Naturally, the common people don't want war, but after all, it is the leaders of a country who determine the policy. And it is always a simple matter to drag people along, whether it is a democracy, or a fascist dictatorship, or a parliament, or a communist dictatorship.

Voice or no voice, the people can always be brought to the bidding of the leaders. This is easy.

All you have to do is to tell them they are being attacked, and denounce the pacifists for lack of patriotism and exposing the country to danger. It works the same in every country.

REPORTERS LAUGH AT BUSH - REICH PROPAGANDA

From a reliable source at the yahoogroups.com website, 2/27/03:

Ari Is Literally Laughed Off The Stage
By White House Reporters

After taking stenography of Bushit for more than 2 years, White House reporters may be finally awakening from their collective coma.

This week's most important story is Bush's efforts to buy a majority of votes on the U.N. Security Council.

But when reporters pressed Ari about the terms of these deals, Ari feigned pure unadulterated outrage.

"I haven't seen the story. And you already have the answer, about what this will be decided on. But think about the implications of what you're saying. You're saying that the leaders of other nations are buyable. And that is not an acceptable proposition."

Suddenly, a remarkable thing happened—the reporters LAUGHED.

They laughed LOUD.

And they laughed so loud that Ari turned on his heels and marched right off the stage.

Will this be reported? Will reporters follow up on Bush's global vote-buying effort? Will this be THE lie that broke the camel's back? Stay tuned!

Sometimes miracles happen. Of course there was safety in numbers, but what better kind of message to send to the Bush Administration's professional "baloney makers" than that their product is finally getting to be a bit too rancid to swallow—even by the ones with iron stomachs.

Furthermore, how about this strong message to the Bush Administration:

SUIT CHALLENGES BUSH WAR AUTHORITY

From the Associated Press, 2/14/03:
[quoting]

A group of U.S. soldiers, parents of soldiers, and six U.S. House members filed a lawsuit in federal court Thursday seeking to stop the President from launching a war against Iraq without a declaration of war from Congress.

The lawsuit seeks an immediate injunction against Bush and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld to prevent them from launching an invasion of Iraq.

Reps. John Conyers, D-Michigan, and the other plaintiffs in the lawsuit say a resolution passed by Congress in October did not specifically declare war and unlawfully ceded the decision to Bush.

Conyers cited an excerpt from Article 1, Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution that states: "Congress shall have power...to declare war."

"Get it? Only Congress!" Conyers said Thursday at a news conference in Washington.

John Bonifaz, the Boston attorney who filed the lawsuit, said Bush is rushing to war without seeking approval or even a thorough debate by Congress.

"We have a message for President Bush today: read the Constitution!" Bonifaz said.

"The president is not a king!" he said. "He does not have the power to wage war against another country absent a declaration of war from Congress."

Congress has not formally declared a war since World War II.

A similar lawsuit filed against Bush's father before the Gulf War by 54 members of Congress was denied by a federal judge in December 1990.

That judge said he agreed in principle that the president must seek congressional authorization for war, but said the elder President Bush had not clearly committed to a course of action. The judge also noted that only about 10% of the Congress had asked for the injunction—a percentage he said wasn't representative of the entire body.

Bonifaz said this new lawsuit is different because in addition to the six members of Congress, soldiers have asked for the injunction.

"They are facing the possibility of death" he said.

One of the plaintiffs, Nancy Lessin, said the people planning the war aren't facing the possibility their loved ones will be killed. She said she has 25-year-old twin stepsons, one of whom is in the Marines.

"We'd like to challenge George Bush to send one of his twins to war. Then let's have a discussion about whether or not we should go to war!" she said. The president has 21-year-old twin daughters.

Bonifaz said several similar lawsuits filed by soldiers during the Vietnam War were unsuccessful. But he said those lawsuits failed because the courts found Congress had taken concrete steps to authorize a war, including appropriating money and authorizing the draft.

The other members of Congress named as plaintiffs are: Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio; Jesse Jackson Jr., D-Illinois; Jim McDermott, D-Washington; Jose Serrano, D-New York; and Sheila Jackson Lee, D-Texas.

Other plaintiffs include a member of the Massachusetts National Guard who was recently activated, an Air Force Reservist from Massachusetts, and a U.S. Marine stationed in the Persian Gulf, Bonifaz said. Their identities are not being made public, Bonifaz said.

The atmosphere of dissent among such a large percentage of the American people over a war with Iraq, especially given our precarious economy, is enough to maybe change the outcome of this kind of lawsuit this time around.

And Bush's main partner-puppet in crime is under similar heat on the other side of the pond:

BLAIR FACES BIGGEST EVER REVOLT, STUNNED BY REBEL VOTES

From The (London) Guardian newspaper, 2/26/03: [quoting]

121 Labour Members Vote Against War, Biggest Ever Revolt Against A Government,
Tory Support Helps Save PM

Tony Blair's Iraqi war strategy was shaken to the core last night when 121 Labour backbenchers defied a three-line whip to join a cross-party revolt and tell the prime minister that the case for military action against Saddam Hussein is not yet made.

The vote, which came at the end of an impassioned and impressive six-hour debate in the House of Commons, dramatically reshapes the debate for the three crucial weeks ahead.

The scale of the revolt, the biggest within a governing party for more than a century, saw Mr. Blair's plea for endorsement of his pro-UN approach to disarming the Iraqi regime rejected in favour of a "not yet" amendment by 198 rebels, including 121 Labour MPs, 52 Liberal Democrats, 13 Conservatives, and 12 nationalists. The vote against the amendment was 393, with Iain Duncan Smith leading most Tory MPs into the Blairite lobby.

Jubilant rebels rubbed home their point when the bland main motion backing Mr. Blair's position was carried by 434 to 124. Fifty-nine Labour MPs voted against.

The rebellion spread far beyond the hard core of 30 to 40 leftwing MPs who have consistently opposed Western military interventions. It easily surpassed the 67 who rebelled against disability cuts in May 1999, and the 47-strong revolt over lone parents' benefits in December 1997.

Pressures from the common people are making the professional politicians, supposedly representing their constituents, nervous on both sides of the pond and perhaps brave enough to at least show some united display of conscience on behalf of those whom they represent.

VETERAN U.S. DIPLOMAT RESIGNS TO PROTEST IRAQ WAR

From the Associated Press, 2/27/03:
[quoting]

Veteran U.S. Diplomat Resigns Over Iraq

ATHENS, Greece — A veteran U.S. diplomat based in Greece has resigned to protest President Bush's "fervent pursuit of war with Iraq".

J. Brady Kiesling, who served as political officer at the Athens embassy, reportedly said in a resignation letter to Secretary of State Colin Powell that he left the diplomatic service because of his disagreement over the Bush Administration's Iraq policy.

"Our fervent pursuit of war with Iraq is driving us to squander the international legitimacy that has been America's most potent weapon of both offense and defense since the days of Woodrow Wilson" Kiesling wrote, according to the New York Times.

The U.S. Embassy in Athens confirmed Thursday that the career diplomat had recently resigned "for personal reasons" and embassy officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed the contents of the letter but could not provide a copy.

Kiesling could not be reached for comment. Embassy officials said Kiesling was still in Greece but no longer at his former office.

Of course the official version of this story turned the event inside out. Is it really any wonder that the American public doesn't know what to think about important matters?!

Meanwhile, here's yet another little business-as-usual deal to consider besides the fraud of war with Iraq:

RUMSFELD'S BUSINESS TIES TO NORTH KOREA'S NUKES

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 3/2/03: [quoting]

Global Eye—Swing Blades

By Chris Floyd

It's a well-known fact—oft detailed in these pages—that the boys in the Bush Regime swing both ways. We speak, of course, of their proclivity—their apparently uncontrollable craving—for stuffing their trousers with loot from both sides of whatever war or military crisis is going at the moment.

That's why it came as no surprise to read last week that, just before he joined the Regime's crusade against evildoers everywhere (especially rogue states that pursue the development of terrorist-ready weapons of mass destruction), Pentagon warlord Donald Rumsfeld was trousering the proceeds from a $200 million deal to send the latest nuclear technology—including plenty of terrorist-ready "dirty bomb" material—to the rogue state of North Korea, Neue Zürcher Zeitung reports.

In 1998, Rumsfeld was citizen chairman of the Congressional Ballistic Missile Threat Commission, charged with reducing nuclear proliferation. Rumsfeld and the Republican-heavy commission came down hard on the deal Bill Clinton had brokered with North Korea to avert a war in 1994: Pyongyang would give up its nuclear weapons program in exchange for normalized relations with the United States, plus the construction of two non-weaponized nuclear plants to generate electricity. The plants were to be built by an international consortium of government-backed business interests called KEDO.

Rum deal, said Rummy: Those nasty Northies would surely turn the peaceful nukes to nefarious ends. What's more, even the most innocuous nuclear plant generates mounds of radioactive waste that could be made into "dirty bombs"—hand-carried weapons capable of killing thousands of people. The agreement was big bad juju that threatened the whole world, Rumsfeld declared.

Of course, that didn't prevent him from trying to profit from it. Even while chairing commission meetings on the "dire threat" posed by the Korean program, Rumsfeld was junketing to Zurich for board meetings of the Swiss-based energy technology giant, ABB, where he was a top director. And what was ABB doing at the time? Why, negotiating that $200 million deal with North Korea to provide equipment and services for the KEDO nuclear reactors, of course!

Yes, nuclear proliferation is ugly stuff—but you might as well squeeze a few dollars from it, right? A smart guy always plays the angles—and, as the hero-worshipping American media never stops telling us, Rumsfeld is one smart guy.

In fact, he's so smart that he's now playing dumb. A Pentagon spokesman says Rumsfeld "can't recall" discussing the Korean deal at ABB board meetings.

How Can Electricity Help Restore Health?

And his erstwhile ABB corporate colleagues say that it's possible the subject never came up. Of course it didn't; going into the nuclear business with a Communist tyranny that very nearly launched a nuclear war against the West just four years before, in a deal that involved high-level negotiations with the governments of the United States, South Korea, Japan, and the European Union—that's certainly the kind of thing that would be handled by a couple of junior executives in a branch office somewhere. Nothing for the bigwigs—especially hard-wired government players like Rumsfeld—to trouble their pretty heads about. A perfectly reasonable explanation.

And so Rumsfeld joins the roster of Bush Regime multimillionaires who once trumpeted their "business savvy" as selling points for their right to national leadership but now claim to have been "hands-off" figureheads who had no idea what their companies were up to.

Bush, in his sinkhole of insider trading and stockholder scamming at Harken; Cheney, making fat deals with Saddam Hussein (yes, after the Gulf War) and muddying up the corporate books at Halliburton; Army Secretary Thomas White, gaming the power grid and stealing millions for Enron in the manufactured California "energy crisis"—all of them went from mighty moguls to mere "front men" the instant their corruption was brought to light. None of it was their fault; nothing ever is.

Whatever happened to Bush's much-trumpeted "era of responsibility?" These guys are not only chiselers, hustlers, hypocrites, and war profiteers—they're a bunch of gutless wonders as well. So you'll pardon us if we are just the tiniest bit cynical about the "moral arguments for war" and other such buckets of warm spit this gang is now forcing down the world's throat.

And what became of that 1994 pact with North Korea? UN inspectors entered the country to make sure the weapons program was put on ice. Pyongyang signed a number of lucrative deals with various politically-connected Western firms, like ABB, to build the promised energy plants, while waiting for the normalization of relations with the United States to begin—a move which most observers thought would set North Korea on a course toward China-style "moderation" of its monolithic regime.

But normalization never came. Clinton, pressured by rightwing forces (such as Rumsfeld's commission) who opposed any truck whatsoever with godless commies, did his usual folding number, with much windy suspiration of forced breath—and no action.

The KEDO companies pocketed Pyongyang's cash but dithered about the actual construction. Pyongyang—while not exactly a font of smiling cooperation itself—concluded that the pact was being deep-sixed. This suspicion was confirmed when Bush took office, calling Korean leader Kim Jong Il a "pygmy" and declaring the county part of the "axis of evil".

Pyongyang then accelerated its weapons program, kicked out the UN inspectors, and is now threatening to unleash a nuclear war if Bush, a la Iraq, makes a "pre-emptive strike".

A dicey situation, sure—but at least Don Rumsfeld made some money out of it.

After a few revealing stories like this, one begins to see just what low-life caliber of self-centered, two-faced profiteers are presently holding key positions of the American government—and thus how dangerous this makes their incessant meddling in world affairs. And this impeachable behavior goes right back to Daddy Bush's regime as well. Consider the following:

GULF WAR VET ADMITS SETTING OIL WELL FIRES UNDER UN COMMAND

From the www.thepowerhour.com website, 2/23/03: [quoting]

During the past six years, the American Gulf War Veterans Association has received numerous reports from veterans stating that U.S. forces were responsible for the setting of the oil well fires at the end of the 1991 Gulf War.

One veteran has now stepped forward and given a detailed account of how he and others in special teams, moved forward of the front, behind enemy lines ahead of U.S. forces, set explosive and incendiary charges on the well heads, and remained hidden until after the charges were remotely detonated and U.S. forces advanced beyond their position.

"We were mustered into the briefing tent, at which point a gentleman whom I first had thought to be an American—but I was concerned because he was wearing a UN uniform and insignias—began to brief us on the operation.

"There was concern that America, the American public, might see this conflict as an unnecessary thing, and we were asked to do this—or we were ordered to do this in order to remove any—to sway any public opinion, American public opinion, to remove any doubts whatsoever that Saddam Hussein and his regime were a terrible evil that had to be dealt with."

Stating that he was given a small number of wells to set the charges on: "I carried out my mission parameters and than I withdrew and concealed myself until such a time as the front moved past me."

The information provided over a series of meetings with this veteran corroborates the reports from other veterans who are totally unconnected with this individual.

This shocking information was first shared with the vast listening audience of Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program on the evening of Friday 2/21/03, now hosted by George Noory.

Highly credentialed former military nurse Joyce Riley (former Captain in the U.S. Air Force) was the featured guest; she's been on this program many times in the past. She's a fearless, longtime, and very well connected activist on behalf of those suffering in many ways from Gulf War Illness (www.gulfwarvets.com).

She said that five separate Gulf War vets had told her that U.S. troops were responsible for setting the oil well fires in Kuwait and that it was done to "make it look like the Republican Guard had set the fire". Riley speculated that the reason behind it was a kind of public relations tactic to convince the American people that Saddam Hussein and his regime were a terrible evil. (The same psychological trickery as Pearl Harbor and 9/11.)

She presented a transcript (also at the www.gulfwarvets.com website) of her interview with one of the accusatory vets. "The explosive I used was C4. It's lightweight, it's easy to use.... I placed the explosive on the wellhead and the incendiaries nearby so that...after the wellhead was damaged, the incendiary could light the crude oil to fire."

Many people at that time didn't accept that Saddam had set the fires, but rather, suspected Daddy Bush and his malevolent cronies were behind the dastardly act to vilify Saddam and help in their gaining control of the oil production and prices.

Meanwhile, back at home, again thanks to these professional crooks of the Bush regime, the economy moves steadily toward a major mess that will catch most Americans by shocking surprise:

FED CAPITULATING TO AN ECONOMIC CRASH?

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 2/15/03: [quoting]

Is the end of global corporate predators finally nearing? Forwarded by my pals at DEPRESSION2TV in response to shutdown of 5 state Fed. Res. Clearing houses:

When the Fed lowers rates, prints money, and removes treasuries from the marketplace, two fundamental things occur.

First—and what every pundit focuses on—is that the borrowing costs are lowered across the board. This leads to a marginal shift in optimism that this time it will work. Stocks typically take a technical jump up, bonds typically fall, and long-term rates rise. This is all a technical reaction to stimulus and indicative of nothing more than a technical reaction. It is not indicative of any fundamental belief that economic stimulus will drive economic activity and be the cause of a new bull market in equities.

Second—and most importantly—it is indicative of a flight to safety by the Fed itself. When the Fed prints money and uses that money to buy treasuries away from the market, it is actually parking its own assets in the only "risk" free paper asset available in the world. By so doing they are moving to protect their asset base at the expense of other investors. As rates are dragged down in the process, other investors must find alternatives to treasuries in which to invest for a desired return. In other words, the Fed is transferring risk to the marketplace and away from themselves.

To date, however, the balance has been that the Fed's primary function has been to stimulate the economy, with protection of their own asset base being secondary.

As we move toward zero real rates, however, I believe this function will shift to protection of their own asset base versus that of stimulus. As a result, they will increase their buying of U.S. treasuries and will drive the yields down to the levels I wrote about above.

Everything pivots on economic activity. The Fed is willing to incur a reduction in the value of their own asset, caused by the inflation they induce only, if it causes an increase in economic activity. In the event that monetary stimulus fails to cause an increase in economic activity, the Fed will have no alternative than to move to protect their own asset base ahead of the recessionary, deflationary effects of falling economic activity.

Once the Fed makes the decision that protection of their asset base is paramount to stimulus measures, the yield on the 10-year treasury will begin to fall rapidly.

As this occurs, those not understanding this will assume the Fed is still attempting to stimulate, and make the tragic mistake of attempting to buy stocks and bonds, expecting a rebound.

What is actually happening is that the Fed is capitulating to an economic crash themselves, and moving to protect themselves at the expense of everyone else.

Also, please be mindful of the fact that the Fed will NEVER tell us that this is what they are doing.

[end quoting]

Pay attention to the insightful warning signs the above economic analyst has spelled out to help us discern just how close the Titanic is to the iceberg. If more of the public knew how bad things REALLY are, and who is REALLY responsible for the economic woes, perhaps the war in Iraq wouldn't be the only issue generating massive anti-government protests here in the United States.

research on the program without extensive consultation with Congress.

House leaders agreed with Senate fears about the threat to personal privacy posed by the Pentagon program, known as Total Information Awareness (TIA).

So they accepted a Senate provision in the omnibus spending bill passed last month, said Rep. Jerry Lewis, R-CA, who heads the defense appropriations subcommittee. Rep. John Murtha, D-PA, senior Democrat on the subcommittee, said of the program: "Jerry's against it, and I'm against it, so we kept the Senate amendment."

Of the Pentagon, he said: "They've got some crazy people over there." The only obstacles to the provision becoming law would be the failure of the conferees to reach agreement on the overall spending bill in which it is included, or a successful veto of the bill by President Bush.

Lt. Cmdr. Donald Sewell, a Pentagon spokesman, defended the program, saying: "The Department of Defense still feels that it's a tool that can be used to alert us to terrorist acts before they occur." He added: "It's not a program that snoops into American citizens' privacy." [Where have we heard that line before?!]

One important factor in the breadth of the opposition is the fact that the project is headed by retired Adm. John Poindexter. Several members of Congress have said he is an unwelcome symbol because he was convicted of lying to Congress when he was President Ronald Reagan's national security adviser. That his conviction was reversed on the grounds that he had been given immunity for the testimony in which he lied did not mitigate congressional opinion, they said.

The conferees' decision spells almost complete failure for a last-minute Pentagon effort, begun Friday, to protect TIA by establishing advisory committees to oversee it. TIA would enable a team of intelligence analysts to gather and view information from databases, pursue links between individuals and groups, respond to automatic alerts, and share information, all from their individual computers. It could link such different electronic sources as video feeds from airport surveillance cameras, credit card transactions, airline reservations, and records of telephone calls. The data would be filtered through software that would constantly seek suspicious patterns.

The program could be employed in support of lawful military operations outside the United States and lawful

International UFO Congress A SUCCESS

We're BAACK!! . . . from another incredible, successful, fun, interesting (and may I say LONG!!) show at the International UFO Congress in Laughlin, Nevada, February 2-8, 2003. [See the back cover of the January 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM for details.]

They were 12-hour days (now you know why I said LONG), but WOW! The speakers (and there were SO many!), we were told, were STUPENDOUS. And the few who we were able to see definitely were incredible!

But mostly, we were VERY busy selling magazines, books, and even some subscriptions. So we'd like to say "hello" and "welcome aboard" to all of our new subscribers—and a very big THANK YOU and "So nice to FINALLY meet you!" and "So great to see you again!" to the many who stopped by The SPECTRUM booth.

Jenelle and Virginia—the International UFO Congress show will NEVER be the same after you two!

Jeanne and Tim—what a pleasure to finally meet you!

Paula, Robert, Andrew, Charles, and so many others—it was great to see you all again, and thank you for coming by to say hello!

Rick and I even had the honor and pleasure of meeting Mr. Bob Dean, who Rick interviewed for the December 2001 issue of The SPECTRUM. What a beautiful, humble, and intelligent man. He truly made Rick's week!

We also need to say a big THANK YOU to the producers of the International UFO Congress, Terry and Bob Brown. It is difficult at best to put on a show of this caliber and magnitude, and they did it seemingly without a hitch. Thank you both for a great show. It was a WONDERFUL experience for us, and we're looking forward to next year.

Thanks again to EVERYONE for helping to make this show a great success for The SPECTRUM!

U.S. GOVERNMENT IS "WORLD'S MOST AGGRESSIVE JAILER"

From the beyond-the-illusion.com website, 3/1/03: [quoting]

"You Ain't Seen Nothin' YET!"
by Maurice Williams

A new Justice Department document, Probation And Parole In The United States—2001, reports that the number of people held in U.S. prisons grew by 147,000 last year to 6.6 million.

One in every 32 adults was either on probation or parole, or in prison.

"America has overtaken Russia as the world's most aggressive jailer" the August 10 issue of London's The Economist explained. For similar offenses, the big-business magazine noted, a U.S. resident "is more likely to go to prison and draw a longer sentence than his European peer".

The article cited statistics compiled by researchers at the University of Minnesota and Northwestern University near Chicago revealing that the percentage of the population incarcerated in state and federal prisons more than quadrupled from 110 people per 100,000 in 1973 to 478 per 100,000 in 2000. When local jails are included in the tally, the imprisonment rate balloons to nearly 700 people per 100,000 in the United States. This compares with 102 in Canada, 85 in France, and 48 in Japan.

With just 5% of the world's population, the United States claims 25% of all inmates.

The greatest expansion of people in jail came during the eight years of the Democratic administration of President William Clinton. With bipartisan support from Congress, the former president signed legislation expanding mandatory prison sentences and increasing their length, reduced protections against arbitrary search and seizure by the cops and courts, and financed a record increase of more police on the streets. Combined with the so-called "war on drugs", this legislation led to the doubling of the U.S. prison population to 2 million people.

The Economist noted the impact of mandatory sentences. In the mid-1970s, three in four U.S. prisoners were released after appearing before a parole board. Now only 30% of prisoners appear before a parole board; the rest are released when they have done their time. In the 10 years after 1986 the average time spent in federal prison rose from 39 to 54 months.

The article is a reminder of how the capitalist justice system reinforces the worst dog-eat-dog values of bourgeois society. In some states ex-convicts are barred from certain types of jobs and can be excluded from public housing. In Illinois, for example, ex-felons cannot get hired in 57 types of professions.

Many of those behind bars suffer from deteriorating health. In 1997 some 25% of the people in the United States with AIDS or the HIV virus had come out of prison that year. The numbers increased for tuberculosis and Hepatitis-C. In the late 1980s, when a resistant strain of TB plagued New York, 80% of the cases were traced to prisons. [More suspicious types may be inclined to consider a correlation between the always popular secret government experimentation using prisoners and this new & improved tuberculosis strain.]

The Economist also noted the denial of voting rights for U.S. prisoners. Most state governments bar inmates and ex-convicts from participating in elections, disenfranchising 4.7 million U.S. citizens or 2.3% of the voting population. The figure is nearly 17% for Black men in Kentucky and Virginia.

In some states, prison authorities have imposed tighter restrictions on inmates by not only curtailing paroles, but reducing family visits and increasing the use of solitary confinement as punishment for "misbehavior". Many "amenities" inside prisons have already been eliminated, including education programs that allowed inmates to obtain college degrees while behind bars.

Fully one-third of all young Black males today are either in prison, on parole, or on probation.

According to the Bureau of Justice statistics, at the end of 2001 there were 3,535 Black prisoners per 100,000 Black males in the United States, compared to 1,177 Latino male inmates per 100,000 Latino males, and 462 White male inmates per 100,000 White males. Based on these figures, Blacks are three times as likely to be in prison as Latinos and nearly eight times more likely than Whites.

Over the past decade, however, the number of Latino prisoners increased at the fastest annual rate, followed by Whites, and then Blacks.

The U.S. Census Bureau figure for prisoners put to death from the years 1930 to 1999 is 4,458 excluding capital punishment by military authorities. Of those executions, 2,201 were of Black inmates—accounting for nearly half of all state-sanctioned murders—although African Americans comprise some 12% of the U.S. population.

These executions of Blacks and other working people don't include those carried out by cops on the streets. Although government officials keep no accurate records on individuals killed by police, a survey based on a search of U.S. newspapers from 1997 turned up accounts of some 2,000 deaths at the hands of cops and prison guards between 1990 and early 1998—just the tip of the iceberg.

On August 26 lawyers for Eddie Joe Lloyd will present DNA evidence to a judge in Detroit exonerating Lloyd in the 1984 rape and killing of a young woman. If agreed to by the court, he will be the 110th person released based on DNA evidence. Lloyd, who was in a mental hospital at the time, maintained he was tricked into signing a confession by the cops who said it would be used to help smoke out the real killer. The judge lamented at the time that Lloyd could not be put to death.

The case occurs as federal investigators are conducting an inquiry into the Detroit police department's systematic violation of civil rights laws. The inquiry includes excessive use of force, death of prisoners in jail, and widespread detention of witnesses.

And people still flock here to be in the "land of the free". This is a pretty good barometer of the New World Order gang's degree of success (so far) in furthering the decay of society.

Moreover, recall how much heat the governor of Illinois received when he decided, several months ago, to change all death-row sentences to life sentences because modern DNA evidence is revealing an astonishingly high number of innocent people slated for execution! He felt such an adjustment was the only

HOW GASOLINE COMPANIES MANIPULATE PRICES

From the www.thememoryhole.org/corp/gas-prices.htm website, 2/27/03:

Excerpted from the lengthy Statement of Senator Carl Levin, Chairman, Permanent Subcommittee On Investigations, Hearing On Gas Prices: How Are They Really Set? (U.S. Senate, 30 April 2002)

Low inventories have helped to create the conditions for price spikes in the Midwest, which have occurred when demand has increased (near driving holidays) and/or the supply of gasoline was disrupted. Not unlike oil companies nationwide, oil companies in the Midwest have adopted just-in-time inventory practices, resulting in crude oil and product stocks that frequently are just above minimum operating levels. And, in the spring of 2000 and 2001, the conversion from the production and supply of winter-grade gasoline to summer-grade gasoline further contributed to low inventories just prior to a seasonal increase in demand. With the stage set by those two factors, the oil companies took actions over these past two years in accordance with their profit-maximizing strategies that significantly contributed to the price spikes when disruptions in supply occurred:

During the spring of 2000, three major refiners determined it wasn't in their economic self-interest to produce any more RFG (reformulated gas) than that required to meet the demands of their own customers, and so in that year they produced 23% less RFG than in the prior year, not enough to supply everyone who wanted to purchase it. That contributed to the short supply in the spot market for RFG, contributing to the price spike of spring 2000. While Marathon did have surplus RFG, it withheld some of it from the market so as to not lower prices.

In the summer of 2001, major refiners deliberately reduced gasoline production, even in the face of unusually high demand at the end of the summer driving season, contributing significantly to the price spike of 2001.

Nationwide, in the winter of 2001-2002, demand fell and inventories rose following the tragic events of September 11, 2001. With reduced demand and higher inventories, prices fell. As a result, refining profits fell and refiners cut back on production in order to obtain higher profits. Along with the increase in the price of crude oil and market speculation, these reductions in production and the increase in industry concentration significantly contributed to the run-up in price in the late winter and continuing into the early spring of this year.

Internal documents from several oil companies confirm that the oil companies view it to be in their economic interest to keep gas inventories low and the supply & demand balance tight.

Several documents from California show that refiners in California sought in the mid 1990s to prevent imports into California in order to make the market "tight".

One internal Exxon memo advises the company to "not do deals that support other's importing barrels to the West Coast".

Similarly, an internal Mobil memo counsels against importing gasoline, saying it would depress margins.

California refiners also sought to limit the overall refinery capacity in the state.

One Mobil document talks about how to block the proposed startup of the Powerine refinery: "Needless to say" the memo says, "we would all like to see Powerine stay down." It then proposes accomplishing this by buying all its product and marketing it themselves. "Especially" the memo says, "if they start to market below our incremental cost of production." The memo then notes that buying Powerine's product the previous year, when it was below Mobil's "incremental cost of production" had worked and it was "a major reason that the RFG premium...went from 1 cent per gallon to 3-5 cents per gallon".

A Texaco memo discusses how to use changes in fuel specifications to reduce supplies. The memo says: "Significant events need to occur to assist in reducing supplies and/or increasing the demand for gasoline." One example of a significant event, the memo says, would be to eliminate the requirement for an oxygenate which, the memo says, would make oxygenate usage go down, which reduces total volume of gasoline supplies. The memo says: "Much effort is being exerted to see that this happens in the Pacific Northwest."

California refiners also exported gas—that is, shipped gas out of California—to keep the market in that state tight.

An ARCO internal document discusses the need to export to prevent supply from building up in the state. The memo indicates that ARCO should export in order to intentionally alter the supply/demand balance within California and not just as a passive response to the prevailing economic conditions. In that same presentation, one strategy discussed is to "exchange and trade selectively to preserve market discipline".

Another document in the Subcommittee files indicates that one company would export gasoline out of California to the Gulf Coast, even at a loss, with the rationale that such losses "would be more than offset by an incremental improvement in the market price of the much larger volumes of [gas] left behind".

Another company's plan indicates that exporting gasoline can "improve market conditions" and that the company was willing to "take [a] hit on price to firm up market".

An internal BP document from 1999 reflects similar thinking with respect to the Midwest. The document reflects a discussion amongst senior BP executives of possible strategies to increase refining margins, and it mentions "significant opportunities to influence the crude supply/demand balance". It notes that these "opportunities" can increase Midwestern prices by 1 to 3 cents per gallon. The memo discusses strategies to reduce the supply of gasoline in the Midwest. It lists some possible options, including: shutting down refining capacity, convincing cities to require reformulated gas that is not readily available, exporting product to Canada, lobbying for environmental regulations that would slow down the movement of gasoline in pipelines, shipping products other than gasoline on pipelines that can carry gasoline, and providing incentives to others not to provide gasoline in Chicago.

BP officials told the Subcommittee staff that these ideas were only part of a "brainstorming" session and that none of the options for reducing supply were adopted. We'll go through this document in some detail later this morning.

In another document from the Midwest, an internal Marathon document, Marathon even called Hurricane George a "helping hand" to oil producers because it "caused some major refinery closures, threatened off-shore oil production and imports, and generally lent some bullishness to the oil futures market".

And that is the heart of the problem with respect to gas prices in the United States today—in certain regions of the country—the refining market is so concentrated, that oil companies can act to limit supply, and from time to time spike prices to maximize profits.

And because there is insufficient competition, there is little-to-no challenge to that action. That's the major problem as I see it. The ability to control supply allows oil companies to spike prices in a concentrated market without adequate competition to challenge them.

The Majority Staff made some other significant findings. Oil companies do not set wholesale (rack) or retail prices based solely upon the cost to manufacture and sell gasoline; rather wholesale (rack) and retail prices are set on the basis of market conditions, including the prices of competitors. Most oil companies and gasoline stations try to keep their prices at a constant price differential with respect to one or more competitors. For example one company decided that its station in Los Angeles should price the lower of ARCO stations plus 6 cents per gallon, or the average price of major branded stations in the area. Another oil company followed a pricing policy in Baltimore as follows: "We will initiate upward; we will follow Amoco, Shell quickly; we will be slow to come down in a dropping market."

Because many oil companies and gasoline retailers set their retail price on the basis of the prices of their retail competitors, prices in each specific market tend to go up and down together. And oil companies tend to stake out a position in each market vis a vis the competitors and hold that position. Hence, it will often appear that, over time, gasoline prices in that market move together in a "ribbon-like" manner—so that as a brand moves up and down it nonetheless remains at a constant differential with respect to the other brands.

In Michigan and Ohio, we found a clear leader-follower pricing practice. Speedway, owned by Marathon, has a pricing practice that bumps up the price of gasoline on Wednesdays or Thursdays. As the price leader in Michigan, once Speedway goes up, the other brands follow. The typical pattern after that is for Speedway to come down in price pretty quickly, while the other brands follow them down more slowly.

Oil companies also use a system of what they call "zone pricing" in order to maximize the prices and revenues at each gas station. Since under the antitrust law, they are prohibited from selling wholesale product at a different price to similarly situated retailers, the oil companies have developed a system for differentiating among retailers in the same immediate area. In doing so, they can charge the retailers different wholesale prices for their gasoline.

The way they accomplish this is by dividing a state or region into zones. A zone is supposed to represent a particular market, and the stations in that zone are supposed to be in competition with each other. The oil companies use a highly sophisticated combination of factors to identify particular zones.

For example, if most people buy their gas on their way home from work instead of on their way to work, a station on one side of a rush hour street may be treated as in one zone and the same brand station on the other side of the street in another zone. The oil company will then charge those two gas stations different prices for their gasoline, because the station on the side of the street with easy access for evening rush hour traffic may be able to get a higher price for its gas than the station on the other side of the street. That's the kind of thinking that goes into the zone pricing system, and it allows the oil companies to charge the highest possible amount for their gas in a given area.

Another pricing practice the Majority Staff uncovered has to do with how gas station owners set their retail prices. The Majority Staff learned that for those stations that lease from a major oil company (about one-fourth of the 117,000 branded stations) the oil company actually recommends to the station dealer a retail price. Now, by law the oil company is prohibited from telling a lessee dealer what it can charge for gasoline, but that doesn't keep oil companies from "recommending" a price.

And the Majority Staff was told by several dealers that if they don't charge their retail customers the recommended price, the next delivery of gas from the oil company will reflect any increase instituted by the dealer. These dealers are saying that if they decide to price their gas at $1.40/gallon when the oil company recommends $1.35, the next delivery of gasoline to the station (and deliveries are sometimes daily for busy stations) will have a 5 cent/gallon increase in the price to the retailer. If these allegations are true, then the practical effect would be that the

GERMAN GIANT TAKING OVER AMERICAN WATER SUPPLIES

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 2/14/03: [quoting]

The influence of foreign business can be seen across America, with consumers cheerfully buying Japanese cars, Korean TVs, and clothing made in China. But many Americans aren't so happy about foreigners controlling their water supply. A recently completed $8.6 billion takeover of American Water Works by German-based industrial giant RWE has led to a backlash from a handful of cities across America.

The deal covers more than 800 water systems serving 15 million people in 27 states and three Canadian provinces. "As soon as people find out their water service is being bought by a German company, they are up in arms about it" said Juliette Beck, a senior organizer for Public Citizen, a Ralph Nader-backed group that has been rallying resistance to the RWE takeover.

The misgivings are driving community efforts to buy out RWE and regain control of local water systems in two Northern California communities, Montara and Felton, also in Peoria and Pekin, Illinois, and in Lexington, Kentucky. Charleston, West Virginia is considering a bid for its water system, while the Southern California city of Thousand Oaks is trying a different tactic: urging state regulators to reverse their previous approval of RWE's takeover.

Much of the opposition to the RWE deal has been orchestrated by Public Citizen, a critic of corporations inside and outside America. The objections have ranged from concerns about whether the foreign-owned conglomerate will weaken U.S. environmental practices to worries that RWE's enormous debt load will lead to higher water bills.

Few issues are as prickly as RWE's German heritage. "That really bothered a lot of people, especially older folks" said Kathryn Slater-Carter, a Montara resident since 1979. "Memories of World War II are still very strong."

Officials from American Water and the water industry say the backlash against RWE is misguided. "Public Citizen is doing a pretty good job of fanning the flames and playing on people's xenophobia" spokesman Tom Thoren said. Supporters of the takeover say RWE's financial clout and expertise will help pay for much-needed improvements in local water systems and provide better protections against possible terrorist attacks on water supplies. [And if anyone believes that hogwash, there's still a bridge for sale on the Moon.]

RWE isn't the only foreigner buying into the U.S. water industry. French companies Vivendi Environment and Suez also have bought local water systems within the past few years. Vivendi entered the U.S. market in 1999 with a $7.9 billion takeover of USFilter.

The French company provides water and wastewater service to 110 million people in 100 countries, generating about $12 billion in annual revenue from the division. Besides running the Culligan bottled water service, USFilter, of Palm Desert, California delivers water to about 13 million people in 600 communities.

Suez, which collects about $8.5 billion in water revenue from 110 million people in 130 countries, entered the U.S. in 2000 with a $1 billion purchase of United Water Resources, based in Harrington Park, New Jersey and a provider of water service to about 12.5 million people. Before coming to America, RWE expanded beyond its primary business as a power utility by buying England's Thames Water for $9.8 billion in 2000.

The money provided by RWE and other foreign companies will pay to replace aging pipes and strengthen security—the kind of improvements many cash-strapped communities can't afford, said Peter Cook, executive director for the National Association of Water Companies, a trade group.

Thames, which will oversee RWE's newly acquired U.S. water systems, has invested $6 billion in service improvements, mostly in Britain, since 1998.

The opposition to RWE's U.S. expansion is "so much hokum and jingoism" Cook said. "Foreign ownership can bring many benefits to a community."

Critics fear RWE and Thames mostly will bring trouble. Thames, for instance, has been fined repeatedly in England for environmental violations that included allowing raw sewage to flow into the streets and onto people's lawns.

RWE's debt-heavy balance sheet has convinced many customers their water rates will have to go up to pay back the loans.

RWE is buying American Water for nearly three times the company's book value—equivalent to paying $1 million for a house worth about $333,000. [Aren't you just a little suspicious of the REAL reasons behind such a seemingly ridiculous business move?]

The German company ended 2002 with an estimated debt totaling about $28 billion. Management wants to reduce the debt to about $26 billion by the end of this year as part of a debt diet that will continue through at least 2005.

RWE has repeatedly assured regulators it can repay its debt by expanding into new U.S. markets instead of raising rates in the systems picked up in the American Water deal. And in some states, such as California, RWE has even consented to rate freezes.

Still, some critics think RWE is on the same perilous path as Enron, the once-powerful energy merchant that collapsed in 2001 after binging on debt to finance years of rapid expansion. "There are a lot of serious warning signs building up at RWE" said Richard Hierstein, city manager for Pekin, Illinois. RWE's rising debt prompted Moody's Investor Service to lower the company's credit rating last year.

Critics believe the hefty debt also contributed to RWE's decision to replace its longtime chief executive officer, Dietmar Kuhnt, who oversaw the company's recent shopping spree. Former Royal Dutch/Shell Group executive Harry Roels has become RWE's new CEO March 1. The communities trying to buy their water systems are betting they will be better off on their own because of the savings available under local ownership.

Publicly owned agencies don't have to pay income taxes or generate profits for shareholders, so in theory they could invest in improvements without raising rates. But money from water rates might also be diverted to pay for other government services facing a shortfall, which might not help water customers.

About 85% of U.S. water systems are still owned by the communities they serve. "Providing water is at the core of what municipal governments do, right up with providing police and fire [protection]" said Scott Mitnick, assistant city manager for Thousand Oaks.

People in Montara, a community of 3,000 about 20 miles south of San Francisco, have been unhappy with their privately owned water system for decades. With monthly bills averaging more than $90, Montara's rates are among California's highest, yet residents like Jim Montalbano sometimes can't even take a shower because the water pressure is so low. "If the guy down the street just flushes his toilet, I have to wait for a while or I can't get any water" he said.

The problems were hard enough to bear while two different U.S. companies ran Montara's water system. They became intolerable after RWE announced its plans to buy American Water in September 2001. RWE's German connection wasn't Montara's only concern. Residents are also incensed about steadily rising rates—a trend that continued in 2002 with a 43% rate increase over seven years. RWE is continuing to push for an additional rate increase of nearly 20% filed last year by American Water. [That sounds more like the truth of the matter.]

In November 2001, more than 80% of the voters in Montara and neighboring Moss Beach approved a $19 million bond to buy the water system. California regulators handed Montara another victory in December 2002 by ordering RWE to sell the water system back to the community. Montara and RWE are still trying to settle on a fair sale price, said Slater-Carter, a board member for the Montara Sanitary District that will oversee the water system under public ownership. California regulators ordered RWE to reach a sales agreement by March 19.

Although they all have initiated the process to buy their water systems, community leaders in Felton and the cities outside California say it probably will take many more months—and in some cases, years—before their crusades pay off.

It's no surprise that other cities hope to follow Montara's example, said Terry Kohlbus, who is marshaling Peoria's effort to buy back its water system. "There is going to be uneasiness" he said, "if you take something as important as the air that you breathe and turn it over to a foreign company."

The important issue we're reminded about here is: just how much of America is owned by Americans anymore? Quite a few well-known companies up to no good have been discussed within the pages of this magazine by various investigative authors as being foreign-owned while appearing to be American. The true ownership is kept hidden because it would adversely affect the bottom line if known by the buying public—just as in the case of these water companies.

With that said, let's add some levity to counteract a world going mad:

And it is always now. In fact, there's even a book called The Power of Now. I haven't had time to read it yet, but I hope to get to it in a later now.

Meanwhile, back in this now, the issue facing the United States, and indeed the world, is: will George Bush give in to his Big Iraq Attack and order up a war?

Latest reports say that a war to force a regime change in Iraq will cost $200 billion. It is puzzling to me why some of those fiscal fitness fanatics in the Republican Party haven't tried to find a cheaper way to do it. Maybe if they offered the Iraqis half—$100 billion—they could do it themselves. Then we'd still have $100 billion left to spend on regime change in this country.

Because—and I have to be blunt here—the folks we have in charge are fossils fueled by fossil fuels. And in the reptilian brain, problems aren't solved, they're attacked.

Like the War on Poverty. Remember that? I'm happy to report that it's finally over. The poor people have all surrendered.

And take the War on Drugs—please. How many billions have they spent? My solution is cheaper and more effective: improve reality!

Now we have the War on Terrorism. We're going to terrorize those terrorists into giving up terrorism if it's the last thing we do! And it just might be.

The good news is—and I have it on the Highest Authority—there will indeed be peace on Earth. Whether we humans are around to enjoy it, that is up to us. No wonder there is so much fear, uncertainty, and confusion on the planet.

I'll tell you how bad it's gotten. You've heard of Heisenberg's Uncertainty Principle? Well, they're not even sure about THAT anymore. And so, more and more people are turning to the mystics for answers.

I have often said there are two kinds of mystics, the optimystics and the pessimystics. Now pessimystics seem to be more in touch with "reality", but optimystics are happier and live longer for some reason. The pessimystics have been crying: "The sky is falling; the sky is falling!" The optimystics say: "No. It just looks that way because we are ascending."

Now, for those people who read the news—not to mention those unfortunate enough to BE in the news—last year was not an easy year to keep an optimystic attitude with so much pessimystic evidence. Call me a hopeless "hopium" addict, but I choose to accentuate the positive. For example, you can say we human beings have moved further down the path of self-destruction. Or you could say the Earth is ridding itself of a virulent parasite.

You can despair over continuing war, disease, and starvation, or you can go: "Hey, population control the good, old fashioned way—without birth control or abortion." Who says "compassionate conservative" is an oxymoron?

You can worry about the government taking liberties with our liberties or you can say: "Life has become simpler." They've boiled the Bill Of Rights down to just one: "You have the right to remain silent."

So I am not going to dwell on the negative. As my guru Harry Cohen Baba used to say: "Life is like photography; we use the negative to develop."

George Bush was responsible for a great spiritual advance last year. He upgraded the Golden Rule for the new millennium. It's now the Gold Rule: "Doodoo unto others before they can doodoo unto you."

And—say what you will—President Bush has made great strides on behalf of minority representation. Never before have we had a President who was looking out for a smaller minority.

Now this is the State Of The Universe Address, and seen from that higher perspective, things look great. I am happy to report that the Universe continued to expand in 2002, and in fact, they actually had to let the Photon Belt out another notch. An expanding Universe means more jobs too, so we can expect a steady influx of aliens looking for work.

Yep, the Universe just keeps purring in perfection, ever-changing as usual. The planets continue to harmoniously spin in their orbits, and except for the occasional case of asteroids, they just calmly go about their business.

Meanwhile, back here on Earth, things are a bit more problematical. We still haven't fully recovered from that vicious dogma attack of 9/11.

But as an optimystic, I believe you can indeed teach an old dogma new tricks, simply by changing the emPHAsis to another sylLAbLe. Instead of focusing only on emergency measures, why not take emerge'n SEE measures?

When we emerge from our fearful hiding places and see from the cosmic perspective, we realize that beneath all the stress and distress and sadness in life there is a deep well of joy. Each time we let laughter bubble up from the well, we experience deep wellness. Levity helps us overcome gravity, especially when we shine the light of laughter on those poorly-lit corridors of power.

Do you know what the leading cause of terrorism is? It's seriousness. I'm serious. Think about it. Those people have no sense of humor. Otherwise how could they believe they will get to Heaven by putting other people through hell?

But if Americans are willing to revive the Iraqi Horror Picture Show just to feed our out-of-control oil habit, how are we that different? How many innocents will be put through hell, just to preserve our little corner of relative heaven?

There is no real peace without harmony and balance, only the vicious cycle of injustice. Peons get tired of getting peed on, right? You get pissed on, and pretty soon you're gonna get pissed off. This causes the hot spots to flare, and pretty soon you have an uprising, which usually results in a downfall. All these uprisings and downfalls can be wearing on the body politic.

Fortunately, we do have a choice.

One of my favorite stories recently is about a Native American grandfather talking to his young grandson. He tells the boy he has two wolves inside of him struggling with each other. The first is the wolf of peace, love, and kindness. The other wolf is fear, greed, and hatred. "Which wolf will win, grandfather?" asks the young boy. "Whichever one I feed" is the reply. Every day—every moment—we have the choice to feed the wolf of love or the wolf of fear.

It is interesting that we are called humanKIND. What better time than now to find out, can mankind treat man kindly?

I have a dream. I call it tell-a-vision. I say, if you're dissatisfied with the current programming, you can turn off your TV and tell a vision instead.

Here is my vision: Remember the Manhattan Project during World War II? It took less than four years for a group of scientists to develop the first weapon of mass destruction. My vision is, we can do even better for an even worthier goal.

We could call it the Manhelin Project, and its purpose would be to develop the first weapon of mass construction instead. Think about it. What if we used that $200 billion set to detonate in Iraq, and put it toward becoming the worldwide leader in renewable, clean, sustainable energy sources?

Now there's some real power! Create something so plentiful you don't have to pay an army to protect your share. A healthy income, a healthy outcome; what could possibly make more sense? Boy, talk about feeding two birds with one scone! The choice is up to us. If we want an alternative, we must feed the "alter native" economy—anything that alters us natives for the better.

The world we live in is a byproduct of the products we buy, is it not? What if we only choose to buy products with healthy byproducts? Think about this: There are at least 45 million Americans who consciously want to feed the wolf of peace. If each of us switched just $100 into the alter native economy, that would be $4.5 billion!

Last year, we launched a blisskrieg and declared "all out peace". I'm happy to report it is already working. More people are letting their inner peace out, and these outbreaks of peace are actually causing esteem to rise. And we all know that rising esteem is good for the atmosphere.

As esteem rises, more people on the planet will be able to be all that they can be—without joining the army. And when more of us put our energy into love and laughter instead of criticizing and condemning, we will have Uncritical Mass—and we will bring about Nonjudgment Day, and along with it, Disarmageddon.

Now you might be wondering, what will Nonjudgment Day look like? Let me tell another vision.

I have been to the heights of levity, and I have seen people all over the world dancing together in the universal dance of fool-alization: The Hokey Pokey. I want you to hold this vision with me: all of the world leaders at the United Nations beginning their sessions with the Hokey Pokey.

What if Ariel Sharon and Yasser Arafat put their whole selves in it? That would be commitment. And then pulled their whole selves out. That is detachment. Then they turn themselves around, which is transformation. And that, my friends, is what it is all about!

So, how can you help raise the Laugh Force on the planet enough to bring about Non-judgment Day? First, you can take a vow of levity, and laugh more. And we even have a Laughmore Society to help you do just that.

Next, you can support everyone's right to laugh by joining the Right To Laugh Party. "One big party, everyone is invited. All for fun, and fun for all."

Commit random acts of comedy. Practice Fun Shui and leave the world a funnier place. Anything to elicit a moment of fool-realization with a spark of laughter. Because only when we lovingly laugh at our foolishness, can we seriously change things for the better.

May you wake up laughing and leave laughter in your wake.

And may the Farce be with you!

There is great wisdom in the above advice that's especially worth keeping in mind at this present stressful time. The planetary frequency is increasing, which is very uncomfortable for the Dark Forces. So they, in turn, through their puppets worldwide, are working hard to engineer major fear-based events to attempt to keep us in a low-frequency state. Humor plays a significant role as an antidote to turn lemons into lemonade and lemon pie. And it's free.

The moral of this story is that we all vote with our wallets, whether we recognize that vote or not. Why is it such a matter for concern (as an earlier News Desk story related) that a foreign company is taking over our water supplies, and yet we look the other way when so many other items we use every day are foreign-made?

No matter where we turn these days, we are having to face the consequences of irresponsible decisions made at ALL levels of society. Is the manufacturer who moves his plant to Taiwan any more at fault than the consumers who choose that cheaper product over its American-made counterpart on the store shelf, downstream putting the American manufacturer out of business?

In many areas of society, this is the kind of moral question we're facing as the Great Awakening and the Great Cleansing unfold on planet Earth.

CONCERNS OVER SOYA SAFETY: PERFECT POPULATION CONTROL?

From the beyond-the-illusion.com website, 2/16/03: [quoting]

The authors say further studies are needed. Scientists have called for urgent research into the impact of soya on unborn children.

It follows tests on rats which suggest a chemical in soya can damage the male reproductive organs.

There is no evidence to suggest it has a similar effect on humans; there have been no such reports from Asia, where soya is a major part of the diet.

However, researchers in the United States said its effects on rats were so severe that tests were needed to ensure it was safe for pregnant women to eat.

Scientists at the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health fed pregnant rats a diet laced with genistein—a chemical found in soya.

Large amounts of genistein are found in some baby formula milks and in some supplements taken by women as an alternative to hormone replacement therapy.

According to a report in New Scientist magazine, the scientists found that male rats exposed to high levels of genistein in the womb grew up to have larger prostate glands and smaller testes.

The rats had normal sperm counts and would behave as if they wanted to mate when placed with females. However, they were unable to ejaculate.

The effects were just as severe in males that did not eat genistein after weaning, as it was in those that continued eating it. They suggested that this indicated that exposure in the womb and during breast feeding has the biggest impact.

The scientists also found that male rats exposed to genistein had a slightly larger thymus gland, an organ that produces immune cells.

This contradicts previous studies which suggested it has the opposite effect on the thymus gland.

To add to the confusion, the scientists also found that moderate levels of genistein had an even bigger effect on male rats than large doses.

The researchers said their findings had caused them concern.

Sabra Klein, one of those involved in the study, said: "The urologists on this project are actually advising pregnant women to avoid soya."

Chris Kirk, who is based at the University of Birmingham, said the findings highlighted the need for further research. "These are serious questions that need answering" he told New Scientist. [end quoting]

The Vermont state legislature is currently studying a stronger response opposing the tattletale law.

BIO-ABSORBABLE SCREWS SIMPLIFY ANKLE SURGERY

Excerpted from the Houston Chronicle via J.C.A., 2/13/03: [quoting]

by Deborah Mann Lake

Bio-absorbable screws designed to hold ligaments or tendons in place just long enough for them to heal are making surgery on ankles easier, according to surgeons at the University of Texas Medical Sciences Center at Houston. "Anchoring tissue to bone has been a problem in the past because you either had to suture the tendon to itself or staple through it, which sometimes does not hold well" said Dr. Clanton, professor and chairman of orthopedic surgery at UT-Houston. "We've been working on fixation with methods that allow us to fix the tendon to the bone but use a bio-absorbable product so you're not carrying around a piece of metal."

The bio-absorbable screws come in all shapes and sizes and are made of a plastic similar to that of dissolvable stitches—as it degrades, the body processes it as a harmless acid.

Ligaments, such as those that keep the ankle in alignment, or tendons, which provide motion to the foot, are susceptible to traumatic injury and chronic wear and tear.

When too much of the ligament or tendon has been damaged, a tendon from another location may have to be used for repair (tendons are used because they can be removed without compromising function).

In the case of the ligaments around the ankle, a hamstring tendon is often used and will be "ligamentized".

This is a great help to orthopedic surgery. Let's hope the breakdown byproducts aren't poisonous to the body.

GOV. DAVIS WAFLING ON INTERNET TAX ISSUE

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 2/14/03: [quoting]

Sacramento's tax-starved spendthrifts are always on the lookout for new sources of revenue, one more place to wring a few additional pennies out of California's beleaguered taxpayers. They think they've found it in cyberspace.

The would-be Internet-taxers may or may not include the governor, who, being Gray Davis, is congenitally incapable of taking a clear stand on the issue.

Like the car tax, which he opposes (for now), the Net tax is not on his immediate agenda, but he's willing to reconsider that position.

For the moment, California's online shoppers are safe, thanks to two U.S. Supreme Court rulings that prohibit states from compelling out-of-state companies to collect sales taxes.

Because the U.S. Constitution charges the federal government with regulating interstate commerce, the court has determined that states can only tax their residents' online purchases if the retailer has a physical presence (such as a corporate office or storefront) within their borders.

Throughout the Internet boom of the 1990s, California resisted the temptation to tax in-state sales because no one wanted to slow down the industry that was already creating surpluses faster than Sacramento could spend them.

But that was then.

Now there are no tax receipts from dot-com stock options to make Sacramento flush, and the spending spree the Net financed has raised the cost of government far beyond the means of traditional tax targets.

Thus the "need" for new revenue sources, and the eagerness to soak the surfer set.

The plans are already on the table. State Sen. Dede Alpert, D-San Diego, has proposed legislation that would begin taxing all in-state Net sales, which, if passed, would be a textbook illustration of the law of unintended consequences at work.

As Sen. Tom McClintock, R-Thousand Oaks, has pointed out, online shoppers "are literally one mouse click away from a competitor with no presence in California". A tax on in-state sales would simply "shift commerce from BarnesandNoble.com to Amazon.com".

Alpert's tax would penalize companies for doing business in California—as if the state's hefty income taxes and regulations weren't incentive enough to close up shop and move elsewhere.

A craftier taxpayer than Alpert is her Senate colleague, Debra Bowen, D-Redondo Beach. Bowen proposes that California join more than 30 other states in a collusive—and brazenly unconstitutional—racket to create a uniform sales-tax system, which would facilitate interstate sales taxes.

But even Bowen's cyber-taxing ambitions pale compared to those of state treasurer Steve Westly.

Westly, who made a fortune as an eBay executive and used his millions to bankroll a successful campaign for statewide office, now contemplates ways of gouging anyone, not just shoppers, who spends time online. Among his considerations are a tax on Internet access and a levy on downloads.

If Westly and fellow Democrats get their way, all California consumers will end up paying dearly, even those who don't use the Internet at all.

In other, smaller states, governments are hampered in their ability to raise sales taxes because consumers can take their shopping across state lines. But for most Californians, that's not an option, meaning the state's lawmakers have little to keep them from routinely raising rates. Already, California has one of the highest sales taxes in the nation, and if the Legislature approves Davis' budget plan, it will go up again, this time by roughly 12%.

The only check on exorbitant sales taxes in California is the consumers' current freedom to opt out by purchasing items online or through a catalog, even if that means paying shipping fees and waiting a few days for delivery.

No wonder Sacramento wants to terminate the threat the Net poses to its tax-hiking powers.

And no wonder dozens of state governments want to effectively nationalize sales taxes, thereby undermining America's federalist and constitutional underpinnings at the expense of consumers everywhere.

So what does the governor think of all this?

Davis has opposed Internet taxation, but that was before he created a $35 billion budget deficit. "While he didn't favor it in the past" spokeswoman Hilary McLean has explained, "he is willing to review it in the bigger context." McLean has said that Davis would reconsider his opinion sometime in the future, but: "Whether that future is now, or in the coming years, it's a little too soon to tell."

That sounds like political weaseltalk. Expect, in the near future, to long for the day when California's Web surfers had only to worry about viruses, pop-up ads, and spam. [end quoting]

With a rapidly sinking economy and more people losing their jobs daily, how long do you think it will take these professional political hustlers to figure out they can't cause any more money to fall from our pockets, no matter how hard they shake us upside down?

But, you say, they'll ALWAYS figure out another tax to levy:

MAJOR RETAILERS NOW TAXING THEIR ONLINE SALES

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 2/14/03: [quoting]

Some major retailers this week began voluntarily charging online sales taxes in 37 states and the District of Columbia, a move that could reshape the way business is done on the Web.

Participating brick-and-mortar retailers, such as Wal-Mart, Toys "R" Us, and Target, hope their first steps will help bolster the states' effort to mandate online sales taxes, leveling the playing field between themselves and Internet-only rivals.

Under current laws, catalog companies and pure online retailers only must charge sales taxes in states where they have operations, such as a warehouse or distribution facility. Nationwide brick-and-mortar retailers say this puts them at a disadvantage in states where catalog and Internet-only companies do not have operations.

"We can't have a system that discriminates against some vendors in favor of others" said Frank Shafroth, director of state-federal relations for the National Governors Association, he said. "Why should there be a double standard?"

The major retailers said the move also helps them integrate their online and brick-and-mortar operations.

The states, meanwhile, are eager to plug their budget shortfalls with help from Internet sales taxes. Last year, Internet sales ballooned to $79 billion; or about 3% of all retail sales, according to Forrester Research.

The attorney who brokered the deal, John Coalson of the Atlanta firm Alston & Bird, said he expects five more states to join in the 37-state program begun this week. He would not name the states.

However, representatives of 34 states and the District of Columbia met in Tampa last month to discuss taxing Internet sales. Those states are: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky,

SCIENCE JOURNALS ADOPT SECURITY POLICY

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 2/16/03: [quoting]

More than 20 leading scientific journals have made a pact to censor articles that they believe could compromise national security, regardless of their scientific merit.

The policy, announced Saturday at a scientific meeting in Denver, is one of the first concrete steps to emerge from a fierce debate over how to balance the ethic of openness that has long been the foundation of American science, with calls from some government officials for greater secrecy after the anthrax attacks in 2001.

"We recognize that on occasion an editor may conclude that the potential harm of publication outweighs the potential societal benefits" reads a statement endorsed by the journals' editors, as well as some scientists and Bush Administration officials. "Under such circumstances, the paper should be modified or not be published."

The journals Science, Nature, The Proceedings of the National Academy of Science, and several others—which together constitute a primary vehicle for spreading scientific research around the world—plan to publish editorials supporting and explaining the policy this week.

Some prominent scientists called the policy a significant step in the wrong direction. Journal editors, critics argue, have no reliable way to evaluate what information would do more harm than good. Research viewed as dangerous, they say, may be the most likely to stimulate new defenses against biological threats and natural diseases.

"I've studied these things for 50 years, and I couldn't make that judgment, and I don't see how editors of journals can either" said Stanley Falkow, a microbiologist at Stanford University.

"The job of journals is to judge the scientific quality of things, not to act as people who censor or make these kind(s) of decisions, which are more political than they are scientific."

Falkow called bioterrorism a serious threat, but added that agreeing to some restrictions could lead to demands for more. "I'm waiting for someone to say: 'Let's not release any genomic information' on potentially dangerous infectious agents" he said, "because that might help bioterrorists."

"Ignorance is not a good defense" he said. "Knowledge is."

But journal editors, in announcing the new policy at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, said scientists had to hold themselves accountable for the dissemination of powerful information that can be used for good and evil.

Unlike nuclear physics, where research that is viewed as dangerous is classified, biological research is largely unclassified, the editors point out, so the logical place to restrict information is at the point of publication.

"I don't want to be responsible for the deaths of Americans or anyone else" said Ronald M. Atlas, president of the American Society of Microbiology and one of the strongest proponents of the policy. "I don't want to be the one that publishes 'Here's how to weaponize anthrax' and find someone tomorrow used that and killed hundreds of thousands of people. I want responsibility on the part of the scientific community."

There is little consensus on the practical effects of the new policy. Some scientists said a paper showing how to weaponize anthrax would probably not be published regardless, since it would not be seen as groundbreaking science.

[end quoting]

No matter by what name you want to call it, this is censorship—plain and simple—and certainly one more step in keeping with the assertive agenda of the Homeland Gestapo. Don't be fooled by showmanship: these publications and consenting scientists are much more concerned about preserving their lucrative research contracts (by not offending the government that could make them evaporate) than they are about "patriotic duty" amidst the absurdity of deciding what is and what is not "dangerous" to publish in scientific journals.

IF AIRLINES SOLD PAINT — OR JUST ABOUT ANYTHING ELSE

Customer: Hi. How much is your paint?

Clerk: Well, sir, that all depends on quite a lot of things.

Customer: Can you give me a guess? Is there an average price?

Clerk: Our lowest price is $12 a gallon, and we have 60 different prices up to $200 a gallon.

Customer: What's the difference in the paint?

Clerk: Oh, there isn't any difference; it's all the same paint.

Customer: Well, then I'd like some of that $12 paint.

Clerk: When do you intend to use the paint?

Customer: I want to paint tomorrow. It's my day off.

How wonderful is the brain to alert an unbalanced part of the body and the mind
TO SEEK THE TRUTH.

Clerk: Sir, the paint for tomorrow is the $200 paint.

Customer: When would I have to paint to get the $12 paint?

Clerk: You would have to start very late at night in about 3 weeks. But you will have to agree to start painting before Friday of that week and continue painting until at least Sunday.

Customer: You've got to be kidding!

Clerk: I'll check and see if we have any paint available.

Customer: You have shelves FULL of paint! I can see it!

Clerk: But it doesn't mean that we have paint available. We sell only a certain number of gallons on any given weekend. Oh—and by the way, the price per gallon just went to $16. We don't have any more $12 paint.

Customer: The price went up as we were talking?

Clerk: Yes, sir. We change the prices and rules hundreds of times a day, and since you haven't actually walked out of the store with your paint yet, we just decided to change. I suggest you purchase your paint as soon as possible. How many gallons do you want?

Customer: Well, maybe five gallons. Make that six, so I'll have enough.

Clerk: Oh no, sir, you can't do that. If you buy paint and don't use it, there are penalties and possible confiscation of the paint you already have.

Customer: WHAT?!!

Clerk: We can sell enough paint to do your kitchen, bathroom, hall, and north bedroom, but if you stop painting before you do the bedroom, you will lose your remaining gallons of paint.

Customer: What does it matter whether I use all the paint? I already paid you for it!

Clerk: We make plans based upon the idea that all our paint is used, every drop. If you don't, it causes us all sorts of problems.

Customer: This is crazy! I suppose something terrible happens if I don't keep painting until after Saturday night!

Clerk: Oh yes! Every gallon you bought automatically becomes the $200 paint.

Customer: But what are all these "paint on sale from $10 a gallon" signs?

Clerk: Well that's for our budget paint. It only comes in half-gallons. One $5 half-gallon will do half a room. The second half-gallon to complete the room is $20. None of the cans have labels, some are empty, and there are no refunds, even on the empty cans.

Customer: To hell with this! I'll buy what I need somewhere else!

Clerk: I don't think so, sir. You may be able to buy paint for your bathroom and bedrooms, and your kitchen and dining room from someone else, but you won't be able to paint your connecting hall and stairway from anyone but us. And I should point out, sir, that if you paint in only one direction, it will be $300 a gallon.

Customer: I thought your most expensive paint was $200!

Clerk: That's if you paint around the room to the point at which you started. A hallway is different.

Customer: And if I buy $200 paint for the hall, but only paint in one direction, you'll confiscate the remaining paint.

Clerk: No, we'll charge you an extra "use fee" plus the difference on your next gallon of paint.

Customer: You're insane!

Clerk: Thanks for painting with United. [end quoting]

For quite some time the airlines have been able to get away with their bizarre schemes because flying has been a big part of modern business and pleasure activities. But the ever mounting hassles of air travel—both financial and wasted time—have pushed many travelers to new levels of creativity. Other forms of pleasure travel have been rediscovered, and more business meetings are by teleconferencing. So just as e-mail is doing to the postal service, the airlines' own self-serving "paint" rules are finally doing them in.

And at a higher level, don't forget the New World Order gang's agenda item to restrict travel of the populace. Their 9/11 events paved the way for a whole new level of airport hassles that they are fully aware would psychologically cause a great reduction in air travel desire to lead to airline collapses and consolidations under tighter controls.

ANALYST STEWART SWERDLOW'S NEWS BRIEFS AND COMMENTS

From the www.stewartswerdlow.com website, 2/27/03 [quoting]

In this regularly updated column, Stewart discusses current events based upon his personal knowledge and experience of Illuminati plans for the Earth.

Colombia Mystery: (2/16/03)

A single-engine Cessna went down over the Colombian jungle with five U.S. intelligence officers. It is believed that they were captured by FARC, the NSA-controlled leftist rebels of Colombia. The U.S. government refuses to discuss who was on the plane, what their mission is, or which branch of the government they work for. They would only say that the plane was on an intelligence mission. Two bodies were found in the plane, three others are missing and presumed captured. More on this as we learn of the true nature of this excursion.

If It's Tuesday: (2/16/03)

It must be Belgium. The highest court in this little country has "universal jurisdiction" to hear war crimes committed anywhere! Wow—that's a big law for a little country. This week, the court in Belgium said that Palestinian survivors of the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon could try Prime Minister Ariel Sharon after his term of office is over. Israel lashed out at Belgium, accusing them of standing idly by during WW-II when Jews were being executed there. Sharon says that the Lebanon invasion was a defense against terrorism. Ariel Sharon is an aggressive and belligerent man. He is known to be this way, even in his own country. His goal in 1982 was to "drive the Palestinians into the sea". It will take a whole lot of Belgian chocolates to fix this one!

Deutschland Uber Chicago: (2/16/03)

The Germans have purchased over $1 billion worth of Chicago real estate, accounting for a third of the total investment in office buildings there. Seems like the Germans have taken their cue from Boeing and many other larger corporations who are moving their headquarters to Chicago. What do the Germans know? That New York City will no longer be the financial capital after the NWO takeover. If you want a real investment for the future, invest in property in Chicagoland areas and the Southern Great Lakes. I told you so.

Identity Crisis: (2/19/03)

Near Philadelphia, a man is in prison on fraud charges for various crimes committed in various places. He has no known birth identity, but has used several names over the years, from the East Coast to the West Coast. He goes by the last name of Truelove, which sounds as odd as the woman arrested for child abuse last year named Toogood. Truelove was once a parapsychology student. We are seeing many crimes committed by activated alters of programmed people, including the young man accused of being the DC sniper. Could it be that George Dubya triggered these people with his "sleeper" speech of post 9/11?

You Can Die From Sci-Fi: (2/19/03)

A Los Angeles resident, Kara Blanc (there's a programming name), filed suit against the actors and producers of the new reality show Scare Tactics. She claims she was abducted, driven out to the desert, and made to witness a staged murder committed by what she was told was an alien. Because of this, she suffered severe trauma and had to be hospitalized several times. Scare Tactics is about unsuspecting witnesses viewing pranks involving aliens, haunted houses, etc. Blatantly scaring people with staged traumatic events is a basic form of programming designed to fracture the mind and compartmentalize the personality. This is standard programming procedures. This show could be a way of mass-programming for the American public, or at least begin imprinting the idea into the conscious minds of the viewing audience to accept programming as necessary.

Shuttle Lies: (2/19/03)

What the government is calling a "little-known network of listening devices" picked up a sound at the time of the Shuttle explosion that they are saying is related to an electrical phenomena called "blue jet". This is also called "elves, sprites, sprite halos, and trolls". This electrical charge is reported above thunderstorms and lightning strikes. They are saying that a photo of Columbia being struck by a glowing corkscrew-shaped energy is one of these—that's officially termed a "Transient Luminous Event". However, there were no thunderstorms or lightning in the area when the Shuttle exploded. C'mon guys—you can come up with a better story than this! Just admit it was a particle beam accelerator weapon and come clean!

False Memory Study Is False: (2/19/03)

University of California at Irvine psychologist Elizabeth Loftus has decided that memories are fragile and can be easily manipulated. She spoke at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. She certainly earned her BS degree! She did a Bugs Bunny study where memory of hugging Bugs Bunny at Disneyland was suggested to participants. Later, 36% of the subjects remembered actually doing this, even though Bugs Bunny is not a Disney character, and would never have been featured at a Disney park. However, Disneyland is a known programming center and it is very likely the character was used as part of cartoon programming for those children. The study even claims that those with alien abduction memories were false. That is actually true. Most abductions are done by the government and they add false mask-memories of aliens to cover the truth. Ms. Loftus is an obvious government disinformant, blatantly telling people that their memories are false—but it's okay because that's normal! It would be interesting if people remember Ms. Loftus as a handler or assistant programmer. I'm hoping that she is a figment of my imagination.

Murder, They Wrote: (2/23/03)

During the past few days, there have been six ritual murders all over the world. Most of them are being billed as accidents, emotional disturbances, or politically motivated. They are as follows:

Missouri: Nan Wyatt, the host of a top St. Louis radio show on KMOX was shot to death by her husband, who was upset over a possible divorce. The name "Nan" is a programming code-name for deception, or making a true story false. KMOX is also promoting that people who remember being abused by priests have false memories.

Pakistan: A Fokker-27 turboprop of the military crashed in dense fog, killing seventeen, including the chief of the Air Force. This will come in handy when the New World Order attacks Pakistan.

Iran: A military plane with 302 passengers crashed in bad weather in a remote area of the country. All on board were members of the Revolutionary Guard whose job it is to safeguard the Islamic Revolution of Iran. Without them, the country will be less dependable in a war.

Saudi Arabia: A British defense contractor was shot to death as he waited at a stoplight on a busy street. His last name, "Dent", is a trigger word in programming.

Chicago: A fire at a nightclub killed almost two dozen people. The club's name was "Epitome". This is a trigger word designed to activate sleepers who are to perform an important function to complete a goal.

Rhode Island: Almost 100 people so far have died as a result of another night club fire. The event took place in "West Warwick". The band was named "Great White" and the song they were playing was "Desert Moon". The club's name was "The Station". All of these names and terms have direct Reptilian references, and are also used to trigger sleepers. Since this was the second fire, there will be a third night club fire somewhere.

Winged Monarch Triggers: (2/23/03)

After believing that most Monarch butterflies were killed in last year's cold and hard rains in Mexico, an estimated 500 million of the winged symbols are fluttering around a twenty-acre area of forest in Central Mexico. Many of these are located in the Mexican State of Michoacan. We must look at the "twining" relationship of the U.S. State of Michigan with the Mexican State of Michoacan. Both are located in central areas of their respective countries. Both have Mayan connections. The media's reporting of the Monarch's comeback is to trigger the human Monarchs in both countries. Both species are coming out of their cocoons.

Al Bielek on CD-ROM

This is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date on one computer CD. The information comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. Use this information as the beginning resource to help you onto your own research track.

The five people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

Order hit western China with a 6.8 magnitude quake, killing over 260 people. This area of Xinjiang Province is populated by Muslim Uighurs. Not only were the Muslims left homeless in this border area, but the underground caverns were enlarged for base expansion. Along the same theme, earlier this week yet another aircraft crashed in the region, this time carrying the Afghan Minister for Petroleum and Mines. He must have gotten in the way of Cheney's pipeline plans. Israel and Lebanon experienced a rare snowstorm that dropped a foot of snow in Jerusalem and the Northern Israeli area. The mountains of Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan were also affected. We are witnessing the slow destruction of any Muslim official who will impede the New World Order take-over of Central Asia. They don't even care how obvious this is getting.

I Am Vindicated! (2/26/03)

According to the Chicago Tribune, February 25, 2003: "The United States already has launched a war on Iraq. The weapons are those of psychological warfare—what the military calls psyops." This is straight from an Illuminati mouthpiece. A psychic/psychological war has already been announced and underway. The psyops organizations are made up of secret units based out of Fort Bragg, North Carolina (where recent wife-murders have occurred). The article compares the U.S. forces to those of Alexander the Great and Nazi operative Otto Skorzeny. Nice comparison! This is the first time since 1991 that the American media has admitted that such tactics are being used and involve mind-control on civilians as well as soldiers. This activity is officially considered an act of war, making Iraq already under attack.

Ideas That Were Not Thought Through: (2/27/03)

Chicago: Two hundred defibrillators purchased for $380,000 for fifty Chicago Public Schools. I suppose in case a ten-year-old gets a heart attack. The Chicago Board of Education also voted to reduce bus service for 7th and 8th graders. I guess all that walking will be hard on the heart.

Washington, DC: The new Transportation Security Administration (TSA) ruled that pilots cannot carry a gun in a holster, but only in a locked case in nondescript bags. Well, that should reduce response time.

Vancouver, BC: A new cooking show features all-nude chefs on television. Called Barely Cooking, the "head" producer is named Larry Sugar (really?).

The show is featured on a new channel, SEXTV. I wouldn't want to be around when the oil splatters.

More Fire/Explosion/Quakes: (2/27/03)

Twining popped its heads again this week with twin explosions at centers in prominent universities in China. About the same time, twin blasts rocked Venezuela with bombs at the Spanish Embassy and Colombian Consulate in Caracas. This past weekend, twin earthquakes hit the planet: a 5.4 magnitude happened in Los Angeles, while a 5.4 quake struck Eastern France around the same time. Meanwhile, in Hartford, Connecticut, a fire blazed through a nursing home in the middle of the night. In Mexico, the volcano near the center of the country erupted with plumes of ash and smoke. Seems as if the entire planet is going up in smoke—except for all of the snow and ice coming down. Perhaps the powers that be are bipolar. [end quoting]

Can you imagine how many other similar clandestine activities are going on right under our noses like these highlighted by Stewart?

THE SUV CONSPIRACY

From The Mountain Signal, Tehachapi, CA area, 2/03: [quoting]

By Marilda Mel White

The other day, a radio talk-show caller suggested that the government's desire to eliminate Sport Utility Vehicles (SUVs) is really a conspiracy to limit the size of American families. I thought that sounded pretty outlandish.

But then, as fate would have it, my favorite fly on the wall in Washington, DC, e-mailed me a transcript of a covert conversation between two bureaucrats that made me stop and wonder.

TweedleDee: "Hey, over-population is one of the biggest problems we're facing in the world today. We've got to do something about it before we run out of water."

TweedleDum: "I agree, but how?"

Dee: "Well, war is always a good idea to reduce the population, and it works in more than one country."

Dum: "But there's always a baby-boom after a war, so it's a short-term solution at best."

Dee: "We could manipulate taxes; you know, make it more financially desirable for people to have fewer children."

Dum: "That would be too obvious. We need something more subtle so no one knows what we're doing."

Dee: "I know! We could make SUVs illegal so people wouldn't be able to transport big families!"

Dum: "Hey, that might work. And there's another angle: SUVs have been proven to be safer than smaller cars in car accidents, so if we remove that safety benefit, the population might reduce itself over and over again in simple little crashes in their simple little cars."

Dee: "I like it; it's subtle, and it will work over a long period of time. I think we're on to something here."

That conversation got me to thinking that an SUV conspiracy theory might not be as far afield as I'd originally thought.

But then, by pure happenstance, I was at McDonald's eating lunch another day, when I overheard a young couple talking in the booth behind me:

He: "I love you so much, and I'm so excited we're getting married next week."

She: "Me too, honey, and I can't wait to start a family. I'm so glad we agreed on having a big one."

He: "Oh, about that. I've been reading how some people want to outlaw SUVs, so I'm concerned about how we'll get around as a big family if we have more than two children."

She: Gosh, I never thought of such a thing! How can we have a big family without an SUV? Maybe we better rethink the whole big family thing."

So there you have it. While some politicians have declared SUVs to be everything bad—from gas hogs to road nuisances—what they are really after is population control. Never mind the reality that families, both large and small, are safer and more comfortable in SUVs, and never mind either the laughable premise that buying gas for SUVs supports terrorism, while buying the same gas for any other car or truck does not.

After all is said and done, the real reason the government wants to get rid of SUVs is simply so that you and I will be unaware that we are being forced to have smaller families. Who—besides that radio caller—would have thought it?

And who, besides me, thinks that no matter what the SUV conspiracy may be all about, it is time for our government to stop butting into more aspects of our private lives and start respecting our rights to make our own decisions—including the right to decide for ourselves what vehicle best suits our individual needs?

This "tempest in a teapot" problem is a byproduct of the greed of the oil companies, who suppress alternate forms of energy—especially "free energy" devices—so that we focus on gasoline consumption and miles-per-gallon numbers. Controlling a commodity as fundamental as energy is a blanket way the New World Order gang ultimately keeps a tight control over the peoples of the entire world.

Refer back to the Tilley vehicle update in last month's News Desk for just one example of how vehicular travel COULD be, once enough of the public are aware of the possibilities and demand an end to Big Oil's stranglehold on our wallets. Every time the Oil Heads play their greedy $2/gallon gasoline game, they risk agitating more inventors out there who have a better idea of benefit to all of us.

SOUND BUSTS BLOOD CLOTS

From Popular Science magazine, March 2003: [quoting]

A rapidly vibrating wire could be a lifesaver for millions of people suffering from reduced blood flow.

One cause of this condition, known as vascular occlusive disease, occurs when blood clots narrow veins and arteries.

OmniSonics Medical Technologies of Wilmington, Massachusetts, has found a way to directly apply sound energy to clots using a narrow wire that is guided to the trouble spot. High-frequency sound waves radiate outward from the wire, breaking the clot into particles smaller than red blood cells. The body naturally flushes the clot particles away. The wire stays cool throughout the procedure, preventing damage to the surrounding tissue, an improvement over earlier technology. [end quoting]

This may help the problem once it has manifested, but the blood clot can typically do a lot of damage in the meantime. Wouldn't it be nice if more attention were paid to simple prevention measures, like sunlight on the skin and certain herbs—but how would the medical profession justify charging you an arm and a leg for that kind of prescription?!

INSULIN INJECTIONS WITHOUT NEEDLES

From Popular Science magazine, March 2003: [quoting]

An ultrasound patch developed by Pennsylvania State University engineers will give diabetics who require insulin a less painful alternative to hypodermic needles or surgically implanted pumps.

A thin reservoir of insulin is placed in front of a 4-cymbal transducer. The cymbals are made of thin discs of piezoelectric ceramic material that vibrates in the presence of an electric current. The resulting sound waves open microscopic channels in the skin, and force insulin into the body. Researchers believe the cymbals could be adapted to deliver other types of drugs.

On the one hand, this is a wonderful alternative to needles, especially for infants and children. On the other hand, how many of the illnesses for which a drug dependency has been created are easily cured but the remedies suppressed by the same medical mafia pushing the more lucrative drugs and needles?

DASTARDLY DEEDS AND QUOTES FROM HISTORY

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 2/28/03: [quoting]

I have capitalised for emphasis parts of these "dastardly deeds" of history to emphasize the point that "some people" are trying to force the very same conditions on the general populace of the United States of America. — Bob H.

Here are the quotes:

"Among the many misdeeds of British rule in India, history will look upon the ACT OF DEPRIVING A WHOLE NATION OF ARMS as the blackest."

— Mahatma Mohandas K. Gandhi (Source: An Autobiography, pg 446)

"This year will go down in history. For the first time, a civilised nation has FULL GUN REGISTRATION. Our streets will be safer, our police more efficient, and the world will follow our lead into the future!" — Adolf Hitler, 1935

"FOOLISH LIBERALS, who are trying to read the Second Amendment OUT OF THE CONSTITUTION by claiming it's not an individual right or that it's too much of a safety hazard, don't see the danger of the big picture. They're COURTING DISASTER by encouraging others to use this same means to eliminate portions of the Constitution they don't like."

— Alan Dershowitz (Source: The Conceptual Foundations Of Anglo-American Jurisprudence In Religion And Reason, 82 Mich. L. Rev., 204, Dan Gifford, 1995)

"WAITING PERIODS are only a step. REGISTRATION is only a step. The PROHIBITION of private firearms is the GOAL"

— Janet Reno, U.S. Attorney General

One of the most powerful ways to learn the lesson that history constantly repeats itself is to pursue a research project, on any subject, such as the author above did. And history repeats itself because the attention span of the public is typically so short, and most history books so devoid of truth, that there's no need to come up with any new tricks since the old ones continue to work so well.

MILITARY CALLS FOR SEX - ASSAULT QUERY

From the Associated Press, 2/27/03:

[quoting]

DENVER — The military has ordered a review of how the Air Force Academy handles sexual assault allegations after female cadets said they were reprimanded for reporting they were raped by classmates.

Five women, four of whom have left the academy, were treated as if they were either crazy or promiscuous, said Dorothy Mackey, who founded a group that tracks sexual assaults in the military and has talked with the cadets.

On Friday, the office of Air Force Secretary James Roche announced that a special review panel had been formed to review sexual assault policies in the military branch "with a particular emphasis on the Air Force Academy".

[end quoting]

So far that special review panel has uncovered 54 new cases similar to those detailed above. Do you think they'll try to make them ALL go away?

DUCT TAPE DOESN'T WORK

From the beyond-the-illusion.com website, 2/13/03: [quoting]

Hi Folks: I hate to state this, but it does not work. Been using plastic and taping air leaks for years; the tape unsticks and leaks.

I wonder how much the duct tape manufacturers (3M) paid to that government official for that recommendation and how much the official invested in duct tape futures?! Heck, if you want to do it right, use 600-mile-per-hour tape used to temporarily repair tears in airliner aluminum wings!

There were some rumors circulating that vice-president Dick Cheney was a major beneficiary of that burst of duct tape profits. Still, the best use for duct tape was brilliantly illustrated in that widely distributed political cartoon showing it wrapped tightly around Dubya's mouth several times.

THE AIRLINE ANGEL

From Guideposts, March 2003, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

Long lines snaked back from the gate at the Denver airport that morning. No way I was getting a seat on this flight. I shouldn't have flown standby. The flight coupon I was using was a gift from a friend. I like to plan my trips carefully, even a short one like this to visit my daughters in San Diego and meet my husband who was coming after me using another standby flight coupon from the same friend. I had packed my bag days in advance and considered everything from what shoes I'd need to what books I'd read. But now, after all that careful planning, I was stuck.

"Excuse me" a friendly woman wearing an airline ID said. "Are you trying to get to San Diego?" She introduced herself as Diane and said she was a ticket agent at the San Diego airport. She'd also been trying to fly standby. "Would you be interested in flying to Santa Ana with me, sharing the cost of a car, and driving the rest of the way?" she asked.

"Sounds like a plan" I said. "Thank you so much!" Diane said. She went straight behind the counter and used the airline computer to find the next flight to Santa Ana; she even had a rental car waiting when we landed. We made it safely to San Diego, and I thanked God for putting such a helpful stranger in my path.

The time came to fly back to Denver.

My husband, Larry, and I wanted to fly together, so I planned even more carefully than I had the first time, calling the airline to make sure there were seats available. But when we got to the gate, Larry couldn't find his standby ticket.

"Try lost and found" the agent said, pointing to a gate nearby. We grabbed our bags and rushed over. There was Diane! Out of 20 gates and 40 employees, we were directed straight to where my friend was working.

"No one has turned in a ticket" Diane responded when I explained the situation, "but you were an answer to prayer the other day. Now I want to help you. Your husband can use one of my flight coupons."

Fallen Angels And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"?

Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

That is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text cherished by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

Elizabeth Clare Prophet examines the controversy surrounding this book and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. She demonstrates that Jesus and the apostles studied the Book of Enoch, and tells why Church fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels.

"How old is Bullet now?" the vet asked as he lifted our old golden retriever up on the examination table. "Thirteen" I said. He put his stethoscope on Bullet's shaggy chest and leaned forward. "I don't like what I'm hearing" he said. "I'll have to do an electrocardiogram."

The EKG led to a blood test, which led to the discovery of a growth on his liver. The vet's prognosis was grim: If we didn't operate soon, Bullet would die. The cost of the operation, including sonograms, X-rays, blood work, and medicine would be costly. "I know how much Bullet means to you" the vet said, "but the average life span of a golden retriever is ten to thirteen years. Why don't you go home and think about what you want to do?"

On the way home I stopped by the grocery store where I bumped into a neighbor and explained my dilemma. "Pam" she said, "the dog is thirteen years old. He's had a good life. Let him go."

"I can't. Bullet is family. We've been through everything together."

He had arrived at my doorstep in a wicker basket wearing a red bow—a gift from my husband to save our faltering marriage. Bullet had shiny brown eyes and thumped his tail. The marriage did not work, but Bullet stayed. On nights when I returned home late from my restaurant job, Bullet would nuzzle me and rest his chin reassuringly on my lap.

By the time I was ready to start dating again, he became my best chaperon. If he didn't like a guy, his tail drooped and he refused to be petted. For those lucky ones who passed muster, he'd wag his tail, fetch his favorite chewed-up groundhog toy, deposit it at the guy's feet, then look over at me as if to say: "This one might be okay."

Several years later, a new part-time security guard named Troy started working at the hotel restaurant where I worked. One snowy night, near closing time, one of the gals and I were having some hot chocolate. Troy waltzed in, covered with snow. "Looks good" he said. "Could you make me some?"

Something about his attitude made me snap back: "Kitchen's over there. Make it yourself."

My friend chided me for being rude, but I was unrepentant. Out in the parking lot the snow was piled in three-foot drifts. I scraped it off my Oldsmobile Cutlass, got in and turned the key. Nothing doing. I tried again and again, my fingers near freezing. Feeling pretty sheepish, I headed back to the hotel to find our new security guard.

"I think my battery is dead" I told him. "Do you have some jumper cables?" Troy's brown eyes danced, and he could barely suppress a grin. "Do you mean you want me to help you?"

My Cutlass refused to start and Troy had to give me a lift home. No sooner had he dropped me off than he was ringing my doorbell. His truck was stuck at the end of my driveway, and he had to sleep on my couch with Bullet standing guard.

The next morning he shoveled my front walk and driveway, got his truck running, and drove to the convenience store around the corner. He returned with steaming coffee, orange juice, and doughnuts.

We sat around the kitchen table. Bullet wagged his tail and licked Troy's hand. He brought his old stuffed groundhog toy and dropped it in Troy's lap. Bullet didn't want this one to get away. Neither did I.

All the happiness that I had missed in my first marriage I found with Troy. He was funny, kind, and as much a dog lover as I was. We looked forward to raising a family. Unfortunately, whenever I conceived, I couldn't carry a baby past two months.

"That's all right" we told each other. "We have Bullet."

We took him to the park, to Florida, to the beach—all those things you do with a kid. We bought Christmas presents for him and celebrated his birthdays.

That's why it was devastating to contemplate his loss. "The vet says that the tests and the operation will cost a fortune" I told Troy after Bullet's exam. "But I don't see any other choice. Bullet helped me when I was at my lowest. Now I need to help him."

Before the surgery we took Bullet to our parish priests. Father Mike and Pastor Ryan said a prayer and blessed him.

I prayed: "Dear God, if you still have some purpose for him, don't take Bullet from us. Not yet. Please."

The surgery was a success. Bullet came home and, in a matter of weeks, he was his old self again. Of course, he moved a little slower and wasn't as fast at fetching his chew toy, but then, I didn't run after him as quick as I used to. He might have been 13, but I was 40.

That summer I experienced some recurring nausea I wrote off to indigestion. Troy talked me into taking an over-the-counter pregnancy test. The test was positive! We hugged and laughed and cried while Bullet ran around us carrying the empty pregnancy test box in his mouth like a trophy.

Troy Joseph was born on April 10, 2002. We'd done all we could to prepare Bullet for the addition to the family, showing him the crib and the changing table and the baby clothes we'd been given. The nurse on the maternity ward suggested getting him accustomed to the smell of the baby. "Take your dog one of little Troy's blankets so he can get used to his scent."

Later that night Troy called me at the hospital from home. "You're not going to believe this: I gave Bullet the blanket and he won't let go of it. Right now he's all curled up sleeping with it."

We brought Troy home and set him in his car seat on the living room floor. Bullet came over to investigate. He looked, sniffed, wagged his tail. No matter where I took the baby, Bullet was by our side. Even at night, instead of sleeping at the foot of our bed, Bullet curled up next to the crib. Little Troy was his.

On the morning of May 1, we were awakened at four o'clock by Troy's alarm. He was going back to work for the first time since the baby was born.

"You get ready" I told him. "I'll take care of the baby."

I changed Troy Joseph's diaper and put him on our bed. Bullet stayed in our bedroom while I went to the kitchen to warm a bottle. I was standing at the kitchen sink, testing the milk on my wrist, when Bullet came barreling down the hall, jumping and barking furiously.

"Want to go out?" I asked. I opened the door, but he wouldn't budge. He stared at me with pleading eyes, barked, then tore back down the hallway. Crazy dog! I followed, stopping at the bathroom to ask Troy to test the temperature of the milk. Bullet returned, barking with a vengeance.

The author was one of the original witnesses at the meeting between contactee George Adamski and Orthon from the planet Venus. Williamson claims he also had contacts with aliens and received transmissions over his radio from friendly extraterrestrials. Others have claimed the same. Senator Barry Goldwater reportedly heard mysterious signals on his ham radio and our own astronauts have reportedly picked up messages not transmitted from Earth.

Other Voices is essentially a reprint of The Saucers Speak, by George Hunt Williamson and Alfred Bailey, originally published in the 1950s. Much of what the authors report has come to pass. Warnings of aliens about nuclear war and environmental doom remain urgent.

"What's the matter with him?" Troy asked.

"I don't know. He doesn't want to go out."

In our bedroom Bullet sat whimpering by our bed. By the glow of the nightlight I could see the baby's head thrown back in an odd way. He was making faint gurgling noises. I picked him up and watched in horror as he went from purple to blue, then limp in my arms.

"Troy!" I screamed and dashed to dial 911. "The baby's stopped breathing!" Troy tried to do CPR until the police and EMTs arrived. Bullet followed them in, barking frantically. I had to drag him into the kitchen and barricade the door with two chairs so he couldn't get out.

The EMTs managed to resuscitate our baby before they whisked him off in the ambulance. His father rode with him, and I followed in the truck. For the next 16 days Troy stayed in the pediatric intensive care unit. After countless tests, later it was determined that Troy's breathing problem was caused by double pneumonia and undiagnosed heart irregularities.

"You're lucky you found your baby when you did!" said the doctor. "Had any more time passed, he most likely would not have survived."

Troy Joseph is doing fine now. We monitor his situation with frequent doctor visits. As for Bullet, I thank God for every day that he's still around. He's more than a hero in our house. He's an answer to prayer.

PERFUME, THE TEACHER

From an e-mail, 3/1/03: [quoting]

As she stood in front of her fifth-grade class on the very first day of school, she told the children an untruth. Like most teachers, she looked at her students and said that she loved them all the same. However, that was impossible, because there in the front row, slumped in his seat, was a little boy named Teddy Stoddard.

Mrs. Thompson had watched Teddy the year before and noticed that he did not play well with the other children, that his clothes were messy, and that he constantly needed a bath. In addition, Teddy could be unpleasant.

It got to the point where Mrs. Thompson would actually take delight in marking his papers with a broad red pen, making bold Xs and then putting a big "F" at the top of his papers. At the school where Mrs. Thompson taught, she was required to review each child's past records and she put Teddy's off until last. However, when she reviewed his file, she was in for a surprise.

Teddy's first-grade teacher wrote: "Teddy is a bright child with a ready laugh. He does his work neatly and has good manners.... He is a joy to be around."

His second-grade teacher wrote: "Teddy is an excellent student, well liked by his classmates, but he is troubled because his mother has a terminal illness and life at home must be a struggle."

