless use of these power levels in our natural shield—the ionosphere—could be cataclysmic according to some scientists.

Two Alaskans put it bluntly. A founder of the NO HAARP movement, Clare Zickuhr, says: “The military is going to give the ionosphere a big kick and see what happens.”

The military failed to tell the public that they do not know what exactly will happen, but a Penn State science article brags about that uncertainty. Macho science? The HAARP project uses the largest energy levels yet played with by what Begich and Manning call “the big boys with their new toys”.

It is an experiment on the sky, and experiments are done to find out something not already known. Independent scientists told Begich and Manning that a HAARP-type “skybuster” with its unforeseen effects could be an act of global vandalism.

HAARP History:

The patents described below were the package of ideas which were originally controlled by ARCO Power Technologies Incorporated (APTI), a subsidiary of Atlantic Richfield Company, one of the biggest oil companies in the world. APTI was the contractor that built the HAARP facility. ARCO sold this subsidiary, the patents, and the second-phase construction contract to E-Systems in June 1994.

E-Systems is one of the biggest intelligence contractors in the world—doing work for the CIA, defense intelligence organizations, and others. $1.8 billion of their annual sales are to these organizations, with $800 million for “black” projects—projects so secret that even the United States Congress isn’t told how the money is being spent.

E-Systems was bought out by Raytheon, which is one of the largest defense contractors in the world. In 1994 Raytheon was listed as number forty-two on the Fortune 500 list of companies. Raytheon has thousands of patents, some of which will be valuable in the HAARP project. The twelve patents below are the backbone of the HAARP project, and are now buried among the thousands of others held in the name of Raytheon.

Bernard J. Eastlund’s U.S. Patent # 4,686,605: “Method and Apparatus for Altering a Region in the Earth’s Atmosphere, Ionosphere, and/or Magnetosphere” was sealed for a year under a government Secrecy Order.

The Eastlund ionospheric heater was different; the radio-frequency (RF) radiation was concentrated and focused to a point in the ionosphere. This difference throws an unprecedented amount of energy into [a small volume of] the ionosphere. The Eastlund device would allow a concentration of one watt per cubic centimeter, compared to others only able to deliver about one millionth of one watt.

This huge difference could lift and change the ionosphere in the ways necessary to create futuristic effects described in the patent. According to the patent, the work of Nikola Tesla in the early 1900s formed the basis of the research.

What would this technology be worth to ARCO, the owner of the patents? They could make enormous profits by beaming electrical power from a powerhouse in the gas fields to the consumer, without wires.

For a time, HAARP researchers could not prove that this was one of the intended uses for HAARP. In April 1995, however, Begich found other patents, connected with a “key personnel” list for APTI. Some of these new APTI patents were indeed a wireless system for sending electrical power.

Eastlund’s patent said the technology can confuse or completely disrupt airplanes’ and missiles’ sophisticated guidance systems. Further, this ability to spray large areas of Earth with electromagnetic waves of varying frequencies, and to control changes in those waves, makes it possible to knock out communications on land or sea, as well as in the air. The patent said:

“Thus, this invention provides the ability to put unprecedented amounts of power in the Earth’s atmosphere at strategic locations and to maintain the power injection level, particularly if random pulsing is employed, in a manner far more precise and better controlled than heretofore accomplished by the prior art, particularly by detonation of nuclear devices of various yields at various altitudes....

"It is possible not only to interfere with third-party communications, but to take advantage of one or more such beams to carry out a communications network even though the rest of the world's communications are disrupted. Put another way, what is used to disrupt another's communications can be employed by one knowledgeable of this invention as a communication network at the same time."

"...large regions of the atmosphere could be lifted to an unexpectedly high altitude so that missiles encounter unexpected and unplanned drag forces with resultant destruction....

"Weather modification is possible by, for example, altering upper atmosphere wind patterns by constructing one or more plumes of atmospheric particles which will act as a lens or focusing device.... Molecular modifications of the atmosphere can take place so that positive environmental effects can be achieved. Besides actually changing the molecular composition of an atmospheric region, a particular molecule or molecules can be chosen for increased presence. For example, ozone, nitrogen, etc., concentrations in the atmosphere could be artificially increased...."

Begich found eleven other APTI patents. They told how to make nuclear-sized explosions without radiation, power-beaming systems, over-the-horizon radar, detection systems for missiles carrying nuclear warheads, electromagnetic pulses previously produced by thermonuclear weapons and other Star-Wars tricks. This cluster of patents underlay the HAARP weapon system.

Related research by Begich and Manning uncovered bizarre schemes. For example, Air Force documents revealed that a system had been developed for manipulating and disrupting human mental processes through pulsed radio-frequency radiation (the stuff of HAARP) over large geographical areas. The most telling material about this technology came from writings of Zbigniew Brzezinski (former National Security Advisor to U.S. President Carter) and J.F. MacDonald (science advisor to U.S. President Johnson and a professor of Geophysics at UCLA), as they wrote about use of power-beaming transmitters for geophysical and environmental warfare. The documents showed how these effects might be caused, and the negative effects on human health and thinking.

The mental-disruption possibilities for HAARP are the most disturbing. More than 40 pages of the book, with dozens of footnotes, chronicle the work of Harvard professors, military planners, and scientists as they plan and test this use of the electromagnetic technology.

For example, one of the papers describing this use was from the International Red Cross in Geneva. It even gave the frequency ranges where these effects could occur—the same ranges which HAARP is capable of broadcasting.

The following statement was made more than twenty-five years ago, in a book by Brzezinski, which he wrote while a professor at Columbia University:

"Political strategists are tempted to exploit research on the brain and human behavior. Geophysicist Gordon J. F. MacDonald—specialist in problems of warfare—says accurately-timed, artificially-excited electronic strokes 'could lead to a pattern of oscillations that produce relatively high power levels over certain regions of the Earth.... In this way, one could develop a system that would seriously impair the brain performance of very large populations in selected regions over an extended period'.... No matter how deeply disturbing is the thought of using the environment to manipulate behavior for national advantages, to some the technology permitting such use will very probably develop within the next few decades."

In 1966, MacDonald was a member of the President's Science Advisory Committee and later a member of the President's Council on Environmental Quality. He published papers on the use of environmental control technologies for military purposes.

The most profound comment he made as a geophysicist was: "The key to geophysical warfare is the identification of environmental instabilities to which the addition of a small amount of energy would release vastly greater amounts of energy." While yesterday's geophysicists predicted today's advances, are HAARP program managers delivering on the vision?

The geophysicists recognized that adding energy to the environmental soup could have large effects. However, humankind has already added substantial amounts of electromagnetic energy into our environment without understanding what might constitute critical mass.

The book by Begich and Manning raises questions:

- Have these additions been without effect, or is there a cumulative amount beyond which irreparable damage can be done?
- Is HAARP another step in a journey from which we cannot turn back?
- Are we about to embark on another energy experiment which unleashes another set of demons from Pandora's Box?

As early as 1970, Zbigniew Brzezinski predicted that a "more controlled and directed society" would gradually appear, linked to technology. This society would be dominated by an elite group which impresses voters by allegedly superior scientific know-how. Angels Don't Play This HAARP further quotes Brzezinski:

"Unhindered by the restraints of traditional liberal values, this elite would not hesitate to achieve its political ends by using the latest modern techniques for influencing public behavior and keeping society under close surveillance and control. Technical and scientific momentum would then feed on the situation it exploits."

His forecasts proved accurate. Today, a number of new tools for the "elite" are emerging, and the temptation to use them increases steadily. The policies to permit the tools to be used are already in place.

How could the United States be changed, bit by bit, into the predicted highly-controlled technosociety? Among the "stepping stones" Brzezinski expected were persisting social crises and use of the mass media to gain the public's confidence.

In another document prepared by the government, the U.S. Air Force claims:

"The potential applications of artificial electromagnetic fields are wide-ranging and can be used in many military or quasi-military situations.... Some of these potential uses include dealing with terrorist groups, crowd control, controlling breaches of security at military installations, and antipersonnel techniques in tactical warfare. In all of these cases the EM (electromagnetic) systems would be used to produce mild to severe physiological disruption or perceptual distortion or disorientation. In addition, the ability of individuals to function could be degraded to such a point that they would be combat ineffective. Another advantage of electromagnetic systems is that they can provide coverage over large areas with a single system. They are silent and countermeasures to them may be difficult to develop.... One last area where electromagnetic radiation may prove of some value is in enhancing abilities of individuals for anomalous phenomena."

Do these comments point to uses already somewhat developed? The author of the government report refers to an earlier Air Force document about the uses of radio-frequency radiation in combat situations. (Here Begich and Manning note that HAARP is the most versatile and the largest radio-frequency-radiation transmitter in the world.)

The United States Congressional Record deals with the use of HAARP for penetrating the Earth with signals bounced off of the ionosphere. These signals are used to look inside the planet to a depth of many kilometers in order to locate underground munitions, minerals, and tunnels. [Editor's note: And let's not overlook the most important use of all—locating underground chambers (and thus artifacts) of ancient, advanced civilizations which the so-called "elite" don't want you and I to know about for fear of upsetting the apple cart of history as it has been manufactured for our gullible consumption.] The U.S. Senate set aside $15 million dollars in 1996 to develop this ability alone—Earth-penetrating tomography.

The problem is that the frequency needed for Earth-penetrating radiations is within the frequency range most cited for disruption of human mental functions. It may also have profound effects on migration patterns of fish and wild animals which rely on an undisturbed energy field to find their routes.

As if electromagnetic pulses in the sky and mental disruption were not enough, Eastlund bragged that the super-powerful ionospheric heater could control weather. Begich and Manning brought to light government documents indicating that the military HAS weather-control technology.

When HAARP is eventually built to its full power level, it could create weather effects over entire hemispheres. If one government experiments with the world's weather patterns, what is done in one place will impact everyone else on the planet. Angels Don't Play This HAARP explains a principle behind some of Nikola Tesla's inventions—resonance—which affects planetary systems.

Bubble Of Electric Particles:

Angels Don't Play This HAARP includes interviews with independent scientists such as Elizabeth Rauscher. She has a Ph.D., a long and impressive career in high-energy physics, and has been published in prestigious science journals and books. Rauscher commented on HAARP: "You're pumping tremendous energy into an extremely delicate molecular configuration that comprises these multi-layers we call the ionosphere." The ionosphere is prone to catalytic reactions, she explained; if a small part is changed, a major change in the ionosphere can happen.

In describing the ionosphere as a delicately balanced system, Dr. Rauscher shared her mental picture of it—a soap-bubble-like sphere surrounding Earth's atmosphere, with movements swirling over the surface of the bubble. If a big enough hole is punched through it, she predicts, it could pop.

Slicing The Ionosphere:

Physicist Daniel Winter, Ph.D., of Waynesville, North Carolina, says HAARP high-frequency emissions can couple with longwave (low-frequency or ELF) pulses the Earth grid uses to distribute information as vibrations to synchronize dances of life in the biosphere. Dan terms this geomagnetic action "Earth's information bloodstream" and says it is likely that coupling HAARP's HF (high-frequency) with natural ELF (extremely low frequency) can cause unplanned, unsuspected side effects.

David Yarrow of Albany, New York, is a researcher with a background in electronics. He described possible interactions of HAARP radiations with the ionosphere and Earth's magnetic grid:

"HAARP will not burn 'holes' in the ionosphere. That is a dangerous understatement of what HAARP's giant gigawatt beam will do. Earth is spinning relative to thin electric shells of the multilayer membrane of 'ion-o-spheres' that absorb and shield Earth's surface from intense solar radiation, including charged particle storms in solar winds erupting from the Sun. Earth's axial spin means that HAARP—in a burst lasting more than a few minutes—will slice through the ionosphere like a microwave knife. This produces not a 'hole', but a long tear—an incision."

Crudely Plucking The Strings:

"Second concept: As Earth rotates, HAARP will slice across geomagnetic flux...a donut-shaped spool of magnetic strings—like longitude meridians (on maps). HAARP may not 'cut' these strings in Gaia's magnetic mantle, but will pulse each thread with harsh, out-of-harmony high frequencies. These noisy impulses will vibrate geomagnetic flux lines, sending vibrations all through the geomagnetic web."

"The image comes to mind of a spider on its web. An insect lands, and the web's vibrations alert the spider to possible prey. HAARP will be a man-made microwave finger poking at the web, sending out confusing signals, if not tearing holes in the threads."

"Effects of this interference with symphonies of Gaia's geomagnetic harp are unknown, and I suspect barely thought of. Even if thought of, the intent (of HAARP) is to learn to exploit any effects, not to play in tune to global symphonies."

Among other researchers quoted is Paul Schaefer of Kansas City. His degree is in electrical engineering and he spent four years building nuclear weapons. "But most of the theories that we have been taught by scientists to believe in seem to be falling apart" he says.

He talks about imbalances already caused by the industrial and atomic age, especially by radiation of large numbers of tiny, high-velocity particles "like very small spinning tops into our environment. The unnatural level of motion of highly-energetic particles in the atmosphere and in radiation belts surrounding Earth is the villain in the weather disruptions, according to this model, which describes an Earth discharging its buildup of heat, relieving stress, and regaining a balanced condition through earthquakes and volcanic action.

"Feverish" Earth:

"One might compare the abnormal energetic state of the Earth and its atmosphere to a car battery which has become overcharged with the normal flow of energy jammed up, resulting in hot spots, electrical arcing, physical cracks, and general turbulence as the pent-up energy tries to find some place to go."

In a second analogy, Schaefer says: "Unless we desire the death of our planet, we must end the production of unstable particles which are generating the Earth's fever. A first priority to prevent this disaster would be to shut down all nuclear power plants and end the testing of atomic weapons, electronic warfare, and 'Star Wars'."

Meanwhile, the military builds its biggest ionospheric heater yet, to deliberately create more instabilities in a huge plasma layer—the ionosphere—and to rev-up the energy level of charged particles.

Electronic Rain From The Sky:

They have published papers about electron precipitation from the magnetosphere (the outer belts of charged particles which stream toward Earth's magnetic poles) caused by man-made very-low-frequency electromagnetic waves. "These precipitated particles can produce secondary ionization, emit X-rays, and cause significant perturbation in the lower ionosphere."

