

Spirited Life Of The Peaceful Warrior: It's All In The Doing

12/3/02 RICK MARTIN

Integrity means living and acting in alignment with spiritual law and with our highest vision, despite impulses to the contrary. From the heart of integrity we recognize, accept, and express our authentic interior reality, inspiring others not with words, but by our example.

— Dan Millman, from his book The Laws Of Spirit

After a deliberate (and some would say rather intense!) focus these past three months on hidden facets of the highest levels of the World Controllers, it seems only fitting to now offer a respite with something completely different and inspirational.

As Fate would arrange it, when recently walking through a large bookstore, longtime popular personal-growth author Dan Millman's many titles seemed to almost "jump off the shelf" at me. That's always a sign I should pay attention.

NEWEST OFFERINGS AT WISDOM BOOKS

Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To NEW! Personal Growth

Code: EDE (1.0 lb.)

Here is Dan Millman's magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve "gateways" or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth. Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant's ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a "numerologist". Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience. Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: "The Practice Of Enlightenment"—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

Why the official story of 9/11
is a monumental lie

David
Icke

Code: AIW (1.75 lb.)

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

The Nazi-American Biomedical/Biowarfare Connection

If you think the Nazi agenda for world control, disposing of undesirable populations, and experiments to genetically develop a master race, ended with World War II, you are in for a shock! Learn about the links between Hitler's top medical and biowarfare researchers and U.S. and British intelligence, allied pharmaceutical and population control interests, the Rockefellers, the Bushs, and the British Royal Family! Dr. Horowitz and Dave Emory, nationally syndicated talk-show host, reveal how Merck, Sharp, and Dohme—the world's largest vaccine producer—was a principal recipient of the Nazi war chest, as part of a scheme to create a monopoly over the world's chemical and pharmaceutical industries, for the purpose of creating a "New World Order" and giving rise to "The Fourth Reich". If you want to know the "straight skinny on the deep doo doo", this is required listening.

The Secret of NIKOLA TESLA

29.95 (+S/H)
Code: TESLA (0.75 lb.)
Running Time: 105 min.

Long shrouded in secrecy, the life of Nikola Tesla is artfully illuminated in this fascinating film. Tesla, born in Croatia in 1856, is considered the father of our modern technological age and one of the greatest scientific minds who ever lived. He was an electrical engineer who changed the world with the invention of the AC (alternating current) induction motor, making the universal transmission and distribution of electricity possible. His achievements led to the discovery of radio and television as well as the development of the first hydroelectric dam, remote control, radar tracking for the military, and the manipulation of matter and energy. His discoveries are also the basis for the emerging science of Free Energy.

Encyclopedia Britannica lists Nikola Tesla as one of the most fascinating people in history. The Secret of Nikola Tesla, The Movie is a well-acted portrayal of the life and mind of a "scientific superhero" who, against all odds, dedicated his life to the task of designing and improving technology for the service and advancement of humanity.

Orson Welles stars as J.P. Morgan, Peter Bozovic as Tesla, Strother Martin as George Westinghouse, and Dennis Patrick as Thomas Edison.

THE PEPPERMINT PATTIE EFFECT

This has nothing to do with candy canes and visions of sugar plums. It has everything to do with what some people manage to get away with at the expense of other people.

That's what I call the Peppermint Pattie Effect. But let me explain:

Get in your time machine, go back—oh—at least thirty years, walk into a candy store, and sample a peppermint pattie. Even with your eyes closed, there's no question about the penetrating aromatic delight you just bit into. Try the same today and, unless you peek and read the wrapper, you're more likely than not to say: "Gee, I don't know; it might be mint or vanilla or whatever."

Why is that? Well, starting in the early 1970s a new species, called the MBA, started to emerge like a plague of locusts from the most "prestigious" graduate schools of business. Lean, mean, and hungry to make a profitable killing in the business world, these MBAs were sold to companies as saviors of the almighty bottom line. And boy, were they ever!

One of many products that suffered from the "cut & slash" mentality of the modern MBA was peppermint patties (which you may have figured out by now I have a fondness for). Sophisticated studies were done, employing blindfolded professional taste-testers, to determine the absolute minimum threshold of that exquisite (and, at the time, expensive) ingredient known as peppermint oil necessary to just barely flavor the candy. As you might imagine, of course, it was quite a bit less oil than was previously used in formulations—back when pride in workmanship and public conscience counted for something.

Profits went up in companies all over the place, and MBAs earned their much-sought-after bonuses and corner offices and corporate takeovers of the laggards to this new wave of practical business "ethics". Consumers grumbled but, heck, the products were still available—even if usually only ghostly shells of their former well-built selves.

Now fast-forward to the present. Two happenings reminded me of the Peppermint Pattie Effect recently. One is the sprawling, 20-hour (!) "Steven Spielberg" UFO miniseries called Taken on the SciFi cable channel. The other is Sir Henry Kissinger's appointment to chair the newly created "independent" commission to investigate 9/11.

Taken is only at the halfway point as we go to press, but I'm already wondering if the title was chosen as an inside joke—to say how we've all been TAKEN for a ride, figuratively speaking—rather than just referring to the story-line of "alien" abductions spanning several generations.

The Peppermint Pattie Effect enters into this design because there seems to be included just enough truthful events for Taken to look like a documentary with something genuine, perhaps even profound, to say. If it were any less substantive, viewers might notice the underlying fear propaganda indoctrination going on.

A single two-hour TV special is an intensive undertaking—both in terms of manpower and money. What (and who) do you think is behind a project that's TEN TIMES that size and "coincidentally" manages to induce a number of popular contemporary television programs to all-of-a-sudden go into repeats during this two-week-long event, to guarantee an even larger viewing audience?

Hmmm. Something really big must be on the horizon in this arena.

Meanwhile, Henry Kissinger turns 80 years old in a few months. Yet, of all characters, he was appointed by President Bush the day before Thanksgiving (when we were safely distracted with matters closer to home) to chair a new 18-month commission "investigating" 9/11.

This one is a more complicated example of the Peppermint Pattie Effect: The product has to resemble the real thing just enough for public consumption, while at the same time sending a clear message of guaranteed fraud to those who might otherwise worry about any exposure of The Truth concerning 9/11.

First of all, Kissinger's appointment tells high-level crooks everywhere that the wily foxes are indeed in charge of guarding this henhouse. Moreover, once propped-up with batteries charged, his presence represents (to the unknowing) a certain gravity of purpose in conducting an investigation the actual fiction of which is likely to make the old Warren Commission Report on the assassination of JFK look downright honest.

So what do we do here at The SPECTRUM this month to offset such nonsense? Why, we continue to make our "peppermint patties" the old-fashioned, full-strength way!

While the governmental spin-masters and their bought media continue to lead an unsuspecting public down the garden path to justify a war with Iraq, this month we redouble our efforts to share the other side of the story—the side that "they" don't want you awake and searching ones to have.

But this month, for a change, we balance that heavy load with Rick Martin's front-page feature that reminds us all what mighty powerful spiritual warriors we are! Or as one of the two messages this month from the Higher Realms likewise reminds us: WE have dominion over the Dark Energies—if we can just keep that fact in mind.

Are the Dark Energies indeed in a desperate panic at this time? Well, go back and think a bit more about the astonishing appointment of ol' Hank to the 9/11 whitewash throne: You mean that was the BEST they could do, was to drag HIM, of all people, out of storage to fill that slot?! It would seem their Evil ranks are getting pathetically threadbare. And that's as it should be, since Evil must always wear a sign.

So with your kind and encouraging financial help, we promise to keep on making only great-tasting, full-strength "peppermint patties" of Truth.

AMAZING PSYCHIC CHILD IN JAPAN

Excerpted from the emissaryoflight.com Internet website, for 11/26/02: [quoting]

Beloved Friends,

I want to tell you about an amazing psychic child I met while visiting Japan, and how he is helping us design the new "Spoonbenders" Internet course we will launch in January.

Koya (which means "I am Light") is a four-year-old Japanese boy who was born completely paralyzed. When he was about one year old, a Japanese healer worked with him, giving him limited use of his body. Almost immediately Koya began trying to communicate with those around him.

Though he could not speak, he was soon able to use a letter board to share his insights. He shared his thoughts about world peace and using energy to heal.

People have come from all around Japan to be in his presence, and to experience his life-changing ideas. (There are over 400 schools for psychic children in Japan, an amazing fact.)

Early on in my tour of Japan I could feel the presence of a powerful young boy, though I did not know who he was, only that I would soon be meeting him. He told me that he has much to share about using energy to awaken psychic powers and how to use those powers to bring peace.

On November 22 we traveled to Hiroshima, where around one hundred and fifty people gathered for a peace meditation at the Peace Memorial Park. When I finished my talk, the organizers took me by the hand and led me to a small boy lying in a stroller. He could not move much on his own, and his father picked him up to bring him close. His mother then held the letter board in front of him and his finger began moving from letter to letter.

One of the first things he said was: "I've been sending you energy for a long time. Has you felt it?" I asked him if he is the boy who has been psychically communicating with me and helping me design the "Spoonbenders" course. He touched his finger board and said yes, and that he was glad I felt him.

He then offered a profound meditation and chant he said would open important energy centers, allowing us to bend metal with our minds, then use that same power to bend the world towards peace.

I have since shared that meditation and chant with several audiences in Japan, and the results have been amazing. It will be one of the foundations of the "Spoonbenders" course. (All of this was videotaped and will soon be available on our website.)

Later that night I performed a concert in Hiroshima, and Koya attended with his parents. When the concert was over, he came backstage and said he had a message for us all.

This is what he said: "Tell everyone that peace is coming very soon. It will happen very fast and will be very fun. Tell everyone this so they will know."

This experience dramatically impacted me, and now I am even more excited about presenting the first "Spoonbenders" Internet course. (This is a four-week free-or-by-donation course we will launch the beginning of January. The goal is to have over 100,000 people using these powerful techniques, then apply them as a single group to promote peace.) We will be using the chant Koya shared with me, as well as other techniques from the children.

I believe that these tools will help anyone master bending metal with the mind, and then use it for much more important applications. Koya said he would continue to work with us, and will share new techniques in the future.

There is a picture of Koya and I on our emissaryoflight.com Internet website.

It's amazing how things are falling into place as we step forward as Spiritual Warriors. The time is right for this, and the Universe is supporting us all.

In Peace, James Twyman

Did you catch that about the Japanese having more than 400 schools to help develop the wise old souls incarnating as gifted children at this time of the Great Awakening? And what are we doing here in the United States—why, trying our best to stupefy them with Ritalin and Prozac and all the rest of the related drugs and vaccines and “educational” programs, because they are rightly recognized as a formidable threat to the would-be kings and their longtime imposed mind-control of the masses. They are here to awaken the masses to the true Potential of the human—and that they shall do!

DAVID ICKE NEEDS YOUR HELP

From an e-mail, 11/15/02:

[quoting]

David Icke Needs Your Help!

Richard Warman has issued a libel writ for one million dollars against David Icke EIGHTEEN MONTHS after David's book Children Of The Matrix was published because of what David wrote about his actions against his talks and books.

Warman didn't even make his first complaint to David, or to the publisher about it, until ELEVEN AND A HALF MONTHS after he first read it. This is, of course, a desperate attempt to take David's books out of circulation by destroying him financially. That's the motivation, not libel.

David says: “I do need help, that's for sure, and quick. I need people involved in the Vancouver events, both organisers and people who came to watch, to send me signed affidavits stating that I am not anti-Semitic, not a hatemonger, and detailing their experiences and consequences of Warman's actions where relevant.

“I need all the help I can get, because this is going to be a case that could decide if any freedom is going to remain in Canada, or whether these guys are going to take it all away. If I lose—and I can only do so through a lack of support and a fixed court—then that's the end of all my books.”

“By the way, to give you a laugh, one of his reasons to claim a million dollars in damages is that I call him a censor. No kidding.

“I am not racist, anti-Semitic, or a hatemonger. I talk of the need for love, tolerance, and coming together—not hatred and division. I need everyone who believes this, people who come to the talks, read the books, etc, saying the same.

“I also need everyone to detail their experience of Richard Warman and how he, and the campaign against me in general, has affected their lives, income, and the way people see them.

“I also need affidavits from every freedom of speech-type organisation you can think of condemning what has been done to me by Warman and Farber etc.”

They need to be sent to: Rocco Galati, 637 College Street, Suite 203, Toronto, Ontario M6G 1B5. [end quoting]

This is an obvious attempt to stop David from any more telling of The Truth. But remember: Evil must always wear a sign: just look at the last name of the person attacking David! In his own telling, this is not a man of peace and goodwill.

SMALLPOX VACCINE REACTIONS JOLT EXPERTS FROM RASHES TO FEVERS, ARRAY OF SIDE-EFFECTS IS UNCOMMON TODAY

From the www.washingtonpost.com Internet website, 12/5/02: [quoting]

by Ceci Connolly, Washington Post Staff Writer

As physical specimens, the Baylor University students were fit and healthy, the “crème de la crème” in the words of researcher Kathy Edwards. Yet when she inoculated them with smallpox vaccine, arms swelled, temperatures spiked, and panic spread.

It was the same at clinics in Iowa, Tennessee, and California. Of 200 young adults who received the vaccine as part of a recent government study, one-third missed at least one day of work or school, 75 had high fevers, and several were put on antibiotics because physicians worried that their blisters signaled a bacterial infection.

Even for experts such as Edwards, the Vanderbilt University physician overseeing the study, the side-effects were startling. “I can read all day about it, but seeing it is quite impressive” she said. “The reactions we saw were really quite remarkable.”

President Bush is poised to announce plans, perhaps as early as this week, to resume vaccinating Americans against smallpox as part of a massive push to protect the nation from a biological assault. As he weighs the decision, researchers are becoming reacquainted with the unpleasant—often severe—complications of the vaccine.

The experiences in a half-dozen clinical trials offer an early look at what military personnel, hospital workers, and other emergency workers will likely encounter if Bush adopts the recommendations of his top health advisers to vaccinate as many as 11 million people in the coming months. What is disconcerting, say the people participating in the clinical trials, is that when it comes to smallpox vaccination, what had once been considered ordinary is rather extraordinary by today's standards.

“I just wanted to go to bed for a day or two there” said Alison Francis, a New York University graduate student who received the vaccine. Francis, 24, said she felt tired and achy after getting her shot. Her arm was heavy, warm to the touch, and terribly itchy. “I thought: ‘Can you just chop off my arm?’ ”

Participating in the study was part patriotism and part selfishness, she said. “Now I'm protected.” [Don't bet on that!]

Once among the deadliest scourges on Earth, smallpox was declared eradicated worldwide in 1981. But growing hostilities with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, Osama bin Laden, and others have renewed fears that the virus could be used as a potent, stealthy weapon.

Vaccination is surefire protection against the disease, but it is risky. For every 1 million vaccinated, between 15 and 52 people will suffer life-threatening consequences such as brain inflammation, and one or two will die, according to historical data. Pregnant women, babies, people with eczema or weakened immune systems should not receive the vaccine.

Federal health officials have proposed resuming vaccination in stages, beginning with as many as 500,000 hospital workers most likely to see an initial case. Later, as many as 10 million police, fire, and medical personnel would be offered the vaccine. The Pentagon hopes to vaccinate 500,000 soldiers.

Over the past year, federal researchers have been testing the 40-year-old vaccine for its safety and potency. None of the 1,500 volunteers has died or been seriously injured by the vaccine. But even the most mundane cases can be disturbing to doctors and patients unaccustomed to the live virus used in the vaccine and its side-effects.

Unlike most modern vaccines, the smallpox vaccine is administered by 15 quick pricks that "establish an infection in your skin" said Julie Gerberding, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta. "There is the immediate discomfort of getting poked in the arm and a range of annoying reactions."

Within three to four days, a red itchy bump develops, followed by a larger blister filled with pus. In the second week, the blister dries and turns into a scab that usually falls off in the third week. During the three weeks, many people experience flu-like symptoms—aches, fever, lethargy—and terrible itchiness.

"You can't scratch it; it's all bandaged up; all I could do was smack it" said Meg Gifford, a University of Maryland junior who participated in one study. For a weekend, she was "pretty miserable" suffering from a slight fever, an arm that was hot to the touch, and swollen lymph nodes in her armpit.

At the University of Rochester Medical Center, researcher John Treanor saw a wide range of reactions, from a small rash to swelling the size of a grapefruit. About 5% of the 170 participants had rashes that spread to other parts of the body. It took time and experience, he said, for the team to get comfortable with the natural course of the vaccine.

"The reactions we are seeing are totally out of line with today's vaccine experience and absolutely in line with historical experience" said Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. "In the 30 years since we had routine vaccination, the public's tolerance level has gone way down."

Maryland researchers have begun a second trial revaccinating older adults to see how much immunity stays in the system. Early indications are that people who have been previously inoculated do not suffer as many severe side effects. "I had a small red mark and that was about it" said Edward Dudley, 33.

Very few of today's physicians have administered the vaccine or treated its side effects. Even at the CDC, where health experts work with an array of germs, smallpox vaccinations were briefly halted when 10 people had serious enough reactions to begin antibiotics, said Walter Orenstein, director of the CDC's National Immunization Program.

"The clinic physician couldn't decide if this was a normal, primary exuberant take, or a bacterial infection" he said. He added that, in fact, the swollen, itchy, red arms were routine.

As a first-year medical student 33 years ago, Orenstein was so alarmed by the fever, swollen glands and red streak up his arm after he was vaccinated that he went to the emergency room for antibiotics. "I respect this vaccine" he said.

If Bush moves forward with vaccination, Edwards warns doctors to expect the array of unsightly, unfamiliar complications that will come.

"You are going to have to be prepared to see these individuals and to see really bad takes" she told state health officers. "You'll wonder if they are bacterial infections; in some cases the rash will move up the arm and onto the chest. The vaccinee requires a lot of TLC."

It's likely that most of you see quite well between the lines of this damage-control propaganda fable. Obviously it's time to condition the public—including the medical community—to some very nasty possibilities. Notice there is no commentary on longer-term side-effects.

You might want to go back and re-read the article Dr. Len Horowitz Blasts Mandatory Smallpox Vaccinations in the July 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM for a reality check. LONGTIME CRIMINAL APPOINTED BY PRESIDENT BUSH TO HEAD 9/11 INVESTIGATION

Excerpted from the rense.com Internet website, 11/28/02: [quoting]

From a review by Mike McGlothlin of Christopher Hitchens' Trial Of Henry Kissinger:

Aliases: Henry Alfred Kissinger, Heinz Alfred Kissinger, Butcher of Cambodia.

The February and March 2001 issues of Harper's magazine feature a series by Christopher Hitchens on the case for charging Kissinger with War Crimes. Part I: The making of a war criminal; Part II features an extensive section on East Timor.

Hitchens presents a rather straightforward argument that establishes two seemingly undeniable propositions: on at least one occasion, Henry Kissinger conspired to commit murder; and on numerous other occasions, Henry Kissinger was the primary force behind certain acts that could quite plausibly be considered war crimes.

The case for Kissinger as murder conspirator is what Hitchens calls a "lay-down" case, i.e., one that stands out for its clear facts and clear law. The murder victim is General Rene Schneider, who was the Commander in Chief of the Chilean Army, whom Hitchens misidentifies as the Chilean "Chief of Staff".

According to Hitchens (and the 9 September 1970 minutes of the "40" Committee, the Kissinger-chaired secret panel that oversaw U.S. covert operations), the Chilean military had a strong tradition of neutrality in political affairs, a rarity on the South American continent. General Schneider was known as an officer committed to upholding the Chilean constitution and was therefore opposed to the rumored incipient coup against newly elected Socialist President Salvador Allende by a right-wing would-be junta of current and former Chilean military officers.

Using U.S. Government communications cables from the CIA, and documents from the State Department and White House, Hitchens relates the facts of Kissinger's direct involvement in the direction, planning, financing, and general support by the organs of the U.S. Government in the plot to remove General Schneider.

From the Village Voice, for the week of August 15-21, 2001:

How You Can Do What The Government Won't: Arrest Henry Kissinger — Manhattan's Milosevic.

Bring Henry Kissinger to justice for crimes against humanity. Consider, though, what happened to the last people to talk even jokingly about plans for a citizens' arrest of the real-life model for "Dr. Strangelove". An indictment of Henry Kissinger for genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes would include (but not be confined to) the following....

Incredibly, Henry Kissinger—the man who rivals Pol Pot for the dubious honor of being the person responsible for the death of the largest number of innocent people in Southeast Asia (and far surpasses Pol Pot in criminality when one factors in Kissinger's various levels of responsibility for wholesale slaughter and repression in other parts of the world)—still wields significant power in the United States; but his role as eager facilitator of mass murder, totalitarian repression and other atrocities is never discussed in polite society....

[end quoting]

Here's an extreme case of having one of the world's most powerful and most notorious FOXES put into the position to investigate the HENHOUSE! I can't think of a better example of the would-be-kings thumbing their noses at we-the-sheep. It's a good test for them to see how many Americans are asleep or could care less about rising up in indignation over such a choice as Kissinger to head the 9/11 investigation commission.

HOMELAND SECURITY BILL DECLARES WAR ON CITIZENRY

From the rense.com Internet website, 11/21/02: [quoting] by John Kaminski

Now, no one is safe from America's killer president.

The Senate's passage of the ludicrously misnamed Homeland Security Bill is easily the biggest bad joke in American history, because in declaring war on all peoples of the world—including its own citizens—it presages a new Dark Age in world history, one in which the United States may annihilate any other country for any reason it concocts, or for no reason at all. The bill is ludicrously misnamed because nothing in this nation's history has ever jeopardized its citizens' security to this degree.

Most tragic of all, however, is the complete destruction of that beacon of hope for the whole world for two centuries, the U.S. Constitution. Completely gone are the right to a fair trial, the right to be safe in one's home, the right to confront one's accuser, the right to legal representation, and the right to be recognized as innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

Now, America simply kills mere suspects from the air with unmanned planes, or throws them into jail without possibility of trial, arbitrarily decreed guilty by biased political functionaries, and executed with no chance to prove one's innocence. And further, Attorney General John Ashcroft plans further incursions into America's privacy by placing new restrictions on Internet and telephone communications.

Though surely few in Congress realize it yet, America's legislators essentially voted themselves out of existence by passing the bill, because now the majority of governmental security functions are lumped together under the arbitrary aegis of Homeland Security, bypassing Congress with its decision-making controlled directly by the president and his unconfirmed henchman, the director of Homeland Security. Congress is now merely window-dressing (as it has been for many years) for the criminal charades of the dictator, which is exactly what happened to the Roman republic all those long years ago.

Congress has approved the mass killing of many American citizens by passing the Homeland Security Bill by shamefully wide margins in both the House and the Senate. A "minor" provision in the legislation gives absolute authority to nonmedical administrative personnel to mandate dangerous, untested vaccinations on all American citizens. Since so many American military personnel died from receiving untested and mysterious vaccinations prior to the first Gulf War, and since vaccine stores, presumably to be used in mass vaccinations, are either out-of-date or untested, many fatalities are expected from these dangerous

Most conscientious doctors have advocated refusing the shots, but the legislation provides for arrest (and possible confiscation of property) of those refusing to accept "legally" ordered vaccinations.

Adding a provision that protects manufacturers of the ingredients from malpractice lawsuits in the event of death or infirmity is another sardonic insult included in the legislation. And investigating the real owners of the companies who are about to foist these injurious substances on ignorant Americans reveals them to be insiders of the highest echelon, some with direct ties to the president's father.

In addition, medical opinion reveals this whole issue to be a complete, cynical, financial boondoggle. The Centers for Disease Control has announced the new smallpox vaccine is not to be recommended for HIV people, anyone on immunosuppressive drugs, or anyone with eczema.

The CDC quoted a new study in the Journal Of Allergy And Clinical Immunology describing reactions that include blindness, scarring, and death. So the vaccine is therefore contraindicated in all these cases, according to the CDC.

Eczema patients alone comprise half the U.S. population. AIDS patients and those on immunosuppressive drugs add another significant proportion to the group of those who shouldn't be vaccinated.

In addition, the omniscient media seem to have forgotten that most Americans over 31 years of age have already been vaccinated for smallpox, since the vaccine was only halted in 1971 in the US. Remember? So if the vaccine is supposed to work, then obviously these people will not need a new shot, right?

Then who does that leave? Ten percent of the population would be a reasonable estimate.

It's not much of a stretch to see how the threat of smallpox is a marketing tool—right out of classic Bernays Public Relations 101—that is being used to justify paying vaccine manufacturers $800 million for a vaccine that is unproven, untested, and contraindicated for 90% of the population.

Why then are our new masters shrieking about the 280 million doses we need to protect the American people from this imminent bioterrorist threat?

Could it just be the money?

In addition, it's well known in history that smallpox vaccinations in 19th-century England caused cases of smallpox to skyrocket, from around 2,000 before vaccinations started, to around 80,000 afterwards, which is why most European countries stopped vaccinating then and still don't to this day. Yet our completely untrustworthy Senate approved this measure by a vote of 90-9, that is—approved certain jeopardy for the collective health of the American people simply for hefty campaign contributions from drug companies.

What's important to notice is that smallpox vaccination in the U.S. persisted another 30 years after the disease was at an incidence of practically zero. Again, the only source of death from smallpox in the U.S. for 30 years was from the vaccine itself. (Mendelsohn, p. 232, World Book, 1994)

It's difficult to discern which element of the Homeland Security legislation is actually the worst encroachment on the rapidly eroding independence of America's citizenry. One which has sparked much complaint is the removal of civil service protections for Homeland Security employees, to improve security aspects of America's "war on terror", according to President Bush. This assault on the well-being of American workers nullifies 70 years of battling for justice in the workplace. Another insulting aspect of the bill is a boondoggle "institute" at a Texas university near the president's ranch.

One glaring affront to hardworking Americans was a provision allowing companies that left the country to avoid federal taxes (think the Enron, Halliburton, and Harken models) to be eligible for Homeland Security contracts. This is clearly a sop to the president's close friends, who do business in this exact manner.

If the United States had an actual Attorney General, he would have long ago investigated these criminal cheaters. John Ashcroft only persecutes those who threaten the profits of the American elite, as the mouldering, sabotaged probes into both the 9/11 horror and the anthrax murders clearly indicate. We desperately need an Attorney General who will enforce the laws of the land and protect people—not this insane Pentecostal functionary whose sole purpose seems to be to assist in the destruction of all constitutional protections for average citizens.

Apart from these treasonous intrusions into the lives of ordinary people lurks America's new penchant for starting wars in various areas of the world for purposes that are kept hidden from the general public. The American mass murder in Afghanistan was ostensibly aimed at bringing to justice the alleged perpetrators of the 9/11 disasters. The aim of this mission failed and was forgotten. Now Afghanistan has degenerated into sheer murderous anarchy, drug-smuggling chaos now conveniently overlooked by the world's major newspapers, or consigned to the back pages.

It is important to remember that this is what other countries in the world should look forward to experiencing after the U.S. decides its "war on terror" should cross their borders. What is happening in Afghanistan is what will happen in Iraq, followed by what will happen to other countries on the immediate U.S. hit list. What will be left of the world after that hit list is accomplished? Nothing but misery, rubble, and heaps of innocent corpses, sanctified as the new American export.

And as the current Iraq saga meanders toward a new criminal conclusion, what are we to think of a world of spineless bureaucrats (including our own CIA) who for months protested that President Bush was clearly lying about his reasons to invade that desperate country, but eventually knuckled under to American pressure (read: were bribed into accepting) and joined the sick parade of “democratic” nations ready to once again sacrifice the Iraqi people for the sins of the Zionist petronazis.

In a country known around the world for the power of its democratic institutions to temper dictatorial impulses of its previous leaders, Homeland Security stands as a colossal betrayal of the peoples of the world, because it means that all of the lectures given by America over the years, that democracy was the best way to govern, are now exposed as cynical lies—convenient ruses used by American corporate shills to bleed other countries dry of their natural resources.

Democracy in the United States clearly no longer works, evidenced by the fact that the opposition party—the Democrats, who crafted most of the Homeland Security Bill—no longer opposes in any significant way the expansionist aims of its unelected, undemocratic dictator.

President George W. Bush is remarkable among American presidents for his distinctive lack of business and life achievements prior to assuming his office in Washington. All of his business enterprises were devious shell corporations sustained by his father’s super-rich friends. And now we have a government of just such a nature.

In addition, the second president Bush has “distinguished” himself, through his record of allowing executions of mentally ill persons in Texas, to prove his toughness about “law and order”. Now innocent American people, as well as people all over the world, are about to learn what the people of Afghanistan have so recently and tragically learned: that no life is sacred if it stands in the way of schemes by the power elite to suck billions of dollars from a tottering economy.

Now, no one is safe from America’s executioner par excellence. Just ask Paul Wellstone.

MARCH ON DC & SF. JAN. 18. HALF MILLION EXPECTED!

From the FindTruth [mail to: findtruth200h@hotmail.com] Internet website, 11/30/02: [quoting]

Begin organizing today! Spread the word!

Come to the march on Washington DC & San Francisco, January 18. Begin organizing busses today! A half-million expected. You can make history!

U.S. media, now ranked 17 in press freedom, censored the last march on DC & SF in October, which DC & SF police noted WERE THE BIGGEST ANTI-WAR PROTESTS SINCE VIETNAM—and happening BEFORE the war.

This January 18 marches will likely dwarf the number we saw in October if we all get busy. In October we saw nearly a quarter of a million in DC and nearly 100,000 in San Francisco. The DC marchers filled the boulevards completely encircling the White House with a sea of humanity. And it was so massive that when the front of the march circled round the 3-mile square, they had to wait 30 minutes for the tail of the march to leave the site and enter the boulevard.

Make history with us. Visit the www.internationalanswer.org website for march details—to find busses leaving from your city, or to post your information as a local contact to begin organizing busses. Also, download flyers and posters there for distribution.

[end quoting]

It’s always a good idea to check out who might be sponsoring such marches so that you don’t play into the hands of the wrong people. With that said, for many so inclined, marches are a useful social outlet to express an opinion. There has been no denying the strong statements made by a number of recent massive marches worldwide against Bush and his Iraq war, such as was covered in last month’s News Desk—where the initial anger of the people was then multiplied even more by the news media’s ludicrous attempts to downplay their reporting of such events in major cities all over the world.

NAFTA TO FINALLY CRUSH MEXICO IN JANUARY 2003

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 11/30/02: [quoting]

The lifting of all tariffs on agricultural products entering Mexico—except for corn, beans, sugar, and powdered milk—as scheduled to occur in January 2003, under NAFTA, will bankrupt what remains of Mexican agriculture, upon which at least 27 million Mexicans depend for their livelihood.

Should it go through, genocide will result. Responsible Mexicans, from across many parties and sectors, are demanding the government block implementation of this phase of NAFTA, opening up a bigger fight than any yet faced by President Vicente Fox.

Some people project 70,000 jobs will be lost in a short period of time, nearly doubling the (conservatively estimated) 82,000 permanent jobs lost in the farm sector since Carlos Salinas opened the “ejidos” (community farms) to private investment in 1992. Over that same period of time, the percentage of the rural population attempting to survive under conditions of extreme poverty rose from 44.6% in 1992, to 46.08% in 2002.

The PRD congressional delegation brought a bill before the Congress November 25, which would have the Congress call upon Fox to provisionally pull out of the agriculture section of NAFTA. [end quoting]

This and the fact that the border is purposely kept very open gives the New World Order crooks what they want—a mechanism to force more millions to flee to the U.S. so they can cause more havoc here according to their speeded-up agenda of Martial Law and complete slavery of we-the-people.

It also advances their world depopulation plans as a result of the turmoil and deaths that happen from hunger and desperate criminal activities due to mounting chaos.

SEATBELT TICKETS FROM MILITARY POLICE

From the beyond-the-illusion.com Internet website, in a 11/25/02 message: [quoting]

It was announced on the news today that, in Florida’s yearly push to reduce traffic deaths over the Thanksgiving weekend, Military Police would be helping State Police issue “no seatbelt” tickets! This might sound harmless at first (because, after all, they are just trying to help us protect us from ourselves). But this could also just be a test to see how far we will let the camel get it’s nose into the tent! The news blurb even included an excuse for this action being that more U.S. military people are killed in traffic accidents than in wars.

The real message was in the fact that the military, which has no place in domestic law enforcement, is now involved in domestic law enforcement.

The point is that Military Police are reportedly being used to enforce this law. This is a blatant violation of the intent of Posse Comitatus, but worse, an initial implementation of a Bush military MARTIAL LAW SCHEME [emphasis mine], in conjunction with Bush Executive Orders, the Patriot and Homeland Security Acts, and Ashcroft's Gestapo/Taliban mindset. AL-QAEDA AND HEZBOLLAH PART OF CIA OPERATIONS

From the www.infowars.com Internet website, 11/8/02: [quoting]

Alex Jones Radio Show partial transcript:

Alex Jones: They are doing precisely, exactly what I said they would do. And I even predicted they would try to connect it to the Michigan militia, following the same pattern of Oklahoma City.

They are now saying that there are al-Qaeda training camps in South America. Translate that into CIA training camps in South America. And that is connected to the American right-wing.

Now, I figured this out over two years ago. Why would they have Iraqis involved in the Oklahoma City bombing, and then cover it up when good police arrested the Iraqis with the eyewitnesses pointing them out? Clinton ordered the Iraqis released. They declared "national security" in two separate Freedom Of Information Act trials.

On the surveillance cameras, they would never release those. So we had FBI in the building. We even know their names, with CIA, actually planting the bombs. We have the diversionary blasts outside with McVeigh and Al Hussaini Hussain of the Iraqi Republican Guard.

They connect Oklahoma City to right-wing with their McVeigh patsy they had traveling around the country trying to meet with every right-winger he could, creating that trail. They then set up the Omnibus Crime Bill, Effective Death Penalty package, the Anti-Terrorism package. Those three separate pieces of legislation, two separate pieces of legislation, they got that passed. And I kept saying: you watch, they are waiting on this to link it up and to say that the American right-wing works for Saddam and bin Laden.

This is a MASSIVE set-up and they are now activating it. This is the first thing Bush's people put out after they sweep the House, the Senate and, of course, the executive, and now the judicial—the first time since the Great Depression.

And they're moving hard; they're moving fast.

We've got to get ahead of this thing, which I tried to do years and months ago on this show. We've got to let people understand what's really going on here.

This is how they are going to activate Homeland Security against the American people, ladies and gentlemen. It is dastardly. It is wicked. It's cold-blooded. It is New World Order M.O., one-hundred-and-ten percent. They are now doing it.

The government bombs Oklahoma City, and they blame it on the right wing. They involve Iraqis and set-up that trail. When they bring it out that Iraq bombed Oklahoma City, which they've already been doing in the national news, we need to point out: Well, why did you then seize the surveillance cameras, all 12 of them—the tapes, showing the Iraqis? Why would police arrest them to order their release?

We need to start asking that question when they try to do this. That's the most powerful tool we've got. Call every talk show now. Call every radio show. Call C-Span in the morning whenever they open those phones up. Call the White House.

Call Congress and tell them: Hey, why did you grab those surveillance camera tapes then—that show the Islamics bombing the building, the Iraqis? Why didn't you keep them in custody after they'd been arrested? Clinton: why did you order their release? Why did George Bush, Sr. bring 3,400 of them in after the Gulf War? Why? Why? Why?

The answer is simple. This government is illegitimate and is behind the attacks. That is an absolute documented fact.

I'll cover the transcript. I'll cover all the other news. There is so much of it today.

[BREAK]

All right, we are attempting right now to get Joe Pilchak on the show. He was a gubernatorial candidate in Michigan and, of course, he was former commander of the Michigan Militia, which had a lot of good people in it but which was thoroughly infiltrated by the globalists and set-up for patsy operations, years ago. Why am I bringing this up? With Bush saying we are going into Iraq and saying that Iraq is sure to attack us, perhaps with nuclear weapons. I've got all this news—just incredible stuff.

"The UN Council Okays Iraq Resolution" as I told you they would. It was all theatre to act like they were deliberating and to empower the United Nations. Why am I saying this? Because I told you over and over again, listeners, that I had figured out two-and-one-half years ago their plan. Connect right-wing militia groups, conservatives, Christians, home-schoolers—what the FBI has in their manuals—with al-Qaeda, with Iraq, and with all these other organizations.

Bottom line, ladies and gentlemen: And now they've done it. I told you right before they go into Iraq, I told you this, they'll bring out news connecting the right-wing with the terrorists, with the Islamists. Then they will go into Iraq and they will kill Saddam. And as soon as they kill Saddam, as soon as they know he's dead—and it won't be announced on the news—they will detonate weapons in this country.

They will level cities. They will release biologicals. They will create untold mayhem. That is, the government will. And now they are doing it. Now I'm more sure than ever. I've gone from 95% sure to 98% sure. Do you hear me? From 95% sure to 98% sure. We can drive that down to 50-50 by totally getting on the phones, going absolutely ape and calling and telling everybody and pointing this out.

Point out why did good FBI arrest 5 members of the Iraqi Republican Guard who were involved in the Oklahoma City bombing with the FBI and the CIA? Why were they ordered to release them by Bill Clinton? Why did George Bush, Sr. bring these Iraqis in, who had been trained here in the '80s, brought back in the early 90s? Why did they declare "national security" on the surveillance camera tapes—showing the Iraqis bombing? Because they were saving that until they were ready to move in, take out Iraq. You see, they could have done that in '91, but they weren't ready. They needed to get their terrorism police state set-up here first. Then they move ahead with the next phase.

I'm giving you the actual policy analysis and strategy and operational program manual. I've never seen it, but I know what it reads, word for word, because an organization as big as the New World Order has to set up its different cadres, it's compartmentalized systems. It has to give them orders. It has to put out directives that we can read. And, at the same time, it has to prepare as a Galligher, prepare the ground, the minds of the people of who the enemy is and what's going to happen.

So, analyzing the propaganda, the declassified reports we have and the long-term strategy, I know exactly, precisely, 110% totally, what their program is. And it is horrible. It is horrible.

We are here preparing to go into the final phase of the New World Order takeover, ladies and gentlemen.

It is mind-blowing. And you're saying: okay Alex, what are you getting at?

Connie Chung. Last night's transcript, CNN's Connie Chung Tonight. And she came back and said, from one of her reports:

"But what about al-Qaeda? A new article in Vanity Fair raises the disturbing specter of al-Qaeda training camps in a terrorist haven closer to the U.S. than may have been imagined, right in South America, in the region where Argentina, Paraguay, and Brazil meet, known as the Triple Border. How long has American intelligence known about this? And could information from the region have prevented September 11?"

They go on to say they have confirmed information from Bush, from the CIA. Yes, the people carrying out the terrorist attacks, that they have the Michigan militia, White Supremacists, and al-Qaeda training there. If you believe that, I've got a bridge on the Moon I want to sell you. This is asinine.

So here's the program. Here's the operation IN YOUR FACE. Sebastian Junger, Contributing Editor, Vanity Fair, is the guest Connie is interviewing:

Chung: All right, based on your reporting, what can you tell us about Triple Border?

Junger: Well, it's an area with a lot of black-market activity, a large Muslim population. And Hezbollah has been there for about 10 years.

Well, who founded Hezbollah in 1973, according to a ten-part report by United Press International? Israel.

They mounted two attacks in Argentina from there in the early '90s. And now it looks like al-Qaeda and other terrorist organizations from around the world are there as well.

Chung: Did the United States know about this Triple Border?

Junger: Yes and no. My understanding—its always a murky story, of course—but the CIA asked Argentina intelligence to infiltrate Triple Border in the mid-'90s to find out about Hezbollah. And when Argentine intelligence came back with was not only Hezbollah, but al-Qaeda. And that was so incredible to the CIA, they basically dismissed it. They said: "That's not possible."

Now they have picked it up quite vigorously, of course. But, for a while, they lost a couple of years there.

Chung: And you connected with a former Argentine intelligence officer. And the most shocking thing, I think, is that, seven months before 9/11, he wrote a letter to U.S. authorities.

Junger: Yes, he wrote a letter. He claims he wrote a letter to Ambassador Walsh in Argentina, warning of attacks on September 11. He didn't say September 11, but he said in the next half-year or so that suicide pilots will fly planes into buildings.

(Yeah, we said that here on the air. Because the U.S. government was setting it up.)

That is corroborated by a young Moroccan who was an al-Qaeda operative in Brazil, named Abdel Fatah, who one week beforehand, had a change of heart and tried to get a letter to U.S. authorities warning about September 11.

(Just like the Taliban minister gave us specifics two weeks before, and he is the only one in custody now, of any high-level al-Qaeda or Taliban? Everybody warned this government. They were running the operation!)

Clearly he was ignored. Clearly, this information was on the street in South America in the months preceding September 11. Why would that be? Well, obviously, al-Qaeda is there.

Chung: Well, did this former intelligence officer, Argentinian, specify even the buildings and what would be hit?

Junger: Yes, he had a list. He said White House. Obviously, they weren't all hit. But he said possible targets are White House, Congress, Twin Towers, Pentagon.

He also said the planes would have explosives in them, which, apparently, they didn't. But obviously, his information is not perfect, but he had an extraordinary amount of detailed knowledge, and also about who was in the Triple Border. He has names, surveillance photos of Hezbollah and al-Qaeda agents who have passed through there.

Chung: Well, but, then, why did the United States not consider him credible? Why didn't authorities here take it seriously?

Junger: Well, to be fair, I think U.S. authorities get a lot of sort of crackpots who contact them about sort of catastrophic warnings. I think they get a lot of that. My contact down there also has a very complicated history with his own government. He tried to warn his own government about terrorist attacks. They ignored him. He spent some time in jail. He's a complicated figure.

(By the way, some of these bombings I've already researched, that went on down in Latin America. They're all CIA. It was always against a government that they didn't like or against a government they did like but then blamed it on rebels.)

I also think, ultimately, they couldn't imagine that it could be true.

Chung: Now, you mentioned that he also provided photographs that you were able to examine.

Junger: Yes. He has dozens and dozens of photographs of men who he says are al-Qaeda and Hezbollah operatives down there.

Chung: And did he pass this along to U.S. authorities as well?

Junger: He passed them along to me, and I sent them along.

Chung: And what did they consist of? Were they people who are now identifiable or prospective terrorists?

Junger: He's identified them, including American right-wing extremists who are down there, who have been down there since the mid-'80s.

Chung: You mean Aryan Nations?

Junger: Yes, Aryan Nations, Michigan Militia, photos and names of these guys. One was ex-special forces.

Chung: An ex-special forces?

Junger: Yes, Vietnam era. That is not unheard of. There was an ex-special forces American soldier who was providing security for bin Laden in Sudan in '94, I believe it was. So, that kind of crossover from sort of alienated American military or right-wing extremists is not unheard of.

He has identified these men to me. The U.S. government, of course, is quite careful about what they confirm and don't confirm. So I haven't gotten anything back from this side. But there's an enormous amount of evidence that this activity is happening.

He goes on to say that he does have sources inside the U.S. government.

Folks, the Republican report put out by the Senate Committee in '99 said al-Qaeda was there with the CIA running the attack on the Serbs. Of course, they're "former" Special Forces soldiers around al-Qaeda. Al-Qaeda works for the globalists, for the U.S. Government. I told you this was coming. Absolutely assured of it. This is how they sic Homeland Security on the American people. We've got to get out who is really behind the terrorism now.

We know what the globalist plan is. They carry out terrorist attacks. They have right-wing patsys at the scenes. They have Iraqis in their employ since the '80s, right through the '90s. Until today, seen on tape. They shelve that information and wait to release it until they move into the next phase of their operation—global domination. That's how they get their domestic operations rolling.

I told you this was the plan, and now they are putting it out on talk radio—all over the place, going Iraqis—we're in love. Of course, they don't say WHY were they in custody and released by the federal government right after Oklahoma City, the week after. Why won't they release the surveillance camera tapes? Why did the founder of the FBI Hostage Rescue Team and the chief of terrorism, that individual, why did he have hotel receipts as being checked-in the night before the bombing, but claimed it was in a whole other state?

And he had to drive as fast as he could to get there because all the planes were busy. There was no record, of course, so he had to say he drove. Why were Feds seen by Jane Graham, the head of HUD there in the building, planting what she said were large gray sticks of butter, plastic explosives. And now they're doing it just like we knew they would. And, boy, you want me to tell you what they'll do after they launch this story? They'll launch this story just in time to get it in your minds that it's the right-wing when cities start vaporizing.

Bush said yesterday in his speech that, you know, al-Qaeda could hit us, and he mentioned his Cincinnati speech where he said that nuclear, chemical, or biological—they could destroy a whole city just like that and leave no fingerprints. Oh, we know they'll be no fingerprints! So you can never get caught for what you are about to do—and things you and your kind have already done.

That's why I boldly get up here on this show and tell you the truth. What's the first thing our so-called right-wing president does once he gets in office? Once he gets his sweep going? Once he gets control of all three branches of government? Why, they start floating their stories that the right-wing is going to get you.

Now the UN has signed onto the Iraq Resolution, and when they've killed Saddam, they've killed their patsy so he can't speak up. Then they are going to tear this country apart, perhaps other countries, and they are going with a wave of untold terrorism and say Saddam did it with the right-wing.

What are we going to do?

And the left-wing will embrace Bush in a vitriolic blood-lust, saying it's so good, we love Bush. He's saving us from the right-wing. This is so sick. It makes my head spin.

This is America, ladies and gentlemen. This is the reality. I told you this. I told you this on Monday. I told you this on Tuesday. I told you this on Wednesday. I told you this a month ago. I told you this precisely a year ago. I kept telling you and warning you and telling you and warning you, over and over and over again. And now it's happening. Now it's unfolding. Now it's developing.

This is their program. This is their operation. I might as well just have the secret documents in front of me.

Alex Jones: Let's go to Joe Pilchak, former commander Michigan Militia, gubernatorial candidate. They set this whole thing up in '95 after the Oklahoma City bombing. Remember that? Over and over again it is the government itself. Joe, it's all unfolding, isn't it?

Joe Pilchak: It sure is Alex. I got a call from my wife this morning about the Connie Chung interview. And the first thing I picked up, as you mentioned, was they said that Michigan Militia was down there in '85. Actually, Michigan Militia wasn't started until March of '94.

A little bit of background on myself, I joined the Militia in August of '94, started the Brigade in St. Clair County in September of '94. I've been Brigade Commander of that brigade ever since. I've been Divisional Commander for about 5 years, Southeast Michigan, and in '98 up to 2000, I was State Commander. After two years, thought that we needed a little bit of a rest. The Michigan Militia—we are not a bunch of terrorists. We are a bunch of patriots. We swear an oath to uphold the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. We've got a good reputation.

Most of the politicians and elected officials in the state, including the sheriff of our county, publicly stood up for us and said that we are good, honest citizens and they have no problem with it.

Here is yet another example illustrating how the strings of the various puppets inevitably connect to the same World Controllers through their various agents-in-disguise. The central question at this time is: How many people can see what is REALLY going on and how many still fall for the shenanigans being orchestrated to mind-control the masses into certain beliefs advantageous to the agenda of the World Control crooks?

The events from 9/11 onward have been suspicious enough to awaken many who otherwise would have remained asleep to The Truth. In that regard, the agenda of the World Elite is backfiring on them. And in that state of panic, the harder they try to further deflect attention to such as "terrorists", the more the TRUE terrorists are being exposed!

BUSH TO PRIVATIZE JOBS

From the Daily News, Los Angeles, for 11/15/02: [quoting]

As Many As 850,000 Federal Positions Could Be Affected

by Ron Hutcheson

The Bush Administration announced

plans Thursday to turn over as many as 850,000 federal jobs to private companies in an effort to improve service and cut costs.

[And if you believe that carrot, there's always a bridge on the Moon for sale.]

The proposal could eliminate about half of the 1.7 million federal civilian workers by contracting-out jobs ranging from lawn mowing to satellite tracking. Private companies could bid for the work under a process that may be outlined as early as today in the Federal Register, which gives public notice of all government actions.

The aggressive effort to pare down the federal work force is sure to inflame labor unions already upset by President George W. Bush's plan to waive civil service protections at his new Department of Homeland Security.

Bush Administration officials say they can impose the new bidding process without congressional approval after a 30-day review period.

[There's yet another end-run around Congress by a confidently arrogant Administration.]

"The Bush Administration seems fairly antagonistic toward its federal employee work force. If they can't bust their unions or take away their civil service protections, they're going to privatize their jobs" said John Threlkeld, a spokesman for the American Federation of Government Employees, a 600,000 member affiliate of the AFL-CIO.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan did not answer directly when asked if federal workers should fear for their jobs.

"What the proposal does is simply open it up to competition" he said. "What we're trying to do is make government work better for the American taxpayer."

Advocates of contracting out government services predict savings of more than 30 percent when federal jobs are put out for competitive bids. Skeptics contend the government is ill-equipped to monitor work by private contractors, who may skimp on quality.

The federal government has a long history of contracting out some work, mainly office services and blue-collar jobs, but Bush would give private companies a shot at almost any job that is not an essential government function. The guidelines are intended to speed up and simplify the competitive bidding process to encourage more participation by the private sector.

The Office of Management and Budget has identified dozens of job categories that could be turned over to private contractors, including security in government buildings, aircraft and railway maintenance, geological surveys, and legal services. [end quoting]

Who do you think would get these lucrative privatized jobs? You don't suppose it would be more Bush cronies? And if enough jobs were under such "favoritism" allegiance, might that guarantee a strong "Republican" presence in Washington regardless of who thinks they control the White house or Congress? Hmmm.

Bank of America laid off about 240 people in San Francisco this past week. Their intent is to lay off 500 in California this month and next month in tech and ops. The reason: to outsource their computer programming to India. CANADIAN OFFICIAL CALLS BUSH A "MORON"

by David Ljunggren

OTTAWA — Canada declined on Thursday to comment on reports that a senior Canadian official at the NATO summit in Prague had referred to President Bush as "a moron".

The reports are unlikely to improve the already rocky relationship between Bush and Prime Minister Jean Chretien, who is clearly uncomfortable with the president's stance on many issues, including his threats of war against Iraq.

The National Post and the Ottawa Sun newspapers said a top Canadian official expressed frustration that Bush seemed more keen on building up moral support for a possible assault on Iraq rather than focusing on NATO expansion, the official focus of the Prague summit.

"What a moron" the papers quoted the official as saying during a discussion with Canadian reporters on Wednesday evening in Prague. A spokesman for Chretien in Ottawa declined to comment on the incident, saying: "We don't comment on unattributed comments."

Let's see now, from Canada we have "idiot" and "moron" describing Bush Junior in the major press. In last month's News Desk we shared comments that he was showing signs of "serious mental strain" at the APEC economic summit in Mexico. Well, considering all the evidence honestly, such comments are hard to argue against.

Furthermore, Bush Junior is probably the best example we have revealing the existence of a masterminding secret Shadow Government—because there is little evidence to suggest he could be masterminding much of anything he is being blamed for!

NEW EVIDENCE OF FRAUD IN CA POWER CRISIS

Excerpted from the Brooks Times, for 11/16/02: [quoting]

by Nancy Rivera, Brooks Times Staff Writer

Workers at AES Corporation and Williams Cos. agreed to idle California plants to drive up electricity prices, federal regulators allege. New evidence has emerged that AES Corp. and Williams Cos. conspired to squeeze electricity supplies to California in early 2000, drawing an angry response Friday from state officials and bolstering contentions that the enormously expensive energy crisis was at least partly a fraud.

Indications of bogus power plant shutdowns, released Friday by federal regulators, may threaten a settlement unveiled Monday in which the state agreed to drop lawsuits accusing Williams of price gouging during the energy meltdown of 2000-01 in exchange for concessions by Williams on long-term electricity contracts.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) released a previously sealed investigation Friday showing Williams employees cutting deals in April and May 2000 with AES employees to shut down one Southern California power plant that AES operated for Williams, and prolong a maintenance closure at another.

The FERC investigation found that Williams employee Rhonda Morgan, in two taped telephone conversations, told an AES worker on April 27 that "Williams wanted the outage to run long" at a Long Beach power plant that had closed for repairs two days before.

In a conversation later that day with Eric Pendergraft, identified in the FERC report as a high-ranking AES employee, Morgan said: "I don't wanna do something underhanded, but if there's work you can continue to do—"

Pendergraft responded: "I understand. You don't have to talk anymore."

AES extended the outage through May 5.

Williams, which has a contract to market the electricity from AES electricity plants in California, earned more than $10 million by selling more expensive electricity from other AES plants to the California Independent System Operator during the outages at the Long Beach and Huntington Beach plants, totaling 17 days, FERC investigators found.

AES and Williams settled the inquiry in April 2001, without admitting wrongdoing, after Williams agreed to refund $8 million to Cal-ISO—$2 million less than the profit Williams made. Cal-ISO runs electricity markets for last-minute power and operates the long-distance transmission grid serving about 75% of the state.

The disclosures give added juice to accusations that energy suppliers worked together to drive up prices in the state's electricity markets, which were created under California's ill-fated venture into power deregulation. In May, FERC released Enron Corp. documents showing that the energy company used trading tactics to create artificial shortages and boost prices.

Former Enron trader Timothy N. Belden has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit wire fraud in connection with the ploys, and the Justice Department and the California attorney general are pursuing separate antitrust investigations against other energy suppliers, including AES of Arlington VA, and Williams of Tulsa OK.

The fresh evidence released Friday presented California officials an opportunity to renew demands that FERC order $9 billion returned to the state for alleged overcharges during the energy crisis. But a top state official said California is unlikely to gain any ground in that proceeding because the allegations come as part of an investigation that was settled last year and because a recent FERC ruling limited the kinds of evidence that the state can present.

At the very least, the damaging new details gleaned from recorded conversations between Williams and AES employees—who at times laugh at their "games" that earned Williams a more than tenfold profit on its power—gave California politicians a chance to claim vindication and accuse FERC of moving too slowly to help the state.

FERC, which acts as a sort of federal utilities commission, was criticized Tuesday in a report by the Democratic staff of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which said the commission failed to devote enough resources to respond aggressively to reports of price gouging or other misdeeds.

IT IS SHAMEFUL FOR THE HOUSE TO LEAVE TOWN WITHOUT HELPING UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

Excerpted from the truthout.com Internet website, 11/22/02: [quoting]

Statement from Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, Friday 11/22/02:

"This is a sad day for a lot of workers. Because of Republican inaction, nearly one million Americans will lose their unemployment benefits three days after Christmas. Without jobs, and without an extension of their unemployment insurance benefits, they are facing a grim holiday season.

"Last week, the Senate unanimously passed a three-month extension of the unemployment insurance program that President Bush signed in March. With a phone call to Speaker Hastert or Representative DeLay, President Bush could have insisted that House Republicans follow the Senate's lead, and provide this much needed help for these hard-hit workers.

"Unfortunately, instead of giving laid-off workers some hope and some help to get through the holiday season, Republican leaders have given them the cold shoulder.

"It is amazing to me that so many who discussed their concern about unemployment on the campaign trail are unwilling to act on that concern now. When the Senate reconvenes, we will continue our work to help those who have lost their jobs, and to strengthen our economy to create new ones."

Washington, DC — House Democratic Leader-Elect Nancy Pelosi denounced House Republicans' decision today to adjourn the 107th Congress without extending unemployment insurance for 800,000 jobless Americans whose benefits will run out three days after Christmas.

"This is a perfect example of the difference between our parties. If the Democrats had been in charge, we would have passed this bill" Pelosi said. "As House Republicans rush home for the holidays, I hope they give some thought to those less fortunate families who will not have much to celebrate this year."

Despite repeated requests by House Democrats today, Republican Leadership refused to even bring to the House floor a bipartisan Senate bill to extend unemployment benefits through March.

In addition to helping workers, unemployment insurance provides a targeted economic stimulus by immediately increasing consumer spending in the hardest-hit areas, Pelosi noted. Boosting consumer spending quickly is one of the most effective ways to bring about an economic recovery.

More than 8 million workers are currently unemployed. The Republicans' refusal to act, means that 800,000 workers will lose their unemployment insurance on December 28, and an additional 90,000 workers per week will lose their benefits.

Millions of Unemployed Workers Start Losing Benefits After Christmas

by Leigh Strope, Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Jo-Anne Hurlston can't find a job after nearly six months of searching, even with her master's degree and experience in education, human resources, and the hospitality industry.

She's one of nearly 1 million unemployed workers across the country who will start losing jobless benefits three days after Christmas because Congress failed to grant an extension before adjourning for the year Friday.

"All the money that's being spent on homeland security and we're left stranded" said Hurlston, 47, a single mother with a 12-year-old daughter. "If they want more money for homeland security, we have to be able to work to pay taxes."

Congress passed a 13-week extension in federal benefits in March, on top of the maximum 26 weeks that laid-off workers typically can receive through states. But the extension benefits start expiring December 28. Since Congress adjourned Friday without acting, an estimated 820,000 people will lose benefits that day, with an additional 95,000 each week thereafter.

Democratic leaders made a last-ditch appeal Thursday to the White House, asking President Bush to urge House Republican leaders to pass the Senate's extension plan. But the White House remained on the sidelines in the debate.

"We strongly urge you to take action to help these families" said the letter from outgoing Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle and House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt. [end quoting]

You can bet your life they would never leave town if it was the issue of increasing their own salaries and benefits. Do you think this kind of treatment might finally cause some of the growing mass of unemployed to begin to pay attention to what their so-called elected representatives are actually up to? It seems the LAST thing on the legislators' list is the welfare of their constituents. Meanwhile, a personal hit in the pocketbook is often the only way to motivate a public who would otherwise be content to look the

Been Losin' Bin Laden: (11/16/02)

This past week, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle ripped into the Bush Administration's "progress" in the war on terror. In the fourteen months since 9/11, bin Laden has evaded capture despite billions of dollars in high-tech spy equipment, a multi-million-dollar reward on his head, and numerous search operations. A reader writes that a survey in Britain reports that "Mr. Bush is viewed as a greater threat to world peace than Saddam Hussein by one in three of those still undecided about the merits of military action." And so the story goes.

Iris Scan: (11/16/02)

John F. Kennedy International Airport is the first in the nation to use iris scanning technology to screen its employees. Approximately 300 employees are voluntarily undergoing the iris scans, which stores 247 traits of the iris into a computer. Officials say the technique is more specific than fingerprinting, which checks for 85 traits. Employees say that they can give their identification cards to anyone, but they cannot give their eyes away.

Checkpoint: (11/16/02)

Beginning this month, November 2002, U.S. Border Patrol agents are allowed to randomly set up checkpoints and stop motorists in the state of Michigan within 25 miles of the Canadian border. Passengers will be asked about their citizenship, and federal agents "will have leeway as to a host of follow-up questions" the Detroit Free Press reported. Southern border states such as Texas and California already have this practice in place. Michigan papers reported that "there are strands of al-Qaeda and Hezbollah and Hamas" according to Special Agent Dawn Clenney with the Detroit FBI. Michigan is one of the first northern border states to implement this program. Watch for more states to join. As always, a slow, steady, progressive step toward losing our freedoms.

Wait A Minute, Mr. Postman: (11/16/02)

This week, my wife Janet was questioned by our postman when he was delivering our mail. Although never friendly or talkative before, he quizzed her about all the mail and boxes he sees coming and going from our home. Was he really interested or is this part of the U.S. Postal Service's spying and reporting program?

Is Anybody There? (11/16/02)

Again, another admission to technology many of our readers have already experienced. Time magazine reports a phone so small that it can be imbedded in a tooth. While there can be no outgoing calls, the tooth phone "receives wireless calls that are heard through inner ear vibrations". Does this announcement surprise anyone?

Our Lady: (11/23/02)

I recently drove into downtown Los Angeles to visit America's newest Catholic Cathedral, Our Lady of the Angels, located, interestingly enough, on Temple Street. The massive complex looks more like a library or college building. Over the front entrance to the chapel area there is a statue of an owl looking down at all who enter. The same owl appears on the U.S. $1 bill. This is an Illuminati symbol that means "swooping down on unsuspecting prey from darkness". Inside, instead of an altar, there is a huge square table, low to the floor. It is capable of holding four humans during ritual. Towards the back there is a Holy Water Font (vaginal symbol) next to a tall, round candle-like structure (phallic symbol). In the guest shop, which overlooks the 101 Freeway, you can buy Lladro statues of Jesus and Mary for several thousand dollars per piece! Looks like this new Cathedral on Temple Street is being set up to be a ritual Temple for the New World Religion.

No More Reserves: (11/23/02)

In line with everything I have said for the last several years, the Bush Administration is now admitting that if the U.S. goes to war with Iraq, tens of thousands of civilian volunteers—members of the Army, Air Force, Navy, Marine, and Coast Guard Reserves, and the National Guard and Air National Guard—will be called up for "as long as they are needed" and possibly two years away from home. These reserves represent 47% of the U.S. military and outnumber the active-duty Army. Once these reserves are deployed overseas, who will help out here at home in case of a national emergency? Who is watching out for the Homeland?

Suicide Surprise? (11/23/02)

No surprise here. A man who was the target of a federal investigation involving the theft of NASA technology reportedly jumped to his death while supposedly logging hours to renew his pilot's license. The fall is not officially being classified as a suicide. The story is that the man bought a $500 computer through a local ad, and when he turned it on he saw some non-sensitive NASA software on it. Suicides and investigations just seem to go hand in hand these days.

True-Ain't: (11/28/02)

Truant officers have been showing up at home-schooling locations across America, threatening to take the children away from parents. The government is now strong-arming parents to put their children in government sanctioned or approved public/private schools where they can be indoctrinated into New World Order mind control and false history. There are over 2 million home-schooled children in the U.S. Studies have shown that they are at least equal to, if not more knowledgeable than, their public/private school counterparts. However, parents who home-school are overwhelmingly anti-New World Order. Therefore, they are a current target of the U.S. government in its efforts to totally control society. [end quoting]

PROMISING NEW APPROACH FOR TREATING CANCER

From an e-mail message, thanks to M. & D. R., 11/21/02: [quoting]

Chinese folk medicine has yielded a promising new approach for treating cancer. Using a dash of logic and modern lab techniques, Seattle scientists have shown that a compound extracted from the wormwood plant seeks out and destroys breast cancer cells, while leaving healthy cells unscathed.

In laboratory experiments, the compound killed, within 16 hours, virtually all human breast cancer cells exposed to it in the test tube, reports Henry Lai, a bioengineering researcher at the University of Washington. Just as importantly, he says, nearly all of the normal cells exposed to it were still alive. And a dog, with a type of bone cancer known as osteosarcoma so severe that it couldn't walk across the room, made a complete recovery within five days of receiving the treatment. X-rays showed the animal's tumor "had basically disappeared" says Lai, adding that he believes the dog is still alive two years later. "Not only does [the drug] appear to be effective, but it's very selective" Lai says. "It's highly toxic to the cancer cells, but has a marginal impact on normal cells."

So what is this "novel" anti-cancer compound? It's called artemisinin—and actually, it isn't new at all. Chinese folk practitioners extracted it from the plant Artemisia annua L., commonly known as Wormwood, thousands of years ago for use in the treatment of malaria, Lai says.

After a "secret recipe" for the treatment was discovered on a stone tablet in the tomb of a prince of the Han Dynasty during an archaeological dig in the 1970s, artemisinin re-emerged as a therapy for the mosquito-borne disease, Lai recalls. In fact, a purified form of the plant compound is now the drug of choice for treating malaria in many areas, particularly where chloroquine-resistant strains have emerged, he says.

Why It Works

Experiments into why artemisinin works as an anti-malaria agent led to its tests as an anti-cancer drug. The key turned out to be a shared characteristic of the malaria parasite and dividing cancer cells: high iron concentrations. When artemisinin—or any of its derivatives—comes into contact with iron, a chemical reaction ensues, spawning charged atoms that chemists call free radicals. In malaria, the free radicals attack and bind with cell membranes, breaking them apart and killing the single-cell parasite.

Cells, too, need iron to replicate DNA when they divide, Lai says. And since cancer is characterized by out-of-control cell division, cancer cells have much higher iron concentrations than do normal cells. On their surfaces, cancer cells also have more so-called transferrin receptors—cellular pathways that allow iron to enter—than healthy cells. In the case of breast cancer, the cells have 5 to 15 times more transferrin receptors on their surface than normal breast cells, Lai says.

And so entered the dash of logic: About seven years ago, Lai reasoned, why not target cancer cells with the anti-malaria treatment? Working with assistant research professor Narendra Singh, Lai devised a strategy and obtained funding from the Breast Cancer Fund in San Francisco. The work appears in the November issue of the journal Life Sciences.

The Anti-Cancer Strategy

The thrust of the strategy, according to Lai, is to pump-up cancer cells with even more iron and then introduce artemisinin to selectively kill them. In the experiments, Lai subjected sets of both breast cancer cells and normal breast cells to either: a compound known as holotransferrin, which binds with transferrin receptors to transport iron into cells and thus further increases the cells' iron concentrations; a water-soluble form of artemisinin; or a combination of both compounds. Cells exposed to just one of the compounds showed no appreciable effect, Lai reports. But the response by cancer cells when hit with first holotransferrin, then artemisinin, was dramatic, he says.

After eight hours, three-fourths of the cancer cells were obliterated. By 16 hours later, nearly all the cancer cells were dead. Just as importantly, he says, the vast majority of normal breast cells did not die, showing the safety of the treatment. The success is particularly noteworthy in that breast cancer cells that were resistant to radiation were utilized in the experiment, Lai adds. "So that means this approach might work for cancer resistant to conventional therapy."

As might be expected, more aggressive cancers such as pancreatic and acute leukemia—which are characterized by more rapid cell division and thus higher iron concentrations—respond even better, Lai says. In a separate study, the therapy eliminated leukemia cells in the test tube within eight hours, he says. The next step, according to Lai, is further animal testing, followed by human trials.

First the patient would be given iron supplements to raise iron concentrations in his or her cancer cells, he says, and then the compound would be given in pill form. While human tests are still years away, the treatment could revolutionize the way some cancers—particularly aggressive, fast-growing ones—are approached if it lives up to its early promise, he adds.

But remember: Not every drug that shows promise in the test tube pans out in human tests. “The fascinating thing is that this was something the Chinese used thousands of years ago” Lai says. “We simply found a different application.”

The application certainly makes sense. There’s a wealth of research linking iron and cancer: One study, for example, showed that three times as much iron could be extracted from malignant breast tissue as from benign tissue, according to Ralph Moss, author of the Healing Choices reports for people with cancer. Elevated iron storage was found in 88% of the breast cancer patients studied.

Given this shared characteristic of malaria and cancer cells, why did it take so long to think of it? That, Lai says, is a mystery. “Maybe people just don’t think of simple ideas.” [end quoting]

If this breakthrough shows any potential for cutting into the cancer profits of the major pharmaceutical companies, then you can be sure it will have to jump through an endless array of testing hoops. The best way to assist the “delivery” of this “baby” (despite the heavy hand of the medical mafia) is to make sure your own physician is aware of it.

2. Study Shows Antibacterial Hand Soap No Better Than Regular

In a recent study, lead researcher Elaine Larson, PhD, RN, associate dean for research at the Columbia University School of Nursing in New York, and colleagues focused on the hand-cleaning habits of caretakers in 222 New York households. Every day for a year, half used an antibacterial soap and half used regular soap.

The results were presented at the 40th annual meeting of the Infectious Diseases Society of America held in Chicago this week.

“It makes you wonder why they call it antibacterial [marketing gimmick], because according to our research, it isn’t any more so than plain soaps” says Larson, in a News Release.

Bacterial cultures were taken at the beginning and the end of the year. They showed that both groups had fewer bacteria at the end, but neither had more than the other.

“We found antimicrobial or antibacterial soaps provide no added value over plain soap” she adds.

But the problem of antibiotic resistance is exacerbated by the regular use of triclosan, the antibacterial agent most commonly found in such soaps.

While there is no conclusive proof that antibacterial soaps can lead to resistance, “if there’s even a theoretical risk of that, why use it?” says Larson.

3. Why Is An Obvious Prostate Cancer Treatment Being Ignored? (by Pamela Hett-Dobricky)

Frankfort, IL (10/1/02) — The treatment is the use of natural progesterone and the reason is money.

Pamela Hett-Dobricky, M.B.A., a healthcare educator, is on a mission to educate men about the use of natural progesterone in promoting good prostate health and in the treatment of prostate cancer.

New research by Brent Formby, PhD, at the Sansum Medical Research Institute in Santa Barbara CA has uncovered evidence that progesterone may help men with prostate problems. His results showed that progesterone inhibits the growth of prostate cancer cells and that estradiol (estrogen) and dihydrotestosterone (DHT) (bad testosterone) accelerate prostate cancer cell growth.

So if this is true, why aren’t doctors prescribing natural progesterone to their patients? The answers are money and lack of knowledge.

First, money. Truly natural progesterone, one that is the same chemical composition that our bodies make, cannot be patented. You cannot patent a natural occurring substance. If you can’t patent it, you can’t make money.

Secondly, doctors remain cautious and wary of a drug that doesn’t show up in their medical literature, and does not appear to have any credibility behind it. It is a vicious circle: if a substance cannot be patented, there is no money to be made; then, if there is no money to be made, there is no reason for a drug company to do a clinical trial to see if the substance is beneficial.

Each year over 400,000 men in the United States alone undergo prostate surgery and over a billion dollars a year is spent on prostate treatment. Proscar, the leading drug, is highly dangerous and, according to the United States Veteran’s Administration, is no more effective than a sugar pill. On the opposite side, there are no side effects to using natural progesterone. By the age of 50, 35% of men have cancer cells in their prostate. Odds are 2 to 1 a man will have prostate problems by the time they are 60.

Ms. Hett-Dobricky’s mission is to get the word out to men about the benefits of

ALCOHOL HELPS TO KEEP PROBLEM ARTERIES OPEN

From Popular Mechanics magazine, December 2002: [quoting]

A many as 30% of the coronary patients who receive artery-expanding stents see their improved circulation diminished by a complication known as re-stenosis. The condition is characterized by the regrowth of cells around the wire mesh from which the stent is made. A simple change in surgical procedure developed at the University of Alabama in Birmingham (UAB) has been shown to reduce artery-narrowing. In the standard surgery, a tiny deflated balloon is positioned inside the blocked artery and inflated. The stent is then installed to prevent reclosure. In the UAB procedure the expanded artery is coated with a dilute solution of ethyl alcohol. Preliminary results show that the alcohol slows, and in some cases stops, cell regrowth. Only 7% of the 46 patients in the study experienced reblockage. [end quoting]

Sounds like an effective yet simple solution to an otherwise potentially fatal problem.

STORING INFORMATION ON ATOMS

From Popular Mechanics magazine, December 2002: [quoting]

The world's densest memory chip has been created by researchers at the University of Wisconsin-Madison (UW-Madison). It stores bits of data as groupings of only 20 atoms. The amount of information that now fits on 1 million CDs could potentially be stored on a single disc. The memory was made by evaporating gold on a silicon chip in a way that naturally forms furrows. Silicon atoms then diffuse into the furrows, aligning like eggs in a carton. Using the tip of a scanning electron microscope, individual silicon atoms can be positioned to create the mechanical equivalent of strings of zeros and ones. Franz Himpfel, the physicist who led the project, says it could take a decade or longer before this type of storage media becomes available. [end quoting]

Thinking back ten years to the memory devices and computers of that time, it's hard to imagine just what might actually be used for high-density memory devices ten years from now, when the above is predicted to finally become available.

U.S. GOV'T. ASKS COURT TO SEAL VACCINE RECORDS

Attorneys for the Bush Administration asked a federal court on Monday to order that documents on hundreds of cases of autism allegedly caused by childhood vaccines be kept from the public.

Department of Justice lawyers asked a special master in the U.S. Court of Federal Claims to seal the documents, arguing that allowing their automatic disclosure would take away the right of federal agencies to decide when and how the material should be released.

Attorneys for the families of hundreds of autistic children charged that the government was trying to keep the information out of civil courts, where juries might be convinced to award large judgments against vaccine manufacturers.

The court is currently hearing approximately 1,000 claims brought by the families of autistic children. The suits charge that the measles-mumps-rubella (MMR) vaccine, which until recently included a mercury-containing preservative known as thimerosal, can cause neurological damage leading to autism.

Federal law requires suits against vaccine makers to go before a special federal "vaccine court" before any civil lawsuit is allowed. The court was set up by Congress to speed compensation claims and to help protect vaccine makers from having to pay large punitive awards decided by juries in state civil courts. Plaintiffs are free to take their cases to state courts if they lose in the federal vaccine court or if they don't accept the court's judgment.

The current 1,000 or so autism cases are unusual for the court. Because it received so many claims, much of the fact-finding and evidence-gathering is going on for all of the cases as a block.

Monday's [11/25/02] request by the Bush Administration would prevent plaintiffs who later go to civil court from using some relevant evidence generated during the required vaccine court proceedings.

Plaintiffs' attorneys said that the order amounted to punishment of the families of injured children because it would require them to incur the time and expense of regenerating evidence for a civil suit.

"Wouldn't it be a shame if, at the end of the day, our policy would be to compensate lawyers" said Jeff Kim, an attorney with Gallagher Boland Meiburger & Brosnan. The firm represents about 400 families of autistic children who received the MMR vaccine.

Kim accused the government of trying to lower "a shroud of secrecy over these documents" in order to protect vaccine manufacturers, who he said were "the only entities" who would benefit if the documents are sealed.

While federal law clearly seals most documents generated in individual vaccine cases, it has never been applied to a block proceeding like the one generating evidence in the autism cases.

Administration lawyers told Special Master George Hastings that they requested the seal in order to preserve the legal right of the Secretary of Health and Human Services to decide when vaccine evidence can be released to the public.

Justice Department attorney Vincent Matanoski argued that to let plaintiffs use the vaccine court evidence in a later civil suit would confer an advantage on plaintiffs who chose to forgo federal compensation.

"There is no secret here. What the petitioners are arguing for are enhanced rights in a subsequent civil action" Matanoski said of the plaintiffs. "They're still going to have unfettered use within the proceedings."

Hastings would not say when he would issue a ruling on whether to seal the court documents, but did say that his decision would be "very prompt".

Notice how slick was the timing of this request—at the beginning of Thanksgiving week, when the public becomes largely preoccupied with other matters. A day or so later, when people are REALLY preoccupied, was when they slipped Henry Kissinger in as the chairman of the 9/11 investigation commission.

This move to prevent public access to that incriminating vaccination data also follows closely the quiet addition to the newly passed Homeland Security Bill—you know, the addition slipped in that protects those poor, little, honest pharmaceutical companies from any big, mean, vaccine-damage-related lawsuits from we-the-people.

Perhaps it's only when Evil of this magnitude runs wild that some people finally get mad enough to do something besides simply complain to themselves about the state of the world—as they flip through television channels for some distraction.

NOW THAT I'M "OLDER", HERE'S WHAT I'VE DISCOVERED

From the Hilltop Shopper News, Tehachapi CA, 11/26/02: [quoting]

God grant me the senility to forget the people I never liked anyway, the good fortune to run into the ones I do, and the eyesight to tell the difference. Now that I'm "older" (but refuse to grow up), here's what I've discovered:

1. Started out with nothing, and I still have most of it.
2. My wild oats have turned into prunes and All Bran.
3. I finally got my head together; now my body is falling apart.
4. Funny, I don't remember being absent-minded.
4. Funny, I don't remember being absent-minded.
5. All reports are in; life is now officially unfair.
6. If all is not lost, where is it?
7. It is easier to get older than it is to get wiser.
8. Some days you're the dog; some days you're the hydrant.
9. I wish the buck stopped here; I sure could use a few.
10. Kids in the back seat cause accidents.

11. Accidents in the back seat cause kids.

12. It's hard to make a comeback when you haven't been anywhere.

13. The only time the world beats a path to your door is when you're in the bathroom.

14. If God wanted me to touch my toes, he would have put them on my knees.

15. When I'm finally holding all the cards, why does everyone decide to play chess?

16. It's not hard to meet expenses—they're everywhere.

17. The only difference between a rut and a grave is the depth.

18. These days, I spend a lot of time thinking about the hereafter: I go somewhere to get something and then wonder what I'm here after.

19. I AM UNABLE TO REMEMBER IF I HAVE MAILED THIS TO YOU OR NOT!

THE BOTOX CLUB-FOOT CURE

From Popular Science magazine, December 2002: [quoting]

Botox, the anti-wrinkle treatment, is all the rage among adults who don't mind the needle if it will keep them looking young. But research shows that the medication—a toxin that works by causing temporary paralysis of muscles—can also help the genuinely young. As many as 1 in 500 babies are born with clubfoot, a condition in which the heel and toes twist inward. The deformity is corrected by moving the foot into a healthy position and stabilizing it with a cast for several months. Before this procedure, most babies need to undergo tendon-lengthening surgery so their feet can be comfortably turned. Because Botox lengthens tendons by relaxing them, surgery wasn't required in trials conducted by Dr. Christina Alvarez of Children's Hospital in Vancouver. She injected Botox into the calves of some 40 babies, repositioned their club feet, and stabilized them with casts. All grew into healthy toddlers. — Harald Franzen [end quoting]

EYES IN THE BACK OF YOUR MOUTH

From Wired magazine, December 2002: [quoting]

by Michael Abrams

The brain doesn't care where visual input comes from. So why not see with a camera jacked into your tongue?

"Don't fly by the seat of your pants." That mantra is drilled into every pilot's head in flight school. It means pay no attention to the g-forces pushing against your ass; and keep your eyes on your instruments. If you don't, and your plane is in a spin or a loop, you could get caught thinking down is up. But as aviation technology evolves, the cockpit is filling up with new instruments, overwhelming the pilot's ability to take it all in at a glance. Luckily, the eyes aren't the only way to see. Pilots can now sense other aircraft from a tiny zap on their shoulders. And they'll soon be able to

How wonderful is the brain to alert an unbalanced part of the body and the mind land a helicopter in a dust storm with infrared images lightly buzzing their tongues.

The fact is, visual information doesn't have to go through the eyes to get to the brain. Our sense organs are mere input devices—wet USB ports. The basic premise, known as plasticity, is that the brain can adapt to new data channels by rewiring itself. It's a short step from there to sensory augmentation and substitution. New devices are extending pilots' perception of space, giving rudimentary sight to the blind, restoring balance to people whose vestibular systems have failed, even enabling orgasms.

"A nerve spike is a nerve spike" says Paul Bach-y-Rita, professor of rehabilitation medicine and biomedical engineering at the University of Wisconsin. "The brain doesn't give a damn where the information is coming from."

Bach-y-Rita has been experimenting with brain plasticity since the 1960s, but only in the last few years has the hardware become compact enough to create practical sensory input devices. His latest technology sends visual data through the tongue, which is jam-packed with nerves and coated with conductive saliva.

A video camera, worn on the forehead, sends images to a laptop, which dumps-down the picture to 144 pixels. That signal is sent to a soviet-gray box, called a Tactile Display Unit, which converts the image to electrical impulses. The current winds up on a matrix of electrodes that tingle the image onto the tongue.

In lab tests, the system enabled blind people to recognize letters, catch rolling balls, and watch candles flicker for the first time.

But a sensory substitution system needn't be for substitution alone. Researchers at the Naval Aerospace Medical Research Laboratory and the Institute for Human and Machine Cognition used Bach-y-Rita's ideas to cram a pilot's brain with expanded spatial awareness akin to sight. Instead of electrodes on the tongue, the Tactile Situation Awareness System (TSAS) uses a flight suit embedded with as many as 96 transducers—mini-vibrators like the ones found in cell phones. The TSAS makes pilots less dependent on their eyes. "The visual workload has gone up so high that we're seeing an increase in the number of human factor-related mishaps" says Anil Raj, who heads the program at the University of West Florida.

Now pilots can gauge their orientation from a buzz on the torso. If the plane banks left, they feel a zap on the left. If the plane makes a 180-degree turn, the zap will travel from one side of the body to the other. It usually takes months of training before pilots can look at their altimeters, attitude indicators, and compasses and understand a plane's location in space. With TSAS, it takes 10 minutes.

Bach-y-Rita is adapting the system for stroke victims and others who have lost their sense of balance. He's also working on a sensor-filled condom that, in theory, could channel sexual stimulation to the tongue (most men who've lost feeling below the waist still get erections). A little more funding and the system may soon fit into a wireless retainer that can snap onto the roof of the mouth.

Videogamers will have a sixth sense. Navy SEALs, who complain that night-vision goggles destroy their eyes' natural ability to adjust to the dark, will scan dark beaches with their taste buds. Pilots will vibrate their way home. And the blind will see. [end quoting]

What we're really talking about here is the amazing (and still largely untapped) power of the mind and brain to interface with the body. As technology can be reduced down from bulky contraptions to tiny packages, further adaptability discoveries like the above will no doubt be made.

...But here's what is perhaps most important, and I never even thought to do this:

Call the three national credit reporting organizations immediately to place a fraud alert on your name and Social Security number. I had never heard of doing that until advised by a bank that called to tell me an application for credit was made over the Internet in my name.

The alert means any company that checks your credit knows your information was stolen and they have to contact you by phone to authorize new credit. By the time I was advised to do this, almost two weeks after the theft, all the damage had been done.

There are records of all the credit checks initiated by the thieves' purchases, none of which I knew about before placing the alert. Since then, no additional damage has been done, and the thieves threw my wallet away this weekend. (Someone turned it in.) It seems to have stopped them in their tracks.

MILK BATHS KILL FUNGUS

From Popular Mechanics magazine, December 2002: [quoting]

Milk makes a first-rate fungicide. Peter Crisp made the discovery while testing traditional plant disease remedies for his doctoral research at the University of Adelaide in Australia.

He found that bathing grape leaves in a weak dilution of water and milk is as effective as using sulfur-based fungicides, which he estimates currently costs the Australian wine industry about $30 million a year. Several organic wineries are testing the treatment.

This discovery should be quite a boost to both the dairy industry and the ecology—but definitely not appreciated by the agricultural chemicals industry. Just think of how many millions of acres of grapes there are on this planet that are now doused with expensive and perhaps dangerous chemical compounds.

THE CHRISTMAS VISITOR

From the beyond-the-illusion.com Internet website, 11/24/02, by John Winston (johnfwinn@mlode.com):

[quoting]

It happened one day, near December's end, that two neighbors called on an oldtime friend. They found his house so meager and lean, made pretty with many boughs of green.

And Conrad was sitting with his face ashine, when he suddenly stopped stitchin' the twine.

And he said: "Old friends of mine, at dawn today when the cock was a-crowin', the Lord appeared to me in a dream, and said: 'I'm coming to visit you on Christmas Day.'

"So I've been busy makin' branches of fir. The table is spread and the kettle is shined, and over the rafters the holly is twined.

"And now I'll wait for the Lord to appear, and listen closely so I will hear, His steps as he nears my humble place, and I'll open the door and look on His face."

So his friends went home and left Conrad alone, for this was the happiest day that Conrad had know, for long since his family had passed away, and Conrad had spent many a sad Christmas day.

But he knew with the Lord as his Christmas guest, THIS Christmas would be his dearest and best.

So he listened with only joy in his heart, and with every sound he'd rise with a start, and look for the Lord to be at his door, like the vision he'd had a few hours before.

So he ran to the window after hearing a sound, but all he could see on the snow-covered ground was a shabby old beggar whose shoes were torn, and all his clothes were ragged and worn.

But Conrad was touched and he went to the door, and said: "Your feet must be frozen and sore. I have some shoes in my shop for you, and a coat that will keep you warm, too."

With a thankful heart the man went away, but Conrad noticed the time of day. And he wondered what made the dear Lord so late, and how much longer he'd have to wait.

Then he heard a knock and he ran to the door, but it was only a stranger once more. A bent old lady with a shawl of black, and a bundle of kindlin' tied on her back. She asked only for a place to rest—but—that was reserved for Conrad's great guest.

But her voice seemed to plead: "Don't send me away, let me rest awhile on this Christmas day." So Conrad brewed her a steamin' cup, and told her to sit at the table and sup.

So after she left he was filled with dismay, for he saw that the hours were slipping away, and the Lord hadn't come like He said He would. And Conrad was sure he had misunderstood.

Then out of the stillness he heard a cry: "Please help me and tell me where am I."

And again he opened the door and stood disappointed as twice before. It was only a little child who had wandered away, and was lost from her family on this Christmas day.

Again Conrad's heart was heavy and sad, but he knew he could make the little girl glad. So he calmed her and wiped her tears and quieted all her fears, then he led her back to her home once more.

But as he entered his own dark door, he knew that the Lord was not coming that day, for the hours of Christmas had passed away.

So he went to his room and knelt down to pray. And he said: "Lord, why did you delay? What kept you from coming to call on me, for I wanted so much your face to see?"

When soft in the silence a voice he heard: "Lift up your head, for I kept my word!"

"Three times my shadow crossed your floor.

"Three times I came to your lowly door. For I was the beggar with bruised cold feet, and I was the woman you gave something to eat. And I was the child out on the street.

"Three times I knocked, three times I came in, and each time I found the warmth of a friend.

"Of all the gifts, Love is the best. I was honored to be your Christmas guest."

HIS MYSTERIOUS WAYS MORE THAN COINCIDENCE

From Guideposts, November 2002, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512:

The order had come down at last. The ground invasion of Kuwait was about to commence. My battalion would cross the Kuwaiti border as part of Operation Desert Storm. I was the second in command of 130 brave Marines who were about to face the most daunting challenge of their military lives.

We'd already dodged heavy artillery fire, and now we'd likely face more dangers—like land mines and oil fires. Thousands of Iraqi troops waited just beyond the Kuwaiti border. It was time for us to make the final strategic push.

Dear God, I prayed, help me to lead my troops wisely. Watch over us. Keep us safe.

I walked from one group of Marines to another, talking to them about the mission and trying to keep their spirits up. Hunched against the dry, biting desert winds, we wrote letters home. Maybe our last.

Just before dawn the next morning I gave the order to move out. The skies were clear. We slung our gear into our Humvees and began advancing toward the border.

I felt a drop of rain, then another. In a matter of minutes it was pouring. The rain came down hard and fast, so thick we could barely make out the desert landscape ahead of us.

It went on for days. Each morning we'd awaken soaked to the bone after another night with only camouflage netting for cover. Bad enough we had the enemy to worry about. Now the elements were against us too.

Father, please make this rain stop and protect us.

The rain continued to pound us relentlessly until we finally neared the Kuwaiti border. There the battalion halted. On the other side, the enemy waited. Rain or no rain, we'd soon be going in.

We awoke on the day of the invasion to clear skies and glorious sunshine. As we closed in on the border, we couldn't help but stare at the astounding sight before us. The torrential rains had washed away the sand to reveal metal disks planted all across our path. It was an Iraqi minefield.

This is surely a variation of the theme about there being no atheists in a foxhole!

REMEMBER THIS PROMISE: HEALING COMES IN MANY WAYS

From Guideposts, November 2002, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512:

Driving down East Pea Ridge Road on a chilly evening last February, I squinted into the darkness, trying to ignore the throbbing pain behind my left eye. I was on my way home from an all-day conference that had been billed as a booster shot for flagging faith.

I'd needed it in the worst possible way. Chronic illness had affected every area of my life. My work as a nurse once brought great joy; now just getting through my shift was a daily battle. Doctors' bills ate up my savings. Too often I cancelled meetings with friends when pain struck. Folks eventually stopped making plans with me.

The worst part was the emptiness I felt, as if illness had blotted out my true self. I couldn't sense God anymore. Even getting down on my knees and praying out loud didn't seem to help.

I tried writing out my prayers in a journal. But my confused ramblings looked so ugly in contrast to the pretty rose-sprigged pages that I tore out all my entries and ripped them to pieces.

The conference had been my last hope, but a latecomer had squeezed into my row, hefting a backpack loaded with books. The backpack hit me square in the eye, giving me a blinding headache. I rushed from the building to my car, eager to get home to an ice bag and my bed.

I was headed down East Pea Ridge Road when I heard a sickening thump, followed immediately by a yelp of pain. My foot slammed down on the brake pedal. I looked frantically over my shoulder and saw a mass of fur on the road. "Oh, no!" I cried. I'd hit a dog!

I jumped out of the car and hurried through a group of onlookers. I dropped to my knees on the road next to the dog and stroked her soft fur. She was badly hurt, bleeding profusely and barely moving. "Jesus. Oh, Jesus" was all I could say. But I knew God wasn't listening. How could something like this have happened if He were?

A young man crouched beside me. "I'm a vet's assistant" he said. "Looks like she's got a broken hip. Maybe some internal injuries. You could take her to the animal ER, but they'll probably end up putting her to sleep." He looked the dog over while rubbing her ear. "No collar. Most likely a stray."

"She can't die!" I said helplessly. Just as the words left my lips, an inner voice took command: "Trust me, Roberta. Let me take care of everything."

"If you want" the man said, "I'll take her to the ER in my car. You can follow."

I ran to my trunk and took out a thick antique rug I'd bought recently. The man and I lifted the dog onto it. By the time we got her loaded into the back of his car, the rug was soaked through with blood. I followed close behind during the 20-mile trip to the animal ER. My head still pounded, but that didn't seem important anymore. Nothing mattered except saving that injured dog.

Yet doubts crowded out my prayers. What does God care about a dog? What does God care about you? You're just one person in a world teeming with people in need. Again the inner voice spoke: "Let me."

I flew into the parking lot and pulled up next to the man's car. I dashed inside, got to the check-in desk and blurted: "I'm the woman who hit the dog that young man just brought in. Do they think they can save her?"

The receptionist avoided my eyes. "Number where you can be reached?" she asked.

I gave her the information, then collapsed into a chair in the corner. Finally someone called my name. I followed a woman to a room with a metal table. On it was the dog, bandaged all over, with an IV in one of her front legs.

Despite her injuries and the harsh fluorescent light, she looked beautiful—a grayish-brown German Shepherd mix. I imagined she was a watchdog for some family.

I leaned over and gently kissed the top of her head. "I'm so sorry I hurt you" I whispered. "I didn't mean to. You know that, don't you?" Her eyes remained closed. It was just one thing after another—my illness, getting smacked by the backpack, hitting this dog. I wished I could help her, but I couldn't even help myself.

Desperate, I cupped the dog's face in my hands and began talking out loud, forgetting about the vet and assistants in the room. "I don't know how to help you" I told the dog. "But I know someone who does. God knows everything about you. He made you. He wants the best for you."

My words startled me. They were promises I'd once clung to, my belief in them instilled and nurtured by years of Sunday school, church, Bible reading and prayer. But my faith had been beaten down by illness.

A picture formed in my mind. It was Jesus, gazing down at the dog with eyes of such compassion that they took in every cell, every molecule, of her body.

"I have to go home now" I told the dog at last. "But don't worry. God will be with you. He's watching over you as if you're the only dog in the whole world."

"Promise me one thing" I said to the vet. "Don't put her to sleep without calling me." Then I thanked the young man who'd brought the dog in, and left.

When I got home I put an ice bag on my head and fell into bed. I tried to sleep, but two images kept appearing in my mind: the dog bleeding on the road and Jesus gazing down at her in the animal hospital. "Why did you let me hit that dog? Why weren't you watching over me too, Lord? I feel so lost."

In the darkness and silence of my bedroom, the inner voice answered: "You are never lost, Roberta. Every day, every instant, I watch over you as if you were the only one in the world. I am with you, even in your suffering."

There, in the stillness of the night, that voice seemed to reverberate through my very being. I felt myself relax. My pain subsided, not just the pain in my head but also the pain deep inside me. I drifted off to sleep.

The ringing phone woke me in the morning. I picked up the receiver hesitantly. "This is a fine dog you've got here!" a male voice said. "You can come pick her up anytime." Pick her up? There must have been some mistake. "Please don't let them have put her to sleep" I prayed, then got dressed.

At the ER the dog raised her head and greeted me with a bark. She was still bandaged, but the IV was gone.

Again I cupped her face in my hands. "Are you really all right?" She barked once more, a happy, healthy bark that said: "Let's get out of here!"

The vet couldn't explain her recovery. "She's one lucky dog!" was all he could say.

I took her home and put an ad in the paper. The next morning a man called me. "That dog sounds like our Lucy. She lifted the latch on the storm door and got out the other day. Looks like she wiggled out of her collar too; it's still here on the living room floor. I tell you, we've been worried sick."

We agreed to meet each other later that day. The man was sitting on a concrete bench when I arrived. The dog jumped up and licked his face, her tail a blur. It was his Lucy all right.

Introducing myself, I explained to him about the accident. "I am so sorry. I feel just terrible" I said.

"I'm just relieved she's not lost" he said, rubbing her ears. "The kids haven't stopped crying since she ran off"

He tried to pay me for the vet bill, but I was having none of it. After all, I was feeling restored myself, at least spiritually. And isn't that where true healing always takes place, in the soul rather than the body?

I watched them pull out of the parking lot. Lucy clambered over the back seat and pressed her nose to the rear window. I could swear she was looking right at me. We were both going home.

There's a story behind how this was found to use here. As most readers know, I use Guideposts many times as my source for inspirational articles. However most times during my pile of reading each month, I run across the articles I want to use and have them marked for use before I start putting the News Desk together.

This month was different in that I was almost done and still didn't have an article I wanted to use, and I purposely had to start spending some time going through several of the magazines and reading to find something that I could feel was the right one, and I found this. God does work in mysterious ways. △

Homeland Security Bill's “License To Kill”

Editor's note: The old aphorism “ignorance is bliss” of course has a flip side that's all too familiar to conscientious readers of this publication: The more you know about what's going on, the harder it is to sit still, shut up, and swim around in the same mindless stupor that so many fool themselves into believing is that some kind of state of bliss.

Longtime SPECTRUM friend and courageous bringer of Tough Truth, Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz, D.M.D., M.A., M.P.H., has been provoked to a heightened level of passion by ghastly recent events that have been unfolding in the dark corridors of power politics.

The following message was broadcast the morning of November 21, 2002, over the Genesis Communications Radio Network and World Wide Christian Radio by its author, Dr. Horowitz, host of The Insight Hour.

While no legislation is written in stone, and any raunchy law can be reversed with enough focused persuasion, there is nonetheless spotlighted below a troubling new heightened level of deception and collusion on the part of OUR REPRESENTATIVES—as they cater to special interests over the public welfare. If nothing else, THAT is the “gotcha” message to drive home to them. Right now, quite a few of them seem to be living up to Mark Twain's assessment from a century ago: “There is no distinctly native, American criminal class—except Congress.”

But, to be fair, we follow the passionate message from Dr. Horowitz with poignant comments from several members of Congress whose courage we applaud and whose warnings at the time of the Homeland Security Bill's passage we wish to share with you—as you decide what YOU should do.

Remember that our elected representatives are much more likely to “do the right thing” if they feel they have a strong constituent backing!

Essay On Vaccine Injury, Homeland Security, And Culpability

If you are still processing shock in the wake of the virtually unanimous passage of the Bush Administration's Homeland Security Bill with its “license to kill” from vaccine injuries without liabilities, you have likely yourself to blame most.

I don't relish blaming victims, for we have all been victimized by this legislation. But for more than six years, since the publication of Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident or Intentional? (Tetrahedron Press, 1996) my colleagues and I tried to alert you to the increasing attacks on health freedoms and human rights directed by special-interest groups representing the multi-national military-medical/pharmaceutical-petrochemical cartel. We provided proof of their power over most elected officials and the mainstream media, but you thought we were delusional.

We predicted unprecedented civil rights violations reflecting past history, international developments, unbridled corporate greed, and ongoing global genocide concomitant with totalitarian legislation. But you turned a deaf ear.

We heralded the Model State Emergency Health Powers Act years before it was announced and even showed you documents and official testimonies concerning the “quarantine camps” being established, but you closed your eyes and said we were “paranoid”.

We explained Machiavellian theory in the common political practice of administering “managed chaos”—creating public frights for which expensive solutions had previously been prepared. As an example, we solved the anthrax mailings mystery and identified its sole beneficiaries, particularly the British oligarchy-controlled anthrax vaccine maker, Bioport. [See the January 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM for this superb story.]

We provided reams of data proving vaccines deliver biotoxic ingredients leaving recipients chronically ill and virtually enslaved to drug companies and their “life-saving” formulas. But you said this was “inconceivable” and asked: “Don't you trust any vaccines?”

So you took your children to “medical deities” for “routine childhood immunizations” because “they said it was mandatory”—and you watched your children get sick, if not crippled. Then, as you were wondering why you were so trusting, you sought other doctors to prescribe other drugs, made by the subsidiaries of the vaccine manufacturers.

Soon after your child became ill, you reached out to leaders in the “vaccine risk awareness” movement to report your grief and horror. They touched your hand, or told you they empathized. They asked that you send them money. Then they professed that most vaccines were “pretty safe”. “Only some vaccines have problems that require our ongoing vigilance” they assured.

They informed you to beware of those people like me in the “anti-vaccination” camp. They labeled us “radicals” for our conviction that vaccines were principally made to deliver genocide. They effectively character-assassinated our messengers, rather than refuting the messages. You shook your head as if to say: "How could the 'radicals' be so stupid?" Then you gave these leaders and their organizations more money and you volunteered your time in support of their outstanding efforts.

One such leader and group comes to mind as an exquisite example. I adequately exposed the National Vaccine Information Center (NVIC) directed by Barbara Loe Fisher and Kathy Williams in previous writings. This leading "vaccine risk awareness" group's developmental history documents formidable formative financial and administrative ties to drug industrialists and pharmaceutical lobbyists. When my colleagues and I pointed this out to you, you silenced us and told us to "Stop it! We all need to work together."

When I then relayed NVIC's large investment in sponsoring the passage of the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, which gave precedent to the Homeland Security Bill's drug industry indemnity clause, you still would not listen. The "superfund" that was set up for injured families through NVIC collusion with vaccine makers "was a good idea" you said somewhat unconvinced and unconvincing. The fact that the vast majority of the hundreds of thousands of vaccine-victimized families got nothing more than a bureaucratic shuffle and legal nightmare didn't alter your optimism toward these "political moderates". "They put out good information too, from time to time" you defended.

Then I told you what the Bible says about half truths: "They are complete lies" I warned. "Unless you are willing to see and expose the 'Big Picture'—the whole truth, including the links between the vaccine makers and the Nazis of I.G. Farben and Holocaust fame—you're misleading people, and your karma will be judged. 'As you sow, so shall you reap.'" In response, you thought: "There he goes again with his spiritual speak."

Incredulously you asked: "You can't possibly believe that all vaccines are bad, do you? They eradicated illnesses didn't they?"

I replied honestly and affirmatively: "No, they didn't; hygiene and nutritional improvements did." But you could not accept my rationale.

You heard me tell of my family's miraculous escape from the Nazis. "They lined millions of 'sheeple' up and marched them, with few protesting, to their early demise in the concentration camp gas chambers through alleged 'showers'. Showers for what? 'Public health' and 'disinfection'." I recalled and continued. "Today's physicians' offices, hospitals, and public health units are much like the 'concentration camps' of yesteryear, and today's vaccines are the 'gas'. Don't you get the similarity?"

You said it frightened you, and you preferred not to think about it again.

You told me that, although you "really respected" me for what I was doing, "calling the 'global beast' a 'global beast'" you felt a less politically disturbing option, a more moderate approach, was more appropriate, at least for you.

I begged you to get in touch with the whole horrific truth. Not let fear or denial get in your way. I said the greatest risk to "homeland security" is civilian complacency as we are all being challenged by "white-collar terrorists" directing political agendas and public health policies. "They use fear to command compliance with backroom shady dealings that put deadly agendas and profits before people, while neglecting the scientific facts" I explained. A glimmer of light appeared for a moment in your eyes, but you blinked, and it was gone.

We finally agreed to disagree and you walked away.

Now, with the passage of the Homeland Security Bill, the most egregious violation of the faith and trust we have placed in our governing officials—a direct physical and financial assault on the American people—maybe you will wake up.

If you haven't already, please read "Disease Deities On Capitol Hill Address Autism" (published in The Spirit Of Health newsletter, Fall-Winter 2002, also freely downloadable from the www.healingcelebrations.com Internet website), and the complete written testimony I presented to the Government Reform Committee last April. You will see that I warned you about misplaced faith and trust in elected officials in Washington. I even warned our elected officials about this form of pork-barrel politics—what amounts to mutual masturbation for financial gratification.

If you had heeded my words, or read my works, you would not be in shock now, nor even mildly surprised by the grave injustice Congress perpetrated by passing this bill. You would understand why even Rep. Dan Burton (R-IN), who chairs the Government Reform Committee hearings into skyrocketing autism rates, voted for the bill. He told us he simply failed to read the last-minute inclusions. What a good excuse.

He said he knew nothing about the vaccine injury indemnity clause before voting to pass this act. And you still believe him?

You believe him despite your knowledge that he, like many of us, reviewed the CDC-secreted scientific reports linking vaccines and mercury to brain-damaged children. "Hundreds of thousands of behaviorally impaired youth" Dan Burton bellowed from the dais, "have resulted from the now widespread toxicity." Still, he argued, we need to give more money to the CDC to study the problem.

Now that this horrific bill has passed, foreshadowing even more devastating impacts on the nation's health and civil rights, you lament your loss and the

DEATH IN THE AIR: GLOBALISM, TERRORISM & TOXIC WARFARE

This book explains how and why:

- We have evolved from the nuclear age into a "Technotronic Era" with "psychotronic warfare" for optimal population control.
- Non-lethal warfare is being effectively used to produce sociopolitical and economic outcomes consistent with global genocide.
- The world's wealthiest policy-makers have recommended, and are working toward, eliminating half the world's population.
- Accepted methods of disease prevention, such as pesticide sprayings, can only be scientifically rationalized as costly and deadly contributions to non-lethal warfare and population reduction.
- Chemtrail sprayings that obscure blue skies are not normal, but reflect a conspiracy of silence and military attacks on the health and welfare of people around the world.

Striking at the heart of those responsible for the latest forms of bio-terrorism, psychotronic warfare, and ecological genocide, the revelations contained in this book offer more than a reality check—they give you and your loved ones a final, last-minute choice for survival.

tragedy befalling the medicated masses of children with autism. You think of the time and energy you wasted in futile pursuit of class-action lawsuits and legal claims against now-fully-indemnified vaccine makers. You question your own sanity in this political reality as you find yourself stuck between the rock of disappointment and the hard place of hopelessness.

You lament the additional ramifications of this "license to kill" given to vaccine makers. It dawns on you that this trash legislation not only impacts the millions of young victims of mercury poisoning, but equally guarantees helplessness, if not hopelessness, for those struggling, now and in future years, with myriad cancers attributed to polio vaccine viral contaminations; for Gulf War Syndrome victims made ill by vaccines and drug interactions; for military personnel recently inoculated with anthrax vaccine with up to 85% made ill; for more than a hundred thousand Lyme-vaccine-injured people; for claimants who cite recent studies that will soon prove early Hepatitis-B vaccines triggered the international AIDS pandemic; and for the millions of forthcoming smallpox-vaccine-injured persons who you are told to accept as simply unfortunate casualties of America's new war.

Finally, did you know that the opposition's effort to strip the bill of this disgusting provision fell short by only 5 votes. The final tally was 52-47.

In my humble opinion, if you had spent the last six years researching the facts available to you, not pandering to deceitful politicians but confronting them, including self-proclaimed industry-financed "leaders" of the "vaccine risk awareness" movement, or playing political games/pussy-footing around the issues so as not to offend people with news of vaccination injuries as they reflect well-orchestrated global genocide, you might have been able to persuade enough people in your sphere of influence to effectively pressure one more politician, each year for six years, to stand against this bill.

But, instead, you preferred to live in denial about the "big political picture" that includes genocide. With your justifications and rationalizations, you get to be right in perceiving me as "radical" if not "insane".

Now Congress has passed the Homeland Security Bill, and you remain numbed by the weight of your personal contribution to this premeditated and exposed conspiratorial outcome. Is there any comfort now in your tormented reflection on how you once called me a "foolish conspiracy theorist"?

You have, now, no one more than yourself to blame.

NEWS RELEASE (11/19/02)

Homeland Security Bill Assailed
By Public Health Expert:
Says Vaccine Policy "Pork" Reflects "Fourth Reich Mentality"

Sandpoint, ID — The Bush Administration's Homeland Security Bill that infers protection for drug makers against vaccine injury cases was voraciously attacked by a public health authority and consumer health advocate this morning on Worldwide Christian Radio (WWCR). Dr. Leonard Horowitz, the talk show host who is also an Honorary U.S. Autism Ambassador, likened the bill to "genocidal policy" reflecting a callous "Fourth Reich political mentality".

A number of medical and legal authorities voiced similar outrage at the sneaky politics in which Bush Administration officials, in collusion with industry lobbyists, advanced the drug company protection clause in a bill allegedly developed to protect the American people.

"It is absolutely disgraceful that even Rep. Dan Burton (R-IN), who chairs the Government Reform Committee hearings into the skyrocketing rates of autism, and who has reviewed CDC-secreted scientific documents linking vaccines and vaccine components to damaged brains and hundreds of thousands of behaviorally impaired children, failed to read the 'fine print' and voted for the bill" Dr. Horowitz told his international audience.

Now that the bill has passed, it will be virtually impossible for vaccine injury attorneys to sue drug companies, and make them accountable to large classes of people who have been injured by vaccines or vaccine ingredients.

This amounts to a "free license to kill" Dr. Horowitz said. "This legislation not only impacts the victims of mercury poisoning, but equally guarantees that other ongoing class action lawsuits, such as those waged on behalf of polio vaccine recipients who developed cancer from monkey virus contaminations, will have no legal recourse."

Nor will those affected by Gulf War Syndrome as a result of drug and vaccine side effects, military personnel recently inoculated who became ill from anthrax vaccinations, and claimants who cite recent studies increasingly proving early Hepatitis-B vaccines triggered the international AIDS pandemic.

Dr. Horowitz had criticized the Government Reform Committee last April during his oral and written testimony before the group. (See the article called "Disease Deities On Capitol Hill Address Autism" at the www.healingcelebrations.com Internet website.)

He reiterated this morning: "The greatest risk to 'homeland security' is being generated by the radical 'white-collar terrorists' we have directing political and public health policies. They use fear to command compliance with backroom shady dealings that put deadly agendas and profits before people while neglecting the scientific facts."

Excerpts from Dr. Horowitz's The Insight Hour broadcast over the Genesis Communications Radio Network internationally by way of WWCR, including this morning's show, are free at the www.insighthour.net and www.scifiles.net Internet websites.

He urged everyone listening to contact their legislators and pass this message of truth on to others in an effort to rescind this legislation at a later date, as promised by leading Democrats.

First we hear from two Senators. The following is excerpted from the Congressional Record of that pivotal day of Thursday 11/14/02, as posted at the reliable www.truthout.org/docs_02/11.20A.byrd.home.htm Internet website:

Senator Robert Byrd And Senator Debbie Stabenow
Delivered On The Floor Of The U.S. Senate

*The Homeland Security Act
Of 2002*

[Senator Debbie Stabenow, Democrat, of Michigan:]

...As Senator Byrd has said so many times on the floor, we need to look at details. We need to know what is in this bill.

It is a different bill that came back. I was deeply disturbed as I looked through it.

I want to support homeland security. I support developing a department. We all share that. This is not a partisan issue.

We want to have maximum safety, security, and ability, communicate it effectively and efficiently, and create the kind of confidence people expect us to create in terms of the ability to respond and ideally prevent attacks.

But my fear is that, under the name of homeland security, we are saying special interest provisions are put in this bill which are outrageous and should not have the light of day. I think it is our responsibility to shine the light of day on those provisions.

[Senator Robert Byrd, Democrat, of West Virginia:]

I remember, years ago, when I was in the House of Representatives, sending out a little booklet to the people in my then-congressional district of how our laws are made. [He describes the process of hearings, committees, debates, reports, etc.]

We all remember how those laws are made according to the script, as prepared there in those handsome little booklets that we send out. That is how the American people expect this Congress to operate. That is the way we are supposed to operate.

But the way this bill was brought in here, less than 48 hours ago, a brand-new bill. It had not been before any committee. It had undergone no hearings, not this bill. It is a bill on our desks that has 484 pages. There are 484 pages in this bill.

It has not been before any committee. There have been no hearings on this bill. There have been no witnesses who were asked to appear to testify on behalf of the bill or in opposition to it. It did not undergo any such scrutiny.

It was just placed on the Senate Calendar. It was offered as an amendment here. And so here it is, before the Senate now.

There it is. That is not the way in which our children are taught how we make our laws—not at all.

The American people expect us to provide our best judgment and our best insight into such monumental decisions.

This is a far, far cry from being our best. This is not our best. As a matter of fact, it is a mere shadow of our best.

Yet we are being asked, as the elected representatives of the American people, those of us who are sent here by our respective States are being asked on tomorrow to invoke closure on these 484 pages.

If I had to go before the bar of judgment tomorrow, and were asked by the eternal God what is in this bill, I could not answer God.

If I were asked by the people of West Virginia: "Senator Byrd, what is in that bill?" I could not answer. I could not tell the people of West Virginia what is in this bill.

There are a few things that I know are in it by virtue of the fact that I have had 48 hours, sleeping time included, in which to study this monstrosity, 484 pages.

If there ever were a monstrosity, this is it. I hold it in my hand, a monstrosity.

I don't know what is in it. I know a few things that are in it, and a few things that I know are in it that I don't think the American people would approve of, if they knew what was in there.

Even Senator Lieberman, who is chairman of the committee which has jurisdiction over this subject matter, even he saw new provisions in this legislation, as he looked through it yesterday and today. As his staff looked through it, they saw provisions they had not seen before, that they had not discussed before, that had not been before their committee before.

Yet we are being asked, on tomorrow, to invoke closure on that—which means we are not going to debate in the normal course of things. We are going to have 30 hours of debate. That is it: 30 hours. That is all: 30 hours—100 Senators, 30 hours of debate.

And this is one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation I have seen in my 50 years. I will have been in Congress 50 years, come January 3.

Never have I seen such a monstrous piece of legislation sent to this body. And we are being asked to vote on that 484 pages tomorrow. Our poor staffs were up most of the night studying it. They know some of the things that are in there, but they don't know all of them. It is a sham, and it is a shame.

We are all complicit in going along with it. I read in the paper that nobody will have the courage to vote against it.

Well, ROBERT BYRD is going to vote against it—because I don't know what I am voting for. That is one thing.

And number two: it has not had the scrutiny that we tell our young people, that we tell these sweet pages here, boys and girls who come up here, we tell them our laws should have.

Listen, my friends: I am an old meatcutter. I used to make sausage.

Let me tell you: I never made sausage like this thing was made. You don't know what is in it. At least I knew what was in the sausage. I don't know what is in this bill.

I am not going to vote for it when I don't know what is in it. I trust that people tomorrow will turn thumbs down on that motion to invoke closure. It is our duty.

We ought to demand that this piece of legislation stay around here a while, so we can study it, so our staffs can study it, so we know what is in it, so we can have an opportunity to amend it where it needs amending.

Several Senators have indicated, Senator Lieberman among them, that there are areas in here that ought to be amended.

What the people of the United States really care about is their security. That is what we are talking about. We don't know when another tragic event is going to be visited upon this country. It can be this evening, it can be tomorrow, or whatever.

But this legislation is not going to be worth a continental dime if it happens tonight, tomorrow, a month from tomorrow; it is not going to be worth a dime.

There are people out there, working now to secure this country and the people. They are the same people who are already on the payroll. They are doing their duty right now to secure this country.

This is a hoax.

This is a hoax.

To tell the American people they are going to be safer when we pass this is to hoax.

We ought to tell the people the truth: They are not going to be any safer with that.

That is not the truth.

I was one of the first in the Senate to say we need a new Department of Homeland Security. I meant that. But I didn't mean this particular hoax that this administration is trying to pander off to the American people, telling them this is homeland security.

That is NOT homeland security.

Mr. President, the Attorney General, and Director of Homeland Security have told Americans repeatedly there is an imminent risk of another terrorist attack. Just within the past day, or few hours, the FBI has put hospitals in the Washington area, Houston, San Francisco, and Chicago on notice of a possible terrorist threat.

This bill does nothing—not a thing—to make our citizens more secure today or tomorrow. This bill does not even go into effect for up to 12 months. It will be 12 months before this goes into effect. The bill just moves [things] around on an organizational chart. That is what it does—moves around on an organizational chart.

The Senate Appropriations Committee, on which Senator Stevens and I sit, along with 27 other Senators, including the distinguished Senator who presides over the Chamber at this moment, the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Reed, tried to provide funds to programs to hire more FBI agents, to hire more border patrol agents, to equip and train our first responders, to improve security at our nuclear powerplants, to improve bomb detection at our airports. That committee of 29 Senators—15 Democrats and 14 Republicans—voted to provide the funds for these homeland security needs. Those funds have been in bills that have been out there for 4 months.

But the President said no. No, he would not sign it. President Bush is the man I am talking about. He would not sign that as an emergency.

These moneys have been reported by a unanimous Appropriations Committee. But this Administration said no. So that is what happened. These are actions that would make America more secure today.

Did the President help us to approve these funds? No.

Instead, the President forced us—FORCED US—to reduce homeland security funding by $8.9 billion, and he delayed another $5 billion. This is shameful; this is cynical; this is being irresponsible. It is unfair to the American people. And then to tell them Congress ought to pass that Homeland Security Bill—that is passing the buck.

Mr. President, I call attention to a column in the New York Times. This is entitled “You Are A Suspect”. It is by William Safire. I will read it:

“If the Homeland Security Act is not amended before passage, here is what will happen to you:”

Listen, Senators. This is what William Safire is saying in the New York Times of November 14, 2002. That is today. This is what the New York Times is saying to you, to me, to us:

“If the Homeland Security Act is not amended before passage, here is what will happen to you: Every purchase you make”—hear me now—“Every purchase you make with a credit card, every magazine subscription you buy, and medical prescription you fill, every website you visit, and e-mail you send or receive, every academic grade you receive, every bank deposit you make, every trip you book, and every event you attend—all these transactions and communications will go into what the Defense Department describes as ‘a virtual, centralized grand database’.

“Political awareness can overcome ‘Total Information Awareness’—the combined force of commercial and government snooping. In a similar overreach, Attorney General Ashcroft tried his Terrorism Information and Prevention System (TIPS), but public outrage at the use of gossips and postal workers as snoops caused the House to shoot it down. The Senate should now do the same to this other exploitation of fear...”

[Editor's note: The complete Safire article appears at the end of the congressional commentary. Byrd read the entire article to the Senate and thus, of course, into the Congressional Record.]

If the American people, if the American public is to believe what they read in this week's newspapers, the Congress stands ready to pass legislation to create a new Department of Homeland Security. Not with my vote. Passage of such legislation would be the answer to the universal battle cry that this Administration adopted shortly after the September 11 attacks: Reorganize the Federal Government.

How is it that the Bush Administration's number-one priority has evolved into a plan to create a giant, huge bureaucracy?

How is it that the Congress bought into the belief that to take a plethora of Federal agencies and departments and shuffle them around would make us safer from future terrorist attacks?”

U.S. House Of Representatives

Unintended Consequences

Mr. Speaker, government efforts at benevolence always backfire. Inevitably, unintended consequences overwhelm the short-term and narrow benefits of authoritarian programs designed to make the economic system fair, the people morally better, and the world safe for democracy.

One hundred years of intense government “benevolence” in the United States has brought us to the brink of economic collapse, a domestic police state, and perpetual war overseas. And now our obsession with conquering and occupying Iraq is about to unleash consequences that no one can accurately foresee. The negative possibilities are unlimited and the benefits negligible.

Some have warned that the planned pre-emptive invasion of Iraq could prove so destabilizing to the region and the world that it literally could ignite a worldwide conflict big enough to be called World War III.

Nuclear exchanges are perhaps even more likely to occur under the conditions of an expanded Middle East war than they were at the height of the Cold War, when the Soviets and U.S. had literally thousands of nuclear weapons pointed at each other. If we carry out our threats to invade and occupy Iraq, especially if we do so unilaterally, the odds are at least 50-50 that this worst-case scenario will result.

The best-case scenario would be a short war, limited to weeks and involving few American and Iraqi civilian casualties. This, in combination with a unified Iraqi welcome, the placing into power of a stable popular government that is long lasting, contributing to regional stability and prosperity, and free elections, just is what our planners are hoping for. The odds of achieving this miraculous result are probably one in 10,000.

More likely, the consequences will be severe and surprising, and not what anyone planned for or intended. It will likely fall somewhere between the two extremes, but closer to the worst scenario than the best.

There are numerous other possible consequences. Here are a few worth contemplating:

No local Iraqi or regional Arab support materializes. Instead of a spontaneous uprising as is hoped, the opposite occurs. The Iraqi citizens anxious to get rid of Hussein, join in his defense, believing foreign occupation and control of their oil is far worse than living under the current dictator. Already we see that sanctions have done precisely that.

Instead of blaming Saddam Hussein and his dictatorial regime for the suffering of the past decade, the Iraqi people blame the U.S.-led sanctions and the constant bombing by the U.S. and British. Hussein has increased his power and the people have suffered from the war against Iraq since 1991.

There are a lot of reasons to believe this same reaction will occur with an escalation of our military attacks. Training dissidents like the Iraqi National Congress will prove no more reliable than the training and the military assistance we provided in the '70s and the '80s for Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein when they qualified as U.S. "allies".

Pre-emptive war against Iraq may well prompt traditional enemies in the regions to create new alliances, as the hatred for America comes to exceed age-old hatreds that caused regional conflicts. Iraq already has made overtures and concessions to Iran and Kuwait, with some signs of conciliation being shown by both sides. Total domination of the entire Persian Gulf and the Caspian Sea regions by the U.S. will surely stir survival instincts in these countries as well as in Russia.

As the balance of power continues to shift in the U.S.'s favor, there will be even more reasons for countries like China and Pakistan to secretly support the nations that are being subjected to U.S. domination in the region. The U.S. will never have a free ride in its effort to control the entire world's oil supply. Antagonisms are bound to build, and our ability to finance the multiple military conflicts that are bound to come is self-limited.

The Kurds may jump at the chance, if chaos ensues, to fulfill their dream of an independent Kurdish homeland. This, of course, will stir the ire of the Turks and the Iranians. Instead of stability for northern Iraq, the war likely will precipitate more fighting than the war planners ever imagined. Delivering Kurdish Iraq to Turkey as a prize for its cooperation with our war plans will not occur without a heated and deadly struggle. Turkey is already deeply concerned about the prospect for Kurdish independence, and only remains loyal to America because U.S. taxpayers are forced to subsidize an already depressed Turkish economy caused by our Iraqi policies.

More money will pacify for awhile, but either frustration with the perpetual nature of the problem or our inability to continue the financial bailout will lead

Turkey to have second thoughts about its obedience to our demands to wage war from their country.

All of this raises the odds that Islamic radicals will once more take control of the Turkish government. These developing conditions increase the odds of civil strife erupting in Turkey.

Islamic fundamentalism in the entire region will get a shot in the arm once the invasion of Iraq begins, especially in Saudi Arabia, Yemen, and Turkey. Our placing the Shah in power in Iran in the 1950s was a major reason that the Ayatollah eventually made it to power in the late 1970s—a delayed but nevertheless direct consequence of our policy.

Balance of power in this area of the world has always been delicate, and outside interference serves only to destabilize. There's no evidence that our current efforts will lead to more stability.

Promoting democracy, as it's said we're doing, is a farce. If elections were to occur in most of the Arab countries today, Osama bin Laden and his key allies would win. Besides, it seems we adapt quite well to working with military dictators who have ousted elected leaders, as we do in Pakistan by rewarding their cooperation with huge subsidies and future promises.

In the chaos that may erupt, several countries might see an opportunity to move on their neighbors. Already we have been warned that cooperation from Russia means no American criticism or resistance to its moves in Georgia or Chechnya.

China could attack Taiwan.

North Korea could renew its struggle against South Korea.

India may see this as an opportunity to settle the Kashmir dispute with Pakistan—with the real risk of nuclear war breaking out.

EMERGING VIRUSES - AIDS & EBOLA

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted Hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein.

This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses and experimented with antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

It seems the obsession about Iraq's improbable possession of nuclear weapons far exceeds the more realistic possibility that our pre-emptive strike against Iraq may precipitate a nuclear exchange between these two countries, or even a first strike with nuclear weapons by Israel against Iraq.

Expect Israel to use the chaos to further promote their occupation and settlements in the Palestinian homeland and possibly even in Lebanon. Israel's possession of nuclear weapons in a period of outright war will surely serve to intimidate her neighbors and intensify her efforts to further expand the Israeli homeland.

If massive Iraqi civilian casualties result, as indeed is possible though not deliberate, expect more worldwide condemnation and even a UN resolution condemning what others will call American War Crimes. Our refusal to be subject to the International Criminal Court, while demanding others be tried in the court, will never sit well with the world community.

Our position is a far cry from what it ought to be: demanding national sovereignty while promoting neutrality and friendship with all nations.

Our own CIA has warned that war with Iraq will more likely cause Saddam Hussein to use any massively lethal weapons that he might have than if we don't attack him. Also, they warned that the likelihood of al-Qaeda attacks on our own soil will increase once an invasion begins. This, of course, could cause a wave of well-placed snipers around the United States.

It is now admitted that over 150,000 U.S. servicemen are suffering from Persian Gulf War Syndrome as a result of the first Persian Gulf War. Our government would like to ignore this fact, but a new war literally could create an epidemic of casualties of the same sort, since the exact etiology is not completely understood. The number of deaths and injuries that might occur from an occupation of Iraq is unknown, but conceivably could be much higher than anyone wants to imagine.

Anti-Americanism now sweeping the world will significantly increase once we launch our attack. Already we have seen elections swayed in Europe, Turkey, and Pakistan by those unfriendly to the United States.

The attitude that the world's "King of the Hill" must be brought down will escalate, especially if the war goes poorly and does not end quickly with minimal civilian deaths.

Al-Qaeda likely will get a real boost in membership once the war breaks out.

Membership is already pervasive throughout the world without any centralized control. We should expect this to continue, with an explosion in membership and a negative impact around the world.

Our attack will confirm to the doubters that bin Laden was right in assessing our desire to control the Middle Eastern resources and dictate policy to the entire region, while giving support to Israel over the Palestinians.

Our very weak economy could easily collapse with the additional burden of a costly war. War is never a way to make the people of a country better off. It does not end recessions, and is much more likely to cause one or make one much worse. A significant war will cause revenues to decrease, taxes to increase, inflation to jump, encourage trade wars, and balloon the deficit. Oil prices will soar and the dollar will retreat ever further.

Already we're hearing demands for a military draft to be instituted for both men and women. I see that coming, and it will serve as another source of domestic friction as our economy deteriorates and unemployment rises.

Under these conditions the standard of living for all Americans is destined to go down.

This war, if of any significant duration, in time will be seen as a Republican war, plain and simple. Along with a weak economy, it could easily usher in a "regime change" here in the United States. The conditions may justify a change in leadership, but the return of control to the opposition party will allow them to use the opportunity to promote their domestic liberal agenda and socialize the entire economy.

The net result, regardless of the size and duration of the coming war, will be that the people of the United States will be less free and much poorer. The bigger the war, the greater will be the suffering.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to read "You Are A Suspect" by William Safire in today's New York Times. Mr. Safire, who has been one of the media's most consistent defenders of personal privacy, details the Defense Department's plan to establish a system of "Total Information Awareness". According to Mr. Safire, once this system is implemented, no American will be able to use the Internet to fill a prescription, subscribe to a magazine, buy a book, send or receive e-mail, or visit a website free from the prying eyes of government bureaucrats. Furthermore, individual Internet transactions will be recorded in "a virtual centralized grand database".

Implementation of this project would shred the Fourth Amendment's requirement that the government establish probable cause and obtain a search warrant before snooping into the private affairs of its citizens. I hope my colleagues read Mr. Safire's article and support efforts to prevent the implementation of this program, including repealing any legislation weakening privacy protections that Congress may inadvertently have passed in the rush to complete legislative business this year.

You Are A Suspect

by William Safire

Washington — If the Homeland Security Act is not amended before passage, here is what will happen to you: Every purchase you make with a credit card, every magazine subscription you buy and medical prescription you fill, every website you visit and e-mail you send or receive, every academic grade you receive, every bank deposit you make, every trip you book and every event you attend—all these transactions and communications will go into what the Defense Department describes as “a virtual, centralized grand database”.

To this computerized dossier on your private life from commercial sources, add every piece of information that government has about you—passport application, driver's license and bridge toll records, judicial and divorce records, complaints from nosy neighbors to the F.B.I., your lifetime paper trail plus the latest hidden camera surveillance—and you have the supersnoop's dream: a “Total Information Awareness” about every U.S. citizen.

This is not some far-out Orwellian scenario. It is what will happen to your personal freedom in the next few weeks if John Poindexter gets the unprecedented power he seeks.

Remember Poindexter? Brilliant man, first in his class at the Naval Academy, later earned a doctorate in physics, rose to national security adviser under President Ronald Reagan. He had this brilliant idea of secretly selling missiles to Iran to pay ransom for hostages, and with the illicit proceeds to illegally support contras in Nicaragua.

A jury convicted Poindexter in 1990 on five felony counts of misleading Congress and making false statements, but an appeals court overturned the verdict because Congress had given him immunity for his testimony. He famously asserted “the buck stops here”—arguing that the White House staff, and not the president, was responsible for fateful decisions that might prove embarrassing.

This ring-knocking master of deceit is back again, with a plan even more scandalous than Iran-contras. He heads the “Information Awareness Office” in the otherwise excellent Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, which spawned the Internet and stealth aircraft technology. Poindexter is now realizing his 20-year dream: getting the “data-mining” power to snoop on every public and private act of every American.

Even the hastily passed U.S.A. Patriot Act, which widened the scope of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act and weakened 15 privacy laws, raised requirements for the government to report secret eavesdropping to Congress and the courts. But Poindexter's assault on individual privacy rides roughshod over such oversight.

He is determined to break down the wall between commercial snooping and secret government intrusion. The disgraced admiral dismisses such necessary differentiation as bureaucratic “stovepiping”. And he has been given a $200 million budget to create computer dossiers on 300 million Americans.

When George W. Bush was running for president, he stood foursquare in defense of each person's medical, financial, and communications privacy. But Poindexter, whose contempt for the restraints of oversight drew the Reagan administration into its most serious blunder, is still operating on the presumption that, on such a sweeping theft of privacy rights, the buck ends with him and not with the president.

This time, however, he has been seizing power in the open. In the past week, John Markoff of the Times, followed by Robert O'Harrow of the Washington Post have revealed the extent of Poindexter's operation, but editorialists have not grasped its undermining of the Freedom Of Information Act.

Political awareness can overcome “Total Information Awareness”—the combined force of commercial and government snooping. In a similar overreach, Attorney General Ashcroft tried his Terrorism Information and Prevention System (TIPS), but public outrage at the use of gossips and postal workers as snoops caused the House to shoot it down. The Senate should now do the same to this other exploitation of fear.

Exactly: the government's infinite knowledge about you is its power over you.

“We're just as concerned as the next person with protecting privacy” this brilliant mind blandly assured the Post. A jury found he spoke falsely before. ☹

SEEDS OF FIRE: CHINA AND THE STORY BEHIND THE ATTACK ON AMERICA

On the eve of the first war in the 21st Century, one perplexing question remains: the role of China. The answer comes in what also have hundreds of shorter-range ballistic and cruise missiles for use in regional conflicts. Some of these shorter-range missiles will have nuclear warheads; most will be armed with conventional warheads.

That prediction is from a CIA briefing paper to the Bush Administration. It is one of almost 100 pages of never-before-published official documents in SEEDS OF FIRE: China And The Story Behind The Attack On America, by Gordon Thomas. No one can afford to ignore this book!

SEEDS OF FIRE is a book that every patriotic American — everyone who cares about the future of this country, everyone who wants to know what goes on behind the scenes — must buy and read. This is THE book. Written by a highly experienced intelligence analyst, it is simply a MUST. You cannot ignore the warnings Gordon Thomas gives.

As an example of his total credibility, hours after the book was published, the CIA was forced to confirm its findings about the threat China poses. The CIA publicly confirmed what Gordon Thomas reveals in SEEDS OF FIRE. Just how big a threat China is.

This has been kept out of the news agenda because it does not suit certain business interests to have that truth emerge. But at last here it is. Every patriotic American should buy and read this book! It is simply revelatory.

Other revelations include the Inslaw/Promis “largest global software theft in history”, MK-ULTRA mind-control applications, and the link between newspaper magnate Robert Maxwell and the Los Alamos laboratory nuclear secrets “spy” case.

But it is the China connection that ought to alert all thinking Americans to “the sleeping giant” of the Orient. Be informed. Be astonished.

Small Liars Behind Large Treasons

Editor's note: If it's possible to fashion one common theme from the gems of Truth which Sherman shares this month, perhaps that theme is what's stated above in the headline. But it's the sheer depth and extent of such depraved activities that frequently boggles the mind and makes it so difficult to convince the unaware that such could actually be going on.

When the Founding Fathers of the United States fashioned the original mechanisms of checks & balances for keeping the governmental machinery from wandering too far from its intended path of purpose, they likely had in mind a certain then-imaginable level of possible derailing forces of corruption. But just like we would never have imagined the depth of violence and depravity woven through most movies today from looking just back as far as their pre-1940s counterparts, our Founding Fathers could not have either imagined or designed for the rampant level of criminality so common within the machinery of government today.

To begin to repair such a massive corrosion of original purpose requires, first, a public knowledge of what's going on behind the scenes. That's where Sherman's commentaries fill a most important role from his well-connected position of earned respect and trust.

For those of you newer readers not familiar with this longtime crusader for Truth from the Chicago area, know that:

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 21 (11/10/02)

Trapping The Grand Old Public-Enemy

Sometimes the explanations of historical events are both simple but diabolical. Behind the scenes, those who know a lot believe the following to be quite true.

On East Coast time, it was just before midnight, December 12, 2000. Who was to be installed as the new resident and occupant of the Oval Office was to be decided by a five-person junta of the nation's highest court. At least four of the ignoble five each had their own terrible conflicts of interest, yet they were not about to remove themselves from deciding the case.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist was overheard by close confidants as saying that if Albert Gore Jr. were to be President, Rehnquist could not retire as he had planned, yet Rehnquist was of an advanced age. Sandra Day O'Connor, having survived a bout with serious illness, likewise had been overheard by those close at hand, as saying that if Albert Gore would become President, it would be terrible for the country, would greatly interfere with her personal wishes and plans for retirement. Clarence Thomas—he of the few words, installed years before after a bitter U.S. Senate commotion, with some outspoken persons of his race angrily calling him an "Uncle Tom" who's bad for the Black people—his wife was with a group tightly tied to the Republican Party.

Justice Antonin Scalia's son was part of those presenting the ticking bomb, Bush versus Gore, to the hurry-up reckoning of the U.S. Supreme Court. The Court was in a rush because supposedly it would interfere with the process of the Electoral College.

Justice Scalia's position, as expressed in what he wrote in the decision, was that Americans had no constitutional right to vote for President. Only the right to vote for Electors who came to be called the "Electoral College", and they, not the American voters, decide who is to be President. The fact that the Electoral Process had come to be an historical appendix, not needed or used for the survival of the body politic, was of no interest to Scalia and the other members of the junta.

No lawyer member of the U.S. Supreme Court bar would dare confront, in writing, Scalia, with his serious conflicts of interest. He and two federal appeals judges in Chicago had previously been fellow law professors at Rockefeller's University of Chicago Law School. That is, Chicago 7th Circuit Judges Richard Posner and Frank Easterbrook.

(To learn how these two Chicago judges, one step below the high court in the District of Columbia, commit blatant judicial perjuries and perpetrate frauds upon their own court, visit our website story "Chief Crook Enters Microsoft Case".)

This troika, two in Chicago and one in Washington, represent, while on the bench, the multi-billion-dollar stock and bond portfolio of the University founded, maintained, and controlled by the Rockefellers and their role in the oil cabal. Each of the three has reportedly violated federal law requiring that they file, under oath, each year, their annual mandatory financial disclosure report. They have never in their required annual reports disclosed what they are a part of and what they, on the bench, represent. If forced to tell the truth, how could they have continued to decide many corporation controversies, whose stocks and bonds they represent, without having disqualified themselves? Like some of their purported written decisions, their annual financial disclosure reports are just another monstrous judicial perjury.

(To understand judicial perjury, study our several-part series called "Coca-Cola, CIA, And The Courts" on our website.)

statement that this decision was NOT to be used as a binding precedent, such as on lower courts, in any other voting or other case involving the Equal Protection of the Laws, a provision guaranteed to each American under the 14th Amendment.

To his credit, Justice John Paul Stevens, in a blistering dissent, stated the ruling of the Five undermines public confidence in the courts.

We were apparently the only ones, on a timely basis, who pointed out the situation seemed in many ways very like the strange election of 1876. Like Gore, Samuel Tilden handily won the nationwide popular vote. Rutherford B. Hayes and his gang had stolen the Electoral College vote by corrupting the Election Board Commission in the State of Florida, whose electoral votes were among the keys to the "Electoral College". Like in 2000, the 1876 election turned on who supposedly got Florida's electoral vote.

Also, bribed or otherwise corrupted was an important judge on a congressional commission set up to resolve the 1876 mess.

Strangely reprinted in the spring of the year 2000, was Gore Vidal's book entitled simply 1876. His opus seemed to be a blueprint for what was done, with respect later, to the 2000 Presidential Election.

(Some of Albert Gore Jr.'s family had been overheard to grumble that their cousin, Gore Vidal, related to First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy of the Kennedy, Auchincloss, and Bouvier families which Vidal apparently badmouthed, seemed to be against supporting cousin Albert.)

On Inauguration Day, 1877, apparently rightfully considering himself the duly elected President, Tilden approached the ceremonial stand where the new occupant and resident of the Oval Office was to be sworn in. But Tilden was blocked going any closer, apparently by troops. Thereafter, because of the stink left from the 1876 debacle, Hayes was referred to widely as RUTHERFRAUD.

(The Hayes gang had made an unholy cover-up deal to block and reverse progress of Blacks after the Civil War, when for a brief period some Blacks held positions in some southern state legislatures.)

In its simplest form, Albert Gore Jr. is the duly elected President NOT INAUGURATED. We prefer to call George W. Bush, as BUSHFRAUD, merely the occupant and resident of the Oval Office.

December 12, 2000 was a fateful time. Supposed Oklahoma City "lone bomber" Timothy McVeigh had just informed the Denver trial judge in his case that McVeigh did not wish to further challenge his conviction. And that the judge should set the date for execution of McVeigh by lethal injection.

Public statements by McVeigh could have exposed the Bush Crime Family. The months-later disappearance of Chandra Levy was also related. (Visit our website story "The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh", and also our two-part series "The Chandra Levy Affair".)

By December 12, 2000, Gore had reportedly been already advised by his economic wizards that the U.S. was heading into a terrible financial meltdown, similar to, if not worse than, the Great Depression of the 1930s. That is, Gore was persuaded not to further challenge what was happening and to let the U.S. Supreme Court junta, the Unholy Five, arbitrarily and with serious conflicting interests of the Justices, install George W. Bush as the new occupant and resident of the Oval Office.

Sidebar: Some months thereafter, Russian judges, visiting with the U.S. Supreme Court judges, hit the target directly with their remark: "Whatever you think of us Russian judges in Moscow, we do NOT install our President by our court maneuvers the way you did recently."

So Gore let Bush Jr., as supervised by Daddy Bush as puppet-master, slide into his chair to become another Herbert Hoover. That is, somewhere thereafter to be condemned and despised by a virtual army of hungry, unemployed, suffering Americans. Hoover, with a background as a worldwide engineer, was clever. Bushfraud is not. But like Hoover, Bush is not inclined to be benevolent to fellow Americans in an economic disaster.

After December 12, 2000, in the formality when the Electoral College vote tally was to be presented to Gore in his capacity as President of the U.S. Senate, Gore showed by his body language, particularly how he held his hands, palms up, that he was not going to assist in any challenge to reverse the situation.

The difference between the Great Depression and the first decade of the 21st century is evident to sharp-eyed types. Franklin Delano Roosevelt was swept into office as a Democrat to remedy the economic suffering. He came to be, however, the greatest COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARY in Western history.

He snuffed-out a gathering revolt against the Ruling Class, of which he and his family were long a part. With a new alphabet soup of Federal agencies and regulations, okayed by a rubber-stamp Congress, Roosevelt opened the food warehouses and fed the needy. He set-up a federal agency to slow down the massive foreclosures on private residences caused by a real estate bubble bust. FDR tried to pack the U.S. Supreme Court with a greater number of judges than previously sat on that tribunal, to outvote the hard-hearted backward-thinking judges infesting the place.

But, at that time, America was not ready for a long overdue Revolution, there having been no genuine Revolution in U.S. history, unlike Europe. We had at the time a great number of Europeans who had come to America early in the 20th century. If times got bad, they would not try to overthrow the American Republic. If cold and hungry, they were quite satisfied, nevertheless, to sleep under bridges when it rains, as long as it was in America, not Europe. (Some are finding out the hard way that any overthrowing of the American Republic is being done because of a terrible split in the aristocracy, and not by common folk, as set forth in this series.)

The understanding and positions of our elders in the 1930s is not the mindset nowadays.

Then came the mid-term elections of 2002. Usually and historically, the White House party loses many seats in the American parliament, the Congress. (Unlike British parliamentary procedures, America has no “vote of confidence” to quickly remove Presidents; instead there’s the cumbersome impeachment process.)

One faction of the American aristocracy believes fascism is the only answer to a growing U.S. population. Simply put, they believe we now have too many people to be guaranteeing to each of them, rights, privileges, and immunities as provided under the Bill Of Rights.

With terrible bribery and election and judicial fraud, they have installed, as their would-be dictator, George W. Bush, pro-British as we have demonstrated. Savvy Europeans dismiss him as someone “who pisses on his own shoes”, to quote some of them—a misfit, an incompetent, a mere puppet for Daddy Bush and his sinister gang in the secret political police, the American CIA.

To step-by-step cancel the U.S. Constitution and Bill Of Rights, this faction, having prior knowledge, allowed, condoned, [let’s not forget “engineered”] and acquiesced in the events of 9/11. One explanation of Black Tuesday, circulating in the monopoly press, however, is that Bush was not obligated to react that morning of September 11, 2001, because the super-secret National Reconnaissance Office (NRO) had already scheduled, for the same morning, a test of how the government should handle a situation, wherein terrorists would slam a hijacked airplane into major landmark buildings, like the World Trade Center. Some apologists offer that explanation for why there was, on that morning, a military stand-down, and why Bush continued to talk to school kids about goats after having been informed that two planes crashed into the World Trade Center towers in lower Manhattan. That is, as if Bush thought it was only a “test” by the NRO.

Contradicting the story that some that morning thought it was only a “test”, was that Bush, in the summer of 2001, had told foreign diplomats that the U.S. will go to war against Afghanistan in October, 2001. It was the oil pipeline, stupid!

Apparently opposing a fascist-like solution to any American problems have been the Jacob Schiff family. For the benefit of the Czarist regime in Russia, they arranged, financed, and built the Trans-Siberian Railroad, a great wonder in its day. By giving great quantities of gold to Leon Trotsky while he was visiting the U.S., the Schiff family financed the changing of the possibly backward Czarina (who was heavily pro-German as from her background) and Czar Nicholas II. Some called what happened the Russian Revolution of 1917.

Congressional Committee documents, compiled about 1976, show the true ownership of the Federal Reserve—which includes the Rothschilds, the Rockefellers, the Warburgs, and the Jacob Schiff family (part of a then New York-based publishing empire), among others.

Albert Gore Jr.’s daughter, Karenna Gore, is married to Andrew Schiff, great grandson of the Schiff family. Some narrow-minded sorts like to think only in terms of conspiracy theories. As if they could point to one racial, religious, or ethnic group and blame all the troubles of the planet on them.

For example, one book blames all the world’s problems on the Jesuits and the Vatican (VATICAN ASSASSINS by Eric Jon Phelps). The ultra-right-wing, for religious and other reasons, wants to blame all the troubles of planet Earth on a “Jewish Conspiracy”. They point to the great number of mass media types with Jewish surnames. Not pointed out is that these are MANAGERS, not owners, with the owners being non-Jewish, using Jews as a front to take the heat which is historically typical.

Others in the ultra-right point to “Jewish bankers”—meaning the Rothschilds, who are not followers of Judaism and are the official bankers and transactors of the Vatican. Also, the term means to some the investment and bond houses of Wall Street. Those with the German Jewish names still running the same have not been actual practicing Jews for several generations, having converted to other religions three generations ago and more. (See the documented study The New Crowd: The Changing Of The Jewish Guard On Wall Street by Judith Ramsey Ehrlich and Barry J. Rehfeld, 1989, Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)

An authority on bank ownership, Martin Mayer has a lot of details in his book The Bankers (Mass Market Paperback, December, 1975). He says he found only one bank in the whole United States that had as much as a vice-president, a Jew. By bank, he meant a bank-bank, a bank-house building. For example, the major bank houses of downtown Chicago make a practice as follows, as known to astute observers, they will hire Blacks and Latinos, but generally only permit them to be vault guards or money-counter tellers. Someone who by name is plainly a Jew is generally totally unacceptable.

The ultra-right dismisses Jacob Schiff as merely a “Communist Jew”, without realizing that a faction in the aristocracy used the Hegelian method, financing and creating supposed opponents, antithesis, to later form a synthesis. During the years when the Moscow government was considered “the enemy”, war-mongers among the ultra rich used this to tax common Americans to further enrich the war-creators and their war production facilities. The late Antony Sutton, in several well-documented books, points out how American big business financed the Soviets and supplied them with American high technology. (Looking under “books” on the amazon.com Internet website, you can see a long list of Sutton’s books.)

The supposed top level of the Democratic Party was ORDERED not to make a major issue of the growing unemployment and the poor economy. Why? So the G.O.P. could appear to grab an armlock on all the levers of power in the United States. As a consequence, the Grand Old Public-Enemy won control of both houses of Congress and has a supposed hammer-lock on the central government and some state governors. (Did they hedge their bets by the apparent sabotage airplane murder of U.S. Senator Paul Wellstone (D-MN), with Senator Edward Kennedy (D-MA) to have been on the death-warrant plane as well, but Teddy having somehow changed his mind?)

Financial experts, off the record, predict a real estate bubble bust soon that would hurt ordinary Americans even moreso than their private pension funds being bust because of stock market reverses. Some political strategists think along the lines of military planners. Now steered into taking over total control of the central government, the G.O.P. has been led into a trap. They face being blamed, despised, and ridiculed for the increasing anguish of ordinary Americans trying to deal with an impending financial meltdown. In its simplest terms, Black Tuesday was a bloody dirty trick, for the moment, to delay and sidestep dealing with the expected crash.

In plain terms, Bushfraud, perceived to be a latter-day Herbert Hoover, will be widely blamed for either being unable and/or unwilling to propose or institute any effective remedy to the economic disaster. He may push a tax cut, yet because of declining tax collections in a recession, there is no money for the same. And issuing a flood of U.S. Treasury securities to make a tax cut possible will cause gold to skyrocket, a temporary inflating to come, followed by a devastating decline in value of homes and properties, the dreaded DEFLATION.

Some close to the matters contend this trap sprung on Bush and the G.O.P. cannot be corrected. Some go so far as to contend, from close-at-hand sources, that the trap was ordered by the Schiff family, part of the faction in the aristocracy that opposes scrapping the Bill Of Rights, and is against the fascist-like plans of the Bush Crime Family to rule this continent with an iron fist. That is, to overthrow the American Republic.

Can Bush and his gang get out of the trap?

More coming. Stay tuned.

The Red Chinese Secret Police In The United States, Part 4

S.E.C./China Mess Can Rock U.S.

The U.S. securities industry supposed federal watchdog has been rocked with allegations of apparent penetration by Red Chinese intelligence. Purportedly divulged was sensitive commercial-value data made known by, among others, U.S. computer firms, to the U.S. Securities & Exchange Commission (S.E.C.). Called CTRs (Confidential Treatment Requests), they are supposed to be kept secret by the S.E.C.

An S.E.C. employee, Mylene Chan, was reportedly fired. An online-service analyst, she reportedly states she resigned and was planning to leave the U.S. She denies wrongly divulging any such data. This type of information, CTRs, are confidential and secret reports of U.S. firms that contain proprietary and other sensitive material that companies do not want to be public, and other sensitive data the firms do not want to be available to competitors, such as in Red China.

The S.E.C./Red China story was first revealed by the Washington Times, ostensibly owned by the Korean C.I.A. through Rev. Sun Myung Moon, who has been accused of being part of a money laundry front to disguise, for tax evasion and other purposes, vast funds from overseas firms, such as in South Korea. Some years ago, Washington was rocked by an earlier scandal when a purported official of the Korean C.I.A. was accused of massive bribery of various members of the U.S. House and Senate.

Long-time investigative journalist Robert Parry, formerly a correspondent for a major magazine, has written about and inquired into the shadowy doings of Rev. Moon, the Korean C.I.A., and George Herbert Walker Bush.

Parry’s details have been publicized through a publication of his, Consortium News, and their www.consortiumnews.com website. Also see Dark Side Of Rev. Moon Hooking George Bush by Robert Parry. The opus details how Daddy Bush has been a form of lobbyist and front man for Rev. Moon’s purported money laundering through a South American publication and other worldwide money washing enterprises. (See the www.freedomofmind.com Internet website.)

The Washington Times divulged the S.E.C./Red China details in exclusive stories on 11/11/02 and 11/12/02. Other prior details have been contained in books by Washington Times writer Bill Gertz, and in books such as Year Of The Rat—How Bill Clinton Compromised U.S. Security For Chinese Cash by Edward Timperlake and William C. Triplett II (Regnery Publishing, Inc., 1998).

The reputed players in the Red China mess have NOT been divulged in the Washington Times currently or previously. Such as:

- PRESCOTT S. BUSH JR., brother of Daddy Bush, and uncle of White House resident and occupant George W. Bush. Uncle Prescott, an East Coast purported “investment arranger”, has been head of the Chicago-based U.S.-China Chamber of Commerce. Some consider it is no coincidence that the Red Chinese Secret

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious “Angel of Death” in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

Police have an apparent armlock on the Chicago markets, in the laundering of dope funds, weapons deals, and proceeds of smuggling of human body parts for transplant hospitals in the Chicago area and elsewhere. This is an open secret, but not mentioned by the liars and whores of the financial press, such as the Wall Street Journal.

Reportedly involved are certain hotshot traders on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade, and the Chicago Board Options Exchange, as well as the Chicago Stock Exchange. (This was formerly known as the Midwest Stock Exchange and center of a messy purported tax evasion/embezzlement scandal implicating officials of the markets as well as Chicago District IRS officials, according to those familiar with a long-pending Chicago court lawsuit.)

Uncle Prescott reportedly was, in some form or another, involved in highly questionable U.S.-Red China deals, on occasion with the participation of renegade and other officials of Israeli intelligence, the Mossad. Prescott was ostensibly helpful in conveying some $40 million as a payoff to Red China by George W. Bush, in April 2001, shortly after Bush Jr. occupied the White House. The clandestine funds were to encourage Red China to release a U.S. spy plane and a number of intelligence operatives onboard when the plane was forced down by Red China and the operatives, for awhile, held hostage. (For related details, see our story "Red China Gets Big Bucks In Secret Hostage Deals".)

Prescott S. Bush Jr., according to various published accounts, has reportedly arranged corrupt deals using the Japanese mafia, the Yakuza.

(See references available through search engines such as the www.google.com website. For data on the Japanese mafia operations in America, see our story "The Japanese Mafia In The U.S.")

By the way, the Korean C.I.A.'s Washington Times stories, according to savvy sources, are calculated to blackmail the Bush White House with undisclosed details such as contained herein, to prevent prosecution of the "moonies" as they are called, as well as a possible federal grand jury quiz directed at the Rev. Moon money laundering empire interwoven with the Bush Crime Family.

Prescott S. Bush Jr. has also been an executive of Dresser Industries, in which his brother, George Herbert Walker Bush, had a financial interest in originally aiding the ruling dictator-family of Kuwait in oil development. Dresser, now a unit of Richard Cheney's Halliburton, has reportedly been implicated in secretly aiding Iraq defeat the embargo and supplying Iraq with oil field machinery.

• ALAN GREENSPAN, another player in the Red Chinese Secret Police penetrating U.S. company secrets, for many years has headed the Federal Reserve. With the use of his secret wire transfer authorization code, Greenspan has aided the Bush Crime Family in massive laundering of the proceeds from the Red China dope trade to the U.S., as well as the illicit funds from other dope smuggling, clandestine weapons deals, and covert political assassination funding.

Used were the Bush Crime Family's 25 worldwide accounts. Included is the Bush joint account with the Queen of England, through her private bank, Coutts Bank London. The authenticated secret wire transfer records are attached to our website story series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush", listing the accounts and passwords, including a $100 billion transaction through the Bush joint account with the British monarch.

The Bush secret accounts went on to not only launder funds of the Red Chinese Secret Police and their surrogate/agent Marc Rich (more about him later), but for what became Enron, Arthur Andersen, and such. A long-reliable top financial source has informed us that Greenspan claims he is tired of being used by the Bush Crime Family as well as General Electric Capital.

Greenspan is married to his longtime girlfriend Andrea Mitchell, NBC White House correspondent, who seems to be part of the Red China-U.S. whitewash. She works for NBC, owned by General Electric, which is seeking to be compensated for large funds they invested in India, in the terrible scandal there known as the Dabhol Project of energy development involving also Enron. Richard Cheney and Colin Powell have reportedly been using their White House clout to pressure the India government to compensate the U.S. investors, including G.E.

• MARC RICH, international swindler, arranging multi-billion-dollar mineral and metal deals, and the laundering of illicit funds through the Chicago markets. He escaped from the U.S. and is holed-up in Zug, Switzerland. He reportedly caused to be conveyed, as a bribe pay-off to Bill and Hillary Clinton, several million dollars. For this, Clinton, as outgoing President, at the zero hour in leaving office in January 2001, granted a pardon to Marc Rich. Israeli officials, including former Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, pressured the Clintons and reportedly were the courier apparatus arranging the offshore depositing of the bribe funds. The Israeli officials confirmed to the Clintons that Marc Rich has aided and assisted the Israeli secret political police, the Mossad, in overseas clandestine projects involving, among other things, huge transfers of covert funds.

The Pardogate scandal has been the ongoing subject of inquiry by the federal prosecutors in New York. They have submitted questions to Barak, requiring him to answer. Unknown to them, Barak was recently in the U.S. Furious at him for not answering questions as to the apparent bribery of the Clintons and related tax evasions, the prosecutors contend they will arrest Barak the moment he again sets foot in the U.S. The Israeli Embassy in Washington has been warned recently about the possible arrest of Barak, who is also believed to be a key player in the joint secret deals between the Bush Crime Family, Red China, and Israel.

A major Israeli newspaper, in their English language edition (www.ha'aretzdaily.com for 11/09/02), mentioned the possibility of Barak being arrested in the U.S. in the Marc Rich Affair.

• RAHM EMANUEL, as former senior Clinton White House advisor, was reportedly implicated in various illicit dealings with the Red Chinese, penetrating U.S. industrial, financial, and military secrets. A dual citizen of Israel and the United States, he left the U.S. about 1990 to serve in the Israeli Defense Forces, the IDF. After leaving the Clinton White House, where he served off and on for some six years, Rahm made a sizeable fortune apparently from the secret Red Chinese dealings to get at U.S. secrets, while Rahm Emanuel was a top official of the investment house Wasserstein, Perella & Co. Rahm is ostensibly an accomplished participant in "political opposition research"—a codename for compiling and using blackmail data.

Rahm Emanuel has used a portion of his apparently ill-gotten fortune to buy massive advertising and such, paving the way for him to win, as he did, the Illinois Congressional District previously occupied by defrocked Congressman Dan Rostenkowski, convicted of embezzling sums from the House of Representatives private bank. With his dual political loyalty as well, Rahm both supported Clinton publicly, while he apparently manipulated him privately using reputed Mossad-controlled sexmate Monica Lewinsky.

Rahm Emanuel has ostensibly functioned as the Mossad's Deputy Chief for North America. In the past, some of Israeli intelligence's top officials for U.S. and Canada were headquartered in Chicago, operating in part through Bank Leumi.

(In 1993, through a one-hour public-access cable-TV program, we exposed the bank and a major spy-swindler, later jailed, aided and abetted by the bank, allowing him under-the-table funds as "overdrafts", the Clifford Sugarman affair. He was jailed as a consequence of our TV show.)

• WAL-MART has been interwoven, as we have shown, with the Red Chinese Secret Police operations in the United States. Various contraband items are coming into the U.S. by direct flights to a huge new airport near the current Wal-Mart headquarters in Northwest Arkansas—direct flights from Red China, which bypass U.S. Customs inspections through tricks. Some of the goods sold by Wal-Mart, at knockdown prices destroying competitors like K-Mart, are produced by slave labor in facilities in Red China and Sri Lanka controlled by the Red Chinese Secret Police.

• FBI AND THE AMERICAN C.I.A. have allowed, permitted, condoned, and acquiesced in the Red Chinese Secret Police committing murder and mayhem on U.S. soil, with impunity and immunity, since 1956. Reports by retired intelligence officials, as a team, have been ignored by the FBI and the CIA.

Admiral Jeremy Boorda, Chief of Naval Operations, highest navy official in uniform, headed a team of "flag officers" (military lingo for Admirals and Generals) attempting, from 1995 on, to arrest Commander-in-Chief Bill Clinton for treason for giving U.S. secrets to the Red Chinese. Ten of the team, to stop the efforts, were assassinated, including Boorda. We have mentioned this in prior stories.

• RON BROWN, as head of the U.S. Commerce Department during the Clinton Administration, was assassinated following a sabotaged airplane crash in Yugoslavia. He and a flight attendant survived the crash caused by foul play, moving the radio beacon so that the plane was directed into a hill instead of the runway. Brown, as later shown by x-rays, was apparently murdered by being shot through the top of the head. The flight attendant, walking and in good order, was murdered by having a major artery slashed on the way to be checked at the hospital. Two airport officials were later murdered, each "suicided"—death by staged suicides. The U.S. military, in a strange procedure, failed to investigate the crash.

Brown reportedly insisted to Clinton that Brown was not going to "take the fall", being the subject of a federal criminal prosecution for pay-offs Brown received from the Red Chinese Secret Police to obtain secret U.S. financial, industrial, and military secrets. Brown was murdered after he continued to insist he receive "part of the action".

• KENNETH W. STARR spent huge taxpayer funds as supposed "Independent Counsel" for four years running half-heartedly against Bill and Hillary Clinton. Starr came up only with juicy sex-tales regarding Monica Lewinsky and Bill Clinton. Most of the time Starr spent in his PRIVATE law practice. His client? Wang Jun, head of the Red Chinese Secret Police.

From time to time, Clinton met with Wang Jun in or near the White House. As the assassinated flag officers were prepared to document, their Commander-in-Chief Clinton reportedly turned over to Wang Jun, U.S. financial, industrial, and military secrets, constituting the classic version of treason: aiding and abetting a sworn enemy of the United States (U.S. Constitution, Article 3, Section 3).

There was actually a stand-off between the Clintons and Starr. Why and how? At any moment, the Clinton Justice Department could prosecute Kenneth W. Starr as AN UNREGISTERED FOREIGN LOBBYIST for the Red Chinese government in Beijing. And the Wang Jun affair could cause the jailing of both Bill Clinton and his supposed nemesis Starr.

• THE SECRET COURT, set up under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, has been inquiring whether to order wiretaps and other surveillance methods, as to the foregoing. They meet in soundproof facilities in the Justice Department building, Washington, D.C.

The Bush Justice Department, however, is seeking to prevent two super-secret agencies from proceeding to extend their authority with respect to the foregoing. That is, the National Reconnaissance Office (NRO) and the National Security Agency (NSA). In charge of satellites and imaging systems, the NRO already has sufficient proof to prosecute each and every government official and operative herein mentioned.

George W. Bush is seeking to bottle-up the S.E.C./Red China aspect, which is just the opening part of the scandal. As a whitewash, Bush appointed a new chairman of a congressionally mandated commission on Red China and U.S. security issues. In October 2002, Bush appointed, as new chairman, Roger Robinson, of the U.S.-China Security Review Commission. Robinson can be depended on to conduct a reported whitewash to cover-up some of the things mentioned herein. During the Reagan Administration, when Daddy Bush actually ran the White House for the two Reagan terms of office, Robinson was part of the National Security Council.

Robinson was quoted in the Washington Times, 11/12/02: "It's troubling to learn that a soft, but sensitive, agency like the S.E.C. may have been penetrated." Some consider that statement by Robinson merely to throw critics off their guard.

To further understand the foregoing, visit and study, the following of our research stories: "Red Chinese Secret Police In The United States" and "Wal-Mart And The Red Chinese Secret Police" plus the series on Marc Rich, particularly how he is helping a Red Chinese monopoly to foist non-lead bullets on the U.S. Military and eventually on ordinary Americans, called "Marc Rich—King Of The U.S. Bullets".

What is the reason, none dare call this TREASON?

Will there be a whitewash to clear both Bill Clinton and George W. Bush?

More coming. Stay tuned.

The Sucker Traps, Part Four

(11/22/02)

Fed To Ambush Common Americans

In nailing bribe-taking judges and bribe-giving lawyers, we do NOT proceed applying some overall conspiracy or plot. We do not like to think of events solely in terms of a conspiracy, nor do we wish to be falsely labeled as "conspiracy theorists"—a favorite put-down of the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press.

We do not like "pie in the sky" ideas or mere philosophies. Our group's corruption investigations have turned on highly technical details, our specialty based on over one million records, court files, secret notebooks, audio and video tapes, and similar items compiled over four decades of our work.

Fingering corrupt members of the bench and the bar, from our standpoint, does NOT depend on whether they are conservatives, liberals, Democrats, or Republicans. In four decades we have hit enough of them between the eyes, in our public interest crusading, more than in the entire previous history of the nation. These are matters of record, not theories, that should reassure even skeptics that we are not inclined to make idle statements.

So, when we call the PRIVATE Central Bank, masquerading as a U.S. Government unit, the conspiratorial FEDERAL RESERVE, we do not know of any more specific way to describe them.

If you watch with an eagle-eye, occasionally the instruments and mouthpieces of The Establishment, “the powers that be”, the Ruling Class, whatever you call THEM—you sometimes get an advance warning from a faction in the Aristocracy.

Here’s a story, datelined Washington, in the New York Times, 11/22/02: (Emphasis added.)

“FEDERAL OFFICIALS SAY POLICY ISN’T LIMITED BY LOW RATES

“The Federal Reserve may have lowered interest rates to the once unimaginable level of 1.25 percent, but senior officials insist they can still FLOOD THE COUNTRY WITH MONEY if they need to.

“The U.S. government has a technology, called a printing press—or, today, its electronic equivalent—that allows it to produce as many U.S. dollars as it wishes AT ESSENTIALLY NO COST”, Ben S. Bernanke, one of the Federal Reserve’s seven governors, said in a speech to economists here today.

“In a detailed analysis that tracks fairly closely with more general comments last week by Alan Greenspan, the Fed chairman, Mr. Bernanke described the many ways the central bank could INJECT VAST SUMS OF MONEY into the economy to combat DEFLATION, even if interest rates were to drop to ZERO.”

Like in the wake of 1929, The Establishment currently is not about to admit that a horrendous financial meltdown is in the works. AND THAT A FACTION IN THE ARISTOCRACY, with prior treasonous knowledge, diverted attention, temporarily, from an impending financial debacle by way of Black Tuesday, September 11, 2001.

The small-to-medium so-called “investors”, having become sour on stock losses, have been advised by the brokerage trade: “Well, then I’ll put you into bonds instead.” And the price of U.S. Treasury Securities goes UP as the interest rates go DOWN, and vice versa.

To just TEMPORARILY delay the inevitable financial collapse, the Federal Reserve is going to RE-FLATE WALL STREET, just long enough for the “big boys” to get their rear ends free and clear, if possible, of financial fallout, destined to rain-down on know-nothings, the unsuspecting suckers, like so much mostly fatal nuclear economic residue.

After all, who remembers that the greatest losses were inflicted AFTER 1929, on those who believed the newsmakers and the Herbert Hoover White House that “prosperity is just around the corner”? By 1930, plenty of suckers were lured back into the stock market, and got clipped and ruined.

A good textbook of the events in and after 1929 is J. Kenneth Galbraith’s opus The Great Crash—1929, several times re-printed since 1959. NOT in October, 1929, BUT IN SEVERAL YEARS AFTERWARDS, quite a number of wrecked “investors”, caught also in the real estate bust that followed, “took the gas pipe”, then typical lingo for snuffing themselves out at a time when not all gas stoves had safety pilot-lights.

No, they do not nowadays jump out of windows in some spectacular “end it all” situation. In fact, cynics point out that it cannot now happen anyway. After all, big buildings—such as near Wall Street, LaSalle Street, and such financial districts—do not have windows that open, and roof entries are locked.

Only old-timers remember the unemployed bond brokers of the 1930s, walking down the street without a topcoat in the winter, in the last of their fancy suits. Who remembers the Wall Street Journal almost went into bankruptcy in 1935? Then and now, as the peddler of Establishment lies, the Journal is trusted by WHOM, and WHO needs them, after all? (Some sarcastic sorts read the Journal the cheap way, on-line, just to see what “Big Lie” is currently being circulated—for the purpose of dissidents and commentators to be able to refute the Journal on Internet or wheresoever outspoken types can be heard.)

In the Fall of 2002, the Wall Street Journal apparently got tired of their skilled team writing stories about corporate finagling. So, in the name of “cutbacks”, the Journal dismissed their entire “legal team”—the label for 23 of their writers of cover-up and whitewash stories of corporate bandits and pirates.

If you believe in conspiracy theories, can it be said the Bush and Cheney White House ordered this head-chopping? And who, if anyone, will write such big lies in the future, to protect the Aristocracy and their corporations? Will it be their worldwide wire-service pack of liars, the Associated Press (AP)—the same ones who promoted big CIA lies such as a “lone gunman” assassinated President John F. Kennedy, and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and Robert F. Kennedy?

So, will the Journal merely reprint AP stories of corporate gangsters, the Journal’s own writing team having been wacked?

In their item of 11/22/02, the New York Times does not dare go into more specifics or contradictions, such as:

1. Is the re-flating supposedly of the economy going to be quite temporary, just long enough to get the “big boys” out and lure the suckers back in?

2. What will happen to U.S. Treasury Securities now that so many ordinary Americans have been herded into that?

3. Will the re-flating actually be able to stop what savvy sorts see—namely, that dreaded long-term oncoming DEFLATION?

4. Will the Federal Reserve’s trick device be able to actually stop the impending real estate bust, considering that real estate is one of the only free markets in America?