His third-grade teacher wrote: "His mother's death has been hard on him. He tries to do his best, but his father doesn't show much interest and his home life will soon affect him if some steps aren't taken."

Teddy's fourth grade teacher wrote: "Teddy is withdrawn and doesn't show much interest in school. He doesn't have many friends and he sometimes sleeps in class."

By now, Mrs. Thompson realized the problem and she was ashamed of herself. She felt even worse when her students brought her Christmas presents, wrapped in beautiful ribbons and bright paper, except for Teddy's. His present was clumsily wrapped in the heavy, brown paper that he got from a grocery bag.

Mrs. Thompson took pains to open it in the middle of the other presents. Some of the children started to laugh when she found a rhinestone bracelet with some of the stones missing, and a bottle that was one-quarter full of perfume. But she stifled the children's laughter when she exclaimed how pretty the bracelet was, putting it on, and dabbing some of the perfume on her wrist. Teddy Stoddard stayed after school that day just long enough to say: "Mrs. Thompson, today you smelled just like my mom used to." After the children left, she cried for at least an hour.

On that very day, she quit teaching reading, writing, and arithmetic. Instead, she began to teach children.

Mrs. Thompson paid particular attention to Teddy. As she worked with him, his mind seemed to come alive. The more she encouraged him, the faster he responded. By the end of the year, Teddy had become one of the smartest children in the class and, despite her lie that she would love all the children the same, Teddy became one of her "teacher's pets".

A year later, she found a note under her door, from Teddy, telling her that she was still the best teacher he ever had in his whole life.

Six years went by before she got another note from Teddy. He then wrote that he had finished high school, third in his class, and she was still the best teacher he ever had in his whole life.

Four years after that, she got another letter, saying that while things had been tough at times, he'd stayed in school, had stuck with it, and would soon graduate from college with the highest of honors. He assured Mrs. Thompson that she was still the best and favorite teacher he had ever had in his whole life.

Then four more years passed and yet another letter came. This time he explained that after he got his bachelor's degree, he decided to go a little further. The letter explained that she was still the best and favorite teacher he ever had. But now his name was a little longer: the letter was signed, Theodore F. Stoddard, MD.

The story does not end there. You see, there was yet another letter that spring. Teddy said he had met this girl and was going to be married. He explained that his father had died a couple of years ago and he was wondering if Mrs. Thompson might agree to sit at the wedding in the place that was usually reserved for the mother of the groom.

Of course, Mrs. Thompson did. And guess what? She wore that bracelet, the one with several rhinestones missing. Moreover, she made sure she was wearing the perfume that Teddy remembered his mother wearing on their last Christmas together.

They hugged each other, and Dr. Stoddard whispered in Mrs. Thompson's ear: "Thank you, Mrs. Thompson, for believing in me. Thank you so much for making me feel important and showing me that I could make a difference."

Mrs. Thompson, with tears in her eyes, whispered back. She said: "Teddy, you have it all wrong. You were the one who taught me that I could make a difference. I didn't know how to teach until I met you."

[end quoting]

What a powerful snapshot of how teachers—real teachers—can have a profound impact on society. No wonder the teaching profession is under such massive attack on all sides by the Dark Forces. When do you think our society will come to its senses and compensate good teachers at least on a par with pampered athletes and vulgar rock stars?

Phony Wars For Phony Peace:

The Ministry Of Fear

Eustace Mullins

Editor's note: (The following article was written shortly before Eustace's health problems took over center stage for him. See the separate story that directly follows this one.)

It is basic to what we call the Scientific Method to distill general rules from a wide array of observable data that we suspect may be connected. Great insight comes from recognizing a common effect behind what at first may seem to be disconnected events. As Eustace points out below, such "reductionist" methodology is likewise central to good cooking and masterful painting.

Being aware of the longstanding common formula that has driven all wars helps greatly to put the present contrived focus on Iraq into clearer perspective as the fraud that it is. As we pointed out in last month's issue of The SPECTRUM, the REAL reasons for the world control maniacs to want to subjugate Iraq hinge upon Iraq being a threat to their continued ability to control the world!

So, rather than wars being fought for the reasons we are told, they're fought, rather, to advance some objective(s) of the elite world controllers. And that is the general idea to keep in mind as Eustace points out some key historical examples that help us to see the common underlying principle at work.

While many of you readers are quite familiar with Eustace Mullins—the Great Grandmaster of Truthbringing—for newer readers we will mention that Eustace is a longtime, highly respected, and often persecuted author of five of the most well-documented, controversial, and hard-hitting volumes ever published on the crooks in high secret places and how they have long controlled world affairs to conform to their own agenda.

Though his books are CONSTANTLY in demand, like the rest of us who bring Truth, he is poor and has little monetary resources at this time with which to reprint these fine manuscripts.

For those of you who may not be familiar with his most important classic research works, they include:

- THE CURSE OF CANAAN: A Demonology Of History,
- MURDER BY INJECTION: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy Against America,
- THE WORLD ORDER: Our Secret Rulers,
- THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE, and
- RAPE OF JUSTICE: America's Tribunals Exposed.

We are, as always, deeply honored that Eustace chooses The SPECTRUM as the vehicle through which to share his insightful writings, in turn to share with you who read AND SUPPORT this conduit of Truth.

1/27/03 EUSTACE MULLINS

The Orwellian doctrine of "Perpetual War For Perpetual Peace" has now been updated to the more practical version of "Phony Wars For Phony Peace".

The established governments have long since abandoned their exhortations to be patriotic, loyal, and sacrificing for the higher good. It has proven impossible to maintain their former shibboleths as the excuse for human sacrifice.

Indeed, sacrifice has reverted to its original mode—that of religious ritual. The previous rituals, which conditioned the brainwashed victims to lay down their lives to propitiate the gods, have been replaced by more psychologically "correct" methods of persuasion, in which the victims nudge each other forward in their anxiety to take their places, laying themselves down on the stone altars and baring their breasts to the sacrificial knives, which slash open their bodies to remove their still-beating hearts.

In sixty years of studying the causes of wars, and the mechanisms by which they have been achieved, I have employed one of the principal methods of great cooking—that of reduction. As the chef continues to mix and manipulate his ingredients, they are distilled into a more concentrated form, usually by heat, until the flavors "marry".

(This is also a recipe for great painting. A certain period is required for the various colors painted onto the canvas to marry, to reconcile with one another, eventually subsiding into a beautiful jewel-like overall tone, which we call "great art". These are the works of the Old Masters, who used formulae known for many centuries. They were well known in Pompeian Wall Painting and Roman art, and can be viewed in their pristine colors today. There are no shortcuts to achieving these effects, which is the sole reason why "modern art" became the travesty that it is today.)

All wars since 1900 have been totally fake. This will prove unsettling to many veterans, who were crippled or killed in these fake wars. I served throughout World War II in the United States Army Air Corps, which was the first to use "weapons of mass destruction" on civilian populations. This is a fact which our supposed opponent, Saddam Hussein, has strangely neglected to mention, probably because Saddam Hussein is a "replacement"—not the opponent which we had wanted at all, but a last-minute choice because no more suitable replacement was available.

He has no illusions about his desirability, and no doubt accepts his billing without resentment, relieved that he had made the cast after all. The first question asked of anyone in the world of theater is: "Are you working?" That remains the principal goal of the profession.

Everything is a charade, which may or may not be entertaining. For me the sole "entertainment" has been in the research.

It is amazing how often the same characters have been trotted forth to go through the same clichés, like "the war to end war" and "the war to save democracy", ad infinitum. In fact, most of these clichés sprang from the less-than-agile mind of Woodrow Wilson during the First World War. Whatever else you might choose to characterize Woodrow Wilson, you must admit that he never failed to bore.

But to get to the business at hand—my statement that the great wars have been exercises in sheer fakery—we might begin with a seminal event in American history, our Civil War, which ostensibly began with the firing on a federal fort in Charleston harbor, Ft. Sumter, by “Southern hotheads” on April 12, 1861.

Ft. Sumter had little military or strategic importance which would make it the seminal event in our greatest loss of life in our history. The “hotheads” were agents provocateurs of the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, which had originated in Charleston. The rest of the South had no knowledge of or participation in this event, which was the sole provocation of the Civil War.

It worked so well that it has been used over and over again. Organizations were set up to provide the necessary umbrella for these provocations. To start World War I, the conspirators set up three organizations: the Navy League, the Council on National Defense, and the Carnegie League to Enforce Peace.

It is our first encounter with the ubiquitous term “defense”—but all three organizations were deeply committed to the steel industry, through the Carnegie connection with J.P. Morgan (Rothschild) banking interests, the required tax-exempt status, and the absence of the very man whose name it bore.

Carnegie had turned over his entire fortune to his foundations, virtuously announcing that he would sever all connections with their operations. This handsomely suited less virtuous operators, principally John D. Rockefeller, who took over the Carnegie Foundations, manipulating them as satellites of his own Rockefeller Foundation, so that his name never was connected with any of their achievements.

World War I, with the undercover passage of the Federal Reserve Act at Christmastime of 1913, was ready to begin.

Dress rehearsals had occurred in the 1890s, with the Spanish-American War, when the U.S. battleship Maine was “blown up” in Havana, and with the Boer War in South Africa, which occurred almost as an afterthought, when some Boer farms in South Africa were found to be teeming with gold and diamonds. These riches were promptly acquired by the British Empire, with the aid of its ubiquitous military forces—and in the process inventing the concentration camp and making war on women and children, which became standard operating procedure of subsequent twentieth century wars.

With these impressive examples, World War I set new records in casualties, and, by design, unseating most of the crowned heads of Europe. The British royal family survived intact, which made it the real victor in the war and chaos which had occurred. British intelligence, known as the British Secret Service, now roamed unchallenged across the world.

They perpetrated the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia—an event in which few, if any, Bolsheviks were active.

In World War II, almost as an afterthought, they created their American counterpart, the Central Intelligence Agency—a group which has always been characterized by its singular lack of intelligence, as was evidenced by its supposed lack of knowledge of 9/11.

The CIA enabled the British Secret Service to remain unseen, as its work throughout the world was carried on by its CIA underlings.

After World War II, these agencies proceeded with their greatest task—that of maintaining the Soviet Union as “the opponent”. This was done through the Cold War, which maintained the world’s status quo for forty-seven years, not only propping up the creaky Russian State, which was always

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the “London Connection”. The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and

A Writ For Martyrs by Eustace Mullins

This is a fully documented exposé of the atrocities which federal agents regularly commit against American citizens.

This book reproduces 121 pages from Eustace Mullins’ FBI file, which he obtained only by the personal intervention of a college classmate, Senator John Warner, Rep. Of Virginia. The FBI refused for two years to send Eustace his files through Freedom of Information Act inquiries. When Eustace found it, he discovered a plot by the FBI, with 60 pages of memos, in which J. Edgar Hoover personally ordered that Eustace be committed to a mental institution for life.

On the basis of these revelations, Eustace obtained two “Default Judgments” against the FBI in Federal Court. One judgment was for $50 million, and one for $35 million, which remain on the books today.

This book also documents atrocities committed against Eustace’s handicapped sister, his ailing mother, and his invalid father, who all died of heart attacks after daily harassments by the FBI terrorists.

Mullins was one of the principal victims of the notorious FBI counter-intelligence program called COINTEL, set up by Alex Rosen, one of five FBI assistant directors. The COINTEL program was actually organized by the Anti-Defamation League of B’nai B’rith, and the Mossad intelligence agency.

This book will give you an idea of what Eustace has had to put up with in his life as a crusader for Truth.

on the verge of immediate collapse, but also flooding a gullible Congress with information that the Soviet Union had the fastest growing economy in the entire world (including the United States) and the most powerful army in the world. (This same army collapsed when it invaded tiny Finland at the outset of World War II, and, when it fought with tiny Afghanistan, the entire Soviet system went into collapse.)

Seeing a good thing, the United States invaded Afghanistan, in its rush into oblivion, where it is bogged down today. The principal goal of this operation, the capture of Osama bin Laden, who was not an Afghan, faded into the mist, and has rarely been mentioned since.

There were equally improbable causes of the brushfire wars which occurred during the Cold War—like Korea (which we are now told is an even greater nuclear threat than Saddam Hussein) and Vietnam

(which was precipitated by a naval “incident” in the Gulf of Tonkin that has now achieved its own immortality).

My recital of these depressing events is intended solely to illustrate that the mechanisms for precipitating war are about as real as the average television sitcom.

President Bush has perhaps fatally wounded the process by his plaintive denunciations of Saddam Hussein’s failure to disarm. Inspectors have failed to come up with his vaunted “weapons of mass destruction” which Bush cites as the sole reason for Bush War II against Saddam Hussein.

We have deployed vast numbers of troops and military equipment to Iraq’s borders, in preparation for the Big Push. The delay in attack has been prolonged by the failure to discover any reason why we should attack him. Surely there is a Gulf of Tonkin somewhere in the Middle East. So much depends on it that we cannot afford to let it pass.

The only thing which keeps this latest crusade of Don Quixote—which has been more accurately described as Alice in Wonderland—in the forefront of world affairs, is the Ministry of Fear, which at present comprises the entire United States Government. It is a public relations apparatus of the military-industrial complex, the Israeli War Party, and the State of Israel.

Every agency of the government is committed to maintain the drumbeat for war, and every method is used to attack those who demand peace.

The system has now come full circle, as I was drawn into this work solely because this same government and its allies sentenced my mentor, Ezra Pound, to life without trial in a mental institution, a duration vile from which I was instrumental in getting him released in 1957, with all charges dropped by the government.

Ezra’s sole offense was to publicly oppose U.S. involvement in the Second World War, a stand which was reflected by many good Americans, such as our national hero, Charles Lindbergh, and many others.

I found that no one had ever defended him, or tried to end his illegal imprisonment based upon charges brought against him by the authority on the subject of high treason—none other than Alger Hiss. Ezra’s sole complaint about this imbroglio was his observing, to his visitors at St. Elizabeth, his goal that he had already served more time than Alger Hiss—and he later walked out, a free man.

The Homeland Security operation, which has yet to find an address in our nation’s capitol, is the present sobriquet of the Ministry of Fear. It is a conglomeration of a host of government agencies: the Federal Bureau of Investigation; Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms; the Central Intelligence Agency; Mossad; the Anti-Defamation League; a hundred-million-dollar mail-order fraud agency calling itself the Southern Poverty Law Center; and the British Secret Service.

They assail peace demonstrators as traitors, accusing them of lack of patriotism and anything else they can think to call them. These innocents won’t alone stop the Juggernaut of War, which may be brought to a halt by its square wheels while other Powerful Influences are at work. The Solution may not be brought to bear on this planet, but we are confident that it will appear in due time.

Money And The Conspiracy Of Evil

Conspiracy Con 2002 Lecture (2 hrs.)

By Eustace Mullins

Sixty years ago Eustace Mullins was a protégé of literary giant Ezra Pound, who understood central banking and its relationship with world unrest. He has been a respected researcher for over 50 years, and has since authored many books on conspiracy, including Secrets Of The Federal Reserve and The World Order.

Using his recent travel experiences and Orwell’s 1984 as examples, Eustace discusses the irony of Homeland Security and how Americans are now treated as “Enemies of the State”. He then describes the real manipulators behind all major wars, the Cold War, the Stock Market, the Medical Scam, 9/11, terrorism, and more.

To accomplish all this, the “perpe-traitors” control the government, the schools, and the media, while keeping us in unimportant jobs, and stealing most of our earnings. For these purposes the Central Bank is the only mechanism that works. Without the government-granted license to print money, the conspiracy would be no more of a threat to us than bin Laden actually is.

Eustace gives a history lesson you won’t forget—nor should you!

Eustace Mullins Trapped In Extended-Care Facility Awaiting Wheels Of Justice

3/7/03 RICK MARTIN
(rick@TheSpectrumNews.org)

I had received a phone call a few weeks ago telling me that Eustace Mullins had a stroke, and his family was trying to get him declared incompetent. That was not good news and certainly required immediate investigation.

After numerous calls to Eustace, it was clear he was not getting his messages, and I had no other contacts to find out what was happening. Then, yesterday, I received an unexpected call from a kind soul, a friend of Eustace's and a long-time reader of The SPECTRUM, who I'll just refer to here as S.M. With information from S.M. I was finally able to find Eustace.

After speaking with Eustace at length yesterday, and then again today, I've managed to piece together the story. Here is the short version:

In late October, Eustace had several minor strokes. He was examined and tested at the University of Virginia, where he was released. Some time passed, but then he became a little ill and his younger brother, Robert, drove Eustace back to the University of Virginia.

Eustace had a third stroke. He stayed at the University of Virginia Stroke Division for three days, and made a complete recovery. Instead of taking Eustace home, his brother took him to a nursing home in Waynesboro, Virginia. That was February 5.

The nursing home turned out to be a nightmare for Eustace. He stayed there for 1 month. Last week he was moved to his present "extended-care" facility.

To quote Eustace:

"It was not healthy. This place is better. They moved me out of there a week ago, and brought me over to this place, but this place has even worse food.

"It's filled with old women in walkers, 90-95 years old. It's the most depressing atmosphere in the world. You couldn't stay here longer than 6 hours, Rick, without jumping out the window. It is so depressing, it's incredible. Unless you actually experienced it yourself, it's impossible to describe."

But before taking him to the nursing home, under duress, Eustace's brother forced him to sign a Power Of Attorney. This has since been overturned, through a Revocation Of Power Of Attorney. But the brother has taken possession of all of Eustace's belongings—home, vehicle, bank account, etc., and is now contesting the Revocation Of Power Of Attorney.

In the meantime, Eustace is awaiting resolution of his rights and his property, through the courts, while confined to the depressing extended-care facility.

Fortunately, Eustace is up to his usual quick wit and humor. Here is what he had to say:

"Well, the story of my life in the last 30 days would make THE horror story of all time. Most people, after reading what has happened to me in the last 30 days, would commit suicide. [Laughter]

"The food is totally tasteless, totally cheap, it's government surplus that they probably get from the government, free, and it's prepared by a couple of old folks. A can opener is the only cooking school they've ever been to in their life.

"They serve Campbell's soup, partially warmed on the stove. The Campbell's chicken soup is filled with huge globules of fat, because they only heat it for about 10 seconds; it doesn't give the fat time to dissolve. It's very unhealthy.

"They serve Campbell's beef stew, which is as basic as you can get. I mean, any cow would be ashamed to wind up in their beef stew.

"Oh, I could go down the line."

Eustace will be 80 years old on March 8 (tomorrow). Here is what he reported during my conversation with him today:

"Today they were having a birthday party for all of the inmates born in March. My birthday is tomorrow, so I was one of them. There were only two of us, and then they had about 15 of the inmates turn out for the ice cream.

"It was really the most ghoulish party you ever saw in your life. There were two 105-year-old women there. All these people are totally deaf. I had a deaf woman from Sweden who kept trying to get me to dance the polka. It was like a horror show, really.

"Honestly, I guess I'll get over it. It's hilarious to talk about, but it was grueling. This is my life now.

"My life, Rick, has been knowing and working with people like you, not living in a hell-hole like this."

Fortunately, Eustace ended our conversation on this note: "We'll have a great laugh about all of this, someday."

In the meantime, Eustace waits for some legal resolution concerning his property. And he's probably taking mental notes for the writing of an upcoming exposé on healthcare facilities such as the ones he has experienced firsthand!

For those SPECTRUM readers who wish to communicate with or help Eustace in any way whatsoever, please send your messages to Eustace in care of The SPECTRUM at P. O. Box 1567, Tehachapi, CA 93581, and we'll be sure that they get to him promptly.

In the meantime, please keep Eustace in your prayers. △

"I'm going to be eighty soon, and I guess the one thing that puzzles me most is how quick it got here."

Armageddon: Zionism's Diabolical Goal

Editor's note: Those of you who study the articles of longtime historical truthbringer Eustace Mullins in this publication are well aware of the close cooperation that exists between many Christian Fundamentalists and Zionist Jews and their respective leaderships. It is a lucrative marriage-of-convenience from both sides of the aisle.

The dangerous consequences for America of this demonic liason is nowhere better described than in Eustace's comprehensive article AMERICA'S PERIL: The Israeli "Fifth Column" Operating In The United States that was shared back in our June 2002 issue. He begins by saying:

"While nervous young soldiers prowl public buildings, fully loaded weapons at the alert, the real danger to America is under no restraint whatsoever.

"While 'Homeland Security' under Tom Ridge daily issues new warnings of terrible catastrophes about to occur, the wreckers go about business as usual, conspiring to force the United States into igniting World War III. They intend only one survivor of this conflict."

And then, later on, in our November 2002 issue, in an article titled The Secret Of 9/11: The Drumbeat For War, Eustace points out:

"In conclusion, 9/11 happened to the American people only after years of preparation and incessant campaigns to neutralize American patriots, wipe out the citizens' militias, and lavish many millions of dollars on the propagandists who work for Israel by convincing Americans that God commands that we help the Israelis massacre all of the remaining Palestinians, leaving them in control of the world.

"The evidence of these operations is 9/11 itself, which could never have occurred without the above participants, and the result could not have been more fortuitous for the Israelis. We [are supposed to believe that we] can only avenge 9/11 by helping the Israelis kill all of their present and future enemies throughout the world.

"The evangelistas have written these words of God in stone, and we are to have no other choice. However, there remains one choice for all Americans: consider the evidence, use your intelligence, and do only what benefits the American Republic."

And that is definitely NOT what is being exercised at this time, either by the duped majority of the American people OR by their bought-off congressional representatives who should know better. Fear and greed rule the day.

And if you look closely—while the United States and Great Britain stand larger than life at the podium, pounding loudly for the "necessary" war in Iraq—you'll see that Israel is lurking there too, hiding behind both of them, like a little devil whispering sweet war directives in both their ears, and hardly able to stand still while waiting for, well, Armageddon to begin.

Grace Halsell, the author of the following essay by that name, discovered Truth the old-fashioned way—as a result of her own diligent and honest personal research. She has a keen eye for the morally absurd, too.

*Grace has covered both the Korean and Vietnam wars as a journalist, was a White House speechwriter for President Lyndon Johnson, and has written many books, among them Prophecy And Politics (Lawrence Hill & Company, Westport, Connecticut). Her seasoned professionalism is everywhere evident in the following report, reprinted from a masterful book collection titled The Book Your Church Doesn't Want You To Read (1993, edited by Tim C. Leedom, Kendall-Hunt Publishing Company, 2460 Kerper Boulevard, P.O. Box 539, Dubuque IA, 52004-0539).*

The timeliness of her observations are nowhere more crucial to share with you than right now. As the drumbeat for war in Iraq continues to beat loudly, despite MASSIVE worldwide opposition at the grassroots level, it's important to highlight key shadowy Forces of Evil and their insane agendas operating in cloaked mode from behind the scenes.

We would especially like to thank Randy R., a longtime SPECTRUM friend and seeker of Truth, who brought this insightful article to our attention to share with you at this perfect time of unfolding events on the world stage. Through the power of a first-person account, Grace tells, in plain terms, the story behind the story that's unfolding on the evening news.

1993 GRACE HALSELL

I first went to Jerusalem in 1979 to research a book dealing with Christians, Muslims, and Jews. While there I met many third-generation Americans, such as Bobby and Linda Brown of Brooklyn, who together with 25 other couples—half of them from the United States—moved onto land of the Palestinians and took the land at gunpoint. They staked off 750 acres and put a strong iron fence around it. Israeli soldiers guard this settlement night and day. That is illegal under every international law.

One evening, we sat under the stars looking at the flickering lights of Palestinian villages. Bobby Brown, with a wave of his arm, said: "All the Palestinians have to leave this land. God gave this land to us, the Jews."

This incident made a deep impression on me. I knew Bobby Brown could not use an Uzi and confiscate land at gunpoint in Brooklyn. What made it all right for him to use a gun to take land from Palestinians?

And moreover, why did we, as American taxpayers, give Israel the money to pay for the weapons to confiscate Palestinian land?

Had God deeded the land to Bobby Brown?

Had the Palestinians been living there for 2,000 years, just holding it until Bobby Brown could claim it?

I had to ask myself: Did I believe God had a Chosen Land and a Chosen People?

I returned home, and the questions remained. To research these questions, and how I and others felt about them, I signed to go on a conducted tour of the Holy Land with Jerry Falwell.

On arrival in Jerusalem, our group went to the Old City and we approached the large Muslim grounds where the Dome of the Rock and Al-Aqsa Mosque are located. "There" said our Israeli guide, pointing to the mosque, "we will build our third temple."

As we left the site, I remarked to Clyde, a retired Minneapolis business executive, that the guide said a temple would be built there. But, I asked, what about the mosque? It is one of the three most sacred shrines in all of Islam, and holy to a billion Muslims around the world.

"Oh" said Clyde, "the mosque will be destroyed. One way or another, it has to be removed. You know it's in the Bible that the temple must be built. And there's no other place for it."

Clyde was convinced that Jews, aided by Christians, should destroy the mosque, build a temple, and reinstate the killing of animals in the temple—all in order to please God.

Many Christians throughout this land feel the same as Clyde. They organized a Temple Mount Foundation to raise money to help Jewish terrorists destroy the Muslim mosque. I talked with several, including Terry Reisenhoover of Oklahoma, and the Reverend James deLoach of Houston's Second Baptist Church.

The Rev. DeLoach visited in my apartment in Washington, and was proud to tell me he had raised and spent tens of thousands of dollars to defend Jewish terrorists charged with assaults on the mosque. He was also pleased to relate that he had entertained, in his Houston home, Jewish yeshiva students who were studying how to slaughter animals, to be used as sacrifice inside the temple they hope to build.

The Christians who want the mosque destroyed—and a Jewish temple built—follow a belief system called dispensationalism. In all of the world, in all of history, they place Israel on center stage.

They contend that we must all go through seven time periods. The countdown on history began, they tell us, in 1948, with the gathering of Jews into Palestine and the creation of the modern state of Israel. The dispensationalists believe in a God not of love, but of war: they believe in what is termed Armageddon theology.

Our group also traveled to Megiddo, located about an hour's drive north of Tel Aviv.

As we left the bus, I walked alongside Clyde, the retired business executive. As we looked out over the valley, Clyde exclaimed: "At last! I am viewing the site of Armageddon."

We continued to gaze at fields—that in size would be lost in any Texas ranch—and Clyde talked of a 200-million-man army that would invade Israel: "Right here!" he said. And a great decisive battle would ensue that would involve all the armies of the Earth. This battle, involving nuclear weapons, would kill most of the inhabitants of this Earth.

I remarked that, for such a big battle, the valley looked very small. "Oh, no!" Clyde says. "You can get a lot of tanks in there!" Clyde's eyes were shining. "When this battle begins, we—who are Born Again—will be lifted up, raptured."

He assured me he was not worried about the destruction of the Earth, because he would not be here. He would be Up There. Watching. With his escape hatch, he seemed actually to look forward to the destruction of Planet Earth.

A couple of years passed, and I received a colored brochure of a Falwell-sponsored trip. Like the first brochure, it was printed in Israel. In this brochure, Falwell did not once mention that we would be traveling to the Land of Christ. Nor, for that matter, did he once mention the name of Christ.

Once we arrived, we had no Christian guide—to any site where Christ was born, died, or had his ministry. There was not a single planned visit to a Christian church—or a plan to meet any of the

"I must write this diary in secrecy and obscurity. It concerns my arctic flight of the nineteenth day of February in the year of nineteen hundred and forty-seven.

"There comes a time when the rationality of men must fade into insignificance, and one must accept the inevitability of the Truth! I am not at liberty to disclose the following documentation at this writing, perhaps it shall never see the light of public scrutiny, but I must do my Duty and record here for all to read one day in a world which hopefully the greed and exploitation of certain of mankind can no longer suppress that which is Truth."

Christians living there, whose forebears have lived in Palestine since the days of Christ.

We had only Israeli guides, and the focus clearly was on military aspects. The Israeli guides gave us endless explanations of why the Israelis should keep all the land of historic Palestine, leaving nothing for the Palestinians.

Once we were on a bus tour, and I thought surely we would stop in Nazareth. "No" said the Israeli guide. The bus would not stop in Nazareth. No one contested the guide's decision.

On the outskirts of Nazareth, however, our Israeli guide changed his mind. "We will stop in Nazareth for 20 minutes" he announced, "to use the toilet facilities." And thus we stopped. We left Nazareth without having seen it.

We proceeded to Jerusalem, where Falwell chose to honor Ariel Sharon, the burly general who masterminded the invasion of Lebanon which injured and killed 200,000 Palestinians and Lebanese, most of them civilians.

In introducing Sharon, Falwell said that, in the annals of history, only a few great men came along. He named George Washington, Abraham Lincoln—and Ariel Sharon!

On another night, Falwell gave a big banquet to honor the defense minister, Moshe Arens. Before introducing the defense minister, Falwell, in an aside to Arens, said: "Mr. Minister, I want to thank you for that jet airplane you gave me."

Falwell, and other dispensationalists, have a working alliance with militant Jewish Zionists. My latest book, Prophecy And Politics, deals with this marriage of convenience between militant Christians and militant Jewish Zionists. Each group uses the other, gains from the other.

Christian Zionists, or dispensationalists, give Israel total support because they think there has to be an Israel there, in place—not for the Jews, but for the battle of Armageddon, which they actually believe must occur. It's part of the required steps, they believe, that will lead to their Rapture and the Second Coming of Christ.

Because of their scenario, they make a cult of the land of Israel.

The seedbed for this dispensationalism is in Dallas, at the Dallas Theological Seminary. I met with John Walvoord, the president, an elderly gentleman who said God had given all of Palestine to the Jews.

In talking with Walvoord, I kept referring to the suffering of the Palestinians. "What about them?" I asked. "I am referring to land" he said at one point. And he added: "You keep talking about spirit aspects."

It actually happens: Those who make a cult of the land of Israel put this cult of land above the teachings of Christ.

Jewish Zionists such as Begin and Shamir and Sharon support the Christian dispensationalists because the dispensationalists give them total support. In dealing with the criticism of this alliance between militant Christians and militant Jews, I think it is important to know the difference between religion and politics.

True faith, whether one is Christian, Muslim, or Jewish, is religion. Zionism, whether one is Christian, Muslim, or Jewish, is politics. And it is politics because it deals with land, not spiritual values.

In closing, I want to mention a trip I made to Basel, Switzerland. I attended the first Christian Zionist Congress. I was one of 589 persons from 27 countries attending this Congress.

It was held in the same hall where Theodor Herzl had called the first Jewish Zionist Congress, about 100 years ago. Herzl had stressed that Jews were different and should live exclusively among Jews. Christian Zionists say the same. This conference was supported by the Israelis.

I listened to speakers who were Jewish Zionists as well as Christian Zionists. Rather than provide hope by suggesting steps whereby Jews and Arabs might reach reconciliation, and live together, in peace, each speaker seemed to reinforce the fears of the other. Rather than stress how much Arabs and Jews—and indeed all human beings—have in common, speakers told us: Jews are different. They must live exclusively among Jews.

Christian Zionists believe that God has ordained that the Jews control the land of Palestine, and that they control Jerusalem, and build a temple, and that they reinstate animal sacrifice.

The Christian Zionists approve every military action taken by the Jewish Zionists. If Israel bombs Iraq, as it has done, or invades Lebanon, as it has done, or shoots and kills Palestinian children, as it does, then Christian Zionists will say: "Well, that is a Chosen Land and a Chosen People. All of that is orchestrated by God."

Although our aid to Israel is more than we give to many countries, including all of India, Africa, and South America, Christian Zionists will support these billions of your taxpayer dollars going to Israel, because of their interpretation that God wants that land as the landing base for the Second Coming of Christ. It is the LAND for which they care. They want it there, in place, so that the rest of their scenario, including their Rapture, can come to pass.

Somehow, in all the sermons of Jerry Falwell and other Christian Zionists, I miss their telling us about the Sermon On The Mount. And I miss these militant Christians reminding us that Christ possessed a way that was NOT based on military strength.

His way was not to steal property and kill people for the sake of a temporary political kingdom on Earth. Rather, as we know, Christ came to advance and enhance life. He came not to speak and support a cult of land. But he came to speak for the suffering, the destitute, the oppressed.

Indeed, He has a Chosen People. We are all chosen to do good, not evil. Chosen to seek and to work for peace, in the Middle East and in the world. △

TRANCE Formation Of America

This is the documented autobiography of a victim of government mind-control. Cathy O'Brien is the only vocal and recovered survivor of the CIA's MK-Ultra Project Monarch mind-control operation. Chiseled deep into the white stone of the CIA's Langley, Virginia headquarters is a partial verse lifted from the Holy Bible and writings of Saint John: "...and the truth shall make you free." This statement, like the agency, is total unreality. The building that it is engraved upon houses the world's most successful manufacturer of lies to facilitate psychological warfare. The "Company" uses truth and technology as their raw materials to produce "pure" lies for control of you and America's allies. Within the pages of TRANCE Formation Of America you'll find the truth.

3/7/03 ARCHANGEL GABRIEL

Good afternoon, dear friend and scribe. I am Archangel Gabriel, along with many others who you may regard as the Host of God. Michael has already informed you ones—through recent past messages—to our very near presence within your planetary environment at this time. We come within the Light of Creator of All That Is. Our Radiance is but the Power of the One Source, flowing through to those in need, for the benefit of ALL of Creation.

Thank you for hearing our call and scribing this message. We have asked you to add this last-minute task to an already filled plate because so many ones on your world are crying out for help in this turbulent time—and yet some of these same ones, who claim familiarity with our messages, easily forget what counsel we have shared in past lessons that would have made the going a lot easier now.

Artificially induced bioelectrical conditions of depression, anxiety, and related detachments from spiritual sustenance are being broadcast at such an intensity at this time that many are floundering in all manner of negativity. This negativity is intensified by a sense of disorientation with respect to what is “reality”—a condition resulting from the planetary frequency rising faster than some of you can adjust.

On the world stage you are witnessing opposing factions of your so-called elite world controllers battle for “king of the hill”—as we told you, for many years now, would necessarily happen. You see the wishes of one faction (who prefer different plans for your demise) manifesting through such anti-war actions as are being taken by France, Germany, the Soviet Union, and China. You see the other faction working through the United States, Great Britain, Israel, and whomever they have managed to bribe or blackmail for their vote at your United Nations debate forum. The foolish determination of the one is matched, step for step, by the overwhelming technical might of the other.

But do not be deceived by external appearances, dear ones. The opposing elite factions conducting their business through these “puppets” are ALL controlled, at a still higher level of inter-dimensional manipulation, by the SAME Dark Energies. They require that your planet be kept down in frequency for their continued comfort and survival in your domain.

How is this accomplished? As we have explained in many past lessons, this is done as it has always been done—through the creation of conditions that generate or provoke negative (low-frequency) emotions like fear, despair, etc. in as many of you as possible. You, millions of you, reacting to their contrived ominous events, then radiate that negative energy outward, like a lot of radio towers, and thus is created a low-frequency “atmosphere” in energy space that’s comfortable and nurturing to them, and in the process partially cancels the unpleasant (to them) high-frequency energies impinging upon your planet (and your entire solar system, actually) with greater and greater intensity, and higher and higher frequency, with each passing day.

So what you are witnessing on the world stage right now (through such focal points as Iraq and Korea) is no more and no less than a reflection in the physical domain of a high-stakes battle for survival by Dark Energies who have long held comfortable reign over the affairs of mankind on planet Earth. Picture them like stubborn bugs trying to hold onto the outside of your automobile (planet) as you drive through a kind of cosmic car wash at this time.

Ultimately these Dark Energies will lose their hold and, through sheer discomfort from the intensifying high-frequency environment, choose to go elsewhere. But not without a fight. And if possible, not without destroying as much of what they can’t have so nobody else can enjoy it either.

This is where we of the Host of God come into the picture and necessarily become very close participants in the affairs of your world. As both Michael and Esu “Jesus” Sananda have explained in recent messages shared within these pages, we stand quite ready to nullify any actions of aggression that cross the line into the danger zone of jeopardizing the health and forward evolutionary progression of Mother Earth and those souls experiencing with her in alignment with Creator’s Will.

Yes, that’s a mouthful. But we’re a recognized formidable adversary to those in positions of seeming power who have chosen to be agents of Darkness. And as has already been explained, the Dark Energies associated with your planet are feeling quite desperate at this time.

I, Gabriel, am historically known for having somewhat of a dramatic flair when it comes to making important announcements. So let me make this one perfectly clear (and you may add your own trumpet blast if so desired): We of the Host again urge those in major decision-making capacities to think twice and then act in good conscience—or be prepared to learn that lesson the hard way. The Golden Rule is not difficult to follow for those who are aligned with Creator’s Will. This is the time of Testing and Sorting—with no exceptions and no “wiggle room” as you ones put it.

We suggest that you who read these words with understanding and appreciation remain diligent about keeping one foot in that physical world of experience and one in our higher world of spirit. Balance between these two domains is key to a smooth ride through the Planetary Transition (that which has been called the Great Awakening and Great Cleansing) now in obvious progress on your Earth.

Do monitor what your news reports have to say, for you can discern much more than they would like to reveal by their actions and words (especially of backpedaling and denial). But practice doing such monitoring of “news” with a healthy detachment that buffers you from being pulled into the negative emotional reactions of fear, anger, etc., that they effort to manipulate you into emitting.

If you find yourself sliding down that slippery Dark slope of negativity, remember to call in the Light, as often as necessary, and ask we of the Host for assistance. We are ever ready to help. But YOU MUST ASK! Likewise make humor a frequent ingredient of your daily emotional diet. Along with love, appreciation, and kindness, humor is a powerful antidote to any type of low-frequency attack, whether from within or without.

We would like to close this message by asking that you also continue to send Love, Light, and Appreciation to Mother Earth, who endures great negativity at this time of turmoil so that you ones may have a classroom environment in which much unique soul-growth can take place. Her destiny resides in the same higher-frequency environment that you who are drawn to these messages instinctively know is likewise YOUR new home. That higher-dimensional realm is already home to many of you during what you call sleep periods, and the “bleed-through” into waking consciousness of that experience shall continue to intensify as the “veil of separation” continues to thin.

It was about this time last year that Soltec—whose translation of duties in your terms would be as Geophysical Commander of our mission of aiding in this Earth Transition Project—shared a most critical message with you that we are asking to be repeated again here. Purposeful covert assaults upon your bioelectrical stability make it difficult to remember what you read yesterday, much less a year ago, and that message was looking down the road to what you are facing RIGHT NOW.

Bless you who are persevering through these intense lessons of spiritual growth, for as any ONE grows, so does the Whole of Creation. It is a grand and glorious journey, indeed!

I am Gabriel—Archangel, Wayshower, and formidable ally to you who hear the call and effort to do your part in this most Grand Play unfolding. I leave you in the Light and Love that flows through me from the Source of All That Is. Salu.

It's Always Darkest Before The Dawn

4/24/02 SOLTEC

Good morning, and thank you for hearing my call. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, here with you in Service to the Radiant Light of Creator God. There are others present, as well, among them Esu (“Jesus” Immanuel Sananda), as we are all watching and monitoring events on your world continuously.

It is very important in these days that we keep the spiritual messages going forth, as many on your planet are searching for something of meaning—something to grasp onto in the present uncertain times. You see, when times appear the darkest, many will turn inward and will find God and true en-Lightenment, and the peace which accompanies that personal connection to Creator Source. Your fellow servants of Light need these messages as well, for even they have times of concern and wonder if all this is true. You have a saying, that it is always darkest before the dawn. Well, chelas [students], it is nearly dawn.

For many years we have sent messages, through our many scribes on your planet, on many subjects. Yet, there has been a thread of continuity that has run throughout all the messages, and that has been instructional information about the time in which you now find yourselves experiencing.

There is, at present, an extremely fearful energy emanating from the inhabitants of planet Earth, as each day passes and the outcome of events seemingly grows more unsure. You have wars and battles raging around your globe, and Mother Earth herself is reflecting the uncertainty of her inhabitants.

There is a great increase in the number and magnitude of earthquakes, many centered in the localities of the wars and fighting. Your planet's magnetic field is fluctuating, and even your scientists are now admitting that it is very likely that the magnetic poles are about to “flip”. The weather patterns have changed drastically. You are experiencing a shortening of your spring and autumn seasons, and a lengthening of your summer and winter. Your planet's ice caps are melting and breaking up. Strange (mostly man-made) diseases are cropping up and taking a tremendous number of lives. Your skies are criss-crossed with what you have labeled as “chemtrails”. Temperatures of your planet's oceans are rising and a lot of sea life is dying. Many fresh-water species have been mutating into unrecognizable things and dying from strange diseases. And the Dark Energies are running rampant upon the Earth, causing all sorts of trouble and mischief, and using all these things to cultivate fear in the hearts of many ones—

Though a small handful of your planet's scientists are starting to understand that Earth is a living entity with a consciousness, and that she will reflect and react to her inhabitants, unfortunately for your world they are coming to this factual awareness too late in the game. For that which has been set in motion is, at this stage, past the point of no return.

The majority of Earth's inhabitants still need the physical experience to learn; they will not listen to Higher Guidance, for they only believe in that which they can see, hear, taste, touch, or smell. These ones have denied all but their physical senses, so it is with the physical senses that they must experience, and eventually learn. And learn they shall, but their lessons may be bitter.

We do understand why you may be apprehensive or even fearful. However, these are all things we have discussed with you over the last 15 or so years. We did this so that those of you who were listening to your Higher Guidance would be prepared for this very time. We told you then that your world would appear to be coming apart, and that fearfulness would be rampant. Well, chelas, you have arrived!

But—recall also that we told you that you would not be alone in these times. And remember also that ALL IS POSSIBLE. YOU ARE ONLY LIMITED BY YOUR OWN LIMITED THOUGHTS AND BELIEFS. THERE ARE NO LIMITATIONS WITH GOD.

As the Dark (Adversarial) Forces push harder and harder, you will continue to see an escalation of all things you consider to be of a negative-energy nature—like wars, diseases, killing, greed, fearfulness, etc. And so long as the majority of people on your planet “live only in the physical realm” and believe only in physical actions (“an eye for an eye” type of mentality), the present negative cycle will not only continue, but will grow ever stronger.

Let me speak for a moment about peace. All are so quick to want peace, but the majority believe that peace can only be obtained by keeping an enemy at bay—such as by having bigger guns, or by killing off the enemy. Chelas, this is not peace! Furthermore, peace is not simply the absence of war.

Peace is A STATE OF BEING, a state of consciousness if you will.

In all your known history, there has never been TRUE peace on your world. And until the state of consciousness of peace has been achieved by those on your world, you will never experience peace.

The best you can hope for is the absence of war. But, you have never had a time in which there were no weapons of destruction pointed at your enemies. Peace through the threat of assured mutual destruction is an oxymoronic statement!

And yet, all the while, your world continues to chase its own tail in trying to amass as much wealth and related material possessions as possible—believing the lie which says that your value or worth is based upon what you have, instead of what you are. The glitter and the glitz are very intoxicating to those who believe that lie, and it has become an addiction to have as much as you can possibly gather to you. But it is never enough.

Others—those who know that they are more than their outward, physical existence—are repulsed by what they are witnessing. You ones see all the enticement as a great distraction, and pray daily that your world will wake up.

Believe me when I tell you that your prayers are seen going up from your planet as great shafts of Light, and they do reach to the farthest ends of the Universe. Your prayers are heard, and your prayers are answered.

But, you must understand that those who desire THE OPPOSITE are allowed their own free will, as well, and they must be allowed to learn in whatever way they see fit. These ones, as you have pointed out, react out of fear and disbelief when they are told about a world in which everyone is truly equal—where there is no money, no gold, a world in which there is no disease and no want, a world where you will live to be at least 1,000 years old.

On that world, you do not get up and go to a job every morning to gather a paycheck. And yet everything that needs to be accomplished gets accomplished, because it is a world where everyone desires to do their part. Everyone is valued and honored for the unique aspects of Creator that they are—and not for what they have, or what they can get. It is the world that many of you ones have dreamed of, and have memories of—for many of you have come from such worlds to this one, to assist in the Great Awakening and in this upward planetary dimensional transition.

And, because you desire your prayers to be answered, and your desires and requests to be granted, likewise those who do not want that world must also be granted their desires and requests. Those ones will be given the choice of leaving here or staying, and most will choose to remain to continue on with their life's course and their karmic path. They will require more lifetime experiences attached to Earth before they are ready to move on.

Those of you who find living on your planet more and more difficult and unacceptable, will be offered the option of leaving or remaining as well. All is by choice, and there is no coercion.

You were told a very long time ago that there are many, many places in the Universe—a place that is suitable for everyone. Some of those places are not yet visible to your eyes, as they lie in parallel dimensions, just slightly offset from your present dimension of experience by “a few seconds of time” (in a manner of speaking). But they are very very real, and very very near. And very soon, those of you whose frequency is accelerating will be able to see them with your physical eyes, for as your frequency increases, you will be able to see beyond your present limited perceptual range.

I tell you now a truth: That time is VERY NEAR, indeed.

And, for those of you who have family members of the four-legged kind, fear not. Those family members will not be left behind. There is more than enough room for all—two-leggeds and four-leggeds alike.

The time of your service on Earth is drawing to a close very rapidly, and your journey there is just about over. As events accelerate, your effectiveness will begin to wane, and we will not require that you remain there, for we would not jeopardize you ones.

The hearts of men are turning cold, and a time is coming very soon when they will close their eyes and ears and hearts to any messages from the Higher Realms. There is coming a time when people will curse and blame God for all their woes, and will want to persecute those who will continue to believe in God. They will refuse to take the responsibility for their own existence. They shall not be able to comprehend the fact that the world in which they live is exactly the world they have created. When your economic structure finally crumbles, and the weather no longer yields rainfall upon the fields, and food disappears from the grocery store shelves, instead of falling on their knees in prayer, they will shake their fists at Heaven.

You have been told that we are among you, and indeed that is true. Esu, Michael, Gabriel, and many others of the Host of God are very close to your planet. I will only repeat it for emphasis.

Know that you are NEVER alone. Know that God ALWAYS protects His faithful servants.

YOUR PRAYERS ARE HEARD. YOUR PRAYERS ARE ANSWERED. You have asked that the Kingdom of Heaven come to Earth, and that we intervene in the course your world is taking. We ask that you have patience just a little longer, chelas. The sorting-out and cleaning-out is proceeding exactly as it should. The fact that events are accelerating is evidence of that.

Continue on for a little while longer, as you have been. Do not despair, and do not stop the service unto one another. When you feel the pressures of your daily lives to be too much, lean upon one another, and share in the burdens. It is the way it should be, and it is the way it shall be.

Do not be too proud to ask for help. It is not a sign of weakness; it is a sign of maturity.

Do not stop praying for your world. You may not think it is making a difference, but it is. We see the effectiveness, and soon you shall also. Many glorious and wondrous things await you ones who have been serving. God never reneges on His promises, and the reward for your service awaits you.

So, in closing, let me only say this: When you see all the events coming—such as Earth changes taking place, and all the battles and wars, and all the economic woes—know that these are the things that signal the end of the current age on Earth, and that the new age is very, very near. And look up, for you will see many things in your skies that you have never seen before. When you see these things, know that we are there with you. All is unfolding as it should.

Rest now, and be at peace. I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, and I thank you for taking the time to sit and write these words. I am in Service unto Holy God of Light and The Creation—and so are you.

Thank you. Salu. ☸

“All of this world is sacred, and so, do not forget! Every dawn as it comes is a holy event, and every day is holy. And also you must always remember that the two-leggeds and all the other peoples who stand upon this Earth are sacred and should be treated as such.”

Patriot Act II Shreds America's Soul

draft bill from the Department of Justice aimed at boldly extending the powers of the Patriot Act. The draft legislation has the typically misleading title Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003.

Fortunately, someone leaked the draft bill to the Center for Public Integrity, and thus, NOW was able to break the story for public scrutiny. Thank you, Bill Moyers, and thank you, Center for Public Integrity for bringing this critical legislation into the public spotlight.

After the program aired, news organizations and civil rights groups were abuzz digesting the alarming implications of this brazen move to eliminate even more of the fundamental freedoms established under the Constitution and Bill Of Rights—freedoms that were already underhandedly overridden by the original Patriot Act legislation of late October 2001.

You can bet the ones responsible for drafting this legislation have sharpened their pencils and gone back to the drawing board to package it even better, in even greater disguise. Don't be surprised if, in the heat of a suddenly begun war with Iraq, this legislation isn't pushed through on a Friday night, while no one is looking, under an unassuming name like Making The Homeland Safe.

And for those of you who may be thinking this is "old" news—it most surely is not! This type of legislation, if not this very legislation dressed-up, will keep appearing and being placed before Congress in an effort to gain more and more and more control over you, the dangerously awakening citizenry of America.

Concerning the above-mentioned "draft" legislation, on February 12 the American Civil Liberties Union (website: www.aclu.org) released the following detailed story:

[quoting]

ACLU Says New Ashcroft Bill
Erodes Checks And Balances
On Presidential Power;
Patriot II Legislation Would Needlessly Infringe On Basic Constitutional Liberties

(Contact: media@dcaclu.org)

WASHINGTON — The American Civil Liberties Union today said that new Department of Justice "anti-terrorism" legislation goes further than the USA Patriot Act in eroding checks and balances on Presidential power and contains a number of measures that are of questionable effectiveness, but are sure to infringe on civil liberties.

"The new Ashcroft proposal threatens to fundamentally alter the constitutional protections that allow us to be both safe and free" said Timothy H. Edgar, an ACLU Legislative Counsel. "If it becomes law, it will encourage police spying on political and religious activities, allow the government to wiretap without going to court, and dramatically expand the death penalty under an over-broad definition of terrorism."

The Department of Justice has been drafting the new legislation—called the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003—in secret over the past several months. It contains a multitude of new and sweeping law enforcement and intelligence gathering powers and expands on many provisions in the controversial USA Patriot Act, passed in late October 2001.

The big picture implications of the bill, the ACLU said, include a severe diminishment of basic checks and balances on the power of the executive branch of government and a continuing love affair with untested and likely ineffective security measures, which will, in addition to not making America any safer, infringe on basic liberties—especially personal privacy and the freedoms of speech, association, and religion.

Provisions in the Attorney General's bill would allow the government to strip citizenship from any American who provides support for a group designated by the federal government as a "terrorist organization" (Section 501).

Significantly, the USA Patriot Act broadened the definition of groups that could be so designated to potentially include domestic protest organizations such as Operation Rescue or People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

Also included are provisions permitting—without court order and at the sole discretion of the Attorney General—wiretapping of Americans for 15 days (Sections 103, 104) without a declaration of war by Congress, if the Executive Branch decides unilaterally that an attack has created an emergency.

While the Justice Department would have to check-in with a judge after the 15 days, the information gleaned during that period could still be retained and used against innocent Americans, the ACLU said.

Other contentious proposals in the draft legislation include statutory authority for secret detentions and the termination of court-approved limits on police spying.

Also, the draft bill would apply the death penalty to offenses that, because of the redefinition of domestic terrorism in the USA Patriot Act, could sweep in protest tactics that “involve violent acts or acts dangerous to human life”.

Under the law, the ACLU said, if an anti-war protestor broke the law during a demonstration and someone died as a result, the protestor could be subject to the death penalty (Section 411).

These provisions are only a sampling of the civil liberties concerns in the Ashcroft proposal, the ACLU said. Specifically, the bill, if signed into law, would also:

- Make it easier for the government to initiate surveillance and wiretapping of U.S. citizens under the shadowy, top-secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (Sections 101, 102 and 107).

- Shelter federal agents engaged in illegal surveillance without a court order from criminal prosecution if they are following orders of high Executive Branch officials (Section 106).

- Authorize, in statute, the Department of Justice’s campaign of secret detentions by including a provision that would preempt federal litigation challenging non-disclosure of basic information about detainees (Section 201).

- Threaten public health by severely restricting access to crucial information about environmental health risks posed by facilities that use dangerous chemicals (Section 202).

- Harm Americans’ ability to receive a fair trial by limiting defense attorneys from challenging the use of secret evidence (Section 204).

- Reduce the ability of grand jury witnesses in terrorism investigations to defend themselves against public accusations by gagging them from discussing their testimony with the media or the general public (Section 206).

- Allow for the sampling and cataloguing of innocent Americans’ genetic information without court order and without consent (Sections 301-306).

- Permit, without any connection to anti-terrorism efforts, sensitive personal information about U.S. citizens to be shared with local and state law enforcement (Section 311).

- Undercut trust between police departments and immigrant communities by opening sensitive visa files to local police for the enforcement of complex immigration laws (Section 311).

- Terminate court-approved limits on police spying, which were initially put in place to prevent McCarthy-style law enforcement persecution based on political or religious affiliation (Section 312).

- Provide an incentive for neighbor to spy on neighbor and pose problems similar to those inherent in Attorney General Ashcroft’s “Operation TIPS” by granting blanket immunity to businesses that phone in false terrorism tips, even if their actions are taken with reckless disregard for the truth (Section 313).

- Further criminalize association—without any intent to commit acts of terrorism—with unpopular organizations labeled as terrorist by our government (Section 402).

- Under the pretext of fighting terrorism, unfairly target undocumented workers with extended jail terms for common immigration offenses (Section 502).

- Provide for summary deportations without evidence of crime or criminal intent, even of lawful permanent residents, whom the Attorney General says are a threat to national security (Section 503).

- Abolish fair hearings for lawful permanent residents convicted of criminal offenses through an “expedited removal” procedure, and prevent any court from questioning the government’s unlawful actions by explicitly exempting these cases from habeas corpus.

Congress has not exempted any person from habeas corpus—a protection guaranteed by the Constitution—since the Civil War (Section 504).

In a decidedly weak rebuttal, the Justice Department’s Director of Public Affairs, Barbara Comstock, issued the following statement on February 7:

[quoting]

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The President expects all his cabinet departments that are involved in homeland security, including the Department of Justice, to make sure we are doing everything we can to protect the American people. It should not be surprising that the Department of Justice takes that responsibility seriously and discusses additional tools to protect the American people. We are continually considering anti-terrorism measures and would be derelict if we were not doing so.

The Department’s deliberations are always undertaken with the strongest commitment to our Constitution and civil liberties.

We are continually asking our field prosecutors, investigators, and experts what tools they need to prevent future acts of terrorism. During our internal deliberations, many ideas are considered, some are discarded, and new ideas emerge in the process, along with numerous discussion drafts.

[Excerpts from the author’s Introduction:] Though I knew in my heart from day one that the 9/11 WTC/Pentagon assault was a staged event, I told myself that I would not write another booklet. Plus, I had had one too many conversations with dear and educated friends who had gone absolutely ballistic when even the concept that anything other than the reported “news” could be behind this episode.

However, as I listen to the media and their 24/7 frenzy of hateful misinformation, I knew it was time to act. This booklet is not for everyone. But it is for those who love their country and have that rare quality called an open mind.

9/11: The Great Illusion is intentionally kept short so as many as possible will have access to this material. People must wake up to some cold hard realities: A small occult group—The Illuminati—have been organized for centuries, and have control of our economy, culture, and political organizations. These people have ZERO respect for our Republic and Bill Of Rights. They are behind a vast majority of the wars and revolutions, and are behind the events of September 11th.

This booklet is presenting evidence that goes against everything that the mainstream media and political structure would have people believe.

As you more suspicious readers might conclude from the above double-talk, Barbara Comstock is NOT available for direct comment or interview concerning this matter. Furthermore, it's probably just "coincidence" that Bill Moyers' exposé aired on February 7, while attorney general Ashcroft delivered a speech to the Council on Foreign Relations on February 10.

Just how bad is this "draft" legislation? Let's take a closer look.

In the NOW program that was aired on PBS on February 7, Bill Moyers interviewed the Center for Public Integrity's founder and executive director, Charles Lewis, concerning the leaked document from the Department of Justice, titled Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003 (dubbed Patriot Act II). Here is what they had to say:

[quoting]

ANNOUNCER: You're watching NOW with Bill Moyers with contributions from NPR News.

Tonight on NOW: inside the Justice Department, plans are afoot. More power to law enforcement at the expense of civil liberties.

LEWIS: There's a lot more authority and power for government, and there's less oversight and information about what government is doing.

ANNOUNCER: Draft legislation leaked to the Center for Public Integrity and NOW's Washington team.

MOYERS: Welcome to NOW. There's an important story developing tonight at the Justice Department. We've obtained a closely-guarded document that shows plans for a sweeping expansion of the government's police powers.

Until now, few people outside of the department, not even members of key congressional committees, have seen this draft legislation. It could lead to increased surveillance and greater secrecy—all in the name of the "war on terror". It raises questions about how we balance liberty and security, the rights of individuals versus the rule of law.

The document was obtained by journalists at the non-partisan Center for Public Integrity.

Here's more on the story from our senior Washington correspondent, Roberta Baskin, and NOW producer Brenda Breslauer.

BASKIN: In Washington, the big scoop often begins with a simple phone call.

LEWIS: I got a phone call from someone who said: "Are you interested in legislation involving national security and surveillance and secrecy and those kind of issues?"

BASKIN: When you got it and read it, what went through your mind?

LEWIS: I got it. I read it. Holy moly. I was incredulous, really, about the document. I realized this is a pretty historic piece of legislation. This isn't just another bill.

BASKIN: What surprised Chuck Lewis was this document, leaked to him by a confidential source and shared exclusively with NOW. It's a Justice Department draft of a law called the Domestic Security Enhancement Act. It has enormous implications for everyone's civil liberties, and for national security. Yet only a few in Washington have even laid eyes on it.

LEWIS: The reason the Justice Department, I think, wants to keep it under wraps is, they know it's a hot potato. They know it's controversial and they want to keep it quiet for as long as possible, until the right precise moment.

BASKIN: And that moment is when?

LEWIS: When we're at war with Iraq.

BASKIN: In wartime, public opinion often favors national security over civil liberties—which is what this draft legislation appears to do—expanding law enforcement and intelligence gathering, reducing judicial oversight of surveillance, even authorizing secret arrests.

To understand the importance of this draft bill, we need to look back at the Patriot Act, rushed into law just weeks after the September 11th attacks.

BUSH: This legislation is essential, not only to pursuing and punishing terrorists, but also preventing more atrocities in the hands of the evil ones.

BASKIN: In the name of the War on Terror, the Patriot Act Of 2001 allowed the government to use secret searches, wiretaps, and other covert surveillance with less oversight. It broadened the government's ability to access email and monitor the Internet, and it authorized the Attorney General to lock up foreign terror suspects without a hearing.

COLE: Principally what the Patriot Act did was to expand the government's ability to conduct surveillance on U.S. citizens and foreign nationals alike, without the same kinds of judicial oversight that had previously been in existence. But much of that surveillance is conducted in secret.

BASKIN: David Cole teaches law at Georgetown University. He says that, in the Fall of 2001, he and other advocates of civil liberties were ignored in the haste to pass the Patriot Act.

BASKIN: The Patriot Act moved through Congress with unprecedented speed. There were few public hearings and very little debate, and some members now have questions about the very legislation they approved overwhelmingly. Nevertheless, the Justice Department has now drafted an even tougher sequel. Insiders are calling it "Patriot Act II".

BASKIN: This draft legislation has been a closely guarded secret. Cole reviewed the confidential draft at Georgetown Law School and gave us his evaluation.

COLE: I think this is quite a radical proposal. It authorizes secret arrests. Never before in this country have we authorized secret arrests. Arrests have always been public. And that's for a good reason. To take someone off the street and lock him up is the most serious thing that a state can do to its citizenry, short of executing them.

BASKIN: And Cole says the draft legislation is worrisome because it is so broadly written.

COLE: It would give the Attorney General essentially unchecked authority to deport anyone who he thought was a danger to our economic interests. It would strip citizenship from people for lawful political associations.

BASKIN: Cole says the proposed changes in the powers of government will be very controversial.

COLE: Many of these provisions, I think, will trouble Republicans. Will trouble conservatives. Will trouble people who are concerned about too much government.

BASKIN: But very few people outside the Justice Department have even had a chance to see the draft bill. NOW has obtained a cover letter for the draft that shows only one member of Congress has received it: Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert.

Iowa Republican Senator Chuck Grassley is a senior member of the Judiciary Committee which would oversee this type of legislation. But when we caught up with him yesterday at Union Station, we were the first to show it to him.

BASKIN: What do you think of the Justice Department's new proposal; it's being called Patriot Act II?

GRASSLEY: I'm going to be very cautious about that legislation. Quite frankly I'm not going to be for dramatic expansion of it, even knowing the environment of terrorism I know is now a threat to Americans. I think we need to move very cautiously. And I think we've had about enough expansion as we should have for awhile.

BASKIN: Grassley says before Congress even considers any new type of terror legislation, he wants answers from the Justice Department about the law already passed in 2001. For months, Senators with oversight over the Patriot Act say Attorney General John Ashcroft has refused to answer key questions.

LEAHY: We really do want answers to the requests that we send. We have 23 outstanding requests to various parts of the Department of Justice, dating back a year, July of last year.

SPECTER: How do we communicate with you? And are you really too busy to respond? And as I've already said, I'll accept that as an answer.

GRASSLEY: You know, it's just like pulling teeth to get information out of a lot of bureaucracy. But where it comes to this issue, the Justice Department has been very difficult.

BASKIN: The Justice Department declined NOW's request for an interview, but confirmed in a statement that additional anti-terrorism measures are under active review.

Professor Cole says if lawmakers do receive new legislative proposals, they should recall that none of the provisions of the draft bill, or the 2001 law, would have prevented the 9/11 attacks.

COLE: There's been no showing that if the Patriot Act had been on the books, September 11th wouldn't have happened. In fact, the evidence that we have about the failure to stop the September 11th plot indicates that it was not through an absence of ability to gather intelligence. It was, rather, through a failure of analysis.

BASKIN: Given that we're in the aftermath of a terrorist attack, wouldn't these proposals help us fight the war on terror and protect American lives?

COLE: They might.

It's always been a balance between keeping us secure and keeping us secure from the government. Our liberties are most tested in times like this. But they were put into place precisely for times like this. So if we give them up at times

CONFIDENTIAL—NOT FOR DISTRIBUTION
Draft—January 9, 2003

DOMESTIC SECURITY ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2003

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Title I: Enhancing National Security Authorities

Subtitle A: Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act Amendments

Section 101: Individual Terrorists as Foreign Powers.

Under 50 U.S.C. § 1801(a)(4), the definition of "foreign power" includes groups that engage in international terrorism, but does not reach unaffiliated individuals who do so. As a result, investigations of "lone wolf" terrorists or "sleeper cells" may not be authorized under FISA. Such investigations therefore must proceed under the stricter standards and shorter time periods set forth in Title III, potentially resulting in unnecessary and dangerous delays and greater administrative burden. This provision would expand FISA's definition of "foreign power" to include all persons, regardless of whether they are affiliated with an international terrorist group, who engage in international terrorism.

Section 102: Clandestine Intelligence Activities by Agent of a Foreign Power.

FISA currently defines "agent of a foreign power" to include a person who knowingly engages in clandestine intelligence gathering activities on behalf of a foreign power—but only if those activities "involve or may involve a violation of" federal criminal law. Requiring the additional showing that the intelligence gathering violates the laws of the United States is both unnecessary and counterproductive, as such activities threaten the national security regardless of whether they are illegal. This provision would expand the definitions contained in 50 U.S.C. § 1801(b)(2)(A) & (B). Any person who engages in clandestine intelligence gathering activities for a foreign power would qualify as an "agent of a foreign power," regardless of whether those activities are federal crimes.

Section 103: Strengthening Wartime Authorities Under FISA.

Under 50 U.S.C. §§ 1811, 1829 & 1844, the Attorney General may authorize, without the prior approval of the FISA Court, electronic surveillance, physical searches, or the use of pen registers for a period of 15 days following a congressional declaration of war. This wartime exception is unnecessarily narrow; it may be invoked only when Congress formally has declared war, a rare event in the nation's history and something that has not occurred in more than sixty years. This provision would expand FISA's wartime exception by allowing the wartime exception like this, without very careful consideration, without a very strong showing, then we've given up what this country stands for.

MOYERS: Chuck Lewis, whom you just saw in that piece, is with me now. He is the Executive Director of the nonpartisan Center for Public Integrity, the organization responsible for obtaining that document. Chuck Lewis, thank you for joining us.

LEWIS: Thank you.

MOYERS: The Patriot Act was passed six weeks after 9/11. We know now that it greatly changed the balance between liberty and security in this nation's framework. What do you think—what's the significance of this new document, called the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003?

LEWIS: I think the significance is it just deepens and broadens, further extends the first Patriot Act. That act in 2001, they had six weeks, which was not a lot of time to throw something together. Now there's been 18 months of all kinds of things that have happened, and court decisions that have tried to roll back some of the Patriot Act.

And other concerns—law enforcement—people have, and so they've had time to sift and sort what they want. And it arguably might be a more thorough rendering of all the things law enforcement and intelligence agencies would like to have in a perfect world. That's sort of how I look at it. And I think it's a very tough document when it comes to secrecy and surveillance.

I understand the concerns about fear of terrorism. And it certainly—

MOYERS: We all have those.

LEWIS: We all have those and there are things in the legislation that make sense, and that are reasonable, I think, for any American. But there are other things that really take some of the Patriot Act civil liberties issues, that folks were concerned about, and go even further. And I think it's going to be very controversial. Some of these sections are going to be debated for weeks and months.

MOYERS: So many of these powers, latent in this draft legislation, were powers that were taken away from the intelligence community some years ago because they were abused.

LEWIS: That's right.

MOYERS: Do you see any protection in here against potential abuse?

LEWIS: I don't think there's very much; there's a lot more authority and power FOR government. There's less oversight and information about what government is doing. That's the headline and that's the theme. And the safeguards seem to be pretty minimal to me.

MOYERS: I just go through here, you know? It would give the Attorney General the unchecked power to deport any foreigner.

LEWIS: Right.

MOYERS: Including lawful permanent resident aliens.

It would give the government the power to keep certain arrests secret, until an indictment is found. Never in our history have we permitted secret arrests.

It would give the government power to bypass courts and grand juries in order to conduct surveillance, without a judge's permission. I mean, these DO really further upend the balance between liberty, on the one hand, and security, on the other.

LEWIS: Well, they do. They reduce judicial oversight with the secret intelligence courts; instead of saying the court MAY do this, now it's the court WILL do this.

They can have ex-parte conversations, where they go into the judge without anyone else around.

In terms of information about detainees, not only can they detain anyone they'd like to detain, there is no public information about it!

Journalists cannot find out the names, so we detained OVER A THOUSAND people after September 11th, because we thought they might all be terrorists. Not one of them was really found with any criminal charges to be a terrorist. And we don't know the names of almost all of those people, still.

And so it does appear that everything that folks might be concerned about with the Patriot Act—this new legislation is times five or times ten. What I look at here, I see as very serious.

MOYERS: You and I have had this kind of discussion often; we go back a long way together. The foundation that I serve on has been a big supporter of yours, and you've been a big supporter of our journalism. If we were fighting terrorists instead of being journalists, wouldn't we want this kind of power in our hands?

LEWIS: Well, we would. But we operate in a democracy, and there's other considerations.

There's no question, if you're in law enforcement, this is gonna make it easier for you to do your job. The problem is, we have a history in our country, just in our lifetime, in the last quarter century, where we've seen FBI and CIA abuses of ordinary citizens—where mail has been opened, where homes have been broken into, where infiltration has occurred in political groups. Informants have been used, misused. People's lives have been ruined. People have committed suicide because of the pressures brought against them by the government, by these kinds of secret intelligence agencies.

This is not a completely crazy idea to worry about the power of the government.

It was curbed and rolled back in the 1970s. And there is something obviously occurring here, in the public space, around the whole issue of liberty and security right now.

It is clearly changing, and it's moving towards security. And the question for us,

Alice in Wonderland and the World Trade Center Disaster
Why the official story of 9/11 is a monumental lie
David Icke

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

I think my biggest personal concern is that there ought to be a debate about this. But the Patriot Act jammed through Congress in six weeks.

There was a Senate hearing that lasted an hour and a half; there were no questions to the Attorney General by the senators. This is too important for our country. Whatever anyone's point of view, this should be a conversation that the country should have.

And I'm afraid they're waiting for a war or something, and then they're gonna pop this baby out and then try to jam it through.

MOYERS: You mean that if it were not rolled out and discussed publicly until the United States is at war in Iraq, people might not pay as much attention to it as they would now.

LEWIS: They wouldn't pay as much attention and, you know, our worries and our fears are gonna be different than they are now. And there will be less of—all these things will melt away. These are nice concerns about liberties, but we'll be at war. We'll have presidents and attorneys general and other government officials telling us things. I see that it wouldn't work quite as easily for them if it comes out in the next few weeks as opposed to then.

MOYERS: Congressman Burton, Dan Burton of Indiana, a very conservative congressman, who is Chairman on the Committee on Government Reform, he said recently: "An iron veil is descending over the Executive Branch."

Now your forté is moving information around in Washington, trying to find out what's going on. Would you agree with what Congressman Burton has said here?

LEWIS: I absolutely agree with what he's saying. I mean, there have been 300 roll-backs of the Freedom Of Information Act since September 11th—all over America, at the state and local level, as well as at the federal government. The Attorney General sent a message to every federal employee: "When in doubt, deny any Freedom Of Information request."

We have other things like presidential papers being sealed-off. We have reporters trying to cover things in Afghanistan being locked in a warehouse and not able to file their stories. Even before September 11th, we had one reporter's home phone records seized by a grand jury without telling him or his news organization.

There's a lot of things happening with information, access to information, and efforts to stop journalism that I have not seen in 20+ years of watching Washington and journalism and

Rule By Secrecy: The Hidden History That Connects The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news. And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

government interact. And it's not just information. It's not information for information's sake. This is about health, safety, lives.

MOYERS: What do you mean?

LEWIS: Well, you have this whole thing in this current draft legislation that there's a worst-case scenario type requirement that every company making hazardous or toxic materials has to make that information available to the public. So if something terrible does happen, they know that it's possible that it could happen and there's some sort of assessment about it.

Well, now that is not going to be required. Chemical companies will not have to tell the world about these problems.

The citizens in that community will not have access to that information in an easily accessible way. That's new and that affects their life. If some problem occurs, unrelated to terrorism, something just goes wrong, they will not know anything about that in their community.

So we're rolling back health and safety and environmental and other considerations and sensitivities that have been in our culture now for decades. These are melting away all in the name of "fighting terrorism".

MOYERS: What would be the Attorney General's justification for wanting to restrict access to information about toxic chemicals?

LEWIS: Well, I haven't heard one. But I think the rationale is that terrorists could get information about a chemical plant and its security, bad security, inadequate security, and somehow then bring about a threat.

But the problem is, sunlight is the best disinfectant. If these plants have bad security, or they're not being well run and they're actually unsafe, it's usually exposing it and talking about it and the public being aware of it that ends up improving the plant or the facility or whatever it is.

I find that that's how change occurs usually.

The ostensible rationale is to keep such information away from terrorists. But I think it's also a rationale to protect companies, frankly, in this instance. Well, I happen to know that's been the chemical lobbyists' dream for a long time. A long time before 9/11, they did not want this information made available.

LEWIS: I see a lot of opportunism here—around the fear and paranoia in the wake of September 11th, and taking advantage of the insecurity that we all feel today.

That is, to me, incredibly offensive. And that's why a conversation about it.

There's 40 sections in this thing. The public needs to have a sense of what exactly are we getting here. There needs to be a chewing over. This should not jam through Congress. This should be out there and be talked about.

I mean, the realm between public and private, between foreign and domestic, all these things have changed into the citizen against all of this out there—this morass of regulations and rules and intrusions. And, at the same time, they can come after you, get your credit card data, your library records, your Internet searching, everything.

And THEY'LL decide whether or not you're a suspect, whether or not they like you. If you're a disfavored political group, or from the wrong ethnic background, then you might come on the radar screen of some folks who you don't know about, you can't find out about, and they can DO things. They have—this is incredible power!

MOYERS: One of the provisions in here, as I understand it, is that the government could actually strip citizenship from someone if—for example, if you were found, according to this, if you were found making what you thought was a legitimate contribution to some nonprofit organization or foundation.

LEWIS: Right.

MOYERS: And months from then, if that foundation or organization was deemed by the government to have been in some way supporting terrorists, you could lose your citizenship because of your contribution, even if you didn't know—

LEWIS: That's right.

MOYERS: —that you were contributing to an organization like that.

[Editor's note: Here we see how both Moyers and Lewis have fallen into the old deception/manipulation trap set by the very government they are claiming to be monitoring for suspicious, self-serving activities.]

That is, WHO is going to say that such-and-such organization is a "terrorist-related" group? Right—the government! Isn't that convenient for the agenda of the foxes running the henhouse?! Moreover, it's potentially intimidating to those who desire to help truly patriotic enterprises that effort to expose the REAL terrorists—like this publication!

This is a good example of the "final exam" kind of testing that is occurring on planet Earth at this time of the Great Awakening and Great Cleansing: Who will stand up for Truth via their actions (not just empty words)—like the millions of anti-war protesters worldwide or those who support The SPECTRUM in some way within their means—rather than allowing themselves to be intimidated by illusory threats from the Dark Forces and their puppetry, comprising the testers, who are diligently working to take down (flunk) as many souls with them as possible.]

LEWIS: No, that's absolutely—they have that power. They can also extradite all over the world, even if we don't have treaties. I mean, some of the things in here strain credulity for legal scholars. They're not sure; they've never seen these kinds of provisions trotted out. I mean, a lot of the question is: If it DOES pass Congress, what would the courts do with it later? I think there are some legitimate issues there.

MOYERS: What do you make of this? This is the document that went from the Department of Justice, with this draft legislation, to certain very key people in government—among them, Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert and Vice President Richard Cheney, for their comments on this obviously confidential document.

Why the Speaker of the House and the Vice President—and not the Committee Chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the Senate or the appropriate committee in the House?

LEWIS: It's a way to say you've consulted Congress to some extent by sending it to the Speaker, and not really consulting Congress.

As far as I can tell—and we have not polled every member or anything like that—but it appears that virtually no one on Capitol Hill, except for the Speaker, has seen this legislation. I'm talking about the fact that people of the judiciary committees in the House and Senate don't have this legislation! And have even been kind of yanked around a little bit for months about whether there will even BE such legislation.

MOYERS: The House Judiciary Committee actually asked the FBI, a few months ago, how it had used the new powers that had been given to it under the Patriot Act. And the Justice Department said: "We can't tell you that information; it's classified."

And this prompted then-Congressman Bob Barr from Georgia—another conservative, by the way—he said the attitude of the Justice Department seems to be that even Congress isn't entitled to know how they are using the authority that Congress gave them.

LEWIS: It's incredible. I mean, if Congress doesn't have oversight over the Justice Department, and these programs, then who does?! That's how it's supposed to work in our Constitution and in our set-up for government.

MOYERS: That's one of your REAL concerns, isn't it? That there's no oversight when secrecy is this tight.

LEWIS: Absolutely. The Congress is the people's chance to monitor the executive branch. It is the closest branch of government to the people. The House members are up for election every two years.

If the House of Representatives, and the Congress in general, cannot keep a watch on the executive branch, and cannot be informed about their activities, there's something very seriously wrong here!

MOYERS: Chuck, I hear people out there in the audience thinking: "You know, I'm scared."

This is a new ballgame, to put it trivially. War on terrorists—they came on 9/11 and we keep getting reports they're coming again; who knows where it'll happen. Everybody's scared.

"You guys are living in Lotus Land, you journalists talking about this sort of thing. Because we really want the government to protect us from another World Trade Center attack or the Pentagon"—which is not far from where your office is in Washington.

DEATH IN THE AIR: GLOBALISM, TERRORISM & TOXIC WARFARE

This book explains how and why:

- We have evolved from the nuclear age into a "Technotronic Era" with "psychotronic warfare" for optimal population control.
- Non-lethal warfare is being effectively used to produce sociopolitical and economic outcomes consistent with global genocide.
- The world's wealthiest policy-makers have recommended, and are working toward, eliminating half the world's population.
- Accepted methods of disease prevention, such as pesticide sprayings, can only be scientifically rationalized as costly and deadly contributions to non-lethal warfare and population reduction.
- Chemtrail sprayings that obscure blue skies are not normal, but reflect a conspiracy of silence and military attacks on the health and welfare of people around the world.

Striking at the heart of those responsible for the latest forms of bio-terrorism, psychotronic warfare, and ecological genocide, the revelations contained in this book offer more than a reality check—they give you and your loved ones a final, last-minute choice for survival.

LEWIS: Right.

MOYERS: What about that?

LEWIS: Look, I want to be protected by the government as much as anyone.

[Editor's note: Again—it's so easy to fall into the "political correctness" trap engineered by the mind-control experts (the TRUE terrorists). That is, do they really want to be protected BY or protected FROM a government gone mad? One gets the impression, from the logical contradictions herein, that a bit too much of "What will others think if I don't say the party line?"—perhaps for job security—gets in the way of plain speaking of the obvious truth.]

But actually, in some ways that's beside the point. There are also freedoms and rights and liberties that, you know, millions of Americans have fought for over 200 years to make sure that this is a special kind of country. And isn't it possible to be secure and have liberties?

Why give all the power and authority and have no oversight and accountability? What are the safeguards? And that's the question.

MOYERS: When someone inside government, inside the Justice Department presumably, gives you a confidential document marked "Not For Distribution" and titled The Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003, knowing that this administration has been cracking down on watchdogs and leaks from inside government, do you consider this person a patriot?

LEWIS: I really do. I think it takes incredible guts to take something that bothers someone, and for whatever reason, they feel they must give it out. They know they're going to be polygraphed, they're going to be questioned. There's going to be a clampdown, there's going to be a witch-hunt after this occurs. They could very likely not only lose their job, but maybe worse.

MOYERS: Be sued by the government?

LEWIS: Be sued by the government and otherwise ruined professionally. That is the most incredible kind of courage. And I have an incredible respect for anyone who does that.

MOYERS: I should make this clear: this document is not marked "Top Secret"—this is not a classified document. It is stamped "Confidential" but nobody is betraying the Secrets Act.

LEWIS: Yes, that's right.

MOYERS: There was a story this week in the Congressional Quarterly, which is a very respected non-partisan journal in Washington. It says: "Pentagon's Proposed Changes Strike Some As

One of the things Donald Rumsfeld wants is waivers of environmental laws so that troops can conduct more "realistic exercises".

Then this magazine, which is non-partisan, says: "This is part of the administration's broad campaign to run the federal government more like a private business." And with private businesses you have more control over employees, you have more control over information. Do you see that developing as a syndrome of this administration?

LEWIS: I think it's incredible what's happening.

I see a wholesale assault on access to information in this country that has not really been seen—I have to just say it—since the days of Richard Nixon.

When you look at the roll-backs of Freedom Of Information, when you look at things like the meeting of energy companies with the Vice President. It's simple things though—in government property with government officials getting paid by taxpayer money, and it's not available to the public.

When you see some of the things that we have talked about earlier with reporters—from detainees to military actions not being able to be seen—I see a lot of very aggressive behavior by government officials towards the act of getting only selective information out and controlling information itself. I think that we're in a very unusual situation right now. And it really worries me, actually.

MOYERS: Chuck Lewis, Center for Public Integrity, thank you very much.

LEWIS: Thank you.

On the one hand, it was amazing that a program as daring as the above was allowed to air, considering the Bush Administration's tight reins on the media. But it was likewise important to note the careful "backpedaling" that regularly softened otherwise strong patriotic statements by these seasoned journalists—seemingly the result of many years of "conditioning" concerning how to speak "on the air" without getting fired.

Meanwhile, there's always the possibility that the stated leak of this important legislation was no accident—but rather, a "trial balloon" to test public opinion in case of the need for "attitude adjustments" of the public mind before the actual legislation needs to be put in place downstream at some point.

For instance, if a strong negative groundswell reaction took place after this program's airing, then perhaps another contrived "terrorist" event (like 9/11 or Pearl Harbor) would need to be executed to convince the public to accept more governmental elimination of their longtime freedoms—for their own safety, and security of the homeland, of course.

But right now the attack on those fundamental freedoms remains a big concern for many Americans suspicious of what's going on. Let's turn now to a revealing "barometer" article on that matter from USA Today on 12/10/02:

[quoting]

ACLU Membership Surges
In Post 9/11 World

The Bush administration's effort to track down terrorists appears to have had an unintended consequence: There are more card-carrying members of the American Civil Liberties Union than ever in its 82-year history.

Since last year's attacks, the ACLU's membership has surged 20%, to about 330,000 nationwide, says executive director Anthony Romero. New membership dues and increased donations have provided a similar boost in income—enough to fund a $3.5 million campaign that includes TV ads criticizing the administration.

The growth is a result of what the ACLU sees as government actions that erode privacy and legal protections, Romero says. "The onslaught on civil liberties that we have seen since September 11 has increased the concern and the fear among many Americans who want to ensure that we balance our safety with our freedom" he says.

It would be naive to assume that this assault on basic freedoms would stop with Patriot Act II. The Bush Administration is likely just warming up.

For example, the Administration could decide later that people who supported the ACLU (or any other organization it chooses, even a church) were "potential domestic terrorists"—and deport them! Last year the Administration stopped members of the clergy flying to a peace demonstration in DC from boarding the plane on the pretext that they were "potential domestic terrorists"—pre-crime detention! And that was before Patriot Act II.

An in-depth article ringing the alarm about Patriot Act II was posted on the lively www.rense.com Internet website.

DOJ's Sweeping Expansion Anti-Terror Act

By Charles Lewis and Adam Mayle
Information Clearing House (2/8/03)

WASHINGTON — The Bush Administration is preparing a bold, comprehensive sequel to the USA Patriot Act passed in the wake of September 11, 2001, which will give the government broad, sweeping new powers to increase domestic intelligence-gathering, surveillance and law enforcement prerogatives, and simultaneously decrease judicial review and public access to information.

The Center for Public Integrity has obtained a draft, dated January 9, 2003, of this previously undisclosed legislation, and is making it available in full text (12 MB). The bill, drafted by the staff of Attorney General John Ashcroft and entitled the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003, has not been officially released by the Department of Justice, although rumors of its development have circulated around the Capitol for the last few months under the name of Patriot Act II in legislative parlance.

"We haven't heard anything from the Justice Department on updating the Patriot Act" House Judiciary Committee spokesman Jeff Lungren told the Center. "They haven't shared their thoughts on that. Obviously, we'd be interested, but we haven't heard anything at this point."

Senior members of the Senate Judiciary Committee minority staff have inquired about Patriot II for months, and have been told as recently as this week that there is no such legislation being planned.

Mark Corallo, deputy director of Justice's Office of Public Affairs, told the Center his office was unaware of the draft. "I have heard people talking about revising the Patriot Act; we are looking to work on things the way we would do with any law" he said. "We may work to make modifications to protect Americans" he added.

When told that the Center had a copy of the draft legislation, he said: "This is all news to me. I have never heard of this."

After the Center posted this story, Barbara Comstock, director of public affairs for the Justice Department, released a statement saying that: "Department staff have not presented any final proposals to either the Attorney General or the White House. It would be premature to speculate on any future decisions, particularly ideas or proposals that are still being discussed at staff levels."

An Office of Legislative Affairs "control sheet" that was obtained by the PBS program NOW—With Bill Moyers shows that a copy of the bill was sent to Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert and Vice President Richard Cheney on January 10, 2003. "Attached for your review and comment is a draft legislative proposal entitled the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003" the memo, sent from OLP or Office of Legal Policy, says.

Dr. David Cole, Georgetown University Law professor and author of Terrorism And The Constitution, reviewed the draft legislation at the request of the Center, and said that the legislation "raises a lot of serious concerns. It's troubling that they have gotten this far along and they've been telling people there is nothing in the works."

This proposed law, he added, "would radically expand law enforcement and intelligence gathering authorities, reduce or eliminate judicial oversight over surveillance, authorize secret arrests, create a DNA database based on unchecked executive 'suspicion', create new death penalties, and even seek to take American citizenship away from persons who belong to or support disfavored political groups."

Some of the key provision of the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003 include:

SECTION 201—Prohibition Of

ALIEN AGENDA: Investigating The Extraterrestrial Presence Among Us by Jim Marrs

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. As his title indicates, the author has concluded that UFOs are piloted by extraterrestrials of various types and with diverse motives. However, rather than taking that conclusion for granted, Marrs guides his readers through 50 years of UFO history that includes some less-traveled byways, off-ramps, and dead ends. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic. — George Eberhart, Ft. Worth Star-Telegram

Disclosure Of Terrorism Investigation Detainee Information:

Safeguarding the dissemination of information related to national security has been a hallmark of Ashcroft's first two years in office, and the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003 follows in the footsteps of his October 2001 directive to carefully consider such interest when granting Freedom Of Information Act (FOIA) requests.

While the October memo simply encouraged FOIA officers to take national security, "protecting sensitive business information and, not least, preserving personal privacy" into account while deciding on requests, the proposed legislation would enhance the department's ability to deny releasing material on suspected terrorists in government custody through FOIA.

SECTION 202—Distribution Of "Worst Case Scenario" Information:

This would introduce new FOIA restrictions with regard to the Environmental Protection Agency. As provided for in the Clean Air Act, the EPA requires private companies that use potentially dangerous chemicals must produce a "worst case scenario" report detailing the effect that the release of these controlled substances would have on the surrounding community. Section 202 of this Act would, however, restrict FOIA requests to these reports, which the bill's drafters refer to as "a roadmap for terrorists". By reducing public access to "read-only" methods for only those persons "who live and work in the geographical area likely to be affected by a worst-case scenario" this subtitle would obfuscate an established level of transparency between private industry and the public.

SECTION 301-306—Terrorist Identification Database:

These sections would authorize creation of a DNA database on "suspected terrorists", expansively defined to include association with suspected terrorist groups, and noncitizens suspected of certain crimes or of having supported any group designated as terrorist.

SECTION 312—Appropriate Remedies With Respect To Law Enforcement Surveillance Activities:

This section would terminate all state law enforcement consent decrees before September 11, 2001, not related to racial profiling or other civil rights violations, that limit such agencies from gathering information about individuals and organizations. The authors of this statute claim that these consent orders, which were passed as a result of police spying abuses, could impede current terrorism investigations. It would also place substantial restrictions on future court injunctions.

SECTION 405—Presumption For Pretrial Detention In Cases Involving Terrorism:

While many people charged with drug offenses punishable by prison terms of 10 years or more are held before their trial without bail, this provision would create a comparable statute for those suspected of terrorist activity. The reasons for presumptively holding suspected terrorists before trial, the Justice Department summary memo states, are clear: "This presumption is warranted because of the unparalleled magnitude of the danger to the United States and its people posed by acts of terrorism, and because terrorism is typically engaged in by groups—many with international connections—that are often in a position to help their members flee or go into hiding."

SECTION 501—Expatriation Of Terrorists:

This provision, the drafters say, would establish that an American citizen could be expatriated "if, with the intent to relinquish his nationality, he becomes a member of, or provides material support to, a group that the United States has designated as a 'terrorist organization'."

But whereas a citizen formerly had to state his intent to relinquish his citizenship, the new law affirms that his intent can be "inferred from conduct". Thus, engaging in the lawful activities of a group designated as a "terrorist organization" by the Attorney General could be presumptive grounds for expatriation.

The Domestic Security Enhancement Act is the latest development in an 18-month trend in which the Bush Administration has sought expanded powers and responsibilities for law enforcement bodies to help counter the threat of terrorism.

The USA Patriot Act, signed into law by President Bush on October 26, 2001, gave law enforcement officials broader authority to conduct electronic surveillance and wiretaps, and gives the president the authority, when the nation is under attack, to confiscate any property within U.S. jurisdiction of anyone believed to be engaging in such attacks. The measure also tightened oversight of financial activities to prevent money laundering and diminish bank secrecy in an effort to disrupt terrorist finances.

It also changed provisions of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act

(FISA), which was passed in 1978 during the Cold War. FISA established a different standard of government oversight and judicial review for "foreign intelligence" surveillance than that applied to traditional domestic law enforcement surveillance.

The USA Patriot Act allowed the Federal Bureau of Investigation to share information gathered in terrorism investigations under the "foreign intelligence" standard with local law enforcement agencies, in essence nullifying the higher standard of oversight that applied to domestic investigations. The USA Patriot Act also amended FISA to permit surveillance under the less rigorous standard whenever "foreign intelligence" was a "significant purpose" rather than the "primary purpose" of an investigation.

The draft legislation goes further in that direction. "In the [USA Patriot Act] we have to break down the wall of foreign intelligence and law enforcement" Cole said. "Now they want to break down the wall between international terrorism and domestic terrorism."

See and hear David Icke at the top of his form as he presents six-and-a-half hours of incredible information before a sellout audience of 1200 at the Vogue Theatre in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

You will laugh, you may cry, and you will be on the edge of your seat as the fantastic story of true human history, and WHO really controls the world today, unfolds in Icke's unique style, aided by video footage and hundreds of illustrations.

This is the presentation that the Illuminati (the forces of global control) tried so hard to stop—media interviews were cancelled; immigration officials turned up at the theatre to question his right to speak; pressure was applied on the venue to cancel the event itself; and pies were even thrown at David at a book signing by a rent-a-mob who ludicrously and outrageously sought to dub him a "racist".

But nothing could silence him or break his spirit—and here you will see the result.

In an October 9, 2002, hearing of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Technology, Terrorism, and Government Information, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Alice Fisher testified that Justice had been: "looking at potential proposals on following up on the Patriot Act for new tools, and we have also been working with different agencies within the government, and they are still studying that, and hopefully we will continue to work with this committee in the future on new tools that we believe are necessary in the war on terrorism."

Asked by Senator Russ Feingold (D-WI) whether she could inform the committee of what specific areas Justice was looking at, Fisher replied: "At this point I can't; I'm sorry. They're studying a lot of different ideas and a lot of different tools that follow up on information sharing and other aspects."

Assistant Attorney General for Legal Policy, Viet Dinh, who was the principal author of the first Patriot Act, told Legal Times last October that there was: "an ongoing process to continue evaluating and re-evaluating authorities we have with respect to counterterrorism" but declined to say whether a new bill was forthcoming.

Former FBI Director William Sessions, who urged caution while Congress considered the USA Patriot Act, did not want to enter the fray concerning a possible successor bill. "I hate to jump into it, because it's a very delicate thing" Sessions told the Center, without acknowledging whether he knew of any proposed additions or revisions to the additional Patriot bill.

When the first bill was nearing passage in Congress in late 2001, however, Sessions told Internet website NewsMax.com that the balance between civil liberties and sufficient intelligence gathering was a difficult one: "First of all, the Attorney General has to justify fully what he's asking for" Sessions, who served presidents Reagan and George H.W. Bush as FBI Director from 1987 until 1993, said at the time. "We need to be sure that we provide an effective means to deal with criminality." At the same time, he said: "We need to be sure that we are mindful of the Constitution, mindful of privacy considerations, but also meet the technological needs we have" to gather intelligence.

Cole found it disturbing that there have been no consultations with Congress on the draft legislation. "It raises a lot of serious concerns, and is troubling as a generic matter, that they have gotten this far along and tell people that there is nothing in the works. What that suggests is that they're waiting for a propitious time to introduce it, which might well be when a war is begun. At that time there would be less opportunity for discussion, and they'll have a much stronger hand in saying that they need these right away."

How could any reasonable person come to any other conclusion—based upon Justice Department clandestine formation of this Patriot Act II—than that they plan to pull a "fast one" on the American people during a time of distraction and/or fabricated necessity? That alone is a big red flag signaling yet another robbery of our basic freedoms.