Two Stanford University radio scientists offer evidence of what technology can do to affect the sky by making waves on Earth; they showed that very-low-frequency radio waves can vibrate the magnetosphere and cause high-energy particles to cascade into Earth's atmosphere. By turning the signal on or off, they could stop the flow of energetic particles.

Weather Control:

Avalanches of energy dislodged by such radio waves could hit us hard. Their work suggests that technicians could control global weather by sending relatively small "signals" into the Van Allen belts (radiation belts around Earth). Thus Tesla's resonance effects can control enormous energies through tiny triggering signals.

The Begich/Manning book asks whether that knowledge will be used by war-oriented or biosphere-oriented scientists.

The military has had about twenty years to work on weather warfare methods, which it euphemistically calls weather modification. For example, rainmaking technology was taken for a few test rides in Vietnam. The U.S. Department of Defense sampled lightning and hurricane manipulation studies in Project Skyfire and Project Stormfury. And they looked at some complicated technologies that would give big effects.

[Editor's note: There exists evidence, to be uncovered by the diligent researcher, that takes "modern" weather modification research—and casualties—back quite a bit more than just twenty years. For example, a huge, freak rainstorm in the Dakotas many years ago, which took a number of lives in casualties, "just happened" to occur in the same vicinity where a quiet, out-of-the-way university research program on weather modification was being conducted. Do you think any of the professors who were responsible for that research bothered to apologize to any of their neighbors for family losses? On the other hand, do you think they gleefully salivated over each new, fat, research grant "dog bone" tossed their way? This is science gone mad—or more accurately, the oldest trick in the book of the dark ones: selling of the soul for money.]

Angels Don't Play This HAARP cites an expert who says the military studied both lasers and chemicals which they figured could damage the ozone layer over an enemy. Looking at ways to cause earthquakes, as well as to detect them, was part of the project named Prime Argus, decades ago. The money for that came from the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA, now under the acronym ARPA).

In 1994 the Air Force revealed its Spacecast 2020 master plan, which includes weather control. Scientists have experimented with weather control since the 1940s, but Spacecast 2020 noted that “using environmental modification techniques to destroy, damage, or injure another state are prohibited”. Having said that, the Air Force claimed that advances in technology “compels a reexamination of this sensitive and potentially risky topic”.

40 Years Of Zapping The Sky:

As far back as 1958, the chief White House advisor on weather modification, Captain Howard T. Orville, said the U.S. defense department was studying “ways to manipulate the charges of the Earth and sky, and so affect the weather” by using an electronic beam to ionize or de-ionize the atmosphere over a given area.

In 1966, Professor Gordon J. F. MacDonald was associate director of the Institute of Geophysics and Planetary Physics at the University of California, Los Angeles, was a member of the President’s Science Advisory Committee, and later a member of the President’s Council on Environmental Quality. He published papers on the use of environmental-control technologies for military purposes. MacDonald made a revealing comment:

“The key to geophysical warfare is the identification of environmental instabilities to which the addition of a small amount of energy would release vastly greater amounts of energy.”

World-recognized scientist MacDonald had a number of ideas for using the environment as a weapon system and he contributed to what was, at the time, the dream of a futurist. When he wrote his chapter “How To Wreck The Environment” for the book Unless Peace Comes, he was not kidding around. In it he describes the use of weather manipulation, climate modification, polar ice cap melting or destabilization, ozone depletion techniques, earthquake engineering, ocean-wave control, and brain-wave manipulation using the planet’s energy fields. He also said that these types of weapons would be developed and, when used, would be virtually undetectable by their victims.

Is HAARP that weapon? The military’s intention to do environmental engineering is well documented.

U.S. Congress’ subcommittee hearings on Oceans and International Environment looked into military weather and climate modification conducted in the early 1970s. “What emerged was an awesome picture of far-ranging research and experimentation by the Department of Defense into ways environmental tampering could be used as a weapon” said another author cited in Angels Don’t Play This HAARP.

The revealed secrets surprised legislators. Would an inquiry into the state of the art of electromagnetic manipulation surprise lawmakers today? They may find out that technologies developed out of the HAARP experiments in Alaska could deliver on Gordon MacDonald’s vision, because leading-edge scientists are describing global weather as not only air pressure and thermal systems, but also as an electrical system.

Small Input, Big Effect:

HAARP zaps the ionosphere where it is relatively unstable. A point to remember is that the ionosphere is an active electrical shield protecting the planet from the constant bombardment of high-energy particles from space. This conducting plasma, along with Earth’s magnetic field, traps the electrical plasma of space and holds it back from going directly to the Earth’s surface, says Charles Yost of Dynamic Systems, Leicester, North Carolina. “If the ionosphere is greatly disturbed, the atmosphere below is subsequently disturbed.”

Another scientist interviewed said there is a super-powerful electrical connection between the ionosphere and the part of the atmosphere where our weather comes onstage, the lower atmosphere.

One man-made electrical effect—power line harmonic resonance—causes fallout of charged particles from the Van Allen (radiation) belts, and the falling ions cause ice crystals (which precipitate rain clouds).

What about HAARP? Energy blasted upward from an ionospheric heater is not much compared to the total in the ionosphere, but HAARP documents admit that thousandfold-greater amounts of energy can be released in the ionosphere than injected. As with MacDonald’s “key to geophysical warfare”, “nonlinear” effects (described in the literature about the ionospheric heater) mean small input and large output. Astrophysicist Adam Trombly told Manning that an acupuncture model is one way to look at the possible effect of multi-gigawatt pulsing of the ionosphere. If HAARP hits certain points, those parts of the ionosphere could react in surprising ways.

Smaller ionospheric heaters, such as the one at Arecibo, are underneath relatively placid regions of the ionosphere, compared to the dynamic movements nearer Earth’s magnetic poles. That adds another uncertainty to HAARP—the unpredictable and lively upper atmosphere near the North Pole.

HAARP experimenters do not impress common sense Alaskans such as Barbara Zickuhr, who says: “They’re like boys playing with a sharp stick, finding a sleeping bear and poking it in the butt to see what’s going to happen.”

Could They Short-Circuit Earth?

Earth as a spherical electrical system is a fairly well-accepted model. However, those experimenters who want to make unnatural power connections between parts of this system might not be thinking of possible consequences. Electrical motors and generators can be caused to wobble when their circuits are affected. Could human activities cause a significant change in a planet’s electrical circuit or electrical field?

A paper in the respected journal Science deals with manmade ionization from radioactive material, but perhaps it could also be studied with HAARP-type skybusters in mind:

“For example, while changes in the Earth’s electric field resulting from a solar flare modulating conductivity may have only a barely detectable effect on meteorology, the situation may be different in regard to electric field changes caused by manmade ionization...”

Meteorology, of course, is the study of the atmosphere and weather. Ionization is what happens when a higher level of power is zapped into atoms and knocks electrons off the atoms. The resulting charged particles are the stuff of HAARP. “One look at the weather should tell us that we are on the wrong path” says Paul Schaefer, commenting on HAARP-type technologies.

Angels Don’t Play This HAARP: Advances In Tesla Technology is about the military’s plan to manipulate that which belongs to the world—the ionosphere. The arrogance of the United States government in this is not without precedent. Atmospheric nuclear tests had similar goals. More recently, China and France put their people’s money to destructive use in underground nuclear tests.

It was recently reported that the U.S. government spent $3 trillion dollars on its nuclear program since its beginnings in the 1940s. What new breakthroughs in life science could have been made with all the money spent on death?

Begich, Manning, Roderick and others believe that democracies need to be founded on openness, rather than the secrecy which surrounds so much military science. Knowledge used in developing revolutionary weapons could be used for healing and helping mankind. Because they are used in new weapons, discoveries are classified and suppressed. When they do appear in the work of other independent scientists, the new ideas are often frustrated or ridiculed, while military research laboratories continue to build their new machines for the killing fields.

However, the book by Manning and Begich gives hope that the military-industrial-academic-bureaucratic Goliath can be affected by the combined power of determined individuals and the alternative press. Becoming informed is the first step to empowerment.

The following two articles are taken directly from the Navy's <http://w3.nrl.navy.mil/projects/haarp/> website for the HAARP project. For those of you readers with sufficient technical background to appreciate what has been assembled there, just from an equipment perspective, the costs are truly astronomical. No expense has been spared to make the HAARP facility a first-class operation.

Moreover, as you "read between the lines" of the stated purposes of the facility, note the elaborate public relations front incorporated in the "visiting scientist/student" aspect of the research program. Understand how this parallels the way the Patent Office works in terms of attracting and identifying any particularly good ideas from the public sector that can then be surreptitiously incorporated into the more clandestine experimental agenda.

Technical Details About The HAARP Program

The HAARP ionospheric research facility will be a major Arctic facility for conducting upper atmospheric research. The facility will consist of two essential parts:

1. a high-power transmitter and antenna array operating in the High Frequency (HF) range. When complete, the transmitter will be capable of producing up to 3.6 million Watts to an antenna system consisting of 180 crossed dipole antennas arranged as a rectangular, planar array; and
2. a complete and extensive set of scientific instruments for observation of both the background auroral ionosphere and of the effects produced during active research using the transmitter system. Output from these instruments will be combined into an integrated data package which will be available world-wide in near real time over the Internet.

During active ionospheric research, the signal generated by the transmitter system is delivered to the antenna array, transmitted in an upward direction, and is partially absorbed, at an altitude between 100 to 350 km (depending on operating frequency), in a small volume a few hundred meters thick and a few tens of kilometers in diameter over the site.

The intensity of the HF signal in the ionosphere is less than 3 microwatts per cm², tens of thousands of times less than the Sun's natural electromagnetic radiation reaching the earth and hundreds of times less than even the normal random variations in intensity of the Sun's natural ultraviolet (UV) energy which creates the ionosphere. The small effects that are produced, however, can be observed with the sensitive scientific instruments installed at the HAARP facility, and these observations can provide new information about the dynamics of plasmas and new insight into the processes of solar-terrestrial interactions.

HAARP Program Status (updated March 14, 2001)

Background:

The HAARP Interactive Ionospheric Research Observatory is a major Arctic facility for the study of upper atmospheric and solar-terrestrial physics and for Radio Science and Communications research. Among the instruments included at the facility are a high power, high-frequency (HF) phased-array radio transmitter, numerous radio frequency and optical research instruments capable of observing and monitoring the complex auroral ionosphere, and site infrastructure to support research activities. An ultra-high-frequency (UHF) incoherent scatter diagnostic radar is also planned for future installation.

The site is being developed in a manner such that scientific results can be obtained early in the program, and increase in quality and quantity as development progresses. The following sections summarize the current state of development for each of the major parts of the HAARP facility and give some idea of the scientific capability currently available.

The High Frequency Transmitter and Antenna Array:

The HAARP HF transmitter/antenna consists of 48 antenna elements arranged as a rectangular array of 8 columns by 6 rows. The total power capability of this transmitter system is 960 kilowatts. Although the long term goal of the program is for an antenna system consisting of 180 elements, the current facility is capable of conducting significant high latitude ionospheric research.

Since March 1999, when the current 960 kW power capability became available, fourteen research campaigns have been conducted at the Gakona facility, each averaging 7-10 days in duration. Initially, the research looked at previously reported ionospheric phenomena to confirm the anticipated research capability of the facility. Recent work has begun to add new knowledge about interactive ionospheric research in the auroral regions. Some of the areas that have been investigated recently include studies of stimulated electromagnetic emissions (SEE), generation of field-aligned irregularities (FAI) and striations, generation of low frequencies both with and without the presence of an auroral electrojet, techniques for detection of optical emissions at specific wavelengths, and trans-ionospheric and trans-magnetospheric studies using space sensors as monitors.

A faculty-student summer school and research program was held between July 31 and August 8, 2000. This activity, conducted in cooperation with the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, Geophysical Institute, began with a series of lectures on space and ionospheric science at the UAF campus. Site visitations to the HIPAS Observatory and to the Poker Flat Research Range familiarized the students and professors with Alaskan scientific facilities in the Fairbanks area. Following the UAF program, the group then travelled to the HAARP Observatory where each student presented a lecture on their scientific interest area along with a discussion of the experiment they were planning to conduct at HAARP. Each student-faculty team was allocated time at the facility to conduct their experiment. All of the experiments produced useful, and in some cases, new results, and the teams provided presentations of their observations.

The facility maintains a continuing program to confirm that all requirements of the Environmental Impact Process (EIP), Record of Decision, with respect to absolute public safety and interference mitigation are met.

HAARP Scientific And Monitoring Instruments:

The HAARP observatory has a diverse suite of scientific instruments operating full time at the Gakona site. These instruments provide continuous monitoring of the auroral geophysical background and are also used during research campaigns to assist in determining optimum operating parameters and in observing and diagnosing results.

The scientific instruments currently operating are:

- A flux gate magnetometer.
- A whole-sky VHF (30 MHz) riometer.
- An imaging riometer.
- A digital ionosonde.
- An induction magnetometer.
- An optical imager.
- A GPS-based, total electron content (TEC) monitor.
- VHF/UHF scintillation monitors.
- A broadband VLF receiver.
- A spectrum monitor.

Two low frequency receivers covering frequencies from ULF through VLF are located off-site at quiet locations, one approximately 7 miles from the facility and the other in Fairbanks. Several additional scientific instruments are available for temporary installation on a campaign basis. During the summer of 2001, new HF receiving antennas will be installed at the facility to support Radio Science research.

Data from each of these instruments are being archived by their principal investigators. Geophysical information from several of these instruments is readily available in near real time and in archived form from links in the data section of the HAARP facility web server.

Site Infrastructure And Support:

Before the HAARP program began, the Gakona site had been planned by the Air Force to be an Over The Horizon Backscatter (OTH-B) radar installation. Under that program, a large, 21,000 square foot building was constructed to house the prime power-producing equipment for the facility. We began to use this building in 1998 with the installation of a 3,600-hp diesel generator in a sound-isolated section of the building. Work on a permanent operations center in another section of the building was completed during January 2000, and the new spaces were occupied during the spring and early summer. The building now provides a modern and spacious operations control room and diagnostics center, 9 offices including spaces for visiting scientists, a conference room, break room, and an electrical shop area.