5. Actually, if not theoretically, would not re-flation, even if temporary, cause the good stuff—the independent real money, namely gold—jump way up? And would the big-time derivatives swindlers like J.P. Morgan Chase be already out of their wrong gold positions, being some 23 or more TRILLION dollars—like three times the gross product per year of the whole U.S.?

6. Why is a faction in the Aristocracy, through their mouthpiece, the New York Times, supposedly warning any of us common folk at all? Perhaps to head-off a pro-Nazi-like, fascist-type of element, an opposing faction in the Aristocracy, who installed a financial incompetent named George W. Bush?

Do we have to, right HERE, include all the details, elsewhere posted on various websites, showing the documented items that the Bush Crime Family promoted and financed Adolf Hitler and the Nazis, before, DURING, and after World War II? (Some examples are in Webster Tarpley’s book The Unauthorized Biography Of George Bush.)

Do we, right HERE, have to show the list of the Ruling Families who formed the Federal Reserve in 1912 and their descendants, agents, and surrogates who continue to own and operate the Federal Reserve? Others on various websites have shown the 1976 Congressional Report detailing the same. Unfortunately, some not-well-informed sorts, highly naive, would require us to re-invent the wheel of history every few paragraphs—and greatly heckle us for not doing so.

More coming. Stay tuned.

Make Room In Your Life For Your New World

12/3/02 ESU "JESUS" SANANDA

Do not be afraid. No harm will come to thee. That which you feel within your emotions may be strong, but it must not take power over you. Darkness is attempting to take you down, but you have the Light of Holy God and the protection of His Host of Angels watching over thee. Though it may seem very dark at the moment, know that the dawn is very near—a new day, a new beginning.

I am Esu "Jesus" Sananda, and I stand with you, this day, in this hour. Fret not, and let us move together. For if you will allow, I will hold you up. Know that I am ALWAYS as near as your call and your request. That which is upon you will soon pass, and you will have grown and learned a great deal from the experience.

No, child, this experience will not end your physical life. You are strong, and you are much needed. This is a time when the Dark Energies are wreaking havoc upon your world, and you have been caught-up in the havoc. But, never fear, for we of the Lighted Realms are with you now, and will prop you up in your time of need. We come from and in service unto Holy God of Light—the One Source of all that is.

You see, the time is such that you have been experiencing the shifting of dimensions, and what was once, is no more. The Transition of your world is in full swing, and there is no turning back for any of you ones. You cannot go back to the way it was, for you can only move forward.

Those who choose to stand still will not be included in the physical Transition, but will experience it from another plane of existence, and they shall not be judged in any way, for this is their choice. Many on your planet are making their choices right now. It will be a time of great sorrow for many, and a time of ultimate joy for others.

It is totally dependent upon your level of understanding and knowledge. If you choose to remain captives of the past, and resistant to the changes taking place, you will find the events occurring to be difficult to deal with, for all things are on the verge of massive change.

Many are they who are in distress, worrying about their financial securities, and of their positions in their careers and social orders. If you are among these, I ask that you examine what really counts and matters. If you were to lose all your money tomorrow, how would you react? Would you be wrought with fear and worry, or would you be able to take it in stride? You must be honest with yourselves.

We have been working with all of you for many years now, trying to reach you with the message of the coming changes. We have offered many suggestions and lessons on how to position yourselves—physically, mentally, and emotionally—for that which you find yourselves experiencing at present. As in the past, we once again advise you that you must keep your focus on the Light; focus on your spiritual path, and allow it to guide you through your physical world.

If you have, instead, allowed your physical life to guide your spiritual life, then you have it quite inside out, and are most likely experiencing one emotional trauma after another.

It is not a time to be timid, nor is it a time to ignore the Inner (Higher) Guidance that is coming to you ones. You are dreaming, and yet ignoring the messages of your dreams. You are receiving information and messages in your awake state, and yet ignoring them as well.

Chelas [students], these are your Guides attempting, in whatever manner, to reach you and show you where you are off course, or show you the course you should be taking. But, if these messages run cross-wise to your physical lives, you are ignoring them, and thus bringing on the traumas in your lives.

The only way you ones are going to get through these coming days and weeks is if you turn inward, and look "upward". You must listen to your Guides, for they are working with you ones night and day, because the Dark Energies are scurrying about like cockroaches.

Yet, what happens when you turn on the light? Cockroaches run for their lives! This is precisely what the Dark Energies will do when you invoke and call upon the Lighted Energies, and make the Light an integral part of your lives. Darkness cannot co-exist with Light. It is an impossibility, both physically and spiritually speaking.

When you find yourself “down in the dumps”, know that these depressed bouts are caused by your allowing the Dark Energies to influence you. If you do not stop them in their tracks, they will continue to cause you to bring all sorts of ills upon yourself, until they have managed to stop you, and ultimately destroy you.

REMEMBER: YOU DO INDEED HAVE AUTHORITY AND POWER OVER ALL DARKNESS, AND YOU DO NOT HAVE TO TOLERATE ITS PRESENCE.

Their only weapon against you is your own fear. If you do not allow them to intimidate and bring you into that place of fear, they will eventually give up and leave you be. Remember to continually bring the Light in, and call upon the Host of Heaven to guide and protect you—to keep the Darkness away from you.

Once you have accepted and taken your God-given authority over these Dark Energies, you will find that you will recognize their tactics, and you can then be on guard for any future attacks. As always, the best defense is a good offense!

So, rather than waiting until you are in a crisis, take the initiative and daily call upon the Light. Look to the Light. Walk in the Light. Live in the Light.

Where Light is, Darkness cannot be!

It is also the time to begin tending to yourselves, as well as others. The Dark Energies are using the ploy of keeping you ones running so fast to and fro that you have no time to take care of your own well-being, and many of you ones are finding yourselves in a physically weakened state. This, in turn, is causing you ones to fall into many traps that have been set-up specifically to catch you off-guard.

Learn to slow down, even though the world seems to be rushing ahead at a breakneck speed. Evaluate all the things that you are doing, or being called upon to do. Examine and eliminate those things which are unnecessary. And take time to stop, on a daily basis, and “just be”. It is very necessary for your well-being.

Learn to be more flexible in your lives. Ask yourself, if you do not do this thing or that thing, what would be the very worst that would happen? You will be amazed at just how many unnecessary and useless things you are doing on a daily basis, simply out of habit and a false sense of responsibility, that busy you to that breaking point.

Simplify your lives, and you will find that life is much easier to live.

Everything in your world is changing, and you must change as well. The more you struggle against these changes, the more you will find yourselves in states of crises.

I am not advocating that you bow down to those things which are known to be of Adversarial design and control. I am speaking of the Transition that is taking place.

As we have told you ones before, the frequency of the planet is evolving to a higher vibration, and you are experiencing that same frequency shifting within your own being. However, many of you are struggling and fighting this change, and such an inner state of turmoil is causing you to be influenced and attacked by the Dark Forces.

That is why taking time daily to “just be”—or perhaps to meditate and focus on the Lighted Energies—is so important. These quiet times will cause your frequency to shift upward toward the higher vibration, and you will not feel like you are always running five steps behind.

Take walks, listen to soothing music, turn off the television and radio, and communicate with another human being. Plant a garden; get your hands into the soil of Mother Earth. Be a part of the naturally occurring cycles of your planet.

Be aware of the subtleties in the behavior of plants and animals. You can learn much from observing such, and they will also put you into a state of mind that will allow you to hear from your Guides.

Learn to uncomplicate your lives. Life is not designed to be a struggle, yet you ones have a tendency to turn the simplest of things into complexities.

Sit for five minutes and be aware of your own breath. This is an excellent exercise for clearing the mind, and for relaxation. Light a candle and stare into the flame. Be still for five minutes and just “be”. Count your blessings.

I am Esu “Jesus” Sananda. I will leave you now, but I leave you with the Light of Holy God. Call upon me; call upon God; call upon the Host of Heaven in these days.

Listen for the Still Small Voice, for that is where you shall find us. We will never intrude into your lives, and we will never force you to do anything you choose not to do. We will, however, assist you and guide you—whenever you ask. But, you must ASK!

Blessings upon all of you ones. Stand strong, and stand in the Light in these coming days. Salu.

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.” — From the back cover of Volume I

Spirited Life Of The Peaceful Warrior

by Rick Martin

An associate informed me that Dan was in a “writing retreat” for his newest work, a novel. Yet I heard back from him almost immediately. Dan was more than willing to give whatever time I needed to develop the theme of this story. So, on November 20, we spoke for several hours. The results of that enjoyable and refreshing experience are shared herein.

Dan Millman is a former world trampoline champion, Stanford University gymnastics coach, and Oberlin College professor. As a popular inspirational speaker, Dan’s talks and seminars have influenced people from all walks of life, including leaders in the fields of business and finance, health, psychology, education, politics, entertainment, sports, and the arts.

For more than two decades he has shared down-to-Earth spiritual insights with professional organizations worldwide, including: The American Healthcare Radiologists Association, Apple University, The American Massage Therapists Association, United Swiss Bank (UBS), The Schuster Center for Professional Development, and The International Conference on Business and Consciousness. Some of his topics include: “The Twelve Gateways To Human Potential”—“Laws Of Business, Laws Of Life”—and “Living On Purpose”.

Dan Millman is probably best known for the longtime classic and word-of-mouth bestseller Way Of The Peaceful Warrior, which is still reaching new readers in a revised 20th anniversary edition. His books have inspired millions, and appear in 22 languages.

Dan has written 11 titles (so far) including:

- Way Of The Peaceful Warrior
- Sacred Journey Of The Peaceful Warrior
- The Life You Were Born To Live
- Everyday Enlightenment
- No Ordinary Moments
- Living On Purpose
- The Laws Of Spirit
- Divine Interventions
- Body Mind Mastery
- Secret Of The Peaceful Warrior and
- Quest For The Crystal Castle.

[Editor’s note: Dan’s one-volume practical guide to personal growth, Everyday Enlightenment, is now available through Wisdom Books & Press 1-877-280-2866. See the information box within this article.]

Dan also offers several audio programs, titled:

- The Peaceful Warrior’s Path To Everyday Enlightenment
- Way Of The Peaceful Warrior
- Body Mind Mastery and
- The Laws Of Spirit.

He has one video, called The Peaceful Warrior Workout. All of these titles are available from major bookstores.

Dan’s www.danmillman.com Internet website is a concise source of information about Dan’s seminar schedules, retreats, frequently asked questions, and many other topics.

Here is what Dr. Wayne Dyer has to say about Dan Millman’s book Everyday Enlightenment:

“Another major contribution to your spiritual awakening by one of my favorite authors. Dan writes with eloquence and practicality—a rare combination.”

A typical Dan Millman statement appears in an interview he sent to me in preparation for this story:

“Self-mastery appears in those moments when we subordinate our little will—our personal tendencies and preferences—to the dominion of our Higher Will, Higher Self, Higher Integrity, or Higher Ideals. It’s a conscious movement from ‘What’s in it for me?’ to ‘What will serve the highest good of all involved?’ ”

Another thought Dan shared with me, which seems appropriate for this interview, comes from Carl Jung:

“The great decisions in human life usually have far more to do with the instincts and other mysterious unconscious factors than with conscious will and well-meaning reasonableness. The shoe that fits one person pinches another; there is no universal recipe for living. Each of us carries his own life-form within him—an irrational form which no other can outbid.”

As you’ll see below, Dan has the “coach’s gift” of provoking us to pay attention to seemingly little things that turn out to have a profound impact on achieving the important goals of a satisfying life.

With that said, let’s turn now to my interview with Dan Millman.

Martin: Can you help me to focus on what it is that makes so many people regard you as their “favorite” author?

Millman: Unlike many other authors and speakers, I’ve found, over time, that I’m quite difficult to pigeonhole, to put in a familiar category. As you’ve noted from my 11 books, my work is quite holistic, and touches on many different aspects of life—from spiritual law, to life purpose systems, to meditation and building bridges between conventional and transcendental reality. It is a bit hard to figure me out and to characterize what I do.

Someone who reads one of my books may experience a phenomenon similar to that old proverb or that old tale about the five or six blind men who come across an elephant. It’s a quite familiar story to most people. Each blind person holds a different part of the elephant: one the tail, one the trunk, one the leg, one touches the ear. And they all have a different experience of the elephant. I'm like that elephant, and depending upon which of my books people have read, they have a different impression of what my work is about.

Martin: Having read several of your books now, you offer a number of tools for spiritual growth, personal and emotional attunement. Obviously these are extremely troubling—and for many, depressing—times to live in. What comments can you make about tools that the readers might hone to help deal with the stresses of our current life in society?

Millman: As you were talking, two points stood out. The first one is “tools”, and the other is “these difficult times”. I will grant you that these times, today, are quite unique, in that we have weapons of mass destruction. We did not have nuclear weapons back in medieval times. They had other problems, such as plagues, lack of sanitation, etc.

So the times, in their own way, have always been difficult and challenging. That's why I see all human beings as “peaceful warriors in training”. We're here to learn both courage and love.

When you mention “tools”, I picture quite concretely my tool area in my house, where I have hammers and duct-tape and screwdrivers, and so on; so if something breaks down, I'll have something handy to fix it. As anyone who has done fix-it work knows, having the right tool is absolutely KEY.

So, the “tools” that I provide, and I have to put that in quotations, are similar in their way. I've often thought about “What can I do to help people, to help others help themselves?” Let me tell a brief story in that light.

One day, Socrates and I were walking down the street—not the ancient Greek, but my old mentor, from the adventures I described in Way Of The Peaceful Warrior—during a period of time when I was doing a great deal of work on myself. I was doing self-analysis through various methods, self-reflection. A great deal of that period many of us go through in our lives where we are pretty preoccupied with our insides, and so on. At the same time, I saw a poster on the wall that was about oppressed peoples. I saw another poster, on another wall at Berkeley, that was about starving children and the homeless. And I said: “Socrates, I feel guilty, and kind-of selfish, doing all this work on myself, when there are so many people in need out there. Shouldn't I be more socially active?”

He didn't say anything, at first. Then, all of sudden he turned to me and said:

“Take a swing at me.”

I didn't understand, it seemed like a non-sequitur. I said: “Didn't you hear what I was just saying?”

And he said: “Yes. Come on, I'll give you $5 if you can slap me on the cheek.”

I thought it was some kind of test, so I took a swing at him and found myself on the ground in the next few moments, in a rather painful wrist-lock. As he let me up, smiling, he said: “Do you notice a little leverage can be very effective?”

I said: “Yes, I noticed”—shaking out my wrist.

And he said: “If you want to help people, that's wonderful that you're moved to do that, to reach out to others; it's a natural impulse of a good heart.

Dan Millman

But you need to do the work on yourself, to develop the clarity, to know how to exert the right leverage, at the right place, at the right time, so you won't just be spinning your wheels being a “do-gooder”, making empty gestures that could even be counter-productive. You learn how to exert the right leverage.”

Since that time, in a sense, that's all I've been seeking to do: to know how to exert the right leverage to impact people. For example, tomorrow, the day after this interview, I'm going to be at the Alameda County Jail. It's a maximum security facility. I'm a short, upper-middle-class White guy, 56-years-old, talking to almost all young, Black teenagers who have committed murder and serious crimes. And I'll face the same challenge: How do I exert the right leverage? How do I express myself and build rapport?

There's an old saying: “No one cares

what you know, unless they know how much you care.” And so, I have to build that first. It's really no different with the rest of my readers. I'm seeking the leverage, I'm seeking those tools, to be able to help in some way.

I've asked myself quite honestly and coldly: “Does it make a difference?” I hope every teacher reaches the point where they say: “Is this a game we're playing, or am I actually making a difference?” If I felt that I wasn't making a difference, I would go into something else. I'd go back into teaching trampoline. But the feedback I seem to get is that I have a way of expressing myself that makes a lot of sense to people. And, hopefully, I'll give some examples of that during our time together here.

What I do is, I offer new perspective, expanded perspective, a new way of looking at life, and ourselves. I, also, offer principles. And these principles are not based just on my opinion; I would hope not. Because my opinion is no more valuable than anyone else's. No one is smarter than all of us.

When I talk about principles, these are based upon spiritual law; I'll say more about spiritual law later on, but I just want to mention that. They are based on universal, consistent laws that work in this world. And the more we align ourselves with those Laws, the easier life becomes. It's like learning to swim with the current, rather than against it.

Then, the third thing I offer are practices, and these are not esoteric. I've done all the esoteric practices, believe me! Over the years, I've gone through phases where I've traveled around the world and studied with different teachers, and done all of the Zen and Hindu and Buddhist and Sufi practices. But, the practices that I offer are those that are easily integrated into everyday life. They're not weird or bizarre, even though there may be appropriate times to sit quietly in a corner; they are things people do when they are going to work or driving down the road.

To me, if they can't be easily integrated into every day life, they're of little value, because we live life day-to-day. And that is one of the things that characterizes my work: I'm not an esoteric, spiritual teacher, although I do understand esotericism. I help provide a foundation.

So, with that brief monologue, I hope I've at least given an overview that, basically, what I can do is to remind people of what they already know on deeper levels, but might have forgotten. I'm like a yellow-highlighter in the “book of life”. I can provide a map.

The late Alan Watts, a wonderful writer, once wrote: “Beware of teachers who pick your pocket—and then sell you your own wallet.”

Ironically, that’s all any teacher can do, because the treasure is inside each person. I’ve seen it, and all I can do is show ones that, or I can point the way, and it points to each person. To have a map can be quite helpful, but ones have to make their own journey. I can help people help themselves. That’s what I do.

Martin: Very well said. I heard Watts many years ago. He, obviously, had lived it.

Millman: Yes. And, you know, Alan Watts also had a problem with alcohol.

Martin: Yes, he did. He was looking pretty rough when I saw him.

Millman: As did Shogun Kumba, but that doesn’t take away from the brilliance of both of these men.

Martin: Watts had a lot of wonderful insights.

I have a compound question for you: In Everyday Enlightenment you suggest that people energize their bodies. How do you recommend that people balance physical challenges—exercise, diet, weight, etc.—with spiritual challenges, and with day-to-day survival challenges? There is a tendency, it seems, that once you start focusing on just the body, everything else is put to the side. How does one balance all of these things, each of which require a commitment of time? Spiritual challenges, physical challenges, and survival challenges?

Millman: Fortunately for all of us, I don’t see any distinction between those three. You know how we talk about the body and the mind and the emotion and the spirit? In order to abstract each one, for the sake of discussion, we refer “just to physical issues” or “just to emotional issues”—but in reality, you can’t separate them, nor can we separate flesh and spirit, or challenges in the world, or challenges with our body.

When we talk about physical energy, I’m reminded about another favorite story about a man who was seeking Energy and Light and Spirit. And he searched through many traditions over the years, but never found exactly what he wanted. He found many wonderful things, but not exactly what he was seeking.

One day he climbed a sacred mountain and stood at the top, and he reached up to the heavens and he cried out fervently to God: “Fill me full of Light and Energy and Spirit.”

Then a voice thundered down through the clouds and said: “I’m always filling you, but you keep leaking!”

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: And that seems to be the human condition. We’re surrounded by Spirit.

There is a saying, an ancient proverb (that I probably made-up), that says: “There’s God; then there’s not paying attention.”

Now, when I say “There’s God”, that doesn’t require someone to have a traditional belief in a God, out there. We can also refer to this as Spirit or Beauty or Inspiration. But we’re surrounded by it, moment-to-moment.

Hillel once said: “There are three mysteries in this world: Air to the birds, water to the fish, and humanity to itself.”

We’re surrounded by Spirit, every single instant, like birds in the air or fish in the water, but we don’t notice, except in brief moments in our life. We can look back on those moments of unreasonable happiness, rising bliss. Maybe we were sitting under a tree or going for a walk, and perhaps just for a moment there was just this ecstatic feeling.

But we tend to discount it; we forget about it. Maybe as a child, or maybe it happened for some people more recently—when reading a wonderful book or listening to music or making love—whatever they were doing. But, it doesn’t have to be rare moments. We can have more moments of that sense of Spirit, by freeing our attention.

I was sitting on a curb in Berkeley, California, in 1967, and I was eating a grapefruit. I remember it, specifically. And I was watching cars drive way, the car exhaust in front of me, litter blowing in the street, and for no reason I will ever be able to explain, all of a sudden I looked up and everything was absolutely perfect. I mean, the car exhaust was perfect; the litter was perfect; I was perfect. And everything in the world that I could see, perceive, think about, or imagine was absolute perfection.

I realized, intellectually, that wars were going on in the world, that some people were starving, and crime was happening. And yet, somehow, in that moment, I saw everything as unfolding perfectly, as a part of the process of human evolution. I didn’t mean that, at the conventional level, we had nothing to work on. There were certainly problems to address, but that was all perfect.

If someone had attacked me on the street at that moment, their attack would have been perfect. And my response to that attack, whatever I did, would have been perfect, too. Everything was absolutely perfect. I was no longer in conflict with inside or out.

Some people might describe that as a kind of illumination or enlightenment experience. But I see it as a few moments of free attention. Instead of looking at life through a veil, or viewing life through cotton, or many of us have the feeling that life is at a distance, we want to have it intensely, and see the colors, and feel everything around us.

We only do those in brief moments, because most of us are preoccupied by: “What am I going to do about my relationship?” or “What am I going to do about my body, and my health?” or “How am I going to deal with the finances, or my career?” So, we’re preoccupied much of the time. There’s God, then there’s not paying attention.

Part of my work is about freeing attention, by rolling-up our sleeves and addressing the realities of our lives. So, we begin to mature in a certain way, as I’ve been maturing over time, and start to see life and the bigger picture of life. We gain perspective.

As our attention is freed-up, it rises, like a bubble up through the ocean, up through the chakras, if you will, and then the so-called mystical experiences begin to happen more naturally. And then, we start to notice Spirit and God around us.

The weather person doesn’t come on the radio and say: “Twenty percent chance of rain and thirty percent Spirit out today.” Spirit is always here. There’s no lack of God; it’s just we don’t notice. And that’s when we can begin to commune with the beauty and the transcendental reality—moment-to-moment—then life changes, even as the daily challenges continue.

Martin: In Everyday Enlightenment you offer some clear insight into the whole issue of self-mastery. In your view, why is self-mastery important?

Millman: Partly I answered that with the story I told previously about exerting the right leverage and developing clarity. If we haven’t mastered ourself—and even that phrase is a little awkward—it implies an absolute. People have asked me: “Dan, have you mastered the Twelve Gateways that you write about in Everyday Enlightenment?”

The answer clearly is “No.”

Martin: Right, it’s like you’ve arrived.

Millman: Yes, you’ve arrived. I am practicing, but I am practicing sincerely, all of the Gateways. Have I mastered them? No. I’m still living; I’m still learning. However, if someone were to observe me, over time, how I behave, what I do in my life, would I be a good example of all those Gateways? The answer would be “yes”—because if I weren’t, then I would have no spiritual authority to speak about it or write about it. I could mouth the words, but I would have much less impact than I do. I believe one reason I have the impact that I have, in seminars and so on, is because I am, to use that often over-used cliché, “walking the talk” and, again, not perfectly.

So, the idea of mastering self is an idealistic notion. But that brings me to a parallel issue, which is the idea of self help. I, actually, become irritated at times when I hear people using that term “self help” in a pejorative sense, in a negative or belittling sense. “Oh, a self-help book. Oh, you mean you’re a self-help author?”

People seem to forget that Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius, and Cicero, and Benjamin Franklin were all self-help authors. Some of our greatest traditions—Aristotle was a self-help author, Plato was a self-help author, so was Freud.

The idea is: “God helps those who help themselves.” I am not apologetic about helping people to help themselves. I grant you, that is quite presumptuous to be caught-up in that field, but I can’t help it, that’s my calling. Sometimes I wish that I were an expert at auto mechanics or computers, because people don’t accuse such people of being arrogant or presumptuous because they learned a lot about computers or auto-mechanics, and can teach other people about those things. When you start talking about life in general, and how to live well, that seems quite presumptuous, and I admit it is. But it’s an area of interest that I have, and I’ve received some good feedback about what I express. So, I’ll continue to do that.

In terms of mastery or mastering the self, we’re just talking about what every single spiritual tradition recommends, which is “know thyself”. Until we know where we are coming from, until we have met our own shadow and seen our humanity and experienced the dark night of the soul and seen ourselves realistically, without all of this self-aggrandizing self-imagery, how can we contact our humanity or the humanity of others?

So, it is necessary to spend a certain amount of time, if you will, contemplating your navel [laughter] or self-observation, even self-obsession. One doesn’t want to go a lifetime like that. But there is a period of time where work on oneself seems appropriate, which allows you to then go out and be more effective—and in your relationships, kinder and wiser, and more impactful in life in general. Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To Personal Growth

Here is Dan Millman’s magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve “gateways” or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth. Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant’s ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a “numerologist”. Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience.

Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: “The Practice Of Enlightenment”—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

work, in career and social service, you can be altruistic and wise at the same time. That’s my own experience. I’m certainly in-process, and still learning lessons of my own.

Martin: What role do you see that discipline plays in self-mastery?

Millman: In Everyday Enlightenment, where I address the Twelve Gateways, the second Gateway is called “Reclaim Your Will”, and it’s one of the foundation elements for life because most people will agree that the biggest challenge in life is not knowing things.

Most of us already know that it’s good to exercise almost every day; it’s good to eat a balanced diet; it’s good to get enough rest; it’s good to be kind to people, and so on. But the challenge in life is turning what we know into what we actually do, and that’s where WILL comes in.

I am sometimes described—by people who are trying to find, again, a handy category—as a “motivational speaker”, but I disavow that, quite quickly. In fact, someone came up to me once, after a seminar, and said: “Dan, I feel so inspired!”

And I said: “Don’t worry, it will pass.”

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: Because inspiration comes and goes, and motivation comes and goes. Motivation is fickle. We feel motivated sometimes, and at other times we don’t. But there are things we need to do in life, whether we’re motivated to do them or not—like take out the trash or drive the kids to school or do our homework or go to work on Monday morning. And that’s where “will” comes in. Will stays with us to the death. Will is always there. And we’ve called upon it many times.

Certainly we don’t have to become discipline freaks.

We don’t have to become a robot. But a certain amount of ability to know what our goals are, and then to do what needs to be done—despite our feeling motivated or not—is what separates people who are functional, effective, and successful in life from those who are just good at coming up with all the reasons why they couldn’t do what they needed to do.

What I’m trying to do here, with this interview, is not to simply repeat and present seminar material, because if you get me rolling on that, I’ll spew out the contents of the books and we’ll be here for 16 hours, easy! I’m trying to give an overall understanding.

Martin: Sure, that’s fine.

Millman: I’m not giving techniques here, and so on, and how to increase one’s will. If you want to get into that, or any topic, I’ll be happy to dig deeper.

Martin: At what point, in your estimation, should one simply surrender to God’s Will.

Millman: [Laughter] That’s called the First Law of Spirit, which I refer to in a little book I wrote called The Laws Of Spirit. I refer to it as the Law of Surrender. It could also be called the Law of Acceptance.

But I consider it the First Law of Spirit, because many people are concerned about stress today. This is stressful. That is stressful. Current events are stressful. Bad news is stressful. Great news is also stressful. Winning the lottery is extremely stressful. I've read interviews with people who have done that.

But stress happens when the mind resists WHAT IS. No resistance, no stress. If a storm comes and pours rain down on us, we can be stressed-out, if we're resisting it, or we can just walk through it.

Now, there is a difference between denial and pretending to like something we don't. There are some times I prefer some things to others. There are idealistic notions that an enlightened being has no preferences anymore, and on some level I would say that may be true, that they don't obsess on their preferences; they seem natural.

So, stress is not resisting. It's making use of what happens, turning it over your way. As Sono, the Japanese poet, said: "Now that my house has burned down, I have a better view of the rising Moon."

And, again, that expresses quite well the idea of non-resistance, or acceptance. Acceptance or surrender does not mean capitulating to someone else's ego. It doesn't mean tolerating injustice. It's much more creative and assertive than that.

The Law of Acceptance is taking whatever happens and using it. It is certainly a principle in the martial arts, that if somebody pushes you, you don't want to push back; that's resistance. If they push you, you want to step back and pull them. In other words, let them go where they want to go. And if they're pulling you, then step forward and push. It works. It's absolutely a practical, martial arts approach, but it also works in life.

Those people who have learned to align their lives with the Law of Acceptance or Surrender, flow through life. They're like the martial arts master—whatever happens they kind-of turn, spin, and go with it. They just make it work for them. And that is a wonderful approach to living.

I often remind people, maybe they've seen that bumper-sticker: "If you don't like the way I drive, get off the sidewalk."

Some people, if they're on the sidewalk and a car comes at them, the first thing in their mind is: "You shouldn't be on the sidewalk!" And boom, they get hit. Somebody else doesn't take time to do that; they see what's happening and step out of the way. And later that day they can say: "Hey, I had a chance to test my reflexes today!" That's the Law of Acceptance. That's the Law of Surrender in application.

So, it's the most effective way I know of to deal with "adversity"—and it takes practice. It's not a matter of just pretending. It's just an approach, a physical approach to life, where whatever comes your way you say "ok" and you face it, and then you use it.

Martin: What is the difference between those who say they are resigning to God's Will and do nothing, and those who choose to take responsibility for their daily experience?

Millman: In one of my books, called Body-Mind Mastery, written more for athletes, kind-of a holistic guide to creating success in sports and life, I talk about three ways to respond to any force, any event in life.

First, we can resist it. Or, we can ignore it. Or, we can go with it.

Again, there is the Law of Surrender. People who resign themselves, fatalistically, and sigh and tolerate life, that's one approach. But I don't think that is really applying the Law of Surrender; that's more being a victim.

And, by the way, when I talk about victim, I mean people who view themselves as a bit player in the movie of their life, or an "extra". For those of us who have gone to these non-resourceful places of self-pity, and feeling like a victim, we tend to view our boss or our spouse or our children or our friends or co-workers as the director and the producer and the screenwriter in the movie of our life. I like to remind people that it's THEIR movie.

Somebody else's life is not your movie, but your life is your movie. And if someone doesn't like their own script, they can become the screenwriter and write a new script. And if they don't like the cast of characters around them, they can become the casting director and get a new cast of characters.

We need to step forward and become the director and producer and writer in the movie of our life. And that means making choices and taking responsibility for those choices.

One of my favorite stories is from Way Of The Peaceful Warrior, when I was complaining about something—again, feeling like a victim, feeling sorry for myself, how people were getting down on me, and my professors weren't fair.

Socrates said: "You remind me, Dan, of a construction worker I knew in the mid-West who, every day at lunchtime, when he opened his lunchbox, just complained about his sandwich. He'd say: 'Not another peanut butter and jelly sandwich. I hate peanut butter and jelly!'"

"Well, the following day he opened his lunchbox and said: 'Oh, no, peanut butter and jelly, again!'"

"And this happened every day, the same thing. Finally, one of his workmates couldn't take it anymore and said: 'Mac, if you don't like peanut butter and jelly, why don't you ask your wife to make you something different?'"

"And Mac scratched his head and looked at his friend and said: 'What are you talking about, 'my wife'? I'm not married; I make my own sandwiches.'"

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: That's a good reminder that, on some level, we ALL make our own sandwiches. Things happen to us; we can't always control that. But—we can control how we respond. Life has ups and downs, the way it's supposed to.

When people ask "gee, why does life have to be so difficult sometimes?" they forget—it's supposed to be! How else do we develop ourselves?

Life, and challenges that arise physically, financially, relationships-wise, they are a form of spiritual weight-lifting. If you don't lift any weights, you don't get stronger. People don't have to believe me. That's not just some kind of fancy refrain.

I mean, if anybody looks back on their life, they're going to see when they've

OTHER VOICES

BY GEORGE HUNT WILLIAMSON
& TIMOTHY GREEN BECKLEY

The author was one of the original witnesses at the meeting between contactee George Adamski and Orthon from the planet Venus. Williamson claims he also had contacts with aliens and received transmissions over his radio from friendly extraterrestrials. Others have claimed the same. Senator Barry Goldwater reportedly heard mysterious signals on his ham radio and our own astronauts have reportedly picked up messages not transmitted from Earth.

Other Voices is essentially a reprint of The Saucers Speak, by George Hunt Williamson and Alfred Bailey, originally published in the 1950s. Much of what the authors report has come to pass. Warnings of aliens about nuclear war and environmental doom remain urgent.

had physical, emotional, and mental pain. But, virtually every time I ask people to think back on those times, and then I ask them: "Aren't you a little stronger, and a little wiser, and maybe even more compassionate for having gone through that?" Everyone nods yes.

I once shattered my right leg into 40 pieces, approximately, the doctor said, my right femur, my right thigh-bone, in a motorcycle accident. And it changed my life. I wouldn't be speaking to you now. I wouldn't be doing the teaching work. I sincerely believe that. It shook me up, and I'm pointing it out right now. It made me ask life's bigger questions.

Now, I don't recommend fractures as a method of personal and spiritual growth. We don't need to seek adversity. But, adversity does visit us, of one kind or another; it's going to happen. And when it does, the question is: How will we respond to it? That makes all the difference.

Martin: This gets back to resisting, as opposed to flowing with it.

Millman: You acknowledge it, and in fact, I would like to address one of the most critical areas of life, right now, that I think might be useful for your readers. This material that I'm about to touch upon is quite provocative. It takes a while to really digest because many of us have been programmed.

Now, by definition, if you've been programmed, you don't know you've been programmed. Once you know you've been programmed, you're no longer programmed. But we've grown up in a certain belief system, especially people interested in spiritual things because, to most people, spirituality has something to do with fixing our insides. Enlightenment has to do having the quiet mind, the peaceful heart, total love, total peace, total freedom, and so on. And it's described as some internal, subjective experience by many.

More recently—and it's reflected in just my last couple of books—I've taken a closer look at reality. I've had some more recent mentors, in particular a man named David K. Reynolds, Ph.D. He was formerly an anthropological psychologist. He's written a number of books, but one of them is called Constructive Living, based on certain work he studied from a Japanese psychiatrist named Shoma Morita, M.D., and another man named Isshin Yoshimoto.

I'd like to share, in my words, what I've embodied and learned about the nature of reality, because it has a huge implication about what spiritual life involves. I believe it can save people an immense amount of craziness and wild-goose chases.

Simply put, there are things we can influence in this world that we cannot control. And the difference between the two are: To influence something means to exert an effort, in a desired direction, without any guarantee it's going to work, or that you'll get the results. That's what influence is about—like trying to influence people: it may work; it may not.

To control something, anything, means you WILL it to happen, you want it to happen, it happens. That's what control is. Now, there are things we can influence that we cannot control. For instance, we can influence the government by voting and sending emails and supporting candidates and so on. We cannot control the government by our will. We can influence the weather by seeding clouds. Occasionally, you can get rain (precipitation) by seeding clouds with dry ice. But I've never met anybody who could demonstrate for me that they could control the weather by their will.

We can influence people by discussing, debating, manipulating, whatever people do, but we cannot control them by our will—any parents know that, who try to control their children.

We can influence our thoughts. If I don't like a thought, I can picture an apple, or something else; I can distract myself. We can influence our emotions in various ways, and I've written about some of them. To influence, for example, our posture, how relaxed we are, how we breathe, being able to look at things from a different angle, with more understanding, all those things may influence how we feel at any given moment. But we cannot control our thoughts.

Now, this is a big one. Many people have read books on positive thinking and positive mental attitude. That's one of those common assumptions, that somehow, if you change your thoughts, you'll manifest different things in the world; and your beliefs are key; and your expectations are key, and all that.

I ask people, when I speak with large audiences, please raise your hand if you've got a book on positive thinking. And many people raise their hands. I say: "Please keep your hands up high if you've only had positive thoughts for the last week."

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: And all the hands come down. The assumption there is, people think: "I must not be doing it right." Or: "Certainly the authors of those books on positive thinking, they must think only positive thoughts."

I say "Nonsense!" Sometimes my thoughts are positive and sometimes they're negative, and that's just how life is. Just like the weather changes, thoughts change.

I often ask people, if there were a storm outside, terrible destruction, hurricanes, thunder and lightning, would it be your fault? And, in fact, just for the sake of this discussion, Rick, would it be your fault if there were a terrible storm outside?

Martin: I would say no.

Millman: And there's a good reason why not. Why would that be? Why isn't it YOUR responsibility?

Martin: Because it's Nature.

Millman: You can't control it, right? If you could control the storm, then it would be your responsibility, correct?

Martin: Correct.

Millman: So, what we need to agree on is that we are responsible for what we

Children Of The Matrix

How an interdimensional race has controlled the world for thousands of years—and still does!

We are born into a world controlled by unseen forces that have plagued and manipulated humanity for thousands of years. You may look around and think that what you see is "real". But in truth you are living in an illusion designed to keep you in a mental, emotional, and spiritual prison cell.

Icke exposes these forces and their methods of human control and reveals a fantastic web of global manipulation, orchestrated by forces beyond this physical realm. He exposes the hidden bloodlines, through which other-dimensional entities live and operate unseen among us; and he shows how the bloodlines of the royal, political, and economic rulers of today are the same as those who ruled as the kings and queens of ancient times.

The truth is not only out there.

Much of it is right here.

can control, and we are not responsible for what we can't control. For the time being, would that be acceptable?

Martin: Yes.

Millman: Ok, let's take a look at whether we can control our thoughts. Now, we do have some limited control over our attention. You can pay attention to me, then your mind may drift, and then you pay attention again, then your mind may drift again. I've never met any Zen masters who could control their attention all the time, on exactly what they're doing.

Martin: That's why it's always a challenge to "empty the mind".

Millman: Well, that's another idealistic notion that we can somehow quiet the mind.

Martin: Right. I totally agree with you, by the way.

Millman: Maybe we'll have a chance to get into that a little more in-depth. For now, while I'm on this particular track, we do have limited control over where we direct our attention. We call it the ability to concentrate. But the thoughts themselves that arise and pass through our mind, I suggest we have no control over whatsoever. And I often ask people: "Do you think a thought before you think it? Do you say: 'I think I'll think this thought next?'" I don't think so!

In fact, a nun came to me once for a consultation, and she was really suffering very seriously. She went through a lot of suffering over the years, over the lustful, erotic thoughts she had been having. Now, why was she troubled by those particular kinds of thoughts? Because what thoughts was she most trying NOT to think? And trying not to think a thought is a great way to obsess on it!

She couldn't stop a thought from happening, and she had to start to realize that. Nobody can hold onto a thought, indefinitely, without letting it go. Under close observation, people may start to realize, when they are no longer confused about the difference between our attention, and thoughts themselves, that we have no control, virtually, over what thoughts come and go in our minds.

Again, we can do some things to INFLUENCE that. We can distract ourselves, temporarily. For example, if we have a lot of worries coming up in our head about something, we can distract ourselves for a time. But what tends to happen to the worries? They tend to come back up, again.

So, we really have very little or no control over thoughts that arise in our mind. We can't stop them. We can't hold onto them, indefinitely; they come and pass. We can respond to how long we hang onto them, or chew on them.

Sometimes we'll just indulge something, and sometimes we'll turn our attention elsewhere. We don't have control over our thoughts. And that's the statement that I'm making, and people can check it out in their own experience, whether they can actually just think positively, not think negatively, and so on. But, I'm suggesting we, virtually, have little or no control over that directly.

Martin: Let me ask you this: It's my view that one way people can get in touch with themselves is, obviously, by having some quiet in their life, so they can listen to and observe what those thoughts are.

If there are issues coming up, and one's life is so chaotic with activity and people and events and noise, TV, stereo, that you can't even hear the noise that's going on in your head, it's hard to resolve issues because you're not even aware of what they are. It's just "mental clutter" essentially.

Millman: I would agree wholeheartedly with that. But if you don't mind, let's talk about meditation and quieting the mind and so on, in just a few moments, because I need to step into the next arena, which is whether we can control our emotions. And then we'll get into meditation and different ways to influence our mind perhaps.

Can we control our emotions? Often, rather than believe what I say about it, let's just do a test, and your readers can also do this test. Would you please feel terrified for me, right now?

Martin: Can't do it.

Millman: Will you feel really angry, in rage, right now, please?

Martin: Can't do it.

Millman: How about, can you feel ecstatic, right now?

Martin: I could work on that one.

Millman: You could work on it, ok. Can you feel envious, right now?

Martin: No.

Millman: You may find that, on command, you cannot feel anything that you are directed to feel.

Now, some people say: "Wait, what about method actors?" We've all had moments where we have a reverie, when tears come to our eyes if it's a sad kind of reverie, or fantasy, or we laugh because we think of something funny. But we can't do that, at will, generally. And method actors, if they're wanting to bring tears into a performance, they try to think back to a time when they were very upset and unhappy, and then they try to access that so realistically that it creates that kind of feeling. Any method actor will tell you that's inconsistent; at best, it's a technique to try to influence emotion. It really doesn't work with any consistency. That's why they call them actors, not feelers.

In fact, if I ask you if there is

THE INDIGO CHILDREN

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern requires parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to help them achieve balance, harmony, and avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- Why do a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?

- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober brings together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

somebody you're in love with, can you just will yourself, in a moment, to stop loving them?

Martin: No.

Millman: If there's somebody you don't like at all, can you will yourself to love them?

Martin: No.

Millman: If you're very, very angry, can you will yourself to just stop?

Martin: No.

Millman: So, we may take a close look and notice, even though there are many techniques to try to influence our emotions and feel better, and feel different, and feel confident, or courageous, and get rid of self-doubt, etc., we have no direct control over our emotions by our will. Emotions are very much like the passing weather.

In fact, they are the passing weather patterns of the body; sometimes we like the weather and sometimes we don't. But, it happens anyway. Emotions come and go, moment to moment. There's no such thing as a repressed emotion. That would make no sense at closer examination. How can you have unfelt feeling? You either feel it or you don't. That's like having unthunk thoughts.

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: You're either thinking something or you're not. You're either feeling something or you're not. This idea of repressing is an old Freudian idea that just doesn't hold water.

I'm suggesting we really have very little or no control over our thoughts, no control over our emotion; therefore, we are not responsible for any thought or emotion we've ever had. Because we've already established, we're responsible for what we can control, and not responsible for what we cannot control.

Now, that is quite different from many teachings and spiritual people who focus on how to change your thoughts and change your life and all that stuff. It's quite different from, for example, the Catholic Church, which says an adulterous thought is the same sin as committing adultery. I would beg to differ. I don't think an adulterous thought is the same as committing adultery. I don't think a murderous thought is the same as committing murder.

In fact, I differentiate action very clearly by acknowledging that the ONLY thing we can control, and are responsible for in this world, is how we move our arms, legs, body, and mouth, and the rest of us—our behavior, our actions. We can control THAT, and we have far more control for how we behave, and far more responsibility for that, therefore, than we

• ENHANCE CREATIVITY?
• SLOW-DOWN AGING?

You can. Simply by understanding your heart's intelligence—which has more impact on our emotions, our mind, and our physical health than was ever thought possible! In this audio, the authors offer astonishing proof that the heart has an intelligence, one that profoundly affects our mental and physical health. When we engage the power of our heart's intelligence, then, and only then, can we make the most of our health and our minds. These life-altering techniques will show you how to deepen the qualities long associated with the heart—wisdom, compassion, courage, love, strength, and joy.

We think that if we're very angry, somehow we can lose control; or if we're afraid, we can lose control. And I suggest: no! I would suggest that our emotions and our thoughts and our beliefs and our expectations and our self-concepts and our sense of self-worth or self-esteem, all those things do create TENDENCIES to behave, or not behave, in a certain way.

It would be silly of me not to acknowledge that our thoughts and beliefs and all those other things don't somehow tend to influence how to behave, but they do not control how we behave. Someone can be terribly shy and ask for a date. Someone can be terrified of speaking in public, and stand up and start making words before a group of people. We CAN control what we do!

Now, is it always easy? Absolutely not. The most extreme case is someone who tends to take cocaine or is addicted to alcohol. It's extremely difficult to change that behavior. But can they do it? Yes, people do it and have done it.

So, that's a different way of looking at spiritual life.

Rather than fixing what we have very little control over, and spending time obsessing, and trying to find one technique after another to fix our minds, fix our emotions, and to feel inner peace all the time, or feel happy all the time, or only think positive thoughts, or have a quiet mind, I suggest that, to live effectively, and live wisely and well, we spend more time focusing on our behavior.

In fact, the guidelines that Dr. Morita suggested, and that David Reynolds suggests, and that I suggest, is: To live well, focus on three things:

First: accept your emotions and thoughts, whatever they are, as natural to you, in the moment. Not a problem, but just what's arising.

Two: know your purpose. And that means, know YOUR purpose or YOUR goal—not somebody else's purpose for you, but what is in YOUR heart, what is YOUR goal. That goal doesn't mean selfish; it could be very altruistic; it could be giving to charity. But, it is YOUR goal. We're here to live OUR life, not someone else's.

You know what a co-dependent is, by the way, while we're on that topic? A co-dependent is someone who, when they die, they see someone else's life pass before their eyes!

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: So, we're here to live OUR lives.

And the third guideline is: to do what needs to be done in line with those goals. That describes successful athletes. They don't go out on the playing field and say: "Coach, I'm not going to work out today; I'm feeling a little blue. I'm not quite motivated enough." It describes people who function well in life. And it also describes spiritual people, people who live with Spirit—not whining, and mediocre, and running away from feelings because they're afraid they might not have the right feeling in order to function. They allow feelings. They accept their feelings completely. They know their purpose and do what needs to be done.

When some people first hear this, it brings up a lot of questions and a lot of confusion, because of the way we've been programmed—that spiritual life is all about our insides. Some people may think I'm saying: ignore your emotions; they're not important.

No. In contrast, I say that I treat my emotions the way I treated my daughters when they were young: I paid attention to them; I listened to them; I learned from them; I valued them; and I cherished them. But I did not let them take over and run the household.

I needed to cover that as a foundation for any discussion we have later on, to focus on what we do in life. Because I think what makes a difference in each of our lives is what we DO, moment to moment.

We talked about choices, briefly before, taking responsibility for our choices. We don't make a choice, mentally.

We don't say: "Hmm, yeah, I've decided on this." We make a choice when we act. Then we know what we've chosen. And choices happen moment to moment. You don't choose something for your whole life. You may resolve it; you may intend that. But, what we choose, moment to moment, is what shapes our life. It comes down to that reality.

Martin: Let's shift back, again, or continue on with the concept of meditation and the myth of quieting your mind.

Millman: Let me just say, throughout history, two schools of thought have been head-to-head. Let's say one is the idealist school. And the other is the realist school.

Now, I don't mean to imply that one of those schools is better than the other. I value them equally. If we had no idealists in this world, it would be a mediocre place indeed. If we had no realists in this world, it would be one failed utopian experiment after another. So, we need realists and idealists. And in each of us lives an idealist and a realist.

But it's important to know where our psyche is hanging-out, in any moment. And in the spiritual and religious tradition, we come across one idealistic notion after the other. I mentioned one, already: that we can learn to think just positively. Another idealistic notion is about quieting the mind. Somewhere, somebody started putting out: if you meditate enough, you reach this state of inner peace.

Now, anybody who has done any meditation has had the experience of a very quiet place, in which time seems to fly. And we don't have any awareness of the passing of time. Suddenly, we're sitting for 20 minutes or an hour, and it seemed like a few minutes. And the reason that happens is because, when we're actually attending, when our attention is on our thoughts, subliminally, yadda yadda yadda—you know—the yadda yadda mind, I call it.

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: When we're paying attention to that, time seems to pass very slowly. And we have a word for it, we call it boredom, that phenomenon. When we're not paying attention to our thoughts, time seems to fly. As the old saying goes: "Time flies when you're having fun." That's one way we define fun: something that makes time fly. And it has other attributes, as well.

So, let me just say that the mind, the discursive mind, bubbling thoughts, it is very much like a hot-springs. If you're at a hot-springs, it's going bubble, bubble, bubble. And, if you're looking at it, it seems to be quite active.

Then, if suddenly you turn your back to it and run over to see friends you haven't seen in 20 years, you're embracing your friends and talking to them, you're no longer aware of that bubbling hot-springs; so, it seems quiet. It hasn't stopped bubbling. It's natural for the mind to bubble. It's just one of those natural phenomena. But, you're not paying attention. It's that old question: If a thought falls in the forest, and nobody is there to pay attention, did it really fall?

We can have experiences of what SEEMS like a quiet mind, when we're focused on our mantra or our breathing, and it quiets; it recedes in the background. I suggest that the mind hasn't stopped bubbling. Thoughts haven't stopped. It's just that our attention drifts away into a quieter space. The body relaxes. That's what many people report as the "quiet mind".

But so many people get discouraged by this. I mean, how many of your readers have tried meditation and then stop because they've concluded: "I'm not very good at this, because all I see are a bunch of arising thoughts and feelings." They're supposed to!

Meditation is NOT the idea of knitting your brow and somehow training your mind to not have thoughts anymore. There's nothing wrong with thoughts; we just don't need to take them so seriously!

The idea of the quiet mind is an idealistic notion. But, meditation is good for some things, and it's not good for others. The purpose of meditation is not to become enlightened. The purpose of meditation is, in itself, the practice of enlightenment.

What is the ideal human enlightened posture?

One way to look at an enlightened posture is the Buddha, sitting with the legs crossed in such a way that it's a very stable way to sit. One doesn't have to be able to have the flexibility, necessarily, to do a full-lotus position; but for those who can, it's a very stable posture. One can also sit in a chair.

But the idea is: The back is straight, vertical, reaching to Heaven. The palms are in a balanced position, one resting on the other; the back is straight, the head in good alignment, optimally in gravity, sitting straight up and down, and in that relaxed disposition, breathing evenly in the belly, smoothly, all kinds of thoughts and emotions arise. But, we don't react to them. We just sit. We play the role of the eternal witness, watching it all arise, almost as if we are looking from the Eyes of God.

To me, that is the "enlightened disposition". It's the basic practice of enlightenment. It's not something you do, to someday get to enlightenment.

It's only a beginner's practice, though—because we still have to open our eyes, stand up, walk around, have relationships, deal with our spouse, with our kids, and with everyday life. When we can meditate through THAT, then we've got something! But, it's a beginning of the enlightened disposition.

The purpose of meditation, also, is to come to know the nature of mind, to know what mind is about, to see that Old Trickster—and to learn to smile and tolerate it, and know it, so it doesn't take over one's processes.

Another idealistic notion is that we

See and hear David Icke at the top of his form as he presents six-and-a-half hours of incredible information before a sellout audience of 1200 at the Vogue Theatre in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

You will laugh, you may cry, and you will be on the edge of your seat as the fantastic story of true human history, and WHO really controls the world today, unfolds in Icke's unique style, aided by video footage and hundreds of illustrations.

This is the presentation that the Illuminati (the forces of global control) tried so hard to stop—media interviews were cancelled; immigration officials turned up at the theatre to question his right to speak; pressure was applied on the venue to cancel the event itself; and pies were even thrown at David at a book signing by a rent-a-mob who ludicrously and outrageously sought to dub him a "racist".

But nothing could silence him or break his spirit—and here you will see the result.

shouldn't have judgments. "Don't judge people." Don't have judgments. Well, frankly, I think judgments are what human beings do best. We judge things constantly. I have judgments whenever someone doesn't use their turn signal, when they're driving. Judgments come up. But, as a Zen master once told me: "There's no problem with having judgments come up, but it's when we start believing them as truth, that's when we go a little crazy."

So, judgments happen, thoughts happen. But, meditation is the idea of seeing the nature of mind. People can meditate for an hour, or a few days, or over the time of a week, or a month, and finally come to see the mind for what it is. Other people are a little slower learners, and they have to meditate for 30 years, until they finally recognize the nature of mind.

I find very little use in sitting down, and just watching thoughts, for its own sake, over time. It's like watching one's bowel movements; you know what to do with them—you flush them. You don't need to get obsessed with them. So, I believe mind is much like that.

I've had periods where I've done a lot of meditation. But, at this time in life, I don't. I strive to do open-eyed meditation, moment to moment.

When I'm in a relationship difficulty, and my life is busy "improving me", and I tend to pout and go into my office, go into my lair (as most guys do), to get away from any kind of hassle, when I do that, I start to notice what's going on: "Hmm, what's going on here?"

I try to meditate through daily life. And sitting down is a beginner's way to do that. Once you can do that, it may help to meditate through daily life. It's about awareness. It's about becoming the witness, and seeing all that's arising, from the Eyes of God, from a bit of a distance, where we start to see the Bigger Picture.

And so, yes, meditation has its benefits, but I don't put it up on a pedestal as "the absolutely essential key to everything in life". I know people meditate a lot whose relationships are going down the drain, who's finances are in the toilet. And maybe they think: "Oh, I better meditate some more." But, there are other things they need to address, as well.

That's why I write about Twelve Gateways, only one of which is Taming the Mind. And, as you now know, I have a different approach to taming the mind. It's not about quieting it; it's about no longer being in conflict with it.

Martin: Let's talk about self-sabotage. What ways do people sabotage themselves in their day-to-day lives?

Millman: Again, I don't mean to belabor referring back to a book, but I want to provide a context. In the book Everyday Enlightenment, the First Gateway, the very first Gateway, the foundation of all Twelve Gateways is what I call "Discover Your Worth". And that is quite different.

Self-worth is different from self-esteem. I've never been particularly enthralled with that whole topic of self-esteem; it's become very popular, thinking our children need to be coddled to have good feelings about themselves. The theory being that they'll live a better life.

But, actually, those people with probably the highest self-esteem are sociopaths. I think self-esteem is way overvalued. Basically, it means feeling good about yourself, and feeling confident, and certainly that's a desirable thing, if it happens. I'd rather feel good, confident, than not; but, feelings just come and go.

Self-worth, in contrast, goes much deeper. It answers the internal question: How good of a person am I? On a 1-to-100 scale, where would I rate myself? We've been keeping score of all our behaviors for our whole life. Unfortunately, some people even judge themselves because of their thoughts and emotions, which we don't have much control over or responsibility for, anyway.

Looking at our behavior, even, some people think "I'm kind-of a good person; maybe I'd rate myself a 70 or an 80 or a 60." Those who rate themselves a 50 are probably out there on the streets. We call them "the homeless"—talk about self-sabotage and choices they've made. We can get into that in a few moments, because there's more to say about that. It's easy to misunderstand some of my comments, unless I go into more detail.

Those who have self-worth issues, who don't see themselves as a really good person, who therefore don't feel deserving of life's blessings, tend to self-sabotage. We don't get what we deserve in life. We get what we believe we deserve. That's how much we'll allow into our lives. And if we're getting more than we believe we deserve, we'll sabotage ourselves.

There are reasons for that; they're not terribly complex. But, most of us have learned the rules growing up in any society—that if you're good, you get rewarded, if you're bad, you get punished—whatever form that punishment or reward takes. Those of us who weren't punished for things we did and nobody saw, we tend to punish ourselves. We tend to sabotage, we get in our own way. We make choices. And we don't make those choices at the conscious level; we make them at the subconscious level.

I define the subconscious as that part of our psyche that's largely unexplored or unexamined. Someone doesn't wake-up one morning and consciously say: "Hey, I think I'll sabotage my relationship today." "Oh, no, I did that last week; this week I'll sabotage finances."

No, we don't do that consciously. But, we start to make choices. We've all experienced the questions: "Why did I do that?" and "Why did I say that?"—that end up getting in our own way, and again, sabotaging ourselves in one area or the other.

When we start to address our self-worth issues, we start to recognize that our worth does not depend on acting perfectly, and it doesn't even depend on how we feel about ourselves. We've already established we have no direct control over how we feel. Sometimes I feel more worthy than other times—and that's realistic and natural. So, it's not about feeling self-worth; it's about treating ourselves as worthy, about how we behave. When something good comes our way, an opportunity, instead of saying "oh, that's ok, never mind" we open our arms and say "yes, thank you" even if we feel awkward about accepting all that.

I ask people: if you saw a newborn baby and looked into those eyes, would you look at that baby and say: "I think that's worth about an 8.5"? I don't think so.

But, we were all that baby once. And the question is, when did we start subtracting? It's something we need to look at. And once we become more aware of self-worth issues, we can stick up a little message on our mirror; we see it every morning when we get up, and it says: "How good can I stand it today?" Because that's how good we'll get it.

"What will I accept today?"

"What will I open my arms to?"

"What choices will I make that will be resourceful, and kind to myself, and give to myself pleasure, and love, and open up to that, in abundance?"

Rama Krishna, the Indian saint, once said: "An ocean of abundance and happiness and peace can rain down from the Heavens, but if you're only holding up a thimble, that's all you're going to get."

That's what I have to say for now about the topic of self-sabotage and self-worth.

Martin: This is somewhat along the same line, and this gets back to actions that you can be responsible for, as opposed to ways you cannot change. What would you say to those people who are feeling powerless to effect change, either in their lives or in the world?

Millman: While they're feeling powerless, they can accept those feelings; they can know their purpose or goal, and they can do what needs to be done. That sounds like a formula, but that's what they can do.

I can't address [spoken tongue-in-cheek]: "Oh, my goodness, they're feeling powerless? Let's counsel them, so they can feel more powerful."

Now, I don't mean to seem callous here. But, I'm going to be a little bit rigid because so many people take the other tack and start working on them, and let's go through analysis. It's as if we're like archeological sites; we can dig and dig and dig, and never get to the bottom. We can work on our past and on our relationship with our parents. We can work on this, and learn this technique and that technique.

Some of the people who are the most "spiritual" are some of the craziest people I know, because they get wound-up in these "feeling labyrinths"—a feeling-centered life. And trying to change feelings is a chaotic life, because feelings change all the time anyway. And because feelings change, it's hard to have any consistency, and sense of self; self keeps changing with our feelings.

People who feel powerless—there are things we can do. I mean, in my seminars I take people through some experiences where they feel powerful. But, can I guarantee that they'll feel powerful all the time, or that feeling will last from then on? Of course not. I can't even control my own feelings; how can I help anybody control theirs? So, it's not about whether they feel powerless or not. And, in fact, their assumption might be: "Oh, those people who do so well in life must feel powerful all the time." But they don't. The difference is what we do.

Cus D'Amato, a famous boxing coach, once said: "Heroes and cowards feel exactly the same fear, but heroes act differently."

George Bernard Shaw once said: "Never mind likes and dislikes, just do what needs to be done. That may not be happiness, but it is greatness."

That's what makes Spirit and Light, when we're feeling depressed, when we're feeling powerless. But then we get up and put one foot in front of the other and say: "Hmm, the grass needs cutting."

"I'll clean the house today."

"I need to tell somebody something."

And we go and do it—even while we're feeling all those things of powerlessness and rage and frustration.

That's why it's a tricky area, because we're so used to the "soap opera" of life, and our role models in growing up. Somebody feels upset, so what do they do? They act it out. Somebody feels angry, so what do they do? They strike out.

There was a man who came to me once who said: "I have a problem with rage."

And I said: "No, you don't."

He said: "Yes, I do!" And he was getting angry.

And I said: "No, you don't. Rage is not a problem. Rage is like a storm. Storms happen. Sometimes we SHOULD be enraged."

I said: "The problem is what you DO when you're enraged." And he got the point. Because many of us mistake emotions for behavior. Rage is what he was feeling. That's not the problem. It's what he did when he was in rage that was the problem.

Such programs as are called "Emotional Management Program" and "Managing Anger"—you don't have to manage anger; you don't have to manage emotions; in fact, you can't. What you have to manage is behavior, to disconnect those emotions from the behavior.

Let's take the example where a little boy hits his baby sister. And the mother says: "That's terrible; you shouldn't hit your baby sister. She's your baby sister."

And she says: "Why did you do that?"

And he says: "Because I hate her."

And she says: "Oh, no, you shouldn't hate your baby sister."

The point is, a wise mother will say: "Yeah, it's fine to hate her, but just don't hit her." Now he's learning the difference between what he can control and what he can't. And he won't grow up neurotic and crazy because of feelings he's had.

Emotions come and go; kids get angry at their baby sisters or whatever. But, he's learning at the same time what he can control, which is his behavior. That makes for a functioning, sane human being.

So, if you ask me about people who feel powerless, I say: "Yeah, sometimes I feel powerless."

And there are people who DO feel powerless. Now, there are practical things they can do: They can do "ropes" courses—where you climb up through the trees to deal with fear, with a safety rope on you, but you do things that are real scary. You can learn a martial art, and feel empowered that way.

There are things you can do, but the key here is: "What do you need to do?" And go do it. It really comes down to that. After all the esoteric techniques, and after all the metaphysical ideas, the question is: How will you live? And that comes down to DOING, moment to moment.

Now, there is a well-know spiritual author who says that's all backward. "All this DOING stuff—we're becoming human doings!" he says, "not human beings."

He says: "People are always doing, doing, doing, to try to get what they want in life." And he said it's just a lot of do-do. And that's cute; it's sort-of humorous. But is it accurate?

I suggest this idea of "being"—we've all heard the term "our being, our beingness"—I, frankly, scratch my head and ask: "What in the world does that mean?"

If each of us wrote down a list of 10 or 20 people we most admired in the world, from our childhood, from our adulthood, people in history, role models, people we know, if we wrote down a list of those people we most admire, I would bet you that, virtually, every single one of those people we wrote down on the list, we wrote it down because of something, or some things, they DID—not because of their "beingness", whatever that means. I can't know the Dalai Lama's beingness; I can only know how he behaves.

Martin: This is, actually, the next question. I'm staring right at it. It says: "At what point in the self-mastery journey is it appropriate to do nothing? Or, is it ever appropriate to do nothing?"

Millman: Doing nothing is doing something. Doing nothing is a choice we make to be still. And there are times when that is extraordinarily wise. But doing nothing is not doing nothing; it only appears that way. Stillness is inaction; it's a choice. And there are times in my life when I would have been much wiser doing nothing, at least waiting, taking a few deep breaths, giving it an hour or a day. So, that's a choice. Doing nothing can be quite constructive.

There's an old saying: "Two mistakes we can make are: acting without thinking, or thinking without acting." And in one of the Laws in my book The Laws Of Spirit, called the Law of Action, it reminds people, as Bodhi Dharma said: "You can't cross the sea merely by staring at the water."

Thomas Edison once said: "We often miss opportunity because it's dressed in overalls and looks like work."

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: Those are good reminders that there are times we need to act, because life doesn't happen, unless we act and do. But, there are other times, certainly, that we need to be still, and do nothing. The wisdom is: how to choose between the two. I can't give any formula about that because it depends on a particular individual, at a given time and circumstance.

Martin: You're certainly correct in saying that when people think about great people in their lives, or in history, what is reflected upon are the actions that those people took in their life. And so, action is obviously a very important component in our "schoolroom of Earth".

Millman: I'm suggesting it's more than AN important component. I'm suggesting that, far more than most "spiritual people" give credit for, it is pretty much the ONLY one.

There is a point in life—and I'll tell you, I have experience—how do I put it? It's not enlightenment, at least spiritual maturity, these past years, since I've been really living, and embodying this idea of focusing more on what I do, and less on what I'm feeling and thinking. And it's almost as if my thoughts and emotions—I'm not saying it's a technique, but what I've noticed is—they seem to have pacified, to a great degree. I still have all kinds of feelings. All the feelings come up for me, but they're like friends; they've mellowed; they're more gentle; they don't seem as problematic anymore.

Whereas, in contrast, when I was a teenager, my thoughts and emotions were all monsters—gigantic, powerful beasts that I had to address, and suffered from terribly. I don't anymore because I'm just focusing on what I need to do, moment to moment. Do I always do the right thing? Nah.

Sometimes, I say that being in a relationship is one of the ultimate ascetic disciplines. I've been married for 26 years, and we love each other dearly. But still, relationships, as everyone knows, have their challenges—two egos getting along, and so on. We have our quirks.

There are times when I don't act totally constructively, or just don't rise to the occasion. But, over time, as I practice, it gets better, like anything. You know that saying: "Everything is difficult, until it becomes easy."

More and more, I can say from my direct experience: life is changing and I've had impact on the world. For example, I've just finished a 700-page novel. I remember being on page 2, thinking "maybe I'll be done by page 200". And it just kept going and going and going. It's like running a huge marathon. Did I feel motivated? Did I inspire myself, somehow? No, I just sat down and kept writing. And it's more difficult than gymnastics, or anything else I've ever done. But—I've been pretty effective so far in my life.

I have one daughter who just graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Stanford University, another is at Harvard University, doing quite well. Their teachers love them. They have strong character; they're good souls.

Challenges continue, but it's not about fixing my emotions, and meditating on my every thought, and whether it's positive or negative. Thoughts happen. Emotions happen. I learn from them. Meanwhile, I go: "What do I need to do now?" And, over time, it gets better.

Martin: There are those who go through life walking the path of least resistance, thinking that's the way to go, from a spiritually balanced point of view. And then, there are others who seek to effect change in the world, if you will, imposing their will, but who encounter resistance at every step of the way. Would you comment on that?

and the first sentence in his book is: "Life is difficult." From then on you knew, this guy is talking truth; he's talking reality.

The path of least resistance—this is quite different from the path of no resistance. This realm we're born into, Planet Earth, is not necessarily a finishing school. Some people might call it a reform school. This is where we have friction, and death, and gravity. This is not an easy world. So, there is a certain wisdom in taking the path of least resistance. Isn't that what water does, when it's running down the hill as a stream? It finds the path of least resistance, and that's where the water flows. And the Daoists might recommend that.

In contrast, what would one suggest? The path of most resistance? As I say, adversity comes to us anyway. Nobody is going to find no resistance in life, no spiritual weights to lift. We all need adversity; we all need challenges. But there is a certain wisdom in taking the path of least resistance, because we still will have spiritual exercises to deal with.

Martin: In your decades of spiritual work, and in your daily life, do you recognize times when there is an adversarial influence trying to affect your life? And, if you do recognize the presence of an adversary (on this planet), how do you live your life in such a way as to disarm that adversary?

Millman: I would certainly hope that I have something to say on that topic, since I teach something I call The Way Of The Peaceful Warrior. Adversaries are quite relevant!

Someone could picture gravity as an adversary. After all, gravity is constantly pressing us, pulling us down to the Earth. And, as we get older, our body may lose that battle—and people start getting bent over, and orthopedic problems, and pain of every kind, back pains, joint pains develop. That's all because of gravity; no gravity, you don't have that happening. So, some people could view gravity as an adversary; or, they can view it as a teacher.

Since my background is an athlete, let's take a look for a moment at the idea of competition, because that's what adversaries engage in—competition.

Let's take the game of tennis. Despite my late father's quip to me, years ago, when he said: "Dan, you know what I love about the game of tennis? Every shot makes somebody happy." That's one approach. But most people, when they play the game of tennis, they recognize the object of that game is to make the other person fail. Now, that seems like an archetypical adversarial situation—you and that person facing each other across that net. And that can be in a relationship, it can be in business, where you have this adversarial thing.

When I play tennis, I don't see an adversary across the net. I truly don't. I see my teacher and my student. They may not know they're my teacher or my student. They may not be consciously aware of that, but they are my teacher, because when they hit a shot to me, they're showing me where my weak points are. They're testing me, and teaching me about reality, and my progress, and where I can learn. And so, they are my teacher.

They are also my student, because I'm going to whack that ball back, and teach them what they need to learn. So, I'm helping them develop.

In my game of tennis, I'm playing the best game I can. I'm going for excellence, which is all you can ever do in a game, anyway. It's not about winning or losing. I'll mention something about that in a moment.

Do I view them as my enemy, which some athletes actually do? Or, do I view them as my student and my teacher?

I don't believe in doing away with competitive sports because they are a natural part of life. I do believe in doing away with competitive MIND, or that approach, where we treat someone as our enemy or our adversary, when they are actually our teacher and student.

There is an ancient proverb that says: "We have no friends. We have no enemies. We only have teachers."

Without an adversary, how do we develop in life? You were talking about the path of least resistance. I tell people often, if you want an easy life, if you want a simple life, don't get married, don't have children, and don't live in the city. Just go out to the country, have a little trailer, grow your own food and garden, and you don't have to deal with much of anything in life. But that's not what we're here for. We didn't come onto this planet for simple and easy. We came for challenges, as many as we're willing to take on, for growth and development of our soul, if you will.

So, I have no problem with what we call adversaries. For 14 years I taught knife fighting training, where people actually fought with rubber knives. And in 3½ days, it was the equivalent of almost a year's training in most martial arts schools, in terms of being able to move without thinking. At the end of the training, three tough martial artists attacked people, with rubber knives, fast, from the right, from the left, straight on, thrusting. And these people, who had never done any martial arts, most of them, were able to get out of the way and learn a lot about themselves, and life, through that particular metaphor. And certainly it involved adversaries, attackers.

I'm all for the idea that we have challenges in life—whether you call them challenges or adversaries—but we also have to recognize that they are blessings, not always pleasant and not always easy. It's a way of looking at life.

I was mentioning that, in sports, it's not about winning or losing. In life and sport, we can control the efforts we make, but we can't control the outcome. Now, that should be patently obvious upon any examination. We can't control whether we sink a putt, or make a basket, or find love, or find success. Anybody who tells people "I'll guarantee you'll be successful"—that doesn't seem realistic to me. There are people who do everything they can, and they still aren't successful. Maybe it's karma; maybe it's their astrological configurations. Who knows. But we CAN control the efforts we make.

Michael Jordan is one of the greatest basketball players who ever lived. Now, could Jordan himself control whether he made a basket? The answer is no. He misses baskets. What he CAN control is whether he took the shot. And as Jordan himself said: "You make 0% of the shots you don't take."

So, by making the effort in life, we vastly increase the odds of getting the results we want, over not making the effort. In other words, as I tell aspiring writers, you've a lot better chance of having a best-selling book if you've written a manuscript.

Martin: Do you think one person can make a difference on this planet?

Millman: I believe one person is all that's ever made a difference on this planet. We read about cultures, civilizations, like Egypt, or the Aztecs, the Mayans, Babylonians, these civilizations that seem to rise-up into these amazing discoveries and achievements, and the calendar, and being able to tell the motions of the stars, and building pyramids. Some people have theories that it was extraterrestrials, which is within the realm of possibility; it's one of the theories; it could explain a lot, extraterrestrial influence. But, another theory that I would suggest is that an enlightened being steps forward to lead a culture, and transforms the culture, within a generation. These were sudden changes as these civilizations arose: And why did they arise where they did?

I believe that one individual is all who ever makes a difference. And each of us can make a difference in our own lives, in our own smaller environment. We can raise the standards around us, or lower them, by our behaviors.

It's an illusion thinking: "If we have a lot of people, it's more powerful." We call that a mob. A lot of people can do things that one person cannot do. One person cannot build a building. It takes specialists who are knowledgeable, it takes laborers, architects, engineers. That's why I say that nobody is smarter than all of us. But it always starts with one person, with a vision, with an idea. One person touches another, and touches another, and then another. It begins with one. So, it's not a matter of one person being more important than a group of people. Both are important.

But I have a strong predisposition toward focusing on the individual. That's my cause, if you will, the individual. And so, I just continue to teach, to write, to reach out to many people. But I'm really reaching one individual at a time.

Each of us does make a difference, and we don't often appreciate the difference we make in the world. Whether or not we happen to write books, or teach seminars, or help assemble cars in an auto plant, we interact with people—our families and others around us.

My wife said: "Dan, with all the work you do, maybe one day you'll realize that one of the most important things you've ever done is help raise our daughter." And I completely agree with her. Some of the most important work I do is not in my official teaching capacity; it's maybe paying a toll for the person behind me on the Golden Gate Bridge, or picking up a piece of litter in the street. Other people might see me do that and think: "Gee, he just reached down and picked up some litter." Maybe they'll do that too, sometime.

Little things can make a big difference, and it starts with the individual. It starts ripples that can have an impact on things we never could have guessed. There are different stories that illustrate that.

Martin: What role does prayer play in your belief system?

Millman: I appreciate your calling it MY belief system, because that's what it is. I don't have scientific evidence. I understand that certain scientific studies have been done. I don't know how good the studies are; I can't speak to them, nor have I read them in detail, whether prayer does good, or what kind of good it does.

This is a psycho-physical realm we live in. So, when I focus on doing, prayer is a form of doing, but it's a more subtle form of doing. Imagining Light surrounding a friend of yours, who lives across the world, and helping to heal them—does it do any good? That's another question you might ask, in the same vein. The answer is: I don't know.

I do know that one form of prayer is not asking for things. I've heard the purest form of prayer is just thanking God, and acknowledging and accepting where we are. And perhaps following that with "if it is Thy Will"—perhaps to create change in some area, while resolving to help create that change. And asking for help from Higher Power. Those are all forms of prayer, not just saying: "God, help me win the football game." Or: "Help me get rid of this sore I have on my body."

Partly, it depends on what you mean by prayer, and what kind of prayer. I know there are things that go around on the Internet, like: "Let's all pray at such and such a time, and we'll create peace in the world." I have no idea whether that has any impact whatsoever.

Martin: I'm specifically talking about prayer to a Higher Power.

Millman: Are you making a distinction between that and people praying, at the same time, to create peace in the world? Would you differentiate that, from what you just said?

Martin: Yes, I would.

Millman: Ok. I think you're suggesting that kind of prayer is "let's all mass our psyches together, and maybe our psyches will create some change"—where you're asking about a transcendental power?

Martin: Absolutely.

Millman: That one individual may be able to impact change?

Martin: Yes.

Millman: One of my books I wrote with a good friend of mine, named Douglas Childers, called Divine Interventions. I was about to start my new novel and Doug came to my house and said: "Dan, I have an idea for a book.

Would you like to collaborate on this?"

I said: "Doug, thanks, but I'm doing fine by myself. I don't really need to collaborate at this point."

Then he said: "Listen to my idea. It's called Divine Interventions, and I've researched about 20 stories. I know there are many more. These are well-researched stories, well-documented, although one can't know for certain. Still, they're quite convincing, about mystery and miracles, including prayer."

I found myself saying: "Yes, let's do the book together." Because most of my writings to that point had been about personal responsibility, pulling ourselves up from our own bootstraps, being practical and grounded. And I had never really addressed the issue of mystery and miracles, including prayer.

In doing this book, and researching these various stories, it was quite amazing. Some of these are well known: Our Lady of Guadeloupe, the miracle at Fatima. Some of them are historical; movies have been made and books written about them. But there are others that are less well known, personal miracles that change people's lives.

If I had to make a judgment on it, I would say that this world, this universe, is infused. In fact, the Substance and the Energy that make up this world is itself Divine.

My personal belief, which you asked about, is not some anthropomorphic God, mysteriously sitting up in the skies or in Heaven or in us or out of us, watching us. But, more that the world is innately Divine, and there are powers and laws and mysteries that we haven't yet fathomed. That the world is infinitely greater and more mysterious than most of us have yet seen.

I believe prayer has a wonderful power, and it's a tremendously useful practice, if only to connect that person to the Divine reality, as a spiritual practice, to remember the Bigger Picture of life. In fact, that's to me the significance of prayer, beyond whether somebody actually gets the result that they're hoping for. Because the ego, our personality level, we can think all sorts of things should happen, or we want to happen. We want to heal; we want to have this good thing happen, and not have that bad thing happen. In fact, sometimes I think people, in the interest of spiritual life, want to feel good more of the time, and they want to feel bad less of the time. There's nothing wrong with that. It's quite a healthy, natural thing to want to feel more pleasure and less pain. But I don't think that's necessarily what spiritual life is about.

I'm looking for something, for a moment here.

Martin: Let me just say—and I don't want to side-track you—what you said is not necessarily mutually exclusive. There can be an anthropomorphic God AND the entire Substance of our world can be Divine.

Millman: Sure. I don't see God "somewhere". I see God everywhere. I don't think there is anything that exists that is not God. You asked my personal belief.

Martin: Yes.

Millman: And that's what I'm stating. I'm not stating it as a truth, or that I know better. That just happens to be my particular stance, rather than relating to an anthropomorphic God, who is looking down over me right now, and who I can personal pray to. That's a part of many people's belief system, and I certainly respect that, as well. I don't presume to know better.

Let me just read this one part into the record, so to speak, from Divine Interventions:

"Ultimately, doubts about the authenticity of specific phenomena are balanced by the compelling evidence of lives transformed as a result of the experiences. Must others share our experiences in order to validate them?

Must an apparition appear in an outward, tangible form in order to be authentic? After all, how substantial is light? How tangible is love? Can those Angels who appear in our vision be less than genuine, if they transform our hearts and minds, and change the course of our lives? Our universe contains many realities, each operating according to hidden Laws. The supernatural may be quite natural, after all. Perhaps our bodies, minds, and psyches contain built-in mechanisms, Divine abilities we don't yet fully understand, that account for spontaneous healings, visionary experiences, levitation, and enlightenment. Perhaps our full powers and Divine destinies are waiting to reveal themselves."

If you don't mind, I'm going to read just a little more:

"Life's Larger Questions. Those who doubt the reality of Divine Intervention may ask: Why does God seem to help some people, answer some prayers, and apparently ignore others? Why is one person saved or cured, and another lost? Why does evil sometimes seem to triumph over good? They may point out that for every person miraculously healed, thousands die of disease. For every pilgrim fed, aliens go hungry. Is Grace or God arbitrary and capricious? Or, is there sense to our suffering, and a spiritual purpose in our adversity? Some view suffering as Divine punishment for moral transgression. Others see it as a necessary part of the soul's education and evolution. To find meaning in the suffering and adversity in your own life, look back to before they occurred. Then, observe yourself now—stronger, wiser, perhaps more compassionate as a result of your struggles."

This is, actually, the paragraph I was looking for:

"Divine Interventions operate outside the limited perspective of our personal desires. We may ask for healing, but we cannot dictate what form this healing will take. Hoping for physical regeneration may fail, even as deeper wounds are healed on emotional or spiritual levels. Pain may purify our Spirit and serve our ultimate destiny. We cannot always know what is for our soul's highest good.

"Like all true mysteries, these stories yield no final answers to life's larger questions. Instead, they inspire hope and reawaken a sense of reverence, wonder, and awe. They remind us of a Divine Presence in our world, in our lives, as close as our next heartbeat, our next breath."

Martin: This brings up another concept that you talk about, and that is the concept of Grace. How do you factor Grace into people's lives?

Millman: I once participated in a retreat; I didn't run it. I sat behind a small screen for 16 hours a day, for about 3 days. Other than eating small meals, that's all I did was sit behind that screen, and contemplate three questions, in relation to my mother, my father, and significant others in my life. The first two days was just on my mother. And I went through every year of my life. Memories came that I thought I had entirely forgotten, from the time I was very young, up to the present.

So, I covered over 50 years. I contemplated three questions: Concerning my mother, the first question was: What have I received from her? I mean, concretely, what did I receive from her? What did she do for me? What did she give me?

The second question was: What did I give to her?

The third question was: What troubles or difficulties did I cause for her?

I did this for two days, 16 hours a day. And then I went to my father. And then I went to other people in my life. And I learned that I've received far more than I have given, and that I have caused many troubles and difficulties.

This exercise, which I did for a weekend, does not tend to improve self-esteem, but it does improve reality-esteem, or esteem for reality. And I've realized that this chair I'm sitting in now is supporting me, whether or not I happen to be a nice guy in this moment, or deserving of it. And that's coming to the answer to your question.

I've received gifts my entire life: The sunshine on my face, my next breath, the people at the electric company who help me to have electricity to turn the lights on and run my computer; the people at the telephone company; the garbage people, who come to collect my garbage, otherwise it would pile-up.

We're constantly being served, whether or not we deserve it or whether we've earned it, whether we're nice people all the time. To me, that's what the meaning of Grace is. Grace is operating constantly; we just fail to notice it. We're busy thinking how entitled we are to everything, because we were born.

In fact, the First Grace people receive is suffering. Let me explain that. As Ram Dass once said: "When we don't get what we want, we suffer." Or, we're dissatisfied, let's say. "When we get what we really don't want, we suffer. And even if we get exactly what we want, we still suffer, because we can't hold onto it forever."

If there was no suffering, why would people be interested in spiritual life, or life's larger questions? They would just want to have as much pleasure as possible. We lose loved ones in this world. And that suffering is what creates the drive for a deeper understanding of life, what humbles us, and asks us to consider the idea that there is a Divine, that there's something larger than us.

Now, I don't know whether that's ultimately better. I know that's just how it seems to work. There are people who are, traditionally, very religious, who fight in wars and kill other people, and all kinds of nasty things. No approach or belief system guarantees a responsible, constructive life. So, these questions about God and Divine Reality, we all have our own perspectives about, and over time mine changes in subtle ways.

More and more, I find myself communing and feeling and breathing that Divine Reality in everyday life. And the moment I contemplate that—and I thank you for your question, because again, it brings it up in my psyche—the moment I contemplate that, I tend to take a deep breath, relax in the Light, and want to say "Thank you." Beyond that, the rest is just philosophy.

Martin: It seems to me, from what you were saying, the concept of Grace is very much like the statement you made earlier about paying attention.

Fallen Angels

And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"?

Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

That is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text cherished by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

Elizabeth Clare Prophet examines the controversy surrounding this book and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. She demonstrates that Jesus and the apostles studied the Book of Enoch, and tells why Church fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels.

Millman: It is; it's an act of attention. We can be attending to our broken sprinkler system, or our last argument, or the job we have to do, and the many tasks before us. But once in awhile, even amidst that, amidst all that, look up! Literally, look up and see the sky, or feel the air, and try to feel where our body ends and the air begins. And remember the depths of the Universe, and its breadth, and then breathe-in the Divine, in an act of remembrance.

Some people, some cynics would say: "Oh, you're just making that up. It's 'pie in the sky'—opiate for the masses, or something to console you and make you feel better."

That's fine. I don't have anything against feeling better, now and then, by remembering that the world is, ultimately, ok.

Martin: Let's make a left-turn here at the fork in the road, and talk about something that seems to be a concern for a lot of people. Let's talk about money, for people with money issues. I know that covers a lot of ground. What do you have to say about money in our lives?

Millman: Let me first acknowledge that many people who make it their business to deal specifically in that area, whether they're financial advisors or popular authors who talk about money and abundance, such things sell very well. People are willing to pay money to read something they think will get them more money. Money tends to be a preoccupation for most of us, because it deals with that lower chakra; it deals with survival. It also deals with pleasure and options and striving and success and images and so on.

Now, in my book Everyday Enlightenment, dealing with Twelve Gateways to personal growth, one of those Twelve Gateways is "Manage Your Money" because, in terms of freeing our attention, most of us are obsessed or preoccupied with money. Even if people have a lot of it, they tend to get preoccupied with it, getting more of it, saving it, protecting it, and so on, or feeling guilty about it.

So money, like sex and some other topics, tends to be controversial. How many people are freely willing to say how much they make for a living, for example. It's one of those taboo topics. There's so much emotional charge around the simple fact of making a living.

It comes down to this, in my view: Unless we're independently wealthy, or have a trust fund or whatever, most of us need to work to make a living. We provide a value, and we're paid for that in society.

Separate from the issue of money, separate from being paid, just for a moment, is our work in the world, our form of service. Whether it's volunteer, whether we're paid a great deal of money, whether it required an education in medical or law school, engineering, or whether we do unskilled labor, we provide a service in society. And that is what connects us up with the rest of humanity, by providing a service. If you provide no service for anybody, you could be a lone wolf in the wilderness somewhere. You're not human in the same sense as if you go and do something, where you meet people and interact, and are able to help, in some small way.

I saw a little man, at a train station in Japan, who was polishing the uprights at the metal gates. There were about 500 of them, and he was polishing each one very carefully. He was like a Zen master. Most people would consider this very "lowly" work. But, he was doing it with real skill and excellence. Then, he moved on to the next upright. And he had 500 of these things to do. That was a service to the world. And it was no less than the service that I provide, because he was doing it well, and so he connected; he was part of the world.

What I think we want in life is not just happiness. What we want is meaning and purpose and connection. And that gave him a sense of connection. And so, even separate from money, work is important, and what we do is important. And it doesn't have to be "spiritual" because spiritual work is not what we get out of the work; it's what we bring TO it. If we bring our attention and our dedication, and we bring quality to it, then that brings Spirit to whatever work we do.

We could be an insurance salesman, and be a spiritual insurance salesman. It doesn't matter, if we do it with refinement. And hopefully it will end up not hurting people.

Notice I haven't spoken about money. It's mostly about work. Now, money itself often comes from work. It's just like some trophies may come from athletic competition. But to do something just for money is like doing sports just to get a trophy or a medal; someone has lost the point, somewhere. They've lost their way, because we ought to do things for there own sake. We work to work. And if we're doing it only to get a paycheck, then we might want to look at how we approach our work, or look at changing our work, or both.

Now, money itself is a form of energy. I had a terrible attitude issue with money years ago. I was like the boxer Joe Lewis, when he once said: "I don't really like money, but it calms my nerves." I had mixed feelings about money, especially money and spirituality, because of all the biblical quotations. You know what they are:

"Money is the root of all evil."

"It's more difficult for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven than for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle."

There have been many interpretations of those things that are not as literal as what most people assume. Most of the popular media emphasizes that poor people are the salt of the Earth and good, and rich people are bad. Most movies have good poor people, and bad rich people.

One example is the movie It's A Wonderful Life. Most people have seen that film. You have George Bailey and his family; they're humble, happy, and good. Money is a struggle, but he's given-up wealth. Then there's one of the wealthiest men in the town, Mr. Potters, this evil, conniving, old spider of a man, who owns half the town and wants it all.

So, we've grown up, often, with ideas that somehow money is bad. To have a lot of it, you must have done something bad, or taken advantage of people. We talk about "the rich" and "the poor", in quotes, as if that meant something. There's no such thing as the rich and poor; they're abstract ideas. Individuals are poor—some more, some less. There are people, individuals, who are rich—some more, some less—and some of the rich people are greedy and mean, and some are kind and altruistic and have given more money to charities than I'll ever be able to afford.

So, I had issues with money. I didn't realize it until one day, when I was watching two well-dressed, attractive teenage girls get into a Mercedes sports car. I looked at them, and if I could have given words to my thoughts, it would have been: "Look at those little rich girls."

In that moment of self-reflection, I realized I didn't know them. They might have been very, very nice, kind, intelligent, people. But, because they appeared to have a lot of money, just because of that one fact, I thought negatively about them.

In that moment I realized, if that was how I felt about money, I sure wasn't going to attract much of it. At that moment in time, I was mastering my "poverty consciousness" phase of life. I was working two jobs, struggling along as a typist at a law firm and a real estate firm, working all day and making very little money. It started the process of turning around, and I started reflecting on: "What is money? Is it good or bad?"

Since that time, money is neither my God nor my Devil. Money is a form of energy. If my car is broken, I can use my energy to fix it, crawl underneath and start working on it, or I can pay somebody who knows how to do it well—green energy, give them some of that, and they fix it.

Money is energy. It is a medium of exchange, instead of bartering everything. It's a convenient medium of exchange. And money doesn't care who has it. It applies to certain rules. If you get a good education, and certain occupations are more rare and are valued in society, that pay more, then you can make more money.

Some people seem to have a little more talent with money; other people have more issues with it. But I think it is important to look at our beliefs, to at least explore them.

Then, since I've emphasized what we actually do, start focusing on how can I use my talents and my interests to create stability and sufficiency in that regard. So, when I talk about managing our money, it's not about getting rich or, on the other extreme, giving all our money away to the poor. It's about achieving sufficiency and stability, a foundation where, if the car breaks down, we can write a check and get it fixed. We don't have to have an emotional trauma.

So, it's not a preoccupation. We do our job; we get paid; we live where we can, within our means—and you know what? Making a lot of money is not the answer, because you can make a lot of money and end up spending even more. I've experienced that myself.

As I've done better, and my books have sold, and my seminars, I make a lot more money than I once did—but for sure, our expenses tend to increase. We've chosen Ivy League schools for our daughters, many thousands of dollars; we live in an expensive area, Marin County, California, so we pay a large mortgage, and so on.

Thus, just because one makes a bigger salary doesn't mean that's the answer, because people tend to then spend to that level. That's why the Second Gateway of that book [Everyday Enlightenment] is "Reclaim Your Will"—because we need to apply will to our finances. It takes absolute will and discipline to live within our means, to save money, to put away 10% of everything we make. That's just an arbitrary figure, but can you image, for most people, if they put 10 cents on every single dollar they ever made in a savings account, what they would have now? Sounds like a modest idea. "Oh no, you have to do more than that." But, 10 cents of every dollar, you put away. That's a practical thing.

I could say more about money, if you have any specific questions about it. Those would be my comments about money, and our relationship to it, to first examine: "Is it unspiritual? Who is more spiritual? Someone who has learned to live off the land and spends no money, and has a little trailer up in the hills, and grows their own food, is that person more spiritual because they don't involved themselves with money? Or, is someone more spiritual who has developed a creative idea, and created a business through their labors and efforts, and now employs 20 people, and helps support 20 families, and are providing a service in the world? "Who is more spiritual?" I would ask. That's something we need to explore, our attitudes toward money, and our behaviors regarding getting it.

Nostradamus: Predictions Of World War III

After the 9/11/01 disaster at the World Trade Center, there is a renewed interest in what the great seer Nostradamus had to say. This book is a serious study of his predictions, based upon the author's research into the original manuscripts. His work details the struggle that is going on in the Middle East and the ongoing conflict between the Christian world and the Islamic world. Jack Manuelian has combed through the prophecies of more modern seers, pointing out how they may agree with what Nostradamus had to say. He offers hope for mankind, but admits that it is troubled times we live in. What will be the outcome? Read the book and decide for yourself.

If my daughters had ever walked up to me directly and said: "Dad, what should I do for a living?" I'd say: "Find out what you love, and get someone to pay you for it." Now that's idealistic, but I don't think it's bad advice.

Let me say one more thing about money. I don't mean to be idealistic here. Not all of us love our work, everyday. I've found something I'm good at—writing and speaking and teaching. It doesn't mean that I love every single thing about it—hopping on airplanes, traveling everywhere, and so on. Nobody loves their work all the time.

I believe we can make good money, however we define that for ourselves, which is different for different people, based on their needs—if they are single or married, have a large family, and so on—but, we can do 3 things: First, we can make good money; second, we can be doing what we enjoy or doing work that we find basic satisfaction in, that matches our interests and talents; and third, do such while serving other people. And I think all three of those are important. If you only have 2 out of the 3, it doesn't work for long.

Make good money; do what you enjoy; serve other people. That would be a good recommendation, a goal, for people to seek out and find—but not to engage in a never-ending search for "the perfect occupation". It's like finding the perfect soulmate.

It's more about just exploring. Continuing an ongoing exploration of what are your talents, what are your interests, and handling what is in front of you. And taking the best options available, at the time, while continuing to consider what you love doing, or what you enjoy, what you have talents at, and make the best money you can.

It's complicated because it involves self-worth issues. For some people, money burns a hole in their pocket, or they're afraid to value themselves enough to ask for what their time is worth to them. There are many psychological attributes or aspects to money. It's our way of "keeping track" of our sense of self-worth and other variables in life, our energy, how effective we are, how well we function. It's not magic.

When I go to speak to these young kids who are incarcerated, I ask myself: "What will I recommend to them, when they get out of prison, if they do? Shall they go and get a job at McDonald's, making $8 an hour or $10 an hour, when they can make $300 an hour selling drugs?"

How do I tell them: "Don't do that; it's better making $10 an hour being an honest person." These are philosophical issues that are extremely complex, and I wouldn't presume to come up with any easy solution.

But we each make our choices, and I believe that change happens not because of ideas of right and wrong. I won't tell these young people in jail that this is right and that is wrong, and you should do right and you shouldn't do wrong, because I haven't helped them, so far. They know that.

Rather than right and wrong, with these young people I will emphasize consequences. If you behave one way, you're more likely to have these kinds of consequences, and if you behave another way, you're more likely to have a different set of consequences.

Having said that, let's move on.

Martin: You suggested, earlier, that the only thing people can do is concentrate on their behavior. Now, if behavior has been a problem for people, how do you recommend, or suggest, that people change their behavior, especially if they are having a problem with addiction, or eating, or what-have-you?

Millman: First of all, I wouldn't suggest that the ONLY thing we can do is concentrate on our behavior. There are times for introspections, to notice what kinds of thoughts we have, and what kinds of emotions we have coming up. You can learn from them. But I'm suggesting that it makes more sense to pay more attention to, and put more

The Untold Story Behind CIA Experiments

With MK-Ultra & Germ Warfare.

America's Great State Secret

by Gordon Thomas

(Author of: Seeds Of Fire: China And The Story Behind The Attack On America)

Now published for the first time as an original e-book (only available via the Internet).

- Sensational never-seen-before documents from inside the White House, CIA, and other agencies.
- Reveals the documentary evidence that links U.S. Vice-President Dick Cheney and Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld to the cover-up of the death of top CIA scientist, Frank Olson.
- How the CIA financed a ruthless and systematic assault of the human psyche—using a British-born psychiatrist to spearhead the assault.
- Names other world-renowned physicians who were involved in the most sinister research program ever created by any United States government and its secret partner, the British government.
- How a woman was programmed to become a CIA assassin.
- How a CIA chemist was murdered by his own colleagues after he had turned to the one man he thought he could trust—a London psychiatrist engaged in similar work.
- How "expendables"—the CIA generic name for those selected for killing—were secretly murdered after they had been experimented on in Europe.
- How the CIA used prostitutes and mental patients in other experiments.
- How the CIA deliberately pioneered the drug culture whose effects are still with us.
- How the CIA agent selected to monitor the experiments eventually died at the hands of a physician steeped in the methods perfected by the CIA.
- How the CIA experiments are still carried on in secret establishments in Israel and China.

- Uncovers CIA terminal experiments on Vietcong prisoners in Vietnam.
- Publishes the CIA Manual Of Assassination—a shocking document describing how to commit state-approved murder.

This is a shattering account of how the dark side of science collaborated with sheer lunacy to create a chilling tour-de-force of terror. Based upon impeccable research, it shows how our elected governments lied to the people for over fifty years, and continues to obscure the truth. It is a story of murder, inhuman experiments, and torture.

It is also the story of a brave man, William Buckley, the longest-serving agent in the CIA until his own terrible death at the hands of a doctor trained in the techniques the CIA pioneered. Buckley was a close personal friend of the author.

All this and more is supported by a wealth of never-before-published evidence and personal interviews with those doctors involved in the work that mocks their oath to do no harm to their patients. An incredible document of Truth!

So, fine, we're talking about behavior, in that light. You said: "How to control behavior." When someone asked me "how" to do anything, I usually suggest to them that they already know how. Everybody knows how to modify their behavior. Easiest thing in the world—still, let me take that back. SIMPLEST thing in the world—not easy, but simple, very simple. Don't do what you were doing. Do something different. Is that easy? No.

The extreme example? Somebody who is doing a behavior that is shooting drugs into their veins. To say "don't do that anymore; stop doing that" sounds naïve, sounds ludicrous—and yet, let's look at that for a moment. There's one critic of my book who said: "Dan Millman is telling addicts just to stop, without even suggesting a treatment program."

I recognize, of course, that some addicts have benefited immensely by going to N.A. or A.A. or having intervention of letting family care about them. Some people stop because they hit bottom, whatever that is for them. Some people stop an addictive behavior because they get frightened enough, or inspired enough.

But, no matter what avenue they take, whether it's 26 rehabilitation programs, in and out, whether they change overnight, whether they go through, for years, up and down, falling back, recidivism, every single addict who does successfully stop, stops exactly the same way. They finally reach the point where they behave differently; they stop doing the action of shooting or snorting or drinking or however they deliver those drugs. Isn't that true?

Millman: Everybody stops the same way. Now, whether it's going to take them a day or an hour or an instant or 20 years, that is going to be their choice. But, the point I make is, they are not out of control. Nobody has taken possession of their arms and legs. Even in cases of addictive substances, people can go through hell of withdrawal, extremely unpleasant, and yet people have stopped. How did they do it? They just did it.

Now, can I give keys? I'd be the Drug Czar, I'd be the wisest man in the world, if I could give a key how everyone could do it easier, and so on. Some people find it within themselves to hold on and, whether you call it will, whether you call it Spirit, they just go through it and fight the good fight. And it's a life-and-death struggle.

Stopping tobacco is 4½ times as addictive as heroin. That is a life-and-death struggle. The only people who I admire more than those who have never been addicted to anything, are those who have been and got over it. Nobody quits once; they quit a thousand times.

Every time the recovered addict feels like saying "just one more; if I ever needed it, I need it now" or "I'm just going to show I can handle it"—every time one of those instances happen, they are confronted with saying to themselves "no" or they say "yes"—but they don't do it; they don't do the behavior.

So, when you say: "How do you change your behavior?"

My answer is: "It's easy; just change it."

But many people, when they ask "How?", they're really asking: "What's the easy way? What's the shortcut? Give me a technique." And there are plenty of people out there who will do that! So I say: "Go and see one of them, if you need techniques."

Martin: [Laughter]

Millman: But it's still going to come down to: "What are you going to DO, right now?"

Martin: Ultimately it gets back to making a choice.

Millman: And you make a choice by how you behave, not in your head. In other words, Shoma Morita, M.D., that Japanese psychiatrist I mentioned earlier, once said: "When running up a hill, it's ok to give up as many times as you want, as long as your feet keep moving."

Martin: [Laughter]

Martin: Let's shift to your new novel on Socrates. What would you like to share about your new book?

Millman: Recently I wrote a book called Living On Purpose, and it was a fun book to write, which is rare, and it's my most reader-friendly book. It's wonderfully formatted, I have to say, in these little bite-sized sections. The book is centered around 24 of what Socrates used to call "House Rules" or "Spiritual Laws" for living. It presents these 24 "House Rules" like:

Earth is a school, and daily life is a classroom.

Our teachers appear in many forms.

Lessons reappear until we learn them.

If we don't learn easy lessons, they get harder.

Consequences teach better than concepts.

Only action brings ideas to life.

Timing is everything.

Play to your strengths.

Judge with compassion.

Simplicity has power.

Life is a series of moments.

And so on. It has 24 of these rules.

Each section asks a big question like: "Is there a larger purpose in living?" Then, one of the House Rules answers that question, followed by a little epigram that explains it.

Then, I have two questions and answers. And these are questions that I've been asked about real life, real problems, from real people. I've edited the questions for simplicity and clarity, but I didn't make them up. Then, I answer them.

My assistant, years ago, saw some notes of these and said: "These are really good answers, Dan; you should write these down." So, I ended up using them to illustrate how the House Rules work.

...and the truth shall set you free

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

The reason I've mentioned that book, and the formatting of it, is because after I wrote that book, all of a sudden I realized: Wow, I've written 11 books—two for children, the rest for adults; two of them are like fact/fiction, like Peaceful Warrior and Sacred Journey, one was a parable, like The Laws Of Spirit, and the rest are non-fiction, self-help books.

I looked around, after I finished Living On Purpose, and I said to myself: You know what? I think I'm done. I think I've said what I have to say. The teachings are there in the books.

And I really felt—then I was 54 years old—a sense of completion. I've never written a book just to have another book out. I hope that's refreshing. Every book has had to justify itself, and been a different facet of what I call a peaceful warrior's approach to living. Each one is a different piece of the puzzle of personal growth, spiritual growth.

People have read one of my books six times; people tell me this. I want to answer them: "You would have been better off reading six of my books once!" Because each one really does have different information. My book The Life You Were Born To Live has uncanny, accurate information to help clarify people's life purpose.

Martin: I have it right in front of me.

Millman: Each book is quite different. But I've reached a point where I thought I was done. And so, what I'm going to write now is what I started writing. I love story.

There's an old proverb: "God invented men and women because God loves stories." And I love story.

I'm going back; from now on, the books I write will be story. My new book won't probably be out until 2004; it's a long process. Even though I've completed the first draft, I have a number of rewrites to do, feedback, and so on. That book is The Journal Of Socrates. It's a novel, based on his journal about his life, from people who asked: "How in the world did this guy Socrates, who taught you, how did he learn? How did he become a warrior like this? Was he married? Where did he come from? What teachers did he have?" And so, this answers all the questions, and solves a mystery that was even unanswered by me, until I finished the journal.

I was surprised, at the end, and my eyes filled with tears. When I'm moved, it's probably a good sign for my readers. I made a huge leap. I'm actually becoming a true novelist. People who have looked at the book so far, have said that it's the best writing I've ever done.

So, I feel quite good about it, at this point. But I'm not going to say much more about it, beyond that. I don't want to give any hints, but I think it will take the reader into a new dimension. There are certainly going to be some moments of philosophy, and hopefully some wisdom. Most of the lessons that people will learn in that book will be through reading about one man's odyssey, and his visits to Heaven and Hell, and the pains and joys of his life. That's how we learn.

From here on out, as far as I can tell, I'm going to primarily be a novelist, and write stories that inspire people. That goes back to The Way Of The Peaceful Warrior; so maybe that will be good news for my readers.

Martin: What closing remarks would you have for our readers out there who are very attentive to what you are saying, and who are living the honorable and good life, service to others, what words of encouragement and empowerment would you have for people to hang-in there?

Millman: Something that I've observed over time, the last two or three decades, is that it can take up to 10 years to embody what we've learned; it can take that long. I would suggest—in fact, it's the last House Rule in my book Living On Purpose—which is: "Be gentle with yourself." We want to show ourselves the same kindness that we would show other people.

Professor Aldous Huxley, when he was near death, one of his students asked him: "After all of the studies you've done around the world, a really in-depth engagement of the different spiritual traditions, can you summarize, somehow, what you've learned?"

And Professor Huxley, quite a gentleman, said: "I'm a little embarrassed to say that I can probably summarize it all in about six words: Try to be a little kinder."

Maybe it comes down to that. Little things make a big difference. We're learning. Each day we live, we make mistakes, and we learn. For all our sophisticated knowledge, and all we've gained in reading and listening to other teachers and ideas and philosophies and esoteric knowledge, it comes down to what we DO, moment to moment.

My life is very busy, as I'm sure many readers' lives are busy, but my life has become quite simple when I recognize that I can only do one thing at a time. So, it's a call to come back to the present moment, to simplify, and to set aside, for a time, all these ideas and philosophies and concepts, and come back to a direct relationship with life, moment to moment. Recognize that it does take time to embody what we've learned, that we do the best we can, each day, and over time, our practice gets better.

The best words that I can leave your readers with are ones I'm about to read from the Epilog of my smallest book, The Laws Of Spirit—many people's favorite of my books. In this book, I meet an ageless woman sage, up in the mountains, through the wilderness, through the natural world, and the changing seasons, the streams flowing down the hill, the growing trees. True Nature has always been my primary teacher. This sage teaches me twelve spiritual laws, and when we're about to say farewell, this is her farewell to me, and this is my farewell to your readers, for now:

She said: "These are my wishes and prayers for you, all the days of your life:

"May you find grace, as you surrender to life.

"May you find happiness, as you stop seeking it.

"May you come to trust these Laws, and inherit the wisdom of the Earth.

"May you reconnect with the heart of Nature, and feel the blessing of Spirit.

"The challenges of daily life will remain" she said, "and you will tend to forget what I have shown you. But, a deeper part of you will remember, and when you do, life's problems will seem no more substantial than soap bubbles.

"The path will open before you, where before there grew only weeds of confusion. Your future, the future of all humanity, is the Path Into The Light, into a growing realization of your unity with the Creator, and our Creation.

"And what lies beyond is beyond description. Even when the sky appears at its darkest, know that the Sun shines ever upon you, and love surrounds you, and that the pure Light within you will guide your way home.

"So, trust the process of your life unfolding, and know with certainty, through the peaks and valleys of your journey, that your soul rests safe and secure in the arms of Spirit."

And that's probably a pretty good way to end.

Martin: That's a beautiful place to end. On behalf of our readers, I really appreciate your taking the time to do this today.

Millman: You seem to have a really good sense of integrity and energy, and you're willing to do a long interview. I'm so tired of "sound bites"! I really like the opportunity to wax forth. I wish you and your readers well, and I hope that this serves, in some way, to bring in a little more Light. △

The Enemy Within

by Gore Vidal

Editor's note: We would be remiss in our duties if we failed to share the following writing from renowned author Gore Vidal with you. Like the well-documented, parallel article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM called Stranger Than Fiction, Vidal backs his scathing criticism of "the Bush junta" with a powerhouse of in-depth references to support some serious assertions and inferences.

As was pointed out back in our November 2002 issue, when we shared an interview with this controversial translator of the Public Pulse, we present the following not because it is particularly aware of the Larger Picture, say in the way an essay from David Icke would be, and as most conscientious readers of this publication would see things.

Rather, what Gore Vidal does is act as a kind of articulate and precise "moral barometer" for the average thinking person (thus his longtime, well-earned popularity as a provocative and exacting writer).

The "glimmers of awakening" he shares here therefore speak volumes about the steadily growing number of Americans who are NOT comfortably under the spell of the Global Elite's relentless mind-control machinery. And THAT'S something to note well—since you can be sure these World Controllers are monitoring the situation with growing panic!

For example, in addition to The (London) Observer that carried Vidal's article, both the BBC and Canadian TV are beginning to hint at a Bush Administration involvement in 9/11. And, as well, these news sources have been more honest about the huge level of protests worldwide against Bush's narrowminded push for war with Iraq.

(While we're on this subject of protest, a major march on Washington DC is planned for January 18, 2003. For details and busses leaving from a number of major cities, see the www.internationalanswer.org Internet website, and also see the article on this subject in this month's News Desk column.)

To see what Canadian television has to say about Bush, the CIA, and 9/11 terror complicity, you readers with computer access can utilize RealPlayer Video and go to the <http://clients.loudeye.com/imc/mayday/mediafile.ram> Internet website. And to see what the BBC has said, in the same RealPlayer Video format, go to the <http://news.bbc.co.uk/olmedia/cta/progs/newsnight/attack22.ram> Internet website. (Keep in mind that these websites could become "unavailable" at any time for obvious reasons.)

As we shared in two very heated stories in last month's News Desk, the public is awakening to the American media's underhanded involvement in the scam to fabricate what we are to believe is reality. This public awakening is due, in large measure, to the blatantly outrageous level of the media's lying these days. After all, even the well-developed "fish that got away" story has to stay within certain bounds to be believable!

As one well-informed Internet sentiment put it:

"GW Bush is using 9/11 and his 'mandate' from the people to lead the world into brutal wars on poor and brutalized people. There are some VERY disturbing issues around 9/11 and Mr. Bush. Issues that have been completely covered up by the U.S. media. The U.S. MEDIA IS PLAYING A HEAVY-HANDED ROLE IN CREATING A VERY DANGEROUS GLOBAL SITUATION.

"It began after the American election was stolen in 2000. The BBC did a documentary detailing how Jeb Bush, GW Bush, and Kathleen Harris stole the election through illegal tactics. This story was COMPLETELY censored in the U.S. media.

"This year 400 family members of 9/11 victims filed a lawsuit against members of the Bush Administration for 'complicity' in 9/11, allowing it to happen for political gain. These 9/11 family members held a press conference at the national press club, which was nearly completely boycotted by U.S. media, including C-SPAN, who would not only not air it, but refused to record it. This story was COMPLETELY censored in the U.S. media (except the San Francisco Examiner).

"The BBC and Canadian TV have done documentaries indicting Bush for likely complicity in allowing 9/11 to occur. These stories are COMPLETELY censored in the U.S. media.

"This week Gore Vidal wrote a column in The (London) Observer indicting Bush for 9/11 complicity. Again, COMPLETELY censored in U.S. media."

Well, not quite completely—'cause here it is, in FULL form, including the References (from the www.ratical.org/ratville/CAH/EnemyWithin.html Internet website).

It begins with a telling Preface written by The (London) Observer:

"Gore Vidal is America's most controversial writer and a ferocious, often isolated, critic of the Bush Administration. Here, against a backdrop of spreading unease about America's response to the events of 11 September 2001 and their aftermath, we publish Vidal's remarkable personal polemic urging a shocking new interpretation of who was to blame."

10/27/02 GORE VIDAL

Introduction

On 24 August 1814, things looked very dark for freedom's land. That was the day the British captured Washington DC and set fire to the Capitol and the White House.

President Madison took refuge in the nearby Virginia woods, where he waited patiently for the notoriously short attention span of the Brits to kick in, which it did. They moved on and what might have been a Day of Utter Darkness turned out to be something of a bonanza for the DC building trades and up-market realtors.

One year after 9/11, we still don't know by whom we were struck that infamous Tuesday, or for what true purpose. But it is fairly plain to many civil-libertarians that 9/11 applied not only to much of our fragile Bill Of Rights, but also to our once-envied system of government which had taken a mortal blow the previous year when the Supreme Court did a little dance in 5/4 time and replaced a popularly elected president with the oil and gas Cheney/Bush junta.

Meanwhile, our more and more unaccountable government is pursuing all sorts of games around the world that we-the-spear-carriers (formerly the people) will never learn of. Even so, we have been getting some answers to the question: why weren't we warned in advance of 9/11?

Apparently, we were, repeatedly; for the better part of a year, we were told there would be unfriendly visitors to our skies some time in September 2001, but the government neither informed nor protected us despite Mayday warnings from Presidents Putin and Mubarak, from Mossad, and even from elements of our own FBI. A joint panel of congressional intelligence committees reported (19 September 2002, New York Times) that, as early as 1996, Pakistani terrorist Abdul Hakim Murad confessed to federal agents that he was "learning to fly in order to crash a plane into CIA HQ".

Only CIA director George Tenet seemed to take the various threats seriously. In December 1998, he wrote to his deputies that "we are at war" with Osama bin Laden. So impressed was the FBI by his warnings that by 20 September 2001, "the FBI still had only one analyst assigned full time to al-Qaeda".

From a briefing prepared for Bush at the beginning of July 2001: "We believe that OBL [Osama bin Laden] will launch a significant terrorist attack against U.S. and/or Israeli interests in the coming weeks. The attack will be spectacular and designed to inflict mass casualties against U.S. facilities or interests. Attack preparations have been made. Attack will occur with little or no warning."

And so it came to pass; yet Condoleezza Rice, the National Security Advisor, says she never suspected that this meant anything more than the kidnapping of planes.

Happily, somewhere over the Beltway, there is Europe—recently declared anti-Semitic by the US media because most of Europe wants no war with Iraq and the junta does, for reasons we may now begin to understand thanks to European and Asian investigators with their relatively free media.

On the subject "How And Why America Was Attacked On 11 September, 2001", the best, most balanced report, thus far, is by Nafeez Mossadeq Ahmed [1]. Yes, yes, I know he is one of Them. But they often know things that we don't—particularly about what we are up to. A political scientist, Ahmed is executive director of the Institute for Policy Research and Development [2] "a think-tank dedicated to the promotion of human rights, justice, and peace" in Brighton. His book, The War On Freedom [3], has just been published in the US by a small but reputable publisher.

Ahmed provides a background for our ongoing war against Afghanistan, a view that in no way coincides with what the administration has told us. He has drawn on many sources, most tellingly on American whistleblowers who are beginning to come forth and bear witness—like those FBI agents who warned their supervisors that al-Qaeda was planning a kamikaze strike against New York and Washington, only to be told that if they went public with these warnings they would suffer under the National Security Act.

Several of these agents have engaged David P. Schippers [4], chief investigative counsel for the US House Judiciary Committee, to represent them in court. The majestic Schippers managed the successful impeachment of President Clinton in the House of Representatives. He may, if the Iraqi war should go wrong, be obliged to perform the same high service for Bush, who allowed the American people to go unwarned about an imminent attack upon two of our cities as pre-emption of a planned military strike by the US against the Taliban.

The Guardian for 26 September 2001 [5] reported that in July 2001 a group of interested parties met in a Berlin hotel to listen to a former State Department official, Lee Coldren, as he passed on a message from the Bush Administration that: "‘the United States was so disgusted with the Taliban that they might be considering some military action’.... The chilling quality of this private warning was that it came—according to one of those present, the Pakistani diplomat Niaz Naik—accompanied by specific details of how Bush would succeed." Four days earlier, the Guardian had reported that "Osama bin Laden and the Taliban received threats of possible American military action against them two months before the terrorist assaults on New York and Washington...[which] raises the possibility that bin Laden was launching a pre-emptive strike in response to what he saw as US threats." A replay of the "day of infamy" in the Pacific 62 years earlier?

Why The US Needed A Eurasian Adventure

On 9 September 2001, Bush was presented with a draft of a national security presidential directive outlining a global campaign of military, diplomatic, and intelligence action targeting al-Qaeda, buttressed by the threat of war.

According to NBC News: "President Bush was expected to sign detailed plans for a worldwide war against al-Qaeda...but did not have the chance before the terrorist attacks.... The directive, as described to NBC News, was essentially the same war plan as the one put into action after 11 September. The administration most likely was able to respond so quickly...because it simply had to pull the plans 'off the shelf'."

Finally, BBC News, 18 September 2001: "Niaz Naik, a former Pakistan foreign secretary, was told by senior American officials in mid-July that military action against Afghanistan would go ahead by the middle of October. It was Naik's view that Washington would not drop its war for Afghanistan even if bin Laden were to be surrendered immediately by the Taliban."

Was Afghanistan then turned to rubble in order to avenge the 3,000 Americans slaughtered by Osama? Hardly. The administration is convinced that Americans are so simple-minded that they can deal with no scenario more complex than the venerable lone, crazed killer (this time with zombie helpers) who does evil just for the fun of it 'cause he hates us, 'cause we're rich 'n free 'n he's not.

Osama was chosen on aesthetic grounds to be the most frightening logo for our long contemplated invasion and conquest of Afghanistan, planning for which had been “contingency” some years before 9/11 and, again, from 20 December 2000, when Clinton’s outgoing team devised a plan to strike at al-Qaeda in retaliation for the assault on the warship Cole. Clinton’s National Security Advisor, Sandy Berger, personally briefed his successor on the plan, but Rice, still very much in her role as director of Chevron-Texaco, with special duties regarding Pakistan and Uzbekistan, now denies any such briefing. A year and a half later (12 August 2002), fearless Time magazine reported this odd memory lapse.

Osama, if it was he and not a nation, simply provided the necessary shock to put in train a war of conquest. But conquest of what? What is there in dismal dry sandy Afghanistan worth conquering?

Zbigniew Brzezinski tells us exactly what in a 1997 Council on Foreign Relations study called The Grand Chessboard: American Primacy And Its Geostrategic Imperatives. [6]

The Polish-born Brzezinski was the hawkish National Security Advisor to President Carter. In The Grand Chessboard, Brzezinski gives a little history lesson:

“Ever since the continents started interacting politically, some 500 years ago, Eurasia has been the centre of world power.” Eurasia is all the territory east of Germany. This means Russia, the Middle East, China, and parts of India. Brzezinski acknowledges that Russia and China, bordering oil-rich central Asia, are the two main powers threatening US hegemony in that area.

He takes it for granted that the US must exert control over the former Soviet republics of Central Asia, known to those who love them as “the Stans”: Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan [also Afghanistan, Kazakhstan, and Pakistan; a total of seven nations constitute the “Stans”]. See the February 2002 National Geographic for an exceptional article on this area.] all “of importance from the standpoint of security and historical ambitions to at least three of their most immediate and most powerful neighbors—Russia, Turkey, and Iran, with China signaling”.

Brzezinski notes how the world’s energy consumption keeps increasing; hence, who controls Caspian oil/gas will control the world economy. Brzezinski then, reflexively, goes into the standard American rationalization for empire.

We want nothing, ever, for ourselves, only to keep bad people from getting good things with which to hurt good people. “It follows that America’s primary interest is to help ensure that no single [other] power comes to control the geopolitical space and that the global community has unhindered financial and economic access to it.”

Brzezinski is quite aware that American leaders are wonderfully ignorant of history and geography, so he really lays it on, stopping just short of invoking politically incorrect “manifest destiny”. He reminds the Council just how big Eurasia is. Seventy-five percent of the world’s population is Eurasian. If I have done the sums right, that means that we’ve only got control, to date, of a mere 25 percent of the world’s folks.

More! “Eurasia accounts for 60 percent of the world’s GNP and three-fourths of the world’s known energy resources.” Brzezinski’s master plan for “our” globe has obviously been accepted by the Cheney-Bush junta. Corporate America, long over-excited by Eurasian mineral wealth, has been aboard from the beginning.

Ahmed sums up: “Brzezinski clearly envisaged that the establishment, consolidation, and expansion of US military hegemony over Eurasia through Central Asia would require the unprecedented open-ended militarisation of foreign policy, coupled with an unprecedented manufacture of domestic support and consensus on this militarisation campaign.”

Afghanistan is the gateway to all these riches. Will we fight to seize them?

It should never be forgotten that the American people did not want to fight in either of the twentieth century’s world wars, but President Wilson maneuvered us into the First, while President Roosevelt maneuvered the Japanese into striking the first blow at Pearl Harbor, causing us to enter the Second, as the result of a massive external attack.

Brzezinski understands all this and, in 1997, he is thinking ahead—as well as backward. “Moreover, as America becomes an increasingly multicultural society, it may find it more difficult to fashion a consensus on foreign policy issues, except in the circumstance of a truly massive and widely perceived direct external threat.” Thus was the symbolic gun produced that belched black smoke over Manhattan and the Pentagon.

Since the Iran-Iraq wars, Islam has been demonized as a Satanic terrorist cult that encourages suicide attacks—contrary, it should be noted, to the Islamic religion. Osama has been portrayed, accurately, it would seem, as an Islamic zealot. In order to bring this evil-doer to justice (“dead or alive”), Afghanistan, the object of the exercise, was made safe not only for democracy—but for Union Oil of California whose proposed pipeline from Turkmenistan to Afghanistan to Pakistan and the Indian Ocean port of Karachi had been abandoned under the Taliban’s chaotic regime.

Currently, the pipeline is a go-project thanks to the junta’s installation of a Unocal employee (John J. Maresca) as US envoy to the newly born democracy [7] whose president, Hamid Karzai, is also, according to Le Monde, a former employee of a Unocal subsidiary. Conspiracy? Coincidence!

Once Afghanistan looked to be within the fold, the junta, which had managed to pull off a complex diplomatic-military caper—abruptly replaced Osama, the personification of evil, with Saddam.

This has been hard to explain since there is nothing to connect Iraq with the events of 9/11. Happily, “evidence” is now being invented. But it is uphill work, not helped by stories in the press about the vast oil wealth of Iraq which must—for the sake of the free world—be reassigned to US and European consortiums.

As Brzezinski foretold, “a truly massive and widely perceived direct external threat” made it possible for the President to dance a war dance before Congress. “A long war!” he shouted with glee. Then he named an incoherent Axis of Evil to be fought. Although Congress did not give him the FDR Special—a declaration of war—he did get permission to go after Osama, who may now be skulking in Iraq.

Bush And The Dog That Did Not Bark

Post-9/11, the American media were filled with pre-emptory denunciations of unpatriotic “conspiracy theorists”, who not only are always with us but are usually easy for the media to discredit since it is an article of faith that there are no conspiracies in American life.

Yet, a year or so ago, who would have thought that most of corporate America had been conspiring with accountants to cook their books since—well, at least the bright days of Reagan and deregulation? Ironically, less than a year after the massive danger from without, we were confronted with an even greater enemy from within: Golden Calf capitalism.

Transparency? One fears that greater transparency will only reveal armies of maggots at work beneath the skin of a culture that needs a bit of a lie-down in order to collect itself before taking its next giant step—which is to conquer Eurasia, a potentially fatal adventure not only for our frazzled institutions, but for us, the presently living.

Complicity. The behavior of President George W. Bush on 11 September certainly gives rise to all sorts of not unnatural suspicions. I can think of no other modern chief of state who would continue to pose for “warm” pictures of himself listening to a young girl telling stories about her pet goat while hijacked planes were into three buildings.

Constitutionally, Bush is not only chief of state, he is commander-in-chief of the armed forces. Normally, a commander in such a crisis would go straight to headquarters and direct operations while receiving the latest intelligence.

This is what Bush actually did—or did not do—according to Stan Goff, a retired US Army veteran who has taught military science and doctrine at West Point. Goff writes in “The So-called Evidence Is A Farce” [8]: “I have no idea why people aren’t asking some very specific questions about the actions of Bush and company on the day of the attacks. Four planes get hijacked and deviate from their flight plan, all the while on FAA radar.”

Goff, incidentally, like the other astonished military experts, cannot fathom why the government’s automatic “standard order of procedure in the event of a hijacking” was not followed. Once a plane has deviated from its flight plan, fighter planes are sent up to find out why. That is law and does not require presidential approval, which only needs to be given if there is a decision to shoot down a plane.

Goff spells it out: “The planes were hijacked between 7:45 and 8:10 a.m. Who is notified? This is an event already that is unprecedented. But the President is not notified and going to a Florida elementary school to hear children read.

“By around 8:15 a.m. it should be very apparent that something is terribly wrong. The President is glad-handling teachers. By 8:45 a.m., when American Airlines Flight 11 crashes into the North Tower, Bush is settling in with children for his photo op. Four planes have obviously been hijacked simultaneously and one has just dived into the twin towers, and still no one notifies the nominal Commander-in-Chief.

Al Bielek on CD-ROM

This is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date on one computer CD. The information comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. Use this information as the beginning resource to help you onto your own research track.

The five people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

[sent aloft] Air Force interceptors either. At 9:03, Flight 175 crashes into the South Tower. At 9:05, Andrew Card, the Chief of Staff, whispers to Bush [who] ‘briefly turns somber’ according to reporters. Does he cancel the school visit and convene an emergency meeting? No. He resumes listening to second-graders...and continues the banality even as American Airlines Flight 77 conducts an unscheduled point-turn over Ohio and heads in the direction of Washington DC.

“Has he instructed Card to scramble the Air Force? No. An excruciating 25 minutes later, he finally deigns to give a public statement telling the United States what they have already figured out—that there’s been an attack on the World Trade Center. There’s a hijacked plane bee-lining to Washington, but has the Air Force been scrambled to defend anything yet? No.

“At 9:35, this plane conducts another turn, 360 [degrees] over the Pentagon, all the while being tracked by radar, and the Pentagon is not evacuated, and there are still no fast-movers from the Air Force in the sky over Alexandria and DC. Now the real kicker: a pilot they want us to believe was trained at a Florida puddle-jumper school for Piper Cubs and Cessnas, conducts a well-controlled downward spiral descending the last 7,000 feet in two-and-a-half minutes, brings the plane in so low and flat that it clips the electrical wires across the street from the Pentagon, and flies it with pinpoint accuracy into the side of the building at 460 knots.

“When the theory about learning to fly this well at the puddle-jumper school began to lose ground, it was added that they received further training on a flight simulator. This is like saying you prepared your teenager for her first drive on the freeway at rush hour by buying her a video driving game.... There is a story being constructed about these events.”

There is indeed, and the more it is added to, the darker it becomes.

The nonchalance of General Richard B. Myers, acting Joint Chief of Staff, is as puzzling as the President’s campaigning-as-usual act. Myers was at the Capitol chatting with Senator Max Cleland [D-GA]. A sergeant, writing later in the AFPS (American Forces Press Service) describes Myers at the Capitol:

“While in an outer office, he said, he saw a television report that a plane had hit the World Trade Center. ‘They thought it was a small plane or something like that’ Myers said. So the two men went ahead with the office call.”

Whatever Myers and Cleland had to say to each other (more funds for the military?) must have been riveting because, during their chat, the AFPS reports:

“The second tower was hit by another jet. ‘Nobody informed us of that’ Myers said. ‘But when we came out, that was obvious. Then, right at that time, somebody said the Pentagon had been hit.’ ”

Finally, somebody “thrust a cellphone in Myers’ hand” and, as if by magic, the commanding general of Norad—our Airspace Command—was on the line just as the hijackers’ mission had been successfully completed, except for the failed one in Pennsylvania. In later testimony to the Senate Armed Forces Committee, Myers said he thinks that, as of his cellphone talk with Norad: “The decision was, at that point, to start launching aircraft.”

It was 9:40 a.m. One hour and 20 minutes after air controllers knew that Flight 11 had been hijacked; 50 minutes after the North Tower was struck.

This statement would have been quite enough in our old serious Army/Air Force to launch a number of courts martial with an impeachment or two thrown in. First, Myers claims to be uninformed until the third strike. But the Pentagon had been overseeing the hijacked planes from at least the moment of the strike at the first tower: yet not until the third strike, at the Pentagon, was the decision made to get the fighter planes up.

Finally—this one is the dog that did not bark:

[Editor’s note: Though our author, Gore Vidal, never actually explains his allusion about “the dog that did not bark”—it likely refers to a matter familiar to all of you Sherlock Holmes fans. In the story called “Silver Blaze” about a stolen race-horse by that name, Holmes tried to tell an arrogant and doubtful local police inspector that the key to the entire mystery was the fact that the watchdog at the stable did not bark during the night Silver Blaze was stolen. In other words, it had to have been an inside job!]

By law, the fighters should have been up at around 8:15. If they had, all the hijacked planes might have been diverted or shot down. I don’t think that Goff is being unduly picky when he wonders who and what kept the Air Force from following its normal procedure instead of waiting an hour and 20 minutes—until the damage was done—and only then launching the fighters.

Obviously, somebody had ordered the Air Force to make no move to intercept those hijackings until—what?

On 28 January 2002, the Canadian media analyst Barry Zwicker summed up on CBC-TV [9]:

“That morning no interceptors responded in a timely fashion to the highest alert situation. This includes the Andrews squadrons which...are 12 miles from the White House.... Whatever the explanation for the huge failure, there have been no reports, to my knowledge, of reprimands. This further weakens the ‘Incompetence Theory’. Incompetence usually earns reprimands. This causes me to ask whether there were ‘stand down’ orders.”

On 29 August 2002, the BBC reports that on 9/11 there were “only four fighters on ready status in the north-eastern US”. Conspiracy? Coincidence? Error?

It is interesting how often in our history, when disaster strikes, incompetence is considered a better alibi than—well, yes, there are worse things.

After Pearl Harbor, Congress moved to find out why Hawaii’s two military commanders, General Short and Admiral Kimmel, had not anticipated the Japanese attack. But President Roosevelt pre-empted that investigation with one of his own. Short and Kimmel were broken for incompetence. The “truth” is still obscured to this day.

The Media’s Weapons Of Mass Distraction

But Pearl Harbor has been much studied. 11 September, it is plain, is never going to be investigated if Bush has anything to say about it. On 29 January 2002, CNN reported [10] that “Bush personally asked Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle to limit the Congressional investigation into the events of 11 September.... The request was made at a private meeting with Congressional leaders.... Sources said Bush initiated the conversation.... He asked that only the House and Senate intelligence committees look into the potential breakdowns among federal agencies that could have allowed the terrorist attacks to occur, rather than a broader inquiry.... Tuesday’s discussion followed a rare call from Vice President Dick Cheney last Friday to make the same request.”

[Editor’s note: Remember that Daschle, along with NBC news anchor Tom Brokaw, had already been mailed an anthrax “valentine”—likely as a reminder to stick to the agreed-upon version of reality.]

The excuse given, according to Daschle, was that “resources and personnel would be taken” away from the war on terrorism in the event of a wider inquiry. So for reasons that we must never know, those “breakdowns” are to be the goat. That they were more likely to be not breakdowns—but “stand-downs” is not for us to pry. Certainly the one-hour and 20-minute failure to put fighter planes in the air could not have been due to a breakdown throughout the entire Air Force along the East Coast. Mandatory standard operational procedure had been told to cease and desist.

Meanwhile, the media were assigned their familiar task of inciting public opinion against bin Laden, still not the proven mastermind. These media blitzes often resemble the magician’s classic gesture of distraction: as you watch the rippling bright colors of his silk handkerchief in one hand, he is planting the rabbit in your pocket with the other.

We were quickly assured that Osama’s enormous family, with its enormous wealth, had broken with him, as had the royal family of his native Saudi Arabia. The CIA swore, hand on heart, that Osama had not worked for them in the war against the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. Finally, the rumor that the Bush family had in any way profited by its long involvement with the bin Laden family was—what else?—simply partisan bad taste.

But Bush Junior’s involvement goes back at least to 1979, when his first failed attempt to become a player in the big Texas oil league brought him together with one James Bath of

“A popular government without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy—or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance; and a people who mean to be their own governors, must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives.”

— James Madison (1751-1836)

Houston, a family friend, who have Bush Jr. $50,000 for a 5 percent stake in Bush's firm Arbusto Energy. At this time, according to Wayne Madsen (In These Times—Institute For Public Affairs No. 25 [11]), Bath was "the sole US business representative for Salem bin Laden, head of the family and a brother (one of 17) to Osama bin Laden.... In a statement issued shortly after the 11 September attacks, the White House vehemently denied the connection, insisting that Bath invested his own money, not Salem bin Laden's, in Arbusto. In conflicting statements, Bush at first denied ever knowing Bath, then acknowledged his stake in Arbusto and that he was aware Bath represented Saudi interests.... After several reincarnations, Arbusto emerged in 1986 as Harken Energy Corporation." [12]

Behind the Junior Bush is the Senior Bush, gainfully employed by the Carlyle Group [13] which has ownership in at least 164 companies worldwide, inspiring admiration in that staunch friend to the wealthy, the Wall Street Journal, which noted, as early as 27 September 2001: "If the US boosts defense spending in its quest to stop Osama bin Laden's alleged terrorist activities, there may be one unexpected beneficiary: bin Laden's family...is an investor in a fund established by Carlyle Group, a well-connected Washington merchant bank specializing in buyouts of defense and aerospace companies.... Osama is one of more than 50 children of Mohammed bin Laden, who built the family's $5 billion business."

But Bush, father and sons, in pursuit of wealth and office, are beyond shame or, one cannot help but think, good sense. There is a suggestion that they are blocking investigation of the bin Laden connection with terrorism.

Agent France Press reported on 4 November 2001 [14]: "FBI agents probing relatives of Saudi-born terror suspect Osama...were told to back off soon after George W. Bush became president."

According to BBC TV's Newsnight (6 November 2001) [15]: "Just days after the hijackers took off from Boston aiming for the Twin Towers, a special charter flight out of the same airport whisked 11 members of Osama's family off to Saudi Arabia. That did not concern the White House, whose official line is that the bin Ladens are above suspicion."

Above The Law (Green Press, 14 February 2002) [16] sums up: "We had what looked like the biggest failure of the intelligence community since Pearl Harbor, but what we are learning now is it wasn't a failure, it was a directive."

True? False? Bush Jr. will be under oath during the impeachment interrogation. Will we hear: "What is a directive? What is it?"

Although the US had, for some years, fingered Osama as a mastermind terrorist, no serious attempt had been made before 9/11 to "bring him to justice dead or alive, innocent or guilty"—as Texan law of the jungle requires. Clinton's plan to act was given to Condoleezza Rice by Sandy Berger, you will recall, but she says she does not.

As far back as March 1996, when Osama was in Sudan, Major General Elfatih Erwa, Sudanese Minister for Defense, offered to extradite him. According to the Washington Post (3 October 2001): "Erwa said he would happily keep close watch on bin Laden for the United States. But if that would not suffice, the government was prepared to place him in custody and hand him over.... [US officials] said: 'Just ask him to leave the country. Just don't let him go to Somalia' where he had once been given credit for the successful al-Qaeda attack on American forces in '93 that killed 18 Rangers."

Erwa said, in an interview: "We said he will go to Afghanistan, and they [US officials] said: 'Let him.'"

In 1996 Sudan expelled Osama and 3,000 of his associates. Two years later the Clinton Administration, in the great American tradition of never having to say thank you for Sudan's offer to hand over Osama, proceeded to missile-attack Sudan's al-Shifa pharmaceutical factory on the grounds that Sudan was harboring bin Laden terrorists who were making chemical and biological weapons when the factory was simply making vaccines for the UN.

Four years later, John O'Neill, a much admired FBI agent, complained in the Irish Times [17], a month before the attacks: "The US State Department—and behind it the oil lobby who make up President Bush's entourage—blocked attempts to prove bin Laden's guilt. The US ambassador to Yemen forbade O'Neill (and his FBI team)...from entering Yemen in August 2001. O'Neill resigned in frustration and took on a new job as head of security at the World Trade Center. He died in the 11 September attack."

Obviously, Osama has enjoyed bipartisan American support since his enlistment in the CIA's war to drive the Soviets out of Afghanistan. But by 9/11 there was no Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, indeed there was no Soviet Union.

A World Made Safe For Peace And Pipelines

I watched Bush and Cheney on CNN when the Axis of Evil speech was given and the "long war" proclaimed. Iraq, Iran, and North Korea were fingered as enemies to be clobbered because they might or might not be harboring terrorists who might or might not destroy us in the night. So we must strike first whenever it pleases us.

Thus, we declared "war on terrorism"—an abstract noun which cannot be a war at all as you need a country for that. Of course, there was innocent Afghanistan, which was leveled from a great height, but then what's collateral damage—like an entire country—when you're targeting the personification of all evil according to Time and the New York Times and the networks?

As it proved, the conquest of Afghanistan had nothing to do with Osama. He was simply a pretext for replacing the Taliban with a relatively stable government that would allow Union Oil of California to lay its pipeline for the profit of, among others, the Cheney-Bush junta.

Background? All right.

The headquarters of Unocal are, as might be expected, in Texas. In December 1997, Taliban representatives were invited to Sugarland, Texas. [18]

The Untold History Of America by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original Native inhabitants of America. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

At that time, Unocal had already begun training Afghan men in pipeline construction, with US government approval. BBC News (4 December 1997) [19] said: "A spokesman for the company Unocal said the Taliban were expected to spend several days at the company's [Texas] headquarters.... A BBC regional correspondent says the proposal to build a pipeline across Afghanistan is part of an international scramble to profit from developing the rich energy resources of the Caspian Sea."

The Inter Press Service (IPS) reported [20]: "Some Western businesses are warming up to the Taliban despite the movement's institutionalisation of terror, massacres, abductions, and impoverishment."

CNN (6 October 1996): "The United States wants good ties [with the Taliban] but can't openly seek them while women are being oppressed."

The Taliban, rather better organised than rumored, hired for PR one Leila Helms, a niece of Richard Helms, former director of the CIA. In October 1996, the Frankfurter Rundschau reported that Unocal "has been given the go-ahead from the new holders of power in Kabul to build a pipeline from Turkmenistan via Afghanistan to Pakistan." This was a real coup for Unocal, as well as other candidates for pipelines, including Condoleezza's old employer Chevron.

Although the Taliban was already notorious for its imaginative crimes against the human race, the Wall Street Journal, scenting big bucks, fearlessly announced: "Like them or not, the Taliban are the players most capable of achieving peace in Afghanistan at this moment in history."

The New York Times (26 May 1997) leapt aboard the pipeline juggernaut: "The Clinton Administration has taken the view that a Taliban victory would act as counterweight to Iran...and would offer the possibility of new trade routes that could weaken Russian and Iranian influence in the region."

But by 1999, it was clear that the Taliban could not provide the security we would need to protect our fragile pipelines. The arrival of Osama as warrior for Allah on the scene refocused, as it were, the bidding. New alliances were now being made. The Bush administration soon buys the idea of an invasion of Afghanistan, Frederick Starr, head of the Central Asia Institute at Johns Hopkins University, wrote in the Washington Post (19 December 2000) [21]: "The US has quietly begun to align itself with those in the Russian government calling for military action against Afghanistan and has toyed with the idea of a new raid to wipe out Osama bin Laden."

Although with much fanfare we went forth to wreak our vengeance on the crazed sadistic religious zealot who slaughtered 3,000 American citizens, once that "war" was underway, Osama was dropped as irrelevant [22] and so we are back to the Unocal pipeline, now a go-project.

In the light of what we know today, it is unlikely that the junta was ever going to capture Osama alive: He has tales to tell.

One of Defence Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's best numbers now is: "Where is he? Somewhere? Here? There? Somewhere? Who knows?" And we get his best twinkle.

He must also be delighted—and amazed—that the media have bought the absurd story that Osama, if alive, would still be in Afghanistan, underground, waiting to be flushed out instead of in a comfortable mansion in Osama-loving Jakarta, 2,000 miles to the East and easily accessible by Flying Carpet One.

Many commentators of a certain age have noted how Hitlerian our junta sounds as it threatens first one country for harboring terrorists and then another. It is true that Hitler liked to pretend to be the injured—or threatened—party before he struck. But he had many great predecessors, not least Imperial Rome.

Stephen Gowan's War In Afghanistan: A $28 Billion Racket quotes Joseph Schumpeter who, "in 1919, described ancient Rome in a way that sounds eerily like the United States in 2001: 'There was no corner of the known world where some interest was not alleged to be in danger or under actual attack. If the interests were not Roman, they were those of Rome's allies; and if Rome had no allies, the allies would be invented.... The fight was always invested with an aura of legality. Rome was always being attacked by evil-minded neighbors.'"

We have only outdone the Romans in turning metaphors such as the war on terrorism, or poverty, or Aids into actual wars on targets we appear, often, to pick at random in order to maintain turbulence in foreign lands.

As of 1 August 2002, trial balloons were going up all over Washington DC to get world opinion used to the idea that "Bush of Afghanistan" had gained a title as mighty as his father's "Bush of the Persian Gulf" and Junior was now eager to add Iraq-Babylon to his diadem. These various balloons fell upon Europe and the Arab world like so many lead weights. But something new has been added since the classic Roman Hitlerian mantra: "They are threatening us; we must attack first." Now everything is more or less out in the open.

The International Herald Tribune wrote in August 2002: "The leaks began in earnest on 5 July, when the New York Times described a tentative Pentagon plan that it said called for an invasion by a US force of up to 250,000 that would attack Iraq from the north, south, and west."

On 10 July, the Times said that Jordan might be used as a base for the invasion. The Washington Post reported, 28 July, that "many senior US military officers contend that Saddam Hussein poses no immediate threat." And the status quo should be maintained.

Incidentally, this is the sort of debate that the Founding Fathers intended the

TRANCE Formation Of America

This is the documented autobiography of a victim of government mind-control. Cathy O'Brien is the only vocal and recovered survivor of the CIA's MK-Ultra Project Monarch mind-control operation. Chiseled deep into the white stone of the CIA's Langley, Virginia headquarters is a partial verse lifted from the Holy Bible and writings of Saint John: "...and the truth shall make you free." This statement, like the agency, is total unreality. The building that it is engraved upon houses the world's most successful manufacturer of lies to facilitate psychological warfare. The "Company" uses truth and technology as their raw materials to produce "pure" lies for control of you and America's allies. Within the pages of TRANCE Formation Of America you'll find the truth.

U.S. GOVERNMENT MIND-CONTROL

On August 3, 1977 the 95th U.S. Congress opened hearings into the reported abuses concerning the CIA's

TOP SECRET mind-control research program code-named MK-Ultra. On February 8, 1988, an MK-Ultra victim, Cathy O'Brien, was covertly rescued from her mind-control enslavement by Intelligence insider Mark Phillips. Their seven-year pursuit of Justice was stopped FOR REASONS OF NATIONAL SECURITY. TRANCE Formation Of America exposes the truth behind this criminal abuse of the unconstitutional 1947 National Security Act.

Congress, not military bureaucrats, to conduct in the name of we-the-people. But that sort of debate has, for a long time, been denied us.

One refreshing note is now being struck in a fashion unthinkable in imperial Rome: the cheerful admission that we habitually resort to provocation. The Tribune continues: "Donald Rumsfeld has threatened to jail anyone found to have been behind the leaks. But a retired army general, Fred Woerner, tends to see a method behind the leaks: 'We may already be executing a plan' he said recently. 'Are we involved in a preliminary psychological dimension of causing Iraq to do something to justify a US attack or make concessions? Somebody knows.'" That is plain.

Elsewhere in this interesting edition of the Herald Tribune wise William Pfaff writes [23]: "A second Washington debate is whether to make an unprovoked attack on Iran to destroy a nuclear power reactor being built with Russian assistance, under inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency, within the terms of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty of which Iran is a signatory.... No other government would support such an action, other than Israel's (which) would do so not because it expected to be attacked by Iran but because it, not unjustifiably, opposes any nuclear capacity in the hands of any Islamic government."

Suspect States And The Tom-Toms Of Revenge

"Of all the enemies to public liberty, war is, perhaps, the most to be dreaded because it compromises and develops the germ of every other. As the parent of armies, war encourages debts and taxes, the known instruments for bringing the many under the domination of the few. In war, too, the discretionary power of the executive is extended...and all the means of seducing the minds, are added to those of subduing the force, of the people...." Thus, James Madison warned us [24] at the dawn of our republic.

Post 9/11, thanks to the "domination of the few", Congress and the media are silent while the executive, through propaganda and skewed polls, seduces the public mind as hitherto unthinkable centers of power like Homeland Defense (a new Cabinet post to be placed on top of the Defense Department) are being constructed and 4 percent of the country has recently been invited to join TIPS, a civilian spy system to report on anyone who looks suspicious. Or—who objects to what the executive is doing at home

Although every nation knows how—if it has the means and the will—to protect itself from thugs of the sort that brought us 9/11, war is not an option. Wars are for nations, not rootless gangs. You put a price on their heads and hunt them down. In recent years, Italy has been doing that with the Sicilian Mafia; and no one has yet suggested bombing Palermo.

But the Cheney-Bush junta wants a war in order to dominate Afghanistan, build a pipeline, gain control of the oil of Eurasia's Stans for their business associates, as well as to do as much damage to Iraq and Iran on the grounds that one day those evil countries may carpet our fields of amber grain with anthrax or something.

The media, never much good at analysis, are more and more breathless and incoherent. On CNN, even the stolid Jim Clancy started to hyperventilate when an Indian academic tried to explain how Iraq was once our ally and "friend" in its war against our Satanic enemy Iran. [25] "None of that conspiracy stuff" snuffed Clancy. Apparently, "conspiracy stuff" is now shorthand for unspeakable truth.

As of August, at least among economists, a consensus was growing that, considering our vast national debt (we borrow $2 billion a day to keep the government going) and a tax base seriously reduced by the junta in order to benefit the 1 percent who own most of the national wealth, there is no way that we could ever find the billions needed to destroy Iraq in "a long war" or even a short one, with most of Europe lined up against us. Germany and Japan paid for the Gulf War, reluctantly—with Japan, at the last moment, irritably quarrelling over the exchange rate at the time of the contract. Now Germany's Schroder has said no. Japan is mute.

But the tom-toms keep beating revenge; and the fact that most of the world is opposed to our war seems only to bring hectic roses to the cheeks of the Bush Administration (Bush Senior of the Carlyle Group [13], Bush Junior formerly of Harken [12], Cheney formerly of Halliburton [26], Rice formerly of Chevron [27], Rumsfeld formerly of Occidental). If ever an Administration should recuse itself in matters dealing with energy, it is the current junta. But this is unlike any Administration in our history. Their hearts are plainly elsewhere—making money, far from our mock Roman temples—while we, alas, are left only with their heads, dreaming of war, preferably against weak peripheral states.

Mohammed Heikal is a brilliant Egyptian journalist-observer, and sometime Foreign Minister. On 10 October 2001, he said to the Guardian [28]: "Bin Laden does not have the capabilities for an operation of this magnitude. When I hear Bush talking about al-Qaeda as if it were Nazi Germany or the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, I laugh because I know what is there. Bin Laden has been under surveillance for years: every telephone call was monitored and al-Qaeda has been penetrated by US intelligence, Pakistani intelligence, Saudi intelligence, Egyptian intelligence. They could not have kept secret an operation that required such a degree of organization and sophistication."

The former president of Germany's domestic intelligence service, Eckehardt Werthebach (American Free Press, 4 December 2001 [29]) spells it out:

The 9/11 attacks required "years of planning" while their scale indicates that they were a product of "state-organized actions". There it is. Perhaps, after all, Bush Junior was right to call it a war.

But which state attacked us?

Will the suspects please line up.

Saudi Arabia? "No, no. Why, we are paying you $50 million a year for training the royal bodyguard on our own holy, if arid, soil. True, the kingdom contains many wealthy well-educated enemies, but...." Bush Senior and Junior exchange a knowing look.

Egypt? No way. Dead broke despite US baksheesh.

Syria? No funds.

Iran? Too proud to bother with a "parvenu" state like the US.

Israel? Sharon is capable of anything. But he lacks the guts and the grace of the true Kamikaze. Anyway, Sharon was not in charge when this operation began with the planting of "sleepers" around the US flight schools 5 or 6 years ago.

[Editor's note: Our author here suspiciously avoids a lot of obvious information concerning Israel's likely role in 9/11 that is more honestly revealed in another well-documented research paper elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.]

The United States? Elements of corporate America would undeniably prosper from a "massive external attack" that would make it possible for us to go to war whenever the President sees fit while suspending civil liberties. (The 342 pages of the USA Patriot Act [30] were plainly prepared before 9/11.)

Bush Senior and Junior are giggling now. Why? Because Clinton was president back then. As the former president leaves the line of suspects, he says, more in anger than in sorrow: "When we left the White House we had a plan for an all-out war on al-Qaeda. We turned it over to this Administration and they did nothing. Why?"

Biting his lip, he goes. The Bushs no longer giggle.

Pakistan breaks down: "I did it! I confess! I couldn't help myself. Save me. I am an evil-doer!"

Apparently, Pakistan did do it—or some of it. We must now go back to 1979 when "the largest covert operation in the history of the CIA" was launched in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Central Asia specialist Ahmed Rashid wrote (Foreign Affairs, November-December 1999 [31]): "With the active encouragement of the CIA and Pakistan's ISI (Inter Services Intelligence) who wanted to turn the Afghan jihad into a global war, waged by all Muslim states against the Soviet Union, some 35,000 Muslim radicals, from 40 Islamic countries, joined Afghanistan's fight between 1982 and '92.... More than 100,000 foreign Muslim radicals were directly influenced by the Afghanistan jihad." The CIA covertly trained and sponsored these warriors.

In March 1985, President Reagan issued National Security Decision Directive 166, increasing military aid while CIA specialists met with the ISI counterparts near Rawalpindi, Pakistan. Jane's Defence Weekly (14 September 2001) [32] gives the best overview: "The trainers were mainly from Pakistan's ISI agency who learnt their craft from American Green Beret commandos and Navy Seals in various US training establishments."

This explains the reluctance of the Administration to explain why so many unqualified persons, over so long a time, got visas to visit our hospitable shores. While in Pakistan, "mass training of Afghan [zealots] was subsequently conducted by the Pakistan army under the supervision of the elite Special Services.... In 1988, with US knowledge, bin Laden created al-Qaeda (The Base), a conglomerate of quasi-independent Islamic terrorist cells spread across 26 or so countries. Washington turned a blind eye to al-Qaeda."

When Mohamed Atta's plane struck the World Trade Center's North Tower, George W. Bush and the child at the Florida elementary school were discussing her goat. By coincidence, our word "tragedy" comes from the Greek: for "goat" tragos plus oide for "song". "Goat-song". It is highly suitable that this lament, sung in ancient satyr plays, should have been heard again at the exact moment when we were struck by fire from heaven, and a tragedy whose end is nowhere in sight began for us.

Stranger Than Fiction: Documented Probe Of 9/11 & The “War On Terrorism”

Editor's note: Back in the June 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM, the longtime grandmaster of truthbringing, Eustace Mullins, shared with us a deeply disturbing and oh-so-revealing major research article titled America's Peril: The Israeli “Fifth Column” In The United States.

At that time Eustace explained the situation this way: “Although infiltrators have been known in military campaigns for thousands of years, such as the Trojan Horse, the term ‘fifth column’ originated during Spain’s Civil War, when Lt. Gen. de Llano noted a secret group of Franco sympathizers in Madrid who made it possible for Gen. Franco to overthrow the Communist government of Spain.

“As Charley Reese pointed out, the Zionist ‘fifth column’ now runs Washington, unopposed by any political or military force.”

That alarming fact ought to give all of us something to think about—especially when monitoring print and broadcast media “news” reports pretending to be unbiased about who’s who and what’s what in unfolding world events. Moreover, this stealthy kind of cancer is, of course, exactly what our Founding Fathers warned about so long ago—the quiet takeover of the nation FROM WITHIN.

The central role played by the Israeli “fifth column” in the events surrounding 9/11—which launched (and continues to feed) the so-called “War on Terrorism” and the seemingly imminent invasion of Iraq—is a subject which has been largely neglected in these pages beyond its relatively brief mention as a critical component in the Larger Picture, way back in our October 2001 special issue on the 9/11 events.

The following research article fills in incredibly well-documented details about that important Israeli control “layer” which, in a number of practical ways, holds the entire “cake” together. This article was originally posted at the great www.whatreallyhappened.com Internet website on 9/1/02.

On Friday November 15, 2002—a day after the frightening Homeland Security Act had passed in the House by a significant 2/3 vote and was about to pass (on 11/19/02) in the Senate by an overwhelming 90-to-9 vote (despite massive opposition from we-the-people, who our elected representatives are SUPPOSED to be representing)—Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle pushed through, by voice vote, a special 9/11 Investigation Commission Bill that the House had just that morning passed by a 366-to-3 vote.

Remember that it was Daschle and NBC newsanchor Tom Brokaw who had each received a deadly anthrax “valentine” back in the fall of 2001—when “someone” wanted to make sure a certain message got through to certain people who may not have been following the “party line” as religiously as was desired.

Diligent readers will be quick to point out that our front-page January 2002 story, from longtime SPECTRUM friend and courageous truthbringer Dr. Len Horowitz, filled-in yet another, intimately connected round of shenanigans having to do with the anthrax scam. That story was titled The CIA's Role In The Anthrax Mailings: Could Our Spies Be Agents For Military-Industrial Sabotage, Terrorism, And Even Population Control? And Len’s heavily interlinked “spider web” of findings should most definitely be kept in mind as the research below is unfolded in splendid, well-documented detail.

It will most certainly play out as a behind-the-scenes tug-of-war to see if ANY actual Truth manages to emerge from this newly minted 9/11 investigation commission. (All we need is another insulting and expensive fable like the Warren Commission Report about the assassination of JFK.) Wouldn’t it be great if the following was among the disclosures that made it through to further awaken a public growing more suspicious by the day?!

9/1/02 DR. ALBERT D. PASTORE

“All truth passes through three stages. First, it is ridiculed; second, it is violently opposed; and third, it is accepted as self-evident.”

— Arthur Schopenhauer, Philosopher, 1788-1860.

Opening Statement

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the ancient Greek philosopher Socrates taught his students that the pursuit of truth can only begin once they start to question and analyze every belief that they ever held dear. If a certain belief passes the tests of evidence, deduction, and logic, it should be kept. If it doesn’t, the belief should not only be discarded, but the thinker must also then question why he was led to believe the erroneous information in the first place.

Not surprisingly, this type of teaching didn’t sit well with the ruling elite of Greece. Many political leaders throughout history have always sought to mislead the thinking of the masses.

Socrates was tried for “subversion” and for “corrupting the youth”. He was then forced to take his own life by drinking poison. It’s never easy being an independent thinker!

Today, our ruling government/media complex doesn't kill people for pursuing the truth about the world (at least not yet). They simply label them as "extremists" or "paranoid", destroying careers and reputations in the process. For many, that's a fate even worse than drinking poison hemlock!

Every news story you are about to review in this comprehensive research paper is true and easily verifiable. This investigation represents 10 months of careful study, research, analysis, source verification, and logical deduction. Every event and quote presented here is 100% accurate. There are over 190 detailed footnotes which I encourage—no, urge—readers to explore and verify for themselves.

The Internet version of this research paper will allow users to obtain instant verification for each and every footnote by clicking on the footnotes/links. Others can obtain easy verification by entering the key search words (provided at the end of the paper) into the Yahoo or Google.com search engines.

Due to the fact that well organized efforts are under way to suppress these facts, some of these news links are mysteriously disappearing, even as we speak. Fortunately, this information has all been transcribed by many web users and has therefore been preserved from the censors.

These footnote searches will take you directly to the news sites of many well-known established media organizations throughout the world, as well as opening up doors to a world of knowledge and information that has been concealed from you. With just a little common sense and a few clicks of a mouse, Google and Yahoo now enable anyone with an ounce of curiosity to become a Sherlock Holmes.

This is no opinion piece. Rather it is a collection of buried, but undeniable facts, events, and quotes which, when assembled in one place, will state their own conclusions. In putting together this research in a logical and sequential format, great care was taken to confirm and double confirm every piece of information. Any and all questionable data which could not be independently verified to this author's satisfaction was discarded.

Taken individually, each story, quote, and event may not amount to a full case. But when taken collectively, this mountain of facts should hammer home the truth to even the most skeptical reader. There are, of course, those who have fallen under the hypnotic spell of the TV talking-heads and "experts" whom they worship as authority figures. Unaccustomed to thinking for themselves, no amount of truth can sway them from their preconceived prejudices. They will even deny that which they see with their own eyes.

They are victims of a psychological affliction known as "the lemming effect". Lemmings are small rodents who have been known to follow each other as they charge to their deaths into raging rivers or off of cliffs. Lemminghood is an innate psychological phenomenon, present in most mammals and observable in common people as well the most sophisticated and educated elites. Lemminghood is not an intellectual phenomenon; it is psychological. As such, no socio-economic class is immune from its strangulating effect.

A grant-seeking university scientist can be a lemming just as much as a fashion-obsessed teenage girl. One blindly follows the latest trendy theory while the other blindly follows the latest

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the "London Connection". The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and

A Writ For Martyrs by Eustace Mullins

This is a fully documented exposé of the atrocities which federal agents regularly commit against American citizens.

This book reproduces 121 pages from Eustace Mullins' FBI file, which he obtained only by the personal intervention of a college classmate, Senator John Warner, Rep. Of Virginia. The FBI refused for two years to send Eustace his files through Freedom of Information Act inquiries. When Eustace found it, he discovered a plot by the FBI, with 60 pages of memos, in which J. Edgar Hoover personally ordered that Eustace be committed to a mental institution for life.

On the basis of these revelations, Eustace obtained two "Default Judgments" against the FBI in Federal Court. One judgment was for $50 million, and one for $35 million, which remain on the books today.

This book also documents atrocities committed against Eustace's handicapped sister, his ailing mother, and his invalid father, who all died of heart attacks after daily harassments by the FBI terrorists.

Mullins was one of the principal victims of the notorious FBI counter-intelligence program called COINTEL, set up by Alex Rosen, one of five FBI assistant directors. The COINTEL program was actually organized by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and the Mossad intelligence agency.

This book will give you an idea of what Eustace has had to put up with in his life as a crusader for Truth.

trendy clothing style. What's the difference? Neither can resist the force of Nature.

The power to fit in with one's social peers can be irresistible. To a human lemming, the logic behind an opinion doesn't count as much as the power and popularity behind an opinion. Man, like lemming, behaves collectively. And it could be no other way. Naturally, the individual must be equipped with this trait. Otherwise, the smallest steps toward civilization could never have been made.

Lemminghood is a survival trait, an inborn instinct in the majority of people. However, as with all natural phenomena, this tendency can be manipulated and used for harmful purposes.

It is this lemming effect which enables entire segments of a society to lose their sense of judgment, all at the same time. This research paper will likely be wasted on many lemmings.

For lemmings, denial is a basic psychological defense mechanism used to not only shield themselves from unpleasant realities, but also to reassure themselves that they will still fit within the acceptable range of opinion held by their peer group. Lemmings are absolutely terrified at the thought of being labeled as an "extremist" or a "conspiracy theorist". At all costs, their beliefs must always be on the "right" side of the issue and conform within the boundaries of their lemming peers.

Lemmings simply cannot bear the burden of responsibility, or the discomfort, which comes with thinking independently. They'll resist any efforts to change their misguided beliefs with all their mental energy. We can try to open their closed minds and free them from their self-imposed blindness, but it's not easy fighting the force of human nature. The chains of ideological conformity have too strong of a grip, and breaking them is a difficult task.

With the limited resources at our disposal, it is next to impossible to compete with the media lemming-masters. Nevertheless, some of us must make the meager attempt, and thus lay the foundation upon which the truth might one day rise again.

There are those among us who do have the courage and intellectual capacity to break free of the shackles of lemminghood and accept the truth when it is presented in a clear and logical sequence. To those open-minded and independent thinkers, I wish to state clearly and unequivocally:

I intend to set forth in this paper an overwhelming body of evidence which should forever destroy the notion that a

Saudi Arabian caveman and his band of half-trained, nerdy Arab flight-school attendees orchestrated the most sophisticated terror operation in world history. The idea is utterly laughable. And yet, due to the blithering barrage of bullshit dished out by the government-media complex, "patriotic" Americans have accepted this ridiculous fairy tale with a religious conviction.

As a public service to my fellow Americans, I have published the results of my research in the hopes of liberating as many people as I can from the oppressive yoke of media brainwashing and state-sponsored lies.

Do you have what it takes to break free? If so, read on!

The Dancing Israelis

Like most Americans, I was gripped by senses of profound shock, horror, revulsion, sadness, and rage as I watched the horror of September 11, 2001 unfolding live on my television screen.

Watching the mass murder of thousands of innocent people, live, on television, was the most upsetting experience of my life. How could any person of sound moral character not be enraged at witnessing this horrific act of barbarism?

To read about some far-away long-ago genocide in a newspaper or a book is distressing enough. But to actually witness the mass murders of what was, at first, believed to have been tens of thousands of innocent people, is truly heart stopping and traumatic. I barely slept for two nights afterward and suffered nightmares. Polling data would later reveal that 65% of Americans actually shed tears on 9/11. [1]

But not all of the eyewitnesses to the 9/11 slaughter were so saddened.

On September 11, five Israeli army veterans were arrested by the FBI after several witnesses saw them "dancing", "high-fiving", and "celebrating" as they took pictures of the World Trade Center disaster from across the river in New Jersey. Steven Gordon was the lawyer who volunteered to represent the five Israelis. He was asked by a Hebrew newspaper why the five men were being detained by the FBI. Here's what Gordon told Yediot America:

"On the day of the disaster, three of the five boys went up on the roof of the building where the company office is located" said Gordon. "I'm not sure if they saw the twin towers collapse, but, in any event, they photographed the ruins right afterwards. One of the neighbors who saw them called the police and claimed they were posing, dancing, and laughing, against the background of the burning towers....

"Anyhow, the three left the roof, took an Urban truck, and drove to a parking lot, located about a five-minute drive from the offices. They parked, stood on the roof of the truck to get a better view of the destroyed towers, and took photographs. A woman who was in the building above the lot testified that she saw them smiling and exchanging high-fives. She and another neighbor called the police and reported on Middle-Eastern looking people dancing on the truck. They copied and reported the license plates." [2]

When the photos were developed, they revealed that the dancing Israelis were smiling in the foreground of the New York massacre. [3]

According to ABC's 20/20 attempted whitewash of the incident, in addition to their outrageous and highly suspicious behavior, the five also had in their possession the following items: box-cutters, European passports, and $4700 cash hidden in a sock. [4]

Why were these Israeli agents so happy about the horrible massacre that was unfolding right before their very eyes? What evil spirit could possess people who are supposed to be America's "allies", and who receive billions of dollars in financial and military aid from U.S. taxpayers each year, to publicly rejoice as innocent people (including many American Jews) were burning to death and jumping out of 110-story buildings?

Could it be that these happy Israeli army veterans were in some way linked to this monstrous attack? That's what officials close to the investigation initially told the Bergen Record newspaper of New Jersey. [5]

As incredible, as ridiculous, and as "paranoid" as that belief may appear to you at this point, the fact is that certain elements within the Israeli government, and Zionist movement in general, have a long history of attacking the U.S.A. and framing Arabs—in order to gain support from the U.S.

Before we begin to piece together what really transpired on 9/11, it is absolutely critical that we first review some historical precedents regarding Israel's and International Zionism's treacherous history of manipulating America (and other nations) for their own selfish purposes. Without a basic understanding of this history, it would be impossible to understand the truth as it is today. So put aside your preconceived notions, your psychological defense mechanisms, and your prejudices, and step into my time machine for a journey down the memory lane.

In the latter part of the 1800s, there arose in Europe a political movement known as "Zionism". Zionism in particular referred to the effort among certain Jews to establish a Jewish nation in the land of Palestine. Today, the term Zionism is more commonly applied to those Jews who want to expand the borders of what was already established, at the expense of the Palestinians who once owned the land.

In a more general sense, the term "Zionist" is also used to describe a certain element within the Jewish community (not all of them) who believe in Jewish Supremacy, thus putting their own interests ahead of those of the nation in which they reside.

It is a mistake to assume that all Jews are supporters of the "Zionist Mafia" or Jewish Supremacy. In fact, some of the strongest condemnations of Zionism and Jewish Supremacy come from Jews themselves. There exists an enormous collection of hard-hitting anti-Zionist writings compiled by such notable Jewish authors, historians, and journalists as John Sack [6], Alfred Lilienthal [7], Noam Chomsky [8], Israel Shahak [9], Benjamin Freedman [10], and Victor Ostrovsky [11]—just to name a few.

There is even a Jewish religious group called "Neturei Karta: Jews United Against Zionism" [12]. For their brave efforts, these men have had to tolerate vicious abuse from Zionist smear groups like the Anti-Defamation League (ADL)—an organization which actually specializes in defamation!

So let us put to rest now and forever the slanderous lie—and strategic Zionist propaganda ploy—that labels anyone who dares to call attention to the dangers of the Zionist Mafia as an "anti-Semite", a "hate-monger", or a "skin-head".

Now, the Zionists of the late 1800s faced one small problem with their bold takeover scheme of Arab Palestine: Palestine was under the sovereignty of the Ottoman Turkish Empire and the Arabs certainly weren't about to just give away prime real estate in Palestine to the Zionists of Europe.

There were very few Jews even living in Palestine and the Jews had not controlled Palestine since the days of the Roman Empire. This destroys the commonly believed myth that the Arabs and the Jews "have been fighting over that land for centuries".

The handful of Arab Jews who lived in Palestine got along well with their Muslim hosts and never expressed any desire whatsoever to overthrow the Ottoman rulers and set up a nation called Israel. The movement to strip Palestine away from the

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

Ottoman Empire came strictly from European Zionists who had become very influential within several European nations.

As fate (or perhaps design) would have it, a great opportunity would soon present itself to the Zionist Mafia. There came in 1914 "The Great War" pitting the three powers of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and the Ottoman Turkish Empire against the three powers of England, France, and Russia.

In the interests of staying on the subject of 9/11 and today's "War on Terrorism", we won't get into all of the underlying causes or the historical flow of World War I. What we need to understand is that the Zionists played an important role in dragging the U.S.A. into that bloody European war—a war in which the U.S. had no vital interests at stake whatsoever.

Here was the situation: By 1916, the Germans, Austrians, and Ottoman Turks had seemingly won the war. Russia was in turmoil and about to be swallowed up by communist revolution. France had suffered horrible losses, and Britain was under a German U-boat blockade. Germany made an offer to Britain to end the war under conditions favorable to Britain. But the British—and the international Zionists—had one more card to play!

The British government and the Zionist leaders struck a dirty deal. The Zionists were led by Chaim Weizmann, the man who would one day become the first President of the State of Israel. The idea was for the Zionists to use their influence to drag the mighty U.S.A. into the war, on Britain's side, so that Germany and its Ottoman allies could be crushed.

In exchange for helping to bring the U.S.A. into the war, the British would reward the Zionists by taking over Palestine from the conquered Ottomans after the war was over. The British had originally wanted to give the Zionists a Jewish homeland in an African territory. But the Zionists were fixated on claiming Palestine as their land. Once under British control, the Jews of Europe would be allowed to immigrate to Palestine in great numbers.