It's the sweeping nature of this robbery that causes the association of historical terms like "Gestapo" and "Fuhrer" to capture the tone of such sinister goings on from modern-day Washington. Consider this insightful 2/10/03 analysis by Alex Jones at the www.infowars.com website:

Total Police-State Takeover

A Brief Analysis of the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003, Also Known as Patriot Act II

Congressman Ron Paul (R-TX) told the Washington Times that no member of Congress was allowed to read the first Patriot Act that was passed by the House on October 27, 2001.

The first Patriot Act was universally decried by civil libertarians and constitutional scholars from across the political spectrum. William Safire, while writing for the New York Times, described the first Patriot Act's powers by saying that President Bush was seizing dictatorial control.

On February 7, 2003, the Center for Public Integrity, a non-partisan public interest think-tank in DC, revealed the full text of the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003. The classified document had been leaked to them by an unnamed source inside the Federal government. The document consisted of a 33-page section-by-section analysis of the accompanying 87-page bill.

On February 10, 2003, I discovered that not only was there a House version that had been covertly brought to Hastert, but that many provisions of the now public Patriot Act II had already been introduced as pork barrel riders on Senate Bill S.22. Dozens of subsections—and even the titles of the subsections—are identical to those in the House version.

This is very important because it catches the Justice Department in a bald-faced lie.

The Justice Department claimed that the secret legislation brought into the House was only for study, and that at this time there was no intention to try and pass it. Now, upon reading S.22, it is clear that the leadership of the Senate is fully aware of the Patriot Act II, and have passed these riders out of their committees into the full bill.

I spent two hours scanning through S.22 and, let me tell you, it is a nightmare for anyone who loves liberty. It even contains the Our Lady Of Peace Act that registers all gun owners. It bans the private sale of all firearms, creates a

How an interdimensional race has controlled the world for thousands of years—and still does!

We are born into a world controlled by unseen forces that have plagued and manipulated humanity for thousands of years. You may look around and think that what you see is "real". But in truth you are living in an illusion designed to keep you in a mental, emotional, and spiritual prison cell.

Icke exposes these forces and their methods of human control and reveals a fantastic web of global manipulation, orchestrated by forces beyond this physical realm. He exposes the hidden bloodlines, through which other-dimensional entities live and operate unseen among us; and he shows how the bloodlines of the royal, political, and economic rulers of today are the same as those who ruled as the kings and queens of ancient times.

The truth is not only out there.

Much of it is right here.

Federal ballistics database, and much more.

There are other bills in the Senate that grant the Federal government sweeping powers. S.45 states in Section One that the office for state and local government coordination for Homeland Security will no longer just oversee, but that now local cities' critical functions will be headed by a Federal director.

On Tuesday, February 11, we noted a story in The Times-Picayune with the headline: Nagin Announces Major Overhaul Of City Hall—New Homeland Security Office To Oversee Cops, Firemen, Emergency Agency. The Federal power-grab taking place is widespread and all Americans must mobilize to resist it.

Another interesting bill is S.16. S.16 is a smorgasbord of Federal funding and control over local police departments and needs to be examined closely.

S.89, the Universal National Service Act Of 2003 is the hallmark of an authoritarian society. The description of the bill is: "To provide for the common defense by requiring that all young persons in the United States, including women, perform a period of military service or civilian service in furtherance of the national defense and homeland security, and for other purposes." We have looked at some of the programs that the Federal government has already been setting up for service here in the "homeland" and they include East German-style tattletale squads of every type, which are just basically a super TIPS program. The nightmare goes on and on. Check it out for yourself.

The Patriot Act II bill itself is stamped "Confidential—Not For Distribution".

Upon reading the analysis and bill, I was stunned by the scientifically crafted tyranny contained in the legislation.

The Justice Department Office of Legislative Affairs admits that they had indeed covertly transmitted a copy of the legislation to Speaker of the House, Dennis Hastert (R-IL), and the Vice President of the United States, Dick Cheney, as well as the executive heads of federal law enforcement agencies.

It is important to note that no member of Congress was allowed to see the first Patriot Act before its passage, and that no debate was tolerated by the House and Senate leadership.

The intentions of the White House and Speaker Hastert concerning Patriot Act II appear to be a carbon copy replay of the events that led to the unprecedented passage of the first Patriot Act.

There are two glaring areas that need to be looked at concerning this new legislation:

1. The secretive tactics being used by the White House and Speaker Hastert to keep even the existence of this legislation secret would be more at home in Communist China than in the United States. The fact that Dick Cheney publicly managed the steamroller passage of the first Patriot Act—insuring that no one was allowed to read it and publicly threatening members of Congress that if they didn't vote in favor of it they would be blamed for the next terrorist attack, is, by the White House's own definition, terrorism.

The move to clandestinely craft and then bully passage of any legislation by the Executive Branch is clearly an impeachable offense.

2. The second Patriot Act is a mirror image of powers that Julius Caesar and Adolf Hitler gave themselves. Whereas the first Patriot Act only gutted the First, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Amendments, and seriously damaged the Seventh and the Tenth, the second Patriot Act reorganizes the entire Federal government, as well as many areas of state government, under the dictatorial control of the Justice Department, the Office of Homeland Security, and the FEMA NORTHCOM military command.

The Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003, also known as the second Patriot Act, is, by its very structure, the definition of dictatorship.

I challenge all Americans to study the new Patriot Act and to compare it to the Constitution, Bill Of Rights, and Declaration Of Independence.

Ninety percent of the new Patriot Act has nothing to do with terrorism, and is instead a giant Federal power-grab with tentacles reaching into every facet of our society. It strips American citizens of all of their rights, and grants the government and its private agents total immunity.

Here is a quick thumbnail sketch of just some of the draconian measures encapsulated within this tyrannical legislation:

Section 501 (Expatriation of Terrorists) expands the Bush Administration's "enemy combatant" definition to all American citizens who "may" have violated any provision of Section 802 of the first Patriot Act. (Section 802 is the new definition of domestic terrorism, and the definition is: "Any action that endangers human life that is a violation of any Federal or State law.") Section 501 of the second Patriot Act directly connects to Section 125 of the same act. The Justice Department boldly claims that the incredibly broad Section 802 of the first USA Patriot Act isn't broad enough, and that a new, unlimited definition of terrorism is needed.

Under Section 501, a U.S. citizen engaging in lawful activities can be grabbed off the street and thrown into a van, never to be seen again. The Justice Department states that they can do this because the person "had inferred from conduct" that they were not a U.S. citizen. Remember, Section 802 of the first USA Patriot Act states that any violation of Federal or State law can result in the "enemy combatant" terrorist designation.

Section 201 of the second Patriot Act makes it a criminal act for any member of the government or any citizen to release any information concerning the incarceration or whereabouts of detainees. It also states that law enforcement does not even have to tell the press who they have arrested, and they never have to release the names.

Section 301 and 306 (Terrorist Identification Database) sets up a national database of "suspected terrorists" and radically expands the database to include anyone associated with suspected terrorist groups and anyone involved in crimes or having supported any group designated as "terrorist". These sections also set up a national DNA database for anyone on probation or who has been on probation for any crime, and orders State governments to collect the DNA for the Federal government.

Section 312 gives immunity to law enforcement engaging in spying operations against the American people, and would place substantial restrictions on court injunctions against Federal violations of civil rights across the board.

Section 101 will designate individual terrorists as foreign powers, and again strip them of all rights under the "enemy combatant" designation.

Section 102 states clearly that any information gathering, regardless of whether or not those activities are illegal, can be considered to be clandestine intelligence activities for a foreign power. This makes news gathering illegal.

Section 103 allows the Federal government to use wartime martial law powers domestically and internationally, without Congress declaring that a state of war exists.

Section 106 is bone-chilling in its straightforwardness. It states that broad general warrants by the secret FSIA court (a panel of secret judges set up in a star chamber system that convenes in an undisclosed location) granted under the first Patriot Act are not good enough. It states that government agents must be given immunity for carrying out searches with no prior court approval. This section throws out the entire Fourth Amendment against unreasonable searches and seizures.

Section 109 allows secret star chamber courts to issue contempt charges against any individual or corporation who refuses to incriminate themselves or others. This section annihilates the last vestiges of the Fifth Amendment.

Section 110 restates that key police state clauses in the first Patriot Act were not sunsetted, and removes the five-year sunset clause from other subsections of the first Patriot Act. After all, the media has told us: "This is the New America. Get used to it. This is forever."

Section 111 expands the definition of the "enemy combatant" designation.

Section 122 restates the government's newly announced power of "surveillance without a court order".

Section 123 restates that the government no longer needs warrants, and that the investigations can be a giant dragnet-style sweep described in press reports about the Total Information Awareness Network. One passage reads: "Thus the focus of domestic surveillance may be less precise than that directed against more conventional types of crime."

Note: Over and over again, in subsection after subsection, the second Patriot Act states that its new Soviet-type powers will be used to fight international terrorism, domestic terrorism, and other types of crimes. Of course, the government has already announced, in Section 802 of the first USA Patriot Act, that any crime is considered domestic terrorism.

Section 126 grants the government the right to mine the entire spectrum of public- and private-sector information from bank records to educational and medical records. This is the enacting law to allow ECHELON and the Total Information Awareness Network to totally break down any and all walls of privacy.

The government states that they must look at everything to "determine" if individuals or groups might have a connection to terrorist groups. As you can now see, you are guilty until proven innocent.

Section 127 allows the government to take over coroners' and medical examiners' operations whenever they see fit. See how this is like Bill Clinton's special medical examiner he had in Arkansas who ruled that people had committed suicide when their arms and legs had been cut off.

Section 128 allows the Federal government to place gag orders on Federal and State Grand Juries and to take over the proceedings. It also disallows individuals or organizations to even try to quash a Federal subpoena. So now, defending yourself will be a terrorist action.

Section 129 destroys any remaining whistleblower protection for Federal agents.

Section 202 allows corporations to keep secret their activities with toxic biological, chemical, or radiological materials.

Section 205 allows top Federal officials to keep all their financial dealings secret, and anyone investigating them can be considered a terrorist. This should be very useful for Dick Cheney to stop anyone investigating Haliburton.

Section 303 sets up a national DNA database of suspected terrorists. The database will also be used to "stop other unlawful activities". It will share the information with state, local, and foreign agencies for the same purposes.

Section 311 federalizes your local police department in the area of information sharing.

Section 313 provides liability protection for businesses—especially big businesses that spy on their customers for Homeland Security, violating their privacy agreements. It goes on to say that these are all preventative measures. (Has anyone seen the movie Minority Report?) This is the access hub for the Total Information Awareness Network.

Section 321 authorizes foreign governments to spy on the American people and to share information with foreign governments.

Section 322 removes Congress from the extradition process and allows officers of the Homeland Security complex to extradite American citizens anywhere they wish. It also allows Homeland Security to secretly take individuals out of foreign countries.

...and the truth shall set you free

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "coup d'état on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

Section 402 is titled "Providing Material Support To Terrorism". The section reads that there is no requirement to show that the individual even had the intent to aid terrorists.

Section 403 expands the definition of weapons of mass destruction to include any activity that affects interstate or foreign commerce.

Section 404 makes it a crime for a terrorist or "other criminals" to use encryption in the commission of a crime.

Section 408 creates "lifetime parole" (basically, slavery) for a whole host of crimes.

Section 410 creates no statute of limitation for anyone who engages in terrorist actions or supports terrorists. Remember: any crime is now considered terrorism under the first Patriot Act.

Section 411 expands crimes that are punishable by death. Again, they point to Section 802 of the first Patriot Act and state that any terrorist act or support of terrorist act can result in the death penalty.

Section 421 increases penalties for terrorist financing. This section states that any type of financial activity connected to terrorism will result to time in prison and $10,000 to $50,000 fines per violation.

Section 427 sets up asset forfeiture provisions for anyone engaging in terrorist activities.

There are many other sections that I did not cover in the interest of time.

The American people were shocked by the despotic nature of the first Patriot Act. The second Patriot Act dwarfs all police-state legislation in modern world history.

Usually, corrupt governments allow their citizens lots of wonderful rights on paper, while carrying out their jackbooted oppression covertly. From snatch-and-grab operations to warrantless searches, Patriot Act II is an Adolf Hitler wish list.

You can understand why President Bush, Dick Cheney, and Dennis Hastert want to keep this legislation SECRET—not just from Congress, but from the American people as well.

Bill Allison, Managing Editor of the Center for Public Integrity, the group that broke this story, stated on my radio show that it was obvious that they were just waiting for another terrorist attack to opportunistically get this new bill through. He then shocked me with an insightful comment about how the Federal government was crafting this so that they could go after the American people in general. He also agreed that the FBI has been quietly demonizing patriots and Christians and "those who carry around pocket Constitutions".

I have produced two documentary films and written a book about what really happened on September 11. The bottom line is this: the military-industrial complex carried out the attacks as a pretext for control. Anyone who doubts this just hasn't looked at the mountains of hard evidence.

machinery that carried out the 9/11 attacks, but the bosses masterminding that event—as a manipulation tool to take away our freedoms and create fear—reside higher up the Pyramid of Power of world control.]

Of course, the current group of white-collar criminals in the White House might not care that we're finding out the details of their next phase. Because, after all, when smallpox gets released, or more buildings start blowing up, the President can stand up there at his lectern, suppressing a smirk, squeeze out a tear or two, and tell us that: "See, I was right. I had to take away your rights to keep you safe. And now it's your fault that all of these children are dead."

From that point on, anyone who criticizes tyranny will be shouted down by the paid talking-head government mouthpieces in the mainstream media.

You have to admit, it's a beautiful script. Unfortunately, it's being played out in the real world. If we don't get the word out that government is using terror to control our lives, while doing nothing to stop the terrorists, we will deserve what we get—tyranny.

But our children won't deserve it.

[end quoting]

The script is "beautiful" only insofar as enough of the public remain duped and asleep to comprise a clear majority. But the astonishingly large numbers turning out for recent anti-war rallies suggests a growing awakening, worldwide, to tyranny. The example set by those people, in turn, awakens yet more people, and thus the real danger (to tyranny) now exists of a cascading

SEEDS OF FIRE: CHINA AND THE STORY BEHIND THE ATTACK ON AMERICA

On the eve of the first war in the 21st Century, one perplexing question remains: the role of China. The answer comes in what will be seen as one of the most important books of all time. It explains how China will use the crisis to launch itself as a new Super Power—and become America's new major enemy.

China by 2015 will have deployed tens to several tens of missiles with nuclear warheads targeted against the United States, mostly more-survivable land and sea mobile missiles. It will also have hundreds of shorter-range ballistic and cruise missiles for use in regional conflicts. Some of these shorter-range missiles will have nuclear warheads; most will be armed with conventional warheads.

That prediction is from a CIA briefing paper to the Bush Administration. It is one of almost 100 pages of never-before-published official documents in SEEDS OF FIRE: China And The Story Behind The Attack On America, by Gordon Thomas. No one can afford to ignore this book!

SEEDS OF FIRE is a book that every patriotic American — everyone who cares about the future of this country, everyone who wants to know what goes on behind the scenes — must buy and read. This is THE book. Written by a highly experienced intelligence analyst, it is simply a MUST. You cannot ignore the warnings Gordon Thomas gives.

As an example of his total credibility, hours after the book was published, the CIA was forced to confirm its findings about the threat China poses. The CIA publicly confirmed what Gordon Thomas reveals in SEEDS OF FIRE. Just how big a threat China is.

This has been kept out of the news agenda because it does not suit certain business interests to have that truth emerge. But at last here it is. Every patriotic American should buy and read this book! It is simply revelatory.

Other revelations include the Inslaw/Promis "largest global software theft in history", MK-ULTRA mind-control applications, and the link between newspaper magnate Robert Maxwell and the Los Alamos laboratory nuclear secrets "spy" case.

But it is the China connection that ought to alert all thinking Americans to "the sleeping giant" of the Orient. Be informed. Be astonished.

effect which greatly diminishes that necessary majority of easily compliant sheep. At that point, the control game is over for the world elite behind such freedom-robbing legislation as Patriot Act I and II.

So as the author above states so well: "If we don't get the word out that government is using terror to control our lives, while doing nothing to stop the [real] terrorists, we will deserve what we get—tyranny."

With that in mind, consider the following article by Jack M. Balkin, an articulate and courageous professor at Yale Law School and the author of The Laws of Change:

[quoting]

USA Patriot Act: A Dreadful Act II

By Jack M. Balkin
Los Angeles Times (2/13/03)

Secret Proposals In Ashcroft's
Anti-Terror War Strike Yet Another Blow
At Fundamental Rights

Just as the Bush Administration is preparing a preemptive strike on Iraq, its Justice Department has been preparing yet another preemptive strike—a new assault on our civil liberties.

For months, Attorney General John Ashcroft and his staff have been secretly drafting the Domestic Security Enhancement Act Of 2003, designed to expand even further the new government powers for domestic surveillance created by the 2001 USA Patriot Act. Justice Department officials have repeatedly denied the existence of the draft bill, dubbed the Patriot Act II, but a copy leaked out recently and has been posted on the www.publicintegrity.org website.

Since September 11, 2001, the government has rounded up hundreds of people in secret and refused to disclose even their names, on the spurious grounds that this protects their privacy.

As drafted, the measure would remove existing protections under the Freedom Of Information Act, making it easier for the government to hide whom it is holding and why, and preventing the public from ever obtaining embarrassing information about government overreaching.

Another section would nullify existing consent decrees against state law enforcement agencies that prevent the agencies from spying on individuals and organizations. These consent decrees were crafted because state and local governments illegally invaded the privacy of American citizens and repeatedly violated their civil rights. To make matters worse, the proposed bill prevents courts from issuing injunctions to block future abuses.

Perhaps the most troubling section would strip U.S. citizenship from anyone who gives "material support" to any group that the attorney general designates as a terrorist organization. Citizenship is the most basic right for all Americans, one from which other rights—such as the right to vote, to participate in politics, and even to live in this country—all flow. Under our Constitution, Americans can't be deprived of their citizenship, and the rights that go with it, unless they voluntarily give it up.

The measure would get around that constitutional guarantee through a legal loophole. It presumes that anyone who provides "material support" to an organization on the attorney general's blacklist—even if that support is otherwise lawful—has intended to relinquish citizenship and therefore may be immediately expatriated.

The McCarthy Era demonstrated that the attorney general could wield enormous power to harass innocent Americans by designating legal organizations as subversive. The proposed Act creates a similar danger: Give a few dollars to a Muslim charity that Ashcroft thinks is a terrorist organization, and you could be on the next plane out of this country.

The Bush Administration claimed last year that the original Patriot Act gave it the tools it needed to fight the war on terror at a minimal cost to civil liberties. These new proposals show, however, that the Administration still is not satisfied. It now seems clear that there is no civil right—even the precious right of citizenship—that this Administration will not abuse to secure ever-greater control over American life. The Bush Administration and Ashcroft have become addicted to secrecy and are drunk on power; the more they obtain, they more they demand.

We are fortunate that these proposals came to light now. Otherwise, the Administration probably would have revealed them only after it began its war with Iraq, when political opposition would be inhibited by support for our troops. The proposals would not help our war with Iraq, but they would help our government cover up its mistakes.

It is frightening to think that our leaders would try to undermine our civil liberties through a cynical manipulation of public opinion in time of war. It would be even more frightening if they succeeded.

[end quoting]

Perhaps this event is obvious enough that even some wearing rose-colored glasses can see how expert psychological manipulation is used to "herd" the public—in this case down a dark path to the slaughterhouse. The boldness of this latest assault on freedom may thus cause many more fence-sitters to awaken to The Truth.

Holding The Justice Department Accountable

When Barbara Comstock, Director of Public Affairs for the Department of Justice, makes a statement like: "The Department's deliberations are always undertaken with the strongest commitment to our Constitution and civil liberties" it begs the question whether anyone at the Justice Department has even read the Constitution—let alone understands it.

Actions speak louder than words, and it will not come as any surprise when they put forth (and try to ramrod through) additional legislation, rewritten under a different cover that will have the same damaging effects to our basic, UNALIENABLE rights.

The Justice Department has a whole lot o' splainin' to do. It's no wonder Barbara isn't answering the phone (or returning her calls).

These are, indeed, troubling times in which we-the-people are under serious attack from WITHIN. Let us remember the wise advice of one of our most visionary Founding Fathers:

"I know no safe depository of the ultimate powers of the society but the people themselves; and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education. This is the true corrective of abuses of constitutional power."

— Thomas Jefferson, 1820

"If ye love wealth better than liberty, the tranquility of servitude better than the animating contest of freedom, go home from us in peace. We ask not your counsels or arms. Crouch down and lick the hands that feed you. May your chains set lightly upon you, and may posterity forget that ye were our countryman."

Former U.S.A.G. Ramsey Clark Again Blasts War With Iraq Another Letter To UN Secretary General

Editor's note: Back in the November 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM we shared a potent 9/20/02 letter from former United States Attorney General (1967-69) Ramsey Clark to the United Nations, whose members were then just beginning to wrestle with the United States' brazen push (with co-conspirators England and Israel) to wage another war with Iraq—while many were trying to figure how the focus had shifted from Afghanistan. While addressed to Secretary General Kofi Annan, Clark's letter had been sent to ALL members of the UN Security Council, with copies to the UN General Assembly.

Here we're sharing Ramsey Clark's NEW letter, followed by a devastating document titled ANSWERING Bush's Big Myths About Iraq from his www.iacenter.org website. Without needing to venture into the more exotic kinds of reasons as The SPECTRUM presented last month, the combination of these two messages shared below blasts right through all the blarney being incessantly preached from the media pulpits for our brainwashing, and leaves the Bush Administration clearly standing where they belong—right in the middle of a mess of very obvious lies.

Born in Dallas, Texas in 1927, some of you may remember that Clark tried to be a conscientious Attorney General during the turbulent anti-Vietnam War years. He was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the U.S. Senate (likely through the wizardry of vote manipulation due to the danger he posed from what he knew). He later returned to public prominence as a political activist and outspoken critic of two Republican administrations. It's clear from the following that Ramsey Clark has lost neither his edge with words nor his conscience—two traits that can be lethal to the mind-control spell over the public so important to the New World Order gang's game.

2/7/03 RAMSEY CLARK

Secretary General Kofi Annan
United Nations, New York, NY
February 7, 2003

Dear Secretary General Annan,

Only Firm Opposition To War Can Serve And Save The United Nations.

The peoples and nations of the world are looking to the United Nations to prevent the United States from waging a war of aggression against Iraq. This is the purpose for which the United Nations was created.

To fail to firmly oppose military action against Iraq as a clear violation of the Charter Of The United Nations and international law will propel the United Nations toward irrelevancy, or worse, apologist for an aggressor Superpower.

The great majority of the people and the nations of the United Nations oppose aggression against Iraq. By saying “no” to the scourge of war, the United Nations may save the United States from its own misguided leadership. It will at least save the moral stature of the United Nations.

If the United Nations yields its authority to United States aggression, it may never achieve independence to pursue its founding purpose: a world free of war and the domination of violent forces.

Better to oppose U.S. aggression and struggle to preserve the principles and major participation of peoples and nations in its cause, than yield to the coercive will of the Bush Administration. The balance of world political, social and moral power has shifted against further United States aggression. Through the courage, now, to say no to war, the United Nations will prevail.

Iraq Has Been The Victim Of U.S. Aggression For 12 Years.

Far from being a threat to the United States, or any other people, Iraq has been a victim of U.S. aggression for 12 years. Between January 16, 1991 and March 1, 1991 the U.S. acknowledges it dropped 88,500 tons of bombs—the equivalent of 7½ Hiroshima bombs—on a defenseless Iraq.

The U.S. targeted and destroyed essential parts of the civilian life-support system: water storage, pipe lines, pumping stations, filtration plants; food production, processing, storage and marketing; medical facilities services and supplies; transportation; communications; housing; schools; mosques, churches and synagogues.

Asked his assessment of Iraqi casualties in the U.S. assault in 1991, General Colin Powell, then the highest ranking officer in the U.S. Armed Forces, responded: “It’s really not a number I’m very interested in.” (Patrick Tyler, New York Times, March 23, 1991, p.A1)

The U.S. placed its casualties during its assault at 157. More than 1/3 were from friendly fire, the remainder from mechanical failures and accidents.

Iraqi casualties were estimated repeatedly at 100,000 by General Norman Schwarzkopf during March 1991. The Wall Street Journal reported that General Schwarzkopf provided the Congress with a report estimating 100,000 Iraqi soldiers dead on March 20, 1991. The Defense Intelligence Agency on May 25, 1991 formally estimated 100,000 Iraqi casualties. The London Times reported allied intelligence estimated as many as 200,000 Iraqi soldiers were killed. The Nouvelle Observateur reported French intelligence placed the Iraqi military death toll at 200,000. A former U.S. Secretary of the Navy estimated 200,000 Iraqi soldiers were killed. Tens of thousands of civilians died during the 42 days of constant bombing.

There were 110,000 U.S. aerial sorties, averaging one every 30 seconds. Civilians were killed directly by the bombs—and from accidents, lack of medicines to treat injuries, and bad water resulting from the bombing. There was no public water system working within 24 hours of the first attacks. Thousands died from drinking contaminated water, often directly from the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. 9,000 civilian homes were destroyed. Most hospitals were damaged.

More deadly than that bombing, twelve years of sanctions have inflicted death on over 1,500,000 people in Iraq, the majority children under 5 years old.

You must remember the enormity of this genocide as you consider whether to agree to another major U.S. military assault on Iraq. U.S. plans for intense bombardment of Iraq, followed by land invasion, discussed daily in the media, would take thousands of Iraqi lives—however successfully executed.

Violence that could radiate out from such a criminal assault may have catastrophic effects far more deadly and long lasting than the sanctions on Iraq.

The Only Rational Explanation For President Bush's Obsession With Attacking Iraq Is Oil And Related Geo-Political Power.

No rational analysis can support war against Iraq from fear it now has, or might later develop and use, weapons of mass destruction. Iraq did not use such weapons when it was mercilessly bombed in 1991—though the U.S. falsely insists it used weapons of mass destruction “against its own people” during the Iran-

Iraq war. (See Stephen C. Pellstierre, New York Times Op. Ed., January 31, 2003: “Iraq Was Not To Blame For The Halabja Massacre”.)

Iraq has not used weapons of mass destruction while enduring 12 years of sanctions. UN inspectors have searched Iraq over most of the past twelve years and found nothing. The UN inspectors have reduced the risk that Iraq might develop, use, or provide others with weapons of mass destruction far below the risk of the more than forty nations known to possess, or considered to be seeking, such weapons.

President Bush has threatened to use nuclear weapons against Iraq. Any realistic hope for the elimination and future prevention of weapons of mass destruction must begin with nations known to possess them. The certainty of violence in a war against Iraq and probability of prolonged and proliferating violence from it, far exceed any risk that Iraq might develop and use weapons of mass destruction, or commit acts of aggression.

An Attack On Iraq Will Cause Terrorism, Not Prevent It.

The only rational explanation for a war on Iraq is an intention by the U.S. to control and exploit its oil, use oil sales to pay for the cost of the war and occupation, benefit U.S. oil companies and petroleum engineering firms with awards of contracts, control the price of oil to enrich the U.S., and enlarge U.S. geopolitical power in the region.

[Editor's note: There are serious other reasons why Bush's world-control-gang bosses want to control Iraq and surrounding areas, as explained in last month's issue of The SPECTRUM, but the riches and power of oil control in that region are still attractive carrots to dangle in front of the rabbits who have been ordered to carry out the more important higher-level destruction plan.]

Secretary Of State Powell's Presentation To The Security Council On February 5, 2003 Was A Rhetorical Exercise Without Credibility.

“We’ve been looking at this for a year and we just don’t think it’s there.” (New York Times article on CIA and FBI summary of U.S. intelligence data of Iraqi efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction, February 3, 2003 p. A13.)

President Bush and other high U.S. political officials have long stated they believe Iraq has weapons of mass destruction. Their “belief” is not based on intelligence data. It is a falsehood designed to overcome resistance to the war they intend to wage.

Secretary Powell’s charts, photos, and electronic intercepts of conversations require authentication. They are repetitious of old tactics like the U.S. claim North Vietnamese torpedo boats attacked U.S. Navy ships in the Tonkin Gulf in 1964. Only later the U.S. admitted there were “no boats” there. Or the U.S. claim in early August 1990 that 250,000 Iraqi troops were poised to invade on Saudi Arabia’s border, disproved by commercial satellite photos that showed no troops were there.

UN investigators have worked in Iraq for years. Their knowledge of the presence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq exceeds the knowledge of Secretary Powell. Their investigations impede any development of, or plan to use, such weapons.

Secretary Powell’s rhetoric encourages the acquisition of such weapons by small countries as essential to sovereignty, self defense, and survival. The investigative agencies of the United States government relied upon to determine whether Iraq has weapons of mass destruction or has any links to al-Qaeda, do not believe such weapons, or efforts to develop them, exist. And if everything Secretary Powell feared and professed to find was true, an attack on Iraq would still be unlawful. International law does not permit a war of aggression for non-violent acts in the absence of an imminent threat of violence.

In Their Determination To Attack Iraq And Control Its Oil Resources, U.S. Officials Will Say, And Too Often Do, Anything.

“All told, more than 3,000 suspected terrorists have been arrested [by the U.S.] in many countries. And many others have met a different fate. Let’s put it this way: They are no longer a problem to the United States and our friends and allies.” (President George W. Bush, State Of The Union Message, February 4, 2003, broadcast and published worldwide.)

President Bush was speaking of summary executions, or pre-emptive murder in the language of a grade-B Hollywood movie on organized crime. His doctrine of “pre-emptive” or “first-strike” war makes war prevention impossible and international law meaningless. His doctrine has increased violence, or the threat of violence, in occupied Palestine, between India and Pakistan, on the Korean peninsula, and elsewhere. It promises the reign of violence and lawlessness.

The United Nations and each of its nations must say "No" to war.

Sincerely,
Ramsey Clark

A.N.S.W.E.R.ing Bush's Big Myths About Iraq

Myth # 1: The United States has the right to wage preemptive war against Iraq.

Preemptive war is war of aggression. Under international law, a preemptive war may be justified as an act of self-defense only where there exists a genuine and imminent threat of physical attack. Bush's preemptive war against Iraq doesn't even purport to preempt a physical attack. It purports to preempt a threat that is neither issued nor posed. Iraq is not issuing threats of attack against the United States. It is only the United States that threatens war. There has been no evidence that Iraq is capable of an attack on the U.S., let alone possessing the intention of carrying out such an attack.

Myth # 2: The UN Security Council can lawfully authorize preemptive war.

The United Nations Security Council cannot authorize a potential nuclear U.S. first strike and war of aggression that violates the UN Charter, international law, and the law prohibiting war crimes, crimes against the peace, and crimes against humanity. The UN Charter—which creates the Security Council and which grants the Council its authority—requires the "Security Council to act in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations" (Article 24). The UN Charter requires international disputes or situations that might lead to a breach of peace to be resolved by peaceful means (Article 1 and Chapter VI). In other words, a nation may not wage war based on the claim that it seeks to prevent war. A nation may use force unilaterally in self-defense only "if an armed attack occurs" against it (Article 51).

Myth # 3: The United States Congress can lawfully authorize preemptive war against Iraq.

Article VI of the U.S. Constitution establishes that ratified treaties, such as the UN Charter, are the "supreme law of the land". The UN Charter has been ratified by the United States, and the Congress may not take actions—including wars of aggression—in violation of the Charter. Wars of aggression, and even the making of the threat of a war of aggression, violates the international humanitarian law to which all nations are bound. Neither Congress nor the President has the right to engage the U.S. in a war of aggression, and any vote of endorsement, far from legalizing or legitimizing global war plans, serves only as ratification of war crimes.

Myth # 4: The U.S. government intends to "liberate" the Iraqi people.

The October 11, 2002 New York Times ("U.S. Has A Plan To Occupy Iraq, Officials Report") revealed the true plans of the United States: "The White House is developing a detailed plan, modeled on the postwar occupation of Japan, to install an American-led military government in Iraq if the United States topples Saddam Hussein, senior administration officials said today.... In the initial phase, Iraq would be governed by an American military commander—perhaps Gen. Tommy R. Franks, commander of the United States forces in the Persian Gulf, or one of his subordinates—who would assume the role that Gen. Douglas MacArthur served in Japan after its surrender in 1945."

The true intention of the U.S. government is to recolonize Iraq. Prior to the 1960s, U.S. corporations made 50 percent of their foreign profits from investments in oil from this region. The Bush Administration wants Iraq to denationalize its oil wealth—10% of the world's supply. This war is an attempt to reconquer Iraq and all of its natural resources. The Bush Administration wants to reshuffle the deck in the Middle East and undo all of the achievements of the national liberation movements from the last sixty years. They want to eliminate independence for all countries in the region and assert their domination and control—not in the interest of the vast majority of people, but for access to oil.

[Editor's note: Again, go back to last month's SPECTRUM for an eye-opening explanation of why such an "occupation government" is REALLY needed in Iraq and the surrounding regions.]

Myth # 5: Iraq is a military threat to the world.

There is no record to support this claim. During the Gulf War of 1991, while the United States bombed Iraq with a barrage that included 110,000 sorties, Iraq did not destroy even one U.S. tank or plane. Desert Storm destroyed, according to UN weapons inspectors, 80% of Iraq's weaponry. As part of the inspections that followed, 90% of Iraq's remaining military capability was destroyed. Iraq has been paying indemnities to Kuwait and U.S. oil corporations since 1991 and has not had the financial capacity to build another arsenal. In addition, there has not been a threat by Iraq of any kind against any other country.

Myth # 6: Iraq threw out the weapons inspectors.

Iraq did not tell the inspectors to leave. The weapons inspectors withdrew in December 1998 because the United States told them to pull out so that the U.S. could launch a bombing campaign on Baghdad. The next day, on December 16, the U.S. unleashed Operation Desert Fox, which included dropping 1,100 bombs and cruise missiles on Iraq. After the bombing campaign, a Washington Post report confirmed the assertions of Iraq that the inspections were intelligence-gathering exercises conducted on the orders of the Defense Intelligence Agency. The Pentagon used the information collected from the so-called inspections to set up coordinates for its bombing operations. After this revelation, the Iraqi government quite understandably did not let the inspectors back in.

Myth # 7: Sanctions are a kinder, gentler way to deal with Iraq.

The plan for sanctions on Iraq came from the Pentagon, not the Department of Health and Human Services. It was a central part of the Pentagon's war strategy against the Iraqi people. Sanctions have been more devastating than the Gulf War itself. "UNICEF confirms that five to six thousand Iraqi children are dying unnecessarily every month due to the impact of the sanctions, and that figure is probably modest." That's what Denis Halliday told a congressional hearing in October 1998. Halliday, who had just resigned his post as UN Assistant Secretary General and head of the UN humanitarian mission in Iraq, spoke of the "tragic incompatibility of sanctions with the UN Charter and the Convention On Human Rights".

Myth # 8: The UN allows U.S. and U.K. planes to bomb the No-Fly Zones.

The United States agreed to a ceasefire with Iraq in February 1991. The no-flight zones over two-thirds of Iraq were imposed by the U.S., Britain, and France 18 months after the Gulf War. The United Nations has never sanctioned the no-flight zones. France has since condemned them. The so-called no-flight zones are in violation of international law. Iraq has every right under international law, and all known laws in the world, to defend itself in these U.S.-declared no-flight zones. According to Article 51 of the UN Charter, Iraq has the right of self-defense in all of its country, including these "no-flight zones".

Myth # 9: The people support a war on Iraq.

Not even opinion polls support this phony assertion. The polls confirm that there is wide opposition to a war. Normally there is wide support for a President who is about to launch a war. Instead, congressional offices report overwhelming constituent opposition to a unilateral war on Iraq. Worldwide, the opposition is even bigger. While British Prime Minister Tony Blair is a vocal acolyte of Bush, few in Britain support a war on Iraq. Already, a march against war of 400,000 was held in London. Similar demonstrations have been held in Rome and Madrid. The general sentiment in Europe was summed up by the Greek Development Minister who said: "We are totally opposed to any military conflict...even if there is a UN Resolution." Around the world, the sentiment is no different. New Zealand's government opposes the war. No country in the Middle East supports a war on Iraq. Lebanon, Jordan, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates all oppose a war. As do France, Russia, and China.

Myth # 10: War will be good for the economy.

It already costs U.S. taxpayers $50 billion per year to keep U.S. armed forces in the Persian Gulf. The estimated $200 billion for a war on Iraq will come straight out of Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, Education, and Welfare. The average working-class taxpayer will foot the bill. The upper classes have already had their taxes greatly reduced so that they pay only a small part of the bill.

Myth # 11: This war will be quick and painless.

War is rarely quick, never painless. A new war will be neither. The 4.8 million people in Baghdad face an invasion by the most modern and lethally equipped military in the world. Iraq is a nation of 22 million people. They will bear the brunt of the pain and the deaths of the war.

Myth # 12: Gulf War Syndrome is a myth.

The Veterans Benefits Administration Office noted that 36% of Desert Storm vets have filed claims for service-related disabilities. A primary reason is because the U.S. used depleted uranium. In July 1990: "The U.S. Army Armaments Munitions and Chemical Command admitted depleted uranium posed longterm risks to natives and combat veterans.... Low doses have been linked to cancer." Gulf War vets have a 500% greater incidence of Lou Gehrig's disease than the general population. Desert Storm female vets have a 300% greater incidence of bearing children with birth defects. For male vets the figure is 200%.

THE INDIGO CHILDREN

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern requires parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to help them achieve balance, harmony, and avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- Why do a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober brings together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

Bushonomics Inspires America's New Spirit Of Middle-Class Crime

Editor's note: Coming up with a headline that covers the main ideas of Al Martin's columns in any one issue of The SPECTRUM is perhaps as big a challenge as deciding just what are the main ideas he's sharing, the ones that have the most impact on we-the-people being royally hoodwinked under Bushonomics.

Is the potential spraying of high-potency Valium on Iraq war protesters really any less important than our rapidly sinking economy or the railroading of a former member of the UN weapons inspection team in Iraq who has dared to tell the truth? After all, the busy Gestapo running present-day Washington DC is quietly yet systematically making the Nazi leadership of World War II seem like Boy Scouts by comparison.

Perhaps the saddest event unfolding, thanks to those in control of Washington right now, is also the quietest—and thus the choice of headline above. A growing number of people who previously lived productive and relatively happy lives above the poverty line are now so destitute and desperate that they have taken to providing for their family through whatever “creative” way they can dream up. Some of these pursuits haven't been seen since the Depression Days of the 1930s; others are new wrinkles in an old scam, updated for our modern age.

And what do the children of that destitute family have to look forward to? As Al calculates the truth of it:

“Every child now born in the United States has a sign around his and her neck that says: ‘I owe $66,000 to other people—and that doesn't include my mortgage or credit cards.’ This is simply their portion of American public debt as an American citizen.”

And yet our bought-and-paid-for elected representatives in Washington DC continue to vote themselves pay raises and fatter retirement benefit packages—while selling the backbone of the country down the river. This is why we need courageous truthbringers like Al Martin to speak out.

For those newer readers who may not be familiar with this crusader, according to his own biographical statement (at his AlMartinRaw.com Internet website), Al is America's foremost whistleblower on government fraud and corruption. A retired U.S. Navy Lt. Commander and former officer in the Office of Naval Intelligence, he has testified before Congress (the Kerry Committee and the Alexander Committee) regarding Iran-Contra. Al Martin is the author of the revealing and witty exposé titled The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider (2001, National Liberty Press; order from Wisdom Books & Press: see information nearby).

The Frame-Up Of Scott Ritter And Other Scams In Bushonian America (2/3/03)

Scott Ritter, the former member of the original 1991 UN inspection team in Iraq, has been an outspoken critic of Bush Administration policy towards Iraq in both the Bush I and Bush II Regimes. And now he's been set-up and framed. [Editor's note: So is our current inspection team leader.]

Ritter had made a name for himself after being invited on mainstream media as an opponent because of the credibility he has as a former UN inspector. People have forgotten, but Ritter played a very dangerous game with the Bushites all along.

After all, it was Ritter who publicly revealed the head of the old UN inspection team, David Kaye, was actually a CIA agent masquerading as a UN inspector. Despite U.S. government assurances to the UN and the Government of Iraq to the contrary, he was passing along every scrap of information from the UN Inspector's Office in Baghdad directly to the CIA.

Initially the Bush Administration and the CIA denied it, but then they were forced to confirm it when the Washington Times came up with conclusive evidence about what this Kaye was doing. Consequently the CIA admitted that he was doing it and they admitted that they had lied to the UN, and the Bush Administration was forced to make admissions. It put Ritter in a bad light [in the eyes of the embarrassed Bush Administration] and they were looking to discredit him ever since.

Initially they weren't specifically targeting him in 2000, but inadvertently Ritter fell prey to an FBI Internet sex sting. He pled guilty to a misdemeanor to avoid a felony trial.

This was one of the stings, by the way, in which his name was not revealed publicly, but this was one of the few times when the Supreme Court ruled against the FBI and expanded the entrapment defense. Consequently the FBI, which had been licking its chops over getting felony convictions in this case, told the stingeers that they would proceed unless people pled guilty to a misdemeanor. So Ritter did, and there weren't any criminal sanctions, and he wasn't put on probation. It was just a matter of pleading guilty to a misdemeanor and paying the $150 fine.

But that opened the door concerning Ritter. More recently the FBI has set up a sting specifically targeting Ritter. The FBI had tried to claim earlier in the day that this was just a general Internet sex sting. However, it was later revealed, it was specifically targeting Ritter. They took a female FBI agent who apparently was very young-looking, and they had her masquerading as a 16-year-old girl who actually contacted Ritter on the Internet. He didn't contact her; she contacted him, so it was a complete set-up.

When he met this girl, Ritter even asked to see her ID because she claimed to be 22 years old (not the 16 years old she was supposed to be) when in fact she's 26 years old. She told him she was 22 and Ritter asked to see her ID and she forked up a Washington DC driver's license which said she was 22, an ID which the FBI had faked.

There's nothing new about that. After all, it is the FBI who prints all fake identification for all other government agencies to use in stings.

So she falsely claims to be 22 and she's holding unlawful identification provided to her by her employer, the FBI, and tries to set him up into a hotel room deal.

After that the story gets murkier. Apparently he didn't have sex with her; otherwise they would have arrested him. CNN said that the FBI is considering proceeding with felony charges, so whatever arrangements were made were not consummated. Otherwise the guy would have walked out in handcuffs.

Ritter was smart enough not to fall all the way for it. He just fell halfway. The FBI, in a very tersely worded statement, stated that they were considering further investigation of lodging a felony charge against Ritter. But this means he backed out.

Then, when CNN exposed the deal, it stung the FBI back. CNN also noted that it doesn't make any difference whether Scott Ritter is prosecuted or not because now he's discredited. And that was the whole point of it.

Just the allegation alone, particularly in an under-age sex case, people a year from now aren't going to remember that it was a sting or setup and an entrapment. They're just going to constantly relate his name in the same sentence with Internet pornography and under-age sex.

People aren't going to care how it happened a year from now, and he will stay discredited.

All the upcoming appearances that Scott Ritter had scheduled on mainstream media talk-shows were cancelled.

It should be mentioned that Scott Ritter has repeatedly and publicly identified himself as a fervent opponent of the War on Iraq. When Ritter did that interview, Larry King asked him: "Aren't you concerned about exposing so much truth?" And he said that people had warned him, before, that he should stop, or there would be repercussions.

And these are the repercussions. The FBI won't prosecute this guy but they'll keep it alive for as long as possible. They'll leak things out and say that the investigation is ongoing. And they will try to keep it in the media as long as possible so it gets ground into everybody's head. Eventually mainstream media will just publish the FBI press releases and they won't even bother to say that it was a set-up and Scott Ritter was the only guy targeted.

(Incidentally the FBI has not said anything, since the initial report of this incident on January 27. The implication is that the FBI completely botched the sting operation, so maybe they'll just let everybody forget about it now.)

The most recent Wall Street Journal/NBC poll indicates that the approval rating of George Bush is now down to 54% [you can assume it's actually much lower than any optimistic propaganda statements from the controlled media outlets], which is the lowest since he's been elected. Also, for the first time since 9/11 there are a greater percentage of people who feel that the economy is the main problem and the main issue and the greatest threat to the country. This proves that the Bushonian deceptions aren't working any more.

Right after that commentary came out the FBI issued a new alert to be on the lookout for new scams. They have said that there is a 300% increase in petty larceny and other scams being committed by the newly unemployed. Many of these people have families.

One of the most common is the medical donation scam, where the parents shave their kid's head and pretend that the kid's got cancer and solicit donations.

In January 2002, they had arrested 19 people nationwide for committing these kinds of scams. They get a website and put pictures of their kids and create dummy medical records, and it's a complete fraud. This month the number has increased to 4000 people—the number of people the FBI expects to arrest.

And speaking of scams, there's over $500 million worth of donations for the so-called 9/11 funds, from government and private organizations, which cannot be accounted for. Interestingly enough this corresponds pretty well with Federal Reserve records showing increases in deposits in offshore accounts.

Another scam they warned about is dressing up the kids as cub scouts and going out soliciting money for scout activities that don't exist. According to the FBI, one set of parents took in $700 in a week, and that's a new twist. Now they're finding very creative and innovative scams, which haven't been committed before.

It was surprising to me, but the FBI spokesperson was very sympathetic toward these people. She said these small larceny scams are being committed by people with no criminal history. These are people who are the newly unemployed. They have families. They've had their pensions wiped out. Their medical coverage is gone. Even the homeless shelters are all filled up nationwide.

Now you can see how Bushonomics has created a new entrepreneurial spirit in America.

In another TV newsmagazine segment, there was an interview with a county commissioner in Maricopa County, Arizona, who spoke about the severe economic distress that the states, counties, and municipalities are under. Of course, Arizona hasn't been able to attract any upscale businesses. It's mostly an unskilled labor class that lives there. There have been 70,000 unskilled labor jobs lost in the last year. These are people who are essentially living paycheck-to-paycheck, unskilled laborers who migrate to Arizona because the cost of living has been traditionally cheap there, such as "trailer park" people. There have also been a record number of repossessions of trailers and pickup trucks.

This county commissioner actually blamed these problems on Bushonomics. He said it's killing the states. They have a record number of people in jail, people who have never committed a crime before, who are doing it to get a 90-day or 180-day sentence, so they get a roof over their heads and three meals a day.

Even with that tough sheriff Arroyo who's building more tent camps, they give them 90 days and then they release them, and they do the same thing again because there are no jobs anywhere.

The Untold History Of America by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original Native inhabitants of America. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

Maricopa County evidently now has a deal with 37 other large counties in the United States wherein they are considering building, for the first time since the 1930s, some sort of civilian labor camps, like the CCC or the WPA projects in the 1930s.

The difference would be that these would be for people who committed petty crimes. He said you have to do something with them, otherwise they keep preying on people. But they're basically not a criminal element. They have been forced into criminality—to buy food and to live. He said they're in every alleyway and they have to do something with them.

So, they're considering building, for the first time since the 1930s, very minimum-security work detention camps for civilians to try to ease the problems, where they would work on farms, etc. Then they will get heat from the Mexican migrant farmworkers because they will put them out of work.

And that brings us to the larger question: What's cheaper than minimum wage? Victims of Bushonomics—used as White slave-labor.

Watching this series, you get the sense of how quickly things are falling apart. If I were Bush, I'd have to be frightened at the numbers they're showing. Iraq is no longer diverting people's attention. The "War on Terrorism" is no longer diverting people's attention. Everyday they have to try something new to try to divert people's attention from reality. One day it's Wolfowitz, then it's Perle, then it's Ari Fleischer, then it's Colin Powell. And it's all an effort to refocus people's attention on Iraq and North Korea.

The Bush Regime is getting more and more desperate to steer people's attention from the real problem: the economic devastation created by Bushonomics.

Bushonomics Strikes Again, And Again, And Again... (2/10/03)

There is a growing problem in New York City because there are so many new homeless people who are victims of Bushonomics. They showed pictures of them milling around in Central Park. These people have kids and they're out begging. They stand across the street from the Park Hotel and accost people in taxicabs and beg for money.

The taxicab drivers wanted to be able to hook-up 120-volt inverters to their batteries, and then run an electrical charge through their car doors to shock these new victims of Bushonomics. And now the New York City taxicab

THE CONSPIRATORS: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider

WHAT IF a criminal cabal, a de facto white-collar crime syndicate, took over the U.S. Government and used its systems and operations for its own profit? According to former government operative and now whistleblower Al Martin, this is exactly what has happened.

For example, at a meeting with General Richard V. Secord, Martin was briefed about Iran-Contra operations and allowed to view voluminous CIA white papers concerning Operation Black Eagle, the code-name for the Bush-Casey-North program involving U.S. Government-sanctioned narcotics trafficking, illicit weapons deals, and wholesale fraud—corporate securities fraud, real estate fraud, banking fraud, and insurance fraud.

Martin has first-hand knowledge of the dirty deals, high-level scams, frauds, and treasonous activities of the U.S. Shadow Government costing taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars—and still growing. This is a story of true conspiracy, an uncensored look at what really goes on in the back rooms of criminal power politics.

commission has voted to allow them to do it.

They also showed a Republican New York City councilman who had ordered the police to sweep the streets. They won't allow people to hold up signs saying that they are victims of Bushonomics, either, and homeless people won't be allowed to accost people for money.

The Israeli Defense Force (IDF) is now using the new high-potency valium gas for riot control purposes [see Valium Spray & Prozac Water To Keep Americans "Happy" in the December 2002 issue of this publication; also at Al Martin's website] that's supposed to be for use in the United States. But some of the local police apparently expressed concern about it because it's never really been tested on humans before. The police in the United States said that if they start using this gas to break up protests which contain oldsters, they wouldn't know what could happen.

Anyway, the Department of Defense got Israel to use it on a test basis on the Palestinians, and they showed a clip of it on CNN. It was at night, but everything was on fire, so you could see what was going on. And the Palestinians, who are mostly a bunch of 16- and 17-year-olds, are throwing rocks and bottles, and then they showed a group of IDF who come up with their gas guns and they start firing these high-potency Valium canisters at them.

Unlike tear gas, this Valium isn't really a gas. It's more of an aerosol mist. When they hit the ground and explode, all you really see is a mist. The protesters can't grab the can and throw it back at the cops like you can with tear gas because the whole thing just disintegrates. It's under high pressure, so it disperses a high-potency Valium mist over a radius of about 10 meters.

The minute these kids came into contact with this mist, they immediately dropped to the ground. Immediately. It took the legs right out from under them. They just keeled over. They were just lying on their backs in the streets. It wasn't lethargy. These people were absolutely moribund. They were completely unable to move, and they all had these great big shit-eating grins on their faces.

Then the clip showed the Israeli Defense Force people run over and start kicking them and hitting them in the balls with their cattle prods. And every time they get shocked, you see their whole bodies shake, but they still can't do anything or even get up. Even as they're getting shocked, they still have smiles on their faces.

But at least now we know that it works.

Look for the new label: "Field-tested on Palestinians."

Then they showed this guy from the Department of Defense who said that all the big-city police are itching to use this stuff, to shoot it at the anti-Iraq war protesters. They can't wait to use it. It's an excellent riot-control weapon because the protesters literally drop like flies. And soon it will be field tested on the disloyal citizens and the dissidents in America.

In other news, the FAA has come up with new proposed regulations, which will limit the air travel of fat people. This is in response to the crash of the short-haul commuter plane in North Carolina. They think that it was caused by too much weight in these small 20-seat aircraft.

The FAA says it's a growing problem because Americans have become so obese. Fat people constitute a growing threat to public safety. When you walk into an airport, they may start to weigh you as a precursor to getting on one of

William Cooper: Death Of A Conspiracy Salesman

On November 5, 2001, William Cooper was shot to death by sheriff's deputies in a gunfire exchange. Who was Bill Cooper? Was he a true patriot? A tough survivalist? Or simply a fanatic?

Some knew him as a UFO "expert" (claimed insider information on government knowledge of extraterrestrials living among us)...a conspiracy theorist...a former Navy Intelligence operative...and the person the President once called "the most dangerous man on American airwaves". Cooper always said he acted from his "conscience" and sought to warn all Americans of the dangers of the New World Order, creeping socialism, and our own brand of Nazism. Here is the inside story, as told by a fellow patriot and government whistle-blower. Commander X has collected together for the first time Cooper's thoughts and finds on such subjects as: The Illuminati • The Kennedy Assassination • MJ-12 and the UFO Cover-Up • Area 51 • The AntiChrist • The World Trade Center Disaster • Gun Control • Skull and Bones Society.

these short-haul commuter flights. Any fat people—those who weigh more than 185 pounds—will pay a surcharge that will equal two normal people. Then they would have to buy two ticket-seats because it would deny someone else a seat.

Now they're relating obesity to public safety issues. Next they'll be saying that obesity supports terrorism.

And some more cheery news: It was announced that the U.S. Pension Guaranty Corporation, a quasi-government agency like Ginny Mae or Fannie Mae, which is the insurer of last resort for the pensions of 44 million working Americans, has experienced a record depletion of capital of some $3.85 BILLION in 2002.

The head of this organization stated that, if these types of losses were to be experienced in 2003, the surplus funds would be exhausted and its obligations would have to be taken over directly by the U.S. Treasury, even though the U.S. Treasury is under no obligation to do so.

For political purposes, this is almost a certainty, but this would create another $5 BILLION of annual liability to the American taxpayers, which would have to be funded.

There was also a lengthy interview on CNBC by former Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, and it was the first time I had seen him smile. He was very jovial and expressed how wonderful it was to be out from under the thumb of the Bushonian Regime. He said it was the first time he was able to tell the truth since he went to work for the Bush Cabinet. But he painted a very dismal picture of what's to come. As long as Bushonomics rules the day, the economic situation of the United States will continue to deteriorate. He was very frank and forthcoming.

The United States has extended such a plethora of guarantees to our so-called "allies" to get their support in the campaign against Iraq that it would actually be much cheaper if the U.S. Treasury (U.S. taxpayers) simply wrote a check to the governments of Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Kuwait, etc. to pay the Iraqi war debts—and then not go to war with Iraq. It would cost the American taxpayers only 1/5 of the amount to do that.

The Rah-Rah World War II veterans object, though. They say we're fighting for democracy, and the American people have never cared how much they've spent fighting for principles and democracy.

My answer is that subsequent administrations have never minded how much graft, corruption, and malfeasance they could commit based on those expenditures. In the last analysis, this war is still being billed as America playing the role of the World's Policeman—which we're not, nor do we have the resources to be, despite what George Bush has said.

Bush has said that we will borrow as much of other people's money as necessary to return the United States to be militarily capable of being the World's Policeman. This way the next several generations of Americans will be saddled to pay for this deficit. Now the Bushs (Senior and Junior) have created $12.5 TRILLION worth of debt thus far. People who will not even be born for another 30 years will, upon reaching adulthood, still be paying for it.

Bushonomics just doesn't mortgage those being born today, as the Democrats have said. It mortgages the future of those who won't be born for 30 years.

And here's another whammy from the effects of the destructive policies of Bushonomics: If Bush's dividend tax elimination proposal passes, the states will have to reduce the unearned income taxes and capital gains taxes they piggyback on the federal rate by the same amount.

When the comptroller of North Carolina spoke, he said that even the likelihood of a 50% dividend tax cut would cost the state $200 million in lost state unearned income and capital gains tax revenue. The big states like California, New York, and Michigan will have losses in the BILLIONS.

Bushonomics, in other words, is not only bankrupting the federal government; it's bankrupting states, counties, and municipal governments as well.

And, unlike the federal government, most of the states are actually constitutionally mandated not to have deficits. However, by a two-thirds majority of the state legislature, with the signature of the governor, the states can invoke what's called a Temporary Waiver For Emergency Purposes, which allows them to accrue deficits temporarily. But the states don't like to do that.

A lot of them did it in 1975, when many states were also in a very precarious financial situation. It led to these waivers going on for years, and the states accumulated tremendous amounts of debt in the late 1970s because of it.

Then they found themselves issuing long-term non-callable bonds in the early 1980s at a 14% to 15% interest rate. The people who bought them did pretty well.

It was the state bond issues in the early 1980s which brought Ambac and the other bond insurance agencies into existence. They were essentially formed to provide insurance for state bonds because the credit rating from 1974 to 1982 had declined so much that, even offering 14% coupons, twenty years hence non-callable, the states still couldn't unload them. This created an opportunity, and Ambac was the first in it.

States can only borrow from banks and lending institution on a very short-term basis of 1 year or less. Furthermore, the states cannot issue so-called cash management bills the way the U.S. Treasury does. They are odd-term bills, 37-day or 51-day cash management bills. They are like Treasury bills except they're odd-cycle. They are literally issued for the purpose of cash management, but the states cannot issue any of these securities.

According to the State Association of Finance Boards, the passage of the complete elimination of dividends would cost the states an aggregate of $155 BILLION in increased interest-rate expenses. Obviously the value of municipal securities is going to decline. They will not be as competitive as they were in the past. The states assumed (because both political parties promised them) that if any effort was ever made to eliminate double taxation on dividends, the states would be compensated in some fashion. And Bush has broken that promise.

Bushonomics has created the states' problems.

From now on, on radio shows, when I quote the National Debt, I'm not going to say $14 trillion, I'm going to say it's $20 trillion—because that's the real number. When the average person hears these numbers, he or she thinks that's the total debt of ALL government. That is simply the debt of the FEDERAL government. It does not include the debt of the individual state, county, or municipal governments, which is now at an aggregate of $6 TRILLION, the highest ever.

This National Debt and the parameters as delineated by the Office of Budget Management is a Republican trick to try to make people believe that it's less than what it actually is.

Some people who call-in to the talk shows I've been on have been so naïve as to think that the National Debt included not only all public debt, but private debt as well.

If you wanted to ask what is the total National Debt, you'd have to say that the National Debt is $14 TRILLION, the accumulated debt of the states, counties, and municipal governments is another $6 TRILLION, the consumer installment debt of the American people is now $8.5 TRILLION (and that's not including mortgages; add mortgages and it's another $28 TRILLION on top of that).

When you add up the figures, the total public and private debt of the United States now exceeds the value of the total public and private assets of the country.

The total debt, public and private, is between $36 and $38 TRILLION, but these are current numbers and do not include any known future liability, nor any contingent future liability, nor any unanticipated or extraordinary spending, of which even in the public sector there's at least $50 BILLION a year. The total private and public assets of the United States are only about $34.9 TRILLION. That's the value of all the real estate and all of the industry.

Every child now born in the United States has a sign around his and her neck that says: "I owe $66,000 to other people—and that doesn't include my mortgage or credit cards." This is simply their portion of American public debt as an American citizen.

Newly born, wealthy Republicans, however, have a sign of their own. They have a placard which says: "I have an offshore trust fund, in which my assets are protected from your grubby hands."

Deputy Reichsfuehrer Ashcroft has dictated that everybody must go out and buy three days' worth of food and water to have on hand in the event the "terrorists" attack. You would think that World War III was around the corner and the sky was ready to fall the way this Ashcroft talks.

Now under "Orange Alert" status, doctors are allowed to give emergency prescriptions, so you can double-up on your medication, in the event there is a disruption in the supply. Then you have to make sure you have plenty of petrol and plenty of batteries and a radio in your home with shortwave capabilities. They even announced the new emergency shortwave frequencies for the Office of State Security (this is what we will be calling the Office of Homeland Security from now on) in the event "terrorists" knocked out U.S. communications.

"A nation can survive its fools and even the ambitious. But it cannot survive treason from within. An enemy at the gate is less formidable, for he is known and carries his banners openly against the city. But the traitor moves among those within the gates freely, his sly whispers rustling through all the alleys, heard in the very halls of government itself. For the traitor appears not a traitor; he speaks in the accents familiar to his victims, and he wears their face and their garments, and he appeals to the baseness that lies deep in the hearts of all men. He rots the soul of a nation; he works secretly and unknown in the night to undermine the pillars of a city; he infects the body politic so that it can no longer resist. A murderer is less to be feared."

— Cicero, 45 B.C.

The threat level is such that you would think that these "terrorists" are actually organized into vast armies with tanks, warplanes, and missiles. They don't say they're just a bunch of rag-tag towel-heads. After hearing this statement, you would think that these "terrorists" have the same capability as the Soviet Army of old.

Deputy Reichsfuehrer Ashcroft is definitely cranking up the fear factor. Now he's claiming that the "terrorists" have the capability to completely disrupt the U.S. economy, to cause the banking system to fail, to disrupt the distribution of food and water, and to destroy power plants.

Meanwhile Iraq has knuckled under to the United Nations. One of the key sticking points that chief UN Weapons Inspector Hans Blix had pointed out was their refusal to allow U2 spy planes to fly over Iraq, and now they are allowing that to happen. Furthermore Iraq has agreed to immediately sign-on to the international treaty ban on weapons of mass destruction, which would force them to be obligated to everything that goes along with it, like inspections from the International Atomic Energy Commission and so on. And all this has stolen Bush's thunder, stung the Bush Administration, and caught them off guard.

About an hour later, Bush was addressing the "Praise The Lord And Send Me A Check" crowd in Nashville. You could tell that the entire tenor of his reasoning for the war has changed.

They have essentially resorted to an entirely different political gameplan. They are no longer harping about the threat that Iraq represents with its "weapons of mass destruction". Now they're saying that it's "America's moral duty" to invade Iraq, kill Saddam Hussein, and "liberate" the Iraqi people from oppression.

Bush is now taking the infamous American "moral high ground" that we are the torchbearers of freedom across the world. It was so syrupy it nearly made me gag. Bush said he's already embracing the widows and orphans of American servicemen who have died in the fight to free other people from tyranny.

Pat Robertson and Jerry Falwell were there, and that's the new tone since Iraq has knuckled under and stolen Bush's thunder about the Iraqi regime refusing to meet the mandates under UN Resolution 1441.

[Editor's note: Be sure to see the stories elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM from Eustace Mullins and Grace Halsell that plainly reveal who is pushing, through puppets like Falwell and Robertson, for war with Iraq at ANY cost to America. A hint would be who, as Al stated in a previous segment, is testing the Valium spray on Palestinian youngsters.]

Putin and Chirac made a joint press release in Paris stating that they have backed away from their previous approval of the War on Iraq. Then Germany, France, and Belgium blocked the NATO emergency meeting to send a military shield to Turkey, which further stung the Bush Administration. The markets then immediately turned higher.

[Editor's note: Keep in mind that this bold, united political announcement opposing Bush's "coalition" plans followed shortly after the shuttle Columbia was brought down in Bush's backyard (see story in last month's SPECTRUM) and just at the time of the huge "mystery blizzard" that paralyzed Washington DC on President's Day.]

The Bushonian effort to topple the Saddam Regime (and to isolate that regime as a precursor) has completely backfired. Now it is the United States that is being isolated.

Saddam Hussein has played Bush like a fiddle. He allowed Bush to stick out his political neck with all this war mongering, and he forced Bush to call in a lot of favors to get the Europeans on board—knowing that the deepest wedge he could drive was to suddenly knuckle under—not to all, but to some of the most important UN demands, and to continue to stretch the process out.

Bush likes to say that he's the master strategist and that we're controlling the agenda, but it's not true. Saddam Hussein is controlling the agenda. He suckered Bush into painting America into a corner.

And this new "moral" stance plays well to right-wingers here in the United

COMMON SENSE II

Thomas Paine's pamphlet Common Sense was written and widely circulated in 1776. The simple logic and wisdom presented in Common Sense persuaded thousands of ordinary citizens to support a movement that sought to unite the colonies in an effort to win their independence from England. The birth of our nation and freedom from King George's tyranny is a direct result of this nation's people understanding the REAL issues and choosing freedom over tyranny.

We, the editors of Common Sense II, are anonymous—just as Common Sense was originally published anonymously. We recognize that this 92-page, 3" x 6" booklet has tall shoes to fill. Time is running out and we must once again persuade our countrymen to choose freedom over tyranny.

The sole purpose of Common Sense II is to awaken our sleeping countrymen. We have compiled the most illustrative and eloquent writings available, and have arranged them in the manner most likely to persuade a nation to stand up for freedom and independence—our God-given rights!

States, but it does not play well in Europe or Asia. In other words, you can read into this that the U.S. is going to go into Iraq militarily and we have abandoned any efforts (and any pretense) in bringing our allies into the situation, and we will take unilateral action. That's what they are signaling by playing the "moral" card and playing directly into the narrow-minded right within the United States.

This obviously puts Tony Blair into a box because he had stuck out his neck much more than Bush had. Blair was committing Britain to the war when more than two-thirds of his own Labor Party voted against it and two-thirds of the British people were against it. It puts Blair in an untenable position within the left wing of his own party because the Labor Party is already nervous about its drop in public support because of Blair's actions.

This series of moves that the Iraqi government made, bending to UN demands, has changed the international dynamics. The price of gold immediately dropped $8 an ounce. The price of oil immediately dropped $1 a barrel.

The Bush Cabal is still committed to war on Iraq. The 101st Airborne Division, which includes 23,000 men, including support staff, plus 268 helicopter gunships, has been sent, and when that is completed in two weeks, there will be 150,000 troops in the immediate area.

This is another move that is designed to isolate the United States. This is not a pro-active move by the Iraqis. The Iraqis are allowing the Bush Administration to be pro-active, to let Bush stick his neck out and then chop it off.

The Bush Administration has completely underestimated the savviness of Saddam Hussein. George Bush seems to think that Saddam's just some stupid tinhorn dictator. But in fact, who is stupid? Who's the one who's being isolated?

Hussein has very craftily made it appear that he's knuckled under to the two key points the UN had—which Bush kept pushing. Now it's Bush's move and he's signaled that move by saying that the United States is going to change its political focus.

We are now essentially resorting to Plan B—no further concessions and no further efforts to get the allies on board. We will simply pander to the right within the United States, and we will go it alone.

Now the big advantage to our allies is that if the United States acts unilaterally, intelligence—which has more impact on our emotions, our mind, and our physical health than was ever thought possible! In this audio, the authors offer astonishing proof that the heart has an intelligence, one that

You can. Simply by understanding your heart's profoundly affects our mental and physical health. When we engage the power of our heart's intelligence, then, and only then, can we make the most of our health and our minds. These life-altering techniques will show you how to deepen the qualities long associated with the heart—wisdom, compassion, courage, love, strength, and joy.

PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT CHRONICLES BY COMMANDER X

Explores the strange case of Al Bielek (only known survivor of the Philadelphia Experiment) and the mysterious death of famed astronomer Dr. M. K. Jessup, who first broke the news about the disappearance of the warship and its subsequent teleportation into another dimension. Also looks at time travel, alternative energy, anti-gravity theories. Highly classified government/military projects exposed.

SUBTERRANEAN WORLDS INSIDE EARTH BY TIM BECKLEY

Is the Earth hollow? Is our planet honeycombed with caverns inhabited by mysterious races? Are there civilizations of super beings living beneath the surface of the Earth? Are the residents of this subsurface world friendly, or do they have our domination in mind? Here are strange and unexplainable legions of the "Wee People", the Dero, and long-haired Atlantean giants as encountered by cave explorers and miners trapped far beneath the Earth.

THE SMOKEY GOD AND OTHER INNER EARTH MYSTERIES

Half of the book consists of a reprint of the classic SMOKY GODS written by a Swedish fisherman who claims he found his way inside the Earth and had an amazing encounter with a race of super-wise giants who have lived inside the Earth since ancient times. Book also contains evidence that at least some UFOs may come from inside Earth and are piloted by a race of super-beings who have survived, largely unknown to the surface world. Includes interview with an inner Earth inhabitant from a city beneath Mt. Shasta.

THE PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT & OTHER UFO CONSPIRACIES BY BRAD STEIGER

In 1943 the Navy accomplished the teleportation of a warship from Philadelphia to Norfolk by successfully applying Einstein's Unified Field Theory. The experiment also caused the crew and officers of the ship to become invisible, during which time they were launched into a time-space warp. One survivor tells his amazing experience.

then it will be the American taxpayers who will have to pay the entire 20-year, $1 TRILLION rebuilding Iraq package. The so-called allies won't have to share any of the expenses, but they'll still get all the gravy of all the contracts. The Bush Administration has already pre-agreed to guarantee continuity of contracts.

Now, if Saddam is smart (and he is), he will go to the Russians, the Germans, the British, and the French, and offer them very lucrative new oil contracts, weapons contracts, and natural resources contracts in Iraq. This is the logical thing for him to do because he knows that the politics of France and Russia, in particular, are propelled by commercial interests.

Now our would-be allies are becoming, not the Axis of Evil, but the Axis of Profits, while the U.S. taxpayers are becoming the Axis of Losses. If the U.S. acts unilaterally, it all comes down to a balance sheet. It means that the "allies" will all profit, and the cost to the U.S. taxpayers will simply increase.

Bush even said that the American taxpayers "have never been concerned about how much money they have to pay to liberate foreign peoples from oppression." During the Second World War, he might have been right. But to say that now, when the American people have lost half of their money in the stock market, to say that they're not concerned is just not true.

And that's how it stands. As a headline, we have: Saddam Hussein Chops George Bush's Political Neck Off, Thanks To America, Home Of The Naïve And Land Of The Brain Dead.

In other news, there was a letter that was delivered to the Bush White House by the world's ten leading economists, all of whom are Nobel Prize winners. It's the first time such a consensus, spanning left to right, of Nobel laureates have agreed to deliver such a joint statement. This has been getting a lot of news play because these economists span the political spectrum from arch-capitalists to arch-Keynesians, and don't usually agree to anything. The gist of it is that the Bush "economic stimulus plan" is just a thinly veiled guise for a political agenda—to wit, the continuous transfer of tax burdens to the middle class.

Even professor Milton Friedman signed it and, as you may remember, he was the chief economist during the Bush-I Regime. Friedman is and always has been quoted by the Bushonian Faction to augment the credibility of their economic agenda. Friedman was never an advocate of deficit spending, but the Bush-I Regime was very cozy with him, appointing him to numerous economic commissions simply to trade off of his credibility as an anti-deficit fighter.

Meanwhile the Bushonian Regime kept accumulating larger and larger deficits. This is a trick that the Bushonian Cabal consistently uses—both in the late 1980s, the early 1990s, and now once again—and that is to have, in its cabinet, people who are anti-deficit hawks in order to have some of their credibility rub off on Bushonomics, which can not be defended by any other means.

Now the nation's Republican Wealthy pay 23% of the federal taxes. If the Bush "economic stimulus plan" were to pass intact, the nation's wealthy would then pay 11% of the nation's income tax burden. The other 12% would simply be shifted to middle and lower middle classes.

In other news, which signifies that the Bush Administration has thrown in the towel on the economy, Bush said in his speech to the "Praise The Lord And Send Me A Check" crowd that he now intends to push, not just tacitly support, a Federal Consumption Tax to replace the Federal Income Tax.

This would be, in other words, a national VAT or Value Added Tax. Of course, this is nothing new, since the Bush-I Regime talked about it as well. The problem is that none of the Democrats will support it, and even none of the liberal or moderate Republicans will support it, either.

Wealthy Republicans do support it because a consumption tax would dynamically shift the tax burden from the wealthy to the middle class, and particularly to the working poor, who spend much more of their income on what would now be taxable goods, as a percentage of their net income.

In fact, the working poor now only pay 6% of the total federal income taxes in the nation. With a consumption tax, they would pay 13%, and that additional 7% shift would be moved directly from the wealthy.

This idea has universal support within the Bushonian Faction. It is also heavily supported by the Republican Right and all wealthy people in the country.

Steve Forbes has been pushing this for a long time. They can couch it in such a way that they can spin it to the middle class, telling them that: "You don't have to pay any more income tax." They won't say that even the middle class would be paying more with a consumption tax, in terms of total federal tax burden, than they would based on the current income tax code.

This is the final recognition that the only way a multi-trillion-dollar tax cut for the Republican Rich can be supported is through a consumption tax. The numbers simply don't work any other way. Someone must begin to pick up the burden of taxation that the wealthy will no longer be paying.

In order to generate the same amount of income for the federal treasury that the income tax generates, you would have to have a flat 13% consumption tax. Then they would accomplish the third great agenda of the Bushonian Cabal, namely to turn the United States into a defacto tax-free nation for the Republican Rich. That's when the offshore slush funds could be repatriated back into the United States.

Even the new Treasury Secretary Snow Job has used this as an argument—that it would repatriate the trillions in offshore accounts, and that would provide economic stimulus by bringing Republican Scamscateer money back into the nation, from which it was originally first purloined.

With the latest SEC changes,

Republicans who scammed money out of the system through stock, insurance, and banking frauds, and have hidden the money offshore, could repatriate their money and it would be held sovereign and immune from all challenge. This came with the collapse of Enron and WorldCom, when the Bush Regime came up with the 60-day no prosecution and no civil attachment orders to allow wealthy Republican Scamscateers enough time to file under the statute for expatriation from the United States. They then would have time to liquidate all their remaining assets in the United States, and move those monies to untouchable offshore accounts.

Now the Bush Regime is telling Republican Scamscateers that their offshore money, if repatriated, will be sacrosanct and immune from any private or governmental action, even shareholder lawsuits.

In terms of packaging this consumption tax, it's very appealing to the working poor and lower middle class, who are certainly not rocket scientists, and believe when they're told there's no more income tax to pay, and instead there's a consumption tax.

Three quarters of them would not understand what a consumption tax is, and the concept that it'll cost them more. The only part they'd hear is that there is no more income tax. It wouldn't occur to them to ask: "Well, where is the revenue going to come from?"

Bushonian policies always discourage anyone from asking questions. You can see how the Bush Regime treats people. Anyone who questions these policies or asks questions is called "disloyal" or "unpatriotic".

On the other hand, when you're a bridge person (homeless and living under a bridge), you're the ultimate realist.

One of the unfortunate side effects for the Bushonian Cabal is that they spread realism by creating more economic distress, which in turn creates a new class of bridge people. When you're cold and wet and sitting in a dirty overcoat under a bridge, and you've lost your home and pension because of Bushonomics, then suddenly reality sets in.

And when there's too much "reality", the State Security will come around and spray people with the high-potency Valium gas to relieve them of the misery caused by Bushonomics.

But this has been a turning point for the Bush Cabal. The way the Bush Cabal will package this consumption tax plan is to make the IRS look like the bogeyman, and they'll claim that the IRS will go out of business. This is very appealing to a lot of people—those on the lower end of the economic spectrum, to the patriots, and the conspiracy people. People will jump on it without thinking of the consequences.

And that's what the Bush Cabal is counting on.

What Are We Doing To Our Food?

Editor's note: Every so often a gem of an article comes along—brief, to the point, generally useful as a condensed reminder of important facts about a subject of wide interest, yet loaded with golden nuggets to be mined by those interested in further research.

The following is just such an article, reminding us of matters that longtime readers of The SPECTRUM will quickly note we have covered—in depth—in the past. After all, what could be of more universal importance than food? (That's assuming you're still among the living while reading this.)

Alarming things are happening to our foods these days. And if we're not aware and vigilant enough about such matters to "vote with our wallets" to send messages back to the purveyors of such unconscionable shenanigans, then guess what—we deserve the poor health and medical complications we get as a result.

Frankly, this kind of covert war against our health deserves even more vigorous protest (due to the ever-growing "casualties of war" numbers) than has been generated over the more visible drumbeats for war with Iraq.

For example, if you're vigilant about reading ingredients, you've probably noticed nasty poisons like "Canola" oil, MSG, and Aspartame creeping into products—even so-called and more expensive "health" products—where they never found residence before and surely don't belong. Longtime readers with good memories will be quick to point out that these three pivotal ingredients have all been the subjects of past ominous articles within our publication. And for very good reasons!

When a longtime staple of the food shelf, previously with a very healthy ingredient, like olive oil, has now quietly switched to "Canola" oil—while still prominently bragging about their "fine old Italian recipe"—one can't help but wonder what nonsense is REALLY going on. Students of conspiracy recognize the trademark clues of the New World Order gang's calculated high-level agenda in play, to slowly but surely compromise the health of, well, the actively health-conscious consumer.

Who better to target? This is the same uppity portion of the citizenry most feared by the world control misfits because these are the people most likely to be actively protesting, say, the war in Iraq. But only if their health permits. An unhealthy public is a docile public of easily herded sheep.

Further, if such poisonous ingredients are, as an incentive for use, nearly "given away"—perhaps at dirt-cheap prices—to key manufacturers more infatuated with profit than, say, their "fine old Italian recipe"—then the temptation becomes practically irresistible. From a pure "business" point of view, it's a captivating situation for such manufacturers, who've sold their souls (and the earned trust of loyal customers) to become—knowingly or unknowingly—agents for the higher-level depopulation agenda of the depraved New World Order elite.

When producers of such mutant obscenities as genetically modified and irradiated foods don't even have to let consumers know that's what they are getting, then vigilance, born of well-founded suspicion, must rule the health-conscious consumer's pursuit of anything as fundamental as food purchases—AND methods of food preservation and preparation. Thus the importance of sharing the following gem of a reminder with you.

We would like to commend VENTURE INWARD for daring to publish this article in their January-February 2003 issue. We've become more aware of the connection between diet and health, so we make an effort to eat more fruits and vegetables. To keep up with this trend, even die-hard burger-and-fries establishments are now offering vegetarian choices and fresh salads on their menus.

This is definitely progress. Yet, when we take a close look at what's in and on our fruits and vegetables, it's obvious that, in many ways, we're undermining our efforts to stay healthy.

The aggressive use of large-scale intensive farming practices over the past several decades has left our agricultural soil depleted of minerals and beneficial

"The genetic modification of food is intrinsically dangerous. It involves making irreversible changes in a random manner to a complex level of life about which little is known. It is inevitable that this hit-and-miss approach will lead to disasters. It must disrupt the natural intelligence of the plant or animal to which it is applied, and lead to health-damaging side-effects."

— Dr. Geoffrey Clements, leader of the Natural Law Party, UK.

microbes. This translates into lower nutrient levels in produce, reflected by a lack of flavor.

My seven-year-old son loves to eat apples, but he frequently complains that they're dry and tasteless—and unfortunately he's right. I remember biting into a pear or an apple as a child and savoring its ripe, juicy sweetness. Such fullness of flavor is rarely found in fruits and vegetables today.

Most produce, grown in impoverished soil, is picked before it's ripe to facilitate transport and storage. This means that even the few vitamins and minerals it does contain will never become fully bioavailable.

To make things worse, our crops are doused with toxic pesticides, which jeopardize the health of farmers and their families, and ultimately the health of the consumer. Pesticides pollute the air, the soil, and our water supplies, and, of course, the food.

Conventional agriculture uses thousands of pesticides; worldwide, several billion pounds are applied annually. Synthetic fertilizers, too, are undermining the health of Planet Earth and its inhabitants. Every year, thousands of tons of highly soluble nitrogen fertilizer are applied, much of which ends up in our ground and surface water.

But we're not happy just treating our foods with chemicals. We also need to redesign them!

So we're working with biotechnology to merge genes from plants, animals, viruses, and bacteria in ways that do not occur in Nature. As an example, let's say that DNA from an Arctic fish, such as a flounder, is spliced into the DNA of a vegetable, such as a tomato, to make it frost-resistant.

Our knowledge of the consequences of the genetic engineering of foods is extremely limited, and many scientists are concerned that it may cause irreparable damage, for instance through accidental cross-pollination and the creation of modified viruses and bacteria that may introduce new diseases unknown to the immune systems of humans, animals, and plants.

In Genetically Engineered Food: Changing The Nature Of Nature (Park Street Press, 2001), authors Martin Teitel, Ph.D., and Kimberly A. Wilson express their concern about the uncertainty of biotechnological processes: "Once genetic modifications are made, there is no way to tell how the effects of the genetic recombining might change and even move into other organisms."

One way in which consumers can avoid foods that have been bio-engineered or treated with pesticides, hormones, and

antibiotics is to eat organically grown produce, meat, and dairy. The steep increase in organic food sales (15% to 20% annually) shows that consumers are casting a vote in favor of natural foods and sustainable agriculture. But the organic farming sector is still extremely small compared to the powerful mega-farms and agricultural conglomerates.

The assault on our food continues in our own kitchens, where the microwave oven has all but replaced conventional methods of cooking. Many people don't realize that microwave heating dramatically changes the molecular structure of foods. One of the changes is the suppression of amino acid hydrolysis. Another is that the amino acid L-proline is converted to its d-isomer, which is known to be toxic to the nervous system and poisonous to the kidneys.

One short-term study involving microwaved foods demonstrated that pathological changes occurred in test subjects following the consumption of microwaved foods. Test subjects scored an increase in leukocytes, an indication of serious stress in the body. There was a decrease in lymphocyte count greater than the decrease typically associated with food poisoning. Total cholesterol levels increased, and blood iron was reduced.

Samples of cow's milk tested after exposure to microwaves showed several significant changes in quality, including increases in acidity and sedimentation, a change in the structure of fat molecules, a reduction of folic acid content, and an increase in non-protein nitrogen.

In all our efforts to stay healthy, we seem to forget that disease always results when we violate the laws of Nature, whether that means chemical agriculture, genetic engineering, or microwaving our foods. And only a realignment with these laws will restore us to health.

As Cayce reading 759-13 says: "Nature is much better YET than science!"

"The FDA has placed the interest of a handful of biotechnology companies ahead of their responsibility to protect public health. By failing to require testing and labeling of genetically engineered foods, the agency has made consumers unknowing guinea pigs for potentially harmful, unregulated food substances."

Politics And Protests Swirl Around “America’s Hitler”

Editor’s note: It is clear from the tug-of-war going on over an invasion of Iraq, that the Elite World Controllers are split over the wisdom of such an event. One faction, controlling the Bush-Blair-Israel puppetry, are pushing for war at any cost. The other faction, working through Russia and most of the rest of the national governments, is opposed to such a move.

This “war within a war” is steadily tearing apart both sides and, in the process, revealing just how fragile and vulnerable is such blackmail-powered, house-of-cards politics. The issues that Sherman discusses below point out this vulnerability very well for those with an eye for how seemingly small events actually figure in the Big Picture like an Achilles’ heel.

Events on the world stage are moving faster and faster. Notice, these days, how many of those events suggest it is only a short amount of time before the prophecy is fulfilled that says: “The serpent will eat itself.” As this time of the Great Awakening continues to unfold and intensify on planet Earth, along with that process is the Great Cleansing—righting the wrongs—which is really what Sherman’s revelations are offered to help accomplish.

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 27 U.S. Civil/Military Insurrection? (2/16/03)

Because of a confluence of events, domestic and overseas, there is a growing possibility that the UNITED States of America will come apart.

For one thing, the British have long had an interest in dividing up this continent into weak, quarreling sections. The British, for example, in part fomented the American Civil War, also called the War Between The States, in an attempt to stop the growing industrial and financial power of the U.S., and in pursuit of the London Government’s vow to restore this continent to being mere puppet colonies of the British Monarchy, and we as subjects of the crown, not citizens of a Republic.

Details that tend to point in this direction are the following:

1. Through highly concealed, super-secret sources within the Bush White House, CBS News has learned that the current occupant and resident, George W. Bush, is being pressured, if not actually ordered, to possibly postpone the planned pre-emptive attack on Iraq. Some background is necessary to understand this:

In prior exclusive stories, we have long since pointed out that, in 1988-89, the covert media subsidy from the American CIA was removed from CBS News and switched, instead, to ABC News. The result is that CBS had to close some of their overseas bureaus, used principally not for news-gathering, but to compile intelligence and as spy centers where journalist/intelligence agents could hang their hats. ABC News took up that role thereafter.

More currently, the American CIA media subsidy has been taken back from ABC News and restored to CBS News. Furthermore, seldom is mentioned that CBS has a division creating and testing military game strategies, such as how to control domestic or foreign insurgencies through created terror squads, even death squads. Sharpened into a workable arrangement by CBS’s late William Paley, the counter-insurgent teams were active in controlling the Civil Rights and Anti-Vietnam War movements, through paid CIA/FBI agent provocateurs whose purpose was to discredit such possible grassroots uprisings.

(In 1972, when I butted into a live TV program in Chicago to identify CIA-funded provocateur Rennie Davis, I was falsely arrested. I beat the attempt to keep me in jail by subpoenaing the Chicago Station Chief of the American CIA, a person and title not supposed to exist domestically under the CIA Charter. I could fill an entire series with our run-ins, over three decades, by way of identifying CIA provocateurs and CIA-controlled media types.)

2. There is a growing number of Admirals and Generals who secretly and quietly oppose the faction of the Aristocracy that installed George W. Bush in the White House using a military-style, five-person, junta-like majority of five judges on the U.S. Supreme Court.

Knowledgeable sources contend that this opposing faction has, in effect, put George W. Bush and the one actually supervising the White House, namely Daddy Bush, under what some would call “house arrest”, or some restraint similar to the same. No, it may not be either publicized or dramatic, and may not be played out like a scenario from the fiction book and movie Seven Days In May.

Called in slang military terms as “flag officers” (those who have a flag flying on the fenders of their staff cars), these high-command officers previously had vowed to arrest their Commander-in-Chief, Bill Clinton, for treason, as they are authorized under the Uniform Military Code. If he were to arrest them for mutiny, they were prepared, if they were not summarily assassinated, to defend themselves with highly well-documented details of his treason. Such as: Clinton giving to the head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, Wang Jun, who from time to time met and ate with Clinton in the White House, U.S. industrial, financial, and yes, MILITARY secrets.

The tragic joke on the American populace was that Kenneth W. Starr, for four years supposedly as “Independent Counsel”, was running after Bill and Hillary, supposedly to eventually prosecute them. Starr spent most of his time as a PRIVATE attorney. His private law client? Why, none other than Wang Jun. Further, Starr was the UNREGISTERED foreign lobbyist for the Red Chinese Government in Beijing. Thus, the Clinton Justice Department was in a position to jail Starr quicker than Starr could think of criminally prosecuting that President and his First Lady.

Efforts by the 24 Generals and Admirals—as we have in earlier stories discussed—were, in part, blunted, when ten of them were assassinated, including General David McCloud, head of the Alaska Military District, and Admiral Jeremy Boorda, Chief of Naval Operations, the highest-ranking naval officer in uniform.

Now, however, such similarly inclined flag officers number far more than the original twenty four and have targeted, and are targeting, George W. Bush, for treason, committed pursuant to blackmail, with and for the Red Chinese Secret Police. (See earlier parts of this series.)

3. Troika is a Russian term for a wagon pulled by three horses. Some time ago I posted a story about a possible troika that may run the government. Certainly it is no great secret that we common Americans are going to be faced with tremendous possible upheavals resulting from an oncoming financial meltdown as well as the plans for Iraq.

Many ordinary Americans may be forced into a point of view that we must, by way of dealing with the growing emergency, temporarily set aside the organic law, the bedrock of our Republic, namely the U.S. Constitution and the Bill Of Rights that restrains the Central Government.

We may suddenly find out that the faction of the Aristocracy that opposes George W. Bush and Daddy Bush, has decided to run this country through a troika, a panel of Emergency Administrators, not provided for by statute or organic law.

Some savvy sorts understand that the one who actually won the popular presidential vote in 2000—who had the election (as to the Electoral College) stolen through high bribery and coercion involving fellow Democrats in Florida, and Jeb Bush, and the five-person majority of the high court in Washington—namely Albert Gore Jr., may NOT have actually completely departed the stage of politics. Gore may re-emerge as one of the Emergency Administrators to deal with the possibility that the UNITED States of America is becoming, has become, DISUNITED through financial and international policy blundering.

4. As hard as it may be to understand for poorly informed and naive sorts, there are parts of the United States, like in the 1860s, that reserve the right to secede from the Union. California is such an example, beset with a huge unmanageable deficit, having sent to Washington their federal tax money, and getting in return insufficient aid in dealing with the open-borders flood of non-citizens burdening the hospitals, schools, and facilities of California.

Who openly discusses that Texas entered the Union with a provision, reserving to itself the right of its State Legislature, to divide up the huge state into five separate states entitled to TEN U.S. Senators. The Texas State Assembly, from time to time, has to roll-over that provision.

5. If the Bush White House plan to topple Daddy Bush's former PRIVATE business partner, Saddam Hussein, and seize the Iraq oil fields, does not work well—will George W. Bush be able to withstand the reversal? Will he go to pieces, psychologically? Answers to that may be found in earlier parts of this series. (As to Daddy Bush and Saddam Hussein as private business partners, see our research item “The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh”.)

6. Another problem facing George W. Bush is the superior quality counterfeit U.S. paper currency (actually hot-air Federal Reserve notes). This bogeyman, capable of toppling the U.S. Central Government, is returning to the U.S. As mentioned by us [see Fake Money's Role In Swindle Politics in the February 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM], there is a secret lawsuit criminally and civilly implicating Daddy Bush, George W. Bush, the U.S. Treasury, and others, for having failed to pay the team of master counterfeiters, called “master cutters”, who are suing Bush, etc. A federal judge in Virginia is seeking to consider the blockbuster case in secret.

Somehow, a group consisting of Albert Gore Jr. and others have come up with a rather complete list of where the superior-quality counterfeit U.S. paper money is and who all is seeking to dump it back on the U.S. via transit point Canada. The dumpers include Moscow strongman Putin, as well as Iraqi strongman Saddam Hussein.

Furthermore, George W. Bush, Daddy Bush, and their apologists and cohorts in the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press, are seeking to dirty up, for example, France—calling the French traitors and cowards. Have we common Americans forgotten the role of the French in the formation of this nation? The French can scandalize, if they wish, Daddy Bush and Bush Jr. into oblivion. Such as the cover-up, started with Bush crony Bill Clinton, as to the missiles that blew up TWA Flight 800 in 1996.

(Counter-terrorist experts, who appeared on our TV show, off-camera, told us how the Central Government is well aware that a submarine, bought by Iran from the former Soviets, and operated by a Russian mercenary crew, most likely fired the missiles taking down Flight 800. Among the dead were 60 French nationals, including 8 members of the French CIA; their team leader refused to get on board and took a later flight.)

The French, further, are in a position to destroy Daddy Bush in that they have proof, beyond question, of his role in the political assassination of President Kennedy. Furthermore, they have a secret video showing Daddy Bush in a Paris suburb, in October 1980, bribing top Iranian officials to keep the 52 U.S. Teheran Embassy hostages captive until the Reagan-Bush ticket “licked” Jimmy Carter, to show him as a wimp, and Reagan-Bush were inaugurated in January 1981. Plainly, the French have the “smoking gun” of multiple instances of treason and high crimes by the Bush Crime Family.

So, will the U.S. end up in a mess wherein a panel of Emergency Administrators run the country because George W. Bush is either unable to govern, is actually but secretly under “house arrest”, or similar extra-ordinary situations?

7. To deal with a possible U.S. civil-military revolt or insurrection, there is housed and resident within the United States, some 75,000 foreign troops trained in urban counter-insurgency. Included are German troops in New Mexico, Russian troops in Louisiana, and, reportedly, a large contingent of Red Chinese troops such as below the Rio Grande border line. They are skilled, having been trained, for example, how to kick-in doors and seize Americans in their homes—ordinary folks who believe in the Second Amendment right to bear arms. EMERGING VIRUSES - AIDS & EBOLA

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted Hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein.

This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses and experimented with antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

Nostradamus: Predictions Of World War III

Code: NOST (1.0 lb.)

After the 9/11/01 disaster at the World Trade Center, there is a renewed interest in what the great seer Nostradamus had to say. This book is a serious study of his predictions, based upon the author's research into the original manuscripts. His work details the struggle that is going on in the Middle East and the ongoing conflict between the Christian world and the Islamic world. Jack Manuelian has combed through the prophecies of more modern seers, pointing out how they may agree with what Nostradamus had to say. He offers hope for mankind, but admits that it is troubled times we live in. What will be the outcome? Read the book and decide for yourself.

heavily promotes gun control, but tells us nothing about these foreign troops who have no great love or understanding of the U.S. Constitution and Bill Of Rights. Most of them do NOT speak English and would not understand the protests of their domestic American victims.