Additional gravel pads have been placed at the facility to allow installation of some of the remaining scientific and diagnostic instruments that are available to the program. Over the past six months, the space available for either permanent instruments or for temporary, campaign installations has more than doubled.

Besides Jeane Manning and Dr. Nick Begich's 1995 pioneering book Angels Don't Play This HAARP, another provocative collection of information on the subject is to be found in the 1998 book by Jerry E. Smith called HAARP: The Ultimate Weapon Of The Conspiracy. Let's consider some excerpts worth pondering: [Quoting]

For decades the government has acted as though it knew all there was to know about the health issues associated with whatever new technology they were fiddling around with. As ridiculous as that may seem, even more absurd is the general public's unquestioning acceptance of such nonsense. The government told us DDT was safe. They told us above-ground nuclear testing was safe. They told us tobacco cigarettes were safe. Now they claim that blanketing us in electromagnetic radiation is safe. Do you feel safe from these assurances?

Nor is health—physical and mental—the only area of concern with HAARP beaming gigawatts of energy into the ionosphere, and from there back to Earth. As noted in a HAARP fact sheet:

"Since the Sun's radiation creates and maintains the ionosphere, sudden variations in this radiation, such as those caused by solar flares, can affect the performance of radio systems. Sometimes the changes are sufficient to induce large transient currents in electric power transmission grids, causing widespread power outages."

HAARP is designed to duplicate solar phenomena. It is certainly not inconceivable that it, too, will cause power outages. For some, a power outage is merely an inconvenience. For others, it can mean damaged electronic equipment, particularly computers, doctors forced to operate by flashlight, and, in the infamous blackouts of New York City, it often means rape, burglary, and murder. Are you prepared to let some scientist tinkering with the aurora turn out your lights?

A widely recognized military potential of HAARP is that it could be used to jam all enemy (and non-belligerent) nations' radio communications, while keeping the Department of Defense's own secret bands open. Changes in the shape of the ionosphere alter its ability to propagate radio waves. This has been known for many decades. Scientists have been using high-power transmitters to deliberately "perturb" the ionosphere for nearly as long.

Fear of possible disruption of regular radio communications has folks out in the Alaska bush in an uproar over HAARP. There, sometimes hundreds of miles from the closest road (or even near a road made impassible by winter snow), being able to get a radio message through to a medical emergency air ambulance service literally means life or death. While HAARP's operators claim to have taken elaborate precautions, there is still a very real possibility of accidental jamming.

What if they plan to do it on purpose?

There is yet another important environmental question left unanswered by HAARP literature and its botched Environmental Impact Study: What about migratory species?

They threw-up a fence around the site to keep out animals (including humans). But what about birds flying through HAARP's intense radio-frequency beam? The HAARP site was nearly half wetlands, in a vast stretch of nearly flat, wet "bush". The wetlands were filled in, the "dispensable" spruce cut down.

HAARP is located in the heart of a prime waterfowl migratory path! The Federal Environmental Impact Study acknowledges this. It states that HAARP "lies within the Copper River Basin, which is one of Alaska's more important migration corridors". And yet it insists that "no significant impacts to birds would result from the construction of the HAARP facility". The most they did was to propose putting some colored streamers on the antenna masts to help reduce the number of birds flying into them!

Salmon, caribou, and other migratory species may be affected by HAARP as well. That is because altering the electrojet may cause alterations of the Earth's magnetic field. This little-noted side-effect of modulating the electrojet may have profound and unseen consequences for "spaceship" Earth and its passengers. The magnetically-sensitive material magnetite has been found in salmon and caribou brains, and in a special organ for sensing direction in the noses of some waterfowl. It has also been found in the human brain.

There may already have been deaths attributable to HAARP, or perhaps to its "cousin", the Russian Woodpecker [system]. Thousands of individuals of a migratory species of turtle "forgot" to migrate south in the Fall of 1995, and died in the frigid North Atlantic—something that has never happened in recorded history.

The February 1994 issue of the Alaskan monthly Bush Blade carried comments by the late geomagnetic researcher Lloyd Zirbes, who strongly opposed HAARP. He wrote:

"Disruption of the Earth's magnetic field will complete damages done by the nuclear bomb blasts in the natural radiation belts. Earth's magnetic field keeps the planet in balance.

"Projected results of the HAARP project may include disturbance of the circadian rhythms of human beings and increased exposure to radiation as the magnetic field is attenuated."

The May 1992 issue of Discovery magazine discussed what might result from disrupting the Earth's internal "dynamo" and altering the upper atmosphere's magnetic belts, saying:

"HAARP could create a premature reversal of the magnetic poles, worsen the newly discovered wobble of the Earth, and possibly create a total polar reversal or Earth shift. During at least one [previous] reversal, magnetic north may have changed direction by as much as 4 to 8 degrees in a single day."

In 1988, scientists at the U.S. Naval Observatory and at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory announced that the Earth had developed a wobble in its spin. The cause of that wobble is still unknown. Some suspect that it was caused by the Russian Woodpecker signal. What effect, if any, HAARP may have on the magnetic pole or that wobble are equally unknown. Do we want the Department of Defense to get that answer the hard way?

During a reversal of the magnetic pole, the strength of the Earth's magnetic field would collapse, then rebuild in the opposite polarity. During the period of collapse and rebirth of the field, the Earth would be without the protection of the magnetosphere. The only living things to survive would be deep in the Earth or the sea. Humanity, and virtually all species that live exposed to the sky would be wiped out by the flood of hard radiation from the Sun and space. Changes in the Earth's interior are known to affect the magnetosphere. If the reverse is also the case, with the magnetosphere affecting the interior, then ignorant or intentional misuse of HAARP has the potential to virtually wipe out life on Earth.

Clare Zickuhr is a former ARCO employee, ham radio operator, and the founder of the Alaskan group No-HAARP. In speaking of the HAARP scientists and what their experiments with the ionosphere will accomplish, he said:

“They don’t know what it will do.” He further commented that what they want to do with their sky zapper is “kick the atmosphere real hard and watch what happens.”

Of course, fears about damage to the atmosphere are unfounded according to John Heckscher, of the Air Force’s Phillips Laboratory, who is the principal government spokesman for HAARP. Heckscher is reported to have told Microwave News in a telephone interview that “It’s not unreasonable to expect that something three times more powerful than anything that’s previously been built might have unforeseen effects, but that’s why we do Environmental Impact Statements.”

The only problem is, HAARP’s EIS is pretty much “doo-doo” because, while it very carefully covers the effects broadcast out from the HAARP transmitter, it largely ignores any effects returning to Earth from the atmospheric regions affected by HAARP. This is either incredible stupidity or carefully planned misdirection.

If it is just ignorance, then we need to wake them up. Every 4th of July several people are killed because some bean-brained people fired their guns into the air, forgetting that their bullets have to come down someplace. We need to act before HAARP can accidentally drop electromagnetic radiation bullets into our brains.

If it is a lie, as I suspect, we need to find out why they are lying and what it is they don’t want us to know. Contrary to the old adage, what you don’t know can sometimes kill you. Remember Michael Unum’s discovery of gamma ray detectors spiking off the scale during an (alleged) test of HAARP, washing the Nevada Test Site (at the least) with deadly gamma radiation.

HAARP literature and spokesfools insist that HAARP is not a weapon and will not be used as a weapon. Yet, in 1994 the Senate Committee on Armed Services stated that:

“The committee is aware of the promising results of the high frequency active auroral research program (HAARP). This transmitter in Alaska...would permit the detection and precise location of tunnels, shelters, and other underground shelters. The absence of such a capability has been noted as a serious weakness in the Department of Defense plans for precision attacks on hardened targets...”

Perhaps the scope of a sniper’s rifle is not a weapon, either. HAARP has many potential military uses, as we shall see in upcoming chapters. We have seen in just this one application of HAARP several serious threats to health and liberty. Unfortunately, we have just scratched the surface of the threat posed by HAARP. [End quoting]

Whenever a deeper investigation is undertaken concerning what HAARP may actually be used for, the clues lead to more incriminating suspicions. That’s where our front-page interview enters the picture, with the above offered as background reading.

The scientific theory I like best is that the rings of Saturn are composed entirely of lost luggage.

With that said, much has been written about H.A.A.R.P. (the High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program) and related new, so-called “non-lethal” technologies. What we are being told these technologies are to be used for seems to be quite a bit at odds (both technically and morally) with what they are actually likely to manipulate.

Dr. Begich has a lot to say about these things, and more. Rather than bog down this interview with background information, we have split the subject matter of this article into two parts. There is a “background information” article elsewhere within this edition of The SPECTRUM, which it would be helpful (but not absolutely necessary) to read first, before delving into the following interview. I would strongly encourage all those interested in this material to read both parts.

Now, for those of you who may be unfamiliar with this subject and with a longtime tireless spokesman in this field, let’s start with the question: “Who is Dr. Nick Begich?” To answer that, we will quote directly from his newest book, Earth Rising: The Revolution—Toward A Thousand Years Of Peace, where we learn:

“Dr. Nick Begich is the eldest son of the late United States Congressman from Alaska, Nick Begich, Sr., and political activist Peggie Begich. He is well known in Alaska for his own political activities. He was twice elected President of both the Alaska Federation of Teachers and the Anchorage Council of Education. He has been pursuing independent research in the sciences and politics for most of his adult life. Begich received his doctorate in traditional medicine from The Open International University of Complementary Medicines in November, 1994.

“He co-authored the book Angels Don’t Play This HAARP—Advances In Tesla Technology, and wrote Towards A New Alchemy: The Millennium Science. His book Earth Rising: The Revolution—Toward A Thousand Years Of Peace was co-authored with James Roderick in December, 1999. The latest book, Earth Rising II—The Betrayal Of Science, is due out by late May, 2001. He is also the editor of Earthpulse Flashpoints, a continuing new-science book series. Begich has published articles in science, politics, and education, and is a well-known lecturer, having presented throughout the United States and in nineteen countries. He has been featured as a guest on thousands of radio broadcasts (including Art Bell) reporting his Earth science-related issues. He has also appeared on dozens of television documentaries and other programs throughout the world including BBC-TV, CBS-TV, TeleMundo, and others.

“Begich has served as an expert witness and speaker before the European Parliament. He has spoken on various issues for groups representing citizen concerns, statesmen and elected officials, scientists, and others. He is the publisher and co-owner of Earthpulse Press and is also under contract as Tribal Administrator for the Chickaloon Village Council, a federally recognized American Indian Tribe of the Athabascan Indian Nation.

“Dr. Begich is married to Shelah Begich-Slade and has five children. He resides just north of Anchorage in the community of Eagle River, Alaska.”

Turning now to the Earthpulse Press catalog, we learn:

“Earthpulse Press, Inc. was originally established as a research organization in 1989 under the name ‘The Change Agency’. In 1995, the organization shifted its focus from research to publishing, releasing its first title in September of that year. Since that time, we have experienced incredible growth as the demand and publicity surrounding our work continues to expand. Featured regularly on talk-radio programs and in printed formats, the subjects of these books continue to tantalize both lay people and scientists. The publishing effort has expanded to include Native American titles, health, new science, and philosophy as primary subject areas.

“Earthpulse Press, Inc. has also supported the scientific research and development of several of the technologies about which it has published in its various formats. It remains our intention to bring readers not only written material, but also to create access to the technologies being disclosed.

“Our publications are about empowerment and education of individual readers and researchers. It is our hope that these publications will provide information which will assist in creating change in our communities, countries, and the world. We are reporting on matters which are not well covered by the mainstream media and are brought forward in simple, straightforward language.”

In this interview, Dr. Begich necessarily covers a wide range of issues that are connected, like a spider web, to the technology under discussion. It would be easy to get overwhelmed by it all. Fortunately Dr. Begich addresses that condition with a number of pro-active suggestions—things you can do to not feel paralyzed or trapped.

Another matter is the need for the establishment—by government and related agencies, as well as within corporate structures—of a system of protection for whistleblowers. This is a matter of imposing checks and balances on a hierarchy of technologists who may not be acting in everyone's best interests.

Until such time as that idealistic goal can become a reality, newspapers such as The SPECTRUM exist to serve as a conduit for those who work to bring their "glimpses of The Truth beyond the shadows" to an awakening public, yet who often find themselves seemingly out in the cold, with nowhere to turn. And that matter begs a bit of a digression here for a few paragraphs.

We feel it is our role, it is our responsibility, to serve as a conduit for potentially useful information, including that which perhaps may seem to be more on the level of "fuzzy" speculation. We are of the belief (perhaps naively) that people generally are telling us the truth—at least what they perceive to be the truth. (If ones are lying to us, that always does eventually come out, too.) We do not censor our presentation of provocative and timely information to you, the discerning reading audience, just because we can't thoroughly dot every i and cross every t.

We have, however, found that documentation and supporting evidence is often forthcoming AFTER some seemingly hard-to-believe stories have been presented, though they may appear to be overly speculative or subjective in their original interview/discussion format. It's a two-edged sword, but we respect and trust in our readers' developed abilities to discern and sort information (including seemingly unrelated fragments) for themselves.

Dr. Begich, Rodney Stich, and other impeccable researchers choose to not even put forth opinion unless such is backed by what they regard as strong supporting documentation. That is well and good, and we salute them for their good-intentioned rigorous standards in service to mankind.

However, we are likewise very cognizant of the hard facts of life—that in this world of sophisticated conspiracies and unconscionable deceptions by secret government agencies operating under cover of "national security" and "black operations", seemingly legitimate evidence trails may be artfully constructed to lead line-of-sight researchers either down false pathways, or nowhere at all.

It's like the attitude that has prevailed for a long time, especially among the older generation, that goes: "I won't believe it unless/until I see it in the papers." Nowadays the younger generation simply substitutes TV news and the Internet for the newspapers. But, as you and I well know, that still don't make it true!

Moreover—and this is a point that surfaces on a regular basis, especially if you listen to guests on talk-radio programs—to naively assume (as so many well-intentioned researchers do) that what you can obtain through channels such as a Freedom Of Information Act somehow opens a door of reliable access into the REAL shenanigans going on in "back rooms" of high-level conspiratorial planning is about as realistic as assuming you're going to get a straight and truthful answer from any career politician.