Zionist powerbrokers such as Bernard Baruch, Louis Brandeis, Paul Warburg, Jacob Schiff, and many others immediately went to work to put the screws to President Woodrow Wilson. The Zionist-influenced press quickly transformed the German Kaiser and his people into bloodthirsty "Huns" determined to destroy civilization.

In 1916 the U.S., with the help of the Lusitania "incident", entered the war on Britain's side—under the ridiculous pretext of "making the world safe for democracy" [sound familiar?].

Meanwhile, in Germany—where Zionists also wielded tremendous influence in the press and industry—enthusiasm for the war was suddenly watered down by Zionist-run newspapers. Wartime labor-strikes in German weapons factories were organized by Zionist and Marxist union leaders. With the German branch of the International Zionist Mafia undermining Germany from within, and the English and American branches of the Zionist Mafia pushing America to join the war, it wasn't long before the German, Austrian, and Ottoman Empires were defeated and their maps rewritten by the victorious powers in the infamous Treaty of Versailles in 1918. In addition to the numerous Zionist bankers who were influencing Versailles, the Zionists also had their own delegation, which was headed by Chaim Weizmann.

Great Britain issued the Balfour Declaration in November 1917, the same month that Germany surrendered. But it had actually been prepared 20 months earlier, in March 1916, with Weizmann's influence. [13]

The Declaration allowed mass Jewish immigration to conquered Palestine while promising to preserve Arab rights. The Arabs living in Palestine weren't buying these promises. They protested, but there was nothing they could do to stop the coming wave of Jewish immigration. This was the first step in creating what was to later become the State of Israel, 30 years later.

Years after the war, an American Zionist millionaire, named Benjamin Freedman, broke ranks with his fellow Zionists and turned against them. Freedman was the principal owner of the Woodbury Soap Company and was one of the many Zionists present at the Treaty of Versailles. Freedman was very well connected and had enjoyed access to several U.S. Presidents. Freedman grew disgusted with the criminal behavior of the Zionist Mafia and dedicated much of his life and fortune to exposing the truth about both World Wars and the Zionist grip on America.

According to Freedman, Wilson had been blackmailed by Zionists with the threat of a public disclosure of an old extramarital affair Wilson had when he was president of Princeton University. [14]

Freedman's voluminous (and buried) writings and books on this subject are essential reading. One leader of the Jewish Anti-Defamation League—Arnold Forster—once described Freedman as a “self-hating Jew”. [15]

We may debate as to exactly what extent this Zionist-British dirty deal was responsible for dragging the sons of America off to die in a European bloodbath. Some, such as Freedman, believe it was the only reason that the U.S. entered the war. Others, such as this writer, believe it was a primary contributing factor.

But let us, at this point, agree on this one irrefutable point: the Zionists had no aversion to seeing Americans die for their own selfish interests. Even the Encyclopedia Britannica and Microsoft Encarta Encyclopedia (look under “Balfour Declaration”) confirm this little-known fact of World War I. Here's the excerpt from Microsoft Encarta:

The Balfour Declaration

“The Balfour Declaration was a letter prepared in March 1916 and issued in November 1917, during World War I, by the British statesman Arthur James Balfour, then foreign secretary.... Specifically, the letter expressed the British government's approval of Zionism with ‘the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people’. The letter committed the British government to making the ‘best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done to prejudice the rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine’. The immediate purpose was to win for the Allied cause in World War I the support of Jews in the warring nations and in the United States. As a result of the Balfour Declaration, Israel was established as an independent state in 1948 in the mandated area.” [16]

It's also worth mentioning at this point that when the British dismantled the Ottoman Empire, after World War I, they created many smaller nations. The oil-rich puppet-kingdom of Kuwait was formed by slicing off the southern coastal tip of what we now know as the nation of Iraq. As a result of this arbitrary redrawing of the Ottoman map, a bitter conflict was created between Iraq and Kuwait. Iraq has always considered Kuwait as its true southern province. This is what ultimately led to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1991 and the Gulf War.

Zionism And World War II

Let us fast forward our time machine to the early 1930s. Again, there is no need for a detailed analysis and debate of the causes and major events of World War II. The purpose here is to again illustrate yet another case of selfish Zionist agitation for American entry into a war.

The German people were bitterly resentful of not only the Zionist role in bringing about their defeat in World War I, but also over the brutal monetary reparations which had been imposed upon them by certain Zionist bankers who helped craft the brutal Treaty of Versailles after the war.

Stripped of formerly German territory, and with the German economy in ruins, the people of Germany elected Adolf Hitler as their Chancellor leader. Hitler and the Nazi party soon seized control of the German media, banks, and universities away from the influential Zionists who reigned supreme in those institutions.

Almost immediately, Zionists all over the world began to agitate for action against Germany. Boycotts of German imports were imposed and calls for the U.K. and U.S.A. to take immediate action against Germany began to emanate from Zionist circles.

On March 24, 1933, the Daily Express of England carried the bold headline: “Judea Declares War On Germany. Jews Of All The World Unite In Action.” [17] The front-page story revealed that the Zionists had announced a concerted worldwide effort to isolate Germany and turn other nations against her.

The following year, Zionist political leader Vladimir Jabotinsky wrote:

“The fight against Germany has now been waged for months by every Jewish community, on every continent.... We shall start a spiritual and material war of the world against Germany. Our Jewish interests call for the complete destruction of Germany.” [18]

A few years later, Lord Beaverbrook, a British newspaper magnate, issued this warning about the Zionist influence over the British press:

“There are 20,000 German Jews who have come here to England. They all work against an agreement with Germany. The Jews have got a big position in the press here. Their political influence is driving us into the direction of war.” [19]

In 1939, Germany and Poland went to war over disputed territory that was taken away from Germany by the Versailles Treaty of 1918. Under the phony pretext of protecting Poland [sound like Afghanistan?], Great Britain and France immediately declared war on Germany. Beaverbrook's prediction was realized.

In the United States, the Zionist Mafia again went to work on a U.S. President. The names of the players had changed, but the game was still the same. It was Franklin Delano Roosevelt's turn to deliver the U.S. into another European war. Patriotic Americans, such as famed aviator Charles Lindbergh, saw this and tried to warn the American people that Zionist media influence was intending to drive us into another World War.

Said Lindbergh:

“I am not attacking the Jewish people. But I am saying that the leaders of both the British and the Jewish races, for reasons which are as understandable from their viewpoint as they are inadvisable from ours, for reasons which are not American, wish to involve us in the war.” [20]

Because of strong public anti-war sentiment, FDR and his Zionist allies had a hard time dragging the U.S. into the European war. Then another “incident” came along—at Pearl Harbor in 1941.

Japan and Germany were bound to a mutual defense agreement, which meant that war with Japan would automatically mean war with Germany. FDR embargoed Japan's oil supply in the hopes of forcing Japan to attack Pearl Harbor. Overwhelming evidence from government documents clearly shows that FDR had advance knowledge of the Japanese attack and allowed it to happen so that he could drag the U.S. into World War II. [21]

As was the case in World War I, U.S. entry into the war meant another defeat for Germany. Hours before committing suicide on April 30, 1945, Adolf Hitler dictated his last will and political testament. In it he placed responsibility for World War II on the Zionist Mafia—or, as he called it: "International Jewry and its henchmen".

[Editor's note: Those readers who have pursued advanced topics concerning the "hidden history" of planet Earth are likely to take exception with the premise that Hitler's "suicide" was a genuine (rather than a staged) event. Considering all the evidence for migrations of secret Nazi advanced technologies and people to various locations in South America and Antarctica, it would be more useful to interpret Hitler's public "suicide" as a symbolic event signaling the "end of a chapter" in the book, rather than the end of the story.]

It's no surprise that Hitler would make such a claim. However, his final accusation of the Zionists does parallel the statements made by Jabotinsky, Lindbergh, Beaverbrook, Joe Kennedy, and many others. In the final writing of his life, Hitler wrote:

"It is untrue that I or anyone else in Germany wanted war in 1939. It was wanted and provoked solely by international statesmen either of Jewish origin or working for Jewish interests.... Nor had I ever wished that, after the appalling First World War, there would ever be a Second against either England or America." [22]

Regardless of your view of World War II and whether or not the U.S.A. belonged in the fight, the essential point which cannot be refuted is again this: years before World War II had even started, the Zionists had yet again demonstrated that they had no aversion to sending Americans to die for their own interests.

Great Britain's Turn To Be Betrayed

A few years after the end of World War II, the Zionist plan to establish the nation of Israel in Palestine was finally realized. But not before the British protectors of Palestine were chased out by acts of terror carried out by ungrateful Zionist terrorists.

It was the British who had taken Palestine away from Arab control and allowed the Jews of Europe to immigrate there. But with Great Britain weakened and in debt from the war, the ungrateful Zionists saw their opportunity to chase the British out of Palestine by committing acts of terrorism against them. The most notorious of the Zionist terror groups was the Irgun, whose leader, Menachem Begin, would one day go on to become Prime Minister of Israel.

On the morning of July 22, 1946, 15-20 Irgun terrorists, dressed as Arabs, entered the King David Hotel in Jerusalem. They unloaded 225 kilograms of explosives hidden in milk churns. [23]

The King David Hotel housed the Secretariat of the Government of Palestine and Headquarters of the British Forces in Palestine. When a British officer became suspicious, a shootout took place and the Irgun lit the fuses and fled. The explosion destroyed part of the hotel and killed 91 people. Most of the victims were British, but 15 innocent Jews also died, proving that radical Zionists are capable of even killing fellow Jews in order to advance their cause.

The Irgun terror gang also targeted Arab civilians in order to frighten them into evacuating their land. The most well known of these massacres happened at the village of Deir Yassin on the morning of April 9, 1948. More than 100 Arabs, including women and children, were systematically slaughtered by Menachem Begin's murderous gang. [24] The Israelis took over whatever villages the terrorized Arabs fled from.

By 1948, the British had had enough of Palestine. Under intense Zionist lobbying, the United Nations, the United Kingdom, and the United States recognized the nation of Israel in 1948.

One of the first acts of the new Israeli government was to pass "the law of return", which gives any Jew in the world the right to move to Israel and become a citizen. Understandably, the Arab nations weren't too pleased about this. There would be a several wars that followed. But the Israelis and their free arsenal of America's finest weapons kept the Arabs from reclaiming their land.

The Arabs have never been a match for the U.S.-supplied Israeli war machine. The irony of "the law of return" is that many of today's Jews have no direct ancestral link to the Jews of the Old Testament. Many, perhaps even most, Jewish people are descended from the Khazars, a people whose rulers converted to Judaism sometime during the 800s A.D. [25] The Khazars never even set foot in Palestine.

The brutal and criminal circumstances surrounding the creation of Israel are now a half century in the past. Even most Arabs understand that Israel isn't going to go away. But by reviewing this real history, we can better understand the deceptive, dangerous, and brutal nature of Zionism today.

America Becomes The Zionists' Whore

We have reviewed how the Zionists used and discarded Germany. Then they used and discarded Great Britain. After World War II, it was clear that the chief remaining global power was the United States.

Now, the U.S.A. had never had any problem with the Arab people, and had no reason to quarrel with the Arabs. For the Zionists to maintain and expand the support they were receiving from America, it would benefit them greatly if the Arabs and the mighty U.S. could somehow become enemies. Could the Zionists possibly stoop so low? Why not? Look at what they had already pulled off! Remember that the official motto of the Mossad (Israel's intelligence organization) is "by way of deception thou shalt do war". [26]

Long shrouded in secrecy, the life of Nikola Tesla is artfully illuminated in this fascinating film. Tesla, born in Croatia in 1856, is considered the father of our modern technological age and one of the greatest scientific minds who ever lived. He was an electrical engineer who changed the world with the invention of the AC (alternating current) induction motor, making the universal transmission and distribution of electricity possible. His achievements led to the discovery of radio and television as well as the development of the first hydroelectric dam, remote control, radar tracking for the military, and the manipulation of matter and energy. His discoveries are also the basis for the emerging science of Free Energy.

Encyclopedia Britannica lists Nikola Tesla as one of the most fascinating people in history. The Secret of Nikola Tesla, The Movie is a well-acted portrayal of the life and mind of a "scientific superman" who, against all odds, dedicated his life to the task of designing and improving technology for the service and advancement of humanity.

Orson Welles stars as J.P. Morgan, Peter Bozovic as Tesla, Strother Martin as George Westinghouse, and Dennis Patrick as Thomas Edison.

In 1955, one of these “false-flag” operations was publicly exposed for the world to see. Israeli agents, impersonating Arab terrorists, were caught staging a series of bombings against American installations in Egypt. [27] When this conspiracy was exposed, it ultimately created such a controversy that it brought down the Israeli government. The long-since-forgotten scandal became known as “the Lavon Affair”.

Then again, during a 1967 war with the Arabs, Israeli gunboats and fighter jets deliberately attacked the USS Liberty, an unarmed U.S. communications ship. [28] Thirty five American sailors were murdered and 170 others injured in a prolonged Israeli onslaught—carried out in broad daylight and with the U.S. flag flying prominently. The intent was to kill all of the Americans and then leave the Egyptians to take the blame.

Israel denied that the attack was deliberate, but the chilling stories of the lucky American survivors clearly contradicts that lie. To this very day, the U.S. Congress has never investigated the USS Liberty massacre.

In 1989, the Israelis once again succeeded in framing enemy Arabs in order to enrage America. Former Mossad case officer Victor Ostrovsky became so disgusted with the criminal behavior of his own government that he defected from the Mossad and tried to warn America of just how evil and dangerous they were.

Ostrovsky revealed exactly how the Israelis framed Libya for the bombing of a German nightclub which killed American servicemen. [29] It was this frame-up job that caused President Reagan to bomb Libya, killing the 4-year-old daughter of Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi. France refused to allow U.S. bombers to fly over their air space and bomb Libya because French intelligence knew that Libya was unjustly framed by the Israelis.

Among some of Ostrovsky’s other amazing revelations are:

- that the Mossad often uses Arab agents to carry out missions,
- that Israeli agents are skilled at impersonating Arabs,
- that the Mossad had a plan to turn American public opinion against Iraq,
- that wealthy Zionists in America are often called upon to help carry out Mossad missions.

Ostrovsky’s tell-all book By Way Of Deception infuriated the Mossad and made him the target of numerous death threats. [30]

In 2001, the Washington Times ran a story about a 68-page research paper issued by the Army School of Advanced Military Studies (SAMS). The research was compiled by 60 U.S. Army officers as an attempt to predict the possible outcomes of deploying a U.S. force to maintain peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Here’s what SAMS had to say about the Israeli military machine:

“A 500-pound gorilla in Israel. Well armed and trained. Operates in both Gaza and the West Bank. Known to disregard international law to accomplish mission.” [31]

Of Israel’s Mossad, the officers issued this warning:

“Wildcard. Ruthless and cunning. Has capability to target U.S. forces and make it look like a Palestinian Arab act.” [32]

Why does the U.S., which is trillions of dollars in debt, give away billions of taxpayer dollars to a foreign government whose military violates international laws and whose Mossad is capable of murdering U.S. troops in order to frame Arabs? Have we lost our minds?

Zionist Power Structure In America

Now that we have established the ruthless and criminal nature of radical Zionism, one more lesson needs to be understood before we return to the five dancing Israelis of 9/11 and other related stories: Even the Zionists themselves have never denied that they have long exerted great influence in America. But what we must understand is that the Zionists do not merely influence United States policy; they dominate it! It is this domination that enables them to pull off monstrous crimes and then conceal them from the general public.

The observation that Zionists dominate the American media, government, academia, and Hollywood has been made by many prominent Americans and is easily verifiable by public information.

Henry Ford said this:

“If after having elected their man or group, obedience is not rendered to the Jewish control, then you speedily hear of ‘scandals’ and ‘investigations’ and ‘impeachments’ for the removal of the disobedient. Usually a man with a ‘past’ proves the most obedient instrument, but even a good man can often be tangled up in campaign practices that compromise him. It has been commonly known that Jewish manipulations of American election campaigns have been so skillfully handled, that no matter which candidate was elected, there was ready made a sufficient amount of evidence to discredit him in case his Jewish masters needed to discredit him.” [33]

Charles Lindbergh said this:

“Their greatest danger to this country lies in the Jewish ownership and influence in our motion pictures, our press, our radio, and our government.” [34]

Admiral Thomas Moorer, Chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff under Ronald Reagan said this:

“I’ve never seen a President—I don’t care who he is—stand up to them [the Israelis]. It just boggles the mind. They always get what they want. The Israelis know what is going on all the time. If the American people understood what a grip those people have got on our government, they would rise up in arms. Our citizens certainly don’t have any idea what goes on.” [35]

While a guest on ABC’s Face The Nation, William Fulbright (U.S. Senator and Chairman of the U.S. Foreign Relations Committee) said this before a national

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

Credo says, “The world must know this—and know it now!”

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the “Chitauli”) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET “gods” for thousands of years.

Credo has not only seen dead “greys” many times, he has seen them examined behind their “grey” exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo’s reply can be imagined!

television audience:

"Israel controls the United States Senate. We should be more concerned about the United States' interests." [36]

Nationally syndicated columnist and former presidential candidate Patrick Buchanan said:

"The United States Congress is Israeli occupied territory." [37]

And U.S. religious leader Billy Graham and President Richard Nixon once had the following exchange, which was caught on tape:

GRAHAM: The Jewish stranglehold on the media has got to be broken or this country's going down the drain.

NIXON: You believe that?

GRAHAM: Yes, sir.

NIXON: Oh boy. So do I. I can't ever say that, but I do believe it. [38]

But enough of quoting others. Let's look at the facts of Zionist control.

FACT: ABC, NBC, CBS, CNN, UPN, the Washington Post, the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, the New York Daily News, Time magazine, Newsweek, People magazine, U.S. News & World Report, and countless other media and Hollywood companies all have either a Zionist CEO, a Zionist News Chief, or are owned by a media conglomerate which has a Zionist CEO. [39] Have you ever noticed how Hollywood movies always seem to portray Germans and Arabs as bigoted fanatics or as terrorists? Now you know why.

FACT: AIPAC, the Israeli lobbying organization, is the most feared lobby in Washington DC. By their own admission, they are capable of unseating Congressmen and Senators who do not carry out their requests. The majority of Congressmen from both political parties receive large donations from AIPAC. Writing for the Nation magazine, journalist Michael Massing explains:

"AIPAC is widely regarded as the most powerful foreign-policy lobby in Washington. Its 60,000 members shower millions of dollars on hundreds of members of Congress on both sides of the aisle." Newspapers like the New York Times fear the Jewish lobby organizations as well. "It's very intimidating" said a correspondent at another large daily. "The pressure from these groups is relentless." [40]

FACT: The Pentagon is under the control of a hardcore Zionist named Richard Perle. The civilian Defense Policy Board actually wields more control over the military establishment than the Defense Secretary or the generals and admirals. There are a number of other Zionists who serve on the board (Kissinger, Cohen, Schlessinger) as well as non-Jewish members who have always supported Israel and the expansion of the "War on Terror". The notoriously belligerent Perle, nicknamed "The Prince of Darkness", is Chairman of the Board. [41]

With Perle as Chairman of the Defense Policy Board, Zionist Paul Wolfowitz as Undersecretary of Defense, and Zionist award winner Douglass Feith as Undersecretary of Defense Policy, the Zionist Pentagon gang controls 3 of the top 4 civilian leadership positions of America's armed forces. Careerist scoundrels like Condoleeza Rice and Donald Rumsfeld are either under their influence or unwilling to oppose their drive for World War III.

The Perle-Wolfowitz-Feith gang represent a fanatical and warmongering "government within a government". In league with these Zionist Pentagon conspirators are Jewish Zionist and potential 2004 Presidential candidate, Senator Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) and his Gentile partner-in-crime Senator John McCain (R-AZ).

An Israeli journalist named Ari Shavit, lamenting the harsh treatments that his government dishes out to the Palestinians, made the following observation in Ha'aretz, a leading Israeli journal:

"We believe with absolute certitude that now, with the White House and Senate in our hands along with the Pentagon and the New York Times, the lives [of Arabs] do not count as much as our own. Their blood does not count as much as our blood. We believe with absolute certitude that now, when we have AIPAC [the Israel lobby] and [Edgar] Bronfman and the Anti-Defamation League, we truly have the right to tell 400,000 people that in eight hours they must flee from their homes. And that we have the right to rain bombs on their villages and towns and populated areas. That we have the right to kill without any guilt." [42]

And this only scratches the surface of Zionist power. With such awesome power to control and cover-up events, is it any wonder why so many of America's journalists and politicians are afraid to even talk about this issue? Is it any wonder why former President Bill Clinton would grovel before a Jewish audience and say something as ridiculous as the following

William Cooper: Death Of A Conspiracy Salesman

On November 5, 2001, William Cooper was shot to death by sheriff's deputies in a gunfire exchange. Who was Bill Cooper? Was he a true patriot? A tough survivalist? Or simply a fanatic?

Some knew him as a UFO "expert" (claimed insider information on government knowledge of extraterrestrials living among us)...a conspiracy theorist...a former Navy Intelligence operative...and the person the President once called "the most dangerous man on American airwaves". Cooper always said he acted from his "conscience" and sought to warn all Americans of the dangers of the New World Order, creeping socialism, and our own brand of Nazism. Here is the inside story, as told by a fellow patriot and government whistle-blower. Commander X has collected together for the first time Cooper's thoughts and finds on such subjects as: The Illuminati • The Kennedy Assassination • MJ-12 and the UFO Cover-Up • Area 51 • The AntiChrist • The World Trade Center Disaster • Gun Control • Skull and Bones Society.

"The Israelis know that if the Iraqi or the Iranian army came across the Jordan River, I would personally grab a rifle, get in a ditch, and fight and die." [43]

I could go on and on at much greater length about this subject, but I want to get back to the dancing Israelis. Have I made my point yet?

The Butcher Sharon

I know. I know. You want to return to the scene of the dancing Israelis on 9/11. But there is one more quick lesson that needs to be covered before we climb back into the time machine and fast-forward back to 9/11. If we don't cover this, you won't be able to fully understand "the big picture".

During the 1967 war, Israel occupied the Palestinian territories of the West Bank and Gaza. Thirty five years have passed since that war ended, yet the Israeli army continues the humiliating occupation of those Palestinian areas. Those areas are not part of the nation of Israel that was created in 1948 by the U.N.

What the Palestinian people are resisting today is not the 1948 confiscation of their land. They simply want the 1967 occupation to end. It is this ongoing occupation, not the 1948 creation of Israel, which fuels the conflict today.

Prior to the current outbreak of hostilities, the majority of the Israeli people also supported the end of Israel's occupation and oppression of these territories. They elected Yitzak Rabin as Prime Minister, and Rabin made more strides toward achieving peace than any of his processors. The 1990s were quiet years in Israel. Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and Prime Minister Rabin appeared to have finally reached a peace deal, with the U.S. acting as the mediator.

This did not sit well with the hardcore Zionists who ultimately hope to expand Israel's borders even more. Hopes for a lasting peace deal were soon dealt a major setback when a flurry of five bullets were pumped into Prime Minister Rabin at close range as he was attending a 1995 Israeli peace rally.

It was not an Arab who killed Rabin. It was a Zionist fanatic named Yigal Amir. Amir was a law student at Israel's Bar-Ilan University. He later told investigators that he had no regrets for his actions. [44] Amir, a bright young law student, was willing to throw his life away in the service of the Zionist cause. (More on that concept later on.)

At the head of the Israeli government today sits a brutal man who has been a guest of honor at George Bush's White House on a regular basis since he took office in October 2000. His name is Ariel Sharon. His fanatical Zionist supporters in Israel refer to him as "Arik King", but the Arabs know him as a lifelong butcher, terrorist, and war criminal.

There was a time when Sharon was disgraced and his political career seemed to be over. The isolation of Ariel Sharon was the result a 1982 Palestinian massacre which Sharon engineered when he was Israel's defense minister. It was the Israelis themselves who forced Sharon to resign.

Sharon's troops blocked the exits from the Sabra and Shattila refugee camps while a Lebanese militia, allied with the Israeli military, went into the camps and slaughtered more than 1,500 unarmed Palestinian civilians while raping many women. [45]

Though these Lebanese militias were the ones who did the actual killing, it was Ariel Sharon who controlled the militias and it was Sharon's soldiers who stood by and blocked the camp exits, deliberately allowing the slaughter to take place.

A survivor of the attack, who had been raped and shot, went to Belgium and initiated a war-crimes case against Sharon. Several Lebanese militia leaders were summoned to testify against Sharon. Shortly before their testimony, three of them were suddenly killed by unknown gunmen and car bombs. Israel's Mossad of course denied any responsibility for the strange and untimely deaths of these three witnesses against Sharon. [46] And if you believe that one, I'll sell you the World Trade Center!

After nearly 20 years of political exile, Sharon made his comeback in October 2000. Knowing full well how much the Palestinians hated him for his role in the 1982 massacres, Sharon and a small army of Israeli soldiers showed up at the Temple Mount—a site held sacred by both Muslims and Jews. [47] This was a deliberate provocation.

When the Muslims protested the Sharon provocation, the Israeli troops cracked down. Rocks were thrown and shots were fired. In just a matter of minutes, years of peace and the Israeli-Arab peace effort had been destroyed by Mr. Sharon's bullying antics.

When the fighting broke out, a frightened and propagandized Israeli population soon turned to a strong man for their protection—the very man who had deliberately instigated the violence in the first place. Ariel Sharon was elected Prime Minister.

True to form, Sharon has brutalized the Palestinian civilian population under the pretext of "self-defense". Armed and funded by Israel's wholly owned U.S. Congress, the Israeli war machine can bulldoze Arab homes at will.

The only weapon that the outgunned Palestinians can retaliate with is the "suicide bomber". With every suicide bombing, Sharon is able to "justify" even more attacks and occupy more land.

The Zionist game plan is to ultimately drive the Palestinians out of the West Bank and Gaza, just like the Irgun massacres had driven the Arabs out of Deir Yassin. Standing in the way of such a bold Zionist scheme were three major obstacles:

1. The force of world opinion. Prior to 9/11, the Palestinian struggle against Israeli occupation had gained the sympathy of many people around the world.

2. The force of Israeli domestic opinion. Most Israelis wanted peace and were opposed to the 35-year occupation of Palestinian territories.

3. Saddam Hussein's Iraq, which had always been a champion of the cause of Palestinian self-determination.

How useful it would be for the Zionists if some "incident" were to happen which would turn American and world opinion against the Palestinians and ultimately drag the U.S. into a war against Israel's Arab enemies.

Now you know why those Israelis were celebrating on 9/11.

Advance Warnings

The days and hours leading up to 9/11 were marked by a series of chilling warnings about impending terrorist plots involving hijacked commercial airplanes. It's worth mentioning at this point that, months before 9/11, the U.S. had already informed some of its allies of plans to go to war in Afghanistan. On June 26, 2001, News Insight/India Reacts, an Indian public-affairs magazine, wrote:

"India and Iran will 'facilitate' U.S. and Russian plans for 'limited military action' against the Taliban if the contemplated tough new economic sanctions don't bend Afghanistan's fundamentalist regime. Indian officials say that India and Iran will only play the role of 'facilitator' while the U.S. and Russia will combat the Taliban from the front with the help of two Central Asian countries, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, to push Taliban lines back to the 1998 position 50 km away from Mazar-e-Sharief city in northern Afghanistan. Military action will be the last option, though it now seems scarcely avoidable with the U.N. banned from Taliban-controlled areas." [48]

Money And The Conspiracy Of Evil

Conspiracy Con 2002 Lecture (2 hrs.)

By Eustace Mullins

Sixty years ago Eustace Mullins was a protégé of literary giant Ezra Pound, who understood central banking and its relationship with world unrest. He has been a respected researcher for over 50 years, and has since authored many books on conspiracy, including Secrets Of The Federal Reserve and The World Order.

Using his recent travel experiences and Orwell's 1984 as examples, Eustace discusses the irony of Homeland Security and how Americans are now treated as "Enemies of the State". He then describes the real manipulators behind all major wars, the Cold War, the Stock Market, the Medical Scam, 9/11, terrorism, and more.

To accomplish all this, the "perpetrators" control the government, the schools, and the media, while keeping us in unimportant jobs, and stealing most of our earnings. For these purposes the Central Bank is the only mechanism that works. Without the government-granted license to print money, the conspiracy would be no more of a threat to us than bin Laden actually is.

Eustace gives a history lesson you won't forget—nor should you!

The story of U.S. military involvement in Afghanistan was reported months before 9/11 in Indian [49] and British [50] publications, but it was never reported in the U.S. media. With the military plans already in motion since at least June of 2001, all that was needed was for an "incident" to take place to justify the U.S. going to "war against terrorism" in Afghanistan.

Here are just a few of the advance warnings which were brought to light in the aftermath of 9/11:

The London Daily Telegraph reported on September 16, 2001:

"The Telegraph has learned that two senior experts with Mossad, the Israeli military intelligence service, were sent to Washington in August to alert the FBI and CIA to the existence of a cell of as many as 200 terrorists said to be preparing a big operation. They had no specific information about what was being planned but linked the plot to Osama bin Laden and told American officials that there were strong grounds for suspecting Iraqi involvement." [51]

Do you smell a "false flag" operation in the works? How is it possible that the Mossad knew of the existence of these 200 terrorists but could not name or locate a single one? And how convenient for Israel that Saddam Hussein should be in cahoots with Osama bin Laden, despite the fact that bin Laden and Hussein hate each other!

The Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, (FAZ) one of Germany's most respected newspapers, quoted German intelligence sources who said that the Echelon electronic spy network gave U.S. and Israeli intelligence agencies several warnings that suicidal hijack attacks were being planned against U.S. targets. [52]

Echelon is capable of monitoring all of the electronic communication in the world. Utilizing 120 satellites, the Echelon system is designed to suck up enormous amounts of data by using keyword search techniques to sift through the data. [53]

The San Francisco Chronicle reported on September 12 that San Francisco Mayor and former California Assembly Speaker Willie Brown was advised eight hours before the attacks that he should be careful about flying on 9/11. [54]

In its September 24, 2001 issue, Newsweek magazine broke this startling revelation:

"Three weeks ago there was another warning that a terrorist strike might be imminent.... On September 10, Newsweek has learned, a group of top Pentagon officials suddenly cancelled travel plans for the next morning, apparently because of security concerns." [55]

Wow! Could these unnamed "top

Pentagon officials" have been some of the Zionist directors of the Defense Policy Board which we talked about earlier? If these Pentagon officials were scared enough not to fly, then why didn't the Pentagon place the Air Force on full alert? How could they have been so slow to react to 9/11 when they already knew there was a threat?

On September 27, the Washington Post reported that two workers of the Israeli company Odigo (with offices also in New York) received instant message warnings just two hours before the attacks. Here's an excerpt from the Washington Post:

"Officials at instant-messaging firm Odigo confirmed today that two employees received text messages warning of an attack on the World Trade Center two hours before terrorists crashed planes into the New York landmarks." [56]

Soon after the attacks, the Odigo employees informed the management about the electronic message they had received. Israeli security services were contacted and the FBI was informed. Nothing has been heard about this event since. I think it's safe to say that "Islamic terrorists" would not have been considerate enough to send detailed e-mail warnings to some obscure Israeli office workers.

The September 11 Dance Party

Let us review what we have learned:

- We have clearly established that Zionists played a key role in steering the U.S. into two World Wars.
- We have clearly established that Zionists do not care if Americans (or others) are killed to further their goals.
- We have clearly established that Zionists have a record of attacking Americans in order to frame Arabs.
- We have established that the Zionists are capable of acts of unspeakable brutality and genocide.
- We have established that U.S. politicians fear the Zionist Mafia and defy them at their own peril.
- We have learned that warnings of a suicidal hijacking plot were issued to several people.
- And most importantly of all, we have clearly established that the Zionists have the capacity to make these amazing stories suddenly disappear from their controlled news media.

Having established these precedents, we can now easily deduce that the reason why those five dancing Israeli agents who celebrated the 9/11 attacks were so happy is because they knew that Americans would now become unconditional supporters of their "Israeli ally" and fanatical haters of Muslims and Arabs.

On the day of the attacks, former Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was asked what the attack would mean for U.S.-Israeli relations. His quick reply was: "It's very good! Well, it's not good, but it will generate immediate sympathy [for Israel]." [57]

The five Israelis made such a spectacle that everyone who saw them felt compelled to call the police. According to ABC's 20/20, when the van belonging to the cheering Israelis was stopped by the police, the first words out of the driver's (Sivan Kurzberg) lying mouth were: "We are Israelis. We are not your problem. Your problems are our problems. The Palestinians are your problem." [58]

The police and FBI field agents became really suspicious when they found box cutters (the same items that the hijackers supposedly used), $4700 cash stuffed in a sock, and foreign passports. Police also told the Bergen Record that bomb-sniffing dogs were brought to the van and that they reacted as if they had smelled explosives. [59]

From there, the story becomes even more suspicious. The Israelis worked for a Weehawken moving company known as Urban Moving Systems. An American employee of Urban Moving Systems told the Bergen Record that a majority of his co-workers were Israelis and they were all joking about the attacks. The employee, who declined to give his name, said: "I was in tears. These guys were joking and that bothered me." [60]

A few days after the attacks, Urban Moving System's Israeli owner, Dominick Suter, dropped his business and fled the country. He was in such a hurry to flee America that some of Urban Moving System's customers were left with their furniture stuck in storage facilities. [61]

The five Israeli army veterans (Mossad) were held in custody for several months before being quietly released. Some of the movers had been kept in solitary confinement for 40 days. [62]

Immediately following the attacks, the

"We must make the world honest before we can honestly say to our children that honesty is the best policy."

— George Bernard Shaw (1856-1950)

Zionist-controlled media was filled with stories linking the attacks to bin Laden. TV talking-heads and scribblers of every stripe spoon-fed a gullible American public a steady diet of the most outrageous propaganda imaginable.

We were told that the reason bin Laden attacked the U.S.A. was because he hates our “freedom” and “democracy”. The Muslims were “medieval” and they wanted to destroy us because of our wealth. But bin Laden strongly denied any role in the attacks and suggested that Zionists orchestrated the 9/11 attacks:

“I was not involved in the September 11 attacks in the United States, nor did I have knowledge of the attacks. There exists a government within a government within the United States. The United States should try to trace the perpetrators of these attacks within itself, to the people who want to make the present century a century of conflict between Islam and Christianity. That secret government must be asked as to who carried out the attacks.... The American system is totally controlled by the Jews, whose first priority is Israel, not the United States.” [63]

To date, the only shred of “evidence” to be uncovered against bin Laden was a highly suspicious, barely audible amateur video, that the Zionist-dominated Pentagon just happened to find “lying around” in Afghanistan. Though there is no evidence, be it hard or circumstantial, to link the al-Qaeda “terrorist network” to these acts of terror, there is in fact a mountain of evidence, both hard and circumstantial, which suggests that the Zionist Mafia has been very busy framing Arabs for terror plots against America.

Who Was Really Flying Those Planes On 9/11?

Hours after the 9/11 attacks, authorities began to find clues conveniently left for them to stumble upon. The Boston Globe reported that a copy of the Koran, instructions on how to fly a commercial airplane, and a fuel-consumption calculator were found in a pair of bags meant for one of the hijacked flights that left from Logan. [64]

Authorities also received a “tip” about a suspicious white car left behind at Boston’s Logan Airport. An Arabic-language flight-training manual was found inside the car. [65]

How fortunate for investigators that the hijackers “forgot” to take their Koran and Arab flight manuals with them! Within a few days, all “19 hijackers” were “identified” and their faces were plastered all over our television screens.

Then, like a script from a corny grade-B spy movie, the official story gets even more ridiculous. The passport of the supposed “ringleader” Mohammed Atta, somehow managed to survive the explosion, inferno, and smoldering collapse to be oh-so-conveniently “found” just a few blocks away from the World Trade Center! [66]

It is obvious that this “evidence” was planted by individuals wishing to direct the blame towards Osama bin Laden. How is it possible that Arab students who had never flown an airplane could take a simulator course and then fly jumbo jets with the skill and precision of “top-gun” pilots? It is not possible. And the fact is, the true identities of the 9/11 hijackers remains a mystery. In the days following the disclosure of the “hijackers” names and faces, no less than 7 of the Arab individuals named came forward to protest their obvious innocence. [67]

That’s right! Seven of the nineteen “hijackers” are alive and well. They were victims of identity theft, some of whom had had their passports stolen. They were interviewed by several news organizations, including the Telegraph of England. Here’s an excerpt from David Harrison’s Telegraph story, entitled:

Revealed: The Men With Stolen Identities

“Their names were flashed around the world as suicide hijackers who carried out the attacks on America. But yesterday four innocent men told how their identities had been stolen.

“The men—all from Saudi Arabia—spoke of their shock at being mistakenly named by the FBI as suicide terrorists. None of the four was in the United States on September 11, and all are alive in their home country.

“The Telegraph obtained the first interviews with the men since they learned that they were on the FBI’s list of hijackers who died in the crashes in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania.

“All four said that they were ‘outraged’ to be identified as terrorists. One has never been to America and another is a Saudi Airlines pilot who was on a training course in Tunisia at the time of the attacks. Saudi Airlines said it was considering legal action against the FBI for seriously damaging its reputation and that of its pilots.” [68]

The story of these identity thefts was also briefly reported by ABC [69] and BBC (England) [70]. The FBI does not deny this. Nobody denies this fact because it is easily verifiable. Instead, the U.S. media and government just ignore this inconvenient little fact and keep right on repeating the monstrous lie that the hijacker identities are known and that 15 of them were Saudis.

CNN revealed that FBI director Robert Mueller openly admitted that some of the identities of the 9/11 hijackers are in question due to identity theft. Here’s what CNN reported on September 21:

“FBI Director Robert Mueller has acknowledged that some of those behind last week’s terror attacks may have stolen the identification of other people, and, according to at least one security expert, it may have been ‘relatively easy’ based on their level of sophistication.” [71]

This opens up a whole Pandora’s box of unanswered questions.

First and foremost of which is this:

Why would Osama bin Laden, the Saudi Arabian caveman, steal identities?

To cover his tracks, you say?

Next question:

Why would a Saudi Arabian, attempting to cover his tracks, steal the identities of fellow Saudi Arabians? What would be the point? Why go through the trouble of stealing identities that would point back to you? Why not steal Greek identities, or Brazilian identities, or Turkish ones?

A much more logical conclusion is that non-Arabs stole these identities as part of a “false flag” operation designed to point the blame at Arabs, and Saudi Arabs in particular.

What kind of a corrupt character is FBI boss Mueller? He initially admitted that false identities were involved with 9/11, but then he allows the media to keep naming these innocent, and alive, Arabs as the hijackers? Why doesn’t he correct them? More on the slimy Mr. Mueller later on.

Now I’m really going to rock your faith in the false religion of 9/11.

In February of 2000, Indian intelligence officials detained 11 members of what they thought was an al-Qaeda hijacking conspiracy. It was then discovered that these 11 “Muslim preachers” were all Israeli nationals! India’s leading weekly magazine, The Week, reported:

“On January 12 Indian intelligence officials in Calcutta detained 11 foreign nationals for interrogation before they were to board a Dhaka-bound Bangladesh Biman flight. They were detained on the suspicion of being hijackers. ‘But we realized that they were tabliqis (Islamic preachers), so we let them go’, said an Intelligence official.

“The eleven had Israeli passports but were believed to be Afghan nationals who had spent a while in Iran. Indian intelligence officials, too, were surprised by the nationality profile of the eleven. ‘They say that they have been on tabligh (preaching Islam) in India for two months. But they are Israeli nationals from the West Bank' said a Central Intelligence official. He claimed that Tel Aviv 'exerted considerable pressure' on Delhi to secure their release. 'It appeared that they could be working for a sensitive organization in Israel and were on a mission to Bangladesh' the official said. [72]

What were these 11 Israelis doing trying to impersonate al-Qaeda men?

Infiltrating? Perhaps.

Framing? More likely.

But the important precedent to understand is this: Israeli agents were once caught red-handed impersonating Muslim hijackers.

This event becomes even more mind-boggling when we learn that it was Indian intelligence that helped the U.S. to so quickly identify the "19 hijackers".

On April 3, 2002, Express India, quoting the Press Trust of India, revealed:

"Washington, April 3: Indian intelligence agencies helped the U.S. to identify the hijackers who carried out the deadly September 11 terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, a media report said here on Wednesday." [73]

Ain't that a kick in the ass?!

Did you catch that?

The Indian intelligence officials who were duped into mistaking Israeli agents for al-Qaeda hijackers back in 2000, were the very same clowns telling the FBI who it was who hijacked the 9/11 planes!

Keep in mind that Indian intelligence has an extremely close working relationship with Israel's Mossad because both governments hate the Muslim nation of Pakistan. [74]

Now about Mohamed Atta—you know, the so-called "ring leader".

There are a number of inconsistencies with that story as well. Like some of the 7 hijackers known to be still alive, Atta also had his passport stolen in 1999 [75], (the same passport that miraculously survived the WTC explosion and collapse?) making him an easy mark for an identity theft.

Atta was known to all as a shy, timid, and sheltered young man who was uncomfortable with women. [76] The 5-foot, 7-inch, 150-pound architecture student was such a "goody two shoes" that some of his university acquaintances in Germany refrained from drinking or cursing in front of him.

How this gentle, non-political mamma's boy from a good Egyptian family suddenly transformed himself into the vodka drinking, go-go girl groping terrorist animal described by the media, has to rank as the greatest personality change since another classic work of fiction, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Atta, or someone using Atta's identity, had enrolled in a Florida flight school in 2001 and then broke off his training, making it a point to tell his instructor he was leaving for Boston. In an October 2001 interview with an ABC affiliate in Florida, flight school president Rudi Dekkers said that his course does not qualify pilots to fly commercial jumbo jets. [77]

He also described Atta as "an asshole". [78]

Part of the reason for Dekker's dislike for Atta stems from a highly unusual incident that occurred at the beginning of the course. Here's the exchange between ABC producer Quentin McDermott and Dekkers:

McDERMOTT: Why do you say Atta was an asshole?

DEKKERS: Well, when Atta was here and I saw his face on several occasions in the building, then I know that they're regular students and then I try to talk to them. It's kind of a PR, where are you from? I tried to communicate with him. I found out from my people that he lived in Hamburg and he spoke German, so one of the days that I saw him—I speak German myself, I'm a Dutch citizen, and I started in the morning telling him in German—"Good morning. How are you? How do you like the coffee? Are you happy here?" And he looked at me with cold eyes, didn't react at all, and walked away. That was one of my first meetings I had." [79]

This is eerily similar to the way in which Zacharias Moussaoui (the so-called "20th hijacker") became "belligerent" when his Minnesota flight instructor tried to speak to him in French (his first language), at the beginning of that course. The Minnesota Star Tribune reported on December 21, 2001:

"Moussaoui first raised eyebrows when, during a simple introductory exchange, he said he was from France, but then didn't seem to understand when the instructor spoke French to him. Moussaoui then became belligerent and evasive about his background, (Congressman) Oberstar and other sources said. In addition, he seemed inept in basic flying procedure, while seeking expensive training on an advanced commercial jet simulator." [80]

It truly is an amazing twist of fate that both Atta and Moussaoui both had American flight instructors who spoke German and French respectively.

Even the great Mossad could not have foreseen such a coincidence.

The real Atta would have been able to respond to his instructor's German small-talk, and the real Moussaoui would have been able to respond to his instructor's French small-talk.

Atta just walked away, and Moussaoui threw a fit. Neither responded because neither could. They were imposters, whose faces were probably disguised by a make-up artist. Their mission was to frame the two innocent Arabs who were probably targeted by the Mossad at random.

The imposter was able to create a new Atta by using Atta's stolen passport from 1999—the same passport that floated safely to the ground with a few burnt edges on 9/11.

These strange inconsistencies tend to give support to Mohammed Atta's father's claim that he spoke over the phone with his son on September 12th, the day after the attacks. [81]

Could a group of professionals have abducted and killed the real Atta in the days following the 9/11 attacks? Mossad agents posing as "art students" were arrested after conducting some type of operation in Hollywood, Florida—the same small town that Atta stayed in. [82]

So what happened to the real Mohammed Atta? To quote his grief-stricken father: "Ask Mossad!"

So who—if not the "19 Arabs"—was on those planes? That's the million-dollar question.

There are a number of alternative scenarios. Could some Israelis have been fanatical enough to have volunteered for such a suicide mission? Odd as that may sound at first, it is not out of the realm of possibility. The fact is, hard-core Zionist extremists have proven themselves to be every bit as fanatical, and even moreso, than Arab extremists.

A nation which can produce thousands of bloodthirsty Zionist extremists, Irgun war criminals, Mossad terrorists who blow up occupied buildings, assassins who kill Israeli Prime Ministers in full view of policemen, and crazed killers who have carried sickening massacres of Arab women and children, would surely be capable of recruiting a few fanatics willing to sacrifice for "the cause". This theory becomes even more plausible when we consider that only the pilots would have needed to know that the planes were on a suicide mission.

[Editor's note: Most SPECTRUM readers are well aware that the clues point strongly in the direction that the airliners were remote-controlled. So while what you have read is instructive in terms of uncovering some of the layers of likely Mossad engineering with regard to painting an implication of "Arab terrorists" as pilots, it would be a mistake to go too far with this line of reasoning to explain the aerial acrobatics of the respective airliners.]

Still don't think Israel is capable of producing suicidal terrorists? Have you already forgotten the case of Dr. Baruch Goldstein?

[Editor's note: As you read the following, keep in mind how skilled are secret intelligence operations in mind-control techniques. Whether the scenario is a "crazy gunman" who shoots school children on a playground so the government can push for tougher gun control, or the following kind of incident, the mind-control techniques are the same.]

Goldstein was a New York doctor and resettled in Israel. On February 25, 1994, Goldstein walked into a crowded Arab mosque in the occupied West Bank. With hundreds of worshippers knelt in silent prayer, Goldstein sealed off the exit and opened fire with a rapid-firing assault rifle, killing 29 and wounding many more. Goldstein, a father of four, was finally stopped and killed when the frenzied crowd overpowered him. With as many as 800 worshippers packed into the mosque, Goldstein surely could not have been expecting to come out alive. This was clearly a suicide attack.

And what did Goldstein's mother have to say about her son's suicide attack? The Boston Globe revealed:

"The mother of Baruch Goldstein, the Jewish settler who massacred about 40 Palestinians in a Hebron mosque a week ago, says she is proud of her son. 'I always thought to myself: When would someone get up and do such a thing? And in the end, my son did it' Miriam Goldstein told the weekly Shishi newspaper." [83]

It gets even more sickening than that. Baruch Goldstein has become a folk hero among many of the crazed side-locked settlers who have encroached upon the West Bank. They have turned Goldstein's gravesite into a memorial and set up a website to honor his murderous deed. Look what these fanatics posted on the Goldstein memorial website:

"Over the years, the grave has become a site of pilgrimage. Numerous people from all over the world come to pray and honor his (Baruch's) memory." [84]

One has to wonder if some of Goldstein's admirers were flying those planes on 9/11. There is one interesting side-note here which may or may not be of any significance.

One of the two Israelis who died aboard the hijacked planes was Daniel Lewin, who was aboard the first plane to crash into the Twin Towers. The Ha'aretz News Service of Israel revealed that Lewin was a one-time officer in the Israeli Defense Forces' elite Sayeret Matkal commando unit. [85] Oddly enough, Lewin's name is missing from CNN's comprehensive September 11 memorial website.

Another possibility is that some other group of "patsies" was recruited for the operation. Perhaps some anarchists, or some leftover Marxists who thought they were going to bring down western capitalism. Or perhaps, the hijackers were another group of angry Arabs who weren't even aware of who their true handlers really were or what the broader strategic aim of the mission actually was. In the dark world of covert operations, agents are often kept ignorant of who's actually orchestrating the show.

Admittedly, these scenarios are speculative, but one thing that is not speculative is this: the hijackers were not the 19 men whose faces were shown on our TV screens.

Who Provided The Protective Cover For The 9/11 Operation?

On October 26, 1999, the famous golfer Payne Stewart boarded a private Learjet in Florida and left for Texas. Shortly after takeoff, Stewart's jet veered sharply off course and began heading northwest. All contact with air controllers was lost. Within 15 minutes of having gone off course, U.S. fighter jets had already intercepted the jet. Everyone on board was likely dead due to depressurization.

These fighter jets were dispatched by NORAD, the branch of the U.S. Air Force whose job it is to monitor and defend U.S. airspace 24 hours a day. NORAD maintains a huge array of land-based radar systems and has fighter jets on alert 24 hours a day, so that they can respond to a crisis.

The jets escorted the doomed airplane until another group of Air National Guard jets took over the escort mission. Finally, Stewart's jet ran out of fuel and crashed in South Dakota. The quick reaction time and military precision with which NORAD intercepted and escorted Stewart's jet was impressive, and exactly what one would have expected from the greatest military power in world history. [86]

But on 9/11, the same NORAD—which had so effortlessly intercepted Stewart's jet in 1999—was nowhere to be found during that two-hour period between the first planes going off course and the last one crashing in a Pennsylvania field. How is it possible that the airspace between Boston and Washington DC, an area which contains the political and economic heart of the nation, was left completely defenseless?

The second plane to hit the New York landmarks had flown off course without communication for 40 minutes. On its way to New York, it actually flew within a few miles of McGuire Air Force base in New Jersey, after the first tower had already been hit!

And how is it possible that Washington DC was left undefended (long after the New York attacks) when Andrews Air Force base is within car-driving distance?

The Air Force jets which did finally arrive were too late. Was this due to NORAD's incompetence, or was the order to scramble the fighter jets deliberately delayed so that the terror attacks could take place?

"It is a great nuisance that knowledge can only be acquired by hard work."

— W. Somerset Maugham (1874-1965)

Given NORAD's impressive performance in the 1999 Payne Stewart disaster, this would suggest that someone high-up in the Air Force establishment may have issued "stand down" orders to some of our Air Force bases. Remember: the Pentagon's Defense Policy Board is headed by Zionist Richard Perle and his gang of warmongering lackeys. [87]

The civilians on this board wield the power to promote career-minded Generals and Admirals. Is it really that hard to believe that a highly placed military leader could have collaborated with the true 9/11 planners?

What makes the Air Force's slow response even more outrageous and suspicious is that previously mentioned Newsweek article which revealed that several Pentagon leaders (Defense Policy Board?) cancelled flight plans for September 11 due to security concerns. [88]

There were other warning signals too which we've reviewed earlier. In light of all these warnings, why wasn't NORAD and it's armada of fighters placed on an even higher alert than they already are? There is only one logical answer to these questions: Certain Pentagon leaders were "in on it".

General Hamid Gul, a former Director of Pakistani Intelligence, hit the nail on the head with his analysis:

"The attacks against New York and Washington were Israeli engineered.

"The attacks started at 8:45, and four flights are diverted from their assigned air space and no Air Force fighter jets scramble until 10:00. Radars are jammed, transponders fail, and no IFF (friend or foe identification) challenge. In Pakistan, if there is no response to an IFF, jets are instantly scrambled. This was clearly an inside job. Will this also be hushed up in the investigation, like the Kennedy assassination?" [89]

This raises another troubling set of questions: Surely the masterminds of the 9/11 operation would have taken the time to learn something about U.S. air defense procedures. They would therefore have realized that hitting New York City with jets hijacked from Boston would have been difficult.

New York is about 30 minutes away by airplane, and jumbo jets fly very slowly when compared to U.S. fighter jets that can crack the sound barrier. Even with a 15-20 minute head start, NORAD's jets could have easily intercepted them, especially the second plane, which took a longer route to New York and flew way off course for 40 minutes.

Why choose Boston's airport and jeopardize the success of the operation? Wouldn't it be safer to just hijack planes from New York's Kennedy or La Guardia Airports? Or even Newark, NJ, which is just across the river. Any plane hijacked from either of those three busy airports would have been unstoppable. Even a plane from Philadelphia's airport would have been much closer to the target than far-away Boston.

The planners were no dummies. They must have counted on receiving protective cover and a window of opportunity by someone high up at U.S. Air command. Why else choose Boston?

In addition to the protection that the planners were to receive from certain Air Force elements, there is another plausible theory for choosing Boston's Logan Airport as well as United and American Airlines planes: It should be noted that the firm which provides security at Boston's Logan Airport and also Newark Airport, and also works extensively with United and American Airlines, is a company called Huntleigh USA. [90]

Claiming that Huntleigh USA's airport security was grossly negligent on 9/11, family members of some of the victims are suing Huntleigh. [91]

Huntleigh USA had been acquired by ICTS International in 1999. ICTS is controlled by two Israelis: Ezra Harel and Menachem Atzmon. [92]

In short, security at Boston's Logan airport was handled (or mishandled) by an Israeli-controlled company. Is there a connection here? Could agents have been infiltrated into Logan Airport under Israeli-owned Huntleigh's cover? It's quite possible.

In the days following the 9/11 attacks, Israeli security professionals began aggressively marketing themselves in order to gain more airport security jobs. [93] Americans should be grateful to have such wonderful allies who care about our airport security so much!

Could some of the failure of our defense systems be attributed to a cyber-attack from computer hackers? Our defense and intelligence systems are very dependent upon technology. A well-coordinated attack on these systems may also have contributed to our inability to expose and prevent the attacks. There is one group who has the capability to attack our military computer systems.

In July of 1999, Ha'aretz (Israel) ran a story headlined: "Hackers Using Israeli Net Site To Strike At Pentagon".

Ha'aretz reported:

"An Israeli Internet site is being used by international computer hackers as a base for electronic attacks on U.S. government and military computer systems, according to Pentagon officials who were quoted in a Washington Times report yesterday.

"According to the Times, the real danger to U.S. national security is the threat posed by foreign intelligence services or governments that could launch electronic warfare against the United States." [94]

And look what the U.S. Department of Justice wrote in this 1998 press release:

"WASHINGTON, DC — The Department of Justice, in conjunction with the FBI, the Air Force Office of Special Investigation, the National Aeronautic and Space Administration, and the Naval Criminal Investigative Service, announced today that the Israeli National Police arrested Ehud Tenebaum, an Israeli citizen, for illegally accessing computers belonging to the Israeli and United States governments, as well as hundreds of other commercial and educational systems in the United States and elsewhere." [95]

No doubt about it. Covert elements in Israel have been targeting the U.S. military's defense systems for some time now. This could very well have been yet another instrument played during the great orchestrated concert of 9/11.

The Curious Collapse Of The Twin Towers

The government/media-approved version of events insists that the fires in the World Trade Center burned so hot that they caused steel supports to melt and buckle, thus triggering a total collapse of the towers. This is a strange theory for a number of reasons:

1. The architects who designed the World Trade Center designed it to withstand the direct impact and fuel fire of a commercial airline crash. Aaron Swirsky, one of the architects of the WTC, described the collapse as "incredible" and "unbelievable". [96]

Lee Robertson, the project's structural engineer said: "I designed it for a 707 to hit it. The Boeing 707 has a fuel capacity comparable to the 767." [97]

2. The history of high-rise building fires provides no case histories of buildings collapsing due to steel beams melting from a fire.

3. The collapse of both towers were both perfectly symmetrical and methodical. The straight-down collapse was identical in appearance to a well-engineered, controlled implosion. A demolition company could not have done it better. Now that we know that all one has to do to bring a tall building straight down is set a fuel fire in it, the well-trained experts who work for demolition companies should all be out of a job by now!

Even a layman with no explosives background should be able to see this. But many specialists in explosives and structural engineering have also made this observation and commented on these inconsistencies.

After the WTC collapse, the Vice President of New Mexico Tech, Van Romero, gave an interview to the Albuquerque Journal. He stated plainly that he believed the WTC collapse was too methodical and that explosive devices must have been placed in key points of both buildings.

Romero said:

"It would be difficult for something from the plane to trigger an event like that. It could have been a relatively small amount of explosives placed in strategic points. One of the things that terrorists are noted for is a diversionary attack and a secondary device." [98]

In that same interview, Romero revealed that he was in Washington DC when the attacks took place. He and a colleague were there to discuss defense research programs for New Mexico Tech. A few days after his interview, Romero abruptly changed his opinion and told the Albuquerque Journal that he no longer believed that bombs brought down the towers. [99]

Romero, who relies upon the Zionist-occupied Pentagon for funding, had suddenly flip-flopped and joined the "melted steel" theorists.

There is more than just my own common sense and Romero's expert opinion to support the belief that the towers were imploded from within. Several witnesses and survivors reported hearing bombs going off inside the World Trade Center. Louie Cacchioli is a firefighter with Engine 47 in Harlem, New York. Cacchioli told People magazine the following:

"I was taking firefighters up in the elevator to the 24th floor to get in position to evacuate workers. On the last trip up, a bomb went off. We think there were bombs set in the building." [100]

Now this whole controversy between the "melted steel" scenario and the detonation scenario is one that could be very easily resolved. All we have to do is dig up the steel beams and examine each and every one of them. If an explosive device caused the steel to fail, there will be tell-tale indications for the engineers to see. But if it was intense heat that caused the steel to "melt" or "buckle", there will be tell-tale signs of that as well.

All we have to do to put an end to this controversy is to closely examine the steel. Right?

Well, don't hold your breath. That's never going to happen.

Thanks in large part to Time magazine's "Man of the Year 2001", New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, the steel beams were quickly recycled before investigators even had the chance to look at them! A media darling and lifelong supporter of Israel, Saint Rudy Giuliani made sure that the "smoking gun" evidence was destroyed—and right quick too.

Much of the steel was recycled in America, but an additional seventy thousand tons of WTC steel was sold to Metals Management—a New York company with a Jewish (Zionist?) president named Alan Ratner. Ratner then turned around and shipped the WTC's steel to China and India for recycling! [101]

China Radio International's English Edition also reported:

"New York's Metals Management is among the firms taking steel from the huge project to clear Ground Zero. The company says it has bought 70,000 tons of scrap from the ruined twin towers. Some of the scrap has been shipped across the Pacific to Asian markets, including China and India. Among the consignments of scrap are the 'very dense' steel girders from Ground Zero, which could finally yield 250,000 to 400,000 tons of scrap for recycling." [102]

Imagine that. The largest criminal investigation in history and the investigators weren't even permitted to see the most important evidence of all—the steel! During the time that Saint Rudy and Ratner the Recycler were destroying evidence, many of the most respected engineers in the country complained not only about the recycling, but also about the federal government's suffocating control of their investigation. On December 25, 2001, the New York Times ran a story about the frustrations of some of the engineers who were called-in to study the cause of the collapse:

"Interviews with a handful of members of the team, which includes some of the nation's most respected engineers, also uncovered complaints that they had at various times been shackled with bureaucratic restrictions that prevented them from interviewing witnesses, examining the disaster site, and requesting crucial information like recorded distress calls to the police and fire departments." [103]

They made their concerns known publicly. Bill Manning, editor of the 125-year-old Fire Engineering magazine, noticed a strange difference between the WTC investigation and other major fire investigations in New York City's history. Manning wrote:

"Did they throw away the locked doors from the Triangle Shirtwaist fire? Did they throw away the gas can used at the Happy Land social club fire?... That's what they're doing at the World Trade Center. The destruction and removal of evidence must stop immediately." [104]

One investigator told the New York Times:

"'This is almost the dream team of engineers in the country working on this, and our hands are tied' said one team member who asked not to be identified. Members have been threatened with dismissal for speaking to the press. 'FEMA is controlling everything' the team member said." [105]

Dr. Frederick W. Mowrer from the Fire Engineering department at the University of Maryland told the New York Times:

"I find the speed with which important evidence has been removed and recycled to be appalling." [106]

Finally, the Times story made this interesting little revelation about St. Rudy and Ratner the Recycler:

"Officials in the mayor's office declined to reply to written and oral requests for comment over a three-day period about who decided to recycle the steel and the concern that the decision might be handicapping the investigation." [107]

It is a very odd form of science that the government and some of its house scientists practice these days. Without a shred of physical evidence, these modern-day alchemists have been able to "prove" their theory that fire caused the towers to collapse. This appears to be yet another monstrous lie. Why else would you destroy the "melted steel"? Ask Rudy.

The Miracle Of Passover

Not just Americans were murdered on 9/11. Nearly 500 foreign nationals from over 80 different nations were killed in the World Trade Center. [108]

As a center of world trade and finance, this is not surprising. It is also commonly known that many Israelis work in the field of international trade and finance. The laws of probability dictate that among the nearly 500 dead foreign nationals, from over 80 different nations, there should have been a considerable number of Israelis. But the number of Israeli dead was suspiciously low, especially when we consider the report, contained in the September 12 Jerusalem Post, that the Israeli embassy in America was bombarded on 9/11 with calls from 4000 worried Israeli families. [109]

George Bush had told the U.S. Congress that he also mourned the deaths of foreign citizens, including "more than 130 Israelis". [110]

But Bush was either misinformed or he was lying. The actual number of Israeli dead at the WTC was far less than 130. It was far less than 100. It was far less than

50. It was far less than 25. It was far less than 10. It was zero! [111A]

That's right! ZERO Israeli nationals lost their lives in the WTC while citizens from over 80 different nations, including such powerhouses of world trade and finance as Granada, Bermuda, Ireland, and the Philippines, all lost people in the WTC.

One Israeli was killed aboard each of the flights that crashed into the WTC. None were killed in the WTC itself. [111B]

We learned earlier about the employees of the Israeli instant messaging company Odigo, who were anonymously informed of the attacks two hours before they took place. [112]

Even more intriguing than the Odigo warnings was the narrow escape of 200 employees of an Israeli government-run company called Zim Israel Navigational. With over 80 vessels, Zim Navigational is the 9th largest shipping company in the world. Just one week before 9/11, Zim Navigational moved out of its World Trade Center offices, with over 200 workers. [113A, 113B]

Company spokesperson Dan Nadler said: "When we watched the pictures, we felt so lucky. Our entire U.S. operations were run out of the 16th floor." [114A, 114B]

Zim moved to Virginia. Nadler added that the aim of the sudden move "was to save on rent". [115A, 115B]

Somehow the claim that a major global shipping firm, backed up by government money, needed to save a few bucks on rent lacks credibility. And oh, what perfect timing!

So who tipped off Zim? Who tipped off Odigo? Who tipped off those Pentagon officials? Who tipped off those Israeli workers in New York? I think it's safe to say it wasn't Osama bin Laden.

Framing Bin Laden

Within minutes after the attack, a parade of politicians and "terrorism experts" appeared on every TV channel all claiming that the attacks were the work of Osama bin Laden. The Bush Administration claimed that it had evidence linking bin Laden to the attacks which it would release to the public in a matter of days. They never did.

Just like they never provided any evidence that he blew up the U.S. embassies in Africa in 1997. The entire case against Osama bin Laden was based on nothing but the repeated claim that he was the culprit for the embassy bombings and for 9/11.

Demands were placed upon the Taliban government of Afghanistan to turn bin Laden over to the U.S. or face an attack. (We established earlier that U.S. military action had already been planned since June.) [116A, 116B]

The Taliban offered to turn bin Laden over to a neutral party if the U.S. provided any evidence to them that he had anything to do with the 1997 U.S. African embassy bombings or the 9/11 attacks. The evidence was never presented to the Taliban for two reasons:

1. There was never any evidence, not even circumstantial.

2. The war to replace the Taliban with a U.S. puppet government was already in motion. The 9/11 attacks served as the perfect excuse, the "incident" to win the support of the American people and kick off the war.

Three months after the attacks, and with the bombing of Afghani peasants in full swing, the U.S. had still not provided one shred of evidence to link bin Laden and his al-Qaeda "network" to 9/11.

People in foreign countries were beginning to ask questions. Then one day, the Pentagon claimed that some unnamed source found a video tape in Afghanistan.

The Bush gang began dropping hints in the media that this video shows Osama bin Laden bragging and admitting his role in the attacks. How convenient! And how improbable.

The "mastermind" of 9/11, who was so brilliant that he pulled off 9/11 without being detected, was careless enough to leave a "confession video" laying around to be discovered by the U.S.!

The video was shown on the news with English subtitles. Bin Laden's voice was so barely audible that even viewers in Arab nations had to rely on the Pentagon's translated subtitles! An obedient American (Zionist) news media accepted the Pentagon story and translation without question. A few Arab media whores were even trotted out to vouch for the tape's authenticity. Aha! This is the "smoking gun" they assured us. But this too is another vicious lie.

On December 20, 2001, the German TV show Monitor (the 60 Minutes of Germany) found the translation of the "confession" video to be not only "inaccurate" but even "manipulative". [117]

Dr. Abdel El M. Hussein and Professor Gernot Rotter made an independent translation and accused the White House translators of "writing a lot of things that they wanted to hear but cannot be heard on the tape no matter how many times you listen to it." [118]

Even more compelling than the revelations of the European press are the actual images of the "confession video". Every photo previously taken of Osama bin Laden shows gaunt facial features and a long thin nose. The Pentagon video of bin Laden clearly shows a man with full facial features and a wide nose. Examine the pictures side-by-side for yourself if you don't believe it. The differences in facial features will jump right out at you. [119]

Would the Pentagon leadership be capable of such deception? Why not?! They were capable of allowing 9/11 to happen, weren't they? The Pentagon itself has even admitted the existence of a special department established for the purpose of planting false stories in the media in order to carry out strategic objectives.

The very Zionist and very pro-war New York Times broke a story in February 2002 which revealed that the Pentagon has plans to deliberately provide false stories to the press as part of an effort to influence policy. The Pentagon set up the Office of Strategic Influence (OSI) for this purpose. A Zionist Air Force General named Simon P. Worden was chosen to head this criminal effort. [120]

Worden's boss is Douglas Feith, another dedicated Zionist who serves as Undersecretary of Defense for Policy. How dedicated of a Zionist is Feith? The Zionist Organization of America (ZOA) honored Feith and his father at an award dinner in 1999. So I'll let ZOA's 1997 press release tell you about Feith:

"This year's honorees will be Dalck Feith and Douglas J. Feith, the noted Jewish philanthropists and pro-Israel activists. Dalck Feith will receive the ZOA's special Centennial Award at the dinner, for his lifetime of service to Israel and the Jewish people. His son, Douglas J. Feith, the former Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, will receive the prestigious Louis D. Brandeis Award at the dinner." [121] (Google users enter: feith zionist organization award) disinformation department, reports directly to a Zionist Pentagon boss who was a recipient of the “prestigious” Louis Brandeis Award. Brandeis, a former Supreme Court judge, was one of the key Zionist powerbrokers who helped influence Woodrow Wilson into joining World War I as part of the Zionist-British Balfour deal we learned about earlier.

One year has passed since the 9/11 attacks and the FBI has not uncovered any al-Qaeda cells in the United States, nor has it found any paper trail. The London Times reported:

“Thousands of FBI agents have rounded up more than 1,300 suspects across America since September 11, but they have failed to find a single al-Qaeda cell operating in the United States.... Tom Ridge, Director of Homeland Security, could not explain why none had been caught.” [122]

In April of 2002, FBI director Robert Mueller—the same Robert Mueller who admitted that several hijacker identities were in doubt due to identity thefts—made this stunning announcement:

“In our investigation, we have not uncovered a single piece of paper—either here or in the treasure trove of information that has turned up in Afghanistan and elsewhere—that mentioned any aspect of the September 11 plot.” [123]

Predictably, Directors Ridge and Mueller attribute this total lack of any evidence to the skill of the al-Qaeda “terrorist network”.

If you’ve read this far, you should know better. The reason that the U.S. has been unable to uncover a shred of evidence to link al-Qaeda to 9/11 is because al-Qaeda didn’t do it!

Whistleblowers: The FBI Agents Who Tried To Prevent 9/11

The FBI’s field agents are “the good guys”. It’s the ass kissing, spineless careerists at the top who have corrupted the agency.

In the critical weeks and months leading up to that fateful day, numerous clues were picked up by loyal FBI field agents. Some of these agents were so alarmed at what they thought was an unfolding terror plot, that they tried to convince their superiors to investigate deeper. These agents were either ignored, threatened, or fired.

Each of these FBI agents thought that they were on the trail of an Arab terror plot and, unless they’ve read this paper, they probably still believe so. We can forgive them their ignorance if they haven’t realized yet that the trail they were on was not that of Arab terrorists, but rather Mossad agents impersonating Arab terrorists. (Much more on that later.)

The essential point is that these agents were on to something big that someone didn’t want them to be digging into.

There is FBI Special Agent Robert Wright. The public interest law firm Judicial Watch is representing agent Wright. Wright claims that he was met with retaliation and threats from his bosses and from the Justice Department who told him they wanted his probes to go no further. [124] Wright maintains that if his investigation had been allowed to continue, the attacks could have been prevented.

There is FBI agent Coleen Rowley. The gutsy Rowley wrote a 13-page letter to FBI Director Robert Mueller in which she actually accuses the director of her own agency of “a subtle skewing of the facts”. [125] Rowley’s letter also charged that the agency refused to react to evidence of a pending terror plot.

According to Rowley, the FBI’s obstruction was so blatant that her and some of her fellow agents jokingly speculated that key FBI personnel must have been moles working for Osama bin Laden! [126]

Rowley’s main point of contention was the agency’s failure to go after Zacharias Moussoui, the “20th hijacker”, even after his flight school instructor reported his suspicious behavior to the FBI. Moussoui, you will recall, was the French Algerian who couldn’t speak French to his flight school instructor.

There is FBI agent Sibel Edmonds. Edmonds was an FBI wiretap translator. She claims that another FBI translator was working for the Mossad and that the Mossad also tried to recruit Edmonds to make phony translations for the purpose of misdirecting investigations. When agent Edmonds refused, the Mossad threatened her safety! [127]

When she brought these allegations to the attention of her superiors, she was fired for being “disruptive”. The Washington Post briefly reported this story without mentioning the name of the nation that tried to recruit Edmonds. But the Post did reveal that Edmonds and the other translator “trace their ethnicity” to this certain “Middle Eastern” country. [128]

Agent Sibel Edmonds is not an Arab. Edmonds is Jewish. Therefore we know that the “Middle Eastern” nation which the Post chose not to name is Israel. (No big surprise there!)

Sibel Edmonds deserves a lot of credit for defying the Mossad and blowing the whistle to her superiors. Instead, she was fired for her patriotic efforts, proving once again that Zionists are willing to hurt innocent Jews.

There is FBI agent John M. Cole, program manager for FBI intelligence investigations covering India, Pakistan, and Afghanistan. In the same Washington Post story about Edmunds, it was reported that Cole also wrote a letter to FBI chief Mueller warning him about lax security procedures in the hiring of translators. [129]

Dedicated agents such as Wright, Rowley, Cole, Edmunds, and others who have spoken anonymously, had to be stopped from going after “Muslim terrorists”. If not so obstructed, they would in time come to discover that they weren’t really al-Qaeda terrorists!

Not only were investigations blocked before 9/11, but they continue to be blocked after 9/11. The cover-up is so blatant that members of both the House and Senate Intelligence Committees complained directly to CIA Director George Tenet and Attorney General John Ashcroft. The Los Angeles Times reported:

“Lawmakers leading the investigation of intelligence failures surrounding the 9/11 attacks are increasingly concerned that the CIA and Justice department are actively impeding their efforts.... The flare up centers on obstacles congressional investigators say the agencies have strewn in their path.” [130]

That’s exactly what FBI agents Wright, Rowley, Edmunds, and Cole said happened to them when they tried to investigate before the attacks! By the way, did I mention that the FBI is under the jurisdiction of yet another Zionist, named Michael Chertoff? Chertoff is the Director of the Criminal Division of the U.S. Justice Department. FBI chief Robert Mueller has to answer to Chertoff. Perhaps that explains Mueller’s highly pathetic—and highly revealing—speech before the Anti-Defamation League’s 24th Annual National Leadership Conference, held in May of 2002:

“I have long admired and respected the work of ADL, and I appreciate your longstanding support of the FBI. I know that under my predecessor, Louis Freeh, this partnership reached new heights.... I am absolutely committed to building on that relationship. We in the FBI tremendously value your perspectives and your partnership. Your insights and research into extremism are particularly helpful to us, shedding light on the changing nature of the terrorist threats facing America. Your support of hate crime and terrorist investigations, which are now front and center in the work of the FBI, is essential to us. And the training and education you provide for the FBI and for law enforcement have never been more relevant. That includes the conference on extremist and terrorist threats you are sponsoring later this month at the FBI Academy.” [131]

Just shoot me now! The FBI is in “partnership” with the Zionist ADL and relies upon this criminal smear-group for “insights and research” and “education and training”.

Didn’t anyone ever tell FBI chief Mueller that, when the FBI raided the California offices of the ADL in 1993, they found that the ADL had computerized files on nearly 10,000 people across the country, and that more than 75% of the information had been illegally obtained from police, FBI files, and state driver’s license data banks? [132] Isn’t Mueller aware that the San Francisco Superior Court awarded $150,000 in court judgments against the Anti-Defamation League in connection with this FBI bust? [133]

What other group in America could get away with not only stealing FBI files (a federal offense), but then becoming “partners” with the FBI? So why would FBI Director Mueller disregard the fact that the ADL is a criminal group that was caught spying on U.S. citizens by his own FBI? Why does Mueller ignore the “insights” of his own agents while thanking the criminal ADL for its “advice”?

It’s because Mueller and his kind are empty, career-minded “yes men” who understand that it doesn’t pay to defy the Zionist Mafia. Ass-kissers like Mueller get promoted. Honest agents like Wright, Rowley, Edmonds, and Cole go nowhere fast.

The Anthrax Letters: Another Anti-Arab Frame-Up

On October 3, 2001, an Egyptian-American scientist named Dr. Ayaad Assaad sat terrified in a vault-like interrogation room at an FBI office in Washington DC. It was not yet known that a pair of letters containing deadly anthrax had been mailed to NBC newsman Tom Brokaw and U.S. Senator Tom Daschle. Five people would die as a result of the anthrax mailings which had been mailed from New Jersey.

Billions of pieces of mail were delayed, costing the U.S. Post Office to suffer huge losses. The news media ran nothing but anthrax stories night and day. Politicians and commentators speculated that Osama bin Laden or Saddam Hussein were behind the letters.

Why was the FBI questioning Asaad? Before the anthrax murders were committed, someone had sent the FBI an anonymous letter accusing Dr. Assaad of being a bio-terrorist with a grudge against the United States. [134]

The letter was sent on September 25—before the first anthrax case was even diagnosed. The FBI agents soon were convinced that the anonymous letter was a hoax and a frame-up attempt. Assaad was cleared of suspicion and released. Assaad later told the Hartford Courant of Connecticut:

“I was so angry when I read the letter, I broke out in tears. Whoever this person is, knew in advance what was going to happen and created a suitable, well-fitted scapegoat for this action. You do not need to be a Nobel Laureate to put two and two together.” [135]

If we find out who would have wanted to frame Dr. Assaad in particular, and Arabs in general, we will likely find out who was behind the anthrax murders.

[Editor’s note: For the “larger picture” answer to that question, SPECTRUM readers are likely to think back to our January 2002 front-page feature story from Dr. Len Horowitz titled The CIA’s Role In The Anthrax Mailings: Could Our Spies Be Agents For Military-Industrial Sabotage, Terrorism, And Even Population Control? Of course such a scam involved a coordination with many other groups and was thus necessarily contrived from a much higher level of above-the-law manipulators, as was discussed at that time. Moreover, the letters to NBC newsman Tom Brokaw and U.S. Senator Tom Daschle were most likely warnings to suggest they adopt an attitude of better compliance with the “party line”—or else.]

That the wording of the anthrax letters was contrived in such a manner as to frame Arabs/Muslims is so self-evident that even a mentally retarded child could see through it.

Here is the wording of the Daschle letter: “You cannot stop us. We have this anthrax. You die now. Are you afraid? Death to America. Death to Israel. Allah is great.” [136]

And the Brokaw letter:

“This is next. Take Penacilin now. Death to America. Death to Israel. Allah is great.” [137]

Ask yourself: Who would want to frame Arabs? Who would want to link the

THE CONTROLLERS: THE HIDDEN RULERS OF EARTH IDENTIFIED

BY COMMANDER X

Humankind continues to wage all-out battle with those who have kept us as their slaves since seemingly the beginning of time. They are: • The Illuminati • The Greys • The Counterfeit Race.

They have, says the author (who is of military intelligence) kept us in human bondage by: • Controlling our minds • Planting imperfect thoughts in our heads • Kidnapping humans • Impregnating women • Causing global warfare and ethnic hatred • Creating a false economic system, and • Assassinating and “replacing” our most trusted spiritual leaders, rulers, and elected officials.

interests of the U.S. and the interests of Israel in the obvious way these ridiculous letters attempt to? Remember the Lavon Affair? Remember the USS Liberty? Remember the dancing Israelis? Remember Netanyahu’s saying 9/11 was good for US-Israeli relations?

A good place to start searching would be the U.S. bio-weapons lab at Fort Detrick, MD. The Ames strain of anthrax has, in fact, been traced to Fort Detrick, where Assaad once worked until he was laid off in 1997. After he was let go from Fort Detrick, Assaad filed a federal discrimination suit based upon the brutal abuse and harassment that he had endured from some highly suspicious co-workers.

In 1991, Assaad found an 8-page poem in his mailbox which became a courtroom exhibit. The poem had 235 lines, many of them lewd and sexually explicit, mocking Assaad. Along with the poem, the perpetrators left Assaad a rubber camel with a large penis attached to it! [138] This was an obvious attempt to mock Assaad’s Arab ethnicity.

Assaad said that when he brought the poem to the attention of his supervisor, Col. David Franz, Franz kicked him out of his office! [139] Now these weren’t immature college kids doing this. This outrageous emotional abuse was carried out by highly trained scientists who obviously wanted Assaad out.

One of the scientists known to have been a leader in the horrible attacks on Dr. Assaad was Dr. Lt. Col. Philip Zack. Philip Zack was to “voluntarily” leave Fort Detrick shortly after Assaad brought Zack’s poem and camel to the attention of his supervisors. [140] Strike one on Dr. Zack!

In an indirectly related matter, another Fort Detrick researcher, Dr. Mary Beth Downs, told army investigators that on several occasions in January and February of 1992, she had come to work several times to discover that someone had been conducting anthrax research after hours. [141] Who could that person have been?

Documents from that 1992 inquiry confirm that an unauthorized person was observed on a surveillance camera being let into the lab at 8:40 p.m. on January 23, 1992.

Who was this unauthorized person caught sneaking into the bio-weapons lab, during the same time period that anthrax research was being done after hours? None other than Lt. Col. Philip Zack! [142] The same Zack who was forced to resign a year earlier because of his horrible abuse of Dr. Assaad. Strike two on Dr. Zack!

Why would Dr. Zack and others have such an animosity towards Dr. Assaad? What would motivate him to help write a 235-line hate poem? What motive would he have to frame Arabs for the deadly anthrax murders?

Well, some research into the name “Zack” reveals that it is a fairly common Jewish surname, derived from the Old Testament “Zacharias”. Dr. Zack is Jewish, and given his obvious, fanatical hatred of Arabs, we can safely deduce that he is a hardcore Zionist. Strike three on Dr. Zack!

All of the above is public information. Assaad’s 1990s legal proceedings, Dr. Down’s testimony, the surveillance video of Zack sneaking into Fort Detrick one year after he had “resigned”—it’s all there. The Hartford Courant exposed all of these facts [143], as did the Toronto Globe & Mail [144], the Seattle Times [145], and other publications.

Just the facts contained in the Hartford Courant story alone should be enough to at least indict Philip Zack. So why didn’t we see Dr. Zack’s face on our TV screens? Why hasn’t Dr. Zack been given a lie detector test? What forces in the media and the government are protecting Zack from being exposed as the logical prime suspect?

The plot thickens (and sickens) even more.

It is not my intent to smear, defame, or offend Jewish people here. But to not mention the ethnicity of certain players in this fantastic drama would be like writing an exposé on the Italian Mafia without mentioning that it’s major players are Italians. Remember: some of the Zionists’ harshest critics are themselves Jewish.

Dr. Assaad had been cleared and Dr. Zack was coming under a small amount of media and FBI suspicion. Enter, from stage left, one Barbara Rosenberg, a Jewish environmentalist professor and political activist with no expertise in bio-warfare. [146]

Rosenberg suddenly went public with the claim that she knew who the anthrax killer was. [147] She was supported in this effort by another Zionist New York Times journalist named Nicholas D. Kristof, who openly called for the arrest of Hatfill! [148]

Quietly and behind the scenes, Rosenberg began directing investigators towards an American scientist named Dr. Stephen Hatfill (and therefore away from Dr. Zack). The Washington Post confirmed that it was Rosenberg who helped put authorities on the trail of the innocent Dr. Hatfill. [149]

The name of Hatfill trickled forth from the news media. In a matter of weeks, the trickle became a media flood. Dr. Hatfill became a household name. Hatfill called a news conference to protest his innocence. There is not a shred of evidence against him and he passed an FBI lie detector test. [150]

But the Zionist-controlled media lynchmob, led by the evil Rosenberg and the yellow journalist Kristoff, continued to pursue and harass Hatfill. Dr. Hatfill may never be imprisoned, but his life and career have been destroyed by these false allegations and the media hype. Lt. Col. Zack is off the hook.

What these mad Zionist scientists and their media brethren have done to Dr. Assaad and Dr. Hatfill is monstrous beyond belief. It is clear that these anthrax letters were first intended to be an anti-Arab frame-up with Assaad meant to take the blame. When that didn’t work, these fanatical Zionists (who always stick together like glue) put the media and the FBI on poor Dr. Hatfill’s back, and wrecked his career and reputation in the process.

Why hasn’t Dr. Zack been given an FBI lie detector test? Ask FBI boss and ADL “partner” Robert Mueller!

Hundreds Of Mossad Agents Running Wild In America!

We talked at length about the five dancing Israeli “movers” (Mossad agents) who were arrested and placed in solitary confinement after they were caught celebrating the 9/11 horror show.

We also reviewed how the Israeli owner of Urban Moving Systems, Dominick Suter, then suddenly abandoned his “moving company” and fled for Israel on 9/14.

But there were still more Israeli “movers” in America whose actions raise serious suspicions.

In October of 2001, three more Israeli “movers” were stopped in Plymouth, PA because of their suspicious behavior. These “movers” were seen dumping furniture near a restaurant dumpster!

When the restaurant manager approached the driver, a “Middle Eastern” man later identified as Moshe Elmakias fled the scene. [151]

The manager made note of the truck’s sign—which read “Moving Systems Incorporated”—and called the police. When the police spotted the truck, two other Israelis—Ayelet Reisler and Ron Katar—began acting suspiciously. [152]

The Plymouth police searched the truck and found a video. The Israelis were taken into custody and the video tape was played at the police station. The video revealed footage of Chicago with zoomed-in shots of the Sears Tower. [153]

The police quickly alerted the FBI and it was also discovered that the Israelis had falsified travel logs and phony paperwork on them. [154]

They were also unable to provide a name and telephone number for the customer that they claimed to have been working for. These Israelis were up to some sort of dirty business, and you can be sure it had nothing to do with moving furniture.

On October 10, 2001, CNN made a brief mention of a foiled terrorist bomb plot in the Mexican parliament building. They promised to bring any further developments of this story to their viewers, but the incident was never heard of again in America.

But the story appeared in bold headlines on the front page of the major Mexican newspapers [155] and was also posted on the official website of the Mexican Justice Department. [156]

Two terrorist suspects were apprehended in the Mexican Chamber of Deputies. Caught red-handed, they had in their possession a high-powered gun, nine hand grenades, and C-4 plastic explosives (great stuff for demolishing buildings). [157]

Within days, this blockbuster story not only disappeared from the Mexican press, but the terrorists were released and deported! The two terrorists were Salvador Gerson Sunke and Sar ben Zui. Can you guess what their ethnicity was? Gerson Sunke was a Mexican Jew and Zui was a colonel with the Israeli special forces. [158]

Can you say “Mossad”?

The story in El Diario de Mexico went on to reveal that the Zionist terrorists had fake Pakistani passports on them. [159]

Can you say “false-flag operation”?

The probable motive of this particular botched terrorist operation was to involve oil-rich Mexico in the “War on Terrorism”. (The War on Israel’s enemies would be a more accurate description.)

Mexico is no military power, but the psychological trauma of an “Arab” attack on Mexico would surely have induced Mexico to provide unlimited cheap oil to her American “protector”. With cheap oil flowing to America at rock bottom prices from Mexico, the U.S. could better afford to break off relations with the oil-rich Arabs in general, and Saudi Arabia in particular.

That's why the conspiracy chose so many Saudi identities to steal for the 9/11 operation.

In November of 2001, 6 more suspicious Israelis were detained in an unspecified mid-eastern state. They had in their possession box cutters, oil pipeline plans, and nuclear power plant plans. [160]

The local police called in the Feds, and Immigration officials took over the scene and released the men without calling the FBI. The Jerusalem Post [161], the Miami Herald [162], and the Times of London [163] all carried this amazing story and all revealed how furious FBI officials were that these suspects with nuclear power plant plans were allowed to go free.

Of course, the corruption-riddled FBI would only have caved-in to Zionist pressure from the Justice Department's Criminal Division boss, Michael Chertoff, and also from the ADL's "partner", FBI boss Robert Mueller—who would no doubt have found a way to release those Israeli terror suspects too.

In December of 2001, the Los Angeles Times published the story of how two Jewish terrorists were arrested by the FBI for plotting to blow-up the office of U.S. Congressman of Arab descent, Darrell Issa (R-CA), and also a California mosque. [164]

Irv Rubin and Earl Kruger of the radical Zionist Jewish Defense League (JDL) were charged with conspiracy to destroy a building by means of explosives. This story got brief national coverage, but quickly disappeared too. These Zionists sure love blowing up buildings and killing innocent people, don't they?

In May of 2002, yet another moving van was pulled over in Oak Harbor, Washington, near the Whidbey Island Naval Air Station. Fox News reported that the van was pulled over for speeding, shortly after midnight. The passengers told the police they were delivering furniture, but because it was so late at night, the police weren't buying the story. A bomb-sniffing dog was brought in and the dog detected the presence of TNT and RDX plastic explosives in the truck (great stuff for demolishing buildings). Both Fox News [165] and the Ha'aretz newspaper of Israel [166] reported that the two "movers" were Israelis.

According to FOX News, throughout late 2000 and 2001, a total of 200 Israeli spies were arrested. [167]

It was the largest spy ring to be uncovered in the history of the U.S. The Washington Post also reported that some of these Israelis were arrested in connection with the 9/11 investigation. [168]

Carl Cameron of FOX News Channel did an excellent four-part nationally televised series of investigations into this blockbuster scandal. But FOX pulled the investigative series after Zionist groups complained to FOX executives. FOX even went so far as to remove the written transcripts of the series from its website! In its place was posted a chilling Orwellian message which reads: "This story no longer exists." [169]

Fortunately, for the sake of history, the FOX transcripts were copied onto many other websites, and all four parts are available for your review.

The FOX series and other mainstream news media sources revealed that many of these Israelis were army veterans with electronics and explosives expertise. Many of them failed lie detector tests.

FBI agents told FOX that some of their past investigations were compromised because suspects had been tipped off by Israeli wiretapping specialists. It was discovered that Israeli companies such as Comverse and Amdocs have the capability to tap American telephones (great for blackmailing all those wife-cheating politicians).

FBI agents also told FOX they believed the Israelis had advance knowledge of the 9/11 attacks—which certainly would explain why no Israelis died in the WTC.

Still another U.S. official informed FOX that some of the detained Israelis actually had links to 9/11, but he refused to describe the nature of those links.

The FBI official told FOX's Carl Cameron: "Evidence linking these Israelis to 9/11 is classified. I cannot tell you about the evidence that has been gathered. It is classified information." [170]

Then there was that small army of Israeli "art students" who were arrested for trying to sneak into secured U.S. Federal buildings and staking out 36 Department of Defense sites. Some of these suspicious "art students" even showed up at the homes of Federal employees. [171]

Ron Hatchett, a Department of Defense analyst, told Channel 11, KHOU news in Houston, that he believed the "art students" were gathering intelligence for future attacks. Here's an excerpt from the October 1, 2001 KHOU investigative report by Anna Werner:

"Could federal buildings in Houston and other cities be under surveillance by foreign groups? That's what some experts are asking after federal law enforcement and security officials—nationally and in Houston—described for the 11 News Defenders a curious pattern of behavior by a group of people claiming to be Israeli art students....

THE SMOKEY GOD AND OTHER INNER EARTH MYSTERIES

Half of the book consists of a reprint of the classic SMOKY GODS written by a Swedish fisherman who claims he found his way inside the Earth and had an amazing encounter with a race of super-wise giants who have lived inside the Earth since ancient times. Book also contains evidence that at least some UFOs may come from inside Earth and are piloted by a race of super-beings who have survived, largely unknown to the surface world. Includes interview with an inner Earth inhabitant from a city beneath Mt. Shasta.

"Hatchett says they could be doing what he would be doing if he were a terrorist: sizing up the situation. 'We need to know what are the entrances to this particular building. We need to know what are the surveillance cameras that are operating. We need to know how many guards are at this operation, when do they take breaks?' Says Hatchett: 'This is not a bunch of kids selling artwork.'

"A former Defense Department analyst, Hatchett believes groups may be gathering intelligence for possible future attacks. 'Some organization, thinking in terms of a potential retaliation against the U.S. government, could be scouting out potential targets and looking for targets that would be vulnerable.'

"And a source tells the Defenders of another federal memo, stating that, besides Houston and Dallas, the same thing has happened at sites in New York, Florida, and six other states, and even more worrisome, at 36 sensitive Department of Defense sites. 'One defense site you can explain' says Hatchett, 'well, that was just chance, but thirty-six? That's a pattern.' " [172]

A federal memo stated that these art students may have had ties to an "Islamic terror group". [173]

Remember the bombing of the King David Hotel in 1946, and how the "Arab terrorists" were actually Irgun terrorists? Remember the Zionist terrorists caught in Mexico with Arab passports? Remember the official motto of the Mossad: "By Way Of Deception Thou Shalt Do War."

Are you getting the picture? Can you say "false-flag operations"?

Before his excellent work was silenced, FOX's Cameron reported this amazing bit of information:

"Investigators within the DEA, INS, and FBI have all told FOX News that to pursue or even suggest 'Israeli spying' is considered career suicide." [174]

Did you catch that? If an investigator dares to mention Israeli spying, he has committed career suicide! And if a journalist like FOX's Cameron dares to bring this scandal to light, he is told to shut his mouth. If they persist, they may even be called "anti-Semitic"—a label which has served as the "kiss of death" for many a journalistic and political career.

This means the Zionist Mafia can do whatever it wants, whenever it wants, and however it wants—including orchestrating, financing, executing, and covering up the true story of events in the Middle East, the 9/11 massacre, and the ensuing "War on Terrorism" (war on Israel's enemies).

Now do you remember the Mossad's "warning" about the 200 "al-Qaeda terrorists" said to have been preparing major attacks in the U.S.? [175]

At the time of this writing, we are one year into the largest investigation in American history, and not one of these 200 "terrorists" has yet to be uncovered. [176]

But—200 Israeli spies were uncovered, among them many military members, electronics experts, wiretapping and phone tapping specialists, and explosives experts, with the skills to bring down tall buildings. [177]

Logic and common sense lead to the conclusion that the "200 al-Qaeda terrorists" were, in reality, 200 Zionist terrorists sent to frame the Arabs for terrorist attacks and drag America into a war. History repeats itself.

But who will teach this history to the American people when the Zionists control the information industry? The Zionist Mafia and their ass-kissing careerist henchmen in media, government, academia, and business have all of the bases covered.

Zionists Want World War III

In January of 2001, 9 months before the 9/11 attacks, a well-known economist and political figure with worldwide intelligence connections issued the following prediction:

"A new Middle East war of the general type and implications indicated, will occur if certain specified incidents materialize. It will occur only if the combination of the Israeli government and certain Anglo-American circles wish to have it occur. If they should wish it to occur, the incidents to 'explain' that occurrence will be arranged. Contrary to widespread childish opinion, most of the important things that happen in the world, happen because powerful forces intend them to happen, not because of some so-called 'sociological' or other statistical coincidence of the types reported for the popular edification of the easily deluded. A new Middle East war, bigger than any yet seen, is inevitable under presently reigning global influences." [178]

The man who made that prediction is the perpetual presidential "wannabe" Lyndon LaRouche. Now LaRouche may be a cult-like figure with some really weird interpretations of history, but his intelligence contacts are legitimate, and many of his political and economic forecasts have been accurate in the past. Considering all the history and recent events reviewed in this paper, and the logical conclusions which they lead us to, the above prediction was "right on the money".

The Zionists (and also Anglo-American Internationalist interests) do not conceal their desire for World War III, with American troops doing the dying. They pulled off 9/11, turned us into Arab-hating fanatics, put an American flag in our hands, and are marching us off to die for Zionism. Just read what Ra'anun Gissin—a senior adviser to and spokesman for Ariel "the Butcher" Sharon—said in an interview with the Arizona Daily Star in April of 2002:

"The terror attacks on September 11 and extreme turmoil in the Middle East point to one thing—World War III. We've been fighting a war for the past 18 months, which is the harbinger of World War III. The world is going to fight, whether they like it or not. I'm sure." [179]

Here's another warmongering, inflammatory quote from Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, urging the U.S. to attack Iraq:

"[Attacking Iraq now would be] 'quite dangerous, but postponing it would be more dangerous. The problem today is not if, but when.'" [180]

And here's another warmongering quote from an editorial that former Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu wrote for the New York Post and headlined "Today We Are All Americans":

"What is at stake today is nothing less than the survival of civilization.... I have absolute confidence that if we, the citizens of the free world, led by President Bush, will marshal the enormous reserves of power at our disposal, harness the steely resolve of a free people, and mobilize our collective will to eradicate this evil from the face of the earth.... The international terrorist network is thus based on regimes—Iran, Iraq, Syria, Taleban Afghanistan, Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority, and several other Arab regimes such as the Sudan. For the bin Ladens of the world, Israel is merely a sideshow.

America is the target." [181]

Note the ominous similarity between Netanyahu's lies and the first words that Sivan Kurzberg—one of the dancing Israeli "movers"—spoke to the arresting police officer on 9/11:

"We are Israelis. We are not your problem. Your problems are our problems. The Palestinians are your problem." [182]

Recall Netanyahu's September 11 comment about the attacks being "very good" for Israeli-U.S. relations. The title of the New York Times article which carried that comment was: "Spilled Blood Is Seen As Bond That Draws Two Nations Closer". [183]

Ariel Sharon used the same "linking tactic" in a speech before the notoriously defamatory Zionist Anti-Defamation League:

"There is a moral equivalency and direct connection between America's continuous operations against al-Qaeda in Afghanistan, and any other Israeli Defense Forces operation to defeat terrorism" Sharon said in a speech Monday to the Anti-Defamation League. "They are acts of self-defense against the same forces of evil and darkness bent on destroying civilized society." [184]

Notice how Sharon, Netanyahu, the Israeli "movers", and the totally Zionist-dominated New York Times and New York Post all used the same strategic tactic of linking the interests of the U.S. with the interests of Israel. The same ploy was utilized in the anthrax letters: "Death to America! Death to Israel!"

Do you see how these evil Zionist bastards play the game? They turn their enemies into our enemies, while pretending to be our "allies". They laugh and celebrate as thousands of innocent Americans are burned and crushed to death. And when someone dares to shine the light of truth upon them, they label you an "anti-Semite"! Can you not see that we've been played for fools?

Behold this bit of bold hypocrisy by American Jewish Congress President Jack Rosen:

"I don't think Palestinians celebrating the death of thousands of Americans should go unchallenged." [185]

Is that so, Jack? What about the Israelis who celebrated the death of thousands of Americans? Why haven't you challenged that?

Now read this quote from the Prince of Darkness himself—Pentagon big shot and Zionist fanatic Richard Perle:

"Neither the President nor the British Prime Minister will be deflected by Saddam's diplomatic charm offensive, the feckless moralizing of 'peace' lobbies, or the unsolicited advice of retired generals.” [186]

Perle not only lays down the policy line for Bush, but apparently for British Prime Minister Tony Blair as well. And note how casually he dismissed the sound advice of those retired generals who warned that a war against Iraq was unnecessary. But what does Perle care!? His kids won't be dying.

As always, it will only be the children of the flag-waving masses, which Perle and his Zionist brothers and sisters see as nothing more than cannon fodder for Zionism, who will do the fighting and killing.

What threat did Iraq ever pose to the U.S.? None! Iraq and other Arab nations are to be crushed so that Israel can have a freer hand to expand in the Middle East.

It appears that George Bush goes along with the wishes of these Zionist gangsters for his own political protection and/or advancement, but it is unclear as to what extent he is truly in agreement with them. Bush and Cheney may even be under some form of blackmail.

But they also represent oil interests, and the Caspian Sea area is rich in oil and minerals. Plans have been in the works for years to build pipelines to take the oil from the Caspian, through Afghanistan and Pakistan, and then out to sea. The “oil angle” may be a secondary contributing factor behind the “War on Terrorism”, one much nearer to the hearts of Bush/Cheney than the cause of Zionism.

It is clear from just the well publicized information that the president had at least some type of knowledge that a major attack was coming. Do you remember Bush's strange behavior when he was first told of the attacks? He was reading to a group of Florida school children when his Chief of Staff, Andy Card, whispered the news of the second tower being hit in New York. Instead of just calmly excusing himself and apologizing to the kids for having to leave suddenly, Bush quickly shifted his eyes at the camera, turned somber, and then returned to reading for another 15 minutes! [187]

Our major cities were under attack, thousands of his countrymen were burning or jumping to their deaths on live TV, and more planes were still unaccounted for. Yet Bush just sat there with a stupid look on his face and then went back to reading a story about a goat. Is this the reaction of a man who was truly surprised by these horrible attacks? Or is this more indicative of the reaction of a guilty person who, like FDR just before Pearl Harbor, was expecting an attack and therefore was not surprised? [188]

There is one more interesting coincidence worth mentioning. During the whole time that these terror attacks were expected, Bush was out of Washington DC on what the media had dubbed “the longest vacation in presidential history”. Time magazine for August 5, 2002 explains:

“Getting ready for a vacation can be so hectic. It certainly was for George W. Bush last week. While Laura Bush left the White House early to get the ranch in Crawford, Texas, ready for a month-long holiday (one of the longest in presidential history), the President rushed through some last-minute errands.” [189]

Bush was in Texas for the entire month of August, returned to the White House briefly, then left again and ended up in a Florida classroom on September 11. (What a tough job, eh?)

Is this of any significance? Well, I don't know about you, but if I had the kind of intelligence network and advance warning that we know certain people had—and surely a sitting U.S. president would also have had—I would not have been in Washington DC on September 11 either!

There are many politicians and journalists in America who “carry the Zionists' water” for them only because they are careerists who understand very well from whence their bread is buttered. My suspicion is that if Bush doesn't deliver a war against Iraq, and then World War III against other Arab states, Joe Lieberman may be installed as President in 2004, with McCain running as an independent to draw votes away from Bush. Will Bush—like Wilson in WW I, and FDR in WW II—go all the way and deliver WW III to the Zionist Mafia? At the time of this writing it does appear that way. But if Bush should hesitate (like his father did in 1991) to “go all the way”, the Zionist Mafia will try to replace him with Lieberman in 2004.

Iraq knows who is behind the planned attack on their nation. In an interview with CBS's Dan Rather, Aziz accused the Zionists:

“This war which the Bush government is planning does not serve the basic interests in the long run of the American nation. It serves the imperialistic interest of Israel and the Zionist groups who have now a great say in the American policy.” [190]

How sadly ironic it is that the Arabs know the Zionist Mafia dominates America, but the American people are oblivious to it. But who will tell the American people when the Zionists dominate the media too?

Closing Argument

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we have established that the political force of Zionism is a dangerous supremacist movement, and that its leaders have always placed the interests of International Zionism ahead of the interests of their respective nations.

We have demonstrated that this Zionist Mafia will send unsuspecting Americans to war to fight for their interests. We have seen how Germany and Great Britain were selfishly used for their purposes.

We have demonstrated the role played by Zionism in helping bring about some of the 20th Century's greatest disasters—such as World Wars I and II and the Treaty of Versailles. We have learned about Zionist massacres of unarmed Arab civilians and Zionist terrorism designed to frame Arabs and poison relations between the U.S. and Israel's Arab enemies.

We learned about the awesome Zionist power structure that exists in America, covering the Congress, the Pentagon, the mass media, and more. We have established that the Zionists, through their media monopoly, have the ability to cover-up and conceal some of the most amazing stories of both the past and present.

We have established a primary motive: To turn the U.S. into a nation of Arab haters and Israel lovers eager to go to war against Zionism's Arab enemies.

We have established a secondary motive: To brutally crush the Palestinian resistance under the cover of a major U.S. “war on terrorism”. Sharon's tanks were unleashed on September 12 in a major escalation of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Because of the 9/11 attacks, few noticed and still fewer even cared.

We have established numerous precedents for these type of “false-flag” operations as well as cases of Israeli agents impersonating Arab terrorists (Lavon Affair, USS Liberty, Mossad agents caught with Arab passports, Muslim impersonators caught in India, etc.).

We have established that the Zionists have the logistical capability and the opportunity to orchestrate such an operation—with the best intelligence service in the world, key positions of power at the Pentagon and in U.S. intelligence, experts with explosives, access to WTC, access to Logan Airport and U.S. Air and American Air, unlimited supply of money, able to thwart investigators with phony wire translations and U.S. moles, etc.

We have established that the Zionist-controlled media has the ability to cover-up the facts contained in this paper, even after the stories had initially penetrated their own media screens. We have established that the Zionists have the power to ruin the careers of U.S. Congressmen, Senators, Presidents, law enforcement officials, and journalists.

Conversely, they also have the power to advance the careers of those who serve their interests.

We have seen that they have the ability to block investigations, as well as misdirect and thwart existing investigations.

We have established that the Zionists were the beneficiaries of the 9/11 attacks, whereas the Arabs have been hurt greatly by the 9/11 attacks.

We have exposed numerous lies linking Arabs to 9/11. We have established how evidence against Arabs was planted and contrived in order to misdirect investigators—such as the wording of anthrax letters, phony passports, stolen passports, Korans and Arab flight manuals left conveniently behind for FBI filed agents to find in cars and “forgotten” suitcases, Atta’s passport surviving the blast and floating down to earth, etc.

We have established that 7 of the 19 hijackers are alive and well. We have established that a small army of Mossad agents was caught planning terror acts in America and Mexico.

We have seen how anxious the Zionists are to use 9/11 as a pretext to crush the Palestinian resistance and to have the U.S. attack Iraq and other nations.

We have established all of this and so much more. In addition, there is a plethora of even more damning facts which, in the interests of time and space, weren’t even included in this paper.

The only logical conclusion that a reasonable person can arrive at is this: The 9/11 attacks, the anthrax murders, and numerous other foiled terror plots, were planned, orchestrated, financed, carried out, and covered up by the forces of International Zionism.

What other logical explanation can there be?

As incredible as this may seem, what other conclusion is there that can so neatly tie up all of the “loose ends” and mysteries related to 9/11?

This is the only scenario into which the many pieces of the 9/11 jigsaw puzzle snap snugly together to reveal a clear image. Now compare this to the official explanation of 9/11, which requires us to force, bend, recreate, and manipulate puzzle pieces.

Even in the face of this mountain of facts, there will still be those who will go into denial and casually dismiss this whole case as just another silly “conspiracy theory”.

But the funniest “conspiracy theory” of all is the theory that some Saudi caveman and his “network” of Arab students managed to elude U.S. investigators and pull off the most sophisticated intelligence operation in world history. You can continue to believe that fairy tale if it makes you sleep better at night (and if your sense of credulity can stand the burden). Or, you can muster the moral and intellectual courage to free your mind from Zionist bondage and face the ugly truth for what it is.

You can join the “extremists” and make a commitment to share the horrible truth with others, or you can smirk, roll your eyes, and “pooh-pooh” everything you’ve just read.

Go back to your controlled TV news, pretend this problem doesn’t exist, and let Messrs. Rather, Brokaw, and Jennings do your thinking for you, while the world goes to hell in a Zionist handbasket.

The choice is yours. History and posterity will judge your actions accordingly. To borrow a line from the Maximus hero of the film Gladiator: “What we do in life, echoes in eternity.”

A Closing Statement From The Father Of Our Country

“A passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one nation the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill-will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld. And it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding, with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.”

Watch Out, Baby, 'Cuz Here Comes Reality!

Editor's note: The above headline is the final sentence in one of Al's more potent commentaries below. It surely sums up the State of the Nation in our carefully contrived post-election gotta-start-a-war climate, wherein the wolves not only are controlling all the major henhouses, but have already prepared the dinner table for a major feast of we-the-people.

This was shockingly demonstrated by the expedient 2/3 House passage, shortly after the "Republican landslide" on Election Day, of the previously blocked Homeland Security Act—then followed in short order by the Senate's 90-to-9 similar vote. There must surely be a lot of guilty consciences in Congress these days, since at least 4/5 of the public the Congress is supposed to be representing are AGAINST such a draconian assault on constitutional rights. Just because the media prostitutes look the other way does not lessen the message being spoken loud and clear through rallies and marches at a level not seen since the time of the Vietnam War-era protests.

In other words, there aren't nearly as many asleep people as the major print and broadcast media puppetry would lead you to believe is the case. And that heightened state of awareness is in large measure due to those, like Al Martin, who courageously effort to share The Truth as best they are given to see it.

For those newer readers who may not be familiar with this crusader, according to his own biographical statement (at his AlMartinRaw.com Internet website), Al is America's foremost whistleblower on government fraud and corruption. A retired U.S. Navy Lt. Commander and former officer in the Office of Naval Intelligence, he has testified before Congress (the Kerry Committee and the Alexander Committee) regarding Iran-Contra. Will The Stupidity Of The American People Ever End? (10/28/02)

The death of Senator Paul Wellstone was a phenomenal stroke of luck for the Republicans. Wellstone was the Democrats' best hope to hold onto control of the Senate.

According to the polls, he was going to be reelected. Since his wife was also killed, she won't be able to stand in for him. This is unlike the Mel Carnahan situation, in which he also died in a plane crash, but his wife was able to take his place.

It should be remembered that John Ashcroft was actually defeated by a dead guy (Mel Carnahan) in Missouri. That demonstrates the popularity of Ashcroft, the current Gauleiter [from the German, meaning a district leader of the Nazi party] of the Beltway. The laws are a little unclear—but what a stroke of luck for the Republicans.

It should be remembered that Wellstone also was the chairman of the new securities reform committee. And it was Wellstone who was attempting to block the nomination of the notorious William Webster—former CIA and FBI head and the Best Friend of Big Business and the Big Accounting Firms—to be the new chairman of the SEC/Accounting "Oversight" Commission.

If the Republicans wanted to take anybody out, this was THE guy.

Wellstone was also the lead voice in the Senate, pushing for the investigation of the missing $350 million from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. This is the affair in which Secretary of Interior Gale Norton has twice taken the Fifth Amendment and refused to answer questions about how $350 million disappeared late in the Reagan-Bush administration. Judge Lamberth cited her for contempt, but when do they send her to jail? It should also be remembered that Lamberth was a Republican-appointed judge.

Wellstone was a very significant player, and if there was one target (the most valuable guy to eliminate), it would be Wellstone. This could be the actual trump card in who will control the Senate.

It's interesting to note that, after the reports came out that he had been killed, the markets rallied 120 points and the market pundits called it the "Wellstone Rally". The rally was generated from retail buying (small investors), and the sellers against it were the shadowy offshore Republican short sellers.

This is evidence that the average American still swallows the Republican-generated idea that Republican administrations are good for markets.

The Smart Republican Money knows that Republican administrations are NOT good for the market, and so they were selling into the rally. They were short their own party knowing that, if through the death of Wellstone the Congress becomes a Rubber Stamp Congress, it is going to be even worse with more Bushonomics.

In other words, the Smart Republican Money knows that Republican Administrations are bad for markets and that's why they go short during their own party's administrations. Yet they continually proselytize by putting out pundits like the Larry Kudlows and Bill Kristols of this world who have deceived the American people (the little people) for decades into believing that Republican administrations are pro-business and good for the economy.

Hopefully the American people are finding out that what is good for Big Business is not good for the small shareholder.

There is a lesson to be learned here, but the little people are still bidding up the market—in anticipation of a Republican-controlled Congress.

That's why I keep asking: Will the stupidity of the American People ever end?

If the little shareholders bidding-up the market knew who was selling against them, if they knew that it was the Republican Smart Money, maybe they'd get a clue. The problem is that they don't know. And that's why I write this column.

In other news, even though 41% of the American people are concerned about the economy and what Bushonomics is doing to us (a record high percentage, by the way), public opinion polls still indicate overwhelming support for George Bush—even with those who say their number-one concern is the economy rather than terrorism. And even though they know what Bushonomics is doing to the economy, they still intend to vote for Republicans.

[Editor's note: There are two problems in Al's thinking here that SPECTRUM readers would be quick to point out. First of all, there's not likely any such thing anymore in officialdom as an UNrigged poll. So naturally official polls say what the Bush Gestapo's puppetmasters want them to say for mass mind-control purposes. Secondly, as was discussed in the page-3 Editor's Note of last month's SPECTRUM, there's plenty of suspicion to suggest it's been a long time since any important election was NOT fixed. So it would be a mistake to infer anything about the American people's actual preferences from official voting results.]

We simply cannot understand the Stupid Factor.

We understand that, according to the polls, the American people are by and large fearful, confused, and depressed—as witnessed by the 30% increase in the use of Prozac since the election of George Bush. Nonetheless people need to get a grip. It is very important that the Democrats remain in control of the Senate in the coming election. Otherwise we are going to have a George Bush with a Rubber Stamp Congress—an Imperial Congress, to coin a phrase.

It is our belief, based on Beltway scuttlebutt, that if Republicans do regain control of the Senate and it does become an Imperial Senate, it is entirely likely that Secretary of State Colin Powell and the little band of “moderates” coalesced around him would leave and would be quickly replaced by people from the Hard Right.

In that scenario, the Bush Administration would quickly bring back the few pieces of legislation that had been defeated, such as the National ID Card legislation, the overturning of Posse Comitatus legislation, and undoubtedly the Homeland Security legislation. We are reiterating what we have said before, as we get closer to the election, because it is important that people understand this.

People ask me what is the central problem with Bushonomics. The answer, of course, is that you cannot increase deficit spending INDEFINITELY while also consistently reducing taxes. It simply doesn't work. This is the key problem of Bushonomics.

For example, Bush signed the Defense Appropriations Bill for 2003, $430 billion plus, on the same day he signed for $21 billion of supplemental defense spending. This must be added to the $389 billion spent in fiscal 2001 on defense, including $38 billion in supplemental spending on homeland security.

THE CONSPIRATORS:

Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider

WHAT IF a criminal cabal, a de facto white-collar crime syndicate, took over the U.S. Government and used its systems and operations for its own profit? According to former government operative and now whistleblower Al Martin, this is exactly what has happened.

For example, at a meeting with General Richard V. Secord, Martin was briefed about Iran-Contra operations and allowed to view voluminous CIA white papers concerning Operation Black Eagle, the code-name for the Bush-Casey-North program involving U.S. Government-sanctioned narcotics trafficking, illicit weapons deals, and wholesale fraud—corporate securities fraud, real estate fraud, banking fraud, and insurance fraud.

Martin has first-hand knowledge of the dirty deals, high-level scams, frauds, and treasonous activities of the U.S. Shadow Government costing taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars—and still growing. This is a story of true conspiracy, an uncensored look at what really goes on in the back rooms of criminal power politics.

OR CALL TOLL-FREE: 1-877-280-2866

Congress and the Homeland Security Bill is passed, he would also get a separate $40 billion for homeland security, which would receive a budget of its own. They would stop financing it supplementally, in other words.

Since George Bush has been elected till the end of fiscal year 2003, we would have spent $1 trillion on defense, security, military, and intelligence appropriations. Think about that: one trillion dollars in two and a half years. It's absolutely incredible.

I have always believed that defense expenditures must be put into the context of the impending threat, and this should always be reiterated. We are now spending as much money on defense as we did in 1986, when the Defense Department called it the Ultimate Credible Threat against the United States. “Credible” did not include global thermonuclear war, but it included the possible attack and invasion of the continental United States by as many as 200 crack divisions of Soviet troops through Alaska, and infiltration through Central and South America. It was also envisioned that this would be backed by 20,000 T-72 and T-80 tanks and supported by 5000 warplanes. With the limited use of low-yield thermonuclear weapons, it was envisioned that there would be 30-40 million casualties.

That was the maximum credible scenario, the maximum envisioned threat. It was when the Soviet Union's essential military power was at its absolute peak. Now we are spending the same amount of money on defense, wherein the maximum would be increased terrorism attacks against the United States in a haphazard fashion involving at the very most no more than 4000 terrorists at any time, whose capability would be to destroy a dozen office buildings or possibly poisoning the water supply, which would be quickly contained. In any case, the maximum sustainable casualties in one terrorist attack may be 30,000 to 40,000 people.

Based on the kind of money we've spent in the past, the damage would have to be a thousand times greater than any damage we face today from any type of military incursion to justify the current level of military expenditures.

It should be noted that, in the immediate aftermath of 9/11, the Bush Administration first told the American people that we were going to respond, that there would be a limited military force in Afghanistan, that we would capture or kill Osama bin Laden, that we will smash the al Qaeda organization. They also said it would be a 90-day operation and it would cost the American taxpayers $3 billion.

Here we are—14 months later and $30 billion of the American taxpayers money later (not $3 billion)—and we have still failed to kill or capture Osama bin Laden. In fact, we don't even know where he is. We have failed to quell the al Qaeda organization, and according to the Congressional Budget Office, we will be in Afghanistan for years at the cost of $2 billion a month. It becomes a planned program of failure once again.

Knowing that the economy was already falling apart by 9/11, Bush was desperate to shift the focus away from the economy (and what Bushonomics does to the economy) and back to foreign affairs, which has always been considered a Republican strong point.

Bush pushed the Department of Defense (you remember all the leaks that came out after the event in which the generals were very upset about White House pressure), which correctly said that we weren't ready and that our defense posture is such that we simply can't mount an invasion that quickly. Furthermore the Department of Defense had almost no intelligence about Afghanistan and no “friend or foe” material with which to instruct our troops, or even maps of the country.

The Department of Defense was right (and I don't know why General Franks, the theater commander, didn't resign; he must have just been concerned about his pension). He said you've got to commit enough troops to seal the borders of the country to prevent these terrorists escaping to neighboring friendly countries.

The Bush Administration was: (a) scared about how much money it would cost; and (b) even though the Republicans love war, they have no balls when it comes to seeing the body bags coming home. The whole thing has been bungled from the beginning.

Then you interject into that mix the fact that the American weapons systems don't work. Remember: we've lost 53 helicopters, and they haven't had to shoot one missile. And therein is the second problem. We have ordinance that doesn't work, bombs that don't explode, mines that either don't explode or explode prematurely, Cruise and Tomahawk missiles only 38% of which can hit their targets.

The other glaring problem is that the U.S. continues to purchase weapons systems that don't work in exchange for which defense contractors give enormous amounts of money to the Republican Party.

And here's how it works: Every time one of our Apache helicopters crashes, and eight or nine people get killed, those eight or nine American soldiers die for that one, two, or three million dollars that that defense contractor contributed to some Republican offshore account, from the taxpayers' money that went on to build that helicopter.

You could call it Republican Blood Money. Our troops are paying for it.

It should also be noted that this Bush Administration has advisors who are all "chicken hawks"—those who want to get us into war, but who haven't tasted it themselves. This is the ultimate hypocrisy.

We have a $200 billion deficit this year, and if we get involved with a war in Iraq, and Bush gets his Rubber Stamp Congress, we are potentially looking at a $350 billion federal budget deficit for fiscal year 2003.

Even though the United States only services 40% of its debt (thanks to B-FLAP—i.e., Bush Fantasy Land Accounting Principles), eventually budget deficits won't be serviced anymore.

Treasury Secretary O'Neill was asked on CNBC—since Bush was elected, all of the Treasury contingency reserves have disappeared, the standby letters of credit are maxed out, the Federal Reserve's currency stabilization fund is gone, so where have these billions gone?

O'Neill just shrugged his shoulders and said: "I have no idea."

Bush Administrations will and have sapped the money out. These are required reserves that the Treasury, other federal agencies, and the Federal Reserve must maintain by law.

Finally people are asking: "Where does the money go?" And: "Where has the money gone?"

The money is usually being filtered through the Department of Defense or through Congressional or White House spending authorization accounts, and it's simply being looped back into the Treasury, to be counted as general revenue, in an effort to disguise (one of the key components of B-FLAP) the true amount of the budget deficits which are created by B-FLAP. That's the problem.

This year's fiscal budget was simply listed as "$200+ billion". Secretary O'Neill stated that from now on we are simply going to state a number and then say plus or minus, because we don't know. They don't know where the money goes and they can't account for it.

Why didn't Mainstream Media touch that?

Why wasn't that a scandal when O'Neill came out several months ago and said that the Department of Treasury has $500 billion missing since the election of George Bush and we don't know where it went?

And NOBODY in the Mainstream Media asked about it. Why? Because the people holding the levers of power are making so much money that nobody has a vested interest to ask any questions.

O'Neill was asked: When is this all going to fall apart? This was referring to the impact of 12 years of Bushonomics-I (1980-1992) and the renewed deleterious effects of Bushonomics-II (2000 - ?).

O'Neill answered that it all falls apart when we can't service the debt anymore.

It should be noted that, prior to the Reagan-Bush Regime, the United States Government had always serviced 100% of its debt—since the first issuance of U.S. Treasury bonds in 1795. It was during the Reagan-Bush years, with the advent of B-FLAP, wherein the government began to service less and less of its debt. By the end of the Reagan-Bush Regime, the United States was only servicing, and still to this day services, only 40% of its debt at any given time. The other 60% of the debt we are not servicing is debt that has been issued in forms of restricted U.S.

Government Bonds or Future Contingency Bonds.

If the United States had to service 100% of our outstanding debt, it would commit 53% of the total budget to service that debt. That would effectively cause the United States Government to collapse—insofar as 48% of the budget is comprised of non-discretionary spending and 13% of the budget is comprised of necessary discretionary spending.

If the U.S. was forced to begin to service all of its debt, it simply could not do so and it would collapse. It should be noted that, sometime in the future, as Secretary O'Neill pointed out (with furrowed brows), the tab comes due.

Here's an analogy: Bushonomics has created for the United States a variable-interest-only mortgage with an ever-expanding balloon payment. It's as if a homeowner was using 40% of his income to pay interest on an interest-only mortgage on his house, then continuously expanding the balloon payment in order to service the other 60% of the debt.

Every year that there is a budget deficit, the U.S. Government's debt-to-equity ratio diminishes. The current accrual of debt we are not paying constitutes about $240 billion per year.

The Economic Policy Institute issued a statistic that the total aggregate debt (National Debt) of the United States by the year 2032 would be $100 trillion.

This figure, $100 trillion, exceeds the aggregate assets of the entire planet.

The current aggregate assets of the entire planet are only about $68 trillion. That means all of the money, all of the real estate, all of the gold, all of the oil, everything. Even now the actual amount of U.S. debt on a realized basis equals fully 1/4 of the aggregate net worth of the entire planet.

If the entire Earth could be converted to a sea of money, it still would not pay the U.S. debt. That's why we have consistently urged the Bush Regime to spend more money on space exploration, particularly in terms of setting up mining colonies on the Moon and the exploration and eventual terra-forming of Mars—because we are going to need other planets in the Solar System to mortgage by 2032 to pay the debt.

Then the Bush Cabal will have to go off planet.

First, under Reaganomics, it was Off-Budget Debt.

Eventually, under Bushonomics, the Off-Budget Debt will have to turn into Off-World debt.

The following is an update on the AlMartinRaw.com Theoretical Stock

Portfolio, which, as our readers may know, went short since the election of George Bush, since that's what you do, knowing the havoc that Bushonomics visits upon our economy.

This portfolio is divided into intermediate and long-term holdings of securities with a 5% cash reserve and 15% committed to short-term trading activities. On the day when Bush was elected, we recommended liquidating all securities within the intermediate and long-term section of our portfolio and recommended selected gold stocks, REITs, and selected long-term U.S. Treasury bond funds.

To date, the AlMartinRaw.com Model Portfolio, in fixed holdings, has shown an increase of 28% (inclusive of capital gains). We would reiterate our original selection of Barricks Gold as our central gold stock. Barricks is up 24% from the time we recommended it. We had originally recommended it over Newmont Mining because Barricks has much more limited political risk vis-à-vis where Barricks principal producing mines are located and the fact that Barricks has been able to maintain $162 per ounce net production cost per ounce of gold. Furthermore we agree with Barricks gold strategy of reducing future hedging operations of production.

Barricks Gold continues to increase production by approximately 2.1 million ounces per year. Its principal plants are much more modern than almost any other gold operation, and the company has shown superb management. We continue to recommend holding Barricks as the feature gold stock of our intermediate and long-term portfolio.

The next item is not a joke.

Senator John McCain, quoting from a conversation with Attorney General John Ashcroft, said that, according to the Attorney General, we would never have complete security in the United States—until every citizen is frightened of being thrown into jail.

Furthermore, in the conversation, Ashcroft admitted that although they've backed away from the TIPS program (the Department of Justice's infamous "rat on a neighbor" program), they've compiled the names of more than a million American citizens (of the blond-haired, blue-eyed Smith and Jones types—not of the Ahmed or Muhammed variety).

The Attorney General and the Department of Justice feel that these individuals would be "potentially seditious" as the State continues to tighten its control.

In the immortal words of George Bush, Senior: "If the truth gives you indigestion, simply take more Prozac."

How George Bush Sr. Almost Got Indicted For Fraud

This is the untold story of Bush Cabal Fraud and how the Clinton Regime delayed the collapse of the United States economy.

Having received some old documents recently from a Democratic committee member, I wanted to tell this story. These were documents that obviously escaped the shredder. Documents from Democrat-controlled committees get boxed up. Then they get duct-taped and put in various storage rooms in the Rayburn Office Building, on the fourth floor. They then sit there forever until they fall apart, and then somebody will either throw them out or will actually look at them.

The documents from Republican investigating committees generally get shredded afterwards. On the other hand, documents from the investigative staff and general counsels of Democrat-controlled committees haven't been able to unveil any truth anyway, so why bother wasting the time shredding them.

These documents I received were essentially transcripts of personal notes made by a Democratic congressman who was very friendly with Bill Clinton and had conversations with him during the first several months of his first term in 1993. This congressman had attended a luncheon for congressional Democrats with the President, and the President had mentioned that he, Bill Clinton, was aware that the economic numbers that the Reagan-Bush Regime had put out were all wrong, particularly when it came to the size of the annual budget deficits and the accumulated national debt.

In fact, Clinton admitted that he had no idea of the size of the fraud and malfeasance committed against the American people during the previous 12 years of the Bushonian Cabal.

When Bush left the White House, the last debt numbers published by the Bush Regime was $5.66 trillion, when, in fact, the actual size of the debt was about $14 trillion. In other words, the national debt was about three times the stated numbers.

Clinton got very nervous because one of the things he had done very early in the regime was to try to get his people to figure out how much the nation was in debt and what the actual size of the then current budget deficit was. Nobody in the Clinton Administration knew. They knew they were inheriting a federal budget deficit.

The Bush Administration had publicly stated that the federal budget deficit for fiscal 1992 was $360 billion. As it turned out, the fiscal budget deficit for 1992 going into calendar year 1993 was over $700 billion.

Realizing the enormity of the fraud he had inherited, Clinton actually started thinking about indicting George Bush Sr. on charges of fraud and malfeasance.

It isn't stated in the documents who had encouraged him to do this or whether this was one of his own ideas, but Clinton was getting very nervous by this time, and he told a group of Democratic congressmen that there was no money left. He was concerned about what was going to happen.

It must have been a shock. Clinton thought he was inheriting a $360 billion federal budget deficit, when it was in fact twice as much. He thought he was inheriting a nation with a $5.6 trillion debt, and it turns out to be a $14 trillion debt.

By April he had learned of the Grand Bushonian Fraud: How the Bush Cabal denuded the Social Security General Trust Fund and 43 other public trust funds out of $5 trillion, and then stuffed them full of worthless non-marketable U.S. Treasury securities. This is the time when Clinton began to talk extensively with Alan Greenspan. He understood that something had to be done because we were virtually in a crisis.

Like most people in Washington, Clinton understood that Ronald Reagan was a figurehead, and that it was really the Bush Cabal which was running things for all of those 12 years. He also understood that the Bush Cabal had perpetrated the greatest fraud ever committed against the American people and that the Bush Cabal had essentially destroyed the economy of the United States—which in fact they had.

It was his opinion therefore that the Clinton Administration should take the unprecedented move of indicting the former vice president for fraud and gross malfeasance against the people of the United States. This decision was heavily augmented by the information he learned in March and April (it's not clear how he learned this) about what the Bushonian people had done.

Then he found out what the Democrats had always suspected—that from 1980 on, the CIA annual assessment report of the Soviet Union was being doctored, and that essentially two different reports were being produced. There was a real CIA document, which was called the Annual Assessment Report Of The Economic And Military Strength Of The Soviet Union. The Democrats had suspected, even as early as 1979, that the last real CIA assessment report they had, when Carter was still president, clearly indicated that the Soviet Union was beginning to crumble internally. Its economy was virtually in shambles. What little export business it had was quickly going down the tubes. Its infrastructure was falling apart.

Then, in 1981, suddenly the annual CIA reports, that came directly from the CIA to the White House, were not given to any opposition members in Congress. They were not given to Democrats anymore. This document had never been considered a secret document. It had always been publicly available.

The CIA was sending its annual assessment report to the White House directly and not to anybody else. (Later in the 1980s Tommy Rheinhardt, the CIA liaison officer to Congress, lied extensively about this very same subject matter.)

The White House then would reproduce a whole new CIA report that showed the exact opposite of what was really happening—saying that the Soviet Union was gaining an economic and military strength at the same time it was falling apart. The Bushonian Cabal then used this as a justification to embark upon a policy of enormous defense buildup and the wasteful expenditure thereunto, and the enormous amount of debt necessary to finance said defense buildup.

The reason they never considered indicting Reagan is because Clinton knew that Reagan didn't realize what George Bush was doing. All of the people around Reagan, except for Don Regan, his Chief of Staff, were Bush loyalists and never told Reagan anything. That's one reason why George Bush wanted to get rid of Donald Regan so badly, and finally did in 1985. Regan was the only real Reagan guy in the White House.

When Reagan came into office, he didn't have a political machine. He didn't have a cadre or a cabal like the Bushs did. He came in with one guy, his friend Don Regan, who had formerly been chairman of Merrill Lynch.

Bush kept trying to keep Regan out of the loop and circumventing him with Craig Roberts and other Bush loyalists. Regan knew he was being sidelined. Finally, when he was pushed out, Donald Regan stated that he was actually frightened of George Bush—and said so publicly.

Ronald Reagan was never told about the CIA assessment reports that were given to him to read, part of which would be incorporated for him into speeches by Bush-controlled political staff writers. You have to remember all of the staff writers for the president were Bostonian minions, and Reagan loved it because it was the political grist he wanted in his campaign to "defeat the Evil Empire".

Reagan didn't really understand anything about economics. It must be remembered that the only economic experience he had was in nearly bankrupting the State of California when he was governor.

Clinton then found out that the only defense that George Bush would have, the reason why this was done, that would generate enough political sympathy to make an indictment against Bush look like a political beast. When Clinton found out that this pretense could be knocked out because of these dual false CIA report schemes that the Bostonian minions had fabricated in order to justify it was in fact itself a ruse.

Clinton wanted to go ahead and push for an indictment of George Bush, when he found out in April that the Bostonian Regime had, in 1987, put the arm on the then West Germans and the Japanese to secretly lend money to the Soviet Union. This is what tipped the balance for him. Clinton was hemming and hawing about it until he found out about the Bush Cabal's final strategy, that they had actually propped up the Soviet Union to maintain the Great Lie.

The Soviet Union was very close to bankruptcy in 1987 and the Bush Cabal was scared. They knew that if the Soviet Union fell apart economically in 1987, the jig was up and people would know they had lied. Everybody would know that they had lied about the military and economic strength of the Soviet Union.

Therefore, the West Germans secretly lent the Soviets $80 billion, and the Japanese secretly, under Bushonian pressure, lent them another $40 billion. However, the money was lent with the understanding that the U.S. Treasury and the people of the United States would be ultimately responsible for the $120 billion should the Soviet Union default on said loans. And that's what got Bill Clinton really upset.

Enter Alan Greenspan, Chairman of the Federal Reserve. Clinton had been talking to Greenspan literally since Day One to try to put together a package to rescue the economy. Greenspan kept telling him that Clinton would have to act not like a liberal Democrat, that he's going to have to act like a moderate Republican, that Clinton would have to have a regime of fiscal restraint and prudence. He told him that he would have to reduce spending and have some targeted tax cuts to industry—things that are not normally associated with liberal Democrats.

Barrons actually once said that Bill Clinton was the best moderate Republican for our economy since Eisenhower. And he did act like a moderate Republican and it lost him some support within the Democratic left.

Greenspan then became aware of what Clinton wanted to do. Greenspan agreed with him that if George Bush was indicted and exposed, all of the truth of what the Bush Cabal had done to this nation, then there would be no more Bush Cabal. The Bushs would never make a political comeback and we would end, once and for all, the greatest future threat to the United States economy that could exist (short of thermonuclear war)—and that would be a return of a Bushonian Regime.

Greenspan agreed with him and this was during a time when he was asked why he had purposely acted to undermine a Bush re-election bid by keeping the economic reins unusually tight. Greenspan then said: "The nation can't afford any more Bushs."

Greenspan was sympathetic to Clinton politically, but he reminded him of the reality of the situation. He told him that if you indict George Bush and members of his immediate cabal, the whole truth is going to come out. Then he asked him: How are the American people, as investors, as well as foreign investors and banks, going to react? This was in the spring of 1993, when the economic recovery was underway, but it was still very nascent at best.

Greenspan reminded Clinton that the nation's banks and securities firms and insurance firms were still undercapitalized, and that the FDIC and FSLIC insurance pools were still undercapitalized, and the Treasury had no emergency monies they could extend.

Greenspan told Clinton that if George Bush is indicted and the whole truth comes out about the extent of the Bushonian Fraud—the fact that the nation is $14 trillion in debt—if this comes out, he said, on a Sunday night, then by Monday, stock markets worldwide will shut down early and there will be panic selling by both domestic and foreign investors of U.S. securities who will simply dump their shares.

By the following day, he said, foreign central banks will begin dumping their holdings of U.S. Treasury Bonds into a marketplace where there will be no bids, reminding Clinton that, by and large, it was money from foreign central banks which had financed the deficit during the 1980s, and that in fact the Bushonian Regime had sold some of America's sovereignty to other nations.

By Wednesday, he said, American banks will have thousands of people lined up clamoring to get their money out. He said if you tell the American people the truth, you will start a domino effect, the end result of which would be global economic collapse.

Greenspan understood the temerity of the situation, and sympathized with Clinton's position and had him understand how clever the Bushonian Cabal had been in creating a Big Lie—because it had successfully trapped Clinton as the successor regime into maintaining the Big Lie and the cover-up for the sake of global economic stability.

Greenspan reminded Clinton that the Democrats couldn't even make political hay out of this. Clinton was reported, by May, to be frustrated as hell. Here he found himself, as the new president, forced to maintain a cover-up of what the Bushonian Cabal had done, yet the Republicans were able to attack him endlessly. And there was nothing he could do.

Greenspan then told Clinton that if he would move forward with a fiscally prudent economic agenda and reduce federal spending, the Federal Reserve will work with him and expand money supply targets and begin to bring interest rates down, bring down unemployment and inflation, and we can try to turn the situation around—at least to the point of generating fiscal surpluses. At that time you could adopt a strategy, with a second term in office, of gradually bringing forth the truth to the people.

Clinton did try to do that in 1995, when it became increasingly obvious that the Clintonian economic agenda was working. He had come up with this so-called 30-year recovery plan in which the government would act over the long term to restrain federal spending and would have to build up fiscal surpluses which could be used to pay down debt by open market purchases of U.S. Treasury securities, and then retiring those securities. Clinton actually called it the "debt free in 30 years plan" and Clinton said (and nobody really picked upon on it) that we would have to generate fiscal surpluses of some $15 trillion to make the plan work. That was an admission of what the total debt actually was, but nobody seemed to pick up on the significance of it.

By fostering an 8-year regime of fiscal prudence and restraint, Clinton was able, most importantly of all, to rebuild confidence in U.S. capital market places. That is the most important thing he did. He was able to cut unemployment by half and reduce the inflation rate he inherited by two-thirds. And he was able to strengthen the dollar to all-time highs and to generate 4 years of fiscal surpluses, something never before achieved in the history of the nation.

Clinton did in fact use those surpluses to pay down debt as promised. In his second term, he was able to stop the practice of taking FICA taxes and using them as general revenue.

In effect, Clinton provided the stability and growth that staved off what would have been economic collapse. As Greenspan subsequently said, had George Bush been reelected in 1992, he had no doubt that the nation would have economically collapsed because it was getting to the point that the Bushonian Regime was running out of accounting tricks to hide the actual size of the deficits that were being generated.

By the end of 1992, the Bush Regime had raped and pillaged any source of money that was available to rape and pillage—meaning they had denuded every penny out of the 43 public trust funds, which are constitutionally sacrosanct. It is considered a High Crime for an administration to take money out of the sacrosanct public trust funds. The money does not belong to the United States Government. It belongs to the people of the United States.

They had taken $5 trillion out of the 43 national public trust funds, and they had denuded the federal treasury of all of its reserve funds, and they had illegally taken from the Federal Reserve its emergency currency stabilization fund. They had drawn out all collateralized letters of credit. They had issued as much debt equity as they could under the federal agencies like Ginny Mae, Freddy Mac, etc. They had sold as many notes as they could and they had issued as many restricted and worthless notes as they dared.

Greenspan pointed out in 1992 that the nation could not have survived another 4 years of Bushonomics because what they had been doing could simply not be hidden for another 4 years. The economic effects of what they had done would begin to filter through the economy, and at that point, the jig would be up.

When the truth is going to cause economic pain in government and capital marketplaces, you can't come out with it all at once. It has to be dribbled out a little at a time. The negative impact on the economy then has to be absorbed gradually because, if you come out with it all at once, you'll have a debacle on your hands, which nobody wants.

Had Clinton adopted the policy of dribbling out the truth, the economy would have slowly sunk again and the fiscal surpluses he generated would have never been generated. Would the American people have read between the lines and understood? Even to tell the American people the truth a drop at a time would have been a risk.

In the last analysis, the only thing that Clinton did was to stabilize the economy, temporarily, for 8 years. The Dow Jones Industrial Average did move from 2400 to over 11000 during his regime. He did create more wealth for the individual person in this country than had ever been created before—and you simply cannot take that away from him.

People who held on to stocks too long as the market began to decline and saw 50% of that lost—that's not Clinton's fault. That's simply a matter of listening to your stockbrokers and not knowing when to get out.

What Clinton did was to buy us time into another Bushonian debacle, which we now have. The question is: How much more damage will the Bush Cabal wreak beyond what it has already wreaked since the election of George Bush? And what will that damage do to the economy?

The Bush Administration has already admitted that, after the coming election, they will begin the repillaging of Social Security—by taking FICA taxes and counting them as general revenues. You're then borrowing from the future every year that you do that. These are the same old smoke-and-mirror accounting practices which were used during the Bush Cabal's first 12 years. They are being used once again to disguise the actual size of Bushonian generated economic deficits.

It's entirely possible that we will have a double-dip recession because stocks cannot continue to increase while the larger economic fundamentals which propel the nation's economy continue to worsen.

The question remains: With its control of mainstream media, can the Bush Cabal continue to hide from the American people the extent of its malfeasance?

When does it all come tumbling down? When everybody knows the truth.

This gets into the Bushonian notion that anybody who tells the truth is being "unpatriotic" or dangerous to the security of the nation.

We are no longer talking about the economic health of the nation vis-à-vis Bushonomics. To those who would say that what we are doing is creating further anxiety by telling people the truth, it should be noted that we are talking about economic survival.

Understanding how Clinton dealt with the knowledge of Bush Cabal Fraud, it gives you a sense of compassion regarding the man. Imagine the frustration of having to keep other people's secrets—particularly secrets that you could politically capitalize on yourself. He acted with political restraint and absorbed year after year of Republican attack when he had the ammunition to destroy them. For the sake of global economic stability—and, by extension, the economic survival of our nation and its people—Clinton could not use the truth to defend himself from 8 years of Republican attacks mostly coming from Bushonian Cabalists.

Most people understand that, as the expression goes, when you can't beat them—the criminals, that is. And that's why AlMartinRaw is starting its new market trading and forecast service. This way you'll be able to make a profit on the criminals' behavior.

We have always specialized in short-side trades (which is definitely joining them, instead of beating them) and that's why we invite all our readers to at least get a few crumbs of the pie. And that's how and why we are rededicating this column—for the profit of our readers.

We are here to present some credible alternatives. In other words, you can still make money in an increasingly negative economic environment. You just have to know how to do it, and the way to do it is to follow the Smart Republican Money.

As the renowned speculator Jesse Livermore said: "There have been fortunes made by being long stocks, but the great fortunes have been made on the short side of the markets."

America In A Trance, Or: America The Stupid

Despite our urgent recommendation to the contrary, the American people have seen fit to turn Congress into a Bushonian Rubber Stamp. What does this mean? The Bushonian Regime will begin to rape and pillage the nation's Social Security trust fund once again. Also, they have already announced that they will continue to denude the people of their civil rights and liberties by bringing before Congress the three pieces of legislation they could not get passed in the previous Congress, namely (1) the National Identity Card Act, (2) the act to overturn Posse Comitatus, and (3) the act to formalize the creation of the Office of Homeland Security.

Lest we forget the short-term memory of America the Stupid (or America in a Trance), when it comes to the Office of Homeland Security, we should always remember George Bush's Immortal Words on September 26 (in the post-9/11 environment), when he first mentioned the concept for our Office of Homeland Security and he told us, the American people, not to worry, that it would be a small federal agency and it would act in a coordinating capacity only; it would have no more than 1,300 employees, and it would have an annual budget of no more than $9 billion.

Furthermore, at least half of that $9 billion would come back to the American taxpayers in forms of "savings" because, with the Office of Homeland Security, we could streamline the functions of the CIA, the FBI, FEMA, and others, and we could reduce staff and reduce costs. That's how the Office of Homeland Security was billed and how it was sold to the American public.

Now we find that the Office of Homeland Security is, in fact, going to be a new "super" federal agency with an initial staff of more than 5,000 and an initial budget of $38 billion.

As George Bush has promised us, there have been no savings from the interim workings of the Office of Homeland Security. Not from the CIA. Not from the FBI. Not from FEMA. And not from the National Security Agency.

In fact, the budgets of these agencies and the number of people they employ has increased.

As is typical with a Bushonian Regime, the budget is more than 4 times what it was originally billed.

As a consequence, what do we now have to look forward to with a Bushonian Congress?

As the Bush Administration previously announced, if it regained control of Congress, in order to stimulate the economy, we can now look forward to the acceleration of tax cuts for the Republican Rich which were not due to take place until the "out years" of 2006-2009.

Furthermore, it will accelerate the elimination of estate taxes for the Republican Rich that were also not due to take place until the so-called "out years".

These two measures, put together, will deny the Federal Treasury at least another $100 billion per annum in desperately needed tax revenue.

The reason why the Bush Administration is so desperate to repillage Social Security funds (by counting FICA taxes as general revenue) is because it will provide them with $125 billion a year of additional income. That in turn will make next year's deficits not look as bad as they otherwise would have been.

This is absolutely classic Bushonomics. You borrow from the future as much as you possibly can to hide the true size of the deficits that you are creating in the present. I cannot think of a better way to describe Bushonomics.

We see that situation, in fact—despite every Republican stock market pundit under the Sun telling us that “Republican regimes are good for the economy” and “don’t worry because the stock markets will rally if you make Congress a Republican Rubber Stamp”.

Instead we find that the market has sold off 350 points since the Republican victory. So obviously that isn’t true. The reason why is because the market is “reality”.

The market knows that having a Bushonian Regime with a Rubber Stamp Congress presents even more danger to the nation’s economy—not less.

First Call Market Services, which predicts quarterly earnings and so on, had a very interesting comment. They said that all of the big securities and brokerage firms, which are Republican-aligned, are the ones which had the greatest number of buy recommendations and the fewest number of sell recommendations.

There’s only a handful of them—like Goldman Sachs and JP Morgan, which are not particularly Republican aligned—that had five times the sell recommendations than they had buy recommendations. It goes a long way in proving the point about the power that a Bushonian Regime has in its influence over Wall Street to get the Wall Street crowd together to consistently tout stocks in declining markets. You’ve got to buy, buy, buy; it’s on every economic show and roundtable discussion you hear.

New financial roundtable talk shows are being added constantly, especially on the weekends. You hear the propaganda that you have to buy stocks—buy, buy, buy!

More recently you start to see the e-mails that come in to CNBC, and they say things like: “Three weeks ago Larry Kudlow recommended I should buy Intel at $20, which is $12 today.”

CNBC is running more and more of these types of e-mails that: “I bought into the Republican hype and I’m listening to all these Republican stock pundits and they said ‘buy this’ or ‘buy that’ and now I’ve lost half of my money in the last 3 weeks because of it!”

This is something the American people should be aware of.

My personal opinion is that it is unconscionable what the Bush Administration does in terms of its control of Wall Street market pundits who are made into venerable names in the media who people trust—the Louis Rukeyser of the world.

They have big reputations and they are considered virtual gods. They say “buy, buy, buy” because that’s what the Administration wants them to say because they are nothing more than shills for the Republican Party.

If one looks at where Larry Kudlow’s money comes from, one will find that it essentially comes from Republican-controlled foundations.

What happens is that the Bush Administration is able, in a way, to keep the market artificially higher than it should be, in a bear market trend, by the consistent hammering on this “buy stocks” theme by well-known Republican-controlled economic pundits. Consequently the American people end up owning stocks at tremendously high prices.

I never heard Larry Kudlow ever in my life tell people to sell a stock.

People just can’t see the reality. The market rally has been 22%, from top to bottom, in this 5-week-old counter-trend rally, when the economic fundamentals propelling a bear market are growing worse.

There is no fundamental economic reason for people to be buying stocks or to have pushed the market 1600 points off the low in 5 weeks. Not when the statistics—like the LEI (Leading Economic Indicators) Manufacturing Indices, Construction Spending, Capacity Utilization, Total Employment, numbers that have created the bear market—continue to deteriorate. Yet the American people are bidding up the market.

Why? Because every television show with every Republican pundit known to man keeps telling people to “buy, buy, buy”. They even drag out the old men like Bill Seidman and Sir John Templeton.

You know the Bush Administration is desperate when they start dragging out the old farts.

If you’re going to be in stocks, IRAs, or 401(k)s—and I’ve always said this, and this is something no brokers will ever tell you because it’s against their best interests to do so, because then they can’t sell market research—you the individual person wearing your hat as an investor have to do your own homework and research.

You can’t rely on other companies, other people’s research and other economic forecasting services. We’ve seen what has happened. The recent scandals have revealed how biased this “research” really is.

The SEC pretends to slap these people on the wrist, people like the Abby Cohens.

I like what Bill Waldman, the great Democratic economist, said. He said that 90% of the research coming out of these Republican-controlled security firms and mutual fund houses was simply nothing more than an effort to “put lipstick on a pig”.

And where was the so-called business press, Forbes magazine, Business Week in this debacle? They were just as unconscionable as the market pundits.

As the market was declining, the venerable magazines like Forbes and Fortune were all screaming: buy, buy, you gotta buy “because stocks are cheap”. But stocks aren’t cheap.

It is so ludicrous, and I don’t understand why the American people can’t see through it. There was an analyst on CNBC from AG Edwards, for example, and every firm tends to make its own assessment of what fair-market value is. He was asked what does AG Edwards think the fair-market value is, and he said: “We feel that current fair-market value is S&P at 720.” This was a couple days ago, when the S&P was at 920. And he’s not asked: What stocks are you selling then? The next question is: What stocks do you buy?

And he comes out with a whole list of AG Edwards-recommended stocks to buy. Yet the firm thinks that the market is 200 S&P points overvalued?

We see this again and again. There is not one firm on the street that has, as fair-market value, anywhere near where the market currently is.

As pointed out by First Call, the average fair-market value assumption by what they call the top 100 securities firms and mutual fund houses ranges from S&P 500 to S&P 750.

In some cases we are talking about firms who are saying that the fair-market value of the market, right now, is thousands of points lower than where it is. Thousands of points lower.

Yet, in the same breath, it’s: “What do we buy?”

They’re never asked: “What do we sell?” Or: “How do we get short?”

They’re simply asked about what you buy in this environment if the market is 4000 points overvalued.

These pundits become part of a system that is designed, under Republican Regimes, to get people to buy stocks at artificially high prices in order to prevent the market from seeking its true value level, in a Republican administration, which is always much less than where it’s trading at.

Then there’s the Stupidity Growth Factor.

During the Bush-I Administration people seemed to understand a little more. They understood that under a Bushonian Administration, you're going to have Bushonomics, which is inherently destructive to the economy. Therefore, the market should be trading at some sort of a discount to its fair value to reflect that.

During the Bush-I administration, particularly later, you did see the market trading at a discount to its fair-market value. But now we see another Bush Administration that is equally as destructive—$200 billion deficit for this year, possibly $350 billion deficit next year, which they will of course try to hide by raping and pillaging Social Security.

Now you see a market that is trading as much as 50% premium to fair market value—at a time when not only is the market going down, not only are we in the grips of a bear market, but we have an Administration that acts to destroy the economy by its own economic policies.

The bottom line is that for everyone who is long stocks, there is an enormous risk factor in here.

This is an administration which follows a certain school of economic policies called Bushonomics.

Bushonomics gradually destroys the economy.

That is known and there isn't any debate about that anymore. That is already a given.

You combine that with the fact that we are in a cyclical bear market. Then you look at the fact that the market is still trading at 50% higher than the average fair-market value guesstimate by the top 100 brokerage firms.

Something is very wrong here.

And what's the bottom of the market? Who knows?

If you listen to Bill Gross of PIMCO, he believes that fair-market value is about S&P 600 or Dow 5000. Most of the rest of the street (when it comes to fair-market value) is somewhere between 680 and 750 or Dow 6500.

In political and economic terms, the markets are severely overvalued.

And the risk factor has just increased by the fact that we now have a Republican Rubber-Stamp Congress. You take an Administration whose economic policies are known to visit havoc on the economy, and then you increase this power to wreak more havoc to imperial levels.

It's interesting to note the statement made by Army Secretary Thomas White, the infamous Enron stock swindler. (I still don't know why he remains the Army Secretary. His plan to "privatize" the Army is essentially taking the extra money that's coming in and giving it to all his Republican Crony Capitalist Pals.)

The statement that came out of his office said that the United States Army is now fully prepared to fight "large-scale domestic urban warfare".

This whole concept is being propelled by the Department of Defense and the Office of Homeland Security, wherein our military should now be prepared, and dramatically increase U.S. military forces within the United States, and that those forces should be ready to fight "large-scale domestic urban warfare". What is so absurd about this is the level of threat assessment.

When he says "large-scale street-to-street fighting" he means domestic urban warfare using our new Broncos on steroids, our new domestic urban hover drones, our new high-potency Valium gas, and a vast new array of "non-lethal" weapons and refurbishing the CILF (Civilian Inmate Labor Facility) programs.

I don't understand why people can't see through this. The military isn't being prepared to fight a "war on terrorism" in the United States when they say "large-scale urban domestic warfare".

There aren't that many terrorists in the whole world.

It is the American Citizens who they're talking about. American Citizens are the target.

people lining up at each bank trying to get their money out or to control the people outside of all the Safeway supermarkets trying to get the last loaf of bread from the shelves.

That's what they're talking about.

Selling the people the concept that we need the ability to fight large-scale urban warfare due to domestic terrorism is absolute nonsense.

How could foreign terrorists possibly get enough people into this country at any given time to create "large-scale urban warfare"?

Why this is "America, The Stupid" is because Americans themselves are the targets and they will ultimately have to be controlled. This has nothing to do with "terrorists".

People really believed that: "We need more military expenditures because of terrorism and to protect the nation against terrorism." What are we talking about? Cells of two, three, or four people widely disbursed around the nation? After all, that is what terrorism is. And terrorists generally come into this country a few at a time.

And what will happen down the line? We're seeing the beginnings of this already. A federalized and paramilitarized Neighborhood Watch Association, which will effectively act as a modern-day Gestapo.

Then the citizenry will divide. You will see the majority who will become "pro-government" and you'll see 20% of the people who know the truth and understand what everything is all about, and they will be the so-called "resistance".

Eventually that's how things are going to line up.

The military will remain relatively cohesive, even if things get real tough, because the military has always been far too close to the Republican Hierarchy for there to be a coup.

[Editor's note: This is where things get interesting because it is yet to be proven if the elaborate mind-control procedures used to train the military, starting in boot camp, may not break down when genuine "matters of the heart" begin to dominate the equation of choices and authority. The spiritual strength of the human being has been vastly underestimated by such dim-witted control nuts as those who would be the kings of this world.]

For instance, if you're in the service 10 years from now, and let's say the unemployment rate is 30% and the grocery shelves are half full and there are petrol and water restrictions, and you're in the military and you know you've got three square meals a day and a roof over

The effects of Bushonomics eventually become irreversible, and as the economy begins to collapse, there's nothing that can be done about it because it's all over. Bushonomics has ruined it.

When we get to the point when this happens, the military is going to have to have the ability to maintain control to prevent

Who Will Be The Next Bag Holders? (11/25/02)

The American people, wearing their hats as investors, are now being subjected to new psychological programming. They have become the Pavlovian (Market) Dogs.

When average people (despite having lost half of their money since Bush has been elected) hear the word "BUY" so many times every day, they continue to "BUY". Who will be next? Who will be left holding the proverbial bag again?

One of the very few negative segments on FNN was the man from the National Credit Council who was talking about the number of Americans who were borrowing off their credit cards to buy stocks. It's a record percentage now. People hear the word BUY and they can't stand it; they have to buy another 200 or 300 shares.

The National Credit Council has a support group for stock junkies anonymous. These are people who, when they hear the word BUY and they're watching the stock market like alcoholics or narcotic addicts, their hands start to shake. They can't help themselves. They have to call their broker and buy another 100 shares of something—even if they don't have the money. They'll borrow it from credit cards; they'll do whatever it takes. This is the new psychology.

That's why I do this column. It's a labor of love, trying to make the people understand.

[Editor's note: Unfortunately, starting at the time of this particular column, whoever is managing Al's website has decided that it should cost $6.95 PER MONTH to access Al's "labor of love" for humanity. While we here at The SPECTRUM genuinely respect Al Martin's salient insights—obviously—we question the wisdom and the knowledge of Universal Law being ignored when the spirit of "freely giving to help people" is replaced with such a strong focus on financial gain. In that "pure business" mode of operation, The SPECTRUM should cost at least $75 per month. How many of you would/could appreciate that?!]

I was watching Joe Kernan on CNBC, who's making jokes all the time. He started to say something about maybe it's time to sell or there might be some bearishness. Then he immediately puts his hand over his mouth and says: "Oh, I forgot. I'm not supposed to say that anymore." And naturally everybody laughs in the background to make a joke out of it.

We'll keep watching to see if one day the cane comes from offstage and pulls Joe off like the old vaudeville acts.

The standard P/E [price-to-earnings] ratios may be retired again. Some people may not know it, but in conjunction with the information from this weekend's market summary is the news that, during the Internet Bubble Days, the venerable Standard and Poors index was not even tracking most stocks by the classic P/E ratio. It became what they call Sales-to-Share Price Multiple because so many companies weren't earning any money.

They didn't have a P/E multiple, so they had to come up with a whole new idea. Buying Lucent and Nortel at 200 times "sales revenue" was then looked at as a good buy.

In other words, the whole market dynamics by late 1999 and early 2000 had begun to change because you had fully one-third of all publicly listed companies not earning any money.

Therefore, you couldn't say they had a P/E ratio anymore. You had to have a new rationale. You couldn't use a book-to-share ratio because those same one-third of companies traded had a negative net worth per share. Therefore, you couldn't use a price-to-share ratio anymore.

People then bought into it because they were told that this was the "New Paradigm". Now we're going to buy stocks based on a percentage of sales. And at the same time sales figures were being fraudulently manipulated. As we now know, many times sales figures were being pumped up through a lot of smoke-and-mirror accounting tricks.

(Parenthetically speaking, it should also be mentioned that Razorfish.com, which was an awfully hot stock, the "integral systems management company" was sold. This company, on a fully adjusted split basis, once traded at the end of 1999 for $1700 a share. The company was just sold for 81¢ a share.)

Now they're trying to bring back the paradigm from the 1999 to early 2000 period. Did the Enron Debacle have any effect on people?

The American people not only don't have a short-term memory when it comes to matters politic, it's economics as well.

Amazingly enough, all of the people who saw their 401(k)/IRA accounts cut in half since George Bush was elected are buying again.

And they're not buying solid companies. They're buying high-tech dot-com stocks that were selling between one and two dollars 45 days ago, and are now selling between three and four dollars. More than 500 of them have doubled in the last 45 days. This action is coming from frustrated IRA and 401(k) people; it's not coming from real speculators.

The buying is coming from average investors who saw their IRA and 401(k) accounts cut in half, and they're frustrated, and they don't know how to get their money back. So now they're all speculating in these one-dollar and two-dollar dot-com stocks.

A lot of people are saying that this strategy is working. They say: "I bought this stock at a buck and a half, 45 days ago, and now its four bucks a share."

Even WorldCom "rallied" from eight cents a share to fifteen cents a share. It is the "average investor" who has been able to pump up these stocks again.

I'd like to know, when they try to sell them and take their profit, who they're hoping to sell them to?

What the burnt-out 401(k)/IRA people are betting on is that there's going to be a whole new series of bag holders available who will take the shares they bought for a buck forty, five days ago, off their hands at four bucks a share, before the end of the year.

The problem is: where is the new class of bag holders when you had so many people burnt the first time?

Nobody has been able to make enough money since Bush was elected to be on the long side of the market to create a new group of bag holders.

The question remains: So, who are the new bag holders going to be?

At AlMartinRaw.com, we're trying to find them.

If we could find out who the new bag holders are going to be, we could make a fortune. We could make a list of the people.

In other news, the Department of Justice has been granted the authority it was seeking by a federal circuit court. This authority is called something like the "Enhanced Surveillance Act Against Citizen Terrorists". The court had granted the Department of Justice vast new authority to surveil and otherwise spy on "citizen terrorists". They actually call it that—"citizen terrorists".

The reason they use that language is because under the USA Patriot Act, and with the passage of the Law Enforcement Extension Act, the Department of Justice now has dictatorial powers, for all practical purposes, to spy on any non-citizens. Therefore they wanted a vast expansion of power to spy on so-called "citizen terrorists"—in other words, to lawfully create a whole new category of "citizen".

Naturally Ashcroft defined this as anyone who might be planning a terrorist attack.

Interestingly enough, it has subsequently been pointed out, on some of the talk shows, with guys like Morton Kondracke and some liberals, that the submission to the court didn't even use the word "terrorist". In other words, this is Ashcroft's interpretation in order to sell it to the American people.

Now, even conservatives like Fred Barnes have expressed some reservations about giving the Department of Justice such vast authority. The DoJ has answered by saying that they have simply created a second class of citizen who effectively has no constitutional protection.

That is, in fact, not what has happened, since the word "terrorist" isn't even used in the original submission to the circuit court; it just says citizen.

Ashcroft didn't give any explanation beyond that. Now you have to go and ask the Office of Homeland Security what their definition of "citizen terrorist" is. They refer you to the Office of Internal Security, who refer you to about four other offices.

This, then, in turn directly affects and expands the Office of Information Awareness, the new agency headed by the notorious and sinister John Poindexter of Iran-Contra fame. This is what bothered a lot of people—putting a guy like Poindexter in charge of it and giving this office, in particular, such vast new authority.

In effect, it will be John Poindexter, a felon, spying on you. According to the Office of Internal Security, the definition of a citizen terrorist is very loose.

Questions were asked later: What defines it? Who decides it? What are the parameters? And how do we begin to weed out citizen terrorists?

And that's going to start with the Neighborhood Watch Association. They will establish profiles on everybody in the neighborhood.

It works on a system of points, plus or minus points. If you have an American flag in front of your house, that's a plus point. If it's bigger than usual, you get another plus point.

But if you have a billboard in your front yard that reads "Indict the Bush Cabal"—that's definitely a negative. Probably a negative 50 points.

This gets into a whole classification routine, but the long and short of it is that the interpretation is so loose in this ruling that a citizen terrorist could literally be any citizen who has publicly expressed disagreement with the Bushonian internal security measures or the Bushonian War on Terrorism.

The ACLU will most likely be the first to sue. But the Department of Justice was seeking a whole new authority to go after people "on the cusp" as it were, pursuant to this entire plan to have the Neighborhood Watch Association classify people according to a certain standard. Then that goes to the Office of Internal Security for "Threat Assessment".

For instance, if you had been overheard publicly to disagree with Bushonian policy or aren't flying a flag in front of your house or don't have four flags flying out of each window of your Caddy, then your threat assessment would go up a notch.

If you were a reader of a liberal publication like The New Republic, your threat assessment would go up another notch.

And if you read Mother Jones, you'd probably already be in a CILF (Civilian Inmate Labor Facility). They'd be pulling up in the vans to take you to the nearest CILF.

Somebody will challenge this all the way to the Supreme Court because it frightened even some conservatives. You can tell that some of the people like Pat Buchanan were definitely frightened of this.

The Far Right—identified with the Far Grassroots Right or Religious Right—are very much frightened. They could take Pat Buchanan's Mercedes away and send him to Mexico under NAFTA. They need a new "populist" candidate down there, don't they?

After what Pat Buchanan has said about the Mexicans over the years, he wouldn't last two minutes down there.

Everyone's heard of course that the Homeland Security Bill has been passed—with the entire requisite Republican Pork tacked on. The vaccine and pharmaceutical manufacturers get a free ride. Eli Lilly, a favorite Bush Cabal company, is a specific benefactor of this bill.

They're giving Eli Lilly protection against lawsuits for manufacturing vaccines—in the event that the vaccines themselves kill a bunch of people. Then nobody can sue the pharmaceutical companies. There are also all sorts of special tax advantages for Republican-controlled corporations.

The Republicans figured: "Hey, we got the votes, and we can steamroll it."

Also, the companies that produce the so-called "security" equipment for airports have been given legal protection from all liability. According to the personnel, the new monitoring devices at the airports have not been tested, and once in a while they blow up. So what happens is that, if you're injured by one of these security devices, you can't sue the manufacturer. And you can't sue any airline security people if you're mistreated. They're held sovereign and immune. So now they have an absolute carte blanche to abuse anybody they want.

The Republicans snuck in this provision into the bill, which has nothing to do with Homeland Security. They weakened the rules on the so-called transfer of US corporations to offshore tax-free jurisdictions. There was a debate about forcing some big US companies like Ingersoll-Rand, Tyco, Stanley Works, and other corporations which have reincorporated themselves in offshore jurisdictions to avoid paying US taxes. The Democrats were pushing to force these corporations to reincorporate here, or at least force a special tax provision on

EVIL AGENDA OF THE SECRET GOVERNMENT

BY TIM SWARTZ

Exposes Project "Paper Clip" and the underground UFO bases of Hitler's elite scientific corps. Elements of the CIA and the Secret Government have imitated real alien abductions to convince the public of interplanetary invasion so New World Order gang can rule the Earth unchallenged.

Project Paperclip was the secret plan that took Nazi scientists and psychiatrists out of Germany and into the upper echelons of the U.S. governmental, scientific, and academic realms.

them. And the Republicans not only defeated this measure, but actually weakened it and made it easier for US corporations to reincorporate in offshore jurisdictions.

The United States said that if those offshore jurisdictions were not only tax-free havens but also non-extraditable jurisdictions, then the U.S. would honor the non-extradition for corporate officers who might be charged for fraud or malfeasance.

In effect, the Republicans are saying that you can move your company offshore, you can commit fraud against American investors, banks, etc., with impunity—as long as you are incorporated in an offshore jurisdiction that has no extradition treaty with the United States for fraud or tax evasion. In other words, corporate officers were given a tremendous shield from liability.

You can continue to commit fraud as long as you continue to donate money to the Republican Party.

In other news, the Republicans keep pushing, under their longterm plan to privatize government and the military, the new Bushonian plan just announced to privatize 850,000 government positions. These are all federal civilian employees. In other words, private corporations would now run these individual branches of government and federal agencies. They do that, in a sense, now anyway, but there are still federal employees. Now they wouldn't be federal employees anymore. They would be employees of private corporations.

This then becomes the "Corporatization of American Government".

And what's left? There are the 170,000 staff members of the General Services Administration. The General Accounting Office. The OMB. The Comptroller.

The way they're selling it is by saying that it will be cheaper for the American taxpayers. They're using the Old Republican BS that private corporations will instill market discipline on government and thus drive costs down, which always sounds nice, but it never happens that way.

This will be literally a Republican Wet Dream because the corporations, which are becoming the new sub-contractors to the government, are Republican-controlled corporations. We are now creating a whole new power structure between corporations and the Republican Party.

The Republican Party is essentially using this privatization to consolidate its political power, so that even if a time were to come that it was not in office, we would literally have a One-Party State. Even if the Republicans were not in office, the corporations will control most of governmental functions, and those corporations are in turn controlled by Republican interests.

Using the Soviet analogy, as there were Soviet apparatchiks (bureaucratic functionaries), now there will be Republican apparatchiks running the functions of state.

As you can imagine, federal employees are all scared of this idea. They're going to lose their rich government pensions.

And then there's Tom DeLay, who's as Far Right as you can get, the House majority leader and lapdog of Attorney General John Ashcroft. He likes to quote Ashcroft saying that the Attorney General says that we must now act to pass the National Identity Card Act and we now must pass the overturning of Posse Comitatus in order "to give the Attorney General new tools in his war to identify the disloyal and weed out all enemies of the state". These are the new marching orders of the Bush Regime.

The Republicans know that the Democratic Party is in a state of complete disarray. They know they can get anything passed through Congress they want.

There has been a lot of talk that this creates the opportunity for the formation of a new party, since the Democrats are in such disarray and even what is left of the moderate wing of the Republican Party is becoming increasingly nervous that the Bush Administration is so far to the right and continues to march even further to the right. Now even some of the grassroots Republicans distance themselves from the Bush Administration on this issue of "security".