Cynics have suggested this series be re-titled "America's Hitler".

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 28 The Bush-Blair Bribery Affair (2/20/03)

What turned out to be a messy situation, all started, at least in part, to unravel on January 16, 2003. Two events happened on that day, one later widely reported, the other seldom mentioned.

The space shuttle "Columbia" took off on that day, later crashing on February 1, 2003. It is dealt with elsewhere in this series. On the same day in January, what some prefer to call jointly the American CIA/Bush Crime Family, conducted a "black bag" job. They did a break-in and entry into the residence of Alan Greenspan, Commissar of the Federal Reserve, America's highly secretive PRIVATE central bank.

What were they looking for? Among other things, they sought to retrieve, and keep from ever surfacing, a series of Federal Reserve wire transfer records showing certain transactions done under the secret authorization code of Greenspan.

The dealings were several months previously. They show that George Herbert Walker Bush used the Carlyle Group to forward some $16 BILLION to British prime minister Tony Blair. Daddy Bush has been a senior paid consultant with Carlyle to, among others, the Bin Laden Group, the Saudi Family dominating several industries in Saudi and the Middle East, including construction. They are NOT actually on the outs with family member Osama, who they finance, also with members of the Saudi Royal Family, through a major bank in Saudi, and banks and financial entities worldwide, including the Dutch money laundry, Algemene Bank Nederland, now ABN-AMRO.

Here is the circuitous route the funds took:

1. The existence of the transactions, by themselves, sufficiently prove the prior planning jointly of White House occupant and resident George W. Bush financially bending Tony Blair. The upshot of it all was to have Blair join with Dubya (said quickly, Texas style) to seize eventually the Iraqi oilfields, for two purposes.

First, to use the oil treasure as collateral to underwrite the huge U.S. deficit, soon to be out-of-control. Thus laying the way for Dubya to push a huge tax-cut for the one or two percent of Americans, the wealthiest in the U.S.

Second, to seek to prop up the Bank of England, caught up on the wrong side of speculations in the Kuwaiti dinar, a currency pegged to the so-called "U.S. dollar", actually hot-air Federal Reserve Notes. And further, to seek to bail out the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the Chicago Board Options Exchange, and LIFFE, the International Financial Futures and Options Exchange in London.

To understand the route of the bribe to Blair, some background is necessary:

2. Starting in the late 1980s and up to 1991, the highly mysterious espionage money laundry, BCCI (Bank of Credit and Commerce International), was later implicated in a scheme to bribe more than 25% of both houses of Congress—more than 28 U.S. Senators and more than 108 Congressmen.

The purpose of the scheme was to corruptly influence—by bribes or phantom transactions used as blackmail—members of Congress who were chosen to help promote the interests of BCCI in opening numerous branches in the U.S. The lawmakers were invited to give speeches in Chicago, seldom reported in the press. While in the Windy City, they were paid their “honorarium” (lecture fee) and told they were getting, as a bonus, an account with the exchanges there—the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade, and the Chicago Board Options Exchange.

Later, some Congressmen were told their Chicago accounts had a loss, but through straddles (a technical device using losses on one side of the fence, and gains on the other) they had a huge gain in London. Some Congressmen directly or through trusted aides picked up the “bonus” in London, while being secretly videotaped. Other Congressmen did not do so, but through phantom records, were shown, nevertheless to have “picked up” the pay-offs—in other words, blackmail.

LIFFE was instrumental in all this. Why? Because they operate electronically only, and retain no paper records—hence the difficulty for regulatory authorities and tax collectors to sniff out wrongdoing.

Upon the apparent downfall of BCCI in 1991 (they continue under the name of an alter ego and successor), the Bank of England, supervising the smash-up, for thirty days ONLY had the bribery list of Congress as a public record. As we told in a prior story, a major news group refused to make public the story, and so it ended up with us. My exclusive details appeared in October 1991, in the populist publication Spotlight, years later made defunct through a dirty court trick.

3. Instrumental in the Bush-Blair Affair was Carlyle Group, having on its Board of Directors a previous Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. The funds for Blair went through the Chicago markets, which have been heavily on the wrong side of Kuwaiti dinar gambling, called derivatives, a sort of book-keeping hocus-pocus. They, together with the Bank of England, are leaning over the edge of the cliff in TRILLIONS of dollars, enough to panic currency markets if completely divulged.

Why was the Kuwaiti dinar selected as part of the route to Blair? Because the currency, pegged to the dollar, is considered more independent. In technical data, that means it has almost no limit features up or down, allowing for “the sky is the limit” betting.

The $16 BILLION in Kuwaiti dinars was to benefit Tony Blair through, among other places, accounts for him, in financial entities in the United Arab Emirates, a favorite money laundry site.

4. What happened with the incriminating records in Greenspan’s residence on January 16, 2003? Well, the “black bag” team did not get them. Why? His wife Andrea Mitchell, senior Washington correspondent for NBC had, previous to that date, moved the records to another location.

The records are now in the possession of certain more independent-minded U.S. freelance journalists. A preliminary story about this, with just a few details, appeared exclusively in Canada on a popular website that’s linked to a Toronto radio program by Mojo Radio called The Cloak And Dagger Program—described as “a talk show for spies”.

A few hours after they posted the preliminary details, their www.cloakanddagger.ca website was smashed by the “shadow government”.

In a conference call, a leading website technician stated to us he had a terrible time getting their website back operating, and that he does not know of another event as troubling as the wreckage of the Cloak And Dagger website, where show host Lenny Bloom posts items on their news forum together with advance listings of upcoming guests.

I participated in putting the preliminary story together for Cloak And Dagger.

5. The Russians, with the help of Commissar Putin, formerly of the Soviet Secret Police (the KGB), have details of a phone conversation recently between Bush and Blair, about the preliminary story.

Blair told Bush: “You have to take down those websites that have the documents.”

Bush responded: “We have a Constitution”—a statement that Bush could make without really believing the same.

Blair: “Never mind all that; take down those websites! If they post the first of the fourteen wire transfer records, you may not find me still on Downing Street anymore.”

The inside joke is that an Israeli firm, reportedly fronting for Israeli intelligence and somehow beholden to Moscow, got the U.S. contract to rewire the communications system of the White House, the FBI, and the American CIA. The firm apparently, through satellites, is able to clandestinely send, in real time, the content of supposedly secure, secret communications of U.S. top officials.

6. And what is the possible fallout from the full disclosure of the Bush-Blair bribery? The possible wreckage of the Chicago markets, together with LIFFE, for openers. And a successful attack on the British pound sterling because of disclosures that the Bank of England, having gambled away their assets on Kuwaiti dinar derivatives, along with those exchanges, is insolvent and cannot any longer support the pound in world currency markets.

Further, Blair would be open to criminal bribery prosecution, together with charges against Daddy Bush and Dubya, of treason, international bribery, racketeering, and sundry other federal criminal offenses.

Please note that, starting three years ago, we posted on our website a series “Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush”. Shown there are the 25 worldwide secret money laundry accounts of the Bush Crime Family, the proceeds of hundreds of billions of dollars of extortion loot, and joint business deals with Saddam Hussein in the 1980s. Also shown is the Bush Crime Family JOINT ACCOUNT with the Queen of England, at her PRIVATE bank, Coutts Bank London.

On December 19, 2001, the London Financial Times reported that the Queen of England sent her top bank executive, Andrew Fisher, to be a top official of Carlyle Group. A Bush/British Monarchy account shows a transaction of ONE HUNDRED BILLION DOLLARS. The secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records, showing the secret authorization code of Alan Greenspan, are part of our website series.

So, will the latest secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records be posted? Wait and see.

7. Furthermore, the Bush-Blair documents show that Tony Blair privately greatly profited from arranging shipments to North Korea to enhance their nuclear capability. In that regard, he privately benefited, as we mentioned in a previous part of this series, like Hillary Rodham Clinton, likewise implicated in privately profiting from shipments of nuclear items to North Korea.

As to both Blair and Hillary, the shipments were reportedly made through Royal Jordanian Airlines. (As to Hillary and North Korea, we showed that document about a year ago on our Chicago public-access cable-TV Program Broadsides.)

So, will the latest documents be posted?

More coming. Stay tuned. △

Vatican Assassins

Wounded In The house of My friends

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's ungodly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

—The Book Reader, America's most independent review of new titles, Fall/Winter 2001/2002

"Probably of all books which could be called 'conspiracy oriented', this is the grand-daddy. This is the Big One, I mean it...."

"It's one of those books that, even if you're a cynic and can come to terms with only half of it, it changes everything."

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach, Volumes I & II

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

More Quotes From Volume II

"Be not in fear of the changes that are upon you, for they are a very necessary part of the [planetary] transition. The Earth will heave to and fro, and many wondrous things will you experience, but lose not your sight upon the final goal. We will always be there with you, and we are but a call away."

— Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec

— Sanat Kumara ("Grandfather")

"The physical body is 'merely' a conduit for the interaction into and the interfacing with the physical experience. I say 'merely' because that body is a most exquisite creation indeed and poorly understood by your current level of so-called medical science."

— Master Hilarion

"Be at peace, you who acknowledge and take within these messages of Higher Guidance, for you are being given that which you will need, in the way of instruction, to meet and surmount these challenges ahead."

— Aton, The One Light

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix' will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen."

— Back Cover, Vol. I

"Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you. (God!) You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose." — Esu "Jesus" Sananda (Vol. II)

"Comets are not dirty snowballs. Comets are a complex plasma (electrical) discharge of the solar capacitor caused by a rocky or asteroidal type body entering the region near our Sun. Some of the objects may be well on their way to developing into planets from previous visits to the solar system....

"'Action at a distance' is, by far, more common and will drastically affect Earth and its inhabitants, sometimes when the comet is nowhere near the Earth, by causing solar flaring, electrical discharges, and electrical alignments between planets, etc." — James M. McCanney, from his book Planet-X, Comets & Earth Changes.

Did you know that some really amazing things are going on in our Solar System these days?

Some spectacular events have been observable through satellite images posted at websites such as the Solar Heliospheric Observatory (SOHO). But other events—perhaps more telling about just how busy our local space environment REALLY is—have been actively censored from the public's attention. What are "they" hiding from us?

NEWEST OFFERINGS AT WISDOM BOOKS

RULE BY SECRECY:

The Hidden History That Connects
The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids
by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news.

And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

ALIEN AGENDA:

Investigating The Extraterrestrial
Presence Among Us

BY JIM MARRS

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. As his title indicates, the author has concluded that UFOs are piloted by extraterrestrials of various types and with diverse motives. However, rather than taking that conclusion for granted, Marrs guides his readers through 50 years of UFO history that includes some less-traveled byways, off-ramps, and dead ends. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic.

9/11: THE GREAT ILLUSION

End Game Of The Illuminati. Our Choice: Fear Or Love?

NEWEST BOOKLET BY
GEORGE HUMPHREY

[Excerpts from the author's Introduction:]
Though I knew in my heart from day one that the 9/11 WTC/Pentagon assault was a staged event, I told myself that I would not write another booklet. Plus, I had had one too many conversations with dear and educated friends who had gone absolutely ballistic when even the concept that anything other than the reported "news" could be behind this episode.

$3.50 (+$1.50 S/H)*

However, as I listen to the media and their 24/7 frenzy of hateful misinformation, I knew it was time to act. This booklet is not for everyone. But it is for those who love their country and have that rare quality called an open mind.

9/11: The Great Illusion is intentionally kept short so as many as possible will have access to this material. People must wake up to some cold hard realities: A small occult group—The Illuminati—have been organized for centuries, and have control of our economy, culture, and political organizations. These people have ZERO respect for our Republic and Bill Of Rights. They are behind a vast majority of the wars and revolutions, and are behind the events of September 11th.

This booklet is presenting evidence that goes against everything that the mainstream media and political structure would have people believe.

Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To Personal Growth

Here is Dan Millman's magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve "gateways" or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth. Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant's ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a "numerologist". Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience.

Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: "The Practice Of Enlightenment"—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

THE UNIVERSE IS KNOCKING AT OUR DOOR

It was ten years ago when friends showed me a video tape that spectacularly drove home the point of our front-page story this month, about the active Universe we live in.

You'd sure never know it from the heavily censored stuff that NASA tosses out to a trusting public (of mere taxpayers) starving for cool news about space.

The tape I viewed was a NASA signal feed—but BEFORE they sanitized it for public consumption. Wow. It reminded me of looking under a microscope at a drop of pond water with all the little critters flitting about in that busy microworld.

You might have heard recent testimonies of ones—especially some of Dr. Steven Greer's astonishing "Disclosure Project" under-oath interviewees—whose top-secret job it was to airbrush "anomalies" out of NASA images before their release to the public. Well, a corresponding sanitization happens for video, but the transmissions were not as secure many years ago as they are now, and "amateurs" with the right know-how and equipment could, with some luck, intercept the pre-censored video information.

Wow. There were all kinds of things moving around above the Earth. Some of them might have been meteorites and other natural stuff of the Solar System. But other things sure looked like sleek and agile alien craft going about their business, either monitoring various Earth activities or cruising on by to/from who knows where. It was like looking down from atop a highrise building at vehicles traveling to and fro on the busy streets below.

At one point something shot up like a missile out of a large mass of white fluffy clouds below, paused for a second or so, and then made a "left" turn and zoomed out into space. When, as a ground observer, you see a UFO shoot up into the clouds above you, this must be what it looks like from a topside view.

Even though it wasn't very high quality, there was something about that all-too-short uncensored video I watched that made the universe feel alive with life and purpose and Presence—like happens when you look, with the openly curious eyes of a child, at that drop of pond water through a microscope for the first time. It's a thrilling sight that, for me at least, paints a picture very different from the sterile coldness that seems to radiate from most of NASA's public photo offerings.

All of the above came flooding back into my mind again as I was reading and editing Rick Martin's front-page feature story for this issue, which includes an interview with pioneering astrophysicist extraordinaire Jim McCanney.

Regular readers of The SPECTRUM are used to discussions about us being in the time of the Great Awakening and Great Cleansing here on planet Earth, and that these major transformational processes are part of the sweeping effects being energized and accelerated by a shower of high-frequency etheric "light" that is bathing us, the planet, and the entire Solar System at this auspicious time.

But if such is really going on, you reason, then the entire Solar System ought to be showing at least SOME signs. And thanks to the intellectual integrity and acute observational sensitivities of truly gifted scientists like McCanney and a few others whose views

Rick shares with us in his article, we begin to recognize just how much the living celestial beings of our space neighborhood are indeed coming alive with change and likewise transforming just as we are. We're all in this together!

Meanwhile, the dogma long taught in NASA's religion of our Solar System and Universe is becoming as absurdly outdated as became the Church's curse on Copernicus and Galileo five hundred years ago for stating that the Earth and other planets revolved around the Sun, rather than that everything revolved around the Earth.

But the same world controllers who were (and still are, for that matter) behind the Church's desire to maintain a hold over the common people are the same world controllers who tell NASA what to do—for the very same reasons. So we really shouldn't be surprised by NASA's dogmatic posturing and secretive antics.

Today, though, some are finally getting smarter about spotting such fraud—and having the courage to stand up and say "Enough is enough!" Because, again, we ARE in the time of the Great Awakening and Great Cleansing. And nothing shall stand against the Big Broom that's sweeping clean layers of dust and opening windows to the Light of Truth.

Thanks to your constant notes of encouragement, prayers, and financial help, The SPECTRUM marches forward too. Nobody said housecleaning on this scale is fun, but the results are well worth the effort, don't you think?

Or as Mark Twain put it: "Soap and education are not as sudden as a massacre, but they are more deadly in the long run."

SOMETHING MONSTROUS THIS WAY COMES

From the www.YellowTimes.org website, 3/23/03: [quoting]

by Canadian commentator John Chuckman

(John Chuckman is former chief economist for a large Canadian oil company. He has many interests and is a lifelong student of history. He writes with a passionate desire for honesty, the rule of reason, and concern for human decency. He is a member of no political party and takes exception to what has been called America's "culture of complaint" with its habit of reducing every important issue to an unproductive argument between two simplistically defined groups. John regards it as a badge of honor to have left the United States as a poor young man from the South Side of Chicago when the country embarked on the pointless murder of something like three million Vietnamese in their own land because they happened to embrace the wrong economic loyalties. He lives in Canada, which he is fond of calling "the peaceable kingdom".)

I won't listen to, or read, the news of the war. The only news I want to hear is that the murder is over.

Murder? Yes, that word is carefully chosen.

I can easily imagine how the expression "shock and awe" was born. Remember, in America, marketing comes before anything. Everything from breast cancer treatment to Jesus is loudly marketed in this bizarre society. That's not even a slight exaggeration, although if you haven't lived there, you'll have to take my word for it.

They are busy marketing terror, insecurity, and xenophobia right now, and that makes your chances of visiting America to research questions of this kind not very good.

If you're a full-blooded American, marketing murder, even mass murder, is just like marketing anything else. You can't be squeamish about it. You need a good turn of phrase or slogan, an eye-catching logo, and perhaps some stirring theme music. You need what will convince jaded consumers that something new and exciting is about to appear on their television screens.

The need is greater than ever now that entertainment and information have been fully merged on American broadcasting—broadcasting, by the way, owned by a remarkably small number of people, all of whom just happen to share the same interest in keeping the Pentagon's furnaces stoked with four hundred billion dollars a year.

I imagine platoons of Pentagon consultants, each earning hundreds of dollars an hour, coming and going for months before the war with their expensive laptops in designer leather cases, making presentations of their marketing proposals, each hoping to land the big contract. Then one day someone stunned the crowd with a super presentation of just the right concept, "shock and awe", with plenty of special effects guaranteed to play well on television.

It can't be that none of the creased-pants innocents in the Pentagon ever heard of the Western Front in the First World War where truly horrifying bombardments, with guns that could shatter your eardrums if you were too close, sometimes went on for days before the troops jumped the tops of their trenches and charged the barbed wire of the other side across fields raked with heavy machine guns and cratered by shell holes where mustard gas lingered like a poison fog ready to blind and burn out the lungs of anyone unfortunate enough to stumble in.

Of course, these bombardments were aimed at soldiers, not at a city like Baghdad, but perhaps I quibble.

Americans don't fight that way anymore. Actually, since Vietnam—where they were sent running even after they managed to napalm a good portion of the nation's villages—Americans don't fight at all. There have been attempts to re-institute the practice here and there, as in Mogadishu, but the results weren't happy—a few dead soldiers and America turned and ran. Of course, it didn't have to be that way if they hadn't muddled a humanitarian mission with the urge to mow down every local who looked at them the wrong way. Maybe they just hadn't done enough focus groups and marketing surveys before that sour-smelling little mission.

Now, America simply commits mass murder with computer-controlled weapons from a safe distance and calls it fighting. When the explosions and screaming stop and the brave American lads set out on their mission of occupation from air-conditioned quarters (they don't do trenches anymore) in their air-conditioned armored cars, dressed in bullet-proof Kevlar suits and equipped with sun-tan lotion and freeze-dried linguini, there isn't a lot for them to do but avoid slipping and falling in the human gore splattered everywhere by missiles and high-tech bombs. They also must remember to don their bubble-boy suits and respirators in areas saturated with tons of vaporized depleted uranium.

There's very little risk to the "boyz"—all of whom, regardless of steroid-induced bovine bulk and savage-looking buzzed-off hair, are affectionately regarded as awkward young Ricky Nelsons (at least before his cocaine phase), who always say things like "sir" and "aw, heck".

I've written before about the approaching age of American high-tech Puritanism, but I didn't expect it to be upon us so completely quite so quickly, reminding one of the sudden onset of a new ice age. America is able to destroy anyone or anyplace it finds displeasing or just suspicious. This is Sharon's Israel occupying Palestine on a global scale.

No consultations with others are needed, or if Americans do briefly consult, it will be a marketing ploy taken in full confidence they are free to ignore everyone and push them aside, even when this happens to include, as it does in the case of Iraq, most of the world's people.

In hopes of gaining some outward show of respectability, this time America conducted a very unpleasant behind-the-scenes campaign of threats and bribery. Again, that is not an exaggeration; that is how they obtained that pathetic list of thirty countries not one in ten Americans has ever heard of, but, even then, most of these places are not joined in the killing, just signaling support in some diffuse way as a response to pressure from the world's economic pituitary giant.

When you really think about it, who else could join in the killing? Who else is equipped for long-distance computerized murder? But America always looks to others to occupy and police, relieving the "boyz" even of these tasks.

You might think that if there had been any true case for war, it would be obvious to more of the world's leaders. Why would you need all the browbeating and threats?

But the case was not obvious, because some very bright people in the U.N. Security Council, all in fact friends of the United States, thrashed it out and could not agree. Mostly, all they wanted was time and patience for inspections. But Mr. Bush, gifted intellect and learned scholar that he is, knew better than all of them, and besides, in the Texas he comes from, all that matters is that you have the biggest fists or are first out with your gun.

Maybe next time America will feel it can dispense with respectability. It really got very little for its effort. That's what America's frighteningly rat-like neocons are telling us with their talk about a damaged U.N. and Atlantic Alliance. They just neglect to mention that it is the U.S. that did the damage.

We all know what Lord Acton said about power and absolute power. His words remain perhaps truer than anything ever uttered about human behavior, and they should serve as a warning. But I fear they provide only consolation.

Just imagine a world where it has become possible to slaughter any number of people, virtually with impunity—a world where that kind of power is in the hands of a relatively small group of narrow, earnest, self-satisfied people possessing virtually limitless material resources and believing themselves somehow guided by God as no one else on the planet is privileged to be.

It's a dismaying picture of the future, but if you are watching or listening to the news about Iraq from the Pentagon's just-built, custom-designed, super-deluxe, press-conference studio, you're getting a first hard look at that very future.

monsters in this scenario. How can anyone believe anything that comes out of their mouths? If they would go so far as to lie about this, who knows the extent of their evil doings. Like I said, there are a lot of delusional idiots out there who need to wake up before it is too late. — Bren

The U.K. Prime Minister, Tony Blair, speaking from Camp David near Washington, claimed yesterday that two dead soldiers seen on Iraqi television had been executed. Today he was forced to admit that this was a lie because the outraged family, who had already been told the truth, made the real story public.

In Britain today, the notoriously inaccurate and pro-government tabloid, the Daily Mail, filled their entire front page with a bold headline proclaiming the false accusation that two Britons had been executed by Saddam Hussein. The problem with such sensationalist propaganda is that, if the truth ever does emerge, it receives less publicity than the lie, so most people are left with the impression that it was true.

The British government tried to manipulate the news of two tragic deaths for propaganda, and this is despicable. Blair's excuse was: "But it was to point up...our knowledge about the depravity, the brutality of that regime."

BBC News—"Regret' Over Blair Execution Comment", 28 March 2003 (http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/uk_politics/2896415.stm):

"A government minister has expressed regret over any hurt caused by Tony Blair's claim that two British soldiers were executed.

"The prime minister's comments were apparently at odds with what the British Army had told relatives of Sapper Luke Allsopp, 24, and Staff Sergeant Simon Cullingworth, 36, both from a bomb disposal unit of the Royal Engineers."

BBC News—"Two Dead British Soldiers Named", 28 March 2003 (http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/middle_east/2893757.stm):

"Later the prime minister's official spokesman acknowledged there was not absolute proof they were executed..."

Daily Mirror—"Our Luke Was Not Executed", front page, 28 March 2003 (www.mirror.co.uk/news/allnews/page.cfm?objectid=12783733&method=full&siteid=50143):

"The heartbroken sister of ambushed soldier Luke Allsopp insisted last night: 'My brother was not executed.' Nina Allsopp hit out at 'lies' surrounding his death. Grieving Nina, who is 29 today, said: 'We have been told by the Army that Luke died in action.' "

The above should come as no surprise to any conscientious reader of The SPECTRUM. After all, that's why there's a need for a publication such as this—because outlets for Truth are few and far between. As usual, notice that it was only after they were caught in the lie that they admitted to the lie. This is standard practice, so those who too gullibly believe what their so-called leaders tell them, ought to reconsider such a blind practice of "patriotism"—before it's too late.

And while we're on the subject of our government's chronic lying, consider the following that had to come by way of Irish radio:

"U.S. WILL LOSE IRAQ WAR" SAYS SCOTT RITTER

From the www.GuluFuture.com website, 3/25/03: [quoting]

Thorn in the side of the American Administration, and former UN weapons inspector, Scott Ritter, has warned that America will lose the Iraq war and the American military "will leave Iraq with its tail between its legs".

In an interview with Irish radio, Mr. Ritter said that the conflict would become an "absolute quagmire", and the U.S./U.K. advance would stall outside Baghdad and fail to capture the city.

"We find ourselves...facing a nation of 23 million, with armed elements numbering around 7 million—who are concentrated at urban areas. We will not win this fight. America will lose this war" said Mr. Ritter.

According to Mr. Ritter, too many in the Pentagon have listened to: "the blithering of Iraqi expatriates" whose agenda coincides with neo-conservatives in the White House.

"We're in Iraq—carrying out the right-wing neo-conservative motives of a handful of people. The Richard Perles, Paul Wolfowitzs, the Dick Cheney's. And we've allowed them to hijack our foreign policy" he told Irish broadcaster Vincent Browne on the RTE1 radio Tonight Show.

He warned that Shia Muslims in the South were not fighting because of intimidation by the Iraqi government, but because of nationalistic and religious reasons.

"They're doing it because the American Crusader Infidel has invaded and violated Holy Iraq, and they will resist us, and they will resist us strongly" said Mr. Ritter. "We are not liberating Iraq; we are destroying Iraq" he added later in the interview.

Scott Ritter is a former U.N. weapons inspector and author of the book Endgame. Ritter, a ballistic missile technology expert, worked in military intelligence during his 12-year career in the U.S. armed forces. In 1998, Ritter resigned from the U.N. Special Commission team to protest Clinton Administration policies that he said subverted the weapons inspection process.

If you remember back to Al Martin's column in last month's SPECTRUM, Al talked about the frame-up of Scott Ritter because he told The Truth—and thereby exposed so many lies of our government. Among other matters, Al said: "After all, it was Ritter who publicly revealed the head of the old UN inspection team, David Kaye, was actually a CIA agent masquerading as a UN inspector." This alone was a bomb of sorts which agreed with Iraq's accusations and flew in the face of Washington's bald-faced lies about that matter.

And it is this vast minefield of lies which high-visibility television reporters Geraldo Rivera and Peter Arnett recently stumbled through unsuccessfully. Geraldo was punished for his "slips" with a slap on the wrist and new duties away from observing the front-line action. Peter Arnett's case was more serious and curious; he was fired after first being vigorously defended by his former NBC employer and fellow journalists, and then quickly hired by the London Daily Mirror to continue to tell The Truth.

Here are two stories on that matter:

HOME OF THE FREE: ARNETT JOINS DAILY MIRROR

From the www.mirror.co.uk website, for 4/1/03: [quoting]

The reporter sacked by American TV for telling the truth about the war is joining the Daily Mirror.

Veteran newsman Peter Arnett was axed by NBC yesterday accused of being a Saddam stooge. He told state-run Iraqi TV the conflict was not going [according] to plan because of fierce resistance and said his Baghdad reports "help those who oppose war".

He joins the Mirror on the day it was revealed that 8,700 bombs have rained down on Iraq in 12 days, including 3,000 missiles over the weekend.

OUTSPOKEN: Live from Baghdad

After his sacking, Pulitzer Prize winner Arnett said: "I report the truth of what is happening here in Baghdad and will not apologise for it. I have always admired your newspaper and am proud to be working for it."

The New Zealand-born journalist was vilified across the U.S. for an interview in which he said: "The first war plan has failed because of Iraqi resistance. Now they are trying to write another war plan. Clearly, the war planners misjudged the determination of the Iraqi forces. In my TV commentaries I'd tell the Americans about the Iraqi forces and their willingness to fight.

"President Bush says he is concerned about the Iraqi people. But if Iraqi people are dying in numbers, then American policy will be challenged very strongly."

Arnett, 68, added that there was growing opposition about the conduct of the war.

He said: "Our reports about civilian casualties here, about the resistance of the Iraqi forces, are going back to the U.S. It helps those who oppose the war when you challenge the policy."

On Sunday [3/30/03], NBC praised the reporter for risking his life to deliver news from Baghdad.

The station said of the Iraqi TV interview: "He answered their questions out of professional courtesy. He saw it as purely analysis."

But the furious White House said Arnett spoke from "a point of complete ignorance".

The day after backing him, NBC cut him loose.

Yesterday [3/31/03] Arnett said on NBC: "I want to apologise to the American people. It was clearly a misjudgment talking to Iraqi TV."

"I'm not anti-war. I said what we all know about this war. But I've created a firestorm and for that I'm sorry."

Asked about his future, he joked: "There's a small island in the South Pacific I'll try to swim to. I'll leave."

Arnett was one of the few TV journalists in Baghdad. He said: "The Iraqis let me stay because they see me as a fellow warrior. They know I might not agree with them. But I've got their respect."

The reporter, the first

Western journalist to interview Osama bin Laden and the last to interview Saddam Hussein, was accused of peddling pro-Iraqi propaganda while covering the 1991 Gulf War.

But he gained much of his prominence for reporting the last conflict with Iraq for CNN.

His Pulitzer Prize came for reporting in Vietnam in 1966 for the Associated Press.

And then this, in Peter's own words:

"THIS WAR IS NOT WORKING"

From the www.mirror.co.uk website, for 4/1/03: [quoting]

by Peter Arnett

I am still in shock and awe at being fired. There is enormous sensitivity within the U.S. Government to reports coming out from Baghdad.

They don't want credible news organizations reporting from here because it presents them with enormous problems.

I reported on the original bombing for NBC and we were half a mile away from those massive explosions. Now I am really shocked that I am no longer reporting this story for the U.S. and awed by the fact that it actually happened.

That overnight my successful NBC reporting career was turned to ashes. And why? [How about the cartoon below?!]

YOU WRITE WHAT YOU'RE TOLD!

THANKS, CORPORATE NEWS!

We Couldn't Control The People Without You

A MESSAGE FROM THE MINISTRY OF HOMELAND SECURITY

"Tariq Aziz told me the U.S. will have to brainwash 25 million Iraqis, because these people think exactly the same as Saddam."

Because I stated the obvious to Iraqi television—that the U.S. war timetable has fallen by the wayside.

I have made those comments to television stations around the world and now I'm making them again in the Daily Mirror.

I'm not angry. I'm not crying. But I'm also awed by this media phenomenon.

The right-wing media and politicians are looking for any opportunity to be critical of the reporters who are here, whatever their nationality. I made the misjudgment which gave them the opportunity to do so.

I gave an impromptu interview to Iraqi television feeling that after four months of interviewing hundreds of them it was only professional courtesy to give them a few comments.

That was my Waterloo—bang!

I have not yet decided what to do, whether to pack my bags and leave Baghdad or stay on.

I'll decide what to do today; right now I'm chewing on what has happened to me.

"American Marines at our checkpoints are suspicious of every man, woman, and child because of the suicide bomb."

But whatever happens I will never stop reporting on the truth of this war, whether I am in Baghdad or somewhere else in the Middle East—or even back in Washington.

I was here in 1991 and the bombing is very similar to that conflict, but the reality is very different.

The U.S. and British want to come here, take over the city, upturn the government, and take us through to a new era. The troops are in the country and fighting there way up here. It creates a very different atmosphere.

The Ba'ath party, currently led by Saddam Hussein, has been in power for 34 years. Tariq Aziz told me the US will have to brainwash 25 million Iraqis because these people think exactly the same as Saddam does.

Maybe he is wrong, maybe not.

For months, Iraqis have said officially and privately: "We will fight the Americans, we will use guerrilla tactics, we will surprise them."

But the Iraqi opposition has said: "This will be a pushover; everyone wants to rebel against Saddam."

Now the reality is being played out on the battlefield.

We have to watch the reality now, and some Iraqis are fighting and the government does seem very determined. For me to see that, and to be criticized for saying the obvious, is unfair.

"As the battle for Baghdad grows, so the potential for civilian casualties grows. This is the spectre rising for the coalition as this war continues."

But it has made me a target for my critics in the States who accuse me of giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

I don't want to give aid and comfort to the enemy. I just want to be able to tell the truth.

I came to Baghdad with my crew because the Iraqi side needs to be heard too.

It is clear the original timetable that America would be in Baghdad by the end of March has fallen by the wayside.

There is clearly debate in the U.S. about this, reinforcements are being sent in and there are delays.

This doesn't mean it is going badly. Every casualty is a loss, but they have been in limited numbers so far.

Every night and every day I hear the B-52s and the missiles hammering the defences of Baghdad.

Just like in Afghanistan and Vietnam, the U.S. is bringing enormous firepower to bear which it believes will grind the Iraqis down. I have seen it before and it has been enormously effective. The U.S. optimism is justified.

On the other hand, at what cost to civilians?

During the Tet Offensive in Vietnam, I entered a U.S.-held town which had been totally destroyed.

The Viet Cong had taken over and were threatening the commander's building, so he called down an artillery strike which killed many of his own men.

The Major with us asked: "How could this happen?" A soldier replied: "Sir, we had to destroy the town to save it."

The Bush and Blair Administration does not want that label stuck on this war; it is a liberation for them. But the problem is, U.S. Marines at checkpoints are suspicious of every man, woman, and child because of the suicide bomb.

Already there is suspicion growing.

And in the south, there have not been popular rebellions and uprisings. As the battle for Baghdad grows, the potential for civilian casualties grows.

"Optimists in the Pentagon talk about an internal coup. But who would have believed Umm Qasr would hold out for six days?"

This is the spectre rising as this war continues. The U.S. and Britain have to figure this out.

I don't think you can tell how it will end, there are many scenarios. A siege of Baghdad, a special operations strike on Saddam. Optimists in the Pentagon talk about an internal coup.

Who would have believed Umm Qasr would hold out for six days or U.S. Marines directing traffic would be killed by a suicide bomber? This is more like the West Bank and Gaza, and it could become like that in some areas.

The U.S. and Britain must avoid that scenario.

Forces come in, communities resist, then suicide bombing and resistance from guerrillas.

Except the Iraqis will be putting up a stiffer fight than the Palestinians because they are better armed.

We know the world, including many Americans, is ambivalent about this war, and I think it is essential to be here.

I'm not here to be a superstar. I have been there in 1991 and could never be bigger than that.

Some reporters make judgements but that is not my style. I present both sides and report what I see with my own eyes.

I don't blame NBC for their decision because they came under great commercial pressure from the outside.

And I certainly don't believe the White House was responsible for my sacking.

But I want to tell the story as best as I can, which makes it so disappointing to be fired. [end quoting]

And if you believe that last part about the White House (and Whitehall) not being responsible for Arnett's firing, then there's always that bridge for sale on the Moon. That statement was an unfortunate soul-selling move in an otherwise informative commentary—unless he means to delicately imply the elite world controllers ABOVE the White House puppets were responsible for the decision to fire him.

And while we're talking about the subject, how about the following item, perhaps suggesting, once again, that factions of the elite world controllers are in a tug-of-war:

THE EURO AND THE WAR ON IRAQ

From the ATrueWord.com website, for 3/29/03: [quoting]
by Amir Butler

(Amir Butler is executive director of the Australian Muslim Public Affairs Committee, AMPAC, and writes for ATrueWord.com. He can be contacted at the abutler@atrueword.com email address.)

As Mark Twain once noted, prophecy is always difficult, particularly with regard to the future. However, it is a safe bet that, as soon as Saddam is toppled, one of the first tasks of the America-backed regime will be to restore the U.S. dollar as the nation's oil currency.

In November 2000, Iraq began selling its oil for euros, moving away from the post-World War II standard of the U.S. dollar as the currency of international trade.

Whilst seen by many at the time as a bizarre act of political defiance, it has proved beneficial for Iraq, with the euro gaining almost 25% against the dollar during 2001. It now costs around US$1.05 to buy one euro.

Iraq's move towards the euro is indicative of a growing trend. Iran has already converted the majority of its central bank reserve funds to the euro, and has hinted at adopting the euro for all oil sales. On December 7, 2002, the third member of the "axis of evil", North Korea, officially dropped the dollar and began using euros for trade. Venezuela, not a member of the axis of evil yet, but a large oil producer nonetheless, is also considering a switch to the euro.

More importantly, at its April 14, 2002 meeting in Spain, OPEC expressed an interest in leaving the dollar in favor of the euro. If OPEC were to switch to the euro as the standard for oil transactions, it would have serious ramifications for the U.S. economy.

Oil-consuming economies would have to flush the dollars out of their central bank holdings and convert them to euros. Some economists estimate that with the market flooded, the U.S. dollar could drop up to 40% in value.

As the currency falls, there would be a monetary evacuation by foreign investors abandoning the U.S. stock markets and dollar-denominated assets. Imported products would cost Americans a lot more, and the trade deficit would be magnified.

It is foreign demand for the U.S. dollar that funds the U.S. federal budget deficits. Foreign investors flush with dollars typically look to U.S. Treasury securities as a means of secure investment. With a large reduction in such investment, the country could potentially go into default. Things could turn very bad, very quickly.

In May 2004, an additional 10 member nations will join the European Union. At that point, the EU will represent an oil consumer 33% larger than the United States. In order to mitigate currency risks, the Europeans will increasingly pressure OPEC to trade in euros, and with the EU at that stage buying over half of OPEC oil production, such a change seems likely. This is a scenario that America cannot afford to see eventuate.

The U.S. will go to any length to fend off an attempt by OPEC to dump greenbacks as its reserve currency.

Attacking Iraq and installing a client regime in Baghdad may have a preventative effect.

It will certainly ensure that Iraq returns to using dollars and provide a violent example to any other nation in the region contemplating a migration to the euro.

An American-backed junta in Iraq would also enable the U.S. to smash OPEC's hold over oil prices. The U.S. or its client regime could increase Iraqi oil production to levels well beyond OPEC quotas, driving prices down worldwide and weakening the economies of the oil producing nations, thus lessening their likelihood of abandoning the dollar. It would have the short-term effect of reducing the profits of domestic oil companies, but the long term effect of securing America's economic hegemony.

The frequently-offered canard of the Left that this war is being fought to secure oil revenues for American oil companies may have some truth to it. However, a more plausible explanation may be that the Bush Administration is waging war to protect the dollar and smash the OPEC hold over international oil prices.

It's a war whose purpose is bigger than Halliburton or Exxon: it's a war being fought to maintain America's position in the world.

Attending the 1992 Earth Summit in Rio, George Bush Senior told the world that: "The American way of life is not negotiable." As cruise missiles rain on Iraq, we are learning just how "non-negotiable" that way of life really is.

"We must make clear to the Germans that the wrong for which their fallen leaders are on trial is not that they lost the war, but that they started it. And we must not allow ourselves to be drawn into a trial of the causes of the war, for our position is that no grievances or policies will justify resort to aggressive war. It is utterly renounced and condemned as an instrument of policy."

— U.S. Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, U.S. representative to the International Conference on Military Trials, August 12, 1945.

Will Bush be impeached?

Will he be called a war criminal?

These are not hyperbolic questions. Mr. Bush has permitted a small cadre of neoconservatives to isolate him from world opinion, putting him at odds with the United Nations and America's allies.

What better illustrates Mr. Bush's isolation than the fact that he delivered his March 16 ultimatum to the U.N. concerning Iraq from an air base in the Azores, where there was no prospect for massive demonstrations against his policy. Standing with Mr. Bush against the world were Britain and Spain.

The U.S., once a guarantor of peace, is now perceived in the rest of the world as an aggressor. Its victim is a small Muslim nation unable to defend its own air space, much less to project power beyond its borders.

If Iraqis attempt to resist invasion, they will be slaughtered. On the eve of Mr. Bush's ultimatum, it came to light that a key piece of evidence used by the Bush Administration to link Iraq to a nuclear weapons program is a forgery. Sen. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Intelligence Committee, has asked the FBI to investigate the origin of the forged documents that the Bush Administration used to make its case that Saddam Hussein possesses weapons of mass destruction.

Secretary of State Colin Powell denies that the Bush Administration created the phony documents. "It came from other sources" Mr. Powell told Congress, but he could not identify the source.

As George Santayana said: "Those who do not remember the past are condemned to relive it." The Administration's use of forged evidence opens Mr. Bush to unflattering comparisons that his enemies will not hesitate to make. They will point out that it was Adolph Hitler's strategy to fabricate evidence in order to justify his invasion of a helpless country. He used S.S. troops dressed in Polish uniforms to fake an attack on the German radio station at Gleiwitz on August 31, 1939. Following the faked attack, Hitler announced: "This night, for the first time, Polish regular soldiers fired on our own territory." As German troops poured into Poland, Hitler declared: "The Polish state has refused the peaceful settlement of relations which I desired, and has appealed to arms." The German High Command called the German invasion of Poland a "counterattack".

Thanks to his neoconservative cadre, outside the U.S. Mr. Bush is now a disliked and distrusted politician. Mr. Bush's enemies will exploit parallels to "naked aggression". After many decades of U.S.

leadership in building an "international order", Mr. Bush's enemies will hold him accountable for his defiance of this order.

As much as those of us who prefer national sovereignty to world government lament the fact, the many decades of appealing to "world opinion" and enlisting it in behalf of our foreign policies has resulted in considerable authority being poured into that nebulous concept. In setting Mr. Bush in opposition to this American creation, neoconservatives have exposed him to serious charges. Democrats, who intended to use allegations about the 2000 Florida vote to destroy Mr. Bush's presidency as illegitimate, now have more deadly ammunition.

Mr. Rockefeller will not be the only one to ask if the forged nuclear documents are part of a Bush Administration campaign to deceive the public. Polls show that 50% of Americans believe it was Iraqis who hijacked the airplanes and crashed them into the World Trade Towers and Pentagon. Inattention or media incompetence are the likely explanations for this extraordinary misinformation, but some will now blame deception.

Others are already thinking the forged documents are part of a neoconservative campaign to deceive President Bush and win his support for their Middle Eastern policy.

Many perceive Mr. Bush as following a reckless path, one that politicians normally try to avoid at all costs. If Iraq resists and devastating new explosives, which our military has been testing at Eglin Air Force Base in Florida, are dropped on Baghdad, there will be massive civilian deaths and charges of war crimes fueled by anger at American arrogance.

Mr. Bush and his advisers have forgotten that the power of an American president is temporary and relative. The U.S. is supposed to be the world's leader. For the Bush Administration to pursue a policy that sets the U.S. government at odds with the world is to invite comparisons with recklessness that we have not seen in international politics since Nikita Khrushchev tried to install nuclear missiles in Cuba. Is Saddam Hussein worth this much grief?

[end quoting]

On Friday 4/4/03, all the major news outlets were running a segment about Senator John Kerry (D-MA) who said "we need a regime change here in the United States" since Bush has alienated so many previous allies worldwide by his brash behavior against Iraq. Naturally a number of Republicans banded together to call him unpatriotic. But the Vietnam War veteran held his ground, said he most certainly stood by his remarks, and added, just for good measure: "Don't tell ME what patriotism is!"

We need to remember that George W. is merely a puppet carrying out his orders from one faction of the elite New World Order control misfits. The dilemma for these controllers is that too many vocal people are awakening from the fiction that must be believed in order to advance their selfish domination agenda.

That leads to the following essay, which eventually gets around to addressing this very central matter of the puppetmasters behind various puppets:

DÉJÀ JEW ALL OVER AGAIN

From the savethemales.ca website, for 3/25/03: [quoting] by Henry Makow, Ph.D.

(Henry Makow is the inventor of the board game Scruples and the author of A Long Way To Go For A Date. He received his Ph.D. in English Literature from the University of Toronto. He welcomes your feedback and ideas at his henry@savethemales.ca e-mail address.)

Who said the following?

"Instead of agitating for war, the Jewish groups in this country should be opposing it in every possible way, for they will be among the first to feel its consequences. The greatest danger to this country lies in their large ownership and influence in our motion pictures, our press, our radio, and our government."

Charles Lindbergh delivered these words in a famous speech in Des Moines, Iowa on September 11, 1941. But if you substitute "TV" for "radio", Pat Buchanan or Congressman James Moran could have delivered it yesterday.

Why is history beginning to sound like a broken record? Because it is unfolding according to a prepared script.

For more than 100 years a small Satan-loving cabal consisting of British Aristocrats, Jewish financiers, and the Rockefeller-Morgan cartels has been plotting to overthrow Western (Christian) Civilization and monopolize all wealth. They plan to establish a global tyranny, a New World Order disguised with terms like "peace" and "brotherhood." This is the Anglo-American Establishment and its existence has been documented in works like Professor Carroll Quigley's Tragedy And Hope (1966).

I am not sure whether the British elite are using the Jewish bankers or vice versa. I tend to think they are interlocking networks. In any case, they run England and the United States and are responsible for Communism, Zionism, and of course, the Iraq war, which will install Israel as the regional overseer.

Israel's Mossad secret service (motto: "to wage war by way of deception") pursued this policy for decades. In 1994 former Mossad agent Victor Ostrovsky wrote that the Mossad's "overall goal" was "to get the West to do its bidding".

"The Mossad leaders knew that if they could make Saddam appear bad enough and a threat to the Gulf oil supply, of which he'd been the protector up to that point, then the United States and its allies would...take measures that would all but eliminate his army and his weapons potential, especially if they were led to believe that this might be their last chance before he went nuclear." (Victor Ostrovsky, The Other Side Of Deception, p.254)

Now think of the five Mossad agents arrested September 11 celebrating the destruction of the World Trade Center.

"SERVICE TO THE JEWS"

It's easier to succeed if your friends are bankers. In 1896 Adolph Ochs purchased the New York Times with loans from several Jewish businessmen including Jacob Schiff, an investment banker and Jewish leader. The backers "made it clear that they wanted Adolph to succeed because they believed 'he could be of great service to the Jews generally.'" (The Trust: The Private And Powerful Family Behind The New York Times, 1999, pp.37-38)

The same Jacob Schiff was the Rothschilds' agent and funded the Rockefellers. He financed the Bolshevik revolution by giving $20 million to Leon Trotsky and his 263 Jewish revolutionaries from New York's Lower East Side. Jews made up 4/5 of the Bolshevik leadership. Communism was/is an instrument of their New World Order.

The same cabal bought the Washington Post and controls U.S. TV and movies. The American public is like a giant that is blindfolded, drugged, and gagged. The giant has earplugs and is led around by the nose.

Throughout history, Jews have been expelled from one country after another because of anti-Semitism, which they define as an "irrational hatred" endemic in non-Jews. The real reason is hidden from Jews like myself. Wherever they went, some prominent Jews alienated the host population and ruined it for the rest. They created anti-Semitism by their business practices, exclusivity, disloyalty, disrespect, or because they tried to undermine Christianity and control and change society.

There is no question that Jewish groups pursued a political agenda. I refer you to Prof. Kevin MacDonald's Separation And Its Discontents (1998) and The Culture Of Critique (2002), and Prof. Albert Lindemann's Essau's Tears: Modern Anti-Semitism And The Rise Of The Jews (1997).

People who attribute all opposition to this agenda to anti-Semitism are morally unctuous, self-deluded, and passive aggressive. By dehumanizing their opponents as hate mongers, they actually provoke the intense hatreds that lead to mayhem. People don't hate without reason. If they are treated with respect, people respond accordingly.

World War Two was partly a legitimate attempt on the part of Germans to resist Jewish control. Although Jews represented only 1% of the German population, they dominated key economic sectors, the media, and professions. Communism (which the Nazis saw as a Jewish proxy) represented a serious political threat, both domestic and foreign.

On the other hand, the Nazis also had a barbaric plan to rule the world. Dedicated to Aryan racial supremacy, they murdered six million Poles and planned to enslave all Slavs. The same Anglo-American establishment that includes Jewish elitists fostered the Nazis. Wall Street and the Bank of England bankrolled the Nazi war machine. The Russian and German armies actually trained and armed each other in the 1920s. The Nazis learned about concentration camps from the Communists.

The lesson is that, at the top, the masters are neither Jews nor non-Jews. They are Satanists united in secret societies like Freemasonry. They divide into two "house teams" in order to wreak havoc. The goal is to destroy nations, make profits, and degrade and demoralize humanity in preparation for satanic world government.

Critics of the elitist Jewish agenda sometimes make the mistake of appearing racist, which most are not. This makes them easier to dismiss. Blaming "the Jews" is sloppy shorthand, like blaming "the Americans" for the Iraq war. Most Jews, like most Americans, want no part of any Elite Master Plan.

On the other hand, ordinary Jews have to stop acting like "human shields" for their corrupt and duplicitous leadership. We need to disassociate from groups that promote the elitist agenda. This also applies to Americans in general. We have to stop fighting their wars for them

Who are the elitists? Begin with any list of members of the Council on Foreign Relations.

These people represent cartels that plan to dominate every aspect of human life. In conclusion, we should not confuse the puppets for the puppeteers. We need to focus blame on the Anglo-American Zionist establishment. If we refine our terms, we will be more effective.

[end quoting]

This is a good reminder to focus our attention on the puppetmasters and not waste too much of our energies on the various puppets running around knowingly or unknowingly doing the bidding of these satanic masters of deception and manipulation.

And while we're mentioning the subject of manipulation, how about some more lying-to-the-public, this time about weather control and its possible role in the Iraq war:

FREAK CYPRUS TORNADO AND SHUTTLE COLUMBIA

From the www.albawaba.com website, 3/25/03: [quoting]

On January 27, 2003 at around 10 a.m., an unusually powerful tornado struck the island of Cyprus, sweeping through the coastal city of Limassol, extensively damaging shops and homes, uprooting trees, tearing apart roofs, and overturning vehicles. The enormous storm marked the first of its kind to hit the Middle East and Cyprus.

Shortly following, an amazing story regarding the rare tornado had started circulating on the Internet. Albawaba has obtained a copy of the story and is delighted to share it with our readers:

At the time of the tornado, Israel's main media channels and newspapers were in contact with sources in the meteorology sector of the Israeli Army and Air Force, as they were interested in finding out the cause behind the "rare phenomenon" of the gigantic tornado, which hit the Mediterranean Sea. The army and other sources said they had no information regarding the developments in Cyprus or Limassol.

At the exact same time, in three different locations—at Houston Space Center, the Israeli Air Force Headquarters "somewhere" in the Tel Aviv area, and Space Shuttle Columbia—hundreds of Israeli Air Force members and meteorology experts celebrated the success of the joint experiment carried out between the Israeli Air Force and NASA's Space Center. The experiment was entitled: "The creation of an artificial tornado, aided by dust storms."

After nearly two weeks in space, as Space Shuttle Columbia STS-107 passed above the eastern part of the Mediterranean across Israel, the final phase of the experiment was activated. This was an experiment that dozens of Israeli and U.S. Air Force aircraft took part in and which required large amounts of resources and high-technology equipment.

The "cover story" for this experiment was "joint regional training between foreign Air Forces and the Israeli Air Force". Each of the heavy aircraft that flew played a role in the experiment to produce the "first artificial tornado".

The man in charge of supervising the entire experiment from Space Shuttle Columbia, on behalf of the Israeli Air Force, was Ilan Ramon—Israel's first man in space. A Colonel in the Israeli Air Force, Ramon was a fighter pilot who was the only payload specialist on STS-107. According to NASA, as a member of the Red Team, Ramon was the prime crewmember for the Mediterranean Israeli Dust Experiment (MEIDEX), a multi-spectral camera that measured small dust particles (dust aerosols) in the atmosphere over the Mediterranean and the Saharan coast of the Atlantic.

Back to the tornado: four-and-a-half years of research and joint experiments, which intensified up until the peak moment in which the "tornado" was "created" were fulfilled. The "cover story" for the experiment, which was revolutionary in its implications, was the effect of the "dust system in the air" on the production of rain. The theory that the Israeli top scientists assumed was that it is possible to create—by means of dust coming from Africa and other "various additives" injected into the air from aircraft situated at "different altitudes"—a hurricane or a tornado.

Actually, the enormous success of the experiment resulted in a side effect, which found its expression in "tremendous amounts of rain" which have recently fallen throughout Israel, from the start of the experiment till it reached its peak on January 27 in the "lethal tornado" that hit Limassol.

The main reason that the tornado did not stay in the heart of the sea, across the territorial waters of Israel, but instead moved north to Cyprus, was the sharp change in the blow of winds that dragged it to an unexpected destination, and that constitutes one central lesson learned.

It is unnecessary, of course, to explain the implications of the possibility of "creating a tornado according to order" or to direct it to a certain place or chosen destination and to activate it above a specific city or region.

It is possible to use this effect for blessed purposes, such as the transfer of water to arid regions or the creation of large amounts of rain which are to fall down according to demand and location. It is also possible to use this effect for military purposes and to create total chaos in a given region and for a fixed period of time.

What exactly went on aboard Space Shuttle Columbia STS-107 regarding the tornado experiment and many other scientific experiments will always remain a mystery, as the Shuttle disintegrated nearly 70 kilometers above the Earth, just a few minutes before its scheduled landing at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. Columbia broke up during re-entry on February 1, killing all seven astronauts on board, including Ilan Ramon.

With regards to the specific details concerning the tornado experiment, it seems the world will never completely really know who and what were exactly behind the experiment, how it worked, was organized and activated, and who originally came up with the idea. Unfortunately, any information regarding the experiment perished and vanished into space's never-ending vastness, along with other secrets aboard Columbia STS-107. [end quoting]

It's still possible more details about this experiment will come out at a later time since so much coordination was necessary with teams on the Earth who probably have duplicate records of the experiment.

Meanwhile, most readers of this publication are aware that Russia has long developed vastly superior technologies for weather modification and control. It's something to keep in mind as you note all the well-timed blinding sandstorms so often confounding the war in Iraq.

And while we're on the subject of crazy weather and related manipulations, how about this report:

CRAZY WEATHER AND RELATED MATTERS NOT WELL REPORTED

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 3/29/03: [quoting]

I received the following information from a reader w/o posting priveledges who thought this might be interesting. One note, however: in the last paragraph the reader states that Homeland Security only had three threat levels. There are five levels with corresponding colors which are: Green-Low, Blue-Guarded, Yellow-Elevated, Orange-High, and Red-Severe.

South Carolina: Two weeks ago rains flooded many city streets in Upstate, which were not passable for 1/2 day to 2 days. Flooded streets are unusual. The state has experienced drought the last few years and last summer the State Hydrologist told homeowners concerned with low water lake levels that he guaranteed the State a flood. The hydrologist would not elaborate or give a timetable for his prediction.

Monday, an investment company "Carolina Investors" closed its doors. 40,000 investors in the state are losing over $400 million.

A small town with less than 3,000 population and six traffic lights had half the traffic lights out at one end of town about two weeks ago. The town police blocked off Main Street for light repairs with brand-new road signs that said "Police Road Block Ahead".

North Carolina: Friday, two weeks ago, I-85 North of Charlotte closed for repairs. There was a sinkhole directly under the interstate large enough for several engineers to gather in to view washed out area from a drainpipe.

Denver, Colorado: Snowstorm with up to 11 feet of snow in some areas, which has collapsed roofs.

Miami, Florida: Two days ago, several tornadoes touched down doing a lot of damage. Tornadoes in Miami are unusual. This is hurricane territory.

Northwest U.S.: "Slow (?) earthquake" is happening. Seismologists can measure moving plates because of movement of stationary devices noted by GPS.

Illinois: Last Thursday night meteorite flashed daylight-bright and broke up over Chicago area, knocking holes in roofs of homes (and a fire station).

National "Amber" Alert: Father of kidnapped Smart was on Today show about one week after the fourteen-year-old returned home. Toward the end of his interview with Katie Kouric and Matt Louher, Mr. Smart ranted about "Amber Alert", saying the words over and over for nearly two minutes of prime TV time. A man described as Smart's brother came over and sat beside him and told the TV audience Mr. Smart was upset and the show went to break. Since then, there has been additional news coverage about "Amber Alert" without explaining it is bill going through Congress. Yesterday, TV news showed an overhead Interstate Traffic-Condition sign with a huge blinking notice "Amber Alert" and gave an 800 number to call. I do not know the location of this flashing traffic sign.

Looking up the Homeland Security "Alert" colors, it goes from green to orange to red and there is no amber. I find it unsettling that in February, immediately after comet NEAT passed its perihelion to the Sun, resulting in a huge Sun [corona] burst, a national "orange" alert was given and recalled. This month, after Mars passed the Sun with another extra-ordinarily large Sun burst, a national "orange" alert was given. My television is turned on infrequently, making it startling to hear repeated mention of the words "Amber Alert" when the TV is on. I know this is supposed to be referring to pending legislation concerning missing children. Something seems amiss. [end quoting]

Four points to make here: (1) Coded (secret) messages delivered over the mass media conduits are much more common than the general public suspects. (2) The Smart kidnapping exhibits a lot of the hallmarks of governmental mind-control projects. (3) There is no question about absolutely strange weather happening in many locations that's not being reported anywhere near accurately. And (4) as for comet NEAT and related matters, be sure to see Rick Martin's front-page feature story in this issue.

MORE BAD NEWS FOR THE ECONOMY

From the www.safemoneyreport.com website, 3/26/03: [quoting]

Just in case you need any more evidence of a capsizing economy, consider the following:

The durable goods report confirms that business investments continue to languish.

Orders for non-capital defense goods, excluding aircraft, which is seen as a barometer for business spending, plunged 2.8% in February. Overall, orders for durable goods from manufacturers fell 1.2% in February. The big cutbacks were across the board: Computers and peripherals, autos, electrical equipment, appliances, aircraft, and fabricated metal products all took a hit. By all accounts, durable goods orders were lousy. That's certainly not a sign of a burgeoning recovery.

[end quoting]

Those of you who monitor the economic news on a regular basis have probably noticed the many creative ways they've come up with lately to spin the bad news so as to give you the impression that, hey, if it's not actually good news, then at least it doesn't really matter. But the reasons all end up sounding a lot like little Johnny's excuses when teacher asks what happened to his homework—again.

And as if our economy were not in enough of a slump, how about this:

WORLD BOYCOTT OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS GROWS

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 3/26/03: [quoting]

The U.S. has so angered the people of this planet that a boycott of American goods was inevitable. George W. Bush has increased hatred of America throughout the world by orders of magnitude. It remains to be seen how much this will worsen America's already disastrous "balance-of-trade" figures, but it certainly won't help.

Boycott Of American Goods Over Iraq War Gains Pace

No more Coca-Cola or Budweiser, no Marlboro, no American whiskey, or even American Express cards. A growing number of restaurants in Germany are taking everything American off their menus to protest the Iraq war.

Although the protests are mainly symbolic, waiters in dozens of bars and restaurants in Hamburg, Berlin, Munich, Bonn, and other German cities are telling patrons: "Sorry, Coca-Cola is not available any more due to the current political situation."

The boycotts appear to be part of a nascent worldwide movement. One website (www.consumers-against-war.de) calls for boycotts of 27 top American firms from Microsoft to Kodak while another (www.adbusters.org) urges the "millions of people against the war" to "Boycott Brand America".

Consumer fury seems to be on the rise. Demonstrators in Paris smashed the windows of a McDonald's restaurant last week, forcing police in riot gear to move in to protect staff and customers of the American fast-food outlet. The attackers sprayed obscenities and "boycott" on the windows.

In Indonesia, Iraq war opponents have pasted signs on McDonald's and other American food outlets, trying to force them shut by "sealing them" and urging Indonesians to avoid them.

In the Swiss city of Basel, 50 students recently staged a sit-down strike in front of a McDonald's to block customers' entry, waved peace signs, and urged people to eat pretzels instead of hamburgers.

Anti-American sentiment has even reached provinces in Russia, where some rural eateries put up signs telling Americans they were unwelcome, according to an Izvestia newspaper report.

A German bicycle manufacturer, Riese und Mueller GmbH, canceled all business deals with its American suppliers.

"Americans only pay attention when money is on the line" director Heiko Mueller told Reuters, whose firm buys $300,000 worth of supplies from half a dozen American firms each year.

"We wanted to make a statement against this war and told our American partners that, unless they renounce what their government is doing, we won't do any business with them anymore."

[end quoting]

How does this honest protest compare with the way we allowed our politicians to injure Iraq with so-called sanctions that hurt many hundreds of thousands of people? We should be thankful the retaliation is not worse!

And speaking of causing injuries, just when you thought we had perfected enough ways to do that, behold:

THE NEW MONSTER BOMB

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 3/26/03: [quoting]

This will probably make you sick in your stomach, but I think we should all be aware of what our country is inflicting on others. — Bobbie by David Wood, Newhouse News Service:

It will fall silently and unseen from the distant sky, a cigar-shaped steel capsule hurtling down at 300 mph with a single deadly purpose. In the final moments, there might come a brief, chilling whir as tiny gears adjust its tail fins to nudge it closer to its target.

On the ground, however, the work of the 2,000-pound Mark-84 JDAM (Joint Direct Attack Munition) bomb, the new workhorse of the U.S. military, is just beginning. In nanoseconds it will release a crushing shock wave and shower jagged, white-hot metal fragments at supersonic speed, shredding flesh, crushing cells, rupturing lungs, bursting sinus cavities, and ripping away limbs in a maelstrom of destruction. These and other effects, calculated and charted by Defense Department war planners in a predictive software program called "Bug Splat", are largely obscured by smoke and debris....

While the Pentagon's war plan is designed to minimize casualties, the inevitable civilian dead and wounded are sure to be seized on by opponents, particularly in the Arab world, as evidence of American perfidy. The simple fact, says Dr. Harry W. Severance, an emergency physician and associate clinical professor at the Duke University Trauma Center, is that weapons like JDAM are designed to kill....

As the Mark-84 JDAM strikes the ground, its fuse ignites a priming charge that detonates 945 pounds of Tritonal, a silvery solid of TNT mixed with a dollop of aluminum for stability. The ensuing chemical reaction produces an expanding nucleus of hot gas that swells the Mark-84's 14-inch-wide cast steel casing to almost twice its size before the steel shears and fractures, showering a thousand pounds of white-hot steel fragments at 6,000 feet per second and driving a shock wave of several thousand pounds per square inch.

Instantaneously, a fireball lashes out at 8,500°F, and the explosion gouges a 20-foot crater and hurls off 10,000 pounds of rock and dirt debris at supersonic speed.

Trauma physicians confronting the human wreckage divide casualties into four classes. One is injury from the blast itself, mostly caused by a pressure wave a hundred times or more the injury threshold of 15 pounds per square inch. By comparison, a shock wave of 12 pounds per square inch will knock over a standing person.

A second class of injury is from the wind and debris that immediately follow the blast wave. A blast force of 4 pounds per square inch—far below the force of these winds—can shatter glass and drive lethal fragments at 120 mph. Metal fragments will travel about 3,800 feet, nearly three-quarters of a mile. Bigger fragments of the bomb—heavy pieces of the thick metal nose cone, for instance—will sail out a mile and a half, a Defense Department engineer said.

A third set of injuries results either as bodies are picked up and thrown against something, or as part of a stationary body is ripped away.

A fourth class takes in everything else, including burns from the fireball and crush injuries from falling debris. "The key to survival with a Mark-84 is to not be behind glass and not be behind something that's going to fail, like a concrete wall" said a Defense Department official who asked not to be identified.

Almost no one survives primary blast injuries, experts say. The brutal shock wave, a force that far exceeds the pressure the atmosphere normally applies to the human body, smashes into and explodes body cavities of lesser pressure—lungs, colon, bowels, even through the sinuses into the skull. The overpressure can burst individual cells and rupture critical blood vessels, forcing air through them and on into the heart and brain, causing instant death.

[end quoting]

This is a good indicator of the heartless insanity directing our tax dollars for the purpose of “defense”. Can you imagine what kind of life these people must have who do this for a living and a career?! Eventually their conscience must get the better of them—and they either quit or go insane, and then get promoted to more senior positions!

And while we’re on the subject of inflicting injury, consider this track record:

Afghanistan 1998, 2001-02.

We are told there is no option but to wage war on Iraq. But the options are clear: We bomb innocent people and hope that this will result in a change of leader. Or we allow UN weapons inspectors to do their job. We work for a change in regime rather than leader, we allow medicines and food into Iraq and we avoid a humanitarian disaster.

There is no legal justification for any invasion or associated bombing of Iraq. There is no hard evidence that Iraq possesses any weapons of mass destruction and there is no substantiated connection between the Government of Iraq, September 11th, and the al-Qaeda network. Iraq’s neighbors, the ones most at risk from Iraq’s weapons, are against this war, as are top military professionals in Britain and the U.S., many international organizations, and countries around the world, and a great majority of people in the U.S.

The above paints a sobering picture of the “business” of war—as conducted by the most aggressive madmen and country on the planet.

So, is it really any surprise that we could expect foreign terrorist attacks in the United States? And if they aren’t forthcoming on schedule (like a Pearl Harbor), then additional fabricated “terrorist” attacks like 9/11 will surely be created to induce the proper terror in the citizenry to get the Patriot II Act passed as desired for more extensive people control.

However, to put this “retaliation” scenario in more politically correct terms, consider the following announcement by a good ol’ boy:

GARY HART: “CODE RED” IS COMING

From the www.rense.com website, for 3/20/03: [quoting]

The war with Iraq has increased the risk of a terrorist attack on America, said former Sen. Gary Hart, who now is co-chairman of the Commission on National Security for the 21st Century.

“Don’t be surprised if, in the coming hours or days, we go to Code Red” Hart said this morning in Washington. “It is almost inevitable.”

Hart was part of a panel of experts gathered by George Washington University and Web Methods Inc. of Fairfax, Virginia to discuss the role of technology in national security.

The commission predicted in 1999 that America would suffer a major terrorist attack, and Hart was predicting such an attack as late as early September 2001. He said the present Administration wasted valuable time in setting up a Homeland Security Agency, which the commission recommended in January 2001.

The September 11 attacks “were not Pearl Harbor”, he said. “America was warned.” Despite the attention to terrorism since then, “the country is not today prepared for retaliatory terrorist attacks.”

The panelists included former Clinton Administration national security adviser Sandy Berger; former CIA director James Woolsey; Mark Forman, the Office of Management and Budget’s associate director for Information Technology and e-government; and former Virginia Gov. James Gilmore, now chairman of the National Advisory Commission on Terrorism.

All agreed that for technology to be effective in national security there must be integration between federal agencies, and between federal, state, and local governments.

But several panelists warned of such integration becoming a threat to privacy and civil liberties. There is an inevitable conflict between liberty and security, Woolsey said, and in time of war, liberty generally loses. He added that although use of tools such as the data mining applications to be developed in the Total Information Awareness program will have to be closely watched, “We have to find ways to make use of generally available information.”

Gilmore said there has not been enough public debate about the costs of improved security.

“We have an obligation to think about the uses of technology and to think about what applications we want and what applications we don’t want” he said. [end quoting]

Looks like former Senator Gary Hart is playing the appropriate gamesmanship to preserve his political future. (His real last

In 1980 he contested the Democratic nomination for the presidency, and stepped down from his Senate seat in 1986 to run, again unsuccessfully, in the 1988 presidential campaign. Wonder what semblance of a guilty conscience (and/or kissing-up to the power elite) made him pronounce a hogwash statement disconnecting Pearl Harbor from 9/11?

Meanwhile, you've surely been noticing the growing anti-war protests worldwide. One group that has struck a strong resonant chord with the feelings of many angry Americans is the following:

"NOT IN OUR NAME!" PLEDGE OF RESISTANCE

From the www.notinourname.net website, 3/20/03: [quoting]

We believe that, as people living in the United States, it is our responsibility to resist the injustices done by our government in our names.

Not in our name will you wage endless war. There can be no more deaths, no more transfusions of blood for oil.

Not in our name will you invade countries, bomb civilians, kill more children, letting history take its course over the graves of the nameless.

Not in our name will you erode the very freedoms you have claimed to fight for.

Not by our hands will we supply weapons and funding for the annihilation of families on foreign soil.

Not by our mouths will we let fear silence us.

Not by our hearts will we allow whole peoples or countries to be deemed evil.

Not by our will and not in our name.

We pledge resistance.

We pledge alliance with those who have come under attack for voicing opposition to the war, or for their religion or ethnicity.

We pledge to make common cause with the people of the world to bring about justice, freedom, and peace. Another world is possible and we pledge to make it real.

NO war on the world

The above is an organization that has been both vocal and courageous in their expression of conscience. It makes one wonder just how many have reincarnated at this time who were similarly active at the time of the American Revolution.

WAGING PEACE: TAKING COMFORT IN REMARKABLE FOOTHOLDS GAINED

From the www.goodmorningworld.org website, 3/19/03:

[quoting]

Peace Plan 2010, by Robert Muller

As unhappy as I am that war is upon us, I'm taking great comfort in what's going on in our world today.

The world community is waging peace.

No matter what happens, history will record that this is a new era. The 21st Century has begun with the world in a broad dialogue looking deeply, profoundly, and responsibly as a global community at the legitimacy of the actions of an Administration that insists upon going to war.

This is a first—and it's part of the difficult work of effectively waging peace. It is a constant job, and we must not let up. It is working, and it is a historic milestone. This is the larger, long-term story, and the Iraq war is a chapter in it.

In this unprecedented public conversation, the world is asking:

"Is war legitimate? Is it illegitimate? Is there enough evidence to warrant an attack? Is there not enough evidence to warrant killing masses of human brothers and sisters?"

"What will be the consequences? The costs? What will happen after a war? Will this set off other conflicts? What might be peaceful alternatives?"

"What kind of negotiations are we not thinking of? What are the real intentions for declaring war?"

Now there are two superpowers: the U.S. and the merging voice of the people of the world.

All of this has taken place in the context of the UN, the body established in 1945 for exactly this purpose. It has taken more than 50 years of struggle to realize that true function. The UN has become, in these past months and weeks, the most important forum for the world's effort to wage peace rather than war.

No, it hasn't prevented the U.S. from forging ahead with war in Iraq—but it has definitely succeeded in engaging the U.S. in conversation and giving the rest of the world a place to be heard.

It is tense, it is tough, it is challenging, but this kind of global conversation has not happened before on this scale—not before World War I or World War II, not before Vietnam or Korea. This is a stunning new era of global listening, speaking, and responsibility. In the process, new alliances are being formed: Russia and China on the same side of an issue is an unprecedented outcome; France and Germany are working together to wake up the world to a new way of seeing the situation. The largest peace demonstrations in history have taken place.

Through these global peace-waging efforts, the U.S. was delayed in its purpose for several months because it was being engaged in this dialogue. And the process allowed all nations to participate in the serious and horrific decision to go to war or not.

All around the world, people are waging peace. It is nothing short of a miracle, and it is working.

This is what waging peace looks like; it is not always clear and easy. It is difficult, hard work. It will henceforth require constant effort throughout the world. Since the cold war ended, there has been just one superpower—the U.S. That has created a kind of blindness in the vision of the U.S.

But now there are two superpowers: the U.S. and the merging voice of the people of the world.

All around the world, people are waging peace. It is nothing short of a miracle, and it is working—despite what you may see unfolding right now in the news.

(Dr. Robert Muller, chancellor emeritus of the UN University for Peace in Costa Rica, was assistant secretary general of the UN from 1970 to 1985. He publishes a daily peace message at the www.goodmorningworld.org website.)

"For it isn't enough to talk about peace. One must believe in it. And it isn't enough to believe in it. One must work for it." — Eleanor Roosevelt

In this age of instant global communications, the world has shrunk to the point where more people are feeling an interconnectedness with one another. This allows a "group conscience" to emerge in reaction to the drumbeats of war from the madmen. The next step is when, through knowledge and understanding, larger and larger groups of people take EFFECTIVE action to checkmate the moves of the elite world controllers. That's when the balance shifts to a path leading to peace and harmony on planet Earth.

Isn't this priceless? Even the title, alone, says it all. I'm just puzzled about when Scalia ever supported free speech—except perhaps when he rules that corporations have the right to “speak” to our elected representatives through massive campaign contributions and lobbying efforts. By the way, if you haven't already seen this article, take a look at the last line.

(The New York Times, March 19, 2003, “Justice Bans Media From Free Speech Event” by Associated Press)

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia banned broadcast media from an appearance Wednesday where he will receive an award for supporting free speech.

The City Club usually tapes speakers for later broadcast on public television, but Scalia insisted on banning television and radio coverage, the club said. Scalia is being given the organization's Citadel of Free Speech Award. “I might wish it were otherwise, but that was one of the criteria that he had for acceptance” said James Foster, the club's executive director.

The ban on broadcast media, “begs disbelief and seems to be in conflict with the award itself” C-SPAN vice president and executive producer Terry Murphy wrote in a letter last week to the City Club. “How free is speech if there are limits to its distribution?”

The City Club selected Scalia because he has “consistently, across the board, had opinions or led the charge in support of free speech” Foster said.

Cameras and recording devices are banned from the Supreme Court chamber, and Scalia prefers not to have camera coverage in other settings, said Kathleen Arberg, spokeswoman for the court. Scalia made the same demand on John Carroll University, where he spoke Tuesday night. He talked mostly about the constitutional protection of religions, but also said that government has room to scale back individual rights during wartime without violating the Constitution.

“The Constitution just sets minimums” Scalia said. “Most of the rights that you enjoy go way beyond what the Constitution requires.”

FALSE INFORMATION NOW OK IN PRIMARY FBI DATABASE

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 3/26/03: [quoting]

The FBI's National Crime Information Center (NCIC), which compiles a huge database on criminals, arrest warrants, missing persons, etc., no longer has to put up with the pesky problem of ensuring the data is accurate. Apparently the Justice Department isn't particularly concerned with justice anymore. [We're they ever?]

The full text of the provision which the main FBI criminal database will no longer have to adhere to is: “Each agency that maintains a system of records shall...maintain all records which are used by the agency in making any determination about any individual with such accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is reasonably necessary to assure fairness to the individual in the determination.”

[end quoting]

This shouldn't surprise any of our readers. Looks like they want to be “legally” prepared to justify a storehouse of fabricated information on any citizen who the Homeland Security Gestapo considers troublesome to their New World Order agenda of subdued sheep.

Meanwhile, there are many other ways to derail the wheels of justice, as in this:

POLICE TOLD FROM BEGINNING BELTWAY SUSPECTS BLACK

From the worldnetdaily.com website, 3/28/03: [quoting]

Police Told Suspects Are Black From Very First Shot Fired. Eyewitness To Michael's Store Window Shooting Also Described Getaway Car.

Just hours after the Beltway snipers shot-out a crafts store window here, kicking off a three-week rampage, a pizza delivery man on shift next to the store told local police he saw two short-haired Black males leave the scene—laughing and “high-fiving” each other—in a dark, older-model car, WorldNetDaily has learned.

Yet the sniper task force, led by Montgomery County Police Chief Charles Moose, ignored the early eyewitness account and focused instead on a White suspect in a white vehicle, according to MCPD investigators, who are now speaking out about what they call racially correct “tunnel vision” during the nation's largest manhunt.

[end quoting]

To many experienced law enforcement investigators, the entire Washington DC sniper incident smelled of being a contrived “inside” event, perhaps originating from as near as the underground levels of the CIA's infamous Langley, Virginia headquarters. Key clues included the expert precision of the marksmanship and the veritable blizzard of disinformation that was employed to stretch out the drama. The “racially correct” mis-lead noted above suggests yet another tactic to throw the police off the scent in order to allow the sniper(s) more time to generate a larger, more dramatic incident—at the expense of those injured or killed in the process, plus the local police looking like fools.

And while we're on the subject of looking like fools, how about this one:

OPEN U.S./MEXICO BORDER?

Heightened Border Security? American Border Patrol Sees No Evidence

San Pedro River, Arizona, American Border Patrol, March 21, 2003 — A seven-hour mission by American Border Patrol (ABP) that ranged over several miles of the U.S./Mexico border found no evidence of increased border security.

According to Glenn Spencer, Executive Director of ABP, not one Border Patrol officer was seen during the entire seven-hour mission along the border. “We didn't see a Border Patrol official all day, including the trip to and from the mission site. [end quoting]

Makes you wonder what's really going on when nobody is minding the store. Perhaps the border guards were all sent over to Iraq to fight the “good” fight? After all, it's an “unpatriotic” idea these days to think American troops should be defending American borders rather than being shipped all over the world to carry out the political agendas of madmen.

54 REPORTS OF SEX ASSAULT, RAPE INVESTIGATED AT AIR FORCE ACADEMY

The Air Force has investigated 54 reports of sexual assault or rape over the past 10 years at the U.S. Air Force Academy, the secretary of the Air Force said on Thursday.

It was the Air Force's first official accounting of reported sexual attacks at the service academy, an Air Force spokesman said, and it included some reports that Air Force investigators could not substantiate.

Nonetheless, the new figures were twice the number of such incidents at the academy that cadets have reported to congressional officials in recent weeks. As such, the new figures showed a widening of the sexual assault scandal that has seized the service academy in Colorado Springs, Colorado, stirred outrage on Capitol Hill, and prompted three military inquiries, which will include reviews of the Naval Academy and West Point.

On Capitol Hill on Thursday, Air Force Secretary James G. Roche said the number of women who have been sexually assaulted at the academy is probably much higher than 54, because many women undoubtedly were afraid or ashamed to report the abuses.

“The part that is the saddest thing is, whatever we see, whatever the number is, 25, 50, there are probably a hundred more that we do not see” Roche said during a hearing of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

As Roche spoke in Washington, the top general in the Air Force, John P. Jumper, arrived in Colorado Springs for two days of meetings with cadets, faculty, the academy's military leadership, and community leaders.

Mindful of the Navy's mishandling of the 1991 “Tailhook” sexual assault scandal, Roche and Jumper have vowed to investigate accusations that current and former cadets who reported sexual assaults or rapes faced indifference or even retaliation by academy officials.

One wonders if this is an honest move to improve a deplorable situation, or an attempt at damage control to cover-up a much larger, ongoing problem.

DETECTIVE ADMITS FOCUS ON ACTOR ROBERT BLAKE

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 3/6/03: [quoting]

One of the lead detectives in the Robert Blake murder case acknowledged on the witness stand Wednesday that police did not investigate victim Bonny Lee Bakley's purported connections with drug dealers, bikers, and racketeers while looking into her background.

The defense sought to show on the sixth day of Blake's preliminary hearing that police focused on the actor as the only suspect and did not pursue leads to other people provided by witnesses.

Attorney Thomas Mesereau Jr. cross-examined Detective Brian Tyndall about his testimony that Blake's former personal assistant, Cody Blackwell, told him about Bakley's shady associations.

“Did you at any time in this comprehensive investigation, that you were co-lead detective in, ever investigate whether or not Bonny Bakley associated with bikers?” Mesereau asked.

“No, I was dealing in a murder investigation, not in association” Tyndall said.

“So that issue didn't concern you, correct?” Mesereau asked. “Not when I was investigating this case, no” the detective said.

Tyndall acknowledged detectives were sent across the country to look into Bakley's background.

“That concerned you, didn't it” Mesereau asked.

“We were trying to gather information on her, yes” Tyndall said,

But when asked specifically if police investigated alleged Bakley associations with drug dealers, racketeers, and

WAL MART REFUSED TO SELL AMERICAN-MADE FLAG PINS

From the beyond-the-illusion.com website, 3/29/03: [quoting]

Recently Wal Mart was contacted about selling American Flag pins made in the U.S.A. by unemployed American Veterans and Wal Mart's comment was the following:

We apologize, but we only offer products made by our “authorized” vendors, which would not include you.

The Veterans group, made of unemployed American Veterans, offered to laminate right into the back of the pins anything Wal Mart desired, and suggested something such as “Wal Mart Believes In America” and then underneath it “Made By American Veterans”.

They said they were not interested; they also refused to allow them to put up even one countertop display of the pins.

Wal Mart vendors are 90% Chinese slave goods.

Considering that the entire nation now knows that Wal Mart buys about 90% of their products from Chinese slave labor factories, and that they alone own over 800 slave factories in China, you would think they would jump at the chance to try and improve their public image!

Fashion designers from New York to Milan have filled the runways in recent weeks with all the latest Spring looks. Hemlines are up, heel heights are down, and pink is all the rage.

But regardless of what you think of this season's haute couture, you should be made aware of a trend that's catching on. It could make you think twice before buying new clothes. Tiny specks capable of tracking virtually every single item are now being imbedded by manufacturers.

This Orwellian technology, called RFID (radio frequency ID) will now be used by Italian clothing designer Benetton in the form of trackable chips woven into its apparel. The chips, which function as itty bitty radio transmitters, will be inserted when the clothes are made and will remain intact throughout the life of the garment. According to chip manufacturer Philips Electronics, the devices will be “imperceptible” to the wearer.

Exactly what kind of shenanigans do you think are behind this new “wrinkle in the fabric” of surveillance? How about this one: just as the device can be used as stated above for tracking, which is annoying enough in a “free” society, it could ALSO be used in the reverse direction, to transmit low-level signals that affect the clothes-wearer's brain and nervous system in such a way to effectively facilitate remote-control mind control. Now there's something to think about the next time you pass a cell-phone tower—and your shirt lights up!

“TIME - TRAVELER” BUSTED FOR INSIDER TRADING

From the www.weeklyworldnews.com website, 3/19/03: [quoting]

by Chad Kultgen

He made $350 million off the stock market—in just 2 weeks!

NEW YORK — Federal investigators have arrested an enigmatic Wall Street wiz on insider-trading charges—and incredibly, he claims to be a time-traveler from the year 2256!

Sources at the Security and Exchange Commission confirm that 44-year-old Andrew Carlssin offered the bizarre explanation for his uncanny success in the stock market after being led off in handcuffs on January 28.

“We don't believe this guy's story—he's either a lunatic or a pathological liar” says an SEC insider.

“But the fact is, with an initial investment of only $800, in two weeks' time he had a portfolio valued at over $350 million. Every trade he made capitalized on unexpected business developments, which simply can't be pure luck.

“The only way he could pull it off is with illegal inside information. He's going to sit in a jail cell on Rikers Island until he agrees to give up his sources.”

The past year of nose-diving stock prices has left most investors crying in their beer. So when Carlssin made a flurry of 126 high-risk trades and came out the winner every time, it raised the eyebrows of Wall Street watchdogs.

“If a company's stock rose due to a merger or technological breakthrough that was supposed to be secret, Mr. Carlssin somehow knew about it in advance” says the SEC source close to the hush-hush, ongoing investigation.

When investigators hauled Carlssin in for questioning, they got more than they bargained for: A mind-boggling four-hour confession.

Carlssin declared that he had traveled back in time from over 200 years in the future, when it is common knowledge that our era experienced one of the worst stock plunges in history. Yet anyone armed with knowledge of the handful of stocks destined to go through the roof could make a fortune.

“It was just too tempting to resist” Carlssin allegedly said in his videotaped confession. “I had planned to make it look natural, you know, lose a little here and there so it doesn't look too perfect. But I just got caught in the moment.”

In a bid for leniency, Carlssin has reportedly offered to divulge “historical facts” such as the whereabouts of Osama bin Laden and a cure for AIDS.

All he wants is to be allowed to return to the future in his “time craft”.

However, he refuses to reveal the location

Officials are quite confident the "time-traveler's" claims are bogus. Yet the SEC source admits: "No one can find any record of any Andrew Carlssin existing anywhere before December 2002."

Illness & Death Tidbits: (3/2/03)

- Colombia—Still dropping like flies in this country. An army helicopter crashed while on a secret mission (again), killing all 23 aboard.

- Florida—This Governor Bush state executed its 55th (twinning) killer this week. Amos King (biblical connotations) maintained his innocence until the very end.

- Atlanta—The Center for Disease Control and Prevention announced that 25 people who received the smallpox vaccine so far have suffered bad reactions. One had a severe body rash, another had a heart attack. The rest had milder reactions including fever, fatigue, redness, and swelling. Sounds like fun.

- Washington, D.C.—In light of recent deaths and illness, the FDA is considering banning the herb Ephedra, since it can cause heart attacks and strokes. Because it is an herb, no government oversight is present—yet. These deaths are a "reason" for the government to regulate the sale of all herbs.

Argentina: The New Hollywood? (3/11/03)

Now that the Argentinean economy is depressed, Hollywood is quickly moving in to capitalize on the devalued currency, European flair, and low-cost talent. Filming expenses are 20% lower, the latest equipment is available, as well as trained people to work both in front of and behind the cameras. Locals are welcoming the business and work. Perhaps this was the plan from the beginning?

There has been a lot of debate about the use of torture to extract information from terrorists or suspected terrorists since 9/11. Everything from hoods, hot and cold temperatures, sleep and food deprivation, clothing deprivation, withholding of pain medications, being made to stand or kneel in painful positions, threats against family members (including children), bright lights, and loud noises, are now being admittedly used according to a recent article in the Chicago Tribune by Jonathan Turley, law professor at George Washington University.

The article states: "To the amazement of the international community, the U.S. government has openly admitted that it is now using such 'stress and duress techniques'—[that] would be unconstitutional—if not criminal—if committed in the United States." Suspects are even shipped to Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, or Morocco, where torture laws are virtually nonexistent. One interrogation official explained that they do not kick the "expletive" out of them, but send them to other countries to do this for them. Professor Turley states that: "We have gone from a nation that once condemned torture, to one that contracts out for torture services." This sounds a lot like mind-control/programming techniques as well.

Slaving Away: (3/11/03)

The newest idea to draw out the Black community is to build a memorial to them. The Slavery Memorial Act would place a monument inside the Washington Mall in a section called the Reserve, close to the Lincoln Memorial. The idea is to give honor and dignity to the nation's slaves who "were the economic backbone of our country for about 250 years", according to Pastor Brett Fuller, of Virginia. While this all sounds good, our Black readers know not to rush out and disclose their genealogy too fast.

Biblical Bombs: (3/17/03)

The USAF has announced the MOAB (Massive Ordnance Air Burst) "Mother Of All Bombs" bomb that spreads a flammable mist over a target and ignites! Lovely. It is 40% more powerful than the "Daisy Cutter" bombs used on the caves of Afghanistan.

MOAB is the Biblical name for the country of Jordan. The attack on Iraq, named "Shock & Awe"—which sounds like Shekinah, is the ancient Hebrew term for "place where God is centered". This entire Iraq war is being layered with Biblical terminology and religious connotations.

It is even being reported that, in the small village of Mealula, Syria, at 5000 feet in elevation, the town's inhabitants are the only people on Earth who still speak Aramaic—the language of Jesus. It seems quite logical that this war will be used as a vehicle to eliminate the Dome of the Rock, rebuild the third Temple of Solomon, and install the New World Religion. Fundamental Islam will become history.

American Sideshows: (3/17/03)

- Attorney General John Ashcroft is promoting a Bush plan to spend over $1 billion to increase DNA analysis over the next five years. This would include a dramatic increase in FBI databases and improved training for scientists and prosecutors.

- Dolphins in captivity in the U.S. are being artificially inseminated to increase dolphin pregnancies. They are saying that it is because it will preserve the species, but that seems unlikely. Dolphins are being trained to ejaculate on cue—very much as in sexual magic ceremonies.

- As a smack in the face to France for not supporting the war effort, the U.S. Congress cafeterias are changing food names from French Fries and French Toast to Freedom Fries and Freedom Toast. That'll teach 'em!

Not Very Smart: (3/17/03)

The amazing and surprising news this week is the mysterious appearance of Utah teenager Elizabeth Smart, who was taken from her home exactly nine months and one week ago. She was found walking in front of a billboard with her picture in the town of Sandy, Utah. She was in perfect physical condition and never made any attempt to escape from her captors. She spent time in the hills outside of Salt Lake City, much of the winter in San Diego, and possibly time in Georgia and Florida. She went to parties and public places within miles of her home, veiled and dressed in robe-like garments, and was never identified. Nor did she run away.

Her captor's name, Brian David

How wonderful is the brain to alert an unbalanced part of the body and the mind
TO SEEK THE TRUTH.

Mitchell, calls himself “Emmanuel”—a Hebrew name for Jesus. “David” is a big programming name.

It seems almost impossible that “kidnappers” would parade their victim in broad daylight, walking under a billboard with the victim’s picture plastered on it, in a town only 15 miles from her home. Even a lunatic wouldn’t do that!

Elizabeth’s father is a strange man whose eyes are blank. He broke down during a television interview, but not one tear fell from his eyes—neither did they water. Within seconds he was smiling again. This behavior was repeated with at least two of Elizabeth’s uncles, and a female family friend.

The FBI, police, and other investigators pat themselves on the back as heroes, when it was private citizens who recognized Emmanuel and called police.

Authorities originally arrested Richard Ricci, a handyman with a police record who worked at the Smart home. He was imprisoned and died mysteriously of a brain hemorrhage while incarcerated.

This Emmanuel also worked at the Smart home. We must ask why a wealthy man like Mr. Smart would invite homeless men with criminal records into his home where his 6 young children live. If he wanted to help them out, he could have just given them money and connected them with conventional employers.

He could well afford to hire professional contractors. Poor Elizabeth was most likely used in outrageous ritual ceremonies over these months and was returned in 9 months to symbolize a “new birth” for the NWO as well as divert attention from the critical moments now in Iraq. She is now the main news, not Saddam.

There is a lot more to this case and I will bring it to you as I find out.

13 Again: (3/23/03)

The magic number “13” is in the headlines now, as the number of rockets fired at U.S. troops in Afghanistan. Continue to watch your papers to see how often you can spot this trigger number.

Good Deals, But Not For You: (3/23/03)

How would you like to buy a truck for 17¢, a copy machine for a nickel, and a drilling rig for $50,000? This is a sample of what the Energy Department sold to a community organization, the NTS Development Corporation, of Las Vegas.

The 23 trucks were valued at $448,000, the copy machine at $9,000, and the drilling rig was cleaned up and sold to an equipment broker for $248,000—who then listed it for sale for $3.9 million! Sometimes the Energy Department sold equipment that was not surplus, and then had to replace the equipment at full price.

I’d like to see the list of who knew who, and who made what. I know it wasn’t me or any other ordinary taxpayer. The audit that “revealed” this information marks “at least” the second time that financial mismanagement has occurred in the Energy Department operations in recent months.

War News, Old News: (3/23/03)

No surprises here. The war with Iraq was officially started one day after the Full Moon and one day before the Spring Equinox.

Reports are that inroads are being made, with unofficial reports that Saddam Hussein was seen being carried out of his compound after it was bombed, on a stretcher with an oxygen mask on his face. It was also unofficially reported that he and his troops are “not in close communication”.

News reports are filled with continued use of the trigger words “shock and awe” which, as I stated last week, sounds remarkably similar to the ancient Hebrew word “Shekinah” for “place where God is centered”.

Last week, Vice President Dick Cheney stated that he expected the war to last “weeks, not months”. Of course, it is much easier to garner support for a “quick” war than one that is long and drawn out. This statement does not seem to sit well with the tens of thousands who marched for peace across the globe.

In San Francisco, police arrested more than 1300 people (another 13 number). Newspaper headlines in the Chicago Tribune are that “Police Arrest Thousands Across Country”. Many peace protestors see this as an economic war rather than a war on terrorism, with many carrying banners stating “No Blood For Oil”. This is definitely one layer of the war.

More updates later, but probably not much that will be new to those of you who follow this site on a regular basis.

Editor’s note: In our April 2003 issue, between the bottom of page 59 and the top of page 60, some of the text is missing. Despite the wizardry of modern computer text layout, all is not perfect. With apologies to you and Al Martin, below, in bold, is the missing text.

The FAA says it’s a growing problem because Americans have become so obese. Fat people constitute a growing threat to public safety. When you walk into an airport, they may start to weigh you as a precursor to getting on one of these short-haul commuter flights. Any fat people—those who weigh more than 185 pounds—will pay a surcharge that will equal two normal people. Then they would have to buy two ticket-seats because it would deny someone else a seat.

Now they’re relating obesity to public safety issues. Next they’ll be saying that obesity supports terrorism.