Therefore, we maintain our contention that the reader is ultimately responsible for discerning what may be the truth from the false. We prefer to maintain a cutting-edge information dispersal attitude because of the possible value that exists therein, regardless of the philosophies of those who take a more conservative approach to information presentation that, in our opinion, is not necessarily based upon any greater genuine accuracy due to the sophisticated skill level employed these days in fabricating "reality".

Our Founding Fathers put the ultimate trust in the common man's ability to discern what is right from what is wrong. There is plenty of room for varying belief systems and varying approaches to problem solving. Unless critical issues are expeditiously brought to public attention, public consciousness may not be opened in a timely fashion to considering "possibilities" for action. Facilitating that process is one of the many powers of a free press.

With that in mind, let's get back to the subject at hand—HAARP and related questionable technologies—a subject which has more levels of double-talk and deception than an onion has layers to peel to get to the core.

On April 2, 2001, I had a great 2½-hour conversation with Dr. Nick Begich, all of which we are including here. That conversation was preceded by a brief but important exchange with James Roderick, a co-researcher who works closely with Dr. Begich.

Roderick: Did you see the brilliant red aurora yesterday?

Martin: Is that from the Sun's activity, or from HAARP?

Roderick: Yes, from the Sun's activity.

Martin: Things have been pretty intense the last couple of days in relation to the Sun, I guess with no end in sight, really.

Roderick: They're firing off one of the devices up here, too.

Martin: This is HAARP-related?

Roderick: It's HAARP-related. It's a device, a fairly new device. It's a laser that can duplicate a number of the HAARP effects.

Martin: And what is the purpose of that device?

Roderick: It will work in conjunction with

HAARP, and with High Pass, the sister to HAARP. High Pass has made a technological breakthrough that actually puts it in a power level greater than HAARP.

Martin: Wow, that's significant.

Roderick: Yes. In fact, it's a small facility with only 16 antennas, as opposed to HAARP's 48 antennas, and this power amplifier they put in, in the new system of beaming, has resulted in this leap in energy output. Nick will tell you about that.

Martin: I'm anxious to talk with him about all of these things, and I'm sure our readers are going to be fascinated, and probably a little upset, too.

Roderick: Yes. And we have quite a lot of new information, which originated in China, by way of the CIA, and that has to do with directed-energy weapons, microwave weapons. They have an information gathering service that is "restricted access", and one of our associates obtained it by FOIA (Freedom Of Information Act), and we expanded on it, did background research on it. The Chinese have been very busy with their plasma weapons, and the whole gamut of advanced weaponry, which kind of fits into some of the current events here, lately.

Martin: It seems to. I was just reading, in Earth Rising, about the microwave weapons, and some of the side-effects and potential negative effects—very scary stuff.

Roderick: Yes. We do have quite a bit of background on the new crowd-control weapon. You've heard of the new Marine weapon?

Martin: Which one?

Roderick: It's a microwave-like device, and it's designed for crowd control. It heats up your skin. It gives your skin the effect of being heated to 130 degrees.

Martin: What does that do to the brain?

Roderick: Now there's a good question. It's designed to make you turn and flee, in panic, so I imagine it does that quite well.

Martin: I was going to say, I imagine it's very effective for that.

Roderick: I suspect that the body won't let you do anything but that.

Dr. Begich: You have Nick on the line now.

Martin: It's a pleasure to talk with you. Thank you, so much, for agreeing to do this.

Dr. Begich: No problem. It's just a hectic life that we lead around here, sometimes, so I'm glad to be able to do it.

Martin: I have a number of prepared questions for you, as you can imagine. I have the tapes rolling, and we will print whatever you say, so now is a great time to have no holds barred and speak your mind—as long and as fully and deeply as you care to on any one of these questions. I will not cut you off until you indicate you're ready. I'll just let you say your piece, and we'll take it from there. How's that?

Dr. Begich: That sounds great.

Martin: Before we get into HAARP and some of the new crowd-control technologies that

I've been reading about in Earth Rising, and hearing about, do you want to just tell us about Earth Pulse Institute and how that has evolved?

Dr. Begich: Sure. We, essentially, set-up originally as just a research organization back, now, over 11 years ago. Eventually we commercialized what we were doing, in terms of book publishing, because we felt like the editorial constraints of a lot of mainstream publishers were such that we really didn't want to deal with them. At the same time we really didn't want to be restrained by spending our time, at least initially, as a non-profit because you spend a lot of time seeking grants and seeking methods for taking care of what you want to get out there, in terms of messages. So we, essentially, set-up Earth Pulse Press, Inc., to deal with that side of our work.

In the last couple of years it has become increasingly apparent that a foundation structure, an institute structure, would better serve certain aspects of our work—primarily on the research side because the accumulation and cataloging of data has become really a HUGE, really a much bigger (laughter) enterprise than we ever anticipated. We catalog between 300-400 new articles and papers every month. To get those read, summarized, abstracted, and loaded into our system is a huge task.

So we've set up, and are in the process of finalizing, the incorporation of a non-profit, the Earth Pulse Institute, to take on that task. And in addition, our hope is to take all the public domain documents that we've acquired over the years and, eventually, have the resources to scan those in and upload those to the Internet, to make our database, and abstracts of our database, available to researchers all around the world. And that's just something that can't be done, feasibly for us, on the economic side, as a commercial venture. So we're setting up the institute to take that on as really the first task, as what we see as a series of things to make these issues more public and more heavily debated across the planet.

Martin: That's a massive task. Do you have some staff there to help you? Or is it just a handful?

Dr. Begich: We are really small. I have my wife and I, Jim Roderick, my colleague and co-author on the last book, Earth Rising. Jim is my archivist and is cataloging data now. We also have one part-time person, and then we, from time to time, contract with people who do our web work and more complicated accounting, obviously, and other things. Basically, it's three of us, full-time, and one part-time person. There's only so much you can do with a staff that size, and that's sort of the commercial side of what we do.

Martin: That's about what we have here at The SPECTRUM. To put out a monthly newspaper, 50-80 pages each month, with the amount of data that pours into this office, I can't even imagine cataloging and uploading to computer the kind of data that pours through here.

That's a huge task that you have on your plate, not to mention doing all of the interviews and the writing.

Dr. Begich: (Laughter) That's exactly it.

Martin: That's just overwhelming. I'm tired just hearing you.

Dr. Begich: We put in about 80 hours on an average week, and it's a long week. I do other work outside of publishing, as well, so it's a pretty hectic schedule, but we're organized people, and with what we've been doing the last 7 or 8 years, we've been able bring a lot of light on a lot of subjects otherwise not even discussed.

I think the combination of our approach, commercially, was the right one because it got the information out very rapidly and our loyalties are to the people who read our materials, not to some grant source or some corporate sponsor. And that has been extremely important to us because it has allowed us the full latitude of independence that other authors and people who deal with these issues don't necessarily have.

Martin: That's true.

[Editor's note: The relentless pressures and constraints that Nick just described are indeed the same ones we here at The SPECTRUM must juggle on a daily basis just to stay afloat and get this information source out to you. You see, if you happen to be, say, some UFO researcher who is spouting nonsense, you'll find that person is invited to speak all over the place and is well-funded through channels (front organizations) which are difficult to trace back to the actual secret government or military sources. By contrast, if you're really telling the truth about something, you'll find the chore is very much an uphill, many-hours-a-week job under poverty conditions—and worse, if you get run off the road or otherwise threatened. You would think there would be at least SOME wealthy people "out there" somewhere who have the discernment and desire to truly help this world in ways that are significant. But, the all too sobering facts are that many more people of money will look to subsidize, say, a ballet or an orchestra or put their name on a new university football stadium than will help critically fundamental educational efforts such as Nick or us. Oh well, that's life at this time on planet Earth!]

Dr. Begich: And in terms of where it goes from here, that's a big part of, again, where we sit right now, in looking at what's in the future for us as both a publishing company and a public interest research group. I think there's a lot that's happening that really needs to see the light of day, and our hope is to be able to continue to bring information on new technologies, and it's impact, and their potential impacts on all of us, to the forefront of debate.

Martin: I notice you have a very classy catalog, I must say; some very nice products in there, some wonderful books, tapes.

Dr. Begich: The other half of it is to take that variety of things that we talk about and try to at least make them available to people, as well.

A lot of the innovative things that we find in the course of our work is more than just a passing interest for a lot of people. And the way we footnote our research allows people to go to the source documents and really explore any area they're interested in, fully. And then, when we see publications and authors' and publishers' works, we do consolidate them within our catalog and make them available.

That's just one of the things we feel is important, in terms of screening through the piles of stuff that we see every day. It's nice to neck it down to what we think are some of the best published materials out there on new technology, and even the new technologies themselves.

Martin: You're doing a fantastic job at this, by the way.

Dr. Begich: Thank you.

Martin: There's a lot to talk about. Let's start with HAARP, because I know that's one of your favorite subjects.

Dr. Begich: Well, I get asked about it a lot. (Laughter)

Martin: (Laughter) There are a lot of other things going on, other than HAARP, but certainly HAARP seems to be the focus of a lot of people's thinking, in terms of, particularly,

See and hear David Icke at the top of his form as he presents six-and-a-half hours of incredible information before a sellout audience of 1200 at the Vogue Theatre in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

You will laugh, you may even cry, and you will be on the edge of your seat as the fantastic story of true human history, and WHO really controls the world today, unfolds in Icke's unique style, aided by video footage and hundreds of illustrations.

This is the presentation that the Illuminati (the forces of global control) tried so hard to stop—media interviews were cancelled; immigration officials turned up at the theatre to question his right to speak; pressure was applied on the venue to cancel the event itself; and pies were even thrown at David at a book signing by a rent-a-mob who ludicrously and outrageously sought to dub him a "racist".

But nothing could silence him or break his spirit—and here you will see the result. David Icke shows that if you do not concede to fear, anything is possible!

frequency increases, bad vibrations, if you want to call the effects that. In the last couple of weeks, I know, certainly here on the West Coast (we're in California), there was a very definite atmospheric feeling that things have been "cranked-up", and we didn't know if that was HAARP or some other type of low-level frequency generating device? Is it a planetary, evolutionary thing?

Dr. Begich: There are several things at the end of March, and the beginning of April, 2001, that are significant. Firstly, a huge solar flare hit Earth; in fact, the aurora was seen as far south as California, Arizona, and New Mexico.

What has happened in the last few days is that a solar storm has come into the upper atmosphere and created some pretty dramatic auroras. These have been seen all the way across the United States and around the world, at much lower latitudes than are normal, and this is because of the surge of energy that is interacting with the magnetosphere.

The magnetosphere is the layer situated well above the Earth's surface; it acts as sort-of a shield, or force of energy, that really keeps a lot of the particle streams coming from the Sun from entering our atmosphere. But this solar storm, and the thing that happened, does create interference with power grids. There's been assertions made, over time, that they even interfere with physiological aspects of our own health. And this is a little bit different, in terms of the Sun's energy, because it is incoherent or it is energy that doesn't follow, necessarily, a clear pattern in terms of how that energy interacts with, say, living organisms on the planet.

We now have man-made devices that are intended to stimulate the same areas of the upper atmosphere—actually the ionosphere, an area just below the magnetosphere, where you actually see the auroras—you can now stimulate this domain using instruments like HAARP, and create a number of effects that replicate what Nature does on her own.

The only difference is, we're using coherent energy, or energy that's very controlled, that's designed to act as a trigger to, basically, release amounts of energy that are naturally in place in this part of our environment. In the ionosphere, for instance, in terms of the aurora, there's as much as 20 million amperes at 50,000 volts, which is a tremendous amount of energy available there! [Editor's note: That's about one million megawatts of electrical power, according to Nick's numbers!]

If you can stimulate that energy by triggering its release in very controlled ways, you can do a number of things that will affect the environment; it could affect physical health, and it certainly can affect electronics and electrical hardware around the planet.

That's what we see Nature doing with these solar storms. In fact, we can even sense it. Many people can sense this surge of energy that's kind of unexplained, and that may very well be what's being described in these recent days.

But, when you add on to that, when you go back to, say, early March, there were a number of Russian war-games taking place. There was some saber-rattling over missile defense. In fact, the Russians launched a submarine launch, a ground-based launch, and a mobile launch, just to demonstrate their ICBM capability, their inter-continental ballistic missile capability.

And at the same time, interestingly enough, a signal appeared that shortwave operators were picking up at 3.39 megahertz, and this signal happens to be the same signal that HAARP has broadcast on in the past. The speculation was that it was HAARP broadcasting again. We couldn't find anything to confirm that.

In fact, it made more sense to us that it was, likely, a demonstration by either the Russians or Chinese of their ability to generate signals in this same frequency range that HAARP has been known to operate at, at sufficient power levels to show a capability that maybe we didn't believe they had.

So, I think all of this, what we're seeing right now is sort of an escalation, one that we predicted 5 years ago, in terms of the Russians, the Chinese, the United States, and Europeans, over missile defense issues, because of the evolving technology in this particular area and the desire to reopen the dialogue on how that technology would advance. And that's what's happening.

Martin: Where is China, currently, in terms of technological capability, in relation to the United States?

Dr. Begich: China's position is pretty remarkable. In fact, in the last several weeks we've been taking a look at what's been going on within China, and a number of things have come up.

One of our good friends and colleagues, in terms of research, Harlan Girard, was and is a very good researcher in these particular areas. One of the things that he came across, through his attorney, in a Freedom Of Information Act (FOIA) request, was a document that was prepared by the foreign broadcast information service, which is an agency operated by the Central Intelligence Agency. And essentially what their role is, is to monitor all global communications in terms of public media, translate into English what those news releases or technical papers or media reports are, and then those are, essentially, all classified, available only to, I suppose, people within the intelligence community, within the government itself; but you can FOIA these, which is a Freedom Of Information Act request.

Harlan's attorney FOIA'd this particular report, and what it's on is the development of new weapons systems in China. We, then, took a look at what was out there in the public domain on China/US relations, and we found a 1997 Senate Intelligence Committee Report on China that we thought was quite revealing in terms of where it shows China going, against its own reports.

I think the biggest thing that jumps out at us is exactly where the Revolution of Military Affairs is, relative to China, Russia, the United States, and Europe. This is the concept that the United States military initially advanced back in the late '80s, suggesting that the technology had changed so dramatically that the whole way in which war would be fought would be as dramatically different as when gunpowder was introduced to Europe in the Middle Ages, or when atomic weapons were introduced to the battle environment during World War II.