Even people like Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson are distancing themselves from the Bush Administration. After all, they represent a lot of gun-owning right-wing Baptist types who are just as frightened of national ID cards as Tom Daschle.

There go the new Neighborhood Watch Association golfcart people. The women are driving around in their NWA golfcarts with their clipboards and their orange and black hats and whistles. They've been going around making notes about which places have American flags flying and which don't, and whether your car has American flags flying or not.

Wait—I have to go look at the new Neighborhood Watch Association car cruising by. The car is highly lustrous jet-black, like an embassy black. Crown Victoria. Blackwall tires. Deeply tinted windows. American flag decals plastered on the back of the car.

On the door there is the new NWA logo with the new imperial eagle in gold. There are lights on top, and searchlights on the driver's side. They have the Geriatric Gestapo driving them. They have teams of two, in case one falls asleep. One guy might fall asleep and another might lose his false teeth, and they get all discommodulated.

You know what they say: it's always a good idea to have backup. △

Recognize The Subtle Energies That Influence Your Life

12/7/02 HATONN

Good afternoon, my scribe. I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the One Light of Creator Source. Be still and allow for the energies to settle.

Much is happening all around your planet that affects the unfolding drama of YOUR daily lives. There are many layers to the “games” being played.

Many who think that they are beyond being “played” are indeed being used as pawns for much larger games. There is physical deception, manipulation, and conspiracy, and then there is spiritual deception, manipulation, and conspiracy. The spiritual aspect of the game is by far the more important, for it allows the physical trickery to go unnoticed.

As you each evolve and expand your inner spiritual awareness, the games of the Dark Tricksters become much more easy to spot, and therefore to counter. The Satans and Lucifers who direct great amounts of energy toward the suppression of information that would allow for ones to more fully recognize their inner abilities, perceptions, and awareness, do so knowing that it is the only way to persist along their chosen path without having to constantly start over.

There is no room for this sort of “Dark” entity in a society that has evolved beyond a certain level of spiritual awareness. Once such a general level of spiritual awareness is reached on a planet, the ability of this sort of entity to make any significant impact is all but eliminated.

We of the Lighted Realms of Creation know that all we need to do is help raise the awareness level of any given planet, and then the “troublemakers” will be stopped. This is, in essence, the fundamental principle from which we operate.

It has been said time and time again that “knowledge is power”. Those who are in power therefore, it is assumed, have greater knowledge. This is neither true nor false.

Just as we of the Lighted Realms diligently try to communicate directly to and through those who are open and accepting of our messages, so too are there ones who diligently seek out information from the Satans and Lucifers who manipulate from behind the scenes. The knowledge that such seekers are given always comes with strings attached, and is almost never of a nature that allows for understanding of the fundamental mechanism that explains why the information is effective.

For example, many of the ones who seek assistance from the Dark side are given ritualistic chants and affirmations to repeat over and over again that, when done, will produce the effect they desire. However, it is rarely explained that the mechanism that they are using is simply so that they will focus their mental and emotional energies on a desire so as to create the outcome.

Often the chant will also involve a prayer for a “deity” (a demon or devil) so that the one repeating the “magical” chant will think that it is the demon or devil who is doing the manipulation of energies—rather than seeing that it is, in fact, THEY themselves who are aligning the energies. This sort of “knowledge” is more like a half truth.

As these Dark manipulators gain the confidence of their newfound puppets, they begin to set subtle “anchors” in the puppets’ minds that, like a seed, begins to grow and, over years, the puppets begin to blur the separation of self from the entity until these puppets actually relinquish their free will, and they sort of just “go along for the ride”—more as a passenger than as an active creative force working through a body.

The mechanism works time and time again, and is the general way ones in positions of “power” rise to their levels of influence. In contrast, we of the Lighted Realms effort to teach you ones the basic principles of creating, in a RESPONSIBLE manner, what it is that you desire. Chants and mantras are tools you can use, but we of the Lighted Realms will say that you should learn to write your own mantras and chants—rather than go along with another’s.

You will notice that in political situations, especially where war is threatening, there will be ones who come to the forefront with slogans or catch-phrases that constantly bombard the media headlines. This is a form of mass manipulation or mass chanting. Just hearing them or reading them will cause a subtle energy to be aligned that matches the vibration of the original intent. This subtle energy, in and of itself, is not very significant. But—when you add together MILLIONS AND MILLIONS of people’s subtle energies, the cumulative effect is quite significant!

This is why some of the more wealthy political candidates in an election spend so much money (energy) on mass-media advertising. They know quite well that they will make a subtle (subliminal) impact on the minds of the millions of “drones” who don’t have time to pay attention to what’s really going on—and therefore are most susceptible to “mantra” advertising, and thus will vote for the most familiar name.

Knowing the nature of the games being played on your world will allow you to more easily recognize the subtle influences that impact your lives on a day-to-day basis. Seeing the mechanism of the games and understanding the rules will enable you to play skillfully within the game—rather than being played BY the game.

It is not our intent to present you ones with riddles, but to present information in such a way that it will, hopefully, cause you to stop and ponder for a moment what has just been implied. Rather than trying to explain each concept in infinite detail—which would be physically impossible in written format—we would hope that you will go within and connect with the intent of the message offered, and thus align your energies with that of the message, and therefore connect with as much explanation and understanding as you could ever desire.

Seek and you WILL find. This mantra has stood the test of time and has been repeated, for billions of years, on EVERY planet with sentient life.

You who desire to know more shall find that the outer world of mass perception is constantly being influenced by non-physical entities. If the entities are telling you what to do, rather than simply making observations or answering your questions, then they are, by definition, MANIPULATING you.

If you are asking, within, questions like: "What can I do to help?" Often ideas will be offered in the form of inspirations. Each such offering should be carefully considered as to the longterm ramifications if acted upon.

Many ones who have been following an inner spiritual path for a very long time will say things like: "I have come to trust my inner gut feelings." This is fine, but I would caution you all to still take the time to examine and question ALL offerings—even this very message. The Lighted Realms NEVER mind being questioned or challenged, for it shows that you are being responsible.

If you simply go along trusting, without questioning for yourself, you will eventually create a situation wherein you stagnate in your growth, for to truly expand your awareness you must understand the foundation upon which you express as a being. If I tell you that you could walk on water or float through the air if your vibration is proper, though this is indeed truth, it is for all practical purposes incomprehensible without a great deal of foundational and experiential knowledge, and is therefore quite esoteric in nature.

Many of you thrive on this sort of idealistic information—to a point that you tend to want to skip ahead to these "fun" parts without filling in the foundational understanding that not only makes it possible to do "miraculous" things, but also allows you to understand the functioning of the world in which you live—so as to make it unnecessary to do such "fantastic" things, for you will, along the way, realize that there are indeed much better uses for your energy that will have a much larger (global) effect—rather than to simply "float" around entertaining your friends.

We of the Lighted Realms are not in the business of simply entertaining you ones, though we will work diligently (by giving guidance and confirmations) to assist any of you who are sincerely seeking knowledge and understanding so as to help make your world a better place.

We have great compassion for your situation and the challenges that you must face. We also know that you need your present experience in order to eventually cause mass consciousness to shift in such a way that a DESIRE for understanding will be generated on a planetary scale. When this occurs, many doors will be opened and great strides will be made by those who are ready for the next step forward in consciousness.

Please read these words with a discerning heart, and question, within, both the meaning and intent of this message. Not everyone who reads these words will come away with the same understanding. Seek clarification within for anything that causes you confusion. If you cannot accept what is offered, then please know that it is not for you and that you would be very wise to seek elsewhere for your spiritual insights.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the One Light of Creator God—the One who created you and me. May you each find comfort in knowing that within you is the ability to connect to, and communicate directly with, Creator God or any of His Creations.

Blessings and Peace to you all.

Salu. △

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach, Volumes I & II

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen."

— Back Cover, Vol. I

"Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you. (God!) You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose."

— Esu "Jesus" Sananda (Vol. II)

More Quotes From Volume II

"Be not in fear of the changes that are upon you, for they are a very necessary part of the [planetary] transition. The Earth will heave to and fro, and many wondrous things will you experience, but lose not your sight upon the final goal. We will always be there with you, and we are but a call away."

— Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec

"You live in perhaps the most unique time that your planet will ever experience—COMING OUT OF IGNORANCE (DARKNESS) AND INTO KNOWLEDGE (LIGHT). Would it not be wise to take full advantage of this exquisite learning environment?!"

— Sanat Kumara ("Grandfather")

"The physical body is 'merely' a conduit for the interaction into and the interfacing with the physical experience. I say 'merely' because that body is a most exquisite creation indeed and poorly understood by your current level of so-called medical science."

— Master Hilarion

"Be at peace, you who acknowledge and take within these messages of Higher Guidance, for you are being given that which you will need, in the way of instruction, to meet and surmount these challenges ahead."

Vatican Assassins

Wounded In The house of My friends

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's ungodly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

—The Book Reader, America's most independent review of new titles, Fall/Winter 2001/2002

"Probably of all books which could be called 'conspiracy oriented', this is the grand-daddy. This is the Big One, I mean it...."

"It's one of those books that, even if you're a cynic and can come to terms with only half of it, it changes everything."

— Jeff Rense, Oct. 11, 2001

Children Of The Matrix

How an interdimensional race has controlled the world for thousands of years—and still does!

We are born into a world controlled by unseen forces that have plagued and manipulated humanity for thousands of years. You may look around and think that what you see is "real". But in truth you are living in an illusion designed to keep you in a mental, emotional, and spiritual prison cell.

Icke exposes these forces and their methods of human control and reveals a fantastic web of global manipulation, orchestrated by forces beyond this physical realm. He exposes the hidden bloodlines, through which other-dimensional entities live and operate unseen among us; and he shows how the bloodlines of the royal, political, and economic rulers of today are the same as those who ruled as the kings and queens of ancient times.

The truth is not only out there.

Much of it is right here.

As we witness Homeland Security's freedom-cancelling measures tightening more and more around our necks each day, and the new/old War on Iraq gearing-up again, a feeling of foreboding descends like a chilling fog, and the question naturally arises: “What next?!”

Perhaps this month we can offer some realistic insights into this and other questions of the hour because we are extremely fortunate this month to present an interview with one of the United States' leading conspiracy researchers—prominent author and articulate investigative journalist Jim Marrs, from Texas (not to be confused with evangelist Texe Marrs).

Most of you will recall Oliver Stone's detailed and absorbing 1991 “documentary” film called JFK. It was partially based on Jim Marrs' New York Times best-selling 1989 book Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy.

NEWEST OFFERINGS AT WISDOM BOOKS

RULE BY SECRECY:

The Hidden History That Connects
The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids
by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news.

And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

ALIEN AGENDA:

Investigating The Extraterrestrial
Presence Among Us

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. As his title indicates, the author has concluded that UFOs are piloted by extraterrestrials of various types and with diverse motives. However, rather than taking that conclusion for granted, Marrs guides his readers through 50 years of UFO history that includes some less-traveled byways, off-ramps, and dead ends. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic.

COMMON SENSE II

Thomas Paine's pamphlet Common Sense was written and widely circulated in 1776. The simple logic and wisdom presented in Common Sense persuaded thousands of ordinary citizens to support a movement that sought to unite the colonies in an effort to win their independence from England. The birth of our nation and freedom from King George's tyranny is a direct result of this nation's people understanding the REAL issues and choosing freedom over tyranny.

has tall shoes to fill. Time is running out and we must once again persuade our countrymen to choose freedom over tyranny.

The sole purpose of Common Sense II is to awaken our sleeping countrymen. We have compiled the most illustrative and eloquent writings available, and have arranged them in the manner most likely to persuade a nation to stand up for freedom and independence—our God-given rights!

Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To Personal Growth

Code: EDE (1.0 lb.)

Here is Dan Millman's magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve "gateways" or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth.

Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant's ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a "numerologist". Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience.

Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: "The Practice Of Enlightenment"—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

I had a vision. I don't mean the kind that results from getting beamed with a snowball launched by the neighbor's scheming little Rambo—the kind of “seeing stars” hit that provokes giving voice to colorful phrases as you prepare to retaliate.

Rather, this vision initially struck me around the first anniversary of the 9/11 tragedy. And it has recurred more and more often since then, usually triggered by certain items (like I'll get to later) that I'm processing for The SPECTRUM.

This vision is one that many can recall from their high school biology class; it looks like the film showing how a single cell divides into two. First there's the one cell; then you see a darkening and doubling of the internal chromosomes, etc., and then—voilà!—as quickly as that, there are now two cells. Only what I'm being shown is how one planet Earth “divides” into two, seemingly as smoothly yet miraculously as one cell divides into two.

So what does the vision mean? The way it comes across to me, the depiction is in “energy space” or “frequency space” and represents the testing and sorting that's occurring on planet Earth at this time. In the simplest of terms, Darkness is getting darker and Lightness is getting lighter—the Evil is getting worse and the Good is getting better.

According to this vision, at some point the two “worlds” become so incompatible frequency-wise or energy-wise that they just plain separate—sort of like the two cells do. But how would that look to ones experiencing WITHIN such a process, rather than looking at it from without?

What first comes to mind is the biblical description from Matthew 24:37-44 that said:

“As it was in Noah's day, so will it be when the Son of Man comes. For in those days before the Flood, people were eating, drinking, taking wives, taking husbands, right up to the day Noah went into the ark, and they suspected nothing till the Flood came and swept all away.

“It will be like this when the Son of Man comes. Then, of two men in the fields, one is taken, one left; of two women at the millstone grinding, one is taken, one left. So stay awake, because you do not know the day when your master is coming.

“You may be quite sure of this: that if the householder had known at what time of the night the burglar would come, he would have stayed awake and would not have allowed anyone to break through the wall of his house. Therefore, you too must stand ready because the Son of Man is coming at an hour you do not expect.”

So if your frequency (heart focus) moves up to be compatible with that of the Lighter world, pretty quickly things would look better all around you, since Evil was now no longer in your midst. And if your frequency is low, resonating with the Darker world—preoccupied with greed, fear, anger, etc.—then you'd find yourself in an atmosphere with others of similar vibes. (Kind of fitting, huh?)

A growing number of items in more recent issues of The SPECTRUM have caused this intriguing vision to flash back into my thoughts.

For instance, look at the beginning of last month's News Desk, when the wise little Japanese child said: “Tell everyone that peace is coming very soon. It will happen very fast and will be very fun. Tell everyone this so they will know.” Sounds mysterious yet certain, doesn't it?

And if you happen to be one of those “moving” emotionally upward (in frequency/energy) toward the World of Light, then that's quite a plausible (if elegantly simple) description for some very real physics at work. What do I mean by that?

Well, without going technical here about such as the electromagnetic substructure of matter and the space-time continuum dynamics that separate worlds of reality, in essence your sustained higher-frequency attitude could, once above a certain “jump threshold” in frequency space, transport you to a vibratory place or world that's always been “there” but was not previously close enough to your field of direct perception or experience—until YOU were close enough in frequency to “jump” to it—like jumping onto a paradise island (that's always been there, waiting) once your boat got close enough.

Conversely, a concept like the little Japanese child shared would be completely lost on the consciousness of those gravitating ever more toward low-frequency material pursuits like greed and war. What the child said would simply not be “real” for them. The sorting is thus automatic.

Another reminder of my vision was last month's striking message from Esu “Jesus” Sananda, titled Make Room In Your Life For Your New World, wherein he said: “You see, the time is such that you have been experiencing the shifting of dimensions, and what was once, is no more. The Transition of your world is in full swing, and there is no turning back for any of you ones.... Many on your planet are making their choices right now. It will be a time of great sorrow for many, and a time of ultimate joy for others.”

And in this month's SPECTRUM not only does the message from Archangel Michael continue this intriguing theme with sometimes intense overtones like: “We each must choose what we shall take with us from this present life, across the doorstep, into that which is but hours away.” And: “Leave behind all fear, all doubt, and all anger, all confusion, all hatred, all greed, and all lusts of the flesh. Step across the threshold into the new age—the new world—into the Kingdom of God, which already exists and awaits you.”

But even Eustace Mullins' unusual message shared this month ends with: “This is Christ's Message of Hope to the entire world. It is happening all around us, but we do not yet see it.”

Yes, this is shaping up to be an interesting year. We can be sure that the Forces of Darkness will do their clever, desperate best to hold as many as possible in “their” world. Meanwhile, with your kind financial help, we here at The SPECTRUM will continue to Light the way to the world we all yearn for in our hearts.

WAR TO START IN LAST WEEK OF FEBRUARY

From the www.globe-intel.net Internet website, 1/3/03: [quoting]

by Gordon Thomas

President Bush has earmarked the start of the war with Iraq for the last week in February.

Midnight on the 21st of the month has been fed into strike-force computers as the launch of the most powerful air attack the world has known.

Bush revealed the details to Ariel Sharon, Israel's prime minister, in a telephone call over Christmas. Sharon has already hinted he knows the date, but insists he is sworn to secrecy. His military commanders have been briefed on the role Israel's forces will play.

In the last Gulf War, Washington persuaded Israel to remain out of the conflict—because their involvement would wreck the fragile coalition America had built with Arab nations. But Sharon has insisted that this time Israel must have a part in ending the threat Saddam poses to the Jewish state.

Israel's role will be to launch round-the-clock air attacks to destroy Saudi missiles roaming in the Iraqi deserts only minutes flying time from Tel Aviv. Israeli fighter aircraft will also be on hard-stand readiness to shoot down any Iraqi planes that try to seek refuge in Syria. In the last Gulf War, Saddam's planes fled to Iran—where they have remained.

Israel's airfields are already acting as an air bridge for American forces—bringing in men and supplies for the ground assault that will follow the initial February bombardment.

[end quoting]

Coming from a source as credible and well-connected as is longtime international investigative journalist and renowned author Gordon Thomas (author of SEEDS OF FIRE about the China threat, author of MINDFIELD about nasty CIA experimentation over the years, and himself the subject of our front-page feature interview back in our May 2002 issue), this is likely a very reliable "insider" report of Bush's plan AS OF the date of Gordon's news release.

However, as most readers of this publication are well aware, there most surely are other forces at work—only these forces are just as determined that there NOT be a war in Iraq. So the outcome of this "tug-of-war" is anything but clear at this time.

Meanwhile, the growing numbers of people (both within the United States and worldwide) who are questioning the "need" for war in Iraq suggests the stakes are high for the creation of at least some "pep rally" event(s), like Pearl Harbor was, to psychologically induce the public to back the United States' entry into this war.

Here's a good example, from Canada (thank you Dr. P.C. from Montreal), of the way Bush and his war are viewed outside the baloney from the very-well-controlled American media:

BUSH OBSESSED WITH KILLING CHILDREN

Excerpted from the National Post of Canada, 1/9/03:

[Editor's note: The above is THEIR headline! And know that the National Post is one of the two NATIONAL CIRCULATION daily newspapers in Canada!]

OTTAWA—Bill Blaikie, a candidate for the leadership of the federal New Democratic Party, came under attack yesterday over his statement that George W. Bush, the U.S. president, spends "every minute of his life" thinking of ways to kill Iraqi children.

Mr. Blaikie, a Winnipeg Member of Parliament, made the remark Tuesday evening in a leadership debate with the five other candidates in Vancouver. While debating the possibility of war in Iraq, Mr. Blaikie said: "I find it strange that a pro-life politician like George Bush is planning every minute of his life to kill as many Iraqi children as he can in the name of oil or whatever it is that's REALLY on the agenda."

[end quoting]

Emphasis was added to that last point because, as SPECTRUM readers are well aware, the New World Order agenda is likely very different from anything so obvious as oil. Yet oil works well as a plausible "cover" to hoodwink the majority of the sleeping public. Throw in some rising prices at the gas pumps, and with heating oil and natural gas all of a sudden, for good measure, and the majority of the public will at least quietly rally behind an aggressive move to invade Iraq.

And while we're on the subject of those resisting the New World Order agenda, how about this one:

JUDGE RULES AGAINST HOMELAND SECURITY DEPARTMENT

Excerpted from the <http://groups.yahoo.com/group/RUMORMILLNEWS/messages> Internet website, 1/2/03: [quoting]

(You can reach rumormillnews information at this site for the time being.)

The Office of Homeland Security lost the first round in a legal fight to keep its activities secret, as a federal judge ruled it will have to answer questions about its power over other federal agencies.

U.S. District Court Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly ordered the office to prove it has no authority other than helping and advising President Bush if it wants to dismiss a lawsuit seeking access to its records.

The ruling last week favored the Washington-based Electronic Privacy Information Center, which is trying to get Homeland Security records on proposals for a national driver's license and for a "trusted flyer" program that relies on biometric information to identify airline passengers. [end quoting]

Looks like the New World Order crooks are beginning to feel some pressure opposing this arrogant take-over of our Constitution and Bill Of Rights disguised as the Homeland Security measures. Not as many people are falling for the ploy as they would hope. And this brave judge is doing more good for we-the-people than most all of our over-paid, weak-spined, so-called congressional representatives whose example is a tragedy to behold.

Meanwhile, some people are doing what they can to raise the public awareness of Homeland Security's mind-control shenanigans, like the following:

CNN DELETES STORY ON PROTEST OUTSIDE CNN HEADQUARTERS

From the www.thememoryhole.com/media/cnn-protesters.htm Internet website, 12/10/02: [quoting]

It was surprising that CNN covered the story in the first place. Dozens of people marched outside the news channel's Atlanta headquarters, holding signs and chanting slogans denouncing CNN's role as warmongering mouthpiece for government and business.

The story was posted on CNN's website on 24 November 2002. It was soon gone. The website of Citizens for Legitimate Government reports that, by the afternoon of the next day, the article was no longer available. The BuzzFlash website, which had linked to the article, then linked to the archived copy of the article in Google's cache. Soon that, too, was deleted. Luckily BuzzFlash had kept a full copy of the story, including a screenshot. The story is presented below:

Protesters Criticize CNN Coverage Of Iraq

Sunday, November 24, 2002
Posted 5:33 PM EST

ATLANTA, Georgia (CNN) — More than 80 demonstrators picketed outside CNN's world headquarters in Atlanta Sunday afternoon, saying the network lacks anti-war perspectives in its coverage of the U.S. confrontation with Iraq.

Demonstrators carried signs reading "Corporate Nonsense Network" and "For Sale: Free Press" among others, and chanted: "Half the story, all the time!" and "Not in our name!"

The protest was organized by a group of Georgia State University students and anti-war activists.

CNN spokesman Matt Furman said the network "reports from the region and around the world, from all sides" but respected the demonstrators' right to protest.

Once again we see an example of people waking up to the tricks of the New World Order gang and DOING something about it. And the speed with which CNN removed this news story from public access only had the opposite effect—to loudly and clearly admit their role as a major governmental prostitute for mind control of the masses.

So, we send a large number of innocent young men and women to the Persian Gulf (and elsewhere) as part of New World Order war games, and then we do the following to them back at home:

HUGE MILITARY ID THEFT, REWARD OFFERED

From the www.cnn.com/2003/TECH/biztech/01/01/pentagon.computerthef.ap/index.html Internet website, 1/1/03: [quoting]

PHOENIX, Arizona (AP)—A government contractor posted a $100,000 reward Tuesday in the theft of Social Security numbers and other personal records of 500,000 military service members and their families in 16 states.

The theft of computer hard drives from TriWest Healthcare Alliance could turn into one of the largest identity thefts on record if the information is misused, the Federal Trade Commission said.

On Tuesday, prosecutors and TriWest jointly announced the reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of thieves who broke into Phoenix-based TriWest's office December 14 and stole the equipment.

The theft came as the Defense Department is working to computerize the medical records of all military personnel.

The stolen computers have no connection to the larger project, but Pentagon officials are "going to learn from this issue and do what's necessary" to protect sensitive information, spokesman Jim Turner said.

The stolen hard drives contained names, addresses, phone numbers, medical claim histories, and Social Security numbers. [end quoting]

Even if there's nothing especially sinister about this theft, it's a good reminder of how vulnerable we all actually are to the same kind of "access" to large blocks of private information in the hands of skilled thieves in this computer age.

Before we leave the military theme, consider the heart-felt message of the following:

A CONCERNED FATHER'S LETTER TO THE EDITOR ABOUT WAR IN IRAQ

From Paris News of Paris, Texas for 11/14/02: [quoting]

A father writes:

I just wanted to express my heartfelt thanks to all of the veterans and their families who have given us so much through their sacrifices. I fear much of what our military men have fought and died to protect is under assault from within as well as without.

I did not serve, but have two sons who are of age to serve. I never thought I'd see the day when I would not be proud to have them serve their country, but now may be that day.

In preface to what I am about to say, I voted for "W". He has done much to disappoint me, but his relentless striving to attack Iraq will involve us, I believe, in what would be, as far as I know, our first war of aggression. We cannot know all of his motives, of course, but I don't see Iraq as imposing an imminent threat to the U.S. So what's up? Oil?

"W" has opened up our Constitution for assault, as no one before him, since the 9/11 attacks. We had better get our head out of the sand before we end up living in a police state. I leave you with a quote that has been attributed to Julius Caesar:

Beware the leader who bangs the drums of war in order to whip the citizenry into a patriotic fervor, for patriotism is indeed a double-edged sword. It both emboldens the blood, just as it narrows the mind. And when the drums of war have reached a fever pitch and the blood boils with hate and the mind has closed, the leader will have no need in seizing the rights of the citizenry. Rather, the citizenry, infused with fear and blinded by patriotism, will offer up all of their rights unto the leader, and gladly so. How do I know? For this is what I have done. And I am Caesar.

— Alan Shelby, Reno [end quoting]

He mentions this as "our first war of aggression" and this is typical of most people's erroneous understanding of history. In the school systems, they have never been guided to truthful information, nor have most had the motivation (perhaps until now) to find out The Truth for themselves. That's a big part of why The SPECTRUM exists—ready and waiting for those who are waking up.

This father is finally, as a concerned parent, asking the right questions—as are millions of others since the suspicious events of 9/11 and thereafter.

If people really could have understood what was going on around this planet, there would never have been any of the world wars and other contrived conflicts masking hidden agendas of greed and power. It just takes time for people to wake up and gradually see how they've been hoodwinked for so long.

And speaking of being hoodwinked with massive doses of public relations baloney, how about this bright light of revelation:

GM CROPS BREEDING WITH MANY PLANTS IN THE WILD

From the news.independent.co.uk/uk/environment/story.jsp?story=365021 Internet website, 12/29/02: [quoting]

Alarming new results from official trials of genetically modified (GM) crops are severely jeopardising Government plans for growing them commercially in Britain.

The results, in a new Government report, show—for the first time in Britain—that genes from GM crops are interbreeding on a large scale with conventional ones, and also with weeds.

The report is so devastating to the Government's case for GM crops that ministers last week sought to bury it by slipping the first information on it out on the website of the Department of the Environment, Food, and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) on Christmas Eve—the one day in the year when no newspapers are being prepared.

Even then, the department published only a heavily edited summary of the main report. Unusually, the full report, which will contain much more devastating detail, was withheld from publication on the website. DEFRA said it was available on request, but when The Independent tried to ask for it last week, the department said no one was available to provide it.

The report, the result of six years of monitoring of GM crops in Britain, is particularly politically explosive and it gives the first results from the official farm-scale trials, which ministers have been running to test the suitability of growing GM crops in Britain.

The Government has repeatedly said that the results of the trials would settle the question of whether GM crops endangered the environment but—perhaps because it knew what the research had found—it has been downplaying their significance in recent weeks.

The trials—originally set up to buy time in the face of strong public hostility to the crops—were not designed to look at the possibility of genes from GM crops contaminating nearby plants, but focused on the effects of different uses of pesticides on GM and non-GM plants. But, after this was criticised, studies of this "gene flow" were bolted on.

The report covers true studies carried out between 1994 and 2000 by the National Institute of Agricultural Botany and the Laboratory of the Government Chemist. It shows that genes from GM oil seed rape, specially engineered to be resistant to herbicides, contaminated conventional crops as far as 200 yards away.

[Editor's note: Rape seed & oil is what has been disguised cutely as "Canola" oil, which has a lot of other health-suspicious problems, though it's being pushed into a number of even "health food" items—for reasons that are equally suspicious. Go back and reread the sobering article Blindness, Mad Cow Disease, And "Canola" Oil in our December 1999 issue if you want an eye-opening account of the research findings on this product.]

Equally alarmingly, GM oil seed rape that escaped from a crop harvested in 1996 persisted for at least four years, until studies ended in 2000.

In another case, the report adds: "It was found that some combine harvesters were not cleaned after the harvesting of the GM crop" and "subsequently flushed out" the GM seed onto ground intended for conventional crops "causing contamination of this field".

Most worryingly of all, the report shows that the GM crop readily interbred with a weed, wild turnip, giving it resistance to herbicides, and thus raising the prospect of the development of "super weeds".

The report concludes that the research "indicates that commercial-scale releases of GM oil seed rape in future could pollinate other crops and wild turnip".

Other studies from elsewhere in the world have shown that interbreeding occurs, and English Nature, the Government's wildlife watchdog, has said super weeds will "inevitably" emerge in Britain if GM crops are grown commercially.

In a commentary also published by DEFRA on Christmas Eve, the official advisory committee on releases to the environment said that the contamination was "entirely within expectations".

The committee added that "in itself" gene flow did not constitute a risk to the environment.

But Pete Riley of Friends of the Earth said the results showed that if GM crops became widespread, almost all similar crops would inevitably become contaminated, severely threatening organic agriculture. He added: "It is not surprising that the Government has tried to cover up this report."

"It shows that we need to know a great deal more about these issues before we even contemplate growing GM crops commercially."

[end quoting]

Longtime SPECTRUM readers are well aware of the dangers of genetically engineered (GE) and genetically modified (GM) crops as shared within these pages for a long time now. Just the facts—that (1) GE/GM leader Monsanto abruptly changed their name not long ago due to so much constant bad publicity, and (2) their own corporate headquarters cafeteria REFUSED to use GE/GM products—ought to be enough clues to think about as the New World Order gang of misfits looks for "better" ways to get rid of us, the "useless eaters and consumers of natural resources". The above is a BIG hit to their massive public relations campaign—and rightly so!

MOBILE-PHONE RADAR SYSTEM WILL TRACK OUR EVERY MOVE

From NEXUS magazine, January-February 2003, in turn from The Observer, London, October 14, 2002, www.guardian.co.uk/mobile/article/0,2763,811034,00.html): [quoting]

Secret radar technology research that will allow the biggest-ever extension of

"Big Brother"-style surveillance in the U.K. is being funded by the government.

The radical new system, which has outraged civil liberties groups, uses mobile-phone masts to allow security authorities to watch vehicles and individuals "in real time" almost anywhere in Britain.

The technology "sees" the shapes made when radio waves emitted by mobile-phone masts meet an obstruction. Signals bounced back by immobile objects, such as walls or trees, are filtered out by the receiver. This allows anything moving, such as cars or people, to be tracked. Previously, radar needed massive fixed equipment to work, and transmissions from mobile-phone masts were thought too weak to be useful.

The system works wherever a mobile phone can pick up a signal. By using receivers attached to mobile phone masts, users of the new technology could focus-in on areas hundreds of miles away and bring up a display showing any moving vehicles and people.

An individual with one type of receiver, a portable unit little bigger than a laptop computer, could even use it as a "personal radar" covering the area around the user. Researchers are working to give the new equipment "X-ray vision"—the capability to "see" through walls and look into people's homes.

U.K. Ministry of Defense officials are hoping to introduce the system as soon as resources allow. Police and security services are known to be interested in a variety of possible surveillance applications. The researchers themselves say the system, known as Celldar, is aimed at anti-terrorism defense, security, and road-traffic management.

[end quoting]

This use of cellphone technologies, while annoying in its own right, only distracts the public's attention from much more sophisticated and sinister applications—such as those affecting our thoughts and emotional states.

Check The Beck Protocol ... A First-Aid Kit for the Future

The healing power of gentle currents of electricity was known in ancient Rome (electric fish) and was used extensively in spas and clinics before The Medical Health Model was established. Today The Natural Health Model recognizes the electrical nature of the body and the importance of working with the body's natural ability to heal itself.

The Beck Protocol offers a four-part program for health using micro-currents of electricity (Silver Pulser), pulsed magnetic fields (Magnetic Pulser), Ionic-Colloidal Silver and freshly Ozonated Water.

Robert (Bob) C. Beck, D.Sc.

The Silver Pulser and Magnetic Pulser are licensed in Canada as Class-II medical devices available to the public.

website.) If you think you've lost unfairly due to the crooked dealings of investment companies, you can file a claim. (See Weiss' book below.) — Chris

Dear Chris Lock,

The time is the early 1800s; the place, a small town in the Wild West.

A gang of masked men ride into town, hold up the bank, hogtie the tellers, and run off with $10,000 in cash, wiping out the savings of dozens of local farmers and ranchers. A local posse finally catches up to the bank robbers with enough evidence to lock 'em away for years to come. Instead, however, they offer a settlement: "Pay us $1, keep the rest, and go scott-free." The robbers whine and moan, but finally, with great reluctance, they accept the deal.

Absurd? Maybe. But that's essentially the deal the SEC and the states have granted to the nation's investment banking firms. Consider the math:

The investment banking firms helped cause nearly $10 TRILLION in losses in the Nasdaq and the NYSE.

But these same investment banking firms are getting away with a fine of no more than $1.4 billion. That's $1.40 for every $10,000 in investor losses.

Meanwhile, the firms are "crying" all the way to the bank. Citigroup, for example, has to pay $400 million.

Sounds big. But it's just 2% of last year's profits. Adding insult to injury, Citigroup says it wants to deduct the fines from its income to save on taxes.

What do you get out of the settlement? Monetarily, mostly crumbs. It's a drop in the bucket to begin with, and the states want to grab most of it for their coffers anyhow.

But you do get one important benefit: Access to the evidence! With that evidence, you have a better chance of prevailing in arbitration claims against your brokerage firm. If you feel you have good case, we think you should pursue it aggressively. (See Martin Weiss' Ultimate Safe Money Guide, Chapter 3, for detailed instructions on how to file a claim.)

Look. Until REAL reform takes place, investors will continue to punish Wall Street. Morgan Stanley announced a 16% decline in profits for the fourth quarter, and profits fell 13% for the year. Goldman Sachs' earnings fell 6% for the year. Year-over-year earnings at Lehman Brothers fell 18%.

Plus, net new cash flow into stock mutual funds so far this year is well below previous years, according to the Investment Company Institute. In 2002, $27.2 BILLION flowed OUT of stock mutual funds, compared to a $13.4 billion inflow in 2001, and a whopping $285.2 billion infusion in 2000. Clearly, investors aren't listening to Wall Street's "buy, buy, buy" mantra any longer.

Wall Street WILL end up paying a BIG price for its slimy practices during the bull market—but it's up to investors to collect.

Plus, take a look at these latest developments in the economy:

- The Conference Board's index of leading economic indicators ticked up in November, but the positive contributors to the index—money supply, interest rates, jobless claims, stock prices, and consumer confidence—aren't going to turn this economy around.

For instance, money supply has been expanding and interest rates have been dropping for quite some time now without spurring an economic recovery. Plus, jobless claims are RISING, and stock prices are FALLING now. And consumer confidence will likely fall once again as the employment and stock market situations worsen.

[end quoting]

The cards have long been stacked against the average, hard-working American citizen. It's only that the crooks are much more brazen now and they grab much bigger chunks of our property, all at once, instead of a little at a time. And of course they are only going to pay the smallest token fines, as their buddies—who split the gains—will demand. The less they are penalized, the more there is to split—everybody wins except we suckers. At least in Las Vegas, on some of the games, you know what your odds are when you go in!

WAL-MART MADE PEOPLE WORK FOR PRACTICALLY NOTHING

From the www.rumormillnews.com Internet website, 12/20/02: [quoting] by Mike Magee

The biggest shop in the world made staff work overtime for nothing for five years, said a U.S. district court today.

Wal-Mart, which turns over a cool $218 BILLION a year, came under massive attack from 400 employees from nearly 80% of the shops it had in Oregon, reports stated.

It's a kind of class action that could be repeated across the United States of America.

Two Oregonians claimed that Wal-Mart managers got Wal-Mart employees to work "off the clock", said the Wall Street Journal, making them clean up the store for practically nothing.

We thought this was par for the course in the U.S.

No damages have yet been decided, however, and Wal-Mart may appeal.

Does this sound like something you would expect to read about one of the biggest elite corporations in the world? Ok, you're right to say "What's the big deal?" After all, we're in the post-Enron age of brutal awareness about massive corporate greed. So why pay workers to do what you can intimidate them into doing for nothing because they want to keep their jobs? Do you think some Wal-Mart executives received a nice bonus for coming up with this one, for as long as they could get away with it?

And speaking of corporations trying to get away with fleecing the public, how about this most sacred of items to be messing with:

ICE CREAM CONTAINERS MELTING AWAY

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, by John Curran, 11/19/02: [quoting]

The half-gallon ice cream container—the sweet standard of grocery store freezers for decades—is starting to shrink.

While manufacturers over the years reduced the package size of everything from candy bars to dish detergent, the traditional ice cream "brick" remained what it was—the half gallon.

Now, pinched by rising ingredient costs and afraid to raise prices already above $5, at least two ice cream makers have started silently phasing out the half gallon with a 1.75 quart carton, a half-pint smaller.

Dreyer's, which is based in Oakland, and sells the Dreyer's and Edy's brands, began introducing the smaller package in March. The new and old cartons can be found side-by-side during the transition, identical in shape and design—and price. But one has two quarts, the other 1 3/4 quarts.

"We have over 100 flavors, and many of them—because people are preferring indulgent, chunky flavors—cost more to produce than regular flavors like vanilla" said Dreyer's spokeswoman Dori Bailey. "We'd like to keep the cost at a price that's more affordable for folks."

Schwan's, which sells primarily via a 7,000-vehicle fleet of home delivery trucks, made the switch in 2001.

Other major ice cream makers, including Good Humor-Breyer's and Turkey Hill, are sticking with the half gallon for now. About three quarters of all ice cream is sold by the half gallon, according to the International Ice Cream Association.

Some customers are noticing the change and don't appreciate it.

"Everybody's doing it" complained Dorothy McGrath, 73, as she shopped the ice cream aisle at a Super Fresh supermarket in Egg Harbor Township. "The same thing happened with laundry detergent.... They're cheating the public, because they don't advertise it."

Manufacturers have heard such complaints, but sales haven't been significantly affected, they say.

"Our research shows there's effectively the same yield. It's a more user-friendly package and it's more efficient" said John Nabholz, spokesman for Schwan's Sales Enterprises of Marshall, Minnesota.

Now THERE'S a REAL con-artist's statement: "It's a more user-friendly package and it's more efficient." The only efficiency is in the fleecing of the public to enhance their bottom-line profits. It would seem that Enron has a lot of company in the pursuit of greed with no regard for ethics.

This reminds me of when a professor I had in college told us how a soap company asked a high-priced consultant how to increase their sales of a liquid soap product. The very costly but very profitable suggestion was simply to make the bottle opening larger, knowing people would use/waste more product.

Whether it's the shrinking candy bar in the larger, air-filled wrapper, or the air they're whipping into the ice cream to make it SEEM like you're getting the same amount of product, or giving the product a deceptive new container that only appears to hold as much as the old one, etc., the important underlying issue remains the same: a sinking economy in which corporations are willing to try any trick in the book—and invent a few new ones—just to try to stay afloat.

And yet another indicator of the sinking economy is the following:

U.S. FACES HOUSING CRISIS

Excerpted from NEXUS magazine, January-February 2003, in turn from the www.projectcensored.org assessment of important stories underreported in the American media, whose source for this story is In These Times, November 2002: [quoting]

The national housing crisis affects nearly six million American families and is growing worse. Over 1.5 million low-cost housing units have recently been lost, and millions of children are growing up in housing that is substandard, unaffordable, and dangerous.

A new crisis in affordable housing is spreading across America. What was once a problem relegated to low-income families along the East and West coasts is now affecting the middle class all across the country. Middle-class working Americans are having just as much trouble finding affordable housing as low-income families did 10 years ago.

Homelessness has become the result for many families across the nation. The economic slowdown, the welfare reform of 1996, and the events of September 11 are pushing hard-working Americans into the street. In New York alone, it is estimated that 30,000 people are living in shelters, and many thousands more live on the street. In Chicago, more than 20,000 units of public housing have been removed from service, and some 50,000 people now reside in the streets.

In an era when there is only one apartment for every six potential renters in the U.S., Congress has taken no action to address this problem. Corporate media have only covered this issue locally, and few media reports have recognized this as a national crisis.

[end quoting]

And things are much worse now. But just keep listening to the talking media heads who are well paid to convince you that the economy is just fine. The growing numbers of homeless can take little solace in such pronouncements. Meanwhile, government spending is at an all-time high for war-related activities and payoffs to foreign governments and other corruptions of decency.

EXPIRATION DATES ON GIFT CERTIFICATES ILLEGAL IN CALIFORNIA

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, 12/18/02: [quoting]

Here's a little holiday shopping secret that many retailers aren't eager to advertise: gift certificates are good FOREVER in California, no matter what the fine print might say.

Since 1997, state law has prohibited expiration, dates on most gift certificates in California.

Still, many merchants keep adding warnings that threaten to wipe out the value if they're not used by a certain date. "Retailers are still out there trying to skin the public" said Myron "Mike" Klarfeld, a San Diego lawyer who helped write California's law against gift-card expirations.

The alleged violations have spurred a flurry of class-action lawsuits filed by Klarfeld and other lawyers who want the courts to ensure that Californians can use gift certificates at their leisure.

A lot of money is at stake, with the rise of prepaid debit cards turning gift certificates into increasingly popular items. Shoppers nationwide are expected to spend somewhere between $20 billion and $30 billion on gift certificates this year.

Many merchants impose monthly fees on idle gift cards, which is illegal because the fees eventually make unused cards worthless, Klarfeld said.

[end quoting]

It makes you wonder how some people can live with themselves, trying any and all devious means to steal from others.

PENN & TELLER SWEAR THEY'LL STAY OUT OF TROUBLE

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, 12/18/02: [quoting]

Just wait until Penn & Teller's "Bulls__t" series hits Showtime next month.

Magicians/comedians/skeptics Penn Jillette and (no first name) Teller are aiming verbal darts at what they consider bogus beliefs—from creationism to chiropractic medicine to crop circles. And do they ever have a different approach to avoiding lawsuits—using obscenity!

"Showtime is making us do it" claims Teller. To hear Teller tell it: "If you go out in public and say, '(TV psychic) John Edward is a liar, a fraud, and a cheat', he can take you to court, tie you up for years, and cost you several hundreds of thousands of dollars. But if you call him an 'a__hole', no one is going to take you to court."

"We have a team of four lawyers who work for the production company. They go through my scripts, which sound like the work of a well-bred New England boy, and ask for changes. They might say, 'Here you're saying he's a 'fibber', which could cause problems, but if we put in 'that dips__t', we're totally bulletproof.' It's a very interesting legal issue."

Teller admits he and Penn have already been asked to tone down at least one episode by Showtime and adds that he's sure they have executives nervous, taking on powers that range from corporations to religious organizations.

[end quoting]

If you weren't sure already about how far gone our legal system is, this ought to speak The Truth loud and clear. And then we have Penn & Teller stooping to taking up the reins where the very un-Amazing Randi left off making a name at the expense of others. One could write an entire book about the karmic lessons and the energies that are being set into motion in this pursuit!

It would seem that some people missed out on important lessons of basic human kindness and goodwill—which brings up the following plea:

A LETTER OF APPEAL TO THE WOMEN OF THE WORLD

From the Internet, by Virgil Armstrong, 12/02: [quoting]

The times upon us are of the utmost importance in that there is an ongoing transformational process which cannot be completed without the endeavors and direct involvement of the Women of the world. This process is spiritual and amorphous in nature, and cannot be defined in materialistic, mundane terms.

As near as I can relate to it with possible elucidation to the many, is that it is a consciousness, a consciousness which is unique and separate and happens only once in the lifetime of a planet and its peoples. It is singular in nature; it is subjective and conforming, yet all pervasive. It is receptive and at the same instance, challenging to that which is needed.

It is likened to the ovum, the female reproductive cell, in that it awaits its mate or opposite, and yet cannot respond until that special quality needed becomes imbedded and functional in the mental, spiritual, and sexual consciousness of Women. It is a consciousness and realization which transcends all previous understandings of femininity. It is an essence which has no definition and yet reaches into the very reproductive yearnings of the Infinite Intelligence, demanding recognition and partnership.

It is a subtle energy peculiar to that which we know as Woman, yet it lies dormant, yearning for the day when Woman will turn inward and discover she is the ultimate, the power which is needed to return sanity to this otherwise insane world. It is the power which is uniquely feminine and has the capacity to transcend and transform all that stands before it; yet she, Woman, knows it not, or if she does, chooses to ignore it.

It is the challenge of the ages, crying for self-realization, a realization which can only be fulfilled when Woman returns to being Woman. It is the open womb inviting impregnation by the Divine, yet is sutured shut by the current inadequacies and misguided judgments of the world and Women at large. It is the saving grace of the planet and its peoples, an infinitesimal nectar which every woman has, yet she knows it not.

When will we learn?

Based on the foregoing, I APPEAL TO YOU WOMEN:

1. To realize that you are unique and hold the key to our future and destiny.

2. To stop competing with men, trying to be his equal or better in a world (his) which is totally alien to your very spiritual essence and superior femininity.

3. To return to true Motherhood, the loving foundation and fabric of the incoming consciousness.

4. To reach out and quietly lead your male counterparts into the realization of their own femininity.

5. To realize and accept that, in the not-too-distant future, somewhere, sometime, a representative group of women—quite possibly in the Middle East or the former Soviet Union or the Republic of Red China or even in the ghettos of the United States—must rise up and, possibly at the cost of life, body, and limb, confront the madness of men. In doing so, the men will throw down their arms and, if necessary, their lives, with the sudden realization that what they are doing is totally against all Godly and humanistic truths.

6. To realize and accept that the Cosmic Clock is ticking rapidly down, and in the cosmic moments left, the crucial evaluator and defuser is you! It is time to declare:

"ENOUGH! My loins are empty. You sacrifice and kill my husbands, my sons, and now my daughters, all in the vain pretense that what you are doing is justifiably correct."

7. To stand up and acknowledge that principally the difficulty between the races and sexes is largely a result of misguided actions, beginning with prehistoric days when you cast men into the very roles they play today, with the theme that he who gets there first with the most is the winner and will be justifiably rewarded by you for this macho behavior and attitude. Because of this belief, attitude, and action, the majority of men today are Oreos: strong on the outside, soft on the inside. You have created a monster, a spoiled brat who knows only force and control as a way of life.

8. To put aside your misappropriation of the masculinity which you are experiencing. I challenge you to not only acknowledge it and use it as appropriate, but also to turn inside and recognize and nurture that essence and strength which is uniquely yours: true femininity. It is a quality which, in its pliable and soft way, can contour, envelop, and transform the rigidity of the insane maleness.

9. To rise up and claim that subtlety and issue which is only yours, and with it declare: "We will have no more wars, famines, depressions, diseases!" All of which are orchestrated and controlled by the few (mostly men) in the interests of self-aggrandizement and control. Only you can do this!

10. Last, but by no means least, to recognize that divine Godliness that is within you, begging for recognition, which, upon being accepted, will give you the strength and wisdom to undertake the divine transformational tasks which lie ahead.

Only you, Woman, can do this. Your time has come!

It's about time someone wrote a reminder like this. Women have been downtrodden by the Power Thugs of this world long enough, despite playing such an absolutely essential, nurturing role in the continuity of all human life on the planet. Their natural sensibilities are sorely absent (having been skillfully suppressed) from the national fabric of common wisdom.

And while we're on the subject, how about the following:

FIRMS DENY CREATING "FEMALE SEXUAL DISORDER"

From the rense.com Internet website, 1/3/03: [quoting]

Pharmaceutical firms on Friday rejected claims they had created a new disorder known as "female sexual dysfunction" to build a market for Viagra and similar drugs among women.

An article in the British Medical Journal said researchers with close ties to industry had defined the new disorder at company-sponsored meetings over the past six years to encourage use of the same medicines that have helped men with impotence.

The result was that female sexual problems were being wrongly "medicalized" and the number of women affected greatly exaggerated.

The author of the article, Australian Financial Review journalist Ray Moynihan, said claims that 43% of women aged 18-59 had female sexual dysfunction were misleading and potentially dangerous.

He traced the origin of the definition of the condition to a May 1997 meeting of researchers and drug company representatives at a Cape Cod hotel.

But drugmakers said they were simply seeking a treatment option for millions of women with sexual difficulties equivalent to the erectile dysfunction that men can face, which is now frequently treated with Viagra, a $1.5 billion seller for Pfizer Inc.

[end quoting]

The creating of a problem and then selling you a solution has been going on for a long time. And there are no better players of this game than the pharmaceutical companies—which are likewise masters of the fine art of denial!

In this regularly updated column, Stewart discusses current events based upon his personal knowledge and experience of Illuminati plans for the Earth.

United We Fall: (12/20/02)

In the wake of corporate failures, both United Airlines and McDonald's are headed for a fall. Both huge corporations announced restructuring and lay-offs, with United actually headed for bankruptcy. With all the consumers eating hamburgers and flying daily, it is inconceivable that these corporate failures are "natural". It would appear that the New World Order is already in the process of monopolizing all industries on a global basis. Therefore, not only will we have a New World Monetary System, but there will be standardized corporate conglomerates globally. Small Business is being pushed out of existence, and large multinationals are being merged. This makes financial control and marketing much easier. Somebody better save those secret recipes!

Their Daley Bread: (12/29/02)

The mayor of Chicago, Richard Daley, and his wife, Maggie, passed out and were taken to the hospital on Friday with what was diagnosed as stomach flu. Maggie actually fainted, fell, and broke a rib. I don't know about y'all, but I've had some serious stomach flus in my life and I have never fainted, much less broken anything. Nor has anyone I know. I think these two important Chicagoans were targeted and punished for refusing to do something. Plus, their son was also reported to have similar symptoms. With Boeing and other larger corporations moving to the Windy City, many demands are being made. Something smells near Lake Michigan.

On The Eve Of ? The Raelians Announced The Birth Of The First Cloned Human Being: (12/29/02)

This religious/scientific contactee group based in France and Quebec has also announced that five more cloned children will be born in the next few weeks. Rael, the spiritual leader of the group, claims to have met an alien in France in 1973 who told him that all humanity are clones of aliens. They have a theme park outside of Montreal and are planning to open up an Elohim Embassy in Jerusalem—what they claim is the real capital of the worlds. Religion and staged alien invasion programming. The Raelians truly do have technology, but it is funded by the NSA, which has programmed and mind-controlled all of them. Scientists who condemn the cloning are simply jealous for not being first themselves. However, the Germans were the very first to clone a human being in 1927, followed by the USA at MIT in 1967. It is old news that is being imprinted on the public now as preparation for 2003. However, better to clone humans than to kill them.

N.K. Ultra: (12/29/02)

In typical American fashion, if one war is good, two or three are better. North Korea admitted to developing nuclear weapons and threw out UN inspectors. Well, at least they're honest. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said last week that the U.S. could absolutely support two war fronts, if we need to destroy North Korea at the same time as Iraq. Of course, our troops will also still be in Afghanistan, Africa, East Asia, and Europe. This then sets-up an America where all or most troops are overseas. So, if something were to happen on U.S. soil, there is not enough military to defend or stop whatever is happening. Therefore, UN (Chinese) troops will be called-in to quell any civil disobedience or terrorist activities. There had been a large transfer of troops, specialty personnel, and equipment to South Korea long before any of this became public. Therefore, the U.S. government was preparing for something staged before the media was notified. The plot thickens—again!

Hot Java: (12/29/02)

The capital of Indonesia is located on the western tip of the island of Java. In recent years, riots and civil disobedience have taken its toll on the large city of Jakarta. Riot police have found that when they play a dance music called "poco-poco" (pronounced poh-choh poh-choh, meaning voluptuous), the crowds start to sway and dance with the music. The music originates from the province of Papua and is tribal-based. Rest assured, some subliminals have been placed into the police versions of the CD. We may be seeing more mind-controlled dance in the future, as a form of crowd control.

Holiday Present For Criminals: (12/29/02)

As a present to non-violent offenders, several states have released hundreds of prisoners before the Christmas holidays. The two most generous states, Kentucky and Illinois, released the most criminals from jails. This was not done for reasons of seasonal kindness, but because the states ran out of money to keep the prisoners in jail. It is likely that many of these men have vigilante programming and are being placed into society in preparation for 2003 activations. Keep your doors locked.

Nemesis Premises: (12/29/02)

I recently saw the movie Star Trek: Nemesis, the latest in sequels to the television shows and subsequent films. It was released on December 13, 2002, an Illuminati holiday. This film was blatantly designed to trigger and activate people with twinning programming, mirror alters, vigilante programming, and also shows the use of sexual magick. The "right on schedule" themes also included cloning, alien invasion, destruction of government, and reptilian armies. In Captain Picard's ready room, masks were prominently displayed, triggering "porcelain doll" alters in viewers. I will be discussing this in detail at my upcoming seminar, Part II of Mind-Control/Programming, New Jersey, in January. Check my website for details.

Earth Tidbits Updates: (12/29/02)

New York: An aftershock of last spring's 5.1M quake struck upstate New York on Christmas Day. This one was approximately 3.0 in magnitude.

USA: A major snowstorm struck from New Mexico to Maine, starting the Monday before Christmas until the day after Christmas. Snow depths were over three feet in the Northeastern U.S., closing roads and airports. The Midwest, Ozarks, and Ohio Valley were also affected. Global warming?!

Pacific Coast: Hurricane-force winds with heavy rains struck from Washington State to California, causing floods and damage to buildings. Winds were clocked near 90 miles per hour.

FEDS BACK-OFF ON SAYING CONDOMS ARE "HIGHLY EFFECTIVE"

From WIRED magazine, 12/19/02:

[quoting]

A government fact sheet that long promoted condoms as "highly effective" in preventing HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases now offers a more neutral summary of the pros and cons of condom use.

Congressional Democrats charge that politics are trumping science.

They also point to a fact sheet produced by the National Cancer Institute concerning the link between abortion and breast cancer. Until this summer, it said that women who had abortions face no increased risk of breast cancer. Now, it says the evidence is not clear.

"We are extremely concerned about these alterations and deletions of important scientific information" Rep. Henry Waxman (D-CA) and 13 other Democrats said in a letter Wednesday to Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson.

"They appear to be part of an Orwellian trend at HHS. Simply put, information that used to be based on science is being systematically removed from the public when it conflicts with the administration's political agenda."

HHS officials say the revisions are consistent with the science. They deny any political interference.

The condom fact sheet on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention website used to say that refraining from sex was the best way to prevent transmission of HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, and other sexually transmitted diseases. The old version went on to say: "But for those who have sexual intercourse, latex condoms are highly effective when used consistently and correctly."

The recently posted version focuses on HIV along with other sexually transmitted diseases. In its introduction, the fact sheet now says that condoms "can reduce the risk of STD transmission. However, no protective method is 100% effective, and condom use cannot guarantee absolute protection against any STD."

The fact sheet goes on to analyze the effectiveness of condoms versus a variety of sexually transmitted diseases.

It says that condoms are highly effective in preventing HIV, an incurable disease that is often fatal and requires extensive treatment. No evidence exists that condoms prevent the transmission of the human papilloma virus, which causes no disease in 99% of cases, but will cause cervical cancer in 1% of its female victims.

Given the mixed evidence, the CDC opted for a more neutral introduction to the fact sheet, said Dr. David Fleming, the CDC's deputy director for science.

"This fact sheet is designed to be as scientifically accurate as possible" he said. "We specifically tried not to nuance it in the direction either of encouraging or discouraging use of condoms. The interpretation really is in the eyes of the beholder."

He said that the fact sheet was written with the help of people at HHS headquarters, but said he stands by it from a scientific point of view.

In the case of breast cancer and abortion, the National Cancer Institute removed a fact sheet from its website that said: "The current body of scientific evidence suggests that women who have had either induced or spontaneous abortions have the same risk as other women for developing breast cancer."

The posting specifically dismissed studies to the contrary, citing methodological problems.

In its place, a neutral rendering appears that says some studies find a link and others do not. The fact sheet promises to convene a conference on the issue early next year.

NCI spokeswoman Nicole Gottlieb said Wednesday that the Institute had no further comment. [end quoting] extra 11 rear channels that really make the difference.

Perhaps not. Pioneer is launching the PDSP-1, the first "digital sound projector" to deliver discrete 5.1 channel sound with more than 500 watts of power. Pioneer is quick to add that the system does not use psychoacoustic modeling, a disappointing technology that attempts to fool our ears into perceiving depth by altering pitch and amplitude.

Instead, 254 speakers are packed into each Pioneer speaker, which direct and reflect sounds off the surfaces of a room to create multiple channels. All you have to do is "calibrate" the speakers to the room they're in, and you'll be dodging bullets and ducking roundhouse kicks during your next viewing of The Matrix.

No price has been set, but the speakers should be available early this year. We can't wait to test this audio scheme!

How many schemes over the years promise the ultimate in sound and fall quite a bit short of the goal? We'll see.

SELF-DESTRUCTING DVD

From MAXIMUM PC magazine, January 2003: [quoting]

This DVD Will Self-Destruct In 8 Hours Side-stepping the issue of whether or not optical discs are a reliable long-term storage medium, New York-based Flexplay has invented a DVD that actually destroys itself in eight hours, like it or not. As soon as the sealed DVD case is opened, a dye sandwiched into the layers of the disc begins to react with air, slowly turning opaque and rendering the disc unplayable. The first DVD to use this technology will be a 10-minute promotional audio disc by Atlantic Records artist Nappy Roots, a hip-hop act. Hopefully, Nappy's career will outlast the life of the disc. [end quoting]

Do you suppose there's a hidden agenda behind such a concept? And what about if the supposedly sealed-from-air disc is not so well sealed, and the clock starts running early, and you get a partially blanked-out disc, or one with only, say, one hour left? This adds a new dimension to our "throw-away society" reputation.

WHY LEDS ARE EVERYWHERE

From WIRED magazine, January 2003: [quoting]

by Simson Garfinkel

Good-Bye, Little Red Diode. Hello, Spotlights!

Gas, glass, and brass are so pre-millennium. LEDs are the lights of the digital age—and they're everywhere.

Those bright new dotted traffic signals? Energy-efficient light-emitting diodes in green, yellow, and red. LEDs are also showing up on bicycles, buses, and subway cars, and in a variety of architectural lighting situations—for example, to throw a color wash onto a wall. In a few years, they'll illuminate automobile headlights, homes, and offices, too.

Here's why: They're colorful.

LEDs have come a long way since the red-only glow of the early Texas Instruments' calculator. Today, the lights range from far infrared to near ultraviolet. The most advanced way to mix them: pulse-width modulation, which varies each diode's duty cycle. Boston-based Color Kinetics has a patent on this technique, which is the basis for its color-changing floodlights, spotlights, and nightlights.

They're bright: During the past four decades, output per LED has increased an average of 40% a year, while prices have dropped 20% annually. Still, today's white LEDs can produce only 130 lumens each, so it takes nine to equal the 1,100 lumens put out by a standard 75-watt incandescent bulb. Yet, because they focus all of their light in the same direction, those nine LEDs actually appear much brighter—roughly the same as a typical 300-watt bulb.

They're white: White light can be made two ways—by mixing reds, greens, and blues, or by using an ultraviolet LED to stimulate a white phosphor (the same stuff that's inside a fluorescent bulb). Combine a white phosphor LED with a few amber ones, and you can create a range of different whites—from the romantic glow of a candle flame to the hot, bright light of the Sun.

They're green: LEDs consume a fraction of the power of incandescents. For example, LED flashlights squeeze as much life out of 1 battery as incandescents get from 20. The result: less toxic trash. LEDs also throw off almost no heat and last longer.

They're cheap: Each has a lifespan of 50,000 to 100,000 hours—10 to 30 years. This can mean huge savings in atriums, auditoriums, and high-ceilinged offices, where replacing a bulb can cost more than the bulb itself. A single 700-lumen LED panel runs about $1,000—but the lifetime price tag is lower than incandescent and almost on par with halogen. Predictions are that, by 2006, they'll be cheaper than even supercheap fluorescents.

LED technology is costly up front—but it lasts. Here's the relative cost of 1 million lumen hours [today]:

INCANDESCENT	$28
LED	$25
HALOGEN	$23
FLUORESCENT	$5

(Source: Color Kinetics)

[end quoting]

One very important point was not even addressed above: Not only do LEDs last a long time and use less battery power—which is great in applications like flashlights and other emergency lighting situations, but they can stand up to rugged treatment. What's the use of having a flashlight with fresh batteries and new bulb that, deep in a cave, you happen to drop, and the jolt breaks the new bulb's hot filament? The basic LED structure is, for most all practical purposes, immune to such mechanical damage, except perhaps for cases where a jolt is quite severe. This durability is a source of great comfort in emergency situations where you're depending on that flashlight's light to keep working!

Drop The Outmoded Idea Of Ownership, And A Whole New Wireless Frontier Emerges

by Kevin Werbach

A revolution is brewing in wireless. In an industry speech in October, FCC chairman Michael Powell expressed support for a radical idea called "open spectrum" that could transform the communications landscape as profoundly as the Internet ever did. If it works, you'll never pay for telephone, cable, or Internet access again.

Open spectrum treats the airwaves as a commons, shared by all. It's the brainchild of engineers, activists, and scholars such as wireless gadfly Dewayne Hendricks, former Lotus chief scientist David Reed, and NYU law professor Yochai Benkler. The idea is that smart devices cooperating with one another function more effectively than huge proprietary communications networks. The commons can be created through distinct, unlicensed "parks" or through "underlay" technologies, such as ultrawideband, that are invisible to licensed users in the same band.

In an open spectrum world, wireless transmitters would be as ubiquitous as microprocessors: in televisions, cars, public spaces, handheld devices, everywhere. They would tune themselves to free spectrum and self-assemble into networks. Anyone could become a radio broadcaster reaching millions. Phone calls would rarely need to pass through central networks; they would be handed off and relayed across devices, for free or nearly so. Businesses would track far-flung assets in real time via embedded sensors. Big TV networks and cable operators would lose their hammerlock control over media distribution. Entrepreneurs would develop as yet undreamed of applications that we can't live without. It happens any time open platforms emerge: think eBay and Amazon.com.

The revolution has already started. Wi-Fi, a runaway success, uses a narrow slice of spectrum that is already "open". Wi-Fi is a shot across the bow, much the way the Arpanet served as a proving ground for the commercial Internet. As ever, Moore's Law is on the side of the technology upstart. Radio waves resemble ripples on a pond rather than swimmers in a pool—they pass through one another. Distinguishing them can be difficult, but it's not beyond the talents of today's radio engineers.

When spectrum licensing was established in the early 20th century, radios were primitive, as was the regulatory model used to govern them. To be heard, broadcasters needed an exclusive slice of spectrum. Today, however, digital technologies let many users occupy the same frequency at the same time. As the FCC's Powell points out: "Modern technology has fundamentally changed the nature and extent of spectrum use." Today's devices employ advanced digital signal processing and other techniques, and they're smart enough to coexist without interference.

Wi-Fi's success is attracting capital and encouraging research into the open-spectrum idea. Last year, over the bitter opposition of entrenched spectrum holders, the FCC granted limited approval for ultrawideband. Within the next year, half of all laptops used at work are expected to have wireless connections. And within four years, Intel hopes to incorporate transmitters into all of its processor chips.

Standing in the way of open spectrum are incumbent licensees, government agencies nervous about interference, and economists entranced by the airwave auction market.

Yet the spectrum auction markets are not free markets. Each buyer gains what is, in effect, a little monopoly—which, in the aggregate, stifles communications progress just as well as one big monopoly.

Governments have long treated the airwaves like real estate to be handed out to favored operators or auctioned for huge sums. And like real estate, spectrum makes people do stupid things. The English auctions for third-generation mobile-phone licenses in 2000 left the winners choked with debt. In the U.S., the battle over bankrupt NextWave's licenses and the hyped transition to digital TV are multi-billion-dollar fiascos.

The problem here is not the market, but the outdated real-estate metaphor. Yet, if spectrum was seen as a commons that could be shared by all, then builders of wireless devices would rush to fill it, unleashing market forces to everyone's benefit. It's already happened with Wi-Fi: A billion-dollar industry emerged overnight with no protection against interference. And Wi-Fi is only the beginning.

(—Independent analyst Kevin Werbach [kevin@werbach.com] is the former FCC counsel for new technology policy.) [end quoting]

Modern economic and technical visions are pushing against the old "real estate" concept of the airwaves that underhandedly allowed just a few to control that arena for so long. Like with the way the Internet leveled the playing field, hopefully this push will make the options of the airwaves more accessible for the average person's benefit.

SELENIUM: IMPORTANT NEW REVIEW OF HEALTH FINDINGS

From AIDS Treatment News, www.aids.org/immunet/atn.nsf/page/a-347-02, courtesy of a reader, 12/2/02:

[quoting]

"Because Good Information Is Still the Best Cure For AIDS"

Selenium: Important New Review Of Health Findings (date: 7/28/00; issue: 347; author: John S. James)

Selenium is a mineral which is essential in human nutrition in very small amounts (larger amounts are toxic). New research, much in the last five years, is finding that selenium deficiency may be involved in many important diseases, including HIV. The fact that this mineral has been the subject of irresponsible promotion as a cure-all must not blind us to the real possibilities that proper supplementation may have value in disease prevention and treatment.

A major literature review I published this month in The Lancet offers a credible overview of what is known and not known at this time on selenium and human health. We were surprised by the strength of the case for more attention to supplementation as a possible treatment—a medical intervention which would cost essentially nothing, so it could be available anywhere in the world.

Here are some quotes from the review (we did not include the references from the original). Note that all measurements are in micrograms, because of the very small amounts of selenium used in human nutrition—about a thousand times less than the dose of most AIDS drug.

- Concerning immune functions: "Supplementation with selenium, even in 'selenium-replete' individuals, has marked immunostimulant effects, including an enhancement of proliferation of activated T cells (clonal expansion). Lymphocytes from volunteers supplemented with selenium (as sodium selenite) at 200 micrograms per day showed an enhanced response to antigen stimulation and an increased ability to develop into cytotoxic lymphocytes and to destroy tumor cells. Natural-killer-cell activity was also increased. Supplementation resulted in a 118% increase in cytotoxic-lymphocyte-mediated tumor cytotoxicity and an 82% increase in natural-killer-cell activity compared with baseline."

- Concerning HIV: "Selenium seems to be a crucial nutrient for HIV-infected individuals. It is a potent inhibitor of HIV replication in vitro.... More than 20 papers report a progressive decline in plasma selenium in parallel with the ongoing loss of CD4 T cells in HIV-I infection. This decline in selenium occurs even in early stages of disease when malnutrition or malabsorption cannot be a factor. In fact, plasma selenium is a strong predictor of the outcome in HIV infection. Baum and colleagues showed that selenium-deficient HIV patients are nearly 20 times more likely ($p < 0.0001$) to die from HIV-related causes than those with adequate levels.... Baum and colleagues showed that low plasma selenium is a significantly greater risk factor for mortality than low helper-T-cell count, by a factor of 16, and confers a more significant risk than deficiency of any other nutrient investigated."

- Hepatitis: "Selenium also appears to be protective in individuals infected with Hepatitis virus (B or C) against the progression of the condition to liver cancer."

- Pancreatitis: "In a small controlled trial in Rostock, Germany, intravenous administration of selenium to patients with acute necrotising pancreatitis reduced mortality from 89% in controls to ZERO in the treatment group."

- Cancer: Various studies have found more cancer or cancer deaths in persons with low selenium levels. For example, in a prospectively followed cohort of 34,000 men, "those in the lowest quintile [fifth] of selenium status, as measured by toenail selenium, were found to have three times the likelihood of developing advanced prostate cancer as those in the highest quintile (p for trend=0.03). Only cases diagnosed more than 2 years after collection of the samples were counted." [The reason for not counting earlier cases is to avoid confusion due to the possibility that the illness itself might cause the low selenium levels through poor intake, absorption, or metabolism of food.]

- Other research has found effects of correcting selenium deficiency on mental status, tiredness, and mood—and possibly on cardiovascular disease, although findings here have been mixed, perhaps because some of the trials included very few people with selenium deficiency.

- And a warning: "We must be careful not to encourage overconsumption of selenium supplements. While an intake of selenium of around 15 micrograms/kg bodyweight per day is thought to be without prolonged impact on human health, it must be remembered that selenium is a toxic mineral with a fairly small therapeutic window. In some sensitive individuals, the maximum safe dietary intake may be as low as 600 micrograms per day. It would therefore seem prudent to restrict adult intake from all sources to an upper limit of 400-450 micrograms/day as recommended by several expert panels."

Persons considering supplementation should note that the multivitamins they are taking may already include selenium—in addition to their dietary intake, which tends to be higher in the U.S. than in many countries.

Comment:

There is no clear agreement on how to supplement with selenium—exactly who should use it, how much, or in what form. (In the research, selenium has been supplied both as inorganic forms such as selenate or selenite, and organic forms such as selenomethionine or as selenium yeast.) Trials are ongoing, including at least two in HIV. But major uncertainties will remain.

We need more attention on rational ways to make decisions based on the incomplete information available now. Most professionals like to have definite proof, and are reluctant to prepare guidelines or recommendations based in part on reasonable guess. The frequent result is recommendations which are much too conservative, or none at all—leaving the field to self-medication and a few self-taught experts, or to medical promoters or cultists. There should be widely discussed nutritional guidelines for persons with HIV, updated at least once a year—as with guidelines for antiretroviral drug therapy.

Selenium levels in diet vary greatly by geography, because of the different amounts of the mineral in the soil where crops are grown. For example, diets are deficient in many areas of Western Europe and Africa. (Finland was especially deficient, and supplemented its food supply by adding selenium to fertilizer, starting in 1984.) It seems possible that region-specific, sophisticated recommendations on nutritional and other low-cost interventions could make major, cost-effective contributions both to treatment and prevention, benefiting those already infected and slowing the spread of the epidemic.

Rayman MP. The importance of selenium to human health. The Lancet. July 15, 2000; volume 356, pages 233-241. [end quoting]

It's a well established fact that small quantities of many minerals—called trace minerals because we need them in small or trace amounts—are important to good health. If we're lucky, we get these in a very assimilatable form from eating a variety of vegetables and fruits that have been grown in well-mineralized soil. Modern greed-motivated agribusiness hardly promotes, or even cares about, cultivating rich soil (though most organic growers do), and thus it is no trivial matter to maintain a healthy supply of these trace minerals in our bodies. Apparently the presence or absence of one of these trace minerals, selenium, shows a significant correlation with the successful battling of HIV/AIDS. Considering the overall general value of trace minerals for good health, this correlation certainly makes sense, though the amount of effect observed is striking.

FLOATING UTOPIA WILL HONOR SCI-FI GENIUS

From the para-discuss@tje.net Internet website, 12/22/02: [quoting]

(m.ford@bepp.co.uk)

This is the first glimpse of a remarkable floating testament to the works of sci-fi visionary Arthur C. Clarke.

In a project worthy of Sir Arthur's own brilliant imagination, the Gaiaship could soon be sailing the world's oceans, bringing peace and harmony across the globe.

The vessel would be home to some of the author's greatest works and memorabilia amassed over decades at the forefront of science.

The brainchild of retired Norwegian cruise-ship magnate Knut Utstein Kloster, the luxury 767-foot craft would be a roving ambassador for science and avenue for sensitive political negotiations.

In the plans drawn up by renowned Danish naval architect Tage Wandborg, at its very center is an incredible six-deck-high glass sphere which boasts ultramodern conference rooms.

It is within the sphere that project organizers plan to house some of the "Clarkives", the original manuscripts produced by, and awards bestowed upon, Somerset's famous son, best known for writing the sci-fi epic 2001: A Space Odyssey.

Costing an estimated $350 million and capable of carrying more than 1,000 passengers in the lap of luxury, the Gaiaship would also boast a "Future Studies Center" named after him.

There have been two major efforts to create a lasting museum to the work of Sir Arthur in Somerset, both of which failed due to lack of finance.

The first was in his birthplace of Minehead, and the second in Taunton, where he conducted some of his first experiments.

Now, it seems, it may take the foresight of a group of eco-minded Norwegians to finally make the dream come true.

Speaking from Norway yesterday, Roar Bjerknes—a former journalist, communications professor, and now member of the Gaiaship Foundation, said the Arthur C. Clarke exhibition is a key part of their ambitious plans. He said: "There were attempts to build a center to celebrate Arthur's work in Somerset, but they sadly failed. We would like to put a version of that center in the dome on the Gaia.

"Arthur liked the idea from the moment he heard it; he has given it his strongest support, and feels this ship is something the world needs now more than ever."

Sir Arthur, now aged 85 and a long-term resident of Sri Lanka, has already penned an official letter of support for the project, which will be sent out to potential investors and sponsors.

For his brother Fred, who lives in Bishops Lydeard near Taunton and has collected the Clarkives over the decades, this could be a happy ending to his relentless efforts on behalf of his brother.

At the age of 81, Fred has just decided to wind-up the Arthur Clarke Foundation of Great Britain, and believes the Gaiaship proposals would be a fitting way to celebrate Arthur's achievements.

"I have been speaking to Arthur regularly and he is very keen on this" said Fred.

"He is sorry that the others have fallen through, simply because he knows all the time and effort I and others put into them.

"The Gaiaship idea is very much about bringing people together from around the world, and that very much fits into Arthur's ideas of a global village."

Still in its early stages, the Gaiaship is proposed as a bizarre self-financing utopian mix of opulent luxury, intellectual stimulation, and political neutrality. As well as offering luxury cruising accommodation for its passengers, the "Peaceship" would act as a mobile neutral venue for sensitive negotiations and meetings between leading world political, religious, and scientific figures.

The plans are also completely environmentally friendly, the ship being powered by gas turbines, solar panels, and wind turbines, and making use of refuse incineration and recycling.

When you think of all the money wasted on war-related pursuits and palatial temples of the super-rich, perhaps one day enough people of means will awaken to better uses like this one. And what about the hospital ships that used to bring humanitarian and medical aid to needy ports of call? We seem to have plenty of money to spend on a super-extravagant "Rose Parade" in Pasadena each year, but little resources for that which adds lasting value to the community. These are examples of the kinds of out-of-balance conditions on planet Earth at this time that must, soon, come back into balance—one way or another.

LEFTOVER STRAW MAY FIX NOISE PROBLEM

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, 11/17/02: [quoting]

by Lisa Masearo, staff writer

Mush up bales of rice straw, cook them at high temperatures, and the result just might be a solution to the high cost and years-long process of getting soundwalls erected along Southern California freeways.

A bill by Assemblywoman Fran Pavley, passed this session, guarantees a look into a product she says could bring cheaper, faster-built sound-absorbing walls to southland neighborhoods.

"In the San Fernando Valley alone, a lot of people from Encino and Woodland Hills, in particular, are very concerned about the noise at adjacent properties along the 101 Freeway" said Pavley, D-Woodland Hills. Requests for soundwalls are among the top three constituent calls fielded by her staff.

KIND WORDS FROM OUR READERS

"Thank you for your courage and love of mankind. I am amazed at the information I receive through your articles, and cannot thank you enough for the information. Living in ignorance does not help one to learn compassion. I have felt desecrated since I have learned what our TRUE history is, and have gone on to reach deep inside myself, and found love, compassion, and acceptance. Living in ignorance is not being fully alive. I have also learned that by accepting this, I also have to accept my responsibility in creating the world we live in. I reach out in kindness now, where in the past I may have reached out in judgement."

"I know Caltrans didn't need one more project to do, but I think, in the long run, this could be a good one."

Pavley hopes her bill helps bring a simple and creative solution to a two-fold problem.

Residents up and down the freeways are demanding sound walls while the state's rice growers are under new environmental restrictions that prohibit them from burning most of their straw, leaving them with a ton—actually lots more—left over.

Caltrans and the Metropolitan

Transportation Authority, which jointly handle soundwall requests in Los Angeles County—and have a backlog of miles of projects costing millions of dollars across the San Fernando Valley—are interested in taking a look at making soundwalls out of the rice byproduct.

"I think we would be interested in anything—any product, any method—that would help us deliver the product at a faster pace" said Jim de la Loza, MTA's executive officer for countywide planning. "We're certainly willing to look at different ways of doing it."

New regulations were imposed in January that mandate the phase-out of straw burning, as part of efforts to reduce air pollution.

Now the leftover rice straw, which had cost growers about $3 an acre to burn, is costing them about $43 an acre to turn back into the soil, said Paul Buttner, manager of environmental affairs for the California Rice Commission.

"Rice doesn't break down. That's one of the biggest problems we have with it—it's very abrasive, very fibrous" said Northern California grower Jerry Maltby. "If you're trying to build, that's a good thing. If you want to break it down, it's a bad thing."

State and industry officials have been seeking new uses for the rice straw. It's currently being recycled into a range of goods, but still only about 3% is being used, Buttner said.

That means most of the 1.1 million tons of rice straw generated each year by the state's $500 million rice-growing industry is being wasted.

"We're hopeful all of these things will happen and a project will come out of this" Buttner said. "Rice straw has a lot of very good sound-deadening properties. It's not very expensive and it is appropriate at reducing the sound attenuation in a sound wall."

For property owners hoping to be shielded from the whoosh of traffic noise, those drab beige walls lining freeway shoulders have long been in high demand.

The MTA receives 20 requests a month for soundwalls, which can take up to a year to engineer, and two more years to design and build once the project is turned over to the state Department of Transportation.

In Southern California, the cost for each mile of soundwall can range from $1 million to $5 million.

Pavley's office believes rice-straw walls could be built cheaper and put up faster than the current cement-block structures.

Under her legislation, Caltrans will conduct a demonstration project using the rice straw within one year—if a manufacturer can get its product approved by the department, which is responsible for testing any new ideas for soundwalls.

Without the legislation, a manufacturer could go through the multifaceted approval process at Caltrans, but see its product wait for years until the state has a chance to try it out, officials said.

Sherman Oaks businessman Glenn Camp—who hears the roar of the 101/405 Freeway interchange from his office—thinks his Enviro Board Corp. is just the company for the job.

For the past decade, the Polytechnic High School grad has been developing methods for turning rice straw into large panels. His company's machinery pulls apart the bales, beats the straw until it binds together, then flattens it out into panels up to four feet wide.

He's used the panels to build the company's 20,000-square-foot facility in Northern California, and believes the tilt-up panels can be installed on freeways in half the time—and at half the cost—of the work now done by Caltrans.

His company is planning to throw its hat in the ring to qualify for the pilot project.

"Everybody's screaming for soundwalls. We're going to come along and be an answer" Camp said. "We can just come in and do a vast quantity of soundwalls in a fraction of the time. We think this is something topical, something that's going to be good for California. Here's an alternative we think is better."

Other companies have other methods for turning the straw into working materials, and could also be contenders for the pilot project.

A Caltrans spokesman said the agency is interested in considering new technology. Already, the department is using recycled shredded tires in road materials as a way to cut down on the noise that comes when tires crunch on streets.

"Obviously, we think it's a great idea" said Caltrans spokesman Dennis Trujillo. "We'll be working with the process and the sponsor to see if we can facilitate this. It's a win-win for everybody."

"If it proves to be more cost-effective, and it can have an impact on the environment, those are two huge benefits everyone can realize." [end quoting]

Sounds like a great idea—if only the scammers who presently make the fat profits from the current expensive methods of building these walls don't win the usual under-the-table battle for the public funds.

SAMPLE OF ASININE LAWS STILL BEING MADE BY CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE

California passed 1168 new laws that went into effect on January 1, 2003. Do you think that was enough?

One of them states video arcades must now post signs informing their teenage customers that, if they want to see a ratings guide for various games, one is available. As if a teenager participating is interested, and furthermore, if they were, they would probably look for the ones that had the worst ratings.

But this one really takes the "looney cake" which was passed by the same type of politicians:

"Nuclear terrorists be on alert: Criminals who use or threaten to use weapons of mass destruction in the Golden State must submit their DNA to a state database."

Surely we could find something useful (or at least less damaging to society) for these talentless politicians to do!

be visible to the naked eye, at least toward the end of that month" Sherrod said. "Certainly binoculars will aid in spotting the comet and exposing any tail that it might show."

Named Kudo-Fujikawa (and officially designated C/2002 X5), the comet is moving east-southeast through the constellation Hercules.

Halley's comet orbits the Earth every 76 years, and its next scheduled visitation is in 2061. Astronomers hope that the newly discovered comet, C/2002 X5 Kudo-Fujikawa, will provide an equally impressive show for viewers here on Earth.

"The comet is a swift-moving object and currently is easily visible in the northeastern skies during pre-dawn hours, showing a pretty distinct tail and large coma (head or halo, caused by the emanation of gases and other materials as the comet warms up on its approach to the Sun). The tail appears to be slightly less than one-half degree, and several spikes in this tail have been recorded (on December 15) by imagers in New Mexico" Sherrod said.

The jury is still out regarding just what kind of show Kudo-Fujikawa would provide Earth-based viewers when it is closest to the Sun, but there is a prospect that it would be a "textbook comet" Sherrod said. "However, the visibility during its greatest brilliance will be greatly hampered because of the comet's angle of approach to the Sun and the Earth-Sun-comet positioning during that period."

Towards the end of January, the comet will be approaching the Sun and swinging behind it from Earth's vantage point, thus getting lower and lower each successive morning into early February.

"In February the comet will be more favorably placed for observers in the southern hemisphere, and there are some estimates that suggest that the comet could attain a brightness equal to the bright planet Venus (a magnitude of less than 4)" Sherrod said.

Magnitude is a measure of brightness used by astronomers. The lower the magnitude value of an object, the brighter that object is. Objects that shine with a magnitude of less than 6 are usually visible with the naked eye. Kudo-Fujikawa is currently being seen at a magnitude of between 7 and 8.

Much of what Earth will be able to see of Kudo-Fujikawa is contingent on the activity that occurs when it is closest to its pass by the Sun (perihelion) on January 28, 2003, Sherrod said. At that point it will be only 16 million miles (25 million kilometers) from the Sun. The average distance of the Earth from the Sun is 93 million miles (150 million kilometers).

"The retrograde orbit (meaning the comet is coming in at an opposite direction in relation to the orbits of the primary planets) of this comet and its close pass from the Sun at that time have suggested to many, myself included, that the comet might potentially break up from solar radiation and solar wind. If this does indeed occur, then we might expect more volatile activity from this object than if it passes perihelion totally intact and unscathed.

"Now, if this does happen, then we might expect an incredible comet to be visible as the inner, more volatile and rare gases are exposed to solar radiation" Sherrod said.

For more precise instructions of how to find the comet—and Sherrod's regular updates on its progress—please visit the Arkansas Sky Observatory.

This should be an interesting view for astronomy buffs and those who just got a new telescope or binoculars for Christmas.

SHARP'S 3-D MONITORS: LOOK, NO GLASSES

From the ZDNetNews website, for 12/19/02: [quoting]

by Michael Kanellos

Consumer-electronics giant Sharp next year plans to sell notebooks and flat-screen LCD monitors that can show three-dimensional images.

The monitors will let people see high-resolution 3-D images or run 3-D programs without using special glasses or additional software. For example, bodies and bullets appear to fly all over the place in a version of the popular game Quake that has been adjusted to work on Sharp's 3-D monitors.

The technology also will be aimed at businesses, said Greg Nakagawa, senior vice president of Sharp Systems of America. General Motors has discussed experimenting with the technology in its modeling and design department. Medical imaging companies and e-commerce sites also are potential customers.

"I'm sure there will be a notebook product and an LCD monitor as well" toward the end of 2003, he said.

computing world has been a longtime goal. Although several companies have come out with Web browser software and other technology to make images appear to pop off the screen, the Web largely remains a two-dimensional world. To most people, 3-D still means paper glasses with red and blue lenses or the hologram image of Princess Leia in Star Wars.

"It is still in its infancy in many ways" said Rhoda Alexander, an analyst with iSuppli/Stanford Resources. "There is a definite interest in the gaming market. There are some medical applications that like 3-D, but precision there is important."

The picture, though, will likely begin to change in 2003. A 3-D consortium—which includes Toshiba, Sony, Olympus, Kodak, and Microsoft among its founding members—was recently established to hammer out standards for hardware manufacturing and software development. Such a move is typically a prelude to greater commercial adoption. The first meeting of the group, known as the 3-D Consortium, took place earlier this month.

Manufacturers are also working to smooth out potential resistance from developers or consumers. Turning traditional 2-D Quake into a 3-D program took only a day, Nakagawa said. Sharp also will let consumers turn off the 3-D functionality.

Enhancing displays is at the core of the Japanese giant's strategy. Sharp, which reported a $557 million profit in fiscal 2002, is one of the leaders in the market for TFT displays, the glass with embedded electronics that comprises LCD monitors, and it has a major presence in the LCD monitor market in Europe and Japan.

More interesting uses of screens can directly improve the bottom line. At Comdex, for instance, Sharp showed off a new version of its Muramasa notebook, which weighs just over two pounds. Earlier this year, the company showed off an LCD panel with an embedded Zilog microprocessor. Sharp envisions a time when complete computers will be embedded into monitors, Nakagawa said.

Toshiba also is working on a 3-D monitor, according to sources.

Sharp's 3-D monitor can be thought of as a TFT sandwich. The monitor contains two TFT panels separated by a parallax barrier, which directs pixel images to two separate regions so that each eye receives a slightly different image.

In the end, the brain formulates the signals so that the image appears to be a three-dimensional object, Nakagawa said.

Sharp has begun to sell cell phones in Japan for the NTT DoCoMo network that contain a scaled-down version of its 3-D technology. The phone also comes with a camera that can display 3-D photos.

The company has recently begun to show off prototypes of its larger 15-inch screen and a 3-D notebook at trade shows and meetings.

More work remains to be done, however, to perfect the screens. For example, the 3-D images are best viewed from 40 centimeters away, Sharp representatives said. Sitting closer or further away results in seeing two overlapping images. Faint vertical lines, a common feature of parallax visual systems, are also visible at any distance.

[end quoting]

Because of the limitations noted above, this present version of 3-D technology is likely to be more of a novelty than a mainstay for computer monitors. Wonder when we poor taxpayers will get to use the kind of 3-D imaging that exists among the toys of super-secret "black-budget" project facilities?

STORY OF A STAR-CHILD

From Dr. Rich Boylan Reports (drboylan@sbcglobal.net), 1/1/03:

[quoting]

From a foreign person with not much knowledge of the English language.

Hi Dr. Boylan,

Very nice story from Scotty! And thanks for sharing it with all of us! Of course he knows he is one of them! Hope it will not disturb his teenager-age that much! It disturbed my son in each case in his daily life when he was a kid and a teenager, but in that time, I was the only person who could help him and taught him all I could, but he was misunderstood by so many. I was in the years 70th! Surely, Scotty with his gran is in good hands and the right place!

Marc, my son, when he was a kid (7) said one day to me when I tried to kill an earthworm. (I saw always my adoptif mother doing it and her children, so I was copying.) Marc said: "Maman, don't do that. Isn't he not a wonderful little being? He spartles so hard to put just his head out of the land and come to breathe the air here. Let him live, please; don't hurt him. He too is created by God, and doesn't do anything wrong than his job, being an earthworm, mam! He is necessary in the earth! And it was like this long earthworm understood him and did like a dance for him, and Marc was so happy he jumped from pleasure, and laughed so loudly!

Claps for me, the stupid maman!

I had, the day of Christmas Eve, a very strange feeling, a bad one about our occupants here on Earth—the people, so many will die! It makes me so sad, because I was—how we may say that in English—without power to help them. But do they really need help? Did they not choose for that destiny? So after, I meditated and prayed, and I felt better since.

If you want, you may put this small story on your website to everyone, what one day happened to a Belgian woman who is the mother of an E.T. like he called himself in that time!

— Maud in Brussels, Belgium

Maud,

Thank you for your star-kid story. I will share your account with my list.

As we have been sharing for a long time, through stories within these pages, many of the children coming into planet Earth at this time are formidable old souls, here to help turn things around. So it's not hard to see why the New World Order gang of misfits are so scared of them and are trying so hard to destroy them through such means as the drug Ritalin, given out in many schools these days almost like candy.

SUNDAY BEST COAT: THE WARMTH IS WITHIN

From Guideposts magazine, January 2003, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512:

[quoting]

One day last December a young couple new to our congregation sat two pews in front of me in church. I'd heard they had just moved to our area and were down on their luck. The young woman was wearing only a light sweater, and I saw her shiver as she listened to the sermon.

Where's her coat? Then a thought came to me: Give her yours. My long black coat was one of the nicest things I owned. Yet I couldn't help but notice the young woman folding her arms tightly around herself for the rest of the service.

After church, I found myself asking her how they were liking the area. "We're from Florida" she said, "and we haven't had time to buy the right clothes."

"Here!" I said suddenly, unable to resist the urge. "Have my coat." I took it off and draped it around her.

A short time later the couple changed churches, and no one heard from them. When winter returned, I wondered how the woman was doing.

Right before Christmas I received a card from her. "A year ago, you gave me a coat and ended up warming my heart. You have no idea how much your gift meant to me. Now I plan to give it to somebody else who needs it."

That coat really was the nicest thing I owned.

How often it is that we never learn how a kind word or a kind action produces a powerful effect in another's life. But that is no reason for not doing them!

When we DO happen to learn about how our kind actions or words help another, is there any better feeling? And what is it that this lady takes with her when she passes from this schoolroom Earth? Not a coat, but surely the warm memory of the kind deed.

"LANGUAGE OF THE HEART"
(HIS MYSTERIOUS WAYS)

From Guideposts magazine, January 2003, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

My husband, John, and I were traveling in Europe back in the days of the Iron Curtain. In Vienna we'd been given a trove of small personal treasures—photos, letters, a few bars of chocolate—to take to an address in Prague. The sender was a Czech evangelist who'd been forced to flee his country, leaving behind a wife and three daughters. He explained through an interpreter how much this contact with his family, though secondhand, would mean to them all.

We arrived in Prague on a cold January day, and we parked our rented Citroen—a novelty in those parts—far from our destination so as not to draw unwelcome attention to the family we were going to visit. My full-length American coat drew even more attention than the French car, so I had to leave it behind as well. We set out on foot. My legs were numb by the time we reached the address.

"What if they're not home?" John asked as we climbed the staircase. "We could leave a note" I suggested, then thought better of it. Writing in English wouldn't be safe, and John and I didn't know what other language they might understand. But to our relief, the wife and one of the daughters answered the door.

Their excitement at receiving the few things we'd brought was wrenching to see. As the woman served us a coffee-colored drink, she pressed us for every detail about her husband's health and spirits.

She and I talked excitedly for almost an hour. It was a wonderful conversation.

When we left, she gave us messages to pass along, and a hastily written letter with the girls' school reports, and photos of a nephew's new baby to bring back to her husband.

Outside, John asked: "What happened in there? What did she tell you? What did you say?"

I looked at him in surprise. "You were there. You heard everything."

"Sure, but I couldn't understand" he said. "You were speaking German."

But how could I have been? I don't understand German, let alone speak it.

"IN PERFECT HARMONY"
BY NAOMI JUDD
COUNTRY MUSIC LEGEND

From Guideposts magazine, January 2003, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

by Naomi Judd

Once liver disease forced me to retire from my country music career in 1991, I thought people wouldn't be interested in my life anymore. Turns out they have more questions than ever.

Folks always ask: How did a girl from sleepy little Ashland, Kentucky, who'd never sung a note in public, end up performing concerts all across America?

How did a single mom who just wanted to find steady work become a country music star?

How did I keep from losing my spirit when I lost the career I loved?

How did I find healing from a devastating chronic illness?

The answers are really different verses of the same song. The song of faith, of believing, of seeing not with the eyes, but with the mind and heart and soul.

The first verse came to me in the spring of 1975, after I'd moved back to Kentucky with my daughters, Wynonna, 10, and Ashley, 6. I needed to put the troubles of the last six years in Los Angeles behind me—a divorce from the girls' dad (whose job had taken us to California), a string of dead-end jobs (all I could get without a college degree), a stint on welfare. I wanted to give my girls the stable upbringing they deserved. Where better to do that than in the Kentucky hills where my roots were?

We stayed in a dirt-cheap rental cabin near Berea while I started my nursing school classes. I promised Wy and Ashley: "This is just until we find a place of our own." Except, six months later we were still there.

Had I uprooted my girls for nothing?

One day in May, when they were at school, I turned on the radio, opened the window, and sat down on a blanket right outside so I could listen to music while I studied. The Stanley Brothers' achingly beautiful bluegrass tunes came on. I closed my eyes and drifted back to my childhood, back to the days when God was as real as our house at 2237 Montgomery Avenue.

"Lord, even if I can't lay eyes on you, I still know you're real" I prayed. "So, I'm going to believe the same with this home we were searching for. I will hold on to this image in my heart—a cozy little house in the hills—and have faith that you'll lead us to it."

The following evening the girls and I were driving through Berea when we saw an elderly woman slip and fall. We stopped to check on her. She'd twisted her ankle badly; and the aspiring nurse in me insisted we take her to the emergency room. We got to talking, and I confided my difficulty in finding a home.

The next day I found a note in my mailbox at nursing school from Margaret Allen, a friend of the woman we'd stopped to help. Mrs. Allen had a house she wanted to show me.

Her directions took us to the tiny town of Morrill. We turned off Big Hill Road, and at the crest of a knoll stood a two-story house with a big front porch and apple trees dotting the yard. An elderly lady stepped out and introduced herself as Margaret Allen. "Welcome to Chanticleer" she said. "Your new home."

I was speechless. "It's completely furnished—linens, dishes, silverware, everything" she said. "Come, I'll show you."

Inside, the house was even lovelier, like something out of a fairy tale, filled with antiques. "Mrs. Allen, we couldn't possibly afford to rent this place!" I gasped.

"Could you afford one hundred dollars a month?" she asked. "I don't need the money, just the right people to have it."

We moved into Chanticleer in June, and it was there on that big front porch we discovered something that would change our lives. Someone had given me an old guitar, and just for fun I brought it out. Wynonna took to the guitar like a bee to honeysuckle, returning to it again and again.

I bought Wy her own guitar, a used but nice instrument. I unearthed an old bluegrass album by Hazel and Alice in the used bin at a record store. Two women singing, their voices blending in a way that sent shivers up our spines. That was the sound of our Kentucky hills!

Wy and I taught ourselves every song on that record. Strange thing was, I'd never sung before, not even in church—I'd felt too shy to do more than mouth the hymns. But on the porch with Wynonna, a voice I never knew I had came out, harmonizing naturally with hers, a musical expression of our family bond. The first song we learned all the way through was A Mother's Smile.

It wasn't till four years later that I learned the second verse of my own song of faith. By then I knew music was Wy's gift, her destiny. My job was to go with her and make sure it didn't become her downfall too.

I'd started writing songs for us to sing together, and we moved to Nashville—Music City, USA—on the condition that she finish high school. I house-sat while we looked for a place in the countryside to rent. I had to wait for my Tennessee nursing certification to come in, so I took a low-paying job as an assistant to a booking agent on Music Row.

One Friday night that summer of 1979 Larry Strickland, an amazing bass singer whose band my boss managed, asked me out. Since I didn't go to bars or clubs, I suggested we check out an old property I'd heard about in Franklin, just outside Nashville. We stood in the moonlight looking at the neglected house and just talked. Then he kissed me softly and that was it. I was head-over-heels.

Sunday after church I called Larry on the road, only to find he was out with another woman. My heart broke. That night the person I was house-sitting for told me he would be returning soon, and we'd have to move on.

I felt so defeated: No partner, no real job, no place to call home. Had I dragged us right back into the mess I'd worked so hard to get us away from?

That's when I remembered a verse from Hebrews I'd heard in church that morning: "Now, faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

"God, I'm going to believe that all the dreams I have in my heart are as real as you are" I prayed. Our own home, with everything in it working. A car that didn't clank, smoke, or break down. A job that would leave me enough to buy my daughters Christmas presents. And finally, the wildest dream of all, a career in country music.

I pictured the future I hoped for. I formed a clear image of it in my mind. Then I set about making it happen.

I stepped out in faith and rented the run-down house in Franklin for three hundred and fifty dollars a month. The girls and I fixed it up, one thing at a time. And with a lot of talking and praying, Larry and I patched things up too.

My nursing certification came in that winter. I signed up with a nurses' registry so I would have flexibility in my work schedule to check out music-related opportunities. Like sweet-talking a local TV producer into letting Wynonna and me perform on the early morning Ralph Emery Show on February 11, 1980.

We became regulars on the show. One of my patients, a teenager recovering from a car accident, recognized me from TV. She introduced me to her dad, record producer Brent Maher. I mustered up the nerve to give him a demo tape Wynonna and I had made on our K-Mart tape recorder. Right away Brent understood our unique sound. He and manager Ken Stilts Sr. landed us an unprecedented live audition with RCA Records.

On March 2, 1983, in the RCA boardroom, Wy and I reached back to our roots, to the very first song we'd learned, A Mother's Smile. Like the old days on our front porch, our voices came together in perfect harmony. Forty-five minutes later, we were officially RCA recording artists!

Seven years on top of the country music world—that's what Wynonna and I were blessed with.

Then, in 1990, my body fell apart—and I would have too, if I hadn't discovered the third verse of my lifelong song.

The symptoms started with headaches and debilitating exhaustion. Some days I couldn't even get out of bed. Wy and I had to cancel one concert after another.

Blood tests showed I had Hepatitis-C, a chronic and sometimes fatal liver disease that I'd most likely contracted from an accidental needle stick in my nursing days.

Treatment with the antiviral drug interferon didn't work, and my weakened system couldn't take the stress of touring. I had no choice. I would have to give up the career I loved. There would be no more making music. No more chasing dreams.

"What if you don't live to see your daughters get married?" I thought. The fears taunted me. "What if you never know your grandchildren?"

I went right to a children's store and started grabbing christening gowns and baby blankets for Wy and Ashley to save for their kids. Maybe it was touching those things, so concrete and real, that made me remember the song, the faith, that had saved me before. I called our church elders to set up a prayer healing.

That night they anointed me with oil, and I claimed my healing, just like I'd claimed all the other dreams God had put in my heart.

"Lord, from now on I will focus not on my illness but on the restoration of my health. On both Wynonna and me coming out of this whole."

Knowing God had the power to make all of that real, I went on our 1991 Farewell Tour. My liver function continued to be monitored, but no longer with any fear about the results. I took my final bows with Wynonna on December 4, feeling completely at peace.

And so I remain, living in harmony with God's ongoing vision for me. Which is as real as my 11-year-long remission from Hepatitis-C. As real as Wy's success as a solo artist and Ashley's as an actress. As real as the books I've written and the TV shows I've done since my "retirement". As real as the Sunday dinners Larry and I have at home at Peaceful Valley, the farm we share with Ashley and her husband, Dario Franchitti, and Wynonna and her two kids, the grandchildren I once thought I would never live to see. As real as the vision that fills my mind, heart, and soul—of a loving God with His arms wrapped around my life.

XYLITOL

Our Sweet Salvation?

Editor's note: Considering the quantity of sugar we all consume in one way or another each day, sometimes not by choice, the following is perhaps the most important health article to come along in quite some time, and should be shared as widely as possible with family and friends of ALL ages.

Many of you readers of this publication are quite familiar with the various business and "health" reasons why the New World Order gang of misfits have long been promoting sugar (and even nastier artificial sweeteners) to help with their sinister control and depopulation agendas. Obviously, on the way to ruining our physical and mental health, a lot of money can be made through "managing" medical problems resulting from these "sweet" poisons. Therefore, when you read the following, you'll easily "connect the dots" and see why Xylitol is not a part of our familiar vocabulary—but should be!

This is reprinted from the January-February 2003 issue of NEXUS magazine (www.nexusmagazine.com; phone: 1-888-909-7474) and we are grateful to them for helping to bring this subject to public attention.

Likewise, it was our News Desk guru (and retired dentist), Dr. Al Overholt, who originally identified this article for the News Desk. When you get to the part of Xylitol's astonishing benefits to the mouth and teeth, you'll see what may have acted as a strong factor in Dr. Overholt's decision to want to share this information with you.

This article was written by Sherrill Sellman of GeWell International, P.O. Box 690416, Tulsa, OK 74169-0416. (See the end of the article for further biographical and contacting information.) Sherrill deserves loud applause for assembling an easy-to-understand and well-documented dissertation on this important health matter having obvious far-ranging implications. Perhaps copies of this article should be available in the waiting rooms of all dentist's and doctor's offices.

Xylitol is not only a safe, natural sweetener without the bad side-effects of sugar and artificial substitutes, it's also good for your teeth, stabilizes insulin and hormone levels, and promotes good health.

Americans have a mighty hankering for sugar. It seems that we just can't get enough of the stuff. On average, a half a cup of sugar is consumed per person every day. It is estimated that the average American eats, drinks, slurps, stirs, and sprinkles about 150 pounds of it annually. Never in modern history has a culture consumed so much sugar.

Sugar truly does deserve its reputation as a "white poison". Thinking of sugar as a food is really a stretch of the imagination, because it is more a chemical that is difficult for our bodies to utilize and digest.

Humans were really not designed to eat large amounts of sugar in whatever form it may take: white and brown, corn syrup, sucrose, dextrose, glucose, fructose, lactose, maltose, barley malt, honey, rice syrup, and maple syrup. Sugar is also highly seductive, acting like an addictive drug that lures even the most well-intentioned person back into its sweet clutches.

According to Chinese wisdom, sweetness is one of the flavors necessary for maintaining balance in the body.

[Editor's note: The concept of "sweetness" referred to here likely means alkalinity, as in the acid-alkaline balance within the body that was a major topic of Edgar Cayce's medical discourses while in trance. In that respect, Cayce's wisdom would agree with the ancient Chinese wisdom—but the advice is actually OPPOSITE the implied conclusion. That is, you want to eat ACIDIC things, like citrus, to produce an alkaline REACTION in the body to keep it slightly on the "sweet" side.

This matter has long been a subject of obvious confusion for Cayce readers, who often "get it backwards" until they understand the actual reactions of body chemistry he was talking about. And that same concept is likely what the ancient Chinese medical wisdom meant by "sweetness" within the body.]

But regularly eating large amounts of sugar will cause serious harm. Sugar can cause hypoglycemia and weight gain, leading to diabetes and obesity in both children and adults. It leaches the body of vital minerals and vitamins. It raises blood pressure, triglycerides, and the bad cholesterol (LDL), increasing the risk of heart disease. It causes tooth decay and periodontal disease, which leads to tooth loss and systemic infections. It makes it difficult for a child's brain to learn, resulting in a lack of concentration. Both children and adults exhibit disruptive behavior, learning disorders, and forgetfulness from sugar consumption. It initiates auto-immune and immune deficiency disorders such as arthritis, allergies, and asthma. It also upsets hormonal balance and supports the growth of cancer cells.

So what are we to do? Will our sugar cravings always hold us hostage, or is there really a way to lick the sugar habit successfully?

Xylitol To The Rescue!

During World War II, Finland was suffering from an acute sugar shortage. With no domestic supply of sugar, the Finns searched for an alternative. It was then that the Finnish scientists re-discovered xylitol, a low-calorie sugar made from birch bark. It had, in fact, been known to the world of organic chemistry since it was first manufactured in 1891 by a German chemist.

By 1930, xylitol had been purified, but it wasn't until World War II that the sugar shortages forced researchers to look at alternative sweeteners. It was only when xylitol was stabilized that it became a viable sweetener in foods. It was also during this time that researchers discovered xylitol's insulin-independent nature. (It metabolizes in the body without using insulin.)

By the 1960s, xylitol was being used in Germany, Switzerland, the Soviet Union, and Japan as a preferred sweetener in diabetic diets and as an energy source for infusion therapy in patients with impaired glucose tolerance and insulin resistance. Since then, many other countries, including Italy and China, have been producing xylitol for use in their domestic markets—and with remarkable health benefits. It has been relatively unknown in the U.S.A. and Australia, primarily because cheap supplies of cane sugar made the more expensive xylitol less economically viable.

Xylitol is a natural substance found in fibrous vegetables and fruit, as well as in corn cobs and various hardwood trees like birch. It is a natural, intermediate product which regularly occurs in the glucose metabolism of man and other animals, as well as in the metabolism of several plants and micro-organisms. Xylitol is produced naturally in our bodies; in fact, we make up to 15 grams daily during normal metabolism.

Although xylitol tastes and looks exactly like sugar, that is where the similarities end. Xylitol is really sugar's mirror image. While sugar wreaks havoc on the body, xylitol heals and repairs. It also builds immunity, protects against chronic degenerative disease, and has anti-aging benefits. Xylitol is considered a five-carbon sugar, which means it is an antimicrobial, preventing the growth of bacteria. While sugar is acid-forming, xylitol is alkaline enhancing. All other forms of sugar, including sorbitol, another popular alternative sweetener, are six-carbon sugars, which feed dangerous bacteria and fungi.

Approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) in 1963, xylitol has no known toxic levels. The only discomfort that some sensitive people may notice initially when taking large amounts is mild diarrhea or slight cramping.

Since the body makes xylitol daily, as well as the enzymes to break it down, any discomfort usually disappears within a few days as the body's enzymatic activity adjusts to a higher intake.

Xylitol has 40% fewer calories and 75% fewer carbohydrates than sugar and is slowly absorbed and metabolised, resulting in very negligible changes in insulin. About one-third of the xylitol that is consumed is absorbed in the liver. The other two-thirds travels to the intestinal tract, where it is broken down by gut bacteria into short-chain fatty acids.

Xylitol looks, feels, and tastes exactly like sugar, and leaves no unpleasant aftertaste. It is available in many forms. In its crystalline form, it can replace sugar in cooking, baking, or as a sweetener for beverages. It is also included as an ingredient in chewing gum, mints, and nasal spray.

Xylitol And Oral Health

Tooth decay and gum disease are serious problems. According to the American Dental Association, 75% of American adults over the age of 35 suffer from some form of periodontal disease.¹ Needless to say, diet plays a major role in dental health. When there is an excess of sugar in the diet, this weakens the immune system and creates an acidic environment; thus oral health suffers. The mouth is home to over 400 strains of bacteria. Most of these are benign, but when sugar enters the scene, it feeds the destructive strains, allowing them to proliferate.

Periodontal disease is basically caused by bacteria. These deposits permit the growth of bacteria that cause inflammation of the gums. The bacteria also release minute amounts of toxins that break down gum tissue, thereby helping the infection to progress. Plaque is an invisible, sticky film of saliva and food residue that constantly forms on the teeth. Ongoing low-grade bacterial infection also burdens the immune system.

Bacteria help to create plaque and they also thrive within it. Unless removed, plaque formed along the gum-line can lead to gum disease. When left untreated, plaque at or below the gum line hardens into tartar.

Periodontal disease takes two forms: simple gum inflammation, called gingivitis, and a more severe gum infection, called periodontitis, which may lead to tooth loss and receding gums.

Gingivitis results from the build-up of plaque and tartar which irritate the gum or periodontal tissue. The more advanced state of gum disease, periodontitis, occurs when inflammation of the gums is accompanied by bone and ligament destruction. Bleeding gums are usually the first indication that gum disease is developing, but obvious symptoms may not always be present.

Gum infection can also lead to other serious health problems. It doubles the risk of stroke, triples the risk of heart attack, increases the incidence of premature, low-weight babies, and also contributes to bronchitis, pneumonia, and emphysema. In fact, the same bacteria that cause gum disease end up either directly or indirectly infecting your heart and arteries. A study conducted at the University of Minnesota in 1998 found that rabbits injected with tooth plaque developed blood clots which led to heart disease.² It seems that the bacteria first attack the bones and gums in the mouth and then enter the bloodstream through small cracks in the gums.

Eating sugar causes tooth decay by creating a highly acidic condition in the mouth. Acidity strips tooth enamel of minerals, causing it to weaken and making it more vulnerable to attack by bacteria, leading to tooth decay or demineralization. Ordinarily, saliva bathes the mouth with an alkaline solution that neutralizes all acidity and actually remineralizes the teeth. Saliva also washes away leftover bits of food and helps the digestion process. But when saliva turns acidic because of too many sweets, bacteria in the mouth have a feeding frenzy. These nasty bacteria, along with carbohydrate waste, stick to the teeth and tongue and hold the acid close to the teeth where it eats away enamel. Virtually whatever food you ingest, the remaining particles become

This book explains how and why:

- We have evolved from the nuclear age into a "Technotronic Era" with "psychotronic warfare" for optimal population control.
- Non-lethal warfare is being effectively used to produce sociopolitical and economic outcomes consistent with global genocide.
- The world's wealthiest policy-makers have recommended, and are working toward, eliminating half the world's population.
- Accepted methods of disease prevention, such as pesticide sprayings, can only be scientifically rationalized as costly and deadly contributions to non-lethal warfare and population reduction.
- Chemtrail sprayings that obscure blue skies are not normal, but reflect a conspiracy of silence and military attacks on the health and welfare of people around the world.

Striking at the heart of those responsible for the latest forms of bio-terrorism, psychotronic warfare, and ecological genocide, the revelations contained in this book offer more than a reality check—they give you and your loved ones a final, last-minute choice for survival.

food for plaque-producing bacteria. Using xylitol helps to raise plaque pH, thereby reducing the time that teeth are exposed to damaging acids, as well as starving harmful bacteria of their food source.

Xylitol is a dentist's dream. It reverses all these destructive effects of sugar on oral health. Xylitol is non-fermentable and therefore cannot be converted to acids by oral bacteria, thus it helps to restore a proper alkaline/acid balance in the mouth. This alkaline environment is inhospitable to all the destructive bacteria, especially the worst variety, Streptococcus mutans. It also inhibits plaque formation.

Using xylitol right before bedtime, after brushing and flossing, protects and heals the teeth and gums. Unlike sugar, it can even be left on the teeth overnight. With proper use, xylitol actually stops the fermentation process leading to tooth decay. Long-term use suppresses the most harmful strains of oral bacteria, making a long-lasting change in those bacterial communities. Xylitol even has the ability to enhance the mineralization of the enamel. It is most effective in treating small decay spots. Although larger cavities won't go away, they can harden and become less sensitive.

Consistently using small amounts of xylitol tends to increase protective factors in saliva. Xylitol stimulates saliva flow and helps keep salivary minerals in a useful form. Prolonged xylitol use increases the buffering capacity and protective factors in saliva. Increased saliva production is especially important for people suffering with a dry mouth due to illness, aging, or drug side-effects.

Since the oral environment becomes less acidic with continued xylitol use, it is advisable to chew xylitol gum or suck a xylitol mint after every meal or after eating sweet snacks. The best news is that studies have shown that xylitol's effect is long-lasting and possibly even permanent.

Xylitol has recently received positive support in the Journal Of The American Dental Association. "Xylitol is an effective preventive agent against dental caries... Consumption of xylitol-containing chewing gum has been demonstrated to reduce caries in Finnish teenagers by 30-60%. Studies conducted in Canada, Thailand, Polynesia, and Belize have shown similar results..."³ A study conducted at Harvard School of Dental Medicine concluded that: "Xylitol can significantly decrease the incidence of dental caries."⁴

Another unexpected benefit came from a Finnish study which showed that children whose teeth are colonised between 19 and 31 months of age by Streptococcus mutans bacteria are more likely to have a large number of cavities. Most children acquire this bacteria from their mother's saliva through food tasting, sharing cups, and kissing. The study showed a dramatic 70% reduction in tooth decay among children whose mothers chewed xylitol gum.⁵

Xylitol, however, isn't just for the young. In a paper published in the Journal Of The American Geriatrics Society, researchers tested 111 adults, aged 60 and older, over a 12-month period. All were frail but healthy adults. In the study, one group of volunteers chewed no gum, a second chewed gum containing xylitol, and a third group chewed gum containing both xylitol and an antimicrobial. In the two groups receiving gum, the participants chewed two pieces for 15 minutes, two times per day. At the end of the study, the researchers reported that the group who received xylitol gum had substantially lowered their risk of developing thrush, a fungal or yeast infection that can cause mouth soreness. (The group who received xylitol plus the antimicrobial had equal benefits.) It had also reduced their risk of developing angular cheilitis, a condition in which sores develop in the corners of the mouth. The researchers noted that xylitol gum can provide a "real clinical benefit" to frail, elderly people.⁶

Xylitol And Ear, Nose & Throat Infections

Recurring middle-ear infections pose a great health threat to children. Tubes are often inserted into the eardrum in children with these recurring infections to reduce the fluid that is attempting to wash out the infection from the middle ear. While this procedure sometimes helps to reduce the frequency of infections, it is also designed to help with hearing.

Language, a critical part of learning, is built by auditory input during the first two years of life—the same period when ear infections are most common. If this input is dampened by infection or fluid in the middle ear during this important period, it can cause learning problems.

One researcher demonstrated that, even when properly treated, recurrent middle ear infections during the first two years result in significant impairment in reading ability up to the age of nine.⁷ Another study followed children longer and showed significant learning and social problems extending up to age eighteen.⁸

One of xylitol's versatile benefits is its ability to inhibit the growth of bacteria that cause middle-ear infections in young children. In two recent studies involving over 1,000 children, xylitol-flavored chewing gum was found to reduce the incidence of middle-ear infections by 40%, significantly decreasing ongoing middle-ear complications and the need for antibiotics.

Regularly washing the nose with a spray containing xylitol decreases the number of harmful bacteria and stimulates normal defensive washing of this area. A clean nose reduces problems with allergies and asthma that originate from nasal irritants and pollutants.

Current research shows how bacteria attach to cells in the body, causing infection. Some sugars like xylitol are known to be able to interfere with this binding, blocking the attachment of the major infection-causing bacteria that live in the nose. Dr. Lon Jones, a physician in Plainsview, Texas, reported that the use of a xylitol nasal spray in his practice prevented 93% of ear infections and resulted in comparable reductions in sinus infections, allergies, and asthma.⁹

Xylitol has been shown to be effective in inhibiting Candida Albicans, a serious systemic yeast problem, and other

Nostradamus: Predictions Of World War III

After the 9/11/01 disaster at the World Trade Center, there is a renewed interest in what the great seer Nostradamus had to say. This book is a serious study of his predictions, based upon the author's research into the original manuscripts. His work details the struggle that is going on in the Middle East and the ongoing conflict between the Christian world and the Islamic world. Jack Manuelian has combed through the prophecies of more modern seers, pointing out how they may agree with what Nostradamus had to say. He offers hope for mankind, but admits that it is troubled times we live in. What will be the outcome? Read the book and decide for yourself.

SUBTERRANEAN WORLDS INSIDE EARTH

BY TIM BECKLEY

Is the Earth hollow? Is our planet honeycombed with caverns inhabited by mysterious races? Are there civilizations of super beings living beneath the surface of the Earth? Are the residents of this subsurface world friendly, or do they have our domination in mind? Here are strange and unexplainable legions of the "Wee People", the Dero, and long-haired Atlantean giants as encountered by cave explorers and miners trapped far beneath the Earth.

The Missing Diary Of Admiral Richard E. Byrd

"I must write this diary in secrecy and obscurity. It concerns my arctic flight of the nineteenth day of February in the year of nineteen hundred and forty-seven.

"There comes a time when the rationality of men must fade into insignificance, and one must accept the inevitability of the Truth! I am not at liberty to disclose the following documentation at this writing, perhaps it shall never see the light of public scrutiny, but I must do my Duty and record here for all to read one day in a world which hopefully the greed and exploitation of certain of mankind can no longer suppress that which is Truth."

harmful gut bacteria including H. Pylori, implicated in periodontal disease, bad breath, gastric and duodenal ulcers, and even stomach cancer.

Xylitol And Osteoporosis

Another exciting benefit from xylitol is its role in reversing bone loss. Studies in Finland found that xylitol maintained bone density in rats that had their ovaries removed. Without ovaries, estrogen levels plummeted and so did the bone density in rats that were not given xylitol. However, in the rats that had ovaries removed and were given xylitol, bone density actually increased.¹⁰ Another study showed that xylitol was effective in decreasing age-related bone loss in older male rats by 10%.¹¹

In an unprecedented action, the Finnish researchers made bold recommendations for human application of their studies. They suggested that an effective human dose would be about 40 grams daily. The scientists speculated that xylitol's bone density-enhancing properties are due to its ability to promote intestinal absorption of calcium. Including xylitol in one's diet is certainly an enjoyable way to reap the benefits of greater bone density, along with other health benefits.

Xylitol And Insulin Resistance, Diabetes Hypertension, And Hormonal Imbalances

Consuming sugar and other refined carbohydrates results in the rapid release of glucose, or blood sugar. In response, the pancreas secretes insulin to usher glucose into the cells, where it is burned for energy. Excess glucose stresses the system, and over time the cells become less responsive to insulin. This condition, known as insulin resistance, is a huge health problem and it is estimated to affect half the American population. Insulin resistance is associated with abnormalities in cholesterol and triglyceride levels, hypertension, increased risk of heart disease, and diabetes.

The dramatic rise in type-2 diabetes since the mid-1900s directly coincides with our increased consumption of sugar. One long-term study of more than 65,000 women demonstrated that a high-sugar, low-fibre diet increased the risk of type-2 diabetes by 250%. Another recent study found that excessive intake of sugar was the single most important dietary risk factor for heart disease in women and for men. It has been estimated that sugar intake may account for more than 150,000 premature deaths from heart disease in the United States each year.¹²

Xylitol has been demonstrated in repeated clinical studies to be very slowly metabolised. In fact, on the glycemic index, which measures how quickly foods enter the bloodstream, sugar is rated at 100 and xylitol at just seven! Xylitol is a natural insulin stabilizer, therefore it causes none of the abrupt rises and falls that occur with sugar. In fact, it actually helps in stopping sugar and carbohydrate cravings. Foods sweetened with xylitol will not raise insulin levels. This makes it a perfect sweetener for people with diabetes as well as those wanting to lose weight. There is a growing consensus amongst anti-aging researchers that maintaining low insulin levels is a key to a successful anti-aging program.

Insulin resistance also plays a significant role in hormonal imbalances, including those that lead to breast cancer. High insulin levels increase the production of estrogens, leading to an estrogen-dominant condition, and also interfere with healthy ovarian function. Insulin resistance is a major cause of a growing hormonal problem called polycystic ovarian syndrome (PCOS). PCOS causes the ovaries to become anovulatory, which means that the normal cyclic production of estrogen followed by progesterone either ceases or becomes dysfunctional. Insulin stimulates the ovaries to produce predominantly male hormones, which, in combination with higher insulin and glucose levels, increase weight gain around the waist—a body type that is a risk factor for breast cancer. Signs that the body is being exposed to higher levels of the male hormones include acne, loss of head hair, and an increase in body hair. Lowering insulin levels is crucial for not only treating PCOS but also resolving most other hormonal imbalances, including those leading to breast cancer.¹³

Dr. John Lee, author of What Your Doctor May Not Tell You About Breast Cancer, explains the connection between insulin resistance and breast cancer:

“Overeating junk food makes you fat. Increased body fat and lack of exercise lead to insulin resistance. Insulin resistance leads to further craving of sugary carbohydrates to generate energy for the body. More insulin is released in response to increased carbohydrate intake, leading to more weight gain. More fat leads to more estrogens, which, in turn, lead to earlier breast development and menstruation. Earlier onset of menstruation leads to more ovulatory cycles and a greater lifetime exposure to estrogens without adequate progesterone. A greater lifetime exposure to estrogens increases breast cancer risk.

“Simultaneously, increased consumption of simple carbohydrates, coupled with insulin resistance, leads to polycystic ovaries and lack of ovulation during menstrual cycles, resulting in excess production of androgens and estrogens, along with inadequate production of progesterone. Excessive estrogen production in the absence of progesterone production leads to estrogen dominance and increased breast cancer risk. Use of contraceptive hormones increases insulin resistance, exacerbating all the above problems.”¹⁴

Using xylitol instead of sugar, as well as reducing intake of high-glycemic, refined carbohydrate foods, helps to lower the risk not only of PCOS but also of ovarian cysts, fibroids, endometriosis, PMS, hot flashes, weight gain, and depression.

The Safer Sweetener

Increased sugar consumption has bedeviled Western cultures with more and more health problems, many of which are putting an enormous strain on healthcare systems. Finally, there is an answer to our collective prayers for something truly healthy that can also satisfy our sweet tooth. Over 1,500 scientific studies have found that the more you use xylitol, the more you can eliminate sugar cravings, reduce insulin levels, and alkalize your body. It's a great aid on the way to good health and long life.

Imagine never having to feel those twinges of guilt when you bite into a xylitol-sweetened brownie. Or how about increasing your bone density while enjoying your favorite hot drink with two spoonfuls of xylitol crystals, or knowing that xylitol-sweetened chewing gum is preventing cavities and gum disease?

With xylitol, you can now have your sweet tooth and treat it, too!

Fallen Angels And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the “daughters of men”?

Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

That is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text cherished by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and “lost” for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

Elizabeth Clare Prophet examines the controversy surrounding this book and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. She demonstrates that Jesus and the apostles studied the Book of Enoch, and tells why Church fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels.

The Bush Boys' Bully Days Versus The Passion Of Jesus Christ

Editor's note: Admirers of typical writings of the Great Grandmaster of Truthbringing, Eustace Mullins, will need to "shift gears" a bit for the following. On Christmas Eve, Eustace was moved to write "A Christmas Message" which, in some ways, resembles our "received" (inspired) spiritual messages from Teachers of the Higher Realms as much as it does his usual great conspiratorial revelations.

In his cover note, Eustace says: "There will be howls of rage from everyone if you print this. However, it is a true religious experience which I have been undergoing for the past five years."

Well—let's just see what you think. Eustace is clearly describing a personal FEELING perceived to emanate from beyond our three-dimensional existence, yet the Presence of which is becoming more and more pronounced within this world. Does that sound familiar?

Hint: As we move forward to experience a new year in which the energies of the Great Awakening are intensifying immensely and enlivening ALL ones whose "spiritual radio" is open to the inpouring of Truth, more and more inspired expressions like the following are likely to blossom. Just look at Archangel Michael's message (elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM) for important clues that, from a much higher perspective, may explain what moved Eustace to blend together themes that span from global threats of war to personal experience of the Christ energy.

Conscientious readers will instantly sense the unabashed sharing of "heart" in Eustace's message of Hope—like a warm personal note conveyed in a lovely Christmas card from a cherished friend. And because of a printing schedule which allows this (written on Christmas Eve) to appear no sooner than now, consider it like a card lost in the whirlwind of the Christmas rush, left like buried treasure in the pile of holiday greetings, unopened until now.

As the Forces of Evil, through their dutiful puppetry, push for a confrontation in the Middle East on the way to igniting the cataclysmic fires of World War III, a message like this becomes all the more timely and powerful—and yes, courageous in its very public sharing of very personal spiritual insights.

While many of you readers are quite familiar with Eustace Mullins—the Great Grandmaster of Truthbringing—for newer readers we will mention that Eustace is a longtime highly respected and often persecuted author of five of the most well-documented, controversial, and hard-hitting volumes ever published on the crooks in high secret places and how they have long controlled world affairs to conform to their own agenda.

Though his books are CONSTANTLY in demand, like the rest of us who bring Truth he is poor and has little monetary resources at this time with which to reprint these fine manuscripts.

For those of you who may not be familiar with his most important classic research works, they include:

12/24/02 EUSTACE MULLINS

During what for many of us is the happiest and most exciting time of the year, it is important for us to realize just what we are celebrating.

Why do we exchange gifts, the keynote of the season? Because mankind received the greatest gift of all, the Son of God, sent on a mission to redeem mankind.

Redemption is much more important than fighting. We live in the Age of Militarism, an age created for the profit of the Central Banks and the Rothschilds. It is the Age of Mass Murder, which might indicate that Christ had failed in his mission.

He did not fail, but this is the time to reaffirm that mission. We are on the brink of another worldwide mass murder, to be executed in the very birthplace of Christ. Should we reel back in horror from this ordeal? No, for it is part of the varieties of religious experience.

There is really very little diversity of religious experience, for here we come to grips with the basic problems of existence. WE have been betrayed by self-styled religious leaders who have adopted uncritically all of the values of the material world, and rigorously excluded spiritual values.

What did the Pharaohs teach us? Despite their erection of enormous tombs, including the largest building in the world, to hoard their wealth so that they could have all of wealth's comforts and advantages in the next world, they arrived naked at the gates of the next world, bearing nothing. Their tombs were even then being looted by thieves, the only heirs of their wealth.

The core lesson is that you can only take with you, to the next world, spiritual experience. No material goods are allowed. Your diamonds, silks, stables of mistresses, and other material goods must be left at the entrance. It is your SPIRITUAL experience which will open the gates of Paradise for you.

Islam teaches that the bravest warriors are met by the most beautiful houris [women] of Paradise. This is a false lesson of the Age of Militarism, but it is a key lesson to be taught to their minions in the mission of mass murder. They are persuaded to commit mass murder because they have been trained to renounce their individuality.

Morality resides only in the individual. Only after one has been duped into giving up his individuality can one be recruited for the Central Banks' and the Rothschilds' program of mass murder.

Like all dictators, Karl Marx focused on the mythical "masses" who did not exist. All dictators on their mission of mass murder must persuade you to give up your individuality.

The Republic of the United States was founded to celebrate the INDIVIDUAL. Our Constitution was formulated by the Founding Fathers to ensure the political existence of the individual, unfettered by a tyrannical government. The Constitution is one of the most anti-government documents ever drafted.

It is fashionable in Washington to denounce citizens as anti-government. This nation was founded to fight against government. It is a revolutionary concept in politics.

Every political party in the United States today swears allegiance to "government"—the very government which it was formulated to fight against.

Why the emphasis on individuality? Because the individual has the power to create the greatest nation in the world!

The emphasis in Washington today is to create the greatest GOVERNMENT in the world—the enemy of every individual. Eventually, every government in the world seeks to create a more powerful government and a citizen who is no longer able to exercise his individual morality.

Christ never preached to the masses. He preached to individuals. The Romans crucified him because they perceived him as a threat to the government.

Also, the government creates delusions through disinformation. They loose so many rabbits that the dogs, running in circles around the track, can no longer decide which rabbit they should chase.

The secret of our world—who is doing what to whom—proves that we have descended into the darkest realms of the occult, into the psychopathology created by Sigmund Freud, a master of delusion. He lifted the lid of the sewers so that we could gaze at our reflections in the filth, making him the master of the modern world, enthralled the masses with Freudianism. We've been enthralled by the world which Freud created, into which he had been ushered floating on a cloud of cocaine-induced fantasy.

(The three main influences in Hollywood—our Dream Machine—are the Kabbalah of ancient mysticism, cocaine, and Freudian psychopathology. As their patron god, Aleister Crowley often boasted throughout his long career: "Nothing human is alien to me." Crowley is the father of all the modern intelligence services. A lifelong agent of the British Secret Service, his influence created the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, which set-

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the "London Connection". The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and documentation from many sources.

A Writ For Martyrs by Eustace Mullins

This is a fully documented exposé of the atrocities which federal agents regularly commit against American citizens.

This book reproduces 121 pages from Eustace Mullins' FBI file, which he obtained only by the personal intervention of a college classmate, Senator John Warner, Rep. Of Virginia. The FBI refused for two years to send Eustace his files through Freedom of Information Act inquiries. When Eustace found it, he discovered a plot by the FBI, with 60 pages of memos, in which J. Edgar Hoover personally ordered that Eustace be committed to a mental institution for life.

On the basis of these revelations, Eustace obtained two "Default Judgments" against the FBI in Federal Court. One judgment was for $50 million, and one for $35 million, which remain on the books today.

This book also documents atrocities committed against Eustace's handicapped sister, his ailing mother, and his invalid father, who all died of heart attacks after daily harassments by the FBI terrorists.

Mullins was one of the principal victims of the notorious FBI counter-intelligence program called COINTEL, set up by Alex Rosen, one of five FBI assistant directors. The COINTEL program was actually organized by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and the Mossad intelligence agency.

This book will give you an idea of what Eustace has had to put up with in his life as a crusader for Truth.

up a private world of conspiracy, sexual perversion, and drugs, and which now informs the halls of government, the diplomatic profession, the journalistic profession, and the halls of academe. In this world, a mere alcoholic is considered hopelessly old-fashioned. Hollywood's movers and shakers, in their more intimate private parties, serve cocaine as the drug of choice, thereby paying homage to their mentor, Sigmund Freud, and they indulge in the obligatory rituals of torture and child seduction as the hallmarks of their closed society. Sexual perversion loses much of its appeal if the essential ingredient—the intentional inflicting of pain, humiliation, and forceful subjugation—is omitted.)

You may wonder why I am involved in this writing, who am I, and why I am doing this. I have never had any choice in the matter. My work has been dictated by who I am, led into the study of subjects personally distasteful to me, which swallowed up my life.

The Mullins family came to America as political refugees who fled for their lives, seeking religious freedom and on the verge of being massacred as Huguenot Protestants in France. They wound up on a sandspit in the ocean, Cape Cod, in the dead of winter, in which inhospitable climate most of them died within a few months, leaving a sole survivor, Priscilla Mullins, from whose loins sprang many of the people I have been writing about throughout my career.

Her father, Guillaume Molines, later Mullins, had been part of the rapidly rising middle class of France, becoming a successful bootmaker. The appearance of the middle class struck terror into the heart of the French Establishment—an iron coalition of the State, the Army, and the Church. All wealth had been gathered into their hands. The rest of the population were peasants, to whom all avenues of advancement were rigidly closed.

Mullins escaped to Holland, and then to London, where he immediately prospered through his hard work. He amassed a fortune and began to look further, deciding that the freedom he sought was now available in the New World. He had the means to move on, and he joined the Pilgrims, who were preparing to voyage to the New World on the Mayflower.

Arriving at Cape Cod, he, his wife, and son soon succumbed to the harsh winter. Daughter Priscilla married another colonist, John Alden, and from this union descended the principal families of New England. The Aldens amply documented their family as the progenitors of the Adams family, the Spragues, Coolidges, and others of the Boston Brahmins.

From such mentors as Ezra Pound, H.L. Hunt, and George Stimpson, I arrived in Washington and began my researches at the Library of Congress, the source of my work.

As my parents and sister had passed on, I was alone. One December, early in the month, I began to experience a strange ecstasy, ineffable peace, and a sensation which was quite overwhelming.

Christmas had always been a time of great family participation, and I thought little of it. In addition, my mother, Jane Muse, had been born on Christmas Day, making it a date of great importance.

The ecstasy persisted throughout that month. The following December, it began again, and on successive Decembers for five years now.

I had never bothered much with ideological goals and religious rituals, but I finally, this year, realized that I was experiencing the Second Coming of Christ.

This had been a doctrinal matter for years, but what I was experiencing was quite different from the traditional expectations of Christ's return. Rather than a physical return, Christ was becoming a Presence—impossible to ignore and all-pervasive. I finally realized that, rather than an actual physical return to this Earth at this time of the year, Christ had arranged that we passed through his Presence in orbit, and received the full impact of his Presence.

Only in this manner could he present us with all that he had hoped for us. The Second Coming had been heralded for centuries, but never in this aspect. A religious program had grown up around his return, called Millennialism, which celebrated his return and claimed he would rule for 1000 years.

Millennialism had been taken up by the evangelists, a creation of the British Secret Service, later falling into the hands of the Central Banks and the Rothschilds, and becoming the instrument of the State of Israel, which intended to use it to seize all the oil-producing regions of the Middle East for Israel, and providing it with the means for world rule.

It was an unholy combination of the Israeli War Party, the military-industrial complex in Washington through the Carlyle Group, and the evangelists who were totally owned by their masters, the State of Israel. They are now determined to launch World War III—in the drive to seize the oil resources of the Middle East—by attacking Iraq and, in domino succession, all oil nations there.

The American people have docilely approved of the ritual massacres in small nations such as Yugoslavia, Afghanistan, and now Iraq, as preliminary steps in the Millennialist program.

But this is the very antithesis of Christ's will and his wish to end the Age of Mass Murder, so obviously it is not going to happen. The second War Against Iraq has been trumpeted in Washington for months, but Christ does not intend to let it happen.

This is our New Year, when Christ wills his own program as part of the Second Coming. This is 2003, and it is indicated by the year itself, the important Year Three of the new millennium. We stand on the threshold of finally implementing Christ's will, which will bring great prosperity and peace to the entire world.

SPECTRUM recently pointed out, in response to "What is Christ bringing us?", the answer was "world peace". This is Christ's Message of Hope to the entire world. It is happening all around us, but we do not yet see it.

Money And The Conspiracy Of Evil Conspiracy Con 2002 Lecture (2 hrs.) By Eustace Mullins

Sixty years ago Eustace Mullins was a protégé of literary giant Ezra Pound, who understood central banking and its relationship with world unrest. He has been a respected researcher for over 50 years, and has since authored many books on conspiracy, including Secrets Of The Federal Reserve and The World Order.

Using his recent travel experiences and Orwell's 1984 as examples, Eustace discusses the irony of Homeland Security and how Americans are now treated as "Enemies of the State". He then describes the real manipulators behind all major wars, the Cold War, the Stock Market, the Medical Scam, 9/11, terrorism, and more.

To accomplish all this, the "perpe-traitors" control the government, the schools, and the media, while keeping us in unimportant jobs, and stealing most of our earnings. For these purposes the Central Bank is the only mechanism that works. Without the government-granted license to print money, the conspiracy would be no more of a threat to us than bin Laden actually is.

Eustace gives a history lesson you won't forget—nor should you!

A New Year's Message From Archangel Michael

Editor's note: The new year is certainly getting off to an interesting start. One suspects there are many surprises yet in store.

One of our longtime gifted "receivers" of messages from the Higher Realms was given the following communication in a brief and sudden burst of activity that hardly allowed for the reaching for the nearest pad of paper and pencil—much less walking to the more familiar computer keyboard for such a transcribing. The speed with which this message "came through" was surpassed only by the sense of urgency that it be shared as soon as possible. After a few readings, you'll probably sense that MUCH is "between the lines" herein.

With the magazine production schedule as forward as it must necessarily be for practical reasons, this issue of The SPECTRUM is the earliest in which this message could be shared. However, those of you with access to the Internet might want to begin to get into the habit of regularly monitoring our www.TheSpectrumNews.org website for the speedier posting of timely similar messages—a likely occurrence as this "year of spiritual battle" progresses.

But rest assured, all of you readers without computer access, that all such important messages from the Higher Realms will most certainly also be shared within these pages. Your notes of appreciation for this feature of The SPECTRUM are among the most eloquent compliments we receive on a regular basis.

ARCHANGEL MICHAEL

9:19 p.m. MST

I am Michael, known to some as Archangel and to others as Saint or Lord. I am, however, Defender of Truth and of the Throne of God. I serve Holy God of Light, as warrior in His Heavenly Army, and do battle with all Forces, Energies, and/or Entities of Darkness. I also stand ready—along with many, many others from the Lighted Realms whose energies likewise blend in this message—to assist and serve mankind in your battle against the Forces of Darkness.

As we draw to a close yet another year on the calendar, we do so with hearts full of praise, gratefulness, and many questions yet unanswered. But above all, may we leave this present year—with all its ills, troubles, and fears—far behind us.

Let us therefore enter a time of New Beginnings in our spirits and minds and bodies. May we find our place of peace, joy, and everlasting faith and hope as we step across the threshold of the new year.

It is a sacred time—a time of reflection upon the past, a time to use that which we have learned, as wisdom, to enter the New Age, upon whose doorstep we now stand. We each must choose what we shall take with us from this present life, across the doorstep, into that which is but hours away.

The year 2003 promises to be a year of oppositions—the great spiritual battle between the Forces of Light and Forces of Darkness. Every man, woman, and child who has reached the age of reason will be required—not asked, but required—to speak their allegiance to one force or the other. Those who have been sitting upon the fence will be knocked off, as they are required to make their choice.

When faced with adversity, you must remember that it comes not from Light or God, but from the Darkness—those who are adversarial to God and wage warfare against Him by using mankind as pawns.

But, we who have faith and undying belief and patronage to God have been given dominion and extreme authority over ANY and ALL such Dark, Adversarial Forces. These Dark Forces (or Energies) have extremely low vibrational frequencies, and deal only in destruction, illness, death, fear, and anxiety.

See that you are not tempted by these Forces of Evil, by keeping yourselves faithful servants and vessels of the Most High Holy God of Pure Radiant White Light.

Be not troubled by the news of world events. Rather, spend your time in meditation, prayer, and service unto God. Be not tempted by the "world", for it is in the "world" that these Dark Forces operate. See yourselves, rather, as citizens of God's Heavenly Kingdom, and live your lives accordingly.

Be not tempted by money, nor by that which money can buy. Instead, know that, with God, all needs and desires are already fulfilled, and it is up to each of us—through our devotion, our faith, and our daily actions and words—to bring these things into the physical world.

Remember to be grateful for all blessings, whether large or small, and give thanks to God daily for all these.

With constant prayer, faith, and ultimate love for God and all His Creation, you shall have no need to resist the attacks of Evil, for you will stand as a Beacon of Light too great for the Forces of Darkness to even approach.

Call upon God and His Holy Angels—the Heavenly Host—to assist you and guide you in all that you do. There is no Force of Darkness which shall not be defeated by God's Holy Army.

Fill your lives with love and gratitude, and Wisdom will make itself manifest.

Know that ALL needs (not wants) are already met. They already exist in the Heavenly Realm, and are awaiting your heartfelt request to be made manifest in your physical realm.

Nothing is impossible if you believe within your heart, your mind, and your spirit that God's love and grace are more than sufficient.

Now go forth in the new year with joy, with love, with the knowledge that God waits upon your call and your request. He waits upon your love, your devotion, and your prayers of gratitude to bless you in every way possible.

Leave behind all fear, all doubt, and all anger, all confusion, all hatred, all greed, and all lusts of the flesh. Step across the threshold into the new age—the new world—into the Kingdom of God, which already exists and awaits you.

The War On Freedom

Interview by Rick Martin

He is likewise the author of the underground bestseller called Rule By Secrecy: The Hidden History That Connects The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids, as well as the earlier books Alien Agenda: Investigating The Extraterrestrial Presence Among Us, and Psi Spies that explores the subject of remote viewing.

On television, Jim Marrs has appeared on ABC, NBC, CBS, CNN, C-SPAN, the Discovery, Learning, and History Channels, Geraldo, Montel Williams, Larry King, the Today Show, and has several times addressed the vast late-night listening audience of Art Bell's popular talk-radio program.

His www.JimMarrs.com Internet website is a constantly updated source of information likely to be of great interest to SPECTRUM readers. Jim can be contacted there, too.

With Jim's permission, we have reprinted his probing article (elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM) titled: THE WAR ON TERRORISM: Fact Or Fiction? While that thoughtful inquiry was written in the weeks shortly after the 9/11 events, it acts as the basis for his new book, currently being written and aptly titled The War On Freedom.

In short: Jim Marrs has a well-earned reputation for Truth-bringing that's especially worth listening to at a time, like now, when suspicions run high about ANY pronouncements from our multi-faced government, and as concerns continue to escalate about the very stability of our world.

I had the great privilege of speaking with Jim Marrs on December 10, 2002. What follows is a no-nonsense, frank discussion about the plight of the United States and world. Jim is likely to instantly seem an "old friend" to many conscientious SPECTRUM readers because the questions he asks and the ironies he points out about our topsy-turvy present world scene are the same ones we're all dealing with.

With that said, let's listen now to a man who has done his homework and has a genuine gift for explaining, in no-nonsense terms, what he's found-out.

Martin: Let's jump right into the meat. Let's not spend time on a foundation. Our readers are very well informed.

First of all, let me tell you that I really loved Rule By Secrecy. It's excellent. Wisdom Books & Press will be carrying the book and promoting it. It's a job well done.

Marrs: Thank you. My premise, of course, was that the Secret Societies of today can be tracked right back through the Secret Societies of old, and even on back to the earliest origins of mankind. That was my premise. To my own amazement, as I really dug, studied, and researched, it proved to be absolutely true. [Laughter]

Martin: Isn't that nice when that happens? It's nice when you can find other information, but it's also nice when you can support a theory like that.

Marrs: Let me tell you this, right off. I think what we're witnessing here, and what's going to happen, you can mark my words, we are seeing the convergence of what heretofore has been thought to be two separate concepts, or two separate research communities: One of them is the UFO community, which of course, was just shunned for years and years. It's taken 50 years for the population of this country to come around. In the early 1950s, the polls showed that virtually nobody believed that there was life outside this Earth. Today the polls show quite the opposite. It's way up into the 80 percentile of people who say that they are certainly open to the idea that there could be life somewhere else. That's quite a dramatic turn-around in public perception.

Martin: Yes, it is.

Marrs: While the UFO thing is being more and more accepted by a wider and wider swath of the population, we see a parallel concept about coming under the rubric of a "New World Order". In other words, Secret Societies, secret wealthy elite who are plotting, trying to institute what they call "Globalism" or a "One World Government" or a "Military One World Economic System", etc., etc.

Now, up until the present these two communities had been separate. The people who were into the New World Order stuff pooh-poohed any talk of UFOs; and the people in UFOs pooh-poohed and didn't pay much attention to the New World Order things. But, I think what we're seeing is the convergence of these two concepts. What it's going to lead to, I think, is going to be very, very interesting. Because once the general population accepts the idea of extraterrestrials, and the possibility of alien visitation—we're almost to that point. And, by the way, the Steven Spielberg Taken series is going to hasten that along.

Martin: Yes, it will.

Marrs: When they firmly accept that, and then, as there is a growing acceptance to the idea of this hidden elite who want to rule the world [laughter], we're going to see, finally, we'll get to the $64,000 question, which is: Are these people who are trying to run this planet, are they even "us"?!

Martin: Yes, or are they Reptilians, which has been a subject of a lot of my writing.

Marrs: Yes, that's true, and of course that's David Icke's thesis. I can't dispute, too heavily, David Icke's Reptilian thesis, because that's pretty much where the evidence points. It's just that, I'm trying to reach a broad, mass audience.

Martin: Right. [laughter] I understand.

Marrs: I don't think that I'm going to win friends and influence people by calling the Queen Mother of England a 200-year-old Reptilian cannibal.

Martin: You're absolutely right, and I appreciate your approach. I have gone there in my own research and material.

Marrs: All of a sudden, if you simply follow the evidence, that's where you end-up.

Martin: Where there's smoke, there's fire.

Marrs: That's true. But, again, I think this Taken series is really going to broaden the perception, because up until now, most average "Joe six-pack" people think that if you talk about an alien, it's got to be a slimy, big-headed, green thing from outer space. Once they get the idea that, hey, either through masking, or through biological technology, or through mental, psychic abilities, they can have you view them as anything you want to see, anything that will make you comfortable. Then, that just puts the whole thing into a new perspective.

Martin: And now we have Nibiru, and the compounding of the problem with the Anunnaki, and their involvement in Sumeria. That further complicates the picture for a lot of people; they don't know how to sort that out.

Marrs: Let me sort it out for you. Number one, let's assume, for the sake of argument, that the 6,000-year-old Sumerian tablets are telling us the truth. In fact, there is no reason to believe otherwise. They were written down thousands of years even before the Bible, and they said that "In the beginning..." and they give the date "425,000 years ago"—back then—"the Anunnaki came from the heavens to the Earth." And they colonized, built their cities, etc.

Now, the problem developed in the 1800s, and this was before the era of heavier-than-air flight. It was before the Wright brothers. It was before anybody even knew about the atom, much less genetic manipulation. When they read these accounts of these Anunnaki coming from the heavens and coming to Earth, and going to other worlds, creating a worker race, it just was not in their lexicon.

Therefore, the scholars back in the 1800s said: "Oh, this is their mythology. These are their gods." You can go to the Encyclopedia Britannica, right now, and you can read the full story of the Anunnaki, it's just that it's couched in terms of "mythology".

Martin: Right, like a "creation story".

Marrs: Exactly. Now, all that some of the more recent researchers, probably sparked by Zecharia Sitchin, but a growing number of others, all they've done is, they haven't changed the translation of the stories much at all. They've simply said, maybe these people are telling us what they believe to be the truth, or knew to be the truth, and maybe these weren't written down as just mythological stories.

So let's assume, for the sake of argument, that what they were telling us was true. And that these Anunnaki were on the Earth, thousands and thousands of years ago. And perhaps they even did create their "worker race", which would certainly explain the absence of the "missing link", because there is no missing link.

Martin: That's right.

Marrs: They got Neanderthal man, they genetically tweaked him, and turned him into Cro-Magnon or modern man. Ok? Now, that leads to the question: What happened to these folks? And to me, it's an either/or answer. Either they all left the planet, or they all, or at least a

Now, how do we answer this? It's pretty simple, I think. You go and you look at the historical record. If they all left, the written historical record of mankind should just show a slow, evolutionary climb from hunter-gatherers to city-states, to nations, etc., which is pretty much what conventional history teaches.

But, that's not what really is in the historical record, is it? What we find is, in everything from Ezekiel and the flying wheel, to the Miamas of the Hindus, to the Flying Dragons of the Chinese, to the Flying Gods of the Central and South American Indians, the historical record is just there. Obviously, they all didn't leave. At least a portion of them are still here.

If they're still here, then where are they? Obviously, if you were Charlton Heston and you were on the "planet of the apes", you would not want to just hide in a cave and let the apes run everything; you would want to run the planet of the apes. You came from another world, and you realized that you had superior technology but, for all of that, you could not physically control six billion apes.

If you'll recall the X-Files movie, the beginning of it shows the two cavemen slogging through the snow. They go in a cave and they encounter a Reptilian being, and there's a big fight, and one of them is killed, but the other one just manages to spear the Reptilian, and he's killed.

So, see, even with technology, numbers count [laughter]—to be overwhelmed by numbers. They know this, so they know that they cannot forcibly control the planet of the apes. The only way that they can control the planet of the apes is to keep the apes fighting among themselves, off-balance and misdirected, so they can control everything through secrecy and deceit.

That is exactly the methodology that we see being employed by these Secret Societies that are pushing for "Globalization"—the effort to control the entire world. In fact, the whole history of mankind has been an effort by a handful to control the whole world. Right?

The problem has been, from their standpoint, lack of technology. When you can only control the world by moving massive Roman legions, it took a long time and a great effort. And when you got there, likely as not, all those people who you wanted to subjugate, they just moved away.

Martin: [Laughter]

Marrs: They went somewhere else. [Laughter]

In fact, if you think about it, all of Western history has been nothing but one mass migration, and it started in Mesopotamia, or what is now Iraq, Sumeria, the home of the Anunnaki. That's where it began, and this exodus then proceeded in two directions: one northward through the Caucasus region, and then into Eastern Europe, and then moving into Western Europe.

You know, Celtic music and Celtic history is a big fad right now, but most people do not realize that they do not originate in the British Isles. They originated in Mesopotamia, and immigrated there with this ancient knowledge, and with their ancient beliefs, and with their ancient stories and legends.

That was one way. The other way was, they moved into Palestine, and then into Egypt. Egypt, the great Egyptian civilization that for so long we have thought was the world's first great civilization, was nothing more than just a resurgence of the old Sumerian civilization. It was brought to Egypt by a Sumerian who is named in the Bible, Abraham, who came from Ur of the Chaldaea. Ur is a Mesopotamian city, a Sumerian city, one of their leading cities. Chaldaea was simply a biblical term for Sumeria.

So, Abraham was a Sumerian, and he brought all of that knowledge into Egypt, and that was the knowledge that helped found the great Egyptian dynasties. It was the same knowledge that was picked-up by Moses, and then taken over and passed along through the Israelites in the form of the Cabala, the ancient knowledge.

It all ties together. Now, all of that migration moved Westward, filled-up Europe, filled-up the British Isles, and then it kept going Westward until it filled-up the Eastern seaboard of the United States. And then, in the 1800s, there was one mass movement from the East Coast, until they finally got to the West Coast, and they settled the whole of North America.

Why did all of these people continue to move, all those centuries? Historians make no bones about it. There's no real argument about it: They moved to escape political and religious tyranny.

So, see? These folks have been trying to get ahold of us for centuries, but we're like quicksilver [laughter]—you try to grab us and we all just scamper off and run, and go and move somewhere else.

Martin: There's only one slight problem, and that is: we've run out of real estate.

Marrs: That IS the problem. Now, there's no place to go, no place to run, and now they have the technology—thanks to computerization and national I.D. cards and social security numbers—now they know exactly where you are.

I live out in an unincorporated area of a rural county. I don't live in a town. I don't live in a city. I just live out in the country. For various reasons, expediency being one of them, I get my mail through a post office box in the little town near here. And I've been out here for more than 20 years.

For 15 or 16 of those 20 years, it was no big deal. Most people out here in the rural areas just kept a post office box in town. And so, if I cashed a check, I'd go to give my address to somebody and I'd say: "It's P. O. Box..." and give the town, and never had any problem.

But just within the past 4 or 5 years, it's now becoming more and more where, every time I try to do something, they say: "Where is your physical address?" I had trouble getting my voter registration card renewed because they wanted a physical address.

Now, I ask you, what has that got to do with my voting? I either turn up to vote, or I don't. What do they care where I physically reside?

It's all government paperwork, and it's all designed so they can put their finger on you. They want to know right where you are. It's pretty scary when you start looking at it from that standpoint. And, of course, I know your magazine has carried plenty of articles right along the lines of what my new book is about. Right now, I'm calling the book The War On Freedom.

Martin: I'd like to go right there. I'd like to spend most of this interview on that one subject. Let's get into it.

Marrs: It's a great next item because we've got certain elite elements in this world who are trying to control the entire population, and they are obviously making great headway here.

If Osama bin Laden was truly behind the attacks of 9/11, and if his goal was to strip freedom and democracy from the citizens of the United States, then I'd have to say he succeeded admirably; he won—because look at what is happening to us!

I think the best quote I saw, and I can't remember now who said it, but I think this sums up my attitude: "We don't have to fear terrorists that much. It's a concern, and we have to work to combat terrorism; but terrorists simply want your life, only tyrants and dictators want your freedom."

That's what we're seeing happen, right now.

Martin: I just finished reading, in our latest January 2003 issue, which goes to press today, a lengthy article titled Stranger Than Fiction: Documented Probe Of 9/11 & The War On Terrorism, by Dr. Albert Pastore. It's a very thorough analysis involving the Mossad and the effort by Israel and the Zionists behind the scenes.

Marrs: Oh, yes. I have a whole section in my new book about Israeli foreknowledge, and it seems quite evident. The thing is, based on all of the evidence available, it's obvious that there was some foreknowledge that 9/11 was going to happen, and particularly in Israel. That should not come as any surprise to anybody, because anybody who knows anything knows that the Israeli intelligence service, the Mossad, is probably one of the most efficient intelligence services in the world. They have penetrated every Arab organization. They know everything those Arabs are doing; they have to, for their own self-protection. To think that the Arab, the al-Qaeda network, or any of those Arab militants could have planned and executed something of the magnitude of 9/11, without the Mossad knowing about it, is just ludicrous.

[Editor's note: Of course it should be emphasized, as more knowledgeable SPECTRUM readers would quickly point out, that the main goal of the Mossad's super-efficient intelligence-gathering efforts can be summed-up in one cold word: BLACKMAIL. Go back to Sherman Skolnick's brilliant dissertation called Blackmail Makes The World Go 'Round in our December 2002 issue for a savvy appreciation of just how the game is played to get what you want. Israel is a grand-master champion of this most ruthless game of entrapment.]

So, the question becomes, did they share their information with U.S. authorities? The total culmination of all the best evidence shows: yes, they probably did.

I think it is absolutely ironic that, in the wake of 9/11, so many national

Rule By Secrecy: The Hidden History That Connects The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids

by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news. And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

commentators were comparing it to Pearl Harbor, because it is a very apropos comparison, but not for the reasons that people think.

Most people think: "Oh, well, that was another dastardly sneak-attack." No!

What we now know about Pearl Harbor is that Roosevelt, George Marshall, a handful of others in Washington, knew exactly when and where Pearl Harbor was going to be attacked, and they allowed it to happen to further their own political ambitions and goals.

I think that a fair and impartial viewing of the evidence of 9/11 would show that was the exact same thing. Hell, even the Taliban tried to warn that Osama bin Laden was going to launch airplane-driven attacks against this country. They uncovered the plans for using hijacked aircraft as flying bombs back in 1996, when they raided an al-Qaeda network cell over in the Philippines. The FBI and CIA were awash with warnings from everybody—the Chinese, the Italians, for gosh sakes, everybody. And yet, nothing was done, and it happened.

Worse than that, when it began to happen—let's go back and recall that when the golf pro, Payne Stewart, had a planeload of people in a private jet and their oxygen malfunctioned, and they all passed-out and/or died, and they went off course. Within minutes there were fighter interceptors all over Payne Stewart's plane. They wagged their wings, and they fired shots over his bow and everything else. They realized that nobody was responding.

So, they stayed with it, in case it went down over a populated area, and it flew about halfway across the United States, and then finally ran out of fuel, and went down in an unpopulated area and crashed. But the point is: they were all over that plane within minutes.

It was well over 30 minutes after those hijacked airplanes went off course that any fighter interceptors were even scrambled.

In fact, if you'll look at it, you'll find that there is a consistent pattern of lack of normal response and defense measures. It's really incredible. And if you couple that with the obvious information, the obvious point of foreknowledge, then it really presents a pretty chilling scenario.

Martin: It's as though NORAD stepped-down for a time.

Marrs: That's right. But now, let me tell you, here is what is fascinating. Here is one possible explanation. I don't know if you're aware of this, but the National Reconnaissance Office, on that very morning, scheduled an emergency drill. Their scenario was that a plane had a malfunction, and had crashed into one of their buildings. Isn't that amazing? Needless to say, that information didn't come out until months later. It was scheduled for 11 o'clock on the morning of September 11, 2001.

Now, this is just absolutely fascinating, because all of a sudden that does present a plausible scenario where NORAD, or possibly even all the way up to President Bush, where they say: "Oh, a plane has crashed into the building." If they're aware of this exercise, they think: "Oh, well, that's the exercise." That might explain their lack of response.

But what makes me think that's not the case is because, if that was the case, they would have announced that NRO exercise the day after, and said: "Man, we got confused because we thought this was the NRO exercise." The fact that this information didn't leak-out until almost a year after 9/11 tells me that it was more than that.

Martin: What other things are you finding in researching this book?

Marrs: The two or three points that blew me away in researching my book are:

First off, it seems quite obvious—and I present all the information, and all of the data and facts—that the person who actually put George W. Bush into the oil business back in the 1970s was none other than Osama bin Laden's older brother, Saline bin Laden, who came to Texas and owned a bunch of property. And, in fact, an airport outside of Houston, and was heavily involved in the Texas business community.

The next thing that ties in with that is that the bin Ladens and the Bushs, according to the Austin American Statesman, based on court records and business records here in Texas, are more than just business associates; they're also social friends. In 2000, the Bush family traveled to Saudi Arabia as the guests of the bin Ladens. Now, that's just a little bit too tight for my comfort. I mean, if this was a business transaction that got involved in a lawsuit, and the judge was that closely connected with one of the litigants, he would have to excuse himself. Ok? I think Bush has excused himself from all of this because there is too much, and too interlocking of business and social connections between the bin Ladens and the Bushs.

The other thing that I found that blew me away was that—I heard this, and I think David Icke makes a point of pointing this out, and I had some trouble with this. I wanted to double check on this; but it turns out it's absolutely true: The Bush family are blood relatives to the Windsor family. Not only that, but according to Burke's Peerage, a very prestigious genealogical publication in England, the Bush family is related to every European monarch, on or off the throne!

Now, what do you suppose the odds are that the same bloodline is running both Britain, and what's left of the British Empire, and the United States, and it's New Imperial position all around the world?!

Martin: Back to the unspeakable Reptilian theory.

ALIEN AGENDA: Investigating The Extraterrestrial Presence Among Us by Jim Marrs

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. As his title indicates, the author has concluded that UFOs are piloted by extraterrestrials of various types and with diverse motives. However, rather than taking that conclusion for granted, Marrs guides his readers through 50 years of UFO history that includes some less-traveled byways, off-ramps, and dead ends. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic. (— George Eberhart, Ft. Worth Star-Telegram) didn't say. I didn't say that. [Laughter]

Martin: [Laughter]

Marrs: I'll let people draw their own conclusions.

[Editor's note: For readers who may not be familiar with the reference implied above by Rick's comment about "the unspeakable Reptilian theory"—this refers to one of David Icke's major investigative assertions that both the Bush family and the Windsor royalty are of related Reptilian heritage, along with a number of other royalty around the world.]

But those are the facts, and it's absolutely amazing.

I've got to add one thing, before I forget it. This will bring us up to and past the current point.

I've been reading some things coming across how there are various communities, various groups and organizations within the United States that are now beginning to try and rally to oppose the Patriot Act and the Homeland Security for "the Draconian measures" that they are. But, of course, they rushed that on us following this big traumatic event, and just ran it right through before anybody had a chance to stop and really think about it.

Here's my prediction: This is the old "two steps forward, one step back" routine. Following 9/11 and the creation of Homeland Security, then the rapid passage of the Patriot Act, and then, finally, the legalization of Homeland Security as a cabinet-level department, this was two steps forward. They used the shock and the chaos of 9/11 to ram all that through.

But now, people are beginning to have second thoughts. There are already beginning to be horror stories of things that are happening, people getting arrested, held incommunicado because they were taking pictures (or something). They're claiming that these are "enemy combatants". And, of course, all that usually works itself out; but the writing is on the wall.

I think what we're going to see, my prediction is that there will be a backlash, eventually, and people are going to go: "Wait a minute; what's happened here?" Various federal judges and courts and even maybe some of the agencies are going to go: "Oh, well, ok, we're going to back-pedal on this; we're going to back-pedal that."

We see this with the TIPS Program—Terrorism Information Prevention System, or something like that. Basically, it's a snitch program. They wanted to employ postal workers, meter readers, cable-TV workers, when they come into your house, they're supposed to go back and report anything that—

Martin: They backed-off of that right quick.

Marrs: Yes, once it became known; and once there is a public outcry, they backed-off. For instance, in the instance of the Post Office, the Postmaster General issued a statement and said: "We are not going to participate in that program AT THIS TIME." Those three words are the key. You see: it's two steps forward, one step backward.

Once everybody fully comprehends what has happened here, there's going to be a little bit of an outcry, and they're going to back-pedal a little. "Well, ok, we're not going to do this. We're going to soften these regulations, etc." Everybody will breathe a sigh of relief and say: "There, we're back to good ol' America." And yet, all of this crap will still be on the books. It will still be sitting there for them to use whenever they choose to use it.

If you go back and study history, and particularly go back and study the history of the Secret Societies that have run this country ever since its inception, you'll find that this is just standard operating procedure. It's problem, reaction, solution.

Martin: It started way back, but most recently it started with the Anti-Terrorism Act Of 1996, then the U.S. Patriot Act, and now the Homeland Security Act.

Marrs: That's right. Actually, you can track it back even further than that, to a series of Emergency Executive Orders. Executive Orders can be tracked back all the way prior to World War II. In fact, I remember there was a bit of a stink of that during the Carter Administration, about the fact that they were basically operating under these Emergency Decrees.

And so they said: "Ok, ok, we're going to clean all that up."

Then there was a brief flurry about: "Ok, they've done away with a lot of those old Emergency Executive Orders." Which was true. They rolled them all—

Martin: Right, they rolled them.

Marrs: [Laughter] They were still there, but it was a cosmetic change. It's two steps forward, one back. It's just the same old methodology.

Martin: We have a situation where Americans, if they knew the truth, would either revolt, or would be so furious that they would do something, but there would be action.

Marrs: I would hope so.

Martin: And yet the public, at large, are so mind-controlled, and given no information, and kept financially so repressed.

Marrs: They're so strapped. Today, in a typical family of 4, the mother and the father, the husband and the wife, both have to work, and work hard, just to maintain their standard of living.

Martin: That's right.

Marrs: And it pretty well eats-up their time. I'll tell you what I think the American public should be upset about, and it's simply this: Any time you go to visit a lawyer, one of the first things they tell you is: "Don't sign anything without reading it first." And yet, the Patriot Act and Homeland Security Act were just rushed right through a Congress that never even read what was in there.

Now that, to me, that's enough, right there.

Like the Homeland Security Act—almost 500 pages and it was only delivered the day before? There's no way somebody can read 500 pages, assimilate it, and discuss it in any kind of intelligent way before that vote came up.

I think that anybody who voted for either one of those acts should be voted out of office, because they are not acting in the best interests of their constituents.

And that's not even to be arguing whether they should have passed the legislation. If they had all read it, and if they had all debated it, then I still would disagree, but at least I could have respected them as that was their beliefs, and that was their decision. But they passed this crap without even reading it!

Martin: In the most recent January 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM, we're publishing Senator Byrd's speech.

Marrs: Oh, good!

Martin: And Representative Ron Paul's speech, which exactly says what you are saying—namely, that nobody had time to read it, and how could they DARE pass such a piece of legislation. It's never been done before.

Marrs: Oh, no. I can't remember the exact stats, but the Homeland Security Act was the largest reorganization of government since the National Security Act Of 1947. In the National Security Act Of 1947, at least they had 3 months to work on that, debate it, and it went through several committees. It still, by the way, got ramrodded through. At least there was some lip-service paid to study it; it wasn't given to them the night before!

Martin: What I was trying to get to, a minute ago, with regard to the American people being ill-informed, is that obviously the truth is out there. For the serious researcher, it IS possible to glean information and arrive at the truth, but it takes serious study and a real conscious effort to do so. But, for the average person, who is ill-informed and who turns to the media, which is totally controlled, do you think we will reach a point of critical mass as a nation where people will get so fed-up with the non-news that they will do something?

Obviously the vote is controlled. We can all say, ideally, to vote the person out. But if the votes don't count, like the book Votescam seems to indicate, we're in almost a "catch-22" situation with these powerful, powerful beings controlling this planet, the Secret Societies controlling the planet. Without bringing in a Divine component, which I always thank God for, what do you perceive happening? Do you think we're going to have a Revolution? Are we going to have just a total fascist society? What's going to happen?

Marrs: I think it should be obvious to everyone, right now, that the Agenda is being pushed forward rapidly; the gloves are off. I mean—when President Bush appointed Henry Kissinger to investigate 9/11, he might as well have gotten up in front of national television and shot us the bird!

Martin: It's a slap in the face.

Marrs: It definitely is. The reason for that, of course, is that any thoughtful person realizes that whatever our problem is with world terrorism right now, is a direct result of U.S. foreign policy which, of course, since World War II has been neo-colonialism.

We go into third-world countries; we pay-off the tin-horn dictator, or we buy-off the ruling family, make them wealthy, and then rape the resources of the country. It's obvious why people are upset over us.