And some more cheery news: It was announced that the U.S. Pension Guaranty Corporation, a quasi-government agency like Ginny Mae or Fannie Mae, which is the insurer of last resort for the pensions of 44 million working Americans, has experienced a record depletion of capital of some $3.85 BILLION in 2002.

ANNA DETWEILER’S LATEST VISIONS

From my e-mail, 3/14/03:

[quoting]

Hi Anna, What’s going on around the Sun with all of these “cruisers”? — Al

Hello Al, Sorry for not responding sooner to this e-mail. With the nice spring-like weather upon us, my time in the house is limited severely!

I’m not sure why the cruisers are out by the Sun, but in my opinion there’s almost always some of them there. The SOHO camera just doesn’t show them all of the time. I get the feeling the last while that we really are entering a time when the “wall” is coming towards us very fast. If you have noticed, we have had several objects of great interest come into our Solar System in just a very short time.

When I viewed the Sun today I noticed what looked like something similar to an asteroid belt that appears to be orbiting the Sun. This is the first time I’ve noticed it. There are lots and lots of objects in this belt, which is still, of course, quite a ways from the Sun. I’m wondering if the pieces may be from comet NEAT and/or its tail.

The object Enigma appears to be going to actually orbit the Earth now, too. It's making a wide swing around us, but if my observations hold true, it is still in somewhat of an orbit. That in itself could turn out to be very interesting!

On the political/war front, there seems to be a splitting and realignment going on. There appears to be very little stability in who belongs to what faction.

Of course, at the very tip of the pyramid [of power] there is always the tight-knit little group who think they have it all under control. They may be in for a surprise one of these days. There is probably no one on this planet who has more enemies than do they. That means they are not as secure as they believe themselves to be.

To say the least, it is a tumultuous time and my goal is to stay calm and balanced. Love and Peace, Anna

[end quoting]

Be sure to read Rick Martin's front-page feature article this month to fill-in more of the details about our busy Solar System that Anna is always observing and confirming through her directed "inner sight" talent—an ability that can't be so easily censored as are many of the SOHO and Hubble pictures! As more of us develop these kinds of Higher Abilities to perceive The Truth, the world controllers automatically lose their hold over us.

Which leads to the following profound advice from a group of children who are wise beyond their years:

PSYCHIC CHILDREN TO "VISIT" WHITE HOUSE?

From my e-mail, James Twyman, (james@emissaryoflight.com), 3/24/03:

Beloved Friends,

Last weekend 600 people gathered on the Big Island of Hawaii to listen to the messages of peace from several of the Psychic Children we have been working with over the past year. I believe it was one of the most profound experiences any of us have ever had, and the Children themselves were overjoyed with the opportunity.

In fact, during a panel discussion on Sunday, they presented their idea of a worldwide prayer vigil that they believe would have a profound effect on the current crisis in Iraq. Its simplicity and wisdom is overwhelming, and the fact that the idea comes from children makes it irresistible.

They want to call this: A Prayer Vigil for George Bush.

They explained that there is so much energy against President Bush that we are not helping him make decisions for the highest good of every person on the planet. The more we focus on what we don't like, the more it increases. They suggest that we see him as God would, and focus on the Light in the President, thereby amplifying the Light. The children believe that if hundreds of thousands of people do this at the same moment, then the effect on his consciousness would be profound. I have to agree.

Therefore, we have decided to conduct an emergency "Great Experiment IV" and are asking all the Spiritual Peacemakers around the world to join us in this important project.

Here are the details:

April 1, 2003, 11 a.m. New York time, 8 a.m. California Time (determine your own time zone based on this), hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of people will join together for fifteen minutes as one mind and pray for President Bush (and all those who influence his decision making) to make all his decisions based on the highest good of all beings on Earth. The Children suggested that we begin by imagining him as a little boy, and use our energy to empower his heart. They say that the boy is still within him, though he is very afraid. He doesn't need to be attacked for what he is doing, but loved, not for his actions, but for the Truth within him.

We call this: "Seeing as God Sees and Loving as God Loves." If possible, gather with other people during this vigil, and please pass this e-mail on to as many people as you can to help spread the word.

Hundreds of people will be joining together in Washington DC to anchor these important prayers. We are in the process of securing a permit for a location as close to the White House as possible, and will have children present a section of the "Children's Cloth of Many Colors" at the White House that same day. (The Children's Cloth of Many Colors is over one-third of a mile long, and is made up of pieces of cloth that have been infused with the energy of peace from tens of thousands of children from around the world. It came from the original "Cloth of Many Colors" peace project I started in 1999 which has been presented at the UN in New York, the U.S. Capitol, the Pentagon, and many other places around the world. (For more information on the CCMC, go to the www.themastersgroup.org website.) If you live in the Washington area and would like to join the group praying near the White House, send an e-mail to: geharmony@aol.com. You will receive a reply as soon as the location has been secured.

The Children wanted me to stress that this has nothing to do with agreeing or disagreeing with President Bush in regard to the war in Iraq. They say that in order to be Spiritual Peacemakers we must release our judgment and focus only on the higher good. George Bush has the power to affect the lives of so many people, and we pray that he will do so with compassion and peace. The intention of this vigil is to break down the walls of fear and increase the love in his heart. It is the gift of the children. Please join us.

Once again, April 1, 11 a.m. EST, fifteen minutes sending George Bush all the love you have in your heart. And tell the whole world.

In Peace, James Twyman

To sign up for this list go to the <http://emissaryoflight.com/emallist—signup.html> website location.

This information will appear too late for you to get involved in the April 1 event, but this doesn't stop us from continuing to direct this same powerful prayer energy as individuals or through forming our own focus groups.

Notice how the children emphasize to pray for the GREATEST GOOD FOR ALL, as all prayers should be directed. We usually do not know what is the best answer for any situation we might feel compelled to pray about. A simple prayer of "God's will be done" will usually be the best way to help achieve the most good.

WHY ANALOG IS COOL AGAIN

From Wired magazine, March 2003:

[quoting]

by Paul Boutin

[Paul Boutin (paul@paulboutin.com) wrote about CD-R swapping in Wired 10.12]

Super-sensitive switches etched in silicon? This is not your father's solid state.

Sharp, vibrant, incredibly detailed: The pictures produced by Foveon's X3 image sensor chip are seductive evidence that pixels will displace film. The Sigma SD9—the first commercial camera to use Foveon's technology—captures three times more color per pixel than standard digital shooters. But here's the thing: This isn't digital technology. It's a twist on old-fashioned analog electronics—an array of millions of light filters and detectors etched in silicon.

Weird as it sounds, the road to smaller, cheaper, more energy-efficient consumer electronics may be paved with analog technology. These circuits are built from the same components as their digital counterparts, but suck 90% less battery power.

The difference? In an analog device, each transistor acts like a dial, with a wide range of readings that depend on the sinuous fluctuation of voltage, current, amplitude, and frequency. Digital circuits, on the other hand, use the same transistors as simple on-off toggle switches. Analog transistors capture far more information, so you need fewer of them.

Advances in the digital realm are powering the technology. Tiny analog circuits, sensors, and even radios can be manufactured using the same fabrication techniques—microscopic etching on semiconductor wafers—that have kept Moore's law chugging along.

Devices with analog chips in their guts will begin landing in consumers' hands this year in the form of high-resolution cameras and mobile phones that can go a week without recharging.

Much of the new analog circuitry creeping into consumer gadgets springs from the research of Carver Mead, Foveon's founder and chair. As a Caltech professor (now emeritus) in the 1970s, Mead sought to imitate the analog elegance of the human brain.

In 1986, Mead cofounded a company, Synaptics, to build high-performance analog computers. He understood that solid state circuitry would be ideal for connecting computers to the real world of light, touch, and sound, which are analog by nature.

Synaptics eventually focused on the tactile, becoming the leader in laptop touchpads. (It controls about 80% of that market.)

Next came Foveon, founded in 1997. Its X3 image sensor chip is perhaps the most impressive analog electronics application so far. Standard digital cameras use filters that permit light sensors to capture only one primary color per pixel. From there, a signal processor runs algorithms that approximate the missing colors by sampling nearby pixels. That guessing game introduces telltale lines and whorls into the final picture. Foveon found a way to use standard silicon as an analog color separator. One of the optical properties of silicon is that different wavelengths of light penetrate it to different depths. This allows Foveon chips to stack red, green, and blue sensors at every pixel.

Impinj, another Mead startup, hopes to conquer sound with a technology that lets digital logic fine-tune a cell phone's analog transmitter midcall, so the overall circuit can be smaller. Impinj claims the design draws one-tenth the power of its two-part predecessors. It also puts out a more efficient signal, allowing phone networks to carry greater call volume. It costs less, too.

For Foveon chief scientist Dick Lyon, who toiled for decades in the shadow of the Digital Revolution, there's a sweet payback to sculpting analog parts from silicon: "If you do it right, you can make transistors and create devices no one imagined."

It's always interesting to see the pattern where, the further we advance in technology, how the old comes back to help improve the new. A lot of you audio buffs noticed this when modern transistor-based power amplifiers and preamplifiers have added old-fashioned vacuum tubes back into their circuitry to help "sweeten" the hifi sound coming out your speakers.

REINVENTING THE WHEEL

From Wired magazine, March 2003:

by Joshua Davis

Michelin's new Pax tire earned some gearhead cred last year when it set a 223-mph speed record on Italy's Nardo High-Speed Test Track. (It had a little help from the Edonis supercar.) But to see the rubber meet the open road, you have to look to France, where 10,000 Renault minivans are riding around on the next-gen tire that runs even when it's flat and wirelessly tells the driver it needs repair. Goodyear has licensed the technology, and Rolls-Royce will roll out the Pax in North America this spring on its 2004 Phantom. Spare tires may soon be a thing of the past.

Michelin's Pax system incorporates a hard-rubber support ring inside its regular steel-belted radial. If it gets punctured, you can still drive another 120 miles at up to 50 mph—eliminating the need for a spare. Pax-certified service stations are now all over France, and Michelin has deployed a fleet of 483 trucks to rescue downed Renaults elsewhere in Europe.

Michelin patented the radial in 1946, ushering in a new age of tire technology—at least in France. The radials had steel cords, allowing them to last up to 10 times longer than other tires. The French embraced the idea right away. But thanks to American protectionism, the radial didn't arrive in the U.S. until 1967, when it was sold on Lincoln's Mark II. Michelin executives are confident the Pax won't take two decades to pick up momentum.

A standard tire is held to the rim by air pressure. The Pax tire is held to the rim by a built-in rubber wedge. Additional torque—say, from sudden braking—actually tightens the seal. If you have a blowout, the tire stays put. There's another advantage: The Pax sidewall is flat, an aerodynamic improvement that cuts rolling resistance by 12%.

Each of the tire valves is equipped with a radio transmitter that feeds temperature and pressure data to your dashboard display. If a tire's air is low, the display tells you to get to a service center. It was no easy task to embed the 1.27-ounce transmitter inside a wheel generating 11,000 pounds of centrifugal force. To prevent the transmitter from warping the rim, the Pax was built lopsided—the side opposite the device has 1.27 ounces less metal.

Michelin has long been a leader in tire technologies and this latest achievement looks to be quite a feather in their cap and provide improved safety for the motorist—assuming these new tires are priced reasonably to be of general value!

BROADBAND FOR SUCKERS AT BEST BUY STORES

From Wired magazine, March 2003:

by Joseph Portera

In a shamelessly clever marketing gambit, Best Buy is selling shrink-wrapped AT&T Broadband digital cable kits for $10 a throw. The truth: There's no "kit" inside, just a brochure with an 800 number and five pay-per-view movie coupons. Best Buy used to hand out the AT&T kits for free, but it found that customers were more likely to order service if they had financial incentive and something shiny to put in the shopping basket. Upon subscribing, they get their 10 bucks back, and Best Buy collects a handsome fee from AT&T. (When a customer doesn't sign up, the retailer keeps the $10.) Savvy shoppers, however, note that all the information in and on the box can be had for free at the www.attbroadband.com website.

"Best Buy is about boxes—we've got people coming into the stores to purchase them" explains Jeff Stratman, a senior buyer. "The digital cable kit isn't the only product we sell that's essentially air." Indeed, the company also packages Netflix, assorted service contracts, and computer courses. The choice is yours: money for nothing or clicks for free.

This is a sobering reflection about our material society and what motivates how we buy things.

QUESTION: HOW IS TECHNOLOGY CHANGING SURGERY?

From Wired magazine, March 2003:

David Vining, Surgeon; director, Virtual Endoscopy Center, Wake Forest University School of Medicine:

Surgery and radiology will meld as image guidance tools become more sophisticated. The kids of today who pick up great manual dexterity and hand-eye coordination playing with their Game Boys may someday be driving microscopic machinery into the human body to diagnose ailments and repair or remove tissue.

Atul Gawande, Surgeon; author, Complications: A Surgeon's Notes On An Imperfect Science:

Ultimately we want people to get right up off the operating table and resume their lives. We just treated a patient with a 3-inch-wide aneurysm in his abdominal aorta. Instead of making a stem-to-stern belly incision, we used a covered stent delivered through a tiny puncture in the leg. He went home the next day feeling well, a 2-inch dressing on his thigh. But this is still just a hint of where we're trying to go.

Jon Linkous, Executive director, American Telemedicine Association:

Progress in tissue regeneration will mean more component replacements—simply pulling out a bad lung and slipping in a new one. Remote sensors and feedback will allow surgeons to immediately operate at the scene of an accident from an electronic surgical suite of a hospital. [end quoting]

If you have to go through a surgery procedure, it's great to see how advances such as these are working to limit the amount of invasion of the body cavity as well as shortening the recovery time.

QUOTES FROM LITTLE KIDS

From an e-mail friend, 3/25/03:

[quoting]

• 3-year-old Reese: "Our Father, who does art in heaven, Harold is His name. Amen."

• A little boy was overheard praying: "Lord, if you can't make me a better boy, don't worry about it. I'm having a real good time like I am."

• A Sunday school class was studying the Ten Commandments. They were ready to discuss the last one. The teacher asked if anyone could tell her what it was. Susie raised her hand, stood tall, and quoted: "Thou shall not take the covers off the neighbor's wife."

• After the christening of his baby brother in church, Jason sobbed all the way home in the back seat of the car. His father asked him three times what was wrong. Finally the boy replied: "That preacher said he wanted us brought up in a Christian home, and I wanted to stay with you guys."

• I had been teaching my three-year-old daughter, Caitlin, the Lord's Prayer for several evenings at bedtime. She would repeat after me the lines from the prayer. Finally, she decided to go solo. I listened with pride as she carefully enunciated each word, right up to the end of the prayer: "Lead us not into temptation" she prayed, "but deliver us some e-mail. Amen."

• And one particular four-year-old prayed: "And forgive us our trash baskets as we forgive those who put trash in our baskets."

• A Sunday school teacher asked her children, as they were on the way to church service: "And why is it necessary to be quiet in church?" One bright little girl replied: "Because people are sleeping."

• Six-year-old Angie and her four-year-old brother Joel were sitting together in church. Joel giggled, sang, and talked out loud. Finally, his big sister had had enough. "You're not supposed to talk out loud in church." "Why? Who's going to stop me?" Joel asked. Angie pointed to the back of the church and said: "See those two men standing by the door? They're hushers."

• A mother was preparing pancakes for her sons Kevin, 5, and Ryan, 3. The boys began to argue over who would get the first pancake. Their mother saw the opportunity for a moral lesson. "If Jesus were sitting here, He would say: 'Let my brother have the first pancake, I can wait.'" Kevin turned to his younger brother and said: "Ryan, you be Jesus!"

• A father was at the beach with his children when the four-year-old son ran up to him, grabbed his hand, and led him to the shore, where a seagull lay dead in the sand. "Daddy, what happened to him?" the son asked. "He died and went to Heaven" the Dad replied. The boy thought a moment and then said: "Did God throw him back down?"

• A wife invited some people to dinner. At the table, she turned to their six-year-old daughter and said: "Would you like to say the blessing?" "I wouldn't know what to say" the girl replied. "Just say what you hear Mommy say" the wife answered. The daughter bowed her head and said: "Lord, why on Earth did I invite all these people to dinner?"

LIFE HAS A WAY OF COMING FULL CIRCLE

From Costco magazine, March 2003: [quoting]

Wally Amos: BE POSITIVE!

In my life, I have noticed how things have a way of coming full circle. Also, that all things do ultimately work together for good. Let me explain by taking you on a little trip.

In 1948, my mother and father divorced. Divorce is not looked upon as a positive experience. However, as a result of my parents getting divorced, I moved to New York City to live with my Aunt Della. It was Aunt Della who first made chocolate chip cookies for me.

In 1970, while I was living in Hollywood, one of my actress clients, Shari Summers, brought me some homemade chocolate chip cookies. It reminded me how much I loved them. Immediately, I wanted to bake them myself. Shari shared the recipe with me, and after our meeting I went to the supermarket to purchase the ingredients.

For years I worked at perfecting the recipe while sharing my cookies with friends and associates, who suggested that I go into business selling them. I declined because my goal was to become important in show business.

In 1974, with my show business career declining rapidly, a friend, B.J. Gilmore, suggested that we open a cookie store together, adding that she had a friend she could get to put up the money. I said yes, made a commitment to do just that, and the rest is history.

During my years as Famous Amos I made many mistakes, which ultimately caused me to lose the company. I was sued over ownership of my name. While involved in the lawsuit, I started another cookie company called Uncle Nona. Uncle Nona eventually became Uncle Wally's, which is now a thriving muffin company.

Now, years later, I am once again promoting cookies: Aunt Della's Cookies, which honors and pays tribute to the lady who started it all.

I'm convinced that when you stay positive and do your best every day, things work themselves out. Like dots in a puzzle, all experiences are truly connected.

Wally Amos is founder of Uncle Wally's Muffin Company. You can email him at amos@aloha.net or contact him through his www.wallyamos.com Internet website.

[end quoting]

Amos always has an inspiring story to tell, and does so in the Costco (warehouse discount stores) magazine on a regular basis. Thank you very much, Amos, and please continue to share your common sense. ☺

Dalai Lama's Views On War And Iraq Conflict

Editor's note: The following is the English translation of His Holiness the Dalai Lama's views on war and the Iraq conflict that was shared recently with Buddhist devotees and others on the first day of the Great Prayer Festival.

This speech was translated and issued (through the www.tibet.com Internet website) by the Department of Information and International Relations, Central Tibetan Administration, 11 March 2003, in Dharmasala, India.

The 14th (and current) Dalai Lama was born in 1935 and enthroned in 1940, but fled in 1959 with 100,000 followers after a failed revolt against the Chinese, who had occupied Tibet since 1950. His government-in-exile is in Dharmasala, India. A revered figure worldwide, he was awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize in recognition of his nonviolent campaign to end Chinese domination of Tibet.

With that in mind, consider that the Dalai Lama is no stranger to the tensions and tragedies generated through willful political incursions into regions that belong to others. He understands well how such political maneuverings are, themselves, merely outward mechanisms for generating the inner turmoil which the Dark Energies thrive on who have long ruled this planet.

Thus, read his message very carefully to really appreciate the Power and Wisdom of that which he suggests in strategically simple terms. Remember: the REAL fight is not on the physical plane. Thus it is through our summoning and focusing, together, of Higher Energies, through our prayers and attitudes, that peace will ultimately be achieved because the Evil Energies cannot exist in the high-frequency environment of Light so created.

3/11/03 DALAI LAMA

His Holiness The Dalai Lama's Views
On War And Iraq Conflict

The Iraq issue is becoming very critical now. War, or the kind of organized fighting, is something that came with the development of human civilization. It seems to have become part and parcel of human history or human temperament.

At the same time, the world is changing dramatically. We have seen that we cannot solve human problems by fighting. Problems resulting from differences in opinion must be resolved through the gradual process of dialogue.

DALAI LAMA

Undoubtedly, wars produce victors and losers—but only temporarily. Victory or defeat resulting from wars cannot be long-lasting.

Secondly, our world has become so interdependent that the defeat of one country must impact the rest of the world, or cause all of us to suffer losses—either directly or indirectly.

Today, the world is so small and so interdependent that the concept of war has become anachronistic, an outmoded approach. As a rule, we always talk about reform and changes. Among the old traditions, there are many aspects that are either ill-suited to our present reality or are counterproductive due to their shortsightedness.

These, we have consigned to the dustbin of history. War too should be relegated to the dustbin of history.

Unfortunately, although we are in the 21st Century, we still have not been able to get rid of the habit of our older generations. I am talking about the belief or confidence that we can solve our problems with arms. It is because of this notion that the world continues to be dogged by all kinds of problems.

But what can we do? What can we do when big powers have already made up their minds? All we can do is to pray for a gradual end to the tradition of wars.

Of course, the militaristic tradition may not end easily. But, let us think of this: If there were bloodshed, people in positions of power, or those who are responsible, will find safe places; they will escape the consequent hardship. They will find safety for themselves, one way or the other.

But what about the poor people, the defenseless people, the children, the old and infirm? They are the ones who will have to bear the brunt of devastation.

When weapons are fired, the result will be death and destruction. Weapons will not discriminate between the innocent and guilty. A missile, once fired, will show no respect to the innocent, poor, defenseless, or those worthy of compassion. Therefore, the real losers will be the poor and defenseless, ones who are completely innocent, and those who lead a hand-to-mouth existence.

On the positive side, we now have people volunteer medical care, aid, and other humanitarian assistance in war-torn regions. This is a heart-winning development of the modern age.

Okay, now—let us pray that there be no war at all, if possible. However, if a war does break out, let us pray that there be a minimum of bloodshed and hardship. I don't know whether our prayers will be of any practical help. But this is all we can do for the moment. ☸

Assault On Iraq: Prelude To World War III

Eustace Mullins

Editor's note: As you can tell from the following, Eustace Mullins is doing well enough to pound out this most timely article on his trusty old typewriter. (See last month's SPECTRUM for details of what had befallen Eustace, and see Rick Martin's sidebar story nearby for some details of Eustace's "release from captivity" and return to the comforts of his own home environment.)

As always, Eustace brings an insight we could call "the long lens of historical perspective"—this time to note important parallels between the diabolical forces that brought about World War II and those same forces perhaps now bringing about World War III through the prelude of what's going on in Iraq.

If ever there was a persuasive argument for Dark Evil Entities long controlling the affairs of planet Earth, such must be evident from the patterns of consistency in behavior: The puppets carrying out the evil agenda change from one generation to another, but the formula, the plan, the methodology, the goals remain invariant—like passing the football from one player to another on the way to the goalposts.

While many of you readers are quite familiar with Eustace Mullins—the Great Grandmaster of Truthbringing—for newer readers we will mention that Eustace is a longtime, highly respected, and often persecuted author of five of the most well-documented, controversial, and hard-hitting volumes ever published on the crooks in high secret places and how they have long controlled world affairs to conform to their own agenda.

Though his books are CONSTANTLY in demand, like the rest of us who bring Truth, he is poor and has little monetary resources at this time with which to reprint these fine manuscripts.

For those of you who may not be familiar with his most important classic research works, they include:

- THE CURSE OF CANAAN: A Demonology Of History,
- MURDER BY INJECTION: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy

Against America,

• THE WORLD ORDER: Our Secret Rulers,

• THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE, and

• RAPE OF JUSTICE: America's Tribunals Exposed.

We are, as always, deeply honored that Eustace chooses The SPECTRUM as the vehicle through which to share his insightful writings, in turn to share with you who read AND SUPPORT this conduit of Truth.

3/25/03 EUSTACE MULLINS

The nation of Iraq is now under assault, from the combined forces of Nazism, Communism, Fascism, Zionism, and democracy. Supporting the assault on Iraq are the most feared intelligence agencies in the world, led by the Mossad (the assassination teams of the State of Israel), and its active collaborators, the CIA in Washington, the British SIS (the famed Secret Intelligence Service), the KGB of Russia, and such backup agencies as the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and its chief Washington agents, Senator Schumer of New York, aided by Senator Hillary Clinton of New York, and the enabling agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Department of Justice under Attorney General John Ashcroft.

One can only marvel at the ingenuity with which these seemingly incompatible forces have been patched together, and the unanimity with which they have accepted the somewhat ingenuous and innocuous President Bush as their leader, together with his equally innocuous understudy, Tony Blair of England. These role players have been carefully chosen not for what they are, but for what they represent.

I am the only scholar in the world who has established their pedigree, which is the House of Rothschild bankers in Europe, and their able representatives, the late dictators Josef Stalin of Russia and Adolf Hitler of Germany. These mass murderers set records for liberating their millions of victims from the burden of physical existence. Remarkably alike in their political will, they finally formed the notorious Hitler-Stalin pact and launched the Second World War.

The war parties are again marching together for their common goal, and in President Bush they have his impeccable record as the Rothschild agent, through the Bush family's long record of service to the Harriman-Rothschild axis at Brown Brothers Harriman, whose chairman was George Herbert Walker, godfather of the Bush clan.

Averell Harriman served as the world courier for the Rothschilds during the 1930s and 1940s, setting up World War II, and his successor, President Bush, announced on June 1, 2002 his personal goal of launching pre-emptive strikes against sixty nations, as the opening gun of his War on Terror, which would launch World War III.

The startling revelation, delivered to the graduating class of West Point, was carefully withheld from the American people by a compliant press, and I only discovered it during a visit to Japan some weeks later. It has never been reported here.

Harriman's credentials as the Rothschild representative were established by a unique introduction to the world through eleven successive novels beginning with World's End (1940) by the rabid Socialist propagandist Upton Sinclair (1878-1968), who had joined the Socialist Party in 1902 and became its most ardent publicist.

Harriman's family fortune had been established by the Union Pacific Railroad, which had been financed by Rothschild millions advanced by its New York agents, Kuhn Loeb Co., and the National City Bank of New York.

The Sinclair novels portrayed a wealthy young man named Lanny Budd, who traveled about the world visiting heads of state and indoctrinating them in the advantages of world Socialism, which would make a better world. The thinly disguised Averell Harriman thus had his carte d'identité [literally "identity card" or establishment of an easily recognizable identity or position] in these novels. Anyone could glance at them and see this could only be Averell Harriman, and the various heads of state would accept his suggestions as the representative of the Rothschilds.

Hitler then employed his ingenious intelligence agencies to employ the best Jewish forgers in Europe from German concentration camps to forge impeccable documents "proving" that Stalin's leading generals were in the pay of the Germans. Bank statements, checks, and hundreds of other papers "proved" that the Russian generals had been for years accepting payments from the Germans. The documents were delivered to Stalin, who saw at once that they were genuine. He then had his generals shot.

A few weeks later, in June 1941, Hitler's armies invaded Russia, which was in complete disarray. Stalin, with no generals, realized he had been duped, and he saw no chance for Russia to survive. He suffered a complete nervous breakdown and was hospitalized.

Soviet Russia had no one to take his place, since he had been the absolute dictator of the Soviet paradise, and the Rothschilds were hard-put to keep World War II in progress.

They sent their ablest man, Averell Harriman, to keep Russia in the war. Roosevelt promptly dispatched him to Russia, as U.S. Ambassador to Russia. He served throughout World War II.

At the end of the war, Stalin recovered sufficiently to resume leadership of Russia, and Harriman returned to the United States. Thus for several years, Harriman served as the replacement of Stalin, the worst mass killer the world has ever known.

Harriman's replacement, President Bush, now leads the world against Iraq in the latest killing orgy. Saddam Hussein believed that the Bush boys were sending troops over to seize some oil, never dreaming that he was facing the heir of Stalin in this operation.

In his lack of preparation for this role, Saddam reveals that he is as provincial as Hitler in 1940, not yet ready to play with the big boys. This ignorance of his enemies will cost him dearly, probably resulting in the loss of his people, and the loss of his own life.

For the United States, the loss will be even more costly, resulting in the final evisceration of our constitutional government, and the final enslavement of the American people.

4/4/03 RICK MARTIN

In late March, Eustace finally returned to his home after regaining his legal rights as a mentally competent individual. With the heroic efforts of his nephew, who worked tirelessly to revamp his home in a number of ways, Eustace is well rested. He is thrilled to be "set free" from the nursing facility. He has asked me to convey to all of you that he is back working, and it's "full speed ahead".

Eustace now has a full-time nurse at his home, and his nephew is staying with him full-time as well.

Your continued good wishes, prayers, and notes of encouragement are most welcome. If you desire to assist Eustace in any way (which would be very welcome, even though he would never ask you), you may send correspondence for Eustace in care of The SPECTRUM and we will make sure he receives it.

A Writ For Martyrs by Eustace Mullins

This is a fully documented exposé of the atrocities which federal agents regularly commit against American citizens.

This book reproduces 121 pages from Eustace Mullins' FBI file, which he obtained only by the personal intervention of a college classmate, Senator John Warner, Rep. Of Virginia. The FBI refused for two years to send Eustace his files through Freedom of Information Act inquiries. When Eustace found it, he discovered a plot by the FBI, with 60 pages of memos, in which J. Edgar Hoover personally ordered that Eustace be committed to a mental institution for life.

On the basis of these revelations, Eustace obtained two "Default Judgments" against the FBI in Federal Court. One judgment was for $50 million, and one for $35 million, which remain on the books today.

This book also documents atrocities committed against Eustace's handicapped sister, his ailing mother, and his invalid father, who all died of heart attacks after daily harassments by the FBI terrorists.

Mullins was one of the principal victims of the notorious FBI counter-intelligence program called COINTEL, set up by Alex Rosen, one of five FBI assistant directors. The COINTEL program was actually organized by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and the Mossad intelligence agency.

This book will give you an idea of what Eustace has had to put up with in his life as a crusader for Truth.

Senator Robert Byrd: “Where Are We Taking The World?”

Senator Robert Byrd

Editor's note: Robert C. Byrd, midway through his 85th year and 8th term as a Democrat representing West Virginia, is our nation's senior-most Senator. He has also lately been capturing, in passionate words spoken on the Senate Floor, the feelings of a troubled national conscience.

His increasingly more outspoken opposition to the Bush Administration's arrogant shenanigans against the American people and ideals was last shared within these pages in a January 2003 article titled Homeland Security Bill's "License To Kill"—in conjunction with galvanizing comments from Dr. Len Horowitz and from Representative Ron Paul, M.D., (R-TX) who is in his 7th congressional term as a true patriot.

As the War with Iraq was being signaled to momentarily begin—with or without United Nations backing—Senator Byrd made the following impassioned comments which we are sharing with you here.

SEN. ROBERT C. BYRD

Senate Remarks By Robert C. Byrd

“Budget For The Cost Of War”

Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate was one of simple commonsense. The President last night spoke to the nation of imminent military action. The American people know that war is looming. The Senate knows that war is looming.

Yet the budget resolution before the Senate ignores that war. It ignores the obvious costs that are staring us square in the face. [Editor's note: That number was quietly announced on the CNN ticker that runs at the bottom of the “news” to be at $1 TRILLION. This was presented during the blitzkrieg on Baghdad that marked only the second or third day of the war, depending on your time zone. But note how the information was slickly inserted while a mesmerized public were dazzled with a “fireworks” display beyond belief—attacking a city of four million innocent people.] This Senate ought to be up-front with the nation and anticipate the costs of war in this budget.

Last night, I went to the White House with a number of my colleagues from this body and from the other body. The message I carried was simple: I will support funds to ensure the safety of the men and women in our Armed Forces. They did not ask for this mission. They did not ask to go overseas. But they are there. They are ready to carry out their orders. They are ready to defend America. I will not flinch when it comes to their safety and support.

But what I will not support is a blank check for this Administration to allow military action in Iraq to slowly creep into other operations, into other lands.

We have seen how the goal of disarmament in Iraq has changed to fighting terrorism in Iraq, to ousting the leadership of Iraq, to bringing peace to the Middle East through war in Iraq, to forcing Saddam Hussein and his sons from Iraq. Is it any wonder that I and others worry what goal may be next? Where is this strategy taking us? Where are we taking the world?

I have stood in this chamber time and again to warn of the dangers of this policy of preemptive strike without imminent threat.

I have urged the President to step back and reconsider his decisions. But the Administration has its eyes shut, its ears covered, and its mind closed.

The decision, apparently, has been made.

This is a war that does not have to be.

This is a war that could be avoided.

But the President has placed this nation on the road to war, and there is little hope of turning back.

In the coming days, we will hear again from the President. I hope that, as he gives the command to commence military action, he and his Administration are looking several moves ahead.

Reconstruction and peacekeeping will be huge tasks. The American people must be prepared for the strains of these missions.

We should not feed them rosy scenarios that a war will be painless or that an occupation would be of minimal length. Nor should we keep them in the dark.

It is imperative that, in times of crisis, the American people can maintain trust in their government.

We must repair our alliances. Already our move to war has had fallout for our closest ally, Britain, with the resignation of their former Foreign Secretary. There is an ever-increasing chance of serious repercussions in the Middle East. We will need the combined political strength of all of our friends and allies; and the process of repairing our ties must begin immediately.

Winston Churchill once said about war: “The statesman who yields to war fever must realize that, once the signal is given, he is no longer the master of policy but the slave of unforeseeable and uncontrollable events.”

It is those unforeseeable and uncontrollable events, that may be precipitated by a war with Iraq, that keep me awake at night.

I wish I could share the President's confidence that the toppling of Saddam Hussein and his regime will set into motion a peaceful revolution in the Middle East. Perhaps it will. Perhaps we will be lucky.

But I have watched too many decades of strife and bloodshed in the Middle East to believe that yet another war can serve as a reliable roadmap to peace.

It is true that no one can predict the final cost of this war. But it certainly is not zero.

Yet that is what the President has asked us to budget, and that is what the resolution would budget: absolutely nothing.

It is as if the looming war was simply a figment of one's imagination.

If only that were the case.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

"The Arrogance Of Power"

I believe in this beautiful country.

I have studied its roots and gloried in the wisdom of its magnificent Constitution.

I have marveled at the wisdom of its Founders and Framers.

Generation after generation of Americans has understood the lofty ideals that underlie our great Republic.

I have been inspired by the story of their sacrifice and their strength.

But—today I weep for my country.

I have watched the events of recent months with a heavy, heavy heart. No more is the image of America one of strong, yet benevolent peacekeeper.

The image of America has changed. Around the globe, our friends mistrust us, our word is disputed, our intentions are questioned.

Instead of reasoning with those with whom we disagree, we demand obedience or threaten recrimination.

Instead of isolating Saddam Hussein, we seem to have isolated ourselves. We proclaim a new doctrine of preemption which is understood by few and feared by many.

We say that the United States has the right to turn its firepower on any corner of the globe which might be suspect in the war on terrorism. We assert that right without the sanction of any international body.

As a result, the world has become a much more dangerous place.

We flaunt our superpower status with arrogance. We treat UN Security Council members like ingrates who offend our princely dignity by lifting their heads from the carpet. Valuable alliances are split.

After war has ended, the United States will have to rebuild much more than the country of Iraq. We will have to rebuild America's image around the globe.

The case this Administration tries to make to justify its fixation with war is tainted by charges of falsified documents and circumstantial evidence. We cannot convince the world of the necessity of this war for one simple reason: This is a war of choice.

There is no credible information to connect Saddam Hussein to 9/11. The twin towers fell because a worldwide terrorist group, Al Qaeda, with cells in over 60 nations, struck at our wealth and our influence by turning our own planes into missiles, one of which would likely have slammed into the dome of this beautiful Capitol except for the brave sacrifice of the passengers on board.

The brutality seen on September 11th and in other terrorist attacks we have witnessed around the globe are the violent and desperate efforts by extremists to stop the daily encroachment of Western values upon their cultures. That is what we fight. It is a force not confined to borders. It is a shadowy entity with many faces, many names, and many addresses.

But, this Administration has directed all of the anger, fear, and grief which emerged from the ashes of the twin towers and the twisted metal of the Pentagon toward a tangible villain—one we can see and hate and attack. And villain he is.

But—he is the wrong villain. And this is the wrong war.

If we attack Saddam Hussein, we will probably drive him from power. But the zeal of our friends to assist our global war on terrorism may have already taken flight.

The general unease surrounding this war is not just due to "orange alert".

There is a pervasive sense of "rush and risk" while too many questions remain unanswered:

How long will we be in Iraq?

What will be the cost?

What is the ultimate mission?

How great is the danger at home?

A pall has fallen over the Senate Chamber.

We avoid our solemn duty to debate the one topic on the minds of all Americans, even while scores of thousands of our sons and daughters faithfully do their duty in Iraq.

What is happening to this country?

When did we become a nation which ignores and berates our friends?

When did we decide to risk undermining international order by adopting a radical and doctrinaire approach to using our awesome military might?

How can we abandon diplomatic efforts when the turmoil in the world cries out for diplomacy?

Why can this President not seem to see that America's true power lies not in its will to intimidate, but in its ability to inspire?

War appears inevitable [in fact, announced by Bush as beginning the very evening of this speech]. But, I continue to hope that the cloud will lift.

Perhaps Saddam will yet turn tail and run.

Perhaps reason will somehow still prevail.

I, along with millions of Americans, will pray for the safety of our troops, for the innocent civilians in Iraq, and for the security of our homeland.

May God continue to bless the United States of America in the troubled days ahead. And may we somehow recapture the vision which, for the present, eludes us.

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS): A Great Global Scam!

Editor's note: The timely importance of the following article from longtime courageous SPECTRUM friend, Dr. Len Horowitz, is growing with each new episode of this unfolding SARS drama. The world elite controllers have long planned a massive depopulation of we mere "useless eaters and consumers of natural resources" and whether the SARS bug is simply a "warm-up" exercise, a political-economic "slap" of China for opposing the war in Iraq, or the first step in an attempt to carry out the diabolical depopulation agenda—or all of the above—is yet to be revealed.

*For you newer readers, Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz, D.M.D., M.A., M.P.H. is the author of thirteen books, including the national bestseller Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident, Or Intentional? and Death In The Air: Globalism, Terrorism, And Toxic Warfare.*

His main website is the very comprehensive www.tetrahedron.org and in the article below he also refers to a new dedicated www.SARSscam.com website concerning this suspicious subject. More information about Dr. Horowitz is at the end of the article.

4/2/03 DR. LEN HOROWITZ

Abstract

Rather than a public health emergency, the "Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome"—generally called SARS—is best diagnosed as a "Sickening And Repulsive Scam".

This article argues that this unprecedented viral attack is, alternatively, an ingenious social experiment featuring institutionalized bioterrorism for widespread psychosocial control. The outcome of this experiment, whether it leads to population reduction or not, depends on you.

Background

You are about to read much neglected truths pertaining to this bizarre new pneumonia-like illness called SARS. Authorities explain this acronym for Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome as simply the latest threat in an ongoing series of attacks on humanity by mysteriously mutating "super-germs". Yet, a careful study of this multi-disciplinary subject reveals something amiss far more insidious and deadly than SARS.

Dr. Len Horowitz

This spreading scourge of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, stretching from Asia to North America, has all the earmarks of a novel social experiment in population manipulation aimed to culture the mass mind for the arrival of "The Big One"—a biological agent that will facilitate decimation of approximately a third to half of the world's population, in keeping with current official population reduction objectives.

Naturally you would be disinclined to believe the above sentence. Open-mindedness in this domain threatens exposure to a "Twilight Zone" of knowledge in which reality is far stranger than fiction. Your first instinct, therefore, might be to close this page in favor of the next SARS site that promises more of the standard treatments broadcast on every official news page and government report on this subject. But, if you choose to have your worldview shattered by considering the little known truths surrounding Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, then continue reading.

"No great epidemic has ever evolved divorced from major socio-political upheaval." — Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz

Introduction

My name is Dr. Leonard Horowitz, and I will be your SARS tour guide. As a Harvard graduate in public health, and expert in the fields of medical sociology, behavioral science, and emerging diseases, I am best known for my work exposing the man-made origin of HIV/AIDS in the national bestselling book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident, Or Intentional?

This was my tenth book that American grassroots activists, medical physicians, and scientists included, made a national bestseller. U.S. Government documents that I reprinted for the first time for the world to see were strong endorsements for this work.

Included here are stunning and tragic contracts under which numerous AIDS-like and Ebola-like viruses were bioengineered by the U.S. Army's 6th leading biological weapons contractor, Litton Bionetics, a medical subsidiary of the mega-military weapons contractor called Litton Industries. You can get free information on this man-made vaccine-transmitted theory of AIDS at the www.OriginofAIDS.com website.

Here I focus your attention on SARS, and what mainstream sources of information are withholding about this new pandemic.

This narrative was written immediately following my return from Total Health 2003—an alternative medical conference in Toronto, Canada, held March 27-30, 2003. I landed in Toronto the day that SARS began dominating front-page headlines in every major newspaper in the country. Five consecutive days of unprecedented media blitz in Canada's largest city over the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome left the entire population frightened and bewildered.

Having been well-trained in media health promotion and persuasion methods from my behavioral science studies at Harvard University, I concluded that something akin to a social experiment was underway. With SARS, people were being frightened beyond reason, I realized. The classic definition of phobia was being manifested on a social, if not global, scale.

Surely the SARS death rate, approximately 3%, was insufficient cause for such widespread panic. The media successfully whipped the Canadian population into a trembling mass of masked and quarantined "sheeple". Officials were forced to direct the closing of hospitals, restaurants, schools, and workplaces with only two deaths reported at the onset of the media onslaught. Within a few days, more than a thousand healthcare workers volunteered for home quarantine because of SARS. Otherwise, they faced legal arrest and incarceration as advised by the World Health Organization. You will find many of these reports from Canada's daily newspapers, documenting these facts, as well as incoming American press reports, in the archive files of my website.

Mission

I have dedicated my website to examining the social and political implications, as well as the correlates (things related to) and antecedents (factors or events that predated or precipitated) this new SARS pandemic.

By examining this illness's etiology—which lies more in the realm of global politics, corporate profits, and population control, than elsewhere—this information offers educated people an alternative to the fright and irrational behaviors promulgated by "mainstream" propagandists, including news sources and health officials better known as "spin doctors".

Most intelligent persons will conclude from the following information that this new microbial attack was premeditated and precedent-setting. In other words, SARS is a well orchestrated social experiment.

Who is behind this SARS madness? I accept the risk of triggering your "conspiracy theory" buttons by identifying the widely recognized "global military-medical-petrochemical-pharmaceutical cartel" as the only suspect that can wield the powers necessary to effect these frightening outcomes.

Although you may find it comforting to simply consider this a conspiracy theory, I view SARS as a huge conspiracy with very few witting villains. Clearly, what you are witnessing is a well organized terror campaign carried out by mostly well-meaning, yet grossly ignorant, "authorities"—medically indoctrinated and virtually hypnotized "Manchurian candidates" if you will allow me to postulate.

Indeed, people are dying from SARS. Yet, I diagnose this illness, by medical-sociological parameters, as a grotesque scam perpetrated for a greater purpose than simply fueling a multi-billion-dollar "cottage health industry" as some analysts have written.

Alternatively, I propose that Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome may be best diagnosed by SARS's telltale dependence on the propaganda used to herald its presence, prompt hysteria, and broadly engage social and economic resources. In military intelligence circles this is called standard "psychological operations" (PSYOPs).

I further suggest this fright's likeliest purpose is in facilitating evolving economic and political agendas that ultimately include targeting approximately half the world's current population for elimination. Much of this will be accomplished, not with SARS, but quite effectively and efficiently by the widely anticipated "Big One" discussed later on this website in a feature article written for the Associated Press by Emma Ross.

"[T]here's fame, fortune, and big budgets in sounding the 'emerging infection' alarm and warning of our terrible folly in being unprepared."

— Michael Fumento, senior fellow at the Hudson Institute in Washington, in an editorial titled "Super-Bug Or Super Scare" in the National Post (of Canada), p.A16, March 28, 2003.

This concept of a microbiological Armageddon is not new to most readers. "Experts" have been predicting the arrival of a super-plague for decades. What is HIGHLY SUSPICIOUS about the mysterious and terrifying arrival of SARS is its timing.

It arrived virtually synchronous with the global war on terrorism, and the Anglo-American war with Iraq. This is pathognomonic (symptomatic and characteristic) of what is predicted and explained in my book Death In The Air: Globalism, Terrorism, And Toxic Warfare, a prophetically-titled text that predated the 9/11 attacks on America by several months, and provides a contextual analysis of this current condition and spreading plague of phobic deception.

This work and my SARS website, in essence, offer insight into the broad application of a new form of institutionalized "bioterrorism" consistent with state-sponsored biological warfare.

Saddam Hussein is said to have exposed populations in his and adjacent lands with biological and chemical weapons of mass destruction. These advancing infectious disease attacks in North America are sanctioned by medical-pharmaceutical and allied military industrialists. They complement

This book explains how and why:

- We have evolved from the nuclear age into a "Technotronic Era" with "psychotronic warfare" for optimal population control.
- Non-lethal warfare is being effectively used to produce sociopolitical and economic outcomes consistent with global genocide.
- The world's wealthiest policy-makers have recommended, and are working toward, eliminating half the world's population.
- Accepted methods of disease prevention, such as pesticide sprayings, can only be scientifically rationalized as costly and deadly contributions to non-lethal warfare and population reduction.
- Chemtrail sprayings that obscure blue skies are not normal, but reflect a conspiracy of silence and military attacks on the health and welfare of people around the world.

Striking at the heart of those responsible for the latest forms of bio-terrorism, psychotronic warfare, and ecological genocide, the revelations contained in this book offer more than a reality check—they give you and your loved ones a final, last-minute choice for survival.

the global “War on Terrorism” and bioterror-influenced culture as additionally profitable, population-controlling threats.

Perceiving Harsh Reality Versus Generally Promoted Myths

What lay persons view as ever increasing madness in the world around them, is eerily consistent with earlier globalist think-tank recommendations for the development and deployment, in the new millennium, of “conflicts short of war” and “economic substitutes for standard militarization”.

These developments were adequately detailed and referenced in Death In The Air: Globalism, Terrorism, And Toxic Warfare. As compared with the First and Second World Wars, these smaller, more manageable, and better controlled conflicts, orchestrated events, and state sponsored threats, were consistently selected options among foreign policy makers and government officials beginning in the late 1960s.

Henry Kissinger, for instance, as National Security Advisor (NSA) under Richard Nixon, oversaw foreign policy while considering Third World population reduction “necessities” for the U.S., Britain, Germany, and other allies. This Bush nominee to direct the 9/11 conspiracy investigation, a reputed war criminal, then selected the option to have the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) develop biological weapons, according to the U.S. Congressional Record of 1975. Among these biologicals were germs far deadlier than the SARS agent (thought to be a strain of coronavirus). Under Kissinger’s watch at NSA, influenza and parainfluenza viruses were, for example, recombined with quick-acting leukemia viruses (acute lymphocytic leukemia) to deliver a weapon that potentially spread cancer like the flu. (More on this later.) These incredible realities have been generally neglected, if not officially secreted.

Weapons selections like these continue to the present day, not simply by radical terrorist groups, but also among a handful of military cartel industrialists who continue to sell weapons of mass destruction to those who can afford them.

These conflicts short of major wars like WWI and WWII, and war economy substitutes—such as the “War on AIDS” and “War on Crime” and “War on Drugs” and “War on Terrorism” and “War on Cancer” and the environmental protection movement, and the “Star Wars” Strategic Defense Initiative—all require sophisticated propaganda programs employing fear campaigns for social acceptance and popular support. These PSYOPS for command and control warfare (C2W), military and behavior experts correctly advise, best support a well-defined rapidly evolving “Revolution in Military Affairs” (RMA) which is synonymous to the evolution into “a form of human slavery” in which the captives—the world’s population, including you and your loved ones—would not perceive this enslavement.

The RMA incorporates the use of debilitating biological weapons and incapacitating chemicals, similar to the toxic carcinogenic organophosphate pesticides deployed against mosquitoes in the “War Against the West Nile Virus”.

These are often called “non-lethal warfare” agents, yet are indeed deadly. Death results slowly, along with advancing mortality from such toxic exposures. Larger profits are made by allied pharmaceutical and medical industrialists as victims of the “non-lethal” exposures die slowly, commonly in expensive hospitals and long-term care facilities, from chronic debilitating diseases.

Most of these ailments, including the plethora of autoimmune diseases and newer cancers, were virtually non-existent 50 years ago. This fact, alone, strongly suggests a modern socio-economic and political conspiracy. Unless you simply wish to believe it is God’s will or man’s greed that has brought these conditions to bear upon humanity.

— Michael Fumento, senior fellow at the Hudson Institute in Washington, in an editorial titled “Super-Bug Or Super Scare” in the National Post (of Canada), p.A16, March 28, 2003.

In recent decades, military think tanks prescribed options for “conflicts short of war” that included novel population control policies and methodologies. These provided for:

(1) the establishment of new profit centers as traditional large-scale wars were phased out by the new millennium. Examples here include the many multi-billion-dollar “homeland security” programs that emerged from post-9/11 legislation, such as those securing air travel and mail delivery. These are just two examples of myriad evolving profit centers fueled by frights and institutionalized terror campaigns;

(2) the development of advanced persuasion and population control programs, with high-tech methods of support, to facilitate “a form of slavery” in which humanity would not realize it had become conditioned into relinquishing personal and social freedoms for the mirage of health, safety, and security. These provided other profit centers and population control options. Once habituated to modern lifestyle restrictions, such as enforced health and travel restrictions, the general population might become virtually “enslaved” with little effective resistance, widespread pharmaceutical dependence (particularly using anti-depressant drugs), through the use of PSYOPs. Media distractions and manipulations were considered essential in achieving this objective; and

(3) lucrative depopulation methods to be employed, including the conditions and resources necessary for culling “excess populations”.

SARS, when considered in light of these social and political impositions, can be clearly understood.

SARS For Profit

By Friday, March 28, 2003, senior fellow at the Hudson Institute in Washington, Michael Fumento, published a thesis in Toronto similar to the one I advance here. This well regarded author of The Myth Of Heterosexual AIDS: How A Tragedy Has Been Distorted By The Media And Partisan Politics (Regnery Gateway, 1990) provided an editorial titled “Super-Bug Or Super Scare” published in the [Canadian] National Post (p. A16.). This included the following:

[quoting]

It’s “an incident of unprecedented scope and magnitude” according to Toronto health officials, who warn Canadians to “quarantine themselves” and wear masks, and in some cases, stay home. Ontario Health Minister Tony Clement has declared a “health emergency”. The media have dubbed it the “mysterious killer pneumonia” or “super-pneumonia”.

But a bit of knowledge and perspective will kill this panic.

Start with those scary tags: “mysterious” in modern medicine usually means we haven’t yet quite identified the cause, although we have now done so here. What’s been officially named Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) is one or more strains of coronavirus, commonly associated with colds. “Killer pneumonia” is practically a redundancy, since so many types of pneumonia (there are more than 50) do kill.

The real questions are: How lethal, how transmissible, and how treatable is this strain? And the answers leave no grounds for excitement, much less panic.

Super ?

At this writing, SARS appears to have killed 54 people out of almost 1,400 afflicted, according to the World Health Organization, a death rate of less than 4%. But since this only takes into account those ill enough to seek medical help, the actual ratio of deaths to infections is certainly far less. [This is a tremendous understatement.]

In contrast, the 1918-1919 flu pandemic killed approximately a third of the 60 million afflicted.

Further, virtually all of the deaths have been in countries with horrendous

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these “emerging viruses” naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted Hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein.

This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses and experimented with antidote vaccines allegedly for “defense” and cancer prevention.

medical care, primarily mainland China. In this country, three people have died out of 28 afflicted according to Health Canada, but that may say more about Canada’s vaunted national health-care system than about SARS. In the United States, 40 people have been hospitalized with SARS with zero deaths.

Conversely, other forms of pneumonia kill more than 40,000 North Americans yearly.

Transmissibility ?

Each year millions of North Americans alone contract the flu. Compare that with those 64 SARS cases diagnosed thus far and, well, you can’t compare them. Further evidence that SARS is hard to catch is that healthcare workers and family members of victims are by far the most likely to become afflicted.

Treatability ?

“There are few drugs and no vaccines to fight this pathogen” one wire service panted breathlessly. But there are also few drugs to fight any type of viral pneumonia, because we have very few antiviral medicines.

[Consider also approximately 97% of cases naturally defended themselves successfully against this plague. What did they, or their immune systems, do right? Why is this rarely, if ever, mentioned or investigated by any mainstream source? Alternatively, Mr. Fumento mentions “Ribovirin” which he states “appears to be effective against SARS”. Is this another form of medically-sanctioned institutionalized bias that even the well-intentioned Fumento expresses? Consider the fact that SARS only existed a few weeks prior to Fumento’s editorial. In fact, the coronavirus had been questionably cultured from SARS patients only days before Fumento wrote the above. Surely no clinical trials matching Ribovirin with SARS had ever been conducted. At best, then, this statement reflects either drug company propaganda and/or health official speculations.]

So why all the fuss over this one strain of pneumonia?

First, never ignore the obvious: It does sell papers.

But an added feature to this scare is the cottage industry that’s grown up around so-called “emerging infectious diseases”. Some diseases truly fit the bill, with AIDS the classic example. Others, like West Nile Virus in North America, are new to a given area.

But there’s fame, fortune, and big budgets in sounding the “emerging infection” alarm and warning of our terrible folly in being unprepared. The classic example is Ebola virus. [Mr. Fumento downplays the Ebola threat here.]

Yet, you’d almost swear that every outbreak of Ebola is actually taking place in Toronto or New York.... The U.S. government and various North American universities have also seen these faux plagues as budget boosters. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention publishes a journal called Emerging Infectious Diseases, though in any given issue it's hard to find an illness that actually fits the definition.

The U.S. Institute of Medicine just issued a report warning that the United States is grossly unprepared to deal with emerging pathogens. Soothingly, however, it adds that it's nothing that an injection of tax dollars can't cure.

Meanwhile, a disease that emerged eons ago, called malaria, kills up to 2.7 million people yearly. Another, tuberculosis, kills perhaps three million more. Both afflict North Americans, albeit at very low rates.

The big money and headlines may be in the so-called "emerging diseases", but the cataclysmic illnesses come from the same old boring killers. In fact, there may be no fatal illness that will cause fewer deaths in North America this year than SARS.

[end quoting]

Michael Fumento concluded by asking, and challenging you to consider: "How do our priorities get so twisted? There's your mystery?"

Favored Economic Victims Of SARS And Other SCAMS In The RMA

Contrary to Mr. Fumento's well considered conclusion that SARS boosts budgets of those who sound alarms loudest, the mainstream media has consistently attempted to have you think otherwise. One article in Canada's leading financial newspaper, the Financial Post, on March 31, 2003, heralds: "SARS virus begins to take toll on global economy."

With no mention of the far larger number of people and industries that profit from such plagues, and the fears surrounding them, reporter Jacqueline Thorpe's editor assigned her to focus on the airline and tourism industries that are "particularly hard hit". She wrote:

[quoting]

Businesses in Singapore have shut down, planes over Hong Kong are empty, and thousands of people in Toronto have been forced into quarantine as a deadly pneumonia virus adds yet another strain to the beleaguered global economy.

While severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) may not be as debilitating as war in Iraq, slumping stock markets, or a weak U.S. labor market, it is already starting to take its toll on some Asian economies and the long-suffering tourism industry....

In Hong Kong, where the number of infections leapt by 60, to 530, over the weekend, and 13 people have died, economists at JPMorgan Chase estimate the economy could lose 0.2% to 0.5% of gross domestic product every month from the drop in tourism and private consumption....

Businesses in many Chinese shopping districts [in Toronto] have reported a sharp drop in business.

Dennis Yuent, a merchant in Pacific Mall in Toronto—North America's largest shopping mall—said his sales have dropped by about 70% since the SARS scare began.

Notice that the expert bankers at JPMorgan Chase, and Ms. Thorpe, failed to mention the stunning growth in medical/pharmaceutical/security and law enforcement sectors, and the increase in "gross domestic product" due to SARS and similar scams.

In the weeks and months following the 9/11 attacks on America, I traced the widely publicized anthrax mailings "mystery" to U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) commissioned biological weapons contractors with ties to Britain's MI-6, Porton Down, the Anglo-American pharmaceutical cartel, including the Bayer, Hoechst, Baxter, and Merck Corporations, and ultimately to George Soros—a global banking and investment industrialist and chief money manager for Europe's wealthiest oligarchy-owners of the Genomic Institute that performed the DNA sequencing on behalf of the anthrax vaccine maker/British Porton Down subsidiary, Bioprot.

[Editor's note: Go back and review this astonishing exposé in the January 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM, titled The CIA's Role In The Anthrax Mailings: Could Our Spies Be Agents For Military-Industrial Sabotage, Terrorism, And Even Population Control? Dr. Horowitz traced the diabolical details of this "terrorism" against an unsuspecting public in incredible and convincing detail.]

China's Threat And The Anglo-American RMA

It seems suspiciously convenient that the travel industry, and Asian travel in particular, would be the greatest victims at a time when globalists (global industrialists, including members of the ultra-rich) have directed military and political policies consistent with the RMA and "conflicts short of war" agenda. Reducing travel helps to secure wide-ranging RMA objectives.

Think about it. Less mobile populations, and less people in general, are easier to control, especially with increased exposure to television, while having to waste their time at home. This is entirely consistent with the "Changing Images of Mankind" advanced by Willis Harmon for Anglo-American military and business interests. The effect of this is similar to forced "quarantine". Isn't this consistent with a "form of slavery in which humanity would not know it had become enslaved"?

People are all too willing to relinquish their civil rights and personal freedoms in the wake of such engineered frights.

The passage of the infamous Homeland Security Act in America, and its counterpart in Canada, are classic examples of this societal direction, forced legislation, and egregious manipulation.

How convenient that Asia, and China in particular, is said to be the origin of this North American scourge at a time when Chinese/Anglo-American relations are strained to say the least.

In the days preceding the emergence of the first SARS cases, America raced to the Pacific Rim to impact escalating aggressions on the Korean peninsula.

Communist China, a "most favored" trading partner with America, is politically allied with several American enemies—including those said to possess weapons of mass destruction, including Iraq. Coincidental? Not likely when viewing the larger political picture involving the Anglo-American oligarchy's RMA and instigated "conflicts short of war".

Ultimately, We-The-People have become the greatest victims of this latest fright, and the larger political agendas it serves.

The Media's Role In SARS: Setting A Precedent

Consider the fact the mainstream media has been heavily influenced, if not entirely controlled, by multinational corporate sponsors protecting and advancing the interests of a relatively small number of global industrialists (I have called "globalists" and others say the "ruling elite" or "European oligarchy"). Also recall that the focus of news providers, on any given day or hour, results from intelligence agency directives, according to reputable authorities including myriad retired news officials and intelligence officers.

So ask and answer the following intelligent questions:

Why have American military officials, beginning with Secretary of Defense William Cohen during the Clinton years, publicized America's greatest vulnerability lies in the realm of biological weapons wielded by terrorists? Is this not a form of treason against the United States to relay such sensitive intelligence to potential enemies through the mainstream press?

During the McCarthy era, Hollywood producers were persecuted for having the slightest liberal or Communist sympathies. What has changed to allow the Hollywood production of [the movie] Black Hawk Down to be used by Saddam Hussein and his military and intelligence commanders to educate and inspire his troops?

Why does the mainstream media continue to foretell of the expected arrival of "The Big One"—an influenza virus that will produce a super-flu that will kill billions of people, like the "Spanish flu" did between 1918-19, while totally disregarding the individuals, organizations, and laboratories that have labored to produce these weapons of mass destruction? Even the devastating Spanish Flu virus has been, literally, unearthed for further study. And, do you suppose, deployment?

Why was the "Spanish flu" influenza virus called the "Spanish flu" when it originated, by historic accounts, in Tibet in 1917? It is said that Spanish newspapers were the only ones reporting on the great plague due to their neutrality over World War I politics. However, Spain was as dear to America

Could bioelectric technologies investigated during the Cold War provide the most advanced form of killing, enslaving, and coercing billions of unsuspecting people worldwide? Dr. Len Horowitz investigates 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge and "healing codes" to humanity. then as Communist China is to the United States today. The "Spanish flu" was named such following two decades of disputes between America and Spain over colonization of the Caribbean Islands, Hawaii, and the Philippines, beginning with the Spanish-American War that ended in the Philippines in 1902. Does this history appear to be repeating with the advent of SARS, allegedly from China?

If the legions of recognized authorities herald the coming of "The Big One", why do the same persons disregard this author's publication of U.S. Government, National Institutes of Health, and National Cancer Institute documents showing that the U.S. Army's 6th top biological weapons contractor in 1969-1970 prepared mutants of influenza and para-influenza viruses recombined with acute lymphocytic leukemia viruses?

In other words, how would you like to have a strain of the flu that spreads cancer by sneezing? Can you even rationalize the development of such a virus-lymphocytic leukemia that kills most victims in just a few weeks following airborne transmission?

These have been shown clearly on page 452 of my national bestselling book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident, Or Intentional? in circulation since 1996. Therein I include a "menu" of infectious agents, potential biological weapons, listing several mutant recombinants involving flu viruses.

Why haven't you previously heard about these developments? Especially since these documents have been extensively circulated throughout newsrooms and government offices, particularly those engaged in public health, since 1996?

Finally, how—if I published this information and definitive documentation, and sent this critical intelligence along with urgent pleas to approximately 8,500 members of the mainstream media (as I have done this week and on dozens of previous occasions for the past seven years)—can you turn on your television sets and gain nothing but the "same old song"?

If you have considered and answered the above questions, doesn't it make sense that America is being manipulated, if not targeted, for the purpose of advancing a global population reduction agenda, if not World War III?

[Editor's note: See the potent article by Eustace Mullins elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM for important historical patterns supporting Len's "World War III" assertion above. And, of course, among his other related research, Eustace's classic volume Murder By Injection strongly supports Len's statements coming up about Rockefeller control over medicine to advance New World Order objectives.]

"The Big One" Is Coming

The U.S. Army's 6th top biological weapons contractor in 1969-1970 prepared mutants of influenza and para-influenza viruses recombined with acute lymphocytic leukemia viruses. In other words, how would you like to have a strain of the flu that spreads quick killing cancer by sneezing?

According to most emerging disease experts and government health officials "The Big One" might arrive at any time.

Emma Ross of the Associated Press reported on SARS as the World Health Organization (WHO) launched its "crisis plan to attack" the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome. WHO, as you may recall, is a UN-sponsored organization that is rumored to have helped spread AIDS to Africa by way of contaminated Hepatitis-B and/or polio vaccinations. There is a reasonable amount of evidence to support this contention.

More disconcerting, the UN is known to be heavily influenced by Rockefeller family members and corporate interests. History shows Rockefeller fortunes built the UN building in New York City. During World War II, the Rockefeller family and their Standard Oil Company supported Hitler, more than they did the allies, according to court records. One federal judge ruled Rockefeller committed "treason" against the United States.

Following World War II, according to attorney John Loftus—an official Nazi war crimes investigator—Nelson Rockefeller persuaded the UN's South American voting block to favor Israel's creation only to assure secrecy regarding his support for the Nazis.

Earlier that century, John D. Rockefeller joined Prescott Bush and the British Royal Family in sponsoring the eugenics initiatives that gave rise to Hitler's racial hygiene programs. During the same period the Rockefeller family virtually monopolized American medicine, American pharmaceuticals, and the cancer and genetics industries.

Today, the Rockefeller family, foundation, UN, and WHO remain at the forefront of administering "population programs" designed to reduce world populations to more manageable levels. As per a recent advertisement in Foreign Affairs—a prestigious political periodical published by the David Rockefeller-directed Council on Foreign Relations—the U.S. population is being targeted for a 50% reduction.

"We've never faced anything on this scale with such a global reach" said Dr. David Heymann of the WHO, regarding SARS.

"This is the first time that a global network of laboratories are sharing information, samples, blood, pictures" added Dr. Klaus Stohr, a WHO virologist coordinating labs internationally. "Basically overnight, there are no secrets; there is no jealousy; there is no competition in the face of a global health emergency. This is a phenomenal network."

In one week, the Associated Press reported, the WHO's lab network had "isolated the SARS virus, produced a preliminary diagnostic test, and narrowed the virus's identity down to two candidates—neither one a new strain of influenza. In the following week, various antiviral drugs were tested as possible treatments.

"Meanwhile, doctors were also sharing information.... WHO coordinated exchanges of symptoms, case histories, and possible treatments.... Asian doctors talked about various therapies they were trying; later, the Europeans and North Americans conferred.

"In eastern Asia—at government invitation—expert field-teams of WHO staffers and scientists from international institutes were sent to Vietnam, Hong Kong, and China to figure out how the disease was spread, to help treat patients, and advise how to control it.

"Aileen Plant, an infectious disease epidemiologist from Curtin University in Australia, led a dozen experts in Hanoi, one of the hard-hit areas. Her international team focused on the Hanoi French Hospital, which closed its doors to new patients and quarantined those inside. Many of the sick were doctors and nurses....

"With newly released figures from China, there have been more than 1,500 cases and slightly more than 50 deaths worldwide, including three in Canada. The WHO believes the disease is generally under control, but Hong Kong remains a challenge. In mainland China, the picture is somewhat murky....

"Many inside the WHO see the SARS operation as a kind of dress rehearsal—'good practice' Heymann said—for The Big One, the inevitable killer flu pandemic that experts say could come at any time.

"This isn't The Big One, because I think it's being contained."

What You Should Do

The above information has been meticulously documented and referenced in my two previous works, Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident, Or Intentional? and Death In The Air: Globalism, Terrorism, And Toxic Warfare. It begs the question of what to do. There are personal and socio-political directions for a rational response.

Here are my recommendations:

1. Personally, you and your loved ones are encouraged to do everything in your power to lift your natural immunity to beyond the 3rd percentile that is apparently necessary to prevent your death from SARS, or other more pathogenic agents. For instructions in this regard, I recommend learning from various alternative medical websites.

These are dedicated to helping you improve your health naturally.

[Editor's note: Exceptionally useful is Len's www.healingcelebrations.com website, as we are talking here about the goal of generally improved health so these bugs can't overpower your immune system.]

There are five practical steps you can take that are detailed on my website and in my book Healing Celebrations: Miraculous Recoveries Through Ancient Scripture, Natural Medicine, And Modern Science. These include: (1) detoxification, (2) deacidification/alkalinization, (3) immunity boosting, (4) oxygenation, and (5) bioelectric/energetic methods.

2. Socially, you should alert your family and friends regarding these matters in an effort to prevent their victimization, media manipulation, and continued confusion.

3. Politically, you may wish to become active in an effort to bring greater public attention to these appalling realities. We-The-People can make a difference in halting the ongoing genocides being conducted under the guises of "medical science" and "public health". This was recently demonstrated when our revealing light of truth illuminated the risks and myths surrounding the deadly smallpox vaccine.

Grassroots publications like Smallpox Alert!, published by the Idaho Observer [which was included as a special insert with the February 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM for all our readers], and the affiliated website at www.allaboutsmallpox.com, created a massive backlash bringing the entire program to an embarrassing halt. By forwarding this article and related website, www.SARSScam.com, to as many people as possible, we can affect the same successful result.

About the Author

Leonard G. Horowitz, D.M.D., M.A., M.P.H., is an internationally known authority in the overlapping fields of public health, behavioral science, emerging diseases, and bioterrorism. He received his doctorate in medical dentistry from Tufts University School of Dental Medicine in 1977, was awarded a post-doctoral fellowship in behavioral science at the University of Rochester, earned a Master of Public Health degree from Harvard University, and another Master of Arts degree in health education from Beacon College, all before joining the research faculty at Harvard.

Dr. Horowitz is best known for his national bestselling book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident, Or Intentional? (Tetrahedron Press, 1998) which recently resulted in the United States General Accounting Office investigating the man-made origin of AIDS theory. Dr. Horowitz's work in the field of vaccination risk awareness has prompted at least three Third World nations to change their vaccination policies.

His recent stunning testimony before the United States Congress' Government Reform Committee, literally brought the hearing to a halt. Dr. Horowitz questioned government health officials regarding a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) secreted report showing a definitive link between the mercury ingredient (Thimerosal), common to most vaccinations, and the skyrocketing rates of autism and behavioral disorders affecting our children and the future of our nation.

Incredibly, Dr. Horowitz alerted the FBI, in writing and in person, one week before the first anthrax mailing was announced in the press, that a "major anthrax fright" was in the process of unfolding that demanded the FBI's urgent attention. Needless to say, they did not heed Dr. Horowitz's prophetic warning.

Moreover, three months before the September 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon, Dr. Horowitz released his thirteenth book, prophetically titled Death In The Air: Globalism, Terrorism, And Toxic Warfare. The book focuses on the West Nile Virus as an act of bioterrorism, and considers what and who is really behind this and other recent outbreaks. Dr. Horowitz argues that his disclosures expose the roots of global terrorism, along with the individuals and organizations at the heart of what he calls "the petrochemical-pharmaceutical cartel". He believes this "multi-national corporate beast" is in the process of committing global genocide, profiting from engineered frights, and at the same time, most efficiently culling targeted populations considered excessive.

As you may have heard, Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, called for an investigation into the links between the recent West Nile Virus outbreaks and bioterrorism. Dr. Horowitz is among the leading pioneers of this theory.

Dr. Horowitz's contact information, books, audio tapes, and video programs are available through his www.tetrahedron.org website, or by calling 1-888-508-4787.

We are not living in a static universe, as some would want us to believe. Rather, we live in a universe that is very much alive. It is in constant motion, and it is chock full of surprises—as evidenced recently by the passing of Comet NEAT (Comet C/2002 V1).

But there are those who don't want the public to know about what's going on in this lively real universe. Unfortunately these ones rule over the very agencies that the public looks up to for information about such matters of space and space exploration. It's time to pull the curtain on this two-faced charade and let the Truth shine in.

For this article I have combined little-known information about the cosmos generally, about comets, about Planet X, even about a number of astronomers who have lost their lives through very suspicious "accidents"—and all this is prelude for a remarkable interview with a well-respected and, some would say, "controversial" astrophysics expert, Professor James M. McCanney. The picture you will finally assemble from this article may open some new windows of thought for you, as well as clarify or confirm ideas you may already have concerning what we are, and are not, being told about incredible changes going on with our planet and our weather, with our Sun and Solar System, and about related issues you may have been sensing, on a more subtle level, but couldn't quite identify.

We'll begin our journey into space with some extracted material from the book called The Divine Cosmos: A Breathtaking New View Of Reality by David Wilcock. Longtime readers will remember my front-page feature interview with David back in our September 1999 issue, titled: Is The "Sleeping Prophet" Back? —Edgar Cayce— An Interview With David Wilcock. The following is from his provocative www.ascension2000.com

The Mystery Is Revealed

On September 11, 2001, the Earth was rocked by a meticulously planned strike...reducing the twin towers of the World Trade Center to a pile of rubble and exploding one wing of the Pentagon.

Prior to this event it was quite common for the general public to proclaim that everything was "normal" and ignore many obvious signposts that humanity, the Earth, and Solar System at large, were all undergoing tremendous, unprecedented change, which includes the following ever-increasing trends:

- A 410% increase in the overall number of natural catastrophes on Earth between 1963 and 1993 (Dmitriev 1997).

- A 400% increase in the number of earthquakes on Earth (over M2.5 on the Richter scale) since 1973 (Mandeville 1998).

- A 500% increase in Earth's volcanic activity between 1875 and 1993 (Mandeville 2000).

- 9 out of the 21 most severe earthquakes from 856-1999 A.D. occurred in the 20th Century (Russian National Earthquake Information Center, 1999).

- A 230% increase in the strength of the Sun's magnetic field since 1901 (Lockwood, 1998).

- A 300% increase in the amount of "severe" solar activity than what was formally predicted for the year 1997 alone (NASA 1998).

- 400% or higher increases in the speed that solar particle emissions are capable of traveling through the energy of interplanetary space (NASA 1997-2001).

- Recent magnetic pole shifts of Uranus and Neptune, as Voyager 2 observed their magnetic axes being significantly offset from their rotational axes (Dmitriev 1997).

- Visible brightness increases now being detected on Saturn (Dmitriev 1997).

- A 200% increase in the intensity of Jupiter's magnetic field from 1992-97 (Dmitriev 1997).

- A 200% increase in the known density of Mars' atmosphere encountered by the Mars Surveyor satellite in 1997 (NASA 1997).

- Significant melting of Martian polar icecaps in just one year, clearly seen in satellite photography (NASA 2001).

- Significant physical, chemical, and optical changes on Venus, including a sharp decrease in sulfur-containing gases in its atmosphere and increasing brightness (Dmitriev 1997).

If we remember that the Sun contains fully 99.86% of the mass in the Solar System, then we can easily see that it wields the strongest thermal, gravitational, and electromagnetic influence.

In this book we will identify a clear physical mechanism that is causing our Sun to experience remarkable changes. These significant energetic changes in the Sun are then radiated outwardly via the "Solar Wind"—dramatically increasing the charge and permeability of interplanetary space, causing charged particles to travel more quickly much as a droplet of water dashes around on a sizzling hot pan. The electromagnetic fields of the planets then absorb this increased energy flux, producing anomalous changes including internal heating, increases in earthquakes, volcanism, and other natural catastrophes, increases in brightness, and even magnetic pole shifts.

Though Western science is not yet equipped to explain how such changes as earthquakes could be caused by an "outside" energetic influence, the full mystery is known amongst Russian scientific circles, and is easily explained by correcting certain fundamental errors in our prevailing concepts.

Not surprisingly, the mainstream media gives almost zero coverage of even the most basic of the changes we have listed. Even in the Internet-dominated Western alternative/metaphysical media, one only hears about the changes in solar activity and increases in Earth's cataclysmic activity on occasion. Thus, a basic media-induced blindness of the workings of our own Earth and Solar System allowed most people to say that everything was "normal" prior to 9/11.

And yet, in the wake of the September 11, 2001 "terrorist" attacks, it is undeniable to almost everyone that certain ancient prophecies, such as those of the Judeo-Christian Bible, the Hopi, the Maya, the Hindu, the Buddhist, and the aboriginal, appear to be taking place almost line-by-line. Increasing wars, diseases, earthquakes, volcanoes, droughts, and other natural cataclysms—which eventually lead up to a "pole shift"—all follow the pattern of "tribulations" that have been predicted by literally almost every source of religion or prophecy that has been recorded.

That such tribulations are upon us now is evident, and easily proven scientifically. What most adherents to these various teachings do not realize is that these phenomena are being caused by a fundamental energetic change taking place throughout the entire Solar System.

When most people think of "biblical prophecy", their mind immediately conjures up images of chaos, apocalypse, and destruction, often believing on some level that the Earth is to be annihilated and there is little if anything to be done about it. A certain, noticeably smaller cluster of groups, associated with the now-distasteful label of "religious fundamentalists", are essentially standing by and waiting for Jesus to return and lift their own sect of "chosen" followers up to Heaven in a "rapture" event, to the exclusion of all other sects. They also believe that the Earth will have "a thousand years of peace" after this event, and that after being "taken-up", they will return to Earth in some newly transformed condition.

Conventional science has no provision whatsoever for such a notion to even be discussed, much less proven, and thus it is tossed to the side without a second thought. Furthermore, the exclusivist nature of such denominational groups is extremely distasteful to all those who refuse to accept the dogma.

Enter our next subculture of discussion, the ever-increasing majority of the population who are actively interested in alternative spirituality, ancient cultures, prophecy, secret mystery schools, indigenous teachings, sacred geometry, extraterrestrial/angelic visitations, exotic physics, and the like. Although there are an enormous number of books available on these topics, the Internet has brought these concepts home to a far wider audience in a way that was never before imagined. It is from this increasing subculture that a new paradigm has been struggling to emerge—a paradigm that offers unforeseen insights into the nature of reality and our place within that reality. It is a paradigm of "initiation"—where one ceases to adhere to reductionist scientific ideals and instead becomes aware that a higher spiritual reality underlies all of physical existence as we know it.

In this book, we hope to direct the reader through a dramatic initiation process, delineating an entirely new view of the universe that will explain exactly what is happening to the Solar System at this time, why it is happening, and what we can expect that it will "do".

The key difference between this book and most other sources of literature on such topics is that each step of our argument will be rooted in clear, unambiguous scientific research. This illumination and initiation for the mind will in turn bear noble fruits, building one's sense of character, purpose, and destiny, and providing strong incentives to aspire to higher physical, mental, and spiritual growth. We will learn that our entire understanding of the nature of physical matter is radically underdeveloped, and that the energy increases that we see in the Solar System will indeed culminate in what may be thought of as a "dimensional shift".

It is our choice as to whether or not we will be willing to accept the attitude of loving kindness that is required for participation in this event, and the Golden Age of human civilization that shall follow it.

[continue quoting, later in the Prologue:]

Once we deeply establish the scientific reality of an Ultimate Being, and of the Universe functioning according to a perfect Grand Plan, the blind from our eyes is removed. We learn to build a temple or vessel within ourselves where Divine Love may reside, by emulating the everlasting laws of harmony, balance, and proportion in thought and in action.

Once this process has been fully accomplished, it is impossible for us to blame anyone for our own problems or feel any sense of negative emotions over others' opinions and actions toward us. There is no need to try to distract and entertain ourselves with the material world, as we become aware that it is nothing but an illusion, fashioned by the limitations imposed by our sensory organs, which are not normally capable of detecting the unseen worlds of energy that surround us, and the advanced intelligent entities that populate them.

We are never alone in the Divine Cosmos.

There is nothing new to the spiritual science of preparation, illumination, and initiation into the mysteries contained within this book. For those who are actively engaged in studying the evidence, it is becoming more and more certain that the Earth was once host to an

Rule By Secrecy: The Hidden History That Connects The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids by Jim Marrs

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they have wielded throughout time. Defiantly rooting out the truth, he unearths startling evidence that the real movers and shakers covertly collude to start and stop wars, manipulate stock markets and interest rates, maintain class distinctions, and even censor the six o'clock news. And they do all this under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

ancient, advanced civilization that had complete understanding of the physics and the timing behind the event that we are now experiencing in the Earth and Solar System. This civilization took great pains to preserve their legacy so that we could re-discover these everlasting truths.

The most obvious footprints that have been left behind by this lost, ancient civilization are the many surviving structures around the world that are composed of multi-ton blocks of stone or “megaliths” far too large and intricate in construction to be built by any known methods now available to humanity.

Additionally in this book we will discover many remarkable new energetic properties of the solar system, the galaxy, and the universe that few could have previously anticipated. We will learn that “empty space” is not empty, but rather is filled with an energy source that is indeed the true source of life and consciousness as we know it. We will see that the quality of our emotions and thoughts are not at all isolated, but are constantly being affected by outside cosmic forces that can take our moods on a roller-coaster ride, producing inspiration at times and desperation at others. And thus, we are all connected to the Cosmos in this very fundamental way.

This functional knowledge goes way beyond the popular concepts of astrology, to include many other unforeseen elements, such as precisely repeating cycles of historical events over long periods of time, and advanced predictions of how the financial markets will move.

When we realize that our thoughts and feelings are not simply our own, but are part of a synchronized web of life, we can never again see ourselves as being separate from others. Humanity, as a whole, will be seen as a form of organism that surrounds the surface of the Earth, interacting with the planets, asteroids, comets, the Sun, and the galaxy itself in a reciprocal relationship. Strange questions will arise as to where our free will begins and where it ends, since there can be forces of will much vaster than our own that are moving us along a previously designed curriculum that we have all agreed upon in a higher sense—a curriculum that has now reached a major turning point. All the major mysteries associated with the prophecies surrounding this “Ascension” event are eliminated in this new model.

Many who have read our books in the past have come away being surprised at how little they knew, or at how much there was to know that they had never even conceived of. One major area of importance is in forming a working “multidimensional” model of the Universe. Our scientists are now beginning to agree that there must be several different planes of existence or “dimensions” in the Universe, and in this new cosmology, that will also become a very simple concept to grasp. We will scientifically demonstrate a unified spiritual and scientific concept of how the Universe is all based on a “master plan” that incorporates simple principles of vibration such as light, sound, and geometry. We will also see that, just like the principle of a fractal or a hologram, within the infinity of the Many is always the signature of the All.

The Transformation Of The Solar System: Changes In The Heliosphere

The phenomenon of “synchronicity” has again occurred just two nights before we post the entire Part One of this book online, for the public, on Tuesday, June 4, 2002. As posted by the Drudge Report, then later in the mainstream press, suddenly it’s official: the U.S. government says “global warming” is real.

In a stunning U-turn for the Bush Administration, the United States has sent a climate report to the United Nations detailing “specific and far-reaching effects” that it says “global warming will inflict” on the American environment.

Also, for the first time, the White House places “most of the blame for recent global warming on human actions—mainly the burning of fossil fuels that send heat-trapping greenhouse gases into the atmosphere” the New York Times is planning to report on Monday, page one, according to publishing sources.

The United States will be substantially changed in the next few decades, claims the Bush report. The United States will “very likely” be seeing the “disruption of snow-fed water supplies, more stifling heat waves, and the permanent disappearance of Rocky Mountain meadows and coastal marshes.” The new report’s predictions present a sharp contrast to the administration’s previous statements on climate change, in which President Bush always spoke in generalities and stressed the need for “much more research to resolve scientific questions”.

Despite these often-discussed changes, only a very small number of people, mostly Russian scientists, are aware that the entire Solar System (heliosphere) is experiencing these changes. “Global

9/11: THE GREAT ILLUSION

End Game Of The Illuminati. Our Choice: Fear Or Love?

NEWEST BOOKLET BY GEORGE HUMPHREY

[Excerpts from the author's Introduction:] Though I knew in my heart from day one that the 9/11 WTC/Pentagon assault was a staged event, I told myself that I would not write another booklet. Plus, I had had one too many conversations with dear and educated friends who had gone absolutely ballistic when even the concept that anything other than the reported “news” could be behind this episode.

However, as I listen to the media and their 24/7 frenzy of hateful misinformation, I knew it was time to act. This booklet is not for everyone. But it is for those who love their country and have that rare quality called an open mind.

9/11: The Great Illusion is intentionally kept short so as many as possible will have access to this material. People must wake up to some cold hard realities: A small occult group—The Illuminati—have been organized for centuries, and have control of our economy, culture, and political organizations. These people have ZERO respect for our Republic and Bill Of Rights. They are behind a vast majority of the wars and revolutions, and are behind the events of September 11th.

This booklet is presenting evidence that goes against everything that the mainstream media and political structure would have people believe.

warming” from CFCs and fossil fuel usage is actually only a minor player in the changes that are now occurring. This chapter of our book will present the case for the energetic transformation of the Solar System in a form never before seen worldwide, prior to the exact day that the U.S. government came clean. As with the rest of this book, we ask that we be credited for compiling this data as it now stands.

The burning desire for an answer has produced many conflicting ideas about what is causing these ever-increasing changes. Outside of government admissions of “global warming”, the theories that have propagated in the Internet metaphysical subculture do not require much scientific substantiation, simply a general feeling of impending doom coupled with a great degree of faith.

As one popular example, a relatively uncommon planetary alignment on May 5, 2000, was heavily hyped-up as being the trigger-point for Earth crustal displacement/pole shift—“the ultimate disaster”. Asteroids are said to be about to strike the Earth. And more recently, legitimate research by Zecharia Sitchin has been combined with intuitively “channeled” speculation that the missing planet Nibiru is about to make a close pass to Earth in 2003. This mythical scenario has been used as a catch-all to explain away the changes we now experience.

Dr. Sitchin himself has calculated that the planet Nibiru shall not return until sometime after 2160 A.D. One would expect that such a massive object enjoying an established 3,600-year orbit would now be glaringly visible, with less than a year before it screams into our lives, larger than the Moon in the night sky. Yet, no observational evidence exists, only shadowy rumors of conspiracy and “leaks” from nameless “informants” in the astrophysics community. Furthermore, a naturally-orbiting planet would certainly not be capable of causing such massive energetic surges throughout the entire heliosphere, which is the combined entity of the Sun’s massive magnetic field and all orbiting bodies within it. Indeed, an outside source of energy is required to explain the anomalies that we are now witnessing. However, most people who already believe in Nibiru 2003 will probably not be open to alternative perspectives until sometime after the popping of champagne corks and a collective sigh of relief on January 1, 2004.

In this chapter, we will make the strongest single case ever that our Solar System (heliosphere) is moving into an area of higher aetheric energy density within the local interstellar medium, or LISM. NASA would loosely define the LISM as: “The space medium (i.e. aetheric energy in this model) between the stars in our local area of the galaxy.”

In our model, this could be roughly thought of as a “Dimensional Shift” that is already underway, though the term “matter-energy density shift” is preferable. As we move into this new field of energy in the galaxy, tremendous changes occur in the Sun, the planets, and the Sun’s gigantic magnetic field which surrounds the entire system—and human pollution-induced “Global Warming” has very little influence on this process.

The Breakthroughs Of Dr. Aleskey Dmitriev

A good portion of the material in this chapter was gleaned from the work by Dr. Aleskey Dmitriev entitled Planetophysical State Of The Earth And Life, which was originally authored in 1997 and updated and translated into English in 1998. Dr. Dmitriev is a professor of geology and mineralogy and the chief scientific member of the United Institute of Geology, Geophysics, and Mineralogy within the Siberian department of the Russian Academy of Sciences. Dmitriev is an expert on global ecology and fast-processing Earth events, and a series of his articles have been translated into English and posted at the www.tmgnow.com website of the Millennium Group.

Dmitriev’s study begins by pointing out that the now government-acknowledged changes in the basic physics and behaviors of the Earth are becoming irreversible. Strong evidence suggests that these changes are caused by our movement into what Dmitriev calls “a highly charged material and energetic non-uniformity”, or what we would refer to as a higher density of aetheric energy, in nearby (local) interstellar space (the LISM). This previously unforeseen, highly charged energetic material is now being absorbed into the interplanetary area of our Solar System, creating “hybrid processes and excited energy states in all planets, as well as the Sun”.

The observable effects of this transformation on Earth include an acceleration in our magnetic pole shift, a change in the vertical and horizontal content and distribution of ozone in the atmosphere, and an ever-increasing magnitude and frequency of major catastrophic events.

One important point that Dmitriev stresses is that this is not just his own hypothesis:

“A greater number of specialists in climatology, geophysics, planetophysics, and heliophysics are tending towards a

World Earthquake Activity 1973-1998 Mag 2.5 Events & Greater cosmic causative sequence version for what is happening. Indeed, events of the last decade give strong evidence of unusually significant heliospheric and planetophysical transformations.”

Furthermore, Dmitriev acknowledges that the changes we have observed are forcing a completely different and more highly integrated view of the Cosmos to the discussion table.

In this new model:

The climatic and biosphere processes here on Earth (through a tightly connected feedback system) are directly impacted by, and linked back to, the general overall transformational processes taking place in our Solar System. We must begin to organize our attention and thinking to understand that climatic changes on Earth are only one part, or link, in a whole chain of events taking place in the heliosphere.

The case for such an energetic interconnectedness has already been well established in our previous chapters. Another important quote says that: “These tendencies [of rapid catastrophic changes on Earth] may be traced in the direction of a growth in planetary energy capacity (capacitance), which leads to a highly excited or charged state in some of Earth’s systems.”

In the aetheric cosmology that we have presented so far in this book, any spherical vortex of aether, such as the Earth’s luminous plasma core, is capable of absorbing and discharging energy much like a capacitor would do in an electronic circuit. As established in previous chapters, luminous plasma has strong electromagnetic as well as torsion-field (gravispin) radiation.

Dmitriev concludes that: “The most intense transformations [in the Solar System] are taking place in the planetary gas-plasma envelopes.” And that these transformations are directly associated with how life on Earth (the biosphere) is able to function. A “gas-plasma envelope” is the combined entity of the layers of our atmosphere, our ionosphere of “charged particles”, and the planet’s magnetic field composition, such as the Van Allen belts.

This “excess energy run-off” is becoming increasingly visible in the following ways:

- In the ionosphere by plasma generation.
- In the magnetosphere by magnetic storms.
- In the atmosphere by cyclones.

All of these high-energy atmospheric phenomena are “now becoming more frequent, intense, and changed in [their] nature. The material composition of the gas-plasma envelope is also being transformed.” All of these points will be touched upon again later in the chapter.

One of Dmitriev’s key concerns in this study is the effect that these changes will have on all lifeforms on the Earth. Using very carefully crafted language, Dmitriev ultimately shows an appreciation for the fact that these changes could lead to a spontaneous mass evolution of humanity as we now know it, creating “new and deeper qualities of life” with “new organismic possibilities of perfection”.

The adaptive responses of the biosphere, and humanity, to these new conditions may lead to a total global revision of the range of species and life on Earth. New and deeper qualities of life itself may come forth, bringing the new physical state of the Earth into an equilibrium with the new organismic possibilities of development, reproduction, and perfection.

The current period of transformation is transient, and the transition of life’s representatives to the future may take place only after a deep evaluation of what it will take to comply with these new Earthly biospheric conditions. Therefore, it is not only the climate that is becoming new, but we as human beings are experiencing a global change in the vital processes of living organisms, or life itself—which is yet another link in the total process. We cannot treat such things separately or individually.

In more technical terms, Dmitriev goes on to explain what this 1000% or higher increase in the excitation of this magnetic boundary really means:

“This shockwave thickening has caused the formation of a collusive plasma in a parietal layer, which has led to a plasma overdraft around the Solar System, and then to its breakthrough into interplanetary domains. This breakthrough constitutes a kind of matter and energy donation made by interplanetary space to our Solar System.”

What this passage is essentially telling us is that a new layer of luminous plasma has been formed that surrounds the Solar System and is now flowing into the Sun, planets, and interplanetary space, raising the overall levels of energetic activity that we have observed. Subsequent sections of this chapter will detail the specifics of this energetic change. However, before we begin surveying the surrounding evidence, it is interesting to research the big question on many Western readers’ minds:

“If this is really happening, then why hasn’t NASA ever talked about it?”

As we shall see, according to one distinguished Ph.D., NASA seems to have a “persistent, pernicious bias” AGAINST any discussion of this heliospheric change, and will automatically assume, without question, that the LISM must maintain a “uniform density”. Other, more esoteric-sounding explanations are proposed for the observed luminosity and energetic increases—such as “re-accelerated solar wind”—that do not have the simplicity and elegance of Dmitriev et. al's model.

We remember from the beginning of this chapter that Dr. Dmitriev reports that there are also changes occurring in our “planetary gas-plasma envelopes” that are NOT being caused by human pollution. New plasma is being generated in the ionosphere, greater magnetic storms are appearing in the magnetosphere, and cyclones are increasing in the atmosphere. Dmitriev also indicated that “the material composition of the gas-plasma envelopes” of the planets is also changing. More specifically, on Earth we have seen a significant new growth of HO₂ (hydroperoxyl) gas at an altitude of 11 miles, which is completely inexplicable by any known source or mechanism, including ozone depletion or human pollution via “global warming”. A separate Russian study confirmed that the total amount of cloud cover across the globe has significantly increased just in the last century.

Additionally, ESO reported in 1994 that two new, unexpected populations of cosmic particles have been discovered in the Van Allen radiation belts that surround the Earth:

1. A new sheaf of electrons, greater than 50MeV, is now being injected into the Earth's inner magnetosphere during times of abrupt solar magnetic storms known as Coronal Mass Ejections, or CMEs.

2. A new belt is emerging in the Van Allen radiation bands around the Earth. This new belt contains ionic elements that were traditionally found only in the composition of stars.

According to Dmitriev, these anomalies are directly being caused by a newly changed quality of interplanetary space, which he feels is acting as a transmission mechanism to allow the planets to interact with the Sun and heliosphere to greater degrees than ever before. (In our model, based on Kozyrev, Mishin, Shnoll, and other researchers' discoveries, torsion radiation will automatically provide such functions.) Even more importantly...this newly changed quality of interplanetary space...exerts stimulating and programming action upon the Solar activity, both in its maximal and minimal phases.