This is the order of magnitude of change that's going to take place within defense, basically based on technologies that we've been reporting on for, now, at least 5 years. The latest published work that we've done, Earth Rising: The Revolution, is a compilation of what these technologies mean, and really is the first major step, from us at least, in trying to open-up sort of the whole, broad spectrum of how these technologies work and what they do. China is following these developments and developing these technologies, apparently, as well, and I think that is an important thing for all of us to be cognizant of.

Martin: Let's talk about High Pass. What is High Pass?

Dr. Begich: High Pass is interesting. High Pass is the high-frequency system that was set-up in Alaska, near the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, and it's operated by the Geophysical Institute.

High Pass is, essentially, a smaller version of what HAARP is. It's a phased-array antenna field that generates radio-frequency energy for specific applications and experiments in the ionosphere and upper atmosphere.

HAARP was build as the biggest, most versatile instrument of its kind on the planet, and it's still only at its developmental stage, which is an intermediate stage for its final size. But High Pass—one of the things that has always been of interest to us is the pulsing of energy. In other words, taking a small amount of energy, when it's discharged over a long period of time, and bursting that energy over a very short duration of time. The effect of that is that you get this spike, this energy spike, that can be quite profound.

In fact, there's a good analogy in Earth Rising. If you take two car batteries and the energy contained in two car batteries, and you release that energy in a hundred and fifty billionths of a second, just a fraction of a nano-second, that energy in those two car batteries, for that fraction of a second, equals the power generating capacity of the United States several times over. That's a phenomenal amount of energy.

What happens is, when that surge of energy is released, it can have a profound effect on electronic circuits and electronics, just in the same way as a massive discharge from the Sun can create the auroras we are seeing now, or interference with radio, television, or even ground-based communication systems.

[Editor's note: The main practical reason that these super-high-energy injection systems only "pulse" their energy output for a small fraction of a second, like the flash of a camera does, is because the system would self-destruct if operating for any longer times! We're talking about huge energy pulses that, if sustained for any longer time, would fry the pulse-generating equipment—even if we knew how to sustain the energy at that level for longer durations. Moreover, just like your camera flash, there needs to be a recharge time because the source (like a power plant) from which power is being drawn to run the pulsing system in no way is adequate to the sustained task. As Nick said, for a brief fraction of a second, you'd need all the power generated in the entire United States several times over. These are the kinds of "toys" that are being played with by scientists who have very little understanding or regard for Mother Earth or the protective environment she sustains for our benefit.]

Martin: Is High Pass working in conjunction with HAARP, or are they independent systems?

Dr. Begich: Here is how it works. High Pass has two parts to it. One is, they've changed the configuration where they've added signal amplifiers to the system. And what it does, essentially, is give the ability to discharge, in its peak, a gigawatt of energy—in other words, a billion watts of effective radiated power.

This is the same level that HAARP was anticipated to be at when they finished its first phase of development. And the significance of that is, by retrofitting these older transmitters with this capacity to really explode energy in a peak discharge, it allows them to reach those high ERPs (effective radiated powers) that are needed to stimulate the ionosphere for specific weapons applications.

So, with High Pass able to do this, and with HAARP likely to be capitalizing on the same knowledge, it means that HAARP will be much bigger, even at its present level, than originally anticipated—meaning that it is much more capable, even at a smaller scale. This is one of the things that has come out repeatedly.

You know, the original idea in the mid-1980s required antenna arrays that would be like 20 kilometers by 20 kilometers square, which was totally out of the question, to get the high effective radiated power levels that people were looking for. With these advances and being able to pulse the energy, much smaller antenna arrays will be able to accomplish what was previously impossible. And that's just based on the advance in the technologies that have happened over, say, the last 15-16 years, and those advances are likely to continue.

The other thing that's important is that for some of the experiments with HAARP, you needed two transmitters, and we have them here in Alaska. This would be for, like, an over-the-horizon effect because you can stimulate the ionosphere and create what could be referred to as a cold plasma; it's like a wall of energy that acts like a mirror when other energy strikes it.

So, what happens, High Pass stimulates this effect in the upper ionosphere, which starts about 30-40 miles above the Earth's surface. They create this plasma layer that can be tilted and manipulated, so that when you send energy from HAARP, it strikes that plasma layer, it bounces around the curvature of the Earth, and allows a number of the over-the-horizon effects that are sought with this particular weapons system. So, High Pass, being retrofitted, represents the ability to now test many of these ideas, as well as to test them at the much higher radiated power levels.

Martin: As we look into the future with more solar blasts, more solar emissions coming and hitting the planet, do you see any possible effect on HAARP or systems like it?

Dr. Begich: This is interesting. There are several different systems operated now for testing ideas in the ionosphere. And the ionosphere is what is disturbed when these systems interact, the natural systems of the Earth. And what HAARP was designed to do was gain a better understanding of not only what happens when those interactions occur, but how to manipulate them to mitigate any damage that might occur.

Solar cycles occur every 11 years, and what you get are surges that appear pretty regularly, in terms of the peak and the ebb of that peak. And then, when you look at what also happens there, the Sun actually reverses its polarity—it switches poles, essentially, on that cycle.

Through that cycle that has been followed, now, for generations, energy is discharged, and it happens at different levels. If you look at, for example, 1947, a huge amount of energy was being discharged. Periodically, since that time, you see these large discharges.

This one we just had this past week was significant in terms of its size. It started with a sunspot 16 times the size of planet Earth, and discharged a huge amount of energy and particles towards Earth at a tremendous velocity, which then showed up as this fantastic aurora. And, interestingly, in many Native American traditions the idea of the sky turning red is expressed throughout—the sky appearing to be on fire, and other religious traditions. That is the visual effect of a stimulation of the ionosphere and the aurora, through natural emissions. But this same effect, with some of the systems that are being contemplated, might actually be stimulated by man, in the future.

First of all, while the current 11-year sunspot cycle should be decreasing in intensity by this time, it actually appears to still be increasing. For those of you who have been paying attention over the last few years to our messages from Ascended Master Teachers, especially geophysical "Professor" Soltec's information in these pages, you know that our planetary system is entering into a high-frequency "cleansing" region of space which is stimulating ALL the bodies of this solar system, including the Sun, in ways that have not been experienced for many thousands of years. Moreover, our Sun is the "father-mother figure" for the planets in our solar system, and in that capacity communicates constantly with the Earth and sends energies for her rebalancing and renewal that is now in progress.

Secondly, certain Native American prophecies are well worth keeping in mind with respect to that recent large sunspot-intensified aurora comprised predominantly of a diffuse, BLOOD RED coloration which filled a lot of the sky on Friday evening, March 30. None of the more technically inclined observers commented on (or seemed to recognize or realize) that such coloration is extremely unusual considering what ought to have been the dominant gaseous elements in the upper atmosphere—nitrogen and oxygen—which would have produced the more typical blue and green shimmering patterns; it makes one wonder WHAT ELSE has been dispersed up there, maybe through the ongoing chemtrails sprayings, to cause such a dominant odd red coloration that so many skywatchers that evening observed without questioning what they were seeing.]

Martin: Will this kind of solar activity potentially knock-out any of these electronic systems?

Dr. Begich: Absolutely. In fact, historically you can go back to the late 1960s and early 1970s, I forget exactly the date, but somewhere right in there. Quebec Power lost energy, based upon solar activity, that actually coupled with the power grid, causing a surge in the power grid, causing electronic transformers to blow out for that utility.

The same can happen in terms of the Internet, anything that can couple with that energy. And so, essentially, all of our sensed electronic systems are vulnerable to these spikes, particularly satellites. I mean, satellites, sitting in the way of the surges, can be totally knocked-out, and historically that has occurred. A lot of them you don't hear about. A lot of our satellites are military-based. They don't want to tell you when they're not working.

But these solar flares do have tremendous impact. There's a lot of research being done presently to learn how to harden our circuits against this kind of bombardment, whether it's natural or man-made. What's understood now is that man can create these surges using EMPs (electromagnetic pulses), deliberately, to create disruption in communications or power delivery systems.

Martin: Is it possible to trigger HAARP by remote activation?

Dr. Begich: HAARP was set-up, originally, in a couple of modes. Firstly, it was constructed modularly so it could be built and added to easily, and moved, even, easily. It was also designed to run remote using fiber optic cables to get the data rates that you need when you're moving between the two locations. But essentially, it IS very possible to operate HAARP without a team of scientists necessarily present on the site or at the facility.

Martin: What would you see as some of the worst-case scenarios for HAARP use, now and in the future?

Dr. Begich: There are several things. Firstly, what has been developed as HAARP, informationally, is being used in the further advancement of missile defense systems, globally. The fact is, the whole issue of missile defense is being advanced on the basis of a lot of research obtained from the HAARP facilities.

What we expect to see happen, and continue to happen in terms of dangerous effects, are the potential side-effects that the scientists on the site are not really considering. And one of those is the potential health effects in terms of the generation of extremely-low-frequency signals, which is part of this program.

What they actually do is pulse the energy into the ionosphere in just the right way so that the ionosphere begins to pulse back, sort-of in harmony or resonance with the signal on the Earth. And what happens, then, is that for about a thousand miles the ionosphere becomes a broadcast antenna in the sky, sending back an extremely-low-frequency signal. And this low-frequency signal actually has the potential of interfering with living organisms and our life cycles, as well. This is, from our perspective, a big problem and one that the military has largely ignored, or it has been claimed as a side-effect that they're not particularly interested in. That's of concern to us.

The other area of concern was originally one of the discussions on this technology—the idea of shunting energy or drawing energy out of the ionosphere for use on Earth. In fact, Senator Ted Stevens made that comment on the floor of the Congress, and he equated HAARP as something right out of Jules Verne in terms of its science implications. What was thought was that energy could be shunted down to the Earth and, somehow, tapped.

One of the concerns that a scientist by the name of Brooks Agnew raised was that if you actually shunt that energy down, that the visual image of that, if it were accidentally done—in other words, you send a signal up, and that signal going up acts like a conductor for coming down, so it draws the energy off—and that thought, again, in the worst extreme, it would appear to be like the largest bolt of lightning you've ever seen, striking the Earth about 40 times a second, until all of the energy was discharged or the connection broken. That's a tremendous amount of power. That was one of the big concerns raised.

The other was in the area of Earth penetrating tomography—which would be like looking into the Earth several kilometers deep, or several miles deep, for underground oil and gas, military structures, such as nuclear facilities and so on. This was actually tested and funded in the 1996 Defense budget, under non-proliferation and counter-proliferation, and proven to be a viable concept. The problem is, the resonance frequencies necessary for Earth penetrating tomography to work, according to Brooks Agnew, can also be stimulated with a significant amount of energy in a way that causes what's called a non-linear reaction; in other words, it acts as a trigger mechanism causing energy in the Earth to be released in an uncontrolled way, such as triggering an earthquake or a volcanic eruption.

These themes are actually echoed in two places that we found pretty interesting. One is Secretary of Defense William Cohen, in comments made at the University of Georgia, and in a press conference shortly after a discussion on weapons of mass destruction and international terrorism. He suggested that the ability to stimulate volcanic eruptions and earthquakes, or even climate changes, through the use of electromagnetic waves, is a technology likely to be available to terrorist states in coming years.

The other thing that comes out is, in this CIA report on China, this issue of geophysical manipulation—the same thing generating earthquakes, climate changes, and volcanic eruptions through the use of electromagnetic techniques.

This is no longer an area of speculation. Major players on the world scene are suggesting that this technology is here today, and exists today, and are sounding the cautions. It even came out in the Congressional hearings in terms of Chinese defense initiatives.

Martin: And what about Russia? Is Russia also involved in similar technologies?

Dr. Begich: Absolutely. In fact, Russian work in weather modification goes back even further. There has been, since the fall of the Soviet Union, quite a bit disclosed on weather modification. In fact, during those Indonesian fires, some years ago, where smoke was blowing into Southeast Asia and Malaysia, it was suggested, in fact, the Russians offered by contract to create an artificial cyclone to blow the smoke out of Malaysia. You know, that idea that you can create these kinds of weather changes is not lost on the Russians, at all. In fact, it shows up in dozens and dozens of published works in the former Soviet Union, as well as in China.

Martin: Of course they've taken a lot of the great Nikola Tesla's inventions a lot further than we seem to have.

Dr. Begich: Yeah, and they've probably gone well beyond it. I mean, the fact is, the Russians, or, excuse me, the former Soviets, were the ones that initiated the initial dialogue, back in the early 1970s, seeking treaties for the restriction of the use of weather modification or geophysical manipulation, including creating tidal waves, earthquakes, and volcanic eruptions, and climate changes. That treaty, actually, was signed by over 60 countries, including the United States, in 1976 and 1977, when it was finally ratified.

But the fact is, that predates many of the nuclear and chemical and biological treaties that most of us have heard about. Very few have heard of the fact that we actually signed, over 23 years ago, a treaty dealing with weather modification, dealing with the generation of tidal waves and earthquakes, as a concept. Just the idea that even that technology existed that far back is surprising to most people.

Martin: What was the name of that treaty, do you know?

Dr. Begich: I have it referenced, actually, in Earth Rising. I can't remember the exact name, but it was a U.N. treaty, and we footnote it, and it's there.

Martin: Let's talk a little more about possible environmental impact and atmospheric impact with HAARP, and this kind of electronic technology. Is there a danger, in your mind, that the ionosphere might possibly be ignited, at some point?

Dr. Begich: I don't see it quite like that. What I see is that the appearance of it may be that way. I mean, when you think about the auroras glowing red, like they have—if you didn't understand what it was, that would certainly be the conclusion you would come to, that it's on fire! I don't see that as a possibility.

I think, visually, the "on fire" is the effect of the aurora. I mean, when you see an aurora in full bloom, that is, in fact, the fire in the sky; that is the energy that is being interacted with. The idea, now, that we can artificially stimulate it, or in the case of major solar activity, certainly see the experience of it.

The energy being released in solar action is tremendous. It's just an unbelievable amount.