Now, who was in charge of that foreign policy for about 30 of those 50 years? Henry Kissinger! Do you put the fox in charge of investigating who got in the hen house? Come on!

I'll tell you, again: it's the old "two steps forward, one step back". What's going to happen is that, no, the poor dumbed-down American public, they listen to CNN and they read the New York Times or their local newspaper—even worse—and they really, truly believe that they are well informed.

But, they really are being kept in the dark about so many things. Then even when they are told things, they are given the spin, the party line. What's going to happen is, as thoughtful people study and research, and as magazines such as yours and various publications come out, that knowledge of reality and of truth will slowly trickle down through the society. Ok?

By then, though, they'll be on to something else. There's going to be another terrorist attack, or whatever. In fact, my particular view is that, I don't think that, within a few years, we're even going to be able to recognize this country.

And I think that things are going to be happening that are outside of everybody's control. I'm talking about geophysical changes. We've been having these earthquakes all around the Pacific Rim.

I think things are heating up. The atmosphere is getting worse and worse, ozone holes are there. I think things are heading to a culmination, to a boiling point, and I think that these Globalists understand that. They know this, and that's why they are taking unprecedented moves to gain total control over the population.

In certain areas, probably, it will turn into an Orwellian society, in certain big cities. I think even the people in control aren't certain as to what they're going to have to contend with. Then, of course, that comes back to one of the Secret Societies' chief mottos: "Out of chaos comes order." That's what they're going to be prepared for, to instill order over the chaos.

I think what all of us thinking, caring people need to do is to start prepping our neighbors and friends that we need to take care of ourselves, when there are earthquakes, etc. We're being told by our government: if it's a biological attack, if it's an earthquake, if it's another related disaster, whatever, that we have to turn to THEM.

And yet, if you go back and look at history, you'll find that right on up until today, generally, it's the local community that's hit the worst that takes care of itself. Even though we always hear the news stories about how they're guarding against looting and rioting and this, that, and the other thing, that actually does not usually happen. What usually happens is, survivors tend to pull together, work together, and really help each other out.

This is what we need to do. This whole nation needs to act like we are the victims of a huge catastrophe, and we need to pull together, and work within ourselves, and work within our communities, to maintain our status as a free and democratic people.

Martin: I think that will happen, as the changes occur. I'm also in a rural area. I think it's wise to live in a rural area if

SEEDS OF FIRE: CHINA AND THE STORY BEHIND THE ATTACK ON AMERICA

On the eve of the first war in the 21st Century, one perplexing question remains: the role of China. The answer comes in what also have hundreds of shorter-range ballistic and cruise missiles for use in regional conflicts. Some of these shorter-range missiles will have nuclear warheads; most will be armed with conventional warheads.

That prediction is from a CIA briefing paper to the Bush Administration. It is one of almost 100 pages of never-before-published official documents in SEEDS OF FIRE: China And The Story Behind The Attack On America, by Gordon Thomas. No one can afford to ignore this book!

SEEDS OF FIRE is a book that every patriotic American — everyone who cares about the future of this country, everyone who wants to know what goes on behind the scenes — must buy and read. This is THE book. Written by a highly experienced intelligence analyst, it is simply a MUST. You cannot ignore the warnings Gordon Thomas gives.

As an example of his total credibility, hours after the book was published, the CIA was forced to confirm its findings about the threat China poses. The CIA publicly confirmed what Gordon Thomas reveals in SEEDS OF FIRE. Just how big a threat China is.

This has been kept out of the news agenda because it does not suit certain business interests to have that truth emerge. But at last here it is. Every patriotic American should buy and read this book! It is simply revelatory.

Other revelations include the Inslaw/Promis "largest global software theft in history", MK-ULTRA mind-control applications, and the link between newspaper magnate Robert Maxwell and the Los Alamos laboratory nuclear secrets "spy" case.

But it is the China connection that ought to alert all thinking Americans to "the sleeping giant" of the Orient. Be informed. Be astonished.

possible. [Laughter]

Marrs: [Laughter] Well, I figured that out about 30 years ago.

Martin: [Laughter] Yeah, right.

Marrs: That's why I am where I am.

Martin: It's not rocket science. The cities are going to get rough, I think.

Marrs: My wife was a public school teacher, and I was a police reporter for a large, big-city newspaper, and we looked at each other one day and said: "It's time to get out of the city." [Laughter]

Martin: You were smart to recognize it and do it.

How much do you know about the "special courts" that have been put in place, under the "War On Terrorism"?

Marrs: Oh, by the way, I just got a new U.S. News & World Report today [keep in mind this interview took place on 12/10/02], and they're covering all that. Interestingly enough—although I don't have it here in front of me—it's talking about military un-justice. They've got a huge story about all of the flaws with this.

The thing is, you have to understand, this is nothing more than what happened in Germany.

[Editor's note: Jim is here referring to a 1933 incident. In his article The War On Terrorism: Fact Or Fiction? which we share in its entirety elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM, Jim explains:

"On February 27, 1933, the German Reichstag or Parliament was destroyed by fire. Hitler and his Nazis blamed the destruction on communist terrorists. They even caught one, a retarded Dutch youth named Marinus van der Lubbe, who carried a Communist Party card.

"After some time in custody, the youth confessed to being the arsonist. However, later investigation found that one person could not have started the mammoth blaze, and that incendiaries had been carried into the building through a tunnel which led to the offices of Hitler's closest partner, Hermann Goering.

"Less than a month later, on March 24, 1933, at Hitler's urging, a panicky German Parliament voted 441 to 94 to pass an Enabling Act which was the starting point for Hitler's dictatorship. As a result of this act, Germans soon saw gun confiscation, national identity cards, racial profiling, a national security chief (Heinrich Himmler), and later, mass murders and incarcerations in concentration camps.

"One of the western leaders who supported Hitler and his policies was Prescott Bush, grandfather of President George W. Bush. He must have taken notice of Hitler's method for gaining unwarranted power."

We're just repeating the Reichstag fire, and then the Enabling Act, which created national identity cards, gun control and gun confiscation, set-up detention centers for dissidents, which rapidly turned into the concentration camps. You can even go back further than that, with the French Revolution, where they just sowed chaos, and then set-up "secret" tribunals, and tried people in secret, etc.

In fact, another subject that's in my book, that I'm sure will make you feel warm and fuzzy, is the Phoenix Program, which I'm sure you're aware of, in Vietnam?

Martin: Yes.

Marrs: This was a population pacification program. The way it worked was quite simple: On the basis of just one anonymous call or tip, they go out and arrest you, and then torture you until you either died, or gave-up somebody else. Then they go get them and repeat the process. More than 40,000 Vietnamese were killed! That is just a little shy of our total military death over there in Vietnam, and thousands more were tortured and maimed.

This was a CIA program, run by Deputy Director William Colby, and using United States personnel. Among those personnel who participated in Operation Phoenix was Tom Ridge, who is heading our Homeland Security office. Doesn't that make you feel more secure? [Laughter]

Martin: [Laughter] You're right, it makes me feel warm and cozy all over.

Marrs: That's right. He knows how to instill security in the population: one anonymous tip, they pick you up, they hold you indefinitely, they torture you, kill you, and keep moving. And pretty soon they've got a very passive and docile population.

People who read your publication, they are probably only too well aware of what we're talking about.

Martin: Right.

Marrs: I think what everybody is looking for, and I know myself, and I think you, too, say: "What do we do about all of this?"

Martin: That's right. That's one of my KEY questions here.

Marrs: I think it has a two-tiered answer.

On the personal level, I think we have to keep ourselves informed. Then we have to inform everybody we can. Now, let me advise against going out and trying to evangelize anybody and everybody. Because there are plenty of people who don't want to hear it; it discomforts them. It might make them have to think.

So, don't be pushy, because that would be counter-productive. But, when you're in coffee-clutches around the office, or at your church, or community events, and somebody goes: "Oh, man, Homeland Security..."

You might just say: "Did you know it's being run by the people who ran the Phoenix Program, where they killed all those people?"

Just throw in things like that. Just throw in some of this knowledge, so that we can spread the knowledge, and spread the education, and maybe increase the consciousness of the population.

Then, also on a personal level, there are things that you can do as an individual. Having worked in the media for about half my life, let me assure you that your local

Why the official story of 9/11 is a monumental lie

David Icke

$29.95 (+S/H)
Code: AIW (1.75 lb.)

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

newspaper, your local radio stations, your local TV stations, they really do pay attention to you. If you, and particularly if you can get a few friends together, if you start sending them emails and letters and calls, saying: "Why aren't you reporting this? Why aren't you reporting that? What about those chemtrails that we see overhead; what are those? And don't tell me that they're contrails, because I know the difference."

Just keep hammering on them. You might actually push them off dead center, occasionally.

You could do that same thing with your congressional representatives.

Now, when it comes to certain things, you may not be able to overcome the sway of the Council on Foreign Relations or the Trilateral Commission, but there are many other instances where you can.

Politicians are in there, and their primary goal is to get re-elected. If you let it be known—and particularly if you can command a sizeable group of people—that you all are concerned and watching what they're doing, you might get them to suddenly find a little bit of courage, and stand-up to some of this stuff.

Of course, they know better than we do, what happens to people who stand-up and try to speak their truth, and are an obstacle in the way of this military-industrial juggernaut—like Senator Paul Wellstone! They know exactly what happens to people like that. That's why most of them are weak-kneed. Maybe if they knew they had a sizeable chunk of the population behind them, maybe they would suddenly rediscover their courage.

So, there are a lot of things you can do. You can host meetings in your home. You can host meetings at the local community center or church or wherever you can spread this information.

Martin: That's good advice.

Marrs: There are just all kinds of things that people can do. But then, on the higher level, I think we do have a "Catch-22" situation because they have systematically destroyed the last of the icons of America.

By that I mean, everybody now realizes, and has for a number of years, that Congress—our so-called "elected representatives"—are pretty much a joke. They are in the pocket of the Special Interests; they're in the pocket of the PACs; they're in the pocket of the Corporations; they are bought and paid for. Congressmen are just commodities of the corporations. Everybody understands that.

Following Vietnam, the military got to be a joke. They somewhat re-established themselves with the Gulf War, and of course, now, as far as we know [laughter], they are doing well in Afghanistan. The fact is, we don't know what they're doing, because there is nobody giving us on-the-spot reporting.

There is no genuine news media anymore; we all understand that.

But the last of the icons—one of them was the sanctity of the office of the President of the United States. Well, Bill Clinton pretty well took care of that.

Now, the only thing we're really left with is the sanctity of our individual vote. And the (s)election of 2000 pretty well took care of that.

So, see, the people now are adrift. There's not much to hang onto anymore. I think we have to look to other ways, and that's why, just this past election in November, the media tried to play that as some "big victory" for George Bush and the Republicans.

Not so, not so! They did get Paul Wellstone's seat, which is exactly what they were after, which makes me wonder how come they can't seem to find out what really happened to his airplane.

But also, if you really look at it, number one: you'll find that the total voter turnout was only approximately 36-37% of the total population, which, considering the gravity of the things going on in this country, is just abysmal. Most people—almost 2/3 of the voting population—is not voting! Which means they have given up on the system.

Then, out of the ones who did vote, the split was something like 48-47 to 53-54; in other words, damn near 50/50. So, it wasn't a huge mandate.

[Editor's note: These numbers assume an HONEST election process—certainly not an assumption most readers of this publication would make!]

In fact, if you go back and look, you'll find that a lot of the Democrats who lost their seats were Democrats who had been big supporters of Bush and the Republicans.

So I think, in the past election, there was more to it than we were led to believe. But the key thing is, we've got to get the other 2/3 of the voters, we've got to get them off their duff, and out to vote. That's going to be a tough sell.

I always make sure I vote, because for years I've always told people: "If you don't vote, you haven't got any room to gripe." You can't gripe about what's going on if you're not out there voting.

I want to tell you that my vote counts, and I KNOW it does, as does my wife's, because we're in a small, rural area. We still have paper ballots. And the local little county newspaper always runs the voting totals, and we're always there—so many thousand for Democrats, so many thousand for Republicans, Libertarians, too. There we are, see? We know our vote counts.

Martin: In the larger metropolitan areas, it's very discouraging when things are so computerized.

Marrs: There's another thing. What we need to do, we need to pressure our Congressmen to pass a law that says that we must return to paper ballots and poll watchers, then we can be sure of a fair election. Without that, unfortunately, there won't be any way, short of armed conflict, to try to change things.

Martin: Florida was a very good example of what can happen.

Marrs: Absolutely. I was absolutely incensed, not long back. I forget now, where I was reading this—but some publication tried to do an interview with the president of the company who sells

THE BIGGEST SECRET

by David Icke

The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, Icke reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed: "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

these voting machines to all of the voting precincts. He refused to be interviewed. He refused to say who programs those computers. He refused to say what kind of program they're using.

So, in other words, it's all secret. That pretty well makes a joke of our voting and electoral system. And that's got to change! That can be changed quite easily. We go back to paper ballots and poll watchers. Yes, it would be slower, but it would be accurate.

The key thing is the poll watchers. We need to have representatives of every single party—I don't care how splintered they are. They need to be standing there, watching that vote take place, so that there will be no questions about voter fraud.

But as long as everything's in the computer, whoever controls the computer, controls it.

Of course, that goes back to Joseph Stalin's famous quote: "I don't care how somebody votes. I only care about who COUNTS the votes." [Laughter]

Martin: Right. [Laughter]

The Paul Wellstone thing really drove home the point. One thing I've noticed in the last 5-10 years, there seems to be, and this is just my opinion, a decided lack of leaders in this country, now.

Marrs: Yeah, why is that? When is the last time we had a popular leader who was young, well-informed, well-educated, who was taking steps to put this country back on a fair and just path?

Martin: JFK.

Marrs: And what happened to him? He got shot in the head.

Martin: That's right.

Marrs: So, this message is not lost on people who want to run for office. I know many, many people. In fact, I just met a guy today who has done quite well in business. They tried to get him to run for governor of one of the states, and he just flat turned them down. He just said: "I don't want to go there." And that's terrible. But he understood how that pathway is fraught with all kinds of peril.

Think of how many fine, upstanding citizens have been, basically, ruined because they went into politics. It's unfortunate. That's another thing to wonder about.

It always amazes me that people will gather-up and spend millions and millions of dollars for a $140,000-per-year job. What's that all about? That means they want to get in there because they want to participate in the grabs and the pork and the money-grubbing.

One thing that I always tell people is, when there's an election, check to see which candidate has the least amount of money, and has spent the least amount of money on the election—and vote for them, because they're probably not in it for the money. If you'll remember, before the election of 2000, George W. Bush, who by his own admission, was unfit for office, had gathered up something like—it was unreal—a $78-million-dollar war chest, something like that. Of course, it was all those oil men pouring-in all that money.

But, basically, today you buy elections. Here is the way it works. Today, to get elected, you have to go on television, and television costs lots of money. The only way that most candidates can get the kind of money that it takes to buy television time is to sell-out to the corporate or special interests, and then you're beholdin' to them.

It's only those stooges of the corporations and of the special interests, who get the money to go on television, who get elected. That's why I say that you BUY your Congressmen; they're bought and paid for, because they don't get elected otherwise.

Alright, there are ways around that. I would say to set-up a system where—you know, they already have this system where, on your taxes, there's like an extra dollar that goes to a fund for politics. It's supposedly apportioned out equally, although I doubt it is. Even if it is, it is only apportioned out equally to the Republicans and the Democrats. I think they ought to come up with a system something along this line, which is, when you declare for a public office, you also declare whether or not you want to take public money or private donations, and you've got your choice. You can go either way.

If you say that you want private donations, then there will be laws governing that which say: "Ok, you can take any amount of money from anybody who wants to give it to you. But you have to record that, and you have to publicize that, and make public who gave you all the money." Do away with these PACs and all these little groups and these fronts, because right now nobody knows where all that money is coming from. If General Dynamics is going to give you all this money to run, so you can push through military pork projects, that's fine; you can do that. But, you have to let everybody know that's where the money is coming from. Alright?

That was for the people who want to accept all that heavy special-interest money. They're still able to, but everybody else can see who's buying them, and who's paying for them.

Now, if you choose not to go that route, and you want to go the public route, then there would be a huge public fund, which is apportioned equally to every candidate. Then, you use that money to push for whatever your platform is. But then, again, everybody knows that is your platform.

There are ways of doing this. It's like the taxation system. Why should our taxation system be as screwball as it is? Why can't they simply go up and say: "Ok, everybody, add up your income for the whole year. If you're below, say, $15,000 to 20,000 per year, you don't owe any tax. If you're above wherever anybody wants to set the poverty line, you pay 10%, period. [Laughter]

The thing is, though—that extends to churches, except where their sanctuary is, that's exempt. But all of their oil holdings, like down here in Texas, and all of their apartment buildings, and all of the land and property they own, they pay 10% on it. IBM, ITT, they pay 10%. They're not paying anything now. Look at Enron: out of 5 years, they only paid

How an interdimensional race has controlled the world for thousands of years—and still does!

We are born into a world controlled by unseen forces that have plagued and manipulated humanity for thousands of years. You may look around and think that what you see is "real". But in truth you are living in an illusion designed to keep you in a mental, emotional, and spiritual prison cell.

Icke exposes these forces and their methods of human control and reveals a fantastic web of global manipulation, orchestrated by forces beyond this physical realm. He exposes the hidden bloodlines, through which other-dimensional entities live and operate unseen among us; and he shows how the bloodlines of the royal, political, and economic rulers of today are the same as those who ruled as the kings and queens of ancient times.

The truth is not only out there.

Much of it is right here.

taxes one year, and I'll bet that was a pittance of their profits. If they paid 10% on the money that was flowing through Enron, we'd have a whole lot of money in our public coffers.

So, you simply say: "10%, across the board." If you're making $50,000 per year, and you have to pay 10%, that's a hit, but that's not near as big a hit as we're having to pay now. If you're making $100-200,000 per year, and pay 10%, that's nothing to you; that's pocket-change.

[Editor's note: In point of fact, if all the political fat, the gross criminality, and the special-interest redirections of public monies were stopped, what money would actually be needed to run a TRUE federal government—having only the powers our Founding Fathers intended—could likely be generated without ANY need to tax personal incomes! And just what would THAT do to boost the economy in a healthy way—if you actually got to keep what you earned, to spend as YOU choose?!]

There are ways of doing all this. We just have to use our heads and put some money into office that will think and operate ON OUR BEHALF, instead of operating on behalf of the New World Order and the special interests.

Martin: The system isn't completely broken, but it certainly needs fixing.

Marrs: Oh, it needs tremendous fixing. Unfortunately, I might almost argue with you: I'm not sure this system can be fixed, at this point, without some drastic changes. And I'm not sure that anybody is ready for drastic changes.

The biggest problem with changing the Congressional thing—and I found this out traveling across the country—everybody agrees that probably what needs to be done is, everybody in Congress right now should be tossed-out. Ok? Voted-out, and vote in a whole new slate of people.

Then, watch them like a hawk, because politicians will lie to you—in fact, that's all they do is lie. In fact, any politician who tries to tell the truth all the time is, number one, not even going to get elected, and won't stay elected. People don't want to hear the truth; they want to hear the fairy story. The thing is, you've got a problem right there.

You have to watch politicians, and you have to watch what they do. If you vote in that slate, you watch them. If they vote the way you think they should be voting, then you re-elect them. If not, you bounce them out and you put another guy in there.

That's the way the system is supposed to work—but, of course, it doesn't work that way. Those guys get put in with all that big special-interest money, and they keep getting it every election, and they stay in for life.

I'll tell you another thing that we could do to straighten things up. We should do away with the Congressional Retirement Plan, which guarantees them their salary for the rest of their life.

By the way, the Senate, which rushed through the Homeland Security Bill, and didn't even really read it, at the same time they voted themselves a pay raise for the fourth consecutive year!

Now, that's just atrocious. At this time, when people are being laid-off, when McDonald's says they're shutting down thousands of their shops, when United Airlines just went belly-up, American is asking its employees not to take a pay raise next year to prevent them from going belly-up. The whole economy is in the toilet, and the Senate's voting themselves yet another pay raise? That's unconscionable. Those guys should be thrown-out, all of them!

[Editor's note: And most of these are the same "representatives of the people" who didn't have either the time or the inclination, before the end of the year, to extend unemployment benefits for millions of their out-of-work constituents. Again Mark Twain's century-old assessment comes to mind: "There's no distinctly native, American criminal class—except Congress."]

Martin: Congress has, basically, become merely a mouthpiece for the Presidency.

Marrs: When Bush was starting to rattle the sabers against Iraq, what was the big announcement? His lawyers had advised him that he really didn't even need the vote of Congress; he could act unilaterally.

Martin: I remember.

Marrs: What's the matter? Didn't those boys ever read the Constitution, where it plainly states that only Congress has the power to declare war?

Martin: Executive Powers and Executive Orders we're told supercede, though.

Marrs: And where did all that come from? That came from the National Security Act Of 1947.

Why did that get rushed through in such a hurry? It was signed into law September 27, 1947.

But they began to put that together about two weeks after what? UFO crashes at Roswell, New Mexico! And don't think these weren't tied together, because they were!

What they did there, the key thing to the National Security Act Of 1947, we all know that it changed the name from the War Department to the Defense Department, which was just a little name change.

By the way, I think it's intriguing to note that, under the old War Department, we only had three wars: the Spanish-American War, World War I, and World War II. Under the Defense Department, where we were "just defending ourselves"—let's see, we fought in: Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Grenada, Panama, Beirut, Kosovo, Bosnia, Kuwait—you could just go on and on. We ought to go back to the War Department; we didn't fight nearly as much under the War Department.

Anyway, we know it created the Defense Department, and we know it changed the Army Air Corps to the Air Force, so we had a separate branch of service there.

We also know that it created the CIA. But what it also did, which is little noticed, it created the National Security Council. Now, just by the definition, anything that comes under the rubric of "national security" is taken care of under the National Security Council. Think

See and hear David Icke at the top of his form as he presents six-and-a-half hours of incredible information before a sellout audience of 1200 at the Vogue Theatre in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

You will laugh, you may cry, and you will be on the edge of your seat as the fantastic story of true human history, and WHO really controls the world today, unfolds in Icke's unique style, aided by video footage and hundreds of illustrations.

This is the presentation that the Illuminati (the forces of global control) tried so hard to stop—media interviews were cancelled; immigration officials turned up at the theatre to question his right to speak; pressure was applied on the venue to cancel the event itself; and pies were even thrown at David at a book signing by a rent-a-mob who ludicrously and outrageously sought to dub him a "racist".

But nothing could silence him or break his spirit—and here you will see the result.

how many times where you've read news stories where "the National Security Council authorized" this invasion or "approved the plan to invade" here, there, or wherever.

Who, exactly, IS the National Security Council? It's the President, the Vice President, and Secretaries of State and Defense. Oops—wait a minute!

So, you're only talking about the President—because HE appoints the Vice President and the Secretaries of State and Defense. In other words, that consolidates all of the power—and, certainly, anything that could be construed to come under "national security"—within the office of the President!

That's an extreme concentration of power that I don't think the founders of this Democratic Republic ever intended.

Martin: They certainly didn't intend an organization like FEMA.

Marrs: Exactly, which is answerable to the President.

Now, the Office of Homeland Security is just adding another layer on top of that. And, if you'll recall, the only arguments between Congress and the President over Homeland Security was whether or not they would come under Civil Service. Congress wanted them under Civil Service, so their jobs were protected, and so they had protection of pay raises and the other self-serving things, feeling the heat from their constituents.

And the President said: "No!"

Why? It's so that if they're carrying out UN-CONSTITUTIONAL acts, and somebody blows the whistle on them—under Civil Service there are whistleblower laws that say you can't prosecute people for revealing wrongdoing—but, if they are not a member of Civil Service, then you just fire them, and you put somebody in there who will keep secrets.

Martin: It's my understanding that under the Patriot Act, and now with the Homeland Security Act, some of the teeth have been taken out of the Whistleblower Act.

Marrs: Oh yes, right. Under the Homeland Security Act almost all of that is by the board. That's part of the whole thing. I think one of the most odious aspects of Homeland Security is that if the Feds, the FBI, the CIA—by the way, as if they haven't been operating internally, anyway, domestically, which is against their charter. They weren't supposed to be doing that, but they have been. But now it's codified; now it's legit; now they can operate.

Unfortunately, it was Kennedy who said he was going to splinter the CIA into a thousand pieces, and cast it to the winds, because he realized how out-of-control it had become. And so did Harry Truman, who actually created it. It was Truman who signed the National Security Act Of 1947. Before his death he was quoted as saying: "Who would have thought that this quiet, intelligence-gathering arm of the Presidency would get to be so out of control."

Martin: I sure wish that JFK had not tilted his hand on shattering the intelligence agency into a thousand pieces. I wish he had just done it.

Marrs: I know. But you see, the problem there is, Kennedy was just like the rest of us. He really thought he lived in the United States of America. He really thought he was operating under the Constitution, and even though he knew there were some very powerful and evil people around who were not above much of anything, I don't think he really, truly understood the threat of the powers that were aligned against him. I mean, not to the full extent.

He, obviously, understood that there was a threat because, interestingly enough, there were several times—in fact, I think the morning of the assassination somebody commented to him about all the security measures, and he said something to the effect of: "Well, that really isn't going to do any good, because if somebody is determined enough, they could take a rifle and get on a high building or something, and they could probably do the job."

So he understood the dangers. But I don't think he realized that the dangers CAME FROM WITHIN his own camp, his own government. That was just foreign thinking to us back in those more naive times.

Martin: There was a real innocence that was lost that day, within the hearts

COMMON SENSE II

Thomas Paine's pamphlet Common Sense was written and widely circulated in 1776. The simple logic and wisdom presented in Common Sense persuaded thousands of ordinary citizens to support a movement that sought to unite the colonies in an effort to win their independence from England. The birth of our nation and freedom from King George's tyranny is a direct result of this nation's people understanding the REAL issues and choosing freedom over tyranny.

We, the editors of Common Sense II, are anonymous—just as Common Sense was originally published anonymously. We recognize that this 92-page, 3" x 6" booklet has tall shoes to fill. Time is running out and we must once again persuade our countrymen to choose freedom over tyranny.

The sole purpose of Common Sense II is to awaken our sleeping countrymen. We have compiled the most illustrative and eloquent writings available, and have arranged them in the manner most likely to persuade a nation to stand up for freedom and independence—our God-given rights!

and minds of America. Something died that day.

Marrs: And we're reaping the outcome of it right now. Here's the key to it; here's what is going on: One of the biggest secrets of the Twentieth Century is that, while we defeated the Germans in WW-II, we did not defeat the Nazis. They took everything that wasn't nailed down, took the whole loot of Europe and took off with it, usually with Vatican passports. They created 750 corporations all around the world, usually funded by foreign nations, or by nationals in the country where they created these corporations. What they did was shift their emphasis away from "taking over the world by military might" to "taking over the world by economic might". They have been slowly and steadily buying up everything, ever since.

When you go back and understand the interlocking business connections between the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds, and Hitler and the Nazis, you'll find out that, basically, you're talking about one and the same.

Here's one that's even better: In 1942, two American businessmen were prosecuted under the Trading With The Enemies Act for some of their business involvements, including Union Bank Corporation. They were stripped of their holdings, because it was charged that they were nothing but financial fronts for Hitler and the Nazis. These two guys were Prescott Bush—the grandfather of our current President and the father of our former President—and George Herbert Walker—the father-in-law to our former President and the grandfather-in-law of George W.

So, here's the family who is on the record as being in support of Hitler and the Nazis, and they're pulling the same thing that Hitler and the Nazis pulled back in Germany in 1933.

Martin: Under Operation Paperclip we brought many of them over here; there are so many of them in the intelligence community, as we speak.

Marrs: That's right. And that's what I'm saying. Some of the more radical people claim: "This is just the Fourth Reich." But I'm telling you, the facts and the evidence support that! That is exactly what is going on.

Martin: Very sobering.

Marrs: Then you have to understand that the very same people who created Hitler, and funded him, were the same people who created and funded Communism. When the Russian Revolution—which, indeed, may have been a popular uprising, although there is a lot of evidence to show that it actually began in Petrograd with some British military intelligence agents who really got the Russian Revolution started. So, you could even argue that it was set-up.

But when the Russian Revolution actually got underway, where was Lenin? He wasn't even in Russia. He was in Switzerland. And where was Leon Trotsky, their main "philosopher"? He was in New York, working for Wall Street capitalists. In fact, those very same capitalists are the ones who gave him millions of dollars, and helped finance a whole shipload of revolutionaries, and sent him back over to Russia to take over the Revolution and just set-up a communist regime.

Now, why would Wall Street capitalists support and finance a Revolution, in support of communism, whose avowed purpose was to destroy capitalists? Because if they control both ends, then they don't have to worry about it. What they could do—in fact, what they did—was to pit communism and capitalism, and play us off against each other for almost 100 years. It was quite a profitable enterprise, with the so-called arms race.

Martin: Make money both ways.

Marrs: Make money both ways. And, just to show the interconnectedness of all this, one of the Wall Street financiers who supported Trotsky and the communists was Jacob Schiff. Today, his grandson, Andrew Schiff, is married to Katrina Gore, Al Gore's daughter.

[laughter]

Now, isn't that interesting—how you've got the same families, the same bloodlines, and they're always running the same deal, and it's always to the detriment of the public?!

Martin: They keep popping-up.

How much have you bumped into the Jesuits in this high-level conspiracy research?

Marrs: Very much so. In fact, that's one of my regrets about Rule By Secrecy. I touched on the Jesuits, but I really didn't go into them in as much detail as I should have, because they are a prominent part of the forces in play.

The only thing that is really saving us is that there are schisms and factions within the New World Order bunch, who fight with each other. And the Jesuits play a role in that, and the Priori of Sion [Prieure de Sion], the Knights of Malta—you can't tell a player without a program. And, frankly, I'm not sure that anybody has a truthful program.

Martin: In my interview with Arizona Wilder not long ago [for the December 2002 issue of this publication], she was talking about the current conflict between what she calls the "Western Illuminati"— which is the old, European Illuminati—and the "Black Hand" in Japan, not to mention the Chinese factor. I guess one hopeful note on the horizon is that all these guys will eventually be at each other's throats. I don't know.

Marrs: Well, hopefully. If they get at each other's throats, maybe they'll leave us alone. It's kind-of a faith hope, but maybe. [Laughter]

There's even the thought, now, that China—another thing is that George Bush—this is really fascinating to me. Back in June the Bilderberger Group met, and one of the things that leaked-out of that meeting was that there was a conflict and a split over whether or not we should have that war in Iraq.

So, right now, there has been some stuff I found very interesting, I quote in my new book, a study by the Council on Foreign Relations which shows, it was basically kind-of an argument against trying to start another war with Iraq. And yet, with George Bush, obviously that is his prime objective. Saddam Hussein could probably kiss his butt and he would still go to war. That seems to be the deal. And yet, that is not a unanimous decision by this world elite trying to control everything.

So, it's going to be interesting to see how that plays out. In fact, I was pretty convinced, back in the late spring and summer, that we'd be fighting in Iraq by now.

Martin: I thought that by October we would be going to war.

Marrs: Absolutely. But, I'll tell you a couple of things that held that off.

One of the things that held that off was, again, this split within the New World Order bunch. They are not of like mind on that, and I think they're trying to work that out because they realize if they go in there divided, that could cause a real problem. The other thing has to do with Global Millennium 2000, which was our giant military exercise. It was one of the biggest military exercises in U.S. history, actually. It took place back in the summer. You didn't hear much about that, but we got our ass kicked.

Martin: It was pretty bleak?

Marrs: It was pretty bleak. They thought they had all these spy satellites and cruise missiles, laser technology and computers, and they were going to kick-tail. They had a retired Marine General named Van Riper. He put himself in the mindset of a Saddam Hussein, or a Osama bin Laden. Instead of making cell-phone calls, and radio messages to all of his people, he sent couriers with hand-written messages. [laughter]

He ordered his people to go up from the Mosque, and just call out orders during the evening prayers or whatever. Take little bitty boats, and go out there in the middle of the night, pull up beside the United States fleet ships and blow them up.

By the computer model, HE WON! But then he resigned in disgust because the other people in charge said: "No, that couldn't happen. We're going to redesign this thing, and we're going to reconfigure this, and you can't do this, you can't do that."

He said: "Well, you obviously aren't interested in getting a fair assessment of what's going on." So he resigned.

You know what? It's the same thing that happened before Pearl Harbor. In the late '30s they had Pacific exercises at Pearl Harbor, and the older Admirals were defending Pearl Harbor, and the younger Admirals were going to be the aggressors. And the younger Admirals, they were all believers in Billy Mitchell, who had proved back in the '20s that one plane and a bomb could take-out a battleship, and that they were just obsolete.

These young Admirals devised a plan where they set sail some aircraft carriers, north of Hawaii, take off in an airplane, come in on a Sunday morning when everybody's guard was down and everybody was sleeping late, use the cloud cover that builds-up on the north part of the island as cover, break through the cloud cover, they'd be over Pearl Harbor, they'd drop their bombs on the battleship, and they'd destroy the United States fleet. And it worked like a charm.

But the old Admirals said: "Oh no, that couldn't really work. We'd be shooting back at them, and we'd knock them out of the sky. No, no, no, that can't work." Just the old hi-bound mentality.

What's really interesting is, when that happened, there were Japanese military attachés there taking copious notes. And then, a few years later, they pulled it off on December 7, 1941, and it worked just as well for them.

It's really amazing. As the French philosopher George Santiana said: "Those who do not learn from history are doomed to repeat it." And we're just repeating it; in fact, it's ancient history, actually. We're repeating the rise and fall of the Roman Empire, almost point-for-point. The only difference is because of technology—it took them about 1,000 years to rise and fall, and it's only taken us a little over 200 years.

Martin: Again, without bringing in the "God factor"—and thank God there's a "God factor"—but without bringing that in, I would look at what is happening now as the decay of modern civilization as we know it.

Marrs: Our culture, if you want to call it that, is just abysmal. I can't believe it. For one thing, I don't watch a lot of television, and when I do watch television, I just watch movies or maybe a sporting event now and then. But I don't watch that daytime, nighttime primetime TV. I gave up on that a long time ago. Just recently, if I'm not ready to go to sleep, I'll start channel surfing and just watch what's on broadcast television, after midnight. It is just absolutely incredible. Then you think, "This is a culture!?"

Martin: I agree.

Marrs: I'm not even going to go into the insipid, insane, crude stuff that's on, but the mentality of these young people that they show: [Voice raised two octaves.] "Well, gee, like his hair is really nice, you know; like he's really got a body." And that seems to be the level of their conversation.

Martin: That's right, there's no substance.

Marrs: They don't know anything else, and they don't want to know anything else.

Martin: There's no mind.

Marrs: No mind whatsoever. It's really incredible. I read this some time back, and it's very true: "Below average people think in terms of people. Average people think in terms of events. Above average people think in terms of concepts."

If you think about that, it's really true. When we were all in grade school, or junior high school, what could we talk about? We'd just talk about the other kids, because that's all we knew to talk about; we don't know anything else. And then, as you get to where most people are today, they deal with events. That's where the news media is. "Today, this happened. Yesterday, that happened." And yet, they never make any attempt to go back and string those happenings together to say: "Gee, look what this looks like. Look what pattern we see here."

So, unfortunately, that only just leaves a few of us who are thinking in terms of: "What is this all about? What does all this mean? Where are we going with all this?"

Martin: Pretty spooky.

Marrs: It is. Let's get everybody who reads SPECTRUM thinking in terms of concepts.

Martin: I think we've been there for quite awhile, but reminders are always helpful. Do you believe that exposure of the Secret Societies will, ultimately, break their stranglehold on our political process?

Marrs: Absolutely. The thing they don't want is "the light" of illumination. If a lot of people knew what they were up to, everybody who go: "Hey, stop! We don't want that." I mean, let's face it: that's why you will never see the New World Order put to a vote. That's why the World Trade Organization—when did we have a chance to vote on that? Never. It was just some program that was NAFTA, and then it evolved.

There have actually been instances where the U.S. Congress has been forced to change U.S. law—not because anybody thought it was a good idea, or because anybody voted to do that, but because a court of the World Trade Organization ordered them to do it. So, the World Trade Organization is now, defacto, an international, governmental body that we must yield to. And yet, when did we ever get a chance to vote for that? How does that fit-in with freedom and democracy?

So, yes, absolutely. This is one reason for a lot of the turmoil that's going on right now, because more and more people are becoming aware of these Secret Societies and these organizations and these wealthy elite who are, essentially, trying to dominate the world.

Martin: And yet, one of the fear factors, if I can use that term, that comes into place with the passage of the

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original Native inhabitants of America. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

Homeland Security Act, particularly—it's like putting a muzzle on any brave journalists out there, other than the so-called "alternative press", who are still hammering. Eventually, it would seem, there are consequences for even speaking freely in this country.

Marrs: What do you think the purposes of the Homeland Security Act are? Nothing in Homeland Security is really going to make this country, the homeland, secure. But what it's going to do is secure the secrecy of the wealthy elite—because now, if you talk about it, they could call you "an enemy combatant" and throw you in the jug and throw away the key, and you can't even make a call to a lawyer.

Martin: No charges.

Marrs: No charges, no nothin'.

Martin: Held indefinitely.

Marrs: That's right. And, by the way, you can also see the muzzling effect this is having already on the media. Most media are very hesitant to do anything to challenge what's going on, or to challenge statements by President Bush.

A classic example is, back when he was arguing to the American public about why we needed to go and fight Saddam Hussein, he cited a report by the International Atomic Energy Association, stating that Saddam Hussein might have a nuclear weapon within 6 months. Well, only one enterprising media source went to Europe, to Vienna, to the head of the International Atomic Energy Association, and talked to them. And they said: "No, we've never issued any report like that."

So, they went back to the White House and said: "Well, the IAEA says they never issued a report like that."

And the White House said: "Oh, well, we were talking about a report back in 1991."

The IAEA said: "No, we didn't have a report like that back in 1991, either."

This is a United Nations organization, and they finally talked to the president [of IAEA]. He said: "The only report we've issued was in 1998, and what we said, essentially, was, because of the Gulf War, and all of the damage and destruction, that we didn't think that Saddam Hussein was capable of building a nuclear bomb."

Hello!

So, this guy was just lying to us, and nobody in the media would call his hand on it. Same thing happened, by the way—we now know that in early October, by October 2-3, the U.S. envoy to North Korea was flatly told by the North Koreans that they had a bomb. And he, of course, in a panic, reported it back to the White House. And yet, all through the month of October, we never heard anything about that, because Bush was out talking about Saddam Hussein, who MIGHT be building a nuclear weapon, a "weapon of mass destruction". And only after he got the resolution through Congress, giving him the power to do what he wanted to do, did the White House release the information that: "Oh, yes, by the way, another 'axis of evil' country, North Korea, has a nuclear bomb."

Now, isn't that incredible? How deceitful is that? And worse than that: who gave North Korea that bomb? George W. Bush!

Back in the spring of 2001, he released all this money under an agreement that allowed them to build their two nuclear reactors, from which they produce their enriched plutonium, that gave them the capability of building a nuclear weapon. It had all been controversial because other countries did not want to go ahead with this agreement unless the North Koreans agreed to open and unilateral inspections to make sure they didn't do that!

Bush waived it all, and said: "No, no, no, it's in our best interest to do this." And he released the money to them that allowed them to build their bomb. Isn't that incredible? But nobody gets told any of this. Nobody gets told this, at all! We just blindly go along, depending on faulty and incomplete information that we're given.

Martin: Do you see any leaders on the horizon?

Marrs: No, not really, not a one. In fact, there are only two members of Congress who I have any regard for at all, and that's Representative Ron Paul, a fellow Texan, and Representative Bernie [Bernard] Sanders.

Martin: SPECTRUM readers are quite familiar with Dr. Ron Paul, but who is Bernie Sanders?

Marrs: He's from Vermont and he's an Independent. [Laughter] One of the only Independents in Congress. And he's the only one who will talk straight to you.

And Ron Paul, he's a Republican. I know that a few years back he was on the Libertarian ticket, so the guy's heart is in the right place. And he's the one, of course, who blew the whistle on the Patriot Act, saying that nobody read it.

[Editor's note: Actually, tough old Senator Robert Byrd (D-WV) also had some choice words about this very subject. Along with that of Ron Paul, Byrd's chastisement was shared in conjunction with Dr. Len Horowitz's article called Homeland Security Bill's

"License To Kill" in last month's SPECTRUM.]

But that, to me, is absolutely amazing that they would pass legislation without even really knowing, or understanding, what was in it. That, to me, is unconscionable. That one fact, alone—everybody who voted for that should be drummed out of office, if not charged with malfeasance.

Martin: Do you foresee the use of "psi spies" in carrying out Homeland Security domestically?

Marrs: You mean remote viewing?

Martin: Yes.

Marrs: Yes, because I do know that they have that capability. I know they've used it on a number of things. They've been using remote viewers against Saddam Hussein to find out if, and whether or not, and where he might have some of these facilities that they're concerned about.

And, I even know, for a fact, that there was some remote-viewer involvement in the Washington-area sniper case, trying to pinpoint those guys. So, yes, that's still being used. They don't want to talk about that, of course.

I think the primary reason is because they do not want the rank-and-file American to understand that this stuff really works. Otherwise, we'd start forming remote-viewing groups, and we'd start remote-viewing what they're up to! We could see through everything they're doing.

By the way, interestingly enough, in my new book on 9/11, I commissioned a remote-viewing study, and some of the findings are pretty astounding—as to who had foreknowledge and who did not. I will tell you this: One of the questions was: "Who was at the control of the airplane that crashed in the World Trade Center?" And the majority of viewers said: "No one."

[Editor's note: Longtime diligent readers will recall that we first specifically addressed this important point way back in our November 2001 issue, in an article titled Electronically Hijacking The World Trade Center Attack Aircraft. It surfaced again in our December 2001 issue, in a powerful article titled The Enemy Is INSIDE The Gates. And it was again argued in our May 2002 issue, in a thought provoking article titled The Flights Of The 9/11 Bumble Planes.]

Martin: So, it was radio controlled.

Marrs: Right, Global Hawk technology. I don't know if you want to use this. You might have to get into too much explanation.

Martin: We've done stories on this. Have you read the story, I think it's called The Flights Of The 9/11 Bumble Planes?

Marrs: Yes.

Martin: We've printed that, so our readers are aware of that possibility.

Marrs: I know, for an absolute fact, that Global Hawk technology, which is the ability to capture and take over and fly large jumbo-jets by electronic means, is a technology that has been perfected and in use since at least the early 1980s, if not before.

So, the idea that this might have been used in the events of 9/11 is in no way futuristic or untenable.

Martin: I'm going to jump here, on this one. I'm torn because there are two parts to this question.

Marrs: Ask it a part at a time.

Martin: Ok. One, I think, involves Nazi gold.

Marrs: There's a whole story there. I'm not sure you're ready to go into this whole, long song & dance. But let me tell you something: not only did the Nazis gain all of the gold and the wealth of Europe. Also, in March of 1944, Otto Skorzeni lead a battalion of SS troops to Southern France, to the area of Rennes-le-Chateau, and recovered Solomon's treasure—the greatest wealth, not only of gold, silver, and precious stones, but also of ancient knowledge, in the history of the world.

Martin: THAT'S my other question.

Marrs: That's where the Nazis got the leg-up, with that, plus, with the stolen loot of Europe, they had all the wealth of the world in their hands. That's why they have simply gone right on, and have shifted from trying to take over the world by military might, to taking over the world by economic might.

Martin: Our readers are well aware of the Nazi Antarctic base, and South American involvement. Where did the Nazi gold end-up? Were you able to trace that?

Marrs: It ended-up in all these Swiss bank accounts, and bank accounts all over the world. I mentioned earlier they used it to create 750 corporations, all around the world, and if you have been paying attention, which I'm sure you have, you'll realize that over the past several decades, in big corporate business, it's just been one buy-out after another.

I was really concerned about 1990-1991, because the mass media in this country had come under the control of about a dozen corporations. Now it's down to, essentially, three or maybe four. You've got Time-Warner, AOL, Disney, and Viacom. Between those, they command virtually everything we see and hear—and I'm not just talking about the news media. I'm talking about publishing. I'm talking about magazines. I'm talking about cable. I'm talking about movie studios.

This is why, you see, people need to understand that the view of the world that we all have—I'm not trying to be superior, I'm at the mercy of this as much as anybody—but everything that we believe is based on what we see and hear. And what we see and hear is controlled by these corporations that have been put together and backed by the Nazis.

I had somebody send me an email, not long back, and he was ranting and raving about all the stuff that was going on, and Homeland Security, and all of this stuff, and he said: "These guys are a bunch of neo-Nazis."

I wrote him back saying: "I agree with you on everything."

Martin: Except the "neo" part. [Laughter]

Marrs: Yes, except about the neo part. They're not neo-Nazis; these are the REAL guys! [Laughter]

Martin: Do we want to bring in the Vatican again, at this point, in relation to the Nazis?

Marrs: Of course—it was the Vatican that provided the backbone for the Nazi "rat line" that got them all out of Europe after the war. That had to be a tricky deal because we had been at war with them, and there were all kinds of orders, and a lot of military commanders, if they caught some ranking Nazi, it was time to either do away with him or put him on ice somewhere.

So, you know it had to be tricky getting all those guys out. Most of them got out through the help of the Vatican.

Then, of course, you understand that the Vatican had reached a concordance with Hitler; they were going to be the official religion of the Third Reich.

Now, I think that because of the pressure, you see what's going on. A lot of people don't understand. Ronald Reagan recognized the Vatican as a separate nation. They have an embassy in Washington, DC. How's that for separation of Church and State?

I think you find, particularly through the Jesuits, that there is a tremendous

This is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date on one computer CD. The information comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. Use this information as the beginning resource to help you onto your own research track.

The five people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

involvement of the Catholic Church in this New World Order. And I think, quite simply, what's happening is, they're still vying to become the official religion of the New World Order, just like they did in the '30s and '40s.

Martin: Now, even the Vatican has got to be, and I'm sure they are, threatened by this impending reality of not only God's forces from the cosmos, but the Anunnaki, and others like them. It's got to have just thrown them for a loop that their little house of cards is, sooner or later, coming tumblin' down.

Marrs: Why do you think the Vatican goes to Arizona and builds this huge telescope? They're well aware of what's going on. This is the thing, I guess, that really bothers me the most, is that the one rule of the game is: Don't give away the game! [Laughter] You know?

And then there's the poor people, the poor average people of this country, who are hard-working, honest, just well-meaning, well-intentioned people. They get up and go to jobs that most of them don't like, and they slave away to put food on the table for their family, and so they can pay their taxes, and they just are kept in the dark about what is really going on. It just really disturbs me.

Hey, if the Mafia or the Vatican runs this country, that's one thing. If we all understand that's the way it is, and we accept that, then who am I to say: "You people are idiots; you shouldn't be doing that." If everybody agrees that's the way, to let the Mafia run the country, then ok; I'm not a revolutionary.

But the problem is, the Mafia runs the country, but nobody knows it. We're told these little rose-colored fairy tales about how it works, but it doesn't work that way. And that's why people are so confused. And that's why nobody is voting anymore, because they have learned, over a period of years. Now the young people—I wish they could learn this without having to live for another forty years or so.

But, you go vote for a Republican, and you get the same thing. You say you want something different, so you go vote for a Democrat, but you get the same thing. It doesn't matter.

Martin: It's a one-party system.

Marrs: It's a one-party system, and it's all run by the same New World Order bunch. So, that's why they're confused; that's why they're depressed; that's why they're despondent; and that's why they don't go vote—because they realize it doesn't matter.

Of course, you and I have talked about computerized voting, and how they could be taking our vote from us anyway.

And that's a big concern. These people are not even to that conscious level, but they know at a subconscious level that it doesn't matter who they go vote for; they're going to get the same deal.

Martin: The first part of the question that I wanted to ask you, concerning Rennes-le-Chateau, had to do with the religious information that was there.

Marrs: I have traveled there. I have been to Rennes-le-Chateau. The religious information is quite simple. They have a tradition over there that is firmly believed by any number of people over there. They are probably the descendants of the Cathars, who had a certain knowledge that the story of Jesus, and the whole story that was made out and decided upon by the Roman Church back at the time of the Council of Nicaea, is just in error about a number of things. And that, in fact, Jesus married; he had children. And his wife, Mary Magdalene, actually escaped Palestine, came and landed in Marseilles, France, and lived in Southern France. I had visited a cave that the local people all say: "That's the cave of Mary Magdalene."

And I would say: "Why do they call it that?"

And they said: "That's because she lived there, for awhile."

That's one thing they don't want out because it disturbs their whole little theology. But the main secret of Rennes-le-Chateau was Solomon's treasure.

All right, let me lay this out for you. This is the way it works:

There's a whole question about who was Moses. And I think, if you'll really study it, you'll find that Moses is more of a title than a name, and that the person who we know—Mosis [correct spelling] means the pretender to the throne, or the true ruler. I think if you go back and really study it, there's a good case to be made that Moses, in actuality, was the

Behind The Attack On America*)

Now published for the first time as an original e-book (only available via the Internet).

- Sensational never-seen-before documents from inside the White House, CIA, and other agencies.
- Reveals the documentary evidence that links U.S. Vice-President Dick Cheney and Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld to the cover-up of the death of top CIA scientist, Frank Olson.
- How the CIA financed a ruthless and systematic assault of the human psyche—using a British-born psychiatrist to spearhead the assault.
- Names other world-renowned physicians who were involved in the most sinister research program ever created by any United States government and its secret partner, the British government.
- How a woman was programmed to become a CIA assassin.
- How a CIA chemist was murdered by his own colleagues after he had turned to the one man he thought he could trust—a London psychiatrist engaged in similar work.
- How "expendables"—the CIA generic name for those selected for killing—were secretly murdered after they had been experimented on in Europe.
- How the CIA used prostitutes and mental patients in other experiments.
- How the CIA deliberately pioneered the drug culture whose effects are still with us.
- How the CIA agent selected to monitor the experiments eventually died at the hands of a physician steeped in the methods perfected by the CIA.
- How the CIA experiments are still carried on in secret establishments in Israel and China.
- Uncovers CIA terminal experiments on Vietcong prisoners in Vietnam.
- Publishes the CIA Manual Of Assassination—a shocking document describing how to commit state-approved murder.

This is a shattering account of how the dark side of science collaborated with sheer lunacy to create a chilling tour-de-force of terror. Based upon impeccable research, it shows how our elected governments lied to the people for over fifty years, and continues to obscure the truth. It is a story of murder, inhuman experiments, and torture.

It is also the story of a brave man, William Buckley, the longest-serving agent in the CIA until his own terrible death at the hands of a doctor trained in the techniques the CIA pioneered. Buckley was a close personal friend of the author.

All this and more is supported by a wealth of never-before-published evidence and personal interviews with those doctors involved in the work that mocks their oath to do no harm to their patients. An incredible document of Truth!

Egyptian pharaoh Amenhotep IV, better known as Akhenaten, the believer in the one true God; and that was because he was raised by Israelites, by Hebrews. When he got deposed and was sent out in exile out of Egypt, he took his family, his step-family, with him, and that was the Hebrew people, and he led them out of Egypt. But, that's another whole argument.

Regardless of who Moses was, when they left Egypt, we all know from the biblical account that they traveled for forty years, and conquered nation after nation, people after people. Well, every time they conquered these people, they took all their belongings as loot. I mean, that was just what you did back then. It wasn't just the Hebrews doing that; everybody did that. When you won, that was your payoff; you got to take whatever you wanted from the defeated.

So, by the time they got to the "promised land", I'm sure they had a huge entourage of gold, silver, gems, knowledge, texts, scrolls, all kinds of stuff that they had accumulated. And it was getting a bit much, hauling all that through the desert. That's when Solomon built his great temple, there on the mount, in what was to become Jerusalem, both as a big temple to God, but also as a storehouse for this huge, vast treasure that they had accumulated. It stayed there for years and years and years.

Now, when the Romans came and took over the Palestine area, it was not the usual conquest. They didn't just run in and slaughter everybody, in which case they would have taken everything. It was more of a political deal, more of a treaty type of thing. It was like: "If you'll allow us to come in and administer this region, you can keep your religion, you can keep your daily practices."

The Jews said: "Ok." That's the way it worked. Except the Romans proved to be pretty able policeman, and the Jews got tired of that police state. So, in 66 A.D., they had the Jewish Revolt. Of course, the Romans sent more troops, and handily put that down. By that time, it WAS a conquest, and they went into Solomon's Temple and looted it. The Jews, of course, knew. They had advance warning, and they knew this was going to happen.

So, they had already gone in there and they had taken as much of that treasure as they could, and they had buried it down in the catacombs under the Temple, and particularly under what later became the stable area of Herod's palace, because at that time it was not the Temple of Solomon; it had become Herod's palace, the King of Palestine.

But the Romans went in there, and they looted it, and they may have gotten as much as half the treasure, and they hauled it off to Rome.

Well, 400 years later, Alorek the Goth sacks Rome, and of course, he takes his booty, which means they go in there and they got hold of half of Solomon's treasure, and they carted it back to their home stomping grounds, the Languedoc Region of Southern France, in the area of Rennes-le-Chateau.

That was a heavy Cathar area, and that was the basis of their knowledge and belief, because they had their treasure hidden over there that was not only gold and silver and precious stones, but was also knowledge, in the form of scrolls and texts and things like that.

So, they knew that the Roman Church's dogma was flawed, and openly said so. And they practiced their own belief, and their own form of gnosticism, which of course was an affront to the Roman Church, and eventually led to the Albigensian Crusade, which is where the Pope created a huge army and they moved to the Languedoc Region, and they slaughtered everybody who they suspected of being of the Cathar belief.

That was where the famous line came from [quoting from Jim's Rule By Secrecy book]: "It was at Beziers that Arnald-Amalric, when asked how his troops should distinguish between Catholic and heretic, replied: 'Kill them all; God will know his own.'"

Martin: So that's an actual historical reference?

Marrs: Yes, that was an actual order. And, of course, that's been used in every war.

I heard that in Vietnam. "How do we tell the Vietcong from the Native population?" And the word was: "Kill them all and let God sort them out."

So, that's where that came from. But they never did find the treasure. The last of the Cathars held out at a mountain fortress, and they actually all just died. They died happily, because they were in the absolute certain knowledge that they KNEW what the truth was.

In fact, there are an ample amount of stories that some of the soldiers, and some of the people who were on the Vatican side, converted and realized that they [the Cathars] really had the truth. So they actually deserted and joined the Cathars, knowing that they were going to their certain death. But that was ok, because they had truth on their side.

The treasure was never found, and it lay hidden. But the knowledge of this whole story was passed along through the Cathar families, which evolved, and included some of the wealthy French aristocratic families, like the Blanchfords and the St. Claires. These were the very people who fomented the first Crusade.

Consider the idea that every war has to have a public reason, rationale, and then a private rationale. Just like 9/11, the public rationale was to go after Osama bin Laden, although we still haven't got him; but the hidden rationale was to go and secure the oil pipeline, and restore the poppy fields in Afghanistan.

Martin: The heroin production has really increased.

Marrs: Yeah, it's going to be a bumper crop this year.

The hidden agenda, back then, was to retake Jerusalem so they could get their hands on the rest of Solomon's treasure. And, sure enough, in 1099, Jerusalem was taken; they created King Baldwin, and put him on the throne as the King of Jerusalem.

These same families, who had instigated the crusades, sent another contingent of knights over there who approached King Baldwin and were named "Knights of the Temple". They said they were going to guard the roads to the Holy Land. But they never did. They also asked to be headquartered in temples, and in Herod's palace, which, of course, was the old Temple of Solomon.

They were granted this, and for 9 years they excavated under the Temple of Solomon. They finally acquired the rest of the treasure, and they took it back to Southern France, the Languedoc Region, and after all those centuries, this tremendous wealth of Solomon was reunited in the area of Rennes-le-Chateau.

THAT is the mystery, and the secret, of Rennes-le-Chateau!

THE DULCE WARS: UNDERGROUND ALIEN BASES AND THE BATTLE FOR PLANET EARTH

Is an alien "Fifth Column" already active on Earth preparing total conquest via implantations and mind control? In the corner of a small town in America's Southwest something very strange is going on. Did U.S. military forces perish recently in hand-to-hand combat with a group of hostile "Greys" who subsequently seized control of one of our top-secret underground bases? Includes latest on animal mutilations, energy grids, secret societies, lost civilizations, abductions, and missing time.

In the late 1800s, they kept all this quiet. They kept it right amongst themselves. It was in the late 1800s, 1898 or so, when Father Saunier discovered some of the Blanchford documents referring to this treasure. That's why he suddenly became wealthy, because everybody in Europe, including the Hapsburgs, were after him because they wanted to find out where this treasure was.

[Some things never change. Remember CIA agent Gunther Russbacher, of the Hapsburg family line? In the early 1990s, he was also working on "recovering" some of that gold.

— R.M.]

Apparently, they realized it was all there, and they began to put two-plus-two together, but they were not ever able to actually find the treasure. But then, in the 1920s, a German researcher, a young guy, Otto Rahn, goes to the Languedoc Region and starts doing his research, starts writing about the Cathars, and he pretty well figures out where the treasure is. Before long, he's put in touch with Heinrich Himmler of the Nazi SS. And the next thing you know, Otto Rahn is an SS officer.

Martin: [Laughter]

Marrs: He wrote several books on the Cathars. He was like one of these soldiers who converted. He began to see that the Cathars had a more direct and truthful line on spiritual history and the story of Jesus than the Roman Church or anybody else. So, the next thing you know, he disappears. [Laughter] The SS put out the word that he had died in a "hiking accident" or something.

Martin: [Laughter]

Marrs: But his work was still there. They had others of a special SS unit who were working on this. This was the same unit that went after the Ark of the Covenant, and went to Tibet looking for Shambala. They were heavy into all of that, as you well know.

Martin: You've got to admit, they really were plugged-in.

Marrs: That's because they knew what the REALITY was; they knew what was REALLY going on. They weren't operating off of little fairy tales and mythologies; they weren't people who have grown-up so indoctrinated by establishment, limited history that they said: "Oh, all that's just hogwash; there's nothing to it." They KNEW there was, and they were out looking for all this stuff.

Like I said, in March 1944 Hitler's Chief Commando, Otto Skorzeni—the guy who had rescued Mussolini off the mountain-top in September 1943—they sent him to the Languedoc Region with a battalion of SS. On March 16, 1944, he sends a one-word telegram back to Berlin that said: "Eureka!" Which, of course, means: "I found it!"

And then there are stories that there were mule trains coming out of the mountains, and special convoys hauling all this stuff. They hauled it back to Berghtesgaden. After that, we've lost it, other than the fact that there were those U-boats that surfaced right after the end of the war that had been stripped of all non-essential equipment, and apparently had been used to convoy a huge amount of material. Nobody knows what all it was. This was in South America.

This, of course, gives rise to the legend of Agartha, the "secret" Nazi base in Antarctica. Rumors have floated around for years, and I stress they are rumors. I've tracked that, and tracked that, and tried to find any bit of reality that I can, and it's very sketchy.

But we do know, beyond any shadow of a doubt, that they set-up huge estates in South America, Argentina, Paraguay, and places like that, and they continued to operate from South America. And they were using all of this tremendous wealth.

Again, the bottom-line is: we defeated the Germans but the

THE PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT & OTHER UFO CONSPIRACIES

BY BRAD STEIGER

In 1943 the Navy accomplished the teleportation of a warship from Philadelphia to Norfolk by successfully applying Einstein's Unified Field Theory. The experiment also caused the crew and officers of the ship to become invisible, during which time they were launched into a time-space warp. One survivor tells his amazing experience.

THE CONTROLLERS: THE HIDDEN RULERS OF EARTH IDENTIFIED

BY COMMANDER X

Humankind continues to wage all-out battle with those who have kept us as their slaves since seemingly the beginning of time. They are: • The Illuminati • The Greys • The Counterfeit Race.

They have, says the author (who is of military intelligence) kept us in human bondage by: • Controlling our minds • Planting imperfect thoughts in our heads • Kidnapping humans • Impregnating women • Causing global warfare and ethnic hatred • Creating a false economic system, and • Assassinating and "replacing" our most trusted spiritual leaders, rulers, and elected officials.

William Cooper: Death Of A Conspiracy Salesman

On November 5, 2001, William Cooper was shot to death by sheriff's deputies in a gunfire exchange. Who was Bill Cooper? Was he a true patriot? A tough survivalist? Or simply a fanatic?

Some knew him as a UFO "expert" (claimed insider information on government knowledge of extraterrestrials living among us)...a conspiracy theorist...a former Navy Intelligence operative...and the person the President once called "the most dangerous man on American airwaves". Cooper always said he acted from his "conscience" and sought to warn all Americans of the dangers of the New World Order, creeping socialism, and our own brand of Nazism. Here is the inside story, as told by a fellow patriot and government whistle-blower. Commander X has collected together for the first time Cooper's thoughts and finds on such subjects as: The Illuminati • The Kennedy Assassination • MJ-12 and the UFO Cover-Up • Area 51 • The AntiChrist • The World Trade Center Disaster • Gun Control • Skull and Bones Society.

Nazis got hold of not only Solomon's treasure, the greatest treasure in the world, but also they got hold of the wealth and the loot of Europe, at the end of World War II. And with that just unimaginable wealth, they were able to begin moving-up their Fourth Reich. We're moving into it, right now.

Martin: I don't know if I'll include this, but in a private conversation I had with a friend a year ago, he said something like: "The Nazis didn't lose the war; they just had to move."

Marrs: That's right! That's a good quote. I'd vouch for that; that's what I'm saying. They didn't lose the war; they just had to move. That is exactly what's going on.

Martin: Concerning our current war effort in Iraq, how much of that has to do with destroying Sumerian records?

Marrs: That's, again, something I've got in my new book. There were a few small news-releases, news-items that were put out over the last couple of years. Apparently, in 1997 they made some very astonishing archeological discoveries in Iraq, having to do with the Sumerians, and they found a wealth of new information, new tablets, also some ancient toys and weapons. I'd like to know what kind of weapons we're talking about. Are we talking about a spear, or are we talking about something else?

But, anyway, yes. I think that could very well be another reason why the New World Order wants to get into Iraq, because they want to gain control over these new discoveries that were made over there. I think that definitely may have something to do with it.

Martin: One other question, then we'll wrap it up. As you travel around on your speaking engagements, what are some of the main concerns that you hear the average person voicing? Are there any common themes emerging?

Marrs: The only common concern I've heard a lot about is about Niburu or Planet X. Everyone wants to know: "Is this real?" and "Is this really going to happen?" Frankly, I can't give you a truthful, absolute answer. It would be nice to be like some of these people on the Internet and just say: "Oh yes, it's coming. It will be here in May 2003; better dig a hole, stockpile your food and your weapons."

I've talked to an equal number of people—in particular, people who are connected in the scientific world, and of course they can be bamboozled too, but they say: "No, no, no, that's not going to happen."

Martin: Yesterday I heard on the Internet a one-minute clip from Sitchen, saying—this was on the "official" Planet-X website—"Planet X will NOT return in 2003." And that was directly from Sitchen.

Marrs: I'm a little devious myself, although frankly it's almost beyond question. There was a little blurb in U.S. News & World Report back in the early part of the summer, just one little paragraph; it was under the subhead of Science. I think it said something about an asteroid or something, and it said: "The bad news is, something big is heading our way."

So, the good news is that scientists say it won't reach the vicinity of Earth for another 877 years. And this will give them plenty of time to figure out how to knock it off its course or destroy it.

Now "just between you and me"—we're just talking here. Ok?

Martin: Sure.

Marrs: I think this is dis-information. And as with any good dis-information—I don't know why I'm saying this is "off the record" since I'm telling this to everybody; I guess, if you want to use this, you can—like any good dis-information, most of it is true. [Laughter] You know, with a SPIN. I think the truthful part is that something BIG is heading this way. The spin is that it's not going to get here for 877 years.

And yet, I can see how they did this. They went to some scientists and said: "If this thing is this big, and it's moving on this course, and it's moving at this speed, how long will it take to reach Earth?" And they do their computations and say: "Oh, it will take 877 years." So, there's your spin.

But they're not taking into consideration—and what I'm hearing on the Internet, which makes a lot of sense to me, although I don't claim to be a great scientist—is that as this thing moves into the solar system, celestial mechanics will take hold, and gravitational pulls will accelerate its movement, which means it could speed-up its arrival.

Martin: That's very logical.

Marrs: It makes a lot of sense to me. I really think there is something out there. I really think it's heading this way. I am not convinced it's going to be here next year—although hey, we're only talking a few more months, six months say. In fact, actually, we're only talking a couple of months, because if that thing is that big, and if it is going to get that close next year, it should be pretty obvious to even amateur astronomers by the end of January or February. We ought to know, pretty quick, whether or not there's something there.

So, I'm not going to start running around, buying-up canned food [laughter], until I know there's something there.

Martin: I understand.

Marrs: Also, you've got to understand, I tend to put, personally, some relevance in the 2012 date—from the Mayan calendar, the Aztec calendar, the Hopi Indians, and a whole bunch of other Native Americans, who have been proven pretty much correct about a lot of things. They say the calendar ends in 2012. Maybe that's when it gets here. I don't know.

Martin: I know that, in the upcoming International UFO Congress/Convention in Laughlin, Nevada, there's almost an entire day devoted to Planet X, right-off the bat.

[Editor's note: The 12th Annual International UFO Congress, Convention & Film Festival is being held at the Flamingo Resort in Laughlin, Nevada, February 2-8, 2003, with 26 outstanding speakers, some not often heard these days. See the Back Cover of last month's SPECTRUM for all the details. And be sure to look for Rick and Gail at The SPECTRUM booth if you're attending the event.]

Marrs: Right, exactly. I'll be interested to see what kind of solid evidence we get on that.

Martin: If any.

Marrs: If any. It does seem there's a lot of speculation.

Martin: A lot of opinion.

EVIL AGENDA OF THE SECRET GOVERNMENT

Project Paperclip was the secret plan that took Nazi scientists and psychiatrists out of Germany and into the upper echelons of the U.S. governmental, scientific, and academic realms.

Marrs: A lot of opinion, and very little REAL information.

Martin: My opinion on it is, yes, I believe in Niburu. Yes, I believe in the Anunnaki and the whole bit. But one thing that the fear-mongers don't factor in is, again, the God-factor, and the fact that there is a God, and He does have His Hosts, and they are "out there", too.

Marrs: That's right. I think what we're seeing here—a lot of this sudden "hurry-up" of the New World Order Agenda, and a lot of this taking-off of the gloves—I mean, they're becoming pretty obvious in what they're trying to do now, such as by appointing Henry Kissinger, for God's sake! How much more of a sign do you want? I think they're panicking a little bit, and feeling that they better hurry up and get this thing done.

And so, we're kind-of in a foot race here, to see whether or not they can instill their New World Order, their Orwellian Nazi Dictatorship, or whether we finally wise-up.

Because, here's the Big Secret that I pointed out in Rule By Secrecy—that we have and they don't: THERE ARE MANY MORE OF US THAN THERE ARE OF THEM! If enough of us simply become aware of what's going on, then their agenda comes to a screeching halt.

In fact, it's just like in quantum physics. What they're finding out is that, when you get to the sub-molecular level and you're studying things there, the objects you're studying change, just through the sheer act of observation. When we begin to interact with this—and of course, what we're getting to here is the underlying composition of the universe—everything is energy; even matter is nothing more than solidified energy. And it's all connected together. It's all part of what Einstein called the Unified Field or, I don't know, in Star Wars they called it "The Force".

Martin: Or, the holographic universe.

Marrs: It's all a part of that. Just by the sheer "knowingness"—if we can get enough people to simply understand what's really going on, IT WILL CHANGE! I'm not talking about taking to the streets. I'm not talking about marching and demonstrating, or anything like that. I'm just saying that, if enough people come to appreciate what's really going on, it will change.

In fact, it's changing right now, as we talked about earlier. There's a rift within the New World Order gang. They don't know whether it's a good idea to go attack Iraq or not. I mean, what happens if we attack Iraq and Saddam Hussein feels like his days are numbered, so he turns around and attacks Israel? What are the other Arab nations going to do? Are they going to sit idly by, while their heroic Arab brother fights Israel alone? No, they're going to jump in, too. It's a powder keg over there. The best thing we can do is try to stop any fighting over there. But you don't get that from George Bush.

Martin: What ray of sunshine or measure of hope can you give our readers, and/or words of constructive action can you suggest?

Marrs: The ray of sunshine is that these World Controllers, in the United States at least, are still giving lip-service to the Constitution and Bill Of Rights, and the system of "checks and balances" that we have. So, let's use that against them. Let's vote them all out.

What happens is—in Congress, everybody kind-of agrees that we need to vote everybody in Congress out—except their guy; their guy's ok, because he's bringing in the pork, and we've got businesses; we've got jobs here, etc.

So we need to get a Bigger Picture. We need to understand that THEY ALL NEED TO GO! Even our guy. And start all over again.

So, the mechanism for change, for non-violent change, is there; it's right there; it's codified. It's, supposedly, the system that we operate under.

The problem is: the problems we have today are not there because of our system. They're there because we are NOT sticking to our system. We are NOT adhering to the Constitution.

First, the whole thing with Iraq would be settled if we would simply stick with the Constitution. The Constitution says only Congress has the power to declare a war, ok? Now, that would take George Bush out of the equation. Can we convince a majority of the members of Congress, a 2/3 vote, that we need to go fight in Iraq?

Well, if 2/3 say "yes, we should", then maybe we should. But, I doubt you would get that. When, instead, what we have are a bunch of weak-kneed sisters who decided that, since George Bush wants to go attack Iraq, they'll pass a resolution saying: "Well, we kind-of support the President."

And what it does, it's a very, very deceitful political ploy. This way, if we go into Iraq and we win, then they're heroes and they get re-elected. But, if we go into Iraq and get caught in a quagmire, and it blows-up in our face, they can blame it all on George Bush and they can still get re-elected.

WE NEED STATESMEN IN WASHINGTON, NOT POLITICIANS!

So, we DO have a system that tells us, and shows us, and guarantees us: "Here is how you correct the system." And we should use it!

Martin: That's a good place to end. Thank you very much for speaking with our readers; I really appreciate it. △

The View From Marrs

THE WAR ON TERRORISM: Fact Or Fiction?

Editor's note: The following provocative challenge was written shortly after the 9/11 tragedy by our gifted front-page interviewee, Jim Marrs. It provides important background for Jim's lively interview with Rick Martin, and is the base from which he has launched his latest full-scale eye-opening book project, tentatively to be called The War On Freedom.

Longtime SPECTRUM readers will notice that some of Jim's points below parallel those we have brought to your attention, starting in our October 2001 special issue on 9/11. However, Jim brings the seasoned eye of a professional investigative journalist to the table in asking common-sense questions about "the things that don't add up" which helps to gently but firmly bring into view a picture that, while disgusting for decent people to entertain, is The Truth from which all concerned Americans can launch corrective actions—while there's still time!

"Hate cannot drive out hate; only love can do that."

— Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

"Those who do not learn from history are doomed to repeat it."

— George Santayana, philosopher

"We are not afraid to entrust the American people with unpleasant facts, foreign ideas, alien philosophies, and competitive values. For a nation that is afraid to let its people judge the truth and falsehood in an open market is a nation that is afraid of its people."

— John F. Kennedy

Americans are now beginning to pay the price for sleeping through history classes, ignoring important information in the alternative media, and neglecting to participate in their own political process.

They find themselves in a new war—the War on Terrorism. This is a war they never asked for and never envisioned, anesthetized as we all are by the flickering tube of distraction. It is a war predicated on the premise that a sneak attack was made on the United States on September 11, 2001.

Unlike previous wars, there is no Berlin or Tokyo to capture—and hence, no victory to be won, except for those who profit from war. The real victims of this war will be the average American citizen, right along with the starving Afghan.

This new war might well be compared to the failed War on Drugs and the nearly forgotten War on Poverty. No clear victory has yet been achieved over the misuse of drugs or the ravages of poverty within our own nation. Our prisons are overflowing with drug offenders, with no appreciable lessening of either demand or supply, and our basic civil rights have been badly mauled.

Just like those failed campaigns, the War on Terrorism, for the foreseeable future, will set us all on a costly course of restrictions on individual freedom, ever more centralized authority, and omnipresent fear.

And where are the voices of those who would argue the merits of this new war? The airwaves and newspapers only ratchet the fear factor upwards each day with little or no effort to hear the many thoughtful Americans who are asking themselves: "Do I really need to give up my freedoms in order to save them?"

So with flags flying on the antennae of our gas-guzzling vehicles, and love of country pulsing in our hearts, we march off to yet another war for oil.

Wars For Oil

Yes, oil. Petroleum has been behind all recent wars, beginning in the early 1940s, when a mostly rural and isolationist America was suddenly thrown into a world war as a reaction to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Americans mourned the loss of some 3,000 soldiers and civilians in Hawaii and, in righteous indignation, allowed their country to be turned into a giant military camp.

The federal government, which had consolidated so much power unto itself under the Depression-busting policies of President Franklin Roosevelt, grew even stronger and more centralized under the aegis of "national security". It all seemed quite natural and necessary at the time.

But serious students of history now know that even that "good war" was the result of machinations by a handful of wealthy and powerful men. By closing off Japan's oil supplies in the summer of 1941, Roosevelt, the quintessential Wall Street insider, ensured an eventual attack on the United States. It has now been well established that Roosevelt and a few close advisers knew full well that Pearl Harbor would be attacked on December 7, 1941, but chose to allow it to happen to further their agenda for launching American into war. (The details of this may be found in my book Rule By Secrecy.)

The Vietnam War was prosecuted by men who were close to Roosevelt and the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) who had long voiced a desire to gain control over Indochina's oil, magnesium, and rubber assets. Again a provocation was created. In August 1964, President Lyndon Johnson whipped Congress into a frenzy claiming that North Vietnamese gunboats had attacked the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Gulf of Tonkin off the coast of Vietnam.

"Our boys are floating in the water" he cried. Congress responded by passing the Gulf Of Tonkin Resolution, which bypassed the Constitution and gave Johnson the power to wage war to stop attacks on Americans. It was the beginning of the real shooting Vietnam War.

And it was all a lie. No evidence has ever been brought forward that such an attack took place. In fact, editors for U.S. News & World Report (July 23, 1984) called it "The 'Phantom Battle' That Led to War".

While America was waging war against North Vietnam, which we were told was merely a puppet of communist Russia and China, Johnson was encouraged by his CFR advisers to grant the Soviet Union loans at higher levels than offered during World War II when they were our ally. U.S.-backed loans provided Russia with the means to build facilities which turned out war materials that were then sent to North Vietnam for use against American troops. This was a good example of the duplicity of our modern wars.

The Gulf War was all about oil—from the wells in Kuwait slant-drilling into Iraq's southern reserves, to the destruction of the oil fields at its finish. Here we found a new Hitler in Saddam Hussein, an enemy armed and financed by the CIA, an agency whose top officials have long been connected to oil-men CFR members and other globalists. (See my book Rule By Secrecy).

Saddam Hussein, strapped for cash due to his eight-year war against Iran on behalf of the U.S., decided to regain Kuwait as a means of increasing his income. Kuwait had been carved out of southern Iraq by British troops. When asked her thoughts on this move, U.S. Ambassador April Glaspie replied that the U.S. government had "no opinion" on the matter and that the matter of Kuwait was not associated with America. But when he moved his troops into Kuwait, Bush mobilized a United Nations force against him, backed by a $4 billion secret fund provided by his business associates in Saudi Arabia.

Yet, as those patriotic soldiers closed in on Saddam, the whole war stopped, and George H. W. Bush's old business partner is still in power. It appears to have been yet another provocation. And as in Vietnam, even as we prepared to fight against Saddam, the American taxpayers backed $500 million in loans that he used to purchase arms for use against our forces.

Caspian Sea Oil Coveted

Today the real issue is the rich oil reserves of the Caspian Sea region, the prize sought by Hitler whose drive to that area was stopped only by the tenacious Russian defense of the Volga River city of Stalingrad.

In the late 1970s, with the Soviet discovery of vast untapped oil in Chechnya, the region was ripe for exploitation. But control over Afghanistan was needed to ensure the safety of a pipeline to bring the oil to world markets. But after almost 10 years of brutal, no-quarter fighting against Afghans and Arab mercenaries backed by the United States, including Osama bin Laden, the Soviets were forced to withdraw. The economic stress of this Russo-Afghan War was enough to topple communism in the early 1990s.

Now the international bankers and oilmen have a foothold in cash-strapped Russia and the estimated $40 billion in Caspian Sea oil is again attracting serious attention. In 1997, six international companies and the Government of Turkmenistan formed Central Asian Gas Pipeline, Ltd. (CentGas) to build a 790-mile-long pipeline to Pakistan and perhaps on to the New Delhi area of India.

Leading this consortium was Unocal Corporation, whose president, John F. Imle Jr., said the project would be "the foundation for a new commerce corridor for the region—often referred to as the Silk Road for the 21st Century".

But problems developed with the fundamentalist Muslim government in Afghanistan, not the least of which was the Taliban government's treatment of women, which prompted feminist demonstrations against firms seeking to do business there. Additionally, the Taliban regime was creating chaotic conditions by pitting the various Islamic sects against each other in order to maintain control. In mid 1999, Unocal withdrew from the pipeline consortium, citing the hazardous political situation and the project languished.

Notice that in President Bush's declaration of war on terrorism, he never mentioned terrorists in Northern Ireland or the Palestinian suicide bombers. Attention was only focused on Afghanistan, the one nation necessary to complete the lucrative pipeline. It should also be noted that Vice President Dick Cheney headed Halliburton, a giant oil industry service company and is generally thought to be more powerful than the president.

Today it can be demonstrated that military action against Afghanistan has been in the works long before the September 11 attacks.

Afghan Action Planned Long Ago

As reported by BBC's George Arney, former Pakistani Foreign Secretary Niaz Naik was alerted by American officials in mid-July that military action against Afghanistan would be launched by mid-October. At a UN-sponsored meeting in Berlin concerning Afghanistan, Naik was informed that, unless bin Laden was handed over, America would take military action to either kill or capture both him and Taliban leader Mullah Omar as the initial step in installing a new government there.

It should be noted, however, that American intervention in Afghanistan began years ago, at least six months prior to the Soviet invasion in December of 1979.

In a 1998 interview with former National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski in the French publication Le Nouvel Observateur, the significant portions of which never made it to the United States, he admitted that American activities in Afghanistan actually began six months prior to the Soviet action.

ALIEN ABDUCTIONS, ELF WAVES, MENTAL MANIPULATION—ALL EQUALS BEHAVIOR MODIFICATION! There is a secret plot by the New World Order to control the Earth's population for a sinister agenda. Many UFO abductees maintain they have become part of a brainwashing program by "aliens"—but is a "secret society" really behind all that is happening?

Brzezinski said the Jimmy Carter Administration began secretly funding opponents of the pro-Soviet regime in Kabul in July of 1979 with the full knowledge such action might provoke a Soviet invasion. Soviet leaders at the time argued the invasion was necessary to thwart American aggression in Afghanistan. The former national security advisor, who helped found the globalist Trilateral Commission, expressed no regret at this provocation, stating: "That secret operation was an excellent idea. It...brought about the demoralization and finally the breakup of the Soviet empire." It also produced the Taliban regime which we are fighting today, as well as Osama bin Laden.

By 1984, with Vice President George H. W. Bush overseeing the Afghan situation, bin Laden was in charge of the Maktab al-Khidamir (MAK) which funneled money, arms, and manpower from the outside world into the war against the Soviets. He soon helped form a polyglot formation of Arabic troops from Egypt, Pakistan, Lebanon, Syria, and Palestinian refugee camps, whom the CIA found easier to deal with than the Muslim fundamentalists in Afghanistan.

There should be considerable soul-searching about America's role in arming and training an international group of Muslim extremists in Afghanistan long after their comrades destroyed the Marine barracks in Beirut and hijacked numerous airliners.

Little noticed in the aftermath of the September 11 attacks were reports that China had signed a pact with the Afghans and was quietly inducted into the controversial World Trade Organization, action which under normal circumstances would have drawn widespread protest.

Although such a pact is unconfirmed at this time, Pakistani General Pervez Musharraf, chairman of their joint chiefs and chief of the Pakistani Army Staff, this year visited China at their request and discussed matters of mutual interest.

Although, it is claimed that Pakistan is aiding the U.S. in the current War Against Terrorism, the State Department's coordinator for counterterrorism, Michael Sheehan, told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that Pakistan supports and trains terrorist groups in Afghanistan.

This raises the specter of Chinese intervention should U.S. forces become bogged down in mountainous Afghanistan. This prospect is particularly unsettling, as back in 1555 the French prophet Nostradamus, who has been proven correct in so many of his prophecies, predicted that America and Russia would go to war against a coalition made up of Arab nations and China. Until just recently, such a notion seemed absurd.

Would Americans Attack Americans?

The WTC/Pentagon attacks provided a convenient excuse to launch the pre-laid plans for military action against Afghanistan. But were they simply allowed to happen or were they contrived?

The question becomes: Would any American allow an attack on fellow Americans just to further his own business or political agenda?

The answer, unfortunately, appears to be "yes".

Incredibly, 40-year-old government documents, thought to have been destroyed long ago, recently were made public and show that the U.S. military in the early 1960s proposed making terrorist attacks in the United States and blaming them on Fidel Castro.

These documents are discussed in a recent book on the National Security Agency (NSA) entitled Body Of Secrets: Anatomy Of The Ultra-Secret National Security Agency by James Bamford.

These documents were produced beginning in late 1961 following the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba that spring. President John F. Kennedy, angered by the inept actions of the CIA, had shifted responsibility for Cuba from that agency to the Department of Defense. Here, military strategists considered plans to create terrorist actions which would alarm the American population and stampede them into supporting a military attack on Cuba.

Under consideration in "Operation Northwoods" were plans:

- to create "a series of well-coordinated incidents" in or around the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, to include inciting riots, blowing up ammunition stores, aircraft, and ships;
- to "develop a communist Cuba terror campaign in the Miami area, in other Florida cities, and even in Washington";
- to "sink a boatload of Cubans en route to Florida (real or simulated)...foster attempts on the lives of Cuban refugees in the United States...";
- to explode bombs in carefully chosen locations along with the release of "prepared documents" pointing to Cuban complicity;
- to use fake Russian aircraft to harass civilian airliners;
- to make "hijacking attempts against civil air and surface craft" even to simulating the shooting down of a civilian airliner.

Kennedy rejected Operation Northwoods and senior military officers ordered the documents destroyed. But someone slipped up and the papers were discovered by the Assassination Records Review Board and recently released by the National Archives.

More recently, according to The New York Times (October 28, 1993), an informant named Emad Salem early in 1993 was involved with Middle Eastern terrorists connected to Osama bin Laden to develop a bomb for use against New York's World Trade Center. Salem, a former Egyptian Army officer, wanted to substitute a harmless powder for the explosive, but his plan to thwart the attack was blocked by an FBI official who apparently did not want to expose the inside informant. The attack was allowed to proceed.

The February 26 explosion in the WTC resulted in six deaths, more than 1,000 casualties, and damage in excess of half a billion dollars.

We now see that creating crises to further political goals is a methodology well understood and utilized in the 20th Century. Is this the game today?

Questions Over 9/11

Let's examine the September 11 attack. Superficially, it all seemed straightforward enough. According to the official story, about 19 suicidal Middle Eastern terrorists, their hearts full of hatred

The author was one of the original witnesses at the meeting between contactee George Adamski and Orthon from the planet Venus. Williamson claims he also had contacts with aliens and received transmissions over his radio from friendly extraterrestrials. Others have claimed the same. Senator Barry Goldwater reportedly heard mysterious signals on his ham radio and our own astronauts have reportedly picked up messages not transmitted from Earth.

Other Voices is essentially a reprint of The Saucers Speak, by George Hunt Williamson and Alfred Bailey, originally published in the 1950s. Much of what the authors report has come to pass. Warnings of aliens about nuclear war and environmental doom remain urgent.

for American freedom and democracy, hijacked four airliners, crashing two into the twin towers of New York City's World Trade Center, and a third into the Pentagon. The fourth reportedly crashed in Western Pennsylvania after passengers attempted to fight the terrorists.

But a series of disturbing questions have arisen. Among them:

- Why was the U.S. military preparing war plans against Afghanistan months before the September 11 attacks? Were they just looking for some incident to propel the normally disinterested American public into a war, as in the past?

- How could paper documents incriminating bin Laden be found intact at the WTC, but the plane's black recording boxes, designed to withstand crashes, be damaged beyond use?

- Even days and weeks after the WTC attack, why were news cameramen prevented from photographing the ruins from certain angles, as complained about by CBS correspondent Lou Young, who asked: "What are they afraid we're going to see?"

- Why has the NYPD liaison to the FBI been sent packing as a "security risk" as reported in the October 16 New York Times? Whose security is at risk? The FBI? What is it that the Bureau does not want the NYPD to know?

- Why was a FEMA disaster relief team dispatched to New York City, arriving the day before the attacks?

- How could an obviously sophisticated terrorist plan involving perhaps as many as 100 persons and in the works for five years escape the notice of our intelligence services, especially the FBI and CIA? And why, instead of cashiering those responsible for this intelligence failure and totally restructuring these agencies, are we doubling their budgets? Will we now get twice as much failure as before?

- Why did the South Tower collapse first when it was not as extensively damaged as the North Tower, which burned for almost an hour and a half before collapsing?

- Why did many witnesses claim to hear further explosions within the buildings, such as the head of WTC security, who stated that he had to dig out survivors on the 27th floor before the building collapsed? And why did the destruction of the WTC towers appear more like a controlled implosion than a tragic accident?

- Why did FBI Director Robert Mueller acknowledge that the list of named hijackers might not contain their real names? Doesn't everyone have to show a photo ID to claim a boarding pass? Where was the normal security?

- Why did one of the named hijackers reportedly leave behind in his parked car a suitcase containing incriminating documents? Why even take a suitcase on a suicide mission? And if the suitcase was camouflage to present the appearance of a normal tourist, why did he leave it behind?

- Why was there a discrepancy of 35 names between the published passenger lists and the official death toll on all four of the ill-fated flights? Internet columnist Gary North reported: "The published names in no instance match the total listed for the number of people on board." Why the discrepancy?

- As none of these listed passengers had Arabic-sounding names, how did the government know which were the hijackers?

- Why did the seat numbers of the hijackers given by a cell-phone call from flight attendant Madeline Amy Sweeney to Boston air traffic control not match the seats occupied by the men the FBI claimed were responsible?

- Since Saudi Arabia's foreign minister claimed five of the proclaimed hijackers were not aboard the death planes and in fact are still alive, and a sixth man on that list was reported to be alive and well in Tunisia, why are these names still on the FBI list?

- Why were none of the named hijacker's names on any of the passenger lists? If they all used aliases, how did the FBI identify them so quickly?

- Why did one of the named hijackers take luggage on a suicide flight, then leave it, along with an incriminating note, in his car at the airport?

- As for the overall investigation into the September attacks, by late October U.S. authorities conceded that most of their promising leads for finding accomplices, and some of their long-held suspicions about several suspects, have unraveled, according to the New York Times. Since more than 800 people have been arrested and more than 365,000 tips have been received from the public, why has nothing substantial been forthcoming in the largest U.S. criminal investigation in history?

- Why are none of the nearly 100 people still being sought by the Federal Bureau of Investigation seen as a major suspect?

- Why are we bombing Afghanistan when apparently none of the listed hijackers were Afghans, but instead Arabs from various Middle Eastern nations? Since Iraq was implicated in the 1993 WTC attack, why are we not bombing that "rogue" nation? Better yet, since Attorney General John Ashcroft announced that the "masterminds" of the attacks were operating out of Hamburg, Germany, why not bomb Germany?

- Why does the heavy drinking and searching for hookers by some of the hijackers in Boston, as reported by Reuters New Service, sound more like mercenaries carousing before a mission than pious religious fundamentalists about to meet their maker?

- How did the terrorists obtain top-secret White House and Air Force One codes and signals, the excuse for hustling President Bush all across the country on September 11? Was this evidence of an inside job? Or was it, as reported by Fox News, evidence that former FBI employee and double-agent Robert Hanssen delivered an updated version of the purloined computer software Promis to his Russian handlers who passed it along to bin Laden? Does this software, which was stolen from a U.S. company during the Reagan Administration by Justice Department officials under Attorney General Ed Meese, allow outsiders carte blanche entrée to our top security computers? (Hanssen's last job before being arrested as a spy was to upgrade the FBI's intelligence computer systems.)

- If United Flight 93 crashed as the result of a struggle between heroic passengers and the hijackers, why did witnesses tell of a second plane which followed it down, of falling burning debris, no deep crater, and crash wreckage spread over a six-mile area indicative of an aerial explosion?

- Why did news outlets describe the throat-cutting and mutilation of passengers on Flight 93 with box cutters when Time magazine on September 24 reported that one of the passengers called home on a cell-phone to report: "We have been hijacked. They are being kind?"

As Internet pundit Gary North stated: "We need a theory of the coordinated hijackings that rests on a plausible cause-and-effect sequence that does not assume the complete failure of both check-in procedures and the on-board seating procedures on four separate flights on two separate airlines.... I don't see how anyone can make an accurate judgment about who was behind the attacks until he has a plausible explanation of how hijackers got onto the planes and were not removed."

But the federal government, aided by a sycophantic mass media, did not allow such rational thinking to interfere with a rush to judgment that Osama bin Laden was the culprit behind the attacks.

Bin Laden And His Friends

As in the JFK assassination, authorities had a suspect even before anyone knew for certain what had happened. He was the son of a wealthy Middle Eastern oil family, Osama bin Laden, who during the Russo-Afghan War of the 1980s, received arms and financing from the U.S. Government. Despite the fact that bin Laden has denied any knowledge of the attack, he was presumed guilty by both the government and the press. No other interpretation of the attack was allowed in the corporate mass media.

Bin Laden is a made-to-order enemy, the man reportedly behind the 1993 WTC attack and a fugitive from United States justice for more than a decade. It has been noted that the government apparently has spent more time and money chasing Microsoft's Bill Gates than in capturing bin Laden.

This may be due to the business connections between our new terrorist enemy and wealthy American companies.

According to several reports, including Jonathan Beaty and S. C. Gwynne's book The Outlaw Bank: A Wild Ride Into The Secret Heart Of The BCCI (New York: Random House, 1993) and American Free Press (October 15, 2001; the reincarnation of the Washington newspaper The Spotlight), Bush family friend James R. Bath used money from Osama bin Laden's brother, Salem, to open a partnership with George W. Bush in Arbusto Energy, a West Texas drilling company. Bush believed the word "arbusto" to mean Bush in Spanish, although it generally refers to a shrub.

According to The Houston Chronicle, Salem bin Laden named Bath his business representative in Texas shortly after the senior Bush was named CIA director by appointed President Gerald Ford in 1975. An Austin American-Statesman article detailed both the financial and social connections between the two families, stating: "Bin Ladens traveled in the same financial circles as Bush."

It was the Bush family, particularly Jeb and Neil, who were involved in the savings and loan debacle from 1989 to 1993 that cost taxpayers more than $500 billion.

Through a tangled web of Texas oilmen, wealthy Saudi sheiks, and unscrupulous bankers connected to BCCI, the younger Bush eventually gained a sizable interest in a new oil company called Harken Energy. Two months before Saddam Hussein sent Iraqi troops into Kuwait, Bush sold two-thirds of his Harken stock, netting himself nearly a one-million-dollar profit. The stock dropped when the Iraqi invasion began.

It should be noted that, during the Persian Gulf War, it was Bin Laden Brothers Construction (now the Bin Laden Group) that helped build airfields for U.S. aircraft. The bin Laden brothers were then described as "a good friend of the U.S. government".

Later the bin Laden firm continued to be hired to construct an American air base in Saudi Arabia—despite the fact that Osama had already been blamed for terrorist acts such as the truck bombing of the Khobar Towers at the Dhahran base which killed 19 Americans.

A WorldNetDaily writer commented: "So let's get this straight: Osama blows up our facilities, and his family gets the contract for rebuilding them. Do you get the feeling there is more going on than meets the eye?"

Osama's older brother, Salem, was killed in the strange crash of an ultralight aircraft in 1988. The single-passenger craft suddenly and inexplicably veered into high-voltage electric power lines near San Antonio, Texas. The BCCI bank was closed by federal investigators in 1991 after suffering some $10 billion in losses. BCCI was a Pakistani-run institution with front companies in the Cayman Islands who used secret accounts for global money-laundering and was used by U. S. intelligence to funnel money to bin Laden and the Mujahideen in Afghanistan fighting against the Soviet-backed government.

Another close connection between bin Laden and the Bush family is a $12-billion private international investment firm known as the Carlyle Group.

Although it has removed its website since the September 11 attacks, it is known that Carlyle directors include former Reagan Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci, former Bush Secretary of State James Baker, and former Reagan aide and GOP operative Richard Darman. The New York Times reported that former President Bush was allowed to buy into Carlyle's investments, which involve at least 164 companies around the world.

According to the Wall Street Journal (September 28, 2001): "George H. W. Bush, the father of President Bush, works for the bin Laden family business in Saudi Arabia through the Carlyle Group, an international consulting firm." It has been confirmed by the senior Bush's chief of staff that Bush sent a thank you note to the bin Laden family after a social visit in early 2001.

With such connections and his son as a sitting President of the United States, the senior Bush's Carlyle involvement was questioned by Larry Klayman, chairman and general counsel of Judicial Watch, who said: "Any foreign government or foreign investor trying to curry favor with the current Bush Administration is sure to throw business to the Carlyle Group. And with the former President Bush promoting the firm's investments abroad, foreign nationals could understandably confuse the Carlyle Group's interests with the interests of the United States government."

After detailing some of the Carlyle/bin Laden investments in several businesses, including aerospace industries, writer Michael C. Ruppert commented: "In other words, Osama bin Laden's attacks on the WTC and Pentagon, with the resulting massive increase in the U.S. defense budget, have just made his family a great big pile of money."

What makes these business dealings—that entangle former and current American political leaders with Middle Easterners—even more suspect was the announcement that several U.S. firms were being investigated for short-selling stocks just prior to the September 11 attacks.

Selling Stocks Short Indicates Foreknowledge

Short-selling of stocks involves the opportunity to gain large profits by passing shares to a friendly third party, then buying them back when the price falls. Historically, if this precedes a traumatic event, it is an indication of foreknowledge. It is widely known that the CIA uses the Promis software to routinely monitor stock trades as a possible warning sign of a terrorist attack or suspicious economic behavior.

A week after the September 11 attacks, the London Times reported that the CIA had asked regulators for the Financial Services Authority in London to investigate the suspicious sales of millions of shares of stock just prior to the terrorist acts. It was hoped the business paper trail might lead to the terrorists. The Times said market regulators in Germany, Japan, and the U.S. all had received information concerning the short-selling of insurance, airline, and arms company stocks, all of which fell sharply in the wake of the attacks.

City of London broker and analyst Richard Crossley noted that someone sold shares in unusually large quantities beginning three weeks before the assault on the WTC and Pentagon. He said he took this as evidence that someone had insider foreknowledge of the attacks.

"What is more awful than he should aim a stiletto blow at the heart of Western financial markets?" he added. "But to profit from it? Words fail me."

The U.S. Government also admitted it was investigating short-selling, which evinced a foreknowledge of the tragedy. There was unusually heavy trading in airline and insurance stocks several days before September 11 which essentially bet on a drop in the worth of the stocks.

It was reported by the Interdisciplinary Center, a counter-terrorism think tank involving former Israeli intelligence officers, that insiders made nearly $16 million profit by short-selling shares in American and United Airlines, the two airlines that suffered hijacking, and the investment firm of Morgan Stanley, which occupied 22 floors of the WTC.

Apparently none of the suspicious transactions could be traced to bin Laden because this news item quietly dropped from sight, leaving many people wondering if it tracked back to American firms or intelligence agencies.

This appears to be the case. According to web writer and former LA policeman Michael C. Ruppert, these transactions were handled primarily by Deutsche Bank/A. B. Brown, a firm which until 1998 was chaired by A. B. "Buzzy" Krongard, who today is executive director of the CIA.

Besides Krongard, other prominent Americans connected to both the CIA and Wall Street power include Clark Clifford (who was a key player in gaining legitimacy for the BCCI), John Foster and Allen Dulles (Allen oversaw the failed Bay of Pigs Invasion and sat on the Warren Commission), Bill Casey, David Doherty, George Herbert Walker Bush, John Deutch, Nora Slatkin, and Hank Greenburg.

As detailed in Rule By Secrecy, the CIA historically has been top-heavy with members of the Wall Street elite who desire to advance their globalist agenda. It also operates a number of front companies which themselves deal in stocks and bonds. "I am absolutely convinced that the Central Intelligence Agency had complete and perfect foreknowledge of the attacks, down to the date, time, place, and location" Ruppert told OnLine Journal on October 12.

There were other indications of foreknowledge. San Francisco Mayor Willie Brown stated that on September 10 he was warned by his personal "airport security" not to fly the next day, according to radio station KSFO.

More ominous was a piece in the September 28 edition of the Washington Post stating that officials with the instant messaging firm of Odigo in New York confirmed that two employees in Israel received text messages warning of an attack on the WTC two hours before the planes crashed into the buildings. The firm's vice president of sales and marketing, Alex Diamandis, said it was possible that the warning was sent to other Odigo members, but they had not received any reports of such.

Military forces had been on a heightened state of alert for several days before the attack, and several psychics claimed to have had a premonition that something was afoot.

Even the Russians got in on the act. Dr. Tatyana Koragina, a senior research fellow at the Institute of Macroeconomic Researches, which is a part of the Russian Ministry of Economic Development, gained credibility due to her July prediction that an unusual catastrophe would strike America in late August, ruining the economy.

In a Pravda interview, she stated: "The U.S. has been chosen as the object of financial attack because the financial center of the planet is located there. The effect will be maximal. The strike waves of economic crisis will spread over the planet."

Following the September 11 attacks, Dr. Koragina was reinterviewed and asserted the "powerful group" behind the attacks will make new strikes. "When [Americans] understand, after the upcoming new strikes, that their government can guarantee them nothing, they will panic—causing a collapse of their financial system."

Asked who was really behind this odious plan, she replied it is not the 19 terrorists identified by the FBI, but rather a larger group seeking to reshape the world. She said this group of extremely powerful private persons hold total assets of about $300 trillion and intend to legitimize their power under a new global government.

Some took Dr. Koragina's eerily correct predictions as evidence that Russia itself may be behind some of the current events. It is a fact that Russia has backed several state sponsors of terrorists—including Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, North Korea, and Cuba.

Perhaps the most shocking evidence of governmental foreknowledge came from the man who led the prosecution of President Bill Clinton during his impeachment.

Attorney David Schippers, chief counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, in a late October interview, stated he had been approached by FBI agents a month and a half prior to the September 11 attacks. The agents revealed that they had knowledge that lower Manhattan was to be the object of a terrorist attack using airplanes as flying bombs and they wanted to prevent this.

They were seeking legal advice because their FBI superiors had ordered them off the case and threatened them with the National Security Act if they spoke out.

Schippers said he tried in vain to warn Attorney General Ashcroft, but was unable to reach him.

Israeli Foreknowledge?

But let us not forget the indications that someone in Israel had foreknowledge of the attacks. And there were questions concerning the number of Israeli citizens killed in the attacks. The day after, the Jerusalem Post claimed two Israelis died on the hijacked airplanes and that 4,000 were missing at the WTC. A week later, a Beirut television station reported that 4,000 Israeli employees of the WTC were absent the day of the attack.

This information spread across the Internet, but was quickly branded a hoax. On September 19, the Washington Post reported about 113 Israelis were missing at the WTC, and the next day President Bush noted more than 130 Israelis were victims. Finally, on September 22, the New York Times stated: "There were, in fact, only three Israelis who had been confirmed as dead: two on the planes and another who had been visiting the towers on business and who was identified and buried."

Of all the nations of the world, Israel probably profited the most from the events of September 11.

[Editor's note: For a substantial dissertation on this key point, be sure to refer back to the article Stranger Than Fiction: Documented Probe Of 9/11 & The "War On Terrorism" shared in last month's issue of The SPECTRUM.]

A permanent American military force in the Middle East is now assured, offering an umbrella of protection to that small nation despite the anger engendered in Arab states. After Ariel Sharon's provocative visit to the Muslim mosque in Jerusalem resulted in widespread violence by Palestinians, world opinion began to shift away from uncritical support of Israel. It has been reported that the Bush Administration was beginning to seriously consider support for a separate Palestinian state.

Israel's powerful and effective intelligence agency, the Mossad, is not beyond suspicion, according to the U.S. Army's School of Advanced Military Studies. The Washington Times on September 10, just 24 hours before the attacks, ran an article quoting officers of the school as describing the Mossad as "Wildcard. Ruthless and cunning. Has capability to target U.S. forces and make it look like a Palestinian/Arab act."

It is generally known that the Mossad has penetrated every Arab and Muslim organization and would have had little problem in finding any number of fanatics to carry out a suicide mission in the belief they were serving Allah.

Indeed, recent news reports contended that not all of the hijackers knew their mission would end in death.

Thanks to newly revealed technology, it is now possible to theorize that none of the hijackers intended to die.

Remote Controlled Aircraft A Reality

Global Hawk is the name of the latest version of a high-altitude, long-endurance unmanned air vehicle (UAV), in other words, an unmanned drone plane that can take off, conduct missions such as photographing battlefields, and land by remote electronic control.

This Buck Rogers equipment made its first operational flight October 7 when it was used for reconnaissance over Afghanistan in preparation for U.S. air and missile strikes against the Taliban regime.

But this remote-controlled plane, similar to a Boeing 737 commercial airliner, was successfully tested earlier this year, first at Edwards Air Force Base and later at Edinburgh Air Force Base in southern Australia.

Prior to leaving Australia, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for Defense Dr. Brendan Nelson said: "Global Hawk will create aviation history again during its return journey to become the first unmanned aircraft to fly non-stop from Australia to the United States' West Coast."

When news of Global Hawk was first released, there was speculation that the UAV technology might be used to thwart airline hijackings. Once a hijacking took place, the Global Hawk technology would be triggered and the captured plane flown to a landing at a safe location, regardless of the actions of the flight crew or the hijackers.

In fact, following the attacks, the New York Times on September 28 in an article on increasing air safety, mentioned "new technology, probably far in the future, allowing air traffic controllers to land distressed planes by remote control". This made it seem such technology is not yet available, yet earlier this year, a former chief of British Airways suggested that such technology could be used to commandeer an aircraft from the ground and control it remotely in the event of a hijacking.

Needless to say, there are those today who question if Global Hawk's true first operational use might have been conducted on September 11. After all, as all experienced aviation and military persons well know, if a technology such as Global Hawk is publicly revealed, it most probably has been in secret use for several years.

But regardless of how the planes with the terrorists were controlled, it is clear that their managers had information, if not help, from inside the government.

Insider Knowledge

Early on, the Bush White House issued a statement stating that "credible evidence" showed that the hijackers had access to the top-secret codes of Air Force One, in which the President fled from Florida to Louisiana and on to Nebraska. This statement made the President's zig-zag journey of 9/11 more like that of a careful and prudent commander than a fleeing coward.

White House officials later said this information was untrue, leaving the public with the question of what else has the Bush people told us that is untrue, or that their first statements were true, raising the possibility that there may have been inside help in obtaining the codes.

It is certainly true that various agencies knew for some time that suspected terrorists were operating in the United States.

As early as 1995, it was known within police and military circles and reported in VFW and American Legion publications that some 5,000 former Iraqi prisoners of war had been allowed in this country by the Clinton Administration beginning in 1993. Most had worked with the CIA at one time or another and were allowed in this country to avoid death at the hands of a vengeful Saddam Hussein.

Many of these men had been with the Iraqi Republican Guard which blew up the Kuwaiti oil fields at the end of the Gulf War, so they obviously were trained in explosives.

They were "resettled" in various U.S. cities and they formed cells there. These cities included New York City, Boston, Washington DC, Miami, New Orleans, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Kansas City, and more.

These men participated in fundraising activities for the HAMAS and Hezbollah terrorist chains. They have been connected to Osama bin Laden through a Cebu City connection in the Philippines, the location that convicted bomber Terry Nichols visited with his Philippine wife. At least 12 of these former POWs are believed to have been involved in the Oklahoma City bombing.

Although this may seem a strange and unreported connection, there is a wealth of information linking Iraqi operatives to Timothy McVeigh. In fact, the October 29 edition of U.S. News & World Report revealed that "top Defense officials" believe McVeigh was acting as an agent for Iraq, an astounding development in light of the extent the government continued to deny any conspiracy other than aid from Terry Nichols.

These same trained soldiers reportedly created a number of clandestine laboratories to produce biological warfare germs, including anthrax, bubonic plague, various hemorrhagic fevers, and other deadly combinations.

FBI Moves Slowly And In Wrong Direction

In 1996, the FBI finally was moved to action concerning the biological threat. Ohio microbiologist Larry Wayne Harris had tried to alert the public to the danger of anthrax being smuggled into the United States by Muslim extremists but was demonized by the mass media as a conspiracy buff. In 1998, Harris, along with Nevada microbiologist William Leavitt, was arrested by the FBI in Las Vegas for possessing anthrax cultures.

The mass media broadcast this news widely, repeating the government's charge that the men were testing the deadly toxins in preparation for an attack on New York. These allegations were quietly dropped only a few days later when it was found that the men possessed a harmless veterinary anti-anthrax vaccine. They were attempting to find their own antidote to anthrax, a dangerous disease the government continued to dismiss in the mid-1990s. (U.S. News & World Report, March 2, 1998 and March 9.)

It is interesting that, at that same time, several people were warning that an anthrax vaccine ordered for all U.S. military personnel was actually going to be used to spread the disease and provoke a United Nations takeover once enough U.S. soldiers were incapacitated. It was claimed that this plan would be set in motion by an emergency blamed on foreigners which would hasten the use of the vaccine. Several military persons were brought before a court martial for refusing to take the vaccine.

And there is evidence that President Bush and his family has even blocked efforts in the past to find and prosecute Osama bin Laden. According to a special BBC investigation reported in the November 10, 2001 issue of The Times Of India, a "secret FBI document, numbered 1991 WF213589" emanating from the FBI's Washington field office, blamed the recent terrorist attacks on "connections between the CIA and Saudi Arabia and the Bush men and bin Ladens". This document alleged that the FBI had been told to "back off" an investigation of a bin Laden brother, Abdullah.

And what of Osama bin Laden himself? What did he have to say about all this?

Don't look to the corporate mass media to inform you, as they have all agreed not to broadcast anything that might detract from the official government story, even though it is acknowledged that Bush's media denunciations of bin Laden have been more filled with adjectives like "evil" and "evildoer" than specific evidence.

Fairness & Accuracy in Reporting (FAR) noted that, on October 10, network executives representing ABC, NBC, CBS, Fox, and CNN were involved in a conference call with National Security Adviser and Council on Foreign Relations heavyweight Condoleezza Rice. The execs apparently agreed to limit how and what they broadcast regarding bin Laden or his al-Qaeda group. Bush people even tried unsuccessfully to have al Jazeera—called the "CNN of the Mideast"—broadcasting from Qatar—tone down its coverage of bin Laden. They were more successful with members of our Congress, when they threatened to cut off intelligence reports if they spoke offhand to the media.

The next day, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer—already on the record saying Americans "need to watch what they say"—extended this constraint by contacting major newspapers asking that they not print full transcripts of bin Laden's interviews.

According to a FAR news release: "The point is not that bin Laden or al-Qaeda deserve 'equal time' on U.S. news broadcasts, but that it is troubling for government to shape or influence news content. Withholding information from the public is hardly patriotic. When the White House insists that it's dangerous to report a news event 'in its entirety', alarm bells should go off for journalists and the American public alike."

Osama Bin Laden Replies

Here's what bin Laden did say in an interview on September 28, according to the Pakistani newspaper Ummat: "I have already said that I am not involved in the 11 September attacks in the United States. As a Muslim, I try my best to avoid telling a lie. I had no knowledge of these attacks, not do I consider the killing of innocent women, children, and other humans as an appreciable act. Islam strictly forbids causing harm to innocent women, children, and other people. Such a practice is forbidden even in the course of battle. It is the United States which is perpetrating every maltreatment on women, children, and common people..."

In this interview, apparently suppressed in the United States, bin Laden unsurprisingly blamed the attacks on Israel, claiming: "All that is going on in Palestine for the last 11 months is sufficient to call the wrath of God upon the United States and Israel...(and) what had earlier been done to the innocent people of Iraq, Chechnya, and Bosnia. (A full text of this interview may be found at the www.khila-fa-h.com/1421/category.php?DocumentID=2392&TagID=2 Internet website location.)

Bin Laden went on to state: "...We are not hostile to the United States. We are against the [U.S. Government] system which makes other nations slaves to the United States or forces them to mortgage their political and economic freedom."

One cannot, of course, take bin Laden at face value, but then the same could be said for the U.S. Government—which has been caught in so many lies and deceit in the past that it is surprising that anyone pays any attention to official pronouncements.

A Dismal Foreign Policy History

What should be thoughtfully considered is the dismal record of United States foreign policy since World War II. This policy, as confirmed by the New York Times years ago, has been in the hands of the Council on Foreign Relations elite since at least 1939.

This elite and its associates include former Presidents Bush, Bill Clinton, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, and Richard Nixon, virtually every CIA director, as well as a considerable number of familiar past and present government officials such as Dick Cheney, Henry Kissinger, Wesley Clark, Strobe Talbott, Alexander Haig, Alan Greenspan, Bruce Babbitt, James A. Baker III, Sandy Berger, Colin Powell, Harold Brown, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Frank C. Carlucci, Richard Darman, John Deutch, Lawrence Eagleburger, Robert McFarlane, Brent Snowcroft, Condoleezza Rice and Casper Weinberger.

This policy has been one of neo-colonialism—that is, the subjugation and control of other nations through military dictators or wealthy families supported by, and often placed in power by, the U.S. military or intelligence services.

The results of this neo-colonial policy have been dismal at best and catastrophic at worst. Never mind the historical aggression displayed by American foreign policy in the Mexican War of 1848 and the Spanish-American War of 1898.

Consider this policy since World War II:

- In 1951, when Iran's Prime Minister Mohammed Mossadegh nationalized the oil industry in that Mideast nation, he was deposed by a coup instigated by the CIA, and the Shah came to power, assuming complete control in 1963. Thousands of Iranians, perhaps millions, died during the repressive rule of the Shah and his SAVAK secret police. The Shah was finally forced out in 1979 by the Ayatollah Khomeini, who became the U.S.'s latest foreign enemy despite the fact that he had been on the CIA payroll while living in Paris. The Shah was granted asylum in the United States.

- In Guatemala in 1954, again the CIA toppled the popularly elected government of Jacobo Arbenz, which had nationalized United Fruit property. Prominent American government officials such as former CIA Director Walter Bedell Smith, then CIA Director Allen Dulles, Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs John Moors Cabot, and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles were all closely connected to United Fruit. An estimated 120,000 Guatemalan peasants died in the resulting military dictatorships.

- Fidel Castro, with covert aid from the CIA, overthrew the military dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista and instituted sweeping land, industrial, and educational reforms, as well as nationalizing American businesses. Swiftly labeled a communist, the CIA then organized anti-Castro Cubans, resulting in numerous attacks on Cuba and the failed Bay of Pigs Invasion in 1961. The island nation has been the object of U.S. economic sanctions since that time.

- More than 3,000 persons died in the wake of an invasion of the Dominican Republic by U.S. Marines in 1965. The troops ostensibly were sent to prevent a communist takeover, although later it was admitted that there had been no proof of such a takeover.

- Also in 1965, the U.S. began the bombing of North Vietnam after President Johnson proclaimed the civil war there an "aggression" by the north. Two years later, American troop strength in Vietnam had grown to 380,000. U.S. dead by the end of that Asian war totaled some 58,000—with casualties to the Vietnamese, both north and south, running into the millions.

- In 1973, the elected government of Salvador Allende in Chile was overthrown by a military coup aided by the CIA. Allende was killed and some 30,000 persons died in subsequent violence and repression, including some Americans.

- In 1968, General Sukarno, the dictator of Indonesia, was overthrown by the General Suharto, again with aid from the CIA. Suharto proved even more dictatorial and corrupt than his predecessor. A reported 800,000 people died during his regime.

- Another 250,000 persons died in 1975 during the brutal invasion of East Timor by the Suharto regime, aided by the U.S. Government and Henry Kissinger.

- In 1979, the powerful Somoza family, which had ruled Nicaragua since 1937, was finally overthrown, and Daniel Ortega was elected president. CIA-backed Contra insurgents operating from Honduras fought a protracted war to oust the Ortega government in which an estimated 30,000 people died. The ensuing struggle came to include such shady dealing in arms and drugs that it created a scandal in the United States called Iran-Contra, which involved selling arms to Iran and using the profits to support the Contras.

- U.S. Marines landed in Lebanon in 1982 in an attempt to prevent further bloodshed between occupying Israeli troops and the Palestine Liberation Organization. Thousands died in the resulting civil war, including several hundred Palestinians massacred in refugee camps by Christian forces. Despite the battleship shelling of Beirut, American forces were withdrawn in 1984 after a series of bloody attacks on them.

- In 1983, U.S. troops invaded the tiny Caribbean island nation of Grenada after a leftist government was installed. The official explanation was to rescue a handful of American students who initially said they didn't need rescuing.

- For nearly 20 years, during the 1970s and 1980s, the U.S. Government gave aid and arms to the right-wing government of the Republic of El Salvador for use against its leftist enemies. By 1988, some 70,000 Salvadorans had died.

- More than one million persons died in the 15-year battle in Angola between the Marxist government, aided by Cuban troops, and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, supported by South Africa and the U.S. Government.

- When Muammar al-Qaddafi tried to socialize the oil-rich North African nation

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

of Libya, beginning with his takeover in 1969, he drew the wrath of the U.S. Government. In 1981, it was claimed that Qaddafi had sent hit teams to the United States to assassinate President Reagan. And in 1986, following the withdrawal of U.S. oil companies from Libya, an air attack was launched which missed Qaddafi but killed several people including his infant daughter.

- In 1987, an Iraqi missile attack on the U.S. frigate Stark resulted in 37 deaths. Shortly afterward, the Iraqi president apologized for the incident. In 1988, a U.S. Navy ship shot down an Iranian airliner over the Persian Gulf, resulting in 290 deaths. The Reagan Administration simply called it a mistake.

- Thousands of freedom-seeking Chinese were killed in Beijing's Tiananmen Square in 1989 after hardliners conferred with former President Richard Nixon on how to deal with the dissidents. Nixon, of course, was the only U.S. president to resign under threat of criminal indictment.

- About 8,000 Panamanians died over Christmas, 1989, when President George H. W. Bush sent U.S. troops to invade that Central American nation to arrest his former business partner, Manuel Noriega. The excuse was that Noriega was involved in the importation of drugs to the United States. U.S. News & World Report noted that in 1990 the amount of drugs moving through Panama had doubled.

- Iraqi casualties, both military and civilian, totaled more than 300,000 during the short Persian Gulf War of 1991. It has been estimated that more than one million Iraqis, including women and children, have died as a result of the continued missile and air attacks over the past decade, as well as economic sanctions against that nation.

- Also in 1991, the United States suspended assistance to Haiti after the election of a liberal priest sparked military action. Eventually, U.S. troops were deployed.

The names of nations that have felt the brunt of U.S. CIA and/or military activity as a result of foreign policy include Somalia, Afghanistan, Serbia, Kosovo, Bosnia, Brazil, Chad, Sudan, and many others. As Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. stated during the Vietnam War: "My government is the world's leading purveyor of violence."

He did not say "my country" or "my people". It is the government, or rather, those who control it, who are responsible—although we, the distracted and unaware citizens who claim to live in a democracy, must take our fair share of the blame.

If such a dismal and counterproductive foreign policy was simply the result of incautious and insipid blundering, one might expect that occasionally mistakes would be made in favor of the people. But a careful study of the United States' errant policies during the past century clearly indicate a persistent pattern of policies which only enrich the wealthy and further the goals of the globalist elite.

Historical Precedents

Is there precedence in history for what is happening to America today? So much so that there is not enough space to present it all. Nero burned Rome, blamed it on his enemies, and took dictatorial power.

But consider what happened just last century. On February 27, 1933, the German Reichstag or Parliament was destroyed by fire. Hitler and his Nazis blamed the destruction on communist terrorists. They even caught one, a retarded Dutch youth named Marinus van der Lubbe, who carried a Communist Party card.

After some time in custody, the youth confessed to being the arsonist. However, later investigation found that one person could not have started the mammoth blaze, and that incendiaries had been carried into the building through a tunnel which led to the offices of Hitler's closest partner, Hermann Goering.

Less than a month later, on March 24, 1933, at Hitler's urging, a panicky

German Parliament voted 441 to 94 to pass an "Enabling Act" which was the starting point for Hitler's dictatorship. As a result of this act, Germans soon saw gun confiscation, national identity cards, racial profiling, a national security chief (Heinrich Himmler), and later, mass murders and incarcerations in concentration camps.

One of the western leaders who supported Hitler and his policies was Prescott Bush, grandfather of President George W. Bush. He must have taken notice of Hitler's method for gaining unwarranted power.

Since the Reichstag fire, the Bush family and their associates in the Council on Foreign Relations, Trilateral Commission, and Bilderbergers have often mimicked Hitler's tactics of creating a problem, offering a draconian solution, and advancing their agenda through any resulting compromise.

The real enemy is whoever is behind the September 11 terror attack. Osama bin Laden, so closely connected to the financial interests of the Bush family and the CIA, may be the mastermind or he may be a convenient scapegoat—yet another provocation to stampede Americans into another war for oil.

We must thoughtfully consider where the real source of terror lies—with one bearded fanatic in an impoverished Middle Eastern country or with those who would profit while shredding the U.S. Constitution in the name of defending freedom. △

Is It Nearing “Showdown Time” On Planet Earth?

Editor's note: The following message was being “received” elsewhere at the same time that I was writing the note on page 3. How's THAT for stereo?!

1/11/03 ESU “JESUS” SANANDA

Good morning, my scribe. It is I, Esu “Jesus” Sananda. Be still and allow for the energies to settle. I come in the Light of Creator God. My core being expresses from the Golden-White Light of Creation, a vibration of Purity and Balance.

I must remind all ones—especially those of you who call upon the Higher Realms regularly for guidance and counsel—to be VERY diligent in clearing your space of unwanted “negative” energies. Make no assumption that you are beyond reach from the Dark Tricksters, for their “craftiness” is quite well practiced and their subtle ways are quite effective. This caution is needed moreso now, and in the coming months and years, due to the vibrational upshifting in the “aethers” (the non-physical energy space that permeates the entirety of Creation).

You and all ones on your planet, as well as all physical matter, are speeding up (vibrating at a faster rate). This increase in physical vibration is due to the energy that you, your planet, and your solar system are passing through at this time. As you continue to acclimate to these shifting energies, you will begin to notice more and more that the veil which separates the physical from the non-physical is becoming thinner. Among other things, this means that you will be able to more easily connect with non-physical entities—many of whom do not have your best interests in mind.

By saying a prayer, affirmation, visualization, or whatever you feel helps you to connect with Creator Source within, you are calling into your presence Angels, Lighted Beings, and other Spirit Guides who will act as Guardians so as to keep the Tricksters away. Without such watchful protection, you leave yourself open to whomever shows up.

We honor your choice to open-up to whatever energies you may choose. Many do not believe that they are susceptible to Dark Energies, and in a somewhat egotistical way feel that only weak individuals need the assistance of the Lighted Brotherhood. Again, if this be your belief and choice, then we shall honor your free will, and allow for you to experience whomever or whatever comes your way.

We of the Lighted Realms encourage ALL ones who read this message to make part or your daily routine affirmations (prayers, visualizations, and such) that will allow the Lighted Brotherhood to more fully assist you throughout your lives.

This can be as simple as acknowledging your connection to God when you awaken in the morning. As you stretch your arms out, see and feel the Light and Warmth (Love) of Creator God washing all over you. Before, after, or even during a meal, you may find it quite beneficial to once again acknowledge and give thanks for the Energy that went into the items from which you gain physical nourishment. And prior to laying down for your evening respite, you would be quite wise indeed to reaffirm your intent toward the Light (Light here symbolizes the Goodness and Love of Creator God), and see this Light coming from within you and expanding outward until your whole family is encompassed within its reach. Even distant family members can benefit greatly from such assistance offered on your behalf.

The games being played on a planetary scale are continuing to escalate toward a point where intervention by the Lighted Brotherhood and those aligned with this intent toward service of others (namely, the extraterrestrial “Peace Corps” who have been assisting you and your planet since the very beginning of sentient life on your world) will become an in-your-face reality. At that point, all the debates over whether or not you are being visited will come to an end.

You ones always want to know WHEN and WHERE will this intervention take place. We of the Lighted Realms will only offer to you the following: it depends on the sequence of unfolding events more than anything else. For example, those who make the decisions to use nuclear weapons can either accelerate the timeline or push it back, depending on the choices they make. We of the Lighted Realms will NOT allow your planet to be destroyed, nor will we allow the slaughter of those who need just a little more time in the schoolroom so that they can “graduate” to the next level of spiritual awareness.

The Dark Tricksters would rather destroy the entire planet just so the small percentage of individuals mentioned above WON'T experience a “breakthrough” in their awareness. This is truly the level of insanity that is being dealt with by we of the Lighted Realms.

We not only have the means by which to accomplish our mission of salvation, but [as Archangel Michael likewise stated elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM] we have explicit permission to intervene if and when conditions (unfolding events) warrant our assistance. Your world leaders have been duly notified of our intent and know that we mean business.

We have, in the past, shut down entire arsenals of nuclear weapons; we have repeatedly “aborted” the many attempts to put weapons into orbit around your globe; and we have proven to the major world leaders that we will not tolerate the war games they try to play.

There are some who believe that with so-called “super-secret” advanced weapons they can match the technology of the so-called “extraterrestrial threat”. To these ones we say: you must know by now, from the few craft you have recovered, that they are based on technology that is MANY THOUSANDS OF YEARS OLD from our point of view, and yet MANY THOUSANDS OF YEARS ADVANCED from your so-called “advanced” technical toys.

Those civilizations who travel among the stars only gain the ability and knowledge to do so by developing their inner spiritual connection to Creator Source. It is through this inner development that all advanced knowledge is gifted to a civilization as they mature and prove that they are capable of responsibly handling same.

To those who believe they can stop us from intervening, should the planet be threatened in a global manner by the hotheaded puppets who do the bidding of the Master Tricksters: you haven't seen anything at all in terms of ADVANCED technology from your Space Brothers—NOTHING AT ALL!

Please note that there are many individuals and agencies who monitor The SPECTRUM and those of you who are responsible for its existence and survival. Some of what is written here is directed to these “monitors” as a message within a message.

While on the subject of The SPECTRUM—I, Esu “Jesus” Sananda, along with MANY others of the Lighted Realms, thank you who support The SPECTRUM both financially as well as with many kind letters and prayers. Without your support, this conduit would simply not exist.

There is much energy “churning” in the aethers as this message is being penned. Let me remind you ones briefly of lessons offered in years past:

Prior to any physical manifestation, there is first formed an idea. This focus exists in what might be termed “mental-energy space”. As more and more emotional energy (desire) is added to the mental idea, a perturbation in the aethers occurs that begins to summon forth the means by which to coalesce and precipitate the final results in the physical realm.

Let us take, for example, an inventor who sees a need for a non-polluting form of renewable energy, and who is by background an engineer with a broad understanding of physics and chemistry. As such an individual focuses his desire to find such a source of energy (his idea), a vibrational signal is sent out, from within his being, into the aethers—in a manner not too different in concept from the Internet.

This request begins to elicit responses immediately in the form of solution ideas. The rate and clarity of the solutions is directly proportional to the amount of emotional energy (desire) behind his original idea. The longer one is focusing on any particular idea with desire, the more the Universe begins to coordinate so that events begin to unfold—such as “chance” meetings with others who are working on the same or similar projects, or funding for research seems to appear just when one needs it, or any number of “coincidental” happenings that would allow for the manifesting of the highly desired idea.

You each create in this manner, some more deliberately than others. But such is the basic method by which your perceived physical reality is fundamentally constructed.

When I say that there is a “churning” in the aethers, I am referring to what can only be described as a diverging duality in mass consciousness. It is as if “heaven” and “hell” are both trying to manifest simultaneously.

As the frequency of your planet speeds up, those who are on a path of enlightenment are racing toward an ideal world of peace, while at the same time those who are single-mindedly trying to bring about complete world domination and control are racing toward a very “dark” outcome. In short—the dark narrow-minded ones are getting “darker”, and the enlightened humanitarian ones are getting “lighter”.

This dichotomy is causing the “churning” in the aethers wherein time itself is beginning to distort in order to accommodate the opposing energies. It is quite interesting from the point of view of the observer, as predictable outcomes continually shift as the masses, as a whole, continue to wrestle with the inner uncertainty of what exactly is taking place. The larger majority of your world sense that time is speeding up, and that there is “something” inside themselves that is not quite the same.

We of the Lighted Realms continually stand ready to answer the many calls from the hearts of these ones when their desire is clarified within their mind. Meanwhile, the Master Trickster will undoubtedly use more “shock therapy”—such as happened on September 11, 2001—in order to keep ones focused on the lower-vibrational emotional energies of grief, fear, and anger. This tactic in general keeps ones externally focused (distracted), and thus diverts ones’ attention away from what is awakening within as their consciousness continues to expand (move upward in frequency).

This sort of “shock therapy” also buys time for the Dark Manipulators, as they can ONLY function within the “shadows of consciousness” wherein conscious awareness is low. Their influence is much like the subliminal mind-control that permeates your movies, television, music, and advertisements. Likewise, they know that their time is indeed quite short, and thus they will become more and more erratic in their attempts to control from behind the scenes. In the light of exposure, these dark entities become quite ineffective, and thus go elsewhere where they can continue their chosen journey of exploring Creation.

Due to the unpredictable nature of the energies being summoned into your world, you are creating, as a planetary whole, a unique situation that warrants great study and monitoring by the many advanced beings who watch over your planet and its many inhabitants. Great care is taken on both individual levels and planetary levels to ensure that each being is given the maximum possible opportunity to grow. This unique unfolding of events also provides many an advanced being with great challenges that will inevitably cause them to stretch and grow. This cycle of expansion and growth is limitless, and each of you play a role in making it all possible. None are insignificant or without purpose.

If you are uncertain as to what your purpose is in all of this, you may find comfort in knowing that you are not alone. Even some of the ones who pen these messages for we of the Lighted Realms are uncertain of their “purpose”!

Your purpose, in a very general way, is to experience and grow. Helping others to do likewise, by being a friend, counselor, or mentor, will likely be something you should find rewarding, especially if you are drawn to this sort of information. This message is offered with you, who will be reading it, in mind. It is of a general nature so as to cause you to go within and challenge your beliefs, preconceptions, and possible misunderstandings about yourself and the world in which you live.

Behind every question you ask is a desire—a desire to UNDERSTAND more, a desire to GROW beyond who you perceive yourself to be at the present time.

Follow this desire. Be passionate about seeking answers to your questions. You will not only be making your life much more enjoyable, but you WILL be fulfilling your very own unique purpose.

I am Esu “Jesus” Sananda, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator God to answer the call of the heart for insight, as well as to play my part, alongside you ones, as a co-creator of life experience.

May you each learn the wisdom of calling upon the Lighted Brotherhood often for assistance, so as to ensure that you are maximizing the growth potential of all ones, everywhere.

Much Love, Light, Joy, and Happiness to you all! Salu.

Fake Money's Role In Swindle Politics

Editor's note: If there is one recurring theme in Sherman's commentaries for this month, it is the intriguing lesson of how money can be used to topple empires more effectively than bombs. And when the definition of the term "money" is expanded to include the fine art of counterfeiting, utilized as a tool in the even finer art of political power-scheming—well, now you've entered the world of the crooks in high places (usually known as politicians) whose antics sometimes manage, for various avenging reasons of those so abused, to get whispered in the attentive ear of "certain rather independent-minded journalists" like Sherman Skolnick.

In our December 2002 issue, Sherman's commentaries focused on how "blackmail makes the world go 'round" at the loftiest levels of politics. But the idea that blackmail monies might sometimes be fabricated out of thin air raises that hustle to a fitting level of bedlam for all so involved!

For those of you newer readers not familiar with this longtime crusader for Truth from the Chicago area, know that:

Since 1958, Mr. Skolnick has been a court reformer, and since 1963, chairman/founder, Citizen's Committee To Clean Up The Courts. Since 1991, a regular panelist, and since 1995, moderator/producer of BroadSides, a one-hour, weekly, taped, public-access cable-TV show, cablecast WITHIN Chicago, to some 400,000 viewers each Monday evening, 9 p.m., channel 21, cable TV.

Great Secrets Into The 21st Century, Part 1 (11/29/02)

Counterfeit Reserve

Carried over from the greatly troubled 20th Century is a hush-hush group of events that is virtually impossible to be dealt with by the American monopoly press. After you study this, the how, when, where, and why of it may become clear to you.

It first became clear in matters of a print shop in the old West Side of Chicago. It was about the time of the Korean War. The facility was owned and operated by several brothers.

Other printers nearby were somewhat puzzled by little things they noticed. Those in the shop did not work long hours—unusual at a time when it was customary because there was plenty of work for skilled printers. The brothers did not seem to be troubled by the then war-time paper shortage. They operated mostly a few hours, now and then, at night. They drove the most expensive cars and seemed to have lots of money.

What was the family of clever sorts printing, anyway? And, ONLY a couple of hours, now and then, at night?

As later became clear, they were enterprising sorts. They had developed and/or perfected a then relatively new process called deep-etch offset. In the hands of the right operators, if they were very careful, they could produce work that previously required steel engraving or a similar old-time, slow, expensive process.

It was a time when fancy lawyers had their envelopes and letterheads printed the long-established way—steel engraving—cumbersome, time-consuming. But the brothers could not possibly be making so much money taking care of a few orders from professional types—lawyers, maybe even a few accountants.

The process they were using was a nice step up from photo offset, which some old-time sorts kept grumbling could not substitute for good quality letterpress, another relatively slow, expensive way of printing.

After a couple of years, the secret could be read in the daily newspapers of that era. The brothers had developed and perfected deep-etch offset to the point that they could produce superior quality U.S. Treasury Savings Bonds, at the time called Series H. Those in the public who bought a few government savings bonds knew there was a series E and a series H.

This print shop, in just a few hours, could mass produce H Bonds that looked just like they were steel engraved or similarly used by the U.S. Treasury.

The situation was simple. The brothers were NOT working for the U.S. Treasury or U.S. Government Printing Office. They were latter-day counterfeiters. And they were, in short order, sent to Federal Prison. From jail, they were used by the U.S. Government as consultants on the Treasury switching over to H Bonds produced by the faster, cheaper method perfected by these clever law-breakers.

The brothers' method was so superior, few people could tell the difference between the older and the newer method of printing the Savings Bonds.

If carried to extreme, counterfeiting government money or securities could topple a central government quicker, and neater, than bombing them to bits. That is, taking care of a government perceived as unfriendly to others, or an enemy.

In the Second World War, the Germans produced a superior-quality counterfeit series of British Five Pound Sterling Notes. There was even, later on, a Hollywood movie about that. The Germans had a two-fold scheme: First, actually bomb to wreckage the London government. Second, destroy their validity through flooding that nation and the world with fake British currency.

Then there was a movie about a spy for the Nazis, holed-up in neutral Turkey, using the code-name "Cicero". It was, by the way, the name of both a Roman philosopher as well as the Mafia enclave adjoining Chicago—Al Capone Land.

The movie about the spy "Cicero" ended with an ironic twist: He was paid for his treachery with several million dollars of superior-quality counterfeit currency. He did not find out until he retrieved the same, while supposedly retiring to South America.

If, over the years, you have various pals who associate with U.S. Secret Service types, sort of like almost contract agents, and if others, like these pals, are retired "spooks", once parachute spies and similar, such as those who dropped into or infiltrated Nazi Germany in the closing days of the War—well, you learned stuff. Such as, how members of their team separated some German banks from the last of their gold. How? By blasting open their vaults and such. In short, you can learn spycraft from those who survived doing it.

The U.S. Government had a unit of super operators, paper currency counterfeiters. No, they were not sweet nice, patriotic types. Some had circulated their highly-skilled product through known criminals. So, the government would, on occasion, grab them and summarily put them in jail at the hands of a blackmailable federal judge. All by way of persuading the bogus money boys to reluctantly work for the Central Government—OR ELSE.

I learned about a convicted counterfeiter, allowed early out of prison, and set up in a Chicago suburb as a supposed “hairstresser”. My information sources used to joke with me, in the wee hours, in an all-night greasy spoon. They would drive me past the “hairstresser’s” closed shop.

“Hey, what happened? The windows and doors are all blown out?” I asked, at the time naive about such matters, still learning bits and pieces about the real world.

The answer I got was blunt: “The Secret Service boys were persuading him a little bit. He was hesitating to go to work for them. They wanted him to produce for them his specialty—superior quality bogus money—so they could start to topple a government or two, enemies of the U.S., such as in Southeast Asia and such.”

“Persuade him?” I asked. My source laughed at me: “Aw, come on, like the old Black Hand Society. The ‘moustache petes’—you know: the boys, the syndicate.”

There, as in the old West Side, when there was a bombing not supposed to be looked into, the police did not respond. So, if late on a Saturday night, a cleaning and dyeing store did not pay “protection” to the mob, the store was bombed. Locals did not call the police. The folks just walked around the blown-out glass windows and such.

In the 1970s, in Chicago, six known gangsters were murdered. The pressfakers, who should know better, explained it away as “mob in-fighting”. Actually, the dispatched mobsters had, for a while, been aiding the U.S. Government circulate phony money overseas, to topple “enemy” governments. The criminals did not keep quiet enough—a fatal flaw.

The U.S. Treasury, arranging for and distributing superior-quality counterfeit currencies, is a deep-down secret. And the pressfakers know to stay quiet. For various reasons.

For example, journalists who go to press conferences of public officials must FIRST be cleared by the U.S. SECRET SERVICE. Among other things, the reporters know they better never arrange photographs showing the Secret Service in a bad light. And they know they better not write something negative about the Secret Service—which not only issues (or refuses to issue) press credentials, but also investigates bogus currency.

What mass media journalist would dare, even half jokingly, repeat the age-old saying: “To kill the king, you need the aid of the palace guards”? And serious or not, apply it to the murder of President John F. Kennedy or President Lincoln and others. Any non-issuance or violation of press credentials, and the reporter becomes unemployable throughout the monopoly press.

Starting in October 1980, Daddy Bush, running for Vice President on the Reagan-Bush ticket, arranged a treasonous deal with the Iranians at the time, holding 52 U.S. Embassy hostages in Teheran. The Iranians agreed, in a Paris suburb meeting, to hold the U.S. hostages until the Reagan-Bush ticket was elected by getting the edge over incumbent Jimmy Carter.

After all, Carter’s phony smile would not help him if he appeared to be a wimp unable to resolve the hostage crisis. In treachery against the American people, Bush promised $40 million to the Iranians, plus weapons, through Portugal and trans-shipped via Israel. The hostages were released at the moment Reagan-Bush were inaugurated in 1981.

(As stated by us elsewhere, the Prime Minister of Portugal, to silence him, was murdered by Daddy Bush by way of a sabotaged plane crash. Israel has used their knowledge of the events to blackmail Daddy Bush, his crony Bill Clinton, and George W. Bush.)

Another little-known part of the treasonous Daddy Bush/Iran deal was Bush’s promise to them that the then new administration would take no action if the Iranians counterfeited foreign currencies, INCLUDING THAT OF THE UNITED STATES.

So, the Iranians bought printing apparatus from Germany—similar to that used by the U.S.—to print superior-quality bogus Federal Reserve Hundred Dollar Notes. Through corrupt means, the Iranians even obtained the special U.S.-contract-only linen-type paper used for printing the hocus pocus money.

The big secret—forbidden to be discussed by the oil-soaked, spy-riddled American monopoly press—is that there is, because of Iran and others, over $800 BILLION worth of these superior-quality Federal Reserve Notes masquerading as the “U.S. Dollar”. Some of it is circulating by way of Iran. Some is being circulated by a joint deal between the Russian Mafiya (former KGB officers) and a faction of the Colombia dope cartel. Some, by blowback (spy lingo), is coming back to the U.S.

(For related details of the Bush Crime Family partners with a co-founder of one of the Colombia dope cartels, visit our two-part website series “The Chandra Levy Affair”.)

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the “coup d’état on the human mind”—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

duper counterfeiters. (One “cutter” is now holed-up in Colombia, producing Federal Reserve Notes.) There product is so well-made, it even goes through the Federal Reserve counting machines and such, as if genuine. From time to time, one or more of these “cutters” are framed by U.S. Treasury and other federal officials to keep these types from refusing to work for the central government again.

As to counterfeit U.S. currency, there have been a few stories overseas, such as in Australian newspapers.

In 1990, the U.S. Treasury, aided by criminal-types within the American CIA, confederates of Daddy Bush, then U.S. President, arranged to topple the Soviet Government. How? By manipulating the Soviet currency, the Ruble.

A book goes into what it calls the Ruble Scam. The book is called Thieves' World: The Threat Of The New Global Network Of Organized Crime by Claire Sterling, Simon & Schuster, NY, 1994. The problem with the book is that it was written by the late Claire Sterling, an apparent American resident in Italy who also wrote for the reputed American CIA-sponsored newspaper in Rome The Daily American. She conveniently left out of her opus that the scam was done with massive amounts of superior-quality counterfeit rubles, not just some manipulating of the ruble by Western World banks.

A team of “cutters” arranged the fake rubles for a special “dirty tricks” unit of the U.S. Treasury, jointly with Daddy Bush’s covert-team cronies in the American CIA. The bogus money team, headed by a master “cutter”, was promised a portion of the damage they caused to the Moscow government, eventually toppling them into anarchy and runaway gangster-types, called the Russian Mafiya. (It is practically an every-month event these days when “bankers”, not co-operating with the Mafiya to launder funds from Russian criminal enterprises, are assassinated.)

The bogus money team, primarily Europeans sometimes residing in the U.S. and elsewhere, have been grumbling that the U.S. Treasury owes them upwards of one trillion dollars—the “cutters” promised take from permanently damaging and destroying the Moscow regime.

Hoping somehow to force the U.S. Treasury to pay them, the hocus pocus producers have used, among other devices, blackmail against the Daddy Bush White House, the Clinton White House, and against the current occupant and resident of the Oval Office, George W. Bush (some perceiving the real president, not inaugurated, as Albert Gore, Jr.).

Informing the present Moscow government just how the “magician’s handkerchief” trick was pulled off by the team could cause a nasty international financial scandal. Some of the same “cutters” were pressed into service following the downfall of Dictator Marshal Tito, to overthrow the Belgrade, Yugoslavia government.

Considered by knowledgeable sorts as a super war-criminal, Henry Kissinger, described by some as a German, not American, arranged the Belgrade counterfeit currency trick. (As to other details of Kissinger’s criminality, see the book The Trial Of Henry Kissinger by Christopher Hitchens, paperback, Verso, 2002.)

The Russian Ruble counterfeiters are experts on how the superior quality U.S. fake currency passes right through the Federal Reserve counting machines and other such apparatus, just as if genuine notes. (Of course, understood by some is the fact that Federal Reserve notes are hot-air-backed paper masquerading as the “U.S. Dollar”.)

Knowing a lot of the foregoing, some savvy sorts simply call them THE COUNTERFEIT RESERVE. The Fed stays quiet about the $800 billion worth of fake U.S. currency floating around the world, some of it coming back into the U.S.

What are the fake Federal Reserve notes, a massive amount, being used for? Simple. They are knowingly used, in part, to temporarily support the U.S. stock markets. To prevent a financial meltdown—the same secret reason a faction in the American Aristocracy used to cover up, if not instigate, Black Tuesday, September 11, 2001, with that faction having prior knowledge they were simply piggie-backing onto a known scheme of supposed Moslems. (To better understand this aspect, read our entire website series “The Overthrow Of The American Republic”.)

Do the bigtime fakers in the Federal Reserve, THE COUNTERFEIT RESERVE, have some of the foregoing in mind? Read carefully the implications of the following press item, datelined Washington, headlined “Federal Officials Say Policy Isn’t Limited By Low Rates”, New York Times, 11/22/02: (Emphasis added.)

“The Federal Reserve may have lowered the interest rates to the once unimaginable level of 1.25 percent, but senior officials insist they can still FLOOD THE COUNTRY WITH MONEY if they need to.

“The U.S. government has a technology, called a printing press—or, today, its electronic equivalent—that allows it to produce as many U.S. dollars as it wishes AT ESSENTIALLY NO COST” Ben S. Bernanke, one of the Federal Reserve’s seven governors, said in a speech to economists here today.

“In a detailed analysis that tracks fairly closely with general comments last week by Alan Greenspan, the Fed chairman, Mr. Bernanke described the many ways the central bank could INJECT VAST SUMS OF MONEY into the economy to combat DEFLATION, even if interest rates were to drop to zero.”

Question: Would the highly corrupt, conspiratorial Federal Reserve temporarily pump-up the U.S. markets using fake U.S. currency created by the U.S. Treasury?

To those urging that stories like this be censored, our motto may explain plenty: LET THE TRUTH BE TOLD, THOUGH THE HEAVENS CRUMBLE.

And: STOP CURSING THE DARKNESS AND LIGHT A CANDLE!

More coming. Stay tuned.

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 22 (12/6/02)

Treasury Boss Sacked

Some often have it on their mind, if not expressed as a question: Does the alternative press, often heckling The Establishment or “the powers that be” or the Ruling Class—whatever THEY are called—do the dissident views get results? And if so, how can we be sure? How can it be known, measured, or proved?

Yardsticks And Other Measurements

1. Helpful in measuring whether an “outside the box” scandal can cause commotions within the “box”, are historical records. The monopoly press keep the same, calling them “the morgue”—the place where they save old news clips, sometimes so old they are on microfilm, microfiche, and similar retention devices.

Do non-monopoly press sorts keep track that way? If not, why not? Internet search engines are helpful but limited. Did THEIR computers save the real stuff, the real possible negatives, revealing little-known happenings?

The pressfakers keep separate, not to be publicly examined, files as part of “The Blackmail Business”. Notice how big newspapers almost are beyond being sued or cannot successfully be sued in Court. Why?

A case in point is the Chicago Tribune. It is virtually impossible to bring a successful suit or claim against them. Even accidents at their facilities caused by their negligence. Why? Because they keep secret files on every judge, state and federal. And the judges know full well of the existence of such files, from anecdotal data gathered from others on the bench and in the bar.

So the Chicago Tribune, and their parent, the media monster, Tribune Company, are virtually immune from being fingered successfully in court. As we stated in our website story about the Tribune and the mob, the newspaper empire has traditionally had, as head of their parent firm, the head of the Federal Reserve Chicago District Bank.

Helpful in this regard, for the public benefit rather than private enrichment, are huge files kept by non-mass-media research and investigation groups. I am the founder/chairman of such a group, since 1963, the Citizen's Committee To Clean Up The Court. As part of our work we have amassed, amongst us, some one million records, audio and video tapes, secret notebooks, little-known court files, notes of witnesses and sources (whose identities we have an absolute policy NOT to divulge, so as to preserve their identity and employment, if not their actual life).

We have the notes of, for example, the most endangered species in the United States: forthright, honest judges. Over the years, some of them have met with us on the sly, to tell us their woes and seek our off-the-record suggestions.

Not one of our sources, but having been considered one of the most outspoken brave judges in America, is the judge who dared issue and cause to be published in the law books, the following: (Emphasis added.)

"More than once judges of a court have been indirectly reminded that they are personally taxpayers. No sophisticated person is unaware that even in this Commonwealth the INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE has been in possession of facts with respect to public officials which it has PRESENTED or SHELVED in order to serve what can only be called political ends, be they high or low. AND A JUDGE WHO KNOWS THE SCORE is aware that every time HIS DECISIONS OFFEND THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, he is inviting a close inspection of his own returns."

(Lord vs. Kelley, 240 F.Supp. 167, at 169, United States District Court, District of Massachusetts, 1965. Available in most law libraries as Volume 240, Federal Supplement, starting at page 167.)

It was apparently the same Federal judge in Boston who dared declare the Vietnam War unconstitutional, but whose decision was overturned by the war-mongering banker-judges on the U.S. Supreme Court.

For similar reasons, most every organ of the mass media dares NOT offend the U.S. Treasury, the U.S. Secret Service, and the Internal Revenue Service.

2. A long-festering mess, for years kept out of the popular press in the U.S., has been the huge amount of superior quality counterfeit U.S. currency (actually, Federal Reserve hot-air notes, backed by nothing, masquerading before the public as the "U.S. Dollar"). In a prior exclusive story, we dealt with this subject.

So, shortly after our story is posted, what happened? Why, the U.S. Treasury boss, Paul O'Neill, is sacked. Of course, cynical sorts have a way of explaining it. They say, Josef Stalin would have given him two choices, if at all: exile to Siberia or the firing squad. O'Neill, the money boss, has a number of failures to his record, as far as the current occupant and resident of the White House is concerned:

- Failure to successfully investigate the sizeable number of U.S. Secret Service agents who have lately and mysteriously resigned. O'Neill failed to adequately find out and failed to shut them up. Some ex-agents confirm to media sources, in confidence, that they are fed-up with the sexual perversions of George W. Bush, including traveling around with his long-time male sex-mate. Bush and this person, mayor of a sizeable city, rendezvous at a certain lounge purportedly owned by a major financier of Osama bin Laden, demonized by Bush as the cause of most problems of the U.S., despite the fact that the Bush Crime Family has been in business with the bin Laden Family, including Osama, who they are NOT on the outs with.

- Failure, by O'Neill, to stop all mention of the huge problem of superior counterfeit U.S. currency, actually Federal Reserve Notes. It is causing tremendous friction between the Washington government and the Moscow government. Moscow czar Putin is beginning to find out that he and his predecessor, Yeltsin, had and have been propped up with huge amounts of U.S. currency, part of it the superior quality bogus U.S. currency. Short of ringing the neck of George W. Bush, how is Putin, supposedly now a U.S. ally, formerly big with the Secret Police, supposed to react?

- Failure by the U.S. Secret Service, part of the U.S. Treasury, to keep secret a previously not publicized film, together with documents, tending to show that Daddy Bush was instrumental in the plot to assassinate President John F. Kennedy. (An FBI document, dated November 29, 1963, circulated by us and a few others, tends to show the elder Bush was part of the JFK plot cover-up.) Failure, as well, by the U.S. Secret Service, to keep out of U.S. bookstores, as they have in the past, the forbidden book Farewell America, written by the French CIA under the pen-name

"James Hepburn". Now available, since October 2002, for the first time in U.S. bookstores since being first issued in 1968. Amazon.com has been offering the same in paperback. (Previous hardback bootleg copies brought as much as one hundred dollars.) The book details the plot against JFK.

- Failure of the U.S. Treasury, by boss O'Neill, to adequately co-operate with the Federal Reserve czar Alan Greenspan, to successfully pump-up the U.S. Stock Market, at least temporarily, jointly using part of the long-secret superior-quality phony-baloney U.S. currency. In such failures the Treasury and the Fed are opening the way for a possible "change of regime"—not in Baghdad, BUT WASHINGTON. In our prior exclusive details, we told about the dissident U.S. Admirals and Generals vowing to arrest Commander-in-Chief Clinton for treason. If Clinton were to arrest them for mutiny, if they survived and were not assassinated, they planned to defend their position documenting Clinton's treason against the American commonfolk to favor the Red Chinese. Although, as we have mentioned, ten of these flag officers, military jargon description, have been assassinated. BUT, there is now a much larger group itching to target George W. Bush, as to the treasonous acts by him, as supervised by Daddy Bush, former head of the secret political police, and others.

- Failure by O'Neill, as Treasury pooh-bah, jointly with the conspiratorial Federal Reserve, to turn-up the U.S. economy, thus paving the way for George W. Bush to be another Herbert Hoover, à la 1931. Did Albert Gore Jr. sidestep being in charge of the White House when he did not fight back "The Gang of Five" on the U.S. Supreme Court, when they, like a military junta, installed George W. Bush as the resident and occupant of the Oval Office, on that infamous December evening of 2000? Some of Gore's confidants claim he so much as muttered under his breath: "Let George be Hooverized, not me"—anticipating a serious meltdown of the U.S. financial system.

George W. Bush, in dismissing Treasury strawboss O'Neill, is blaming one of the stooges for the acts and doings of chief pro-British stooge, George himself. The Bush Family, as we have documented, share the proceeds of illicit dealings in a joint account with the Queen of England, at her private bank, Coutts Bank London. (See secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records, under the secret code of Greenspan, in a transaction of ONE HUNDRED BILLION DOLLARS, in our website series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush", where the records of twenty five secret Bush Crime Family worldwide bank accounts are attached to our stories.)

Note how the British Monarch sent the head of her private bank to a key position with the Carlyle Group, where Daddy Bush has been a heavily paid consultant to the bin Laden business interests. As noted in the Financial Times of London for December 19, 2001.

- Failure of the U.S. Treasury, through their Internal Revenue Service unit, to increase tax collections, to finance a proposed war to capture and dominate one of the world's largest oil reserves not fully developed, namely Iraq. And remember: Daddy Bush had been a private business partner, in the 1980s, with Saddam Hussein, as shown in an unpublicized federal case in Chicago. (See our research story "The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh" on our website.)

Thus, the Treasury, as supposedly supervised by O'Neill, failed to crack-down on tax cheats. BUT, who were those tax cheats, if not those tied to the Bush Crime Family? Such as WorldCom. Such as Enron. Such as Microsoft, which reportedly pays no taxes, using reputed book-cooking, yet doing a zillion-dollar business. Such as General Electric. Greenspan's wife, Washington correspondent for NBC, Andrea Mitchell, has ostensibly covered up GE's financial finagling. Mrs. Greenspan's boss has been GE unit NBC.

Some old-time cynics in Chicago perhaps remember my first appearance on a live, not-taped, TV talk-show in 1967. The host blundered when asking me a question he did not know in advance the answer to: "Mr. Skolnick, you contend Chicago and elsewhere around the nation are riddled with bribe-taking judges. What do you suggest be done with them?" He turned visibly pale when I answered: "Selling justice, they are not entitled to Due Process of Law. They should be dealt with by a National Firing Squad, to teach the bench and the bar a lesson."

One form of proof is circumstantial. With such evidence, some in the past have even been sentenced to the electric chair or execution by lethal injection. A useful research tool, if not an actual yardstick, is propinquity—events that can be shown to be related, a sort of event kinship.

Various mass media reporters are becoming aware of the details of the massive amount of fake superior-quality U.S. currency, much of it coming back from overseas, and also how George W. Bush's cavorting with his male sex-mate is enabling Red China to defeat U.S. national security by way of blackmail.

Is the Federal Reserve dictator the next to hurry-up his retirement? We call the Oval Office resident and occupant "Bushfraud" for reasons we have previously mentioned. He has cut back the wages of federal employees and his political party fails to extend unemployment benefits to a suffering nation. Does HE remember what happened to the last monarch who scornfully told the anguished populace: "Let them eat cake!"? More coming. Stay tuned.

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 23 (12/20/02)

The Fake Money Business

When private business partners have a falling out, it seems to be like a divorce.

1. From inside information, they rant against one another. Each hollars that the other was never any good.

2. One partner accuses the other of cheating, on friendship, on money, on business, on assets.

3. Each accuses the other of hiding or stealing the family jewels.

If you understand this, you comprehend how George Herbert Walker Bush and Saddam Hussein react to each other nowadays. Daddy Bush was actually important to the American CIA since formation of Zapata Petroleum Company, later called Zapata Offshore. They had hundreds of overseas affiliates. Some contend the firm assisted foreign and domestic spy agencies as a cover operation for covert activities and sucking-up intelligence data worldwide. Others assert Zapata's offshore drilling platforms, such as those in the sea beyond the U.S. jurisdictional limits, are transit points for clandestine shipments, such as dope.

Was/is this a way of helicopters, servicing the oil drilling, picking up narcotics shipments, and getting them into the U.S.? Some think so. International wire service Reuters, some years ago, studied the matter and so alleged. (The exact dates of their items are hard to track down, but are known to exist. Was the story dropped into a black media hole?) So, Daddy Bush has been apparently for many years part of the dope trafficking.

One heavily detailed book mentions that Daddy Bush was started in the oil business by British royals. (The Unauthorized Biography Of George Bush by Webster Tarpley et al., 1992.)

In an FBI document, dated November 29, 1963, circulated by us and others, shown is "George Bush of the Central Intelligence Agency" who played a key role in the covering up of certain data as to the murder of President John F. Kennedy.

So George Bush The Elder was active in the American spy community long before he was, for eleven and a half months in 1976, Director of Central Intelligence. And ever after, as well. He was instrumental, in the late 1970s, of installing, through political assassinations, in Iraq, Saddam Hussein as the Iraqi strongman.

In the 1980s, Daddy Bush was Saddam's PRIVATE business partner. It was the subject of a little-mentioned Federal Court case in Chicago, where this freelance journalist was the only reporter covering the court hearing. My exclusive story appeared in a populist weekly newspaper, The Spotlight, August 19, 1991. (See our website story, "The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh" for more details.)

Bush the Elder and Saddam Hussein, just like a Mafia gang shake-down, extracted "protection money" from the weak oil sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf. Also, Bush's criminal business confederates in the 1980s, inside and outside the White House, supplied Saddam with the beginnings of nuclear and bio-chemical materials and research, for the possible development of so-called "weapons of mass destruction".

(See the heavily detailed book The Spider's Web: The Secret History Of How The White House Illegally Armed Iraq by Alan Friedman, Bantam Books, 1993, never adequately publicized in the oil-soaked, spy-riddled American monopoly press.)

Recently, the present Bush White House obtained the original of Saddam's response to the United Nations inspection team, a many-thousand-page document. Bush, in turn, had copies supposedly made of this and turned it over to other members of the U.N. Security Council. Some assert that the Bush White House eliminated or redacted some of the pages showing the role of the Bush Crime Family in supplying such items to Baghdad. (See "Annan [U.N. Secretary General] Criticizes Handling Of Iraqi Files", New York Times, December 11, 2002.)

The Persian Gulf conflict of 1990-1991, in its simplest form, was just, as we have shown, a falling out of disgruntled private business partners, Daddy Bush and Saddam Hussein. In 1991, Daddy Bush stole billions and billions of dollars of monies and assets belonging to Saddam, his former partner. These purloined funds were transferred to twenty five secret worldwide accounts of the Bush Crime Family.

(See our extensive website series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush" where the secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records, showing Greenspan's and other secret codes, are attached and can be brought up on the screen. For example, one account shows ONE HUNDRED BILLION DOLLARS—partly traceable to assets and funds belonging to former business partner Saddam Hussein—were transferred to a joint Bush account that the Bush Crime Family had with the Queen of England in her private bank, Coutts Bank London. And notice how the Queen arranged for the head of her bank to leave and become a top official of Daddy Bush's purported war-mongering operation, the Carlyle Group, with an armlock on the American war weapons industry. According to the Financial Times of London, December 19, 2001: "The Queen has a new bank manager, following the departure of Andrew Fisher, chief executive of Coutts, to the Carlyle Group, the U.S. private equity firm.")

Here is what happened in the 1990s and thereafter, after Daddy Bush stole hundreds of billions of dollars belonging to his former private business partner, Saddam Hussein. Using the American CIA, Bush set about to try to topple the Baghdad regime, the classical way using fake money. Historically, it has overthrown governments quicker than dropping bombs.

A team of highly-skilled counterfeiters, headed by a master "cutter" (the trade lingo for a superior performing steel engraver), produced the plates for counterfeit U.S. paper money. (Of course, actually this paper money of a private central bank, the so-called FEDERAL Reserve, has long masqueraded, throughout the world, as the so-called "U.S. Dollar".)

Daddy Bush, in various deals (some of them through oil machinery suppliers headed or connected to Richard Cheney), saw to it that Iraq was flooded with superior fake U.S. hundred dollar bills. They were so expertly made, they actually passed through the Federal Reserve's counting machines as if they were genuine. This type of trick worked well when the same counterfeit team, headed by the same master "cutter", then working for a secret unit of the U.S. Treasury and American CIA, flooded the Soviet Union with superior-quality fake Russian rubles. It caused the collapse of the Moscow government.

In the 1990s, Daddy Bush and his gang of criminals purported to be supporting Yeltsin and then Putin with U.S. paper money—actually some $800 billion of superior-quality fake U.S. paper money. Putin finally caught on to this trick and is shoveling them BACK to the U.S. by the Moscow government's huge buying of gold in the run-up in December, 2002. (See Part 22 of this series.)

The Bush Crime Family are known to be terrible cheapskates. They reserve the right NOT to pay for goods and services supplied to them. So the crack counterfeit team were, and are, disgruntled, whispering details into the ears of more independent-minded journalists not part of the monopoly press. The team, as typically handled by the Bushs, has NOT been compensated or paid off, as promised by the American CIA and the U.S. Treasury, at the behest of Daddy Bush.

By the way, some of these countefeiters, absolute experts at their work, previously worked on the other side, producing expertly made plates for Mafia-style gangs. Some cynics, however, prefer to point to the U.S. Treasury and the American CIA as two agencies themselves constituting an underworld.

Whatever opinion you have made of Saddam Hussein [generally formed from heavily biased accounts through the controlled mainstream media], he is NOT some dummy. The superior quality hundred dollar U.S. paper money bills that flooded Iraq and the Mideast by Daddy Bush—well, Saddam, in turn, dumped them on Europe, and from which they are coming back to haunt and trouble the United States.

To cover up this treason and criminality done by Daddy Bush against the American people and their organic law, the U.S. Constitution and Bill Of Rights, his son, George W. Bush, the resident and occupant of the Oval Office installed by a military junta-style Five of the U.S. Supreme Court, feels obligated to find a reason to protect Bush the Elder by violently seeking to remove the Baghdad regime. Saddam's details, documents, and testimony can send Daddy Bush and members of his crime cabal to prison for treason and other high crimes.

Meanwhile, does anyone in the lap-dog monopoly press ever mention anything positive of the distinguished background of Iraq, once called Mesopotamia?

The Greeks called it Mesopotamia—"the land between the two rivers" the Euphrates and the Tigris. The word "iraq" is an Arabic noun meaning the shore and grazing area of a river. Iraq was invented by the British, experts on divide and conquer. (As stated earlier in this series, the Brits have been trying, since the War of 1812 when they burned down the U.S. Capitol, to overthrow the American government, returning us to being mere subjects of the British Monarchy, and this continent returned to being just puppet colonies of the Crown.)

After World War I, the British (also with French help) wanted to put the defeated Ottoman Empire into a historical wreckage. So they carved it up, and out of it came, among other things, Iraq, in the beginning just a puppet colony part of the League of Nations Mandates.

Who ever reminds us that the country of Mesopotamia, now called Iraq, is the original Cradle of Civilization, where were first created the city-states, some 6000 years ago?

To try to protect his father from treason conviction and prison, George W. Bush is determined to silence his father's now disgruntled former business partner, Saddam Hussein.

Do we all understand that Baghdad is a cosmopolitan city of some five million inhabitants? Is the U.S., for the private purposes of the present resident and occupant of the White House, as supervised by Daddy Bush, going to demolish Baghdad by bloody violent force? And for the purpose of taking over Iraq's oilfields, which may, in time, supplant Saudi Arabia as a sizeable supplier of oil to the U.S.?

(Recently, competitor to U.S. oil firms, British Petroleum, had a rare statement of their boss. He warned the U.S. that, in taking over Iraq, the U.S. better NOT keep Britain out of the oil deal.)

Some contend that, under a supposed leader trying to protect his father and thereby cause tremendous bloodshed in Iraq and among poorly informed U.S. troops, the end result may be the change, perhaps violently, of the regime IN WASHINGTON.

More coming. Stay tuned.

Will Lunacy Become The National Illness?

Editor's note: This month's commentaries from Al Martin seem just this side of lunacy. The only problem is, Al is simply reporting on what is being done by the movers & shakers in Washington that somehow gets overlooked by a "politically correct" American print and broadcast media.

Fortunately, Al's connections and conscience motivate him to share Truth with us—that is, if we're willing to endure knowing that such lunacy rules the corridors of national power. It's bad enough that an agenda of "terrorism" is being waged upon America from within. But most people don't realize how that situation is compounded by a bought compliance from those (Congress) who are supposed to exercise the checks & balances on our behalf.

While it's true that most Americans remain asleep, growing evidence suggests that nearly 1/4 of the American public is awakening to the lunacy and becoming actively more suspicious by the day—especially as war drums beat loudly while the reasons for war remain so vague. That's a lot of people talking to friends and family and neighbors about a government whose TRUE motives become more transparent with each new pronouncement. How long until the machinery of the Great Illusion can perform its magic no longer and The People decide to reclaim their country from the lunatics? We'll see.

For those newer readers who may not be familiar with this crusader, according to his own biographical statement (at his AlMartinRaw.com Internet website), Al is America's foremost whistleblower on government fraud and corruption. A retired U.S. Navy Lt. Commander and former officer in the Office of Naval Intelligence, he has testified before Congress (the Kerry Committee and the Alexander Committee) regarding Iran-Contra. Al Martin is the author of the revealing and witty exposé titled The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider (2001, National Liberty Press; order from Wisdom Books & Press; see information nearby).

The Bush Cabal End-Game: Terrorist Insurance, Kissinger, And Other Scams

(12/2/02)

The Bush scams continue.

Last week it was protecting Republican pals in the pharmaceutical industry and security firms from lawsuits. This week there's the terrorism insurance bill. Nobody really understood what it was all about, but now we know.

As you may remember, it was something that Bush kept pushing and pushing. Why? Now we know the scam.

First of all, it's a huge lie, as was pointed out once he signed it. Bush kept trying to sell it on the idea that "let's put America back to work" and "look at all the construction projects that have been held up because there's no terrorism insurance".

The Chicago Daily News did a big investigation piece on this. Did you know there was not one construction project in the United States that was held up for lack of terrorism insurance?

This was pointed out to the Bush Administration, so they finally backed down from the previous lies and said that "this will help the nation's economy". And there's Bush standing there, signing it, next to a bunch of guys wearing hard hats, who are supposed to be construction workers out of work. And Bush says: "This bill will put these people back to work."

And the guy from the Chicago Daily News says: "Well, Mr. President, these men were never out of work because of the lack of terrorism insurance" and this really embarrassed Bush.

The idea of providing catastrophic or unusual insurance coverage from the government is not new. They talked about riot insurance that the Johnson and Nixon administrations had offered to insurance companies in the late 1960s and early 1970s. The insurance companies had to pay premiums for them.