What Dmitriev is trying to tell us here is that this highly-charged energy in the space between the planets has formed a two-way “circuit” that allows events on Earth to affect the Sun, not just the other way around.

[end quoting]

In another article by David Wilcock, this one titled The Ultimate Secret Of The Mayan Calendar: An Imploding Cycle Of Energy Increase, Culminating In 2012-2013 A.D., we find the following statement, related to the subject at hand:

By combining the effects of geocosmic change with the overall flourishing of humanity in the cultural and spiritual sense, we see that as the cycle continues to exponentially accelerate its energetic rate of vibration into the 2012-2013 “singularity”, we can expect ever more rapid increases in human awareness, leading up to a discontinuous mega-event where “time and space collapse” as we know it. We believe that there is no reason to fear this change, as what we are moving towards is a literal shift in the basic characteristics of matter, energy, and consciousness.

Or as David summarizes in his 3/3/03 article called A Time Of Great Change, Globally And Personally:

“So, now that we are moving into an area of higher vibration, we are experiencing a collective awakening unlike anything ever seen before. For those who accept unconditional love, the transition is rather easy to make; and for those who do not, there will be no end to the shock and dis-ease that is produced, eventually leading to an inability to maintain a physical body on the Earth. This might seem to sound rather harsh, but it is simply the way things are.”

Now let's look more closely at the findings of the respected Russian scientist, Dr. Alexey N. Dmitriev, in his own words. While several brief statements by him have been shared above, it is important to present more of his amazing research findings in his own words.

The following English presentation is from the www.tmgnow.com website, sponsored by The Millenium Group and dated 1/8/98:

Planetophysical State Of The Earth And Life

By Dr. Alexey N. Dmitriev
(Published in Russian, IICA Transactions, Volume 4, 1997; Professor of Geology and Mineralogy, and Chief Scientific Member, United Institute of Geology, Geophysics, and Mineralogy, Siberian Department of Russian Academy of Sciences; Expert on Global Ecology and Fast-Processing Earth Events; Russian-to-English translation and editing by A. N. Dmitriev, Andrew Tetenov, and Earl L. Crockett.)

Summary

Current Planetophysical alterations of the Earth are becoming irreversible. Strong evidence exists that these transformations are being caused by highly charged material and energetic non-uniformities in anisotropic interstellar space which have broken into the interplanetary area of our Solar System. This “donation” of energy is producing hybrid processes and excited energy states in all planets, as well as the Sun. Effects here on Earth are to be found in the acceleration of the magnetic pole shift, in the vertical and horizontal ozone content distribution, and in the increased frequency and magnitude of significant catastrophic climatic events. There is growing probability that we are moving into a rapid temperature instability period similar to the one that took place 10,000 years ago. The adaptive responses of the biosphere, and humanity, to these new conditions may lead to a total global revision of the range of species and life on Earth. It is only through a deep understanding of the fundamental changes taking place in the natural environment surrounding us that politicians, and citizens alike, will be able to achieve balance with the renewing flow of Planetophysical states and processes.

Introduction

Current in-process geological, geophysical, and climatical alterations of the Earth are becoming more and more irreversible. At the present time researchers are revealing some of the causes which are leading to a general reorganization of the electro-magnetosphere (the electromagnetic skeleton) of our planet and of its climatic machinery. A greater number of specialists in climatology, geophysics, planetophysics, and heliophysics are tending towards a cosmic causative sequence version for what is happening.

Indeed, events of the last decade give strong evidence of unusually significant heliospheric and planetophysical transformations. Given the quality, quantity, and scale of these transformations, we may say that: impacted by, and linked back to, the general overall transformational processes taking place in our Solar System. We must begin to organize our attention and thinking to understand that climatic changes on Earth are only one part or link in a whole chain of events taking place in our heliosphere.

These deep physical processes, these new qualities of our physical and geological environment, will impose special adaptive challenges and requirements for all life forms on Earth. Considering the problems of adaptation our biosphere will have with these new physical conditions on Earth, we need to distinguish the general tendency and nature of the changes.

As we will show below, these tendencies may be traced in the direction of planet energy capacity growth (capacitance), which is leading to a highly excited or charged state of some of Earth's systems. The most intense transformations are taking place in the planetary gas-plasma envelopes to which the productive possibilities of our biosphere are timed. Currently this new scenario of excess energy run-off is being formed, and observed:

- In the ionosphere by plasma generation.
- In the magnetosphere by magnetic storms.
- In the atmosphere by cyclones.

This high-energy atmospheric phenomena, which was rare in the past, is now becoming more frequent, intense, and changed in its nature. The material composition of the gas-plasma envelope is also being transformed.

It is quite natural for the whole biota of the Earth to be subjected to these changing conditions of the electromagnetic field, and to the significant deep alterations of Earth's climatic machinery. These fundamental processes of change create a demand within all of Earth's life organisms for new forms of adaptation. The natural development of these new forms may lead to a total global revision of the range of species, and life, on Earth. New deeper qualities of life itself may come forth, bringing the new physical state of the Earth to an equilibrium with the new organismic possibilities of development, reproduction, and perfection. In this sense it is evident that we are faced with a problem of the adaptation of humanity to this new state of the Earth—new conditions on Earth whose biospheric qualities are varying and non-uniformly distributed.

Therefore the current period of transformation is transient, and the transition of life's representatives to the future may take place only after a deep evaluation of what it will take to comply with these new Earthly biospheric conditions. Each living representative on Earth will be getting a thorough "examination" or "quality control inspection" to determine its ability to comply with these new conditions.

These evolutionary challenges always require effort, or endurance, be it individual organisms, species, or communities. Therefore, it is not only the climate that is becoming new, but we as human beings are experiencing a global change in the vital processes of living organisms, or life itself—which is yet another link in the total process. We cannot treat such things separately, or individually.

[jumping forward to the conclusions:]

Conclusions

The situation that has been created here in our heliosphere is of external, interstellar, cosmic space origin, and is herein assumed to be caused by the underlying fundamental auto-oscillation space-physical processes of continuous creation that has shaped and continues to evolve our universe. The present excited state of our heliosphere exists within the whole or entire organism that makes up the Solar System: the Sun, planets, moons, comets, and asteroids, as well as the plasmas and/or electromagnetic mediums and structures of interplanetary space.

The response to these interstellar energy and matter injections into our heliosphere has been, and continues to be, a series of newly observed energetic processes and formations on all of the planets, between the planets and their moons, and between the planets and the Sun.

Earth's ability to adapt to these external actions and transferences is aggravated, made more difficult, by the technogeneious alterations we have made to the natural quality or state of our geological-geophysical environment.

Our planet Earth is now in the process of a dramatic transformation by altering the electromagnetic skeleton through a shift of the geomagnetic field poles, and through compositional changes in the ozone and hydrogen saturation levels of its gas-plasma envelopes. These changes in the Earth's physical state are being accompanied by resultant climatic/atmospheric and biospheric adaptation processes. These processes are becoming more and more intense and frequent as evidenced by the real-time increase in "non-periodic transient events"—i.e., catastrophes.

There are reasons favoring, or pointing to, the fact that a growth in the ethical or spiritual quality of humanity would decrease the number and intensity of complex catastrophes.

It has become vitally important that a world chart be prepared setting forth the favorable and the catastrophic regions on Earth, taking into account the quality of the geologic-geophysical environment, the variety and intensity of cosmic influences, and the real level of spiritual-ethical development of the people occupying those areas.

It is reasonable to point out that our planet will soon be experiencing these new conditions of growing energy, signifying the transition into a new state and quality of space-Earth relationship. The living organisms of those regions of Earth having the major "inlets", or attractions, for cosmic influences will be taking the lead in evolving life's appropriate reactions or processes to these new conditions.

These zones of vertical commutations and energy transfers are already becoming the heart or hotbeds in the search for new systems of adaptation and mutual transformation. The general list of these zones includes the polar regions, the eastern continental extremities of the equatorial regions (Caribbean, Madagascar, Philippines, Yellow Sea, etc.), and the inner continental zones tending to folding and uplifting (Himalayas, Pamir-Hindukush, Altay-Sayan systems, etc.).

The most significant of these areas are the helio-sensitive zones which have intense responses to geo-effective solar activities—responses that include the very dramatic and unusual manifestation of non-homogeneous vacuum or classical non-mechanical ether domain structures. These structures or objects then interact with the heliosensitive zones, producing deep and powerful effects upon the environment, such as the alteration of seismic activities and chemical compositions. Because these non-homogeneous vacuum-domain objects display not-of-this-physical-world characteristics such as "liquid light" and "non-Newtonian movement", it is difficult not to describe their manifestations as being "interworld processes". It is important to note that those heliosensitive zones that exhibit middle- and large-scale processes are also those that are closely associated with these "interworld processes" produced by physical vacuum homogeneity disturbances.

Such disturbances cause and create energy and matter transfer processes between the ether media and our three-dimensional world. The multitude of such phenomena, which is rich in it's quality and variety, is already growing quickly. Hundreds of thousands of these natural self-luminous formations are exerting an increasing influence upon Earth's geophysical fields and biosphere.

We suggest that the presence of these formations is the mainstream precedent to the transformation of Earth—an Earth which becomes more and more subject to the transitional physical processes which exist within the borderland between the physical vacuum and our material world.

All of this places humanity, and each one of us, squarely in front of a very difficult and topical problem: the creation of a revolutionary advancement in knowledge which will require a transformation of our thinking and being equal to this never-before-seen phenomena now presencing itself in our world. There is no other path to the future than a profound internal experiential perception and knowledge of the events now underway in the natural environment that surrounds us. It is only through this understanding that humanity will achieve balance with the renewing flow of the planetophysical states and processes.

So what these scientists are observing are the indicators or signs of a massive transformation of our Solar System into one which may support other, new forms and functions due to the increased cosmic energy we're experiencing.

The following explanation of a "plasma" helps us to better appreciate the fundamental electrical nature of our universe as hinted at above. This information is from the www.holoscience.com website:

The Electric Universe

Plasma has been called the "fourth state" of matter—after solids, liquids, and gases. Most of the matter in the universe is in the form of plasma. A plasma is formed if some of the negatively charged electrons are separated from their host atoms in a gas, leaving the atoms with a positive charge. The negatively charged electrons, and the positively charged atoms (known as positive ions) are then free to move separately under the influence of an applied voltage or magnetic field. Their net movement constitutes an electrical current. So, one of the more important properties of a plasma is that it can conduct electrical current. It does so by forming current filaments that follow magnetic field lines. Filamentary patterns are ubiquitous in the cosmos.

This next article is a bit more technical, but I believe you'll glean the essence, which will offer further insight into the important subject of plasmas. This article is extracted from the public.lanl.gov/alp/plasma/ubiquitous.html website:

What Is Plasma?

Plasma is overwhelmingly the dominant constituent of the universe as a whole. Yet most people are ignorant of plasmas. In daily life, on the surface of planet Earth, perhaps the plasma to which people are most commonly exposed is the one that produces the cool efficient glow from fluorescent lights. Neither solid nor liquid nor gas, a plasma most closely resembles the latter, but unlike gases whose components are electrically neutral, a plasma is composed of the building blocks of all matter: electrically charged particles at high energy.

Plasma is so energetic or "hot" that in space it consists solely of ions and electrons. It is only when a plasma is cooled that the atoms or molecules that are so predominant in forming gases, liquids, and solids that we are so accustomed to on Earth, is possible.

So in space, a plasma remains electrically charged. Thus, plasmas carry electric currents and are more influenced by electromagnetic forces than by gravitational forces. Outside the Earth's atmosphere, the dominant form of matter is plasma, and "empty" space has been found to be quite "alive" with a constant flow of plasma.

Plasma is by far the most common form of matter known. Plasmas in the stars and in the tenuous space between them make up over 99% of the visible universe and perhaps most of that which is not visible.

On Earth we live upon an island of "ordinary" matter. The different states of matter found on Earth are solid, liquid, and gas. We have learned to work, play, and rest using these states of matter. Sir William Crookes, an English physicist, identified another, more fundamental, state of matter in 1879. In 1929, Nobel Laureate Irving Langmuir gave this state a name: plasma. He borrowed the term from medical science because the matter with which he worked resembled life itself. It formed cells through bifurcation and often acted in a complicated and unpredictable manner. Plasma is defined as an assemblage of charged particles, called electrons and ions, that react collectively to forces exerted by electric and magnetic fields.

Given its nature, the plasma state is characterized by a complexity that vastly exceeds that exhibited in the solid, liquid, and gaseous states. Correspondingly, the study of the physical, and especially the electrodynamical, properties of plasma forms one of the most far-ranging and difficult research areas in physics today.

From spiral galaxies to controlled fusion, this little-known state of matter, the fundamental state, is proving to be of ever greater significance in explaining the dynamics of the universe and in harnessing the material world for the greatest technological result.

- There are only four dominant naturally-occurring states of matter, although many other states of matter exist when considered broadly. (See: A. Barton, States Of Matter, States Of Mind, IOP Press, 1997.)

- The Navier-Stokes equations are basic equations for studies of fluids and neutral gas systems.

- The Maxwell equations for electromagnetism and the plasma Boltzmann equation are the basic equations for studies of electromagnetic systems of which plasmas are a prime example.

In analysis, plasmas are far harder to model than solids, liquids, and gases because they act in a self-consistent manner. The separation of electrons and ions produces electric fields, and the motion of electrons and ions produce both electric and magnetic fields. The electric fields then tend to accelerate plasmas to very high energies, while the magnetic fields tend to guide the electrons. Both of these mechanisms—the accelerated (or fast) electrons and the magnetic fields—produce what is called synchrotron radiation, so-called because it was first discovered in large magnetized containers of electron beams in laboratories on Earth.

Because of their self-consistent motions, plasmas are rampant with instabilities, chaosity, and nonlinearities. These also produce electric and magnetic fields, but also electromagnetic radiation.

The term fundamental is used to denote plasmas because the constituent components of plasmas—electrons and ions—are the longest lived particles known. Their lifetimes far exceed that of any other known particle. Thus long after other forms of matter and radiation have ceased to exist, it will have reverted back into the plasma state.

Understanding Plasmas

While all matter is subject to gravitational forces, the positively charged nuclei, or ions, and the negatively charged electrons react strongly to electromagnetic forces, as formulated by James Clerk Maxwell (1831-1879) and Hendrik Antoon Lorentz (1853-1928). Because of this strong interaction with electromagnetism, plasmas display a complexity in structure that far exceeds that found in matter in the gaseous, liquid, or solid states. In addition to the cellular structure, most visible to us on the Sun, plasmas most often display a filamentary structure. This structure derives from the fact that a plasma, because of its free electrons, is an excellent conductor of electricity, far exceeding the conducting properties of metals such as copper or gold.

The above physics lesson is important to understand for what will be coming later on. Another matter, seemingly unrelated, has to do with those individuals/scientists who have died mysteriously in recent years, all of whom have a connection to research and/or revelations about so-called Planet X.

Murders Related To Planet X

In a discussion on March 2, 2003, that appears on the www.citiesoflight.net website, “Wayne” makes the following series of statements concerning these “mysterious” deaths:

[quoting]

With Planet X apparently approaching, and the renewed interest in comets and asteroids, plus the strange anomalies surrounding the Sun of late, the mystery and intrigue is beginning to build.

- On July 1, 1999, 20 French astronomers were killed in a mysterious accident as they were headed up the mountain to the observatory on Plateau de Bure on a cable car (<http://iram.fr/accident-a.html>). There were reports that the cable had been cut.

- Additionally, in 1997, Gene Shoemaker, of the University of Arizona, one of the discoverers of the Shoemaker-Levy comet, died under mysterious circumstances: a two-car crash in the middle of nowhere in Australia.

There are several others who “just happened” to pass on in 1997:

- Carl Sagan died in December after a two-year battle with bone marrow disease.

- On July 3, 1997, the son of a high-ranking NASA shuttle chief, named Brewster Shaw, from Houston, was killed. His bullet-riddled body was found stuffed in the trunk of his car at the bottom of a lake. Local police reported it was done by car-jackers.

- On June 25, 1997, the day of the supposed burn for the spacecraft and mid-course correction, and the day of the MIR “accident”, a Senior Program Director at NASA Headquarters, Dr. Gergen Ray, was found dead near his home in Potomac, Maryland, under unusual circumstances.

- A few days prior to that, a computer technician working on Pathfinder, in Palo Alto, California, was found dead. His body was wedged between a tree and a fence in a very well-traveled, upper-class residential-shopping area near Stanford University. Officials in his case claim that he was beaten to death by gang members.

- The Program Manager for Mars Surveyor at NASA Headquarters in Washington, Mary K. Olsen, went to Jet Propulsion Lab in Pasadena a few months ago, wound up in a hospital with a very strange and anomalous embolism, and died. She was only 35 years old.

- Father Malachi Martin spoke publicly about the coming of Planet X and the purpose of the Vatican-sponsored

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman, and child on planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the “coup d’état on the human mind”—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom.

Continuing with this theme, our next information comes from astronomical author, professor, and physicist James M. McCanney’s jmccanneyscience.com website, dated February 1, 2003, also concerning these “mystery” deaths:

The List Of Murdered People
Relative To Planet-X
Types Of Objects

Chuck Schramek — Houston news host and one person who took photos of the companion of Hale-Bopp who was on the old Art Bell Show. (For Chuck’s 1997 interview of me [McCanney], scroll to the bottom of my webpage and go to the real audio/radio link—this was a classic interview. When you listen to that interview you will see why they wanted him eliminated.)

Robert S. Harrington — at the time head of the Naval Observatory, Washington DC. Was head of NASA Planet X internal study and was on his final trip to New Zealand to photograph Planet X. He died suddenly of the same rapid-onset type of cancer that Chuck Schramek died from.

Gene Schumacher — NASA planetary geologist while studying ancient asteroid impacts in Australia. He was a prolific discoverer of comets and we all know now that NASA is lying about the fact that they know I [McCanney] am right and have been right for over 25 years—that comets are not dirty snowballs, but are a complex plasma discharge phenomena, and with the larger ones becoming planets and moons of the solar system.

Schumacher had access to the southern hemisphere data, as did Harrington. He could see the vast comet Hale-Bopp and knew, as did NASA at that time, of the original discovery of Hale-Bopp, which must have been in the same time that Harrington was viewing Planet X, that Hale-Bopp AT THAT TIME was on a near direct collision course with Earth (it later fell behind schedule due to the tail drag and missed us by nearly 3 months). But the point is that Schumacher must have known this and was going to go public to spill the beans on all of this. Like Harrington, he was well known and would have carried many scientists with him. The story of his “death” is the most ridiculous lie you would ever hear. There was no autopsy, and there is no information available other than there was a jeep crash and he died on the way to the hospital. His ashes were blasted into outer space, out of a NASA satellite, as a “tribute”.

Heaven’s Gate — was NOT a cult, but was a group of 39 or more very highly talented programmers who were NOT suicidal. They were building the most sophisticated firewall and encryption software on the planet. When their web page mentioned Hale-Bopp and all of a sudden became very popular as they were about to “leave society”, they were called to a meeting and the mole (we think that programmer mole is quite active on the current Planet X government disinformation website and related work on the web—yes, these are some really nice folks working for your government) informed the execution squad, and one by one, as the programmers entered the house, they were murdered. There was never an autopsy performed. The government immediately pulled down and changed their website and had a huge front page disinformation campaign in place all over this country.

Although not related to Planet X exactly, John Denver was about to become the first civilian to go into space under the direction of the Russian Space program. This was a little known fact about John. The “accident” was clearly the same “method” employed by the Clinton-Bush gang in the Mena Arkansas cocaine drug smuggling ring of the mid 1980s (for more information, read Terry Reed’s book Compromised). The way they eliminated risk pilots was to mess with their flight instruments to either send them off course or fix their gas gauge to read full but with an empty tank; that is what I think happened to John Denver.

Immediately upon John’s death there was a national news campaign to smear him, calling him a drunk alcoholic and that the FAA had been trying to pull his pilot’s license. That was most interesting since Northwest Airlines at the time had no less than 6 pilots currently flying 747s who had worse drinking records than this, including drinking ON THE JOB, and the FAA did nothing about them.

There is increasing evidence that a number of top astronomers who clearly had access to large telescopes have suddenly died of “heart attacks” recently. All I know at this point is that the stories are filtering in from various “sources” that their personal Planet X source just “died of a heart attack”.

James [Jim] Jones — remember them? It is now becoming apparent there is a concerted effort and pre-designated program to eliminate any group or person who would cause society to move from the standard dependence on your friendly federal government. Their techniques are pretty much the same. We think they have had a similar plan for a “cult-like group feeding off the alien contact trough” in place and the plan there was also to stage a Planet X suicide “party”.

The patterns are clear.

[end quoting]

To compound the complexity of this story, let's explore Comet NEAT, which made such a dramatic pass by our Sun in mid-February. I'll be quoting from a series of articles, in the order they were written, to help establish a chronology. To many of you, the very mention of Comet NEAT will be news. (This is NOT the same comet mentioned in our February 2003 News Desk column.) It's significance will make itself apparent, as you'll soon see.

Comet NEAT (C/2002 V1)

Let's take a brief look into the history of Comet NEAT, as it appears on the www.space.com website, titled Promising New Comet Called NEAT Graces Evening Sky, written by Joe Rao, and posted on January 31, 2003:

[quoting]

The first word about this new C/2002 V1 [comet] reached the astronomical community on a routine announcement card from the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory (SAO), Cambridge, Massachusetts, the clearinghouse in the United States for astronomical discoveries. The SAO also serves in that capacity as an agency of the International Astronomical Union.

The I.A.U. Circular No. 8010, dated November 6, 2002, stated that Steven H. Provdor of NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory reported the discovery of a new comet as part of NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory's NEAT program. NEAT is an autonomous celestial observatory [Near Earth Asteroid Tracking] searching for and studying asteroids and comets that roam the same region of the solar system through which Earth orbits.

The NEAT system, using a 1.2-meter (4-foot) telescope, is located in Hawaii and is a cooperative effort with the U.S. Air Force.

The following day on I.A.U. Circular 8011 a preliminary orbit for the new comet was published. The comet was then about 217 million miles (349 million kilometers) from the Sun. It was projected to make its closest approach to the Sun (called “perihelion”) at a distance of 9.2 million miles (14.8 million kilometers) on February 18, 2003. That's just under one-tenth the Earth's average distance from the Sun.

[end quoting]

Let's turn now to an article written by Fintan Dunne, editor of the GuluFuture.com website. The article is titled:

[quoting]

Welcome To Planet NEAT

Many NASA scientists are listening to his radio broadcasts, according to James McCanney in his February 27th broadcast. Server bandwidth was exceeded on the broadcast due to the increased volume of listeners.

In a reference to GuluFuture.com and other websites, Professor McCanney complimented the “amateur scientists who have uncovered the manipulation of images by NASA”.

Summarizing the current situation for new listeners, Prof. McCanney said: “Something big is going on in our solar system right now. All the planets did not form at the same time. And a new planet can form at any time. The planet NEAT is obviously a new planet.”

“The nucleus is probably about the size of the planet Mercury. It is in an orbit that is perpendicular and will not interact in a gravitational manner, but action at a distance is the rule in the solar system.”

“You could see the Earth react to Comet NEAT. And NASA shut down the SOHO feed because clearly they were not getting the photos they wanted. [SOHO feeds are live, real-time daily images of the Sun through a variety of very sophisticated lenses.] The comet was doing things it shouldn't.

“All the satellite information on solar winds, etc., were giving different readings. NASA is hiding data. A group of scientists are in charge who are, well, liars. They are not talking about this.”

[still quoting:]

Internet And Disinformation

Professor McCanney said that people should beware of the Internet.

“There is a lot of misinformation out there. A lot of government sites out there are giving misleading information.

“One piece of misinformation came out today that this comet was about a six-kilometer-sized piece of rock.”

Later in the broadcast Professor McCanney detailed the second misinformation in an ABCNews.com article by Lee Dye.

“He quotes a David Morrison—who they say is a senior NASA scientist. He is saying that asteroids could collide with Earth and cause a problem.

“Morrison is a very elderly man and they are ridiculing him.

“JPL and Goddard are the two news release agencies for NASA—so why is ABC News using Morrison's name to talk about a possible threat?

“And the article quotes Lee Clark—Associate Professor of Sociology from Rutgers. What is he doing talking about asteroids? Where are the NEAT impact team?

“Clarke says it may not happen for thousands or millions of years, if at all.

“The article says nothing about Comet NEAT. They knew it was big, they knew it was inbound and said nothing. Why?

“Because they knew the public is smart enough to ask what else is out there. And what if they came near the Planet Earth? The average guy would realize this immediately.

“But the public realized one thing—that Comet NEAT was huge. If you can see a comet in broad daylight Sun, near the Sun, it must be huge.

“Now, 2.5 years into a solar minimum, the Sun is going crazy. We have had about four comets come in by the Sun in a week.”

[still quoting:]

Neat Info

Later in the broadcast, Prof. McCanney revealed important information about the NEAT Comet passage past the Sun.

“As NEAT rounded the Sun, it was in perfect alignment with Mercury. On the 19th [of February 2003] you see a very faint trailer. That's the electron beam that is connecting the comet to Mercury. Mercury at the time was probably turning into a comet and attracting quite a bit of material.”

Weather Effects

“The response on Earth is incredible weather. You get very exaggerated flipping of the jet streams taking place. Because the jet stream is influenced by the solar wind.

“Comets at a great distance can affect us—as described in the Hopi legends, which say blue comets are the dangerous ones.”

[end quoting]

On February 27 I [R.M.] received an e-mail dated February 24, titled This Is Really NEAT, written by Edgar J. Steele:

[quoting]

After a great misery for mankind an even greater approaches.

The great cycle of the centuries is renewed:

It will rain blood, milk, famine, war, and disease.

In the sky will be seen a fire, dragging a tail of sparks.

— Nostradamus, Century 2, Quatrain 46 (1654)

Something else truly amazing is taking place in the solar system at this moment. A huge comet is rounding the Sun, a comet twice the size of Jupiter (about 22 times the size of Earth).

Some have seen it at sunrise and sunset; otherwise, it is not visible because it is occluded by solar glare. Essentially, it is coming from behind the Sun....

NASA's solar observatory has released a number of pictures of this comet, but those stopped just as a huge coronal mass ejection (CME) erupted from the Sun toward the comet. Some call these things "sunspots".

This comet is passing within 9 million miles of the solar surface. In celestial terms, that is a very near miss.

You haven't heard about this, have you?

Remember the hullabaloo over Hale-Bopp and Levy-Shoemaker? They were pikers by comparison with what has been dubbed Comet NEAT.

Why all the silence this time?

I have read a good deal of speculation on several different Internet sites. Some see it as biblical prophecy fulfilled. Some consider this to be Nibiru or Planet X, foretold by the Mayans as passing through the Solar System every 3,600 years or so. Some consider this simply to be an awesome photo opportunity.

Some say the strange weather on Earth lately is the result of an effect caused by the Sun, which in turn is responding to Comet NEAT.

Electromagnetic fields reach hundreds of millions of miles into space, you see, and are generated by all celestial objects. Influences occur at distances far in excess of that between the Sun and Comet NEAT or, for that matter, between Earth and Comet NEAT.

The Sun has a regularly-repeating solar "sunspot" activity cycle of approximately 11 years. 2000 was to have been the most recent peak. Solar activity, rather than dropping off in year 12 [2001], as it always has, has continued to rise ever since.

Earth's magnetic field has been weakening in an accelerating fashion of late. The North Pole, which wanders anyway, has traveled almost as far in the past 20 years as it did in the 100 years prior to that, when it was located in Canada's northern Yukon Territory.

Some hypothesize that Earth's poles reverse when its magnetic field reaches zero. The geological record proves the poles have shifted many times down through the history of the Earth (metal flakes in lava align with the magnetic field, to be frozen in place when the lava cools, you see, just like the needle in a compass). Coincidence? Perhaps.

Maybe it is nothing. Maybe it is something. If something, it could be the most significant occurrence in recorded human history.

Generally, the concern is not that Comet NEAT will strike Earth or even come near us (though I have yet to see a good description of its path relative to Earth). Rather, the concern is for the effect upon us through the electromagnetic interaction between it and Earth and the Sun.

There is a secondary concern that something this huge could have smaller objects following in its wake, or that pieces of it broke off during the massive solar flare when it passed near the Sun, pieces that might find their way to Earth. "Planet-buster" asteroids can be as small as 1/3 mile in diameter.

[end quoting]

Then, in an article from an e-mail I received on February 23, titled Comet Side-Effects, author unknown, comes the following information:

[quoting]

Comet Side-Effects

Massive solar eruptions have accompanied the close solar flyby of the Comet NEAT Tuesday. One coronal mass ejection plume at 05:00 hours 18 Feb., Tuesday morning, extended at least 5 million miles from the surface of the Sun toward the comet. Other coronal discharges were observed extending in excess of 12 million miles.

In the early hours of Thursday morning [Feb. 20] around 6:30 a.m., the Godlikeproductions.com comet discussion board (linked to the absent Kent Steadman's CyberspaceOrbit website) inexplicably went offline about thirty minutes after participants discovered that NASA had been faking web-images of the comet's passage past the Sun on the morning of the 18th of February.

A web-image posted by NASA from a sequence of 7 missing hourly photos of the comet near the Sun, had a tell-tale partial white comet image below the observed comet location. The photo thus shows two positions for the comet. This partial matched the exact position of the comet in later NASA images in the sequence posted from the SOHO satellite.

A total of 7 hours of data from early Tuesday had been missing from the hourly photographs released by the SOHO project monitoring the comet's passage. Also a U.S. military website following the comet's flyby did not provide new images from 11:30 p.m. EST Tuesday until late Wednesday afternoon. The images normally update several times an hour. At one point the website showed pictures from Feb. 12, 2003 in their 5 minute update. The implications given all this is that the current image data has highly dubious credibility. The severity of the solar reactions could have torn the comet apart, and even without this, the coronal mass ejection could cause significant weather, geomagnetic, and seismic effects on Earth. One side-effect of the interaction with the Sun may be that the orbit of the comet has been flattened. Orbit calculations had indicated it would be directly overhead around Nov. 28, 2003, but if alternative theories about comet composition are correct, then the close flyby could have altered the trajectory disastrously.

There are numerous other articles available on the Internet concerning the controversy of "tampered with" images from SOHO. But, I want to keep progressing with this story and there is a lot of ground yet to cover.

In an e-mail I received on March 2 comes the following information:

[quoting]

Danger Comet Photo/Story Update

We have witnessed far smaller and less relevant comets being given more publicity and hype, yet when a few-thousand-year event takes place with a comet larger than a small planet ("It is far the brightest and largest comet seen" says Paal Brekke, SOHO deputy project scientist, telling SPACE.com), there is MEDIA COVERAGE SILENCE!

This when added to the data manipulation and silence from NASA and other observatories leads us to one conclusion:

This event has everyone in authority extremely scared and they have no idea what may be the final results of its trajectory or its passing.

Silence is a strategy that a top advisor to the U.S. government has already stated would be the policy for impact or dangerous objects moving through space. We may be seeing this policy currently being enforced.

Here are some quotes from the Homeland Security Office one day after the comet changed its trajectory, being influenced by a massive solar flare. (This happened on the 18th of February. Homeland Security issued their warning on the 19th of February.)

Here are some "give-away" quotes from the Homeland Security website:

- "Be prepared to improvise and use what you have on hand to make it on your own for at least three days, maybe longer."

- "Some of the things you can do to prepare for the unexpected, such as assembling a supply kit and developing a family communications plan, are the same for both a natural or man-made emergency." (www.ready.gov/overview1.html)

- "You may have trouble getting through, or the phone system may be down altogether, but be patient." (www.ready.gov/overview.html)

- "If you see large amounts of debris in the air, or if local authorities say the air is badly contaminated, you may want to "shelter-in-place". (www.ready.gov/overview2.html)

Do you think that terrorism will cause "natural" disaster or "debris in the air"?! (That is a giveaway.) The only advice to readers is: Be vigilant/be prepared.

Please note that the preparation steps issued by the U.S. government on February 19th at www.ready.gov. are the bare minimum and do little more than avert panic and limit liability so the government can say they at least warned us.

[end quoting]

As is always the case in matters concerning comets and NASA, on the other side of the conspiracy isle we have the following rebuttal (typical and transparent, I might add) concerning a NASA cover-up, appearing on the www.space.com website:

[quoting excerpts]

Alleged NASA Cover-Up Of Menacing "NEAT" Comet Threat Is Pure Bunk, Experts Say

by Robert Roy Britt
Senior Science Writer, 2/28/03

Internet accounts of a comet, supposedly bigger than Jupiter and possibly bearing down on Earth, have concerned citizens e-mailing astronomers and journalists worldwide asking if the end is finally nigh. True to form, the rumors also include allegations of a cover-up by NASA.

Scientists say there is absolutely no danger and call the suggestions of cover-up false and even silly.

ALIEN AGENDA: Investigating The Extraterrestrial Presence Among Us

by Jim Marrs

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic. — George Eberhart, Ft. Worth Star-Telegram

The inaccurate portrayals on various Internet sites range from suggestions that the comet's electromagnetic field will drastically alter Earth's weather in coming days to even wilder notions that it is not a comet but instead the long-missing and hypothetical "Planet X". In some accounts the object is destined to fulfill dire biblical prophecy.

Comets are chunks of ice and rock that form in the outer reaches of the solar system and orbit the Sun. When they approach the inner solar system, on elongated loops, solar energy boils material away. This gas and dust shines with reflected sunlight, creating the telltale heads and tails that make popular viewing targets out of the icy visitors.

The accusations of cover-up result, in part, from a few alleged missing images, or images that NASA tampered with, in the series snapped over a few days by SOHO (Solar and Heliospheric Observatory).

Plait called the tampering suggestion silly.

Plait said the idea that NEAT is as big as a planet is just plain wrong.

"The actual comet itself, the chunk of rock and ice, is only a few miles across" he said. "What we see in the [SOHO] images is the cloud of gas surrounding the nucleus, evaporated off the surface by the heat of the Sun. That cloud is huge, but the comet itself is tiny."

Doomsday aficionados might also recall that a chance alignment of planets in the year 2000 had been cited as a moment that would bring great gravitational calamity to Earth. Nothing happened, just as reputable scientists had predicted.

Plait predicts the same non-occurrence of the present prognostications.

"I wonder what those conspiracy theorists will say a week or two from now, when nothing has happened" Plait said. "Will they say NASA covered up the destruction of the Earth?"

[end quoting]

Continuing with facets of the Comet NEAT "controversy", this next information comes to us from the aoreport.com website:

[quoting]

Furor Over Doomsday Comet
On The Internet
(Updated 2/26/03)

Is this comet real or is it a machine?
Is NASA telling us the truth or is there a cover-up?

Could all of the furor be the product of overactive imaginations or "conspiracy nut-cases"?

This is the median of 43 images of 50 seconds each, captured in the time period from 17:32:01 UT to 18:17:56 UT on 1/31/03 by Soren V. Andersen, David Lange, Martin Sorensen, Kristian Mandrup, and Michael Jensen. Image size = 1.2 degrees; the comet has an angular size more than twice the full Moon. (Above image is from the www.amtsbgym-sdbg.dk/as/Neat website, with thanks to the observatory at EUC Syd and AGS - Sonderborg.)

- Signs in the heavens?
- Confusion reigns over solar-comet behavior & the after-effects.
- Strange things are happening out by the Sun, and those events may be creating a bizarre set of circumstances here on Earth.

SOHO researchers allege coverup by NASA with 7 missing pictures from spacecraft removed from website. NASA also accused of tampering with and/or faking SOHO pictures to mislead independent researchers and the public.

Then there was the incident involving a forum discussion website that was discussing the latest coverup information and current picture controversy which was suddenly hacked down and out of existence from the Internet for a critical time.

The Comet NEAT Is Big:

- Sun Diameter = 870,000 miles
- Comet NEAT Diameter = 348,000 miles

- Length of NEAT's tail = 5,220,000 miles

- Jupiter Diameter = 88,782 miles (That Makes The Comet 4 Times Bigger than Jupiter!)

This is a HUGE Comet—not one peep out of the media over this. Nothing from the science community to speak of either. (Note: Comet size referred to is size of coma—actual comet approximate size of Mercury.)

[end quoting]

Obviously a great deal of effort was directed toward keeping this comet out of the public eye.

Nostradamus

In an article by Jack Manuelian, author of Nostradamus: Predictions Of WWII, titled "Is The Prophesied Comet Here?" we read:

[quoting]

The prophetic quatrain no.62, century no.2 of Nostradamus is a reflection of our nowadays. It states:

"Mabus then shortly will die, there will come a horrible devastation of people and animals.

Then suddenly the vengeance will be seen when the comet runs.

For a hundred hands (500 days as each hand has 5 fingers) there is going to be widespread thirst and hunger."

Some have interpreted "Mabus" as a reference to Saddam (Hussein) since reading the word Saddam on reverse sounds like the anagrammic word Mabus. Hence, the prophet could be saying that when Saddam is murdered by our President Bush during the planned war upon Iraq, we should look up in the sky for the visitation of the comet—and what a vengeance that would be! God help us!

[end quoting]

Another interpretation of the same quatrain comes from John Hogue, well-known author on Nostradamus. The following article comes from his TheHogueProphecy.com website and appears in his February 3 publication:

[quoting]

Nostradamus' famous "Mabus" prophecy is about to be fulfilled. A translation in English reads:

"Mabus will soon die, then will come,

A horrible undoing of people and animals,

At once will see vengeance,

One-hundred powers, thirst, famine, when the comet will pass."

Nostradamus wrote two prophecies concerning the advent, destruction, and 27-year war of the third of three antichrists. He hid the name of the first antichrist under the anagram "Napaulon Roy" (Napoleon King); the second he called "Hister" (Hitler); the third is either code named "Mabus" (C2-Q62), or he is addressed as the "Third Antichrist" of Century 8 Quatrain 77. For now, I will give you brief interpretive conclusions about the Mabus/Third Antichrist prophecies.

Two finalists compete for the title of "Mabus". By following the laws of anagram you turn the "M" and "a" in "Mabus" upside down and they become "g. W." The "h" then is left silent in Latinized French, thus "bus" becomes "bus(h)." "Mabus" therefore becomes G.W. Bus(h).

As I have been saying for over 15 years now, you can also get Saddam (Hussein) out of "Mabus" by using the anagram game of reverse lettering. Put Mabus into lower case letters: "mabus". Reverse them and you get "subam". Reverse any letter that makes another letter and you get "sudam". The laws of anagram allow for doubling one letter, so you can get "suddam". You are allowed one vowel's replacement with another, so you can replace "u" with "a" to spell "saddam".

I have shared my belief on the record for nine years (and counting) that Nostradamus' Third Antichrist is none other than Saddam Hussein. However, as events catch up with augury, an interpreter must be open minded to the ever clearer understanding that often comes when the light of future events foreseen draw near to the present.

No matter how repugnant this revelation may be to myself and to other Americans, I cannot rule out the growing prescient evidence that the Third Antichrist may be the American president G.W. Bush, rather than Iraqi president Saddam Hussein. It is also necessary to confront the ugly possibility that Nostradamus has once again mistaken his symbols and made a composite out of two adversarial leaders. In other words, Mabus is a composite of Bush and Saddam Hussein. They are the two-faced catalysts for the Third World War.

The events of the next few months will judge my interpretation of the Mabus prophecy true or false. If my understanding of Nostradamus is correct, then the United States will invade Iraq. Saddam Hussein will be killed in one of his bunkers by a missile or by a coup. If he is "Mabus" then he "soon dies". He therefore is one of the first casualties of this new war. His death is not the beginning of the end of troubles, but the end of the beginning of a 27-year war of terror. A number of Nostradamus' prophecies imply that this war's final stages could see nuclear exchanges between old adversaries of the Cold War era, Russia and America, as well as a nuclear exchange between America and China—all taking place sometime no later than the end of the 2020s. In other words, a rush to war will hasten the death of Mabus, and his death brings this terrible apocalypse upon humanity.

Nostradamus in Century 8, Quatrain 77 says:

"The Third Antichrist very soon annihilated. Twenty-seven years his bloody war will last. The heretics are dead, captives exiled, blood-soaked human bodies, and a reddened, icy hail covering the Earth."

The Third Antichrist—this man named Mabus—is the first to go down. Whether this first casualty of war turns out to be the president of America or of Iraq—or both—the war of Mabus is just beginning. It is a war motivated by "heretic" religious views. Its catalyst harbors extreme fundamentalist and apocalyptic religious views, be they Christian (in the case of Bush) or Islamic (in the case of Saddam Hussein).

Islamic terrorists are already the "captives, exiled" filling U.S. POW camps at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. The final line could be a horrific description of the human wreckage one might behold if the death of the American president or the Iraqi president should inspire a catastrophic retaliatory revenge attack ("a great undoing [or destruction] of people and animals").

Nostradamus, in other quatrains, hints of "new plagues" unleashed across the Earth from this war. Perhaps the red stain upon corpses and the icy hail are a 16th century man's attempt to describe those killed by a rain of chemical and biological weapons.

Perhaps "Mabus soon dies" in the next few weeks, after "the comet" passes.

John Hogue wrote this before the passing of Comet NEAT, so in this writing he was interpreting the comet as the Space Shuttle Columbia. He also is interpreting descriptions of Nostradamus as being necessarily war-related.

If I understand the possible impact that another passing comet could have (which you'll read about later in this article), Nostradamus's descriptions may be war related, or they may also be connected to Earth changes brought on by celestial events.

In addition to the above, there has been a recent "controversy" over informing the public in the event of the discovery of a Near Earth Object.

Let's take a moment to see what the flap is over:

EVIL AGENDA OF THE SECRET GOVERNMENT

Asteroids And Secrecy: If End Is Nigh, Do You Want To Know?

by Robert Roy Britt
Senior Science Writer, 2/24/03

Suppose a giant asteroid is heading toward Earth right now. Impact is certain. The consequences are expected to be globally devastating, with the human race among the casualties. The chances of doing anything about it are zero, the government decides.

Would you want to know?

Or would you prefer the Feds keep the information secret and spare you and your neighbors a bunch of pointless worrying?

In essence, the question concerns whether you'd prefer to die in ignorant bliss, or if you'd like some options. The alternatives might include dying in a panic, calmly making peace with your Maker, finally taking the kids to Disneyland or—who knows?—making a last-ditch effort to fight odds your elected leaders say are wholly against you.

For several reasons that will become apparent as you read on, the question is largely moot.

But that didn't stop it from coming up at a major science gathering earlier this month and generating a global round of conspiracy headlines. According to some articles, the U.S. Government has been advised to withhold information of a catastrophic impact, were one ever found to be imminent. The Times of London put this headline above its story: Don't Tell Public Of Doomsday Asteroid.

The media accounts centered around the words of one graduate student (the press variously and erroneously called him a scientist, a researcher, and a government adviser). Geoffrey Sommer spoke as part of a seven-person panel Feb. 13 at an impact hazard symposium during a meeting of the prestigious American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), held in Denver.

Controversial Words

Here are the widely quoted words, from an AAAS press release, attributed to Sommer (much to his surprise, he said later):

"When a problem arises with high uncertainty, there is an opportunity to spin the problem to avoid global panic. If you can't do anything about a warning, then there is no point in issuing a warning at all. If an extinction-type impact is inevitable, then ignorance for the populace is bliss."

Those words were taken "severely out of context" and "inaccurately described my position" according to Sommer, who says he was not advocating a position but rather discussing choices involving information disclosure that policymakers would face. Yet the press release was sent out with, effectively, an AAAS stamp of approval, and for several days, all Sommer could do was watch as the comments generated ire among readers and some frustration on the part of scientists.

However misconstrued, the quote seemed to stem logically enough from a case study that was part of Sommer's doctoral dissertation at the Rand Graduate School, operated by the Rand Corporation (the media inaccurately placed him as an employee of the Rand Corporation working for the government). The dissertation's topic: Low-Probability, High-Consequence Threats And How Policymakers Might Evaluate Them.

Whatever the circumstances, Sommer received some vitriolic responses to his words, which many saw as downright wrongheaded and arrogant at worst, pessimistic at best.

"Inconceivable"

Late last week, Sommer explained his true stance to space.com. First, the reaction of scientists—most of whom were somewhat confused about what Sommer was actually trying to say—shows how passionately they detest secrecy.

Across the board, experts in asteroid search efforts and death-by-space-rock risk assessment, collectively known as the Near Earth Object (NEO) community, contest whether secrecy could ever be warranted, let alone possible.

The Panic Myth

At the heart of Sommer's case is how people would respond to the knowledge of looming cataclysm.

Lee Clarke, who advocates asteroid-mitigation planning, spoke at the AAAS asteroid symposium, too. The Rutgers University sociologist studies big-time catastrophes and the supposed public panic that comes with them. He says the whole concept that everyone freaks out is largely a myth.

"We have five decades of research on all kinds of disasters—earthquakes, tornadoes, airplane crashes, etc.—and people rarely lose control" Clarke said. "Policy-makers have yet to accept this. People are quite capable of following plans, even in the face of extreme calamities, but such plans must be there."

A scheme for survival would require good international communication and ought to be discussed in the United Nations, so that poorer countries are not left out of any world blueprint for notification and mobilization, Clarke said. "Earth's history is filled with unanticipated catastrophes and their disastrous consequences. With appropriate planning, the human toll could be lessened."

Clarke figures the worst thing governments could do is lose public trust by withholding information. But he points out that secrecy might appeal to some public officials.

"Keeping secret something potentially very dangerous is an idea that would resonate very well with the current administration in Washington" Clarke said. "It would probably resonate with most high-level decision makers."

[end quoting]

Let's hear from Lee Clarke, in his own words, concerning the issue of panic in a global catastrophe. This article comes from the www.spaceguard.ias.rm.cnr.it website:

[quoting]

NEO IMPACT SYMPOSIUM & SECRECY ISSUES (Posted 2/25/03)

Clarke Summary:
Responding To Panic
In A Global Impact Catastrophe

A common fear among high level decision makers is that people react badly to bad news (we don't want to cry wolf) and that they will panic if a catastrophe happens. Scientists who think and write about global catastrophes also worry that the public will panic. But our leaders are wrong, because panic in disasters, at least in the United States, is quite rare. And our scientists are often unscientific, because they're neglecting the empirical evidence on how people behave in dire circumstances.

Fifty years of social science research on disasters and extreme situations show that panic is rare even when people feel excessive fear. Panic, according to the Oxford English Dictionary, is an excessive feeling of alarm or fear leading to extravagant or injudicious efforts to secure personal safety. Panic usually refers to desperate acts of self-preservation that have the contrary effect of harming self and/or others. People escaping from the destruction of the World Trade Center didn't act like that, nor did they disregard the needs of others around them. Instead, they behaved civilly and cooperatively. We now know that almost everyone survived if they were below the floors where the airplanes struck the buildings. That is in large measure because people did not become hysterical, but instead facilitated a successful evacuation.

Hollywood's disaster movies Armageddon and Deep Impact are obvious examples, but any disaster movie will show people running wildly from catastrophe, knocking over their own grandmothers to save themselves. That's dead wrong. Not only will they save their grandmothers, they'll save complete strangers, before saving themselves. This is surprising if one assumes that people are naturally self-interested. But looking at the evidence leads to the inescapable conclusion that people are naturally social.

A major reason that the panic myth persists is that it provides authorities (i.e., decision-makers, politicians, and administrators) with an easy explanation for complex events. Even when panic does happen, say at soccer matches, focusing on it usually detracts attention from more important factors such as official misconduct or police over-reaction.

In addition, by using pacifying speech (e.g., "Everything is under control.") and to allay public fear and hiding information from the public, spokespersons cultivate distrust at a time when nothing could be more important to public safety than trust of the information that authorities disseminate.

The truth is that disasters are normal. Disasters are special situations but they are still social ones, and people generally follow community expectations when things go awry, just like in less tumultuous times. Furthermore, people don't usually lose their sense of community, even when every building has been destroyed. The more consistent pattern in disasters is that people connect in the aftermath and work to rebuild their physical and cultural environments.

The lion's share of thinking and research concerning Near Earth Objects (NEOs) has gone into detection and deflection. It's a mistake to neglect the social, political, and organizational aspects of the problem. Our concern is, after all, with people: saving them, helping them, educating them, working with them.

This presentation will consider these issues, and try to specify the utility, and limitations, of extant social science research for trying to predict and manage the public response to a global impact catastrophe. Some of the presentation will be built on a paper, Panic: Myth Or Reality, which appeared in the Fall 2002 issue of Contexts, the American Sociological Association's general-interest journal.

On the question of why governments fear public panic, my hunch is that it's just common sense, which is sometimes more common than sense. But it's very real among high-level decision-makers. Even professional emergency managers often believe it. One quick example: a fellow who works for the NYC mayor was speaking at a conference for emergency managers last October. He made a big deal about how one of the lessons of Guiliani's handling of risk communication after 9/11 was that he asserted a single, strong voice; had he not, this fellow claimed, New Yorkers would have panicked. Sadly, he totally dismissed me, even though I offered real evidence to the contrary.

My claim in Denver won't be that panic never happens, or that it isn't an issue regarding NEOs. It will be more measured than that. I will point to the research on disasters, all of which suggests panic, at least the usual conception of it, probably wouldn't happen. But there are big limits to the validity of the extrapolations we can confidently make from present knowledge to NEO-related issues. We can predict confidently, I believe, that if policy makers act as if people can't handle bad news, then they can help produce the very irrationalities they fear. The problem of risk communication in this venue hasn't been discussed enough.

Let's take a closer look at the subject of Near Earth Objects. Don't you wonder why, all of a sudden, this is such a hot topic for debate on all sides? Let's consider an article from NASA Ames Research Center's website page on "Asteroid And Comet Impact Hazards":

[quoting]

What Is A NEO?

Near-Earth-Objects (NEOs) are small bodies in the solar system (asteroids and short-period comets) with orbits that regularly bring them close to the Earth and which, therefore, are capable someday of striking our planet. Sometimes the term NEO is also used loosely to include all comets (not just short-period ones) that cross the Earth's orbit. Those NEOs with orbits that actually intersect the Earth's orbit are called Earth-Crossing Objects (ECOs).

What Size NEOs Are Dangerous?

The Earth's atmosphere protects us from most NEOs smaller than a modest office building (50 meter diameter, or impact energy of about 5 megatons).

From this size, up to about 1 km diameter, an impacting NEO can do tremendous damage on a local scale.

Above an energy of a million megatons (diameter about 2 km), an impact will produce severe environmental damage on a global scale. The probable consequence would be an "impact winter" with loss of crops worldwide and subsequent starvation and disease.

Still larger impacts can cause mass extinctions, like the one that ended the age of the dinosaurs 65 million years ago (15 km diameter and about 100 million megatons).

Are Any NEOs Predicted To Hit The Earth?

As of the end of 2001, astronomers had discovered more than half of the larger Near Earth Asteroids (diameter greater than 1 km). None of the known asteroids is a threat, but we have no way of predicting the next impact from an unknown object.

How Much Warning Will We Have?

With at least half of even the larger NEOs remaining undiscovered, the most likely warning today would be zero. The first indication of a collision would be the flash of light and the shaking of the ground as it hit.

In contrast, if the current surveys actually discover a NEO on a collision course, we would expect many decades of warning. Any NEO that is going to hit the Earth will swing near our planet many times before it hits, and it should be discovered by comprehensive sky searches. This is the purpose of the Spaceguard Survey. In almost all cases, we will either have a long lead-time or none at all.

[end quoting]

Let's look a bit closer at the Spaceguard System mentioned above, from the www.spaceguard.ias.rm.cnr.it website:

[quoting]

What Is The Spaceguard System?

The Spaceguard System is a collection of observatories all around the world that are engaged in Near Earth Object (NEO) observations. At this time these observatories are all ground-based. A few of these centers are conducting “discovery” programs, while others are mainly involved in “follow-up” observations.

It is the purpose of the Spaceguard Central Node to provide these observatories with services that may result in optimizing the level of international coordination for follow-up of NEOs.

The participation of observatories to the services offered is on a voluntary basis.

[end quoting]

Now consider the following article titled How Dangerous Are Earth-Crossing Objects? by Philip R. Burns, which appears at the www.pibburns.com website:

[quoting]

Earth Crossing Objects

Spacewatch and other Near Earth Object search programs demonstrate that the Earth is surrounded by a swarm of asteroids and comets that threaten us with collision and world-wide destruction. The danger from Near Earth Objects has sparked research into the probability of occurrence of damaging impacts, as well as the possibility of deflecting potential impactors before they strike the Earth.

The extent of the damage that even a small impactor can cause is exemplified by the asteroid or comet fragment which exploded in the air over Tunguska in Siberia in June of 1908, with a force equivalent to between ten and twenty megatons of TNT. (Such an explosion in the air, in which the impactor does not reach the ground intact, is called an air-burst or air-blast.) The resulting blast wave leveled hundreds of square kilometers of forest. The area was sparsely inhabited, so only two people are reported to have been killed: Vasiliy, son of Okhchen, died from wounds sustained after being hurled against a tree by the blast, and the aged hunter Lyuburman of Shanyagir died from shock.

The Tunguska object was probably a stony body about 50-70 meters (around 200 feet) in diameter. An object of this size could easily destroy a large metropolitan center. This nearly happened with Tunguska; a difference in arrival time of a few hours might have seen populous St. Petersburg or another European city destroyed. In fact, at about the same time as the Tunguska object exploded, a small object struck near the city of Kiev. The coincidence in time leads some scientists to speculate that the Kiev object may be a fragment of the Tunguska impactor, or at least a fragment of the same parent object as the Tunguska impactor.

Smaller scale air-bursts over populated areas have caused minor damage. For example, an air-burst over Madrid, Spain in 1896 smashed windows and leveled a wall. There are many reports of air-bursts causing tremors and minor damage in inhabited areas.

John Lewis's book Rain Of Iron And Ice lists a couple of dozen such incidents over the past century. A small air-burst which occurred over El Paso, Texas, USA, on October 9, 1997, caused no apparent damage but did alarm residents. Another which occurred July 7, 1999, over New Zealand was captured on videotape. Fortunately, most air-bursts occur over the oceans, so no damage to human habitations results.

What size impactor makes it through the atmosphere to the lower atmosphere or the ground with enough remaining velocity to produce a damaging air-burst or crater-forming impact? It turns out that the Earth's atmosphere is ineffective in preventing ground impact damage for stony meteorites greater than 200 meters (about 650 feet) in diameter. For iron meteorites that impact at greater than 20 km/sec (12.5 mi/sec), the critical diameter is about 40-60 meters (130-200 feet). Stony bodies greater than 60 meters and less than 200 meters can cause significant air-burst damage as at Tunguska.

The greatest danger from an ocean impact occurs when the incoming body does not disintegrate in the atmosphere, but instead strikes the water relatively intact. The impact raises a tsunami which, if the object is large enough, can devastate coastal areas hundreds of miles away. Tsunamis of unknown origin are usually attributed to earthquakes and volcanos, but it is likely that some—including the largest and most damaging—result from cosmic impacts. An asteroid of sufficient size to raise a tsunami with an average height of 100 meters along the entire coast of the ocean strikes once every few thousand years on average.

Stony bodies less than 200 meters in diameter do not produce tsunamis, while those larger than 200 meters can produce catastrophic tsunamis. Water waves generated by such an impactor are two-dimensional disturbances that fall off in height only inversely with distance from the point of impact. The average run-up in height of a tsunami as it reaches the continental shelf is more than an order of magnitude. An impact anywhere in the Atlantic of a stony asteroid more than 400 meters (1,300 feet) in diameter would devastate coasts on both sides of the ocean. Tsunami run-ups would exceed 60 meters (200 feet).

Frequently it is asserted that there have been no recorded deaths caused by meteorite strikes. In fact, as John Lewis points out in his book Rain Of Iron And Ice, there have been a number of injuries and deaths attributed to meteorite impacts throughout history.

The well-known Richter scale is often used to gauge the severity of an earthquake. The recently developed Torino Scale measures the potential damage from a cosmic impact on a scale on 0 (no damage) to 10 (an impact event capable of causing a global climatic catastrophe). The Torino Scale was developed by Richard P. Binzell of MIT.

The idea of deflecting impactors before they strike the Earth goes back at least to Lord Byron, who in 1822 wrote:

"Who knows whether, when a comet shall approach this globe to destroy it, as it often has been and will be destroyed, men will not tear rocks from their foundations by means of steam, and hurl mountains, as the giants are said to have done, against the flaming mass? And then we shall have traditions of Titans again, and of wars with Heaven."

A few ideas for deflecting a threatening near-Earth comet or asteroid include:

- Attach rockets to the NEO's surface with the engines pointed away from the object. Fire the rocket engines for a sufficiently long time to nudge the NEO into a new non-threatening orbit.

- Build a mass driver on the NEO's surface. A mass drive accelerates fragments of the NEO into space. The reaction would nudge the NEO into a different non-threatening orbit.

- Attach a thin solar sail several square kilometers in size to the NEO with strong cables. Solar wind pressure would eventually nudge the NEO into a new non-threatening orbit.

- Detonate sizable nuclear weapons near the NEO. The energy pulse released by the bombs would vaporize part of the NEO's surface. The vaporized material blown away from the surface would propel the NEO in the opposite direction, again moving the the NEO into a non-threatening orbit.

All of these methods—and many more which have been proposed—rely on sufficiently early detection of the threat from a particular Near Earth Object. That is why the NEO search programs are so important. If we don't know a threatening object is coming, we can't prepare to deflect it. If we don't deflect the NEO, the impact may destroy our civilization. A sufficiently large impactor will extinguish us and most life on Earth. We could go the way of the dinosaurs without even knowing what hit us.

You're correct in suspecting there's a good reason for presenting the array of background material I've shared to this point. That reason is James McCanney.

I first became aware of James McCanney at the International UFO Congress in Laughlin, Nevada, this year. Having purchased his book (and booklet) at the convention, and after hearing the "buzz" after his talk, I knew that he would factor into a story concerning Planet X and our "busy" universe.

Let's start by examining Mr. McCanney's unique background, prior to sharing some of his information. He has certainly had more than his share of challenges.

James M. McCanney, M.S.

Professor James McCanney, M.S. is a physicist who has spent decades promoting his theoretical work showing that the solar system is ever changing and is electrically active.

These theories have been confirmed with space probe data and prove that there are definite Earth effects resulting from our Sun's electrical activity. He has openly opposed NASA's view that outer space is electrically neutral and has direct knowledge of NASA's lies.

For detailed information on the Electrical Plasma model and the effects on planets, comets, and the solar system, listen to Prof. McCanney's Real Radio lectures on his jmccanneyscience.com Internet website. (You will need Real Audio player software on your computer to listen to the lectures.)

Prof. McCanney received a sound classical physics training at St. Mary's University, receiving a Bachelor of Arts degree with a double major in physics and mathematics in 1970. He was offered full scholarship awards to three major U.S. physics graduate schools to pursue graduate physics studies. However, he chose instead to postpone graduate studies for a period of three years while he traveled and taught physics and mathematics in Spanish in Latin America.

During this time he spent a good deal of time traveling to ruins of ancient cities and archeological sites, studying firsthand many times as the ruins were dug from under dirt that had not been moved for thousands of years. Also during this time he developed the basis for his theoretical work that would, at a later date, deal with the celestial mechanics of N-bodies and plasma physics. It was here also that he learned to appreciate the fact that the ruins and devastation he was

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern requires parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to help them achieve balance, harmony, and avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- Why do a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober brings together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

witnessing had to have come from celestial events that were so devastating that they left the Earth and these stone cities in ruins, in some cases leaving no trace of the inhabitants.

With this new understanding of archeology, astronomy of the ancients, physics, and the world around him, Mr. McCanney returned to graduate school in 1973 and earned a master's degree in nuclear and solid-state physics from Tulane University, New Orleans, LA. He was again offered a full fellowship to continue on with Ph.D. studies, but once again he declined and returned to Latin America to study archeology and teach physics, mathematics, and computer science in Spanish. He continued his work to explore the mysteries of celestial mechanics and its relationship to the planets, moons, and other celestial bodies.

In 1979 he joined the faculty of Cornell University, Ithaca NY, as an introductory instructor in physics. It was during this time that he had access to NASA data returning daily from the Voyager I and II spacecraft as they traveled by the planets Jupiter, Saturn, and beyond (as well as data from many other spacecraft).

It was here he recognized that his theoretical work regarding the electro-dynamic nature of the solar system and universe had its signatures in the new data that was streaming in from the edges of the solar system.

All standard science continued to look at gravitational explanations for the working of the planets, moons, and other objects of the solar system, while Mr. McCanney was applying his electro-dynamic scientific theories, and ventured to say for the first time that comets were not dirty snowballs.

His papers were published at first in the standard astrophysical journals, but soon he began to receive resistance from the standard astronomical community, and within a short period of time, the journals would no longer publish his theoretical work. Mr. McCanney was removed from his teaching position because of his beliefs regarding the electro-dynamic nature of the solar system.

Contrary to the traditional belief that the solar system formed all at one time 4.5 billion years ago and has not changed significantly since, Mr. McCanney's theoretical work essentially stated that the solar system was dynamic and adopting new members on an ongoing basis.

He pointed to the planet Venus, the Jovian moon Io, the Saturnian moon

Titan, and the small planet Pluto (which supports an atmosphere even though it is so distant from the warmth of the Sun and has insufficient gravity to hold an atmosphere for long) as being obvious new members of our solar system. He stated that all this was proof that the way this occurred was by "planetary capture".

His theoretical work additionally stated that comets were not dirty snowballs, but were large electrical "vacuum cleaners" in outer space. The comets were drawing in vast amounts of material by way of powerful electrical forces, and there was potential for very large comets capable of disrupting the planetary structure that was already in place.

His innovative theories on plasma physics and a new model for fusion in the solar atmosphere provided the basis for the electric fields and plasma discharge phenomena that have become the core elements of his theoretical models of the true nature of the solar system in which we live.

Upon being fired from the physics department for his radical beliefs, Mr. McCanney was rehired shortly thereafter by the mathematics department, also at Cornell University, where he taught for another year and a half and continued to publish his papers in astrophysical journals. Once again astronomers forced his removal and he was once again blackballed from publishing in the astrophysics journals in 1981.

During this time Mr. McCanney established himself as the originator of the theoretical work regarding the electrical nature of the cosmos, which today is being proven correct on an ongoing basis by space probes returning data from outer space.

Many of his predictions, such as x-rays to the Sunward side of comet nuclei, that comet nuclei would be found to have no ice or water frozen on their surfaces, and that comets interact electrically with the Sun to affect Earth weather, have now been confirmed by direct measurements in 1986, 1996, 2001, and 2002 respectively. Many other more abstract concepts have also been verified.

There exists a rare combination of factors that makes Mr. McCanney a unique person who stands alone in the development of the scientific theories summarized in his book. Some have tried to borrow and copy this work, but when observers consider the factors involved, they too will agree that the extensive rewriting of standard scientific structures had to be accomplished by someone with a rare set of characteristics and circumstances.

He was always at the top of his classes in mathematics and physics, and was always creating his own formulas and proofs. His education was soundly based in classical and modern physics. He was able to recognize that when the basic new aspects of the functioning of the solar system were understood and then verified in space probe data, he had the ability to extend this information and take it to all its logical conclusions. This all occurred while working in and around the top-rated scientists of the day at Cornell University, who were still at least two decades behind what Mr. McCanney was discovering and writing.

Another unique condition was that Cornell University offered a rare location since it was not only a Library of Congress (if it was in print it was there), but also it was a repository of data for NASA. Armed with his existing theoretical work and this incredible source of information, and with the timing that coincided with the daily arrival of new data from the Voyager and other spacecraft from the far reaches of the solar system, he was in a totally unique position to do what he has done.

An essential requirement of anyone who attempts to alter the fundamental propositions of a subject as complex as astronomy and astrophysics is an in-depth knowledge of the history of that and all related sciences. Mr. McCanney has studied the history of science extensively and understands where the theories came from that currently make up the structures of science.

There are few people who have the tenacity to pursue and uphold their beliefs for as long as he has had to do in facing the odds pitted against him over the past decades, and to emerge intact with as full a commitment as when he started down this path long ago.

These numerous and individually rare characteristics make the record clear that the important contributions made here combine both personal traits and a situation of "being in the right place at the right time" as the spacecraft data poured into Cornell University as Mr. McCanney's theoretical ideas were solidifying.

In 1981 the interdisciplinary journal KRONOS agreed to publish what has since become known in inner circles as the "3-Part Comet Paper". His work today includes many new significant insights into the connection between the Sun, comets, Earth weather, the Sun-Earth connection and Earth changes.

Mr. McCanney has also remained active and well-known within the space science/astronomy community and within professional societies, and although standard astronomers still resist accepting his theoretical work, he is generally well respected amongst his peers in these communities when attending professional conferences. He is what some have called "the last of the independent scientists" who were able to work "on the inside" and still remain active to talk about it "on the outside".

In the mid-1990s Mr. McCanney's work was recognized by a group of high-level Russian scientists who had measured but did not understand electrodynamic effects around Earth and in the solar system. They translated all of his papers to date into Russian. These are being taught at the university level as the leading edge of research in this field. It is only due to the ongoing and intentional efforts of NASA that his work has received such little attention in the western scientific community and press.

Plasma Discharge Comet Model

by James McCanney

The theoretical work you will encounter here is one of the best-kept secrets in the astronomy world. It was developed in the late 1970s while the author was on the faculty of the Physics and Mathematics Departments of Cornell University, Ithaca NY. My work was in theoretical celestial mechanics and plasma physics. (For the layman, these are the studies of planetary motion and electrified gases in outer space.) Initial papers were published in astrophysics journals, while later papers were quietly returned without referee comments.

The work showed, among other things, that comets were not dirty snowballs sublimating (vaporizing) in the solar environment, but were a complex plasma discharge interaction involving an asteroidal comet nucleus with the "solar capacitor"—the capacitor being the result of a differential flow in the solar wind of high energy particles leaving the Sun.

The balance of charge in the solar system, and a myriad of other previously unknown effects, were predicted by the theory, including the existence of an electron sheet arriving from the Sun at a cometary nucleus and resulting x-rays. Only recently have these been verified by observation.

The new comet theory also explained that the tail matter was not moving away from the comet nucleus, but was being drawn in by electrical forces millions of times more powerful than gravity or solar wind forces alone.

Essentially a comet was now seen as a huge "cosmic vacuum cleaner". Comets were being captured into the solar system by the existing planets, and the comet "tail drag" helped to circularize their orbits. Many commonly stated beliefs regarding the nature of the solar system were being dispelled with more subtle explanations.

The theoretical implications were devastating to commonly held beliefs. Comets were not dirty snowballs, the solar system did not form all at one time

4.5 billion years ago, and dozens of other theories developed to allow new data to comply with these "axioms of astronomy" might not be correct also. At any rate, an entire rethinking of astronomical theory was required.

As you may well imagine, this did not (and still does not) set well with some scientists, while others have recently (especially after Hale-Bopp) begun to realize that Hale-Bopp is an extremely large, powerful, and highly energetic comet.

I have attempted for nearly 20 years to work in a friendly manner within the ground rules of the established scientific community. It is unfortunate that the scientific process that is in place and which is supposed to be self-regulating simply does not work. It is unfortunate that we have to resort to the Internet to bypass this stalled system. With the Internet available, hopefully this situation will be changed.

[end quoting]

Now, turning to James McCanney's booklet titled Surviving Planet X Passage (A Supplement To The Text: Planet X, Comets, & Earth Changes), let's take a few moments to read a few excerpts about some of the potential problems that might emerge in the event of a large comet or Near Earth Object, either passing close to the Sun, or close to Earth:

[quoting]

Defining The Problems

Communication will be a huge problem. In fact, the infrastructure of all the facilities provided by utilities and services that we depend on daily will eventually not be there at all. Roads, vehicles, gasoline, transportation, natural gas and oil for heat, clean water, sewer, electricity—all of these will go away prior to the passage if the conditions are severe as we know they have been in the past.

The Earth Changes

It will not be enough to simply store some goods and food, as an entire change in lifestyle will be required to survive for the long term. Most people today are totally unprepared mentally and physically to make such a dramatic change in lifestyle, even under modern excellent conditions, let alone under the severe adverse conditions one would find during an encounter with the tremendous Earth changes occurring at the same time.

Earth changes include the following:

Electrical effects between the huge comet (with Planet X as its nucleus) and Sun will increase severe weather, and very unstable weather patterns will result. Earth itself will develop extended electrical interactions with the Sun, and violent storms, with both excessive lightning, wind, and water (much of the water coming in from outer space) will last for days and even weeks at a time. These will occur in some cases months or even years before the passage.

Secondary effects will be the degradation or complete elimination of infrastructures to the point that public utilities and local governments will be totally unable to cope with the repairs.

Cyclones will come in large groups and decimate cities and towns, leaving those with standard housing with nothing. Torrential rains will weaken roadbeds, and mudslides will be common. Rivers will flood and mobility will come to a standstill. Since the jet streams will also become erratic, and due to extended cloud cover, some days will be very hot while on the next day it will snow in even the tropical locations.

The public will now also begin to see large electrical discharges streaming between the planets and their moons and between the planets. Jupiter especially, with its large electrical interaction with the Sun, will seem to be throwing lightning bolts across the sky. The huge comet will likewise begin to discharge electrically to the other planets and a huge trumpet-like call will ring through Earth's atmosphere as the searing electrical discharges interact with the upper atmosphere. Colorful auroras will light up even the daytime sky with finger-like dancing lights as the electrical discharges continually interact with the ionosphere.

When the Ancients saw the huge comet attach electrically to Mars and remove its atmosphere, they saw a huge snake-like filament extending from the comet to Mars, and the auroras in the upper atmosphere that encircled Mars made it appear as a lashing cosmic serpent with Mars in its mouth. The historical record is rich with this symbolism of the destruction of Mars as seen by Earth inhabitants.

Sharp whistling noises will be as music choreographed with the electrical light show in the heavens. The comet itself will appear as many colors, but through its middle will be an intense blue or purple neon-like light that will be visible in even the daytime sky. This is due to the extreme amounts of electrical currents flowing through the comet as it interacts with the Sun. If the comet is close to Earth, it may at times be mistaken for the Sun or Moon. It is known from historical records that some of the past large destroyer comets had nuclei so large that they could be seen through the huge comet tail. If this is the case, then one would see the actual Planet X object.

Historical records indicate that it could be reddish or bluish in color, but it is not possible to predict what a new large one would look like, since it is constantly growing.

As Earth's magnetic field reverses more frequently, large sprays of high-energy atomic particles will pummel Earth's upper atmosphere, causing severe levels of radiation that would cause cancer in large numbers of survivors unless they were properly sheltered. These may also cause gene mutations in the species, causing new or altered animal or planet types to form in a fairly short time.

If the comet passes out of the solar system without a very close approach to Earth, then the above description may be realized or it may be less severe.

There could be one major complication, however. If, as in the past, the large comet is accompanied by companions, these might be large and of planet size themselves, and if they are perturbed away from the main comet nucleus, these too could become captured into the solar system. These then could remain to continually harass Earth as they wander through the solar system for possibly hundreds of years to follow.

If the comet's orbital path brings it so that Earth passes through its tail, the interactions will increase and we would see severe flooding and immense hurricanes with associated tornadoes and cyclones on both land and sea. The influx of hundreds of other chemicals would also occur. The Sun would be blotted-out for days or even weeks as the huge comet passed by and Earth's temperature would fall rapidly. Heavy rain would turn into snow and cover numerous parts of the globe, forming glaciers. Animals would be quick-frozen into these glaciers and would be perfectly preserved for thousands of years to come.

Our Moon would likewise flood and experience the same effects, although it does not have an atmosphere like Earth. There could be the possibility of meteor streams coming into Earth's atmosphere and seeming like a rain of stars from the heavens. Mixed with the influx of hydrocarbons in the atmosphere, this would be the "fire and brimstone" spoken of by the Ancients.

The severity of all of these possible effects would depend on how close the comet came to Earth, and there is no way to predict exactly what effects will occur. This is just a list of possible direct effects.

[end quoting]

In an effort to further clarify some points delineated by Mr. McCanney, to assist in our understanding of these changing times, let's turn now to his

COMMON SENSE II

Thomas Paine's pamphlet Common Sense was written and widely circulated in 1776. The simple logic and wisdom presented in Common Sense persuaded thousands of ordinary citizens to support a movement that sought to unite the colonies in an effort to win their independence from England. The birth of our nation and freedom from King George's tyranny is a direct result of this nation's people understanding the REAL issues and choosing freedom over tyranny.

We, the editors of Common Sense II, are anonymous—just as Common Sense was originally published anonymously. We recognize that this 92-page, 3" x 6" booklet has tall shoes to fill. Time is running out and we must once again persuade our countrymen to choose freedom over tyranny.

The sole purpose of Common Sense II is to awaken our sleeping countrymen. We have compiled the most illustrative and eloquent writings available, and have arranged them in the manner most likely to persuade a nation to stand up for freedom and independence—our God-given rights!

book titled Planet-X, Comets & Earth Changes: A Scientific Treatise On The Effects Of A New Large Planet Or Comet Arriving In Our Solar System And Expected Earth Weather And Earth Changes. Keep in mind that ANY large celestial object approaching even marginally near to the Earth may cause the wide array of effects described above.

[quoting]

Essentially, all the reader needs to know for a basic grasp of the material in this book is that our solar system acts like a large electrical circuit—based on the following simple facts (all of which have been confirmed by direct measurements of spacecraft):

- Our Sun forms an electrical capacitor (a separation of electric charge as is done by a simple DC battery in a flashlight).

- This “solar capacitor” has its negative pole at the surface of the Sun, and also has a positive pole far out beyond the outer planets in the form of a sparse “nebular cloud of dust and gasses”. An excess current of protons (positively charged subatomic particles) continually generates and supports the solar capacitor by way of the “solar wind” (literally a wind of such particles leaving the Sun and blowing outwards into space).

All stars and galactic nuclei, and even unlit small stars such as our “planets” Jupiter and Saturn are producing these types of cosmic batteries around themselves. This is a result of a natural by-product of the nuclear fusion process (the burning of nuclear fuel such as hydrogen, helium, etc.) in the atmospheres of these celestial objects.

Additionally, there may be many zones and regions in the space that surrounds these objects that complicate these batteries, such as rings of dust and gasses, or zones of atomic or chemical materials that have settled into certain areas due to a differential separation in the proton winds.

The Sun

The solar system is electrically dynamic. Just this fact alone proves that the Sun cannot derive its heat and energy from deep in its core as suggested by traditional astrophysics theory. This is the topic of great depth and detail, but can be understood from just looking at the surface of the Sun. The Sun is powered at its atmospheric surface by an electrical fire of hydrogen and helium—that we call “fusion”—which is constantly ignited by energetic lightning bolts in its turbulent atmosphere. It is the local electric field at the outer surface of the Sun (the solar corona of high-energy electrons) that hurls the vast solar flares out into the far reaches of the solar system. The positively charged protons are accelerated outwards while the negatively charged electrons are retarded, thus causing what I have called the excess current of protons in the solar wind. The Sun produces far more energy in the form of electrical energy than it does in the form of light energy.

[Continuing later in the book:]

- As the comet develops and discharges the solar capacitor, the increased electrical energy imparted to the solar atmosphere ignites a higher level of nuclear fusion causing the Sun to become excited above its normal levels, and may ignite small to very large solar flares. Small comets have many times been observed to directly cause solar flares as they pass near the Sun.

- Water is one of the primary components of the comet tail. Water forms in the comet tail from the combination of free hydrogen and free oxygen that are stored in gas-rich areas of the solar system. When these two elements combine, they give off a tremendous amount of energy in the form of heat. In general, the very large comet is already forming the myriad of chemicals that we find on Earth including oil. Other chemicals are also forming and there is a quite long list of chemicals that have been directly observed in the comet tails.

Axioms Of Astronomy

What are the axioms of Astronomy? They are the basic concepts around which theory and data must conform as seen by traditionally educated scientists.

They are:

- The solar system formed 4.5 billion years ago and the order of the planets has not changed since (first stated by the mathematician Laplace).

- The universe began in a “big bang” about 10 billion years ago and the universe has been expanding ever since (first stated by Hubble at the turn of the century).

- Gravity is the sole force that governs the cosmos (first stated by Newton).

- Comets are frozen balls of ice which melt when near the Sun (first stated by Kepler).

[As you will see, McCanney is at variance with many models of astrophysics held by NASA and other traditional “scientists”. Their actual predicament right now is how to update the outmoded beliefs without having to admit McCanney was correct all along.]

Comparing Traditional Astronomical Theory (NASA)

Versus

The McCanney Plasma Discharge
Comet Model

Origin Of The Solar System

NASA: The solar system formed all at one time 4.5 billion years ago and no new planets or moons have formed since.

McCanney: Only Jupiter and the Sun were in the original solar system, and all the other planets and moons were captured and adapted into the solar system, one by one, at later times. Each new object formed under unique conditions and were large comets (the cosmic vacuum cleaner) until they settled into their final resting orbits. As the new members arrive, they will encounter the currently existing planets and moons in a dynamic game of celestial billiards.

Circular Orbits Of The Planets

NASA: The orbits formed in nice circular patterns at the time of formation, and the planets and moons have not altered from these since.

McCanney: As the comets are drawn into the solar system and are captured and encounter other planets, two effects tend to reduce the comet orbit and bring it into a circular orbit. First, it will encounter other planets and either gain or lose energy. The primary effect that will reduce the orbit of the comet (and new planetary member) is the “tail drag” caused by the pull of the tail as the comet draws in vast amounts of matter relative to its size. The huge comet Hale-Bopp had its orbit reduced from 4200 years to 2650 years in one passage of the Sun. The dirty snowball “jetting concept” could not account for this amazing change in orbit.

Comets

NASA: Comets are tiny “dirty snowballs” that were formed at approximately the same time as the rest of the planets. Since standard theory requires a huge solar wind emanating from the Sun to account for the spin rate of the Sun, these comets somehow must have been moved out to a location where we cannot detect them, called the Oort cloud. Occasionally objects pass by the Oort cloud and disturb the comets from their orbits and they come in towards our Sun. These snowballs melt (sublimate) when near the Sun and the solar wind sweeps their tails out away from the Sun.

Comets are getting smaller and go away eventually or leave a small asteroid in its orbit. NASA states that only if one of these tiny nuclei hits Earth directly can it harm Earth.

McCanney: Comets are asteroidal or larger rocky objects, which ignite a complex electrical discharge of the Solar Capacitor when they enter the Sun's electrical region (that is produced and maintained by an excess current of protons in the solar wind). Comets are drawing in the tail material and therefore are getting larger as they move on their orbits in the solar system. Although most comets are small, some can be large or even of planetary size, and if so, can cause extreme damage to the existing planets and moons as they work their way into their eventual stable orbits. They do not have to directly hit an existing planet to cause damage, in fact extreme levels of damage can be caused by a myriad of effects by "action at a distance".

The Sun

NASA: The Sun has a nuclear fusion engine in its core (ignited originally at the birth of the solar system by gravitational pressure) that heats it into a hot glowing ball of 6000 degrees and it will burn for billions of years at a steady rate. The Sun is electrically neutral and is not affected by external conditions (especially not comets which are insignificant little snowballs).

McCanney: The Sun's nuclear fusion is taking place in its upper atmosphere and the nuclear fusion reaction is ignited on an ongoing basis by pinched electrical discharges in its violent stormy atmosphere. The Sun's temperature actually cools as one measures deeper, eventually hitting a solid planetary-type core. (This is confirmed by x-ray measurement experiments performed by Russian scientists.) The Sun is dynamic and changes rapidly to external conditions. Especially, comets which are forming an electrical connection with the Sun can rapidly and significantly alter the solar output; large solar flares can occur in response to electrical interactions with comets. Additionally, special conditions such as electrical alignments of the planets can occur which will cause a discharge of the Solar Capacitor, which in turn can cause currents to flow to the Sun, resulting in enhancing solar flaring and energy output.

The Electrical Nature Of The Sun

NASA: The Sun is electrically neutral and so is the entire solar system. Energetic effects are explained to be results of magnetic effects such as "magnetic reconnection", magnetic pick-up ions, magnetic bubbles releasing energy, and magnetic storms of the Sun.

McCanney: The Sun is left with a net negative charge as it continually ejects large composite streamers of primarily protons in the solar wind. This builds up and sustains a "Solar Capacitor" with the positive anode far beyond the orbit of Pluto, where there is a large ionized cloud of dust and gasses. This capacitor is discharged by the asteroids and larger comet nuclei that enter the solar system. This capacitor is what powers and controls the electrical nature of the solar system. Magnetic effects are secondary effects of the electrical plasma currents that flow as a result of this power source. The Sun produces thousands of times more energy in the form of electrical energy as it does in the form of light energy, but Earth is buffered from this by its large magnetic field. We only notice changes here when the local electric field and current flows are altered either by solar flares or large comets passing nearby. The planets in near circular orbits also constantly discharge the Solar Capacitor, but to a lesser degree than comets which are on elliptical orbits which cut at greater angles through the Solar Capacitor (causing a greater degree of discharge).

With the issue of Planet X weighing so heavily on the minds of many people, combined with the recent passage of Comet NEAT, in an effort to find some definitive answers, on March 12, James McCanney posted the following notice on his website:

THE HARRINGTON EXPEDITION Completing The Unfinished Work Of Dr. Harrington

In 1991, Robert S. Harrington, head of the Naval Observatory, Washington DC, wrote an internal Abstract which culminated over a decade of theoretical and observational astronomy with a team of experts. He was in charge of the NASA-directed search for a large planet at the edge of our solar system that had been perturbing the orbits of the outer planets. Many previous attempts had been made, all leading to incorrect results. But this time Harrington was certain that he had found the location of the large rogue planet.

What is interesting is:

- NASA for decades had sponsored a search for this object with the highest level staff members available;
- it was fully aware that something big was entering our solar system; and

- as you will see, it seems that anyone associated with the results has been silenced—either by death or by fear. A shroud of secrecy and deception surrounds this entire story.

Part of the discovery of Planet X was based on the fact that the outer large planets Uranus and Neptune were being pulled DOWN in their orbits. No other effect could cause such a change in the orbits of these planets except the existence of a very large previously undiscovered celestial object that had to exist down and in the direction of the unexplainable motions of these outer giant planets. Harrington knew that it had to be BIG and it had to be down below the plane of the planets (the ecliptic). He also knew that since it had not been there before, that it must be a new body entering the solar system.

Harrington wrote a brief abstract telling of his final trip, scheduled to New Zealand in the spring month of May, to perform the blink photographic session with a 20 cm astrograph (approximately 8" aperture high-precision camera). This seemed like what should be a routine observation, and so sure was Harrington of the location of this object in the sky that he planned only two successive nights for the two required photos. These would be returned to Washington to determine the location and size of the new object.

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original Native inhabitants of America. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all feel honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

An 8-inch camera in 1991 to 1993 (the date we believe Harrington made his final expedition; NASA information is scarce) was not very large, so we are not talking about professional-grade equipment. That is, this object was expected to be very large and Harrington knew it would be only visible during the month of May from a very southerly remote location on Earth. He chose New Zealand over the rugged uncharted regions of Patagonia in South America. Harrington's internal NASA Abstract [is reproduced nearby].

Only a few short years later another astronomer working in the outback of Australia studying the geology of ancient craters was Eugene Shoemaker, another NASA scientist who had discovered many comets as a hobby. It has been reported that Shoemaker had just made notice of a huge discovery regarding a comet. He met an untimely accident and never released the discovery. The three versions of the "accident" story that came out were different, and none made any sense. The point is that he must have had information relative to the same object that Harrington had discovered. Shoemaker's ashes were blasted into space by NASA as a eulogy. (Or was this a warning to others of what would happen to them if they broke silence?)

We know that by this time NASA had much if not all of their infrastructure already under the direction of higher-level government security agencies. It was about this time that NASA shut the door on data coming in regarding the huge comet Hale-Bopp. We know that comet was known about by NASA long before its "official" discovery by Mr. Alan Hale and Mr. Bopp. If the Hopi Indian prophecies are correct, then Hale-Bopp was the precursor of the even larger comet that the ancients called Nibiru (Planet X).

It has become clear to me that both Velikovsky's Venus (the huge comet captured by Jupiter that eventually became the planet Venus) and Hale-Bopp were most likely smaller companions of the larger "planet".

Whatever the story, one thing is clear: NASA has all of the world's largest telescopes under lock and key and NO ONE has access except certain inside personnel.

The Vatican has built a world-class astronomical facility to observe these large comets, and they are still looking at something—even though Hale-Bopp has long since passed out of the inner solar system.

There have been a number of Internet sites created by the government to make the entire story of Planet X sound crazy to the general public. Their purpose was to choose a time and place that were known to be false for the "passage" of Planet X, so that when the real story broke, the government disinformation would blast the front pages of the newspapers and evening news with: "Oh, don't listen to that; it's just those crazy Planet X people again."

These ploys have been effective to a degree, but have been exposed for what they are.

Certain talk shows that have recently been taken over by government interests are helping make this story by allowing only certain "guests" to air while avoiding others who have spent a lifetime studying this in a strictly scientific sense. The Internet is full of government agents representing themselves as just "common folk" but using non-names or first names only. Their job is to try to dissuade the common man from listening to the true story of Planet X and to report back to "headquarters" of anyone who is producing an audience with non-government-sponsored work.

As a result of this, and much more that is related elsewhere, it has become necessary for someone to complete the unfinished work of Dr. Harrington. Since

THE LOCATION OF PLANET X

R. S. HARRINGTON
U. S. Naval Observatory, Washington, DC 20392
Received 17 May 1988; revised 12 July 1988

ABSTRACT

Planet X, if it exists at all, is most likely to be found, at present, in the region of Scorpius, with a considerably lesser likelihood that it is in Taurus.

In 1930, Tombaugh found the planet Pluto. This was the result of a systematic search initiated at Lowell Observatory as the result of predictions made by Lowell as to the position and nature of a supposed additional planet in our solar system. At the time, Pluto was hailed as the object of that prediction, even though there were anomalies in its appearance and orbit evident right from the time of its discovery. Since then, these problems have only become more serious, and the discovery of its satellite in 1978 revealed a mass of Pluto that could not have caused any of the perturbations in the orbits of Uranus and Neptune used to predict the existence of a ninth planet. For a complete review of the discovery of Pluto and the developments leading up to the suspicion of the existence of a tenth planet, see Seidelmann and Harrington (1988).

The motions of Uranus and Neptune cannot be adequately represented within the present gravitational model of the solar system. Pluto cannot have any detectable effect on these two planets. There is therefore a good possibility that there is at least one undetected planet in our solar system, and it is now possible to set some constraints on where that planet might be.

The observations used in this study were taken from compilations of all positional determinations available through 1982 for each planet of interest. These observations are quite varied in nature and source and include both visual and photographic determinations. The Uranus observations go back to 1833 and the Neptune ones to 1846. These compilations were supplied by the Nautical Almanac Office of the U. S. Naval Observatory. They consist of observed positions of Uranus and Neptune, along with residuals in right ascension and declination from positions computed from DE200 (Standish 1982a,b). The residuals were first converted to residuals in ecliptic longitude (great circle) and latitude. As a statistical approximation, this is not correct, since these data are not statistically independent. However, for the present analysis this makes no difference, and it greatly facilitates the subsequent comparison with numerical simulations.

These residuals were then combined into seasonal normal points, producing average geocentric residuals spaced slightly more than a year apart. These residuals were then assumed to be adequate representations of the equivalent heliocentric average residuals for the observed oppositions. There are usually enough observations per opposition, with enough balance pre- and post-opposition, that the small systematic errors within each observation should tend to cancel out in the mean. The exception would be that, in the mean, heliocentric residuals should be, at most, a few percent smaller in magnitude, an effect that is well below the noise level within each normal point. In any case, these short-period differences do not affect the long-period effects being sought. Finally, a weight was assigned to each normal point. Weights based upon the rms scatter within each normal would give the bulk of the weight to the observations after about 1920, and therefore on modern transit-circle observations. However, it is important to give enough weight to early observations to give them some significance in a solution for long-period effects. Therefore, the weights were based merely on the square root of the number of observations per normal. A few tests indicated that this consideration is not significant for the final results.

The item of interest for the present analysis is the perturbation in the orbit of a known planet, produced by the presence of an unknown Planet X. (X can be thought of as either representing the unknown or the number 10.) Hence, the equations of motion are cast in the form of the motions of the residuals in rectangular coordinates. For numerical work, this is known as Encke's method, and the description followed here comes from Brouwer and Clemence (1961). The method relies on the fact that it is being applied only to the orbits of Uranus and Neptune. These planets are sufficiently distant, move sufficiently slowly, and are perturbed sufficiently little that all vectors representing planetary positions, whether known or unknown but assumed, as they appear in the derivatives of the perturbations, can be represented by approximate vectors. For assumed Planet X orbits, two-body motion is assumed. For Uranus and Neptune, the low-precision formulas as given by Van Flandern and Pulkkinen (1979) are employed.

Additional assumptions are that the perturbations are sufficiently small that expansions in them are only required through first order and that the mass of the perturbed planet need not be included in the solar gravitational constant representing the principal term in the acceleration of the perturbation (both of these have been numerically verified). The result of this development is a set of relatively simple equations of motion that can be integrated very quickly for a given orbit of Planet X. A reintegration of the entire outer solar system is not needed for each test case and, indeed, only the positions of the perturbing and the perturbed planets (the perturber and the perturbed) are required.

To be specific, let ξ be the vector of perturbations of an observed planet, caused by Planet X, from the vector r of the predicted position of the observed planet, based on the known gravitational model of the solar system (i.e., the actual vector of observations is $r + \xi$). The vector r is approximated as described above. Let r_x be the position vector of Planet X. Let μ be the gravitational constant of the Sun and μ_x be that of Planet X. The equation of motion for the perturbation vector can therefore be written as follows:

there are few people on this planet with the background in science to understand what has to be measured and recorded, as well as having an understanding of the history of the situation, I have taken it upon myself to take up the Harrington Expedition—literally 10 years after Dr. Harrington's sudden and unexplained death, and to make this undercover so that this time the results will be made public.

The purpose of the Expedition is to:

- Examine the locations of the 1991 Harrington report and determine what it was he was looking for (to clear the southern sky or determine the orbits and family of objects that may be inbound and their expected times of arrival). Part of this is to advise the public on immediate or longterm preparations for a possible approach of a large inbound planetary object or family of objects.

- Determine the true size of the nucleus of the comet Hale-Bopp, and determine its new orbital parameters. (Hale-Bopp is the newest planetary member of our solar system.)

- Inform the public of what NASA was keeping secret and convince the public that NASA has had in place for decades a program of not informing the public of disastrous situations.

- Determine the new orbital parameters for the comet C/2002/NEAT V1 (another new planetary member of our solar system) and the true size of its nucleus.

- Perform Sun-calendar surveying on certain archaeological sites now known to be older than the Egyptian pyramids and determine the time line of their creation based on astronomical alignments.

- With a number of pre-selected sites, determine the old celestial (rotational) north pole of Earth prior to the last polar shift that was caused when the comet Venus passed close to Earth and the gravitational waves caused the last pole shift.

- Return safely.

There is a button [on McCanney's website] to accept donations of at most $5 per person (not tax deductible—the 50¢ extra is to cover credit card processing fees) to offset the cost of the expedition. Donations larger than $5 per person will not be accepted. When a total of expected expenses has been reached, the button will be removed and the total announced on the web page (expected expenses US$2,300). Any expenses over this I will cover out of my pocket. The equipment required will be donated and procured by myself.

It probably wouldn't hurt to keep James McCanney in your prayers as he attempts to solve this intriguing mystery.