What they also have, on a much more focused level—I mean, when you think about the amount of energy given to any defined space—a solar event doesn't really deliver as much as, say, a directed energy laser. And what they've developed, again, at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, and through UCLA's cooperation, basically laser technology, again for stimulating the ionosphere, but in this case delivering a very high density of energy to a very small space, and then pulsing that energy to create a reaction, and this is being used in conjunction with HAARP and High Pass, at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks.

All of these things are mainly to test ideas about artificially stimulating what we have observed Nature to do, and to see if there is an efficient way to do it. Efficiency is defined by window frequencies, frequencies that create very specific effects—whether it's in our natural ecosystems or in our physical bodies or within computer hardware.

The idea is, by stimulating certain energy harmonics you can create a reaction within living cells and living organisms, or within hardware, and by being able to direct that energy, that is the essence of directed energy warfare and directed energy weapons. It is just not very well explained.

We look at it like “Oh, this is kind of cool. This is a laser. This is a maser. This is this or that.” We don't really think about what it's doing on a physical level. And on a physical level these things are more profound than bullets passing through tissue.

If you think about it, if you can create the same kind of damage without the visual effect—in other words, debilitate someone to the point of death or even kill them—that is what this technology is all about when it is misapplied to military applications. The same things that are being learned for military exploitation, in terms of how to kill somebody, are the basic same mechanisms that tell us a lot about our physical bodies that could be used for healing the body. In fact, there are lots of people out there looking at these things, but with nowhere near the financial backing as the United States military, and other militaries, who are looking to exploit it for much different reasons.

Martin: Speaking of military and their use of these new weapons, what does the buzz phrase “perception management” mean?

Dr. Begich: (Laughter) Oh, that's a great phrase. This is coming out of the Pentagon. In fact, it's just a creative way of saying: “How do you lie to the public so they'll think what you want them to think?”

Perception management is about that. It's about creating the PR relationship that is sought in order to develop and advance certain weapons systems that otherwise would be considered immoral or unethical, or certainly below the standards of civilized people. This is a big concern that the military has expressed in its own writings.

So, perception management is the concept that has evolved out of the Revolution of Military Affairs. The Revolution of Military Affairs, or RMA, is the big change in the military, which the military has said will run right smack up against American values in terms of civil liberties, due process of law, privacy, the right to assembly and expressing ourselves freely. The fact that these new systems will restrict or limit some of those basic freedoms requires a change in our attitudes or values, and they actually express this in U.S. Army War College documents. One, in particular, from the Revolution of Military Affairs, in conflicts short of war, and in a number of other military records, but then they go further.

In the late '90s they evolved this concept of “perception management”, a way that the public will hear what you want them to hear, so they perceive it in the way you want them to perceive it.

Let's look at the latest example, the Marine's disclosure of the millimeter-wave weapon, or microwave weapon that creates heating in the human body, that got so much fanfare in March. That particular technology was also shown to create severe burns when misapplied, or dialed-up incorrectly.

The problem is, this microwave weapon is like tuning a radio. When it's at the right frequency [or at a low intensity] it creates a sensation of burning, which, incidentally, hasn't been used as a crowd-control or a behavior-control method since people were burned at the stake because we realize that burning people wasn't really a humane approach to anything.

The other side of it is, with a microwave weapon like the one that the Marines are demonstrating currently, you have the idea that if you adjust that frequency just slightly, then you can create much different effects; whether it's increasing the intensity to create burning effects on the skin, where there is actually scaring, or whether it is to create some other physiological effect, the reality is, these systems are very versatile, much in the same way that HAARP can be used for many different things.

These smaller-scale tactical weapons are designed to use energy as their basic ordinance discharge. Instead of a bullet blasting out of the end of a barrel, you have energy coming out of the end of an instrument that is intended to interact with the body in a very unique way.

Martin: So-called “phasers”.

Dr. Begich: Right. Well, it's the same idea. Right now the story is that you get this burning sensation over the full surface of the skin from this millimeter-wave weapon. But—what happens when you tune it so that you get heart failure, for example? This has been shown to be able to be stimulated using radio-frequency emissions when they are controlled in a very specific way.

The other side is the whole issue of where does the technology go when it's being advanced?

One of the things that we've seen clearly come through is the idea that the real interest is the versatility of the instrument. The fact that we can use these tools, in many cases, against personnel, personnel and equipment, or just equipment, by just changing the frequency, pulse rate, or energy density being emitted from the device.

That makes these weapons much different than things of the past because, essentially, they're tunable instruments. The more the military learns, the more versatile the instruments become.

And so, they introduce them, first, by talking about their benign use or things that most of us, they think, would agree would be ok. And then, once we've accepted that, then all of these “new” innovations come into play—which incidentally, are not new, but have been well understood for many, many decades in some cases.

I think that's where we really do our best—to cite, for instance, the ability to influence human behavior. As an example, we cite over three dozen United States patents and military records and academic studies that go back to the early 1960s, even late 1950s, and show how this technology has evolved and what the risks to our personal liberties have become.

It's this generation, living today, who will decide whether or not these technologies destroy what's left of this planet and humanity, in terms of our higher values and the things that we are capable of as human beings, and whether or not we live in a more directed and controlled society or whether we maintain our personal liberties and freedoms, and have our technology serve humanity rather than enslave us. That is the choice this generation will make for many, many generations in the future.

Martin: As you note, the secrecy issue among the military has become so overpowering, many of these issues do not become a matter of public debate or public discussion, but rather, under the guise of “national security” are held in confidence for years on end.

Dr. Begich: That's true.

Martin: The public ends up being the victim rather than the participant in the decision process. So, when we talk about our lifestyle and our basic freedoms being in jeopardy, it's no laughing matter. It's a very real and dangerous trend that has been going on for decades now. Big Brother has been watching for a long time, the so-called image of Big Brother watching, be it the image of the all-seeing eye of Big Brother in movies such as Enemy Of The State, with the satellite in the sky, or moving toward video surveillance on the streets of most major cities and facial scans of crowds at sporting events.

Dr. Begich: Right. All of those things are issues we have discussed in the course of our writings—in some cases, for years.

You know, when it finally hits the mainstream, like the Super Bowl game, when it finally hits the mainstream that, hey, they were taking images of everyone walking in and cataloging them and matching them against criminal records, and who knows what other records, U.S. passports, driver's licenses, credit card images, I don't know what all they were accessing and matching against, and I'll guarantee you the public didn't get the whole story either.

But the fact is, these technologies have been evolved to, basically, gain what some feel is necessary for "national security", this idea of total control of the population and knowing where everyone's at, at any given moment.

You know, the idea that we can do that now, and that we're quickly approaching the capacity to do it on a wholesale basis, with every soul on the planet—data storage is getting cheaper and cheaper, data sorting is getting faster and faster—so the reality is that all of this converges in our digital doorway.

We used to think of our doorway to privacy as the front door of our dwellings, but we now have a digital doorway which allows people to enter that portal into our entire existence—what we buy, what we sell, where we bank, where we live, our tax records, our work records, our medical records, every record that you can imagine that's digitized can be accessed by someone with a will to do so. To think any system is secure from that is not only foolish, but totally ridiculous.

In fact, the idea that the Internet has become this huge thing developed by the military for their own purposes has now become one of their biggest problems.

Martin: I think it is backfiring.

Dr. Begich: Yeah, and what they've done—and this is a big change—they've given investigative reporters a new name. I mean, instead of calling us investigative reporters, they now give us the name of "accumulator". And they villainize us as people who jeopardize national security because we're able to go out and—I'll give you a good example.

We can go on the Internet to the military's RFP areas, where they list the request for proposals for contracts, whether it's the military, FBI, Central Intelligence, Department of Justice, I don't care who it is. We go to them all on a fairly regular basis. We see what contracts are coming out, and then we go and see which companies are winning the contracts. We go read their corporate reports to find out what they're bragging about to their stockholders, read the press reports that they release to stimulate their stock values, look at the academic studies that are involved in their research efforts and, voilà, you've got a pretty clear picture of what's happening.

And then you just follow the money. You go look at the Congressional appropriations, and then you can put all your pieces together, find out who the players are, see what they've published in their lives, and all of a sudden the picture starts to get painted. And now you can do it really quickly; at least we do! (laughter)

Martin: (Laughter)

Dr. Begich: Because we have the ability to grab anything we want from high-speed modems, off the Internet, and correlate that data—and we have enough working knowledge of a number of disciplines across the sciences to see how these things inter-relate, and enough people to contact who are experts in any given field, either via Internet or directly, to where we can have things that are too complicated, say, for our backgrounds to be able to be interpreted, can be interpreted by, literally, the best scientists on the planet.

It's one of those things that is great on the one hand—and, actually, the Internet is starting to break down some of the barriers that needed to be broken down, long ago, which really deal with this whole secrecy syndrome that has denied the public an opportunity to, at least, debate the concepts of modern weaponry. We don't have to tell people how to build them, and most people don't really care about that any more than they care about how to rebuild the engine in their automobiles, but we still drive them. And we have to look at that same equation, in terms of our public policy. Just because we don't understand the nitty-gritty of these technologies doesn't mean that we're not supposed to be the ones making decisions on them.

The fact is, this Democratic Republic was established with the idea in mind that the average person would dictate to government what government looked like, and not the other way around. That's where the technology and the bureaucracy has run right up against American traditional values and civil liberties. And that's where we see the greatest risk to all of us. If we lose those basic values that have driven our governments and driven our systems to be successful, we have really gone backwards in time, back to those same Middle Ages where burning was considered a good idea—the good idea the Marines are now trying to sell the public.

Martin: Speaking of our "brave new world" and privacy rights, let's talk about Echelon.

Dr. Begich: Oh, that's a great subject. You know, Echelon is a subject that people don't know much about either. But Echelon was set up by Great Britain, Canada, the United States, and Australia and New Zealand, after World War II, essentially to work together for intelligence collection, really, tapping into electronic mediums around the planet.

Well, what's happened in the 40+ years since they engaged in that first agreement, is the advent of supercomputers, high-speed modems, the ability to draw information out of large banks of data, collate the data, and then use it effectively.

Essentially, full monitoring of telephone communications, e-mail communications, fax communications, virtually everything that's digitized and transits across communication lines is sorted by computers. What they look for are what are called dictionaries. These dictionaries are by the 5 participating governments, where 300 agencies within those 5 governments submit word lists, phrases, key names, even voice prints—biometric data, the voice image of someone, if you will. So, any time those names, voice images, or data transit across communication lines, computers pick it out, they sort it out, they see what makes sense for technicians to look at, where most of it, probably more than 99 percent of it, is screened out. A small amount then drops down to tens of thousands of technicians in the various participating countries who interpret that intelligence.

And what they've done with Echelon is, basically, skirt our civil liberties and privacy. In other words, instead of the United States spying on every citizen, they have Canada doing it for us. We do it for them. Great Britain participates, Australia, New Zealand, we all violate each other's civil liberties, but not our own; and so it's a skirting of the law and violating the true intent and spirit.

This is another issue that we can't lose sight on, because Europeans are now very concerned because the information being developed through Echelon is not just for national security, but is also being used commercially, to advance one country's commercial interest over another.

These are the things that are stirring the pot, if you will, in Europe. But the bigger issue, ultimately, is personal privacy and legitimacy, and maintenance of that personal privacy that's violated with these systems.

And how do we balance the national security interests against our own privacy interests? This question is going to become increasingly important as time goes on.

Martin: What's happening at Brooks Air Force Base?

Dr. Begich: Brooks Air Force Base—we go back to one document that was put together on non-lethal weapons, back in the mid-'80s. It was actually talking about a number of things that were coming out and Brooks became sort-of the central point for feeding a lot of the research, in terms of biological effects of these new technologies. And Brooks has become sort-of the central point for research in this particular area.

They've got the contracts with, for instance, the University of Utah, for getting the dosimetry, which is the dosage of radio frequency necessary to affect the major organs of the human body. It's the research hub, if you will, for electromagnetic warfare, which is, in fact, what the largest part of the Revolution of Military Affairs is truly about.

Martin: Let's talk about technology for crowd control. Obviously there is a lot of new stuff in the works concerning so-called "non-lethal" weapons. There's one thing, in particular, that I've heard you talk about—namely, one means for crowd control involving millimeter waves, similar to microwave technology. Can you talk more about that?

Dr. Begich: Yes, this is the new one that the Marines announced in March of this year. And what they were talking about was the idea of creating the sensation of heating, up to about 130 degrees, which would be like grabbing a hot lightbulb and hanging on. That system has been developed as a non-lethal.

But in conjunction with that, and a little bit different, an earlier system developed for crowd control was using infrasound, which is a low-frequency sound wave that would cause symptoms of sea sickness or nausea, or even total disorientation on the part of recipient.

Another one that was used for crowd control, and has gotten a fair amount of notoriety, is infrasound for creating fear and panic. This was also suggested by Scottish media to have been used during the Gulf War for stimulating the fear and panic that we saw Iraqi soldiers display when they were surrendering in large numbers. And what they used there was embedding this signal onto a radio broadcast going into the area. These broadcasts were the ones that were sending in the subliminal messages, through use of their normal radio—the Moslem prayer schedules and that sort of thing that lots of people were listening to.

As a consequence, we saw the implications of using that weapon, which was mass surrendering of tens of thousands of Iraqis, which is something we had never seen in modern warfare—at least not at this scale, and at a time when we were being told that it was the ordinance that we were dropping, which seemed implausible to us at the time. The fourth largest army surrendering like a bunch of schoolgirls didn't make sense to us.

This report from Scottish media, when combined with U.S. patents that we have copies of, and other data, it appears to us quite clear that we were experimenting with these new systems just to see their effectiveness.

What we saw in the Gulf War was direct combat—a couple hundred American and allied casualties—as compared to Kosovo, with virtually no casualties in the combat arena at all, and the deployment of remote and new technologies, to basically kill tens of thousands, without placing ourselves in harm's way.

That side of it is kind of interesting, but again, when you take the dimension of combat out of warfare, when people return from combat they're much more ready to go back into it, as opposed to looking for other solutions before we engage in what should be, in all cases, the absolute last resort.

The idea of taking human life on a mass scale should be avoided to the extent that we can. For the greatest period of time that we can, we should try to find a solution other than killing each other.