This so-called "terrorist insurance" is a straight giveaway of taxpayers' money. The insurance companies don't have to pay a dime for it.

The U.S. Government now says they will provide up to $90 billion a year of coverage if any property covered by any insurance company is destroyed due to "terrorist attacks". And the minimum claim level they're worried about is just $3000—which they say is so low that it could literally be construed that a guy who throws a pipe bomb through a shop window would be enough to collect, once they declare it an act of terrorism.

The whole phony scheme is that its billed as a Terrorism Insurance Bill but it doesn't really have to be "terrorism". Under the bill's guidelines, anything could be construed as an act of "terrorism".

(Maybe they'll be able to grandfather-in Wellstone's "accident" into the terrorism insurance provisions.)

This is a direct giveaway of U.S. taxpayers' money to the insurance companies—without the insurance companies having to pay one dime.

It makes you wonder if Hank Greenberg, a/k/a Mr. AIG, is the prime beneficiary; but the really big beneficiaries are the offshore-based re-insurance companies. There are only really a couple of big American reinsurance companies left.

In anticipation of this bill, many reinsurance companies moved a lot of their surplus accounts. They've been taking profits, which should have been paid out in the form of dividends, and simply tucking them away in an offshore account, so they can't be touched. Instead they will be using taxpayers' money should there be any further "terrorist" incident.

This is just a $90-billion-a-year giveaway of U.S. taxpayers' money to help Bushonian friends in the insurance business.

The definition of "terrorist act" is so loose that the man from the American Consumer Conference on Insurance said the terrorist part of this is so weak that even if a blond-haired blue-eyed guy throws a pipe bomb through a bakery window because he's upset, as long as he's upset and he disagrees with Bushonian policy on the "war on terrorism" and "domestic security", then he's classified as a "terrorist".

Any internal act of violence that results in the destruction of property can be construed as a "terrorist" act, as long as the perpetrator of that act is a "bad citizen"—a citizen who disagrees with Bushonian policy.

The definition of what a terrorist is keeps blurring and simultaneously expanding to include more American citizens.

But this act opens American taxpayers up to an enormous potential liability the way the bill is written. Bush said that if a billion dollar office building were knocked down, this insurance would rebuild it. But that's not what the fine print says.

The fine print says that this takes in a $3000 minimum claims limit considering who it is by the new definition of who can be declared a terrorist.

This could set up a whole new category of insurance scam. The Terrorist Fender Bender Scam. Or the Terrorist Whiplash Scam—as in: “The terrorist gave me whiplash when he rear-ended me.”

And who's on the board of directors of American Re? There has been a long and close affiliation of the Bush Family and the insurance industry, especially American Re and AIG. (See my book The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran Contra Insider.)

This is just a transfer of money from the American taxpayer to Bushonian-friendly insurance companies. And that's all this terrorism insurance bill really is.

But you can imagine the way this is set up, and the scams that are going to be formed.

Bush also signed the so-called Intelligence Authorization Act which vastly increases the power of the FBI, CIA, NSA, etc., to spy on American citizens. It effectively extends presidential power to override part of the CIA's charter and loosen the regulation about the CIA not being able to spy domestically. This will be a contravention of the CIA charter (National Security Act Of 1947) by expanding the CIA's ability to spy on U.S. citizens within the United States.

Using his new powers under the USA Patriot Act, Bush has the ability to expand the CIA's capabilities, contravening the original law, to surveil upon American citizens domestically.

* * *

In other news, Bush knows that it's all over, and he's just going through the motions. He's come up with nothing new in terms of an economic agenda, and no new economic stimulus. The only thing he wants to see passed are accelerated tax cuts for the rich and the elimination of the estate tax—none of which are going to provide a boost to the economy.

Bush understands that a lot of people are beginning to understand: the long-term economic collapse of the United States is now unavoidable because of what the Bushes have done to us. Consequently the only thing he's doing is attempting to execute the rest of his agenda, i.e., to make the United States a defacto tax-free nation for the rich and to transfer as much public money to Bushonian Cabalist interests as possible. I think that's his only agenda.

He knows that there's nothing that he can do to turn things around, since it was he and his father who destroyed it all. Obviously it would be ludicrous for them to make any effort to turn it around—because then people would figure out what it was that they did to begin with.

Now there's not even a pretense anymore, because Bush knows that it's politically impossible to save the United States economically. The Charlie Rose Show said what I've been saying all along on radio shows, that even if George Bush Jr. only serves one term in office, he's going to leave behind at least a $15 to $18 TRILLION debt, depending on how you calculate it.

It would take 50 consecutive years of an administration that could produce $300 billion annual budget surpluses over 50 consecutive years to pay down that debt. And what are the chances of the American people allowing that to happen? They wouldn't allow a fiscally prudent regime to remain in office that long.

They would have to suffer the consequences of the previous Bushonian frauds and it would all have to come out. And that isn't going to happen. The mainstream media would never allow that to happen. The Republicans would never let that happen. The Republicans are transferring as much wealth from the people to themselves as possible, and garnering as much political and would-be military control, so they can control the collapse when it comes.

If the whole truth would ever come out now, there wouldn't be any more Republican Party.

People ask me on radio shows all the time: “What do we do about it?” And I say: “You do what the Smart Republican Money does; that is, you trade the markets now to make as much as you can, convert your profits into gold, and sit on it and wait for the end to come.”

I say you don't need cans of Spam like the survivalists say. Food will always be available. It'll just cost more. Or the currency necessary to purchase it will change.

But nobody cares anymore.

The enforcement agencies don't enforce anymore. Their enforcement powers have been watered down. Their budgets have been dissipated. The FBI is actually considering doing away with its WCC (White Collar Crime) division because the White House wants them to concentrate almost exclusively on “terrorism”.

The Wall Street Journal got rid of its white-collar crime-reporting writers. The SEC is in turmoil and has been watered down. The FTC has been stripped. All the regulatory agencies virtually don't exist anymore. We're potentially creating a whole new era of the Salad Days of Fraud again.

In other news, Bush held a news conference on the formation of the “independent” commission on 9/11, which is going to investigate “U.S. intelligence failures” leading up to the 9/11 incident.

And guess who's heading the commission? Henry Kissinger. And he said: “Ve vill find out und ve vill take ze leads to verever dey go.”

If this isn't a classic case of putting the fox in charge of the henhouse!

Henry is going to tell us who all the Bad Republicans are, who committed the intelligence failures. But this bespeaks volumes about the whitewash of this probe.

Henry Kissinger has spent his entire career covering up for the Bush Family, particularly when it came to covering up connections to Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf in general.

Kissinger helped cover up the Bush Family's long affiliation with Ghaith Pharaon, the former head of Saudi Intelligence, and their affiliation with

EXCLUSIVE SHOCKING EXPOSE OF CRIMINAL GOVERNMENT

THE CONSPIRATORS
SECRETS OF AN IRAN-CONTRA INSIDER
AL MARTIN

$19.95 (+S/H)
Code: THCO (1.0 lb.)

WHAT IF a criminal cabal, a de facto white-collar crime syndicate, took over the U.S. Government and used its systems and operations for its own profit? According to former government operative and now whistleblower Al Martin, this is exactly what has happened.

For example, at a meeting with General Richard V. Secord, Martin was briefed about Iran-Contra operations and allowed to view voluminous CIA white papers concerning Operation Black Eagle, the code-name for the Bush-Casey-North program involving U.S. Government-sanctioned narcotics trafficking, illicit weapons deals, and wholesale fraud—corporate securities fraud, real estate fraud, banking fraud, and insurance fraud.

Martin has first-hand knowledge of the dirty deals, high-level scams, frauds, and treasonous activities of the U.S. Shadow Government costing taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars—and still growing. This is a story of true conspiracy, an uncensored look at what really goes on in the back rooms of criminal power politics.

Osama bin Laden.

Pharaon was getting tired of getting hammered all the time for his connections with George Bush Sr. and he told Bush that if you don't get the media and these congressional Democrats off my back, who keep sending subpoenas to every country in the world looking for me, I'm going to have to start telling the truth.

This was a time when George Bush Sr. was head of CIA and Pharaon was the head of Saudi intelligence. And now they put a guy like Kissinger in who can carefully weed out every single connection that the Bush Family has with Saudi Arabia.

You can call this 9/11 probe the "Warren Commission Redux" in honor of the cover-up of the Kennedy assassination.

It must be noted that Kissinger is one of America's greatest criminals. In fact, Kissinger is the first World-Class Criminal, a man who cannot enter more than 37 countries because he's either under subpoena by some investigating committee within those countries or because those countries have stated that they will not use their own intelligence resources to protect him from assassination.

After all, even John Poindexter—former Iran-Contra Scamscaater and now head of the Defense Department's Information Awareness Office—and Oliver North are only barred from entering Costa Rica, where they were both under indictment.

It really is ironic that Henry Kissinger, the world's first Global Criminal would have been picked to do the 9/11 cover-up.

Another note about Dick Cheney. The timber industry was pressuring the Bush Administration to speed up the relaxation of logging. They were complaining that a lot of the easing of logging regulations and pollution control had gotten bogged down in red tape and the Bush Administration promised to immediately clear up the red tape "for the sake of American industrial expansion". Dick Cheney has always been closely aligned with timber industry interests, and for years fought for the timber industry in Wyoming being completely exempted from Bureau of Land Management regulations.

Cheney said that we might as well cut all the trees down now, since we're going to do it eventually anyway "to build more tract housing and strip malls". He was smiling when he said it.

That's the Republican Mandate—raping and pillaging the environment to the very end.

The interviewer asked him: "But what about the pollution of the rivers and soil erosion, Mr. Vice President?"

And Cheney shrugged his shoulders and says: "Who cares?"

There's no pretense anymore. Putting Kissinger in charge of the 9/11 probe is like a bitch slap—not only to the American people, but to the entire world.

When the Bush Administration put Kissinger in charge of the 9/11 probe, Pro Gov Net (Pro-Government Network) media did a poll: "Do you think Henry Kissinger was the best man for the job?" And 78% of the people said "yes".

It's because of these responses that they get from the American people that they don't have to lie. They really don't have to lie or couch things anymore. They just come right out and say it.

[Editor's note: Put the other way around—and assuming you can sort of believe ANY poll these days—at least 1/4 of the American people are awake and aware enough to appreciate what is going on. And that's an alarming number of people from the crooks' perspective of keeping the public under control.]

The Bushonian Cabal has created a whole new political movement in this country, which I have entitled "American Disempowerment". Or you could call it "American Catatonia". We have become a nation floating in a sea of Jack Daniel's, punctuated by bobbing capsules of Prozac, adrift on rafts in a catatonic sea.

It's the American Comatose public. Or, to coin a phrase, the United States of Catatonia. (Not to be confused with Catalonia.)

Finally, we have a new tagline for the AlMartinRaw website: "Information may want to be free, but you know you have to pay for the truth."

In other words, information is a commodity just like any other, that is bought and sold every day. Information, like any other commodity, is worth what you pay for it.

But the truth, of course, is on a different level. There are no discount coupons for the truth.

Fox News did a very good report on Homeland Security and the Department of Justice, wherein they explained the ongoing effort to classify every U.S. citizen for security risks.

You would be absolutely amazed at their intentions and what they're doing. For instance, all convicted felons—no matter what type of crime they were convicted of—will carry a higher security risk classification.

To refresh your memory, the new citizen security classification goes from E1 to E8. E1 is the most patriotic, the most loyal and most naive citizen, those citizens who have the biggest set of blinders or deepest rose-colored glasses, or those who have sprained their arm waving the American flag.

The E8 will be those people like me, those who know the truth about the Bushonian Regime and the individual members of the Bush Family, the truth about their agenda, and who have established for themselves a platform upon which to announce it to the public.

They didn't say who got the contract for the data management software and administration, even though that is the most important information. They're supposed to be building the database capability now, but they don't have all the

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now!"

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli") has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

capabilities they want yet.

This will be a collaboration between the Office of Homeland Security, the Department of Justice, the Office of Cyberspace Security, the World Internet Police, and then it goes to the State Civilian Defense Force and the Neighborhood Watch Association. These are all the elements involved in it, along with the FBI, in collecting this data.

The information will start trickling up from the local Neighborhood Watch grassroots level. Once this classification process is completed, convicted felons, no matter what they were convicted of (even convicted of the most innocuous non-violent crime, such as passing bad checks) will no longer be able to take a commercial airline flight in the United States. They will not even be able to board, and that will be part of the new security profile.

They said that now there are over 6 million convicted felons in the United States, who are not in prison, and they will not be allowed to board a commercial airliner. Then, when the database is completed, they will not be allowed to board an interstate train or bus either.

(This could be a niche marketing opportunity for private charter services—felon transportation service. And smokers too. You could have the SFA—Smokers & Felons Air.)

But it makes you wonder: will this new regulation also apply to the convicted felons within the Bush Administration? Probably not. They don't fly commercial; they fly on Department of Defense aircraft.

Remember Bush Cabal felons fly free. Felons, you too can go to work for the Bush Administration and fly free.

They also talked about the new restrictions that the Office of Homeland Security and the Department of Justice are putting on demonstrations and protest marches. It's absolutely incredible. If the local police deem them to be "violent", demonstrations and protest marches will no longer be tolerated. In other words, every person who has participated in such a civil disobedience march or protest will now be arrested and charged with a felony under the Homeland Security Act.

The spokeswoman from the Department of Justice mentioned that they know (because of the massive increase in the use of publicly funded security cameras) and they already have a pretty good idea "who the rabble rousers are". They were talking about the recent protests in Seattle against the IMF conference and she disdainfully spoke about "the people before profit" crowd whom she labeled as "communist". This will no longer be tolerated, she said. The only civil disobedience that will henceforth be tolerated by the government is going to be protest demonstrations by what the government deems as "recognized groups".

The leadership of these groups must be identified. They must apply for a permit—not just a local permit as before, but a special permit from the Office of Homeland Security—to hold a demonstration. They must remain behind police lines. They cannot obstruct public transportation, business, or commerce. They cannot yell. The signs they use can be not larger than one square foot. The language of the signs cannot contain anything that incites others to commit civil disobedience, or other language or disclosure of information which the Office of Homeland Security deems to be "injurious to the security of the State".

Art projects will also be severely limited by the Bush Administration, which will be cutting back on humanitarian assistance to the arts. If you take public money as an artist, musician, etc., you must now be approved by the Office of Homeland Security.

(If you remember Soviet art, you could only do "patriotic" murals of workers holding up hammers and sickles. And that's exactly what we're coming to. The Bush Administration's National Endowment for the Arts will not tolerate any nudity, any perversity, or any disparagement of recognized religious values. This could be a precursor of the resurgence of politically correct Aryan Art—like blond, blue-eyed boys waving banners in the air.)

Furthermore the Office of Homeland Security will begin to enforce Statute 432 of the National Security Act as amended in 1949-50, which says that citizens who reveal their knowledge of a criminal act being committed by government may themselves be charged with a felonious offense, if the Department of Justice so deems that the revelation of said information, pursuant to state sponsored or acquiesced or committed crime, may prove to be injurious to the security of the State.

The Office of Homeland Security and Department of Justice will also be asking Congress for "special exemption" to whistleblowers. In other words, whistleblowers won't have protected status anymore, if they are revealing any truths about government that should prove to be injurious to the security of the state.

Those who work for the Office of Homeland Security will be the first federal employees who will be required to take a political loyalty test, and they lose their protections under federal civil service rules against being fired. If an employee of the Office of Homeland Security should say anything outside the office critical of the Bush Administration or its policies, they will be fired. They do not enjoy federal civil service protection anymore.

This Department of Justice spokeswoman also said that the Office of Cyberspace Security is going to require non-government-approved media websites to purchase licenses because, after all, they are using public airwaves.

Whether or not they are granted those licenses depends on the content they are publishing. You can imagine what that means. She said that the licensing fee would probably be between $1250 to $2500 a year. Then she laughed and said this would get rid of 90% of the conspiracy websites. And, of course, she's right.

She also added that those citizens who believe that the government has already restricted their rights "don't know what restrictions of rights are until we have the National Identity Card and we overturn the Posse Comitatus Act. That is precisely what she said.

Also she admitted that the nation's prison systems are such that they will not be able to handle the "new influx" (her words). Therefore, the Department of Justice and Office of Homeland Security are going to ask for special appropriations to build "appropriate detention facilities for those citizens whom they may deem are acting in a seditious capacity".

They're going to ask for more money to revitalize and expand the CILF (Civilian Inmate Labor Facility) program because the CILF program, as it stands, now only has the capacity for detaining about 700,000 people. When she was asked about the "estimated target" she said we would need the ability in the future to detain as many as 2,000,000 people at a time.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Army has a new recruitment tool for young people. They have introduced new video games, an interactive domestic urban warfare video game which you can download from their website. They're promoting it now on the Gov Net Media (Government Network Media) and they're planning to have a whole library of these video games.

There's one called Domestic Urban Warfare or something similar. They showed how you could pretend to be a soldier in an elite domestic urban control unit. They showed a bunch of people, average citizens in front of a bank, protesting while the sign says "Bank Closed". The people are holding up placards that say "Down With George Bush; Restore Our Civil Rights And Give Us Our Money". Then you hear a voice which is a digitized voice representing the command for what you're supposed to do in the game. The Army loves acronyms and alphabet soup and they call these people DCMs (Domestic Civilian Malcontents).

It's interesting that there are no ragheads in these video games; they're all domestic-based. Then you see the soldiers gathering around from their firing-point positions, and the digitized voice says: "Move in and eliminate DCMs."

Then there's another game called "Find the Terrorist". It showed a typical Main Street America. Every house (save one) has a great big American flag flying out in front. All the cars in the driveways had an American flag coming out of the windows and an "I Love Bush" bumper sticker. All except one house that didn't have the American flag in front or the flags on the car. And guess which house the "terrorist" lives in?

You wouldn't believe the names of these games, like "Suppress Civil Disobedience". And they're using these video games as Army recruiting tools.

They were talking about the number of 14-year-olds playing this game. They had a bunch of these 14-year-old boys in a room and they videotaped them. And every time they machine-gunned a bunch of protesters, the kids went: "Yeah! Yeah!" They were whooping and screaming every time a line of protesters got machine-gunned down.

And I thought to myself: "Boy, if this isn't an indoctrination tool! What our new Domestic Warfare Units are going to look like." (Laurenta Beria must be smiling from his grave.)

There are no terrorists and no ragheads. It was all about putting down American civil disobedience. There's a constant monotone drone in the background. The voice says: "Civil disobedience will not be tolerated." And: "Support your government; support the leader."

In all of these videos, the president isn't called the "president" anymore. He's called "the leader". 1984 is really here. Fatherland security is here. Achtung, baby!

Some of the new prototype video games that the U.S. Army is test-marketing include "Beat-Up The Protesters" "Quell Civil Unrest" and "Find The Terrorist". It showed these kids trying out the games.

The soldiers come in with their new weapons, stun guns, valium gas, lead-weighted spinning sticky nets, and they beat up a bunch of protesters. The boys are clapping and cheering. After they had beaten up the protesters, Army trucks come in and drive them away.

They showed them driving for a long way into the middle of nowhere, and then they come into an area full of barbed-wire fences and gray cinder-block buildings. On the top of the building you see "American Dissident Detention Facility" or words to that effect. And this is how our 14- to 18-year-olds are being indoctrinated if they want to go into the Army.

(You could call this test marketing segment: Preparing For The Bushonian Nightmare.)

It's very well done. The narrator talks about how they're increasing the pay and pension benefits and increasing housing allowances and upgraded the food that the military gets to eat. They also talked about how they use what they called "Psycho-Conditioning" people, who work for the National Security Agency, and they've taken the best and transferred them to Homeland Security to come up with these new psych programs.

In other news, Iran-Contra criminals make a comeback. The infamous Iran-Contra Scamscateers Otto Reich, John Negroponte, and Elliot Abrams are back in the Bush White House. The CIA director Bill Casey used to call them "the three weasels". They were all in charge of supporting tinhorn right-wing dictators in Central America; as long as they professed to be "anti-communist" we didn't care how many of their own peasants they killed.

Elliot Abrams, who was Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs, is now the National Security Council's senior director for Democracy, Human Rights, and International Operations. (I've written about them in my book The Conspirators.)

The Kerry Commission at the time recommended to the Department of Justice that these three men be prosecuted for obstruction of justice. Elliot Abrams' code-name was also “the weasel” given to him by Bill Casey, the late CIA Director. Casey always gave out code-names based on what he thought of people and their animal-like characteristics.

Negroponte was ambassador to Honduras at the time, and now he’s ambassador to the United Nations. They used to say that John Negroponte never saw a peasant he didn’t want to shoot. By the way, Otto Reich (not Henry Kissinger) was the original model for “Dr. Strangelove”—the character that Peter Sellers played in the Stanley Kubrick movie. Reich actually had to hold his hand down to keep from saluting. When he spoke to Reagan, Reich would always say: “Jawohl, mein Fuehrer!”

But these are the operational-level guys who ran the scams, ran the narcotics, ran the weapons, and made sure we supported various tinhorn dictators. This is Iran-Contra Redux.

Totalitarian nomenclature is also making a comeback in the United States. There was a federal court ruling that the Office of Homeland Security and all relevant domestic law enforcement organs of state (they’re not called “agencies” anymore) to detain American citizen protesters under the Enemy Combatants Act. This is the law under which José Padilla is being held because they have absolutely no evidence to prove the charges against him. He is simply being detained as a so-called “material witness”—and under this act any U.S. citizen can be detained indefinitely, forever without charge.

There are some conditions which must be met first. The Office of Homeland Security or its relevant organs, the Office of Internal Security or the Office of State Security, must declare said person to be an “enemy of the state”. It’s narrowly defined.

A person can be declared an enemy of the state and held under the act if they are publicly protesting Bushonian economics or Bushonian internal security policies. The reason why they can be detained for protesting Bushonomics, as the court mentioned, is because the United States is still under an economic state of emergency declared by the president on Sept 14, 2001. The USA Patriot Act has so expanded the powers of the president, that when the president declares a state of economic emergency, it is not subject to any congressional oversight or judicial review. And this state of emergency remains in force at the pleasure of the president.

The real reason is that the economy continues to decline, and the Bush Administration keeps spending more money, and the deficits keep ballooning, and that’s why we’re in a state of economic emergency—to prevent Congress from

The HeartMath Solution AUDIO Book by Doc Childre & Howard Martin

WHAT IF YOU COULD EASILY—• MAKE BETTER DECISIONS?
• ENHANCE CREATIVITY?
• SLOW-DOWN AGING?

You can. Simply by understanding your heart’s intelligence—which has more impact on our emotions, our mind, and our physical health than was ever thought possible! In this audio, the authors offer astonishing proof that the heart has an intelligence, one that profoundly affects our mental and physical health. When we engage the power of our heart’s intelligence, then, and only then, can we make the most of our health and our minds. These life-altering techniques will show you how to deepen the qualities long associated with the heart—wisdom, compassion, courage, love, strength, and joy.

blocking any of his defense or security spending measures.

The Office of Homeland Security asked for a court opinion on this matter because it wants to vastly expand its powers to arrest American citizen protesters in order to “smash civil disobedience”. In other words, because of the war in Iraq, civil disobedience must be controlled and cannot be tolerated. This information was simply mentioned on a crawl tape. There was no actual story in the news. (It’s as if Pro Gove Net Media is saying: “Your country has now been occupied; there is no need for further details.”)

Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge made a statement that these increased powers are necessary in anticipation of the overturning of the Posse Comitatus Act early in the next congressional session. As Ridge said, the Office of Homeland Security wants to “hit the ground running”. In other words, they want all their new authority in place.

They’re at it again. Preparations are quickly being made by NSA, CIA, Office of Homeland Security, Department of Justice, and Department of Defense for the new era in the post-Posse Comitatus environment.

The Office of Homeland Security announced that, as soon as it happens (they expect it in January when Congress returns), they will solidify the creation of their Office of Internal Security.

The Department of Defense will create a new agency underneath them known as the Office of State Security. The Department of Justice, in concert with the National Security Agency, will in turn create a third agency, the Office of Political Security.

They’re talking about the creation of an Office of State Political Police eventually. They just don’t want to come out and say it. Every time there’s an election, you’ll see them at the voting booths intimidating everyone “to ensure fair voting”. “Are you voting as a patriotic citizen?” will be the line.

The Bushonian Regime is creating an atmosphere where, in order to survive financially (and potentially later, even get fed), you have to be with them. Dissent will simply not be tolerated.

Secretary of Treasury Paul O’Neill resigned suddenly and unexpectedly on Friday [12/6/02]. And then, about ten minutes later, Larry Lindsay resigned. Of course, the Bush Regime immediately put the spin on it that these guys didn’t know what they were doing so we’re going to bring in a couple Bushonian yes-men. They were able to spin that in such a way as to make it seem bullish.

That was done on purpose to prevent the markets from tanking because the monthly unemployment numbers, released Friday morning, including the sub-numbers, were so negative that, had the Bush Regime not been able to do what they did to effectively bury the bad economic news on the second page, the Dow would have probably lost a couple hundred points that day.

Larry Lindsay was a Bushonian yes-man, but they needed someone to deflect the criticism on the buildup of debt. Lindsay, an old Reagan Bushite, has a philosophy that a buildup of debt is good. He incessantly criticized Clinton for producing fiscal surpluses and paying down the debt. This comes directly from John Maynard Keynes, the original proponent of this so-called “policy”.

The real story of O’Neill is that they wanted to get rid of him because he kept trying to tell the people the truth. They got rid of Lindsay so they could blame him for the debt problem and say that it was his idea. That’s how you could kill two birds with one stone.

The search is on for an SBYM (Super Bushonian Yes-Man). Speaking of which there is the Department of Labor’s Dr. Elaine Chow, who’s SO loyal to the BushCabal. The unemployment numbers were an unmitigated disaster, but after listening to her, you’d think they were

This is the documented autobiography of a victim of government mind-control. Cathy O'Brien is the only vocal and recovered survivor of the CIA's MK-Ultra Project Monarch mind-control operation. Chiseled deep into the white stone of the CIA's Langley, Virginia headquarters is a partial verse lifted from the Holy Bible and writings of Saint John: "...and the truth shall make you free." This statement, like the agency, is total unreality. The building that it is engraved upon houses the world's most successful manufacturer of lies to facilitate psychological warfare. The "Company" uses truth and technology as their raw materials to produce "pure" lies for control of you and America's allies. Within the pages of TRANCE Formation Of America you'll find the truth.

U.S. GOVERNMENT MIND-CONTROL

On February 8, 1988, an MK-Ultra victim, Cathy O'Brien, was covertly rescued from her mind-control enslavement by Intelligence insider Mark Phillips. Their seven-year pursuit of Justice was stopped FOR REASONS OF NATIONAL SECURITY. TRANCE Formation Of America exposes the truth behind this criminal abuse of the unconstitutional 1947 National Security Act.

THE INDIGO CHILDREN The New Kids Have Arrived by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern requires parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to help them achieve balance, harmony, and avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- Why do a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober brings together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

Bushonomics depends on this. It rests on a platform that is supported by a whole bunch of little pins, and each one of those pins is a spinmeister. To make it all work, you have to have all those pins spinning things. Otherwise it doesn't work, because the one great crack in the façade is the truth.

The greatest threat to Bushonomics is the truth, and so they have to keep spinning and spinning and spinning to keep propping up the markets.

The Global Chess Game: Saddam Puts The Bush Cabal In Check (12/10/02)

This is the untold story of the December 2002 release of the UN Report on Iraq's weapons systems.

With the release of the 12,000 pages of the UN Report on Iraq, Saddam Hussein has hoisted the Bush Cabal on its own petard. This report is divided into two sections, the first section deals with Iraqi weapons systems and nuclear weapons before 1991, and the second part deals with post 1991.

The pre-1991 section details every single weapons system and chemical and biological weapon that the Bush-I Administration illegally sold to Iraq. Therefore the Bush Administration cannot allow the release of this report because it incriminates their illegal activities.

The Iraqi guy who presented the information was very candid. He spoke very good English, and when the BBC reporter asked him how they originally obtained these so-called "weapons of mass destruction", he answered: "Well, the Bush-I Regime sold it to us."

This is an absolutely brilliant move by the Iraqis. In other words, the missile systems and all the other weapons systems the Iraqis have, were sold to them by the Bush Regime, and the Bush Administration cannot use those allegations against Iraq without fear of rehashing the entire Iraqgate Scandal, which the Bush-II Administration is scared of doing.

This would not only incriminate George Bush Sr., but it would also incriminate Dick Armitage, Elliot Abrams, Otto Reich, and John Negroponte—and, of course, these are all Bush Sr. people back in the Bush-II Regime.

That's the price you pay for maintaining a political cabal.

Sometimes with the criminal acts your cabal has committed in the past, you can't use them to extract any political mileage in the future, for fear of harming your own cabal.

What the Bush-I Regime did was both illegal and covert, and it has to be kept that way. Otherwise you simply have to rehash a scandal that you spent a lot of resources, once before, trying to cover-up.

Of course, now that the Bush-II Administration has the same criminals back in office again—almost to a man—that the Bush-I Regime had, it makes it seem even more disingenuous.

So what Saddam has done is calmed down the international community a lot by making more revelations that Bush claimed he was going to make, and he's stolen the Bush Administration's thunder by preventing the Bush Administration from using the admissions against him.

It's a brilliant move. Everybody's saying that George Bush Jr. is incredibly pissed off about it.

The Bush-II Administration is amazed how smart Saddam was to do this. They never thought this guy was smart enough to pull off a political coup like this.

Everybody's saying that Saddam isn't as stupid as he was 10 years ago and he's learned a lot since then. One thing he's learned (and he's done it to everybody) is that during the Iraqgate Scandal—which started with the Bush-I administration selling embargoed weapons components and weapon systems themselves to the government of Iraq—it should be remembered that this was a global scandal however.

The Bush-I administration also put the arm on the British, the French, and the Germans to sell Saddam illicit weapons systems during this same time period.

In the first section of the UN report, it is mentioned in great detail the special long-range artillery tubing that the British sold them illegally that the Israelis intercepted and embarrassed them at the time.

The fact that the Germans sold Iraq illegal high-speed centrifuges at the insistence of the Bush Administration as well as the krypton switches.

When they were caught, they said they did it under pressure from the Bush-I Regime.

And why did the Europeans sell Iraq these illegal weapons systems? It was very simple: American weapons contracts.

If you don't sell these weapons systems to Saddam, the Bush-I Regime told them, we would restrict British, French, and German arms companies from making bids on American projects.

You have to understand that they didn't really have to twist their arms. They just gave them the go-ahead nod, because the British, French, and German governments were licking their chops at the billions of dollars of export revenues that their companies would get. There was Siemens, for example, and Thompson—two of the largest European beneficiaries of illegal weapons sales to the government of Iraq.

As many commentators have pointed out on all the major networks, Saddam Hussein made a brilliant move because it freezes into place the Bush Administration's ability to use these admissions against Iraq that Saddam has made. It will force the Bush Administration to come up with separate evidence in order to prove that Iraq has committed violations.

Everybody knows that the Bush Administration doesn't have any separate evidence, despite the fact that they keep saying that they do.

Some of the supposed evidence depended on the cooperation of German, French, and British intelligence agencies. But that cooperation is now gone because the German, French, and British governments don't want a rehash of their involvement in the IraqGate Scandal.

Most of the so-called new information that the Bush Administration claims it has regarding Iraqi weapons violations has come from these foreign state intelligence agencies. None of this information has come from the CIA because even the CIA hasn't got it.

Now the cooperation of said friendly foreign intelligence agencies is going to come to a halt for political reasons. This does however give the Bush Administration the freedom to simply make-up the evidence. They will just fabricate it. They will make up an entire situation, which doesn't exist.

In other words, the principal allies—the British, French, and Germans—are not going to come out and publicly state that the Bush Regime fabricated the evidence.

There is one flaw in this plan—and that is, that Saddam Hussein has forced the hand of the United States, the British, French, and Germans, because now they have a common objective: to hide their common involvement in Iraqgate.

Therefore, the Bush Administration will now just fabricate evidence that the French, German, and British governments know is a fabrication. But they're obviously not going to say anything because it would be contrary to their own political interests to do so.

And everything will be covered-up once again, but this time it won't just be Bushonian Malfeasance As Usual, based on the Big Lie Principle. This time it will have a different twist: It will be Completely Manufactured News.

We are now in a new era of compressed, manufactured, and produced news—news that didn't even happen. It's not like they're taking intelligence that existed and altering it. Now they are fabricating it from the ground up.

This will give the Bush Administration, particularly the Office of Cyberspace Security, the opportunity to test some of its new high-tech video technology with holographic and electronic computer-generated inserts.

This is technology that the National Security Agency has been looking for a reason to test—the new ultra-sophisticated next-next-generation video equipment that will completely manufacture news stories that can then be released to the media.

And will the bamboozled American public buy it? Of course they will, because they buy everything else the Bush Administration has always said.

What's going to be different about this? With this new video “virtual reality” technology, the Bush Administration will be able to produce beautiful slick stories for release to the media—with pictures of different places that don't even exist.

With this new virtual reality technology, computer graphics, and holographic inserts, you can now manufacture a news story which doesn't exist. And you can make it look perfect. This is the next generation of computer-generated software. Nobody is talking about it, but it's not any big secret.

ProGovNet Media like CNN has already done stories on the new technology to produce “manufactured news”. They have said that they will start using it as a cost-cutting measure. That's how they're trying to sell it to the American people. But the bigger question would be: how does anybody know if the news is genuine anymore?

When you see a vid-clip of guys running down a hill and shooting at American troops, how do you know it actually happened?

The answer is: you don't! And you won't be able to distinguish so-called “reality” from the so-called “news” anymore.

Bushonian Snow-Job Continues, While Bushonomics Spurs New Industry (12/17/02)

In the latest Bush snow-job, it should be noted that there are two great qualifications that John Snow has in order to be Treasury Secretary in a Bushonian Regime.

First, he knows absolutely nothing about public finance—and he admitted it.

Second, he is the chairman of CSX, which is little more than an amalgamation of a bunch of formerly bankrupt railroads. The railroads went bankrupt after he took them over.

His other claim to fame was as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Transportation in the Ford Administration.

Snow's entire career has been spent in the transportation sector, not the finance sector. They made a big deal out of the fact that he's got a PhD in economics and he's a lawyer.

The only thing he has ever done in the business world is run CSX. And the only thing that CSX has ever done, which includes part of the bankrupt Amtrak by the way, is stayed alive on the back of government money.

They've changed the names so many times, and there have been so many splits and changes. They gave a part of one bankrupt railroad back to the government. The government then changed the name to Conrail (talk about an apropos name for it), which then spent billions and billions of taxpayers' money that went in to keep the thing afloat.

Conrail is a very appropriate name when you think about it. The government has spent billions trying to keep Amtrak viable, which it still is not to this day. When the Reagan-Bush Regime renamed it Conrail, I thought that was pretty appropriate. Somebody there had a sense of humor.

But the only thing the Bush Regime wants are Bushonian yes-men who will sell Bush's agenda. They have this guy Snow, who is a genuine old-time fiscal conservative in the vein of Warren Rudman. As a matter of fact, he even served on the economic advisory committee under the Clinton Administration (in spite of the fact he's only served Republicans) because he was so enthralled with the Clinton economic plan to generate fiscal surpluses.

So what the Bush Regime does is bring in a guy who is known to be an old-fashioned fiscal conservative, who eschews endless buildup of debt and wants to generate fiscal surpluses to try to inspire market confidence.

At the same time, the Bushonian Regime continues with its same old economic malfeasance of endless increases of governmental debt.

Thus Snow became effective window-dressing for all of one hour.

In other words, the effective window-dressing ended an hour later.

Then there's Steve Friedman, who was co-chairman of Goldman Sachs with Robert Rubin. He has been appointed as Bush's chief economic advisor. Friedman is the Republican version of Robert Rubin, and he is also known to be a smart money guy and also a fiscal conservative. That's one reason they picked him—to try to get a little political juice out of him.

It's going to be disingenuous. These guys are not going to last because they are hired as Bushonian yes-men and salesmen to push an agenda that they don't believe in. In fact, their personal beliefs are directly opposite of what Bush is trying to do. These guys are not going to do any better a job than O'Neill did.

Bush has got to get real and pick a Bushonian Cabalist.

Recently we have had many images of Strom Thurmond's 100th birthday party, with him sitting in his wheelchair, drooling.

You see all the old farts in Congress. Everyone you saw on TV looked beautiful with their fresh facials and their hair packed up with Grecian Formula, trying to undo the effect of having Strom Thurmond drooling in his wheelchair, with his hearing aid hanging out.

One of the things that hurt our markets was that there was a lot of negative world economic news. German industrial production for October fell 2.3%, the

The Bank of Japan knew what it contained before it was released. But it was so negative that they actually issued a warning, an hour beforehand. Because if you think we have a lot of old people who do nothing but watch CNN, MSNBC, and FNN all day and every day, in Japan they have twice as many old people hanging out and doing nothing but watching the Japanese version of the same programs all day long.

The Bank of Japan actually came out with a statement warning senior-citizen investors to take their heart medication and blood pressure medicine (or Prozac or any other anti-depressant medication) an hour before they released the report. It was a general health alert. That's how bad it was.

The Japanese Prime Minister is actually getting concerned about the number of old people who, after hearing a fresh economic report about Japan's economy continuation to slide downhill, are wheeling themselves over to the windows of their little cubicles and climbing out and that's the end of them.

They don't have the ability to throw themselves out anymore. They sort of shuffle out.

They showed a picture of a nursing home in Japan and every single old person is in a wheelchair, sitting around watching big-screen CNBC all day long. That's all they do. So, before Japan issues any economic reports, the nurses have to come by and strap them into their wheelchairs with these little belts that go around them, because they're afraid that they'll do themselves a mischief.

In United Airline bankruptcy news, the spokeswoman said that UAL is going to attempt to restructure, but in the process they will lay off about 30,000 employees. Those employees will leave with no pay, no pension, and no healthcare benefits—nothing.

A reporter asked the UAL spokeswoman: "Well, what are these 30,000 people supposed to do?" She shrugged and said: "Well, there's always the local homeless shelters."

There's a huge rift now between corporate management and the workers because corporate management is blaming the workers for not giving up enough in order to get the government guarantee package.

What prompted the UAL bankruptcy filing was when the government refused the $1.8 billion government bailout, stating that the employees hadn't given up enough. Of course, the employees are earning less than ever before. If this paycut had gone through, it would have been the 29th paycut package in 30 years. So if you went to work for UAL 30 sharpest decline in 19 months. British industrial production for November fell 0.6% after an anticipated rise was expected.

There was also the release in Japan of what they call the Tan Tan Book. It's released every quarter by the Bank of Japan and it's similar to our Beige Book, which the Fed releases every quarter. It's a survey of economic conditions.

years ago, you're earning less money today than you did then.

But I think this bespeaks volumes about the state of our economy and the new Bushonian get-tough corporate culture. Of course, corporate management is being encouraged by the Bushonian Regime to get tough with employees.

This is the new mandate with 28% of all U.S. companies near bankruptcy. The new mandate is that corporate salaries and perks will remain unchanged (their pension plans are all guaranteed separately) but from now on the workers will give up everything. That's the new culture we're in. This will be done under the guise that most of these workers aren't Republican voters anyway, so who cares.

In other news, there was a great report on CNBC called "No More Unions" about the unions and how deleterious the financial positions are now. They're the worst that they've ever been. Union leaders were saying that they're very close to dissolving the unions and packing up shop. The Bush Administration is, behind the scenes, doing everything it can to see unions dissolved.

In the Bushonian Cabal's continuing effort to liquidate all opposition, whether that's media opposition or within political constituencies, they're attempting to put all the unions out of business, and from what the UAW spokesman was saying, he directly tied-in the economy to Bush. He said that, by the end of Bush's second term, every union in this country will be simply dissolved and out of business.

Victims of Bushonomics now have an outlet. The latest thing on the Internet is the new "e-panhandle" service. It's for victims of Bushonomics, where you can establish a website and beg other people for money.

The text asks: "Are you a victim of Bushonomics? Have you lost all your IRA/401(k) account? Have you been laid off? Have you lost all of your pension?" It goes on and on in this vein. This is evidently now their number-one product in terms of growth: e-panhandle web pages.

Even federal employees are upset at the Bush Regime. They didn't get their inflation increases, which Bush vetoed because he said it would have cost $11 billion and the nation can't afford it. Then, in the very next breath, he authorized a $21 billion supplemental spending bill for the Department of Defense.

Of course, in this new environment, federal employees are frightened of saying anything. If you criticize George Bush, your name winds up on a list somewhere—in John Poindexter's able hands. Or in his files—where you don't want to be.

In other news, there was a report featuring the State of Colorado's actuary for its prepaid state university tuition program, warning people about the prepaid tuition programs which have become so popular.

She said that what the states have not been telling the parents, who have been buying these programs, is that the money is invested in market-sensitive items.

In fact, in the last three years, state university prepaid tuition program monies have taken an awful beating. She said that, if the markets do not turn around, and if inflation comes back (which is almost a certainty between now and the time your child is 18 years old), the parents are going to get a real eye-opener when they find out these state pre-paid tuition plans they bought won't be worth the paper they're written on.

Under the rules, these are not considered investment items. They're actually considered insurance products. Therefore, the states do not have to make an extensive disclosure about these products or what the risks are. The presumption—which is completely wrong, and it's not stated in the contract—is that it make the average armchair investing parent believe that these instruments are guaranteed by the state, when in fact they are not.

This product is a big money-maker for the brokerages because the states offer a 5% concession fee to the brokerage and insurance firms who market this product. A brokerage firm can't market this unless it has a Series 212 Insurance License, which most have, so they can market annuities and so on.

In fact, although the states say that the instruments are state-guaranteed, they are not. Many of the states in the last three years, she said, have lost A THIRD of this tuition money on the markets. People who buy these things may have one hell of a surprise coming down the road.

Homelessness is also now at an all-time high, and that will increase as more and more people run out of their unemployment benefits.

It was announced that Los Angeles, like all major U.S. cities since the election of George Bush, is seeing record levels of homelessness.

The mayor of Los Angeles is calling these new homeless people the victims of Bushonomics. These are people who were formerly middle class, but have now lost their jobs, been forced into bankruptcy, lost their pensions. He said these are people who are not used to being homeless, and they don't really know how to handle it.

The mayor of Los Angeles has formed an organization with the city's long-term homeless which he calls the "Bridge People" who live under bridges and push around shopping carts packed with their stuff and wear heavy winter coats in the summer. He's asking for the help of the "long-term homeless" to help acclimate the "new homeless" into their new lifestyle as homeless people.

The self-styled leader of the Bridge People was being interviewed. It's hard to tell how old he is because his face was all red and blotchy from drinking Old Irish Rose, and he had on a stocking cap and heavy coat.

But the long-term homeless were complaining, saying that there are only so many returnable and recyclable tin cans and empty bottles. They say that, if there's a big influx of new homeless people, there isn't going to be enough scraps to go around. In other words, this is impacting the Homeless Economy.

The mayor of Los Angeles then unveiled his "killing two birds with one stone" policy. In recent years there has been a big increase in the rat population of Los Angeles, and they're becoming a health problem, and they clog-up the city's sewers and so on.

The city has now been put on, as he called it, a "$4-per-tail bounty" on rats. As of this Friday, the mayor reported that since the program began, nearly 5,000 rats have been turned in for a bounty by the homeless. He reported that this is cleaning-up the city's health problem and creating a new source of revenue for the homeless.

The mayor recognizes that, with a new influx of homeless people (who are not used to being homeless), they have to be educated by the existing homeless and a new source of revenue has to be found.

This is Good News for supporters of Bushonomics. In other words, there is a bright side to Bushonomics.

Employees of Enron, WorldCom, United Airlines, etc., who voted for Bush, take heart. There is a new economy coming, growing out of the ravages of Bushonomics—the Rat Bounty Sector.

Remember: Bushonomics spurs new industry.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND AND THE WORLD TRADE CENTER DISASTER

Alice in Wonderland and the World Trade Center Disaster

Why the official story of 9/11
is a monumental lie

David
Icke

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

$29.95 (+S/H)
Code: AIW (1.75 lb.)

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

The Secret of NIKOLA TESLA

Long shrouded in secrecy, the life of Nikola Tesla is artfully illuminated in this fascinating film. Tesla, born in Croatia in 1856, is considered the father of our modern technological age and one of the greatest scientific minds who ever lived. He was an electrical engineer who changed the world with the invention of the AC (alternating current) induction motor, making the universal transmission and distribution of electricity possible. His achievements led to the discovery of radio and television as well as the development of the first hydroelectric dam, remote control, radar tracking for the military, and the manipulation of matter and energy. His discoveries are also the basis for the emerging science of Free Energy.

Encyclopedia Britannica lists Nikola Tesla as one of the most fascinating people in history. The Secret of Nikola Tesla, The Movie is a well-acted portrayal of the life and mind of a "scientific superman" who, against all odds, dedicated his life to the task of designing and improving technology for the service and advancement of humanity.

Orsen Welles stars as J.P. Morgan, Peter Bozovic as Tesla, Strother Martin as George Westinghouse, and Dennis Patrick as Thomas Edison.

Vatican Assassins

Wounded In The house of My friends

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's ungodly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

—The Book Reader, America's most independent review of new titles, Fall/Winter 2001/2002

"Probably of all books which could be called 'conspiracy oriented', this is the grand-daddy. This is the Big One, I mean it...."

"It's one of those books that, even if you're a cynic and can come to terms with only half of it, it changes everything."

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach, Volumes I & II

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

More Quotes From Volume II

"Be not in fear of the changes that are upon you, for they are a very necessary part of the [planetary] transition. The Earth will heave to and fro, and many wondrous things will you experience, but lose not your sight upon the final goal. We will always be there with you, and we are but a call away."

— Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec

"You live in perhaps the most unique time that your planet will ever experience—COMING OUT OF IGNORANCE (DARKNESS) AND INTO KNOWLEDGE (LIGHT). Would it not be wise to take full advantage of this exquisite learning environment?!"

— Sanat Kumara ("Grandfather")

"The physical body is 'merely' a conduit for the interaction into and the interfacing with the physical experience. I say 'merely' because that body is a most exquisite creation indeed and poorly understood by your current level of so-called medical science."

— Master Hilarion

"Be at peace, you who acknowledge and take within these messages of Higher Guidance, for you are being given that which you will need, in the way of instruction, to meet and surmount these challenges ahead."

— Aton, The One Light

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix' will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen."

— Back Cover, Vol. I

"Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you. (God!) You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose." — Esu "Jesus" Sananda (Vol. II)

— William Henry

Many people have a feeling of great foreboding about this year of 2003. A number of credible visionaries likewise report unusual or even ominous intuitions. The very fabric of time and space feels restless as the warmongers target Iraq. So it was time to dig deeper into this matter. What I found out may astonish you—even if it reads like pure science fiction!

NEWEST OFFERINGS AT WISDOM BOOKS

RULE BY SECRECY:

The Hidden History That Connects
The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids
by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news.

And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

COMMON SENSE II

Thomas Paine's pamphlet Common Sense was written and widely circulated in 1776. The simple logic and wisdom presented in Common Sense persuaded thousands of ordinary citizens to support a movement that sought to unite the colonies in an effort to win their independence from England. The birth of our nation and freedom from King George's tyranny is a direct result of this nation's people understanding the REAL issues and choosing freedom over tyranny.

We, the editors of Common Sense II, are anonymous—just as Common Sense was originally published anonymously. We recognize that this 92-page, 3" x 6" booklet has tall shoes to fill. Time is running out and we must once again persuade our countrymen to choose freedom over tyranny.

The sole purpose of Common Sense II is to awaken our sleeping countrymen. We have compiled the most illustrative and eloquent writings available, and have arranged them in the manner most likely to persuade a nation to stand up for freedom and independence—our God-given rights!

The Cover: The signal lantern for Paul Revere's infamous ride shined in Boston's Old North Church to warn vigilant colonists that the King's troops were heading toward Lexington and Concord, Massachusetts, early on the morning of April 19, 1775. The light is shining again today.

ALIEN AGENDA:

Investigating The Extraterrestrial
Presence Among Us
BY JIM MARRS

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. As his title indicates, the author has concluded that UFOs are piloted by extraterrestrials of various types and with diverse motives. However, rather than taking that conclusion for granted, Marrs guides his readers through 50 years of UFO history that includes some less-traveled byways, off-ramps, and dead ends. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic.

Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To Personal Growth

Here is Dan Millman's magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve "gateways" or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth.

Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant's ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a "numerologist". Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience.

Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: "The Practice Of Enlightenment"—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

REAL MIRACLE BEHIND SADDAM'S “WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION”

Things are rarely as they seem. And most readers of this publication know that fact all too well.

Since shortly after the contrived “Pearl Harbor” of 9/11 and the ever so subtle switcheroo from bad Afghanistan to even badder Iraq, the media pulpits have preached a droning fire-and-brimstone sermon about crazy Saddam Hussein and his scary “weapons of mass destruction”. Never mind that (as we’ve long shared within these pages) Daddy Bush and his cronies actually provided Iraq with many of the “seeds” that allowed Saddam’s military “gardens” to flourish.

And so, through the relentless blather of prostituted media mouths, our Official Focus has been kept exclusively on military-based scare-tactics about Saddam’s so-called “weapons of mass destruction”. That way, when the more simple-minded conspiracy theorists all jumped on the baited bandwagon to yell: “The war’s really about oil! You can’t fool us!” the crooks in high secret places could be pretty sure they had covered all the bases, thus extinguishing the fires of further inquiry. Neither of the obvious explanations would then give even the slightest hint about what might REALLY be The Truth.

Then our front-page story this month started to come together. Soon it became obvious that we probably had been hoodwinked, once again, by the clever word-games played by the New World Order elite misfits. They take lying to such a level of an art form that it often circles all the way back around to being sort of the truth—but not in any way you’d easily recognize!

(It’s like when our imperious leader ominously warned “the enemy is within” during his 1/28/03 State Of The Union fable on primetime national indoctrination television. What HE meant by that was all those plotting foreign terrorists supposedly sneaking around within the United States and up to endless no-good deeds that justified a Homeland Security Gestapo; what most of YOU readers of this publication saw all too clearly in that statement was represented by who was looking back at you on your TV screen.)

So considering the New World Order gang’s consummate skill at lying, coupled with the incredible news shared in Rick Martin’s front-page feature story this month, an entirely different—and much more intriguing—“lightbulb” comes on:

Saddam’s REAL “weapons of mass destruction” have NOTHING to do with anything intended to hurt you or I. But they have EVERYTHING to do with initiating the collapse of the entire longtime New World Order control game!

How’s THAT for having “weapons of mass destruction”?!

But what could these miracle weapons be, that could so effectively eradicate such Darkness?

Mark Twain put it best when he said: “Soap and education are not as sudden as a massacre, but they are more deadly in the long run.”

For the point of this discussion, we’ll sidestep the soap part and concentrate on THE POWER OF EDUCATION (though ol’ Mark may have been winking that soap was just as important—for washing out some lying mouths). And, of course, I mean the awesome power of TRUTHFUL education—not the synthetic baloney that’s so often dished out as education these days.

The two most highly contrived domains of such baloney are Science and History. In Science, we’ve been denied much truth and the amazing technologies that result therefrom, such as “free-energy” devices, like the great Nikola Tesla tried in vain to share with the world. In History, we’ve been fed such ridiculous fables about every important facet of our past on planet Earth that the mechanisms of organized religions have been able to sustain a major lucrative enterprise of fear-based control over the masses.

And THAT’S where Saddam’s so-called “weapons of mass destruction” enter the scene in a potent way.

You see, Saddam appears to be angling to share with the world both (1) very advanced scientific and (2) far-back historical knowledge residing in a number of secret ancient libraries located in Iraq. So if the New World Order gang doesn’t soon gain tight control over such revealing materials (as they routinely have done at so many other locations around the world), Saddam’s “bombs” would expose the frauds in history, religion, science, etc., that the New World Order elite have perpetrated on society for so long. The locks of their control game would, in a manner of speaking, get blasted wide-open. And the way would be cleared for an awesome chapter of The Great Awakening on planet Earth.

So, from THEIR point of view, Saddam indeed DOES have very powerful “weapons of mass destruction”—the mass destruction of their New World Order racket!

The crooks are not exactly lying to you, after all. It’s just that what they’re REALLY concerned about regarding “weapons of mass destruction” aren’t the same ones they’re wanting you to believe are the excuse for a war mission. Saddam has the potential to unleash a lethal strike on the chains of slavery long employed by the New World Order elite to control the rest of us.

And as Mark Twain pointed out earlier, TRUTHFUL education is absolutely deadly, in the long run, against such Evil—an idea you readers and kind supporters of this publication understand very well.

"HUMAN SHIELDS" LEAVE UK FOR IRAQ

From the rense.com website, 1/26/03:
[quoting]

Waving goodbye to families and denouncing "imperialist" warmongering, the first convoy of Western volunteers set out from London on double-decker buses on Saturday to act as "human shields" against any attack on Iraq.

About 50 volunteers, ranging from a 19-year-old factory worker to a 60-year-old former diplomat, formed the first in a series of convoys organizers say will take hundreds of anti-war activists to Iraq.

Dismissed by critics as naively playing into Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's hands, the volunteers plan to fan out to heavily populated areas of Baghdad and other parts of the country as a deterrent to Western bombing.

"Our strategy is potentially dangerous, but that is the risk we must take in standing beside our brothers and sisters in Iraq" said former U.S. Marine Ken Nichols, whose Human Shield Action Iraq group is coordinating the London departures.

"We have been inundated by volunteers. This is just the first wave. I am calling for 10,000 to get down there and stop this war" he told Reuters.

Saturday's convoy—like others being planned for early February—will travel across Europe, picking up more people on the way, loading provisions, and stopping to promote their cause.

Nichols' group is one of several around the world whose aim is to mobilize peace activists as human shields in Iraq, and show solidarity with Iraqi people in the face of a possible U.S.-led war against Saddam.

The campaign has upset some among the thousands of Westerners detained by Saddam to act as shields against attacks after his 1990 invasion of Kuwait and during the 1991 Gulf War.

They feel the volunteers do not appreciate the seriousness of what they are doing and are unaware of their past suffering.

"The majority went through hell on wheels" said Steve Brookes, who ran a support group for British victims. "Of the 1,800 or so British hostages, most suffered from some form of post-traumatic stress."

Volunteers from Nichols' group, mainly from Western nations, but including some from Turkey and China, insist they are not going to support Saddam but try to prevent the death of innocent people.

"When we arrive, we will work out where the bombing is most likely to be, where there would be the most casualties, and we will go there. Our purpose is to protect civilians" 32-year-old lecturer Uzma Bashir, from Yorkshire in northern England, told Reuters.

Many have had trouble convincing their families of the importance of their mission.

"Nine out of 10 of the people going as human shields are more scared of what their mothers say than the bombs in Iraq" said Bashir, who plans to join a second convoy from London.

In the Muslim world, the main rallying point for would-be human shields is in Jordan. There, a campaign led by leftist parties and civic bodies is seeking 100,000 volunteers.

Baghdad has said it will receive the volunteers with open arms and help them decide where to place themselves.

Washington and London are trying to garner international support for possible military strikes over Saddam's alleged programs to develop weapons of mass destruction.

[end quoting]

The convictions of these "human shield" volunteers is a lesson that goes far beyond what anyone would expect or even imagine. Keep them in your prayers and let's hope they cause the warmongers to think twice before taking any "actions of mass destruction" in Iraq—or anywhere else for that matter.

Meanwhile, if your friends want to debate the imperative of war with you, tell them they'll have to compete against a professional who learned some of The Truth back in 1933:

"WAR IS JUST A RACKET" SAYS MAJOR GENERAL
SMEDLEY BUTLER, USMC

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 1/28/03:
[quoting]

American Patriot Marine Vet
Dissenter Tells It Like It Is

(This is the first paragraph of the interview with the ex-Marine that you can read at the <http://groups.yahoo.com/group/RUMORMILLNEWS/message/1362> website:)

BARNICLE: In Baghdad, it's becoming a common ritual. A large demonstration today against the United States and United Nations weapons inspections. Some foreign anti-war protesters took part. Meantime, a group of anti-war activists from the West plan to head to Iraq to serve as human shields. The group is being organized by Ken Nichols O'Keefe, a former United States Marine in the 1991 Gulf War. He joins us from London. Mr. O'Keefe, welcome. How are you?

(Then, at the end of that interview, this is the closing speech. It's excerpted from a speech on Interventionism, delivered in 1933 by Major General Smedley Butler, USMC:)

War is just a racket. A racket is best described, I believe, as something that is not what it seems to the majority of people. Only a small inside group knows what it is about. It is conducted for the benefit of the very few, at the expense of the masses.

I believe in adequate defense at the coastline, and nothing else. If a nation comes over here to fight, then we'll fight. The trouble with America is that when the dollar only earns 6% over here, then it gets restless and goes overseas to get 100%. Then the flag follows the dollar, and the soldiers follow the flag.

I wouldn't go to war again as I have done to protect some lousy investment of the bankers. There are only two things we should fight for: One is the defense of our homes, and the other is the Bill Of Rights. War, for any other reason, is simply a racket.

There isn't a trick in the racketeering bag that the military gang is blind to. It has its "finger men" to point out enemies, its "muscle men" to destroy enemies, its "brain men" to plan war preparations, and a "Big Boss" called Super-Nationalistic Capitalism.

It may seem odd for me, a military man, to adopt such a comparison. Truthfulness compels me to. I spent thirty-three years and four months in active military service as a member of this country's most agile military force, the Marine Corps. I served in all commissioned ranks, from Second Lieutenant to Major General. And during that period, I spent most of my time being a high-class muscleman for Big Business, for Wall Street, and for the Bankers. In short, I was a racketeer, a gangster for capitalism.

I suspected I was just part of a racket at the time. Now I am sure of it. Like all the members of the military profession, I never had a thought of my own until I left the service. My mental faculties remained in suspended animation while I obeyed the orders of higher-ups. This is typical with everyone in the military service.

I helped make Mexico, especially Tampico, safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of half a dozen Central American republics for the benefits of Wall Street. The record of racketeering is long. I helped purify Nicaragua for the international banking house of Brown Brothers in 1909-1912. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for American sugar interests in 1916. In China I helped to see to it that Standard Oil went its way unmolested.

During those years, I had, as the boys in the back room would say, a swell racket. Looking back on it, I feel that I could have given Al Capone a few hints. The best he could do was to operate his racket in three districts. I operated on three continents.

[end quoting]

From the level he was involved, not quite running into the New World Order elite, it couldn't be stated any better today—and this warning was given in 1933! This kind of "racket", as he puts it, is part of the typical carrot dangled in front of the business and military puppets who carry out—with or without their understanding—still higher "consolidation of power" objectives by the elite world controllers.

With that "pyramid of power" acknowledged, consider yet another puppet of the elite and how his recent "pep talk" angered the more awake among our citizenry:

POWER - LUST PRESIDENT

From the www.lewrockwell.com/rockwell/powerlust.html Internet website, 1/29/03: [quoting]

(Llewellyn H. Rockwell, Jr. is editor of LewRockwell.com newsletter.)

I would rather eat my keyboard than watch the State Of The Union speech, so consider this article an act of sacrificial public service.

The most irritating thing about the state of our Union is that we are a captive audience in every way. This guy taxes us, spends our money on stuff he likes, sends our kids to war on his decision, lies to us, dares to believe that his personal will is somehow more important than yours or mine or anyone else's solely because he managed to eke out [stole] a few more electoral votes than Gore two years ago, and to top it off, expects that we will watch for more than an hour as he prattles, while his minions interrupt him only to stand and applaud.

Where to begin to criticize? George Bush is the biggest spender since Lyndon Johnson, increasing federal spending at a rate twice that of Clinton, and yet he stands up and demands spending restraint, seeming to blame everyone but himself.

He talks about freedom and opportunity, and then brags about his new bureaucracies, spending programs, mandates, comprehensive plans, regulations, and goals concerning all our lives, from how our kids are educated to the cars we drive, to the way we care for those in need.

He claims to care for life, decries partial-birth abortion, but refuses to rule-out the use of nuclear weapons in the war he is plotting. He calls on America to feed the entire world, liberate all its women, educate all its children, and cure all its sick, even as ghettos rife with every social pathology languish miles from the White House.

Hypocrisy? He denounces bureaucrats and praises innovation, only to demand a huge new boondoggle program to put researchers on the dole. Indeed, the underlying assumption behind the entire speech was that America's commitment is identical to his own commitment, which is reflected in HIS plans for YOUR money.

Don't write me to say that he wants to cut taxes, and so we should like him. Every few minutes, we heard spending numbers: tens and hundreds of millions, tens and hundreds of billions! It is never too much, and nothing is outside his purview. Indeed, he calls for the federal government, under his leadership, to "transform" our "souls". He went further:

he says he is defending the "hopes of all mankind".

His entire foreign policy seems like a massive effort to incite every terrorist in the world against this country, and otherwise encourage every small country to arm to the teeth against the U.S. threat. From the government's point of view, such would only increase the power of DC, so one has to wonder whether this is the point after all. And not to nitpick, but how can he at once say that Iraq is despotic for ignoring the UN, even as he brags that he will ignore the UN if he chooses?

"The course of this nation does not depend on the decisions of others. I will defend the freedom and security of the American people."

Are these not the words of a dictator?

It's too much! There should be a break at the midway point, in which we could broadcast messages like:

- You are our servant, not our master!
- Everything you do, you do with our money!
- There are three branches of government, and you only represent one!
- The powers not granted to you are reserved to the states and the people!
- You are not king of the world!
- The Founders envisioned frequent impeachments!

Instead, we must sit and watch a despotic display that seems like an import from the times of Pharaohs and Caesars, or the modern world of dictators and commissars. What does this one fellow, holed-up in the White House, living off other people's money, surrounded by sycophants and pollsters, know about the state of the union?

The speech was particularly bad this year because we are dealing with a man who has clearly lost perspective. He speaks about his desire for peace, even as he ignores the whole world's plea for him not to bomb and kill. He talks about a war on terror, but the words Osama bin Laden never pass his lips. He speaks of all the things the government will do to make us prosperous, even as his two-year track record has failed to put a dent in the worsening recession.

Indeed, his language seems to reflect a very dangerous state of mind. He habitually speaks about America as identical to the central state, and seems to regard that state as incarnated in himself—the entire apparatus of government embodied in his person.

His will is the people's will, the perfect realization of Rousseau's fantasy. But rather than the language of the French Revolution, he uses the cadences of his evangelical constituents, invoking God and quoting old-time hymns.

Americans have a hard time recognizing just how fascistically scary all this is, because we are surrounded by it all the time, and we read and watch a media that rarely draws attention to it.

But foreigners see it.

Hardly a day goes by when I don't receive a call from abroad, usually from some classical liberal scholar or supporter, who asks with astonishment: "What in the world is going on over there? What is it that drives this man? Why is your president going to war? Who does he think he is? How broadly is he supported? Are there no mechanisms available within your system of government to rein him in?"

Well, the speech tonight illustrates the problem. Whereas Clinton was merely a con man who seemed to revel in his ability to dupe people, Bush is something more alarming: he may actually believe what he is saying.

Sadly, there are no mechanisms to restrain him other than public opinion. Americans are instinctively suspicious of government, but when it is headed by someone who seems to be a good and sincere man, they let the head of state get away with murder, particularly the murder of foreigners.

Just in time, however, it is becoming more obvious than ever that the economy is not improving.

For 20 months, the business punditry and the government have been telling us that the economy is not in recession, but is rather only stumbling a bit. Recovery is perpetually underway.

The truth is that we are still in the midst of what even official data designate as the longest recession in postwar history. There's nothing like a prolonged recession to end a people's romance with the head of state, and this seems to be happening.

It was due to internal polling that the speech had an unusual focus on domestic issues, at least in minutes. But instead of recognizing an obvious truth that there is nothing the government can do to improve our lot except get out of the way, Bush has invoked a tired cliché that we must rally to a unified "great cause" that involves serving the government and serving each other in ways the government approves of.

This man has no idea what a "great cause" is. In the real world, a great cause is doing something like meeting a payroll, getting one's kids a good education, paying for college, doing a good job at work, helping the needy

How Can Electricity Help Restore Health?

Check The Beck Protocol ... A First-Aid Kit for the Future

The healing power of gentle currents of electricity was known in ancient Rome (electric fish) and was used extensively in spas and clinics before The Medical Health Model was established. Today The Natural Health Model recognizes the electrical nature of the body and the importance of working with the body's natural ability to heal itself.

The Beck Protocol offers a four-part program for health using micro-currents of electricity (Silver Pulser), pulsed magnetic fields (Magnetic Pulser), Ionic-Colloidal Silver and freshly Ozonated Water.

The Silver Pulser and Magnetic Pulser are licensed in Canada as Class-II medical devices available to the public.

through our churches, maintaining healthy families and peace at home. These day-to-day details of bourgeois living constitute the Great Cause, and it has nothing to do with the government. Nothing at all!

But in Bush's mind, no cause can be truly great unless it is endorsed and generally organized by the state. If the great cause that Bush is seeking won't actually address any real problem that the typical American may be having, what is the point? It is to "rally the American people", as they say, which is to say, distract them from the failures of the state in hopes that they will view the state as the organizing center for all of society. This is their real point of invoking a Great Cause.

Everyone says that Bush is a Christian man who has a strong moral sense and a penchant for prayer. Good. But the Christian religion offers specific spiritual guidelines for heads of state. St. Augustine writes in the City Of God (Book XIX) of the Libido Dominandi—the lust to dominate others. He was speaking of a general flaw in human nature, to which heads of state are particularly prone.

Augustine cites this impulse as the worst manifestation of the sin of pride. It can also be shortened to a more familiar phrase: Power Lust. By way of contrast, Augustine cites the case of a family headed by a "just man who lives by faith and is as yet a pilgrim journeying on to the celestial city". There, "those who rule serve those whom they seem to command; for they rule not from a love of power, but from a sense of the duty they owe to others, not because they are proud of authority, but because they love mercy."

Mercy and peace are causes great enough to consume any head of state. A just man who heads a government has enough to do to suppress the lust to dominate, which every "great cause" proclaimed by every despot threatens to unleash. He got the country's name wrong, but Bush was precisely right when he said: "Your enemy is not surrounding your country. Your enemy is ruling your country."

[end quoting]

Well stated. And it's likely this author reflects the feelings of a growing number of other thinking Americans who were likewise insulted by the arrogant audacity of Bush's propaganda. But his actions make more sense if you look at him as a front-man puppet carrying out others' orders from behind the scenes.

Meanwhile, some are not willingly accepting his leadership without a fight, as in the following:

SMALLPOX PLAN OPPOSED

From The Daily News of Los Angeles, 1/24/03: [quoting]

The California Nurses Association said Thursday that it opposes a smallpox vaccination program and urged its 50,000 members not to participate because the risks outweigh the "minimal benefit".

"I will not get the vaccine and I will encourage nurses in my facility and throughout the state to do the same" said Malinda Markowitz, a San Jose nurse and association board member.

Los Angeles County officials received 9,200 doses of smallpox vaccine from the federal government Wednesday and plan to start vaccinating public health workers as early as next week.

The shipment was part of a plan proposed by President George W. Bush to protect the public from the smallpox virus that could be used by terrorists.

[end quoting]

Longtime readers of The SPECTRUM have been informed for some time about this dire subject from Dr. Len Horowitz. Let's hope Len's important cautions are circulated widely, if quietly, among those targeted to receive the vaccine.

The figures that will be given of those who "willingly" take this poison won't mention the numbers who are coerced to do so through, for example, a veiled threat about keeping their job.

Then there's a similar level of strong opposition from across the pond:

ROYAL NAVY DUMPS ANTHRAX VACCINE OVERBOARD

Excerpted from the www.newsday.com website, 1/20/03:

Anthrax Vaccine Found
On British Beach

Several boxes of anthrax vaccines from the Ministry of Defense were found washed up on a southern British beach Monday, officials said.

Investigators were checking if the boxes were from a ship that was headed to the Persian Gulf as part of a U.S. and British military buildup for possible war against Iraq, a Ministry of Defense spokeswoman said.

The packages found at West Bay in Dorset, southern England, also included some vials of dimercaprol, which acts as an antidote to heavy-metal poisoning. They had been supplied to the Center for Applied Microbiological Research in Salisbury, 85 miles southwest of London.

The beach was closed and searched after coast guards found the vaccines at 11 a.m. The Ministry of Defense said scores of vials were in the packages.

"We can confirm it was issued to the armed forces" a Ministry of Defense spokeswoman said on condition of anonymity. "Neither of the two drugs pose a risk to public health. The anthrax vaccine is used to protect personnel and doesn't contain any live anthrax."

She said officials would investigate if the vials came from a warship involved in the recent Royal Navy Task Force deployment to the Persian Gulf.

Anthrax, a biological agent, is one of the main concerns of UN arms inspector teams searching Iraq for weapons of mass destruction.

[end quoting]

They must have been unable to hide the massive scale of the "mutiny" because later stories by several of the major media just outright stated the blatant show of opposition that was kept subdued in the writing of the above story.

Here's another serious item of special interest to the health and well-being of military personnel:

RED ALERT TO MILITARY AND HEALTHCARE PERSONNEL

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 1/25/03: [quoting]

(The following is credited to be from the SONS_OF_LIBERTY_MILITIA.)

RED ALERT! Pass this on to anyone in the Military and Health Care:

Confidential sources and current events have led us to the conclusion that the trigger is about to be pulled on the final stages of the plot for the takeover of America.

It is now clear that the United States Military cannot be made to be a tool of the New World Order conspiracy due to the formation of substantial pockets of resistance within the military and their reluctance to attack or kill Americans under any pretense short of overt aggression against this country.

As a result, it appears clear that the decision has been made to neutralize the vast majority of front-line American Military. As you know, vaccines have been used recently to spread disease very successfully. If you doubt this, do some research and confirm this for yourself.

The Gulf War Syndrome was only a TEST!

Now think about this: Why try to eliminate the military with guns when you can get them to sit in a chair, one by one, and be poisoned?

The decision has now been made to use the proposed anthrax vaccine on ALL Military and related Healthcare personnel. If sufficient numbers refuse to take these vaccinations, and enough focus is put on this matter, the program can be halted.

Contact everyone you can in the military TODAY and urge them to voice their STRONG OBJECTION to the vaccine, and REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION of its dangers IMMEDIATELY.

As usual, the vast majority of leadership in the military has been kept completely in the dark and have been led to believe that this vaccine is necessary for the health of the soldiers. Only a small number have any suspicion or knowledge of the truth.

Once the vaccination program begins, soldiers will be given NO CHOICE in the matter. Let your friends and family know to be ready for anything these demons may try to pull.

We must act as God's soldiers, and not as sheep. It is time to take a stand. The resisters in the military will wage a war from within if necessary. This will include the elimination of any persons trying to execute this plot.

This means that you need to be especially sure to warn personnel in the Medical Corps that they are in DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

The vaccine is only part of the plot to put foreign soldiers in control of the United States. I understand that I am taking great risk by bringing this into the open. I can provide no further information.

Also, go back and read all the information you can about how AIDS was spread through Hepatitis-B vaccines and how tainted vaccines are spreading disease at an alarming rate.

[Editor's note: Longtime readers of The SPECTRUM need only go back over many fine articles by Dr. Len Horowitz to acquire the background on The Truth stated above, as well as below.]

Then find out where the serum came from to create the anthrax vaccine. You certainly will not want anyone you care about taking it!

If you believe this is possible, you owe it to America to take action. If this threat is not real, all that will happen is that the government will be forced to take an objective look at the safety of the vaccine.

Sometimes The Truth is stranger than fiction. [end quoting]

The above message has been circulating on various Internet newsgroup locations since 10/16/02, as best we can determine. From the manner of the postings, it is likely that someone(s) want to make it difficult to trace this to a single source that perhaps could be incapacitated. Thus there was apparently carried out, over a number of websites, a distributed approach to the sharing of this potentially serious information.

Keep in mind that "the few" cannot control "the many" if the many are sufficiently awake and aware to determine their own course of action. And if sufficient numbers make their course of action a very public matter, then all the better for their safety and protection.

Now since, as just stated above, the American soldier can't be counted on to carry out orders against the American people, behold the following story that speaks volumes:

GERMAN TROOPS TO GUARD U.S. MILITARY FACILITIES

From the Stars And Stripes military publication, via "friend of liberty" on the Internet, 1/28/03: [quoting]

(by Kevin Dougherty, Stars And Stripes, Wiesbaden, Germany)

The German Ministry of Defense will dispatch at least 2,600 troops to U.S. military communities over the next couple of weeks, a deployment that could begin as early as Friday, a ministry spokesman said Thursday.

Corresponding with the U.S. military buildup in the Middle East, the German troops would provide security and other force protection measures in the event of war with Iraq. The spokesman said the first contingent, numbering nearly 300, represents the vanguard of a larger force that would assume responsibility for force protection at dozens of U.S. installations between now and mid-February. [end quoting] Psychological testing many years ago predicted that American soldiers could not be relied upon to carry our orders against the American people—but foreign soldiers were not so "unreliable". How many others, besides these German troops, do you think the New World Order gang of misfits are installing within the United States at this time, in anticipation of a growing anger among the citizenry?

But that's not to say military engineers aren't trying to "help" American soldiers "be all that they can be"—as the following so revealingly tells us:

shacks, acting as human shields for weapons that threaten the lives of other civilians, the soldier's comrades, and his cause in this messy 21st-century war.

There will be no surgical strikes tonight. The artillery this soldier can unleash with a single command to his mobile computer will bring flames and screaming, deafening blasts and unforgettably acrid air. The ground around him will be littered with the broken bodies of women and children, and he'll have to walk right through.

Every value he learned as a boy tells him to back down, to return to base and find another way of routing the enemy. Or, he reasons, he could complete the task and rush back to start popping pills that can, over the course of two weeks, immunize him against a lifetime of crushing remorse. He draws one last clean breath and fires.

Pills like those won't be available to the troops heading off for possible war with Iraq [And who do you suppose said that? Likely the same people who continually mislead the public about experimentation on military personnel, admitting the truth only years later!], but the prospect of a soul absolved by meds remains very real. Feelings of guilt and regret travel neural pathways in a manner that mimics the tracings of ingrained fear, so a prophylactic against one could guard against the other. Several current lines of research, some federally funded, show strong promise for this.

At the University of California at Irvine, experiments in rats indicate that the brain's hormonal reactions to fear can be inhibited, softening the formation of memories and the emotions they evoke. At New York University, researchers are mastering the means of short-circuiting the very wiring of primal fear. At Columbia University one Nobel laureate's lab has discovered the gene behind a fear-inhibiting protein, uncovering a vision of "fight or flight" at the molecular level. In Puerto Rico, at the Ponce School of Medicine, scientists are discovering ways to help the brain unlearn fear and inhibitions by stimulating it with magnets. And at Harvard University, survivors of car accidents are already swallowing propranolol pills, in the first human trials of that common cardiac drug as a means to nip the effects of trauma in the bud.

The web of your worst nightmares, your hauntings and panics and shame, radiates from a dense knot of neurons called the amygdala. With each new frightening or humiliating experience, or even the reliving of an old one, this fear center triggers a release of hormones that sear horrifying impressions into your brain. That which is unbearable becomes unforgettable too. Unless, it seems, you act quickly enough to block traumatic memories from taking a stranglehold.

[end quoting]

Even if the truth is between the lines and perhaps way far down the road, the author of this story is still doing a lot of good by getting out this information.

The problem is that the military sources supplying him with raw materials are acting in their typical manner. That is, if it were their job to convey the state of "modern" automobiles, the author of an article on that subject would be getting information about the 1958 Edsel being the latest and greatest.

There's no doubt that the underlying point of this article is important, and perhaps a "happy killing pill" is indeed already in the psychotropic bag of tricks—along with all the other sophisticated forms of mind control inflicted upon our military personnel to "help" them be better killing machines. After all, such research has been pursued with great gusto since Nazi experiments during World War II. How far might that have progressed by now?

This is fundamentally a matter of TRAINED KILLERS—who are often difficult to control and never really get deprogrammed. For example, remember the spate of four (known) gruesome murders at Fort Bragg SPECIAL FORCES Base in North Carolina between last June and August? Four military wives were horribly killed by their husbands in that two-month period. Three of the soldiers had just returned from active duty in Afghanistan.

What kind of ticking time-bomb is this within our society at large? Remember Timothy McVeigh and the DC sniper—and the list goes on and on—most we would never even suspect having received such training unless we knew their military background.

But just in case things get too far out of control and we need to "bury" a few military experiments gone awry, there's this thinly disguised contingency plan:

PENTAGON EYES MASS GRAVES OPTION

From the Denver Post, 1/25/03:

by Greg Seigle

The bodies of U.S. soldiers killed by chemical or biological weapons in Iraq or future wars may be bulldozed into mass graves and burned to save the lives of surviving troops, under an option being considered by the Pentagon.

Since the Korean War, the U.S. military has taken great pride in bringing home its war dead, returning bodies to next of kin for flag-draped, taps-sounding funerals complete with 21-gun salutes.

But the 53-year-old tradition could come to an abrupt halt if large numbers of soldiers are killed by chemical or biological agents, according to a proposal quietly circulating through Pentagon corridors.

Army spokesmen said the option to bury or even burn bodies contaminated by chemical or biological weapons is being considered, along with the possibility of placing contaminated corpses in airtight body bags and sending them home for closed-casket funerals.

"All due care is taken to honor the remains of our fallen comrades" said Maj. Chris Conway, an Army spokesman. "It's just too premature to speculate on any plan or policy."

Lt. Col. Ryan Yantis, an Army spokesman, said: "Military planners look at an operation in the full spectrum from the best-case scenario to the worst, and you have to make plans accordingly."

Yantis said that if a biological or chemical attack occurs, "we're going to treat the wounded with the best possible medical care. Those who are, unfortunately, deceased, we're going to treat with the utmost dignity and respect.... We're going to have to take care of the mission and we're going to have to ensure the safety of the force."

U.N. inspectors have found no proof Iraq is hiding weapons, but the U.S. insists they are there and is massing troops in the Persian Gulf for a possible war.

The U.S. had a plan for mass burials during the Gulf War in 1991, said Lt. Gen. William "Gus" Pagonis, the chief logistician for that conflict and the man who conceived the plan.

"The bulldozers were all lined up and ready to go" to deposit contaminated bodies in "mass graves" Pagonis said.

"You'll use whatever equipment is necessary to avoid contaminating more people" Pagonis said in a recent interview. "You don't want anybody else to die."

Pagonis said that before the Gulf War, he sent the plan simultaneously to commanding Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and the Department of the Army, and no one responded. "When you send a plan and no one gets back to you, you assume it's been approved" he said.

Army spokesman Capt. Ben Kuykendall said the Pagonis plan is similar to the option currently under consideration—except that bodies infected by biological agents might be both cremated and buried.

If soldiers are killed by "something like smallpox in which bodies cannot be decontaminated, we would have to cremate them right there" Kuykendall said. He said he recently discussed the option in detail with Brig. Gen. Steve Reeves, program executive officer for the Army's chemical and biological defense office. Reeves declined to comment.

[end quoting]

Do you think there might be more to this story than meets the eye? You bet there might!

Some of you may recall that bulldozers were used to dig long "ditch graves" in which were forced many thousands of live Iraqi soldiers. (Were dissident U.S. soldiers included as well?) Remember the psychotronic (electrical) "brain-wave" pulsing that was broadcast in the vicinity to make these soldiers more compliant with suicidal orders? The trick is always to hide nasty true objectives behind some façade of plausible excuses.

Meanwhile, how are our American veterans of past wars being treated by an "appreciative" nation? How about this:

VETERANS' DAY BETRAYAL PROTEST

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 1/12/03: [quoting]

February 12, 2003, veterans across the nation will protest the betrayal of many World War II and Korean Veterans who were firmly promised, by the United States Government, that if they served 20 or more years in the military, they and their dependants would get free healthcare benefits for life.

Both the United States Government and the Federal Courts admit the promise was made, however the Federal Courts have ruled that the government may make false promises, and commit fraud, to America's veterans and not be held accountable.

Retired Air Force Colonel George "Bud" Day, a Vietnam veteran and Medal of Honor winner, has taken this clear case of mass fraud against America's veterans to the Federal Courts in Washington which, for solely political reasons, have slapped all of America's veterans in the face, and refused to correct this grave injustice against those who provide the very freedom our courts operate under.

Tana Kidwell, CEO of www.VetsForJustice.com, and wife of disabled Vietnam veteran Billy Kidwell, issued a statement saying that:

"I do not find it surprising that the Washington Federal Courts, which have a long history of being hostile to, and betraying America's veterans, are again playing politics and misusing their power, to save money on the budget, by cheating those who defend this great country, by stealing from our veterans. If the United States Supreme Court lets such a farce and mockery of justice stand, then no veteran should ever respect or give any weight to any decision by that court.

"As we prepare for another Great War, it is appalling that the same Administration sending our troops into harm's way is actively pursuing a policy of cheating and stealing from those who have already served. Is this the future of those going into combat now? To be required to fight one day for the benefits they have earned, and are firmly promised, only to have slick, shyster Federal Judges, playing politics, steal their benefits from them? Is this how America treats her combat troops?"

All Veterans of conscience should protest this grave injustice against our brothers. We STRONGLY URGE all of our new members to be active in some way on February 12, 2003, either protesting, or passing the word to as many other people as you can, exposing that this is the future of today's military now going into harm's way, if we all don't UNITE together in this great cause.

[end quoting]

While the above was obviously written for the 2/12/03 rally, its message must be spread well past that date.

There doesn't seem to be any problem continually upgrading the perks and retirement benefits of our congressional racketeers, judges, and other high-level federal employees and their "consultant" buddies who have contracts with our Government. But there's no assistance for the little people who were the ones coerced into risking their lives?!? The facts speak loudly and yet we-the-people permit such an atrocity of justice to persist.

Speaking of the professional American criminal class of racketeers at "work", how about this one:

"TRUST US — WE'RE GOVERNMENT"

Excerpted from the Denver Post, editorial page, 1/25/03: [quoting]

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell said this week that if the United States invades and wins in Iraq, our government will hold the country's oil fields "in trust" for the Iraqi people.

American Indians must be laughing themselves sick.

More than a century ago, Uncle Sam took control of Indian assets—including oil and gas fields. The government also took control of Indian grazing leases, timber rights, and so forth, promising to hold the assets in trust for the Indians.

But the government never kept proper track of the money, making basic bookkeeping and legal errors that, if committed by anyone else, would have landed the trustee in prison. Among other things, the government mixed funds owed to some people with other accounts, failed to bill oil companies and other leaseholders for royalty payments, and didn't keep tabs on payments to the Indians. [end quoting]

We can be pretty sure that the Iraqi people would not be as gullible as the American people. When the foxes guarding the henhouse say "trust us" you know that everything not nailed down will be gone.

And if the usual lame excuses (like those being tested on the American people right now to cover the truth about the space shuttle Columbia tragedy; see story elsewhere in this issue) don't work, how about something that's so utterly absurd it temporarily numbs us with disbelief? (We couldn't begin to make these up! But note this wasn't from the American press.) Behold:

Facing its most chronic shortage in oil stocks for 27 years [if you believe this is anything but contrived, there's a bridge on the Moon for sale cheap], the U.S. has this month turned to an unlikely source of help—Iraq.

Weeks before a prospective invasion of Iraq, the oil-rich state has doubled its exports of oil to America, helping U.S. refineries cope with a debilitating strike in Venezuela.

After the loss of 1.5 million barrels per day of Venezuelan production in December the oil price rocketed, and the scarcity of reserves threatened to do permanent damage to the U.S. oil refinery and transport infrastructure. To keep the pipelines flowing, President Bush stopped adding to the 700-million-barrel strategic reserve.

But ultimately oil giants such as Chevron, Exxon, BP, and Shell saved the day by doubling imports from Iraq from 0.5 million barrels in November to over 1.0 million barrels per day to solve the problem. Essentially, U.S. importers diverted 0.5 million barrels of Iraqi oil per day heading for Europe and Asia to save the American oil infrastructure.

The trade—though bizarre given current Pentagon plans to launch around 300 cruise missiles a day on Iraq—is legal under the terms of the UN's "oil for food" program.

But for opponents of war, it shows the unspoken aim of military action in Iraq, which has the world's second largest proven reserves—some 112 billion barrels, and at least another 100 billion of unproven reserves, according to the U.S. Department of Energy.

Iraqi oil is comparatively simple to extract—less than $1 per barrel, compared with $6 a barrel in Russia. Soon, U.S. and British forces could be securing the source of that oil as a priority in the war strategy. The Iraqi fields south of Basra produce prized "sweet crudes" that are simpler to refine.

On Friday, Pentagon sources said U.S. military planners "have crafted strategies that will allow us to secure and protect those fields as rapidly as possible in order to then preserve those prior to destruction".

The U.S. military says this is a security issue rather than a grab for oil, after a "variety of intelligence sources" indicated that Saddam planned to damage or destroy his oil fields—which would inflict up to $30 billion damage on the U.S. economy and cause irreparable environmental damage.

But the prospect of British and U.S. commandos claiming key oil installations around Basra by force has pushed global oil diplomacy into overdrive. International oil companies have been jockeying position to secure concessions before "regime change".

Last weekend a Russian delegation flew to Baghdad to patch up relations after Iraq's cancellation of its five-year-old contract to develop the huge West Qurna oil field—worth up to $600 billion at today's oil price. Lukoil was punished by Baghdad for negotiating with the U.S. and Iraqi exiles on keeping its concession in a post-Saddam Iraq.

The delegation of ministers and oil executives returned to Moscow with three signed contracts. Oil is the state budget's lifeblood, and Russia requires an oil price of at least $18. Russians fear a U.S. grip on a large reserve of cheap oil could send prices tumbling.

But Saddam has offered lucrative contracts to companies from France, China, India, and Indonesia, as well as Russia.

It is only the oil majors based in Britain and America—now the leading military hawks—who don't have current access to Iraqi contracts.

Richard Lugar, the hawkish chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, suggests reluctant Europeans risk losing out on oil contracts. "The case he had made is that the Russians and the French, if they want to have a share in the oil operations or concessions or whatever afterward, they need to be involved in the effort to depose Saddam as well" said Lugar's spokesman.

A delegation of senior U.S. Republicans was in Moscow last Tuesday trying to persuade Kremlin officials and oil companies that a war in Iraq would not compromise their concessions. A leaked oil analyst report from Deutsche Bank said ExxonMobil was in "pole position in a changed-regime Iraq".

Washington is split along hawk-dove lines about the role of oil in a post-Saddam Iraq. Two sets of meetings sponsored by the State Department and Vice-President Dick Cheney's staff have been attended by representatives of ExxonMobil, ChevronTexaco, ConocoPhillips and Halliburton, the company that Cheney ran before his election.

The dovish line, led by Colin Powell, places the emphasis on "protection" of Iraq's oil for Iraq's people. His State Department has pointed to a precedent in the U.S. interpretation of international law set in the 1970s. Then, when Israel occupied Egypt's Sinai desert, the U.S. did not support attempts to transfer oil resources.

While the State Department is mindful of cynical world opinion about U.S. war aims, officials do not always stick to the script. Grant Aldonas, Under Secretary at the U.S. Department of Commerce, said war "would open up this spigot on Iraqi oil which certainly would have a profound effect in terms of the performance of the world economy for those countries that are manufacturers and oil consumers".

The U.S. economy will announce zero growth this week, prolonging three years of sluggish performance. Cheap oil would boost an economy importing half of its daily consumption of 20 million barrels.

But a cheaper oil price could have been reached more easily by lifting sanctions and giving the U.S. oil majors access to Iraq's untapped reserves.

Instead, war stands to give control over the oil price to "new Iraq" and its sponsors, with Saudi Arabia losing its capacity to control prices by altering productive capacity.

Paul Wolfowitz, Assistant Defense Secretary, and Richard Perle, a key Pentagon adviser, see military action as part of a grand plan to reshape the Middle East.

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original Native inhabitants of America. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

the warmongering plans toward Iraq.]

To this end, control of Iraqi oil needs to bypass the twin tyrannies of UN control and regional fragmentation into Sunni, Shia, and Kurdish supplies. The neo-conservatives plan a market structure based on bypassing the state-owned Iraqi National Oil Company and backing new free-market Iraqi companies.

But, in the run-up to war, the U.S. oil majors will this week report a big leap in profits. ChevronTexaco is to report a 300% rise. Chevron used to employ the hawkish Condoleezza Rice, Bush's National Security Adviser, as a member of its board.

Five years ago the then Chevron chief executive Kenneth Derr, a colleague of Rice, said: "Iraq possesses huge reserves of oil and gas—reserves I'd love Chevron to have access to."

If U.S. and U.K. forces have victory in Iraq, the battle for its oil will have only begun.

[end quoting]

Are you at all surprised about a 300% rise in profits? The crooks are laughing all the way to the bank—which they probably own.

You don't suppose the New World Order elite planned this "oil shortage" to boost their bottom line any more than they had their hands in any of the past "oil shortages" since the 1970s?

There's no doubt that Saddam's oil is a very attractive financial and political gem among the "spoils of war". But remember that—as our front-page story and page-3 editorial point out—the oil prize is small potatoes on the way to the goal the Really Big Boys want.

the nagging voice of conscience being shared in the following essay, even though it rests on the oil argument:

AMERICA THE HIDEOUS

From the rense.com website, 1/26/03:

by Diane Harvey (merak@sedona.net)

The United States of America is about to murder, in cold blood, a large number of hungry, ragged, and generally debilitated human beings. An enormous army of Techno-Goliaths is being launched halfway across the world to demolish a poverty-stricken population with a dazzling display of overwhelmingly inescapable death and destruction. The revolting new policy of instantaneous mass death is being referred to as Shock and Awe, but there is nothing new about it. It's called a Blitzkrieg, and its pedigree is well known.

And after as many mommies and daddies as possible are torn limb from limb, and their children set on fire, we will steal their last remaining natural resource. To prepare the way for outright theft, our courageous military is sallying forth to make short work of the lame, the feeble, and the blind. We are about to cruelly torture and destroy innumerable lives already brought low by a coarse dictatorship, simply because we want what they have, and we have the firepower to take it.

Ultimately, it is the citizens of this nation who are collectively responsible for all of the unthinkable, unimaginable agonies about to unfold. In our name, and with our tacit consent, our nation is about to commit hideous atrocities so that we-the-people can continue thoughtlessly to waste, for a short while longer, more energy and resources than anyone else on Earth ever has.

It is easy to blame the disgusting criminals in power, but nevertheless, the majority of Americans has callously accepted this disastrous leadership. There was never anything theoretically in the way of half the country marching on Washington and demanding sanity—Or Else.

And yet there never really was the slightest chance that this, the first of the Lifestyle Wars, would be prevented. To deflect the American juggernaut on a downhill roll, a significant percentage of citizens of this nation would have had to show up bodily on the streets of Washington, and remove the wheels by hand. Sociopathic governments in search of sustenance can only be stopped by overwhelming numbers of awakened citizens who recognize the rankest form of brutalitarianism when it clubs them in the face.

In our case, however, even the astonishing act of setting fire to the Bill Of Rights failed to register on the overall population. On the whole, Americans don't care about anything at all except being as comfortable as possible. We know this because if we did care, none of this would be allowed to happen.

The raw greed and pathetically flimsy tissue of lies being offered as justification for all this leaves a rational person stunned, in another form of Shock and Awe. The architects of the new policy of brutalitarian rule are counting on the fact that most Americans are not rational, and have no desire to think about the meaning of any of this.

In this, the designers of this new and deliberately terrifying Monstrous America are correct—so far. As long as people sit in front of the perpetual hypnosis machines and choose to pretend they don't really know what is happening, then the Lifestyle Wars and state-sanctioned genocide on our behalf will continue. The future of our once-noble country is apparently to demand ever-larger piles of innocent human bodies to burn as fuel for our standard of living.

We will manage the incredible feat of denial only by resolutely ignoring the obvious truth and willingly believing the transparent lies of our despicable leaders. Doesn't all this sound very familiar, historically speaking?

Yes, in chilling Shock and Awe, one must understand that it certainly does.

[end quoting]

While many decent, moral people have rallied in very public displays against this war—all around the world AND within the United States—it is nonetheless very clear that those so-called elected and designated

Washington REPRESENTATIVES OF THE WISHES of the American people have sold-out their trust and honor in allowing this matter, and the related Homeland Security Gestapo, to exist and grow to their present levels of power.

Here's what one truthful and thoughtful American sees:

When they talked about how kids were encouraged to snitch on their parents in Russia, how everyone was spied on in Russia, how neighbors turned in neighbors. I was told this was the evil of Communism. I remember that a Communist leader said how they would take us over from the inside, and they have; we have become them in the name of preserving freedom.

I remember a teacher showing us the Communist Constitution and it was remarkably like ours, but he opined that it was not worth anything because they did not live it and it was a sham—for show only. Not too unlike the U.S. and most of the free world today.

[end quoting]

When enough of the population are aware that this is what America has become, perhaps the fires of desire will burn brightly enough to return America to what the Founding Fathers envisioned—as THE example to the world of what freedom should be.

Meanwhile, at the grassroots level of activism, conscience is alive and well (so look out, Washington DC), as the following illustrate:

ATTENTION — ALTERNATIVE HEALTHCARE PRACTITIONERS!

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 1/28/03: [quoting]

(Opinion by consumer advocate Tim Bolen.)

I've got the BIGGEST story in North American Health Freedom, EVER. Here it is.

The conventional medicine stranglehold on healthcare has been broken—period. It was done in Health & Human Services Director Tommy Thompson's office on January 16, 2003, when Thompson SIGNED the approvals to use a new billing code system called ABC Codes in HIPAA transactions.

Let me explain. Prior to Thompson's action, the world of health practitioners had been dependent, for billing, on two basic systems. One is called the Diagnostic Codes and the other is known as the Physicians' "Current Procedural Terminology" or CPT Codes.

The World Health Organization (WHO) owns the rights to the Diagnostic Codes. The American Medical Association (AMA) owns the rights to the Current Procedural Terminology or CPT Codes. Each gets paid money each time the code is used. The codes, both sets, are used to bill Medicare, health insurance, etc.

The WHO Diagnostic Codes are simply that—diagnostic codes. But it was the CPT codes that became the issue in healthcare. Simply, the AMA would NOT issue codes for alternative healthcare. Congress told them. Federal judges told them. Their membership told them. They didn't listen.

What was happening, of course, was that the AMA was controlling, through its codes or lack of codes, what actual procedures would be paid for, and which ones would NOT be paid for.

That's over. The AMA has lost. January 16, 2003, was their "Waterloo". Enter, from stage left, ABC Codes—which are designed specifically for alternative practitioners.

Understand this: Thompson signed-off on the first part of the project—a two-year sort of pilot program, where they see how well it works. There is a 60-day sign-up period. The clock is running. It started January 16, 2003.

Health practitioners—GET INVOLVED IN THIS RIGHT NOW!

There is a website you need to visit to read more about this. Read ALL of it. I've been on the phone with the ABC Codes' project people yesterday and today, at length. They'll have their website updated for the information you need to be part of this very soon.

They have gained the approval of not only Tommy Thompson, but every agency of "standards" in the United States. They have over 4,200 codes available right now. You've got to go to the www.alternativelink.com website right now. If you're a practitioner, you don't have ANYTHING better to do in the next half hour.

Go do it. And yes, pass this story along.

—Tim Bolen, Consumer Advocate

For background information on the "Battle Between Health And Medicine" go to the www.savedrclark.net/by_whom2.htm website. A copy of this newsletter, and older ones, are viewable at the www.quackpotwatch.org/default.htm website. [end quoting]

But does this action REALLY make any difference? Given the typical motives pushing both Washington and the AMA, it is a substantial leap of faith to assume, just because some "code" for a medical procedure exists and can now be written down, that it will be sanctioned as legitimate for treatment AND reimbursement purposes.

"SCORCHED EARTH" TACTICS USED ON TRAFICANT

From the www.americanfreepress.com website, 1/20/03: [quoting]

by Michael Collins Piper

The full force of the FBI and the Justice Department is now being deployed—at the expense of thousands of taxpayers nationwide who admire Jim Traficant—against the wife and daughter of the imprisoned ex-congressman.

Not content with railroading former Rep. Jim Traficant (D-OH) into an eight-year prison term on trumped-up corruption charges, the federal authorities are moving quickly to collect a $150,000 fine levied against Traficant following his conviction.

The government is also trying to collect nearly $100,000 in additional funds that the FBI and the Justice Department claim Traficant accepted in bribes and on which he failed to pay taxes.

Since Traficant is no longer receiving a salary, the FBI and the Justice Department are trying to squeeze the money out of Traficant's wife, Tish, who works as a beautician, and from his daughter, Elizabeth Chahine, who works as a clerk for the state of Ohio.

The government is suggesting that Traficant's wife and daughter may be holding assets that belong to Traficant. Under court order, the two women were subpoenaed to appear before federal authorities with the following wide-ranging list of materials:

- Copies of federal income tax returns for the past three years.
- All documents showing ownership of personal or real property belonging to Jim Traficant with a value of more than $100.
- All titles, deeds, mortgages, and other documents evidencing their ownership in real estate and the dates they acquired such ownership.
- All leases, notes receivable, mortgage, liens, contracts, judgments and other documents evidencing income, dividends or royalties owed or paid to them.
- All records, including pay stubs evidencing your gross wages, salary, or commissions for the past six months.
- All records establishing ownership in all or part of any business as sole owner, partner, or stockholder, and the financial condition of such business for the past three years, including a statement of assets, inventories, liabilities, gross and net income, and the amount of any undistributed profits in the business.
- All titles and registrations for all motor vehicles owned in whole or part by Jim Traficant. All titles and registrations for all motor vehicles transferred to them by him.

- All receipts, appraisals, and other statements or documents establishing ownership and value of jewelry and furs owned by them and/or their business.

- Statements for all their checking, savings, and trust accounts for the past 12 months.

- All records and statements for certificates of deposit, savings bonds, stocks, bonds, coupons, and mutual funds they and/or their business may own, separately or jointly with Jim Traficant.

- All life insurance policies in effect and all records evidencing their face value and cash surrender value where the name insured is Jim Traficant and they are the beneficiary.

- All records establishing them and/or their business interest in any account held by someone else on them and/or on their business's behalf in any bank, savings institution, or credit union.

- All records evidencing their ownership and/or their business interest in any property, real or personal, in the possession of or name of any person or corporation.

- A list of all their and/or their business real property transferred by gift, sale, or otherwise since February 1, 2002, and all records establishing the transfer and the value received.

- All records evidencing their receipt of any pension, disability compensation, retirement pay, or other benefits from the United States or any other source on behalf of Jim Traficant.

Not without good reason, Traficant's new attorney, Richard M. Kerger, says that the ex-congressman is "a bit subdued...but still Jim Traficant".

Kerger, who will be lead counsel for Traficant's ongoing appeal of his conviction, told a local newspaper in Ohio that Traficant is quite somber and not his usual gregarious self.

Another of Traficant's attorneys and a personal friend, Percy Squire, said of Traficant: "He's very concerned about his family. He's very bitter. He feels he was railroaded. He's a very proud man, and he's sucking it up, so to speak."

Those who wish to send Traficant messages of support may write: James Traficant, 31213-060, C/O FCI Allenwood (Low), P.O. Box 1000, White Deer, PA 17887.

[end quoting]

Much thanks to American Free Press and Michael Collins Piper's high-caliber investigative vigilance. Of course, to proceed with the high-pressure persecution tactic, the Feds are operating on the typical "out of sight, out of mind" assumption of a short attention span of the public. But thanks to this article, and all of Traficant's loyal friends, the sordid matter of his frame-up won't soon be dropping off everyone's radar screen.

To better understand why Traficant was so mercilessly singled-out as a bad guy, in a den full of well-cultivated professional criminals, go back and re-read the article called THE CHINESE CONNECTION: Powerful Hidden Reasons Why DOJ Conspired To Get Rep. James A. Traficant back in the September 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM. The truth reveals incredibly high international levels of political corruption that desperately want not to be exposed to the American people—especially by anything as utterly rare and dangerous as an HONEST congressman.

FORGET SPIES — LET PSYCHIC "REMOTE VIEWERS" DO THE JOB. SAYS EXPERTS

From the www.newindpress.com website, for 1/26/03: [quoting]

BANGALORE, India — At the height of the Cold War, the Americans experimented with a spying technique—remote or clairvoyant viewing—dismissed as pure fiction by much of the scientific world.

In July 1995, when the CIA partially declassified these experiments, the world found that America's remote-viewing spies, sitting in the confines of their U.S. laboratory, reported with uncanny accuracy, military developments in distant Russia.

Now, a former physicist with the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre, Dr. M. Srinivasan, and one of India's best known parapsychologists, Prof. K. Ramakrishna Rao, have placed a proposal before the Indian Government to experiment with remote viewing for security purposes. Both scientists were part of the Science

And Spirituality conference, which was held in the city a week ago.

"Since remote viewing or psychic spying has been reported in ancient Indian scriptures, it is high time India itself studied it. We have proposed to study the phenomenon and have sought the Government's assistance" says Chennai-based Dr. Srinivasan, a former associate director of the physics group and head of the neutron physics division at BARC.

The proposal placed before the Centre describes the experiments conducted in the U.S. and proposes similar efforts to identify Indians with remote-viewing capabilities, says Dr. Srinivasan who has a special interest in parapsychology.

"The intelligence community in the U.S. seems to value remote-viewing data whenever it is available. They use it to complement information gathered through other means" he says.

During the Cold War years, two sets of the now-famous remote-viewing experiments were carried out in the U.S. The first set involved remote viewers describing sites within the U.S.—where activities unknown to them were happening. Researchers have reported a high degree of accuracy in these experiments.

The second set of experiments, supervised by U.S. intelligence agencies, involved actual "spying" on Russia. In one case, an American remote viewer was given the co-ordinates of a mysterious site in the former USSR. The remote viewer was asked for information about the site and was told that it could be a research and development facility.

After remote viewing the site, the spy described to U.S. authorities the activities at the site, which were later verified by satellite pictures and actual ground information.

The site was the super-secret Soviet atomic bomb laboratory at Semipalatinsk and the remote viewer's illustrated and written description was remarkably accurate, as researchers found.

In another famous example, when no U.S. intelligence agency had picked up the information, a remote viewer—given the co-ordinates of a site in Russia—told the American National Security Council that Russia was building the world's biggest submarine. Four months later, in January 1980, the remote viewer's information was proven right.

In his presentation, at the Science And Spirituality meeting in the city, Prof. K. Ramakrishna Rao—former editor of the Journal Of Parapsychology and former head of the U.S.-based Foundation For Research On The Nature Of Man—stated that the paranormal mind "transcends the usual sensory processes and has extraordinary experiences".

[end quoting]

The military has hidden the usefulness of Remote Viewing ever since the project officially began at Stanford Research Institute in the early 1970s with researchers Russel Targ and Dr. Harold Puthoff. Because of the slick public relations effort that has long supported the ongoing military denial of Remote Viewing's usefulness, you can be pretty sure the technique is actually of tremendous value.

But here's the rub: Since it was found that nearly everybody was capable of Remote Viewing, how do the elite controllers keep you or me from snooping on them and discovering what they are really up to? Moreover, secrecy in government "black budget" projects depends on compartmentalization—that employees only get to know a small piece of a total project. The walls dissolve under the practice of Remote Viewing and it becomes a lot more difficult to motivate AND control the employees—particularly if they can see that the overall project is nowhere near as "patriotic" as they were previously led to believe!

These days there is a real tug-of-war in the public relations efforts concerning psychic abilities like Remote Viewing since the perverted shenanigans of the Secret Government misfits depend so much on, well, secrecy in order to proceed. So how do they cultivate psychic spies who will snoop on a supposed enemy, but not on them? This problem couldn't happen to more deserving people!

This registration is not much more different than the Danish Jews being forced to wear Stars of David by the Nazis.

Ay Ca-Rumble! (1/24/02)

Mexico experienced a powerful 7.8 magnitude earthquake which killed at least twenty-five people. The quake was centered near Colima, 300 miles west of Mexico City. The Pacific Rim has become extremely active. This quake was preceded by a major quake in the South Pacific. Recent quakes off the coast of Oregon and Washington State exceeded 6.0 in magnitude. Japan now has 108 active volcanoes, and Hawaii's volcanoes continue to boil. The effect of the second moon is becoming much more pronounced. Again, the volcanic eruptions in the Pacific Northwest of the U.S.A. are imminent. Even Wyoming's slowly forming cauldron volcano created a moderate quake last week. Fasten your seat belts.

Bled Dry: (1/24/02)

Parts of the U.S. have less than a one-day supply of blood according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. This is a significant announcement in light of a major war about to take place. This would be the perfect opportunity to introduce the artificial copper-based blood that has been stored for at least three years. This will basically become the one, universal blood-type for the entire world.

Birds Of A Feather: (1/27/02)

Scientists in China have discovered the 128-million-year-old fossil of a four-winged dinosaur that could be the precursor of modern birds. The creature, called Microraptor Gui, had modern firsthand wings on its four limbs. The find is considered to be "phenomenal" because nothing like it has ever been seen or found in birds or dinosaurs. The newspaper articles have a drawn picture of the creature with its four wings and tail outstretched. If you turn the picture upside down, you see a very clear fleur-de-lis! This is a symbol of the three-horned god of the Reptilians. I believe this "find" to be manufactured for triggering purposes.

Hillary's Sillary: (1/27/02)

Senator Hillary Clinton spoke at a security conference in New York City saying that homeland security is a "myth". She was promoting her own version, called the "Provide For The Common Defense Act". This article will call for the creation of anti-terror

She hinted at post-Pearl Harbor procedures that would include rationing of food and gasoline. Run, Dorothy; it's the wicked witch of the East.

Smallpox, Small Docs: (1/27/02)

Only four doctors in Connecticut showed up to get the smallpox vaccination scheduled for 500,000 healthcare workers in the U.S. Since the illusion of making it voluntary is not working, it is likely that soon an "outbreak" will be reported somewhere in the U.S. that will require mandatory vaccinations so that the population can get the nano implants immediately.

Very strange. This story is obviously hoaxed and only publicized as a measure to imprint alien presences on the Earth. It's getting old.

In the bigger picture, it is all part of the plan to create one large global airline under New World Order jurisdiction.

Plagued By Plague: (1/31/02)

A Texas professor is being accused of reporting 30 vials of bubonic plague missing when he claims he accidentally destroyed them. Two cases of the plague appeared in New York City last year very mysteriously. In light of biological threats and terrorism, it is likely that this professor in Texas was set-up to turn over the vials to government agents who will then use it on the public at an auspicious moment. Readers will note that in the last six months or so, a lot of hazardous materials have either disappeared or been "destroyed". It is all being used on the public.

KIND WORDS FROM OUR READERS

"You people are incredible! I appreciate every effort you are making to wake us up. The least I can do is donate when I can." — A.U. from HI

"Dear Dr. Young: You and the others at The SPECTRUM are doing a great job. I was especially impressed with the January 2003 issue, page 72, article by Dr. Albert D. Pastore entitled Stranger Than Fiction: Documented Probe Of 9/11. I feel that it should have been the COVER STORY! Keep up the good work!" — M.F. from NV

"Dear Gail: Lately I have been able to share with several different people and tell them what a terrific magazine you put out, and how they can connect up over the Internet. Your [website] page is very impressive." — G.B. from KS

"SPECTRUM Staff: How do you manage to out-do yourselves with each issue? The Albert D. Pastore work [January 2003] is a marvelously researched and written contribution. But there is an enormously revealing explanatory part within the main body that is of great value to me. I'm speaking of the "Lemming Effect". With that detail alone, I can now see how and why religions are used to weaken, control, and enslave the masses, and how entire societies can be kept in the dark. This factor deserves an entire article by itself. It explains so much!" — N.N. from CA

"I feel so blessed each month when your magazine arrives. Sometimes it's easy to take for granted the knowledge and information we gain that we think everyone must know. I was so stunned by the election, and later wondered if I had suddenly become so politically naive. And then I read Ed Young's opening article [December 2002], and once again it made sense. God bless all of you!" — K.F. from TX

"Many, many thanks for the November and December issues of The SPECTRUM, which I just received. I really look forward to this magazine and thank you for the excellent reading." — D.C. from UT

"Dear SPECTRUM Crew: We thank you for another spectacular year of The SPECTRUM, and we anxiously look forward to those coming next year. Each issue seems better than the last. Please know that we very much appreciate the hard work, long hours, and dedication that each of you give to this project. Thanks again, and best wishes for the New Year! Love & Light." — K. & M.S. from CA

"Thank you, again and again, for being available to us. I don't know how else I could learn about what's happening on the planet, surely not all the things you reveal. You are truly a "God send" for many of us, and I cannot thank you enough for all the work you do. I pray this new year will be a bountiful one for The SPECTRUM and all of its staff. I pray that peace will become a reality—even though, I must confess, we seem further and further from it. But I must never forget that Divine Mind works in mysterious ways. Bless you! Bless you! In love and gratitude." — D.W. from NC reason. One example of this is a local nun who started an organization called "The Chiapas Coalition" to help fund the starving Chiapas Indians in Southern Mexico. The Denver police labeled this a "criminal extremist" group. Another man who started a motorcycle club was labeled an "outlaw that makes money through drug deals". The Denver Police have listed people on their computer files merely for attending peace rallies. This is the wave of the NEAR future. Police departments from New York City to Los Angeles have asked for added surveillance rights and money to spy on ordinary citizens.

The question is—who's watching the police?

ROCKEFELLER FAMILY IS WORTH $11.8 TRILLION

From an Internet source, 1/18/03:

Posted By: "Tom"

In Response To: "Bush Gives Richest Man On Earth Another $38 Million"

I received this email in response to the article above:

Very interesting. But the richest men on Earth are surely those who create the "$" out of nothing and then lend it to all the governments of the world at FACE VALUE (called a bond), plus compound interest, which is collected via the income tax.

(Yes, the IRS is another private corporation, just like the "Federal" Reserve scam. See 12 USC for proof; under section 284 thereof the Federal Government is not allowed to own stock in the "Federal" Reserve scam.)

R. Gaylon Ross, author of Who's Who Of The Elite, says: "In 1998 the Rockefeller family was worth $11.8 TRILLION, and the Rothschild family over $100 TRILLION."

Since most of the mass media is owned by the Rottenfellers and the Ratchilds, they will lie to you about who is the richest, since these mass-murdering con-men must always keep their evil scam concealed.

(In the Middle Ages, goldsmiths who wrote phony receipts for gold that they did not have on deposit were often hanged following the runs on their "banks".)

The Ratchilds have instigated every war, and the French "Revolution" and it's reign of terror, and the Bolshevik "Revolution"—which was actually an invasion of over 400 thugs from the Lower East Side of New York, trained in guerilla warfare on Rottenfeller's Standard Oil property in New Jersey, who were financed with $20 million by Ratchild agent Jacob Schiff and arrived in Russia via the SS Christianaford.

Since for every $ the governments spend these criminals pocket an equal amount, called a bond, from the governments in return for the governments' borrowing of the Ratchilds' private "money" (counterfeiters, under cover of law).

And the SOBs collect every bit of IRS $ collected to pay the interest for this scam! This is FACT!

Sorry I went hog-wild on this, but these criminals, with their scam, must, with mathematical inevitability, end up with ALL the chips—and the rest of us with poverty and slavery!

For those of you who may be new to this subject, the above is a very short history of the financial game that has been perpe-traitor-ed on the American people since the late-night passage of the Federal Reserve Act around Christmas of 1913.

How much bleeding of this nature can a country endure before it collapses? We're just about to find out! Then people will have plenty of time, in the bread lines, to deal with the results of what they didn't care to deal with beforehand.

TILLEY CAR / FREE ENERGY DEVICES UPDATE

This is for those readers who are interested in the amazing article about the free-energy Tilley car that was featured on pages 17-18 of the October 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM. You may remember the pictures showing the sleek 1981 DeLorean modified with what appears to be some kind of free-energy electric motor and power plant. The www.tilleyfoundation.com website has been updated with new information about an ATV vehicle being tested, and more.

In related news, Dr. Steven Greer, of the UFO Disclosure Project, was a guest on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program Coast-To-Coast AM the night of 1/30/03 (now hosted fulltime by George Noory weekdays and Barbara Simpson weekends). Dr. Greer was talking about another group he has formed. This one's focus is to get a free-energy device into production that can be incorporated into small items, such as even a table lamp, or can be scaled-up for planes, cars, etc.

And while we're on this subject, be sure to read the article about the Genesis Project energy device elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.

It looks like the longtime elite-engineered walls of control denying us such low-cost energy-generating devices are rapidly crumbling. The time appears to be very close when we'll be able to have such fantastic energy devices for our own use. Nikola Tesla must be smiling with each new liberating step toward limitless clean energy—and the abundant transformation of planet Earth it can achieve!

EARTH'S MAGNETIC POLES ON THE MOVE

From the Sunday Times (London), for 1/19/03: [quoting]

The North Pole is on the move. Scientists have found large holes in the Earth's magnetic field, suggesting that the North and South Poles are preparing to REVERSE POSITIONS.

A period of chaos could be approaching, when compasses no longer point North, migrating animals take the wrong direction, and satellites are burnt up by solar radiation. The holes lie over the South Atlantic and the Arctic.

The changes were revealed after detailed data from the Danish Orsted satellite was analyzed. Results were compared with data from earlier satellites. The speed of the change has surprised scientists.

Nils Olsen, of the Center for Planetary Science in Denmark, one of several centers analysing the data, said the Earth's core appeared to be undergoing dramatic changes. He added: "This could be the state in which the Earth's geodynamo operates before reversing."

The geodynamo is the way the magnetic field is generated by currents of molten iron flowing around a solid core. Sometimes giant vortices form in the liquid metal and they can change or even reverse the magnetic fields above them.

Olsen's team believes vortices have formed beneath the North Pole and South Atlantic. If they become powerful enough they could reverse all the currents, causing the North and South Poles to switch places.

Dr. Andy Jackson, a specialist in geomagnetism at Leeds University UK, said a change was long overdue: "Such flips normally happen every 500,000 years; but it has now been 750,000 years since the last one".

The change could affect both humans and wildlife. The magnetosphere gives vital protection against searing solar radiation that would otherwise sterilize Earth.

Although the magnetic field would not disappear altogether, it might weaken while the poles switched, resulting in a surge of radiations that could cause cancers, reduce crops, and confuse migrating animals from whales to pigeons.

For scientists the big question is not whether, but when the changeover will happen. Some say it could be soon, while others say it could be anytime in the next 1,000 years.

[end quoting]

The Earth's magnetic poles have been on the move for a number of years now as part of a natural process, but moving more dramatically in recent years. The fact that such an article would finally appear in the popular press, for all to see, suggests that "someone" has finally decided to let the public know about big changes on the way soon.

Meanwhile, powerfully invasive artificial electromagnetic technologies like the HAARP system (and its affiliates around the world) are being secretly employed for selfish geopolitical reasons of the elite controllers, and these systems sometimes greatly interfere with Mother Earth's own "nervous system" as well as with her cleansing and rebalancing operations going on at this time. When her patience finally runs out with the pesky fleas on her back, she'll shake, and that will be the end of their selfish games.

SIX WAYS NANOTUBES WILL CHANGE YOUR LIFE

From WIRED magazine, for February 2003: [quoting]

by Kevin Kelleher

What if you had the chance to get in on a hot new technology that promised to revolutionize not just one industry but many—slashing costs, boosting productivity, enhancing existing products, and creating incredible new ones? Suppose big, stodgy old companies were lining up to throw money at this technology. Now imagine that it had nothing to do with the Internet.

That's the prospect dangling before would-be investors in carbon nanotubes. Discovered accidentally by a Japanese scientist a decade ago, nanotubes are elongated cylinders made of ultrastable carbon molecules. At first, the tiny building blocks—50,900 times thinner than a human hair—could be manufactured only a handful at a time. But in the past year, new production methods have emerged that will soon make it possible to crank them out by the pound. Here's a look at how this nanobounty could be put to use:

1. Safer Buildings

Carbon nanotubes are 100 times stronger than steel and a sixth as heavy. That could lead to disaster-proof buildings. Also on the drawing board: stronger and lighter vehicles, from super-efficient cars to lightweight airplanes and next-generation spacecraft.

2. Smaller Chips

Carbon nanotubes can replace or combine with silicon to create a faster and smaller breed of chip. At NTT in Japan, researchers are finding new applications by sending current through nanodevices, creating a nanotube transistor network and even a self-organizing neural network.

3. Stronger Threads

Chinese scientists have made a silk-like thread from nanotubes, which are almost impervious to chemicals or radiation. The resulting hard-as-diamonds fabric would be bulletproof, too.

4. Super Detectors

Nanotube chips can be programmed to identify substances as small as atoms and molecules. They can be used to detect proteins and DNA, gases, and dangerous chemicals in the workplace.

5. Cheaper Connections

Fluorescent nanotubes make for inexpensive fiber optics. They also provide a low-cost means of diagnosing tumors.

6. Better Stockings

Purdue researchers have found that they can create designer nanotubes by mixing them with other molecules. Combining nanotubes with nylon, for example, produces stockings that will never run. [end quoting]

What are the odds that last item will be the biggest seller?

As science learns to work with matter closer to the molecular and atomic levels, amazing products are possible that can't be fashioned from any cruder methods. Going beyond that requires working from the "etheric substructure" of physical matter—a domain akin to alchemy that's presently not a part of conventional science.

IS THE PEN MIGHTIER THAN THE KEYBOARD?

Logitech Introduces "Digital Pen & Paper"

Taking notes on a handheld can be like going to a foreign country and speaking a language you know only from a semester of night classes—just trying to get a few words out can quickly degrade into frustration. So Logitech is trotting out a new note-taking gadget based on a familiar friend: the ballpoint pen.

Logitech's gadget—annoyingly named just "io"—has an internal processor and remembers the exact strokes of up to 40 pages of anything you write or doodle.

Just one catch: You have to write on special paper that's covered with a light-gray pattern of tiny dots. When you write on the paper, the io works just like a ballpoint pen, so you can see everything you write. But inside the pen, a tiny digital camera takes 50 snapshots per second when the device is in use. The camera uses the pattern imprinted into the special paper to create "coordinates" out of everything you write (in a process analogous to vector drawing). The coordinates are converted to digital information and stored in the pen's internal memory. The io can also compensate for the angle at which you write.

When you're finished writing, just dump the pen into a USB cradle, and the data is uploaded to your PC. From there, the Logitech software helps you direct the results to whatever application you'd like to send them to. The software includes "limited" character recognition, but we're withholding our enthusiasm for this feature until we've tried it.

A device like this is certainly a good idea, but it may require more work before it's finally as convenient as pen & paper.

SMART SHOPPING CARTS DEBUT, SOME SAY THEY PUSH PRIVACY

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 1/6/03: [quoting]

(Compiled from the www.safeway.com website; Consumers Against Supermarket Privacy Invasion and Numbering www.nocards.org website; and the Klever Marketing www.kleverkart.com website.)

New Smart Carts
Could Breed Retail Caste
(by Michael Liedtke)

What if a shopping cart became a computer on wheels, a sales vehicle sophisticated enough to analyze individual buying habits so it could pinpoint which shoppers got the best prices? Safeway Inc., the nation's third-largest grocer, is quietly searching for the answer by testing a smart shopping cart.

The trial reveals how retailers might capitalize on the reams of consumer information they have been stockpiling since the mid-1990s. It is unfolding at two of Safeway's Northern California stores, one in the affluent town of Moraga near San Francisco, the other in rural Cameron Park.

Shoppers are greeted by the "Magellan"—a shopping cart with a book-sized computer on the front handle. A side slot lets shoppers swipe their Safeway "club" cards—the identification most major grocers now require for discounts on certain items. Reading the club card enables the shopping cart's computer to tap into the buying histories Safeway has compiled on most customers. The cart can then display four grocery items offered at sales prices unavailable to anyone else. The computer also provides a guide to each consumer's most frequently purchased items and monitors the shopper's steps through the aisles, flashing ads to promote nearby merchandise.

Safeway and other grocers experimenting with similar technology believe the tools will make it easier to reward their best customers and increase sales. Keeping these customers happy is becoming even more important to supermarkets as they face increased competition from the likes of retail powerhouse Wal-Mart, Inc.

The grocers also believe customers will embrace the cart's other bells and whistles, such as store maps. Consumer advocates fear the smart carts will cultivate a caste system in which grocers cater to big spenders by offering deep discounts unavailable to poorer consumers. "I am concerned that some people are going to be left behind by this technology" said John Vanderlippe, associate director for Consumers Against Supermarket Privacy Invasion and Numbering, a watchdog group.

Even certain demographic groups, such as unmarried shoppers, might get the short end. The computer, for instance, could conclude that a single man generates relatively little profit compared to a mother buying groceries for her husband and two kids.

There's a powerful incentive for supermarkets to be more discriminating about their prices. Industry data show 30% of supermarket shoppers generate 75% of a store's sales. Analysts say it makes sense for grocers to pamper the big-spending customers to make sure they keep coming back. But "the best customers at supermarkets often get some of the worst treatment" said Arthur Middleton Hughes, a vice president for CSC Advanced Database Solutions, a database-building company in Schaumburg, Illinois.

As an example, supermarket customers buying the most groceries are routinely stuck in the longest checkout lines, while shoppers with just a few items use express lanes, Hughes said. "Giving greater discounts to the best customers could be just one way to reward them for standing in longer lines."

But the technology also might work against big spenders. For instance, the smart cart might determine that a mother buys peanut butter for her kids every week, no matter the price, and conclude there's no reason to ever offer that shopper a discount.

Safeway won't discuss its long-term plans for the computerized carts. The Pleasanton-based grocer wouldn't even allow media to photograph the carts.

Although the consumer response during the trials so far has been "fairly good", Safeway doesn't have any current plans to introduce the smart-cart system in all 1,650 stores nationwide, spokesperson Brian Dowling said. "We think this could be a unique way to deliver more offers to our customers" Dowling said. "It would be a bad assumption to conclude all the offers will only go to high-income individuals."

During a recent hour-long visit at Safeway's Moraga store, only three shoppers used computerized carts, despite brochures and a display promoting the technology. Dozens of other consumers grabbed the conventional shopping carts still parked outside the store.

Helen Rosenberg of Moraga swiped her card through the computerized cart to get more good deals, but she didn't like the system. "It's horrible. It's totally like Big Brother is watching you" Rosenberg said. "Safeway should just stop spending its money on things like this and lower its prices for everyone."

Safeway isn't the first grocer to experiment with smart shopping carts. Last year, Iowa-based Hy-Vee, Inc. tested similar technology that used infrared tracking devices and video screens to make special offers at some Kansas City, Missouri stores.

The company that developed that system, Salt Lake City-based Klever Marketing Inc., has been trying to sell its smart carts to toy stores, warehouse stores, and other discount merchants, according to regulatory filings. Klever Marketing officials didn't return calls seeking further comment.

Safeway wouldn't reveal the company behind its technology. Smart-cart critics, meanwhile, hope the technology fails. "This idea could backfire" Vanderlippe said. "It could help people realize just how much information they are sharing about themselves every time they let supermarkets swipe those club cards through the register."

CAT BURGLAR — IS A CAT

From the rense.com website, 1/31/03: [quoting]

A kleptomaniac cat has stolen more than 700 items from his human neighbors in the past two years, said his owner Sara Peacock. "I own a cat burglar! He goes into peoples' homes and steals things" Peacock told The Daily News in New Zealand. "It's an anxiety thing. He wants to please me by bringing me home presents."

The oriental bi-color cat named Dandelion steals at least one thing a day and has a fetish for socks—stealing one, then the pair, and sometimes three in one day. Dandelion also has taken shoes, clothes, toys, purses, gloves, rags, pin-cushions, sunhats, jewelry, and much more.

After hearing about a spate of burglaries in her hometown of Spotwood, Peacock attempted to explain to police about her pilfering feline, but police did not believe her until they caught him in the act. [end quoting]

OUR FAMILY TREE

From Guideposts, December 2002 (P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512): [quoting]

Holiday music streamed from the speakers in the department store that December 1984. I was 24 years old and struggling to make it on my own, but I still couldn't resist getting swept up in the excitement of the season.

It helped subdue the worry I felt about the future and what I was going to do with my life. After graduating from Columbia University with a degree in English, I'd gotten a job in the mailroom of a talent agency. I was making a paltry salary. A couple of years later, I felt none too enthusiastic about the "real world".

I was in the store that day getting supplies for my family's Christmas. A part of me wished I were a kid again. Back then, I had spent my time lying under the sea-green branches of our Christmas tree daydreaming.

Our house had cathedral ceilings, so we always got the tallest tree we could find, usually a 14-foot noble fir. I'd look up into the branches at the hundreds of antique, hand-blown glass ornaments Grandmother Veronica had brought with her when she came to America from Poland as a young woman, family treasures that her mother and grandmother had passed down. There were stars and comets, kites and parasols, candy canes and icicles, a Santa in a basket under a hot-air balloon, a creche and a flurry of angels. I wasn't supposed to touch them because they were fragile, so I just looked at them wonderingly.

Once I'd gotten older, I was allowed to help set up and decorate the tree. Now that I was working, I had money to get a tree stand. The old cast-iron one we'd used for years was covered with so much sap and grime I couldn't get it clean.

At home that night we decorated the tree. "I'll never forget the day Mama surprised me with this" Grandmother Veronica said in her warm, rich accent, holding up a glass bird.

"All my friends used to make faces in this one" she said, pointing to a large mirrored ball.

Listening to Grandmother tell the story behind each ornament, I almost felt like the people from the Old Country she described—who were as dear to her as she was to us—were there too.

We finished, and my family went to get ready for dinner while I got the vacuum cleaner to remove some of the fallen needles. I was in the hallway when I heard a tremendous crash. I dropped the vacuum and raced back into the living room. I gasped. The tree had fallen over! Thousands of glass fragments glittered all over the carpet.

In a moment the rest of the family was at my side, including Grandmother, sobbing. I was the one who discovered why the tree had fallen over, and in one agonizingly long moment I realized it was all my fault. A leg of the new tree-stand I'd put up had collapsed. I forced myself to turn and face Grandmother, who met my eyes. She didn't have to say it: I had ruined Christmas forever.

Almost every ornament had shattered or cracked when the tree fell. Amid the debris I spied a tiny unicorn Grandmother had given me when I was a boy. "For little Christopher with the big imagination" she had said. I picked it up and turned it over in my hands. It was completely undamaged, right down to the slender glass horn.

My first instinct was to run and show it to Grandmother. But then I stopped myself. "What about all the other ones that are lost forever?" I thought. "Your foolishness has destroyed the family tree."

Promising to replace the ornaments, I went back to the store where I'd been a few days earlier. Nearly every ornament was plastic or cheap metal. The few glass pieces were obviously mass produced.

I scrounged the city, but everything had been picked over. We put the tree back in the old iron stand, tied it to the wall, and hung some dried flowers along with the few surviving glass ornaments.

Every time I walked through the living room, seeing that sparsely covered tree reminded me of my guilt. At midnight Mass I could barely meet Grandmother's eyes. I couldn't wait for Christmas to be over.

After the holidays I plodded on with my job, not knowing any better what to

THE INDIGO CHILDREN

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern requires parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to help them achieve balance, harmony, and avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- Why do a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?

- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober brings together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

pursue careerwise than I knew how to make amends for what I'd done. I felt down for months.

Sometime in the spring I got a letter from my cousin, Margaret, in Poland. "Heard about what happened at Christmas" it read. "Why don't you come visit for Easter?"

I thought a change of scene would help lift my spirits and also maybe I would be able to find something for Grandmother in the Old Country. I took my vacation time and flew to Poland.

When I got there I told Margaret all about my fruitless search for blown-glass ornaments. "I have an idea" she said.

She led me to an apothecary's window and pointed at some hand-blown, prismatic laboratory vials, tubes, and beakers. They were surprisingly beautiful. "I went to high school with the glassblower" she said. "Maybe he can help."

We went to a small garage-like building to talk to Margaret's friend. He took off his black-rimmed glasses and polished them as I described the globes, reflectors, angels, and icicles I wanted.

"Do you think you could sketch some of the designs?" he asked me.

"I'm not sure" I said. "I can try."

I sat down at his worktable and closed my eyes. Could this be the chance I'd prayed for? I so wanted to make things right.

In my mind I imagined holding the delicate old ornaments as I scouted the right spot for them on the tree. I made a few tentative strokes on the pad. Slowly the pencil seemed to take on a power of its own. The designs flowed onto the paper—icicles with tapering ends, globes with concave mirrors, stars with tiny moons painted on them.

The glassblower examined my designs with a perplexed expression. "These are the kind of ornaments my grandfather used to make before the war. Nobody wants these old things any more."

"Oh, we do" I said. "They're what made our tree special. Can you make them?"

He shrugged. "I'll do my best."

I spent the rest of the week seeing the sights with my cousin, wondering how the ornaments would come out. I came back to the shop and was presented with a large box. I opened it and caught my breath.

Inside lay 18 delicate handblown glass ornaments, just like the ones that had broken. The craftsman had silvered each on the inside, and his wife had painted them iridescent colors. I picked up a silver ball and held it in front of me; my face reflected in it.

"I don't know how to thank you!" I said finally. "These are exactly like the ones Grandmother used to have."

"Well, all I did was make them the way you drew them. Enjoy!"

The whole plane flight back to America I couldn't stop thinking of the ornaments. I'd never dreamed I'd be able to get such perfect replacements! I imagined the look on my Grandmother's face when she saw them.

In the meantime I took the ornaments to work to show them off. My coworkers were awed. "How much do you want for 'em?" one asked. Another promised to top the first guy's offer. For me it was more than a whole day's pay at my job. "Maybe I can cable Margaret some money and order more ornaments" I thought. I might actually be able to pay my rent on time for a change.

When I showed the ornaments to Grandmother, her eyes grew wide.

"Where did you find these?"

I explained how I'd gotten them made in the Old Country just for her. Grandmother picked up an ornament and cradled it in her hand. "It's heavy, just like the old ones. And so shiny!"

When a box of glittering ornaments from Poland arrived at my workplace, my coworkers bought them all that same day. During my lunch-hour I found myself doodling new designs on a napkin. A friend suggested I try selling the ornaments at a local gift store. Figuring the money would come in handy for buying more ornaments, I gave it a try.

I didn't have an appointment, but when the secretary for the store buyer saw the ornaments I'd brought, she picked up the phone. "Sir" she said, "there's a guy here with something I think you'll like."

They gave me a huge order. I maxed out my credit card to purchase ornaments through Margaret. I also sent her my new designs.

I fulfilled my shipment to the gift store and loaded the extras into the trunk of my beat-up Oldsmobile. I went from store to store selling them. Then I sent samples and photos to buyers for stores. It was a lot of trial and error. Maybe one in 10 stores I contacted said yes.

All my free time was spent packing and shipping the ornaments that arrived from Margaret, and designing new ones. I'd gone beyond just recreating the broken ones, and started putting in some twists of my own.

In one year's time, I sold twice my salary's worth of ornaments! Still I hesitated to quit my job. But after selling quadruple the amount the second year, it was "Good-bye, mail room. Hello, Christmas!"

I started my own company, employing skilled craftsmen from all over Eastern Europe to produce beautiful, finely detailed ornaments based on my designs.

Perhaps people like my ornaments because they sense in them the same link to the past that I do. For me, a Christmas tree is like a family diary. I like to imagine that, years after I'm gone, someone decorating their tree will pick up one of my ornaments and say: "Look, this one belonged to my great-great-grandmother. It dates all the way back to 2001!"

The best part for me was getting the chance to help Grandmother rebuild her collection before she passed away in 1995. The last Christmas we spent together we reminisced over old times as we hung new hand-blown glass ornaments I'd designed on our family tree. Near the center I placed the unicorn that had been spared all those years before. Little had I known at that time how blessed I would be in turning a tragedy into a success.

"I hope that all of these new ornaments are at least a fraction as precious to you as this one is to me!" I said to my grandmother.

"Oh, Chris" she said, patting my cheek. "I'm so very proud of you."

I hugged her tight and together we gazed at the ornaments hanging on the family tree in a sparkling confluence of light and color, present and past—and once again, anything seemed possible.

Space Shuttle Columbia Disaster: Clear Message In Open Sky

Editor's note: The following is a small collection of information about the demise of the space shuttle Columbia. As we go to press with this month's issue of The SPECTRUM, there are two main pockets of information, neither of which is without problems.

On one side is the mainstream print and broadcast media, which aids NASA with their public-relations job of establishing some cover story that will hold-up as being believable to the inquiring public. No one expects much truth from this well-oiled machinery.

On the other side are "alternative" information conduits, mostly Internet-based, heavily awash in both reasonable and wild conjecture, plus some far-out gems of fact.

So, with one foot planted in each domain, we offer the following excerpts.

First up is a conventional summary of the space shuttle Columbia disaster from CNN

News at the www.cnn.com website, dated Monday, February 3, 2003:

Summary Of Space Shuttle Columbia Disaster

Just 16 minutes before its scheduled landing February 1, the space shuttle Columbia disintegrated 40 miles above Earth, killing its crew of seven astronauts.

Debris from the shuttle was scattered over thousands of square miles of Texas and Louisiana.

NASA is investigating the disaster, and an independent probe is being led by retired U.S. Navy Adm. Harold Gehman, who headed the inquiry into the October 2000 bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen.

The seven astronauts killed were commander Rick Husband; pilot William McCool; payload commander Michael Anderson; mission specialists David Brown, Laurel Clark, and Kalpana Chawla; and Israel's first astronaut, Ilan Ramon.

The Columbia disaster came one week after the 17th anniversary of the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger, which disintegrated 73 seconds after liftoff from Florida's Kennedy Space Center on January 28, 1986.

Space shuttle flights have been put on hold until NASA determines what caused four times faster than on the right. The left wheel well experienced a temperature spike also.

In addition, NASA is taking another look at an incident from Columbia's January 16 launch in which a piece of debris—possibly foam insulation—fell off the external fuel tank and struck the shuttle on the left side 80 seconds after liftoff.

Officials said they want to know whether the debris knocked off or damaged any of the heat-resistant tiles that protect the shuttle from almost 3,000°F temperatures as it enters Earth's upper atmosphere.

Human remains discovered amid the debris from Columbia have been taken to Barksdale Air Force Base in Louisiana for analysis.

The independent panel investigating the disaster met for the first time Monday, and NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe briefed President Bush on the investigation.

KEY QUESTIONS:

What caused the shuttle to break apart?

Did the piece of debris that fell off during launch have anything to do with the disaster?

How long will the moratorium on shuttle flights last?

When and how will the crew aboard the international space station return to Earth?

KEY PLAYERS:

Ron Dittmore: NASA's shuttle program manager.

Sean O'Keefe: NASA administrator.

Harold Gehman: Retired U.S. Navy admiral appointed to lead an independent probe of the Columbia disaster. Gehman headed up the the Columbia to break apart, but President Bush said Saturday that the U.S. space program will continue.

The moratorium on shuttle flights affects the three-man crew of the international space station, which was due to return to Earth on March 1 aboard the shuttle Atlantis. NASA said the space station's crew has enough supplies to last through the end of June.

UPDATE:

In its final minutes, the shuttle experienced an unusually high temperature increase on its left side, lost a series of sensors on the left wing, and then rolled unexpectedly to the left, according to a NASA data analysis.

Data also showed the temperature of the shuttle rose 60° Fahrenheit in five minutes on the left side of the fuselage, investigation into the October 2000 bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen.

Plus this related story, also from CNN News sources:

Timeline Of The Columbia Disaster

The space shuttle Columbia broke up during re-entry Saturday, killing the seven astronauts aboard. NASA has suspended shuttle flights and launched an investigation into the disaster.

A timeline of the final minutes of the shuttle flight and following events (all times EST):

8:15 a.m.: Space shuttle Columbia fires its braking rockets and streaks toward touchdown.

8:53 a.m.: Ground controllers lose data from four temperature indicators on the inboard and outboard hydraulic systems on the left side of the spacecraft. The shuttle is functioning normally otherwise, so the crew is not alerted.

8:56 a.m.: Sensors detect rise in temperature and pressure in tires on the shuttle's left-side landing gear.

8:58 a.m.: Data is lost from three temperature sensors embedded in the shuttle's left wing.

8:59 a.m.: Data is lost from tire temperature and pressure sensors on the shuttle's left side. One of the sensors alerts the crew, which is acknowledging the alert when communication is lost.

Approximately 9 a.m.: All vehicle data is lost. The shuttle is 207,135 feet over north-central Texas and is traveling about Mach 18.3. NASA officials try to re-establish communication for several minutes.

Texas and Louisiana residents report a loud noise and bright balls—shuttle debris—in the sky.

9:16 a.m.: NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe contacts President Bush and Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge when the shuttle does not land on schedule. O'Keefe later says Bush "offered full and immediate support".

9:29 a.m.: NASA declares an emergency.

9:44 a.m.: NASA warns residents of affected area to stay away from debris.

11 a.m.: The flag atop the countdown clock at Florida's Kennedy Space Center is lowered to half-staff. Flags at the White House and Capitol soon follow.

12:15 p.m.: Bush returns to Washington from Camp David in a speeding motorcade.

1 p.m.: NASA administrators officially announce the loss of the shuttle and all aboard.

1:25 p.m.: Bush calls Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and speaks with him about 5 minutes. The shuttle was carrying the first-ever Israeli astronaut, payload specialist Ilan Ramon.

2 p.m.: The president addresses the nation from the Cabinet Room at the White House. "Columbia is lost" he says. "There are no survivors."

3:20 p.m.: NASA suspends shuttle flights for the length of the investigation.

There are several newsworthy clues to note from the above, even from this "plain vanilla" mainstream account of events.

The first clue is the large and rapid and localized temperature rise on the left side of Columbia. This suggests some kind of concentrated energy of some kind that had been striking the shuttle as from a beam, perhaps at a known vulnerable location on the fuselage calculated to cause sure loss of structural integrity.

The second point is how the majority of debris fell in Bush's backyard, so to speak. Considering the altitude, this is an astonishing feat of mathematics and physics, requiring high-speed fancy calculations of air-current data, shuttle speed, etc. to guide exactly when and for how long to direct a hypothetical beam attack. Moreover, the fact that so much debris fell in PALESTINE, Texas, should be noted as putting a little extra emphasis on the basic message being written in the sky. (Note that these points were not part of the CNN story, which, within a few hours of the initial reports, along with all the other media, "blurred" the area of the debris field over a much larger area to obscure public recognition of any kind of a message and thus underlying purpose to the event. Of course from that altitude SOME debris would rain down over a wide area; but the fact that so much of it managed to fall in Bush's backyard is an engineering feat not to be overlooked by the awake.)

The third clue to this "message in the sky" is certainly the death of the first Israeli astronaut. After all, there's no such thing as a NON-military shuttle mission—despite what the public is told about cute experiments with roses or tadpoles or soap bubbles as a distraction.

So, given the timing of this mission with respect to several heated world events, the super security surrounding the mission, and the Israeli astronaut on board, one can surmise any number of military objectives having to do with preparations for an attack on Iraq. This Israeli astronaut was also a highly decorated "hero" of a mission that destroyed Saddam's nuclear reactor IN

THE SAME YEAR THAT COLUMBIA MADE ITS FIRST FLIGHT.

With clues overflowing between the lines, let's consider what renowned investigative journalist and author Gordon Thomas had to say on this matter, in a 2/4/03 article from his www.globe-intel.net website:

Israel's Shuttle Astronaut Was On A Secret Mission On Columbia

by Gordon Thomas

Astronaut Ilon Ramon was conducting secret experiments on the Columbia to discover new ways to beat Saddam's threat to use biological and chemical weapons against Israel.

For most of his 16 days on board the Columbia, he had been using cameras linked directly to the Israeli Space Agency to study desert dust and wind-drifts emanating from the deserts of Iraq.

The information was fed to the Institute for Biological Research—the ultra-secret establishment that is at the cutting edge of Israel's multi-layered defence system.

The Institute's scientists constantly study how contaminants can drift into Israel from Iraq.

"Ramon's work was regarded as a priority among his fellow astronauts—because of the fear that Saddam will launch a pre-emptive strike against Israel", said an intelligence source in Tel Aviv.

Ramon, 48, was already a hero in Israel because of his role in flying one of the eight F-16 fighters which destroyed Saddam's nuclear reactor in 1981—the same year Columbia made its first flight.

At the time the plant was [according to Israel] ready to go online to produce weapons-grade plutonium.

Ramon's task was to send out a signal to fool Iraqi radar that the fighter formation was a commercial jumbo-jet.

After the raid, he said: "It was no big deal."

It was that can-do philosophy which made him not only a born leader, but popular with all his fellow fliers. He had flown his first mission at 18 in the Yom Kippur War against the Egyptians. Later he had commanded Israel's nuclear bomb squadron.

For the past five years, he had been at the NASA training school in Texas preparing for last Saturday's mission.

He went to his death carrying a small pencil drawing titled Moon Landscape. It had originally been drawn by a 14-year-old Jewish boy, Peter Ginz, who had died at Auschwitz.

"For Ramon the flight was a chance to honor in the heavens all the victims of the Holocaust" Ilon's father, Eliezer, said yesterday.

For the scientists at the Biological Research Institute, to the very end his work proved invaluable.

Within its laboratories and workshops are manufactured a wide range of chemical and biological weapons. The Institute's chemists—some of whom once worked for the Soviet KGB or East German Stasi intelligence service—create the Institute's current research programs.

Founded in 1952 in a small concrete bunker, today the Institute sprawls over ten acres. The fruit trees have long gone, replaced by a high concrete wall topped with sensors. Armed guards patrol the perimeter.

Long ago, the Institute disappeared from public scrutiny. Its exact address in the suburbs of Nes Ziona has been removed from the Tel Aviv telephone book. Its location is erased from all maps of the area. No aircraft is allowed to overfly the area.

Only Dimona in the Negev Desert is surrounded by more secrecy. In the classified directory of the Israeli Defence Force, the Institute is only listed as "providing services to the defence Ministry".

Like Dimona, many of the Institute's research and development laboratories are concealed deep underground. Housed there are the biochemists and genetic scientists with their bottled agents of death: toxins that can create crippling food poisoning and lead to death; the even more virulent Venezuelan equine encephalomyelitis, and anthrax.

In other laboratories, reached through air locks, scientists work with a variety of nerve agents: choking agents, blood agents, blister agents. These include Tabun, virtually odorless and invisible when dispensed in aerosol or vapor form. Soman, the last of the Nazi nerve gases to be discovered, is also invisible in vapor form but has a slightly fruity odor.

The range of blister agents include chlorine, phosgene, and diphosgene, which smells of new-mown grass. The blood agents include those with a cyanide base. The blister agents are based upon those first used in World War I.

Outwardly featureless, with few windows in its dun-colored concrete walls, the Institute's interior has state-of-the-art security. Code words and visual identification control access to each area. Guards patrol the corridors. Bomb-proof sliding doors can only be opened by swipe cards whose codes are changed every day.

All employees undergo health checks every month. All have been subject to intense screening. Their families have also undergone similar checks.

Within the Institute is a special department that creates lethal toxic weapons for the use of Mossad to carry out its state-approved mandate to kill without trial the enemies of Israel. Over the years, at least six workers at the plant have died, but the cause of their deaths is protected by Israel's strict military censorship.

The first crack in that security curtain has come from a former Mossad officer, Victor Ostrovsky. He claims: "We all knew that a prisoner brought to the Institute would never get out alive. PLO infiltrators were used as guinea pigs. They could make sure the weapons the scientists were developing worked properly and make them even more efficient."

Israel has so far issued no denial of these allegations.

The strong military overtones suggested by both this shuttle mission and its noted Israeli astronaut are probably the most underreported features to keep in mind.

Let's now look at two detailed timelines of the flight path and related activities. One is from 2/4/03 by NASA and provides more details about the path the shuttle took upon reentry. The other—in square brackets following the NASA timeline entries—is information from the <http://spaceflightnow.com> website that fills-in more of the picture:

Timeline Of Events Leading To Columbia Disaster

Here is a timeline of events, as released by NASA, that begins with the de-orbit burn and ends with the last understanding of telemetry received from Columbia. This information is expected to change from day to day as some facts are added, others adjusted.

Last updated as of 7 a.m. EST (1200 GMT) Tuesday, Feb. 4:

SEEDS OF FIRE: CHINA AND THE STORY BEHIND THE ATTACK ON AMERICA

On the eve of the first war in the 21st Century, one perplexing question remains: the role of China. The answer comes in what also have hundreds of shorter-range ballistic and cruise missiles for use in regional conflicts. Some of these shorter-range missiles will have nuclear warheads; most will be armed with conventional warheads.

That prediction is from a CIA briefing paper to the Bush Administration. It is one of almost 100 pages of never-before-published official documents in SEEDS OF FIRE: China And The Story Behind The Attack On America, by Gordon Thomas. No one can afford to ignore this book!

SEEDS OF FIRE is a book that every patriotic American — everyone who cares about the future of this country, everyone who wants to know what goes on behind the scenes — must buy and read. This is THE book. Written by a highly experienced intelligence analyst, it is simply a MUST. You cannot ignore the warnings Gordon Thomas gives.

will be seen as one of the most important books of all time. It explains how China will use the crisis to launch itself as a new Super Power—and become America's new major enemy.

China by 2015 will have deployed tens to several tens of missiles with nuclear warheads targeted against the United States, mostly more-survivable land and sea mobile missiles. It will

As an example of his total credibility, hours after the book was published, the CIA was forced to confirm its findings about the threat China poses. The CIA publicly confirmed what Gordon Thomas reveals in SEEDS OF FIRE. Just how big a threat China is.

This has been kept out of the news agenda because it does not suit certain business interests to have that truth emerge. But at last here it is. Every patriotic American should buy and read this book! It is simply revelatory.

Other revelations include the Inslaw/Promis "largest global software theft in history", MK-ULTRA mind-control applications, and the link between newspaper magnate Robert Maxwell and the Los Alamos laboratory nuclear secrets "spy" case.

But it is the China connection that ought to alert all thinking Americans to "the sleeping giant" of the Orient. Be informed. Be astonished.

fired for two minutes and 38 seconds, slowing the shuttle by 176 mph. At the time it was over the Indian Ocean roughly 5,000 miles away from the Kennedy Space Center. Columbia's orbital path required only about 14 miles of crossrange flight toward the right.

[8:42 a.m.: Columbia is currently above the Pacific Ocean at an altitude of 90 miles.]

8:43:53 a.m. EST (1343.53 GMT): Columbia reaches Entry Interface, the official point about 75 miles high that NASA defines as the place where the vehicle first begins to encounter traces of Earth's atmosphere. It's at this time the vehicle begins to slow from orbital velocity of 17,500 mph and the crew begins to feel the first tugs of gravity. Outside, the first hints of re-entry heat start.

[8:44 a.m.: The protective tiles on the belly of Columbia are now feeling heat beginning to build as the orbiter enters the top fringes of the atmosphere—a period known as Entry Interface. The shuttle is flying with its nose elevated 40 degrees, wings level, at an altitude of 400,000 feet, passing over the southern Pacific Ocean, about 4,400 nautical miles from the landing site, at a velocity of Mach 25.

8:46 a.m.: Thirty minutes to touchdown. Altitude 64 miles. Columbia will be making landfall over California shortly, flying north of San Francisco. The shuttle's course will take it over Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and then along the Gulf Coast and into the Florida Panhandle.

8:49 a.m.: Columbia is beginning the first in a series of banks to scrub off speed as it plunges into the atmosphere. These turns basically remove the energy Columbia built-up during launch. This first bank is to the right.]

8:49:26 a.m. EST (1349.26 GMT): Because Columbia is a glider and has only one shot at landing, the shuttle enters the atmosphere with excess altitude and speed, or with too much "energy". To dissipate that energy so the shuttle doesn't overshoot the runway, the shuttle flies a couple of sweeping s-turns. The first of these starts now, with Columbia rolling onto its right wing at an angle of 23 degrees.

At this same time the shuttle's nose is up about 40 degrees, the crew have long since been strapped into their seats, and the onboard computers are flying the re-entry profile with the help of inputs from sensors and other guidance and navigation equipment located all over the spaceplane.

8:51 a.m. EST (1351 GMT): Columbia crosses the California coast north of San Francisco and is seen on the ground.

[8:51 a.m.: Altitude 47 miles. Speed 16,400 miles per hour.]

8:52 a.m. EST (1352 GMT): The first indication that something is going wrong is recorded when three left main landing gear brake line temperature sensors detect a rise. The shuttle is flying over California.

8:53 a.m. EST (1353 GMT): Two more sensors in the left-hand wheel well (left brake line strut actuator and uplock actuator temperature sensors) detect an increase in temperature of 30 to 40 degrees Fahrenheit in five minutes. At the same time, four sensors near the elevon at the back of the wing failed off, suggesting their wiring was severed somewhere.

[8:53 a.m.: Columbia is now crossing the California coastline.]

8:54 a.m. EST (1354 GMT): Sensors on the outside wall of Columbia's fuselage above the left wing shows a 60-degree rise in temperature in five minutes, while the sensors on the right side showed a more normal 15-degree rise—an indication that a significant heating problem was taking place on the left side. Temperatures inside the cargo bay are normal. The shuttle was over eastern California and western Nevada.

8:55 a.m. EST (1355 GMT): Another main gear brake line temperature sensor shows an unusual temperature rise.

[8:55 a.m.: The shuttle is now soaring over the southern portion of Nevada.

8:56 a.m.: Columbia's speed is now about 15,000 miles per hour as it streaks over northern Arizona.]

8:57 a.m. EST (1357 GMT): Two sensors on the left wing's upper and lower skin failed off. The shuttle is flying over Arizona and New Mexico.

[8:57 a.m.: The shuttle is now 43 miles over New Mexico. Columbia is now reversing its bank to the left to further reduce speed.]

8:58 a.m. EST (1358 GMT): The elevon flaps on the left wing began moving to steer the shuttle on course after computers detected the shuttle was beginning to fly off course due to increased drag on the left wing. At the same time, wheel well sensors measuring temperature and pressure of the left main-landing gear failed. The shuttle is over New Mexico.

8:59 a.m. EST (1359 GMT): Two of Columbia's nose steering jets automatically fired for 1.5 seconds to help the shuttle counteract the rapidly increasing drag on the left wing. The shuttle is over west Texas.

[8:59 a.m.: At an altitude of 40 miles, shuttle Columbia has entered Texas.]

8:59:22 a.m. EST (1359.22 GMT): Loss of signal happened at 15 days, 22 hours, 20 minutes and 22 seconds after launch. Columbia was 207,000 feet high and moving 18 times the speed of sound, or more than 12,000 mph.

[9:01 a.m.: Columbia is out of communications with flight controllers in Houston. Now 15 minutes from landing time.

9:04 a.m.: We're getting reports from Texas of debris behind the shuttle's plasma trail during reentry.

9:05 a.m.: There has been no communications with the shuttle. Mission Controllers waiting for tracking data from the Merritt Island station.

9:06 a.m.: Mission Control is waiting for C-band tracking data and UHF communications with Columbia through MILA, located near Kennedy Space Center. Houston lost communications with the shuttle a few minutes ago over Texas. We have gotten reports of debris in the sky.

9:10 a.m.: NASA is still seeking tracking data. Communications with the shuttle were lost about 10 minutes ago.

9:14 a.m.: Entry Flight Director Leroy Cain has instructed flight controllers to get out their contingency plan.

9:15 a.m.: The flight dynamics officer reports there is no tracking of the shuttle.

9:16 a.m.: This was to be the time of Columbia's landing. What we know is contact was lost with the shuttle at about 9 a.m. EST and a sighting by residents in Texas reported a debris cloud following the plasma trail as Columbia streaked overhead.

In a devastating tragedy that took the lives of seven astronauts, the space shuttle Columbia disintegrated in the skies over Texas on Saturday morning as the ship was heading back to Earth. By the time the shuttle was over California, the first sensor data (at 8:52 a.m. EST) reported increasing temperature on the left side. This information leads to an interesting story from the Associated Press:

Astronomer Saw Shuttle Apparently In Trouble Over California

by John Antczak, AP Writer

February 1, 2003, 12:10 p.m. PST

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Space shuttle Columbia appeared to begin trailing fiery debris as it passed over Eastern California early Saturday, well before its destruction over Texas, according to a California Institute of Technology astronomer who witnessed its fiery transit.

Anthony Beasley observed the shuttle's re-entry from outside his home in Bishop, California, near Caltech's Owens Valley Radio Observatory.

"As it tracked from west to east over the Owens Valley it was leaving a bright trail. As it actually moved over the valley there were a couple of flashes.... Then we could see there were things clearly trailing the orbiter subsequent to that" Beasley said.

Beasley said he, his wife, Anne, and mother-in-law had gone outside in the early morning darkness to watch the re-entry from the small town 225 miles north of Los Angeles. He said he had never witnessed a shuttle re-entry before and is not an authority on shuttles, but he immediately thought Columbia was having problems.

"In particular, there was one very clear event where there was a piece that backed off the orbiter.... It was giving off its own light, then it slowly fell from visibility" he said.

Beasley said he thought the shuttle might be losing some of the heat-resistant tiles that protect it during the fiery re-entry. He said he did not learn of the shuttle's destruction until he went to the observatory and compared notes with two news photographers who had arranged to photograph the re-entry through a telescope.

Beasley said they compared notes and all agreed they had seen what he termed "the bright event, the third event".

"The analogy, I think, is it looked like the shuttle dropped a flare" he said.

He described the scene again: "Pretty soon after we started to see it track, there were brief flashes of light. It would sort of flash a little bit and there was an indication of material trailing the orbiter. They would sort of disappear from view.... That happened two or three times. One of these was very bright. It was a very clear thing. It separated itself from where the orbiter is. It sort of fell behind in the trail and it was burning itself. It was hot itself...and then the orbiter continued heading toward Texas."

The commonly offered idea of a few insulation tiles falling off the shuttle as a mechanism leading to the kind of intense hotspot(s) such as were THAT visible from the ground (in the above story) doesn't sit very well with the physics of heat transfer and actual frictional heat build-up at surfaces.

A more reasonable localized-heating mechanism would be some kind of an energy beam which began to "burn a hole" in the side of Columbia at this point (at 8:52 a.m. EST), when the temperature sensors started to register unusual heat activity. With that "far-out" concept in mind, let's look at this intriguing San Francisco Chronicle story:

San Francisco Man's Astounding Photo: Mysterious Purple Streak Is Shown Hitting Columbia 7 Minutes Before It Disintegrated

by Sabin Russell, Chronicle Staff Writer
Wednesday, February 5, 2003

Top investigators of the Columbia space shuttle disaster are analyzing a startling photograph—snapped by an amateur astronomer from a San Francisco hillside—that appears to show a purplish electrical bolt striking the craft as it streaked across the California sky.

The digital image is one of five snapped by the shuttle buff at roughly 5:53 a.m. Saturday as sensors on the doomed orbiter began showing the first indications of trouble. Seven minutes later, the craft broke up in flames over Texas.

The photographer requested that his name not be used and said he would not release the image to the public until NASA experts had time to examine it.

Although there are several possible benign explanations for the image—such as a barely perceptible jiggle of the camera as it took the time exposure—NASA's zeal to examine the photo demonstrates the lengths to which the agency is going to tap the resources of ordinary Americans in solving the puzzle.

Late Tuesday, NASA dispatched former shuttle astronaut Tammy Jernigan, now a manager at Lawrence Livermore Laboratories, to the San Francisco home of the astronomer to examine his digital images and to take the camera itself to Mountain View, where it was to be

See and hear David Icke at the top of his form as he presents six-and-a-half hours of incredible information before a sellout audience of 1200 at the Vogue Theatre in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

You will laugh, you may cry, and you will be on the edge of your seat as the fantastic story of true human history, and WHO really controls the world today, unfolds in Icke's unique style, aided by video footage and hundreds of illustrations.

This is the presentation that the Illuminati (the forces of global control) tried so hard to stop—media interviews were cancelled; immigration officials turned up at the theatre to question his right to speak; pressure was applied on the venue to cancel the event itself; and pies were even thrown at David at a book signing by a rent-a-mob who ludicrously and outrageously sought to dub him a "racist".

But nothing could silence him or break his spirit—and here you will see the result.

transported by a NASA T-38 jet to Houston this morning.

A Chronicle reporter was present when the astronaut arrived. First seeing the image on a large computer screen, she had one word: "Wow!"

Jernigan, who is no longer working for NASA, quizzed the photographer on the aperture of the camera, the direction he faced, and the estimated exposure time—about four to six seconds on the automatic Nikon 880 camera. It was mounted on a tripod, and the shutter was triggered manually.

In the critical shot, a glowing purple rope of light corkscrews down toward the plasma trail, appears to pass behind it, then cuts sharply toward it from below. As it merges with the plasma trail, the streak itself brightens for a distance, then fades.

"It certainly appears very anomalous" said Jernigan. "We sure will be very interested in taking a very hard look at this."

Jernigan flew five shuttle missions herself during the 1990s, including three on Columbia. On her last flight, the pilot of the craft was Rick Husband, who was at the controls when Columbia perished.

"He was one of the finest people I could ever hope to know" said Jernigan.

It was an astounding day for the San Francisco photographer, who said he had not had any success in reaching NASA through its published telephone hot lines.

He ultimately reached investigators through a connection with a relative who attends the same church as former astronaut Jack Lousma, who flew 24 million miles in the Skylab 3 mission in 1973.

Lousma put him in direct touch with Ralph Roe Jr., chief engineer for the shuttle program at Johnson Space Flight Center in Houston.

After a series of telephone conversations Tuesday afternoon, the photographer had a veteran shuttle mission specialist knocking at his door by dinnertime. Within hours, he was left with a receipt, and his camera was on its way to Houston.

Was NASA simply overloaded with calls, or was this call from California one they dreaded getting, knowing full well that it could supply the kind of evidence they'd rather not deal with? After all, their immediate goal is a "damage control" job of concocting a cover story that hides The Truth and yet satisfies the public.

So considering the information from the timelines, we can hypothesize some preliminary beam strikes over California, followed by the ones that finally dissolved the structural integrity of Columbia, within seven minutes later, over Texas.

A fisherman out trying his luck that morning near Palestine, Texas said the blasts over his head "sounded like lightning, but real close by" even though the shuttle Columbia was about 40 MILES up! Those of you who may be familiar with the physics of "Tesla technology" energy-beam physics might recognize such a signature effect as the fisherman reported.

He also said that small pieces of the shuttle started to rain down like small rocks—not right away, but relatively soon thereafter. He felt lucky, once he later found out what had happened, that none of the debris falling all around him actually clobbered him!

Other Texas eye-witnesses also reported "crackle and bright lightning flashes" shortly before the breakup of Columbia began.

There are also rumors that plutonium could have rained down all over the debris field, though we're not likely to hear NASA admit that such a dangerous material was on that shuttle, especially given its likely no-good military goals.

Meanwhile, a BBC report on Canadian television news on 2/5/03 reported that AS SOON AS the shuttle incident occurred, armed guards hustled control-room personnel away from their stations at the Johnson Space Flight Center in Houston. Why? Concern over a "terrorist" attack, or a clearing of unnecessary (and perhaps unwilling) participants in subsequent cover-up activities?

Needless to say, such revealing news so far has not been shared by the well-controlled American print and broadcast media. No surprise there.

Now, to answer the question of where these energy beams may have originated from, we have to move further away from conventional investigation tools. Several good psychic viewers of the shuttle demise claim they saw "cloaked" triangle-shaped craft in the vicinity. For example, as gifted viewer Anna Detweiler put it the day after, on 2/2/03:

I'm not sure who's triangle-shaped craft this was. In my own way of thinking though, I'd say the Russian High Command was a big player here.

I know a lot of people think that the triangle-shaped craft are "ours", but I wouldn't dismiss the thought that the High Command has this kind too.

I want you to take a good look at Dubya's tie he had on yesterday in the news briefing. If I saw right, it was a black tie with small white patterns on it. In the years I have watched the tie phenomenon, this almost always signals all-out battle.

Oh yes, I wonder how many people heard Tom Brokaw announce the color of the President's tie as he walked out to make the State Of The Union speech. In a very matter-of-fact way Brokaw said: "And the president is wearing a blue tie."

Anyway, the world is in an uproar right now. I am trying to stay in a state of calm and balance. Once I get caught-up in the imbalance of the masses, I have no ability to view the events going on.

Once again, I want everybody to keep

Why the official story of 9/11 is a monumental lie

David Icke

$29.95 (+S/H)
Code: AIW (1.75 lb.)

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

their eyes and ears peeled as to what is going on in Algeria. That is where there was lots of very bad energy being projected at us yesterday. That's the area I believe to be the main hornet's nest when it comes to real terrorists. They almost certainly are receiving their commands from higher up, but they certainly have the negative energy to match the orders! May we all stay safe and within the Balance of the One Light!

Love and Peace, Anna.

Below is part of a lengthy exchange between Anna and another respected SPECTRUM author, Calvin Burgin, on 2/1/03:

Yes, Calvin, they are very quick to say this could not have been a terrorist attack. In reality it has not been a terrorist attack in the sense they talk about. This was, though, by no means an accident.

I have rewound the event and can very clearly see a triangler craft come up behind the shuttle and fire some kind of weapon toward the shuttle. This is so obviously a message to some faction that is trying to get a message across!

We are standing at a very critical crossroad right now as to whether to take revenge or settle back and wait for the next move. The reason it was blown up coming in instead of going out makes me believe it was more of a warning than an elimination of information.

I can feel a swirl of chaotic energy surrounding the whole globe at this time. It is making goose pimples come up on my arms, so you can know how prevalent that energy is! May the Balance of The One be with us all!

Love and Peace, Anna

Then from Calvin:

Due to the timing, extra security, and an Israeli on board, it was obvious that this was a military mission having to do with the attack on Iraq. I am not at all surprised with the explosion, except I expected it on launch or during orbit; it surprised me that it was on the landing approach.

I would say that there goes Bush's war. If there is any sanity at all left among those turkeys, they will call off their war. But they are just crazy enough to retaliate in blind anger.

As I write this, there is a Texas man telling on TV of another aircraft very close to the shuttle which he and his family watched, at the time of the breakup. There was no way to judge distances, but he said he was surprised to see another plane "so close" to the shuttle.

And now they have decided to classify it [shuttle] as a military craft and ordered people to stay away from it. They might learn too much. — Calvin

Then from Anna to Calvin again:

Calvin, I wonder on what channel you saw this. I never did see what you were talking about, but I also wasn't watching TV much yesterday afternoon. This what you described is almost exactly what I saw when watching it via Remote Viewing.

I think you are right about there being more than one attacker in the area. At first, when I rewound the "tape", I could feel the craft, but not see it; then I did it more slowly and noticed it come into view. I can feel a "cloaked" craft, and if I focus on it I can bring up an image of it.