Planet X

In an e-mail I received on 3/19/03, there came the following information, originally from Mark Hazelwood, author of Blindsided. We read:

[quoting]

Subject: Planet X — 2003
Russians Are Aware Of A Large Body/Comet Being Inbound

This information may be repeat for some here. Because of its significance I want to make sure all here are exposed to this. James McCanney met a colleague of his from Russia in Laughlin, Nevada, and confirmed that the Russians are aware of a large body/comet being inbound. — Mark H.

Notes taken from McCanney's radio talk:

He said he has interviewed a colleague in his field from Russia, where they have decided to begin opening this subject (coming large-body comet) up to the public. In fact he said that the United States citizens are now the least informed in the world about this. This interview (2/6/03) with the Russian scientist is available on McCanney's archives.

He doesn't give a specific date at this point when he predicts the arrival of the large planet-sized object that is out there and is currently having tremendous effects on the activity of the Sun, and on the amount of solar radiation which we are getting which is affecting the weather as well as the amount of volcanic activity and increasing numbers of earthquakes, but based on the behavior of all objects in the Solar System, there is no doubt that it's out there.

Remember the woman doctor who had to be emergency evacuated from one of the polar stations because she discovered she had breast cancer? Well, as an aside, McCanney mentioned that the Earth's magnetic field has gone to zero at the poles a number of times already, and because of the tremendously increased radiation when this happens, anyone exposed gets mega-dosed with x-rays and can develop cancer in as little time as a WEEK!

He said the last time we had a major close call that no one was told about was when Hale-Bopp passed by. He said it was about half the size of our Moon when it entered the Solar System and (because of its electromagnetic interaction with the Sun) grew to approximately the same size as the Moon by the time it left. Its original orbit as it came in would have brought it into an intersection with Earth's orbit, but as it passed by the Sun, it was diverted [due to the tail-drag].

He said if we had passed through its tail, based on its size, we would have been inundated by water and hydrocarbons (combustible) thrown off from the nucleus, would have had tremendously powerful storms, and tides three times their normal height, which would essentially be like tsunamis which would have completely rolled over the island of Manhattan (for example) and penetrated one to two miles inland (this is without any "impact" of the comet itself).

The comet that is passing through now (NEAT), he says has a nucleus about the size of Mercury (though the entire body, including the out-gassing tail, has been estimated at up to 2X the size of Jupiter as it passed by the Sun).

And even NASA has been quoted as saying that the CMEs (coronal mass ejections) which this comet's passby evoked from the Sun were the largest ever measured.

Bill Pawelek was also on the show and said:

There are four categories of telescopes on the planet:

(1) 4-inch to 8-inch scopes used by most amateurs;

(2) 12-inch to 4-foot scopes located mostly at universities;

(3) 4-foot to 12-foot scopes which represent the older mainline observatories; and

(4) state-of-the-art observatory scopes with clusters of mirrors, each 25 to 30 feet across.

McCanney said that most people don't realize that NASA reports to the NSA (top-secret National Security Agency), and that all NASA employees are under strict loyalty and secrecy oaths. He said that NASA, the NSA, and the National Science Foundation (all governmental agencies) are the major funders of the category 2 and 3 observatory programs, which are dependent upon this funding to be able to afford to continue in operation and make equipment upgrades.

He said that he has been personally following the tribulations of one graduate student who hasn't been able to complete his degree because the scopes at his university and every other university he has contacted have been "down", either for maintenance and upgrade, or simply without any explanation at all, FOR THE LAST YEAR! He said that all category 2 and 3 scopes have been unavailable to the public since at least May of last year. He said that the category 4 scopes have a 1- to 2-year waiting list to schedule scope time.

He said that an even more top-secret subsidiary of the NSA, the National Reconnaissance Organization (NRO—so secret that Congress didn't even know it existed until its budget for an extravagant new office building created a scandal a few years back) is now in charge of putting spy scopes into near Earth orbit that are the size of busses (some already there, others on the way), some taking pictures and film, some monitoring communications.

And the most interesting thing about that is that some of these are monitoring activity on Earth and some are pointed the other way, monitoring activity out in the Solar System, including communications, presumably of alien craft.

He said that all top-secret programs like this have a public "mirror agency" as front—in this case the SETI program which goes on "listening" for possible signs of life in the universe without ever finding any, and that its purpose is to reassure the public that nothing is going on.

He said that the Columbia had a project onboard which used high-resolution ground-penetrating radar which discovered a large underground river 750 feet under the Sahara desert (as an example of what it can do), and on this last mission this technology monitored "something" that sent out a light signal from 40 feet to 50 feet underground in Iraq, and received a signal back.

As posted in other threads on this forum, Iraq is the original territory of the people chronicled in the Sumerian tablets, which tell the story of Nibiru and its 3,600-year orbit, the same Planet X which is purportedly on its way, and Iraq has a lot of ruins which Saddam has been excavating for some time now.

These people came from an advanced, space-faring civilization, so their "artifacts" could be something quite unexpected. You can get transcripts of James' talk-shows at the www.GuluFuture.com/future/mccanney.htm website.

Interview With
James M. McCanney

Through a series of events and interventions that apparently were "meant" to be, on 3/16/03 I had the great opportunity to finally speak with Mr. McCanney directly. I believe you'll find the conversation fascinating.

Martin: Before we get started, let me just ask you what your thoughts are about the research of Dr. Aleskey Dmitriev? Are you in tune with what he is saying?

McCanney: Oh, yes. In the mid-1990s to 1999, approximately, I had an Internet website called The Millennium Group.

Martin: That's you?

McCanney: Yes, my science information was the heart of that page.

Martin: They have some excellent information.

McCanney: It's basically a continuation of what I did. Jerry, I think, is the webmaster for that page. Then, a guy named Earl, is a researcher, let's say. Back in the 1990s, we were getting about 3 million hits a month on that page. That was after doing the Art Bell Show a few times, so you may want to mention that.

Martin: What was the reception like with Art Bell?

McCanney: Of the people?

Martin: The reception of the people, and how did Art Bell receive you?

McCanney: Pretty well. He said at the end of that show that it was one of the most interesting shows he had ever done. I still have the recording of that show, and I'm going to put it up.

In fact, I'm going to relive the Hale-Bopp days in an individual lecture on my page, one of these days, and go back through The Millennium Group, Chuck Schramek. In fact, if you go down to the bottom of my home page, to the Real Radio Lectures section, and click on that, you go to a subpage, and there's an interview that Chuck Schramek did of me for The Millennium Group in the '90s.

Of course, he was a talk-show host from Houston, and he later died from the same rapid-onset lower-back cancer that Dr. Harrington died from.

[Editor's note: And then, of course, there's the coincidence (?) of Art Bell's "lower-back problems" that supposedly is the reason for his retirement back on the first day of 2003.]

Martin: Isn't that interesting?

McCanney: Oh, yeah. He was very critical of NASA. He was in Houston, which is one of NASA's big hubs. He used to use a lot of my stuff on the radio down there.

At any rate, your question originally was about Dmitriev. There was a duel exchange. Earl Crockett back then took it upon himself to translate Dmitriev's papers, the ones you still find on The Millennium Group web-page. The flip-side was, they took my papers and translated them into Russian and were, literally, teaching them in colleges and graduate schools over there in Russia back in the 1990s.

Dmitriev is an experimentalist, partly theoretical physicist, but mainly he was an observational scientist, atmospheric scientist. He's the one who discovered the tornadoes on the Moon, just all kinds of stuff. He talked about the vacuum domain, and what they were measuring in the atmosphere and other things in the cosmos, that basically they didn't know how to explain. They were measuring them, but they didn't know what was going on.

But then, when they got my papers, they said: "This explains everything we've been seeing." So, it was quite the thing.

Martin: The reason I was asking you about him is because at the front-end of the article that will appear in our May issue of The SPECTRUM, I am quoting from his Planetophysical State Of The Earth And Life document as a foundational piece for the changes that are going on in our non-static universe. So, I just didn't want to be in conflict with him.

McCanney: Oh [laughter]. You might just mention that he was head of the group that I worked with back in the '90s in Russia. So, my work is well known in Russia.

Then, NASA went over there, around 2000. That's when Russia, of course, had no money. These guys were making $75 a month—they used to laugh about it. And they were trying to publish their own work, using money out of their own pocket; it was just ludicrous. But NASA went over there and started pumping some money into them, and then went over there and said: "If you teach any more of McCanney's stuff, we're cutting you off!"

You can include that, too.

Martin: I will, I'll be glad to include that.

McCanney: It was about that time that my e-mails began to be—I could tell it wasn't them writing back to me. They were intercepted. There were people who had clearly intercepted my e-mails, and were writing back to me. Then, eventually, they just stopped.

Martin: I do have included in the story, not only your listing of the people who have died, but from another source, a similar list. Can you talk about these deaths? Are they all Planet X-related, do you think, or what is your conjecture behind what's happening?

McCanney: It is the control of space, let's put it that way. The Harrington thing was real unusual, especially for its time. It was way ahead of its time. Then, the Shoemaker thing was so abnormal for a young guy like that—young, for a scientist—he was middle aged, but it was very clear. It was about the same time when comet Shoemaker-Levy [9] crashed into Jupiter [in July 1994]. The murmurs of the scientific community was that these aren't ice balls. Everybody in the scientific community knew it. I forget what year that was. It was very clear that comets are not dirty snowballs, but NASA holds onto that. I just saw a posting the other day about Comet NEAT that came by, and they're still hanging onto this dirty snowball thing.

Martin: That's incredible.

McCanney: Yeah, it's just so bizarre.

Martin: It's like hanging-on to a sinking ship.

McCanney: It's so absurd that it is beyond any comprehension. It was in the mid-1990s when Shoemaker was about to make a large announcement. It's clear that he was going to make an announcement about comets, the composition of comets, and probably take a lot of people with him in the scientific community.

Then, all of a sudden, he dies in this supposed car crash in the bottom of a crater over in Australia. Three stories came out of that. It was very bizarre the way the stories came out because I was right on top of it, as we were with everything in those days. I mean, we were the news center for everything going on in science.

By the way, concerning the 3 million hits at The Millennium Group website—there was an engine on that page that could identify the e-mail addresses of the person who was at the page. A daily printout was 50-60,000 names. But you'd go through the list and half of them were from the government.

Martin: Big surprise.

McCanney: But they pretended like they knew nothing about it. They just tried to ignore it. And they would go there for the weather. They'd go there for the Sun's weather. Hal Blandel was doing the daily solar report and we, literally, had the scientists going to our page to get that information, which came literally from their sites, but he interpreted it so well.

So, that's the kind of thing that was going on. On the Art Bell Show, just another note of interest, the show was originally to air my comet theory and talk about my science work. Midway through the show I made a comment—Whitley Strieber was also interviewing. I said: "And the companion of Hale-Bopp, etc.," because we were talking about Hale-Bopp.

Art goes: "Whoa, wait a minute. We've been through all of this. You just said Hale-Bopp's companion."

And I said: "Yeah." Because, you know, Art Bell was accused of being responsible for the death of those 39 people.

Martin: No, I did not know that.

McCanney: This is why I want to do this lecture on my homepage, because a lot of this stuff has been lost.

It was a story—Courtney Brown was a Ph.D. involved in remote viewing.

Then, the other thing, Chuck Schramek, the same guy who interviewed me—what happened when Hale-Bopp appeared, it was announced that NASA had a webpage. Some underling at NASA thought it would be cute to put up this picture of Hale-Bopp, which they weren't supposed to put up because that feed had been coming in for years, literally, under the Hubble. And so, some guy put it up there, and this is how Gary Goodwin got started. He was surfing the web and he saw this big, whirling pinwheel of Hale-Bopp, and he downloaded it; he captured it.

He went back to it the next day and it was gone! And so he said: "What's this?" That was his first clue into NASA hiding data.

And, of course, I eventually saw their web-page. I had my own web-page at the time, just a little page. I e-mailed them [The Millennium Group] and I said: "You might want to look at my stuff."

So, the agreement was that they would post my webstuff. It just kind-of worked out that I was the science guy, Gary was the webmaster, and Earl did political analysis, searching out NASA contracts and things like that.

Back to Hale-Bopp. Chuck Schramek, who also saw the same thing, heard that there was supposedly a companion to Hale-Bopp. So, he went out in his back yard, with his amateur-grade but very nice telescope, and started clicking pictures of Hale-Bopp, and he got pictures of the companion.

He sent them to Art Bell, who he knew very well, and it wasn't unusual for Art to be in the middle of a program and he'd say: "Chuck Schramek just faxed in." Chuck told me how to get through on a show to Art. There was a secret to it. Art had a secret fax number. I could do that, too, if I heard something false, or whatever; I could quickly write down a fax and get it through, and he's talking about it the next minute.

So, at any rate, Chuck got the pictures that he took, gave them to Art Bell, who posted them. At the same time, Courtney Brown had gotten some 35mm slides from, we later found out, the University of Hawaii. But he wouldn't say where he got them. He was under a private communication hold not to tell where he got the pictures from, but he gave them to Art Bell.

So, here's Courtney Brown's picture of the companion, and here's Chuck Schramek's pictures of the companion, and Art Bell posted them on his web-page.

Well, hours later, there's the 39 people who supposedly commit suicide in California, with Heaven's Gate, the Heaven's Gate suicide massacre. The government goes in, takes their website down, and posts a brand new website in place of theirs. This is all a thing right now that's going on—people were able to capture their site before it went down, so that's available now. But, at any rate, that's a whole other story.

But then the government came in and had a national news campaign the next day: "Crazy people, Heaven's Gate cult group, were going to go to this alien ship that was coming in with Hale-Bopp, the comet, and they all put on nice tennis shoes and robes and ate porridge and committed suicide so they could go to meet the aliens."

That's not what happened; what happened is: The government killed all those people. And the reason they killed them is because they were in competition with a very large software outfit, and the Heaven's Gate group were all programmers. They were building encryption software and firewalls that the government couldn't break into.

There was another little bit—that they were competing with a very large contractor who was selling encryption encoding and firewalls to the government, and these people were able to break through theirs. Anyway, there are a whole series of things that went on there.

At any rate, the other half of the Heaven's Gate thing is, they just posted a thing, and they had been recruiting all over the country for many years, saying there was a large comet that they expected to come in. It would have aliens, and go up to the aliens, and they were going to be transcended into this life. In fact, they were not suicidal at all. They took very good care of their bodies because their belief was, they needed their bodies in excellent condition to transform, and go into this long-term state of living with the aliens. Be that as it may, they were not suicidal.

The other half of the Heaven's Gate equation was that when Hale-Bopp showed up, they posted: "This is it, folks; this is what we've been waiting for, we're all going to meet." And they had—the counts were astronomical—they probably had a half million people who were going to get up and walk off their jobs—a lot of them young people, college age, high-school age. Those were the kinds of people they had been recruiting. Then the "hit number" on their page went through the ceiling. That's when the government went in and killed them.

That's why they had the news blip on the next day, which was on the front-page of every newspaper. And they blamed Art Bell because he posted those pictures of the companion. They blamed him for the murder of these 39 people. They roasted Chuck Schramek. Courtney Brown lost his position as a teacher. He was a Ph.D. in astronomy. Art Bell was accused publicly of being responsible for the death of these 39 people. And NASA came out and said there was no companion, and produced pictures from the University of Hawaii that proved that there was no companion.

Well, in The Millennium Group, we had a guy who went in, and he analyzed the pictures and he showed that the pictures that they produced were from a different telescope, and that they were doctored. They had taken the companion out of them. The pictures that Courtney Brown had, they took and analyzed those, and they showed how the only telescope that could have taken those pictures was one of the big military scopes run by the University of Hawaii.

So anyway, I'm on the Art Bell Show, and all of this comes out on the air. And Art is like: "Wait a minute! What do you mean? We have been roasted, everybody has been roasted, I have been accused of murdering 39 people, because I posted these pictures, and now you're telling me that these pictures were the correct ones, and that NASA was the one who faked the photos?!" He said: "Prove it to me, right now!" He was hot. He had taken a lot of heat.

And Whitley Strieber said he had called a few observatories in London when he first heard about it, and he said everybody was talking about the companion, all these observatories, but NASA had the ability to go shut all these down and make them all reverse their stories. So, that was the Art Bell Show. We were able to convince him on the air that he had been had. I'm going to do a whole lecture on that.

Martin: There is the list of people who have been "taken out", and obviously NASA is doctoring data and withholding data. Do you have any theories or information about who specifically at NASA is behind this sort-of diabolical withholding of knowledge?

McCanney: Yes, it's very clear; I've known this for a long time.

Martin: Can you talk about it?

McCanney: Sure. NASA is a group of scientists. That's what we always think of, these engineers who build spacecraft and that type of thing. NASA is owned and operated by the NSA [National Security Agency]. There's a layer above NASA that controls NASA.

Donald Golden, who came into NASA in the '90s, came in from the CIA, and his job was to secretize or put the cap on NASA. What he did is, he went in and the first thing he did was make everybody—top, bottom, sideways who worked for NASA—made them sign, basically, an NSA non-disclosure agreement.

The NSA is controlled on a worldwide level, as part of the overseeing government that is already in place. They talk about the One World Government now. The One World Government is already in place; they just want to make it official now. That's what all of the stuff going on now is about. But the One World Government has been in place for some time.

Martin: Are there Jesuits behind all this?

McCanney: [Laughter] The Jesuits?

Martin: Yes.

McCanney: The Vatican has a big stake in the Worldwide Government, and it's part of it, but not the whole show. It's like back in the Middle Ages, with the kings, the descendants of that whole entourage of people, and it actually goes back much farther. Some people believe it actually goes back to the priest cults in Egypt. But it's very much a worldwide situation, where you, literally, have hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of families who are associated with this, and they are very wealthy; they have control in their countries; they're in every country of the world. In their countries they control the politics, and the money, and the banking; so, it takes a very large web of these people.

For the NSA, these are people who have been drawn in, many times at a very young age, like Clinton, young Bush, to be the operatives to operate things.

Martin: The puppets.

McCanney: The public figures, and they're allowed a certain amount of latitude. There's a lot of in-fighting amongst those groups. But the NSA—it's just like the CIA—it's not a national thing. They are really controlled from outside. And it's groups that came out of Nazi Germany.

Martin: I was just going to mention the Nazis; that's were I was going with my original question.

McCanney: Yes. The Bushs and half the people in the Bush Administration are directly descendants of the Nazis.

Martin: We have published all that, so our readers are well familiar with that. You won't be offending anybody by saying that.

McCanney: There's not many people who—you know, you tell them something like this and they'll say: "What are you

Why the official story of 9/11 is a monumental lie

David Icke

Code: AIW (1.75 lb.)

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the talking about?" They have no clue.

Martin: That's actually common knowledge with our readership.

McCanney: They, of course, realized that space is the last frontier in resources. The control of space is essential to everything that they're doing. It's the last frontier.

But space is different. Now you have other things going on. But we're getting a little too far afield here.

Back to the Hale-Bopp days. They knew, and this is why Harrington, who was head of the Naval Observatory—the Navy is in charge of a lot of stuff there, that's true—but like a lot of other things, all these people are working compartmentalized, and working in capacities like Harrington was. He was not in charge of anything, other than he was the head of the Naval Observatory, of all the astronomers there. Just the fact that there is a document there with his name on it.

Martin: What is the fear of NASA concerning Planet X? Is it related to Sumeria and the Annunaki? Or, is it something else.

McCanney: I wouldn't say that, but the knowledge that there is this Big Thing that's going to come in on a regular basis is old. That's part of the very high levels of secrecy in a lot of these groups, like the Vatican.

I mean, the first thing when Hale-Bopp showed up, the Vatican built a world-class observatory in Arizona, and staffed it with astronomers. Gee, wonder why?

Martin: Clue.

McCanney: Then they have a second one. But what is interesting, even after official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

Hale-Bopp left—because they thought that Hale-Bopp was the Big One.

Now, let's backtrack back to 1991. Hale-Bopp was officially discovered in 1995, by Alan Hale at New Mexico, and then Bopp was the Japanese guy. They both hit on the same night, so they both got credit for the name of the comet.

Prior to that, it's very clear to me, and if you're looking at my Harrington notes, one of the things that Harrington was looking at was Hale-Bopp. The nucleus of Hale-Bopp was extremely large. The reason NASA pulled the feed down immediately, once they realized that some lackey had stuck it up on the Internet—because any astronomer, or person like myself, would know that with that small amount of data you could determine the mass of the central nucleus. It's a little equation you use; they use it all the time to determine the mass of central stars when they see a wobble in a star. Then, they can determine the radius of the thing orbiting it. You need the period and the radius of whatever is orbiting the larger object, and with those two parameters you can calculate the mass of the central object. Just a little equation in celestial mechanics.

So, with that small piece of evidence on the web, anybody could calculate the mass of Hale-Bopp, showing that it's planetary in size coming in.

Now, the other factor: In 1991, what Harrington saw was two things: he saw Hale-Bopp, and he saw something much bigger beyond Hale-Bopp, that's Planet X. That's my understanding at this point.

In 1991, Hale-Bopp was on a near direct collision course with Earth. With a couple of quick photographs they could chart the orbit, and it was on a near collision course for Earth.

Martin: No wonder there was such a scramble.

McCanney: It was a huge scramble. When it was first discovered, I called up Goddard, because—I can say this now—I knew the secretary there. If you ever want to know anything, you ask the secretary. She knew all the astronomers. I, of course, never let on that she was my inside contact there. She heard all their conversations, and she would tell me what was going on.

I called her and I said: "What's going on? I heard there's this comet?" You could hear the screaming in the background and stuff.

And she said: "Oh, my God, this comet is huge!" But I thought she meant in the sense of being a news story. No, it was huge in the sense that it was a planetary-sized object. They had been tracking it.

You see, this is where the division comes in, because it wasn't until then that even a lot of the scientists at Goddard found out about it. But they had been tracking this since 1991, possibly earlier. But Harrington discovered it, and you see it in that memo, the 1991 memo, that he knew exactly where to go and look at it.

You can't tell me that he didn't go down and get the information and come back.

What they found out was that he was going to go public and say that there was this large object coming in that is on a direct collision course with Earth. So, that's why they killed him.

Martin: I still want to talk about these people who have been murdered, but I don't want to let NASA off the hook just yet, either. We were talking about the names, the people behind NASA who are the villains, withholding knowledge from the world. Who are these people?

McCanney: Ok. At this point I would call them "family". They are people who go to privileged schools; people whose money is not taxed; it's not even registered. When the stock market crashes, it's these people who are withdrawing their money, on purpose. They create the money in the first place. The World Monetary Fund and all the people who work in that are all related to this.

So, literally, what came out of the Middle Ages, the banking system, the Vatican, and these groups of families who have descended down through, and have basically run all of these countries for centuries and centuries.

A long time ago what happened is, they moved out as—let's go back to before the devastation, which was 3600 years ago. It was one of the companions of Nibiru that did the damage to Earth.

Martin: A companion?

McCanney: A companion; it was the one that became Venus. Velikovsky was very right that Venus was a huge comet that worked its way through the solar system, and it took about a 600-year period from the time it was captured by Jupiter to the time it encountered Earth, and then worked its way in to become the planet that we know today.

So, originally what happened, and Hale-Bopp was here about 4200 years ago, and Venus was captured by Jupiter about 4200 years ago. They were, literally, smaller companions to Nibiru.

And so, it's very clear in the Koldrin Bible—let me see if I can find that right here, right now. The Koldrin Bible is the Old Testament that has been kept by the Caldiens (sp) in Northern Scotland. They moved there from Rome when Christ was around. Joseph of Aramatheia, who was Christ's stepfather, kept the Koldrin Bible and handed it down, and it's just in a very small placement and group of people who kept it.

Here it is, I found it. I'm going to read a couple of passages here.

Koldrin is one of the purist versions of the Old Testament. And this is from "The Deluge", Chapter 4, from the Book Of Gleanings. Chapter 4 is titled "The Deluge", so this is where it gets into the flood, paragraph 24: "There, riding on a black rolling cloud, came the destroyer." That is Nibiru. "Newly released from the confines of the sky, and she raced about the Heavens for it was her day of judgment."

Now, this is the line I wanted you to notice here: "The beast with her opened its mouth and belched forth fire and hot stones and vile smoke; it covered the whole sky above and the meeting place of Earth and Heaven could no longer be seen. In the evening the places of the stars were changed, they rolled across the skies to new stations; then the flood waters came."

That's why they didn't want anybody to know about the companion, because they knew it was on a collision course with Earth, and they knew it was the companion to the bigger one that caused the problem. But they didn't realize that Hale-Bopp was, literally, one of the companions itself.

Now, when the destroyer, the big guy comes in, Nibiru, it has an entire entourage of these things.

Martin: I guess Comet NEAT would be one of those?

Large-print, 700-page, 8½" X 11" book, with over 100 rare pictures PLUS a DATA CD-ROM with 13 rare, out-of-print books used in the researching of Vatican Assassins.

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's un-godly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

McCanney: And that's the thing. When we got barraged a few weeks ago by all these comets, and they never announced Comet NEAT, C-2002/V1, clearly all of this stuff is coming from the Southern Hemisphere.

Then, of course, Harrington knew very well where that was, for the reasons that I gave; they were pulling down on the planets Uranus and Neptune. It's interesting to note that when the story of Harrington came out, the government tried to make a statement through some of these astronomers that are on the radio; the disinformation guys came up with a story: "Oh, well, we have corrected the masses of those planets due to new information, so that has taken care of that problem."

Well, no, that doesn't correct anything when you see these planets being pulled down. That would only correct things in the plane of the planets. This object was big enough—back in 1991—it was pulling Uranus and Neptune down out of their orbit; that's how big this thing is!

So, you see the concern over the companion. Because they all know, and the Vatican knows, that it was the companion that did the damage the last time. The only problem is, the companion became the Planet Venus. What they don't understand is that it's a very difficult thing to produce the orbits for these, and NASA is learning that the hard way. They couldn't keep track of Hale-Bopp; it changed on a daily basis. That was one thing we did in The Millennium Group was track the daily changing of its orbit, on the government ephemeris pages.

Martin: Was Comet NEAT a surprise? Did that come out of nowhere, or did they expect that?

McCanney: No—Comet NEAT is another VERY large nucleus, planetary size, probably the size of our Moon, at least, probably larger. NASA knew it was coming. They probably saw it coming in years ago, as part of this entourage of things that are coming in, that I think of as things that are coming in as part of the Planet X entourage. They didn't want anybody to know about it, for the simple reason they knew it was going to come in right around the Sun, and it was big, and they probably never expected it to become as bright as it did. But it was, literally, visible in the daytime sky, right next to the Sun, as it passed—over about a 12-hour period when it was coming in.

Martin: The media blackout on that was deafening.

McCanney: [Laughter] Yeah, that's a good way to put it. Yep.

Martin: I have the SOHO updates as my computer screen-saver, so daily I get the updated images of the Sun. I happened to be looking at the computer when it started to come in. So, as it was happening, I was seeing the images, and I was just stunned at the size of that thing.

McCanney: Then they're saying: "The nucleus was half-a-mile across."

Martin: Bullshit.

McCanney: Bullshit, yeah. IT WAS PLANETARY IN SIZE! That's why, on my home-page now, on the very top, I originally said: "Welcome Hale-Bopp, the newest planetary member of our solar system." And that's part of my Harrington Expedition goal. I know at this point that the coma of Hale-Bopp has thinned out enough where you could actually see the nucleus. It, actually, was like that maybe a year and a half ago. But I'll be able to, with a good photograph, over two successive nights, I'll be able to identify which object it is in the star-pattern. With the calculation of the amount of light that's being reflected off of it, I can make a good estimate of its size.

Martin: The obvious question is: How many more of these companions can we look forward to?

McCanney: We don't know. And, of course, NASA would have a very good knowledge of this.

The other thing that I want to say about Hale-Bopp, just one last thing, is that in the six-year period from 1991 to 1996, where it actually hits perihelion with the Sun, it lost three months time in arriving, due to the tail-drag of the huge comet. That's why we didn't have the direct collision with it. And when I mean direct collision, I don't mean hitting Earth, but we would have been within about one million miles. By anybody's standard, it would have been total devastation of this planet. The flooding would have been enormous. It was only due to the fact that this thing slowed down that we missed it.

So, that's the other half of Hale-Bopp. We were in May, and NASA came out and said: "Oh, all these silly people talking about this comet; it's just a little snowball."

And that's what they're doing with Comet NEAT. I saw a posting just today on CNN, if you click on the space-science section on the web, you'll see a story, the lead story is All The Funny Things That Amateurs Are Seeing, like unidentified flying objects and this kind of thing. But when you pull it up, there's actually a picture of NEAT there. Then they're saying: "Even amateurs can look for these little snowballs."

Martin: [Laughter]

McCanney: [Laughter] It's just there way; it's just TOTAL disinformation.

Martin: Obviously you've confronted

NASA a zillion times. How do they respond to you when you confront them with knowledge?

McCanney: Two things. They really don't know what's going on. They don't have a clue. You can still talk to the astronomers, and they're talking about dirty snowballs and neutrals, and they go through all of the jargon. They, obviously, are in total denial because NEAT in no way in the world—people, amateurs were looking at it in UV [the ultraviolet part of the light spectrum, above visible light in frequency, and of shorter wavelength]. Now, ok, here is a comet, 93 million miles away, next to the Sun, and amateurs are able to view it. Now, ultraviolet is pretty much blocked out by our atmosphere. The Sun's UV rays get through because it's the Sun; it's cranking out a lot of energy. But, for a comet next to the Sun to be visible in UV under our blanket of atmosphere is absolutely unheard of.

Martin: I guess another question would be: where is NEAT going?

McCanney: NEAT headed back out. That is object number four of my South American Harrington Expedition, to re-chart the new orbit for NEAT, because it clearly lost a lot of its energy as it came around the Sun, as it picked up a lot of tail material.

So, it's not going to come and hit Earth. That's what NASA always says: "Oh, these people think it's going to hit Earth." No, no, nobody said anything about it hitting Earth. They try to make fun of people, and in fact, they actually have people who set up those stories on the Internet so they can go make fun of them. It's part of their disinformation campaign.

Martin: When a comet the size of NEAT, or a planet the size of NEAT, swings by our Sun, how does "action at a distance" come into play?

McCanney: The flare that came off [the Sun] that you see in many of the photos, that came and hit the back side of the comet tail.

Martin: The HUGE flare?

McCanney: Space is a very big place.

Martin: The 5-million-mile flare?

McCanney: Yes. Now, if that were to come at Earth, it would have knocked us to our knees. But it went off in a totally obscure direction.

Let's look at something else: What you didn't see there, but I could see it coming off of NEAT, if you look very closely you'll see a pin-thin streak coming directly away from the Sun, through the nucleus, and out away from the nucleus out the right of the screen. That's connecting with Planet Mercury. Mercury was in a direct alignment with NEAT as it came across the ecliptic, the plane of the planets. That line, that you can actually see on solar photographs, is connecting to Mercury.

So, now, let's put Earth over there. What if Earth was over 90° around, and we were not broadside to it? Then, we could have very easily been in a position to take that flare, for example, or take an electrical discharge directly from NEAT. That is what the ancients talked about with the comets, the lightning bolts flying across the heavens; they saw these things—Zeus throwing lightning bolts to Mars. They saw this stuff.

Martin: It was literal; it wasn't metaphorical.

McCanney: No, it was not metaphorical. And, of course, now, thousands of years later, everybody wants to make it into mythology. Mythology is the study of false sightings, almost, whereas these people really saw this stuff.

When Venus came around Mars, it lashed out with an electrical discharge and the auroras in the atmosphere of Mars lit-up, and it looked like a snake grabbing Mars. It, literally, sucked the oceans and atmosphere off of Mars as it passed by.

And they saw this. They knew that Mars, prior to that, was a water planet, was a blue planet, just like Earth.

And these scientists are going out there—let's talk about a little obvious science, right now. NASA is looking for water on Mars. There's the oceans, there's the erosion, there's river beds, everything a water planet should have in terms of markings are on Mars, but there's no ocean, or streams, or rivers, and the atmosphere is very thin. NASA is saying: "Oh, it's in the ground from permafrost."

First of all, do you think, after being there for millions of years, all of a sudden the ocean just sank into the ground? How ridiculous is that?

Martin: [Laughter]

McCanney: Ok. Secondly, you need a very extensive atmosphere to hold that ocean in place for those millions of years. So, did the atmosphere sink into the ground, too? Clearly, I mean, if you just attack it on very basic, rudimentary principles, a kindergarten student would not believe their story. But, they're sending spacecraft up there, digging around in the ground, expecting to find permafrost where the ocean fell in. It's absolutely ludicrous.

[Editor's note: It's ludicrous IF you accept NASA's reasons at face value for why they're sending "digging" equipment to Mars. But since they've never told us the truth about any of the REAL activities being conducted during Space Shuttle missions, there's no reason to believe what they state is actually why NASA is sending the equipment to Mars.]

And we have direct confirmation from the ancients who talked about Mars having its ocean sucked-off by this massive comet Venus. When you look at the percentage chemical composition of Venus and Mars, the atmospheres are identical in composition, if you go percentage-wise right down. Mars has a very thin atmosphere. Venus has a massive atmosphere, thousands of times denser than Earth's atmosphere. But percentage-wise, the chemical composition of the atmospheres of Venus and Mars are exactly the same—which means they were formed in the same boiling pot there, as they passed by each other.

Martin: Would Venus be the planet that was referred to, in ancient times, as Tiamet?

An Example Of Our Busy Universe

In January 2002, a dull star in an obscure constellation suddenly became 600,000 times more luminous than our Sun, temporarily making it the brightest star in our Milky Way galaxy!

The mysterious star has long since faded back to obscurity, but observations by NASA's Hubble Space Telescope of a phenomenon called a "light echo" have uncovered remarkable new features. These details promise to provide astronomers with a CAT-scan-like probe of the three-dimensional structure of shells of dust surrounding an aging star.

"Like some past celebrities, this star had its 15 minutes of fame" says Anne Kinney, director of NASA's Astronomy and Physics program, Headquarters, Washington. "But its legacy continues as it unveils an eerie light-show in space. Thankfully, NASA's Hubble has a front-row seat to this unique event in our galaxy."

Light from a stellar explosion echoing off circumstellar dust in our Milky Way galaxy was last seen in 1936, long before Hubble was available to study the tidal wave of light and reveal the netherworld of dusty black interstellar space.

"As light from the outburst continues to reflect off the dust surrounding the star, we view continuously changing cross-sections of the dust envelope. Hubble's view is so sharp that we can do an 'astronomical CAT-scan' of the space around the star" says the lead observer, astronomer Howard Bond of the Space Telescope Science Institute in Baltimore.

Bond and his team used the Hubble images to determine that the petulant star, called V838 Monocerotis (V838 Mon) is about 20,000 light-years from Earth. The star put out enough energy in a brief flash to illuminate surrounding dust, like a spelunker taking a flash picture of the walls of an undiscovered cavern. The star presumably ejected the illuminated dust shells in previous outbursts. Light from the latest outburst travels to the dust and then is reflected to Earth. Because of this indirect path, the light arrives at Earth months after light coming directly toward Earth from the star itself.

The outburst of V838 Mon was somewhat similar to that of a nova, a more common stellar outburst. A typical nova is a normal star that dumps hydrogen onto a compact white-dwarf companion star. The hydrogen piles up until it spontaneously explodes by nuclear fusion—like a titanic hydrogen bomb. This exposes a searing stellar core, which has a temperature of hundreds of thousands of degrees Fahrenheit.

By contrast, however, V838 Mon did not expel its outer layers. Instead, it grew enormously in size, with its surface temperature dropping to temperatures not much hotter than a light bulb. This behavior of ballooning to an immense size, but not losing its outer layers, is very unusual and completely unlike an ordinary nova explosion.

"We are having a hard time understanding this outburst, which has shown a behavior that is not predicted by present theories of nova outbursts" says Bond. "It may represent a rare combination of stellar properties that we have not seen before."

The star is so unique it may represent a transitory stage in a star's evolution that is rarely seen. The star has some similarities to highly unstable aging stars called eruptive variables, which suddenly and unpredictably increase in brightness.

The circular light-echo feature has now expanded to twice the angular size of Jupiter on the sky. Astronomers expect it to continue expanding, as reflected light from farther out in the dust envelope finally arrives at Earth. Bond predicts that the echo will be observable for the rest of this decade.

About the photo sequence itself:

This sequence of pictures from the NASA Hubble Space Telescope's Advanced Camera for Surveys dramatically demonstrates the reverberation of light through space caused by an unusual stellar outburst in January 2002. A burst of light from the bizarre star is spreading into space and reflecting off of surrounding shells of dust to reveal a spectacular McCanney: I don't know. Velikovsky's Venus is very accurate.

Martin: I wanted to ask you about Velikovsky. You're very similar to him in that he was given a hard time, and ridiculed, and it turns out, he was right. My question to you is: How is it, in the year 2003, to be a scientist who thinks outside the box?

McCanney: It's a fact. There's no question anymore that Velikovsky was right. And, I think the biggest thing that I want to say about Velikovsky, he was not studying astronomy. He was studying CALENDARS! Velikovsky was studying the calendar. The whole purpose of his study was to create a timeline that would—he was searching for events that were worldwide in scope, in ancient history. He was a very well trained person, much better than most modern Ph.D.s who criticize him, in astronomy.

What the modern astronomers, Carl Sagan and all those people who attacked him, what they never understood is that he wasn't studying planetary science. He wasn't interpreting that information that he got, to talk about our science, or comets, or solar systems, or anything else.

He was studying calendars. Ancient calendars were clearly changed about 3600 years ago. There was a huge effort, all over the world, and we see it in all of these cities.

Let me talk about something else. There is a tremendous push, right now, in the dating of the Mayan, of the Egyptian, of the Chinese, of all of the calendars that we know around the world, and when some of these civilizations lived, that's totally misleading, especially the Mayans. I just read an article today that talked about the Mayans, the Mayan demise at around 800 A.D. to 900 A.D. Totally incorrect, absolutely totally incorrect.

Let's look at Chichen Itza. Clearly it was built many thousands of years ago. It was built based on the orbits of Venus. At any rate, all that I'm saying is: On almost every front of knowledge, whether it is geography, or geology, or history, or archeology, they're trying to present misinformation, literally, to basically fool the public.

I just want to reiterate: Velikovsky was studying calendars, looking for a timeline, an event so massive in world scope that it would be recognized around the world, and he could then take Tibet, and China, and Egypt, and Israel, and all of those ancient lands and put them on a time scale where you could say this is an event. How we can go forward and backwards in time and build our calendar. That's what he was doing. And in doing so, he discovered that the event that he was looking for was Venus, being a large comet, and becoming the planet Venus that we know today.

At any rate, I just wanted to make that clear that Velikovsky is very misunderstood, and that a planetary event is what he discovered in his study of calendars.

Martin: Let's talk about your concept of comets and plasma. What is plasma?

McCanney: Plasma is like a fourth state of matter. In a vacuum environment, where you have strictly gases and high energy—for example, a lot of light coming out of the Sun—that splits the atoms into free electrons, ions, neutral atoms, and other forms of energy, like stored magnetism, stored electric fields; that's a plasma. And the interaction of all of these things is what you call plasma multicolored bull's eye.

This sequence of pictures from May to December 2002 shows apparent changes in the appearance of the circumstellar dust as different parts are illuminated sequentially. This effect is called a "light echo".

From the first to last image, the apparent diameter of the nebula appears to balloon from 4 to 7 light-years. This gives the illusion that the dust is expanding into space faster than the speed of light. In reality the dust shells are not expanding at all, but it is simply the light from the stellar flash that is sweeping out into the nebula. The different colors in the nebula reflect changes in the color of the star during its outburst.

The red star at the center of the eyeball-like feature is an unusual erupting supergiant called V838 Monocerotis, located about 20,000 light-years away in the winter constellation Monoceros (the Unicorn). During its outburst the star brightened to more than 600,000 times our Sun's luminosity.

The circular feature has now expanded to slightly larger than the angular size of Jupiter on the sky. For several more years it will continue expanding as reflected light arrives from more distant portions of the nebula. Eventually, when light from the back side of the nebula begins to arrive, the light echo will give the illusion of contracting, and finally it will disappear by the end of this decade. The black gaps around the red star are regions of space where there are holes in dust. This shows the nebula has a Swiss-cheese structure.

physics; that's the study of that. That's, literally, in a nutshell, what plasma is.

Martin: Let's talk about comets. They're not dirty snowballs. What are comets?

McCanney: Let me start by saying this: For a long time, there was somewhat of a feud in the astrophysics community between a guy named Chapman and Hans Alfvén, from the Swedish Institute. Chapman tells that space was electrically neutral. Alfvén says, no, we can see this plasma up there, it's doing strange things, we don't know what causes all of this, but space is not electrically neutral; it's very much active electromagnetically.

And then, the United States, of course, is where the money is. Chapman won out, he was the American.

There is a very simple physics problem that is taught to every graduate student in space science and astrophysics and physics. That is, if you take a charge and put it in outer space, very, very rapidly, and you can calculate how rapid this is, charge will come and surround it, and shield it, and will not allow it to be seen, electrically, in any other part of the Universe. It's a shielding property, and if you have a magnetic field out there for some reason, around an object, the same thing will happen; you get a plasma effect. And that, for example, is one reason why our gravity is known to be a force that is totally independent of electromagnetism, because these electromagnetic forces are so shielded that gravity "sees through them" let's say.

Be that as it may, Chapman kind-of won this theoretical battle. And so, for decades you had the Chapman conferences, Chapman physics, which was taught in all the textbooks, and all of these guys grew up thinking that space was electrically neutral, because of that little problem that you could do as a graduate student.

And I've done that. But what I realized, and apparently none of these other people realized, the data, as it started coming back from the space-probes, didn't support that at all. There was a tremendous amount of electromagnetic activity out there, and that's when, in 1979, I was a young instructor at Cornell University, that had access to all of this data coming in from Voyager spacecraft, Pioneer and Voyager, as they went by Jupiter and Saturn. That was before NASA realized that they had to keep the data away from people like me, who would interpret it differently than what they would like to see.

At any rate, the data was saying something totally different. Very bizarre electromagnetic things were being observed—spokes in Saturn's rings, tremendous electrical discharges, current rings of millions of amperes floating around the planet. Things just didn't make sense. There was a proton wind. The thing that caught my attention the most was that there was a proton wind coming off of both Jupiter and Saturn, and that's a satellite property that we only see from the Sun. It's interesting that they only saw protons. They didn't see an electron wind that would neutralize that.

So, clearly, outer space was not what they were expecting. They were expecting Jupiter to be an ice-cold frozen ball of hydrogen, very sterile, and it was not. It was tremendously dynamic, had a huge magnetic field. Literally, as they went out in front to Venus, as they went out to all of the other planets, they were very different than what they thought they would be.

So, at any rate, I happened to be at Cornell at this time, and I had already completed much of my theoretical work by that time, on inclusion of electromagnetic fields and celestial mechanics. I understood how these worked. When I saw this data coming in, I recognized, out of my theoretical work and the data—and that, of course, is something that none of these Chapman physics guys had any clue about. They were still trying to imagine that these were gravitational effects that they were seeing.

At that time I also studied comets, as part of what I was doing. I realized that comets could not possibly be these dirty snowball things. There is a lot of data indicating that comets were interacting electrically with the Sun, and were noticed to have had electrical discharges around them. At the time, I didn't know what caused the electric fields, but I knew it had to be caused by the Sun. I knew that the comets were interacting and that the nuclei of the comets were becoming negatively charged.

Then, it finally dawned on me at that time, 1979-80, that this had to be produced by a differential flow in the solar winds. In other words, there were more protons in the solar winds than electrons. That gave me a whole new model for fusion. That's when I realized that the fusion had to be up in the solar atmosphere, and not down in the core. That's when I realized that the corona of electrons around the Sun was really a super-atom space, and that the Sun itself was positively charged down below that, and up above that the corona of electrons was actually making the Sun look negatively charged to the outside.

This whole complex phenomena of how the solar winds would open up holes in the corona and come blasting out, was caused by electrostatic acceleration of the protons as they moved out through the corona. And that's exactly what we're viewing. And this whole time, even up until today, NASA insists that the energy from the Sun is coming from the core. Totally incorrect.

When I was at Cornell, I met Hans Bethe, Nobel Prize winning physicist who created the model for the Sun that we now use. And, of course, he was a friend of Albert Einstein, and they both won Nobel Prizes. But Hans Bethe won the prize for the chemistry and the understanding that the nuclear fusion model that we now, literally, use today, and the chain reactions that would build up the bigger atoms, and cause the heat. He made the initial calculations that the heat of the Sun, and those kinds of things, would actually match reality.

But I sat and I talked to him about this. I talked to him about the fact that the Solar System had to be electrically active, and that comets were not dirty snowballs. And he looked at me and he knew, and Einstein knew, that—one of Einstein's last things he did was very actively pursue Velikovsky's work because he knew that general relativity was missing something very big, and that was the electromagnetic field. You could not have gravity affecting light without also having the electromagnetic field around stars affecting light as well. He knew that those factors were missing from General Relativity, and that's what he was working on when he died. Hans Bethe told me that's what Einstein was working on, he was trying to figure out that problem. I know he looked at me like: "I think this kid has figured out what's going on here."

I asked him: "I'm having trouble publishing. They're taking away my ability to publish. Do you have any suggestions for this?"

And he said: "Try the German publications." And I did. My work eventually began to be published in the Netherlands.

Martin: That's interesting. So, you had to go off-shore.

McCanney: Yes, and there were two journals that were actually published in the Netherlands, Astrophysics & Space Science and another one called The Moon & The Planets. This was due to what Hans Bethe told me.

Martin: Sounds like he gave you good advice.

McCanney: Yes. But when this stuff started hitting the streets, the people at Cornell freaked-out.

Martin: Why is that?

McCanney: Because I was using Cornell's name, and I was using non-

Chapman physics with Cornell's name on it. This was NOT what they wanted to see. And, of course, when they got a hold of all of my papers and ran them through the Space Science Department there, they realized that what I was doing was corroborating Velikovsky's story.

Carl Sagan was Professor Emeritus of the Donald Duncan Chair of Astronomy, a very exclusive seat of astronomy at Cornell. He was the one who, basically, did-in Velikovsky. That's why Sagan was famous. Not many people understand that he led the charge against Velikovsky, who was selling millions of books all over the world. Sagan led the charge that Velikovsky was a geologist and planetary scientist and astronomer, and on and on, to prove, so to speak, that Velikovsky could not possibly be true. And that's why Sagan eventually got the COSMOS series, because he was the spokesperson for the astronomy community that buried Velikovsky. Not more than two years later, I show up at Cornell. I'm using their data to prove Velikovsky correct.

Martin: I'm sure it went over like a lead balloon. [Laughter]

McCanney: [Laughter] I didn't understand any of this at that time. Now I understand.

Martin: So, you didn't understand how "politically incorrect" that was?

McCanney: [Laughter] Yes.

Martin: This is slightly off-point. Apparently we just had a passing of something called Enigma, which was a black dwarf?

McCanney: Did you hear that there was actually something there, at all?

Martin: No. I was looking and looking, and I never saw anything.

McCanney: No, there wasn't anything. There again, when that first came out, I looked at the webpage, I looked at the information, and I said: "This is a NASA disinformation site."

Martin: I wondered about that.

McCanney: That was the first thing out of my mouth. You look at the webpage, very well constructed. Here's a guy, Chung, who has no prior history of being involved in anything like this.

Martin: And notice he's the ONLY one making that statement, as far as I can tell.

McCanney: Yeah. He's putting down Planet X. You look at his references and they are all NASA/JPL sites. The only non-NASA site that he lists is Zetatalk, which is, literally, a NASA site—the Nancy Lieder site, which was built by NASA to create more disinformation about the topic of Planet X.

Martin: Let's talk about Planet X some more. I know you don't like to talk about time frames, but do you have any sense of it, at all? Are we a year out? A hundred years out?

McCanney: That I don't know, and that's what I want to find out with The Harrington Expedition.

Martin: So, you don't have a sense of that, at this point?

McCanney: I do, privately. I'm always afraid to speak of dates because people try to hold you to that.

Martin: Could you talk in general terms?

McCanney: Ok. If history plays out correctly, let me say this: Hale-Bopp, NEAT, and the other five comets that we saw in February. We saw five comets come in very close to the Sun—one was Kudo-Fujikawa, one was NEAT V1, the other one was no name, it just came tunneling into the side of the Sun at about 100 million miles an hour, and then there was another small comet nucleus that tunneled up in the Sun on the lower-left side of the picture, as you look at it, as NEAT passed on below, and it was believed that was an object that was thrown off of NEAT and tunneled down into a solar flare, and that's where those big balloon-shaped, long plasma tubes came out of the Sun, in reaction to that.

Ok, your question was Planet X. The Hopi Indians believed that Hale-Bopp [1995] was the Blue Kachina, which was the precursor by about 10 years, of Planet X. And 10 years, of course, is a very relative term there. The point is, what appears to be, if Hale-Bopp had been a companion of the Big Guy, 4200 years ago—and that's what the cycle is, not 3600 years, but 4200 years for Nibiru—then we're due here within the next decade.

Martin: Ok, that's helpful.

McCanney: And the other thing is, people are concentrating on this Planet X or Nibiru object. The thing I point out is, I study the extra-Solar System objects. NEAT, for example, didn't match anything that we've seen before. It was a brand new comet. So, whether it was related to Nibiru coming in, or not, is impossible to really say.

Martin: So, really, it's an unknown entity.

McCanney: Right. The point is, there are hundreds, if not thousands, or hundreds of thousands of these big objects floating around out there. And that is something that NASA refuses to acknowledge. They keep talking about these comets as being a quarter of a mile across, or something. Well, you know and I know that NEAT was BIG. It wasn't a half-mile across. And just by the fact that NASA says that, any grade school kid would know that they are lying. Why are they lying? Because they want to downplay these big objects, which they're now observing but they don't have a theoretical place for them. And if they admitted that NEAT was planetary-sized, they would, basically, say: "Jim McCanney is right."

Martin: What's wrong with that?

McCanney: [Laughter]

Martin: I don't see anything wrong with that.

McCanney: Ask them; I don't know. They seem to have a problem.

Martin: They have a very large problem. Reality is knocking at their door, and they're not answering.

McCanney: Yeah. There again, this goes back to the fact that—let's talk about NEAT. What if the public was aware that everybody was saying: "Oh, look, the paper says go out at sunset tonight. Let's look at this comet go by the Sun."

And all of sudden they're standing there and what would be the first thing that goes through everybody's mind? "What if that thing came near Earth?"

Martin: Right. "Oh, my God!"

McCanney: I mean, wouldn't that go through your mind?

Martin: Sure.

McCanney: Why do you think they didn't announce it?

Martin: The so-called "panic theory".

McCanney: Yeah. And then, that logical deduction: "If that came all of a sudden out of the blue, could another one come out of the blue, at any time, and come by Earth and affect it?" And of course, that's what I'm saying. That's the "action at a distance" thing. We don't have to be hit by these things. NASA keeps pounding on this: "If we're HIT by one of these thing." No! It has nothing to do with necessarily actually being hit.

If that flare would have hit us, come out and go out behind NEAT, you would have known it. There would probably be, in 5 years, there'd be a lot of people dying of cancer, because that would have blasted the magnetic field, would have torn away our magnetic shield, and whoever was facing the Sun at that time would have been toasted.

It's not well known, but back in the late 1990s—this I got from Dmitriev, in fact—there was a solar flare that hit Earth, and we were on the night-time side, at the time when the actual magnetic field went to zero. Russia was pointed toward the Sun, and they are actually tracking cancer rates, right now in Russia, based on that flare.

Martin: That's amazing. This will get into an area that you might not feel comfortable answering, but my wife was curious to know, what effects on people will these vibrational changes have over the next few years?

McCanney: I would say two-fold. There is very much a polarization going on, right now, around the world. It's literal in that the people who are raising to higher consciousness of understanding where we fit in the universe, and that we have to come together in a peaceful manner and stop using the resources on this Earth in a totally careless manner. We have to provide for our future generations. Those people are going to be elevated, way up. And they're going to be communicating on an almost mental, spiritual level around the world, understanding that we cannot continue to have petty Earth-wars, and put all our resources into this.

The other thing that's apparent is, time is a resource. We always think—and NASA wants us to believe, too—that we have all of this time. We have years and years and years—in that case, eons. And we will only continue to advance and go forward. They don't want to talk about the fact that we have a very limited time resource to get our act together here in dealing with these celestial storms; let's call them celestial hurricanes. I think that would be a good word, because they come sort-of randomly. You don't know when they're going to form. They're based on powers that are far beyond anything that we can control.

One of the biggest things that we have to get rid of is this world-wide organization that is controlling the whole world and keeping it, basically, in a slavery mode.

The other part of the pole is exactly that. The organizations, the Catholic Church in the form of the Vatican. I'm not talking about the little local church, with the priest and the people worshipping Christ. I'm not talking about that. I'm talking about the Vatican, the top-down worldwide power source, and these elite families who are keeping the world, basically, on a day-today, mouth-to-mouth situation. And those people are going to become far worse in doing what they're doing. And we can see that happening right now.

So, literally what's going to happen is—and some of it is tuned to the electrical fields that are caused when these things come in. So when they talk about "rumors of war", literally the people who are that mindset are going to increase their war effort 100-fold. They will be totally, totally dedicated to doing nothing but war and destruction and killing.

And the other half is going to be the people who are raising their consciousness. They would have two possibilities: To try to go out and kill the people who are causing all the wars. Well, obviously we built this entire war machine, and you can't fight it. It's too huge.

And the people operating that would say: "Well, you're trying to ruin our defense." It's not defense anymore; it's offense. They're going out and they're going to have wars and wars and wars. They're already talking about the wars after the Iraq war, which would be Iran next. The war is not going to end. And Bush said at the beginning, he said this war is going to last forever.

So, that is the polarity that is going to occur, and that is actually part of both the prophecy and the reality. If you look at what's going on, there's no doubt that all of this stuff is coming to pass.

Martin: Let's talk about the Schumann Frequency and arriving at Zero Point, as a planet. Do you see that happening? And, do you see these celestial bodies as having an influence in that occurring?

McCanney: You know, I talk with people who talk about Zero Point energy and all this stuff, and I don't personally—let me say this so I can be politically correct here.

Martin: You don't have to be politically correct here. Let me rephrase the question, it might be more comfortable for you. Let's talk about the shifting magnetic poles of Planet Earth, and how these changes are affecting our magnetic poles?

McCanney: First of all, the magnetic field of the Earth is very much misunderstood. Most of it is caused by currents that flow around the Earth. It's not caused by some kind of magnet in our core. The magnetic field that does come from our core, the permanent component of that magnetic field, is very loosely bound in iron and nickel deposits. It's not like a little iron magnet that you would put in your pocket as a kid. Most of our magnetic field is in the form of electrical currents flowing around the planet in the solar wind, and in the Van Allen Belt, and in other forms—that's our magnetic field. That's

Money And The Conspiracy Of Evil Conspiracy Con 2002 Lecture (2 hrs.) By Eustace Mullins

Sixty years ago Eustace Mullins was a protégé of literary giant Ezra Pound, who understood central banking and its relationship with world unrest. He has been a respected researcher for over 50 years, and has since authored many books on conspiracy, including Secrets Of The Federal Reserve and The World Order.

Using his recent travel experiences and Orwell's 1984 as examples, Eustace discusses the irony of Homeland Security and how Americans are now treated as "Enemies of the State". He then describes the real manipulators behind all major wars, the Cold War, the Stock Market, the Medical Scam, 9/11, terrorism, and more.

To accomplish all this, the "perpe-traitors" control the government, the schools, and the media, while keeping us in unimportant jobs, and stealing most of our earnings. For these purposes the Central Bank is the only mechanism that works. Without the government-granted license to print money, the conspiracy would be no more of a threat to us than bin Laden actually is.

Eustace gives a history lesson you won't forget—nor should you!

why, when a very highly charged electromagnetic comet comes by, that's why it can very much affect us.

The Russians—and this is a good time to mention this—it just occurred to me, but the Russians did a study a number of years ago on unborn fetuses. What they realized was, these unborn fetuses were tuning-in to the electromagnetic rhythm of the cosmos. This is like what Dmitriev was talking about. They were very aware of the electromagnetic part of our environment, where in the West here they were still going “there is no such thing”. They weren't even building instruments to measure it, whereas the Russians were doing this. That's why, when the Russians got hold of my papers, they flipped-out. They said: “This explains everything that we've been seeing.”

Then they did statistical studies on the planetary alignments, and things like that, relative to astrology. And, basically, they became convinced that there was a very definite association with people, and their lives, and the way they acted, and the planetary position. They did this with not just humans, but plant life, animal life, and on and on. They realized that there was something to this, but they didn't understand what it was.

But when they realized that all of the planets are discharging the solar capacity that's built-up around the Sun, due to excess current of protons in the solar winds, as these planets came into alignments, that increased the flow of currents along those paths. And when you had many planets line-up, it increased the currents 100-fold, not just 2-fold.

And so, as the Moon, for example, comes through a New Moon and passes away, for a short while, in the New Moon phase it's blocking the solar wind. But as it moves out of the way, that solar wind comes pounding in and breaks our magnetic field down, causing tremendous pressure on the atmosphere.

So, the New Moon phase and the Full Moon phase are times when the Earth is being, basically, crushed under a lot of electromagnetic pressure, just as one way of talking about it.

So, all of these effects that you're seeing are very real.

When a big comet comes into the solar system, breaks down the solar electric field and starts driving this energy up in the Sun that we're seeing, then all of a sudden you get what I'm talking about with this polarization. The people who are raising themselves to a higher spiritual consciousness will raise much farther, and the people who are intent on war will go out and beat the war drum much more. And that's what we're seeing right now.

Martin: What do you think individuals will experience? Will people experience much more disease, more out of balance, any theories?

McCanney: Let's talk about the jet-stream and weather. Everything will become more erratic. We're already seeing this. You'll see temperature swings that are much larger. And you're going to see the same thing in people. People who are not really in control of themselves, you're going to see becoming erratic; people who are off-balance a little bit, become off-balance a lot; people who are very balanced become far more balanced.

So, this is part of the polarization. There's not going to be anybody in the middle any more.

Martin: Accentuating what is.

McCanney: That's right.

Martin: Let's get back to the Zero Point, politically incorrect subject.

McCanney: Here is what I think is going on, and I learned this when I first met the Russian people. They would talk in terms—like Dmitriev talks about the vacuum domain—and that, to us, means outer space. And he has a lot of terms that he uses, and at first I said: “What's he talking about here?” I just met another Russian in February when I was at the UFO Congress in Laughlin, Nevada. I was the lead-off speaker at the conference. I spent some quality time with Dr. Valerie Uvarov from Russia [heads the Department for Investigation of Extraterrestrial Civilization under the hand of the Academy Sciences of Russia]. I interviewed him on my show. In fact, I did my radio show from there, and I spent quite a bit of time talking to him. They are very, very aware of this in Russia. In fact, that comes under his dominion as Head of Security in Russia.

Martin: No kidding?

McCanney: Yeah. And the fact that they are now having more UFO contacts. And I asked him off-line: “I know, for a fact, from the feedback I get from our own ‘black-ops’ and ‘skunk works’ in this country, of which I used to have input regarding electromagnetic propulsion systems and how they work, like Star Wars, why they come out and shoot down these rockets that are coming, because of electromagnetic effects.” People come and ask me about those kinds of things, to see if I can help them understand it. And I told Valerie this. I get this input because I'm in the loop. These people come out of the woodwork and ask me. They say: “Can you help us? Can you explain this?”

I said to Valerie: “What they don't understand in this country is, there's a higher-level concept. When you get up to this kind of hardware—let's call it hardware, because that's what we would call it in this country. In Russia, they wouldn't call it hardware because they understand the conceptual side of this. But you can reverse-engineer, you can have all of the knowledge on how this stuff works, and it will NEVER work properly if you have evil intentions.

Martin: That's right.

McCanney: In this country they don't understand that. When I told Valerie this—

Martin: There's a Higher Force at play here.

McCanney: His eyes got bigger than saucers. He said: “You understand this!” He said: “You're the first person in the West who understands this concept!”

Martin: Those things will not be allowed in space with evil intent. It's just not going to happen.

McCanney: No.

Martin: Not now, not ever.

McCanney: No, absolutely. And the people in “black-ops” here have gone to the extent of going to the East and actually getting higher-level consciousness humans to come over there and stand next to their spacecraft, to try to induce that into what they're doing.

Martin: It's not going to work.

McCanney: [Laughter]

Martin: You can't deceive Mother Nature; and you certainly can't deceive God and the entirety of Creation.

McCanney: Yeah. Who do they think they're fooling? By the way, I put that there on my home page, the two comets flying into the flare. I put that there for a reason, because every one of those “black-ops” guys who goes there knows that picture, and they know the rumble that went through the NSA, and those guys, when that happened. And that was, that was a shot over the bow. It's like, look what we can do, and don't screw around. And these guys still don't get the message.

Martin: They are really slow learners.

McCanney: Yep, yep. And this is something that is a real problem in the West, because Russia already knows this.

They have broken the ties with that kind of philosophy and are moving on. Valerie told me; he said they are accelerating, they are being contacted.

He said, very plainly to me: “Your country and the people in it will not be contacted until you break that down.” Because this is like a lead weight on the planet, this country. “Then you'll start to progress.” It was just so obvious.

And those [Russian] people are making great strides. It's not because they have a hundred-billion-dollar budget. You don't need money. These devices are not complicated. It's very clear that the ancients had space travel, and they had the understanding of how to electromagnetically shield themselves as they moved throughout space, and to move electromagnetically. All of this stuff is very clear. It's very clear that this planet was destroyed. The flood came for a reason last time.

Martin: Right.

McCanney: Because there were people here who didn't get it. So, I don't know how much of that you want to use.

Martin: We've written about this for years, and our readers are well aware of this. This is not news, believe it or not. We've said this for years.

McCanney: There again, how many groups could you really talk about this to, and have them even have a clue as to what you're talking about.

Martin: It's right on point. It will not go over anyone's head [among our readers].

McCanney: It's a whole consciousness thing. I keep saying, the idea of Planet X—and that's why the government has created Nancy Lieder: because they want a date when it's NOT going to happen. That's why they created Enigma. They want a date, they want a time. They want to go in the newspapers and on the media and say: "Look at these crazy people. Look at all this stupid stuff that's coming out of the Internet. Listen to us, because we're the ones who will tell you the real story here?"

[Editor's note: This is a good lesson illustrating how the disinformation machinery operates—at taxpayer expense—to mislead so many people searching for answers. It is likewise a measure of the desperation these misfits are experiencing as The Truth comes out anyway!]

Martin: I notice that Zecharia Sitchin is acting like somebody put a lid on him. He's VERY quiet.

McCanney: I don't know. I understand he had a little "talking to".

Martin: Do you mean after Harrington died?

McCanney: Actually, somewhat recently, in the last 3 years, something like that. About 3 years ago he was very active on radio shows and things, and all of a sudden it's like the bottom fell out. Apparently, they had a little discussion with him, and specifically about Planet X, because that's when the popularity of the topic was growing.

Martin: Do you think, the way the magnetic poles are shifting now so rapidly, do you think we'll reach a point where the magnetic poles actually do completely shift?

McCanney: We're tetering near a zero magnetic field all the time, right now. They're just not talking about it.

Martin: Will there come a time when we actually reach Zero Point?

McCanney: We're going through it all the time.

Martin: So, we're going back and forth?

McCanney: Oh, yeah. We're doing this daily.

Martin: Now, do you think there is a point at which time ceases to exist?

McCanney: Time is a human construction. I mean, a clock is a human construction. They need it for navigation. You called me at the same time that I was going to be here. [Laughter] It's a human construction.

Martin: It's also very 3rd dimensional.

McCanney: Yeah. These events are very normal. I liken what's going on to the Arrowack Indians of the East Antilles. When the White man first came over from Europe and encountered these people, they worshipped their god Hurrican. Hurrican was a god of the hurricanes, and of course, it's very much like what we're dealing with here. These big storms would come rolling through, totally out of their control, so they deified it, so they invented the word hurrican. And then it was very similar—sometimes they were very bad, sometimes they were totally devastating, blew all the trees down and only a few people survived, and they rebuilt.

So, we're dealing with very much the same thing here. We're deifying. In fact, the Old Testament deifies all of the events that happened from this planetary catastrophe. It's so weird to see the way they teach it, for example, in Christianity, modern Christianity that is. Christ was very much on-line when he was talking at the Sermon On The Mount. They were asking the same questions. Go read your Bible, the Sermon On The Mount. The people were asking the same questions people are asking today. When is it going to come? What should we do to prepare? It's all there. The people 2,000 years ago were saying the same thing.

And he was saying the same thing. He knew it because he was raised by Joseph of Arimathea, who had this old Bible, which had nothing in it but the devastation and the flood. That's what the whole Old Testament is about, the rebuilding of society. It's a textbook on that devastation. Yet, we today talk about it in kind-of a dual mode, in that God came down and did this, and saved Moses and all the Israelites, the burning pillar of fire. Well, that was the electrical discharge going up to the comet. And, of course, nobody understood it. They thought God did all this, parted the Red Sea.

If you go back into the legends of the Jews, and read where they are leaving Egypt, most of them died. This wasn't a picnic. This wasn't like Hollywood makes it out. Mostly everybody died—the Pharaoh's kids, everybody died who made it through just this deluge of big boulders burning out of the sky, a rain of fire and brimstone out of the sky. These people were all burned, they were mostly deaf because of the electrical discharges, and the lightning bolts, and the tremendous thunderclaps. These people were a mess.

Martin: I've read a lot on the subject of Earth changes in the last 20 years. In a few pages in your Earth Changes book you write more explicitly and clearly, and in more frighteningly plain language than I've seen anywhere. Your description is fantastic. [Refer back to some passages shared just prior to the beginning of this interview.] I have not seen anywhere the way you spell it out. It demystifies this comet-interplanetary-tectonic enigma that has been put forth. It makes the Gordon Michael Scallion map of the future Earth crystal clear.

McCanney: I had the fortunate experience of being at archeological sites when they were dug-up. So, I saw the history being unearthed, literally, as it came out of the ground.

And the other one was to have the ability, as a scientist, as a physicist, and being at Cornell, to see the data coming in from the space probes, as it came in. You have to understand, if I weren't there at that time, all that data would have been lost. And then, I had the ability to not only see the data, enough to understand what it said, as I saw it, because there were hundreds of people who saw that data, but I was the only one who really knew what it meant.

Martin: It seems like there is a gigantic “black hole” centered right over NASA, and all of this stuff just gets eaten-up and swallowed. Does anybody give a damn working in that organization?

McCanney: Nope.

Martin: It really ticks me off to think about it. I guess I’m not the only one. I’m sure you’ve had your moments with them. What a waste of resource.

McCanney: Literally. When you realize the value that has to be coming out of that Department. That Agency is, literally, the most critical thing for the human species that we have to be doing—and that’s getting out, and learning how to live in outer space—but we can’t do it with warfare equipment piled-up on top of these spacecraft. It was in the wrong hands. NASA was supposed to be a civilian agency, and it was immediately taken over. There was in-fighting as to who would control NASA, and where the facilities would be stationed, and who would get the cut of the pie. When you realize all the things that went wrong with NASA, you can chalk it up to one thing, two things, they go hand-in-hand: power and money.

Martin: Sure, always.

McCanney: It’s a total failure of our society, at a time when we needed to make that last step. It’s like coming up a flight of 20,000 stairs, with people dying on the way, and wars, and famine, and every possible difficulty you can image, and we get to the very top step, and all of the steps that were taken before are total failures because of money and greed at that top step. That’s what happened.

Martin: Do you have—I imagine you do, and probably can’t even comment on this—do you have your own network of allies, who you can exchange information with, in other parts of the world?

McCanney: Oh, yeah, in OTHER parts of the world; but not in this country. [Laughter]

Martin: I’ve taken enough of your time already, but are there some closing comments you’d like to make to our readers about this time, where we’re moving, things to look for?

McCanney: I would say, number one: The rest of the world is advancing far beyond the United States, in consciousness, and in progress as a human species.

The other thing I would say is: As a country, as a civilian population, we have to grab hold of this country and turn it around because, literally, the whole rest of the world depends on it. We are at a stage, right now, that is equivalent to 1939, pre-World War Two Hitler Germany. They did not turn that country around. And if we don’t turn this country around, we’re going to be in a far bigger world problem than World War Two ever thought of being.

You pile on top of this, the very likely situation that a large, historically known planet, Nibiru, is coming in with its entire entourage of members, any one of which could be the thing that comes near us and causes us serious damage, or goes near the Sun and throws off flares and causes us serious damage, then we have squandered our resources. We’ve squandered our physical resources, and we’ve squandered our resource of time. So, in the judgment of the Universe, we’ve failed—as a civilization, as a society, as the most advanced country, possibly, that the Earth has seen—we’ve failed. And there’s still time, but precious little time, to recover.

Martin: That’s a perfect place to end, unless you have something else to say.

McCanney: No, I think that’s it.

Martin: Well, thank you so much. I really appreciate your being willing to do this. You might be surprised at some of the correspondence you’ll get from our readership, which is worldwide.

McCanney: The thing I find is that you cannot measure the things that are going on. The information, as it moves out, takes root.

Martin: These things take on a life of their own, once they’re in print. And they just go far and wide.

McCanney: Great.

Martin: It’s just really nice talking to you. I’m glad you’re on the planet.

McCanney: [Laughter] Thank you, it’s good to be here.

Martin: [Laughter]

McCanney: You know, I hope I stick around for a while.

Martin: I hope you do, too. Thank you, so much.

McCanney: Just keep me posted.

Martin: I certainly will keep you posted. Thanks.

Closing Remarks

It’s obvious from the above that our universe is in a lively state of constant change and evolution. Furthermore, existing within that great universe, and responding to its energies, so are WE changing and evolving in some astonishing ways.

But there are some—those who have long controlled the affairs of our planet—who don’t want the public to be aware that these big changes are occurring, and that even bigger changes are just around the corner. Perhaps these changes are SO big that the controllers know they’ll finally lose their hold over us, and thus they scheme to delay this inevitability as best they can.

It’s also obvious that our little planet will, ultimately, be in for some kinds of outside influences from the greater cosmos—be it through Near Earth Objects or Solar Flares or simply the Higher Forces that watch over and keep a universe in healthy balance. This is where things get interesting.

Keeping the public in the dark, as NASA has been doing for so long now, is not the answer. Holding NASA and related agencies of public trust ACCOUNTABLE for withholding their knowledge is probably a step in the right direction. But such will require the pressure that results when a number of people know The Truth and act together to tear open the curtain of lies.

Thank God for people like Prof. McCanney, who is willing to put himself on the line so that the public has access to information and insights that would normally be out of common reach. And what is the best way to support a man of truth like McCanney? Simply by purchasing and reading his book(s), and perhaps by writing a word of thanks and encouragement to lighten his walk down a sometimes treacherous and often lonely path.

The information is out there, but it certainly does require a lot of time, and a great deal of discernment, to separate the wheat from the chaff. But I, for one, want to know. And I suspect you do, too. △

What Has Become Of The Grand Freedom Experiment Called The United States?

3/23/03 VIOLINIO ST. GERMAIN

Good afternoon and greetings, my dear friend and scribe. We shall get this job completed, one way or another, for with God ALL things are possible.

You know the phrase “attitude is everything”—and that’s what separates those who, whenever the opportunity arises, give of their heart in the spirit of helping their brothers and sisters, from those paralyzed by fear, self doubt, or “what’s in it for me?”—as if they’ve never heard of the Golden Rule. But pardon me for jumping upon the lecture soapbox before I’ve even provided a proper introduction.

I am Violinio St. Germain, Ascended Master, Teacher, and Keeper of the intense Violet Ray of Transmutation and Transformation. In combination with other Masters of Spectral Ray Energies governing defined areas of activity—all of which combine to make up the One White Light of Creator Source—we inspire the fullness of creative expression in your physical domain and elsewhere. I and my fellow Teachers, present for this writing from the Higher Realms, come to you within the Love and Light of our Creator, and we bring same to share with you who ask for (and accept) our help at this challenging time on planet Earth.

The consequences of that which your madmen of war are unfolding reach far beyond their understanding or control. People everywhere are literally FEELING the effects of that which is playing out on your Earth schoolroom at this time.

Indeed, you are in a period of rapid change along an accelerating learning curve. It would be wise on your part to recognize how change ALWAYS opens a window of opportunity for experiencing—and more importantly, for utilizing—the Violet Ray of Transmutation. That is to say, this powerful Ray becomes available to those who, by frequency of ATTITUDE, choose the “high” path over the “low” path through the challenges you ones face. Choose the “high” path and wonderfully transformative “positive” changes will come into your life. Choose the “low” path and you will experience that “negativity” which confounds you most, with greater and greater intensity of irritation. It is all a matter of your choices, and then growth (sooner or later) through learning from the consequences of those choices. It is all part of the science of evolving soul energies and the Laws of their natural flow according to Creator’s Will.

Just look around you, dear ones. The world is becoming so small that, as your Dalai Lama has recently said [as shared elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM], the actions of any one of you are more and more affecting ALL the rest of you. You are like twenty survivors of a shipwreck crammed into a lifeboat designed for ten. Under such conditions, any movement by any one of you is felt by all, and an inconsiderate mis-step by any one could topple the boat and cause you all to flop into chilly waters and perhaps drown. Of course “life goes on”—but not necessarily along the path you thought you would be taking.

Believe me, you are all in this “boat” together, in a decidedly intimate kind of experience that some of you recognize (the minority) and some don’t (the majority)—yet! Your environment—your schoolroom Earth—is presently so arranged to more fully bring home this lesson that we Teachers from the Higher Realms have long shared through many past messages. This is the same lesson that so many of your Native caretakers, especially those of Hopi lineage, have likewise patiently labored to teach to far too many deaf ears for far too long: that

ALL is connected; that ALL is sacred in that connection; that ALL are One, originating from the Desire and Will of The One Creator Source of All That Is.

This is not a difficult message to state. But it seems to be a most difficult concept for many on planet Earth at this time to truly appreciate in its fullness of meaning. How about this:

YOU are all in that little boat together.

You ARE all in that little boat together.

You are ALL in that little boat together.

So, if you think you can simply look the other way while you allow agents of Evil to run rampant around your little lifeboat, then you better think again. From the level of the energies that affect ALL, that connect ALL together, your end of the boat is going to be rocked just as surely and rudely as the other end.

So what are YOU going to do—besides perhaps getting a good case of seasickness? Everyone can make SOME kind of positive contribution to the stability of your little lifeboat—even if only in terms of sincerely asking your Guides to help you see what it is that you CAN do to help.

I, Germain, am known for being a personality of no nonsense and great passion. I am sensed by many of those among you actively seeking balance and healing at this time, especially because your very planet, Mother Earth, is herself in a time of Transformation and Transmutation to higher-dimensional status. And as Archangel Gabriel stated in a message last month within these pages, those of you who are operating in reasonable alignment with Creator’s Will are likewise Transforming and Transmuting to that same higher-dimensional environment.

(You want “scientific” evidence of this Transformation, now going on, of which I speak? You need look no further than the serious front-page story being presented in this issue of The SPECTRUM—which we of the Higher Realms have Guided into formation to assist in providing insight concerning your many questions on this matter.)

The direction to which you are aspiring is an environment wherein true freedom of expression knows no bounds within the contours of Divine Law. And that is a matter of great passion for me—for I am long dedicated to facilitating the free and uninhibited expression of the unique Divine Spark of Creator which resides at the core of each Lighted Being. I intend to explore that subject at some length in this message.

Though you'd hardly recognize it now, your United States of America was begun as a grand experiment for providing just such an atmosphere of soul-freedom. It was not the first such experiment on your planet and, given the current level of passivity of the citizenry, may well not be the last. All past such experiments have failed for one simple reason: the perversion of the responsibilities for maintaining freedom, as such slid downward into the sloth of disguised slavery, through the complacency of ignorance.

Your modern conspiracy theorists all talk about such "strings" of manipulation as mind control and economic control over the masses. But for such mechanisms as these to gain a foothold of success, there must first be allowed a weakening or virtual severing of your personal connection within to Creator Source. This then paves the way for a "fall into ignorance" and resulting lack of vigilance in upholding the true support structure of freedom—which comes from WITHIN because it is no less than a Divine Birthright! You then begin to relinquish segments of your personal freedom to the dictates of others—often very ego-oriented, materialistic ones, who typically operate (knowingly or unknowingly) as agents for the Dark Energies loose on your planet.

Now, what is this soul-freedom to which I refer with great passion? Are we talking about the freedom to bop your neighbor over the head and steal his shiny new car? Is it the freedom for corporations like Enron or Arthur Anderson to coldly deceive both investors and clients, and ruin so many lives and futures? Is it the freedom to knock down your forests, kill off your animal life, and pollute your water and air?

Well—if I may be blunt—looking at the antics prevailing across your modern world, and the legal arguments presented daily in your courts to successfully justify those antics, one could easily conclude that such is indeed your modern interpretation of what freedom means!

Rather, the experiment in freedom of which I speak with such passion, especially in regard to the formation of your United States, is a much more fundamental and profound philosophical and spiritual imperative. It involves the unfettered bringing through and nurturing, in the physical domain, of the very unique essence of Creator's Divine Will as such dwells within EACH OF YOU.

Your Founding Fathers of the United States came from many different backgrounds, bringing many diverse kinds of experience—and very human prejudices—to the discussion table. But what most drew them together in their bond of strength and conviction was their gradual recognition (and then appreciation and understanding) of a powerful "common element" within each of them, a subtle quality that somehow seemed to shine brightly no matter how "rough" they were on the surface. They came to see that "common element" to be no less than the unique creative "Spark of the Divine" that burns within each of us and knows full well your common spiritual heritage.

Their challenge, then, was how to design an environment which could protect and encourage this Divine Flame—glowing from each of the many exquisite little candlelights of human beingness comprising the kaleidoscope of the citizenry—despite the winds and rains ablowin' and the vultures constantly circling.

They became passionately committed to this project because, as they were also "shown" (through many personal inner encounters with me and my Fellow Teachers), the consequences of carrying out that vision would lead to no less an environment than "Heaven on Earth". They were given to see the larger ramifications that result from the principle we so often share with you: "As one grows, so grows the WHOLE of Creation."

They were also shown awesome cultural advancements that would later be possible to carry forth through such an environment of freedom—such as the elimination of illness and the development of “free energy” technologies, plus mutually satisfying interactions with your extraterrestrial brethren. Such cultural upliftments and milestones COULD have manifest (through the gifts of ones like Nikola Tesla and Royal Rife) well over 100 years ago! That is, had it not been for the kinds of “low road” choices later made by many ones (especially in positions of power) whose vision was far more clouded and susceptible to material temptations compared to that of your Founding Fathers.

As some of you more esoteric history buffs are aware, I was the Guiding Hand (and yes, the Pesting Voice) as your Founding Fathers moved cautiously forward in their formation of a clearer and clearer image of what it was they were truly efforting to fashion as “a land of the free”—or more accurately “a land in which to be free”.

One familiar way to state their challenge is: “Be all that you can be!” That is to say: Bring to a state of full expression all of the facets of the Potential—the unique Divine Spark of Creator Source—that exists within you. (Your Army manipulation experts knew exactly what they were doing when they cleverly exploited such a soul-appealing concept in their very successful recruitment advertising campaigns.)

Another way to state the challenge faced by your Founding Fathers was: To create an environment in which to freely live one’s life according to one’s highest conception of God.

In more simple terms, this was a project to create a vibrant garden. But it was no ordinary garden—because the more successful it would become (the more brilliant its Light), the more this garden would pose a threat provoking all manner of attack from Dark Energies. One by one, each of your Founding Fathers began to appreciate the rugged yet delicate nature of the task they had undertaken to set into motion.

This United States of America was thus visualized to be a garden in which there existed the freedom for each experiencing soul to draw upon, strengthen, and fully actualize their God Potential. This God Potential was finally being recognized as no less formidable a Driving Force than the very Desire and Will of Creator—that which creates universes and little sparrows in the very same way, and that which exists within and works through EACH OF US.

The challenge was the creation of an environment which would nurture the manifestation in your physical domain of this Infinite Source of Expression—creating a “Heaven on Earth” for all practical purposes.

But how was this nurturing environment to be achieved—much less sustained—when rampant upon this schoolroom planet of Earth were Dark Energies who, in their own ways and through their own agents, pursued a vast domination agenda of their own design?

Thus it became clear to your Founding Fathers that, TO REMAIN ON COURSE, this experiment in freedom would require a design structure incorporating built-in checks and balances which DRAW DIRECTLY upon the boundless capabilities of this God Force within each citizen.

A good example of this goal is the original design adopted for your trial-by-jury system—a system now corrupted and subverted so as to allow manipulation of any covertly desired outcome. In its original form, however, THE JURORS THEMSELVES WERE THE KEY. They alone decided the consequences of matters in dispute, arriving at judgements from their own personal inner understanding of spiritual principles like the Golden Rule. The judge was there to answer questions and “direct traffic” and “keep the peace” as needed to maintain a smooth flow to the proceedings.

Each juror, after having heard uninhibited presentations of both sides of the argument, was supposed to “go within” and consult with their Godself or Conscience or “still, small Voice within” or whatever you want to call a direct communing with God. (Tell me how often we Teachers from the Higher Realms have stressed this practice to “go within for your answers” in our many messages to you?!)

Consider the outcome of TWELVE people who conscientiously carry out this task of personal inner communication with God. Is there any doubt in your mind that, in so doing, they would come up with a consensus opinion leading to a fair and wise judgement for the given case?!

Moreover, to measure the built-in resilience of a design such as this, consider that it would only require any two or three people (“when two or more are gathered in My name”) exercising such a concerted group deliberation of conscience to arrive at an appropriate decision. Thus do you see the formidable “safety margin” built-in when, not two or three, but TWELVE are brought together to do so?

Let me here point out that this procedure of “going within” for Guidance works just as well when generalized for a wide range of decision situations—from those made in corporate board rooms and voting booths (where votes are honestly counted!), to those made by a sports team and around the family dinner table. This is a powerful Rudder to help steer your boat through stormy, turbulent waters.

But let us not get sidetracked here in details, dear ones. The general point I wish to recap is simply this: Your Founding Fathers recognized that THE POWER IS THE PEOPLE, AND IT CAN BE AN AWESOME POWER AT THAT. And this is due to each individual’s PERSONAL CONNECTION to Creator Source.

Each citizen is capable of drawing upon the strength of this Divine Birthright and adding to The Whole. Moreover, what gathers in energy space when a group comes together in focus upon a common purpose is that which is summed up in your statement: “The Whole is greater than the sum of the parts.” Thus, as we Teachers from the Higher Realms have so often stressed in our messages to you: YOU ARE SLEEPING GIANTS! YOU ARE MIGHTY POWERFUL SPIRITUAL BEINGS—WHEN YOU PUT YOUR MINDS AND HEARTS TO WORK

The Masters And The Spiritual Path

You have friends in high places!

There are Masters who have come out of all the world’s great spiritual traditions. These great Lights have graduated from Earth’s schoolroom. Now they come to show us the pathway home.

The Masters tell us that they are examples and not exceptions to the rule. We, too, are destined to fulfill our life’s purpose and reunite with Spirit.

In this intriguing work you will discover valuable keys to your own spiritual path. You will learn about the function of the Spiritual Hierarchy and the role of the Masters of East and West. Includes a unique meditation on the bliss of union with Spirit and a breathing exercise to help you balance and expand consciousness.

TOWARD A FOCUSED GOAL!

This is what the Dark Energies do exceedingly well, dear ones!

So the Dark Energies, operating through various agents and mechanisms, and knowing well the challenges of maintaining control—especially over such Power-in-numbers of you-the-citizenry—have long employed a “divide and conquer” approach to fragmenting “pockets of Light” in your world. This is most recently seen in the relatively short-timeframe downward-spiraling of your United States, a condition which, in turn, is pulling many others down, due to the role of Destiny which the United States has long been responsible for carrying as an example for an aspiring world.

The techniques to accomplish such fragmentation and derailment of Lighted purpose are as endless as are the exploitable weaknesses of the human condition. Such is the respected, formidable role of the Dark Energies, as teachers and testers of sorts, who themselves, by the way, will learn the errors of their thinking when enough of you ones rise above their tricks—and thereby demonstrate the ultimate power of a “service to others” philosophy over their present “service to self” conviction.

Your Founding Fathers were not perfect—none of us are—but, despite all of their individual faults and weaknesses, they were given to see, in unison, a clear vision. And it was a compelling, grand vision at that!

They were shown how to create an environment that could stand powerfully as an example for your entire planet to follow—in which souls experiencing in your physical density could most graciously yet resolutely build Perfection in the three-dimensional domain according to Creator’s Divine Plan. Your Founding Fathers (and many others at that time) sacrificed their personal safety and tranquility, their property and wealth and friendships, and even their lives to help that grand vision take its first important steps toward becoming reality.

As a whole, your nation and your world are presently far removed from experiencing the products of that grand vision. Through the seductions of the Dark Energies, step by devious step, you’ve moved away from utilizing the Power Within that always awaits your call. Your personal connection with God has thus become, generally speaking, weak-to-nonexistent, from a gradual shifting of attention to the following of external pathways of material distraction and pure mirage.

The situation on your world is likely to get “worse” in some respects before enough are caused to awaken to the point of actively deciding to make things better. Meanwhile the growing world tensions continue to serve a very important purpose in your schoolroom—to agitate more of the “sleeping giants” among you from their slumber. Thus, to come full circle in this message, you can see what a grand time of Tribulation OR Transmutation/Transformation you are now inescapably experiencing on your little lifeboat.

I, Violinio St. Germain, as well as many other Teachers and Guides from the Higher Realms, stand ready to help as your desire to create a better world of freedom prompts you to call upon us. As we have said many times, we will not do it FOR you, but we will most certainly work WITH you, as has always been the case.

What kind of United States (and world) do YOU want to see? What kind of United States (and world) do you see RIGHT NOW?

Look back historically just as far as the deceptions and manipulations of events leading up to your ghastly World Wars, such as the contrived Pearl Harbor atrocity. How do events such as that fit into the grand vision of soul-freedom pictured by your Founding Fathers?

And then, more recently, look closely and honestly at 9/11—that clumsily contrived preamble to your Patriot Act I, your Homeland Security Act, and the Patriot Act II (just this side of martial law), waiting to be imposed upon you—the-people BY YOUR GOVERNMENT, at the earliest appropriate distraction opportunity. Is this what has become of the grand vision of government “BY the people and FOR the people”?! As has been wisely stated long ago and well worth repeating here: “The price of freedom is eternal vigilance.”

I urge you to contemplate what freedom means to you—not in some abstract sense, dear ones, but quite personally. And in answer to that contemplation, may you ACT in wisdom and with conviction in these challenging times of testing, when freedom everywhere upon your world is under heavy attack.

Your world need not be this way. But, as always, what YOU are experiencing is a result of YOUR choices.

Thank you for considering my words. Pardon my bluntness that comes from my passion to help you ones regain a better tomorrow. I am pleased to carry on personal dialog with any who seek my assistance with the clear desire of an open heart.

I am Violinio St. Germain, Master of the Violet Ray of Transformation and Transmutation of the baser into the finer. I leave you now within the Light and Love of Creator’s Divine Plan.

Salu.

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.”

The Prozac Nation & Its "Robot" Leader

Get Ready For The United Soviet States Of America

Editor's note: Longtime readers of this publication might find themselves inclined to conclude more from one of the snapshots Al Martin shares this month than he may intend to convey.

Al's description of Bush at the podium for one of his recent well-orchestrated propaganda sessions paints a picture that some of you more knowledgeable readers might conclude described a Genetic Duplicate or Robotoid—a possibility that would more likely guarantee the outcome be a "perfect" news conference, without embarrassing goofs that White House Press Secretary Ari Fleischer would later have to explain away.

And yet, the subject of Robotoids and Genetic Duplicates has a lot of competition right now in the "far-out" department. We're now a nation riding on such a sea-to-shining-sea of Prozac and Xanax that it's anybody's guess just what surreal image, parading before the public eye, would even get noticed. The fact that the British Medical Journal can, by sheer numbers, pronounce America to be THE Prozac nation, leads one down a path of distorted perception wherein pink elephants floating down the street soon won't raise an eyebrow of interest, much less concern. No wonder American taxpayers don't seem to care as former Soviet Top Brass are hired as consultants to facilitate the enslavement of America.

And that's exactly where the Power Elite want the public to be: in a state of docile stupor. What better conditions could one engineer to facilitate nudging the sheep, step by step, to the slaughterhouse? Whether it's the massive deflation of so many people's retirement accounts—and the collapse of the dreams that went with them—or the arrogant deployment of so many American sons and daughters to Iraq for contrived, selfish reasons, the effect is the same: the slaughtering of the American spirit.

But considering the vigor of recent anti-war protest rallies nationwide (and around the world), it looks like they'll have to deploy that Valium spray Al talked about in our December 2002 issue. An uppity minority of truly patriotic Americans (and world citizens) refuse to buy the baloney and are doing their best to awaken their fellow citizens from that deep hypnotic sleep.

And that is likewise what Al is attempting to do in the following commentaries. For those newer readers who may not be familiar with this crusader, according to his own biographical statement (at his AlMartinRaw.com Internet website), Al is America's foremost whistleblower on government fraud and corruption. A retired U.S. Navy Lt. Commander and former officer in the Office of Naval Intelligence, he has testified before Congress (the Kerry Committee and the Alexander Committee) regarding Iran-Contra. Al Martin is the author of the revealing and witty exposé titled The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider (2001, National Liberty Press; order from Wisdom Books & Press: see information nearby).

Shake-Down Of America, The Prozac Nation (2/24/03)

It's official and it's scientific, too. The British Medical Journal has officially declared America the Prozac Nation.

They report an explosive increase in the use of Prozac—more than a 40% increase in the use of Prozac—since the election of George Bush. And they report how wimpy Americans are and how the psyche of Americans has completely changed.

According to the British Medical Journal, we are now a bunch of confused and depressed people, moping around, looking for a reason not to think about what Bushonomics has done to our IRA and 401k accounts and to our economy.

This combined with the fear of terrorism has turned the American people into a nation of Prozac users and has sapped America of its traditional will. And they directly blame this on why there is so little opposition to the Bush Cabal. The American people have essentially given up.

The reason we don't see more opposition reported in the news is due to the Bushonian control of the media. What they're talking about is the majority of the American people being confused and depressed, and they have given up.

They see their IRA and 401k accounts destroyed. They see their retirement dreams destroyed. There have been millions of jobs lost and millions of people have lost their medical coverage. The cost of medical care has increased by one-third since the "election" of George Bush; and Bush will, of course do nothing to reduce the cost of medical care insofar as the medical industry, including the pharmaceuticals, is the third largest contributor to the Republican Party after oil and defense.

The British Medical Journal also concluded that there is a growing sense of hopelessness in the United States, and that's why Prozac usage has increased so much—because people feel that there's nothing they can do. They believe that the Bush Cabal is now all-powerful, so they feel helpless and hopeless.

Interestingly enough, they tie this directly into the diminishing future expectation component that you see released in the University of Michigan's or the Conference Board's Consumer Confidence Index, which shows a record gap between current expectations and future expectations. Traditionally this gap was plus or minus 3 to 5 percentage points. In other words, people expected economic conditions to either improve or decline by 3 to 5 percentage points in the future. But now, as they pointed out, since 9/11 in particular, wherein the scourge of Bushonomics has become more evident, the average future expectation is now 10 to 15% lower than current expectations, and this is a gap that has never been seen in this series of numbers. And this isn't a new series. This is a series of numbers that was started in the late 1930s, and there has never been such a gap between current and future expectations which, according to them, is directly related to the depression of the people.