Martin: The technological weapons that you talk about that have been in the works, are in the works now, would seem to make obsolete just huge quantities of munitions held by the military. So, in a way, it's built-in obsolescence, and in another way it's job security because it's a whole new field of technology and manufacturing that's going to come into play. So it's an interesting combination of factors.

Dr. Begich: It's going to be huge. And to be sure that there's an adversary in the game, think about it in these terms. We've first invigorated the biggest potential economy on the planet, the Chinese economy, by basically consuming everything that they can produce with their cheap labor and low materials cost. What that's allowed them to do, in the last couple months, is announce one of the biggest military expenditure increases in Chinese history. The West has been poo-pooing it, going "Oh, it's only a few billion dollars." You know, because they compare what we do with a billion dollars when we spend $1,500 on toilet seats, and $1,000 on hammers and coffee makers, we wonder how come it's such a threat.

Well, the reason it's a threat is because they're paying their top scientists a few hundred bucks a month; they're paying their military personnel less than a hundred a month; and they're the ones who are developing many of the infra-structure facilities and developing the science at a much cheaper cost than we can develop the same science. And they do it with multidisciplinary teams, which is a much more effective way, and cost effective way, to develop science. You bring in specialists from all areas, and you work together, and you get the synthesis of their knowledge much more rapidly.

We compartmentalize in the West. We separate the scientists and the projects, so no one sees what the other is doing. In so doing, we can maintain secrecy, but we do it at an extremely high cost. The inefficiency in our procurement systems—I mean, if they're inefficient in China in buying things because they're talking bribes, they just shoot them.

In the United States, we go through these big exercises, which are certainly necessary and appropriate, but remember what we're competing against is a different value set that handles their procurement and their development of science much differently.

We're dealing with a group of people whose ideology is totally different than our own, and yet we're fueling that ideology, and we're fueling that military by our own expenditures, economically, just like we did with Russia. When you think about it, we had U.S. industrialists and financiers building the steel mills in Russia in the '20s, putting in the financing for all the big infrastructure developments in Russia through banks that do business on every side of the border.

The reality is, we're doing the same thing in China. We didn't give them the tanks; we just gave them the means to build them. We didn't give them the computers; we just gave them the means to build them. We didn't give them the missile systems; we just gave them the means to build them.

We've got an adversary, which means now we have an escalating scenario where our military-academic-industrial complex is now going to spend the billions of dollars we had hoped to avoid and divert into more humane areas of human endeavor, because first we've created the enemy that, now, we have to defend against. It is the biggest system of business welfare ever contemplated when we create enemies who then take the majority of public resources to defend against, on the basis of fear and paranoia generated by military, instead of the higher value of human beings.

That's what we're talking about in terms of what this generation is responsible for. We are now equipping countries around the world, who have very different ideologies, with the ability to destroy this place, or the ability to enhance it. And the choice is going to be ours.

Martin: And, of course, Russia and China are aligned together in something of a partnership, or friendship between the two countries, and that's something to further be alarmed about.

Dr. Begich: Absolutely. And do you know why that is occurring? It's because of the missile defense position the U.S. has taken, which is a defense position we warned people against 5 years ago, when Earth Pulse published it's first work. It said eventually what would happen is this unilateral abrogation of the treaty, which began to occur in the later part of 1998, with pronouncements by the U.S. Senate, a lot of saber-rattling during the election, and now it's becoming crystal clear that we're moving forward.

This has unified Russia and China in the way that we predicted on February 5, 1998, in a hearing in the European Parliament. And that unification now creates the threat that has forced us all to reassess national and international security.

The Chinese approach really is they consider themselves inferior but they look at it as they did during the revolution in the '40s when Mao took over China, using the concepts laid out in The Art Of War from thousands of years ago. The same thing says and suggests that, if you approach things in the right way, you can overwhelm an adversary, even when they're significantly larger. That's the approach being taken by the Chinese.

They're even contemplating the "first-strike" approach. What they said in the Senate Intelligence Committee was "first-strike" is an option the Chinese retain because they believe that if they had the right technology in place to knock-out our sophisticated electronics in one sweeping blast of EMP (electromagnetic pulse), for instance, this would give them such an advantage that they could overwhelm us.

But they're patient. Their view is, within that report, it may take two or three decades for the economy of the U.S. to be diminished sufficiently by the emerging economies of China and the third world, and the political climate will change dramatically enough so that they could, in fact, overwhelm us in either a commercial way, or in a more direct military way.

They're not above that approach. I mean, the things they're looking at are how to affect our computer systems with viruses [going on right now]; how to affect our information systems overall, our power generation and distribution systems—again, using these kinds of technologies, and the direct interference with our sophisticated electronics, as well as the non-lethal weapons that can affect human beings.

In fact, the Chinese split it into three areas: anti-personnel, personnel and equipment, and anti-equipment weapons, using infrasound, particle beams, directed energy weapons of various kinds, to do everything from knocking-out electronic transmissions or ignitions in cars, to disabling computers, to disabling the human being or creating emotional distress, mass hysteria, and fear, using these types of technologies.

These are the weapons of the next war. These are the next weapons of the next major conflict, and these are the weapons that maybe, maybe we need to rethink before we have plowed straight into this giant arms-race in new technological areas.

Martin: Where do you see the Bush administration, in terms of the military budget, in relation to China and Russia?

Dr. Begich: What they have said, and they have made very clear, both to our allies and to the Russians and Chinese, is that they don't care what anyone thinks about missile defense, we're moving forward.

[Editor's note: And that point was reiterated very emphatically in a major announcement by president Bush on, of all days, May 1, otherwise known as May Day. Needless to say, the Russian and Chinese responses were far from an enthusiastic embrace of ("bitterly opposed to") our decision. Makes you wonder what's REALLY going on here, since provoking the combined angers of the Chinese and Russians is hardly a position the United States can reasonably contend with. A hint was buried in Bush's comments where he said these nuclear defense missiles were for the protection of the U.S.—or—"our chosen allies". Now, just who do you think that was in reference to? Hint: What is rapidly brewing in the Middle East despite the media's concerted efforts to focus your attention elsewhere?]

Meanwhile, on that same day, May Day, with riots going on all over the world by those awakening to the shenanigans of the New World Order gang, FBI director Louis Freeh abruptly announced he was leaving that job. Perhaps he wants to distance himself from something about to happen?]

The second thing that they've said, regardless of anyone's concern, is that they want to leap-frog into the next generation of technologies. That's from Rumsfeld, Bush, and others in the administration. This leap-frog places them right square in the middle of Earth Rising: The Revolution, which was published in January 2000.

That IS the direction of all of these new technologies, where they are going to be used in a way that gives us, certainly, strategic advantage, for a period of time. But in creating the instabilities that go along with it, maybe we create bigger problems for ourselves as well, and that's the danger.

If we need to revisit these treaties, then by all means let's enter into the appropriate dialog and the appropriate forums and do so. By all means let's guard our national security interests and realize that others are not honest, and probably aren't honest in terms of how they deal with us. But, whatever we do, let's do it deliberately and let's do it with the proper invigorated public debate that's necessary for major policy decisions that are going to affect trillions of dollars in U.S. expenditures over the next couple of decades.

Martin: You know, many years ago there was a journalist by the name of Peter Beter who wrote about Russian orbiting space platforms, that were military platforms hovering over the Earth. What do you see as the possibility of the United States having that kind of capability or technology, using particle-beam weapons and laser weapons in space?

Dr. Begich: That is a direction we intend to go. In fact, one of the problems with space platforms was always how do you keep them refueled so they can stay up there, because bringing fuel up is a pretty expensive undertaking. And to get the best effect you want to be in low orbit, because you want the least distance, so you can keep the maximum energy densities when you are transferring energy from, basically, space to the Earth, to try and create an effect.

Low orbiting space platforms—there was actually development from HAARP that was able to demonstrate in Canada, back in the early '90s, the ability to transfer energy from this type of phased array where it can be sent up to a space platform, and the radio-frequency energy converted back to an electrical energy, where it can be utilized.

One of the other things that people may remember a few years ago was the Shuttle dragging that long tether through the ionosphere. It conducted all of that electricity and blew-up a bunch of things on the ship. Well, that's again tapping energy that's in place.

Remember, there's this huge volume of energy that's there naturally. If you can hang these long antennas and tap that energy, and draw it into, say, a weapons system—which is what that experiment was most likely really about—that's pretty profound, because now you've got the supply of energy; you don't even have to transmit.

But, because we've learned a lot about the ionosphere, a lot about the energy that's there in the ionosphere, maybe we can, literally, tap it. Or maybe we use something narrowly focused, like the new lasers, for transferring energy up to low orbiting space platforms. And use these platforms, then, for these energy weapons.

The first thing that you need to realize is that the government is actively pursuing contracts for miniaturization of these technologies, so they are lighter, more versatile, and higher power. Then the ability to create power systems in space, using either solar or some of these more creative, innovative approaches like tapping, literally, the envelope surrounding the planet for the energy.

These are aggressively and actively being pursued, and the solutions are being found. As they are found, and we feel like we have an advantage, or China does, or Russia does, the temptation is there to go forward, and to heck with the treaties is going to be there.

That's what's happening right now with missile defense that's causing all the instabilities. Imagine that scaled-up!

Now, I can guarantee you that the Chinese and Russians are having a lot of "behind the scenes" discussions about what THEY have that they can throw into the battle arena. I think all of that is just creating a greater level of instability, and at the same time, a lot of insecurity, because we realize that man—again, think of nuclear as being the scourge that could wipe out the planet—it's a grain of sand on the beach compared to these new technologies, in terms of what we may be capable of, now and in the coming generation.

Martin: Well, we talk about places like Area 51, for example. God knows what kind of technology they have available, just in terms of very fast aircraft.

Dr. Begich: Yeah, and most of that, you know, it takes 20-30 years before we find out what was really going on. In some cases we never find out.

But the reality is—and I think all of us can pretty well see it—the advances that are taking place that make the public forum, even those that we talk about, as upsetting to the military as we can be, what they've done to solve some of it is, they've taken down data that they used to make publicly available, so it's not as easy to collate. Or, they've made it only available to government organizations.

So if you're entry point doesn't end in mil, for military, or the proper ending digits, you don't get into the system. And that's important to note, because this is sort-of a screening of their activity, realizing that the public wouldn't stand for it; and that's the wrong reason to take something off the public radar-screen, so to speak.

You take it off because it's a legitimate national security issue. You don't take it off to limit the public discussion. That's fundamentally wrong within this country, or should be wrong, and the people who are doing it for those reasons ought to be removed from whatever positions they occupy, because they're in the wrong slot. They're not public servants anymore, they're detriments to the public service.

Martin: I have some questions here that just seem so miniscule, compared to what we've been talking about. But let me just run a few of them by you. What are the short term and long range possible effects by HAARP on radio communications globally?

Dr. Begich: One of the ideas was that you could create a system with HAARP, and HAARP-type instruments, and I say that loosely because HAARP, remember, is a developmental prototype. Once the prototype and the developmental ideas are taken to a certain extent, then you get deployment, which means there will be many transmitters scattered around the planet. In fact, Super-DARN, across Canada, is being constructed now. Super-DARN are arrays that are being built in the U.S. and Canada. You have EISCAT being developed in Europe. You have other transmitters in Russia. [Editor's note: From their own Internet website we read: "The EISCAT Scientific Association is an international research organization operating three incoherent scatter radar systems at 931MHz, 224MHz, and 500MHz in Northern Scandinavia. It is funded and operated by the research councils of Norway, Sweden, Finland, Japan, France, the United Kingdom, and Germany (collectively, the EISCAT Associates)."]

"EISCAT (European Incoherent Scatter) studies the interaction between the Sun and the Earth as revealed by disturbances in the magnetosphere and the ionized parts of the atmosphere...." The stated technical focus of this system just "happens" to parallel the HAARP system's capabilities.] These transmitters can be used together, and in conjunction with one another.

There's a lot of pressure on Greenland to put in some of the missile defense components. Canada, as well. They're not on board yet. We got a really interesting internal document. You know the military with their procurement officers, and people who they have to clue-in, to a certain extent. They publish what are called "talking points", or "basic messages". (Laughter) when you read them. They appease the press, so the press gets something they think looks good. This way everyone's given the same message, so no one is speaking off the script. That's exactly how they deal with it.

I mean, it's a scripted dialog with the public. We're going to tell them this much, this is the message; here it is, stay on message. You hear all of this nonsense, rather than, let's present the facts and let the public debate them, and let's make some decisions, like you're supposed to do within Democratic Republics.

Instead we get this kind of strategy: "Well, what do we really want them to see? What do we really want them to hear? And how do we want them to feed that back to us so we can do what we want?"

That is the wrong approach, and that is the approach that too much of government has taken over the last 50 years, whether it's national, state, or even local. That's what really, fundamentally, has to change—a re-grabbing and re-capturing by the public of what Democracy is, and using what remains of it to take that back. And I think that's where the solutions ultimately lie with all of this.

The idea that HAARP can be used, or other systems can be used, to create a more secure world is certainly desirable, but let's not do it at the expense of that which we are trying to protect, which are the basic, fundamental freedoms that we've come to enjoy—the pursuit of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—fundamental to who we are as Americans. If we're going to lose that in the process, then what are we guarding against in the first place?

Martin: It's hard to imagine that "black operations" budgets are going to cease. And it's hard to imagine that such huge organizations such as the NSA and the CIA are going to acquiesce to free disclosure and public information, when large organizations like that tend to do absolutely anything to insure their continued existence. And the beauty of "black operations" budgets is that they are not accountable to anyone.

Dr. Begich: Again, it's part of that "perception management". It's basic messages; it's all of the propaganda, so they don't say the wrong thing that will make our allies mad.

They're really interesting

Dr. Begich: That is very true.

Martin: Now, philosophically, I don't think there's anyone reading this newspaper who will disagree with what you've said. However, on a pragmatic level, these scoundrels doing all of this behind the scenes are not about to let go of the reigns.

Dr. Begich: And I think this is where there are some potentials for solutions.

I mean, there is the potential—and I say this carefully because I think it's going to take an awful lot of effort to get there—but I think it's possible; first in Europe, and then in the U.S., only because Europeans have a keen sense of what it's like to be oppressed. You can take Eastern Europe and everyone breathing today who has been around for 12 years remembers it. You can go to World War II and have a pretty clear understanding, across Europe, of what oppression is like, which means the existing generation remembers it.