It seemed to do just what you described: decloak for a bit and then fade away again. I could feel more of the same energy in the area, but did not bother to focus on it. From the way it appeared, the blast from the other craft did not break up the shuttle instantaneously, although it fried all electronics and everyone on board. It still saddens me to see the carnage that they inflict on each other.

Love and Peace, Anna

Then this from Calvin:

TV is showing what happened. A craft, probably a cosmosphere, decloaks and follows the shuttle. It fires, the shuttle blows up, the attacker drops back and disappears.

It is assumed that the second blip is a piece of the shuttle, but compare the size. The second blip maintains speed with the first. Does it accelerate? They are showing different tracking pictures now than at first. Yes, the clip I am watching just showed it moving closer to the shuttle. Then the shuttle explodes, the second blip fades out and drops back and UP!

It is too big to be a piece of the shuttle BEFORE the shuttle explodes.

It glows white, then fades out. If it were a piece, would it not glow brighter as it descended?

In fact there may be more than one attacker; it appears that one moves to the front of the shuttle.

The beat goes on. — Calvin

And then this revealing research from a friend of the above discussion:

Yesterday I decided to record some of the shots of the shuttle BEFORE they could withdraw evidence from the public.

I then went through the 3-minute recording frame by frame (VHS high-speed).

The large white "dot" was very visible most of the time, but there was definitely a second craft on occasion—long before the explosion.

I was then surprised to see a black form (probably triangular), emerge from the left and cross immediately behind the shuttle, being silhouetted against its trail, and disappear on the other side. This was probably what Anna referred to as a black triangular craft. — Milson

Finally we will leave you with this food for thought that, while "far out" by some standards, definitely factors the Larger Picture into the discussion. This was discreetly posted at the www.GuluFuture.com website, 2/1/03:

Scalar Strike On Columbia Ends WW3? High-Profile Target Makes For Devastating Blow

A scalar-burst strike on the U.S. space shuttle Columbia has struck a debilitating preemptive blow to Anglo-American plans for a Middle-East takeover.

Psychological warfare tactics were to the fore in continuing pre-conflict skirmishing over the planned US-UK invasion of the Middle-East. This time the blow was devastating, as the Columbia ran into an electromagnetic "wall" in the sky over Texas.

On Saturday, 1 February 2003, a scalar Tesla Howitzer weapon—aimed at downing the U.S. space shuttle Columbia, was phenomenally successful and will leave red faces in the Pentagon.

Despite the media spin of an unfortunate accident, the nature of the crash of Columbia was evident from eyewitness accounts. The telltale sonic boom from the deployment of the weapon was so strong: "It was like a car hitting the house or an explosion. It shook that much!" This is what John Ferolito, 60, of Carrollton, north of Dallas, told the Associated Press.

Media reports put the noise down to the effects of the shuttle breakup, but this is clearly spurious. The shuttle was gliding at 203,000 feet. That works out to almost 40 miles. Aircraft-generated sonic booms 40 miles up in super-thin air do not shake homes at ground level! Nor do small debris parts. Just try generating air pressure changes at ground level when 40 miles up—no matter how fast you are going.

Just after a previous shuttle launch in November, 1985, a sonic boom occurred over the launch site, after the shuttle had departed. The same effects took place on at least two previous shuttle launches. Scalar expert T. E. Bearden put these down to testing of the weapons.

The scalar boom effect is caused in a way similar to a thunderstorm. In that case the lightning cleaves apart [actually heats up due to the electrical current flow] large masses of air, which boom [in response to the rapid thermal expansion of the air].

The scalar weapon can generate a massive version of the same effect. This is not a “beam” weapon like the one used to down the two WTC towers. It remotely produces local space-time distortion effects by connecting through the complex plane around which all space-time is wrapped.

Military Strategic Catastrophe

Quite how top military brass managed to hang out an irresistibly attractive lure for targeting, remains to be answered. If gross incompetence was the reason, then perhaps their war might better be delayed until the US-UK Axis has some competent military strategic leadership in place.

Let’s just recap:

First, the shuttle was launched in the middle of a tense period of nuclear weapon sabre-rattling between the U.S. and China—through the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK) acting as the Chinese proxy and battleground.

Second, the propaganda highlight of the mission was the onboard presence of an Israeli researcher.

Third, the shuttle was scheduled to land in the middle of Chinese New Year celebrations.

Fourth, it was scheduled to glide in over U.S. president Bush’s home state of Texas on final approach.

Given that taking the shuttle out with scalar weapons (known to be in the possession of a number of opponents of the Anglo-American cabal) was always going to be a straightforward matter, the question is: who allowed this shuttle mission to go ahead at this time?

[Actually, turn the question around into an inference: The shuttle mission was THAT important to the Iraq war plans that it went forward, in desperation, fully knowing how dangerous a mission it was for the astronauts involved. This tells you what kind of despotic lunatics want that war.]

Today, February 1, 2003, the China People’s Daily online edition reported the DPRK’s ambassador to Russia, Pak Ui-Chun, warning in Moscow on Friday that the DPRK would [likely in conjunction with Russia] take “adequate measures to counter a possible United States preemptive attack”.

Adequate measures indeed! When the People’s Daily reports the words of the DPRK ambassador, there is a certain significance to such a report—under the headline: “DPRK Warns It Will Take Measures In Face Of U.S. Threat”.

As we recently reported, last week the U.S. was hit with a scalar manipulation of weather, but the U.S. Administration did not seem to get the message.

And so they left the space shuttle Columbia hung out on a limb for INEVITABLE targeting. This failure was overseen by military planners possessed with what can only be described as mind-boggling levels of incompetence.

If this is the leadership the U.S. is relying upon to win a war in the Middle-East, then expect George Bush to join the antiwar protesters tomorrow. Have these top brass ever heard of PsyOps? Presumably they have, as they run a huge PsyOps effort themselves.

So why offer such an unbelievably enticing PsyOp target such as Columbia in the context of all the above? The impact on the U.S. population could not be greater—entirely negating the “positive” military psychological and diplomatic advantages of this cabal having staged the 9/11 attacks in the first place.

Even judged by the deeply flawed logic of global imperialist ambitions, what’s the point of sacrificing 3,500 people [on 9/11] to ensure the survival of the “free world” if you are going to squander that blood-earned “advantage” like this?

Prudent planning would have anticipated the potential disaster, but prudence is a strange bedfellow to the arrogance born of expectations of hegemony as a birthright.

Yes, on the domestic scene the story is already being spun frantically along the lines of “tiles came loose” (insufficient cause) and “valiant astronauts” to minimize the damage to national psychology. But nevertheless there will be significant effects and nagging doubts in the minds of the domestic population.

What next: The unwashed masses in the U.S.A. may well swallow whatever McSpin the networks churn out for domestic consumption, but it is internationally that the real damage will be done. International allies and waverers will know the truth of the matter and are unlikely to be unaffected. Time for a VERY big rethink in the Cabal.

Excuse me, Mr. Bush. War on Terror? Run that slogan by me again, please. I thought, for a moment, you said War in Error.

There is a nearly insane desperation of those pushing for war in Iraq (as our front-page story and page 3 editorial explain why). We can thus expect further “lessons”—some perhaps shocking like this shuttle Columbia attack—by accomplished technical powers like Russia, in concert with the wishes of China and other nations worldwide, to render the New World Order misfits incapable of carrying out their war of mass destruction.

This more public confrontation between Good and Evil in the physical plane has been a noted subject of discussion, by Teachers from the Higher Realms, in many of our spiritual messages over the past few months. Looks like we’re now seeing why! △

Understand Who Are The Host Of God

1/12/03 ARCHANGEL MICHAEL

Thank you for asking; thank you for reminding; you are quite correct and well within your authority to request identification of this communication.

Therefore, I am Michael, Archangel and leader of God's Heavenly Host. I am Defender of Truth and of the Throne of God. I am Defender and Advocate of Mankind on planet Earth. I serve Creator of All That Is with great honor and respect, and my Sword of Justice draws its power from the White Light of Creation.

In the coming days, you will begin to hear more frequently the term Heavenly Host. Therefore, it would be a good time to examine this phrase so that you may understand just exactly what this term means and the implications that are carried with it.

I have therefore instructed the receiver to engage in research in order to aid you ones in understanding precisely what the term "Heavenly Host" is all about.

* * *

From Abingdon's expanded 1980 edition of Strong's Exhaustive Concordance Of The Bible:

There are three Hebrew words used in the Old Testament that translate as Host. They are as follows:

Referring to the Lord God of Hosts or specific MILITARY situations. The most commonly used words:

- Hebrew word ts'ba'ah: A mass of persons, especially or regularly organized for war (an army), by implication, a campaign; literally or figuratively (especially hardship or worship); appointed time + battle, company, host, service, soldiers, waiting upon, war(fare). As in Genesis 2:1, 21:22, 21:32.

- Hebrew word machaneh: Encampment (of travelers or troops), hence an army, whether literally of soldiers, or figuratively of dancers, angels, cattle, locusts, stars, or even the sacred courts; army, band, battle, camp, company, drove, host, tents. As in Genesis 32:2 "This is God's Host."

Dealing with army of men:

- Hebrew word ehayil: Able, activity, army, band of men (soldiers), company, (great) forces, goods, host, might, power, riches, strength, strong, substance, train, valiant(ly), valor, virtuous(ly), war, worthy(ily). As in Ezekiel 14:4, 14:17.

* * *

What is the Heavenly Host? You ones tend to think of the Host of Heaven simply as angels. However, if you will but do some simple homework, and research the word in your biblical scriptures, you will find that the word Host is quite specific, and it is, beyond a shadow of a doubt, a definite military term. This "Host of Heaven" that you so often talk about is none other than the "army" or the "military" of God. And I, Michael, lead this army.

Why is this so important? Why do we want to see this clarified?

We want you ones of Earth to have an understanding of who and what we are, because it is becoming more apparent with each passing event that it may become necessary for the Heavenly Host to intervene in the events of humankind on Earth, as we have done on many occasions in times past.

Though man has dominion over the planet, man does NOT have the authority to cause the destruction of the planet, nor to cause the demise or extinction of life on the planet. Having dominion carries with it a strong responsibility, but it does NOT mean that you ones have ultimate authority.

Let it be known, then, that there is none mightier, there is none with greater strength—either in weaponry or in sheer numbers, or in terms of determination and focus—than this Army of God.

But, do we have the technology that could counter those forces upon planet Earth determined to accomplish their selfish goals at any cost?

Dear ones, we have technologies that you have not even dreamed of—technologies that you would never even recognize. Many of our weapons are not of a physical nature, but are far more potent than any of a physical nature could be.

If you ones think that the Host of Heaven is going to sit back and allow the childish forces upon your planet to do unprecedented harm to Earth, then you ones need to think it through again. As the leader of this Host, I am authorized to inform you ones that your time of nonsense and bullish behavior has reached an end, and we shall no longer sit back and allow the ongoing destruction to occur.

There has, until recently, been a "hands-off" approach—a non-interference policy in effect. However, those on your planet who are in league with the Dark Adversarial Forces have been duly warned and counseled, and were given a specific timeframe in which to change their ways.

When this did not occur, the non-interference, hands-off policy became null and void. We have upheld our end of all agreements, and only expected the same from those ones on your world who are acting in such an irresponsible and reprehensible manner.

I, Michael, will from this point forward be taking a greater role in communications with regard to events upon planet Earth.

It is most unfortunate that there are those upon your planet who are in league with, and in service unto, the Dark Adversarial Energies, and these ones are in the game to usurp the rights and powers of individuals. They have been seduced, and long ago cut their deals, in order to gain power over the planet. They have believed the lies of the Darkness, and do not recognize nor believe that these Dark Energies are only using them for their own exploitation. It has gone on for so long that these ones are completely convinced it is within their rights to be the ultimate controlling faction on Earth.

We have attempted—more times than you know—to negotiate with and to educate these ones regarding the lies put forth by the Darkness. Unfortunately, we have not been successful, and things have reached such a point of crisis that most likely they have left us with no options but to step in and put an end to the madness, lest there be none who would survive.

There will be no need for us to cause any destruction, as those Adversarial Forces will cause their own demise. All we need to do is act as "deflectors". But it will be so frightening to them that they will be faint from fear and will turn upon one another. Just our presence, with our sheer magnitude and numbers, will be enough to turn the tide.

Why are we disseminating this information at this time? Because, dear ones, you have troops and ships of war on their way at this very hour.

And this is to reassure you, as well as to give warning to those ones who are calling the shots. The war that your leaders are about to engage in has nothing to do with protecting your nation's borders, nor its people. The war has to do with the acquisition of an extremely important, powerful artifact, and the personal vendetta of a son.

Yes, chelas [students], it is beginning to get quite interesting, and you should know that dawn is approaching—so see that you fear NOT the dark of night.

Those who are faithful servants of the Most High, and those who search with their hearts for a better world, are getting ready to see the dawn of the New Day.

I am Michael. I leave you for this time with the knowledge that the Light is all about you and quite visible if you will but step out of the darkness (your fears).

I leave you, for the moment, with all the Blessings and Light of Creator Source. Salu. △

A Philosophy For The Twenty-First Century

Eustace Mullins

Editor's note: Those of you who studied the unusual writing from Eustace Mullins last month, will notice how it acts as an introduction to his follow-up message shared here.

In a framework of metaphor, Eustace sets the stage of the escalating battle between Good and Evil that many are sensing is going on at this time. Of course, given Eustace's substantial historical background, this overall spiritual issue is thoughtfully supported with examples underscoring how extensively orchestrated have been the longtime lies that must now begin to dissolve in the Light of an increasing Awareness sweeping planet Earth.

While many of you readers are quite familiar with Eustace Mullins—the Great Grandmaster of Truthbringing—for newer readers we will mention that Eustace is a longtime highly respected and often persecuted author of five of the most well-documented, controversial, and hard-hitting volumes ever published on the crooks in high secret places and how they have long controlled world affairs to conform to their own agenda.

Though his books are CONSTANTLY in demand, like the rest of us who bring Truth he is poor and has little monetary resources at this time with which to reprint these fine manuscripts.

For those of you who may not be familiar with his most important classic research works, they include:

- THE CURSE OF CANAAN: A Demonology Of History,
- MURDER BY INJECTION: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy

Against America,

- THE WORLD ORDER: Our Secret Rulers,
- THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE, and
- RAPE OF JUSTICE: America's Tribunals Exposed.

We are, as always, deeply honored that Eustace chooses The SPECTRUM as the vehicle through which to share his insightful writings, in turn to share with you who read AND SUPPORT this conduit of Truth.

1/2/03 EUSTACE MULLINS

Once again, we enter a new millennium woefully unprepared, neither understanding what has gone before or preparing ourselves for what is to come. Our egotism persuades us that the future will be comprised of rare and startling events, but reality tells us that it will be much more of the same.

The most disturbing and unsettling aspect of our situation is our total reliance on soothsayers, charlatans, and traitors for our guidance. Preeminent in the land are our Rasputins, with magical cures for whatever ails our nation, oversexed, and totally unscrupulous. One can hardly be too critical of anyone who took advantage of Czar Nicholas, the richest and most powerful monarch in the world, who succumbed to a few itinerant mountebanks [charlatans or tricksters] with no program.

Does the reader see an alarming resemblance to present day United States of America? Our President is restlessly scouring the world in search of an insignificant small nation which will topple us into oblivion and relieve our nervous leaders of the responsibility of ruling the world. No doubt the Czar felt the same enormous relief at Ekaterinburg.

The United States, and thus the world, is ruled by a small clique of mountebanks who could only be portrayed by W. C. Fields. They are evangelists and, to the man, summa cum laude graduates of the school of P. T. Barnum. And their degrees are signed by the school's dean, Benedict Arnold, who soon will be replaced by the sainted KGB agent, Alger Hiss, the Martin Luther King of America.

These evangelists fervently believe that loyalty to God commands treason to man, cleverly concealing their treachery behind their peculiar passion, which they call humanism, and claiming that man is the Creator of all things. This does not mean that they have dismissed God altogether, for they proudly wave the banner of their faith: a contract with God which awards the Zionists perpetual and unconditional title to all the lands of this Earth. The contract offers no compensation to the former owners, under the well known doctrine of "finders-keepers", nor is it signed by any of the principals, for who can doubt the Word of God?

At this juncture, having successfully eaten their way through the woodwork, a new phalanx of intellectual leaders has emerged to chart our way through difficult days. In recent decades, this group has been led by Daniel Bell, who proclaimed The End of Ideology. A Wall Street publicist-cum-scholar at well endowed schools of business, Bell suddenly discovered the end of ideology—meaning that our people had advanced to such a pinnacle of intellectual preeminence that they no longer needed ideology in order to guide them.

As usual, intellectual Bell had mistaken worn-out discarded ideologies for the tossing aside of now useless ideologies. This was an ideal solution for him because he is incapable of devising even the most rudimentary ideology to take their place.

He has since been joined by a host of imitators, for bears bring nothing new to the honeypot. Chief among them is Yamamoto Fujiyame, an intellectual who, having reached the end of a chapter and not knowing enough to turn the page, announced to the world that he, and our world, had come to the “end of history”. We had arrived at the saturation point, so that we could go no further in our history. As an intellectual, he looked at all that God had made, and congratulated himself that he had created the entire scenario.

There could be no more history because we had arrived at the culmination of history, and nothing more remained to be accomplished. We had achieved absolute equality of all the inhabitants of the world; we had achieved total multiculturalism—through dictatorship.

Anyone who challenged this miracle would be meted out the punishment reserved for troublemakers of all kinds who sought only to embarrass their betters and make their dictatorship more difficult. Underlying the triumphalism of these intellectuals was their reluctance to celebrate their final victory—the casting down of their mortal enemy, the white male, who for five thousand years had been the only consistent threat to their conspiracies.

At the precise point of the triumphant intellectuals, they had themselves already become history. This millennium will shortly usher in marvelous changes which will make them not only superfluous, but nonexistent.

Democracy is about to return to the morass from which it emerged, the “Creature from the Black Lagoon”. Not yet coal, it will remain a stinking mess for many years to come.

Many people have contacted me about the changes which are imminent. Some see it as a rise to another, entirely new dimension; others welcome it as our world emerging into the orbit of other planets, suddenly coming into the Light from an orbit which had condemned us to being overshadowed by Dark Forces.

These changes are not due to any splendid conversion or achievements of our people. It is merely the case of standing on the street corner long enough, and your bus will come by.

We have learned to accept our life here on “Devil’s Island”, in an eternal prison consisting of a tiny stretch of concrete floor, and a daily ration of inedible food.

I had been informed of these changes a decade ago, when the annual onset of December introduced me to a new world of ineffable peace and beauty, in which A Serene Presence extended to me the Calm of the Real World—a world in which we did not require mind-altering drugs to achieve Nirvana, but a world which we had refused to enter, whether from our own sense of unworthiness or from the malevolence of demonic forces who used their influence to prevent us from tasting the fruits of Paradise.

Genesis tells us that Adam and Eve forfeited Paradise because of their own errors. But we cannot entirely dismiss the influence of Dark Forces which led them into those errors.

Among those errors, we must confess our embracing of The Lie, which the Oxford English Dictionary defines as a false statement with intent to deceive. The Lie is always protected by its loyal cohort of defenders, which is censorship, placing the lie beyond any human challenge.

The Lie is always enthroned in ideology which, according to

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the “London Connection”. The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and documentation from many sources.

A Writ For Martyrs by Eustace Mullins

This is a fully documented exposé of the atrocities which federal agents regularly commit against American citizens.

This book reproduces 121 pages from Eustace Mullins’ FBI file, which he obtained only by the personal intervention of a college classmate, Senator John Warner, Rep. Of Virginia. The FBI refused for two years to send Eustace his files through Freedom of Information Act inquiries. When Eustace found it, he discovered a plot by the FBI, with 60 pages of memos, in which J. Edgar Hoover personally ordered that Eustace be committed to a mental institution for life.

On the basis of these revelations, Eustace obtained two “Default Judgments” against the FBI in Federal Court. One judgment was for $50 million, and one for $35 million, which remain on the books today.

This book also documents atrocities committed against Eustace’s handicapped sister, his ailing mother, and his invalid father, who all died of heart attacks after daily harassments by the FBI terrorists.

Mullins was one of the principal victims of the notorious FBI counter-intelligence program called COINTEL, set up by Alex Rosen, one of five FBI assistant directors. The COINTEL program was actually organized by the Anti-Defamation League of B’nai B’rith, and the Mossad intelligence agency.

This book will give you an idea of what Eustace has had to put up with in his life as a crusader for Truth.

the Oxford English Dictionary, is the science of ideas. The liars never base their lies on science, and they have only one idea, which is to rob the suckers.

The final enthronement of the power of the ideologues is the worshiping of idols, idolatry. The Oxford English Dictionary defines an idol by the ancient Greek definition, as a phantom. Certainly we have suffered from an excess of worshiping idols, but it is we who have sought out—or even invented—our phantoms, and it is we who must undergo the exorcism of ridding ourselves from their influence.

The Twentieth Century—the century of mass murder—was plagued by a plethora of idols or phantoms. We had Nazism, Communism, Zionism, Fascism; and for each of them we invented an antidote, called anti-Nazism, anti-Communism, and so on. The antis became a source of as much fanaticism as their originals, and embodied the well known philosophy of Hegel: thesis and antithesis.

During the Twentieth Century, millions of people were massacred under the thesis, and even more millions were killed during the appearance of the antithesis. These phenomena THEMSELVES will offer a blessing on mankind with their imminent disappearance.

It is noteworthy that these phenomena were exposed by my mentor, Ezra Pound, who wrote in his Cantos:

“I don’t understand how humanity stands it,

“With a painted paradise at the end of it, without a painted paradise at the end of it.”

It is understandable that these painted paradises were created, one and all, by the New World Order—the world created out of nothing by the Kabbalah, through the instrument of the Rothschild central banks.

Thus we find that their primary instrumentality, the Bank of England, poured enough money into a political party of seven malcontents in Germany to create a world power which successively created the Second World War, the State of Israel to rule the world, and a multicultural world which had only one crime: the challenging of orthodoxy.

In the same vein, the Rothschild bank had launched another vehicle of future world domination in hiring one Karl Marx to write the Communist Manifesto and launch the world movement of Communism. His work was met with little success. He wrote several unreadable books, among them Das Kapital. As he never came into contact with any capital, he knew nothing of its attributes, and his life work on capitalism found few converts.

With the capital of the Rothschilds behind him, he set up a world conspiracy of terrorists, which fumbled along until they stumbled into the world’s least developed nation, Czarist Russia. The conspirators found fertile ground there, and to their surprise, perpetrated a successful revolution.

Here again, their success was not due to any talents of their own, but to funding from the Bank of England. There were no Bolsheviks in the successful Bolshevik Revolution. It was carried out by the British Intelligence Service, whose agents had a field day running amuck in Russia. They were as surprised as anyone when the world’s richest and most powerful ruler, Czar Nicholas, surrendered his nation without a fight, and turned his people over to the tender mercies of the revolutionaries.

After stealing his gold and sending it to their banks in London and Paris, they murdered the Czar and his entire family. They set up a bloodthirsty regime which routinely murdered a million Russians each year for the next seventy years—a figure which the world refused to believe, and it was only given credence by an exiled writer, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, who publicized the death toll when he arrived in the United States.

His revelation earned him the undying enmity of the luminaries in Washington, whose careers were entirely dependent on their work in the world Communist conspiracy. No less than accused war criminal Henry Kissinger was outraged by Solzhenitsyn’s presence in America. Solzhenitsyn was even invited to have an audience with President Gerald Ford, but Kissinger exercised his power as the most influential man in America, and promptly cancelled the invitation.

As often happens, the world moves on, and the center of the world was transferred from Washington to Tel Aviv. The mantle of power descended from Alger Hiss to the Zionist monarchs in Tel Aviv and Washington. They remained totally dependent on the American taxpayer and on our military equipment, but the political vermin learned that loyalty to Moscow had been transferred to Tel Aviv, and they quickly made the switch. Since 1948, Washington influence has depended on access to the State of Israel, and power rested solely in the amount of American moneys given to Israel.

Since the Zionists are of the Jewish faith, no one could have been more surprised that their principal support in the United States was built upon Christian evangelists, who rapidly found that if they supported the Israeli occupation of Palestine, millions of dollars flowed into their coffers from Israeli supporters. The evangelists overnight forgot about their lean years, when they only had Christian contributors.

One of their leaders, Rev. Jerry Falwell, was adopted by Israel’s leading terrorist, Menachem Begin, the architect of Israel’s mass murder of Palestinians. Falwell never ceased to voice his admiration of this terrorist, and millions of dollars flowed each week into his little Virginia church.

Other evangelists, such as Rev. Pat Robertson, son of the head of the Senate Banking Committee, set up an entire TV network to sell Zionism to the American people like a new brand of soap powder. He later sold the network for almost a billion dollars, which went into his family pockets.

Other evangelists soon got the message, and the United States was blanketed by television Christian evangelists whose message was not the words of Christ, but promotion of Zionism.

This sorry spectacle is coming to an end, which will provide a tremendous hiatus in American politics. It is a remarkable rebirth of Christ, who had been totally forgotten by the promoters. And it shows the staying power of Christ’s mission.

This brings us back to our identification of these sideshow barkers as protégés of P. T. Barnum. Almost everything printed and broadcast in the United States is a functioning part of a great hoax. We have billion-dollar publishing and television empires whose sole product is promoting Zionism—a serious competition to the drug business as the greatest moneymaker in the nation. It does not hurt that the pharmaceutical business is heavily owned by Zionist bankers.

Hoaxes and high treason are their stock in trade, and will continue to be their chief product. This gives us even more reason to await the coming changes, which hopefully will expose the hoaxes for what they are. △

“The next year, the next decade, in all likelihood the next generation, will require more bravery and wisdom on our part than any period in our history. We will be face to face, every day, in every part of our lives and times, with the real issue of our age—the issue of survival.”

A Message From Red Elk

Editor's note: It seems as if the pace of the Great Awakening on planet Earth has jumped up another notch. Those of you who have been closely following the spiritual messages (and some others) shared within these pages over, especially, the last few months have noticed a common theme: that we are all, spiritually, in a "decision-making" time. There's no more fence-sitting; rather, we are told that ALL shall experience conditions and circumstances which require a decision one way or the other—a siding with Good or Evil.

Well, here we go again. Yet another respected source has come forth.

On Wednesday, January 22, 2003, we received a telephone call at The SPECTRUM from renowned Native American leader Red Elk, who felt compelled to share the following message with all of our readers.

Many of you will remember Red Elk as Rick Martin's featured front-page interviewee for our April 2002 issue. That provocative article was titled Red Elk's Medicine Message Of Worlds Within Worlds: Old Mysteries, Powerful Truths For Today. Red Elk teaches and lectures extensively and has several times spoken to the vast listening audience of Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program about both spiritual matters AND the many layers of activity going on right under our feet.

Rick Martin answered Red Elk's call and, once the intent was understood, quickly grabbed his tape recorder so that we could share the following information and dialog with you.

Is it timely? That's a matter of personal value within the Larger Play that's rapidly picking up speed. It seems that teachers from all directions are being urged to step forth and do their part to help guide those who are awakening to an awareness of the Cleansing Spirit moving ever more surely over planet Earth.

As Red Elk says, conditions shall be such as to encourage ALL of like mind to work TOGETHER toward the renewal of Mother Earth—for all our relations.

What I'd like to say, if at all possible, is to the people:

The line IS drawn. Capitalize IS. There will be no more fence-straddling. You're either going to be for Good, or for self.

Basically, we've only got about 2½ years before war comes to our shores, and WE lose. But it won't be a total loss.

The Great Hand of the Creator will slap-down on the foreign armies that occupy the USA. It will slap-down three times, and every foreign personnel who are connected with taking us over will flee. But, nevertheless, war is due.

There will be a M7.2 earthquake on the West Coast. Somewhere rolling in from the Portland, Oregon area. Now, I do not know if that's Portland included, but from that particular area, up toward Washington. Date or year unknown, but it will be early on a beautiful Spring morning.

Mount St. Helens will blow again, going through the lava tubes, wiping-out Cougar, Washington—going towards Portland. I don't know if the winds catch it before or after, and then blow it along the coast, and inland again, East, as before. Time and date and year unknown—but it will be. It will be as before, on a beautiful Spring morning, between 6:00 and 10:30 a.m. More towards Summer, I think, because it's a very beautiful day.

Mt. Rainer will blow approximately just under 1/4 of its top, like an arrow shooting up. And then it will turn around and come down and fill the gap that it had left, creating air pressure far into the inlands of Eastern Washington, Kittitas County. There will be holes from a few mere inches to 60 feet or so across, that are blown out with just air pressure, nothing to do with lava. This will happen sometime approaching or during elk season, which is Fall time. Again, the time and year unknown.

But we're in for one heck of a ride. This should take place before the war.

Planet X will not flip the Earth. It's only one of three events. It will be a contributing factor only. It is there. We've known it in Native medicine knowledge for many, many, many—well, foretold for centuries. When will it come? I don't know if it's on the date everybody is talking about; I have no idea. All I know is that it will be coming. And it will cause great disturbances on the Earth. But it will not cause the Earth to flip, though it will be a contributing factor.

When will the Earth flip? I don't know. It will flip within 23 years, anytime within 23 years, and AFTER the events just described.

THE LINE IS DRAWN. YOU EITHER GET RIGHT SPIRITUALLY WITH THE CREATOR, SO THAT YOU CAN RELY ON THE CREATOR TO PROTECT YOU AND MAKE YOU SAFE, IF THAT IS WHAT HE WANTS OF YOU, OR NOT.

And it's going to be Bad versus Good, Good versus Bad, Unconditional Love versus Self Gratification.

The Christian churches will break up. There will be the true-hearts who will leave, leaving the modern-day Christian way, in the church buildings. The true-hearts will start meeting in homes, again. They will stay in the traditional Christian churches until they can't stand it anymore. But they will be a Light within the Church for a short time, and then they will pull out.

Again: THE LINE IS DRAWN! There's no more fence-straddling, at all. You make up your mind NOW which way you're going to go: Good or Bad.

You still LOVE the Bad. They can call

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now!"

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli") has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

...and the truth shall set you free

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world. Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

you enemy; but you don't call them enemy.

The year 2012 is NOT the end of civilization as we know it; that I can see. But it IS the Year of Confusion. So many probables. Mankind can go in so many different, strong ways that the Mayan, the Aztec, etc., just did not see which way they were going to go. They were all such strong possibilities to go. So, they more or less threw their hands up and said: "We don't know."

Thank you, my brother, that's the best I can do.

* * *

Martin: I have one question for you.

Red Elk: No, I'm not pregnant.

[Laughter]

Martin: [Laughter] Our upcoming March feature concerns the year 2003, primarily.

Red Elk: Yeah, there is something that is going to be done in 2003. I don't know what.

Martin: There is a lot that people are seeing, a lot of apprehension for the first half of 2003. Some people are apprehensive because of Planet X, some people are apprehensive because of the possible war in Iraq, and yet there are other factors coming into play, not the least of which is time manipulation.

Do you have a sense of what people's apprehension is about 2003?

Red Elk: Most of the apprehension is caused by the Earth, inner great shifting. We are of Earth. We are made of dirt, and stuff, originally. So we are, therefore, very much in tune with the Earth, regardless if you are aware of it or not. The grading, and all of the movement of our Earth, she's getting ready to roll. It's causing a sympathetic vibration in the human body.

Also, people are going into parallel times and places, actually doing it—and shocked: "What was that all about?" Because it only lasts a moment, to several minutes. Are they going crazy? No, it's just they are not aware of what is happening.

[Editor's note: This last comment is very similar to what Al Bielek and Preston Nichols say in Rick's front-page feature story.]

Martin: There's a lot of that.

Red Elk: Yes, there is a tremendous amount, and it is growing, and growing, and growing.

So some of the apprehension is due to our Mother Earth. And the fact that our people came from her belly—in that sense, we ARE connected. But most people are not aware of the TOTAL connection.

But another thing: How do I say it? There is also occurring manipulation through “other forces”—those who in turn are manipulated by Luciferian angels and he himself, who are trying to manipulate the humans to be afraid.

Martin: True.

Red Elk: You’re supposed to run to the government; they will “protect” you. You’re damn right they will! They’re part of the other ones, the Bad ones!

You are being controlled simply by FEAR—they’re trying to, anyway. Big word: FEAR! FEAR!

And those who learn to overcome that fear, and walk in the Light of Love and Unity with The Creator—shoot—this will be a piece of cake.

It will be like walking through a cloud instead of hitting a mountain. It will only cause you to waiver a bit; then off you go, right through that mountain! It’s nothing more than energy in the first place, just as YOU are energy. You become an unstoppable force, going right through an immovable object!

It’s all mind, God-mind stuff. It is, literally, thought energy. You match energy and pass through. And we can do that—but it takes a HEART relationship with Daddy to do it. It really does; I’m not kidding anybody. It really does!

Put that down, however you want, brother, if you will.

Martin: I’ll be glad to.

Red Elk: The line is drawn! There’s no ifs, ands, or buts about it. Our skies haven’t turned red, yet. I think that Planet X is going to help along in that way.

I’m not sure if it’s going to be a nuclear explosion that causes this. Although, the wavering of our Earth, and this Planet X coming by so close and causing what it does—makes the Earth shake and rattle and roll even more.

And since everybody is on edge anyway, somebody might, MIGHT hit the wrong button and we will have a nuclear war. And I’m talking PRIOR to Armageddon.

So, the skies will turn red, day and night, for a number of days in a row. What actually causes it? I’m not sure. It hasn’t happened yet. We can still change everything if enough people of the planet got right with The Creator; we could stop everything.

Planet Earth can go out into space like a slingshot. Mamma would calm down and say: “Ah, the fleas are resting.” And not shake us off. Otherwise, we’re on our own.

And I tell you true: THE LINE IS DRAWN! It’s not a matter of going to be, or a little line here, a little line there, like it has been—people here, people there, praying for Mother Earth, not knowing that there’s five more, six blocks down the road, doing the same thing. They’re not yet connected, a bunch of little lines.

But now, THEY ARE GOING TO CONNECT AS ONE! Those who are for Good will connect as One, in some super-huge kind of meeting.

And they’ve got to learn that, when they connect, they cannot—I repeat, with big CANNOT—say: “We’re all here for helping Earth and mankind, and THIS is the way YOU must do it.”

They’ve got to realize—I’m talking medicine people, spiritual people, I’m talking wiccan people—I don’t care, as long as they are for Mamma Earth, and for unity of Love, I don’t care how they go to The Creator.

But, I’m telling you this: There is a great problem in the world today, amongst the so-called “spiritual” people. They have a problem with: “MY way is right; so we’ll do it THIS way.”

They are not living Mitakuye Oyasin [for all my relations]. They just talk the word.

The world is a body, in a sense. We are the doctors, in a sense. All doctors, to be regular doctors, all go to the same kind of basic training to know the body before they branch off to be a brain surgeon, a heart surgeon, a foot doctor. But they all have to take the same basic training before they branch-off.

They are forgetting that we all have the same basic training; we’re all working with the same body. And sure, some know how to do brain surgery; some know how to do foot work. But that does not cure the body; it only cures that part.

They must realize it takes ALL, working TOGETHER, on the whole body! The brain surgeon, the heart surgeon, the guy who heals broken bones, the guy who takes care of intestinal disorders—without all of them truly working TOGETHER, no ONE is right.

They must unify! Then the body has a great chance of being healed; otherwise, it’s just partially crippled.

Right now the body is spastic. We must work together to make the body whole. Work TOGETHER, not against each other. None of this “mine is right, yours is wrong” attitude.

And until they can do that, these who call others together to meet for praying for Mother Earth, and all that, but they still stay in their specialty and fight each other—how can they be so stubborn and yet claim to heal ALL?! They must accept every bit of each other’s little individual—or great—amount of work on the body.

The nurse who gives the aspirin, she is very much needed. And so is the brain surgeon. No one is more important than the other. We must unite!

Now, people world-wide are getting awfully antsy, scattered, frightened. As I said, it’s designed to be that way, so they can be controlled.

They must be FREE, SELF-THINKERS, and TOTALLY FEARLESS. And they can’t do that without the total spiritual contact with our Creator. And that Creator is 100% real! They’ve got to reach that point of KNOWING!

Make that Creator—however you call The Creator: He, She, Cosmos, Allah, God, whatever—make that one Daddy. Make Him REAL in your heart! Humanize Him to the point where you can run and jump on His lap, and hug Him. But do it with great respect; that’s what He wants. You are His thought! You are His child! You wouldn’t exist if He didn’t want you in the first place!

So make Him an approachable Daddy. Don’t keep Him at such a distance, pushed away with some kind of artificial reverence. Talk to Him in a respectful manner. But then, regard Him as you would your father, human father, who you love dearly. You want to go to Dad and give Him a hug. Or, you want to be able to say: “Dad, I don’t understand this or that; help me.”

And if you’re in the wrong and don’t admit it, you’re going to get your butt spanked. He’s Dad! He wants you to grow up right!

You might as well get up on His lap and apologize, and love Him, instead of standing out there in the doorway. Get in there and hug the Guy, this Great Being. He exists!

Well, I’ve said my piece. A lot more than I intended to say. Take it down as you choose. △

“All life is wakan. So also is everything which exhibits power, whether in action, as the winds and drifting clouds, or in passive endurance, as the boulder by the wayside. For even the commonest sticks and stones have a spiritual essence which must be revered as a manifestation of the all-pervading mysterious Power that fills the universe.”

Interview by Rick Martin

We at The SPECTRUM are not in the prediction business. Generating fear is not appropriate either, and that is surely not our intent in offering this information. Rather, knowledge and understanding are the strongest antidotes to fear. However, there does seem to be particular apprehension among people concerning the months of March and May 2003.

By its very nature, this is a remarkable story that will, without a doubt, require some strong foundational background, so please bear with me. You'll be glad, later on, that topics have been placed in the order they occur.

This is a story that will be a combination of straight reporting, mixed with hypothetical, philosophical, and technical components. I'm going to be posing a lot of questions and there won't necessarily be immediate answers. It's more like you have to be patient to finally form an idea of the Larger Picture being framed.

This is a story that stretches one's thinking about the Nature of Reality—about the substance of the fabric of time and space, and that which may alter both. Much of what you are about to read may be hard for you to digest, even after some reflection.

But here we go. So hang on.

During the final weeks before Art Bell's "retirement" from his late-night talk-radio program called Coast-To-Coast AM (the night of 12/31/02-1/1/03), two well-known regular guests, Sylvia Brown (renowned psychic and author), and Ed Dames (former military "remote viewing" expert), made independent comments on the air concerning March 2003 and their inability to see beyond that month. They both used the same eerie expression: "It's as though time stops."

Also of note was a caller to the final evening of Art Bell's show. It was always a yearly ritual on 12/31 for Art to take predictions for the coming year and also go over the list from the previous year for "hit" and "miss" assessments. This particular caller's ominous prediction for 2003 went approximately like this: "Something will go terribly wrong with an experiment with time."

Meanwhile, how might our very questionable focus on war with Iraq factor into all of this? Many feel we don't know The Truth motivating such a brazen push to effectively start World War III.

And then, by going to war with Iraq, will we provoke China? Will THAT stir the great Russian bear to join in the action?

The American public is strongly against a focus on Iraq while leaving so many important economic matters at home neglected. So, will there be a major incident of some kind to rally a cry for war within the American psyche? Perhaps something nuclear? Could THIS be yet another aspect of what people are sensing?

And if a major traumatic event of some kind does occur, who REALLY will be behind it? Remember Pearl Harbor?

What else may be influencing these ominous perceptions felt by so many?

Is 2003 finally the year for open extraterrestrial interaction and, as a result (like it or not), recognition by our world's governments? Is 2003 the year that extraterrestrials are caused to intervene and show themselves to stop political and military madness?

As it turns out, there seem to be many possible factors that could come into play this year! Then add these:

How about an actual, physical "time warp" or other time anomaly coming from the center of our galaxy? Could this be the reason "time seems to stop" as the two guests on Art Bell's show put it?

Furthermore, could this galactic phenomenon cause an upward dimensional shift for the planet? What could the effects of that be? Might there be a change in the way we perceive the fabric of space itself?

In addition to a galactic-level time anomaly, there has been a discovery in Iraq, we are quietly told, involving ancient (but very advanced) weapons and technology, probably extraterrestrial in origin, including a possible inter-dimensional "stargate" mechanism of some kind.

So is our war with Iraq about gaining control of this powerfully strategic technology?

Is the war with Iraq about destroying or hiding ancient archeological findings and sites that might threaten to topple the longtime stranglehold of our contrived modern religions?

Is something about to happen involving this stargate mechanism that would cause a seasoned remote viewer and a renowned psychic, independently, to feel that "time has stopped"?

In the midst of all this "science fiction", is Saddam Hussein trying to rebuild infamous Babel? How does Saddam's reported belief that he is the reincarnated Nebuchadnezzar factor in? What might be the significance of the modern Saddam Tower? Is an ancient biblical scene about to play itself out again on the modern world stage?

Then there is the concern among a lot of people about Nibiru or so-called Planet X and its supposed inhabitants, the Anunnaki (of the Iraqi Sumerian civilization, also known as the "Watchers" or the "Shining Ones"). Some predict that Planet X will strongly affect the Earth in May 2003, while others are discounting that possibility, saying there will be no significant effect on Earth. Zecharia Sitchin, THE recognized scholar who has written extensively on Sumeria, the Anunnaki, and Planet Nibiru, has now gone on record saying that Planet X will NOT pass by us in 2003.

What is the truth? The United States Government and NASA are very tight-lipped, though suspicions run high that both these agencies know a lot more than they are sharing with the public.

As if all of the above were not enough to chew on, we must also recall the pivotal 20-year cyclic "anniversary" time-window of August 12, 2003, associated with the 1943 Philadelphia Experiment of naval ship-invisibility and time-travel notoriety, as well as its ongoing, vastly expanded offspring called the Montauk Project. Could THIS be a reason that time is perceived as ending, due to some time manipulation experiment that will go awry on that date?

Will something be caused to go wrong with a stargate mechanism in conjunction with something else underway among the shenanigans at super-secret underground labs?

Is it critical—in the eyes of those Dark Energies who secretly control the United States—to have control of Saddam's purported stargate for further time-related or people-domination experiments before the every-20-years' August "window" rolls around?

Does Mars factor into any of this? After all, Mars will pass closer to Earth in late August 2003 than in the last several hundred years.

What about the Photon Belt? Are its high-frequency energies stimulating changes not to the liking of those who have long labored to enslave planet Earth?

Will the Van Allen Radiation Belt become ignited through some global war effort? Might there be an extraterrestrial intervention to stop such a catastrophe?

Where are the moons of Mars? Are they missing? Are one or both of the moons occupied? Will they play a role in any of these other issues?

Are we arriving, as a planet, at Zero Point (when the Shumann Frequency reaches 13)? Will the magnetic poles reverse themselves? Is the planet wobbling toward greater instability?

Well—as seems to frequently happen these days, a little story turned out to have massive implications. That's what happens when you let the information take you where it wants to lead. And this is yet another example that everything is connected to everything.

When it comes to these kinds of subjects, there are three exceptional professionals to talk to: Al Bielek, Preston Nichols, and William Henry. For the purpose of finding answers to these specific questions, I interviewed both Al Bielek and Preston Nichols twice. Also, I spoke with William Henry about his provocative research volume, Cloak Of The Illuminati, and about the purported Iraqi stargate and related matters.

What emerges from those conversations is a very fascinating—and perhaps science-fiction-like—series of revelations. But first, in building this multi-faceted story, prior to presenting the interviews, of necessity I have to provide some background.

For example, Al Bielek mentions the moons of Mars, Phobos and Deimos. What do we know about them?

Phobos And Deimos

In looking at the NASA website, we find the following description of the moons of Mars:

[quoting]

Mars has two small moons: Phobos and Deimos. Phobos (fear) and Deimos (panic) were named after the horses that pulled the chariot of the Greek war god Ares, the counterpart to the Roman war god Mars. Both Phobos and Deimos were discovered in 1877 by American astronomer Asaph Hall. The moons appear to have surface materials similar to many asteroids in the outer asteroid belt, which leads most scientists to believe that Phobos and Deimos are captured asteroids.

[end quoting]

Was there purpose behind the naming of these moons? Keep them in mind as we proceed.

The next point to note is how NASA has had its share of "challenges" concerning the operation of its Mars probes. In an article titled The Strange Case Of Fobos-2, by Jim Oberg, appearing at www.space.com we read:

[quoting]

If Robert Frost had been the poet laureate of space flight, he might have written: "Something there is that doesn't like a Mars probe." And a comic cartoonist once drew an ugly, hungry, space beast lurking near Mars to devour Earth's space vehicles. (The painting hung on the wall of a mission manager at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory for years.) You get the picture.

This past decade has not been kind to Earth's Mars probes. There was NASA's expensive Mars Observer blowing up in 1993 as it warmed its rocket engines up to slow into orbit. And we've seen both of NASA's 1999 missions fail.

Russia lost another ambitious probe in 1995 when its upper stage failed, dumping radioactive fragments onto the Andes Mountains. And a Japanese mission, their first to Mars, went off course right out of the gate in December 1998.

But the most bizarre loss of a Mars probe is unarguably the case of Phobos-2 (or Fobos-2, in the Russian spelling). It "disappeared" in March 1989, under very unusual circumstances that still mystify and excite many people.

[Still quoting further on:]

Trying To Lift The Curse

The Soviet Union launched two probes towards Mars in mid-1988, trying to break a decades-old jinx. Its initial series of small probes (1960-1965) had been a total disaster, and a series of heavier probes (1969-1973) didn't do much better. But this third generation was much more promising.

The spacecraft "bus"—the main body—was of an entirely new design. It had new engines, new computers, new communications gear. And this new mission carried subsatellites to be dropped onto the inner Martian moon, Phobos.

But the old jinx still prevailed. The first probe was lost due to an erroneous command and the outbound second vehicle was crippled by electronics failures. By the time it reached Mars on January 30, 1989, it was operating on its last and lowest-powered radio.

Nonetheless, it slipped into orbit around Mars and slowly matched its path with Phobos, as it closed in [to conduct] observations of Mars.

A dozen times, it turned its cameras away from Mars and towards Phobos. This required the whole spacecraft since a moveable "scan platform" hadn't been installed. The maneuver also turned the dish antenna away from Earth, stopping communications for several hours each time.

On March 27, 1989, the probe began another Phobos photo maneuver and, as expected, radio signals ceased. But after the planned maneuver, when listeners on Earth expected to reacquire the signal, nothing was heard. More careful listening picked up brief bursts of radio signals, as if the dish antenna were swinging wildly through space and only occasionally beaming back towards Earth. Then—only silence.

[end quoting]

Then there is the matter of the "cigar-

THE PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT & OTHER UFO CONSPIRACIES

By BRAD STEIGER

In 1943 the Navy accomplished the teleportation of a warship from Philadelphia to Norfolk by successfully applying Einstein's Unified Field Theory. The experiment also caused the crew and officers of the ship to become invisible, during which time they were launched into a time-space warp. One survivor tells his amazing experience.

shaped shadows that were plainly visible on many of the 37 photographs that the doomed probe sent back to Earth during the 60 days it survived circling Mars". The explanation (spin) that was forth-coming had to do with the imaging system's "scanning radiometer rotating perpendicular to the line of the probe's motion" and related technical double-talk.

Again, from www.space.com, we read from an article titled Forgotten Moons: Phobos And Deimos Eat Mars by Robert Roy Britt:

[quoting]

"In the 24 years since the Viking orbiter returned the first close-ups of the moons, revealing them to be odd shaped lumpy objects, scientists have learned almost nothing about them. Christensen [of Arizona State University] laments that, despite his own research and efforts of others, "we're not progressing".

Scientists still don't know if the moons were created along with the birth of Mars, or if they are asteroids captured later. Their composition remains unknown. Mars Global Surveyor passed within 200 miles of Phobos, and showed that the moon had been pounded to powder by countless collisions with smaller space rocks. But how, with virtually no gravity, does Phobos hold on to this dusty debris?

[end quoting]

Then, on August 9, 2001, an intriguing article appeared on www.yowusa.com that reads:

[quoting]

Is Phobos still orbiting Mars or not? Normally, that would be a rhetorical question. Unlike some periodic comets, moons don't just disappear. If Phobos is gone, something had to knock it out of orbit.

An earlier YOWUSA article stated that the Phobos-comet 76P collision hypothesis could be refuted if either body could be observed where it is supposed to be: 76P since about April 1997 (the presumed orbit-changing epoch) and Phobos since June 4, 2000 (the presumed collision epoch). Recently two observations of Phobos were reported, but now one has become questionable. Confirming observations are needed to bring the Phobos mystery to a conclusion.

If convincing observations showing both moons orbiting Mars are made public, then this collision hypothesis can be discarded and forgotten with apologies offered for the false alarm.

If they show that one or both moons have been ejected from their Martian orbits, then the next order of business should be to determine when each moon was ejected. Once the collision hypothesis is proved to be true, then people who can shed light on that question should be more forthcoming with that information.

[end quoting]

As if all of this information isn't intriguing enough, on the www.zetataalk.com website (that some consider controversial), we find the following information:

[quoting]

It is rumored that one of the moons of Mars, Phobos, is inhabited by the giant hominoids (Anunnaki) from the 12th Planet (Planet X, Nibiru), and this rumor is correct. They have burrowed into the interior of this relatively small moon to conduct a mining operation, but this is not the only reason. As we have mentioned, they ruined the surface of Mars with these mining operations. What thin atmosphere Mars had, essentially disappeared when the water was diverted into underground caverns, cooling the surface until the remaining water froze. Mining the caverns of Phobos allows these visitors several advantages:

- They remain out of sight of Earth telescopes, and thus hope to evade interference of visits from curious humans.
- Atmosphere and temperature control is easier within an enclosed space.
- The moon's surface affords a thick and almost impermeable shield from bombardment from space trash such as dust and small meteors, which would continually pepper them if they remained on the surface of Mars.

What occurs when one of NASA's probes drifts close to this moon? Monitoring equipment stationed on the surface of Phobos by these visitors alerts them to the approach of something other than space trash. Not wanting to be observed or to become the object of curiosity, the giant hominoids simply put the eye out of the probe. This is done with a laser, the same mechanism they use to send signals to one another at great distances, but devastating to delicate electronic equipment at close range.

Send a probe to Phobos and, oops, the probe stops working! Any attempt to fly a manned shuttle to Phobos to explore the operation would also meet with disaster and death, and such an attempt is, therefore, ill advised.

[end quoting]

Is the above an accurate report of what's going on in the vicinity of Mars? Just keep the information in mind under the heading of "possibilities" as we continue.

More On Phobos & Deimos

Then there is the lengthy, very well documented article about the "missing" Phobos and Deimos, which appears on the Millenium Group's www.tmgnow.com website. But let's first look at who the Millennium Group is:

[quoting from their website]

The Millennium Group is organized to create an unbiased outlet for scientific research and critical thinking. Our goal is Truth; however we do acknowledge the difficulties in attaining such a lofty destination. We respect tradition only as much as it assists us in our quest and does not hinder the journey toward our chosen goal.

The Millennium Group is organized to provide an open, honest, and truthful forum and repository for the new scientific research and critical thinking that is now necessary for the successful evolution and transformation of life on planet Earth.

What is the stated goal of this website? When institutions place their scientific principles, positions, theorems, and ideas above reproach, they no longer serve the best interests of the public at large. Rather, they serve their own self-interests and will subsequently rely on their own size or attributed authority as proof of their own "correctness".

When this happens, we as individuals lose the right to be self-informed so that we can fairly draw our own conclusions. Worse yet, as time passes it becomes more and more difficult to challenge those ideas, unless someone is willing to withstand the ridicule that comes from openly challenging an idea that "everyone knows to be right".

We of the Millennium Group see our role as being that of catalyst of debate. We want you to think; to agree as you choose; and to disagree as you choose. But above all else, what we hold most dear, is that all the people of the Earth are allowed full and unfettered access to all knowledge pertaining to our survival as a species.

[end quoting]

The above could just as well be a "statement of purpose" for The SPECTRUM—as you longtime faithful and supportive readers must surely agree! It's nice to know there are others of similar mind out there, as part of the Great Awakening going on right now on planet Earth.

Turning now to excerpts from an intriguing article on the Millenium Group's website titled The Four Horsemen Of The Apocalypse: An Answer To The Threat Of 76P And The Plight Of Phobos, written by Ray Ward & Gary D. Goodwin:

[quoting]

There still remains no evidence either way that Phobos and/or Deimos are still in orbit around Mars or if they are not. There are no images showing the two moons in orbit around Mars. The last public pictures we have of Phobos are from the Mars Global Surveyor, taken on August 19, 1998.

We had become convinced that there was something flying around in the skies above the Earth.

So there was evidence that they [unknown objects] were in some kind of orbit, even though very erratic and indeed two of them had the potential to be very similar in size to Phobos and Deimos.

Many people would think that if an object the size of Phobos or Deimos were flying through the skies above us, the moons could be easily seen. Phobos and Deimos are respectively approximately 10 and 5 miles in diameter. In Dr. Frank's (the discoverer of house-sized comets hitting the Earth) explanation pertaining to the visibility of these house-sized comets, we can easily understand that these objects could not be seen without special equipment.

The other factor in this matter is that Phobos and Deimos are very dark objects. The Moon itself, believe it or not, is a low-reflective object and considered dark. However, the two moons of Mars have less than half of the reflectivity than that of the Moon!

Then we found an image of one of the objects where it appears to be standing still over the Gulf of Mexico. In the image [on the website] there appears to be quite a disturbance in the ocean below the object; this disturbance appears to be jetwash or electrical in nature. Again the size fits pretty well at that altitude—that is—about 10 miles in diameter—the size of Phobos!

Question: What was this object doing over this particular area? What history or other events are associated with this area of the Gulf?

April 13, 2001 is an important date. It is the date that the image from Western Europe was taken and the GOES Magnetometer went off the scale. Then the Sun, after the magnetic event, produced a significant X flare. Now we had triple evidence of this object being in orbit closer to the Earth!

Remember, the last image of Phobos in orbit around Mars was from MSSS and claimed to be on August 19, 1998. What events had occurred between this last image of Phobos and the latest info? We had to go back to another very popular event in 1999—the total solar eclipse over Turkey, when it was alleged that Phobos was seen!

But we kept looking through our files for more. And we found more.

1998 was an interesting year. On November 21, 1998 SOHO went into ESR (Emergency Recovery). The last image on the site was our old friend ORCA. As we looked closer at the "ORCA" images, we realized that there were actually two bodies in the picture, not just one. At the time we had no explanation for the second object in the images. The shape of the larger one does appear to match that of Phobos.

Simply we state that we believe that Phobos and Deimos, in addition to numerous other bodies, likely natural and created, are in dynamic orbits above the Earth.

[end quoting]

Of course, there's a lot going on in the skies above our heads that doesn't get reported in the mainstream media—if they even know about it—because of the somewhat specialized equipment that is generally necessary to keep an eye on space activities. It's not like simply standing on a street corner and watching what's going on around you—though you who make it a habit to watch the sky routinely see some pretty strange things moving overhead!

And furthermore, how often do you think, just with Shuttle missions, we are told what they're REALLY up to up there? You can be sure most Shuttle missions have military objectives not shared with the taxpayers. Which leads into our next subject.

Mars

On the Steve Quayle News Alerts website, at www.stevequayle.com, we read the following article written on January 13, 2003:

[quoting, in part]

This year Mars will pass closer to the Earth than at any time in recorded history.

This year in August, Mars will be nearer to Earth than it has been in 59,000 years. It will appear 4 times larger and 50 times brighter than it appears now, at the time of this writing. This close pass is more significant with respect to world events than most can imagine.

This coming August may be the time of unprecedented violence on this Earth. The United States, by that time, will be in the quagmire of war in the Middle East—if not also with nuclear capable North Korea.

In Roman history, under the reign of Augustus (63 B.C. — 14 A.D.), Mars became Mars Ultor ("Mars the Avenger" of Julius Caesar), and a personal guardian of Augustus.

The preeminent UFO researcher of the 1960s, Jacques Vallee, discovered that during closest oppositions between Earth and Mars, UFO sighting reports would greatly increase.

[end quoting]

And, as you will soon read, August will also be the month that additional time-manipulation is attempted by those wishing to take advantage of the 20-year biorhythm cycle of planet Earth. Will Mars' proximity play any role in how this time experiment will turn out?

As if all of this isn't enough food for thought, let's turn our attention now to the subject of spacetime and related matters. This next material is relevant to understanding the whole picture of this story. While what you are about to read may seem far-out, perhaps it's worth pondering—especially when our entire "reality" is being stretched in ways we never would have considered likely a mere decade ago.

Keep in mind that, outside of the confines of physical reality, time, as we know it, does not exist. It is an artifact of experiencing from within the physical playground and through the physical vehicle. And even within the physical

Black Holes & Star Gates

In an article written by Neil Johnson, Physics Lecturer at Oxford University, titled Time Travel—Shaping The Future, and appearing on the BBC website at <http://www.bbc.co.uk/science/space/exploration/timetravel>, we read:

[quoting]

Einstein's theory of relativity brought space and time together in a single four-dimensional arrangement that he called spacetime. We know that we can travel forwards, backwards, and sideways in space, so why not forwards and backwards in time?

Four dimensions are difficult to imagine, so physicists usually suggest you think of spacetime as a rubber sheet stretched out flat. If there are no large masses around, the sheet stays flat, and so any object placed on it will move around in a straight line.

But a large mass, such as the Sun, makes a dip in the sheet because it actually warps spacetime. Now any other object with smaller mass, like our Earth, moving about in spacetime, rolls into the dip as it comes past the Sun. It appears "attracted" to the large mass. This effect of warping spacetime is what gives rise to gravity.

The Universe is full of heavy objects exerting gravitational effects, and the net result is that spacetime is not flat at all, but curved. Everything, including light, has to follow curved paths in spacetime. We know Einstein was right about this because astronomers can sometimes see distant stars that ought to be masked by nearer objects such as the Sun. Instead of traveling in straight lines and hence being blocked, the light from the stars bend around the obstruction.

When a star reaches the end of its life it may collapse inwards under the influence of its own gravity to such an extent that all its matter becomes concentrated into an extremely dense object a fraction of its original size. This is a black hole.

Black holes have such a huge gravitational pull that nothing can escape from them, not even light. We cannot see them, but we have good evidence that they exist. We can see stars behaving in ways that suggest that they are being pulled about by a nearby invisible object with enormous mass.

What does a black hole do to spacetime? Relativity predicts that at the center of the black hole is an infinitely dense point, called a singularity, within which all the normal laws of physics no longer apply. Time, space, matter, and energy no longer have any well-defined meaning.

Einstein's equations show that such a singularity doesn't just make a dip in the imaginary rubber sheet of spacetime, it makes a tunnel that goes right through and momentarily opens out on the other side.

Where is "the other side"? It could be somewhere else in spacetime, either in the future, or in the past, or it could even be in another Universe!

[end quoting]

Continuing with our examination of star portals or star gates, let's turn to a portion of another article titled Wormhole Stargates: Tunneling Through The Cosmic Neighborhood by Eric W. Davis, Ph.D., FBIS, of the National Institute for Discovery Science in Las Vegas, Nevada:

[quoting]

It was many years ago when science fiction media (TV, film, and novels) began to adopt traversable wormholes, and more recently, "stargates", for interstellar travel schemes that allowed their heroes and heroines to travel the Cosmic Neighborhood. Little did anyone outside of relativity physics know, but in 1985 physicist Kip Thorne and his students at Cal Tech had in fact discovered the principle of traversable wormholes right out of Einstein's General Theory Of Relativity (GTR, published in 1915). Thorne et al. did this as an academic exercise, and in the form of problems for a physics final exam, at the request of Carl Sagan, who had then completed the draft of his novel and wanted to follow the genre of what I call science "faction", whereby the story's plot would rely on cutting-edge physics concepts to make it more realistic and technically plausible.

This little exercise ended up becoming one of the greatest cottage industries in general relativity physics research—traversable wormholes and time machines. However, it should be noted that it was Alan C. Holt (NICAP, VISIT, and MUFON member, presenting at the NASA-Johnson Space Center) who should receive credit for being the first to originate, in 1979, the physical characteristics defining what he then called "field resonance spacetime tunneling", which is what we now call a wormhole, for all intents and purposes.

Real stargates exist in principle; they are merely a form of what are called traversable wormholes and they are a form of "propellantless propulsion" or "field propulsion". These are unlike the well-known, non-traversable Einstein-Rosen Bridges or Schwarzschild wormholes that are formed from collapsed stellar matter (black holes) or spherically symmetric vacuum regions. Black holes are collapsed stars that have all their mass concentrated at an infinitesimal point where the induced gravitational field crushes all matter and spacetime. However, even Einstein-Rosen bridges can be made traversable by an infinitesimal tweaking of their spacetime metric.

Wormholes are hyperspace tunnels through spacetime connecting together either remote regions within our universe or two different universes; they even connect together different dimensions and different times. Space travelers would enter in one side of the tunnel and exit out the other, passing through the throat along the way.

In the case of black holes, there is the singularity of collapsed matter that totally blocks the way through the tunnel along with its crushing gravity field. A traversable wormhole does not have a singularity blocking the tunnel, nor any crushing gravity field.

Explorers would enter one side of the tunnel, travel through the throat, and exit out the other side. Traversable wormholes also do not possess an event horizon, which is a region of high gravitational field-strength separating inside space, surrounding the black hole's singularity, from the outside universe. Once you go through a black-hole's event horizon, you can never come back out because you will have to attain greater than light speed to escape it. Not even light can escape from an event horizon.

Traversable wormholes are creatures of classical GTR allowing for very comfortable traveling through the Cosmic Neighborhood. But from the viewpoint of modern physics, the Cosmic Neighborhood can encompass other universes, other space dimensions, and other times beyond the 4-dimensional spacetime we live in.

Mankind has certainly not discovered all of the universe's facets, and we will need to continue to construct new experiments and technology in order to verify or not these undiscovered facts.

[end quoting]

That last paragraph is perhaps the most important thought to retain from the above. Vast uncharted domains of reality likely exist outside our perception when functioning in a normal way in daily life. But every so often “parts” of some of these other realities may intrude on our reality, producing some strange effects.

In a brief article called Mankind's Version On Wormholes from www.grantchronicles.com, which was excerpted from A Brief History Of Time by Stephen Hawking, we read:

[quoting]

Wormhole: A thin tube of spacetime connecting distant regions of the universe. Wormholes might also link to parallel or baby universes and could provide the possibility of time travel.

The idea of wormholes between different regions of spacetime was not an invention of science fiction writers, but came from a very respectable source.

In 1935, Einstein and Natan Rosen wrote a paper in which they showed that General Relativity allowed what they called “bridges” but which are now known as wormholes. The Einstein-Rosen bridges didn't last long enough for a spaceship to get through: the ship would run into a singularity as the wormhole pinched off.

However, it has been suggested that it might be possible for an advanced civilization to keep a wormhole open. To do this, or to warp spacetime in any other way so as to permit time travel, one can show that one needs a region of space-time with “negative curvature”, like the surface of a saddle. Ordinary matter, which has a positive energy density, gives spacetime a positive curvature, like the surface of a sphere. So what one needs in order to warp spacetime in a way that will allow travel into the past, is matter with negative energy density.

[end quoting]

In an email I recently received with no source information, we read: “An object many astronomers believe is a black hole has been found only 1500 light-years from Earth, making it the closest black hole candidate—V4641 Sgr.”

Now, viewing the idea of stargates from a less rigidly physical perspective, here is a brief quote appearing on the www.earthlinkmission.org website:

[quoting]

The stargate alignments allow us to connect on very high-frequency levels, with the Earth and ourselves, as One Consciousness, bound in infinite time and space, to the Source of All.

A stargate is an etheric inter-dimensional energy alignment between two points in interstellar space, which allows high vibrational energies to pass through long distances of space, along the spacetime continuum. Put most simply, it is a sub-space vortex through which energy may pass. This passage of energy is most unrestricted during a solstice or equinox, when the position of the planet is such as to allow an optimal amount of energy through to Earth.

[end quoting]

In other words, think of a stargate as a kind of doorway—or better yet, a doorway that's part of stepping into an elevator of sorts—where the idea of moving up or down from one floor to another in the elevator is symbolic for changing frequency so as to quickly traverse into other dimensional spaces and times.

Now, as we delve into seemingly esoteric “science” it becomes all the more important to pause and have a reminder, such as the following commentary, about the kind of “real” world constructed by so-called Science. This very well written note is from the www.grantchronicles.com website:

[quoting]

Mankind has always wondered about the many mysteries of the cosmos when peering into the Universe, but when given the answers, most have chosen to ignore the truth. Few would dare to challenge theories that have stood the test of time.

History has taught us one lesson: there is a strong resistance to change. Most theories, which seem to be etched in stone, gain strength sometimes, not from validity, but from the passage of time and acceptance pushed by the hallowed halls of higher learning. But when put to the test, they crumble over a period of time, as the future unfolds new scientific discoveries.

Grants are given to finance research at the universities for those who choose to stay within the norm or provide an edge to a corporation.

The academic leaders in the field of astrophysics use their prestige to solidify and back new theories, but if a newcomer presented those same theories, non-acceptance would likely be a result.

Fear of change to the comfortable theories accepted in the learned circles of doctorates, are the focal point to perpetuate control over those who are the forerunners in science.

Very few, among mankind, are out there to present theories on the cutting edge of scientific knowledge, due to fear of non-acceptance and ridicule. At times they may lead to a breakthrough, or may present an element of truth years later.

[end quoting]

The above is most surely a useful reminder when we slip into the error of thinking that science is actually done in an honestly enquiring manner like it is so often portrayed for our brainwashing in movies and television—and the classroom.

And when we're dealing with matters as controversial and potentially powerful as are the subjects of this article, it's well to remember that the halls of science may be anything but friendly and open to corrections about their “religion”!

Now let's stretch our thinking a bit more, and consider the following, titled Event-Symmetric Spacetime 1, from the www.trufax.org website under the heading Space-Time-Reality:

[quoting, in part]

The Storyteller (Between A Story And The World)

The storyteller, surrounded by his enthralled audience, softly ended his tale. After a few moments of silence, a young voice from the front asked a question: “What is the difference between a story and the world?”

The storyteller replied: “There is no big difference. The world is just a story told with too much irrelevant detail.”

“That's nonsense!” The words came from a teacher listening from the back. “The world is real, tangible, concrete. A story is just made-up fiction.”

“A child knows that a story can be as real as anything” said the storyteller. “As people grow older, they learn to separate a part they see as the real world from the rest, but they are mistaken. Some continue to regard certain stories as real which others come to regard as fiction. A story is not made up. It is discovered!”

The storyteller and the teacher might argue for many hours about what is real. For centuries, physical science has been based on a paradigm which considers the universe as real and material. Other things are held apart and regarded as part of the imagination. In the real world, events are governed by the laws of physics and causality. In our imagination, anything goes.

As the second millennium draws to an end, science is searching for a new paradigm. Many surprising discoveries have been made over the past century, and causality has been cast into doubt.

Above all, our own place in the universe is a great mystery. Often physicists have remarked that the laws of physics seem to be designed so that life could evolve. But if the universe was designed just for us, why was it necessary that we evolve? Why not just put us there?

In quantum physics it seems to be impossible to separate the laws of physics from our role as observers. Does the universe depend on us to work? And what about consciousness? What, if anything, does it mean to be aware of our own existence?

In the past, these questions were regarded as unscientific. But now, many scientists are trying to tackle them, and the old paradigm is totally inadequate.

Our storyteller sees the world differently. To him all stories already exist, and are real. We do not create them. We find them.

The universe is no different. It might be helpful to see it as a coherent collection of stories which unfold. He may not be able to persuade you to accept this immediately, so in the best storyteller's tradition, he asks you to suspend your disbelief: "I want to tell you about how space can evaporate and how time might change direction."

Some people find such things hard to accept as a possible part of real experience, yet some-where, some-when, they may happen.

Try to imagine that there is a very large number of real or hypothetical storytellers all telling their favorite stories. They may be in this universe—past, present, or future—or perhaps they are somewhere else; they may be very different from storytellers as we know them. It does not really matter.

Some storytellers will be telling the same stories as others, perhaps with different details, or they may be telling stories which start the same but end differently. There are so many possible storytellers in our imagination that this is not really a coincidence.

Some will tell stories which are sequels or prequels of others. Sometimes one story will seem to be the story of what is going on next door to the location of another. Many of the stories will be very imaginative when compared to our limited experience. They may even make little sense to us, but somewhere in the whole collection any possible story is being told.

To understand the physics of event-symmetric spacetime, which I am going to explain, you must imagine that the universe is built this way. There are many possible stories, and where stories fit together in a self-consistent way, they combine to form many different universes. Each of us has a life which is a story, somewhere in these universes. We should not expect our future to be completely determined, since what we have experienced up to now could fit into many stories with different endings.

Even our pasts, and events happening elsewhere in our present, may not be fully determined, yet we are guaranteed a consistent story in the end. The storyteller's arena of universes is called the Multiverse, and this is the storyteller's paradigm.

If you are not very impressed, remember that a paradigm is not a theory. It is just an empty vessel within which you can place a theory. The storyteller's paradigm is much more flexible than other paradigms—such as mechanism, materialism, and causality. It needs to be if new physics is to be comprehensible.

[end quoting]

The analogy of the storyteller is another way to look at the unlimited options of free-will choice, restricted only by our imagination and our desire to manifest that which we imagine. Where physics is running into problems these days is with having to confront the fact that so-called causal reality is actually much more plastic and "bendable" by the mind than was previously IMAGINED possible.

What we've thought of as The Rigid Rules of Reality are actually not quite so rigid, and actually sometimes are full of exceptions. It is this universe of exceptions that we have to be ever mindful about as this story unfolds.

Lama Tsering

In an article written by Steven McFadden in 1995, titled The Tale Of Our Pilgrimage To The South, from the www.v-j-enterprises.com website, we read:

[quoting]

Lama Tsering delivered a simple yet powerful message for the delegation of Tibetan Lamas:

"Today" he said, "many depend on modern technology and enjoy its benefits. But technology can also be a problem. We can destroy life on our planet. This is a reality. Long ago people did not believe this. They said it was impossible. But now, for those who examine the facts honestly, it is clear that this is a problem, a real problem. We need peace and loving compassion. We need kindness.

"Many times we are confused because of race, color, or religion. But we are all really not so different. We all want to be happy, and not suffer. We are all human beings. On this point there is no debate.

"In the same way, no one wants to suffer. We all grieve from this, from the suffering of the world. It's important to practice kindness. If so we each will be happier. Without kindness, no matter how rich we are, we will not be happy. With a warm, kind heart, you will be happy even if you are poor.

"So, if just one person in a family practices kindness, soon the whole family will be more peaceful. Peace can grow from this—family to family, village to village, city to city, country to country. Kindness creates peace. Anger and hatred create suffering. We make the problems. We make the unhappiness. We can make kindness and happiness, too. Kindness is a responsibility."

[end quoting]

There is no question that technology has gotten far ahead of our ability to wisely utilize it. And its proper use is likewise a responsibility few have taken to heart. With that thought in mind, let's move now to the subject of time travel.

Time Travel

In two previous issues of The SPECTRUM, I have gone deeply into the history of the Philadelphia Experiment and the Montauk Project, and the related experiments with time travel. It's not possible to reiterate all of that history here. But for those of you who may not have read those stories, which included interviews with Al Bielek and Michael Ash, they were in the October 2000 and the January 2001 issues.

However, a few major points raised in those interviews I would like to revisit, to assist in understanding some of the comments made by Al Bielek in the interviews included later in this story.

Michael Ash was a Delta Commander for time-travel missions at Montauk. In my interview with him on 9/13/00, for the October 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM, here are some key items he had to say:

[quoting]

Ash: My personal opinion, from my experiences with the time sea, and working within this time bubble, and outside the normal human constraints, so to speak, that most people affix themselves under, this time bubble is of artificial manufacture. The project created it.

Time, as we know it now, we experience because of this artificial situation. Time was nothing like this before. Our concept of time was nothing like this before. The restrictions that time had was nothing like this. After the project, this has been altered permanently, in both directions—future, past, present, and absolute nothing stasis.

Ash: I told you before that travel into the future, specifically, really didn't work too well for us. We did continue to do it on a number of missions. And the reason that we did it was to expand the size of the time bubble.

Now, remember they basically were setting up a structure and a rule, and they had control, so to speak, over this synthetic time and space—set aside from God's view of, and variation of, time and space. Basically, they created their place outside of "the Eden". I guess the best way to liken their philosophy is: "Better to rule in your time-bubble, then to serve in Heaven." And that's basically what they did. They would go into the future with the sole purpose of expanding their territory, and that particular date (6062) was one of the dates that was targeted to move forward, to push the envelope bigger.

[end quoting]

Michael is here discussing the artificial distortion or manipulation of the "natural" timeline to serve the wishes of those Dark Energies who are desperately seeking to maintain control over planet Earth. This is an important matter to keep in mind as our story unfolds.

Al Bielek

Al Bielek is well known on the lecture circuit as being, perhaps, the "sole survivor of the super-secret Philadelphia Experiment" which took place in 1943, with the immediate goal of achieving radar invisibility for a large naval vessel. Al was also involved in time-travel experiments and missions at Montauk, Long Island.

Turning now, briefly, to an interview I did with Al on 12/12/00, and appearing in the January 2001 issue of The SPECTRUM, we read:

[quoting]

Martin: Is the reality construct in which we live now an artificial one, created as a result of the Montauk/Phoenix Project?

Bielek: There is a considerable amount of thought to that effect. Preston Nichols says that is the case, and there is some evidence I have of that. I'll tell you how I came by this information later, but in 1963, Dr. John Von Neumann and three other Alfred Bielek has come forward claiming to be a survivor of the horrible "invisibility" project conducted by the U.S. Navy.

From: The Philadelphia Experiment & Other UFO Conspiracies, by Steiger and Bielek, 1990.

scientists worked to produce a deviation in the timeline for planet Earth. They had to do it before the 12th of August, 1963, because the theory said that, due to the reverse time waves, they collided at one of these node points, which was 12 August 1963.

[He is referring here to the midpoint between the two projects—the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk—which linked-up on August 12, 1943 and August 12, 1983. — R.M.]

It could cause massive disruption of Earth material, like throwing most of the North American continent into space. The only thing that would be left would be the mountains; the rest would be under water, ocean water.

So, Von Neumann, knowing this, collected a number of scientists and mathematicians to work with him. And how they produced the hardware, I don't know. I was not part of this project, I only heard it from one of the scientists who was involved with this, later.

They built the hardware at Montauk, and they turned it on in May of 1963, and the end result of that is that the Earth is NOT on its original timeline. So, in that sense, we're not in the original reality. We're on a different timeline. And that was done to prevent massive physical destruction in the North American continent. Obviously nothing ever happened, but who would know that we're on a different timeline except those who had done it, or who had been in communication with those who had done it?

[continuing later in the interview]

You see, he [Von Neumann] traveled in time, himself, into the future as part of that 1963 operation to collect the people. You build a time machine back in 1943, after the, shall we say, terrible problems with the Eldridge [the ship involved in the Philadelphia Experiment] and I came back and he didn't believe me when I said: "I have been in 1983." He built a time machine and sent me back there to bring proof back that I had been in 1983, and that he had been in 1983. Eventually, he was satisfied.

But he knew far more technology and mathematics than most people ever gave him credit for. Because of his trip to collect these scientists who came out of the future—well, three of them did—to get them back on this project was a major accomplishment. He had to go, literally, scrounge these people and take them out of their "normal" timeframe and bring them back to 1962-1963 to complete this project. Fortunately, it was successful.

Bielek: What else was going on? What else did they attempt to do? And what else was the goal which, perhaps, failed? But the Eldridge did wind-up in hyperspace.

The question still arises as to why that really happened. I've assumed, and Von Neumann stated, it was due to the lock-up of the two experiments, the Philadelphia Experiment on August 12, 1943, and the Montauk Project, August 12, 1983. This was deliberately designed to do so, but not by humans. It was designed to do so by an alien group who wanted to hit the alternate agenda at Montauk.

Martin: Do you think that part of the agenda that was taking place here had to do with creating a portal that would allow their entry?

Bielek: It was deliberately designed, yes, to create a huge portal, 40 years wide, that would allow entry of very large spaceships, with somebody having an agenda. It was not aimed at us. We're, apparently, just a convenient "waystation" for the portal so they could get through to another reality and go out and do battle, I'm told, with the Andromedans, who had long since thought they had put this enemy to rest.

At least, that's the information that reaches my ears. I am not in a position to prove it.

[end quoting]

So now we have the idea of alternate timeline realities combined with "windows" or "portals" in time that allow for the intersecting of goings on in different dimensions.

With that background now in place, it's time to share what I found out. And remember that truth is always stranger than fiction!

Current Interview(s) With Al Bielek

On 12/30/02, I had a conversation with Al Bielek about 2003 and some upcoming events:

Martin: Hello, Al, this is Rick at SPECTRUM. I'd like to ask you about something that happened on Art Bell's show last week.

Bielek: Ok.

Martin: Two different nights, one night Ed Dames was on, following Sylvia Brown.

Bielek: I don't know who Sylvia Brown is.

Martin: She's a well known psychic and author. Talking with Art Bell last week, she made the statement that [paraphrasing], as a psychic, she could not see beyond mid-2003, that "It's as though time ended."

Then, later, Ed Dames was on Art's program, and he commented that, as a remote viewer, he could not see beyond—I think—March 2003, and again the statement: "It's as though time ended." He said there is something like a "firewall" there that he can't see beyond. And they were talking about something major in March 2003 or mid-2003.

Then, I was recalling in our conversation from many months ago, sort-of the reverse pendulum swing, as a result of the Philadelphia-Montauk time experiments, that ended in 2003, didn't it?

Bielek: Yes, August 12, 2003.

Martin: Can you talk about this? I want to write an article about all the different people coming up with different things about this, because it will hit about March.

Bielek: A number of things are happening in March. As many people know, this on-going mess with Mr. Hussein in Iraq and the stirring for a war, which could expand into a World War. The Administration is still pushing quite hard on that. People in Europe are backing down all over the place. Even Tony Blair has decided to back down. He was quoted as saying that if we were to go to war against Iraq he would not back it, unless there was a direct council agreement in the Security Council itself, as a Declaration of War against Iraq. He said that only then would he back it. Now, this is quite a turn around for Tony Blair.

Martin: A major turnaround for Tony

Blair, our one supporter.

[Editor's note: Since the time of this interview, Britain's position has changed again, and British troops are on their way to possible war. This should be expected in a fluid situation full of public-relations manipulations, such as we're seeing with Iraq. This particular kind of "distancing" trick is usually pulled by the American government whenever Israel is up to something particularly nasty, to give the impression that the two are not together involved.]

Bielek: Yes, and all of Europe is against it. There have been marches all over Europe against it. The support [for this war effort] is not as unanimous in this country as some news people would have you believe.

Now, a number of things are occurring.

Number one: In March, through friends of mine, I know that—and I've had this verified from other military sources—the period of time, starting this year [2002], late Summer into the Fall, our government and military have gone absolutely bananas in ordering military hardware. When I say "bananas", I mean TRILLIONS of dollars worth, because the arsenal was considered, essentially, empty. All contracts are to be filled and shipped by March 2003.

[Editor's note: Some of you may have noticed that the above figure is just a bit higher than the $200 billion that the talking media heads tossed around after Bush's State of the Union fable on Tuesday night 1/28/03. They continued to drill that figure into viewers' heads, by constant repetition, in their post-speech analyses—as if to condition us about what to remember and retain, despite what Bush may or may not have actually said.]

Those of you who follow Al Martin's insightful columns in this magazine are likely to be snickering as, once again, "Bushonomics" reveals its all too creative bookkeeping techniques! Of course, with each new Enron-like pronouncement from a President whose popularity is rapidly plummeting, more and more of the American people are wising-up to the extent of the lies—particularly as they stand in the unemployment lines with plenty of free time to think.]

Now, that doesn't include, of course, new aircraft carriers, very large aircraft, and so forth; but all the smaller hardware, everything is to be delivered in March (and the payments will be later).

Here is one curious item about March: Why is there such panic? And it IS a panic situation in the military, as I am told!

Martin: Within the U.S. military?

Bielek: Yes. To have all these contracts filled and the hardware shipped in March—start shipping by the beginning of

This is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date on one computer CD. The information comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. Use this information as the beginning resource to help you onto your own research track.

The five people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

March, and be completed in March.

I do not see a block or wall, myself, as a remote viewer, for sometime in March of this year. But, there is something, possibly, coming down. Everybody senses it; everybody feels it. Sometime around March there is going to be some major event. I've gotten this universally from almost everybody, even non-sensitives. Everybody feels this, that there is something coming down about March 2003.

I'll throw-in something here which is really going to disturb a lot of people. On the Internet—and I have not been able to find the location myself, my computer is down, and other people haven't been able to give me the exact website. But it was reported to me that on a website there has been a lot of extensive reporting in the last two months, Phobos and Deimos, the two moons of Mars. Now, there is a history of them, in the past. Attempts have been made to get up close, and take close photos of them from NASA, and the Russians, and all of the probes have been destroyed—apparently, they went “blank”.

According to the reporting I have heard, in 1997 one of those two moons disappeared for 3 to 4 months, then came back to its normal location. Then the other one disappeared, in the same year of 1997, for a couple of months, and then came back. In 1999, both moons disappeared for a couple of months, and then came back.

The current data is that they're not around Mars any more, either one of them; they're around Earth. Let me repeat that: They are around Earth, since October.

A friend of mine, when I was in northern Arizona, saw it in his own private telescope. He got up one morning at 5:30 a.m. and said: “What's that bright thing? I don't remember seeing that before!” He got out his telescope and said: “Hey, this damn thing is a moon. What's it doing out there? What is it?” Since then, they've checked on it, repeatedly.

I came home from Arizona to here [Florida]; I got up one morning at 5:30 a.m. and went outside, and lo and behold, there was a very bright object in the sky, where the brightness was greater than the Moon itself, which was directly overhead.

I haven't checked since, but there is something very strange going on with regard to the moons of Mars. Apparently, if the reports are correct, the two moons are no longer around Mars, but around Earth. And they are around Earth in orbits so erratic that those few scientists who have commented on it, on the Internet—not publicly, although the Internet is fairly public—have said that their orbits are so erratic, they do not constitute a normal orbit of any size or description. The conclusion is that these things are manned.

So, if you want to dig on the Internet and verify this, great, but this has happened as of last October, and it's in that time period when our Administration, the U.S. Administration, went absolutely bananas in ordering military hardware. The reports are that the deficits are high, in terms of financing the military for whatever is coming—and I'll say for WHATEVER it may be; I don't know what it may be, at this point. War with Iraq I consider less likely, as time goes on, as being the reason for the massive military build-up.

But, in any case, something is coming up, and they're going bananas by ordering hardware by the trillions of dollars. They wouldn't do this; they haven't done this since the 1940s for World War II; in fact, they didn't even order that much, then. They did for the Gulf War and, of course, for some of the other little operations we've had. The Vietnam operation cost a huge sum of money.

Martin: About the moons of Mars, a large amount of the information concerned a central monitoring facility within Mars itself. Ed Dames used a specific term which escapes me in the moment, but he was talking about light-rods as being manufactured things that gather intelligence for the beings, or the information “hive” within Mars itself.

So, I'm wondering, as you're now talking about the moons of Mars, that such could be linked to what Ed Dames was talking about, too.

Bielek: That is possible. I don't know Ed Dames, personally; I've never met him. I don't know how good (or not) a remote viewer he is, or how reliable his information is. I will reserve any comment.

But, there is something heavy going on. The Mars moons could be the equivalent of spy satellites. I know they're not very large, but I don't recall the exact size because I haven't seen those figures in years, and I don't have the sources available for the information, right now.

[Editor's note: Photographs from the Voyagers and the earlier Mariner 9 spacecraft revealed that both moons are elliptical, with Phobos having the longest diameter of only 27 km or 16.8 miles, and Deimos a longest diameter of only 15 km or 9.3 miles.]

Martin: So, you think this massive military build-up has to do more with a space thing.

Bielek: I think it has something to do with something from “outside”, more than a concern about an Iraqi war.

Martin: It seems a little excessive for something on this planet.

Bielek: They're also concerned about North Korea. North Korea poses far more of a threat than Iraq. And, of course, North Korea could be backed by China. There is a deal cooking where China is backing Iraq, and Iraq is backing China—in both a political sense, and it goes beyond politics. This has not been released to the public yet, but I got this through private channels, that China is now backing Iraq. If that is known, which I'm sure it is, to our military people, it puts a whole new view on the possibility of a war against Iraq, because if you attack Iraq, you're going to also, in essence, be attacking China.

Martin: Could get nasty here in the United States.

Bielek: It could get very nasty, very nasty in a hurry! I'm not going to comment because I don't know whether or not Iraq has concealed weapons of mass destruction. They have other things. They have biological weapons, which were set-up 25 years ago by Mr. Bush, Sr., in a partnership with Iraq, and various other people. That is well known.

The problem is this: He may not have any of those weapons of mass destruction in Iraq today. They may have all been moved out. They've had plenty of time to move them over here, or wherever else they want to move them.

So, if a war is mounted against Iraq, you're going to find, suddenly, these weapons of mass destruction coming out of hiding, and all over our American cities, or whatever other country might be involved in a war against Iraq. Those weapons have been distributed.

I will say this: The whole thing against Iraq has nothing to do with oil; it has nothing to do with a regime change, whatsoever. That's the cover story.

The real story is, they are after a stash of very secret weapons, which is known to the Iraqi government; it's known to the Israeli government.

An American team went in there some time ago, to recover those. It was partially successful, but then threatened. They knew if they came back to the U.S. they'd all be terminated.

[Editor's note: Al has more to say on this matter in a follow-up interview later on in this story.]

Martin: Are you talking about the weapons that were found in the Sumerian area? Very ancient weapons?

Bielek: Yes, ancient weapons.

Martin: So, that's what we're talking about?

Bielek: Yes. That is the real problem, and the real goal, in my view.

Martin: We break that information, a little bit, in the Jim Marrs interview [appearing in the February 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM], but he did not have specifics as to what that was.

Bielek: I know exactly what it is.

Martin: Can you talk about it?

Bielek: Only that it is a time-manipulating weapon. That's all I will say.

Martin: Do you have any hunches that there will be some kind of dimensional shift at that time, in mid-March?

Bielek: We're getting that problem now, straight on through, since approximately the beginning of 2002, due to a problem involving the core of our galaxy. Many people, years ago, referred to this phenomenon, that we were going to run through a field, or energy problem, which they had a specific name for, and that is not what it was. What it happened to be is, there is a very strange energy coming from the core of the galaxy, since sometime last year, and it's going to get worse. It will peak-out about 2005.

What it is, it's finally been identified by NASA and others, it's a time-flux energy, which causes instantaneous shifts in our time field, and distortions in the time field—to the extent that you cannot keep the two major atomic clocks on this continent in sync.

The one is at the Naval Observatory in Maryland, and the other atomic clock is in Colorado, at the international site there. They sometimes drop out 15-20 minutes from each other!

Now, this is theoretically impossible for an atomic clock. And if you drive across country, and try to keep sync with those clocks, you may sometimes find your time out by a half-hour. You'll find these phenomenal types of shifts—I'm talking about the word phenomenon—in which time does a sudden shift for maybe a second or two, a violent shift.

In the scenario where you're driving, it's happened to me three times coming back from Miami to here, back in October one night, driving on I-75. Preston Nichols has had it happen to him, coming back from Vermont to Long Island. In his case, in the last strange encounter, his vehicle shifted a lane, instantaneously, and another car, over in the left lane, was so shaken-up by what either they saw, or experienced themselves, that they pulled over to the side of the road and stopped.

Martin: Have you talked with him about this mid-2003 event, whatever it might be?

Bielek: No, I haven't. But this phenomenon of the time shifts is getting worse, and it's going to continue to get worse. It's going to cause, and is causing, a great deal of stress for individuals, particularly those who don't know what's going on—which most people don't. They don't understand it. They don't understand the sudden "stress" feelings they get.

And they think they're going nuts, or some physiological problem, and the doctors examine them and say: "Take this pink pill, go home, and sleep it off." That's essentially what they do, because the doctors don't know, or if they do know, they're keeping their mouths tightly shut. I would say, probably, most of them have no idea.

Martin: Has NASA published anything on this time flux issue?

Bielek: Nothing that I know of, except it was stated that NASA had determined that this is a time-flux problem coming out of the core of the galaxy. We're seeing about 1% of it now. We're on the fringes. Come the year 2005, if that is the peak point, they expect there will be large numbers of deaths, because people will not be able to withstand the effect, physiologically, particularly when they don't understand what's happening.

Martin: Now, is this time related, or frequency related?

Bielek: Time.

Martin: And this is independent from the Photon Belt?

Bielek: Yes, there's no connection with the Photon Belt; that is a misnomer. What we're experiencing is what others once said was going to be the Photon Belt, but it is not a photonic problem. It is a time-shift problem, instantaneous time shifts, where time, in essence, can go backwards, for a brief period of time, maybe milliseconds, half a second, whatever it may be, and then come back to normal, or do other strange manifestations, which are beyond people's normal understanding.

[Editor's note: There seems to be a semantics or definitional problem and energy—strictly speaking that IS photonic, meaning "of Light", but of a higher-dimensional order—into which (and eventually through which) our entire solar system is passing. Just one of the effects of the impinging of this energy region on the fabric (more precisely, on the etheric sub-structure) of our local space-time continuum is the time-related anomalies such as Al is describing above. Another is the "thinning of the veil" between dimensions that used to be more strongly separated. Both of these—plus other possibly disorienting effects—will continue to intensify as we continue to move further into this so-called Photon Belt region until our frequency eventually "catches up" with what's coming in and we come into balance within a new higher-dimensional reality.

To avoid getting into a lengthy Larger-Picture discussion at this time, simply think of this phenomenon as entering a cosmic "car wash" every so often—by Someone's Grand Design—to clean-up toxic conditions such as occur on schoolroom planets as part of their curriculum to help evolve soul growth.]

The other way you can check this is, anyone who has a mantle clock—where instead of the pendulum swinging vertically, you have a pendulum device which rotates around horizontally, back and forth, as the mechanism for this clock—if you watch it, many people have reported this, they will sometimes stop in mid-stroke, as it were, stop rotating, sit there for a couple of seconds, and then start rotating again, in the normal manner—and, occasionally, rotating backwards.

Now, this has been reported to me by a number of people. One guy, a friend on the West Coast, saw this happening so much to his clock, he took it to his clockmaker and said: "Fix this thing!"

The clockmaker said: "I'll have to rebuild it." Then, he rebuilt it.

My friend took it back to his house, put it on his mantle, and it continued to do the same thing. This is a phenomenon that I can't properly explain. I don't know that anybody can. But they have been able to identify it, at least, as to what it is, so that if people understand what is going on, they won't think they're going nuts.

That's the primary problem: keeping people from thinking they're going nuts over something they don't understand, which they're observing, but is totally beyond the recognition of their normal, conscious mind.

Martin: There won't be any public announcements about this, on the mainstream media.

Bielek: There won't be any public pronouncement about this. Something is resulting confusion here related to what Al is calling the seeming mis-naming of the phenomenon popularly known as the Photon Belt.

The term Photon Belt is simply a symbolic name for a region of high-intensity high-frequency galactic

TIME TRAVEL: A HOW-TO INSIDERS GUIDE

Visit the past and future with safe and proven methods. We have long been taught that time travel is impossible and the work of science fiction, but during the past several decades secret agencies with the U.S. military have successfully been crossing the barriers of space and time. Here is the shattering evidence that we are being visited by "time surfers" from the future, and that we too can journey forward and backward in time.

The Authors: Commander X is formerly of military intelligence, having worked on several classified projects. Tim Swartz is Emmy award-winning journalist.

going to happen in this coming year of 2003 which is going to, I think, be the cause of possible Martial Law, in certain areas. I don't think it will be universal, across the country, at this point.

I know that it will be, at a later date—let's say about 2008-2009; you'll see universal Martial Law, and not just in this country, either. That phenomenon will be due to other factors than this time stress, though the time stress is going to add its input to other problems, which are ongoing.

Like the chemtrails—what it's doing to the human body, unraveling the DNA, and causing, eventually, massive deaths. I don't think that is reversible. I think it can be slowed down, so it won't be as severe as I saw it, at a future date. But it's going to happen, and I don't think there's anything that can stop it from starting, which will be in the coming new year of 2003.

Martin: Let's talk about Planet X or Nibiru for a minute, and whether or not that will even appear in 2003, or whether there is something else: a cloaked craft that is mimicking Planet X. Do you have any sense of that?

Bielek: That is a possibility. I have no sense of seeing, or expecting anything like that. But, insofar as Planet X is concerned, it's not going to do what it has been given all the publicity that it will do.

Let me put it this way: It is totally under our control, and they're not going to be going through the same orbit. It's already shifted 15 degrees.

Martin: At any point will NASA come forth with information on this?

Bielek: I don't know. At the present time what's been going on with Planet X is, I would say, a closely guarded, more or less, military secret. But, it's not being conducted by the military, directly. I'm not sure who's in back of the program, which has gotten there, taken over their machinery, rebuilt it, and an agreement has been made between the U.S. Government, or some element of the U.S. Government, perhaps the military, and the Nibiruans. They've allowed us to take it over, in exchange for things they need. And the agreement is, it will never come near Earth. It will do this flip number, around the Sun, above the plane of the ecliptic, and then leave, and never be seen again.

[One could also easily theorize that the intervention concerning Nibiru occurred at a much higher-dimensional level by our Cosmic Brothers.

From a slightly different perspective, in an article titled Enterprise Mission Statement On The Coming Of Sitchin's Nibiru In Spring 2003, Richard C. Hoagland & Michael Bara state: "We make no exception for this fabled return of Nibiru in 2003. It should be noted for the record that Sitchin places the next passage of Nibiru some 1,600 years into the future."

—R.M.]

Martin: Right now, does Saddam Hussein have control of those unearthed weapons?

Bielek: No, he has no control over the objects which were found, I'm certain. He has some knowledge of them.

Martin: Who has control?

Bielek: A very clandestine "black-ops" group.

Martin: So, it's U.S.?

Bielek: Yes, but also, they are in "no man's land", and they're being helped and supported by people in the "no man's land", which is basically, I believe, the Kurds. It may not be entirely the Kurds. I do not have enough data on that to give any definitive answers.

But I do know, from what I've learned, and what has been done, and the connections with the Israeli special-ops groups—parts of Mossad, and what have you—they were definitely aware of those devices, and apparently had their hands on them for awhile.

Martin: But, not now?

Bielek: Not now, from what my own information says, and from my own remote viewing of it.

Martin: What do you think about the possibility of 2012 actually being 2003?

Bielek: A very good possibility, because of the fact that nobody has ever fully resolved the problem between the Mayan calendar and our so-called Gregorian calendar. There is a discrepancy, and quite a large one. It varies in estimates from about 5 years to maybe 8 or 9 years.

We also have another problem: There was a time-shift on August 12, 2001, in which suddenly there was a major time-shift for planet Earth, and perhaps our solar system, wherein there was suddenly an advancement of time of about 5 years, estimated, because the star field shifted, everything shifted. And this, of course, has been totally denied by the trade journals like Sky & Telescope and Astronomy, or any of the other major magazines. But just take a look at the sky and see if it looks at all like you remember it looking, prior to August 12, 2001. The star fields have shifted. They shifted overnight.

So, there is definitely something different. The Earth is on a different timeline, and I suspect most of the solar system with it.

Martin: Do you have any sense at all as to who might be manning Phobos and Deimos?

Bielek: That is a difficult thing to answer because I have not even taken a good view at it, to remote view it.

Martin: Like, which group?

Bielek: Yes, that's the problem. Is it a human group or non-human? Is it part of the gang known as the New World Order? Or, is it somebody else entirely? I'm inclined to think it's somebody else entirely, but I cannot say that definitely.

Martin: Any other theories about what March 2003 might have in store for us?

Bielek: We've had so much noise about UFO overflights, and they have been increasing. The establishment, in general, still denies it, that it doesn't exist, it's improperly identified phenomenon and so forth; you know the line.

But when you have, as reported last Fall on one of the websites, "dog fights" between two UFO groups, in broad daylight, over Russia—which are as monitored by their own Russian radar, and people on the ground watching this, for about 12 minutes—and then, suddenly, they stop shooting each other down and take-off, and disappear. And they just pick-up the pieces on the ground of the defunct UFOs, which have been shot down, and no further reports. You have that sort of thing going on.

You have the sightings about 2½ years ago over Phoenix, Arizona. You have massive sightings over Mexico. There have been massive sightings over Canada.

The question arises: If there are increasing sightings like this, and they're getting more and more bold about it, when are we going to come to a confrontation which nobody can avoid publicizing, where it gets so big that they can't deny it anymore?!

mentioning of this very situation being likely on the horizon of possibilities. The cornered New World Order misfits are presently walking a tightrope of "daring" that could soon result in a display of intervention from God's Heavenly Host that cannot possibly be ignored or swept under the rug!]

One of these days, whether it's in the year coming, or whether it be after that, our government is going to be forced into admitting the facts—if not totally, at least partially. They are already doing so by the program which was put on by Spielberg in 10 segments, called Taken. They're admitting to a lot of it, indirectly. And they're saying that they did what they thought was best to do, to protect the public, and all of that, still denying Roswell. A friend of mine estimated that it cost, whoever paid for it, at least a quarter of a billion dollars to put that series on.

Martin: It cost a lot of money.

Bielek: It cost more than any standard movie. It is, perhaps, a "trial balloon" to see how the public reacts when they do let a few cats out of the bag. And they did—but nothing massive, nothing like direct statements: "Yes, there are ETs; yes, they are here; yes, we've been working with them." They've never admitted this openly. It's coming. It might be this year.

We're in for something else: They don't tell you the extent of severity of some of these various viruses going across the country. This new so-called "five-day flu" is apparently very harsh. I know some people who have come down with it. Again, it depends on the individual, but it can be fatal.

And it can be fatal in a very strange way: Your body develops a problem of retaining water. And if you retain enough water around the heart sack, the heart stops functioning. You don't die of a heart attack; you die of the pressure from the water.

Martin: I've not heard of any of this.

Bielek: No. It's not in the media. I've talked privately with people who know about this through medical connections. Medical people are aware of it, because the hospitals are pretty well filled up. It's hit half the U.S., one half of the entire country! People are coming down sick with this new "flu".

[Editor's note: Earlier this very day that I (E.Y.) am editing this part of the story, I got word of a friend of a friend in this small country town who died this very morning of this exact strange illness.]

A few days ago this early-60s-ish person was fine, running a local motel with her husband. Then the chest cavity started to fill with water, cramping heart action. Rushed to the hospital, puzzled doctors finally drained her chest cavity and, after a few days, sent her home as "ok" yesterday.

During the night, the same thing happened again, and this time it was too much. The husband was awakened from his sleep and tried to apply emergency heart CPR, but without success; he said he could hear that her chest cavity was again full of liquid.]

Martin: Just in time for the smallpox vaccines.

Bielek: Uh-huh, how interesting. And then, of course, all of the information that's been coming out about the dangers of the vaccine, we don't need to go into that. Dr. Len Horowitz has done it very well. It's deadly stuff.

[Editor's note: And those of you who read The SPECTRUM are well aware of Dr. Horowitz's important warnings.]

From all of the combined effects, the program they want is starting in mid-2003, where people start dropping dead like flies. That's my memory from history; that's my memory from remote viewing from this point. It will start mid-2003, and it will not be recognized (the extent to which it will grow) until we're in it. They'll cover it up until about 2005, where everybody can see it—people dropping dead like flies, all over—the hospitals are overloaded, nobody can treat them, nobody can handle it. When people start dropping dead by the tens of millions, you'll know that it's too late to stop it.

Martin: Will this be chemtrail related, or something else?

Bielek: Everything, chemtrail related.

Martin: Cumulative?

Bielek: Possibly this business of the time flux, which I think may be a major part of it. Other factors, too. It will be called by some people "the great dying"—for unknown reasons in most cases. Some of it can be identified as disease. Some of it can be identified as, possibly, a time-flux problem. In other cases, people will just die, and nobody will be able to figure out why they did.

Martin: If there is a frequency upshift, there may be an inability to adapt to the frequency itself.

Bielek: That is a basic problem, if the humans cannot adapt to whatever changes take place on this planet, and get stuck in the old rut so thoroughly that they can't change. Yes, then they'll die, because the body will rebel. It won't be a matter of their conscious choice to die. Or, somebody signing a writ for their death. It will be a case of the body simply not being able to adjust; and if it gets far enough out of sync, it collapses, the whole system quits.

So, I see that as a major problem. There are going to be a lot of shifts, and a lot of people will not be able to take it.

Martin: This is about the perfect length for this subject. Thank you so much, Al. I really appreciate it.

Bielek: You're very welcome.

As if the above was not enough to think about, on 1/6/03 I conducted a follow-up conversation with Al Bielek. While some of that conversation was necessarily "off the record" at this time—though very supportive of previous information shared within these pages—what else Al wanted to share became another critical part of this unfolding story.

Martin: You and I were talking about a number of things coming up for 2003. The time flux, and then of course, the 20th anniversary on August 12, 2003. Let's talk about that a bit. Are you in danger, do you feel, from that? What else do they have in the works? It seems like every time the 20-year anniversary comes up, they do something.

Bielek: [Laughter]

Martin: What do they have in store for us this year?

Bielek: That's a very good question, what might be in store for this year.

The first part of that question was: "Do I feel like I'm in any danger?" No. At one time, I thought that I might be. But the aspect to that is, they were concerned about the fact that I have time-traveled a great deal, and of course, the original concern was with the loop created from 1943 to 1983. The problem is, I've also been in 2137, and also in the 28th Century, which create two much larger loops. So, I don't think they are going to feel that I am expendable, just because 2003 has rolled around, and that particular date, of course, of August 12. There are too many other things that I've been involved in which still put me in the category of, you might say, an active time-traveler. That's my feeling on it.

- Ancient tunnel system has existed since time of Atlantis.

Martin: So, you feel a little more secure now than you once did?

Bielek: Yes, more secure now than originally.

Martin: Good, I'm glad to hear that.

Bielek: The other question is: what else, as you say, are they cooking-up?

Martin: This is a $10,000 question.

Bielek: I think it's more like a $100,000 question, or a $64,000 one, as you wish. I think before August 2003 rolls around, we are going to see a number of problems.

Number one: the current major problem is the fact that all of the pundits are now saying we're going to be at war, within weeks, with Iraq, whether or not it's justified.

In any case, I don't feel it's justified. In terms of the Administration's view, they would feel it's justified if Mr. Hussein fails the inspections, and so forth, or doesn't co-operate fully, or whatever they may think-up. Bush is saying now, of course, that he will hold off for the UN to make a decision, and he's not going to act unilaterally; at least that's what he started to say in the last week, that he's going to use every diplomatic effort, first.

But, at the same time, we're calling-up all the reserves. They're all being called-up now to go overseas. They'll go into their period of training; then they'll go overseas in the various holding areas where, really, there's huge amounts of materiel. They've already dispatched two more aircraft carriers.

So, they don't do this unless they're quite certain that they're going to be using them. I feel that, before August 12th, we're going to see a war scenario with, I would say, at this point, a reducing possibility of it being avoided. I think the escape hatch is closing. Let's put it that way, slowly and inexorably. It can still be stopped, but I don't know what it will take to stop it. That's one of the things that I feel is coming up.

Number two: This problem with the time flux is going to continue to get worse. I'm noticing physical effects are starting to get worse from this. You're going to see more and more confusion on the part of people, because of this. You're going to see crazy car accidents. People are going to be more and more distracted. They're not going to be paying full attention to what they should be paying attention to, and should be doing. And this problem is going to get worse.

Other problems will be an inability to analyze properly and see things that are happening.

And I don't know at what point in this year the death rate is going to cross over and be higher than the birth rate, but it is going to happen sometime this year. The death rate is going up, and the birth rate is going down. There will be a crossover sometime this year, I suspect the later half of the year. And from that point on, you'll see the world population going down. It is a problem which has been, in part, thrust upon us by this chemtrail seeding, and all the other crap they've been putting in our atmosphere now for the last 4-5 years. And it isn't stopping—even though it may be, in the Administration's view, and the view of some of those who have looked at this, necessary for reasons which are somewhat obscure.

One of the reasons given, of course, is to reduce the heating effect, the "global warming" effect. Ice is just melting off all the glaciers all over the world. Even Switzerland doesn't have many glaciers left. Our own Glacier National Park is now nothing but soil and plants. There is no ice there. The same is happening in Alaska. The melting-down effect in the South Pole area, Antarctica, is severe enough that we can now see dry land—huge chunks of ice have broken-off, the size of the state of Rhode Island, and exposed dry land for the first time in God knows how many thousands of years. But if this continues, there will be serious problems, and this may be one of the problems that they're addressing in trying to reduce the Sun's heating effect.

But there are many problems we face in the period from this year forward, until about 2025. They're going to increase, as we go. It's hard to predict exactly what course it may follow, or what may be the most predominant problem at any given point, and whether or not it's going to get as bad as I saw it. It might not, if enough people wake up and turn around and avoid a war. They're going to save an awful lot, right there. And, of course, the problems will not be helped if we wind-up in a total economic meltdown because we can't afford the war.

Martin: What do you think the "agenda" would be if they try something again in August, which seems more than likely?

Bielek: In terms of another event comparable to the Philadelphia Experiment? Is that what you're implying?

Martin: Yes, at least.

Bielek: At this point, I don't really know. I haven't looked at that to see if I could figure out what they might be pulling this time. That's a very good question.

Martin: Historically, they've done it every 20 years since 1943, so there's no reason to believe they wouldn't.

Bielek: The year 2003 would be an "open window" for a number of things. It could be, as one item, opening up to the public the fact that we've been in bed with the aliens, extraterrestrials, for decades. I can't say, for sure, that's going to happen at this particular time or date, but it's going to happen, and it may well be sometime this year, because almost everybody feels that something "heavy" is coming down this year.

Everyone I've talked to feels it, somehow, subconsciously, as a dread. The war could be it; but it could be something else. They're trying to say that the war is going to be over in a few weeks. Of course, the mop-up will take years in trying to clean-up the whole mess.

But, quite aside from the potential of a war in Iraq, maybe in the next month or so, and possibly that thing being over in a matter of a month, there's something else coming down. THAT I can say for sure. I don't think the war is the primary problem. It is, I believe, an extraterrestrial-involved problem. And it may be that they, or we, will pull some rabbits out of the hat, if you will, in August of this year.

Martin: During one of the closing days of Art Bell broadcasting his radio show, somebody called in and predicted that this next year the government would pull something with time, and that this time experiment is going to go tremendously awry.

Bielek: They've been playing with time, and the use of time now, for decades—actually since 1938! Of course, the Philadelphia Experiment became the open door for time manipulation between that and Montauk. Montauk, after it was on-line in 1975-76, was playing extensive games with time. The technology isn't well known and how to use it. However, what this person may be implying is that they may take off on a new tangent, in terms of time manipulation.

Martin: So, what could that be, I wonder?

Bielek: The only thing I can think of that would fit would be trying to get Earth, as a whole, back on its original time track. On 12 August 2001, we went off the original timeline. That was very obvious. We have a much more intense Sun now than we had prior to that date. The fact that we went off on a different timeline, and changed perhaps 5 years—I have to say perhaps because that seems to be the estimate, but I don't know if it's accurate. From my understanding, it's supposed to be sometime this year that we're supposed to get back on the original timeline.

So, that would mean there are going to have to be major changes somehow instituted. And possibly, as this caller to Art Bell suggested, a monstrous experiment with time could go wrong, possibly involving the whole planet, to shift us onto another timeline or back onto the original timeline. That could go awry and cause some very serious problems. We have the technology to do it, but whether anybody will be foolish enough to attempt it, I don't know. It is a great possibility—and a grave concern if we try something like that.

There is a possibility of pulling something, again, and it could be either one of two periods or two dates: June 21, the Summer Solstice, which is very critical, or again, August 12, 2003, a very critical date.

[After some repeat comments about the moons of Mars, we continued our discussion. — R.M.]

The Planet X problem is no longer a problem; that's under control of our military. It's no longer critical. It's changed course by 15 degrees, and is apparently, by current information, going to stay above the Plane of the Ecliptic. It will not come near Earth.

They will be pulled into the Sun—not into it, but as normally happens, flung around it in a sling-shot effect—and then will go out into space, never to return. It's being guided and controlled by, let's say, U.S. military forces actually running the machinery. Let me put it that way. A deal has been struck.

Martin: Thank you, Al. I'm going to give Preston Nichols a call, and see if he can shed any light on this August 12th date.

Bielek: It's interesting that you bring that up, because yes, that is a major conjunction, again, and that could be one of the things that people are sensing, that it portends some great problem. This may be what people are feeling. I still have the feeling that war with Iraq may be averted at the last minute. Nobody wants a war, except the war-mongers.

Martin: That's right.

Bielek: The people do not want it, anywhere. And, of course, the usual prevails. People's wishes are—

Martin: Ignored.

Bielek: Totally ignored. In this country, they're totally ignored. They may not be, so much, elsewhere, but they certainly are here.

Martin: Thank you for this follow-up conversation.

Bielek: You're very welcome.

* * *

During another call with Al Bielek on 1/27/03, additional pertinent information to this story was shared, along with some things that must remain confidential until some later date. Needless to say, more pieces of an extensive jigsaw puzzle are falling into place!

Martin: Is there anything else you can tell me about what they found in Iraq? Are there any other comments you can make "on the record" about that, about the ancient weapons and the stargate?

Bielek: So far as I know, they didn't find a stargate there, but they did find a cache of ancient, highly technical weapons. That was found in the mountains, in the Kurds' territory, where they're protecting it. There was an American team who went in there to recover that. They said, flat-out, through channels, that they will not return to the United States; they would all be massacred if they did.

Martin: Because of this find?

Bielek: Yes. Also, there is suspicion—but I'm not free to give out my source on this, but its ex-Agency who still has his foot in the door—I mean, they all do, because there's no such thing as an ex-agent. His information was that the Mossad got into this find first, and took one of the devices out.

And, apparently, it's some type of time-shifting, time-modifying device. The suspicion is that it was used as part of the operation for 9/11.

[Editor's note: For those of you readers who maybe don't realize what an important piece of the Larger Puzzle was just provided here, go back and carefully study again our October 2001 special issue on the events of 9/11—and continue studying on forward all the way to the story by Dr. Albert D. Pastore in our January 2003 issue.]

Two VERY IMPORTANT elements of the real 9/11 story are (1) the heavy involvement of the Mossad, and (2) the need for some kind of extensive time manipulation in order to—in a split second of our time—have those towers largely emptied and otherwise "prepared" to allow for the smooth vertical drop of the structures that we all witnessed.]

Then, somehow, our side got it back and put it back in the find, the cache, the vault, whatever it was that they found it in. That group is somewhat decimated, but most of the people, apparently, are still together and they are staying there. The Kurds are covering them, and the Kurds are supplying them with food and keeping them alive. They all are still alive but, I think, one. This information was verified through other channels, from this friend of mine who has a lot of connections.

The problem is, they don't want Iraq to get these things. Apparently, Iraq has not; but Mossad got their hands on one, first. Now, what they may have learned from it, I don't know. Whether it is damaged or not, I don't know. The word is that it was used as part of the operation for the 9/11 events.

Martin: Any sense of how old those technical weapons are?

Bielek: No information on that, no indication.

Martin: No indication whether it is from Sumeria, or long before?

Bielek: No. No indication or, for that matter, whether it was a stash that was put there by the WingMakers, or somebody else out of the future, because they are very, very sophisticated time-manipulating devices. I don't know where they originated.

Martin: Is this why we would use the nuclear missiles that go very deep underground, to destroy this cache?

Bielek: That's true, they were developed back in the times when Kissinger was Secretary of State. Those things, the design of them, are anywhere from 10-20 years old—the type that bore into the Earth and then go off.

Martin: Are they thinking about destroying it, rather than trying to excavate it?

Bielek: I don't know. I have a feeling that they want to salvage it, but that is my personal feeling, based on the way they're doing it. If they want to invade Iraq and make sure they wipe-out the Iraqi forces, it means they want to use Iraq for something else. I don't think they would destroy this without knowing what's in it. Our military and technical research teams, under control of the military, are much too curious to let something like that go by the board.

Martin: This find seems to be very much what it's about.

Bielek: They don't want to just put Hussein out of power. That's a minor consideration. Yes, they would like to. Both he and his Minister have said, flat-out on TV, that it's their homeland and they will not leave it. They'll die there, first. The U.S. Government was trying to bribe him to leave. Huge sums of money were offered, if he would go into exile to save us the problem. So, it means Hussein is onto it, also, in my opinion. He knows something about what's going on there.

Martin: No doubt. And thank you, again, for this additional follow-up conversation.

Bielek: You're very welcome.

As if all of that's not enough to consider, we now move on to my next interviewee:

Preston Nichols

Preston Nichols was born on Long Island, New York, in 1946. He received degrees in Parapsychology, Psychology, and Electrical Engineering.

After graduating, he went into Defense Electronics and wound-up working at both the infamous Long Island, New York establishment called the Brookhaven

National Laboratory, and also at A.I.L. [That's the Airborne Instrument Laboratories in Farmingdale, Long Island, New York.]

In 1968, Preston's involvement with Montauk began. He got involved with the tail-end of stealth research at A.I.L. Preston was told that the research started right after the Philadelphia Experiment.

He actually read the final report of Project Rainbow, which we know as the Philadelphia Experiment. The report named the Cameron brothers [that is, Al

Bielek and his brother] as being the Navy liaison in the experiment.

Next, he got pulled into the mind sciences project at Montauk. They were working with interfacing a person's mind to the computer.

[Editor's note: See the map nearby for the layout of "busy" Long Island, New York. Note well-known Manhattan Island and Brooklyn are at the bottom, Brookhaven is at the midpoint, and the town of Montauk, with the Air Force Base, is at the top. If we could look BENEATH the surface, say down the equivalent of at least 20 to 40 stories, the view would REALLY get interesting!]

Preston worked with Al Bielek on the psychic aspects of the Montauk Chair [time travel] and the Montauk Boys Program. Preston trained the Montauk boys to be "Psi Warriors".

The Montauk Chair used subtle quantum fields to read a person's thoughts. A psychic would lay in the chair, go into a trance, and a group of coils picked-up the emanations. A bank of radio receivers designed by Nikola Tesla would pick up and digitize the thought, turning thought into computer code. The radar tower was used to turn thought into reality.

[Editor's note: See the photograph of that infamous "radar" tower nearby.]

This chair was used for many purposes. One was to open up a vortex for time travel. Many Montauk boys were lost during the initial testing in the time vortex.

Preston was also actively involved in the music industry, where he worked as an expert sound engineer and recorded hundreds of hit records during the golden era of rock 'n' roll. Beginning with his early works for Time Records, he expanded his role in sound engineering, and constructed the premier music studio in the world for Phil Spector at Bell Sound. He interfaced with the likes of the Beatles, the Beach Boys, the Rolling Stones, and many others. His work in the music industry involved mind control and the manipulation of the masses.

Preston's efforts, over recent years, at exposing these and other behind-the-scenes manipulations, have created numerous personal challenges for him. He has revealed many of these intriguing stories of personal attacks against him in the books The Music Of Time, The Montauk Project: Experiments In Time, and others.

[Editor's note: These and other fascinating accounts are published by Sky Books, P.O. Box 769, Westbury, NY 11590-0104. For a catalog of their books and videos, send them a large, self-addressed, stamped envelope along with your request.]

Preston is a scientist of tremendous and varied technical abilities, and I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank him for being willing to speak with me on these key issues of national and global importance. It was on 12/31/02 that I conducted the following telephone conversation with Preston Nichols:

Martin: There seems to be almost a collective awareness, among a number of independent people, that we are in for some kind of major event in early-to-mid-2003.

Now, initially, some of my contacts, of course, were thinking that was related to Planet X or Nibiru, but that has diminished into the background, substantially.

Nichols: Yes, rightfully so.

Martin: However, there seems to be something surfacing that appears to be almost ominous, but certainly significant for the planet, that's coming up. And I am just wondering if you have any sense of that? If it's related to war? If it's related to a time-shift of some kind? If it's related to an interplanetary interaction, or intergalactic interaction of some kind? Do you have any sense of what might be on the horizon?

Nichols: We KNOW there's that 20-year cycle in time that's based upon 2003–1983–1963–1943.

Martin: Right, from the Philadelphia Experiment?

Nichols: It goes back before that. But, yes, there is some sort of a time cycle that is taking place here where major events in space and time, not necessarily physical events, seem to peak-out at this period, which is centered on August 2003.

Now, we're well aware that the American economy is in the dumps, and that, traditionally, a war is what the government controllers have used to bring us out of the slump. This has happened, going back eons. You get in an economic slump, then start-up a war with somebody.

There is, also, the "ray" or "field"—or whatever it is—that is coming out of the center of our galaxy, that we've been passing into. And 2003–2004–2005 appear to be the peak of this odd energy period. The ray appears to be pure time-stress.

Martin: Now, this is independent from the so-called Photon Belt, or anything related to that? Is that correct?

Nichols: It may be what the predictors have been calling the Photon Belt.

Martin: So, is this the so-called "time flux"?

Nichols: Yes, that's what it appears to be. All of the measurements have been taken by NASA. DARPA [the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency] and others are pointing to some form of a field of pure time distortion, or time flux, whatever you want to call it.

Martin: What does that mean to the average person on planet Earth?

Nichols: Things are going to be more chaotic, more disturbed, more upset. If we're going to have a war, I would suspect that the time flux could precipitate it by itself.

Martin: By increasing agitation among people?

Nichols: Right. Also, it will increase agitation in our Sun, which we're already seeing. It will cause agitation in the Earth's sphere itself, which we're seeing. The planet is wobbling more. That's one of the reasons that we're having the crazy weather, due to a planet wobble.

Martin: Is NASA acknowledging this time flux?

Nichols: No, they are not.

Martin: They are not publicly acknowledging it?

Nichols: No, they're only acknowledging it behind closed doors.

Martin: What are they calling it?

Nichols: I don't know what they're calling it.

Martin: Do you have any personal theories about what either the cause or the intent of this distortion might be?

Nichols: I believe the cause is probably related to some sort of quantum phenomenon taking place at the center of our galaxy, possibly a black hole, a quantum singularity, or something like that. I don't know that there is an intent behind it, just that it's a cycle that runs every so often.

Martin: So, it would be more in the class of a natural, cyclic, physics phenomenon, rather than some kind of Divine-generated thought event?

Nichols: The idea that I've gotten, by talking with the people I know "inside", is that there are four rays coming out of the center of the galaxy, at 90 degrees, that every so often, as the galaxy rotates, we come into one of these rays. And I do believe this is what is disturbing the Sun, because the sunspot cycle should be over by now.

Martin: It's been pretty active the last few years.

Nichols: Yes, it's getting worse; it's been getting worse, not better.

Martin: Yesterday I had a conversation with Al Bielek, and he mentioned something that threw me off a little. He was talking about, somewhat in passing, Phobos and Deimos, the moons of Mars.

Nichols: Yes. I know nothing about that. Al is saying that they disappeared.

Martin: Yes, and that at least one of them may be manned. I'm very aware that you may not be able to talk about certain things. Let me ask you this though. This is probably a sensitive question, but I'll ask it anyway.

It's my understanding that in the Sumerian area of Iraq, at some point in the not too distant past, there was a discovery of ancient artifacts and weapons.

Nichols: Yes, this keeps coming to the surface, every so often.

Martin: Yes, and I keep hearing it from different sources, all independent from one another. I was asking Jim Marrs, a couple of weeks ago, about this, and I asked him if our war with Iraq is really to either somehow destroy ancient records there or something like that, and he mentioned this discovery of ancient weaponry.

Now, in talking with Al Bielek about it, he seemed to think that whatever was found there was a time device of some kind, time related. Do you have any sense of that? Or, can you even talk about it.

Nichols: I don't know anything of it to talk about. [Laughter]

Martin: I see, ok.

Nichols: No, I don't. We can just go into generalities that there were earlier civilizations here, and there has been technology found all over planet Earth. Iraq is not the only place. It wouldn't be surprising, because that is an area that civilization, essentially, started in. So, yes, it wouldn't surprise me.

Martin: Let me shift gears here for a minute. I know you are, and have been, on the cutting edge of consciousness research for many years. Is there anything you can share with our readers about what you're involved in, as it relates to pure consciousness?

Nichols: It's a relatively long story. What I'm working with, since we're entering this period of time agitation, and since our mind is multidimensional, spreading over many reference frames, this agitation is going to have a tendency to tear the non-physical part of the mind apart, and disturb the physical mind.

I've been working on methods and procedures to remove the blocks, and remove the hang-ups, so that the mind hangs together much tighter, much closer. As we enter this period of disturbance, you want your mind as tightly glued together as you can.

Because of our upbringing, and our society, we have a tendency to take at least three levels of our mind and, basically, break them free, and let them float. We tend to call that the subconscious.

When we're born, we have seven levels of consciousness, one level of subconscious, in the physical mind, which opens through the eighth-level conscious, or first-level subconscious, into a multi-level non-physical mind, or the multiverse.

As we grow-up, this has a tendency to get shattered. This is why our bodies have a tendency to become a free and floating article, with very little direction from the mind. That's why the immune system, and the overall body systems, have a tendency to break down. I've been working with ways to feed that eighth-level physical consciousness back to the upper levels, and essentially restore the glue, so to speak, of the levels of the mind.

Martin: Are you doing this through pharmacological means, technological means, or just purely psychological input?

Nichols: Purely psychological, although we are branching-out into the use of music therapy along with this, or musical meditation, whatever you want to call it. I've been developing sound systems which are totally interactive with the person, and have a healing effect.

I'm using sound technology that's more interactive. You need the properly structured bass response. You need the properly structured high-frequency response. It should be loud. Through the pyramid energies that I'm working with—a special speaker system, and the quantum well amplifier that basically crosses all of the different quantum domains and forms a quantum matrix in the room—the listener will experience the instruments of the music as if they are coming from point sources in the room.

The listener will also be in a quantum well, which will make him/her synchronous with the music, which allows the music to reach extremely deep levels into the mind.

And yes, we are getting, along with what's commonly known as male-energy rebirthing, along with that and the music, we're reaching extremely deep levels at this point. This is all within about the last month of research. I'm only beginning now to marry the male-energy rebirthing to the music.

This is also bridging into an area that I would like to call the Wingmakers' Healing Music. The Wingmakers music is not what the people on the West Coast think—it's not that tribal Indian music. It actually turns out to be the musical soundtrack for the movie StarGate, of all things.

Martin: No kidding? That's interesting!

Nichols: The stargate, I have seen it. I have used it. I have worked with it.

I'm told that it was found in the 24th room in Chaco Canyon [northwest New Mexico, cliff-dweller ruins], along with the optical disk that's been talked of, but no one has spoken about, that I know of, the 24-rim steel phonograph record, which my boss in DARPA [Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, part of the Department of Defense] handed me to play. When I played it, I called him up and said: "Hey, what kind of a joke is this? That's the music from the movie StarGate!"

He said: "Yes, we know. We want you to dub it onto a 160 kHz sampling digital sound."

After I did a wave table analysis of what's on the phonograph record and the StarGate CD, I found out they match exactly. It's an exact match-up, which is as good as a fingerprint match. So, there's no question. The music from the movie StarGate has something to do with the Chaco Canyon cave business, and the WingMakers.

I've been in contact, over the last six months or so, with guys who claim they are out of the future and represent the WingMakers. After a lot of questioning on my own part, because I was questioning, was this a hallucination on my part? Did I dream this, or was this real? Considering the fact that these people gave me the design directions for my speaker system, and my sound system, and that when I put the speaker system together as they told me, it worked, right out of the box. And, you know, speaker cabinet design is a magical art. My speaker cabinet design experience has been out of cookbooks. So, I know nothing about designing a speaker cabinet.

They also gave me some computer code for improving digital playback systems, which now is locked-up by the military. I got the patent pending, and notice of classification of the patent for the military because the WingMakers called it "structured sound". I understand they call it "directed sound", and it relates to their sound weapons technology.

Martin: Now, can we assume then, from what you're saying, in the sound-track from StarGate, that this is particularly beneficial, as opposed to detrimental?

Nichols: When I first got that this has something to do with this WingMakers phenomenon, whatever that is, I played this music for a number of sensitives and psychics. They all came up with the impression that it affects DNA, that it will evolve DNA. And this is basically what these guys, supposedly out of the future, told me. That the purpose of it is to evolve our DNA from a 23-paired sequence, to a 24-paired sequence—you know, go from 46, as we are now, to 48. There's this rumor, legend, theory, that our 47th and 48th chromosomes are crashed down into the 46th. I'm told this music, along with a light show, has something to do with re-expanding our DNA.

Al Bielek claims that he went to the future, met with the WingMakers, and that he heard the same music—music that they were placing in the "time stash" to help evolve mankind's DNA. He was told the same thing, somewhat independently.

Martin: That's consistent. Do you sense anything ulterior in any of this?

Nichols: I don't. No one else has. What I've been doing for the last month, I've been going around the Northeast, doing musical meditation sessions with what I call the pyramid of sound, with the quantum well amplifier, featuring structured sound. Of all the music that I play, the Wingmakers, or the StarGate movie music, seems to be the most uplifting, and the most healing, by the people who experience it. And no one has said that they've sensed anything negative in it.

Martin: In your questioning of these people from the future, were you able to just enter into a dialog about things to come?

Nichols: They don't talk much about things to come. They, basically, come and say: "Look, you're the one who develops the sound technology. This is what you've got to do next." And they give me damn little of anything else. They're very guarded.

Of course, if I visited the past, I'd be very guarded, too. Because you've got the problem of, if you go back into the past, you can change the future. You've got to be very careful of what you do, so the future will come out as you want it, from the viewpoint of the past.

Martin: It's my understanding from what I read quite a while ago about the WingMakers, basically their work concerns trying to guide man in such a way that it will correct mistakes that man has made, somewhere along the way.

Nichols: I don't know. I have not gotten into philosophy with these people. These people seem to be very benevolent thinking. From what I've observed, I don't think they have any malevolent purposes at all, but of course, you never know for sure.

Martin: I asked Al Bielek, about a year ago, just point blank, if he thought the whole WingMaker thing was strictly a CIA operation. And he said, paraphrasing: "No, they really are real; they really are from the future; and the whole thing is legit."

Nichols: The website may be a CIA operation. But I keep getting these people who come to me, and one time they took me into the future with them, for a while. What they say, literally, is: "I represent a group you know as the WingMakers, in the future."

Martin: Now, that is us, isn't it?

Nichols: I don't know, for sure.

Martin: As opposed to some other planetary influence.

Nichols: Seems to be.

Martin: It's us, in the future. That's the way I understand it. I don't know if that's true.

Nichols: Again, the situation is such that I don't have enough direct view into what's going on when these people come to me, or when they took me into a future. I don't have enough of an overall view to know, really, who they are, what their purposes fully are, or where they are.

It appears that they're human. It appears that we're still on planet Earth. They speak English. Their oral structure is human, but they speak of a multi-level society, with some sort of human hybrid at the head of it—you know, some sort of alien-human hybrid.

Martin: That's interesting.

Nichols: The alien may still be on this planet, at this time; I don't know. They're not forthcoming with a lot of information. The only thing they are forthcoming with is what they want me to do.

So far, everything they've told me has been correct and on the money. That's why I've come to the conclusion that I haven't hallucinated, or dreamed this, that I am in contact with some intelligence outside of myself. Because if I dreamed or hallucinated this thing, it would have to be information that I'm capable of, and I wish I could be the technical genius who came up with the triangular speaker systems that generate a pyramid of energy. I wish I could claim that, but I'm not going to claim that. I'm truthful.

I designed the amplifiers. And that's what they said, that even in the future I'm still highly regarded for my amplifier designs. But speaker systems, I don't know anything about that subject.

Martin: Sounds like something I'd like to hear someday! It sounds beautiful.

This story will be appearing in the March issue of The SPECTRUM, and things will probably be escalating at that time, on a planetary level. What general words of advice or comments would you have for our readers?

Nichols: Don't go off on a fear mode. The worst thing you can do is get frightened, and go off and hide in a cave somewhere.

Martin: That's good advice.

Nichols: So many predictors and sensitives are predicting everything up to Armageddon. You make all this stuff much worse for yourself if you're in fear. Because, when you're in fear, you cannot think logically, and you cannot act logically, and act in your best interest. You're acting on fear, which is generally your worst interest.

Martin: Last week, on Art Bell's radio program, Ed Dames was a guest, and the day before, Sylvia Brown was on.

Nichols: Two doomsday soothsayers!

Martin: Both of them were talking in terms of March "as though time ended". They both used that phrase. "It's as though time ends."

Nichols: We know that 2003 has a major time-shift in it. It has to.

So, it may be that time, as we know it, will end, and we'll start a whole new adventure.

That's why I'm saying: don't go into a fear mode. There's nothing to fear. If you have your mind together, if you're thoroughly glued together, you'll come through this very well. If you're shattered, and you're in total fear, and you're running, of course you're not going to come through this well.

Martin: All of that is good advice. Is there anything else that you can share that might be relevant to the next year of our history?

Nichols: Not that I can think of, offhand. It is going to be very interesting times.

Martin: Right, it sure is.

Nichols: I'm going to be positioning myself out of the cities, up in rural America, not through fear, but because of financial aspects.

Martin: That's a good reason. Thank you so much for talking with me, I sure do appreciate it.

Nichols: You're very welcome.

Then, on 1/6/03, I conducted a follow-up interview with Preston Nichols. Here is what we discussed:

Martin: The question has to do with August 12, 2003. Or, even June 21, but August 12, 2003: Obviously, we're coming up against an anniversary, and if the 20-year cycle of history has taught us anything, it's that something else will be done. The question would be: What else would they try?

Nichols: This is very true that, basically, we are coming up on the 20-year biorhythm point of the Earth itself. I'm sure there's going to be all sorts of activity around August 12th, probably plus or minus about five days, I would estimate. What it is, who really knows? But it probably will involve the use of time.

Martin: In talking with Al Bielek, theoretically, we were conjecturing, would the purpose of such a thing be to get us back onto our proper timeline?

Nichols: That's one possibility. But I can't see the conspiratorial One World Order wanting that. I could see the conspiratorial One World Order wanting to put us on another timeline of their creation, where they come out ahead.

Martin: Apparently, in the final days of Art Bell hosting his show, somebody called in and said that the government was going to pull some time experiment that would go terribly awry. And that was a prediction.

Nichols: That's a prediction like any other prediction; who knows whether it's going to really come true? It's a possibility.

Martin: The August 12th date is somewhat of a concern, only because of the history since 1943.

Nichols: Right, and earlier than that. Go back to 1923 and 1903. This is an ongoing thing. Whether or not the government is going to try some experiment, I don't think there's any question they will. The question is: What are they going to try? And is it going to go awry and cause us a disaster? We don't really know, for sure.

But yes, there are definitely going to be time projects, including some that I'll be involved with myself. And, of course, the ones that I'm involved with, I would like to believe, they're going to try to put us on the proper timeline—where we're supposed to be.

Martin: And that would be acknowledging that we're not there now?

Nichols: Yes. We're almost in a kind of limbo of time, since 1983.

Martin: Since the last August 12th date?

Nichols: Yes, in 1983, and something did happen. We went into a deeper limbo in 1993. Some people believe that time actually stopped in 1993, and that for the 10 years between 1993 and 2003, we've been in no-man's land; that, basically, our reality has been nothing but a thought, not so much of a physical, real world as it's been in the period of 1983 to 1993, and before 1983.

Of course, we have the "dead zone" at 2013, which some people say is there, and some people say isn't there. There's no question that there is some sort of a barrier at 2013. How impenetrable it is, I don't really know. I think this all figures into a cosmology of time.

Martin: That's all I had, I was hoping you could clarify that, and you've done that. I appreciate it, thanks.

* * *

I'd like to take a moment to share a few brief comments posted on the www.cyberspaceorbit.com website, with no apparent date, as they relate to Iraq and buried archeological sites and advanced, ancient technology:

[quoting]

Many years ago a missile was developed dubbed Excaliber. They bore two miles into the Earth before detonating. Some were used in the Gulf War Show. Aside from military targets, five archeological sites were evacuated and destroyed with Excaliber missiles.

The area Americans loosely refer to as the Middle East is an area rich in ancient machinery and ancient recorded knowledge. Not always machinery as people now think of it, including petrol engines, gears, and pistons—nor the silicon crystal circuits of computer machines. Nor do I mean the time-keeping devices of line and shadow found worldwide. Many of these machines are enormous and deep underground, when not surrounded by a military base. They are machines created by the juxtaposition of particular geometries in particular fashions. Usually based in stone, incorporating other materials.

Oil production is already secured from the Caspian Sea and we wait to find out if Arafat throws in completely with Hussein. Hussein may be nuts but he is not stupid. He may certainly know what he has underground besides oil. He may even have a legitimate grudge with Kuwait just for slant drilling into oil pockets beneath Iraqi soil. He might take it personally that the wells are/were owned by Zapata Oil, a Bush company.

The ancients in what is now the Middle East have certainly displayed knowledge of the solar system and Nibiru not obtainable by observations from Earth, at least not without technological aid. If ancient cultures had technologies able to build in ways we cannot duplicate today, is it too far a leap to imagine they had technologies superior in other arts besides building? If something as basic as smoothly cutting five-ton stones and making a wall or a pyramid that can't be duplicated in construction techniques today, imagine how advanced some cultures were in more esoteric sciences.

Ancient machines: The lands now known as Iraq and Iran cover what was once Sumeria. That is what is under the surface in these places. All you can imagine of Sumeria and much you cannot. Until just about 50 years ago, Sumeria was considered a total myth.

I want to mention the spectacular solar activity. Consider the Sun is downloading data to the Earth and to your bodies—directly. This is a great thing. All you have to do is be in sunlight. It's automatic. Your body knows what to do with the data; you do not. In the same way your body knows how to digest a cheese sandwich, while you do not. If your body suddenly gave you the responsibility of oxygenating blood cells, how long would you live? Now the idea of your body knowing what to do with data from the Sun does not sound so unrealistic.

[end quoting]

It's important we put history into perspective and consider the possibilities that may exist in an area as central to ancient culture as is the area around Iraq. And if such ancient culture was actually MUCH MORE ADVANCED than the history books are telling us (due to their censorship of truth, as imposed by the world controllers), then REAL reasons for forcefully gaining control of the area may be quite different from what we would conclude from the media's version of reality.

William Henry

That's where this story sat at what was supposed to be the end. But then along came William Henry.

* * *

William Henry

One way I gauge the timeliness of a given story is how information flows in my direction. After completing all of the above, I became aware of William Henry through a friend, and I investigated his website. And after viewing his website, I remembered that I had heard him lecture several years ago. He had made an impression that stuck with me.

Note how the information you are about to read goes hand-in-glove with some of the information you've just read.

On 1/14/03, I had the privilege of speaking with William Henry about his latest book, and his research into stargate technologies. Before offering that conversation, here is some necessary background information.

William Henry is an investigative mythologist and author, living in Nashville, Tennessee. His primary expertise and mission is finding and interpreting ancient stories involving advanced technology for raising consciousness.

William began his journey to the ancient mind in 1984. Seeking to understand the unbounded potentials of the mythological realm, he began with a study of psychology, physics, and brain-mind studies.

William parlayed his intuitive understanding and undergraduate study into a position as Special Projects Researcher at the Subliminal Research Foundation in Albuquerque, New Mexico. There, working with a team of psychiatrists and psychologists, he developed self-help technologies.

Since 1992, William has focused on interpreting ancient myths and spiritual mysteries that relate to the empowerment of the human soul. His extensive data base of Egyptian, Sumerian, and Holy Grail symbolism and mythology enable him to detect the startling ways history is repeating itself today.

William is the author of several books, including: The Keepers Of Heaven's Gate; The Peacemaker And The Key Of Life; One Foot In Atlantis; Ark Of The Christos; and most recently, Cloak Of The Illuminati. These books are available through William Henry's www.williamhenry.net website.

The following narrative is from William's book Ark Of The Christos: The Mythology, Symbolism, And Prophecy Of The Return Of The Planet X And The Age Of Terror. Let's take a closer look at the ancient Sumerian culture, as background for my later discussion with William Henry:

[quoting]

For the ancient Sumerians, the story of Planet X was the guiding myth of civilization. The gods of Planet X, the Shining Ones, created the human body as an ark vessel of the soul. It was designed to project the soul through the stargate, the Arch or Ark of the Christos, to Heaven. In this groundbreaking new guide to the esoteric knowledge hidden in the symbolism of the Shining Ones, William Henry attunes the readers to the consciousness and stargate technology of these gods. Ark of the Christos is a profound exploration of stargate consciousness. William contends that the years 1999-2012 are a season of prophecy culminating, as the Mayans say, with the opening of a wormhole to Heaven.

Not only the Sumerian, but the Mayan, Judeo-Christian, and Templar symbol systems are loaded with stargate imagery. Building on the belief of the followers of John the Baptist, that the center of our Milky Way galaxy was called the "Place of Terror", William shows that this season of prophecy is an Age of Terror. He interprets this time as an era of spiritual initiation and awakening sparked by a new light emerging from the galactic core that will soon have a major impact on the consciousness of Earth.

In his latest book, Cloak Of The Illuminati, William Henry digs deeper into the realm of stargates and wormholes. From his website, we read the following book description:

[quoting]

Thousands of years ago, stargate technology of the gods was lost. Mayan Prophecy says it will return by 2012, along with our alignment with the center of our galaxy. This will bring the birth of a new matrix and a new human. We are its elders. Highlights of this book include:

- Examples of stargates and wormholes in the ancient world.

- Examine myths and scripture with hidden references to a stargate cloak worn by the Illuminati, including Mari, Nimrod, Elijah, and Jesus.

- See rare images of gods and goddesses wearing the Cloak of the Illuminati.

- Learn about Saddam Hussein and the secret missing library of Jesus.

- Explore the duplicate of the Stargate Pillar of the Gods in the Illuminists' secret garden in Nashville, Tennessee.

- What the government's view of humanity as a collective "hive" means to you.

- The implications of new nanotechnology on your spiritual growth.

- How TARA (compassion) will overcome TERROR and bring a new spiritual politics, and stargate technology will bring true PEACE.

Notice the clues above which bring Saddam Hussein into our story, front-and-center. How much of this important angle do you think will be revealed on the evening news as reasons for a war in Iraq?

With the "Saddam connection" as our focus, let's now consider the following from William Henry's informative website:

[quoting]

The Saddam Tower

Saddam seeks to restore the lost glory of Babylon, ancient home of the Tower of Babel, the Gate to God. In 1991, Saddam's Babel Tower was the first Coalition target to be destroyed. Saddam rebuilt the tower.

It will likely be the first target if military action is taken against Saddam.

Compare the Saddam Tower in downtown Baghdad with the Egyptian Djed Pillar of Osiris. The Saddam Tower is a communications tower. The Egyptians called the Djed the "Tower", the "bond between Heaven and Earth". It resembles an antenna.

[end quoting]

Most readers of this publication will immediately "connect the dots" between this tower, its possible esoteric purposes,

The Saddam Tower

and control of the masses—AND how important that would be to ritual-bound planetary controllers such as the Illuminati misfits.

With that said, consider the following article by my next interviewee, William Henry, reprinted here with his kind permission:

Saddam Hussein,
The Stairway To Heaven,
And The Return Of The Son Of God

It is well known that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has connected himself with Nebuchadnezzar, the biblical King of Babylon, spending over $500 million during the 1980s on the reconstruction and the re-establishment of ancient Babylon, the capitol of Nebuchadnezzar. Over sixty million bricks have been made to place in the walls of Babylon, each engraved with the inscription: "To King Nebuchadnezzar in the reign of Saddam Hussein."

In essence, as has been widely reported by prophecy watchers and international news organizations alike, Saddam is saying he is the reincarnated Nebuchadnezzar. He is attempting to recreate and outdo the feats of the biblical king.

As we shall see through this investigation, Saddam controls an asset infinitely more important and powerful than oil, or even nuclear weapons. He controls access to the temples of beings the Sumerians, and later Babylonians, considered gods, that housed the history humanity's origins, and potentially, the secrets of stargates, as exemplified in the story of Nebuchadnezzar's opening of a "fiery furnace" and the return of the "Son of God" through this gateway.

Buried deep beneath the sands of Iraq are the secrets of the Shining Ones, whom the Sumerians claimed came to Earth from Planet X, a mysterious 12th planet in our solar system. Saddam's actions reveal that he knows the political value of these secrets. Before exploring the eye-opening story of Nebuchadnezzar's opening of a gateway and the return of the Son of God, it is important to lay a foundation for this event.

Based On Ark Of The Christos:
The Mythology, Symbolism, And Prophecy Of The Return
Of Planet X And The Age Of Terror

A lot of wild speculation in metaphysical circles these days concerns the possible return of Planet X, a mysterious roaming planet that swings to the far side of our solar system, and is expected to return to our part of the solar system soon. While this story may, at first, appear fanciful, it should be noted that the mythology of this planet sheds light on current world events.

In Sumerian mythology, Planet X is called "The Lord" and is the home of a group of beings that the Bible calls Shining Ones. According to my interpretation of Sumerian myths presented in my book Ark Of The Christos: The Mythology, Symbolism, And Prophecy Of The Return Of Planet X And The Age Of Terror, these wise beings, the “angels” of the Old Testament, wielded enormously advanced technology.

They operated a (star) gateway linking Heaven and Earth. They genetically altered the human body as a “resurrection machine” of “soul flow-er” to operate in conjunction with this gateway. They possessed the secret science of alchemy, the transmutation of the elements, through which they could create weapons of mass destruction and advanced human beings.

The Shining Ones of Planet X were last here in 3760 B.C., which is the time of Anu’s, the ruler of Planet X’s, last visit.

In a morning-time ceremony in which Anu departs Earth, E.A. and Enlil, two sons of Anu, await Anu at what is called the “golden supporter”. [see Figure 1] They hold several objects: “that which opens up the secrets” (most certainly the Egyptian Key of Life), “the Sun disks”, and the “splendid shining posts”.

The “golden supporter” device is sheathed in a golden skin.

Anu and his wife, Antu, stand before the golden supporter, which can only be the golden Pillar or Tree of Life, a 45-foot-tall device lined with a gold alloy the Egyptians said could “drill” holes in space. This device [see Figure 2] was mounted on a platform that resembles, in form and likely function, the Ark of the Covenant.

The device comes alive, the gate swings

open, and Anu and Antu enter the Abyss (sometimes called the Fish of Isis).

Incredibly, Sumerian scholar Zecharia Sitchin has recovered what may be depictions of this scene. [see Figure 3] In this scene we see two people flanking an entrance to a gateway in which a third person makes an entrance (or exit). The Sun and Moon symbols can be seen above this gateway.

The two guards hold devices, long poles with circular tops, which Sitchin concludes served an astronomical purpose. He also equates them with golden pillars at the entrance to Solomon’s Temple in Jerusalem. [1]

This being so, can we see these devices as “golden needles”? Is the story of this golden needle woven deep into the mythology of the ancients? Is the “silver thread” woven by this needle actually a wormhole linking Earth with the Planet of the Lord?

While it is uncertain if Planet X is headed this way in the immediate future, one thing is certain: The return of this planet centers on the recovery of a technology once housed at Solomon’s Temple that is used to open a gateway linking Earth with far off regions of space.

Recent military and political activity suggests that the world powers are jockeying for position as if the return of Planet X is imminent. The stakes are high.

This planet is at the center of a biblical prophecy known as the “Day of the Lord”. The man in the catbird seat of this milieu is Saddam Hussein, the mass-murdering Iraqi dictator with the Cheshire cat smile.

Sitchin, one of the few experts on Planet X, indicates that, according to prophecy, the last time Planet X was visible was in the 6th Century B.C. The “Day of the Lord” (the return of Planet X) occurred about 550 B.C., when prophecies said that Planet X was visible.

550 B.C. is an extraordinary date. In 576 B.C. the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar looted and leveled the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem, took three temple wise men hostage, and as I will detail momentarily, appears to have negotiated a deal with these temple priests to open a gateway to Heaven.

As the Book of Daniel describes [2], he put the three wise men from the Temple of Solomon into a “fiery furnace”. When they reappeared, not only were they in pristine condition, they were not alone. They had the Son of God in tow.

I have interpreted this “fiery furnace” as a zone of frequency or vibration that is the mouth of a stargate or a wormhole. When the three wise men entered this gateway, they traveled to a distant place, possibly to the center of our Milky Way galaxy, or possibly to Planet X, and returned with the Son of God.

This remarkable story is of far greater significance in the Age of Terror than most realize. It is well known that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has connected himself with Nebuchadnezzar, spending over $500 million during the 1980s on the reconstruction and the re-establishment of ancient Babylon, the capitol of Nebuchadnezzar. Over sixty million bricks have been made to place in the walls of Babylon, each engraved with the inscription: “To King Nebuchadnezzar, in the reign of Saddam Hussein.”

In essence, as has been widely reported by prophecy watchers and international news organizations alike, Saddam is saying he IS the reincarnated Nebuchadnezzar. He is attempting to recreate and outdo the feats of the biblical king.

As we shall see through this investigation, Saddam controls an asset infinitely more important and powerful than oil, or even nuclear weapons. He controls access to the temples that housed the history of humanity's origins, and potentially, the secrets of stargates.

Buried deep beneath the sands of Iraq are the secrets of the Shining Ones of Planet X. Saddam's actions reveal that he knows the political value of these secrets.

Before exploring the eye-opening story of Nebuchadnezzar's opening of a stargate, it is important to lay a foundation for this event. Saddam is currently engaged in a massive program to convert Iraq into a "Disneyland of the ancient Shining Ones" (my term). Included in this program is the recreation of ancient Sumerian temples dedicated to the Shining Ones, the copying of ancient cuneiform tablets concerning the Shining Ones, and the retrieval of ancient Babylon's famed Ishtar Gate from Berlin.

One of the most startling antiquities moves Iraq is set to launch is a campaign to "revive" the Ashurbanipal Library, the earliest systematically collected and catalogued library in the ancient world. [3] This was the library of the king who said he could read the texts from BEFORE the Flood!

Excavated by British archaeologists in the mid 19th century at Nineveh, the 25,000 cuneiform tablets assembled by King Ashurbanipal are almost all now in the British Museum. These include the famous 7th-Century B.C. Flood Tablet, which relates part of the Epic Of Gilgamesh and contains the "backstory" to the account of the flood given in the Book Of Genesis.

In April 2002 Iraqi archaeologists asked the British Museum if it would allow casts to be made of the cuneiform tablets. Although individual tablets have in the past been copied as casts, this would be the first time that any substantial number had been made. British Museum keeper John Curtis, who received the request during his visit to Baghdad last month, told The Art newspaper that: "The museum would do its best to cooperate." [4]

The proposed reconstructed library at Nineveh would hold copies of all of the British Museum's tablets, and it is planned as both a scholarly center and tourist attraction. Alongside the library, the Saddam [Hussein] Institute For Cuneiform Studies will be set up as part of the University of Mosul. Plans are also being made to excavate one of the wings of King Ashurbanipal's palace, in Kuyunjik Mound, where it is hoped that THOUSANDS of other tablets lie buried.

There are 10,000 archaeological sites scattered throughout the country, most of them not fully excavated. In Iraq, historical monuments are a matter of national security. This is because they mark the locations of the secrets of the Shining Ones.

It's absolutely impossible to get close to the legendary ziggurat of Ur without a letter of authorization. Ur, the biblical city of the Chaldeans, is the land of the prophet Abraham, father of the three great monotheistic religions: Judaism, Christianity, and Islam.

What is presented as the ruins of his house from around 4000 B.C. can also be seen near the ziggurat. The ziggurat was re-engineered by Nebuchadnezzar. A monumental staircase—rebuilt by order of Saddam Hussein—allows the visitor to ascend to the second stage. The façade of the ziggurat still bears traces of American bombing during the Gulf War—or "Mother Of All Battles" as it's known in Iraq.

According to archaeologists, gang leaders sometimes drive through provincial towns with trucks and shovels, recruiting people to dig at poorly guarded sites. [5]

What are they after? As in the example set by a recent robbery, the monument robbers want knowledge. Thieves smashed the doors of an Iraqi museum and a glass display case, absconding with cuneiform tablets and cylinders from the 6th Century B.C. They left behind gold jewelry that might have tempted amateurs. Cylinders from the 6th Century B.C. are more valuable than gold for the information they record. [see Figure 4]

The looting began in the tumultuous immediate aftermath of the Gulf War. In the Kurdish areas of northern Iraq, and the southern area populated by Iraq's restless Shiite Muslims, most of the provincial museums were ransacked.

Iraqi authorities charge—and their accusations are backed up by some archaeologists abroad—that Sumerian antiquities are smuggled out of the country by diplomats and U.N. relief workers. Last summer, a landlord was cleaning out a Baghdad villa that had been recently vacated by a diplomat. Inside, he found two cartons of archaeological fragments. The Iraqi government hasn't named the diplomat or his country.

Saddam believes he is to unite the Arab world under Islam. By recreating ancient Babylon, and by uncovering and disseminating the texts from ancient Iraq, he can simultaneously duplicate the feats of Nebuchadnezzar and potentially pull the intellectual rug out from underneath Judaism and Christianity.

The pre-history of both of these religions is found in Iraq. Saddam controls the temples that housed the "back story" of Judaism and Christianity. He seeks to retrieve the rest of the story and destroy these religions.

If Saddam launches a storm of ancient knowledge, it could turn current biblical scholarship into gumbo, and release a potentially debilitating thought-virus into the Global Mind.

[Editor's note: Longtime readers of The SPECTRUM would rightly conclude that Saddam's releasing of The Truth about humanity's history would destroy—more surely than any bomb—the unconscionable enslavement presently exercised by the world-controlling elite over the peoples of the world through the contrived mechanisms of the major religions. That's plenty enough reason for the major controlling countries to conjure an excuse to go in and destroy Iraq!]

This may explain why the pace of archaeological work being done in Iraq is increasing from the little activity of the past decade due to the ongoing international crisis over Baghdad's weapons programs and the economic effects of sanctions. Saddam assuredly knows that the release of documentation proving Judaism and Christianity as derivatives or copies of an ancient Sumerian religion could have a devastating effect on global affairs. Millions of people who partake in the Christian ceremony of communion may be surprised to learn that this procedure is derived from an alchemical teaching of E.A., the god of wisdom of ancient Sumeria, modern-day Iraq.

An expedition sponsored this past winter by the Deutsches Archaeologisches Institut (German Archaeology Institute) in Berlin sent a team of researchers to make a partial map of a buried Mesopotamian city using a magnetometer. The sensitive instrument is able to detect the presence of man-made objects beneath the soil and reveal the remnants of walls, canals, and residential districts. [6]

The team zeroed-in on the legendary city of Uruk, immortalized in a famous Sumerian epic poem The Song Of Gilgamesh. The poem, which today is the earliest surviving work of literature, tells the story of a Sumerian hero, Gilgamesh, who many researchers believe may have been one of Uruk's early kings. In the story, Gilgamesh goes in search of the Stairway to Heaven and the Abode of the Gods. [see Figure 5]

According to prophecy, additional primary targets of Saddam's duplication of Nebuchadnezzar's feats involve London, New York, and Egypt. Each of these locations is home to obelisks known as "the images of Bethshemesh". These "images" are referred to in Jeremiah 43:9-13. Bethshemesh (literally "House of the Son God") is in the land of Egypt. "The houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire" says Jeremiah.

"Bethshemesh, that is in the land of Egypt" is the city of Heliopolis, which is 6 miles NE of Cairo, Egypt. [see Figure 6] It was the center of an ancient cult of an Egyptian Son of God, who was symbolized by the phoenix or heron. Heliopolis was the location of the Temple of the Phoenix (or heron), the Egyptian sun god and savior.

The symbolism of the phoenix or heron was later attached to Jesus, including the hieroglyph for the heron  which was duplicated in the fish symbol of Jesus

Something of profound significance appears to reside at Heliopolis. Located just across the Nile from Giza and the pyramids, Heliopolis was the center of Egyptian religion. It is a place of enormous mystery. In the Bible the name given to Heliopolis was "On" or "An".

Sumerian texts record this is also one of the names of Planet X, and was derived from "Anu", the name of the ruler of Planet X. [7] The Greek Heliopolis means "City of Helios"—literally the "city of the Sun-god Helios" (or "light of life") [8], being the Sun/Son of An or Anu. Heliopolis, An, or Tula, as it was also known, became the center for the priesthood of the Sun god, Ra, sometime around 3350 B.C. [9] Thutmose III originally erected the obelisks of Heliopolis about 1500 B.C. Thutmose III is known as the "Napoleon of suspect [11], this would mean that the descendents of David, including Solomon and Jesus, would have carried the "sang azure"—the royal blue blood of the Pharaohs.

The obelisks in New York and London are the property of this family.

In this profound scenario, Jesus, who came from the Royal House of David, potentially emerges as one of the last, if not the last, of the Egyptian pharaohs. [12] If the Davids were a group of people (possibly pharaohs), it would not be easy for them to simply disappear. Is there any evidence of their continued influence in worldly affairs, even as absurd as it sounds, in the affairs of America?

As it turns out, there is evidence of the pharaohs' continued existence as the Celtic Druids. Scholars debate the origins of the word Druid. In Gaelic druidh means "wise man" or "instructor". This is another appellation of the Shining Ones. Larousse's World Mythology says Druid came from "daru-vid" meaning "skilled". One art in which the Druids were highly skilled was the transmutation of the elements.

One classical scholar from the third century, Diogenes Laertius, said the Druids were the cult of the Magi, the sect of the Three Wise Men who sought out the Christ child Jesus. Does the Druid connection to the line of David explain why they sought the Christ child?

It was at Heliopolis that the Pyramid Texts were discovered. The Pyramid Texts are hieroglyphic writings written on the walls of the pyramids that contain the instructions for the rebirth and resurrection ancient Egypt". Historians note that his martial accomplishments matched precisely the impressive resumé of the biblical King David, the ancestor of Jesus, and father of King Solomon. His rulership would witness the founding of one of the most mysterious dynasties in all Egyptian history, a dynasty that included such illustrious names as Akhenaton and Tutankhamun. According to Laurence Gardner, it was also Thutmose III who established a mystery school of the original Rosicrucians, the Essene Therapeutate—meaning "physicians of the soul". [10] The Essenes later adopted this name.

Figure 5: Akkadian seal impression (2340-2180 B.C.) depicting Gilgamesh's journey beyond the gates at the end of the Earth, guarded by doorkeepers tending ringed (or ringing) posts. He met Utnapishtim (the Sumerian Noah) at the source of the waters of immortality. (From the British Museum)

If Thutmose III was the original biblical "King David", as some scholars now of the pharaohs. It was also a center of an alchemical priesthood that guarded the secrets of transmuting the elements.

Nebuchadnezzar's expedition into Egypt gave the ancient fulfillment of this prophecy. However, modern fulfillment of this prophecy will be seen in New York City and London.

The "images of Bethshemesh" are literally the "obelisks of Heliopolis". These obelisks are also known as Cleopatra's Needles.

Cleopatra's Needles are two ancient obelisks presented by the khedive of Egypt to Great Britain (1878) and the United States (1880). Each weighs about 200 tons and stands about 70 feet tall. The British installed their obelisk on the Thames River Embankment in London (1878). The Americans installed their obelisk in Central Park in New York City (1881).

Jeremiah prophesied the destruction of these obelisks by the "King of Babylon". [13]

The concern the United States must contend with is that this modern Nebuchadnezzar can obtain nuclear weapons—almost at will—through the Russian or Chinese black market. According to the blueprint provided by biblical prophecy, he may choose to use these weapons against these three targets. The primary target is Jerusalem. Nebuchadnezzar is the only foreign invader to destroy Jerusalem. Saddam believes he must match him.

The United States and Israel are prepared to use nuclear force against Iraq if necessary.

Revelation 18:21-23, in fact, tells of the future and utter annihilation of the City of Babylon: "And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, 'Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee; And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee.'"

Bible prophecies concerning Babylon's destruction have not yet been fulfilled. Isaiah 13:19 says: "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah."

Isaiah's "burden" for Babylon, in chapter thirteen also included a terse warning: "Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty." (Isaiah 13:6).

Sodom and Gomorrah were erased from the map by a premeditated and preventable thunderbolt from the sky of atomic proportions. In a scene reminiscent of the obliteration of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, at dawn one morning, as Abraham looked upon the valley below, fire came down from "the Lord out of Heaven". [22] "The smoke of the land went up like the smoke of a furnace" [23] and Sodom and Gomorrah were gone.

God promised Israel that they would someday take up this taunt against the King of Babylon (Saddam Hussein?): "How hath the oppressor ceased! The golden city ceased!" (Isaiah 14:4)

Here, the utter destruction of the city of Babylon is linked to (1) God's overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah (a blast of light from heaven), and (2) the Day of the Lord (the return of Planet X).

If and when such an event took place, everything Saddam has rebuilt could suddenly reduce to vitrified green glass that no one could even go near for thousands of years.

As we can see, Saddam is a far more complex figure than the comic book head of the "axis of evil" presented on the evening news. He is a man in search of himself and the alchemical secrets of the ancient past. He may also be in a race against time. If Planet X is due to make a rendezvous with Earth in the near future, he does not have much time.

Let us now turn to the ultimate quest of this man: the duplication of Nebuchadnezzar's stargate encounter.

Nebuchadnezzar's stargate encounter began in 576 B.C. when he conquered Jerusalem [14], flattened its walls, stripped Solomon's Temple of all its treasure [15], set the city ablaze, and returned home to Babylon with the treasure of the Temple [16] and a group of royal prisoners of war. [17]

The Temple priests supposedly were forewarned before the attack. To save the Ark of the Covenant the priests took it to "Solomon's Vault" beneath the Temple, sealed themselves inside, and committed ritual suicide so no one would know where they hid it.

Nebuchadnezzar also took captive thousands and thousands of Jerusalem's citizens, including the holy men at the Temple, and forcibly moved them to Babylon, the ruins of which are buried beneath the sands of Iraq about twenty miles from modern-day Baghdad.

During this Babylonian Captivity many strange things happened. Included among the captives were three wise men from the Temple, a young man and "master magician" named Daniel, and another prominent prophet, Ezekiel, who had visions of "the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth" while imprisoned in Babylon, and who later left the planet in what many consider to be a starship.

Surprisingly, the Jews discovered that the Babylonians possessed long-sought answers concerning their past. This is because the Jewish and Babylonian histories emerged from the same original source in Sumeria.

From the Sumerian stories the Hebrews found missing pieces to their own Flood story, and story of Creation. With a few name changes here and there, both traditions match. Most scholars now believe it was in Babylon, during the captivity of Nebuchadnezzar, that the first five books of the Old Testament, including Daniel and Ezekiel, were constructed (with a lot of help from the original Sumerian stories).

Most Christians are shocked to learn the stories that form the foundation of their religion are copies of original stories that belonged to another time, place, and people. Only the names have been changed.

As important as it is to realize the context in which these books were assembled—the captivity of their authors—it is more important to realize that they are a compilation of actual history, mythology, literary devices, and fond memories of a past that never was Hebrew, but Sumerian. Separating Hebrew from Sumerian is crucial. The original stories provide valuable and accurate knowledge.

The marriage between the Sumerian and Hebrew mythologies was a match made in heaven. It was as if each carried the missing half to the other's message. What both sides apparently wanted was access to the stargate of the Shining Ones. This was the gift of the gods of Planet X. As we shall see, Nebuchadnezzar's story bears this out.

On entering ancient Babylon the visitor passed the E-mah, the temple of the mother goddess Ninmah or Ninharsag, which has recently been restored by Saddam. [18] E-mah is a highly significant word. It is the Hebrew word for "terror". Beyond the Emah was Babylon's most important temple, the Esagila, the dwelling-place of the Sun-god Marduk, the Babylonian name for Planet X.

Nebuchadnezzar says that he covered its wall with sparkling gold in order to make it shine like the Sun. In this temple was found a chapel or sanctuary for Marduk's father, E.A, whom Zecharia Sitchin upholds as the genetic engineer responsible for the creation of humanity.

Second only to Nebuchadnezzar's famous Hanging Gardens, Babylon's most famous monument was the staged tower or ziggurat, Etemenaki, "the house that is the foundation of Heaven and Earth", situated north of Marduk's temple. The Marduk temple housed "the golden image of Bel" ("the Lord") and a strange golden table, which combined weighed nearly fifty thousand pounds of solid gold!

Nebuchadnezzar's Hanging Gardens of Babylon were one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. [see Figure 7] Growing on a huge 75-foot-high artificial seven-stage mountain—known as being of the fantastic ziggurat of Marduk, the well-known Tower of Babel, which Nebuchadnezzar restored—the Hanging Gardens could be seen for fifty miles across the flat desert. The seven terraces held trees, vines, and flowers, and were watered by a system of wells and fountains. King Nebuchadnezzar had this wonder built for his queen, who longed to return to her mountain homeland.

Babylon must have been a spectacular, perhaps unbelievable, sight to Daniel and the rest of the Jewish captives—sort of like placing a war-torn refugee child in Disneyland today. [see Figure 8]

In its glory the city of Babylon was the greatest city in Mesopotamia—the center of the new world order. It was a veritable playground for the gods.

Babel originates from the word Bab-li, which in the Babylonian language meant "Gate of God". This is our first tip-off that Nebuchadnezzar attempted to construct a means—perhaps even a stargate—to transcend Earth life and travel the cosmos.

Our primary interest is in the "Image of Gold" Nebuchadnezzar set-up in Babylon. [19] This isn't some ancient status symbol the king kept on his desk.

The Image is a massive 30 cubits high and six cubits wide. A cubit is 18 inches, making the image 540 inches high. 540 inches is 45 feet high—about the size of a 4½-story building! Undoubtedly, this massive structure could be seen from miles around.

Nebuchadnezzar could not make this gleaming image (the Pillar of Osiris) work. This was a major failure. Like the tribal leader David, who ruled Jerusalem five hundred years before him, the king had planned to unify his kingdom, and the golden image was the unifying force.

He tried using music to get it to work. He demanded that when the people heard the music play they were to fall down and worship the golden image (as if this act would impress the lifeless heap). [20] If they didn't, they would be tossed into a burning fiery furnace. [21]

Nebuchadnezzar acknowledged that Daniel had immense prophetic gifts, including the ability to interpret dreams. In chapter four of Daniel, he is asked to interpret a dream in which Nebuchadnezzar saw: "A tree in the midst of the Earth, and the height thereof was great. The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof reached into Heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of the Earth. [22]

"There was great fruit in this tree, and the birds of Heaven lived in its branches. From this tree the king saw a 'watcher' and a 'holy one' from Heaven emerge. They told him to destroy the tree, and leave its

'stump' in the Earth."

This was a confusing dream to the king, but not to us. The "watchers" is another name for the Shining Ones. It is also the Egyptian name for "divine being" or "god" or NTR or neter, which means "one who watches". Neter-neter land is the name of the place in the stars where these beings dwell. Sumeria, another earthly land of the Shining Ones, was known as the land of "ones who watch".

Why didn't the Watchers want Nebuchadnezzar to join them in Neter-neter land (Peter Pan's Never-Never Land)? Could it be that it was because Nebuchadnezzar was not one of them (but Daniel was, which explains why he could interpret their symbols)? What did they mean by leaving the "stump" of the "tree" in the ground? Nebuchadnezzar wanted to know. Did this dream foretell disaster of a project represented by the tree? If so, what is the specific project that is in danger?

The answer to this question is found in the fact that Old Testament scholars universally agree that Daniel was compiled over a long period of time and does not represent the visions of one particular person. Daniel ("God is my judge") was not a personal name. The question of who or what is Daniel takes on paramount importance.

In her Woman's Encyclopedia Of Myths And Secrets [23] Barbara Walker answers this question by saying "Daniel" was a title used to distinguish a group of people: "a person of the Goddess Dana or Diana". Dana was Jacob's daughter, his 13th child. Her name means "light of An".

There's your trouble. That is exactly the same meaning as the Celtic Tuatha De' Danann ("Children of the Goddess Diana"). In Irish history, the mystical Tuatha De' Danann are described as Heaven-sent "gods, and not-gods". They are compared with the Sanskrit deva ("shining one, god") and adeva ("devil"), which became daeva ("devil") in Persian. The Old English divell ("devil") can be traced to the Roman derivative divus, divi: gods. As we have seen, divas also links with terror.

These connections are important not only for their value in decoding the story of Daniel, but also for another important reason. According to Sir Laurence Gardner, Mary Magdalene, as the Miriam, was the Head Sister of the Order of Dan. [24] Her order appears to be the continuation of the mysterious Tuatha De' Danann. Mary's or Mari's title "Magdalene" means "she of the temple tower", a reference to Jerusalem's temple and its three towers. [25]

Ultimately, as Nebuchadnezzar's story continues, along came three wise Jews from Jerusalem. [26] Unfortunately for Nebuchadnezzar, they refuse to worship the hulking image of the god of the Babylonian king. What is more, the three insult Nebuchadnezzar by betting the king that their god will save them from the fiery furnace. [27]

Clearly, the three wise men [see Figure 9] from the Temple of Solomon possess crucial knowledge that Nebuchadnezzar needs to make this golden gadget work. He was successful in firing up the fiery furnace component of the "Image". But beyond that he was stuck. He needed the "Open Sesame".

What is this gadget, this golden image of which I speak? This holy object is likely the Axis Mundi, the Pillar of God. If it is correct to associate Pillar with the 90-foot "tree" bearing the "great fruit" of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, it now makes perfect sense why Nebuchadnezzar would wish to involve Daniel in this project.

It was the sons of the Shining Ones of D'Anu, the people of Daniel, who had originally brought this device to Earth. The angel who appeared to the king was related to the Daniel. There is no way in hell they would want Nebuchadnezzar to enter their realm uninvited.

In the story from Daniel the three wise men refuse to spill the beans to Nebuchadnezzar, what is undoubtedly the "Open Sesame" to open the (star) gateway. Furious, the king orders that the three be cast into the "fiery furnace". [28]

"The three men put on their coats, their hats, and their other garments, and were cast in the midst of the burning fiery furnace" says Daniel 3:21.

"Their coats, their hats, and their other garments" you say? This is an immensely meaningful statement.

Why put on any clothes at all if your body is about to be translated into a toasted marshmallow by the fiery furnace?

These garments turn out to be more than just standard-issue loungewear at the Temple of Solomon or the garb of hostages in Babylon. That is, if they turn out to be anything like the coat, the hat, and the other garments the goddess Mari is wearing in The Goddess With A Vase discovered at her temple at Mari in 1934.

Mari is shown wearing her Shugurra helmet ("a hat"). [see Figure 10] Literally translated Shugurra means "that which makes go far into the universe". [29]

It may be more than coincidence, or this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." [30]

The principalities and powers are the angelic spiritual forces that work as Heavenly governors and messengers in the Heavenly realms (i.e. Galactic beings).

This is exactly the angelic level of the Shining Ones. Apparently, some of these are harmful creatures that seek to attach themselves to human souls. At Armageddon Jesus promises to send his angels to sever the wicked from among the just. And then shall cast them (both?) into the fire. [31]

Does the "armor of God" uniform here described—including the Shugurra Helmet of Salvation and the PALA coat—simultaneously help to protect us from harmful spirits AND make the cosmic connection with a stargate?

It appears so, for Ephesians next describes a person standing in front of the Ark of Covenant, the soul-transportation device that opens this fiery furnace! We know this because the person is wearing the Breastplate of Righteousness. Their feet are "shod with preparation for the Gospel of Peace".

Above all they take the shield of faith, the Helmet of Salvation, and the (S)word of the Spirit, which is the word of God. All of these appear to be necessary for soul travel through the stargate to Tula.

Into The Fiery Furnace

What happens to those who don the "armor of God" get-up and walk through the fiery furnace? Where do they go? Through the black hole?

This detail is omitted. However, after the three wise men from Solomon's Temple entered the fiery furnace [35], Nebuchadnezzar and all the king's men cautiously approached the lethal furnace. He asks that the three men appear to him. When they do, the king (and I'm certain all the assembled) stands utterly astonished. [36] He's expecting nasty flame-broiled corpses. Instead, he sees the three wise men are in perfect condition!

"Did we not cast three men bound into the midst of the fire?" asks the baffled king. [32]

He certainly did. To add to the high strangeness of this event, A FOURTH

Figure 9 : The Trial of the Three Wise Men, from the Temple of Solomon. The Three Wise Men are depicted rejecting the Image of Baal—a head atop a pillar. (From the Catacomb of Sts. Mark and Marcellian, Rome, 4th century)

6 of Ephesians. There, in addition to the "helmet of salvation", spiritual questers are encouraged to "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against PRINCIPALITIES, against POWERS, against THE RULERS OF DARKNESS of PERSON now accompanies them!

However, this is not just any man. Nebuchadnezzar believes this fourth man is an angel. Not just any angel, either. The fourth man is like the Son of God! [33]

Is this Jesus, the Son of God? Is Nebuchadnezzar telling us the three wise men returned from their stargate travels with Jesus in tow, five hundred years before his appearance in the New Testament?

It is quite conceivable because, understandably, at this point Nebuchadnezzar was convinced: the god of the three wise Jews is THE God. He proclaims that, if anyone speaks against this God, he will cut them to pieces and their houses will be made into dunghills. [34] Next, he promoted the three wise men.

The Bible does not say what happened after this Son of God arrived. I believe, however, that tremendous knowledge must have been gained from his appearance. This knowledge is capable of altering the balance of power in the world.

If Saddam Hussein truly believes himself to be Nebuchadnezzar, he most certainly would be interested in acquiring this knowledge, which is among the highest secrets of the Shining Ones.

In Ark Of The Christos I take a closer look at this exotic occurrence, and the possible stargate knowledge gleaned from this episode. Understanding the science of stargates makes one a master of the Laws of Nature. It also provides one the capability of manufacturing weapons systems that make nuclear weapons look like firecrackers in comparison. This is just one more reason Saddam is in the crosshairs of the world.

Cloak Of The Illuminati

William Henry's newest book is Cloak Of The Illuminati—Secrets, Transformations, Crossing The Stargate. This is an incredible volume of research, and is so involved, from an archeological, technical, and cross-referenced standpoint, that I don't really feel competent to attempt to summarize it here, out of context. However, I went one step better and found the author.

On 1/15/03, I had the distinct privilege of speaking with researcher and author William Henry about his insights concerning Iraq and the ancient Sumerian knowledge that is buried there.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank William Henry for his openness, and his willingness to freely share so many years of astonishing research with our readers. As we watch the war drums of the puppet-politicians beating ever more loudly, on instructions from their behind-the-scenes world elite controllers, let's see what eye-opening reasons William Henry has to offer for what's REALLY going on in the Middle East.

Martin: I'm very impressed with your research; it's really excellent. I've gone through Cloak Of The Illuminati, and I've read the bulk of your website, and like I said, I'm very impressed.

Henry: Thank you, very much. I appreciate that, Rick.

Martin: In the story that I'm writing, I keep hearing from every direction that there may be some kind of a stargate in Iraq, and THAT, along with extraterrestrial weaponry and technology, is REALLY what the war with Iraq is about.

In going through your book, there were a couple of things. You talk about [in William Henry's article shared above] Mari's "Shugurra" helmet or hat. You talk about the PALA garment or coat.

Henry: Correct.

Martin: Is there another device, or actual mechanism, that you see as the gate itself?

Henry: In the story that describes Mari, when she puts on her coat, her hat, and her other garments—her Shugurra helmet, her PALA garment, the Garment of Life, and her other accouterments that accompany it—she is interacting with a Pillar, or Tree of Life. And her Serpent husband, named Yama, the reverse of the name Maya, or Mari, is thought to dwell in this Pillar, or Tree of Life. When she puts on her hat, her coat, and her other garments, the Shugurra helmet, according to Zecharia Sitchin, the word Shuggura literally translates to "that which makes go far into the universe". So, what I did is, I connect the dots saying: Well, she puts on these garments. Then, she interacts with this Pillar.

Let us suppose that the Pillar is some form of a key tone or frequency-generating device that opens up a "serpent" or a hole

THE CONTROLLERS: THE HIDDEN RULERS OF EARTH IDENTIFIED

BY COMMANDER X

Humankind continues to wage all-out battle with those who have kept us as their slaves since seemingly the beginning of time. They are: • The Illuminati • The Greys • The Counterfeit Race.

They have, says the author (who is of military intelligence) kept us in human bondage by: • Controlling our minds • Planting imperfect thoughts in our heads • Kidnapping humans • Impregnating women • Causing global warfare and ethnic hatred • Creating a false economic system, and • Assassinating and "replacing" our most trusted spiritual leaders, rulers, and elected officials.

in space. And it's this wormhole or stargate that enables her to go far into the universe.

Then, what I follow that up with is a look at the actual facility, the Temple of Mari, in present-day Syria, where this statue of Mary, or Mari, wearing this outfit, was found. And we find that what it was, it was a temple medical facility.

My conclusion is: Unlike what you see in the movies StarGate or Contact, where the figure is, literally, flushed down a wormhole, the sense that I'm getting from the story of Mari—the word “palla” means miracle, but it also means flash or flesh—and my sense is that this is more of a flash experience, as opposed to a flush. And so, it would be more of a spiritual experience, is what I'm getting at.

Unlike the movies StarGate and Contact, you wouldn't just get flushed through one of these stargates or wormholes. The stories that I've interpreted indicate that there was a spiritual, mental, physical, and emotional preparation that was undergone, preparatory to that experience. And that spiritual, emotional, mental, and physical training transformed the ordinary homosapien into homoangelis, or what might be described as “an illumined one” or “illuminati”.

Martin: I was surprised—that's not the right word—at the level of information you had about Saddam preparing or gathering the cuneiform tablets, and all that he has in mind. It just makes so much sense, in terms of filling-in holes about information that we are just not getting.

Henry: No question about it.

Martin: It's like a breath of fresh air, actually.

Henry: I think so, too. It even increases the stakes, in my mind, in this whole episode.

Martin: It's so much more amazing, and important than anybody has been led to believe.

Henry: I agree.

Martin: It's of intergalactic proportions.

Henry: It definitely points in that direction.

Martin: I, actually, haven't asked you any of the questions I have. I've just been speaking stream-of-consciousness.

I was just told last evening that one of the major tabloids this week has the Saddam Tower on the front page, saying something like: “Saddam's Secret Tower—and this is why we're going after him.”

Henry: [Laughter] That's great!

Martin: One of the major tabloids.

Henry: I'm going to have to go look for that.

Martin: [Laughter] I was really shocked to hear that.

Henry: It's like something out of the movie Men In Black, isn't it?

Martin: It's exactly like that!

You enclosed a postcard picture of the layout there in Nashville, Tennessee, with the book. That's really an elaborate layout [referring to the Bicentennial Capitol Mall in Nashville].

Henry: Oh, yeah. They spent $55 million dollars to build that place. Actually, the aerial photograph in the postcard is old. They have since—it's even more elaborate, as it sits today. Right now I'm trying to get some new aerial photos of it made.

Martin: What is the reason for this?

Henry: The official explanation is that it was built to commemorate Tennessee's bicentennial, and also to provide an unobstructed view of the state capitol, which sits on a mound.

Martin: What's the REAL reason?

Henry: I don't know. I can only speculate. It seems to have to do with FDR's search for the Holy Grail in Mongolia in 1934, because the letters indicate they were going to return the results to Nashville.

center. That's, potentially, what we have here.

In my opinion, based on my research, it's a copy of the [Buddhist] Pillar of Meru that once existed in several places around the world, including Sumeria, Mongolia, and even Egypt. This is interesting to us because Saddam, in his Tower, that tower is designed to glorify the Tower of Babel. Well, the Tower of Babel was built as a copy of the Pillar of Meru.

What we have here in Nashville is a copy of this, I believe, the Pillar of Meru, and therefore it is also the Tower of Babel.

Martin: Incredible.

Henry: It is, it's absolutely amazing! And it gets even more bizarre because what it technically is, what it's called in the Bible, is an Ashura, which is the Rod of God that is prophesied to appear during the so-called End Times. And Ashura, literally, means oak grove. That's exactly what this Capitol Mall facility is: this giant Rod, that is lined with oak trees, fitting the exact technical definition of an Ashura. It's an amazing place.

Martin: I gather you've been there many times? Who frequents it? Anybody?

Henry: Not that I can tell. It has a tremendous universal drawing power or character to it. Every time you go down there, you're seeing people from all over the world.

When people come through Nashville, very often, since it's near the Convention Center downtown, they'll take tours of the place. But it's like the blind leading the blind. The tour companies pretty much give the straight history of it. They keep people out on the perimeter. They don't take them on to the inside of the structure. And they don't describe it, in terms of its mystic connections.

Martin: That is so interesting.

Henry: Yes, I think so, too.

Martin: Can you explain the phrase “the Age of Terror”?

Henry: Sure, that basically comes from statements made by Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld. When the War on Terror began, he stated, repeatedly, that the War on Terror was going to last generations. And from that we would gather, if a generation is approximately 25 years, or 25 to 30 years, he's anticipating that this War on Terror is going to last two generations, or 50 years. And, from that, I get this notion that we've entered an Age of Terror. Because, according to their theme, it's going to be the predominating focus of our civilization, this War on Terror.

But, I think it's extremely coincidental that we enter this Age of Terror at the same time that the Mayans tell us that we've got an impending alignment with the center of our Milky Way galaxy, that is going to

The author was one of the original witnesses at the meeting between contactee George Adamski and Orthon from the planet Venus. Williamson claims he also had contacts with aliens and received transmissions over his radio from friendly extraterrestrials. Others have claimed the same. Senator Barry Goldwater reportedly heard mysterious signals on his ham radio and our own astronauts have reportedly picked up messages not transmitted from Earth.

Other Voices is essentially a reprint of The Saucers Speak, by George Hunt Williamson and Alfred Bailey, originally published in the 1950s. Much of what the authors report has come to pass. Warnings of aliens about nuclear war and environmental doom remain urgent.

It's also, potentially—if you want my wildest speculation on it—it's what the Sumerians called a Duranki. And Duranki means “bond between Heaven and Earth”. Whenever the gods came down, whenever the Anunnaki came down, they would set-up one of these Durankis, or bond between Heaven and Earth, and it would be a ceremonial

by WILLIAM HENRY

Thousands of years ago stargate technology of the gods was lost. Mayan Prophecy says it will return by 2012, along with our alignment with the center of our galaxy. This will bring the birth of a new matrix and a new human. We are its elders. Highlights of this book include:

- Examples of stargates and wormholes in the ancient world.
- Examine myths and scripture with hidden references to a stargate cloak worn by the Illuminati, including Mari, Nimrod, Elijah, and Jesus.
- See rare images of gods and goddesses wearing the Cloak of the Illuminati.
- Find out how to put on the Inner Cloak of the Illuminati.
- Learn about Saddam Hussein and the secret missing library of Jesus.
- Uncover the secret Roman era eugenics experiments at the Temple of Hathor in Denderah, Egypt.
- Explore the duplicate of the Stargate Pillar of the Gods in the Illuminists' secret garden in Nashville, TN.
- Discover the secrets of manna, the food of the angels.
- Share the lost Peace Prayer posture of Osiris, Jesus, and the Illuminati.
- What the governments' view of humanity as a collective hive means to you.
- The implications of new nano-technology on your spiritual growth.
- How TARA (compassion) will overcome TERROR and bring a new spiritual politics, and stargate technology will bring true PEACE.
- Experience a new way of understanding ourselves and our future.

...And much, much more.

bring a moment of New Creation or New Co-Creation.

And that galaxy center has a name; it's called Tara. It's also called Tula. But it's also known as the Place of Terror. And I think it's just highly coincidental that we enter this Age of Terror at the exact same time that the Mayan prophecies say that we're aligning with the Place of Terror, or Tara, depending upon your perspective. Tara means love, compassion, and enlightenment.

Martin: And, of course, there are those viewing this time on the etheric level, on the spiritual level, who are saying that this is what "the sorting" is all about; sorting those of "war consciousness" from those of "love consciousness".

Henry: Exactly. And that's my thesis, if you will:

What if we took the trillion-plus dollars that we're going to spend on the War on Terror, just in the next 5 years, and took some of that money—what if we took it all?—and launched a War on Ignorance, and created a World of Tara, or enlightenment?

Martin: What a concept. It would be so easy to do, too.

Henry: It would be so easy to do. I just read this morning, now we're getting ready with this missile, space-shield, that the Bush Administration wants to build; they figure it's going to cost over a trillion dollars, over the next 20 years, in order to get that off the ground.

Martin: One of the people I interviewed for this story said there has been a mad scramble among the military recently, and they are spending TRILLIONS, just on hardware for the military to have in-hand by March. It's nuts, absolutely insane!

Henry: It sure is!

Martin: If I'm reading between the lines correctly, do you feel there is an internal warring for control, within the Illuminati, over this stargate technology?

Henry: I would definitely say so. I mean, there always has been. It seems that, up until now, there always will be.

You have to go back to the original Sumerian stories—many of which were interpreted by Sitchin, again—that talk of the rivalry between the two brothers, or half brothers, E.A. and Enlil. These were Anunnaki gods. On the one hand, you have E.A., who seeks to uplift humanity to the level of the gods, even perhaps beyond.

On the other side, you have Enlil, his half-brother, who seeks to keep humanity at the level of slaves and sex objects.

On the one hand, you're going to educate humanity and prepare them through the powerful and illuminating mental, spiritual, physical, and emotional preparation that's undergone, preparatory to the stargate experience, and thereby raise them to the levels of the gods.

Or—you're going to keep them away from knowledge that they even exist.

It troubles me because I have seen articles, recently, that the present Administration is discouraging scientists from really talking about their new discoveries, for fear that they're going to be used by terrorists. What they're creating here is a cryptocracy, a rule by secrecy, so that only the few will have access to this knowledge. And the reason is to keep it out of the hands of the so-called enemy. But the question is: WHO'S THE ENEMY?

Martin: That's the question!

Henry: I mean, ultimately, all of us are lumped into one there, because the information is being withheld from everyone, at that point, except those on the "inside".

Martin: How did you originally come across the idea of Saddam being the reincarnation of Nebuchadnezzar?

Henry: This became common knowledge during the Gulf War. It was widely reported, especially by the “prophecy watchers”, that Saddam had spent over $500 million, during the 1980s, rebuilding Babylon; that he made over 60 million bricks that had inscriptions on them, linking him with Nebuchadnezzar. These were the two first major indications that he believed something kind-of strange about himself. And after the Gulf War, the story subsided, but the information—the cat was out of the bag then, that Saddam believed he was the reincarnated Nebuchadnezzar.

What I started noticing last year was that he started making some dramatic moves, in an effort to duplicate the feats of Nebuchadnezzar; and I’m talking about his acquisition of copies of ancient Sumerian and Mesopotamian tablets from the British Museum, his request to the Berlin Museum to return the Ishtar Gate, which had been stolen by the Germans from the Iraqis in the 1850s. And he’s doing all of this because he believes that he has to duplicate what Nebuchadnezzar had done in rebuilding Babylon. But he’s also out to out-do the biblical figure!

It’s my contention that he’s operating on a more vast time-scale than you and I think in terms of.

Think about it: If he really believes that he is Nebuchadnezzar, he knows he does not die. He knows he goes on. What I believe he’s attempting to do is leave a marker, to do something so profound or dramatic that he is remembered by history, so that maybe, a thousand or two thousand years from now, there are a couple of guys talking, and they say: “Well, you know, HPB Unit Forty-Two believes he’s the reincarnated Saddam Hussein.” And Saddam believed that he was the reincarnated Nebuchadnezzar. And Nebuchadnezzar believed that he was the reincarnated biblical King Nimrod.

Pretty soon we put together this picture of a person who is traveling throughout time, attempting to do something. And in all of his stories it involves gateways into other realms.

Martin: Do you have a sense of where the technology is? By whose hands it’s controlled?

Henry: It could be dispersed. In writing the Saddam article [shared earlier], I found that Nebuchadnezzar went in and leveled the Temple of Solomon. This is when he took the Jewish wise men hostage and returned them to Babylon, and they ultimately opened-up the gateway through which the Son of God emerged.

During the exact same timeframe, there’s this really magical decade, approximately 590 B.C. to 580 B.C. During that time, according to Irish history, the prophet Jeremiah took the Ark of the Covenant, removed it from Jerusalem, and took it to Ireland, to the Hill of Tara, and deposited it there.

And so, the question becomes: did he do this in conjunction with Nebuchadnezzar? Did he do it in order to prevent Nebuchadnezzar, who’s mission seems to have been entirely successful? In other words, he was able to open-up a gateway, through which three wise men entered, and returned with the Son of God in tow. I call that a successful mission!

So, it seems that he had all of the pieces together—at one time. Does the Mossad control any part of this? Is any of this in Israel? I say, no.

Martin: The Mossad has agents throughout Iraq, and they have had them there for a long time. The information I received from a prior interviewee is that the Mossad DID have control of it [this discovered technology], at one time, but that it is now returned through the hands of American “black ops”.

Henry: I would agree with that.

Martin: Just for a moment, let’s talk about the Tower in Borsippa, in Iraq. You talk about the UN possibly declaring it a World Heritage Site. What would that do? What would be the impact of that?

Henry: What’s thought to be located at Borsippa is the library of a Priest King, who’s name was Nabu. Nabu is the root of the name Nabuchadnezzar, or Nebuchadnezzar.

According to the followers of John the Baptist, Nabu is Jesus, in an earlier incarnation, approximately the time of Nebuchadnezzar, about 576 B.C. If you think about it, this makes a lot of sense. The Book Of Daniel says that Nebuchadnezzar goes into Jerusalem, takes captive the three wise men from the Temple of Solomon, who know how to open-up the gateway—they’re of the Tribe of Dan, those who understand the Ladder to Heaven.

They open the Ladder to Heaven; they return with the Son of God in tow. Now it seems there was a ziggurat, or a pyramid, that was built for Nabu and his wife. And there was, according to the Sumerian stories, a tremendous library of Nabu that was deposited there.

If we put all of these stories together, it suggests that they opened-up this stargate or wormhole; the Son of God, whom they called Nabu, steps out; he delivers an incredible teaching; the Library is left; and the Library now vanishes into history. Archeologists are still looking for that library.

I mean, what would the impact be if, suddenly, the secret Library of Jesus was discovered?!

What would the impact be, if this is a figure who is constantly reincarnating throughout history?

I won’t even suggest that he had at least one previous incarnation. What if he had others? What if one was there in Iraq? And he did have that library?

Let’s say that it was a cache of information about stargates and wormholes. What if one of the cuneiform tablets they unearth is called The Idiot’s Guide To Wormholes. I think it’s possible, based upon just the hints that are found in the Bible, and other sources.

Martin: And, of course, the Vatican wouldn’t be too anxious for a discovery like this to come forth!

Henry: Absolutely not! No way!

Martin: What does the term “transfiguration” mean to you?

Henry: The classic definition of transfiguration is the transformation into

This book explains how and why:

- We have evolved from the nuclear age into a “Technotronic Era” with “psychotronic warfare” for optimal population control.
- Non-lethal warfare is being effectively used to produce sociopolitical and economic outcomes consistent with global genocide.
- The world’s wealthiest policy-makers have recommended, and are working toward, eliminating half the world’s population.
- Accepted methods of disease prevention, such as pesticide sprayings, can only be scientifically rationalized as costly and deadly contributions to non-lethal warfare and population reduction.
- Chemtrail sprayings that obscure blue skies are not normal, but reflect a conspiracy of silence and military attacks on the health and welfare of people around the world.

Striking at the heart of those responsible for the latest forms of bio-terrorism, psychotronic warfare, and ecological genocide, the revelations contained in this book offer more than a reality check—they give you and your loved ones a final, last-minute choice for survival.

a being of light. I think that this is the final step that is taken, preparatory towards entering the stargate or wormhole.

Martin: You make mention of stargate pillars. Can you talk about the pillars?

Henry: In numerous stories, including the story of Nebuchadnezzar constructing or erecting a 90- to 180-foot-tall golden image of the beast, and Mary or Mari interacting with her pillar, the Sumerian stories of E.A. Whenever we're seeing examples of stargates or wormholes being opened, there is an accompanying pillar that goes along with it. My sense is that this is some form of an antenna that assists in the opening of this stargate.

Something similar was portrayed in the movie Contact, where they had built this tower. The tower was the source of—probably not the source of energy itself—but it was through that tower that the stargate or wormhole was opened.

And I rely on that, because what we see in the movie Contact is technically accurate. It's not science fiction; it's based on science fact!

Martin: What do you think the Saddam Tower is? Do you think that is such a device?

Henry: It's a possibility that it is more a model of one.

One of my readers makes the claim to be a person who was involved in reverse-engineering some ET technology. He's given me a fairly descriptive interpretation of that tower, in light of his reverse-engineering experience, and he claims that it is.

I don't make the claim.

He goes through it, makes certain associations with the Egyptian Dajet pillar and other things such as that, and even with the Ark of the Covenant. I think it's more than likely symbolic of that actual gate, rather than being the technology itself.

Martin: It certainly is a large, and difficult to ignore, symbol!

Henry: Right, and being a devil's advocate says it doesn't look a whole lot different from the Space Needle in Seattle, or the Needle in Toronto.

But what's different about it is what they SAY it is. They say: "This was built to glorify the Tower of Babel." When you consider the source, that's when you have to start factoring in, I think, the mythology of it.

Martin: Since the book has come out, is there anything else you can say about the current Iraqi situation that you may have come across recently or, new flashes of inspiration that you might share?

Henry: No, other than following the story into the Hill of Tara in Ireland. That's really it, right now.

Martin: Would you explain that statement?

Henry: That's what I was saying earlier, where the prophet Jeremiah took the Ark of the Covenant to Ireland.

What we find is that—and I've got that article up on my website [www.williamhenry.net] called Tara: Secret Throne Of The Illuminati Discovered? And what we find is that the Iraqi mythology and symbolism is duplicated in Ireland. It is all traced to that time when Jeremiah took those secrets, and either stole them from Nebuchadnezzar, prevented him from having them, or was in collusion with him to preserve those secrets in Ireland, at the Hill of Tara. Scientists have recently discovered, back in November they announced the discovery of a huge subterranean temple underneath the Hill of Tara.

So, for me, the story is starting to open-up on those two fronts. I say that they are opposed, but they may not be, because obviously you'd think that Saddam Hussein would be bent on using these secrets for terror, whereas the discovery at Tara indicates that the opposite energy is trying to come forth.

and broadcast media output, would LIKE you to think Saddam Hussein is a terrorist. And if Saddam really wants to expose a lot of longtime people-control fraud, like religions, by sharing ancient Truth, then he most certainly is a terrorist—to those who want to continue the fraud for their own selfish world-control reasons!]

Martin: That would make sense, wouldn't it?

Henry: I think so. But I try not to lay a judgment. In other words, I'm not here to say Saddam Hussein is good or evil. I'm just saying, this is what he is doing.

Martin: I think you do a very good job of being objective about that, and that adds further credibility to the story.

Henry: Thanks. I mean, wouldn't you love to talk with Saddam, if you could have an open conversation with him about this?

Martin: It would be an interesting interview, wouldn't it?

[Editor's note: One of our enthusiastic readers, who is also our largest financial supporter, suggested trying to interview Saddam Hussein a few months ago. As you might imagine, however, the red tape and diplomatic hurdles, so far, have been beyond our means to pursue.]

Henry: It would, assuming he really wants this story out. What I see is evidence that he does, just by his actions. I really believe that he wants to turn Iraq into a "Disneyland for the gods". The question is: will the world powers allow him to do that, given the stakes of the knowledge and information that are preserved in Iraq?

Martin: It certainly seems like the American powers-that-be, orchestrated by the Illuminati and higher Dark powers, don't want that to happen. Although, on an even higher level, God and His Forces, if you will, for lack of a better way of putting it, are also factoring into all of this! So there's got to be this huge tension building on all levels, on all dimensions.

Henry: Sure is!

We have to remember this isn't new. We've been trying to invade and get control of the archeological sites in Iraq since at least the 1850s.

Originally, it was a race between the Americans and the Germans. The Americans, predominantly, were coming from Yale University [where is headquartered the Skull & Bones organization for grooming future high-level puppets of the elite controllers], Johns Hopkins University, University of Pennsylvania [other well-groomed schools of the elite], and were funded by John D. Rockefeller and also by fundamentalist Christian money [a lot of which has been from Zionist/Israeli intelligence, according to Eustace Mullins' article elsewhere in this issue].

They went to Iran and Iraq and started digging-up those temples over there because they wanted to prove that the Bible was true. They were in a race against the German scientists, who were there to prove that Atlantis was true. And they both used the same evidence to support their conclusion.

[Editor's note: The "religious" group wants to guard against anything leaking out that would upset the lucrative status quo, and the "scientific" group wants to resurrect super technologies from long ago—both groups interested for their own power games.]

What we're seeing today is just the latest chapter in this effort to take control of that area to either prove Christianity is true, or that there was an original, pre-flood religion of the Atlantians, of the Anunnaki, of the gods.

World War II, I believe, was a Holy War, based upon this ancient battle between those two forces, the forces of terror and tera. You had Adolph Hitler [actually, his handlers], who was seeking the secrets of the Grail, and seeking the secrets of Atlantis, because he wanted to create a genetically enhanced civilization, a new, second human being, a new Adam, based on racial purity.

Then you had the Americans who wanted to create a new Atlantis, a melting-pot Atlantis, based upon genetic diversity. And it turns out that we won—or, maybe not.

Martin: We've just gone to press with our February issue, which features a front-page story with Jim Marrs. He spent quite a lot of time, as you may know, at the Rennes-le-Chateau. He is saying that the "secret" of the Chateau, other than the obvious religious implications of Jesus and Mary Magdelene, had to do with the treasure of Solomon. That was discovered by the Germans at the end of World War II, and it's in their hands to this day.

They capitalized major corporations around the world.

Did they lose the war? I don't know. That's the REAL question. I don't know if they did. This is a continuation of that.

Henry: Yes, it is!

Martin: It just goes on and on!

Henry: Yes, this really is a "Holy War". There's no doubt about that in my mind. Just like World War II was a "Holy War".

Martin: All I can say is, it's an interesting time to be alive!

Henry: Definitely!

Martin: Well, I think we've gone about as long as I dare go—only because this story is getting pretty long and I have to get it done! I really appreciate this.

Henry: Thank you.

Martin: Thank YOU, so much! You've added important insights that I'm sure our readers will greatly appreciate.

So—suffice it to say that 2003 is shaping up to be a year of events that will likely challenge the hearts and minds of all of us. Whether or not any of the unusual time-displacement "events" occur, especially in a manner we can recognize, remains to be seen. But if unusual things DO start to happen, at least we'll have tucked away in our minds some very remarkable and equally intriguing information upon which to measure our perceptions as things unfold. And by all means—keep an eye on the Middle East!

The Genesis World Energy Project: Is A Grand New Era Dawning?

Editor's note: Has THE fundamental breakthrough finally been made that has died aborning on so many previous occasions? The idea of cheap energy to power our homes and businesses would, naturally, if a reality, transform planet Earth for the better in so many healthy ways, and surely topple the world elite controllers from their entrenched pinnacles of selfish power.

With that said, the following article may well announce quite an historic milestone. Is it for real? We here at The SPECTRUM haven't been invited to observe this technology—yet—but what is described herein has quite the ring of plausible Truth. So we would thus be remiss not to share such potentially awesome news with you.

For the record, I (E.Y.) stepped in and inserted several technical clarifications where such seemed useful, and in some places I changed original wording where it could lead to unnecessary confusion due to being technically either incorrect or inaccurate—for the sake of those really trying to make sense of it all. But that in no way reflects badly upon the fundamental message being shared here; rather, it merely hints that, perhaps in the rush, technical eyes may not have carefully gone over the following information before its release to the general public through the www.genesisworldenergy.org Internet website.

Likewise, there is some repetition of key points within the flow of the following outlay. But that's the result of sharing, for the sake of thoroughness, a collection of information some of which was designed to act as stand-alone documents, such as the Press Release.

Two very important "issues of awareness" are evident from the following narrative that favor the success of this current project, where so many have failed in the past:

First, there is the up-front unabashed acknowledgment of a Higher Power that is Guiding this endeavor; and second, there is both the acute awareness of, and the tremendously brilliant engineering to counter, the elite power-mongers who would otherwise surely stop at nothing—as they have done so many times in the past—to prevent the delivery of such a fundamentally liberating gift as this to the general public.

Their own words relay this awareness so well: "Call it Fate or Divine Inspiration, but the Genesis Team knows that every aspect of this journey came together by Design. From every Team member and each successful milestone, to the amazingly short development process, this scientific breakthrough is nothing short of a Miracle."

Well, that's certainly familiar territory for SPECTRUM readers! After all, the continued existence of this magazine is a similarly remarkable Miracle—with a capital M—that's in large part due to your financial support EACH month. Else we could not publish.

We are IN the time of the Great Awakening on planet Earth. No doubt about it. And, as last month's provocative spiritual messages hinted with even more than their usual degree of between-the-lines clues, we ain't seen nothin' yet! Let's hope that what you're about to read truly heralds a Grand Era in the rebirth of planet Earth.

GENESIS WORLD ENERGY

THE VISION:

Our Mission

The Genesis Project was created to quickly develop a viable, abundant, low-cost and totally environmentally-friendly source of energy, capable of immediately eliminating the world's dependence on oil, gasoline, natural gas, coal, and nuclear energy, at minimal cost, minimal conversion effort, and without requiring people, businesses, or industries to change the way they use energy.

There were three primary objectives involved in accomplishing our mission.

First, develop the underlying technology necessary to form the basis of the new energy source.

Second, create turnkey energy generation devices that utilize the technology for easy and transparent replacement of traditional forms of energy.

Third, advance the designs and specifications of the devices to the point where worldwide mass production and deliveries could begin within months.

Our Message

We created the Genesis technology to allow the world to view energy from a different perspective, and to prove that each one of us has the gift and power to change the world and make it a better place.

Today is only the beginning of our journey. We have given the world the gift of total freedom from the bonds of energy dependence on fossil fuels. Oil, natural gas, and coal are precious resources that we can never recreate or replenish. Many of the products we use and depend on in our everyday lives require chemicals derived from oil, natural gas, and coal in order to exist. Once these natural resources are gone, life as we know it will be gone as well.

Energy has always been as plentiful and inexpensive as water. Amazingly, it was right there in front of us all this time; we just were not looking at it that way.

THE TEAM:

The Genesis Team

Genesis World Energy is a technology development, production, and supply consortium whose key members have spent much of their careers developing pivotal technologies for defense and space programs. Their contributions range from defending the world's nations from nuclear holocaust, to taking man to the Moon and exploring the depths of space.

In September 2000, a plan to create a new, practical source of energy out of the hydrogen and oxygen in water was put into motion. By early 2001, a team of over 400 visionaries from a wide spectrum of disciplines, including science, technology, and engineering, was assembled to crack the scientific and technological breakthroughs necessary to make this technology possible.

This team of dedicated men and women, who have very diverse ethnic, religious, and political backgrounds, were able to set aside their differences for the common benefit of mankind. With a focused mission, they accomplished what no one else has: the ability to harness an unlimited source of energy from the molecular structure of water. An achievement that will change the face of energy as we know it.

But it isn't the recognition, fame, or fortune that motivated the Genesis team to pursue this challenge. In fact, they desire to remain in the background, letting the technology receive the attention. Rather, it is their passion to make a positive difference in the world that compels them: To provide the world's people with access to a low-cost, abundant energy resource. To protect the Earth's natural resources from depletion and pollution. And to invest in future generations through the support of educational, environmental, and charitable causes, and the perpetual advancement of this technology.

Call it Fate or Divine Inspiration, but the Genesis Team knows that every aspect of this journey came together by Design. From every Team member and each successful milestone, to the amazingly short development process, this scientific breakthrough is nothing short of a Miracle.

THE TECHNOLOGY: The Science Behind Genesis

The most abundant and practical source of pure hydrogen and oxygen on the planet is ordinary water. However, previously it had not been possible to break water down into its basic atomic constituents in practical terms from an energy consumption standpoint. The process consumed more energy than could be extracted from the resulting hydrogen and oxygen gases.

As an example, 1000 watts of energy would be consumed to break water down to its basic constituents, and only 900 watts of usable gas energy would be yielded from the process.

Recently, two new processes have been developed that are capable of breaking water down at lower energy-consumption rates; however, those processes have proven to be costly and impractical.

One requires the use of a very specialized chemical additive on a continuous basis that is in relatively short supply. Furthermore, the chemicals left over from the process must be disposed of without contaminating the environment.

The other process is only accomplishable in highly controlled centrally located facilities. Therefore, it would involve establishing new hydrogen and oxygen gas distribution and transportation channels from scratch.

In order to make Genesis viable, the team needed to develop the ability to break down any type of water into its basic constituents, using a small amount of space and consuming far less energy than could be realized as a result of the process. Major scientific and technological breakthroughs were required to accomplish this.

Since the objectives of the Genesis Project were very specific and unique, the team started entirely fresh, creating every aspect of the new technology from scratch. Therefore, the conventional thinking and the technological accomplishments of other scientists and engineers did not limit the team.

Extracting Hydrogen And Oxygen From Water: The G-Cell Process

In common terms, the essence of the Genesis technology involves a process that excites the hydrogen and oxygen atoms contained in water, and detaches them with very little electrical energy, much the way magnets with the same polarity push away from each other.

[Editor's note: Perhaps a more useful picture to understand the above technical concept—of a molecular dissociation process needing less work or energy when the components are in an excited state at the molecular/atomic level—would be to picture the bonds as rubber bands holding the atoms of a molecule together.

An excited or "warmer" molecule is in a higher energy state. That is, each of the component atoms making up an excited molecule are jiggling around a lot more actively compared to a less energetic or "colder" molecule. That more active jiggling stretches the rubber bands and weakens them, so it takes less additional energy to completely break them (that is, the bonds holding the pieces of the molecule together) than it does when the molecule is in a less energetically excited or "cooler" state.

Thus, if you can somehow get the water molecules (H₂O) into a higher energy state BEFORE applying the energy to dissociate them (break them apart) into their hydrogen and oxygen components, then it would take a lot less energy to do the actual dissociation, compared to the energy it would take to break apart "colder" water molecules.]

This was accomplished by creating a series of atomic-level reactions within a specialized cell (the Genesis gCell), which in appearance looks similar to a fuel cell. Within this cell, three simultaneous processes occur.

The first process produces electrical voltage from water passing over special catalytic reactants. This electrical voltage aids in the excitement of the hydrogen and oxygen atoms in the water.

The second process involves a thermo-electro-catalytic reaction that results in the complete separation of the hydrogen atoms from the oxygen atoms. This yields maximum efficiency in the extraction of ultra-pure hydrogen and oxygen gas.

During the third process, small amounts of the hydrogen and oxygen gas molecules created in the second process reattach, providing additional electrical energy to subsidize the overall gas generation process.

[Editor's note: For you more scientific readers, there are actually TWO fundamental energy-producing reactions going on here, just dealing with things at the molecular level.

The first one is the process whereby generated free atoms (from the earlier dissociation process) of hydrogen and oxygen will want to form lower-energy-state stable molecules of hydrogen and oxygen—H₂ and O₂—releasing some excess energy in that formation process.

And then, in a separate reaction, if two generated hydrogen atoms (or one of the H₂ molecules) and one generated oxygen atom come together to form a lower-energy-state stable water molecule— H_2O —then, likewise, another quantity of excess energy would be released in that formation process.

So there are actually TWO distinct energy-releasing molecular reactions going on that are not delineated in the description above. And why is that something important to note?

Well, it indicates they have engineered what would technically be regarded as a “robust” or very healthy process that’s anything but marginal in its function—something like having a Porsche racing engine in your riding lawnmower; it probably won’t stall in patches of tall grass!]

The result of this landmark technological breakthrough allows hydrogen and oxygen gas to be created from ordinary water, using only a fraction of the total resulting energy. The amount of water used to generate hydrogen and oxygen gases through this process is negligible, usually only a few ounces of water a day, much of which is ultimately recovered within the process and reused.

A single Genesis gCell stack (about the size of a small car battery), consisting of several individual gCells, is capable of producing hundreds of cubic feet of gas per day. In comparison, a typical American home located in cold climates consumes approximately five cubic feet of natural gas a day.

[Editor’s note: That “five cubic feet” usage estimate is a very generous estimate—perhaps for a rather leaky large house in a very cold climate.]

Creating Electricity From The Hydrogen And Oxygen: The E-Cell Process

As was the case in creating the technology for extracting hydrogen and oxygen gases efficiently, the Genesis Team elected to start completely from scratch in developing its own special fuel cells. While Genesis’ electrical generating cells (eCells) are in fact “fuel cells”, they share very little in common with any other type of fuel cell in existence.

Using the molecular technology developed for the Genesis gas-generating gCell provided significant advantages over existing fuel cell technologies. These advantages include a low manufacturing cost, substantially higher electrical generation yields, and catalytic reactant formulations that are not subject to normal degradation, providing substantially longer service life.

Utilizing a reverse reactant process (similar to, but less complicated than, the gCell gas-generation process), hydrogen and oxygen molecules are excited and attracted to each other (much like aligned magnets pulling themselves together), and water is then recreated as a result. Substantial amounts of electricity and heat are generated as byproducts.

The Genesis technology is so efficient that a single compact eCell stack (about the size of a gCell stack) can produce over 1000 amps of electrical current. The electricity extracted from the eCells then replaces the electricity provided by utility companies. Water generated from the eCells is recovered and reintroduced into the gas generation system, while heat generated during the process is converted to usable energy.

The Genesis gas and electrical generation processes are so compact and efficient that devices based on the technology are easily capable of replacing traditional forms of energy using very little space.

[Editor’s note: The process is illustrated in their graphic, shown nearby.]

Bringing It All Together: The Edison Device

While the gCell and eCell technology is breathtaking in its simplicity, it needed to be incorporated into a mechanism that could viably meet residential and commercial energy requirements. This has been accomplished through the Edison Device: a self-contained energy generation system consisting of stacks of gCells and eCells. The Edison Device is roughly the size of a typical residential outdoor air conditioning unit.

[Editor’s note: Those of you familiar with TRUE electrical history—especially the disgusting role played by Thomas Edison (and his nefarious financial backers) in attacking the monumental genius Nikola Tesla—are probably disappointed to learn the so-called Edison Device is not more honorably named, especially considering who is likely among the principals Guiding this kind of project from the Higher Realms!]

Installing the electrical generation feature of the Edison Device to any home or business simply requires attaching three wires to existing electrical service connections, typically located in the electrical box that contains the utility company’s power meter. Installing the gas generation feature of the Edison Device simply requires connecting the device’s gas feed-line directly into the existing natural gas line on the customer’s side of the utility company’s gas meter.

At that point, customers are fully independent from energy provided by utility companies. Appliances that use natural gas or propane are easily converted to use hydrogen gas by installing gas-line flow restrictors that can be accomplished simply and easily by any average do-it-yourselfer.

As a safety precaution, if a gas leak develops in a customer’s appliance, the Edison Device has the ability to detect the leak and immediately shut the gas supply off until repairs can be performed. As a result, gas supplied by the Edison Device will be safer than using natural gas or propane.

The Genesis Project has developed two market-ready models of the Edison Device: a residential version and a commercial version. The residential model is capable of producing up to 30 total kilowatts of combined gas and electrical power per day (a typical home uses between five to six kilowatts), and the commercial model can generate up to 100 total kilowatts of energy. For heavier commercial requirements, multiple Edison Devices can be linked together.

[Editor's note: Electrically-minded readers will have some problems relating to the above specifications, which were likely not written by an electrically-minded writer.]

First of all, the correct electrical energy consumption or generation measurement quantity is the kilowatt-hour (kWh). That's what you see somewhere on your electric bill.

For you inquiring minds, the kWh is derived from two parameters: the rate of electrical POWER (volts x amps) being consumed or generated (in watts or kilowatts), multiplied by a length of time (hours) during which this occurs. The watts x hours quantity is a measure of the total electrical ENERGY being consumed or generated; not to be confused with the term "power" that is the RATE of energy usage or generation per unit of time. It's the total ENERGY you've used that you're being billed for, though most people tend to use the terms electrical "power" and "energy" interchangeably—if incorrectly.

Now, with that basic definitional matter cleared up a bit, the second point that needs to be clarified here is that a typical active household will use around 20 kWh of electrical energy per day. My (E.Y.) latest wintertime bill showed a total of 760 kWh of usage over a 34-day span between meter readings, for an average of 22.35 kWh per day.

(On the one hand, I use more than an average amount of electricity because of all the computer-related magazine-production and website activities going on here; but on the other hand, I'm not connected to the power company's electrical grid all the time—due to having built a supplemental solar-cell (photovoltaic) system as part of a back-up electrical energy system to keep this magazine going in an emergency. So, because of those two opposing factors, my monthly average electrical usage quantity is probably representative of what is typical.)

Thus, if we add-in some natural gas or propane equivalent energy usage for furnace and hot water, particularly in the winter in cold climates, that brings the total needs of the average active household just comfortably in-line with their residential Edison Device's design—assuming they meant to say 30 kWh above, rather than the meaningless measure of kW.

Finally, an important matter not addressed here (but briefly covered in the Question & Answer section much later in this outlay) is the one where, for part of your day, you use very little energy (unless perhaps your pets run the vacuum or do the laundry—you wish—while you're out working or doing errands), but in the evenings you may use a lot when everyone's home. Thus you either need to have an electrical generator sized to handle your MAXIMUM usage needs, or you need some kind of capability to store excess electricity and gas, that's being generated when you don't need it, for when you do.

(This is a common practical design consideration for those of us who utilize solar panels, wind machines, and other forms of alternative electrical energy generation technologies.)

Thus, if the home Edison Device can produce 30 kWh per day, that means it can generate a maximum usable quantity of 30 kWh / 24 hours = 1.25 kW of combined gas and electrical power per hour, while you may need 5-6 kW during PEAK usage hours of the day. That's where back-up storage capability becomes necessary to maintain comfort and convenience without interruption.]

The design of the Edison Device has proven that less is more. The energy-generating portion of the device has no moving parts. In fact, the only "mechanical" aspects of the Edison Device are the small circulation pumps and micro-valves that control the flow of water and gases. As a result, maintenance is limited to the occasional replacement of inexpensive water filters that can easily be accomplished by consumers themselves, while water usage is minimal over the device's projected 20+ years of service life.

The Ultimate Green Machine

Using only small amounts of water to meet residential and commercial energy requirements, producing no noise or emissions beyond the creation of ultrapure water, and utilizing an energy generation technology that is self-sustaining, the Edison Device is truly a "green machine".

THE FUTURE: Delivering The Edison Device Technology To Market

In addition to the energy generation device, known as the Edison Device, Genesis World Energy has already created several versions of the technology that will support the majority of the world's traditional energy needs. Check the Press Room section of our website for updates and new releases.

Genesis World Energy is committed to moving this revolutionary new technology forward in the market immediately. Therefore, it will be made available through broad licensing arrangements, widely and quickly.

Qualified governments and private industries worldwide will be given the opportunity to license the rights to manufacture, distribute, and sell Edison Devices. Special licensing opportunities will also be offered to those industries most affected by the introduction of the technology.

Key proprietary components critical to the operation of the device will be manufactured and distributed worldwide from the United States. A specially organized energy supply consortium will manage the distribution, advancement, and expansion of the technology in the marketplace to accomplish this. Using the components supplied by the consortium, licensees will complete the manufacturing, assembly, distribution, sales, and service of the devices within their local areas.

On November 5, 2001, William Cooper was shot to death by sheriff's deputies in a gunfire exchange. Who was Bill Cooper? Was he a true patriot? A tough survivalist? Or simply a fanatic?

Some knew him as a UFO "expert" (claimed insider information on government knowledge of extraterrestrials living among us)...a conspiracy theorist...a former Navy Intelligence operative...and the person the President once called "the most dangerous man on American airwaves". Cooper always said he acted from his "conscience" and sought to warn all Americans of the dangers of the New World Order, creeping socialism, and our own brand of Nazism. Here is the inside story, as told by a fellow patriot and government whistle-blower. Commander X has collected together for the first time Cooper's thoughts and finds on such subjects as: The Illuminati • The Kennedy Assassination • MJ-12 and the UFO Cover-Up • Area 51 • The AntiChrist • The World Trade Center Disaster • Gun Control • Skull and Bones Society.

A licensing priority will be given to the governments of qualifying nations first, who may then choose to manufacture, distribute, sell, and service the devices themselves, or may elect to sublicense the rights to private companies within their country. Private companies will be permitted to license the rights to manufacture, distribute, and sell the devices independently, in the event their government has elected not to license the technology themselves.

Due to the presence of a competitive market-based free-enterprise system within the United States, the United States Government will be excluded from licensing the rights to the technology and sublicensing the rights to corporations. In an effort to reverse the recent decline in the number of manufacturing jobs in the United States, all devices destined for the United States shall be manufactured entirely in the United States.

Scientific Breakthrough
Liberates Energy Users
From Fossil Fuel Dependence

Technology Breakthrough Harnesses Energy From The Molecular Structure Of Water

BOISE, ID (December 5, 2002)—Genesis World Energy, a privately funded consortium created by a group of military and space program research and development specialists, today unveiled a scientific breakthrough that allows consumers to easily access the energy contained within the hydrogen and oxygen molecular structure of ordinary water. This scientific breakthrough provides a limitless, low-cost, and environmentally clean source of energy that can be implemented with minimal cost and effort. The viability of using water as an energy source, previously a theoretical concept, is now a reality.

“Water has always been the source of life on this planet; now it will also transform the way we create energy.” Thus said Charles Shaw, corporate counsel and spokesperson for Genesis World Energy. “The implications for worldwide energy generation and consumption are nothing less than staggering.”

The Genesis Project

The technology is the result of nearly two years of continuous effort by a team of more than 400 visionaries from a wide spectrum of disciplines, including science, technology, and engineering. Assembled as the “Genesis Project”, the team discovered a way to extract far more energy from water than the extraction process itself required, differentiating this new fuel-cell technology from any other development efforts thus far.

The key component of the Genesis Project technology is the Genesis gCell, which, through a series of electro-chemical processes, separates hydrogen and oxygen molecules in water. The resulting gas molecules can either be burned cleanly as a replacement for natural gas or various other traditional forms of fuel, or may be remarried within Genesis eCells (an advanced fuel cell) to generate large amounts of electrical current. When both Genesis gCells and eCells are combined, the entire process becomes self-generating, recycling both water and electricity from the molecular reattachment phase. A more detailed description of the process can be found at the www.genesisworldenergy.org Internet website of Genesis World Energy.

The Edison Device

The first application of this technology is represented in the “Edison Device”—a self-contained, self-sustaining energy generation unit.

Roughly the size of an outdoor air conditioning system, the power source can be quickly and easily installed in any home or business to provide virtually unlimited energy from any available water source. The Edison Device utilizes the existing electrical wiring and natural gas plumbing in a home or business to replace the energy provided by utility companies. The home version of the Edison Device produces approximately 30 kilowatts of combined gas and electrical energy per day. By comparison, the typical home uses between five to six kilowatts per day. The commercial model is capable of producing 100 kilowatts of energy per day.

The energy generation portion of the devices has no moving parts. In fact, the only “mechanical” aspects of the equipment are small circulation pumps and micro-valves, making the Edison Device both silent and virtually maintenance-free. A minimum amount of water is used over an estimated 20+ years of service life.

Market Ready

The commercialization of the devices is the responsibility of two business entities, Genesis World Energy and World Energy Management. Genesis World Energy is a technology development, production, and supply consortium, while World Energy Management functions as the exclusive licensing representative for the worldwide distribution of Edison Devices.

According to Nejhlá Shaw, World Energy Management President: “We will make Edison Devices rapidly available to governments and industries on a worldwide basis, with special licensing opportunities for those industries that will be most affected by the technology. For the first time in the history of the world, a clean and abundant source of renewable energy is as simple as the attachment of three wires, a gas line, and a water hose.”

The Genesis Project

Creating An Abundant, Clean, And Renewable Energy Source From Water

From The Source Of Life,
A New Source Of Energy

Scientists and technologists have long explored viable sources of energy that would reduce the dependency of the world on fossil fuels and other non-renewable sources. Clean, low-cost, and abundant energy is, in many ways, the Holy Grail of the 21st Century.

The economic, environmental, and geopolitical implications of such a fuel source alternative are nothing less than staggering. And it is no exaggeration to say that these implications would extend to virtually every person on the planet.

One of the most promising energy technologies has been the generation of power using the Earth’s most abundant natural resource: water. Just as water has been the source and sustainer of life on our planet, it also holds the key to transforming the way we generate energy.

While generating energy from hydrogen and oxygen gases has been demonstrated in recent fuel-cell technologies, none of these technologies have succeeded in creating a water-based energy source that can meet the demands of homes and businesses in a scientifically efficient and economically viable manner. Until now.

The Genesis Project

In September 2000, a privately owned and funded research and development organization with a half-century history of technology development for military and space programs decided to focus its resources on the barriers preventing the use of water as a total energy source.

Assembling a team of more than 400 visionaries from a wide spectrum of disciplines, including science, technology, and engineering, work groups were formed in a number of locations throughout the U.S.

Code-named "The Genesis Project", these work groups engaged in a continuous research and development effort over an 18-month period. Only after the team's goals had been realized, were the details of what had been accomplished shared with everyone on the team.

In June 2002, the goal of the Genesis Project was achieved: the creation of a low-cost, self-sustaining process for generating unlimited energy from any available water source.

The Science Behind Genesis

Hydrogen and oxygen contained in water have always been the most attractive, yet elusive source of energy on the planet. Water molecules consisting of two parts hydrogen and one part oxygen are pure energy, yet the process of breaking water down into its atomic parts consumed more energy than could be derived as a result. Genesis' breakthrough technology cracked the scientific secret to extracting far more energy from water than the extraction process itself required, making it possible to quickly and easily replace traditional forms of energy.

The G-Cell Process

The gCell is the fundamental component to the technology where three processes occur simultaneously.

In the first of these processes, water is passed over catalytic reactants to produce an electrical voltage that excites the hydrogen and oxygen molecules.

At the same time, a thermo-electro-catalytic reaction creates an effect similar to that of magnets with similar polarities, separating the molecules into pure hydrogen and oxygen gases.

In the third process, some of the hydrogen and oxygen molecules are reattached to generate additional electrical current that subsidizes the gas generation process, thus making the process self-sustaining. Since water is recovered and reused in the reattachment, gCells require only a few ounces of water per day.

A single gCell stack, which is no bigger than a car battery, is capable of producing hundreds of cubic feet of customer usable gas per day. By comparison, the average American home in cold climate areas consumes approximately five cubic feet of gas per day.

The E-Cell Process

The eCell generates electricity and is one tool used in the conversion of hydrogen and oxygen contained in water into a consumer usable form of energy. The hydrogen and oxygen gases created in the gCells are used by eCells in a reverse reactant process that attracts the molecules much like magnets pulling themselves together. The resultant remarrying of the hydrogen and oxygen molecules produces, in a single eCell stack, more than 1,000 amps of electricity.

Bringing It All Together: The Edison Device

While the gCell and eCell technology is breathtaking in its simplicity, it needed to be incorporated into a mechanism that could viably meet residential and commercial energy requirements. This has been accomplished through the Edison Device: a self-contained energy generation system consisting of stacks of gCells and eCells. The Edison Device is roughly the size of a typical residential outdoor air conditioning unit.

Since the Edison Device utilizes the electrical wiring and natural gas plumbing in a home or business, installation is simple and quick. Three wires attach the Edison Device to existing electrical service connections, while the gas application requires connecting the Edison Device's gas feed-line into the customer side of an existing natural gas line. Conversion of appliances from natural gas to hydrogen gas is accomplished by the use of inexpensive gas flow restrictors.

Market Ready

The Genesis Project has developed two market-ready models of the Edison Device: a residential version and a commercial version. The residential model is capable of producing up to 30 total kilowatts of combined gas and electrical power per day (a typical home uses between five to six kilowatts), and the commercial model can generate up to 100 total kilowatts of energy. For heavier commercial requirements, multiple Edison Devices can be linked together.

The design of the Edison Device has proven that less is more. The energy-generating portion of the device has no moving parts. In fact, the only "mechanical" aspects of the Edison Device are the small circulation pumps and micro-valves that control the flow of water and gases. As a result, maintenance is limited to the occasional replacement of inexpensive water filters that can easily be accomplished by consumers themselves, while water usage is minimal over the device's projected 20+ years of service life.

Using only small amounts of water to meet residential and commercial energy

THE BIGGEST SECRET
The book that will change the world
David Icke

The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, Icke reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed: "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

requirements, producing no noise or emissions beyond the creation of ultrapure water, and utilizing an energy generation technology that is self-sustaining, the Edison Device is truly a "green machine".

The Edison Device, and the underlying Genesis technology, represent a pivotal moment in human history: the promise of liberation from the shackles of fossil-fuel dependency.

The environmental impact alone is enormous. Limitless energy production without the consumption of fuels that deplete the ozone layer and pollute the planet. The reduction of drilling and mining for new energy sources. A more decentralized management and distribution of energy resources. Future applications will allow vehicles to operate on a pollution-free basis.

And then, there are the economic considerations.

Rapid Deployment

The commercialization of the Edison Device is the responsibility of two recently created business entities: Genesis World Energy and World Energy Management. The first of these entities, Genesis World Energy, is a technology development, production, and supply consortium. Its essential responsibility is to further the underlying Genesis Project technology and to establish and manage a roadmap for future product enhancements.

The responsibility for the proliferation of the Edison Devices falls to World Energy Management, which is the exclusive licensing representative for the worldwide distribution of the Edison Device. This organization will make Edison Devices rapidly available to governments and industries on a worldwide basis through broad licensing agreements. These agreements will entitle licensees to assemble and distribute Edison Devices through the purchase of critical components from Genesis World Energy—allowing the technology originators to protect vital intellectual property.

Given the profound impact that the Genesis Project technology is likely to have on traditional producers and consumers of generated energy, World Energy Management will provide special licensing opportunities to those industries most affected by the introduction of the Edison Device.

In the case of utility companies, for example, World Energy Management believes that the proliferation of Edison Devices will create a more stable and profitable business model.

With the regulatory measures imposed on utility companies in the purchase and sale of energy, these companies would now have the option of charging the consumer a flat monthly rate for the rental of Edison Devices, at a fraction of the cost of current power usage. While this would represent a smaller revenue stream, it would essentially be pure margin, since there would be no cost to the utility companies for the generated energy. Depreciation of the Edison Device equipment would also create a tax benefit. Consumers, for their part, would have the option of purchasing Edison Devices from other licensed manufacturers, thus forgoing monthly utility bills altogether.

An American Legacy

The scope and impact of the Genesis Project may be difficult to comprehend outside the context of a large and well-publicized government or industry initiative. Indeed, the efforts made by the Genesis Project to protect the anonymity of its members have, in part, been out of the desire to keep its technology firmly in the control of free-market forces.

Nevertheless, to view the Genesis Project as an unprecedented phenomenon is to ignore American history. Nearly a century ago, Thomas Edison brought together a small band of dedicated visionaries who, outside of any governmental agencies, taxpayer funded programs, or corporate R&D structures, created technologies and products that transformed the world. The Edison Device is an heir to this uniquely American legacy of scientific inquiry, Yankee ingenuity, bold innovation, and altruistic impulse.

Questions & Answers

Q: How did the Genesis Project begin?

A: A 50-year-old research and development group launched the Genesis project in 2000, with past ties to Cold War technology programs. The Genesis Project was privately funded to ensure that its goals—the generation of clean, abundant, and renewable energy from hydrogen and oxygen molecules in water—remained outside the control of government or corporate interests.

Q: Who is involved in the Genesis Project?

A: The project team was very large, consisting of more than 400 visionaries representing a wide array of scientific, technological, and engineering disciplines. Working in task force groups throughout the U.S., team members themselves did not know the identities of other Genesis Project members outside their own group, or the totality of the project's goals. In order to retain their privacy and for reasons of confidentiality related to the protection of their intellectual property assets, the individuals involved in the Genesis Project wish to remain anonymous.

Q: Who owns the Genesis Technology?

A: The Genesis Technology is privately owned by the individuals who created it, and they have no intention of offering equity to the public. People who wish to invest in Genesis-related technologies may look to publicly traded corporations that receive licenses.

Q: What makes the Genesis Project technology unique?

A: The concept behind the Genesis Project is not new. Scientists have been experimenting with processes that can generate energy by separating the hydrogen and oxygen molecules contained in water for decades. The problem with these efforts was that they required more energy than they produced, or required specialized processes that were not commercially viable. The Genesis Project has achieved a technology breakthrough that can separate pure hydrogen and oxygen gases from ordinary water in a way that is scientifically efficient and economically practical.

Q: What is the reason for the secrecy surrounding the Genesis Project?

A: Because of the economic and geopolitical implications of the Genesis Project technology, every possible means of safeguarding it have been taken prior to its disclosure and the subsequent establishment of licensing agreements aimed at its proliferation. Because the technology may initially be perceived as a threat to established government and industry interests, strict security measures are being taken to keep the Genesis Project technology in the hands of free-market forces.

Q: Why was Boise, Idaho selected as the location for the presentation of the Edison Device?

A: Boise was the location where key members of the team originally gathered to begin organizing their efforts, and was the location where the final and most significant stages of the technology development effort took place. Finally, Idaho is seriously being considered as a location for future development and engineering operations, given its high-tech infrastructure and access to a talented and motivated workforce.

Q: How is the Edison Device being commercialized?

A: Commercialization of the Edison

Device is the responsibility of two separate business entities. The first of these, Genesis World Energy, organized as a technology development, production, and supply consortium, will further the underlying Genesis Project technology, and establish and manage a roadmap for future product enhancements. The responsibility for the proliferation of the Edison Device falls to World Energy Management, which acts as the exclusive licensing representative for the worldwide distribution.

Q: Are Edison Devices currently available?

A: Commercially viable versions of the Edison Device currently exist, as does the manufacturing capacity to produce and assemble devices. It is the intent, however, of the Genesis Project that full-scale assembly and distribution of the Edison Device be accomplished by licensees, rather than by Genesis World Energy or World Energy Management.

Q: How will licenses for the Edison Device be distributed?

A: World Energy Management will broadly issue licenses for the Edison Device on a worldwide basis to both qualifying private industries and governments. Special consideration in licensing, however, will be given to those traditional energy producing and distribution companies who will be most affected by the Edison Device technology. In all cases, licensees will have the rights to assemble, distribute, sell, and service Edison Devices, but will purchase the critical technology components from Genesis World Energy.

Q: How will consumers gain access to Edison Devices?

A: Based on the licensing objectives of World Energy Management, consumers will most likely gain access to Edison Devices either by purchasing them from licensed manufacturers and assuming responsibility for their installation and maintenance, or will rent them through entities such as local utility companies, who would in turn assume responsibility for installation and maintenance.

Q: How are Genesis World Energy and World Energy Management structured?

A: Genesis World Energy is a consortium organized as a private general partnership. World Energy Management is also organized as a private general partnership.

Q: Must homes and businesses be retrofitted to use the Edison Device?

A: Not at all! Installation of an Edison Device is as simple as connecting three wires, a gas line, and a garden hose. The gas generation portion of the Edison Device installs in the customer side of a residential gas line, with inexpensive gas flow restrictors required to convert appliances from natural gas to the hydrogen gas produced by the Edison Device. The electrical portion installs quickly into the existing power box. The water required for the device's process can literally come from any source, including salt water from the ocean, rainwater, and recycled water—or from a simple garden-hose connection.

Q: What is the life expectancy of an Edison Device?

A: Because the Edison Device has virtually no moving parts, the only parts that need routine replacement are inexpensive water filters. The life expectancy of the Edison Device is 20 years or more. Although each customer's energy needs are different, average all-electric homes may use as little as 30 gallons of water over the device's expected 20-year life cycle.

Q: How will this technology affect utility companies?

A: Utility companies can obtain a license to supply Edison Devices to their customers, and in turn rent them to consumers who do not wish to purchase the devices themselves—giving consumers a rent or own option.

Although there would be up-front costs associated with the purchase of these devices for utility companies, and a smaller revenue stream than would be realized from historic energy rates, there are real benefits for utility companies with the new business model made possible by the Edison Device. Utility companies would no longer have to purchase power from outside sources, which would provide them with a much higher profit margin. The devices can also be depreciated as assets.

Q: How will it affect oil companies?

A: World Energy Management will allow oil companies to apply for manufacturing licenses and sell the Edison Devices to utility companies. Proliferation of Edison Devices will significantly lower the demands for development of new fossil fuel sources, thereby lowering the cost of energy exploration and extraction. This impact on the business model of oil companies will provide them with an opportunity to focus on higher-value petroleum derivatives in thousands of other products, rather than on oil as a regulated fuel source.

Q: When can the individual consumer purchase the device?

A: Companies and governments have 60 days to apply and qualify to obtain licenses. After that, all companies and governments selected for licenses will receive product design and specification packages on exactly the same day, giving each licensee the incentive to begin delivery to consumers as quickly as possible in order to establish the best possible market share. In all cases, in order for licensees to retain their license, they must begin regular delivery to consumers within nine months after receiving their license.

Q: Who will install and service the devices?

A: Typically, the company that sells the Edison Device directly to the consumer will also provide installation and service. Do-it-yourselfers may also elect to install and service the devices themselves. Utility companies will most likely utilize their existing service personnel to install and service the devices that they supply to customers.

TRANCE Formation Of America

This is the documented autobiography of a victim of government mind-control. Cathy O'Brien is the only vocal and recovered survivor of the CIA's MK-Ultra Project Monarch mind-control operation. Chiseled deep into the white stone of the CIA's Langley, Virginia headquarters is a partial verse lifted from the Holy Bible and writings of Saint John: "...and the truth shall make you free." This statement, like the agency, is total unreality. The building that it is engraved upon houses the world's most successful manufacturer of lies to facilitate psychological warfare. The "Company" uses truth and technology as their raw materials to produce "pure" lies for control of you and America's allies. Within the pages of TRANCE Formation Of America you'll find the truth.

U.S. GOVERNMENT MIND-CONTROL

On August 3, 1977 the 95th U.S. Congress opened hearings into the reported abuses concerning the CIA's

TOP SECRET mind-control research program code-named MK-Ultra. On February 8, 1988, an MK-Ultra victim, Cathy O'Brien, was covertly rescued from her mind-control enslavement by Intelligence insider Mark Phillips. Their seven-year pursuit of Justice was stopped FOR REASONS OF NATIONAL SECURITY. TRANCE Formation Of America exposes the truth behind this criminal abuse of the unconstitutional 1947 National Security Act.

Q: Does the Genesis Project technology represent perpetual motion?

A: Absolutely not. The Genesis gCell technology is based on a chemical reaction that is triggered by exposing chemicals to water and small amounts of electrical voltage and current. All of the chemicals used in the process are contained on a specially coated membrane within the gCell and are consumed over time. Once the chemicals are depleted, the system will not continue to function.

Q: How long will the chemicals in the Genesis gCell last?

A: The Genesis gCell provides a finite amount of energy. As a result, system life is proportional to the amount of energy each consumer uses. Presuming that the water system is serviced properly, the gCells in the Edison Device are projected to provide energy to an average home in the United States for up to twenty years. In a home where energy usage is twice that of the average, the gCells in the Edison device would last approximately ten years. Once depleted, gCells can be replaced by consumers for a fraction of the cost of an entire Edison Device.

Q: How long will the Genesis eCells last?

A: Although different than other fuel cells, as is the case with fuel cells produced by other manufacturers, the Genesis eCell also has a limited service life. Fuel cells by nature degrade in performance over time. Because of this, manufacturers traditionally rate maximum electrical output based on how much electricity the fuel cell provides at the end of its service life.

Genesis eCell electrical output is rated in the same manner. Unlike other fuel cells on the market that use the oxygen contained in ordinary air, the Genesis eCell is designed to operate on pure hydrogen and oxygen gases. As such, Genesis eCells are not subject to damage by environmental contamination, and the water created during the process is self-recovering, further extending service life.

Therefore, an eCell's projected service life is four to five times longer than ordinary fuel cells. Once the eCells reach the end of their service life, they can be replaced by consumers for a fraction of the cost of an entire Edison Device.

Q: How much water does the Edison Device consume?

A: That depends entirely on the type and amount of energy used by individual consumers. An average all-electric home located in the United States could consume as little as 30 gallons over the Edison Device's approximately 20+ years of service life. A typical U.S. home that uses both gas and electricity would consume about as much water as a refrigerator icemaker. A large gas-heated swimming pool, depending on the size and location, could consume several gallons of water a month.

Q: Why can no one find pending or completed patent applications related to the Genesis Technology in the U.S. or foreign patent offices?

A: Simply stated, the Genesis Team has elected to protect its intellectual properties and/or proprietary trade secrets utilizing different and varied mechanisms rather than those afforded through the traditional patent process.

Q: Why are some within the scientific community skeptical of the Genesis Technology?

A: For security purposes, the Genesis Team has elected to disclose little about the science behind the technology. In the absence of detailed information, it is not possible to understand how Genesis' stated results were achieved. Therefore, the scientific community at large will analyze the Genesis Project based on conventional thinking. The Genesis Technology works and is ready to go worldwide.

Q: How were the Genesis Team members selected?

A: The Genesis Team was assembled based on the guiding principle that each human being has the potential to contribute great value to the world. As such, credentials, career acclaim, education, and personal background issues were not top priority in selecting team members. The selections were based on relevant expertise and positive attitude toward meeting the challenges.

Q: How was the Genesis Project assembled and how did it function?

A: The Genesis Project and Team were assembled and managed under the strictest of secrecy, modeled after the highest priority given to defense projects. Although the Genesis Team eventually consisted of hundreds of members, only a few individuals knew what specifically was being created.

This was accomplished by separating every aspect of the research and development effort into very small-defined tasks. Until early in July of 2002, when the veil of secrecy was finally removed for many of the team members, less than half a dozen people actually understood all aspects of the technology, or had seen the Edison Device. All current and future aspects of the Genesis Team's efforts will be conducted in the same manner.

Q: What are some of the reasons for the continued high level of security?

A: First, to successfully complete the development of the technology, deploy it, and continue with its advancement without future interference.

And second, to remain in a position to protect the key intellectual properties related to Genesis on an ongoing basis.

Q: When will the public get to see demonstrations of the Edison Device and the Genesis Technology?

A: There have been numerous demonstrations of the technology to the public. In fact, the technology was demonstrated for invited members of the public and a film crew, near Boise, Idaho, on the 27th of November, 2002, a few days before the Boise press conference [and the subsequent Press Release dated 12/5/02, shared earlier in this article]. Demonstrations have also taken place on the East and West Coasts of the United States.

For security purposes, the dates, times, and locations of demonstrations are always kept secret, and individuals attending the demonstrations must sign strict confidentiality agreements. Once licensees have been selected and licenses awarded, each licensee will be free to demonstrate the technology for the public at will.

New Questions Answered
(1/06/03)

Q: Will each Edison Device, produced or delivered by different licensees, be the same?

A: No. Each licensee will have the ability to custom configure their version of the Edison Device to meet the needs of their intended market. World Energy Management will offer licensees a selection of potential configuration options to choose from, including the amount of electrical and gas energy their devices will deliver and store. While each licensee will be free (within certain limitations) to custom configure their individual products, each Edison Device from the licensed manufacturers will be required to be 100% compatible with each and every Edison Device on the market.

Q: How does the Edison Device create and deliver electricity in a consumer usable form?

A: The Genesis eCell, like other fuel cells, produces direct current (DC) voltage. Each eCell in a stack of eCells typically produces between 1.0 volt at no load, and as little as 0.5 volts under full load. Therefore, a series of eCells is connected together into stacks to obtain the correct range of voltage the Edison Device requires to operate on a self-contained basis.

To greatly simplify matters related to delivering voltage and current in a consumer usable form, the Edison Device is configured to operate only at predefined levels of electrical output. The electrical energy produced by the Edison Device is then stored in special DC batteries. When electrical energy is needed to support a customer's needs, it is then inverted into the type of electricity delivered by utility companies.

Q: What establishes the amount of hydrogen and oxygen gas that is needed by the eCells in the Edison Device to create electricity?

A: The amount of hydrogen and oxygen gas that is needed to generate the correct amount of voltage and amperage is determined through a calculation called the stoichiometric rate. This calculation assures that the right amount of hydrogen and oxygen gases are delivered to the eCells to meet the electrical current generation demand required at any given moment.

The Edison Device is designed to greatly reduce the complexity and cost of managing proper gas flows by operating only at a limited number of predetermined electrical output levels, based on the amount of electrical energy being stored in the batteries of the Edison Device at any given time.

Q: How much electricity will the Edison Device deliver?

A: It is easiest to think of the Edison Device as a generator that charges batteries, which can then deliver consistent levels of voltage and amperage when needed to DC-to-AC inverters. The DC-to-AC inverters in turn deliver electricity to consumers in the same form as utility companies deliver electricity.

Since each licensee will have the ability to custom configure electrical and gas energy outputs to meet the needs of their intended markets, the final energy outputs of each Edison Device marketed will be related directly to how each manufacturer configures their individual product offerings. In simple terms, the electrical generation aspect of the Edison Device is rated like traditional generators.

The Edison Device's battery storage capacity is rated in kilowatt-hours of reserve.

[Editor's note: Finally someone is talking in the correct electrical units and terminology, as was explained in an earlier editorial clarification!]

Meanwhile, the battery storage capacity is by no means a trivial consideration in the customizing of an Edison Device to a specific home or business because battery life and health depend greatly upon how deeply the battery stack gets discharged during peak electrical usage times when the generator itself can't keep up and a lot of electricity is being drawn from the battery stack. Or if the Edison Device's generator has to be shut-down for some repair time and one has to run solely on batteries.

For example, I (E.Y.) have a battery stack of 16 large-capacity heavy-duty conventional lead-acid batteries that together weigh almost ONE TON in order to meet only 8 hours of my day's electrical demands while at the same time not dangerously discharging the batteries too low for their health.]

Consumers should select a version of the Edison Device that allows them to meet their average kilowatt-hours of consumption, with the Edison Device operating no more than 75% of maximum output. In addition to storing reserves of electrical energy, the batteries in the Edison Device also function as a method of seamlessly meeting periods of electrical demand that exceed the Edison Device's maximum electrical output. The batteries in the Edison Device are recharged at any time electrical demand is less than the output of the Edison Device.

Q: Is the Edison Device totally self sufficient from outside energy?

A: The Edison Device initially requires either outside electricity or hydrogen and oxygen gas to start the process and to develop internal reserves of electrical and gas energy. Depending on the configuration of the Edison Device offered by individual licensed manufacturers, the Edison Device typically becomes independent of outside energy within an hour. From that point on, the Edison Device is designed to retain enough reserve energy to restart itself in the event that shutdown is required for maintenance—for example, when replacing the water filters.

Q: Will I be without electricity or gas energy if the Edison Device is turned off for any reason?

A: No. Reserve electrical energy is stored in batteries, which will continue to provide electricity through the DC-to-AC inverter for a period of time even when the Edison Device is turned off. In addition, a limited reserve of hydrogen gas is stored in a small, low-pressure metal hydride container, which will continue to supply gas until depleted. Depending on each customer's needs, the Edison Device will typically be configured to store enough energy for one to two days.

Q: What costs will licensees be required to pay Genesis World Energy?

A: There are no costs paid by potential licensees until each qualifying licensee has the opportunity to examine independent operational lab results and working devices. Payment will be due upon acceptance of the license terms, at which time the licensee will be presented with a license, data package, and a production representative Edison Device. The Edison Device that is delivered will be used as a standard for all Edison Devices that are ultimately delivered to consumers. Once in production, a reasonable royalty fee will be added to the cost of each gCell and eCell used in the device.

Q: Will there be future public demonstrations of the Edison Device?

A: Yes. The device will be demonstrated for selected members of the media and other invited interested parties in the future.

Q: Has Genesis World Energy accepted any public or private investment?

A: No.

Q: Who has previously been invited to demonstrations of the Edison Device?

A: The Edison Device has been demonstrated to people from many walks of life. Previous invitees have included past and present U.S. Senators and Members of Congress, the Dean of a university, science and engineering professors, community leaders, CEOs of major corporations and engineering firms.

Individuals who attended the presentations viewed the entire working process on an unrestricted basis.

Q: How complex are the gCells and eCells?

A: Each original pre-production version of the gCell contained approximately 600 precision components. Each pre-production version of the eCell contained approximately 400 precision components. The production versions of the gCell and eCell will contain approximately 300 and 200 precision components, respectively.

Manufacturing tolerances for some components are within 0.0002 of an inch.

Q: Is it difficult to mass-produce the Edison Device?

A: No. Every component within the Edison Device is engineered to be produced using readily available manufacturing processes.

Q: Can the assembly of the Edison Device be automated?

A: Most aspects of the Edison Device can be automated; however, the Genesis Team elected to focus on creating quality jobs for people instead of investing in automation. The net effect of the cost to consumers is very little.

These Days, Who ISN'T An "Enemy Of The State"?

Editor's note: It takes a keen eye, mixed with a durable sense of humor, to honestly report on what's going on within the lunacy legislations from our so-called government these days. And that's Al Martin's strength—if the job doesn't soon drive him over the edge!

Al's other genius is economic analysis. And you better be sitting down when he lists, particularly in one of the commentaries below, the TRUE state of economic indicators like real estate, the auto industry, and repossessions of "toys" like boats and big-screen televisions bought on payments.

Banks are taking quite a hit in all this, yet they hope, somehow, the overtaxed public will continue feeding them with business. There's simply no doubt that our economy is sinking—even without hints from the likes of so many K-mart and McDonald's closings.

What Al shares with us are the plain (if astonishing) facts and figures the Bush Administration is desperately working to keep hidden. But like any house of cards, the structure is so flimsy right now that one good sneeze could collapse the whole façade like a cheap Hollywood set. Then will commence the flurry of finger-pointing rhetoric on a scale that will make precursor "tremors" like the Enron debacle seem quite restrained by comparison.

For those newer readers who may not be familiar with this crusader, according to his own biographical statement (at his AlMartinRaw.com Internet website), Al is America's foremost whistleblower on government fraud and corruption. A retired U.S. Navy Lt. Commander and former officer in the Office of Naval Intelligence, he has testified before Congress (the Kerry Committee and the Alexander Committee) regarding Iran-Contra. Al Martin is the author of the revealing and witty exposé titled The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider (2001, National Liberty Press; order from Wisdom Books & Press; see information nearby).

Bushwhacked For The New Year: More Boeing Fraud, B-FLAP, And Other Fraud
(1/6/03)

Now we know why Boeing had been such a frequent visitor to the AlMartinRaw.com website during the past two years, particularly reading the columns about illegal weapons sales at the Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Alabama.

The Department of Justice has announced that Boeing and GM Hughes have been cited for 123 export arms-control violations to China regarding the prohibition of the sale and transfer of technologically sensitive information.

The information they transferred was regarding missile guidance systems, which is exactly what we had been writing about in those columns.

Boeing immediately came up with a lame excuse, saying that it and Hughes had contracted with the Chinese government in 1995 to launch satellites because the U.S. market was so tight and there wasn't the availability for launch. The French missiles, which were being launched out of French Guiana, kept crashing.

This was the development of the so-called Long March missiles, which is what the Chinese called them. The first two crashed, so Boeing (principally Boeing, though Hughes supplied some of the technical components), without informing the U.S. Government, gave the Chinese information and guidance technology to prevent their Long March space missiles from going off course and crashing all the time.

The chairman of Boeing said that the Chinese Government "assured us that they wouldn't use the technology for military applications" and the Department of State, which submitted substantial materials to the Department of Justice, said that they had a report from the CIA and that, of course, the very first thing the Chinese did was to use the technology that Boeing had given them in missile stabilization, gyro-synchronous orbits, etc., to improve the accuracy of their intercontinental ballistic missiles.

This is the typical wink & nod that takes place. This isn't actually an indictment. They're being charged with export violations, and the maximum fine is $100,000 per violation. It will be just another slap on the wrist for Boeing and Hughes. The only reason they were charged, I believe, is because the Washington Post was about to break the story on this subject.

The Post had been working on an article, and was about to come out with an article accusing Boeing and Hughes of doing this with a wink and a nod from the Bush Administration. So the Bush Administration, as always, to try to gain the upper hand, broke the whole thing earlier by coming up with these violations.

CNN showed some clips of the Chinese Long March missiles that blasted off, went up ten feet in the air, and then came back down and blew up. Boeing tried to make it sound like the Chinese geo-synchronous devices were not as advanced as the Chinese claimed, and consequently they had a problem in keeping them on course. They could only keep them on course for about the first 30 feet off the launch pad—before they tilted over to the side, hit the ground, and blew up.

As we've written before, in the Aries-II story, this Boeing fraud is simply more back-channel illegal technology transfer to China, which is an embargoed nation, by the Bush Administration, pursuant to the Bushonian Plan of helping China become the Bogeypman of the 21st Century in order to justify our own defense expenditures.

They keep giving them the old wink and a nod to the transfer of technology and sales of components to China, which are technically illegal.

Every time that a U.S. defense contractor gets caught at it, because suddenly a newspaper is planning to come out with an article about it, suddenly they get whacked with these export violations. All they do is pay the $100,000 fine per violation, and sign a consent decree where they admit no guilt.

The Post story was that Boeing and Hughes sold this embargoed technology to the Chinese, and the Chinese immediately used it for military applications. This comes under the "prohibition against dual-use technology".

In other news, there was talk that the GAO has long since been interested in the subject of what has happened to an aggregate amount of money in the BILLIONS of dollars that various corporations have paid in fines when they do something wrong—money, for instance, from hospitals and HMOs who settle claims that they were overbilling Medicare.

They were talking about these fines that corporations get virtually every day—$5 million, $10 million, $15 million. Every day, millions of dollars in fines are assessed.

Over a period of time, the aggregate amount of money gets up into the BILLIONS, and yet, as it turns out, there is no real accounting system for these federal fines that come in.

The Department of Justice or the Department of Commerce (whosever laws get violated, that's who the check gets made out to) is supposed to turn over the checks to the Department of Treasury. That's what's supposed to happen.

The problem seems to be that the Treasury Department records don't seem to jibe with that of other federal agencies. It's like they only get one check out of ten from the various agencies. And now people are asking where all the money has gone.

The implication is that someone within each agency is skimming the money—or someone more directly connected with the Bushonian Cabal would be more likely.

That's always been a subject matter that's interested me—the very loose bookkeeping requirements the federal government maintains for recording federal fines that are levied. So where the hell has the money actually gone?

The B-FLAP (Bush Fantasy Land Accounting Principles) System is now the officially recognized accounting system of the federal government. Even the head of the GAO has said that.

And where did the missing billions go? It went the same place as the missing 2600 tons of gold from U.S. inventories. (Story coming soon.)

In every Bush Administration, there seems to be this enormous black hole that money and gold and everything else falls into and seems to disappear. This is the Bushonian Sink Hole.

Over the New Year, Bush talked with soldiers at Fort Hood, Texas and he was presented with a real U.S. Army jacket, which says "U.S. Army" on it and "Bush". And he said how proud he was to wear a U.S. Army jacket in the State of Texas ONCE AGAIN.

In the back of the audience there were two guys in wheelchairs who were disabled Vietnam vets who immediately held up signs and yelled: "Bush is a draft dodger!" The Secret Service then quickly grabbed their wheelchairs, and by the time these guys were out the door, they were virtually airborne.

In other depressing news, it was reported that there was a record number of New Years Eve suicides in the United States this year. The common factor among these suicides was that these were people who were in relatively good emotional and financial shape two years ago, but had subsequently been "Bushwhacked".

They had seen the value of their IRA/ 401(k)s wiped out, lost their jobs, fixed pension plans wiped out, having been forced to declare bankruptcy (as the nearly 3 million other American citizens have since the election of George Bush Jr.), and their health and unemployment benefits had expired because the President has refused to sign an extension of the Unemployment Benefits Claim Act, and things had gotten so bad for these people that whatever residual medical coverage they had from their previous jobs ran out.

Then they couldn't even pay for their Prozac.

Finally, the last devastating psychological blow came when it was announced that George Bush Jr. would seek a second term. That's when they simply lost all hope.

Welcome to Bush Cabal Occupied America, 2003.

FBI Incompetence, And Court Ruling Designates U.S. Citizens As "Enemy Combatants" (1/13/03)

The FBI finally admitted they are totally clueless regarding the "War on Terrorism" as well as regarding the five would-be "terrorists" who supposedly came across the Canadian border.

In another major embarrassment to the FBI, they found out that one of the supposed "terrorists" was a jeweler who had never left Pakistan before; and then the FBI admitted that they didn't even have the right names or photographs of the people.

The FBI also finally admitted that the informant they relied on for the information had actually lied and that the whole thing was a complete fabrication he had set up with a bunch of his Middle Eastern chums in Canada in order to get the reward money from the FBI. Evidently he did collect the reward money: $50,000.

CNN had also done a segment featuring a recently retired senior FBI agent. He was shown in screen so you couldn't see his face. Apparently he had been giving CNN information about what an absolute joke the so-called "War on Terrorism" is at the FBI. They are in a complete state of disorganization over it and the Administration just keeps doing what every Republican Administration does—and that is, simply throw more money at it.

He said that the agency is awash in money but doesn't have a clue as to how to spend it or what to do with it. He was saying that before 9/11 the FBI did maintain a counter-intelligence unit (CI3), but it was rather small, and furthermore, most of the best people had retired after the Cold War was over.

Historically the CI3 has had numerous notable failures in the past. There was the case of the famous Czechoslovakian spies, the Korchers, who got away in 1985. But the FBI was always considered to be bumblers. Then they were asked to literally transform the entire Bureau and devote 90% of the Bureau's resources to counter-terrorism. They weren't prepared for it at the time, and they're still not prepared.

The FBI is having an awfully hard time finding and training counter-terrorism people, or even finding people with the appropriate intelligence skills or even language skills.

This FBI whistleblower said that they haven't been able to find the people. In order not to get caught in some political squeeze and get blamed for everything, what the FBI has been doing, ever since the "War on Terrorism" began, is they have been relying on a series of informants and paying them. He said the problem now is that they don't have the intelligence capability to check out what any of these informants are saying—to see if it's the truth or not.

The CIA won't cooperate with them, as this FBI guy said, in terms of assisting them with overseas intelligence, which the FBI would normally not have much of anyway. But it's not a turf battle. The CIA doesn't want to show the FBI how incompetent it is—in its inability to provide intelligence on the Middle East.

The whistleblower continued, saying that it's a mad scramble for everyone trying to cover their asses.

This guy speculates that, out of all the money the FBI has been given (their budget has been increased by $3 billion), half of it has been wasted. He said that they have no idea who's entering and who's exiting the country. They can't track the people once they're here because the FBI isn't set up for it. The INS hasn't gotten up to speed and neither has the Border Patrol, which doesn't have modern equipment. Although the Office of Homeland Security is supposed to be acting in a coordinating capacity, it couldn't coordinate getting a cat out of a wet paper bag.

From his point of view (as a senior FBI agent), the only thing the Office of Homeland Security seems to be doing is putting up a coordination function so that everybody's asses in all the agencies are covered. But like the guy said, we're forced to spend money paying these informants—but not knowing whether the information is right. Then we spend millions upon millions trying to find people and track them down, and setting up surveillance and asking local police for their help.

Meanwhile the local law enforcement hasn't received any money they've been promised from the Office of Homeland Security. Local police departments are actually complaining about having the arm put on them without having any extra money.

This FBI agent said that basically the whole thing is a joke. We are not equipped. We're not prepared. We don't have the inter-agency coordinating ability. No federal agency, law enforcement, intelligence, or otherwise had a real intelligence network built up in the United States before this happened.

He also said that they've had hundreds and hundreds of tips from informants, that the CIA keeps telling them are reliable because the CIA may have used them once before. One out every two of these tips is simply made up to get the reward money. Then, when the FBI goes back to the CIA to complain about why they sent this Mohammed to them, to get fifty grand out of them, the CIA will then say that they really didn't know that this is exactly what has happened.

much about him to begin with.

This FBI agent's tone was somewhere between snide, sarcastic, and sardonic. This guy I think was just trying to come out and tell the people the truth—that this "War on Terrorism" is simply a joke, that the American taxpayers are being asked to pay the bill, and that frankly it would probably be years before the agencies could actually get their act together and build up a viable and reliable intelligence network in the United States within the ranks of their own people, so they don't have to rely on every Ahmed who comes in the door and about whom nobody seems to know anything.

Some of the field offices are looking for the political gravy out of this, he said, to be able to say they have their own Ahmed. The FBI agent said that anybody with a turban who comes off the street with a story—they give him ten grand.

Everybody with the name of Ahmed, Muhammad, etc., take note: walk into your nearest FBI field office and leave with a check for $10,000 of the American people's money.

In other, more sinister news, there was a ruling by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals that the President of the United States has the ABSOLUTE right to order the arrest and indefinite detention, incommunicado and without right of counsel, of any U.S. citizen who has been duly declared a threat to the security of the State by the relevant federal law enforcement, intelligence, or military agency.

The 4th Circuit further said that the plaintiff in the case, the ACLU and several other so-called federal watchdog agencies, could not appeal the decision to the United States Supreme Court. The Federal Circuit Court can order it simply by saying that the case does not have sufficient merit in a declared state of national emergency, which now exists in the United States.

This case relates to Yaser Esam Hamdi who is being detained, without being charged, and is one of the 742 U.S. citizens currently being detained indefinitely, without charge, being held incommunicado, under false names, and being denied the right of counsel.

What the plaintiffs in the suit wanted was to prevent the president from having the power to do this and to force the Federal Government to identify the U.S. citizens it is currently holding incommunicado.

But it was almost a certainty that the court would grant the president this power. The court said, in its opinion, that although civil judicial bodies do not give up their right of judicial review in times of war or declared states of national emergency, said judicial bodies must nonetheless defer to "the power of the office of the President, our nation's law enforcement, and military".

In other words, the court said that "any" U.S. citizen could be held this way once he or she is declared an "enemy combatant". This includes any tenth-generation American with the All American names of Mr. Smith or Ms. Jones.

The ACLU expected at least some modification because they have been pressing independently for this. This also related to the detention of the so-called Guantanamo prisoners, who now number more than 400.

The ACLU was able to obtain an affidavit from General Tommy Franks (because Franks didn't like the military being blamed for this) stating that, regarding all the Guantanamo prisoners who were detained, it was suggested by the U.S. military that these people didn't know anything and they should not be further detained and they should have been released in Afghanistan.

The Bush Administration has tried to defend its actions by saying that U.S. military suggested these people were potential threats to U.S. security or threats to American forces in the Middle East. Franks didn't like the Bush Administration blaming the military for it. He said that "we questioned these people at great length" and they didn't know a thing. But, as Franks added: "We knew the minute we got a White House request to send these people to Guantanamo that the whole issue of detaining prisoners at Guantanamo was all a great big ruse. It wasn't designed to extract any more information because they didn't have any more information than what they had already given military investigators in Kabul."

This detaining of prisoners was a ruse to establish this very precedent now established by the courts. They called it the Enemy Combatants Act and they wanted to solidify and expand that Act—and that's what the whole Guantanamo thing was about and has been about since the beginning.

It wasn't about extracting more information or the claims that these Afghans are dangerous. Even the Army CID investigators have since issued statements that there are no reasons to keep holding these people.

The Guantanamo detentions were used as a ruse to establish this court precedent to be used as a threat and form of coercion against the American people.

Since it's costing the Bush Regime a fortune to keep these people down there, the Bush Administration will most likely say that they've learned everything they can from them, and then they'll ship them back to Afghanistan because they've served their purpose.

The Office of Management and Budget even complained about this. They said that the cost of transporting these 400-500 people here, the cost of building the facility at Guantanamo, and the additional U.S. costs to the military in maintaining it and equipping it (food and medical costs), will amount to about $300 MILLION of the American taxpayers' money. And not one scrap of worthwhile intelligence was obtained.

It was all a political ruse to increase the power of the Office of the President, pursuant to the unlimited ability to order the arrest of U.S. citizens. As the court pointed out, not only does the President have the unlimited power to order the arrest of U.S. citizens in the United States, he can now circumvent the laws of any other nation. He can order the arrest of U.S. citizens living in other countries.

Since the National Emergency was redeclared, the courts strengthened the Supreme Court opinion of 1987, which states that the courts do not have to be concerned about how U.S. citizens, living abroad, got here to be brought to trial.

Initially the Reagan-Bush Administration took that as a license to begin a kidnapping policy. This was the infamous Executive Order 12333, and now the Court has essentially reaffirmed the original Supreme Court decision, which led to that Executive Order.

Now all limits are off.

The Bush Administration can now act with impunity, through the CIA and the military, to covertly kidnap U.S. citizens from foreign soil. And there's nothing the foreign nations can do about it. They cannot even petition the U.S. Supreme Court for relief. What the court is effectively saying is that the United States no longer has to be concerned with the issue of sovereignty of other nations.

In the case of a national emergency, and further, in a case of the State security of this country, all other sovereign immunity is held in abeyance.

The New American Realism: Dealing With The Ravages Of Bushonomics (1/20/03)

Just when you thought it couldn't get worse, here are the latest bleak statistics about the effects of the Bush Regime's so-called "economic policies" known as Bushonomics.

As we reported earlier, the Mortgage Bankers Association has reported that mortgage foreclosures on single-family homes had reached record highs—despite the boom in residential housing.

There was an interesting follow-up by them on Jan 16 (this is a weekly statistic they maintain as well as refinancing statistics, etc.). They said that if mortgage foreclosures on single family homes in the United States (they reiterated reached record highs several weeks ago) continue at the current weekly pace, then by the year 2009 (in seven years from now) mortgage foreclosures would reach a rate equal to April of 1932, when 16% of all real estate in the United States was in foreclosure.

These statistics have been maintained since 1928. The all-time record of residential property foreclosure rate was 16.4%, which was reached in April 1932.

The National Realtors Association also mentioned the growing number of mortgage foreclosures and how much property that was now bringing onto the market. There was also an announcement by the ABA (American Bankers Association), which reported a record number of, not only defaults in mortgages, but also a record number of defaults in home equity lines of credit, which have led to foreclosures.

In tandem with this, the Association of State, County, and Municipal Finance Boards announced that there is now a 27-year high for the amount of residential property which is being taken for back taxes. Residential housing in back tax arrearages exceeding two years is now the highest since 1975, and is in fact approaching the all time records reached in 1939.

Regarding these three statistics, the comment made by the National Realtors Association was that, by the end of 2003, they estimate that 6.4% of all available housing for sale in the United States will be foreclosed or tax lien or encumbered property. These are just staggering numbers.

It begs the question: How long can the speculative bubble in residential housing be maintained with record foreclosure and record repossession rates?

Obviously it cannot be maintained indefinitely—not with unemployment continuing to increase and the amount of foreclosed property coming onto the market increasing. The reason the banks haven't been hurt yet by these record foreclosures is because property values have continued to rise, so they've been able to sell foreclosed properties into a rising market.

But what happens when the speculative bubble in residential housing eventually breaks? Then they're going to be selling repossessed properties into a declining market.

As the American Bankers Association pointed out, the banks are now potentially exposed to almost $500 billion in bad residential, commercial, and industrial property loans. Then, when the current sellers' market turns into a buyers' market, that $500 billion is going to be felt.

That was a cheery piece of news. The second piece of cheery news came from the National Council of Credit Associations, which reported through its member finance companies that there is now an all-time record-high repossession of installment-loan chattels, like automobiles, boats, campers, home furnishings, and electronics, etc. It's an all-time-high repossession rate. The problem is so large that the value of the stock of AmeriFirst Finance (the largest sub-prime lender in the United States) was cut in half in recent trading. They're saying that they're very close to bankruptcy. This is a stock that, two years ago, was $64. It's now trading at $3.

Generally speaking, finance companies don't trade like speculative high-tech stocks. Now, with Mercury Finance having declared bankruptcy, Greenleaf Acceptance is very close to bankruptcy. Some of the nation's largest finance companies are very close to bankruptcy, since their capital base has been wiped out because they're repossessing chattels at a record rate.

As the National Credit Association pointed out, the resale value of these chattels, particularly in cars, has declined dramatically. This is due to the record number of new car sales because of zero financing and the special promotions. Now there are a record number of used cars on the market.

Normally there are only 10-12 million used automobiles on the market at any given time. Now there are 22 million used automobiles for sale in the U.S.

Used car values have depreciated by 30% over the last two years. Auto dealers have to jump through hoops in order to take trade-ins and still make money on the sale of new vehicles. Now GM, Ford, and Chrysler have been secretly reimbursing their own dealers for the losses—just to maintain a high rate of new car sales that they're not making any money on.

The rate of repossessions is horrendous. Cars, boats, airplanes, home furnishings, and electronics—the list goes on and on.

Of course, Enron's former top echelon doesn't have anything to worry about. Former Enron chairman Ken Lay has now expatriated all of his assets, including all of his real estate, which he was able to liquidate at a very substantial price.

Evidently Lay is still living in Denver in one of the high-rise luxury condos he owns, but has now leased it back from the group that he sold it to, which is some Republican-controlled offshore realty trust. The guy doesn't have ten dollars left in the United States. He could be gone in a New York minute at this point.

He already owns a residence in the Cayman Islands. He already has all his money in numbered offshore accounts. He apparently has made all the proper applications with the State Department and the IRS for expatriation. Apparently the Caymanian government has already accepted Lay. This guy could be gone from the United States, on a private airplane, literally on 30 minutes notice.

After all, Lay doesn't seem to be all that worried about criminal actions against him. From what I understand, particularly the disposition of his assets, he seems to be more concerned about civil liabilities like shareholder lawsuits and/or huge fines levied against him by the SEC or some other government agency.

The chances that Lay will ever be prosecuted are between zero and none—because he knows too much and he was involved with too many high-ranking Republicans that have close connections to the Bush Regime to be put on trial. It simply wouldn't be politically possible.

It should be remembered that Enron had 3,000 offshore subsidiaries. Each subsidiary was essentially a separate PLC or LLC, incorporated in an offshore jurisdiction, ostensibly to hide separate sets of losses.

The problem with the Enron situation is that what Enron did at the time they did it wasn't illegal. And that's the basic problem of going after Lay. Offsetting their losses into separate companies, in other words, wasn't illegal at the time. It is illegal now.

As Anderson Accounting pointed out in its own defense, GAAP accounting is still subjective. There are no hard and fast rules. They are "generally accepted" and that's why it's called "generally accepted accounting principles". And they're subject to interpretation.

The SEC and IRS, in a knee-jerk reaction, have come up with thousands of new regulations over the last 12 months. For the first time, they will try to define some real parameters for what is GAAP and what isn't GAAP.

And that's going to be a problem with prosecuting Lay. All the other people who have been prosecuted so far have been Lay underlings, but they have been prosecuted for other reasons—like insider trading and illegal price manipulation.

The core of the charges against Enron (stripping derivatives of losses and putting them in offshore accounts and then, through GAAP accounting, marking them up differently), since they're subject to interpretation, the government has to prove that Enron did this as an ongoing criminal enterprise to defraud its shareholders, employees, the government of the United States, and the people of the United States.

And I don't know how the hell they're going to prove it—because there is no one law they can point to that says what you did and the accounting methods you employed were wrong and illegal. They may have been deceitful or dishonest—but were they illegal? And therein lies the rub.

[Editor's note: That's where the ORIGINAL version of a "trial by jury" would have entered the equation. All that would be necessary is for a group of unbiased normal people, considering the facts, to agree that something wrong had been done. It is a consensus matter-of-conscience decision. And new law was thereby instantly possible as guided by a group-conscience consideration.]

However, the modern, judge-controlled version of a jury trial is intentionally engineered so the crooks in high secret places can control what would otherwise be an honest pursuit of justice. These days the judge is in control where the jury should be. After all, it's cheaper and easier to buy-off "professionals"—called crooked judges—than it is to attempt to do the same, day-in and day-out, with each new jury.]

Gold hit a new 6½-year contract high. The February contract gold went up to $359 before settling down again. The dollar hit a new 3-year low, surpassing 1.06 Euros. Despite the fact that the market only closed 20 points lower, the background was extremely shaky. The dollar got very shaky, and surprisingly enough, the Treasury Department acted to intervene in the dollar late in the session, in the off-markets after it was closed.

They didn't actually spend any money because they don't have any money to spend. It's the old hoodwink which is called "checking rates". This means that the Fed calls around to check quotes, which is something that is a fake-out move by the Federal Reserve. When the Fed calls the principal FOREX dealers to check rates, it's generally done as a precursor to intervention. But sometimes the Fed doesn't intervene. It just checks the rates, yet the market will move anyway. So it's a fake-out move, when the Fed doesn't want to spend any money.

Nostradamus: Predictions Of World War III

After the 9/11/01 disaster at the World Trade Center, there is a renewed interest in what the great seer Nostradamus had to say. This book is a serious study of his predictions, based upon the author's research into the original manuscripts. His work details the struggle that is going on in the Middle East and the ongoing conflict between the Christian world and the Islamic world. Jack Manuelian has combed through the prophecies of more modern seers, pointing out how they may agree with what Nostradamus had to say. He offers hope for mankind, but admits that it is troubled times we live in. What will be the outcome? Read the book and decide for yourself.

Regarding the gold derivative scam story, JP Morgan claimed they only had "$10 million" in gold derivatives. Of course, they can claim anything they want because they know that the story isn't going to have any legs in the United States anyway.

In other news, Standard & Poors have been criticized by the pundits on CNN and FNN including Larry Kudlow, the great Bushonian apologist. They've said that the Standard & Poors rating agency has declared war on the Bush Administration.

Once a year, Standard & Poors issues a long-range (5 to 10 year) forecast of ratings. Apparently they have become very anti-Bushonomics in recent months, and a lot of the Republicans on the CNN and FNN Republican-controlled shows are criticizing them. They're dragging out Bill Seidman and all the Bushonian Cabalist economists.

Standard & Poors says that if George Bush Jr. is re-elected, and hence Bushonomics continues, Standard & Poors would, for the first time since 1864, put U.S. Treasury instruments on its watch list for pending downgrade.

S&P pointed out that Bushonomics wreaks havoc on the economy. Also, if this current tax package—the so-called "Stimulus Package"—passes as is, unamended, it would more than triple the budgetary deficit projections going out till 2009. And as the OMB said, $900 billion deficits per annum cannot be sustained. They also said that the Bush Administration is effectively lying.

The Treasury Department actually has to submit documentation to S&P every year to maintain its rating in U.S. Treasury bonds. It isn't done automatically.

S&P pointed out (and I point this out all the time) how the Bush Administration tries to obfuscate the debt it's creating by saying this only constitutes 2% or 3% of GDP.

My argument (and the Republicans hate this argument) concerns the Old Republican Bushonian lie about obfuscating debt by saying that even if we're running a $500-billion-a-year deficit, that would still be less than 5% of GDP, which historically isn't all that high. But as they pointed out, the percentage of GDP to debt is meaningless. The only percentage that makes any difference is the percentage of actual government revenues required to service that debt. If you look at the debt on that basis, the United States is actually spending about 26% of total federal income to service debt.

This is the whole central argument about Bushonomics, which I keep trying to tell people. The counter argument, that Kudlow makes, is that under the Bushonian Regime, GDP has been doubling every 10 years (which is true). The problem is that, although GDP has been doubling every 10 years, it would take only 3.6% per annum growth rate for 10 years for the number to double because it's compounded.

Meanwhile, the amount of revenue the government receives keeps declining, which isn't supposed to happen. The only time it happens is under Bushonomics. As the GDP expands, the Bushonian Cabal cuts taxes for the rich at a proportionately faster rate than exists the governmental income derived from the expansion of the Gross Domestic Product. Therefore, as the GDP rises, the net government income actually declines.

This scenario happens only under Bushonomics. Even though Bush talks about GAAP all the time, as Standard & Poors pointed out, it's time that the Bush Administration itself be held to GAAP accounting.

Standard & Poors is controlled by the Stovall Family, and the son, Sam Stovall Jr., has gotten a lot more vociferous lately. For years, S&P was just a Bushonian mouthpiece. There is a reason behind this, and it's not because it still isn't a Republican-controlled organization.

Now, under the change in SEC rules, the bond rating agencies like Standard & Poors, Moodys, Fitches, etc. can now be held more directly liable for their ratings. Therefore, they actually have to start speaking the truth.

This is a part of the recent SEC changes in the "New Era of Corporate Responsibility". Rating agencies now also have to act with responsibility. They simply can't be a political beast anymore and go out and tell the American people that U.S. Treasury bonds will ALWAYS be Triple-A Prime Instruments. Now they have something to lose.

If they continued the old Bushonian line that says: don't worry about it, U.S. Treasuries are prime and always will be—and then suddenly they're not, that means that every holder of a Treasury bond who is a subscriber to S&P services (every bank, all the large bond trading houses, and brokerage firms) can sue them. Now they are forced to speak truthfully.

The final point was made by the agencies who control the issuance of municipal bonds, and how the Bush "Tax Stimulus Plan" is going to hurt the muni bond business. Obviously if you eliminate the taxation on all dividends and unearned income, the munis are going to get killed, because the rates of municipal bonds are going to have to rise. The Bush Administration itself has said that this will cause interest rates on long-term municipal securities to increase by one-half of one percent.

With publicly traded municipal debt now approaching $6 trillion, a one-half of one percent increase in rates means an increase in interest costs of $150 BILLION a year. This is a cost which will have to be passed on—in higher state taxes and higher county property taxes—directly to the American people.

Having done a breakdown of 20 extremely negative consequences of the passage of the Bushonian so-called "Stimulus Plan", the havoc that it will wreak in the municipal bond industry is the first in this series.

With that kind of increase, and the states and counties so desperately short of money, the average state and county debt-issuing agency now has the lowest income-to-debt service ratio since 1937. During the Depression, this was called "The Threadbare 37". The economy took a double dip, and Roosevelt was frankly ready to shoot himself in the head. It looked like we were going to go below the levels reached in April 1932.

The one good thing is that the agencies who issue public comment and opinion on economic instruments and ratings are being forced to tell the truth because of the new SEC rules. Of course, the truth is the last thing the Bush Administration wants the people to hear.

When half of the American investors have lost half of their money, since Bush has been at the helm, they had to have some sort of reaction that would be popular with the people. Throw a few people in jail. Talk about a New Era of Corporate Responsibility. Make tougher GAAP accounting standards.

The problem is that you're forcing brokerage firms and banks and credit-rating agencies to tell the truth now. These are things that a Bush Regime cannot survive—if everyone tells the truth.

The Secret Life Of Maurice Strong: International Man Of Mystery (And Fraud); Deconstructing The Shoe-Bomber Scam

(1/27/03)

Many people may be familiar with Maurice Strong, the jet-setting corporate honcho who was appointed as a consultant to supposedly reorganize the United Nations and make it more "efficient". The dark side of Maurice Strong, however, has never been publicly revealed. And now (I can't believe their unmitigated gall), the Bush Regime has appointed the infamous, sinister, feared, and dreaded Maurice Strong as a "special envoy" to North Korea. He has already left for North Korea from Washington. And here is, as they say, the rest of the story:

Maurice Strong is not even an American citizen. When I first saw his picture, I thought this guy's got to be dead. He was an old man when I knew him—and that was decades ago. And I couldn't believe he's still alive. He's got to be way up in his 80s.

And how did I know Maurice Strong? I knew him and his partners—the infamous Ray Harvey and the infamous Larry Freeman. I knew them from the late 1970s and early 1980s; but I didn't know all the things they did in the 1960s. I didn't know them until their careers, as Republican Scamscateers, were much more in cement.

For instance, I didn't know Maurice Strong in his capacity as a CIA paymaster and as a money launderer for the CIA. This goes back even further.

Maurice Strong and his partner, Ray Harvey, had for years maintained an investment office in Tampa, Florida. Their attorney, who handled everything they ever did, was the infamous Larry Freeman, who was a former CIA counsel by the way.

These three guys operated together in a variety of scams. Petro Canada was one of them. But we're talking about the cream of the crop of Republican Scamscateers—money launderers and CIA paymasters.

Their names first came to light in 1977 (before then these guys were virtually unknown) when the Church Committee found out that Strong and Harvey and Freeman had laundered CIA payments to the mob on the Kennedy Assassination deal. These guys go back a long long way. We're talking about 40 years ago. These guys weren't young then.

And this is how far back this guy goes.

Maurice Strong and Ray Harvey were partners in some of the original Texas oil swindles committed by Prescott Bush Senior in the 1950s. These guys were involved in the original founding of Apache Oil.

Now we're talking about very infamous Republican Scamscateers. You could literally say the term "Republican Scamscateer" came into existence because of these two guys—Maurice Strong and Ray Harvey. They are the original Republican Scamscateers.

They started in the late 1960s, forming a lot of offshore banks. (They were the guys who started it, and they were the very first people to do it.) They were behind the famous British American Insurance Trust swindle of the Cayman Islands. They were the guys who taught, as an underling, the infamous Phil Davis.

(See Whistleblower Gazette, Vol. 1, No. 4, "True Stories From The Scam Business"; also available in the book Bushwhacked: Inside Stories Of True Conspiracy, by Uri Dowbenko at the www.conspiracydigest.com Internet website.)

Phil Davis learned the offshore banking scam business from Strong and Harvey. He was a salesman for them. These guys, Strong and Harvey, are connected to everything imaginable.

In the late '70s and early '80s, when George Bush Senior became involved with Andreas Papadopoulos in the infamous National Bank of Greece swindle, Maurice Strong and Ray Harvey laundered the money for them. They laundered the proceeds of the scams when they were bleeding money out of the National Bank of Greece, using fake letters of credit. (See my book The Regarding the Kennedy hit, my private investigator told me about their connections to the CIA in the early 1960s. They were laundering money for the CIA, which was going to the mob through a bunch of front companies that they owned in Florida and in the Bahamas.

They were also deeply involved in the Bay of Pigs debacle. As a matter of fact, they were the ones who originally started the Orca Supply Company as a CIA cutout in Coral Gables, Florida. Subsequently Orca Supply Company was run by Colonel Jack Terrell during the Iran-Contra period. It was the Orca Supply Company which leased the F-123 aircraft in the Bay of Pigs invasion. These guys were the original Bushonian/Republican Scamscateers.

And why did the Bush Cabal pick Strong? Strong has certain connections to North Korea in the oil business. North Korea imports a lot of its oil from China and Russia. I'm not sure of the details, but Maurice Strong fits into the North Korean oil business somehow.

In other news, it's incredible to think about the power that has been assumed by the Department of Justice pursuant to the Homeland Security Act. Ashcroft was on television saying that the DoJ was going to start exercising its new authority vis-à-vis putting together "what could have happened" demonstrations and prosecuting people.

Now all U.S. prosecutors have this new authority, and they're encouraging state and county prosecutors to do this as well. This is in regard to the sentencing of the so-called shoe-bomber, Richard Reid (who I think should be sentenced to 20 years just for forcing everybody to look at him). Have you ever seen anybody as ugly as this character? He pled guilty and his sentencing is coming up.

The Department of Justice took an old military converted Lockheed L-1011, which they got from the Department of Defense, out of retired stock, and supposedly put a bomb on it the size of the shoe-bomb that Reid was carrying, and blew it up.

They are now going to be allowed to present this demonstration as "evidence" in court as a "what could have happened" scenario.

The defense counsel has no right to review the process of the "scenario" and they cannot subpoena any of the people involved in "creating" the scenario. And they cannot investigate the "scenario". They can't even ask any questions about it.

These are federal guidelines already in place. They were contained in the fine print of the Law Enforcement Extension Act that was passed subsequent to the U.S.A. Patriot Act. It's not just the U.S.A. Patriot Act we need to be concerned about. Look at the 53 pieces of ensuing legislation that have passed as addendums.

Anyway, they show the plane blowing up, and it's really such a joke. The Science and Technology Channel had some retired Department of Defense demolitions experts reviewing this film. They were claiming that the "shoe-bomber" had a plastic explosive in the heel of his shoe that contained 200 grams of Semtex. They showed where he was sitting in the forward compartment of the aircraft.

They were showing from the Department of Defense's own video footage of what 200 grams of explosive looks like when it detonates. And the only thing 200 grams of explosive does is, it blows a hole in the side of the aircraft that's just one meter in diameter.

But the Department of Defense's portrayal of what this supposed 200 grams of explosive did was that it blew out the entire left side of the aircraft, and then incinerated the entire aircraft simultaneously.

This was not a computer simulation, but supposedly real. But as the retired Department of Defense demolition experts pointed out, they had done the same thing in a computer simulation and had figured out that it would have taken 5 kilograms of Semtex, placed in various parts of the aircraft, to duplicate what the Department of Defense showed.

But it doesn't make any difference because the Department of Justice has the right to put together these "simulations" and the defense counsel can't say boo about it. They can't subpoena their own experts or present any witnesses.

So now the United States enters the Era of Pre-Fabricated False Evidence. And you have an attorney general, namely Ashcroft, who is urging (to use his own words) federal, state, and county prosecutors to make use of this new law for prosecuting all violators.

CNN actually had the nerve to show some examples of how sinister this is. Suppose you had been charged with speeding and reckless driving, and you go into court. Then the prosecutor shows a video footage of "what could have happened"—a 50-car pileup with 100 mangled bodies hanging out of the cars. And the jury sees it all.

They do it with the jury present, and they point to this and say: "This is what COULD have happened." Can you imagine the prosecutorial power involved in using this new law to convict people? And you know that, once the jury sees this, they're going to convict. They literally wouldn't have to present any other evidence.

The states and courts are complaining about not having any money. This will save prosecutorial money, and hence taxpayers' money, and they should be delighted because: "We don't have to present any other evidence. We just have to go in there and show it to the jury and tell them: 'This is what COULD have happened.'"

Ashcroft campaigned on these "public safety" issues in Minnesota, in order to get the MADD (Mothers Against Drink Driving) vote. The next step, he said, follows from how it has been proven conclusively, because of advances in genetic medicine, that there is a nearly 100% predisposition to genetic connection when it comes to alcoholism.

Alcoholic parents will almost certainly pass along the gene sequence, they say, which causes alcoholism. There's a 50% chance that that sequence will be passed along to the children. And this gets into the predictive forensics issue. He said that the state of South Carolina has already expressed interest in this.

The logical extension of science and technology, combined with the power of this new law, would allow states to deny people driver's licenses because they are genetically predisposed to be alcoholics. And that would give the states the ability to deny driver's licenses to these people. And how much safer the roads would be.

This would give government at all levels the ability to potentially arrest, incarcerate, psychologically treat, or deny citizens some sort of license or registration based on what they MIGHT do. That's where we're going.

The attorney general himself said that's the direction we're heading—arresting and charging U.S. citizens based on what they MIGHT do in the future. It ain't pretty, but it looks like the future. △

"This Administration is doing everything we can to end the stalemate in an efficient way. We're making the right decisions to bring the solution to an end."

Cracks In The Wall Of Lies

Editor's note: There exists a "fabric of truth" hidden behind the "wall of lies" through which seemingly disconnected events are found to be all tied together. That wall of lies is crumbling more and more these days as Truthbringers such as Sherman Skolnick chip away at the weak points and courageously share what they've found out.

Sherman's offerings this month at first seem to cover very different areas of corruption. But soon, parts of the fabric appear from behind that failing wall and those seemingly disconnected events no longer appear so.

For those of you already familiar with The Big Boys at the level of the world-controlling elite, such as those known as the Illuminati, sometimes the smallest fact that Sherman tosses out speaks volumes of insight as to their methods of deception and control of underling puppets, especially through avenues of blackmail and the always reliable dangling carrots of greed.

For those of you newer readers not familiar with this longtime crusader for Truth from the Chicago area, know that:

Since 1958, Mr. Skolnick has been a court reformer, and since 1963, chairman/founder, Citizen's Committee To Clean Up The Courts. Since 1991, a regular panelist, and since 1995, moderator/producer of BroadSides, a one-hour, weekly, taped, public-access cable-TV show, cablecast WITHIN Chicago, to some 400,000 viewers each Monday evening, 9 p.m., channel 21, cable TV.

The Overthrow Of
The American Republic, Part 24
The Pedophile/Homosexual Underground
(12/27/03)

Fair-minded commentators avoid mere purely private bashing of pedophiles and homosexuals, in entirely private arrangements. Why? Because it is not news; just some folks and their private lives.

When do the matters cross the line of considerations of privacy and become data that the public should know about?

When do national security and related issues make the crossing of the privacy line important?

Many states nowadays have laws forbidding discrimination against persons because of race, religion, gender, and sexual orientation. And this applies to equal accommodations, restaurants, hotels, jobs, and other everyday concerns. Some states authorize so-called same-sex marriages and lifetime partner arrangements as to health and other fringe benefits, probate, and similar items.

Since our weekly public-access cable-TV show started, in February 1991, we have approached the line dividing privacy from national security with great caution, crossing it only about twice in all those years.

A fellow alternative journalist once offered me a book of sordid photos with supporting documentation. The explicit pictures showed the Chief Judge of one of the courts in the Chicago area sexually molesting little boys.

The fellow journalist said: "Sherman, you ought to finger this Chief Judge. He is a sickie. Put these pictures on your cable-TV show."

I responded: "I already know about that Chief Judge. Yes, we have a thick file on that crook. He is a bum. In an additional government capacity, he whitewashed a government report how the underworld blackmailed some federal judges in Chicago. How? By throwing a federal appeals judge, W. Lynn Parkinson, into Lake Michigan in 1959. I had part of the secret government report and I brought a suit to have the whole report publicly disclosed."

"Get this" I added: "The crooked, blackmailed judges who sat on the bench with the then murdered judge, ruled on my case, claiming I could not get the balance of the government report, because the government warehouse in Suitland, Maryland supposedly burned down. No proof was offered by the government or the judges."

"Look" I said, "as a freelance journalist, head of a court reform group and courtroom spectator, I several times saw the Chief Judge coming into the courtroom very late, keeping everybody waiting. He was often so drunk, he could not mount the step up to his chair at the bench. He favored the reputed Mafia projectionists' union one time. As an apparent pay-off, they rewarded his apparently misfit son with a high-paying movie theater projectionist job."

Finally I said: "Yes, I know the Chief Judge is a crook. But I prefer pictures and documents relating to his corruption and bribery. We, in our organization, knew the Chief Judge was a child molester and a drunk. But I do not run a commercial-TV show. I am not trying to amuse idle-minded viewers with stuff like in these pictures. We already have a big audience. Hey, get this book of dirty pictures out of my house."

On another occasion, several sources each came to us with details and pictures about Congressman Henry Hyde, a Republican from the Chicago area. He purports to be a spiritual, family-oriented sort, but is apparently actually a lowlife. In an unincorporated area adjoining Chicago (that is, not actually designated a village or municipality), he reportedly runs a strip joint using Russian women dancing naked. They were apparently lured into the U.S. with promises they would work as "office employees". We also understand that Hyde does not, from the strip club, apparently report any proceeds to the state or federal tax collectors. Also, according to court records and other sources of data, we firmly believe Hyde has been a secret, silent partner in a gun store and profitted from selling illegal gun silencers.

Hyde, as then head of the House Judiciary Committee, favored Clinton with impeachment resolution charges watered down to include mostly items of a sexual nature relating to Monica Lewinsky. As we have pointed out, Hyde was subject to blackmail because he had charges pending against him for massive misapplication of federally-insured funds at a time he was a director of a Chicago-area Savings & Loan Association that went bust. And Hyde was in a position to blackmail the judge to set Hyde free of the federal charges.

(As to Hyde, see our website items "Corrupt IRS Officials Face Exposure, Part One" and "Marc Rich Swindles The Pope's Soybean Company".)

So, I rejected the idea of fingering Henry Hyde on my cable-TV show with sordid pictures.

In 1992, after careful considerations of what is public and what is private, I arranged to have cablecast a very controversial one-hour TV show. Direct witnesses had informed us that Hillary Clinton, originally from the Chicago suburb of Park Ridge and whose husband Bill was then running for President, was part of a circle of four Lesbian business women involved in monstrous violations of national security. Hillary's business partner, Diane Lewis, was supposedly running a firm refurbishing sizeable airplanes for use by Middle Eastern sheiks.

Delivered to our TV show was an entire file cabinet of records, travel documents, secret meeting places with known terrorists, part of the Abu Nidal Terrorist Worldwide Group. Diane Lewis and her partners were secretly shipping missile parts to the known terrorists. We had the secret notebooks, handwritten notes, secret address books, secret telexes and faxes, the whole works. We put key items up on the screen of our TV show and said that, by corruption, the FBI and the CIA were covering this all up.

Before they were married, in a "marriage of convenience", Bill and Hillary each had separate roles, since they were of college age, with covert operations of America's secret political police, the CIA. Hillary and her women business partners and the Lesbian angle was important to the mess we showed.

Because of our TV show, Diane Lewis lost her protection with the spy agencies. As shown by an article in the New York Times in September 1992, Ms. Lewis was arrested. The federal judge hearing her criminal case did NOT hear it in open court, but behind closed doors. The judge was informed that the criminal defendant, Diane Lewis, charged with violating U.S. export laws, was a business partner of the new First Lady, and Ms. Lewis arranged to become a CIA snitch to supposedly help them finger more terrorists. So Ms. Lewis was quietly turned loose.

As the new First Lady, Hillary, as a reprisal, arranged to inflict unlawful harassment and surveillance upon me and my TV associates, by putting us illegally on her "Enemies List", for the secret political police to do dirty tricks on us.

We brought a damage suit against her and her associates, pointing out that the First Lady is not an official government-authorized position, just a title. And that it was illegal, what she was doing to us. Our sixty-five-page complaint, with attached documents, spelled out highly detailed facts, dates, and occurrences.

The U.S. District Court Judge, George M. Marovich (same one Henry Hyde blackmailed to set Hyde loose), dismissed our case without allowing us a single moment actually in his courtroom. He said we had too many specific dates and details for him to consider. The judge did not disqualify himself, even though we showed in our court papers that he owned a suburban shopping center and his secret silent partners were known gangsters jointly with corrupt top Chicago IRS officials, all of them using the shopping mall as a giant money laundry in a monstrous tax evasion.

Guess what happened when we appealed to the corrupt banker-judges in Several years ago, some devout Catholic activists contacted me. They urged that I have some of them as guests on a one-hour program. They wanted to publicize a problem worrying them. There are priests, they told me, who as pedophiles, sexually molest choir boys and such.

I said I had heard about such things that have been going on for many centuries. I told them I hesitate, me being of another religion, to put such things on the air. I suggested they find a Catholic venue of some sort, a Catholic magazine or such, to bring their charges before the public. After all, I told them, Chicago is the largest Catholic Archdiocese in the nation, and I do not want to appear to be an anti-Catholic, which I am not.

Many months later, the American monopoly press began hollaring about this centuries-old problem of reputed sexual molesting of children by Catholic priests. I find it more than strange that, many months later, the mostly pro-British U.S. pressfakers are fingering Catholic priests in areas heavily dominated by Irish Catholics, such as Boston and Chicago. And that such Catholics tend to vote for the Democratic Party, whereas most in the news media are pro-GOP.

We have cablecast a several-part TV series entitled "The Irish Question" wherein we dare bring out a mostly censored subject about the British dominating the American press—print, radio, and commercial TV (not public-access cable, non-commercial TV). And, for example, the British royal family bitterly opposes and seeks to discriminate against Irish Catholics. The British royals are major stockholders of the Tribune Company, parent of the media monster Chicago Tribune, which likes to bash Chicago's Irish Catholic Mayor, Richard M. Daley.

The priest problem has been known for centuries. Why bring it up now? To cause great discomfort in areas of Irish Catholics who tend to vote for the Democratic Party?

[Editor's note: Also, the general economic climate is terrible, and many more people are "creatively" and desperately looking for sources of money. So, just like scams such as the whiplash auto-accident "business", why not go after the wealthy Church? Right now allegations don't even need to be proven in order to have a good chance of some kind of a financial "settlement" for public relations reasons.

Pointing out this economically motivated kind of scam—that is calculated to benefit both hungry lawyers and their willing clients—in no way

Chicago's Federal Appeals Court? They refused to hear our appeal and unlawfully barred us from all the federal courts in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Indiana. The U.S. Supreme Court refused us a remedy. Do not waste my time mentioning our First Amendment "freedom of the press" guarantees that were thus cancelled.

diminishes the seriousness of a much larger genuine problem that has existed for a long time, but THAT problem extends far beyond the confines of just the Church—for example as several Illuminati “insiders” have shared in recent past issues of The SPECTRUM.]

Only about the second time in all the years of our work, we recently posted a story about George W. Bush and his male sex-mate. And that this situation is outraging some U.S. Secret Service agents who have quit in sizeable numbers. AND, that this situation violates national security—in that the Red Chinese are using it to blackmail U.S. weapons secrets out of Bush as the occupant and resident of the White House.

George W. Bush's father, George Herbert Walker Bush, is apparently a known pedophile. Daddy Bush was entangled in a terrible scandal that started with the downfall of a financial institution in November 1988, just at the time Daddy Bush was elected President.

On November 4, 1988, in Omaha, Nebraska, the Franklin Community Credit Union was closed by the FBI and the IRS. A kingpin in the operation had been siphoning off many millions of dollars to reportedly finance a pedophile ring operating between Omaha, Chicago, and Washington, DC. Caught up in the mess of pedophiles, child porno, and such, was Daddy Bush.

Related details are in a book called The Franklin Cover-Up by John DeCamp, a Lincoln, Nebraska attorney, once a Nebraska State Senator. A companion book is called The Mystery Of The Carefully Crafted Hoax with a forward by Ted Gunderson, the former head of the Los Angeles FBI office who, after 1979, specializes in investigations of child molesting, pedophile rings, satanic rituals, and such.

A Committee of the Nebraska State Senate was formed to investigate the pedophile charges. Their investigator was Gary Caradori. He took his son to a sports game in Chicago and, while in Chicago, Gary was able to apparently pin down with witnesses the role in the pedophile ring of the Elder Bush. Gary called from Chicago to Loran Schmit, a member of the Nebraska State Senate investigating committee.

Gary “called committee chairman Loran Schmit, before his (Gary’s) return trip and said: ‘I got it, Loran. We’ve got ‘em by the balls.’” That was July 11, 1990. “Caradori wasn’t finished with his investigation. He and his son were killed on 7/11/90, while returning from the All-Star game in Chicago. The plane came apart in the air and crashed and burned on impact. The NTSB (National Transportation Safety Board) has not issued a formal statement on the cause of the crash. In addition to going to the ball game, he was also working some leads on the case.”

And Gary’s “briefcase and papers were inexplicably missing from the crash site, along with the two rear seats of the plane.”

(The above is from The Mystery Of The Carefully Crafted Hoax, pages 77-78. The book goes into great details about how the state and federal authorities, through a hoax, tried to cover up the pedophile ring operating at the highest levels in the nation’s capital.)

Since the early 1960s, I have been more or less on the periphery of the press. I have, through many circumstances, become a sort of “father confessor” to various reporters of print, radio, and TV. They know, from our background, that we never, never, never divulge the names of witnesses and sources. Yes, it puts a burden on us, but we do this to protect them. We do not want to find out that one of our key witnesses or sources mysteriously fell off a building to their death, or their body was found floating in a canal, or their plane somehow blew up.

We share useful information with our sources, all the way from local reporters, to White House reporters, to key journalists on several continents and in other countries. As a volunteer unpaid consultant, I share ideas about how to get their contract renewed when an editor, news director, or such, somehow takes a dislike to them. Giving a paid reporter “dirt” on his troublesome boss often is helpful in getting the reporter’s contract renewed. In return, the reporters know where to communicate the details of censored stories.

To preserve the contact and their cover, I instruct them to avoid acknowledging that they know us. If somehow pressed to comment on us, they should say something negative. Then they call me from their unlisted home phone and we have a little laugh about preserving their job and their “cover”, so that they stay at their post and help us with an important story that would otherwise remain censored and secret.

From time to time, some reporters have confided to me that they are not promoted, not given choice assignments, and other career obstructions occur, because there is a “pedophile-homosexual underground” such as they claim at ABC News and elsewhere up and down the important media outlets and networks.

I have paid attention to these complaints. But I have cautioned our contacts that such finger-pointing might be perceived as just private gay-bashing UNLESS there is some angle, such as the news bosses and such are blackmailed into running or not running some corporate scandal—or like with George W. Bush, the private life details are used by sworn enemies of the U.S. to blackmail the White House, such as has occurred with Bush, Senior and Junior.

For example, two well-known radio commentators, whose programs are heard in most every important radio market in all 50 states, have homosexual situations that are used apparently to force them, among other ways, to slant things FOR the GOP and against Democrats.

Although their private lives raise many questions, so far the public generally does not know. As to them, at some point the line of privacy has to be crossed because of how it affects what goes on major radio commentary shows throughout the nation. (A tip-off is that they have few, if any, good advertisers. Is the GOP paying for them to be on the air?)

A key criterion: Do THEIR private-life arrangements help violate national security and aid those who would want to have America’s Hitler? And overthrow the American Republic and cancel the organic law, namely the U.S. Constitution and Bill Of Rights?

Remember: some outspoken sorts point, as to this, as to the homosexual rituals, even satanic versions, in forests and elsewhere by the German Nazi military and the Nazi secret political police, their Gestapo. This was done in furtherance of the German aristocracy’s plan to use Adolf Hitler for THEIR purposes.

(As to the Nazis and the occult and such as symbols, see the book The Spear Of Destiny by Trevor Ravenscroft, G.P. Putnam’s Sons, New York, 1973.)

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 25 Kingdom Of Jordan Link

(1/31/03)

Far too many Americans do not have a good handle on what is really happening. Is it because they are addicted, as to dope, on the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press?

A hopeful sign, however, lately is that a growing number of ordinary Americans are seeking additional data from certain Internet websites they have come to more and more respect.

Still in all, far too many click on nytimes.com, washingtonpost.com, and chicagotribune.com, for supposed “news”—that is, what we prefer to call “The Liars and Whores of the Press” (both men and women press prostitutes).

Left out by what we call the “news fakers” are historical as well as other related items to help explain current events.

BACKGROUND:

(1) In the 16th Century, Jordan was ruled by the Ottoman Turkish empire. The British grabbed land and power following World War One with the crumbling of the Ottoman Empire, a loser in that War. Formerly known as Trans-Jordan, the territory was separated from the Palestine mandate in 1920, and in 1921 placed under the rule of Abdullah ibn Hussein. Britain carved out the territory, ignoring natural boundaries, as if it were a regular checkerboard design.

In World War Two, Trans-Jordan was loyal to Great Britain. So, in 1946, Britain recognized Trans-Jordan as a separate state. And in 1946, Amir Abdullah assumed the title of King.

In 1951, King Abdullah was assassinated. His son, Talal, heir to the throne, was removed, called deposed, because he was mentally ill. Talal's son, Hussein, born in 1935, became the new King. The territory in 1946 was renamed The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan.

King Hussein had to walk a tightrope between Israel on the West and surrounding Arab dictators pushing nationalism.

Starting with King Abdullah and continuing for the 46 years of the reign of King Hussein, the American CIA heavily subsidized the monarchy. In effect, the various Directors of Central Intelligence were in charge of Jordan, and King Hussein was an obedient puppet.

On February 7, 1999, after 46 years on the throne, King Hussein died of cancer. Weeks prior, he unexpectedly removed his brother Prince Hassan, who had been heir apparent to the throne for some 34 years. King Hussein named his eldest son, Abdullah, age 37, as the new crown prince. Without any political experience to speak of, but a military leader, King Abdullah II was crowned on February 7, 1999.

(2) Two important events, related to this commentary, occurred in the summer of 1992. First, delivered to our public-access cable-TV Show was a file cabinet. It contained the travel documents, secret terrorist meeting codes, secret names and addresses, and methods of contacts between smugglers of weapons as provided to known worldwide terrorist groups, such as the deadly Abu Nidal Terrorist Gang. Included in the treasure trove of records were hand-written notations of some of the weapons providers, related notations, secret notebooks, copies of related telexes, and other communications.

These were the records of four lesbian women partners that included Hillary Rodham Clinton, whose husband Bill was then running for president, and her business partner, Diane Lewis, who ran in Chicago, a supposed firm refurbishing and selling to wealthy sheiks and such, large airplanes for their use. The lesbian link was important to the overall events.

Prior to taping our one-hour program, we became privy to the direct eyewitness testimony and interviews, further corroborating the self-explanatory secret documents. Our long reliable sources within and outside the government confirmed that the American CIA and the FBI—that is, America's secret political police—permitted and condoned this situation.

More about this first event later.

(3) The second event of the summer of 1992 revolved around a purported “Christian” television station at 38 South Peoria Street, Chicago, a few blocks from our cable-TV studio. Called Channel 38 TV, it had previously been owned and operated in cramped quarters elsewhere by the Catholic Archbishop of Chicago.

A head of Channel 38 at the time was linked to the Assembly of God. A close confidant of his was Diane Lewis. We found out that when Channel 38 bought the block square choice property, an American affiliate of Israeli intelligence put up $2 million to have Channel 38's the rogue international spy operation acting for the American CIA and foreign intelligence agencies—namely, Bank of Credit and Commerce International, BCCI, which continued to operate under alter egos and other names after BCCI supposedly went defunct in 1991.

A group calling themselves “Real Christians” in the summer of 1992, descended on Channel 38's headquarters. They marched with signs and placards, most stating: “CHANNEL 38, BOMBS INSTEAD OF BIBLES”.

They were referring to the details shown in the file cabinet of secret records—that the confidant of Channel 38's boss was supplying missile parts to known worldwide terrorists. The testimony and interviews showed that Diane Lewis used certain Channel 38 talk shows, taped and supplied to Mid-East outlets, as secret signals of upcoming meetings with terrorists. Certain props on the talk-show set were placed or moved as signals.

I was there as a TV journalist. I was sitting right outside the glass door entrance to Channel 38, with a video camera operated right behind my shoulders by someone else. The glass doors opened slightly from inside. Two officials of the TV station, second and third in command as they identified themselves, said to me: “Mr. Skolnick, you are not a Christian. We object to you being here. Why are you here?”

First, I explained about how the boss of Channel 38 reportedly received large profits from dealings with BCCI. They said: “Well, that is a private matter that does not effect us. Why are you here? You are not a Christian.”

I answered: “Where is there a law or regulation requiring a TV journalist like me, gathering news, to be a member of some specific religion?”

And I added: “I am here for humanitarian reasons. I found out from Israeli sources that they are grumbling about Channel 38. The Israelis keep invoking the biblical matter of an eye for an eye. They contend that Diane Lewis, a close confidant of the head man of Channel 38, supplied weaponry used to murder 42 Israelis at a facility in Buenos Aires, Argentina. They talk in sinister tones that there are approximately 42 people working inside this building, and the Bible says an eye for an eye. I am here to possibly stop further bloodshed.”

The two TV bosses simply dismissed me and my explanations, further stating: “You are not a Christian. We should not be talking to you. Get away from our building.”

(4) By way of the secret records and direct eyewitness testimony and

The Missing Diary Of Admiral Richard E. Byrd

“I must write this diary in secrecy and obscurity. It concerns my arctic flight of the nineteenth day of February in the year of nineteen hundred and forty-seven. “There comes a time when the rationality of men must fade into insignificance, and one must accept the inevitability of the Truth! I am not at liberty to disclose the following documentation at this writing, perhaps it shall never see the light of public scrutiny, but I must do my Duty and record here for all to read one day in a world which hopefully the greed and exploitation of certain of mankind can no longer suppress that which is Truth.”

—Admiral Richard E. Byrd (from the Introduction)

interviews, we became aware that Hillary Rodham Clinton and her business partners, including Diane Lewis, had huge financial links to the Royal Bank of Jordan as well as Royal Jordanian Airlines (ALIA), and certain related entities and enterprises linked to each. For example, at her Chicago-area residence, Diane Lewis had living with her an immediate direct relative of the top official running Royal Jordanian Airlines.

During the 1992 presidential primary in New York, a large newspaper there ran a story ignored by others in the press. Namely, that Bill Clinton's wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, and her law partner in the Rose Law Firm, of Little Rock, Arkansas, Vincent W. Foster, Jr., were accused by federal bank regulators, including the private central bank, The Federal Reserve Board, of being implicated in massive overseas money laundering. Implicit in the story was that there were serious violations of U.S. national security. We became privy to the reporters' original story, censored in part by their editor, which left out details like the following:

Such as the details of Hillary Rodham Clinton's and Foster's massive secret dealings with and through the Royal Bank of Jordan and related entities and enterprises, and purported shipments of contraband, including weaponry purportedly to worldwide terrorists through Royal Jordanian Airlines.

We were heckled, by the way, for our exclusive stories, ahead of other commentators, that Bill and Hillary were a "CIA couple". From an early age, when each was separately in university, each had separate covert activities they did for the American CIA. Theirs was a "marriage of convenience", often imposed on CIA couples even if they are not entirely socially or sexually compatible.

During the surfacing of the Juanita Broadrick rape matter, she was quoted as stating that after Bill Clinton forced sex on her, he said: "Honey, there is nothing to worry about. I have been sterile since I had mumps as a teenager." If so, then WHO fathered daughter Chelsea? Some point to her lips being much like those of Webster Hubbell, the federal jail-bird who had been at one time Chief of the Arkansas Supreme Court, and Mayor of Little Rock, and law partner of Hillary and Foster. He had been sent to federal jail on charges he embezzled large sums from the Rose Law Firm.

(5) In the summer of 1992, we taped and caused to be cablecast a one-hour program of our public-access cable-TV program Broadsides, about Diane Lewis and Channel 38 TV. Up on the screen we put samples of the numerous secret records, telexes, secret notebooks and such. In September 1992, the New York Times reported that Diane Lewis was arrested on federal criminal charges that she caused shipments of missile parts in violation of U.S. export provisions. Her address, however, was not shown as Chicago, but rather, Lancaster, Pennsylvania. She apparently had links to CIA firms in Lancaster, making secret technology items.

According to The Outlaw Bank: A Wild Ride Into The Secret Heart Of BCCI, by Jonathan Beaty and S.C. Gwynne, 1993, Random House, New York, page 360:

"A self-made millionaire and defense contractor, (James) Guerin founded International Signal Controls in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, which manufactured exotic fusing devices and other highly secret technology. He had business associates such as onetime (Reagan Administration) Secretary of State Alexander Haig, and when ISC merged with Ferranti, the British arms and electronics firm, Admiral Bobby Inman, the former deputy director of the CIA (and top National Security Agency official), joined the Ferranti-ISC board of directors. Presumably to keep an eye on American secrets." (Guerin was tried for massive fraud in the U.S.)

Diane Lewis's criminal case came up about the time her business partner Hillary Rodham Clinton became the new First Lady, upon the January presidential inauguration of Bill Clinton. Ms. Lewis's case was heard by a federal judge in closed session. Ms. Lewis's attorney, invoking White House and Justice Department clout, told the judge that Ms. Lewis is a business partner of the new First Lady. And further, the judge was told Ms. Lewis and her three business partners, including Hillary, listed as un-indicted co-conspirators, agreed to becoming snitches for the American CIA. Ms. Lewis was turned loose.

Thereafter, Hillary put me and my TV associates on an "enemies list" to be unlawfully harassed. Our lawsuit against Hillary was dismissed in Chicago's federal district court without us ever being allowed to actually be in a courtroom for a hearing.

Hillary Rodham Clinton's apparent links to the Royal Bank of Jordan and related enterprises and entities, as well as Royal Jordanian Airlines, continue to this date. Hillary privately profited from supplying nuclear components to North Korea, where that airline reportedly shipped in, for her, to North Korea, items forbidden by U.S. citizens to be sending to North Korea. Further, Hillary has apparently used that bank and related enterprises and entities to launder massive amounts of paper currencies she and others had reason to believe were superior quality counterfeit versions of U.S. and other currencies. (See prior parts of this series.)

Knowledgeable sources contend the January 2003 Associated Press story was fraudulent and misleading in dealing with the burglary of the residence of Alan Greenspan, Commissar of the Federal Reserve. The wire service asserted that the purpose of the burglary, with the burglars having purportedly long cased the place, was to get at the jewelry of Greenspan's wife, Andrea Mitchell, Washington whitewasher for NBC, owned by General Electric.

Our sources contend the break-in was carefully planned and executed, to get at the secret notebooks of Greenspan as to some of the following:

- How much gold the Federal Reserve will have to somehow procure from Canadian and South African mines to carry out an expected or intended dealing with a financial meltdown. Namely, this by way of a gold standard/gold exchange policy which Greenspan of late has been promoting. Prior to becoming Fed boss, he promoted gold. Upon becoming head of the sinister PRIVATE central bank, he downplayed gold, upon orders, and promoted paper money. The monopoly press ignores what was shown in the 1970s, namely there is no actual world-bullion-grade gold at Fort Knox. The bulk of the gold depository was quietly shipped in 1968 to stem a run on the gold of the Bank of England. (Hard-hitting independent journalist Tom Valentine, and his then publication National Tattler, now defunct, documented the absence of real gold at Fort Knox. At the time, his publication had a campaign demanding the Fort Knox vaults be opened for auditing.)

• Details in secret notebooks of Greenspan as to the North Korea dealings in forbidden nuclear components by Hillary Rodham Clinton, now a U.S. Senator from New York. Reportedly implicated are enterprises and entities linked or part of the Royal Bank of Jordan, and reputed shipments arranged through Royal Jordanian Airlines. Release of the secret Greenspan notebooks would give an additional motive why, in July 1993, shortly after becoming Clinton White House deputy counsel, Foster was murdered and covered up by Bill and Hillary Clinton as a supposed "suicide".

During 2002, our TV program put on the screen documents relating to Hillary and illustrating her supplying nuclear components for her apparent profit to North Korea.

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 26 Disasters Of Convenience (2/2/03)

1. On January 16, 2003, space shuttle Columbia lifted off into space. On that same day, the residence of Federal Reserve Commissar Alan Greenspan was burglarized. As described by the Associated Press story, 1/22/03, the maid had gone shopping. The residence had apparently been "cased" by the burglars for some time. According to AP, the thieves were looking for the jewelry of Greenspan's wife, Andrea Mitchell. (What they were really looking for is described in Part 25 of this series.)

2. On February 1, 2003, space shuttle Columbia exploded. Early reports, however, denied that it had exploded. On that afternoon, on network television, a person described as Andrea Mitchell told how the explosion of space shuttle Challenger, on January 28, 1986, was a convenient disaster as to the then President Ronald Reagan. At the time, Reagan was being heckled with charges that he was implicated in the Iran-Contra situation. Charges were that funds secretly given to the Iranians were skimmed off to finance the counter-revolutionaries in Nicaragua, to evade the Boland Amendment, prohibiting the U.S. from financing the Contras, as they were called.

At the time, Daddy Bush, as Vice President, denied he knew anything about this. He said he was "out of the loop" and thus not told what was going on. Later facts brought out by the Independent Counsel showed otherwise. In later years, some congressmen and other insiders admitted that they thought about impeaching President Reagan, but thought it would be a bad thing for the nation. Working on a report on the Iran-Contra mess was a commission headed by Senator John Tower (R-TX). For short, it was called the Tower Commission. In 1991, when he was unfairly defamed in being rejected by the Daddy Bush Administration for Secretary of Defense, Tower began grumbling he was going to bring out some dirty secrets of the elder Bush, then President. Conveniently, Tower perished with his daughter in an apparent sabotaged plane crash in April 1991. About the same time, Senator John Heinz (R-PA), heir to the Heinz Ketchup fortune, was himself snuffed out when his airplane was hit from below by a helicopter. Although some believed it was foul play, others contended the helicopter pilot, examining whether the Heinz plane could not lower the landing wheels, slammed into the plane. Others raised the sinister version that the whirlybird pilot wanted somehow to commit "suicide". Heinz' widow married Senator John Kerry (D-MA), long connected to the American CIA. Senator Kerry, in investigating the dope traffic through his subcommittee, conveniently covered-up the role of the espionage agency money laundry, Bank of Credit and Commerce International, BCCI, that also financed the campaigns of a group of senators, including Kerry.

3. Those close to Greenspan were in a position to know that he was getting tired of being ordered to do certain acts to unlawfully, in violation of Anti-Trust laws, force down the price of gold, among other things he was compelled by the aristocracy to do after being installed by them as head of their PRIVATE central bank. The "black bag" job on Greenspan's residence was the last straw.

Despite negative acts Andrea Mitchell may have done prior to 2/1/03, she did a brave and patriotic act, good for common Americans, to implicitly draw an analogy. That is, the space shuttle Columbia explosion was a "Disaster of Convenience", just like that of Challenger. It served to divert attention, for a period, from the growing anti-war sentiment as to George W. Bush's plan to invade Iraq to remove his father's private business partner from the 1980s, Saddam Hussein. Saddam and Daddy Bush shared billions of dollars from extortion practiced on the oil-rich weak sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf.

The secret partnership was the subject, in 1990-91, of an unpublicized federal lawsuit in Chicago. I was the only journalist at the court hearing, and in the back of the courtroom interviewed the participants. (Details are in our website story "The Secrets of Timothy McVeigh".) Like so many other once partnerships, these partners had a falling out.

As to how the Daddy Bush Whitehouse supplied the beginnings of Iraq's nuclear quest and that of bio-chemical weapons, see the heavily documented book The Spider's Web by Alan Friedman, investigative journalist for the Financial Times of London. How did Daddy Bush escape impeachment?

4. On September 11, 2001, for some time after being informed that one and then another plane slammed into the twin towers in lower Manhattan, George W. Bush, the occupant and resident of the White House, described by some as a usurper of presidential powers, continued to joke with school children about stories about goats. On Black Tuesday, Bush did not by phone, radio, or otherwise, immediately communicate with his Generals and Admirals. There was a strange stand-down of the military, described by some as part of foreknowledge, a deliberate plan.

On February 1, 2003, on the other hand, White House occupant Bush immediately was brought from Camp David to the White House, where he began giving orders of what was to be done.

5. Astute commentators and investigators, such as Michael Ruppert, have raised the question that there was prior knowledge, at the highest level, of 9/11. The purpose, as described by Ruppert and others, was to sidestep and head off, by the Black Tuesday disaster, the expected and impending financial meltdown of the United States.

By the disaster of convenience, the explosion of Challenger, the Reagan/Elder Bush White House evaded the consequences of their treasonous acts and doings in the Iran-Contra Affair leading back to the treachery of the October Surprise, where incumbent Jimmy Carter was shown to be a wimp because he could not get the release of the 52 U.S. hostages held by the Iranians.

Daddy Bush, in a Paris suburb, secretly taped by the French CIA, paid off the Iranians to keep the hostages until the Reagan-Bush ticket won the election and were inaugurated. The hostages were released at the very moment Reagan was sworn in as the new President, in January 1981. By multiple gunmen shooting at him, however, a few weeks later, Reagan was warned he has to follow ORDERS. The failed assassination taught Reagan a lesson.

6. A flood of misleading and contradictory reports by the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press covered up any possible foul play in the disaster in 1986 of Challenger. No official U.S. investigation was made of the high-tech Soviet ship located right near where Challenger lifted off and then very shortly thereafter exploded and the capsule fell into the ocean. The explosion was explained away, conveniently, by a possible failing of a retaining ring in the space shuttle, referred to as an "O-ring". Naturally, the public, beat on the brain repeatedly with that explanation, more or less accepted that. That was before widespread talk-radio, before Internet, before more alternate news reports now available.

7. As to the explosion of Columbia space shuttle, Americans will no doubt be beat on the head again by the pressfakers—such as that some tiles came loose, causing the disaster.

As to a split in the Aristocracy that would explain several strange events, the "Liars and Whores of the Press", as we see fit to call them, will not point to various happenings as possibly part of the same scenario: Such as Black Tuesday and the growing understanding by careful investigators that there was prior knowledge. Such as counter-terror expert, FBI top official John P. O'Neill, who resigned just prior to 9/11, because the Bush White House ordered him to stop investigating Osama bin Laden. Why? Because of the Bush Crime Family being in partnership with the bin Laden Family that has NOT been on the outs with Osama. O'Neill became the new security chief of the World Trade Center, and although originally safe outside the buildings, was somehow lured inside to his death. (Visit earlier parts of this series for related details.)

Such as top officials of both the current Bush Administration being criminally implicated with the downfall of Enron, WorldCom, and Arthur Andersen. Such as top officials of both the Republican National Committee and the Democratic National Committee being likewise criminally implicated.

Such as George W. Bush being blackmailed by the Red Chinese Secret Police to get U.S. military secrets out of him. Why? Because they and others, otherwise, may publicize the no longer secret cavorting of Bush with his male sex-mate. It is not, as we carefully have described, a PRIVATE matter, but a matter of national security. (See prior parts of this series.)

8. Lawyers know how to split hairs to fudge on the truth. Bill Clinton's understanding of sex is when the male penetrates the female. Hence, Monica Lewinsky performing oral sex with him, was not, according to Clinton, "sex with that woman". In the Columbia disaster, NASA said it was too early to know what happened. Despite that, a spokesman for the newly created Homeland Security Department boldly stated that no ground-to-air missile brought down the space shuttle at 207,000 feet above Earth. What about a water-to-air projectile? Conveniently left unsaid was any discussion of Star Wars, lasers, or particle beams possibly aimed at the space shuttle from satellite. Some reports contend a satellite mysteriously changed course just before the explosion of Columbia.

And what about HAARP, the super-beam technology particularly good at putting many millions of watts scorching particularly at the level above Earth that the Columbia was reportedly at when it exploded? The U.S. Military has bragged that they are always ten years ahead in technology where the ordinary people think the military is at. Savvy sorts contend particle-beam technology is old hat. That there is a so far publicly unnamed technology that can, through electromagnetic or other pulsing, bring down airplanes (such as that of Wellstone, where a witness said there was a strange flash near the plane's tail just as it dived into a crash).

9. When there is a political assassination, the monopoly press NEVER raises the obvious question: WHO BENEFITS? If there is a disaster, and possible foul play is not ruled out, WHO BENEFITS?

Research note: In Part 25 of this series, I left out the fact that most all the details contained in that Part 25 story were in a highly detailed petition, prepared by me and submitted to the Federal Communications Commission, shortly after 1992. We asked that Channel 38 TV have its broadcast license revoked for having assisted in the coverup of Hillary Rodham Clinton and her business partners, including Diane Lewis, who was, in September 1992, arrested for sending missile parts to known worldwide terrorists. And that the higher ups at Channel 38 aided and abetted these offenses in violation of federal criminal provisions as to exports. Highly political under the Clinton Administration, and long known as corrupt, the FCC refused us a hearing on our highly detailed petition asking for Channel 38 TV Chicago to be appropriately punished as a licensed TV broadcaster.

THE SMOKEY GOD AND OTHER INNER EARTH MYSTERIES

Half of the book consists of a reprint of the classic SMOKY GODS written by a Swedish fisherman who claims he found his way inside the Earth and had an amazing encounter with a race of super-wise giants who have lived inside the Earth since ancient times. Book also contains evidence that at least some UFOs may come from inside Earth and are piloted by a race of super-beings who have survived, largely unknown to the surface world. Includes interview with an inner Earth inhabitant from a city beneath Mt. Shasta.

INVISIBILITY & LEVITATION : A HOW-TO GUIDE TO PERSONAL PERFORMANCE

BY COMMANDER X

Methods utilized by occultists, military, and martial artists to perfect the art of levitation and invisibility. Throughout history only a "super" few have learned to accomplish such seemingly impossible tasks. Were the blocks of the pyramids levitated into place? This is the only how-to book on a very strange topic.

EVIL AGENDA OF THE SECRET GOVERNMENT

BY TIM SWARTZ

Exposes Project "Paper Clip" and the underground UFO bases of Hitler's elite scientific corps. Elements of the CIA and the Secret Government have imitated real alien abductions to convince the public of interplanetary invasion so New World Order gang can rule the Earth unchallenged.

Project Paperclip was the secret plan that took Nazi scientists and psychiatrists out of Germany and into the upper echelons of the U.S. governmental, scientific, and academic realms.

FALLEN ANGELS And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"? Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

This is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text followed by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

This book examines the controversy of the Book of Enoch and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. It tells why Church fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels. (4.25"x7", 514 pp.)

MONEY AND THE CONSPIRACY OF EVIL CONSPIRACY CON 2002 LECTURE (2 hrs.) By Eustace Mullins

Sixty years ago Eustace Mullins was a protégé of literary giant Ezra Pound, who understood central banking and its relationship with world unrest. He has been a respected researcher for over 50 years, and has since authored many books on conspiracy, including Secrets Of The Federal Reserve and The World Order.

Using his recent travel experiences and Orwell's 1984 as examples, Eustace discusses the irony of Homeland Security and how Americans are now treated as "Enemies of the State". He then describes the real manipulators behind all major wars, the Cold War, the Stock Market, the Medical Scam, 9/11, terrorism, and more.

Eustace gives a history lesson you won't forget—nor should you!

Vatican Assassins

Wounded In The house of My friends

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's ungodly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

—The Book Reader, America's most independent review of new titles, Fall/Winter 2001/2002

"Probably of all books which could be called 'conspiracy oriented', this is the grand-daddy. This is the Big One, I mean it...."

"It's one of those books that, even if you're a cynic and can come to terms with only half of it, it changes everything."

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen."

— Back Cover, Vol. I

"Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you. (God!) You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose." — Esu "Jesus" Sananda (Vol. II)

More Quotes From Volume II

"Be not in fear of the changes that are upon you, for they are a very necessary part of the [planetary] transition. The Earth will heave to and fro, and many wondrous things will you experience, but lose not your sight upon the final goal. We will always be there with you, and we are but a call away."

— Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec

"You live in perhaps the most unique time that your planet will ever experience—COMING OUT OF IGNORANCE (DARKNESS) AND INTO KNOWLEDGE (LIGHT). Would it not be wise to take full advantage of this exquisite learning environment?!"

— Sanat Kumara ("Grandfather")

"The physical body is 'merely' a conduit for the interaction into and the interfacing with the physical experience. I say 'merely' because that body is a most exquisite creation indeed and poorly understood by your current level of so-called medical science."

— Master Hilarion

"Be at peace, you who acknowledge and take within these messages of Higher Guidance, for you are being given that which you will need, in the way of instruction, to meet and surmount these challenges ahead."

Fuhrer Ashcroft's Patriot Act II Shreds America's Soul Public Exposure Only Antidote

3/7/03 RICK MARTIN

“Our rulers can have authority over such natural rights only as we have submitted to them.”

— Thomas Jefferson, 1782

“This proposed law would radically expand law enforcement and intelligence gathering authorities, reduce or eliminate judicial oversight over surveillance, authorize secret arrests, create a DNA database based on unchecked executive ‘suspicion’, create new death penalties, and even seek to take American citizenship away from persons who belong to, or support, ‘disfavored’ political groups.”

— Dr. David Cole, Law professor at Georgetown University, author of Terrorism And The Constitution, commenting on the “secret” Patriot Act II legislation.

Thank God somebody is paying attention to the Washington Gestapo. On the February 7 broadcast of Bill Moyers’ program NOW on PBS, he exposed the “secret”

NEWEST OFFERINGS AT WISDOM BOOKS

RULE BY SECRECY:

The Hidden History That Connects
The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids
by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news.

$15.00 (+S/H)
Code: RBS (1.0 lb.)

And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

9/11: THE GREAT ILLUSION

End Game Of The Illuminati. Our Choice: Fear Or Love?

NEWEST BOOKLET BY GEORGE HUMPHREY

[Excerpts from the author's Introduction:]
Though I knew in my heart from day one that the 9/11 WTC/Pentagon assault was a staged event, I told myself that I would not write another booklet. Plus, I had had one too many conversations with dear and educated friends who had gone absolutely ballistic when even the concept that anything other than the reported "news" could be behind this episode.

$3.50 (+$1.50 S/H)*
Code: TGI (0.25 lb.)

However, as I listen to the media and their 24/7 frenzy of hateful misinformation, I knew it was time to act. This booklet is not for everyone. But it is for those who love their country and have that rare quality called an open mind.

9/11: The Great Illusion is intentionally kept short so as many as possible will have access to this material. People must wake up to some cold hard realities: A small occult group—The Illuminati—have been organized for centuries, and have control of our economy, culture, and political organizations. These people have ZERO respect for our Republic and Bill Of Rights. They are behind a vast majority of the wars and revolutions, and are behind the events of September 11th.

This booklet is presenting evidence that goes against everything that the mainstream media and political structure would have people believe.

ALIEN AGENDA:

Investigating The Extraterrestrial
Presence Among Us

BY JIM MARRS

$15.00 (+S/H)
Code: ALA (1.0 lb.)

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. As his title indicates, the author has concluded that UFOs are piloted by extraterrestrials of various types and with diverse motives. However, rather than taking that conclusion for granted, Marrs guides his readers through 50 years of UFO history that includes some less-traveled byways, off-ramps, and dead ends. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic.

Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To Personal Growth

$14.99 (+S/H)
Code: EDE (1.0 lb.)

Here is Dan Millman's magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve "gateways" or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth. Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant's ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a "numerologist". Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience.

Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: "The Practice Of Enlightenment"—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

BEN & JERRY'S ICE CREAM FOUNDER COLLIDES WITH MEDIA FRAUD

Ben Cohen—of Ben & Jerry's ice cream fame—is these days the director of a popular activist-oriented organization called TrueMajority, headquartered in downtown Burlington, Vermont.

According to a story by Susan Green in the 2/19/03 issue of a Burlington, Vermont publication called Seven Days, right now this local prominent entrepreneur is trying to tell people that a war in Iraq would wreck the U.S. economy, breed more terrorism, and take a terrible human toll.

Adopting faxing and e-mail as modern equivalents of "the pen is mightier than the sword" motto, TrueMajority was launched last June (before the Iraqi situation heated up) as a peaceful voice to pressure the government to move some tax dollars, now going to the military, into pressing social needs.

Cohen pointed out the $39 billion allocated for children's health, $31 billion for education, yet $548 billion for the military. (And if we included all the secret black-budget projects, that military money number would likely triple.) "I think we got better things to fight for."

Cohen's original idea was to simplify activism through a mechanism wherein people who join TrueMajority receive e-mail alerts about key matters before Congress, and at the same time—with a few mouse-clicks on their computer screen—they can quickly send electronic faxes expressing their views to their Washington representatives.

Cohen said: "We had 30,000 people sign up [initially]. And we've grown exponentially since then, at 20% a month. TrueMajority now has 130,000 members." That's a lively group.

The e-mail and faxes continue. But when the drums for war in Iraq began their incessant beating, attention shifted quite a bit to address that dangerous push. Meanwhile, the mind-control spin from Washington is aggressively equating honest dissent with traitors. (No surprise there.)

Cohen said: "The bulk of our work is now anti-war. Most other issues pale in comparison. We realized it was crucial to build an opposition when the Bush Administration started telling us we were traitors and to watch what we say. I was amazed at how effective that was in casting a chill on the country."

Starting back in October, his organization began working together with some like-minded groups—such as MoveOn, Working Assets, Business Leaders For Sensible Priorities, and the more recently very outspoken Not In Our Name—to start a national newspaper campaign to inform the public. This was later followed by the pursuit of television spots, starting in January, particularly as more and more famous celebrities wanted to come on board to oppose the insane push for war.

But guess what these well-intentioned ambassadors of peace found out? As the Seven Days article puts it: "They were stunned to discover that the national airwaves are restricted when it comes to alternative viewpoints."

Imagine that! Not exactly news to you faithful readers who help, as best you can, to keep The SPECTRUM afloat.

As Ben Cohen put it: "We initially wanted to run the ads across the country on the major networks. They all refused. It's OK for them to present one-sided news reports every day, but we can't even pay to get our message out there. Instead, we could only buy time with local cable companies in New York, Los Angeles, and Washington DC."

As "Luck" would have it, one recent TV ad did manage to get some national play when it ran as part of a report on antiwar activism on CNN's Connie Chung Tonight. Rather than featuring popular Hollywood or rap-music celebrities, Ben Cohen and cofounder Jerry Greenfield talked about the economic disaster from a war, and concluded: "Take it from a couple of old ice cream guys. Demonstrate. Act."

We here at The SPECTRUM loudly applaud grassroots activism from sincere groups such as TrueMajority. No situation is more feared by the world control elite.

Except perhaps for one: the power of actions taken as a result of knowing The Truth.

As Mark Twain explained about words: "The difference between the right word and the almost right word is the difference between lightning and the lightning bug."

Actions taken in ignorance—no matter how good the intentions—are easily rendered ineffective or even twisted to produce undesired results. Actions taken from a position of KNOWING stand a much better chance of success—sometimes able to strike with the power of that proverbial lightning bolt.

So thank you who help us to help others make their actions really count, through our sharing of The Truth. We can never have too many lightning bolts on the side of Good these days.

— Dr. Edwin M. Young, Editor-In-Chief

We cover a "full spectrum" of news and information to help you follow the First Law of The Creation. The Highest (First) Command of The Creation states: "Achieve the wisdom of knowledge of Truth, as this will enable you to wisely follow the Laws of The Creation."

The SPECTRUM can be regarded as class notes for a graduate-level course in The Truth that no university would dare teach.