The fact is, we've forgotten what oppression is like, so when it creeps in a little bite at a time, we don't notice how oppressed we are. You know, this generation was supposed to be the "leisure generation", back in the '60s. A trade person, a person with a high-school diploma and some decent skills could make a living, buy a house and own it, put his kids through college, and retire in 20 years.

Martin: Didn't work.

Dr. Begich: And that is no longer here. The fact is, most people cannot look to that as any sense of ability, and yet, why is that? We have all this capacity, all this greater productivity, and we can't achieve that. And it's just the way in which our politics have evolved, and the public resources have been diverted to really what has become a huge, massive expenditure in corporate welfare, where our tax dollars feed the wrong things. And those things are stimulated and motivated by disarray, not by cohesive human co-operation.

It's really—the war-making machine needs a reassessment. Part of that can be established, I think, in a whistle-blower mechanism. There needs to be a method, whether it's corporate or government, where people who see actions taken against humanity, a mechanism for bringing that information forward to be looked at, to be debated. I think that needs to happen. We need to have a national reconciliation, much in the same way as South Africa has, where they've allowed people to come forward, admit what's gone on, achieve some level of amnesty for what they may have engaged in, in the interest of knowing the truth.

I think this country, and the West, is as much in need of that as the East was when they collapsed in 1989 or thereabouts. The fact is, we need the same reconciliation of our past and our history, and we also need a measure of accountability. The United States government admits to over half a million—according to Secretary of Energy O'Leary, when she was in that office—over a half a million victims of human experimentation in the United States, without consent. Half a million people, they admit to, and not one single person has ever been held accountable for that.

We need to revisit laws on the books dealing with human experiments and their non-disclosure. When you do a FOIA, do you know what's knocked-out of those requests? The names of all the people who perpetrated the sins against their fellow Americans; they hide that—the academics and people who now may be in highly-placed positions who were involved in this garbage, who when it's revealed they were working on the same kinds of programs in Nazi Germany, we deport them.

In the United States, we black-out their names when people legitimately ask for their records, and we hide the people who are the perpetrators of this nonsense, and we don't make them criminally liable. That's where the action is. You make people criminally liable, not just civilly, for violating American civil liberties when they operate within government programs or corporate programs. Then you're going to have a whole different tenor and taste in terms of who participates in this nonsense in the future.

We need to make people accountable for what they do. We need to make government accountable for what it does, and we need to provide a mechanism for people to come forward and be forgiven, so in the interest of truth we can end these programs and put them in their proper perspective, in terms of American values.

Martin: Speaking of American values, let's talk about mind control and the capability of HAARP and other technologies to manipulate mass consciousness.

Dr. Begich: This is probably the most controversial area that we've researched. We've got in the book Earth Rising over three dozen U.S. patents, from over the course of the last 30-40 years, that explain how this works. We have a number of academic reports and military reports, the most revealing, interestingly, came from the U.S. Army War College.

They have a quarterly publication, and the one that was striking is an article called "The Mind Has No Firewall", which essentially is an article about how to influence human behavior and mental processes using external means—not the traditional things that we think about, not chemicals or biological agents—but electromagnetic weapons systems specifically designed to interact and interfere with brain function in a way that can create emotional distress, or illicit a specific emotional response.

Or, even more sinisterly, in one report, over to the next century "New World Vistas, Air & Space For The 21st Century", it was produced by the United States Air Force Science Advisory Board. In their ancillary volume, they explore the idea of being able to actually go into the human brain, remove a memory, and replace it with a synthesized one. In other words, where you would not be able to distinguish the truth from the fiction. They sell it in the case of training, to be able to learn how to, say, speak a language or operate a complicated piece of equipment; this would be a way to transfer knowledge directly into the brain. And that's believed to be possible within the next 10-15 years.

One of the other things that came up in that same report is the idea of transferring sound, wirelessly, so that it appears as a proverbial "voice in the head". This technology actually already exists. We demonstrated it in the European Parliament with a crude working model, and in the demonstration the end result was the European Parliament was convinced that the technology existed. I mean, to even get politicians to even talk about this technology is a huge obstacle to try to overcome.

But we not only got them to discuss it, and to witness the demonstration, but they also passed a resolution. In the body of the resolution they called for the international treaty dialog banning the use of any weapons system that would interfere with human mental processes as a weapon of war.

And so, these things do exist, very controversially, no doubt. But again, it is an area that we've heavily researched, and we've demonstrated with over a hundred footnoted sources how this technology has evolved and how it can be used, and how it is actually being used, both commercially and militarily.

Martin: Let's talk about the possible benevolent uses for HAARP and related technology.

Dr. Begich: One of the things that has come up and will continue to come up—in fact we expect that it will come up even more, is this benevolent side of many of these technologies, because one of the things, as a rule, that happens, once there's a certain point of no return for the military, where they realize the public is not going to ignore the issue, they can't skirt the issue, they're going to have to face it on some level—then what do they do? And the military doesn't plan for the unexpected, in the sense of not knowing what's coming—they've established every kind of contingency for everything they do. The idea is, no matter what comes, you've got a solution.

One of the things that Bernard Eastlund spoke about is the idea of being able to affect weather systems, and be able to control weather systems with this type of instrument.

Martin: That's one of my other questions.

Dr. Begich: The other area where we think they're going to start talking is the idea that this can be used for stimulating the production of ozone in the upper atmosphere, or knocking out pollutants in the upper atmosphere, different kinds of carbon gases, and so on. That comes up in the original patents on the technology, both of these things, although they're not appearing much in the mainstream. In the earlier Chinese article that I spoke about, the idea of depleting ozone was discussed as one of the ways to control weather by the Chinese using this kind of technology.

But those things certainly are possible with HAARP, and those are the things that are the most striking, as well, from a military perspective, that they would probably start selling us on so we would buy the system, and in exchange, they get all these other applications or possibilities with the same instrument.

This is the same thing that happened with the millimeter-wave weapons being pitched by the Marines. Yeah, it has that effect, but what ELSE does it do? Those are the things that we need to be concerned about. In HAARP, the relevant issues of weather modification actually were pursued by the European Space Agency, which contracted with Dr. Bernard Eastlund for a paper on knocking-out tornados using ground-based phased-array antennas. HAARP, specifically, was referenced for knocking-out tornados.

Now, when he finished modeling all of that and showed that it was feasible for the European Space Agency, and it was a peer-reviewed paper, a few months later there were the tornados that ripped through Oklahoma City. President Clinton showed up on the scene and said: "Hey, don't worry, one of these days we're going to figure out how to mitigate the damage these tornados make by taking the energy right out of them." And everyone kind-of laughed in the media. Well, what the media didn't know is, three months before, Dr. Eastlund had completed his modeling at the University of Oklahoma and proved where this was not only feasible and possible, but could be done.

The other thing that then happened is the European Space Agency's paper was published, then NASA and FEMA contracted with Dr. Eastlund to see if he could create the same effect using a satellite-based technology, and he prepared a paper demonstrating that was possible, as well. The point is—and that made CBS News in January 2001 as a major story—the idea of knocking-out tornados with these new technologies. In other words, weather modification was being pitched to the public as "Isn't this a great thing? We're going to be able to do this?" What the public wasn't told was, the same instruments can be used in a lot of different ways that are not so beneficial, and secondly, you can't just destroy a tornado and expect the energy to just disappear. It has to go somewhere, and what we've seen, and what is clearly understood is, you may stop one problem in one place, and create disproportionately unexpected results somewhere else on the planet, much more devastating than what you were trying to avoid in the first place.

The other thing that comes up with these applications is, any plane or aircraft or living organism flying through that space where the energy was being transferred, would be blown-up, like being cooked in a microwave oven.

The other thing they forget to mention is the fact that if you hit the tornado just wrong, you'll have the opposite effect; instead of depleting the energy in the tornado, you'll actually feed it, and actually amplify its effect many, many times over, perhaps creating the most devastating tornados in our history.

Man now has the capacity to play God. But it's the equivalent of a kindergartener taking a live hand-grenade to show-and-tell. It's not a good idea, right now. Our maturity in dealing with these issues is lacking. In fact, the public is not debating these issues.

Secondly, our capacity, scientifically, to model the entire Earth system is not there yet, and yet this is the very system that these very new technologies are playing with and toying with, as if it were a lab in the sky, and it's the very environmental system that we depend on for our sustenance on this planet.

Martin: This could be considered a fringe question, but do you foresee any intervention by outside, by off-planet beings, in the event that man over-steps his bounds, technologically?

Dr. Begich: Well, you can answer that, maybe, from a lot of different levels. I mean, on a religious level, certainly that's the alternative. I mean, the subtitle on Earth Rising: The Revolution is Toward A Thousand Years Of Peace, which is the ultimate hope in a lot of our minds as to what happens at the end of this Age. But the fact of the matter is, between now and then there's going to be a lot of disruption.

What interventions may occur? I think the first intervention is the consciousness of human beings who are awakened enough to our responsibility as co-creators, with the Creator, whatever we perceive that to be, and I think that's where the action is. If we fail to measure up to the standards of humanity—which means, we act on what we know to be right and true, we act on it such that we create change that makes this place a better planet—if we fail at this, then we're the recipients of whatever adverse actions we create for ourselves. And I think that's where the answer lies. We can externalize that or we can internalize it, but we have the responsibility to act in our own best interest in a way that's humane and responsible.

Martin: Based on your understanding of the research that you've encountered in the last two decades, do you think that man has that responsibility?

Dr. Begich: There's no doubt. I think that man does have that responsibility. An interesting conference I attended a couple of years ago was sponsored by the Orthodox Church, which, interestingly enough, split from the Catholics in 1054 AD, but traced the roots back to the Revelation of John and the Island of Patmos.

These guys sponsored a conference called "Religion, Science & The Environment", which brought together the leading heads of major universities from around the world in the environmental, and other sciences, policy makers, vice-presidents of several countries were onboard, media, a lot of people. And you know, the interesting thing about all of these groups representing all of these different interests was, we were all saying, essentially, the same thing—using different words to describe our observations, whether it was a religious leader talking about the end of the age, or a scientist. When you get right down to it, everyone described the same things in different words.

Man now has the capability to be the deliverer of our own bad news, or at the same time, has the capacity to change our direction. I don't think we're going to go free. I think we're going to have a lot of damage in the process, but in the end of all of this, as things get sorted out and the tensions get resolved, where do we want to be? What do we want to do with this technology?

We have an opportunity to provide a much more stable world, recognizing the differences between populations, and that's still achievable. At the same time, it's a very insecure planet in terms of the different ideologies and different belief-systems that exist. I think there is reason to be optimistic, but at the same time we need to be cautious and act responsibly with what we now possess in terms of knowledge and technology.

Martin: As you know, our country was founded on a system of checks and balances. Part of the problem that we see happening now with technology and the military is that the checks and balances have been usurped through secrecy.

Dr. Begich: Yes, and it's been amplified in law. And this is what needs to be dis-assembled. We need to create greater levels of accountability.

I mean, think about it. You've got 40 percent, according to a 1997 Washington Post article, you've got 40 percent of the Air Force equipment budget going to "black" projects, projects so secret that the Congress doesn't even know what they're giving them the money for. That is a huge amount of money, when one new bomber costs a billion dollars. Forty percent of their equipment budget is a large expenditure.

And then you've got this Senate Intelligence Select Committee, and you've got the House equivalent, and you've got these committees of half a dozen Congressmen or Senators who are supposed to be making these decisions and asking the intelligent questions against a bureaucracy comprising of a million people, or more, and they're supposed to come up with the answers without any ability to access outside experts, or anyone else.

Now, what's wrong with that picture? It's pretty easy for most of us to see.

If you go into a dark room and you listen to all of the experts, who's listening and who's making the interpretations of what they're being told? Look at the make-up of that committee and you're going to be saying "Gee, you know, maybe my interests aren't very well represented there."

The fact is, when only a handful of people get to decide that portion of the budget, on issues that are going to affect the basic fundamental freedoms of Americans, THERE IS A PROBLEM! And we need to open that up in a much different way.

Yeah, there's vulnerability and there's risk when you disclose what we're working on. That's the price of freedom. The fact is, you're vulnerable to a certain extent in order to maintain those freedoms.

You have to trust the population to be responsible. We can't say that the average person is not capable of self-governance. If we say that, which is what our actions say when we hide in secrecy those things that we're afraid to demonstrate to the public, which is what a lot of it has become, we have to ask ourselves those basic, fundamental questions about what our government is, and what it should rightly reflect.

And where it fails to reflect those values, we need to change it. That means BIG changes need to happen! The same kind of changes, perhaps in the same non-violent way, as change occurred in Eastern Europe. We can see a revolution in the human spirit in the United States, because when the day happens where that's ignited, the changes will begin.

It always begins with a handful of people. And, I think that beginning is already taking place. The changes will occur, as long as people steadfastly follow their path to tell what they know, in a way that's uplifting and not degrading to the human spirit.

Martin: Was it Eisenhower who, upon leaving office, warned about the Military-Industrial Complex, all those years ago?

Dr. Begich: It certainly was, and he couldn't have been more accurate in terms of Big Brother. You know, people can look at the works of Huxley, in terms of what he was saying back as far as the '30s. The reality is, it came a lot sooner, and a lot more vigorously than many expected, and with technologies never contemplated before.

Those are upon us, and now the decisions have to be made, or we can just wait and be the recipients of the bad news. I think that's counter-productive, although a lot of people are sitting in that position.

I think a little bit goes a long way. We certainly demonstrated it with a small operation. We've been able to take very complicated issues to the public in a big way, around the planet. It doesn't take a whole lot of people. It just takes a sustained effort, and I think that's what we've been able to demonstrate, and many others are doing the same.

Martin: Let's talk about HAARP and lightning. There is a theory that in Northern Idaho and other places, the recent wildfires were the result of HAARP-type technology.

Dr. Begich: I don't see any evidence of that, at all, at this point. In fact, a lot of things we've seen show up as speculation are very counter-productive in the sense that people have built speculation on top of speculation on top of speculation, until you end-up with something called fiction. And these kinds of things don't need to happen. If somebody has some firm evidence of an event, there's usually some documents you can put together to prove something occurred. You don't have to speculate.