Even though there has been a book written called Prozac Nation, this statement by the esteemed and august British Medical Journal is the first authoritative declaration. The United States has now been officially declared a Prozac Nation by a medical body, which is considered the most esteemed in the world, even more esteemed than the New England Journal Of Medicine. The United States has been duly and officially declared to be a Prozac Nation.

Since the election of George Bush, in the United States the use of Prozac has increased more than 40% and the use of hard liquor has increased by 25%. (You can tell it's pretty bad when you see that even cats and dogs and kids have their own form of Prozac now.) However, in Britain in the last 3 years, the use of Prozac and other anti-depressants has remained relatively flat, while there has been a doubling of the consumption of liquor. That is traditionally the way the British handle it. They are, meanwhile, in the grips of the Never-Ending-Pint Syndrome—pints marching to infinity.

This report was very authoritative, describing how different nations are handling what has happened. The British economy continues to decline. British consumer spending and industrial production are down for the 19th straight month. Germany is teetering close to an out-and-out economic depression.

Then there's the way the German people traditionally deal with it. When the German people become depressed, they simply commit suicide. The suicide rate since the election of George Bush has increased 50%, a larger increase than in any other nation. All the major industrial nations have seen dramatic record increases in suicide rates since the election of George Bush. In Germany it has been higher—but it's blamed on the fact that, with Germany and Japan there is a cultural tradition, where they handle depression with suicide. They don't need Prozac.

So now it's not only official but also it's scientific. Bloomberg news had a piece about what's unusual about this economic decline and what separates it from past economic declines.

We began this economic decline with the election of George Bush, and his policies have of course made it much worse. It began at a time when the rest of the world was weak and has continued to weaken.

Britain, Germany, and France have all seen spurts of 3 or 4 months of growth

THE CONSPIRATORS: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider

WHAT IF a criminal cabal, a de facto white-collar crime syndicate, took over the U.S. Government and used its systems and operations for its own profit? According to former government operative and now whistleblower Al Martin, this is exactly what has happened.

For example, at a meeting with General Richard V. Secord, Martin was briefed about Iran-Contra operations and allowed to view voluminous CIA white papers concerning Operation Black Eagle, the code-name for the Bush-Casey-North program involving U.S. Government-sanctioned narcotics trafficking, illicit weapons deals, and wholesale fraud—corporate securities fraud, real estate fraud, banking fraud, and insurance fraud.

Martin has first-hand knowledge of the dirty deals, high-level scams, frauds, and treasonous activities of the U.S. Shadow Government costing taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars—and still growing. This is a story of true conspiracy, an uncensored look at what really goes on in the back rooms of criminal power politics.

during Bushonomics prevailing in the United States, but that growth would be cut short because all the world's economy is so tied to the United States. What separates this economic decline from others is that this time the United States is dragging down the rest of the world with it.

As Bloomberg pointed out, this is a dangerous situation because economic recoveries have usually started in Asia and Europe, and then spread to the United States, and not the other way around. But now Bushonomics is acting like a giant anchor around the neck of the world's economy—from which there is no recovery.

The shakedown of America by our "allies" continues. And then comes the final straw with Turkey demanding $32 billion from the United States so it would agree to allow its territory to be used in the War Against Iraq. The Bush administration offered $26 billion—take it or leave it. The way it was couched, of course, to make it sound more politically palatable to the American people, was $20 billion in loans and $6 billion in direct aid. But, of course, what the Administration failed to say is that for all of the money we have ever "lent" to Turkey in the so-called "loans" (which now exceed $560 billion), the Turks have never paid back a dime of the capital.

As a matter of fact, the United States has consistently and quietly written off Turkish loans in the past—just as they're going to have to write off this $20 billion in "loans" because the Turkish economy is perpetually bankrupt. It has effectively depended on U.S. and European loans almost since the end of the Second World War.

Turkey has not had sufficient net gross domestic product to service its debt since after the Second World War. It has been effectively supported by the rest of the world. This harkens back to late in the Eisenhower Regime when they had to cough up $3 billion in so-called aid to Turkey (which of course was never paid back) in order to get Turkey's agreement to place our Jupiter-class medium-range thermonuclear missiles in Turkey, which Kennedy withdrew as part of the Cuban Missile Crisis Accord. He had to throw Khrushchev a bone. Otherwise Khrushchev could not make the deal. So the deal was that Khrushchev would pull his medium-range missiles out of Cuba, and the United States, in exchange, would pull their medium-range missiles out of Turkey.

Over the course of 3 years, this is what happened. We put them in 3 years earlier and took them out 3 years later—at a cost of $3 billion to the American taxpayer.

But if you add to that the preponderance of the shakedown from the French, the Germans, the British, and the Russians—that we have to guarantee Iraqi foreign debt to those nations, and we have to agree in a post-Hussein regime to use American taxpayers' money to rebuild the Iraqi oil infrastructure, at a cost of about $3.5 billion of the American taxpayers' money, then we have to agree to subordinate the production until all of the Iraqi foreign debts to our allies (including the $13 billion of war reparations to Kuwait which were awarded Kuwait by the World Court in 1992, of which Iraq has never paid a dime)—all of this money has to come out of Iraqi oil production.

We're essentially mortgaging Iraqi oil production—and that's under the assumption that we can return Iraq to producing 3 million barrels a day. We are essentially subordinating Iraqi oil production for 13 years to pay back all these deals made by our "allies" putting the arm on us in exchange for their support.

Furthermore, to sweeten the pot, the "allies" demanded that whatever U.S.-installed interim government was put in Iraq and what final government that turned into (which obviously couldn't survive without U.S. support), would guarantee all existing commercial contracts between the government of Iraq and our allies. So we're forcing whatever Iraqi regime comes in next to honor contracts which it had nothing to do with and will not profit by. All of the remaining $1 trillion/20-year deal is going to come out of U.S. taxpayers' pockets.

Incidentally an Australian research group has estimated that a "short" War Against Iraq is going to cost $1 trillion to the global economy. And that assumes that our allies all back us up 100%—and make a commitment of a quasi-military presence in Iraq. It also makes an assumption that the allies will stand by the post-Hussein regime agreement they've made with the United States to provide aid to a new Iraqi regime.

The Japanese, the French, and the Germans were all part of the $1 trillion Rebuild Afghanistan 20-year program. The U.S. taxpayers are only supposed to come up with about $350 billion or so, but none of the so-called "allies" who have agreed to this deal have come up with a dime—and they won't. And you know that the Bush Administration will never say anything about it because the deal that got sold to the American people got sold for American political consumption—as in: "Don't worry, the whole trillion isn't coming out of our pockets; the allies are kicking in." That's how the Afghanistan aid package got sold to Congress and the American people.

These agreements only exist in George Bush's mouth. Look at what happened during the First Iraqi War, when Saudi Arabia said it would defray all U.S. expenses. Then, when the U.S. submitted a bill for $78 billion to the Saudi government, they never paid a dime. And the Bush Administration, either II or I, never said a word about it. It should piss people off.

Bush consistently defends U.S. military presence in Saudi Arabia and, to a lesser degree, in Egypt as a "stabilizing force". And he has consistently lied to the American people.

Jane's Defense Weekly has asked him this question. It's costing the U.S. taxpayers $7 billion a year to station U.S. troops permanently in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the Arab Emirates, and surrounding areas ostensibly for the protection of Middle Eastern oil. Bush says: "Oh yes, but the Saudi government pays us the $7 billion every year." They don't. They don't pay a dime. And you can't force that information out of the Treasury Department.

The GAO (General Accounting Office) has tried. And the Bush Administrations I and II simply put a "national security" seal on everything. There has never been so many Treasury financial records sealed under "national security" as there have been during Bush I and Bush II Administrations. Everybody laughs about it, because past Administrations have sealed CIA, FBI, and NSA documents for years. There's nothing new about that. But Bushonian malfeasance takes things to a new height, where it becomes necessary to seal Treasury records, Federal Reserve records, and all sorts of financial records that shouldn't really have to be sealed.

And nobody comes forward and asks the question: "Why are Treasury records sealed particularly when it comes to payments from foreign governments who are obligated to make treaty payments?"

Because the payments aren't being made.

It's a shakedown. That's all it is. The first Iraqi campaign was a shakedown, and now the American taxpayer (who has still not paid for all the money spent during Iraq I) is going into more than a $1 TRILLION commitment for Iraq II, on top of a 20-year Afghani commitment, which will cost the American people another TRILLION dollars.

We're all alone. The allies will pay nothing, despite Bushonian lies to the contrary.

And we haven't even finished paying for the Bush I "Iraqi Adventure". This "Iraqi Adventure" ride is rather akin to the Bush Regime taking the taxpayers on a trip to Disney World—at a trillion dollars a ticket.

The way this Bush is going, we've already got Mars mortgaged.

By the time we get him out of office, whoever comes in after him will have to mortgage Pluto to make up for the damage this guy has done. Soon the entire Solar System will be in hock.

Since the accumulated U.S. debt now exceeds the total resources of the entire planet, Bush has to mortgage all the mineral wealth on the Earth's moon and any potential commercial wealth Mars will have in the future. Then, by the time he's done, whoever comes after him will have to mortgage Pluto.

You could mortgage all the ice on Pluto, ship it back and sell it to the Arabs on promissory notes. And never get paid for it. But if there's a Bush around at the time, he'll certainly hypothecate the worthless Saudi Ice Promissory Notes to some group of hapless banks.

America: A De Facto One-Party State
(3/3/03)

During the annual governors' conference in Washington, Bush gave a 15-minute pep talk to the governors. After the event, the 27 Democratic governors held a separate press conference bitterly complaining about the manipulation of the press conference.

When they got there, the governors were given a list of what questions they could ask the President. They were told that the President would NOT tolerate ANY criticism of Bushonomics or the Bushonian War on Terrorism/Iraq. If they asked questions like that, not only would the questions not be answered, but State Security would remove them from the room. These are the governors of the states which are being killed by Bushonomics.

Then the Democratic governors were told that this would reflect badly on any increase in their revenue. Bush said that "The most extraordinary piece of true history in recent years."

David Icke talks with the Zulu Shaman Credo Mutwa

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now!"

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli") has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

3-Tape Set: over 6 hours $59.95 (+S/H)

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

there would be a 9% increase in federal revenue sharing for the states. Then Bush looks around the room and says: "Well, I see many of my Republican friends here who will enjoy the preponderance of that increase."

This fits into a bigger pattern.

Also Roll Call broke a new coming scandal in Congress about Republican representative Mike Oxley, who is the chairman of the House's financial services regulation committee. Part of the SEC reform package is named after him.

Oxley evidently pressured one of the nation's largest mutual fund houses to replace their Democratic lobbyist with a Republican. He said that the securities industry coming before his committee would receive better treatment, provided they only have Republican lobbyists. The Democrats want to file an ethics charge against Oxley.

The ultimate Bushonian Cabalist in Congress, arch-right-wing nut and religious-right sympathizer Tom DeLay, had publicly said that in doing this they would break the truce that has existed between Republicans and Democrats wherein neither side would file ethics charges against the other.

In fact, if Nancy Pelosi, as minority leader, filed any charges against Oxley, the Republicans would consider this "an act of war" and they would file ethics charges against every Democrat in Congress.

He said that we had an agreement and it's time for the Democrats to understand that we Republicans are in control and we will not tolerate any ethical violation charges being lodged against Republicans by Democrats—and from now on we are in control. And he said that it's high time for the Democrats to understand that they are "a party in decline" and they are becoming increasingly irrelevant.

Watch out for the Purple Alert, the highest grade of "natural disaster" alert. Not to be confused with the "terrorist" alert. You will be instructed to go and buy more cans of Spam, more batteries, and more battery-powered radios and flashlights, and candles. This will again boost retail spending because we have to stock-up on more supplies.

In a recent Washington Post article, the headline read: Many Say Bush Is Greater Threat Than Saddam.

The article says: "The messages from U.S. embassies around the globe have become urgent and disturbing. Many people in the world increasingly think President Bush is a greater threat to world peace than Iraqi president Saddam Hussein."

Public opinion polls throughout Western Europe, Russia, and Japan uniformly agree that Bush is the greater threat to world peace and world economic stability.

And in another Washington Post piece, the headline says: FBI Warns Lone Extremists Represent Threat (evidently not to be confused with "lone nuts").

The article says: "Lone extremists unconnected with al-Qaeda may become so enraged by world events, including a possible U.S. invasion of Iraq, that they could launch terrorist attacks against U.S. targets while acting alone or in small groups."

In other words, they could try to use a fake bomb in the heel of their shoes and end up burning their feet à la Richard Reid. But this doesn't mean that domestic "patriot" types are implicated.

A lone terrorist, acting alone, would mean that he would have the gas money to get to his target. And we know that all the domestic militia, unless they pooled all their beer money together, would not even have enough money to get their pickup trucks to their "target".

Also in his speech, Deputy Reichsfuehrer Ashcroft said that the United States government would move to squash the anti-abortion movement in the United States. But there is no reference to "domestic terrorists" because they know all the militia guys have been Budsterized—i.e., made Broke, Useless, and Depressed by Bushonomics.

"Lone extremists" does not mean domestic terrorists; it means that they have enough gas money to get to their target.

In this way Bushonomics has solved the problem of "domestic terrorism". Everybody's equal when everybody's Budsterized. Anybody who would potentially challenge Bushonian power has been effectively Budsterized.

Ashcroft also just came out with this big announcement about their sting of Internet drug paraphernalia websites. They spent $16 million of the American taxpayers' money and they arrested 55 people for drug paraphernalia, bongs, and roach clips.

Also, there is a new category of what is now considered drug paraphernalia.

They seized a quantity of empty lipstick containers and empty office highlighter pens because they could be used for the transportation of narcotics. From now on, Ashcroft said that lipstick tubes and empty highlighters will be put on the terrorist paraphernalia restriction list.

Women of America: beware! And get this: He doesn't say women; he says "housewives of America" you're not supposed to throw out your empty lipstick containers in the trash, lest some would-be cokehead or terrorist could find it and use it as a bomb, or for the transportation of narcotics. Instead you're supposed to turn them in to your representative of the local Neighborhood Watch Association.

The point of it is increasing state control. You start out with these little things, and get people used to it, before you hit them with the big things. You can bet that Franz Kafka is smiling in his grave.

9/11 is becoming the Bushonian Holy Grail. The Bush Administration has manipulated public opinion even on a financial level, where it literally becomes unpatriotic not to use 9/11 as an excuse. According to them, everything started then. That's when the economic downturn started. That's when the deficit spending started.

The Bushonian Cabal is building a mystique around 9/11. When the stock market eventually collapses, they'll probably have a bronze plaque that says "victim of 9/11".

Remember: 9/11 is the Bushonian Excuse That Lasts Forever.

The Bushonian plan to turn the United States into a de facto One Party State continues. The concept of privatization of government, which Bush is pushing, fits into this plan, and it has already begun with their plans for the privatization of 850,000 federal civil servants. It is being sold to the American people as a cost-cutting agenda, despite the fact that the privatization of anything in this nation has ultimately cost the people more money.

You may remember how the privatization of prisons got sold in the 1980s during the Reagan-Bush Regime. Now we know that this so-called "privatization" cost the American taxpayers more money than ever. A lot of them were packaged up into investment deals like Correction Corp of America, whose board of directors included many Republican Scamscateers. This was done during the REITS (Real Estate Investment Trusts) Tax Scam Era.

In terms of saving the American taxpayer money, privatization in this country has never worked. The reason why it has never worked is that there have always been political agendas behind privatization. We don't privatize an industry, or federal employees, or the military with the objective of saving money. It is done for a political motive to consolidate power and control.

This effort by the Bush Administration to dramatically expand privatization of federal government agency functions should be seen for what it is.

If one looks at the corporations, both privately held and publicly traded, the contracts to manage these privatized federal employees, agencies, bureaus, you find the same cast of characters. You look at the boards of directors and it looks like the Bushonian Cabal. Henry Kissinger sits on many boards. James Baker, Brent Scowcroft, Cappy Weinberger, Barry McCaffrey—these are literally the Who's Who of the Bushonian Cabal that control the corporations which are managing these private contracts with the government—without governmental interference.

Some liberal public-interest group should challenge these privatization contracts before the Supreme Court, and say that they are an illegal effort to consolidate and maintain non-elected power because they are specifically designed to increase the power of the Republican Party, and more specifically the Bushonian Cabal, for that control to be maintained, even when said Party and said Cabal is not in public office and is not answerable to the people.

That is inherently the problem, constitutionally speaking, with what Bush is doing—turning the United States into a de facto One Party State. The Republicans will have control, even when they're out of power and not in office; but they will not be answerable to the people.

Also this will limit the choices of any future opposing Administration. This is the same thing Bush is doing with these multi-trillion-dollar tax cuts for the Republican Rich, as well as the acceleration and elimination of estate tax, which would mainly benefit the Republican Rich.

Instead of using presidential authority, he's getting congressional votes for it, and then Bush is augmenting that vote with binding presidential directives. This is a typical Bushonian scheme. In other words, he is making it almost impossible for anyone who succeeds him to undo that which is causing tremendous deficits, which Bushonomics is creating. He is in effect forcing a continuation of Bushonomics—even when he is not in power.

Why is the Bushonian Cabal attempting to turn the United States into a de facto One Party State to maintain control even when they are not in office?

It is because it will be necessary to control the legacy of the Bushonian Cabal and to continue to make the Republican Party viable, so the Great Lie can be maintained.

The Republican Party can then continue to control the political and legal liability created by their own policy, so it will never occur to the American people what Bushonomics has done to the nation.

In the last analysis, this control is a self-defense mechanism. Remember what George Bush Senior once said about "Iran Contra". It was very very telling.

Bush told [longtime Washington-based journalist] Sarah McClendon: "If the American people ever knew what we had done, we would be chased down the streets and lynched."

That comment he made in 1992 goes to the very heart of the matter, i.e., the Bushonian Cabal—which dominates (and is in fact) the Republican Party for all intents and purposes—must continue to exert sufficient power to maintain the long-term cover-up of what it has done to the nation, when the people begin to feel the effects of what they have done: When the economy begins to collapse in earnest. When grocery stores are only half-full. When petrol and fresh water are rationed. When the long-term results of Bushonomics start to smack the American people in the face, they're going to look for scapegoats.

They'll ask: "How the hell did this happen?"

And as long as the Bushonian Cabal still controls the media, they're still in office, and they still have the power to maintain a cover-up, they will always (as they have done before) successfully blame someone else for what they have done.

And people will believe it because there are enough naïve my-country-right-or-wrong flag-waving Republicans who will always be with us.

You can kick them, beat them, destroy their retirement accounts, and starve them—and, by God, every time you do that, they'll put up another American flag, made in China, on the back of their Cadillac. Even if they have to be pushing the Cadillac down the street because there isn't any gas. That's what they will do. Before they ever blame a Republican.

It's high time the Americans people wake up and understand what the Bushonian Cabal is all about and what its long-term agendas are. The fact is that the 9/11 incident created an environment wherein the Homeland Security Act could be initiated with the wholesale gutting of the civil rights and liberties of the American people.

The USA Patriot Act is really a massive transfer of the rights of the people back to government. If you put it in those terms, it makes it more understandable why the Bushonian Cabal pushed for it so hard.

If you strip the American people of their rights and liberties, their ability to dissent, their ability to be informed (honestly, rather than by a Republican-controlled media), it intensifies the control of the Big Lie—and that's what the Homeland Security Act and the USA Patriot Act are all about in a long-term context. This is the longer-term agenda, which will outlast any so-called "terrorist" organization.

It's amazing how many Old Naïve Right-Wingers who call-in to radio shows seem to believe that this is like World War II again. I've heard this so many times. They say that after the war was over, the rights and liberties that were taken away were restored.

And I say: You're dreaming!

The rights and liberties taken away under the USA Patriot Act (and ensuing legislation yet to come) will never be given back to you-the-people. Why? Because the crisis will never end. If it begins to end, the Bushonian Regime will start a new crisis.

This follows the plot line of Orwell's 1984, wherein the never-ending wars go on and on, and the constant drumbeat of new crises continues day after day. It's almost like they're using 1984 as a textbook.

Why do you think the book 1984 has become so vilified by the right? Why do you think it has been removed from high school libraries in the United States? A librarian called-in to a talk show I was doing and said she has removed the book under the recommendation of the Office of Homeland Security because the book promotes "distrust" in government and is therefore seditious.

So the Bushonian Regime is following the book 1984 as a template, yet trying to deny access to the book by saying that it promotes distrust in government—the very same government that is using the book as a guideline to continuously increase governmental control at the expense of the people.

In times of crisis, when you start using words like "sedition" and "treason"—the people will believe it.

Before World War II, Justice Louis Brandeis was vehemently attacked in the 1930s by the Republican establishment for his anti-Hitler views, even though Roosevelt was in office. He wrote articles warning about the Hitler Regime and the dangers of fascism. He was virtually labeled a communist. They called him a pinko Jew and a communist because he was trying to warn the American people of the dangers of fascism and Hitlerism. Not only Brandeis, but Ezra Pound was also vilified earlier.

Nostradamus: Predictions Of World War III

After the 9/11/01 disaster at the World Trade Center, there is a renewed interest in what the great seer Nostradamus had to say. This book is a serious study of his predictions, based upon the author's research into the original manuscripts. His work details the struggle that is going on in the Middle East and the ongoing conflict between the Christian world and the Islamic world. Jack Manuelian has combed through the prophecies of more modern seers, pointing out how they may agree with what Nostradamus had to say. He offers hope for mankind, but admits that it is troubled times we live in. What will be the outcome? Read the book and decide for yourself.

Then, during the 1950s, there was Alger Hiss who was put down forever. At the same time, the Republican establishment, which put him down for being pro-communist, is the same Republican business and industry community which did business with the Soviet Empire through the coldest days of the Cold War through third party states or agents.

Look at how many corporations Armand Hammer represented on his trips to Moscow. He not only represented Amerasia Hess and Occidental Petroleum, he represented Procter and Gamble, General Mills, and all sorts of other companies. It was basically a one-way trade in which we purchased from them. We basically kept the Soviet Union afloat. During the darkest days of Stalin and Khrushchev, it was U.S. business and industrial money which kept the Soviet Union afloat.

The Soviet Union never generated sufficient internal liquidity to support its own economy, and it should be remembered that communism itself was a creature of capitalism.

The Republican Party has always been the Supreme Party of the Forked Tongue. They say they're anti-communist and they're going to defeat the Evil Empire—because that sells well domestically.

But the other side of the tongue is, let's do business surreptitiously with the Soviet Union, not only to enrich ourselves and make a profit, but also to give the Soviet Union sufficient hard-dollar capital to survive—because the longer they survive, the more our other side of the tongue can use them as an excuse and as an "enemy".

As General Richard Secord used to say: "Son, you can't make money without a bogeyman." And that's why the Bushonian Regime is hell-bent on turning China into the bogeyman of the 21st Century. By 2020, China will be a military and economic superpower—thanks to the United States.

Remember we are allowing China to run a multi-billion-a-month trade surplus with the United States, which China then plows back into its military. It is the American consumer who is arming China.

In about twenty years, when China holds a celebration in Tiananmen Square on its entry into the world of superpowers, both economically and militarily, they should take down the picture of Mao and put up a picture of George Bush. Both George Bush Senior and George Bush Junior. The entire Bush family—including Neil, Jeb, Prescott. All of them. These are the new gods. No more Mao.

And instead of Mao's Little Red Book, they'll have Bush's "Little Red Book". Mao's Little Red Book spouted political philosophy. Bush's "Little Red Book" is full of red ink.

Bush, Propaganda Minister O'Reilly, The P-Word, And The Weiner Nation (3/10/03)

In the latest press conference, Bush looked like a wind-up talking corpse.

When he came onto the podium in the East Room, there was so much makeup on his face that he looked like Casper the Ghost. It was definitely too much pancake. They were trying to hide the red blotchiness in his upper cheekbones, which is a telltale sign that appears when he lies. But they put it on so thick it made him look artificial and you could actually see the ridges of it in his upper cheekbones. And his demeanor—he was so calm, artificially calm, and he kept moving his head around. He looked just like my neighbor after he takes one of his Xanax tablets.

Bush had this artificial calmness and he spoke in a monotone. He didn't use his hands the way he normally does.

When a reporter got up and asked him a question, Bush would look at the reporter and then his head started moving around in this mechanical back-and-forth motion, side to side. His eyes looked doozy and glazed over. It was the strangest thing, but it's typical.

They must have had this guy on Prozac because his demeanor, his physical appearance, the way he spoke, the way he moved—all were exactly the way my neighbor acts after he's taken his medication.

There were reporters there too, all pro-Bush reporters. And you could tell the questions were rehearsed because Ari Fleischer, the press secretary, was sitting in the front row. They should have had him off camera—but there he was, holding onto a clipboard. Every time one of the reporters asked a question, Ari would look at the clipboard and use his finger to follow what they were saying to make sure they were using the approved question line.

Bush spoke very very slowly through the whole thing, dragging out every word. He spoke so mechanically and slowly it took forever. They must have used the new Valium gas system in the White House because the reporters were exactly the same way. They would stand up s-l-o-w-l-y and ask the questions s-l-o-w-l-y. It was very surreal. They enunciated every word and spoke s-l-o-w-l-y and even sat down s-l-o-w-l-y.

Bush looked like one of those late 19th Century French wind-up mechanical automatons with a painted white face. The funniest part was at the end, when he's walking off the podium, walking down the East Wing, and you see his back. They always show that at the end of the conference. All of a sudden you hear this electronic noise and then you hear all this clapping. They played a canned clapping tape.

They showed the reporters getting up and milling around, and they were the only ones there. But it was so artificial and so obvious that it was a canned clap tape. Even the tone of the room was different, so you could tell. It sounded like a bunch of people clapping inside of a steel drum.

Then they showed Bush walking down the hallway and he goes to this door on the left and tries the knob, and it's locked. He looks around and walks across the hall to the other door, and it's open. He looks up at the camera and gives an "Ah ha!" look.

At the same time, the Asian markets were trading very quietly and Bloomberg News was flashing to different trading floors around the world which were open—Tokyo, Hong Kong, and Sydney. It was a riot—particularly the Japanese on the floor of the Nikkei; they're glued to this enormous TV screen, and then, every few minutes, they'd turn and talk to each other and then start laughing like hell. They were actually laughing at him. Then, when it concluded, the Nikkei immediately dropped 100 points, Sydney dropped 50, and Hangseng dropped 50.

The only one who looked alert was Ari Fleischer, and the problem is that although they powdered up Bush something fierce, they didn't do anything to Ari's head. They should have put more powder on the top of his head, because every time he moved his head around it created a flash and glare off the top of his head. It even seemed to annoy Bush a little bit. He'd give him this look like: "Why don't you turn your head down 50 watts?!"

Then there was the story of the lawyer called Stephen Downs who was arrested for wearing a T-shirt in an Albany, New York mall. The T-shirt read: "Give peace a chance" on one side, and "Peace on Earth" on the other side.

So now you can get arrested for using the "P" word.

The "P" word has been declared to be "seditious". By order of Deputy Reichsfuehrer Ashcroft, anyone caught wearing a T-shirt with the "P" word shall be considered in violation of State Sedition Laws. You can't have these people walking around using the seditious "P" word.

You just watch—Rush Limbaugh will now be railing not only against "tree huggers" and "feminazis", but also those who wear "Peace on Earth" T-shirts. He'll call them "the 'P' word people".

And then there's the other right-wing nutcase called Michael Savage, whose program should be called The Weiner Nation. That's his real name, Michael Weiner; it's not Michael Savage.

But that's probably why he changed his name. His producers probably decided that "Weiner Nation" wasn't the kind of image they want to portray. After all, how could you call a right-wing nut show The Weiner Nation? And now MSNBC is giving him a TV show, after they got rid of Donahue.

So here's the recap: The scourge of Bushonomics continues and the "P" word (Peace) is declared seditious in the Weiner Nation.

Meanwhile, Goebbels wanna be Bill O'Reilly, of the "All-Spin Zone", has publicly declared that anyone who opposes Bush Cabal policies is not only "un-American" but will be considered by him to be an "enemy of the state". In other words, it looks like O'Reilly is actively seeking the post of "Propaganda Minister" in the Bush Administration.

[Editor's note: Goebbels' official title in the Nazi hierarchy (1933) was Head of the Ministry of Public Enlightenment and Propaganda. Watch for that office to reappear in the Bush Administration one of these days!]

There's a little-known channel on TV called the Public Legal Issue Forum which explained what justification the Bushonian Cabal was using for this incident in Albany and the Michigan high schooler who was sent home for wearing a T-shirt which read "International Terrorist" with a picture of Bush on it.

They're getting away with it by using the now reinstituted Seditious Publications Act. I always thought that it was restricted to books, magazines, and periodicals, but they're using this Act (which they have the authority to do under the Office of Homeland Security and under the USA Patriot Act) and saying that anybody who wears a T-shirt or carries a placard is "publishing" and these acts constitute "publishing" a picture, a photograph, or printed statements. In other words, this falls under the Seditious Publications Act, which is meant to stop the dissemination of any materials deemed to be hostile to the security of the state. "Publication" then includes anything printed on a T-shirt or a placard or a poster.

Then they showed several clips from Deputy Reichsfuehrer Ashcroft when he spoke a couple weeks ago (and people didn't know what he was talking about), in which the State of Maine education superintendent leaked out a letter he received from the Office of State Security regarding high schoolers. Ashcroft said that they are acting to crack down (and he didn't really explain what he meant) but now we're getting a pretty good idea.

The lawyer on the show said that usually under the Seditious Publications Act the very reinstitution of the Act requires consent of Congress and judicial review by the Supreme Court. Of course, under the USA Patriot Act and the vast expansion of the 1947 War Powers Act, as it relates to the expansion of presidential powers and the passage of the emergency extension of the Law Enforcement Powers Act, the president has the right (now that a state of national emergency has been declared) to simply, by edict, reinstitute the Seditious Publications Act.

Furthermore they craftily worded this in the USA Patriot Act, so that they stripped all civil courts of their jurisdiction to hear cases involving state security; but there still must be a judicial review process. That's why the Supreme National Security Court was created, separate and distinct from the existing National Security Court. Then there's the Supreme National Security Council, which is separate and distinct from the National Security Council. The president chairs both the Supreme National Security Court and the Supreme National Security Council. He has sole authority.

The Bush Administration is relying on the decision to dust off the Seditious Publications Act and to expand the original intent of the law to some degree. As it was pointed out before, there was court precedent that publishing any material or placards being held by a citizen does constitute publishing, as it relates to sedition.

"Art" was not brought under the sedition acts until after 1950. Joe McCarthy pushed for it and pushed Estes Kefauver into it. Kefauver was chairman of many committees in Congress and also oversaw the distribution of money for the arts and humanities. They were able to use that law, stating that since the government was paying for it, they should be able to decide what kind of art was "seditious".

Also, just before the war, the Roosevelt Administration attempted to pressure Hollywood away from certain movies that were considered pro-German, but they didn't invoke any law at the time. Then, in the 1950s, they went after several movies that Billy Wilder and John Huston wanted to make, and they shut them down because they were declared "disloyal".

The catch in expanding the meaning of the Seditious Publications Act is that it has been reviewed by a court, by judicial authority, namely the Supreme National Security Court, which the president chairs and controls. The difference between them is that none of its proceedings, findings, or rulings are made public. Everything it does is considered a state secret. The president has these meetings, which he chairs, once a month.

The minute he invokes "State Security", the president can effectively create any law he wants to create. There are no boundaries now. They're not only saying that dissent against Bushonomics or the Bushonian War on Terrorism/Iraq will no longer be tolerated, but anything that is published or transmits the truth about any member of the Bushonian Cabal will also fall under state security clauses.

And, as this lawyer pointed out, they are technically correct under the National Security Act because telling the truth about the Bushonian Cabal could in fact be destabilizing to the government. If everybody knew what Bush had done, there would be a loss of confidence in the Bush Administration.

Who knows what would happen? They are technically correct. It is dangerous to the security of the state and domestic tranquility of the people to reveal the truth.

Now not only do they have the great power of controlling the biggest debtor nation on Earth, i.e. the United States, but it also shows the power of following the Big Lie Principle. You cannot uncover or attempt to reveal the Big Lie because to do so would in itself constitute a destabilizing act.

And that leads us to the book The Conspirators. There are only about 2500 copies left, and when those are gone, no more are going to be printed because, given the direction that the Bush Administration is proceeding in, it won't be long before The Conspirators will be verboten. People love the idea of buying a book that will be declared seditious and then hide it in their house. It makes them feel like urban information guerillas. It could be like the movie Fahrenheit 451.

And then there are the increasingly obvious market rumors, manipulations, and leaks. You see how carefully the Badministration has manipulated the price of oil to keep it artificially high and to keep the war premium built in it. And then you see how they orchestrate the release of these leaks, most recently the supposed capture of the alleged sons of bin Laden, which spiked the market. Then these rumors are not verified one way or the other until the market closes, which is what happened on Friday, March 7.

They do it to support the stock market and they have been able to do it successfully. If you look at where the U.S. markets are compared to the European and Asian markets, we should be 1000 Dow points lower because they have gone down proportionately that much. It's how the Bush Administration has constantly been able to support the market through a carefully orchestrated campaign of leaks, rumors which lead to geopolitical jitters, then denials, and then "we don't know", and then "no confirmation".

They did it before on February 13. They seem to do it every time we get a really bad economic number, like March 7, particularly the monthly unemployment number, which is considered the king of monthly economic statistics. It was expected to show a payroll gain of 10,000, but it came out at minus 308,000. The market immediately called down 150 to 200 points. Panic selling conditions were declared on the floor.

At 9:30 a.m., when the market opened, the Bush Administration let the first half hour go by. They let the market trade down and then they suck in all the short sellers. Then, exactly at 10 o'clock, they announce that: "Two of Osama bin Laden's sons have been captured." This was supposedly according to a Pakistani general. Then when CNN finally tracked this guy down, he says he didn't know anything about it and he says that he didn't release any rumors or reports.

And it's interesting how they're able to do this. It makes you wonder how many guys they're hiring to do this because they have a superb coordination staff of how to support the market and how to support the oil prices through carefully crafted leaks, rumors, and denials.

This must mean that they took the advice of AlMartinRaw.Com and actually instituted an LCB (Lie Coordination Bureau). They must have taken our suggestion [see the November 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM for this great column] and gotten it to work right, so at least we can say that they're not totally incompetent.

How deep does this conspiracy go to maintain unwarranted market bullishness?

At 11 p.m. CNN is running the wrong numbers for the S&P futures—that morning's pre-market opening numbers, yet saying that these are the futures prices for Monday, when it's not. It makes the market appear higher than it actually is. I called CNN on their 800 toll-free number, where you're supposed to tell them they made mistake. And they hung up on me.

The Bushonomics Market Conspiracy must be maintained—even though it's transparently obvious they don't care.

Get Ready For The USSA (The United Soviet States Of America) (3/17/03)

You will be happy to learn that the former head of the KGB (the secret police of the former Soviet Union), General Yevgeni Primakov, has been hired as a consultant by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. Do you think he will share his expertise in "security" to prepare U.S. citizens for domestic internal passports under the pretense of fighting the never-ending "War on Terrorism"?

CAPPS II is the name of the new program, which is technically under the auspices of the U.S. Department of Transportation, but that's only technical, and the only reason they did that was to use the Transportation Department's budget to buy the computer hardware and software they need.

The way it works is, you give them your credit card and they slide it thorough like you would in a store, and then they hit a button and the monitor reads: CAPPS II, SS CTF. The SS CTF evidently stands for State Security Citizen Threat File.

But it has nothing to do with the Department of Transportation. It goes directly to a division which has been established between the FBI, the Department of Homeland Security, and the CIA, and several other federal agencies. This is a new division, referred to as the Office of Internal Security, which is coordinating the effort to establish "citizen threat files" on every U.S. citizen. It will be a huge database including credit files, medical files, political and religious affiliations, military history, attendance at anti-government rallies, etc.

The newsclip didn't point out what information is being accessed. The only thing they'll tell you is that they're going to access your credit history; but like the guy giving the interview said, they will be accessing A WHOLE LOT MORE. They just don't tell you what it is.

When the Department of Homeland Security was asked about it, they wouldn't say, but replied that it would defeat the purpose if we told you what it was we were looking for.

No announcement will be made to the public about what information exactly is being accessed, or exactly how much information or what type of information is going to be included in each citizen's security threat file.

What I liked about this segment is that they interviewed General Yevgeni Primakov, who is now a consultant to the Department of Homeland Security along with General Alexander Karpov.

Primakov was laughing about it because he's getting paid a big fee to do it. He doesn't care, of course. Primakov speaks beautiful English, as you would expect a former head of the KGB to do.

When he was asked what is this CAPPS II program really about—because obviously even "terrorists" could have credit ratings—Primakov said that this is one of the steps now being employed, along with NICA and new identity upgrade features which are coming to your driver's license. It is being used to get the people used to new types of documentation and carrying new types of identity cards, pursuant to the United States instituting a formal policy of internal passports. And he actually used the words "internal passports".

It's like he said, and he was pretty knowledgeable. When the NICA (National Identity Card Act) gets passed, the Posse Comitatus Act gets overturned, a few other pieces of legislation yet to be proffered get passed, the White House will have more control over the American people than the Kremlin had over the Russian people when Stalin was alive. He said that—and then he laughed.

What Primakov finds funny are what he calls these "right-wing flag wavers" that were so anti-communist and now they're supporting a state policy of internal passports.

The irony is deafening.

Old right-wing farts: Turn up your hearing aids for the irony is deafening.

Primakov continued by saying that he had been hired as a consultant, and he was consulting on other "security" matters, an ongoing policy in various agencies of government (some of these offices haven't even been created yet) to consistently narrow the rights of the American people and to expand the power of government. He professed not to know what the reason for all this was, other than he admitted that: "It doesn't have much to do with 'fighting terrorism'."

In other words, it's funny that we need a commie to come over here and tell people the truth. And remember: it's not just any commie, it's the former head of the KGB, who is being paid with taxpayers' money from all the naïve flag-wavers out there.

If you think about it—how ironic this whole thing is. And it's not only Primakov, who was, by the way, the last general of the KGB, before the KGB was changed to the Russian Federal Security Service (RFSS).

Look who else was hired: There's General Primakov. Then there's General Karpov, former KGB station chief of their Washington station, at their embassy, and the first director of the RFSS.

You could call this the "Sovietization of America".

Primakov said he can't wait to get on the payroll. (He called it the "pay corps"—referring to the Heritage Foundation, the PNAC, and all the other right-wing foundations in the United States.) He can't get over how many ex-KGB generals and colonels still want to come over to the United States and become consultants to get on the pay corps.

It has been reported that Nikita Khrushchev Junior works for the Heritage Foundation. Another right-wing foundation has Elena Stalin. The old Soviet brand names are all coming to Washington to get on the gravy train and teach the Bush Administration how to further restrict the rights of the American people.

And Primakov is waiting for the USSA—the United Soviet States of America. It'll probably make him feel right at home. ☺

"We can't be so fixated on our desire to preserve the rights of ordinary Americans."

Michael Moore Triumphs At Academy Awards

Editor's note: With all the serious news we need to share with you, it's always nice when we can balance that with information which, while thoughtful in its own right, will also tickle your funny bone and give you something wonderful to cheer.

The following could have been part of the News Desk, since we've therein followed Michael Moore's successful assaults on phony government and corporations for a long time. But the recent 3/23/03 Academy Awards ceremony provided a whole new territory which Michael has taken by storm.

If Michael Moore isn't the reincarnation of Mark Twain, then there must have been a "twin flame" somewhere out in the universe who, out of compassion for our plight, decided to come and help us out here on planet Earth at this absurd time of madmen running the world.

Below are three stories about Michael's recent exploits that you may have missed if you were depending on the controlled print and broadcast media for an account of what happened. They tried their best to downplay Michael's standing ovation and winning of the Best Documentary Oscar.

This first story is Michael's own reflections written on 3/27/03—a few days after the Academy Awards ceremony in Hollywood, conducted this year under the tightest security ever. This is from Michael's wonderful down-to-Earth www.michaelmoore.com website:

I'd Like To Thank The Vatican . . .

A word of advice to future Oscar winners: Don't begin Oscar day by going to church.

That is where I found myself this past Sunday morning, at the Church of the Good Shepherd on Santa Monica Boulevard, at Mass with my sister and my dad. My problem with the Catholic Mass is that sometimes I find my mind wandering after I hear something the priest says, and I start thinking all these crazy thoughts like how it is wrong to kill people and that you are not allowed to use violence upon another human being unless it is in true self-defense.

The pope even came right out and said it: This war in Iraq is not a just war and, thus, it is a sin.

Those thoughts were with me the rest of the day, from the moment I left the church and passed by the homeless begging for change (one in six American children living in poverty is another form of violence), to the streets around the Kodak Theater where antiwar protesters were being arrested as I drove by in my studio-sponsored limo.

I had not planned on winning an Academy Award for Bowling For Columbine (no documentary that was a big box-office success had won since Woodstock), and so I had no speech prepared. I'm not much of a speech-preparer anyway, and besides, I had already received awards in the days leading up to the Oscars and used the same acceptance remarks.

I spoke of the need for nonfiction films when we live in such fictitious times.

We have a fictitious president who was elected with fictitious election results. (If you still believe that 3,000 elderly Jewish Americans—many of them Holocaust survivors—voted for Pat Buchanan in West Palm Beach in 2000, then you are a true devotee to the beauty of fiction!)

He is now conducting a war for a fictitious reason (the claim that Saddam Hussein has stockpiles of weapons of mass destruction when in fact we are there to get the world's second-largest supply of oil).

Whether it is a tax cut [for the wealthy] that is passed off as a gift to the middle class, or a desire to drill holes in the wilds of Alaska, we are continually bombarded with one fictitious story after another from the Bush White House.

And that is why it is important that filmmakers make nonfiction, so that all the little lies can be exposed and the public informed. An uninformed public in a democracy is a sure-fire way to end up with little or no democracy at all.

That is what I have been saying for some time. Millions of Americans seem to agree.

My book Stupid White Men still sits at No. 1 on the bestseller list. (It's been on that list now for 53 weeks and is the largest-selling nonfiction book of the year).

Bowling For Columbine has broken all box-office records for a documentary.

My website is now getting up to 20 million hits a day (more than the White House's site).

My opinions about the state of the nation are neither unknown nor on the fringe, but rather they exist with mainstream majority opinion. The majority of Americans, according to polls, want stronger environmental laws, support Roe vs. Wade, and did not want to go into this war without the backing of the United Nations and all of our allies.

That is where the country is at. It's liberal, it's for peace, and it is only tacitly in support of its leader because that is what you are supposed to do when you are at war and you want your kids to come back from Iraq alive.

In the commercial break before the Best Documentary Oscar was to be announced, I suddenly thought that maybe this community of film people was also part of that American majority and just might have voted for my film, which, in part, takes on the Bush Administration for manipulating the public with fear so it can conduct its acts of aggression against the Third World. I leaned over to my fellow nominees and told them that, should I win, I was going to say something about President Bush and the war, and would they like to join me up on the stage? I told them that I felt like I'd already had my moment with the success of the film and that I would love for them to share the stage with me so they could have their moment too. (They had all made exceptional films and I wanted the public to see these filmmakers and hopefully go see their films.)

They all agreed.

Moments later, Diane Lane opened the envelope and announced the winner: Bowling For Columbine. The entire main floor rose to its feet for a standing ovation. I was immeasurably moved and humbled as I motioned for the other nominees to join my wife (the film's producer) and me up on the stage.

I then said what I had been saying all week at those other awards ceremonies. I guess a few other people had heard me say those things too, because before I had finished my first sentence about the fictitious president, a couple of men (some reported it was "stagehands" just to the left of me) near a microphone started some loud yelling. Then a group in the upper balcony joined in.

What was so confusing to me, as I continued my remarks, was that I could hear this noise, but looking out on the main floor, I didn't see a single person booing. But then the majority in the balcony—who were in support of my remarks—started booing the boopers.

It all turned into one humungous cacophony of yells and cheers and jeers. And all I'm thinking is: "Hey, I put on a tux for this?"

I tried to get out my last line ("Any time you've got both the pope and the Dixie Chicks against you, you're not long for the White House.") and the orchestra struck up its tune to end the melee. (A few orchestra members came up to me later and apologized, saying they had wanted to hear what I had to say.) I had gone 55 seconds, 10 more than allowed.

Was it appropriate? To me, the inappropriate thing would have been to say nothing at all or to thank my agent, my lawyer, and the designer who dressed me—Sears Roebuck.

I made a movie about the American desire to use violence, both at home and around the world. My remarks were in keeping with exactly what my film was about. If I had made a movie about birds or insects, I would have talked about birds or insects. I made a movie about guns and Americans' tradition of using them against the world and each other.

And, as I walked up to the stage, I was still thinking about the lessons that morning at Mass. About how silence, when you observe wrongs being committed, is the same as committing those wrongs yourself. And so I followed my conscience and my heart.

On the way back home to Flint, Michigan, the day after the Oscars, two flight attendants told me how they had gotten stuck overnight in Flint with no flight—and wound up earning only $30 for the day because they are paid by the hour.

They said they were telling me this in the hope that I would tell others. Because they, and the millions like them, have no voice. They don't get to be commentators on cable news like the bevy of retired generals we've been watching all week. (Can we please demand that the U.S. military remove its troops from ABC/CBS/NBC/CNN/MSNBC/Fox?) They don't get to make movies or talk to a billion people on Oscar night. They are the American majority who are being asked to send their sons and daughters over to Iraq to possibly die so Bush's buddies can have the oil.

Who will speak for them if I don't? That's what I do, or try to do, every day of my life, and March 23, 2003—though it was one of the greatest days of my life and an honor I will long cherish—was no different.

Except I made the mistake of beginning it in a church.

And Michael was definitely not alone in following his heart and conscience at the Oscars. Here's a 3/24/03 (day after the Academy Awards ceremony) honestly written report on that subject from the www.inthesetimes.com website by Joel Bleifuss. Joel is the editor of In These Times, where he has worked as a investigative reporter, columnist, and editor since 1986. SPECTRUM readers will appreciate that Bleifuss has had more stories on Project Censored's annual list of the "10 Most Censored Stories" than any other journalist:

Michael Moore Stars At Academy Awards

On day five of the war, it was supremely ironic that network television viewers had to tune into the 75th Annual Academy Awards ceremony to hear voices that questioned the wisdom of the Bush Administration.

Rumblings of protest began on Saturday. At the Independent Spirit Awards (the award ceremony for independent films) in Santa Monica, California, Maggie Gyllenhaal, the star of Secretary, said the country was "in the middle of a war about oil and imperialism and I hope for peace as soon as we can possibly find it."

That same afternoon at the Miramax party, crooner Michael Feinstein couldn't rouse the guests to sing God Bless America no matter how hard he tried.

Then there was ABC's presentation of the Academy Awards on Sunday night. Steve Martin got the ball rolling: "I am really glad they cut back on the red carpet, that'll send them a message." Minutes later, he followed up with: "A movie star is many things: they can be tall, short, thin—or skinny. They can be Democrats—or skinny."

The political statements ranged from the subdued to the outraged. Susan Sarandon, like many others wearing the Dove of Peace pins designed by Henry Dunay for Global Vision for Peace, flashed a peace sign. Chris Cooper, winner of the best supporting actor for his role in Adaptation, quietly said: "In light of all the troubles in this world, I wish us peace."

Gael Garcia Bernal, the hunky star of Y Tu Mama Tambien, introducing the nominated best song from Frida, said to loud applause: "The necessity for peace in the world is not a dream, it is a reality. And we are not alone. If Frida was alive, she would be on our side, against war."

Pedro Almodovar, accepting the Oscar for best original screenplay for Talk To Her, read a statement: "I also want to dedicate this award to all the people who are raising their voices in favor of peace, respect of human rights, democracy, and international legality, all of which are essential qualities [for life]."

And the audience cheered as Adrien Brody, who won best actor for The Pianist, admonished the orchestra to stop so he could say: "Whether you believe in Allah or God, may He watch over you, and pray for a peaceful and swift resolution to this war."

In a veiled protest against the war, which went totally unreported, Bono, lead singer of U2, sang "The Hands That Built America" from Gangs Of New York, changing two lines of the song:

"It's early fall, there is a cloud on the New York skyline, Innocents across a yellow line" became: "Late in the spring, yellow cloud on a desert skyline, Some father's son, is it his or is it mine."

And then there was Michael Moore.

He received a standing ovation when Bowling For Columbine was announced the winner of best documentary. The Chicago Tribune's Mark Caro reported that the pressroom also erupted in applause when it was announced that Moore had won.

Taking the stage, flanked by documentary filmmakers, Moore said: "I've invited my fellow documentary nominees on the stage with us. They are here in solidarity with me because we like nonfiction. We like nonfiction and we live in fictitious times. We live in the time when we have fictitious election results that elect a fictitious president. We live in a time where we have a man sending us to war for fictitious reasons, whether it is the fiction of duct tape or the fiction of orange alerts. We are against this war, Mr. Bush. Shame on you, Mr. Bush. Shame on you. And any time that you have the Pope and the Dixie Chicks against you, your time is up."

John Horn of the Los Angeles Times reported that "as Moore's speech reached its crescendo" Oscar producer Gil Cates and director Louis Horvitz, who were in the production truck, decided "to cut him off. 'Music! Music!' Horvitz yelled. The orchestra quickly drowned out the rest of Moore's speech." And his microphone receded into the floor.

Most of the Hollywood audience smiled and applauded, but stagehands [who probably drove vehicles with government license plates], who were close to the microphones, booed loudly, making it appear to a television listener that Moore's criticism of President Bush was not well received.

"It was so sweet backstage, you should have seen it. The Teamsters are helping Michael Moore into the trunk of his limo" quipped Steve Martin after a commercial break.

Backstage, Moore kept up his criticism. These remarks were well reported by the Tribune's Mark Caro and the Chicago Sun-Times's Bill Zwecker, but most of the national media ignored them.

Reporter: Why did you do what you did?

Moore: I'm an American.

Reporter: That's it?

Moore: Well that's a lot. I'm an American, and you don't leave your citizenship when you enter the doors of the Kodak Theatre. I don't stop being who I am when I come to this ceremony, and I'm extremely grateful for this response.

Moore wanted it made clear that despite the loud boos from the stagehands, the Hollywood audience was behind him: "Don't report that there was a split decision in the hall because five people booed" he said. "I did not hear that. I saw the entire place stand up and applaud, applaud a film that talks about how we are manipulated by the fear that's put forth by the White House and put forth by corporate America to create a culture of violence at home and abroad."

Noting that his book Stupid White Men is on the nonfiction bestseller list, Moore said: "My finger's on the pulse of where I think the majority of Americans are at, and I think it would be irresponsible of me not to say what I felt. I don't think anyone who voted for me for this award thought they'd get a speech about agents and lawyers or the lawyers of agents."

America, he said, is "not divided.... The majority of Americans do not want to see their boys or girls killed in this war. The majority of people do not want to see our democracy hijacked by the squatter on federal land at 1600 Pennsylvania. I just happen to believe in one person, one vote, and you count all the votes."

Naturally, the national media, which have been busy as wartime cheerleaders, falsely reported that Moore was not well received.

Kurt Loder of MTV's report on Michael Moore's "witless flip-out" was typical. Loder wrote: "Moore brought all of the losing nominees in his category up onstage with him as a show of 'solidarity'. (Uh oh.) He then launched into a raving denunciation of 'our fictitious president' which—okay, a lot of people feel this way. But Moore's spittle-flecked undulations were so over-the-top, that even the Oscar crowd—his natural constituency, you might think—erupted in a storm of boos. This was totally unexpected."

Are Loder et al softening us up for another Hollywood blacklist? Boycott Hollywood already wants to dim the lights of 94 outspoken stars.

A statement released by the Screen Actors Guild, earlier in the month, put it this way: "Some have recently suggested that well-known individuals who express 'unacceptable' views should be punished by losing their right to work. This shocking development suggests that the lessons of history have, for some, fallen on deaf ears."

The furor over Moore's comments will no doubt continue. We should remember the words of Barbra Streisand, who said: "I am glad that I live in a country that guarantees every citizen, including artists, the right to say and to sing what you believe."

In a culture where the Dixie Chicks are being blacklisted, it was an affirmation that needed to be made.

You can bet your hot-buttered popcorn that high on the Homeland Security Gestapo's list of projects is to bring under tight control the more independent, conscientious segment of the Hollywood community.

With that in mind, the following news by Michael Fleming comes from the Variety.com entertainment news website, for 3/28/03. Take special note of what a pro-Bush Administration spin dominates the presentation of the underlying facts in this story, compared to the balance of the story presentation you just read above. Regardless, the courageous Founding Fathers of the United States are likely proud to be watching as this show of moral strength unfolds:

Michael Moore Teams With Mel Gibson For Next Documentary

NEW YORK — Michael Moore, who didn't endear himself to the Oscar audience last Sunday, will doubtless arouse further ire with his next documentary.

The project will depict the allegedly murky relationship between President Bush's father and the family of Osama bin Laden. And it will suggest that the bin Laden family was greatly enriched by that association.

Moore is making a deal with Mel Gibson's Icon Productions to finance Fahrenheit 911, a documentary that will trace why the U.S. has become a target for hatred and terrorism. It will also depict alleged dealings between two generations of the Bush and bin Laden clans that led to George W. Bush and Osama bin Laden becoming mortal enemies.

While the words "fevered auction" and "documentary" should never be used in the same sentence, they fit the post-Oscar bidding battle orchestrated by the Endeavor talent agency. Gibson and Bruce Davey's Icon won with a bid worth eight figures in upfront cash and potential backend profits.

The deal comes as Moore's Oscar-winning Bowling For Columbine moves toward the $40 million worldwide gross mark. The $3 million film is one of the most successful documentaries ever.

"The primary thrust of the new film is what has happened to the country since September 11, and how the Bush Administration used this tragic event to push its agenda" Moore said. "It certainly does deal with the Bush and bin Laden ties. It asks a number of questions that I don't have the answers to yet, but which I intend to find out."

Moore has put a year's worth of research into the film. He'll finish it in time to be submitted for Cannes 2004, and released in time for the presidential election that fall.

The Bush-bin Laden tie, if only circumstantial, begins with a business relationship between the former president and Mohammed bin Laden, the Yemeni-born father of Osama who was a Saudi construction magnate. He died and left his future terrorist son about $300 million that has been used to finance global violence. The young bin Laden was among the freedom fighters propped up by the CIA as they battled the Soviets in Afghanistan when the elder Bush headed that agency. And bin Laden's Al Qaeda campaign began after Bush put U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia during the Gulf War. A decade later, bin Laden's Twin Tower attacks made the battle against terrorism the prime focus of George W.'s presidency.

"The senior Bush kept his ties with the bin Laden family up until two months after September 11" Moore said. "The bin Ladens invested heavily in the Carlyle Group, which has its hands in a number of pies and is the 11th largest defense contractor even though it mostly buys failing defense companies and sells them for profits."

The mood in Hollywood was mixed over whether Moore would be ridden out of town after his anti-war speech. He admitted his passion was partly fueled from the research he's done on the new movie and said public and industry reaction was overwhelmingly positive.

"I'd always watched and felt a little odd seeing actors win an Oscar and go off on some tangent cause. I'd just been given a standing ovation and an Oscar for a movie that deals not only with American gun violence, but how Bush manipulates the public with fear and how we are violent to people around the world. I expressed exactly what was in the film, and instead of being blacklisted, I've not only gotten a deal to fund Fahrenheit 911 but offers on the film after. Presales on [Columbine's] video release ran ahead of Chicago this week, and my book is returning to the top spot on the New York Times bestseller list. It's because the majority of Americans agree with me, see the economy in the toilet, and didn't vote for George W. People are now realizing you can question your government while still caring about the soldiers. We are all still filled with rage over September 11 and have every right to seek vengeance on the bad guy. But not any old bad guy."

Moore said he was mildly surprised by the speech reaction, since it was a carbon copy of what he said at the Spirit Awards the previous day: "I didn't write an Oscar speech because I never thought we'd win. The last documentary that was a box office success and won the Oscar was Woodstock" Moore said.

Some of you may remember our past News Desk coverage of Michael's eye-opening censorship encounters during his absolutely mobbed cross-country book signing stops for his still (more than 53 weeks) bestseller Stupid White Men—And Other Sorry Excuses For The State Of The Nation. His experiences have been a marvelous study in the kind of tug-of-war that has been churning between the greed of allowing a clear bestseller to generate dazzling profits versus deep dark orders "from above" to censor Michael. What a dilemma for staunch Republicans!

Well, stay tuned. You can be sure we haven't seen the last of Michael Moore. Remember that a number of Mark Twain's classic volumes were BANNED from school and public libraries for many decades because of the devastating skill with which he told The Truth. Let's end this by simply noting that Michael is in very good company! △

When The War Is Over, The Real War Begins

Editor's note: Longtime respected and extremely well-connected international investigative journalist and renowned author Gordon Thomas was the subject of Rick Martin's front-page feature story for our May 2002 issue, mostly on the "sleeping giant" China. Since that time Gordon's insightful commentaries on a wide variety of subjects have appeared within these pages.

And now, true to form, while other journalists are focused on typical wartime topics—from sand storms to POWs—Gordon is looking down the road to the truth beyond the shadows.

The public is being led to believe that the war now raging in Iraq is some kind of "final solution" to a longstanding problem—when in fact it stands as an arrogant assault on common human decency likely to have many further consequences.

Just what might be some of the backlash? Without stretching his sights beyond the very real vultures circling around the immediate periphery of the "kill zone" in Iraq, Gordon paints a deadly picture of what may happen in consequence to the present war, when, as he puts it, the REAL war begins.

3/22/03 GORDON THOMAS

(Website: www.globe-intel.net)

When the war is over, the REAL war begins.

If not tomorrow—then soon.

The multi-weapon systems will kill no more. The last of the body bags will be zippered closed. The oil-well fires will be quenched by U.S. vice-president Dick Cheney's old company, contracted to do so; it will be a nice little earner.

Then what?

Saddam Hussein and his two sadistic sons may or may not be found buried beneath the rubble of the ruins of Baghdad or their birthplace, Tikrit. Or, like Osama bin Laden, if they have escaped, they will be forever hunted.

Then what?

Oliver North, the most gung-ho of all the U.S. network reporters, will return to his Fundamentalist Christian lair in America's Bible Belt to write a book about his war.

Donald Rumsfeld will finally move off screen to give the Simpsons back their prime time. Have you noticed how Rummi sounds like Homer?

George Bush will go back to mangling the English language. In elocution terms, he has had a good war.

Tony Blair will find that his truce with the Labour Party will not last as long as the war he helped launch.

And in Iraq, a new war will have begun. One far more deadly and dangerous for the region, and perhaps ultimately, for the whole world.

A potent mix of religion, hatred, oil, and greed will be ignited in a way that all the smart bombs so far have not managed to do.

In the south, the marsh-Arabs, the Shias, will seize the end of the war to state their claim for a powerful voice in the future of Iraq.

They have suffered much. They not only want revenge, but they want real power to ensure they will never have to endure again.

Their demands, uttered from the minarets of their mosques half-hidden by the reeds of their inhospitable earth, will be reinforced by the mullahs of Tehran. That could be the springboard for Iran to come into the sights of President Bush's "axis of evil", which incorporates Iran.

What will he do?

The omens are not good. There are already mutterings that "Iran has to be dealt with" from Washington.

If not tomorrow, then certainly soon.

In the north of post-war Iraq, the Kurds will grab their moment for independence. That will bring them into almost certain conflict with Turkey. NATO's member is on the rump of that now seriously divided organisation. For Turkey, an independent Kurdish nation is unacceptable and will be resisted with a show of arms.

What will NATO do?

At most, expel Turkey. But likely—nothing.

What will Bush do?

Possibly place his battle-weary force between Kurds and Turks. But domestic public opinion may not let him.

In central Iraq, are the Assyrians and the Turkomans. They too want their piece of the cake when it comes to who gets what in a new Iraq.

Then there is Saddam's Ba'ath Party. Just as in post-war Germany, it turned out to be an impossible dream to eradicate the Nazi Party; so it will prove with the remnants of Ba'athism. They are imbedded in the very structure of Iraq. Ramshackle they may have been, but it was the Ba'ath members who keep their nuts and bolts greased.

Beyond Iraq, waiting to move in is the Iraqi National Coalition. This is a mish-mash of politicians and generals who have defected from Iraq over the last few years. They have set up comfortable homes—partly paid for by Whitehall and Washington—and spent their time promoting their case around Westminster and on Capitol Hill.

Their biggest contribution so far has been to issue a wish-list for “social justice, civil rights, virtues of tolerance, and peaceful co-existence”.

They like to think it reflects the best of the Magna Carta and the words inscribed on the Statue of Liberty.

The reality is that all their talk of political pluralism and “the separation of powers, military in particular, from the future political establishment” is wishful thinking.

That “future political establishment” will be run by America for the foreseeable future. Stripped of all the spin-doctoring from the White House and London, Iraq will be little more than another American protectorate.

The reason is simple. Washington—whatever it has said in these past weeks—has a deep and abiding interest in the Iraqi oil fields. They are only second to Saudi Arabia in what they will once more start pumping over the next few months.

Bush and Blair have issued a fine declaration that all the money from Iraqi oil will be held “in trust for the Iraqi people”.

But any lawyer will tell you that a trust costs money to run: the bigger the trust, the larger the costs to administer it.

Have no doubt: America will expect those charges to be paid. And the easiest way to do so is to cream-off the appropriate number of barrels of oil.

George Bush is steeped in how that is done. He was born and raised an oilman. He is concerned that Saudi oil will not be there forever. Better to secure as much as is possible to extract from under the Iraqi sands.

But there is a problem. Both Russia and France already have huge vested interests in Iraq’s oil fields. They have financed and built refineries—some now burning—around Basra.

Have no doubt: when the time comes, they will argue they have legally-established rights to the oil. And neither country has agreed to that noble sounding ideal to put the oil in trust for the “Iraqi people”.

And even if that did happen—and after America has taken its “administrative slice”—how will the money be divided up? How much will the Kurds get? The Shias? The other lesser tribes?

Knowing their own entrenched suspicion of each other—and their well-honed skills to haggle over the price of a camel’s hide—the potential millions to be shared out from the oil will lead to internal strife.

It is the way serious arguments have always been settled in that country.

And internal strife will be fuelled by the nations that now have a ringside seat at the conflict. Both Syria and Iran have made it clear that they will become involved in the setting up of a new Iraq. So will Turkey. Between them they could foment, through their surrogates, sufficient trouble to see Iraq descend into a lawlessness that would be even more frightening than that under Saddam.

America and Britain, already isolated in Europe, will find they will be under huge pressure at home to withdraw their troops from their role as “protectors”.

It is enough to make Saddam turn in his grave—assuming he is there.

The war may indeed soon be over. But a new and in many ways more deadly one is about to begin.

Iraq may well become a leit-motif for an uncertain future. The billowing oil clouds over the region may turn out to be the precursor of an even more threatened future that will spread beyond the present conflict.

SEEDS OF FIRE: CHINA AND THE STORY BEHIND THE ATTACK ON AMERICA

Seeds Of Fire explains how China will use a crisis to launch itself as a new Super Power—and become America's new major enemy.

That prediction is from a CIA briefing paper to the Bush Administration. It is one of almost 100 pages of never-before-published official documents in SEEDS OF FIRE: China And The Story Behind The Attack On America, by Gordon Thomas. No one can afford to ignore this book!

SEEDS OF FIRE is a book that every patriotic American — everyone who cares about the future of this country, everyone who wants to know what goes on behind the scenes — must buy and read. This is THE book. Written by a highly experienced intelligence analyst, it is simply a MUST. You cannot ignore the warnings Gordon Thomas gives.

As an example of his total credibility, hours after the book was published, the CIA was forced to confirm its findings about the threat China poses. The CIA publicly confirmed what Gordon Thomas reveals in SEEDS OF FIRE. Just how big a threat China is.

This has been kept out of the news agenda because it does not suit certain business interests to have that truth emerge. But at last here it is. Every patriotic American should buy and read this book! It is simply revelatory.

Other revelations include the Inslaw/Promis “largest global software theft in history”, MK-ULTRA mind-control applications, and the link between newspaper magnate Robert Maxwell and the Los Alamos laboratory nuclear secrets “spy” case.

But it is the China connection that ought to alert all thinking Americans to “the sleeping giant” of the Orient. Be informed. Be astonished.

The French Connection, Black Slavery, And ‘Fragging’

Editor's note: France has played a prominent—and at times seemingly quite outspoken—role among the coalition of nations arguing against the War in Iraq. But don't expect the controlled media puppets to make any connections between this current French stance and France's string of historical clashes with the London/Rothschild faction of elite world controllers who have long been the driving force behind British Imperialism—the same “Evil Empire” enmeshed with the American show-of-force in Iraq. (See Eustace Mullins' article elsewhere in this SPECTRUM for some key historical connections.)

If we go back and review truthful information about what we were taught in school as the “French And Indian War” (1754-63), we find France clashing with British “ownership” of early colonial territories in the New World. Then we need to add France's assistance to the American colonists in their struggle for freedom from this same Evil Empire.

Let me quote from Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Encyclopedia (© 2000) for a brief recap of the relevant events:

“After the end of the costly French and Indian War, Britain imposed new taxes on the colonies and trade restrictions, which fueled growing resentment and added to the colonists' objection to their lack of representation in the British Parliament.

“Determined to achieve independence, the colonies formed the Continental Army, composed chiefly of Minutemen, to challenge Britain's large, organized militia. The war began when Britain sent a force to destroy rebel military stores at Concord, Massachusetts.

“After fighting broke out on April 19, 1775 (Battles of Lexington and Concord), rebel forces began a siege of Boston that ended when American forces under H. Knox forced out the British troops under W. Howe on March 17, 1776, in the Battle of Bunker Hill.

“Britain's offer of pardon in exchange for surrender was refused by the Americans, who declared themselves independent on July 4, 1776.

“British forces retaliated by driving the army of G. Washington from New York to New Jersey. On Christmas night, Washington crossed the Delaware River and won the battles of Trenton and Princeton.

“The British army split to cover more territory—a fatal error. In engaging the Americans in Pennsylvania, notably in the Battle of the Brandywine, they left the troops in the north vulnerable.

“Despite a victory in the Battle of Ticonderoga, British troops under J. Burgoyne were defeated by H. Gates and B. Arnold in the Battle of Saratoga (October 17, 1777). [Yes, the same Benedict Arnold who would later join the British and be branded a traitor.]

“Washington quartered his 11,000 troops through a bleak winter at Valley Forge, where they received training from F. Steuben that gave them victory in Monmouth, New Jersey, on June 28, 1778. British forces in the north thenceforth chiefly concentrated near New York.

“France, which had been secretly furnishing aid to the Americans since 1776, finally declared war on Britain in June 1778. French troops assisted American troops in the south, culminating in the successful Siege of Yorktown, where C. Cornwallis's forces surrendered on October 19, 1781, bringing an end to the war on land.

“War continued at sea, fought chiefly between Britain and the U.S.'s European allies. The navies of Spain and the Netherlands contained most of Britain's navy near Europe and away from the fighting in America.

“The last battle of the war was won by the American navy under J. Barry in March 1783 in the Straits of Florida. With the Treaty of Paris (September 3, 1783), Britain recognized the independence of the U.S. east of the Mississippi River, and ceded Florida to Spain.”

There were more French-British clashes over blatant British aggression in both World Wars, though the majority of history books conveniently underplay this clash of ideologies. And right now, as the American-British “coalition” forces blitzkrieg Baghdad, France is the first to stand up and say it is “absolutely opposed” to American or British control of “post-war Iraq”—understanding full well the Rothschild agenda that's operating behind the scenes.

(Remember our front-page story for the March 2003 issue, and also consider the important News Desk story in this issue: “In November 2000, Iraq began selling its oil for euros, moving away from the post-World War II standard of the U.S. dollar as the currency of international trade.” So the REAL power struggle is far from being resolved!)

Thankfully the all-important “long lens of history” is NOT overlooked by Sherman Skolnick, who shares below a critical perspective that's key to appreciating the French Connection to the power struggle occupying the world stage at this time.

Elsewhere Sherman employs that same “long lens of history” to make long hidden connections between the current military conflict in Iraq and both the previous Iraq war AND the earlier Vietnam war. Does anyone remember the Black slavery that's integral to some Middle Eastern royal families? How about “fragging” during the latter part of the Vietnam war? It wasn't something noted on the evening news propaganda of the time.

The Overthrow Of
The American Republic, Part 29:
France's Plan To Stop America's Hitler
(3/13/03)

Some in Europe are determined to stop any further Bush White House plan to attack in the Middle East and elsewhere, such as a long-planned bombardment and invasion of places like Iraq.

How many Americans realize the attitude of France in current events?

The monopoly press, dealing with us like eight-year-old children, would have us forget how France was instrumental in helping America against the British dictators in the American colonial period. And, that the British Aristocracy vows to divide this continent into Balkan-like warring regions, subjects of the British Monarch, and that we Americans should be puppets of British colonies rather than citizens of the American Republic.

Short of targeting the Brits with French missiles—and some believe the Paris government harbors that thought if not already in effect—how would the French stop the British/American aristocracy and their war-mongering as to Iraq, in the Middle East, and elsewhere?

If the U.S., under the Bush Administration, starts a war in the Middle East, such as is currently planned against Iraq, here is what France plans:

1. France would freeze all U.S. assets in any way within their custody, control, or jurisdiction.

2. Inevitably this freeze would include freezing the assets and funds of Canada, as well, since the U.S.'s northern neighbor has mostly just a few large banks with numerous U.S. dollar accounts transacting, among other places, through French financial intermediaries, entities, agents, brokerages, and similar.

3. Well-informed Americans, not sharing their knowledge with routine journalists, have been quietly repatriating their assets and funds parked, pledged, held, brokered, or otherwise within the custody, control, and jurisdiction of France, and within the control and custody of French financial intermediaries as branches in the U.S. and elsewhere.

4. Yes, such activities not shared with naive, know-nothing Americans addicted to the U.S. monopoly press as if it were a narcotic, tend to make the U.S. isolationist—a bad word to New World Order types but possibly acceptable to common Americans.

But, it is a forced reality update that the U.S. is a FORMER world superpower, now in the midst of financial collapse. Our attention has been diverted from this fact by a prior-arranged series of violences, called 9/11, and then later, playing up Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein as the two demons of the planet.

Who all has studied the documents of "Operation Northwoods" in James Bamford's opus Body Of Secrets, published just before Black Tuesday? These documents described how madmen in the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, in 1962, wanted to instigate an invasion of Cuba, by orchestrating bloody killings of Americans, disguised as if having been done by Cuba instead of actually by monsters who were part of covert U.S. teams. It should be studied carefully by those persisting in falsely blaming Black Tuesday on "the Moslems".

The U.S./British aristocracies, Establishment, powers-that-be, Ruling

Classes—whatever you call "them"—is step by step overthrowing the American Republic and making us the DISUNITED States of America. Our good-paying jobs are ending, our industries exported to cheap-wage overseas regions, our porous borders mere unenforced jokes.

Here is some background to understand this—that there is a need to change the regime IN WASHINGTON, not Baghdad. AND some in France and elsewhere believe this is necessary.

Old-time Frenchmen recall, with great regrets, that France, in the mid-1930s, had an opportunity to stop Hitler. How? By moving French military forces into a key region of Germany, as the French were authorized to do so under various treaties and provisions that were enacted in the wake of World War One.

The French move, however, in the midst of the worldwide Great Depression, was tabled, some say, by French leader Leon Blum. He was blamed, some say falsely, because he was a peace-seeking socialist. At the time, France had a virulent, fascist element; the French word describing this, gagliards, translates as "the hooded ones"—sort of like the American KKK, the Ku Klux Klan.

Some later blamed this ultra-right-wing element for the perceived weak opposition in France to the German invasion of 1940, peaking with the surrender of Paris in World War Two. It led to the division of France into what was called the Vichy Government, pro-Hitler collaborators.

The pro-British American monopoly press overlooks the now known treason, before and during World War Two, of the British Monarchy. After all, the Brits changed their name to the House of Windsor to disguise their German origin. They should rightfully be called the House of Hanover.

A sizeable portion of the British royals plotted to surrender to the Nazis. King Edward VIII abdicated, not because he married a divorced commoner, but because he was pro-Hitler—which needed, for the moment, to be concealed. As the Duke and Duchess, the couple ruled the British colony of Bahamas during World War Two, and treasonously allowed Nazi submarines to refuel right offshore the U.S.

Without desiring to recall the history of Mesopotamia, the war-mongering media persistently repeat the words of George W. Bush that there is a need for regime change in Baghdad (NOT Washington).

The newsmongers are not inclined nor capable of a more balanced understanding of recent history.

• To control oil, American/British big business interests favor backward, non-progressive regimes of the oil-drenched Middle-Eastern sheikdoms. Whatever one may, in retrospect, otherwise say about the Shah of Iran, the Pahlavi Royal Family were determined to make Persia a modern, 20th Century nation. The Shah restrained and restricted the narrow-minded clerics of Iran. Sarcastically, they could be described as the best minds of the 14th Century.

The American and British spy agencies jointly installed one of THEIR agents as the Ayatollah [Khomeini], the head man-c cleric in Teheran, part of the overthrow of the Shah in 1979. Thereafter, as a front for the British royals, Daddy Bush instigated the Iraq-Iran War, starting in September 1980, which ended in 1988. In great part, it was to keep up the price of oil, by causing the bombing of oil machinery and such. The price of oil drastically declined upon the end of the conflict.

By the massive bribery of Iranian clerics-leaders in October 1980, in Paris and in a Paris suburb, Daddy Bush had an advantage against the dreaded possibility of what he called "The October Surprise". Namely, that Carter, running for re-election, would have a voting advantage if he could gain the release of the 52 U.S. hostages from the Teheran Embassy.

The U.S. hostages, because of Daddy Bush's treason, were released ONLY just at the very moment, in January 1981, when the Reagan/Bush ticket were inaugurated. To remind Reagan to "follow orders", there was an attempt to assassinate Reagan a few months later—multiple shootings, falsely blamed on a lone gunman, John Hinckley, whose father was in the oil business with Daddy Bush.

And, to stop any efforts of the Vatican to promote peace, shortly after the attempt on Reagan, was the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II, falsely blamed on a Turkish nut, but actually arranged by the American CIA.

In the 1980s, Daddy Bush assisted his PRIVATE secret business partner, Saddam Hussein, in obtaining the makings of biological and chemical weapons and the start of nuclear devices. (See the documented opus, The Spider's Web by Alan Friedman. AND, as to Daddy Bush and Saddam Hussein as PRIVATE secret business partners, see our story "The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh".)

The Bush Family were the key players in making Kuwait a British colony up to 1961, as a world oil power. This was done through the Bush Family business, Dresser Industries, which later was merged into Richard Cheney's Halliburton, a worldwide provider of oilpatch equipment.

By the late 1980s, Kuwait was

TRANCE Formation Of America

This is the documented autobiography of a victim of government mind-control. Cathy O'Brien is the only vocal and recovered survivor of the CIA's MK-Ultra Project Monarch mind-control operation. Chiseled deep into the white stone of the CIA's Langley, Virginia headquarters is a partial verse lifted from the Holy Bible and writings of Saint John: "...and the truth shall make you free." This statement, like the agency, is total unreality. The building that it is engraved upon houses the world's most successful manufacturer of lies to facilitate psychological warfare. The "Company" uses truth and technology as their raw materials to produce "pure" lies for control of you and America's allies. Within the pages of TRANCE Formation Of America you'll find the truth.

financially damaging Iraq, which was impoverished by the eight-year Iraq-Iran war, into which Bush had suckered Saddam Hussein. Kuwait had driven down the price of oil by massive oil pumping. Further, Saddam claimed the area near the Iraq/Kuwait border is actually Iraq's 19th Province. Kuwait was stealing oil from Iraq, Saddam claimed, by slant-drilling and pumping oil out of the contested region.

Why was Saddam in a position to be misled by Daddy Bush? Because the American CIA assisted Saddam Hussein into power by political assassinations.

In 1990, Saddam was informed by Daddy Bush's U.S. Ambassador to Baghdad, April Glaspie, that the U.S. has no interest in interfering in Saddam's quarrel over the 19th Province and slant-drilling with Kuwait.

Is it not strange that Saddam has not been the victim of an CIA assassination plot? Created by the American secret political police, Saddam, like Osama bin Laden, has been used by Daddy Bush. A convenient "enemy", to be demonized while the Bush Crime Family, as stooges of a section of the American aristocracy, jointly with the British, destroy the U.S. Constitution and the Bill Of Rights.

How many Americans understand Iraq? Numerous households in Iraq have a large number of books, follow opera, promote intellect. Baghdad is a cosmopolitan metropolis.

Americans find it difficult, because of media brainwashing, to understand that Iran under the Shah, and Iraq under Saddam, have been modern-seeking nations, not run by backward clerics opposed to women being educated, opposed to women driving cars and such. Modern nations are a detriment to Big Oil, which needs narrow-minded reactionaries and fascists.

Unlike Iraq, how many ordinary Americans have in their homes numerous books and such? The media fakers have pounded Americans into simple-minded types, believing that there are no high-level plots and that only "lone assassins" murder our leaders.

How and when are we reminded that, among industrial nations (or declining industrial nations), America has the highest percent of functional illiterates?

Will it be needed and will it work, if necessary—that is, France's plan to stop America's Hitler—by, among other things, the freezing of American funds and assets?

More coming. Stay tuned.

The Overthrow Of
The American Republic, Part 30:
Most Forbidden Subject—U.S. Military
(3/22/03)

It was December, 1990. Since August of that year, the American mass media kept telling us that Saddam Hussein, the Iraqi strongman, was the leading devil on the planet. That as an aggressor, we were told, he had invaded Kuwait, the former British colony bordering Iraq.

There was plenty, however, that the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press did NOT tell us. Such as:

1. That in the 1980s, George Herbert Walker Bush had secretly been the PRIVATE business partner of Saddam Hussein. Together, they had extorted tens of billions of dollars from the weak sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf area—"protection money". They were obligated to pay the Bush/Saddam business partnership upwards of five dollars per barrel of crude petroleum shipped to the

FALLEN ANGELS And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"? Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

This is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text followed by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

William Cooper: Death Of A Conspiracy Salesman

On November 5, 2001, William Cooper was shot to death by sheriff's deputies in a gunfire exchange. Who was Bill Cooper? Was he a true patriot? A tough survivalist? Or simply a fanatic?

Some knew him as a UFO "expert" (claimed insider information on government knowledge of extraterrestrials living among us)...a conspiracy theorist...a former Navy Intelligence operative...and the person the President once called "the most dangerous man on American airwaves". Cooper always said he acted from his "conscience" and sought to warn all Americans of the dangers of the New World Order, creeping socialism, and our own brand of Nazism. Here is the inside story, as told by a fellow patriot and government whistle-blower. Commander X has collected together for the first time Cooper's thoughts and finds on such subjects as: The Illuminati • The Kennedy Assassination • MJ-12 and the UFO Cover-Up • Area 51 • The AntiChrist • The World Trade Center Disaster • Gun Control • Skull and Bones Society.

Western interests. For the decade of the 1980s, this partnership had profited by upwards of $25 BILLION per year, a total of upwards of $250 BILLION for the decade, making Bush/Saddam two of the wealthiest people on the planet.

These funds were quietly laundered through a series of twenty five secret worldwide accounts of the Bush Crime Family. The loot was the same as if this partnership had been operated by the traditional Italian/Sicilian Mafia or the latter-day Russian Mafiya.

One of the "washing machines" used to disguise the funds was the joint account of the Bush family with the Queen of England, at her private bank, Coutts Bank, London. In just one of the many transactions, one secret Federal Reserve wire transfer record showed the handling of ONE HUNDRED BILLION DOLLARS.

By 1991, the secret Federal Reserve records were in the hands of Saddam's half-brother in Switzerland, who let it be known that he vowed to release the same if the American CIA engaged in any plot (which they did in 1993) to try to assassinate Saddam. The Saddam relative let it be known in Europe that the records, depending on how they were publicized, could cause the criminal prosecution of Daddy Bush for treason.

Among the records were the handwritten notes of the key official of the Internal Affairs investigation unit of the U.S. Treasury, detailing the Bush Crime Family's treasonous 25 worldwide accounts, used to launder the partnership loot of Bush/Saddam.

(By the year 2000, the records having fallen into our possession, we posted the same in conjunction with our popular website series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush", showing the secret authorization codes of the Federal Reserve Commissar, together with the secret bank codes and instructions of routing and the Treasury records. Those familiar with such records have pronounced them authentic. The records are attached to our website series and, one by one, can be pulled up on the screen. In 1990-1991, the Bush/Saddam partnership became the subject of a little-known federal case in Chicago, at a hearing of which I was the only journalist there present, and later interviewing the participants in the back of the courtroom. Details are in my website story "The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh".)

2. Not mentioned in the popular press was that the U.S. Ambassador to Baghdad, April Glaspie, had, on behalf of Daddy Bush, then President, told Saddam that the U.S. would NOT interfere if Saddam pursued Iraq's quarrel with Kuwait, as to unlawful slant drilling into Iraqi oilfields and as to Kuwait poaching on oil land that was actually Iraq Province 19.

3. Iraq was once one of the most wealthy nations, and became impoverished in the 1980s for, among other reasons, that Kuwait, by these unlawful means, had driven down the price of oil and stolen Iraqi oil.

4. Daddy Bush bribed various other nations with billions of dollars to join with the U.S. to extract Saddam's troops from Kuwait. The American press fakers peddled a knowingly false satellite photo supposedly showing Saddam's troops gathering for an invasion of Saudi on the Saudi/Kuwait border. It was a terrible fraud calculated to okay what Daddy Bush was doing.

So, in December 1990, a group hired one of the largest auditoriums in Rosemont, Illinois, a Chicago suburb right near O'Hare International Airport. They advertised they were going to conduct an anti-war rally. A number of speakers were invited to speak. None of them—certainly not me—were members of the group that hired the meeting hall. Each speaker was told to limit themselves to fifteen minutes. I, for one, told no one but my closest trusted longtime associates of the topic I was going to speak about.

The hall was packed. About 750 people had showed up.

Point by point, I discussed the findings of a unit of the United Nations which had documented a terrible truth. Here it was, late in the 20th Century, I told the crowd, that Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, according to undisputed details of the U.N. unit, each had huge numbers of BLACK CHATTEL SLAVES. Saudi, according to the findings, had about one hundred thousand such slaves, and Kuwait about fifty thousand of the same. I emphasized that this was done by the Saudi Royal Family and by the Emir of Kuwait, both unelected dictators.

Looking into the faces of the vast audience, I could see a sprinkling of Afro-Americans sitting there. Their expressions and body language told me I had touched a real nerve. Several of the other speakers on the stage with me were well-known Black-activist celebrities. One had apparently come in a limousine with his bodyguards. None of the other speakers dared comment on or touch upon my subject. (The one with the limo—was he secretly going to comment elsewhere? Why do I say that? Because shortly after his speech, he was murdered.)

I thought to myself that these supposed Black civil rights promoters must be on some big, secret corporate/espionage payroll, and they are afraid to touch the Black chattel slavery issue as to the U.S. military.

One of the other speakers, I knew from my longtime sources, was installed as the head of an important Black activist group, by the secret political police, the American CIA, to steer matters away from such topics.

I went on to point out that the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, and the 14th Amendment, outlawed slavery in the United States. (The 13th Amendment was ratified December 6, 1865, after the close of the British-promoted War Between The States and British-instigated murder of President Lincoln, and the 14th Amendment was ratified July 9, 1868.)

[Editor's note: Knowledgeable readers will be quick to point out that the ORIGINAL 13th Amendment, restricting LAWYERS from serving in government, was ratified in 1819 despite many attempts to stop it, but was later deliberately REMOVED from the Constitution during the chaos of the Civil War—for obvious reasons. However, that intriguing historical subject is a separate matter and takes nothing away from Sherman's discussion above, except for how the later Amendments would have been numbered.]

Thus, it was unconstitutional for Daddy Bush, as then President, to have ordered Black U.S. military personnel to aid and protect owners of BLACK CHATTEL SLAVES. A sizeable percentage of our troops in the Persian Gulf at that time were Blacks. Further, of those, a sizeable number were Black Muslims. Iraq is part of the Southern Hemisphere. Some consider Iraqis as "people of color". Why and how were U.S. Black military ordered to protect and aid BLACK CHATTEL SLAVE owners and to soon slaughter a great number of fellow Moslems in Iraq?

A woman in the large audience, I found out later, was the sister of a Black junior naval officer enroute with his ship to the Persian Gulf. She wrote him about my speech. He took action. He wrote down the substance of my speech and tacked it to the door of his Commanding Officer. The Black naval officer was arrested and court martialed for insubordination and clapped into the brig. The liars and whores of the press pretended like it was not news. To no avail, I contacted various media outlets. They were not interested, including lapdog Black reporters at various print, radio, and TV facilities. Later, only on my public-access cable-TV program Broadsides was this subject raised again publicly.

The sister of the jailed Black naval officer wrote to me of this terrible injustice. It troubles me to realize that my telling the truth caused this to happen.

At the close of the Persian Gulf War in 1991, upwards of 150,000 Iraqi conscript troops were going back to Iraq while, in effect, under a white flag of surrender. On the "Highway of Death" occurred the most ghastly war crime in the history of the world. President Daddy Bush ordered U.S. military aircraft and ground units to kill these surrendering troops by shooting them in the back, from the air and on the ground. (Was this done by all-White units? There is reason to believe so.) U.S. military bulldozers were ordered by Bush to bury these slaughtered surrendering Iraqi troops, some of them still alive, in mass, unmarked graves in the desert.

Years later, one of those so ordered to commit what amounted to war crimes, told me, off the record, with tears in his eyes, his great regrets in retrospect having carried out such an order. Somewhere between 50,000 to 150,000 Iraqis thus surrendering were butchered. The American monopoly press, under "war-time" censorship, was ordered to remove from all pictures any showing of dead Iraqi bodies and to show only blown-up tanks, military trucks, and such on the "Highway of Death".

In the 1990s, on my public-access cable-TV program, was one of the only places in the U.S. where was mentioned this dreadful violation of the Geneva Conventions, to which the U.S. is a signatory.

The three leaders of the Persian Gulf War of 1991 were quietly and secretly rewarded, after the war ended, by the Al-Sabah Family, the Emir of Kuwait, owners, as I stated, of Black chattel slaves.

President George Herbert Walker Bush received $15 MILLION in gold. General Norman Schwarzkopf received $15 MILLION in diamonds. General Colin Powell received $10 MILLION in gold. (Hey! Did the Emir of Kuwait, having Black chattel slaves, discriminate against General Powell, an Afro-American, by giving HIM a lesser amount of valuables?)

These benefits to these U.S. officials were unconstitutional rewards, as shown by the U.S. Constitution, Article I, Section 9, last clause, that provides:

"No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States; And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, FROM ANY KING, PRINCE, OR FOREIGN STATE." (Emphasis added.)

Hey! Does this also apply to Daddy Bush, when President, having a JOINT ACCOUNT for ONE HUNDRED BILLION DOLLARS with the Queen of England in her private bank as mentioned?

Other than us, WHO dares raise these same issues? Are not Kuwait and Saudi being protected in Persian Gulf War Two by Black GIs, with Saudi and Kuwait being owners of BLACK CHATTEL SLAVES?

More coming. Stay tuned.

Update Note:
Flashback To Vietnam "Fragging"
(3/23/03)

The following may possibly be related to my 3/22/03 story [above].

A U.S. airman, reportedly a Muslim, serving at a highly secure rear airbase in Kuwait, was arrested as a suspect in having fired guns and hurled hand grenades into the tents of his commanding officers, wounding several of them.

This is based on several radio reports of BBC London, heard in the United States on 3/22/03, several times on the National Public Radio network.

[Editor's note: There was later a confirmation, midday on 3/23/03, of 1 dead and 15 wounded at the 101st Airborne Division's 1st Brigade, called Camp Pennsylvania, on the northern Kuwait border. On 3/26/03 a second high-ranking soldier died from complications of his wounds. The grenade-thrower was a "disgruntled" Platoon Sergeant of the 326th Engineer Battalion of the 101st, who was described to be a "Muslim convert" and "against the war with Iraq" according to CNN. After cutting electrical power to the Tactical Operations Center, he tossed fragmentation grenades into 3 tents housing staff. The Pentagon identified the first soldier killed in the incident as Captain Christopher Seifert, 27. The second, later fatality was identified as Air Force Major Gregory Stone, 40, a member of the Idaho Air National Guard, based in Boise. None of the wounded, some very seriously, were identified.]

Also a possibly related historical note: As anti-war sentiment and peace parades escalated in the United States during the Vietnam War, there were reports of numerous incidents of disgruntled U.S. soldiers in Vietnam throwing hand grenades into the tents of their commanding officers, calculated to murder top officers blamed for keeping the war going.

At that time, it was called "fragging".

To wind down that growing unpopular war, and to extricate the American aristocracy from being blamed for starting the war-for-profit through a fraudulent "Gulf of Tonkin" incident, the American CIA had government-paid supposed peacenik leaders highly publicized by the spy-riddled monopoly press. So-called "peace leaders" were promoted and installed to direct the conclusion of the war so as to evade mentioning how the major warmongers, tied to the pressfakers, profited from the terrible bloodshed in a seemingly endless conflict.

These peacefakers included Rennie Davis, part of the notorious "Chicago Seven", whose father was a strategist and consultant to pro-war Richard Nixon in the White House. To misdirect dissent, Rennie, part of the Chicago Seven, created staged riots with the Chicago Police in 1968, during the Democratic Presidential Convention. The upshot and purpose? To discredit Democratic Presidential candidates and assist Nixon taking over the Presidency and continuing the war.

As I documented at the time, Rennie Davis, Tom Hayden (more recently in the California State Assembly), Abbie Hoffman (whose family was in the pharmaceutical business and Abbie liked to make jokes to popularize dope), and Jerry Rubin (another dope promoter), and other supposed peacenik leaders were heavily and secretly financed by the Roger Baldwin Foundation.

In 1967, that Foundation quietly took over the American Civil Liberties Union which, as an actual entity, does not continue thereafter to exist although the name continues to be used to mislead the public.

In the 1970s, I taught seminars at various colleges in Chicago and across the nation and at a radio broadcast school in Chicago, as to the methods of tracing funds from the American CIA to fake "for sale" leaders and government-paid agents-provocateurs. A favorite trick, for example, of Rennie Davis, was to lead poorly informed, good-hearted peace marchers into the bayonets of National Guard troops guarding military facilities and weapons armories. Rennie would peel off from the peace marchers and disappear two blocks or so from the confrontation.

In 1972, Rennie was on a live television show broadcast in Chicago. I was a spectator in the audience. As a paraplegic, I got up on my braces and crutches, and haltingly got myself onto the live TV set. I confronted Rennie Davis with the specific details of how he was secretly financed through CIA-linked foundations, such as the Roger Baldwin Foundation which took over the ACLU. The TV station went blank on the program. To protect Rennie, 18 heavily armed police were called-in to take me away to jail on charges of alleged trespass.

The United Press International wire service photo of me confronting Rennie Davis on the live television show appeared in many newspapers without adequate explanation as to what it was about. During my jury trial on the trespass charges, I defended myself, being self-educated in law, and subpoenaed the Chicago Station Chief of the American CIA—a person and title of domestic U.S. operations forbidden to exist under the CIA Charter. (I had previously located the secret office of the CIA official in the federal courthouse building.) The resulting jury trial commotion enabled me to be turned loose and freed from the trespass charges.

Many years later, Rennie's CIA-financed gang members, Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin, were killed or found dead under circumstances strongly indicating they were murdered to shut them up.

In 1988, at the 20th anniversary of the 1968 events of the Chicago Seven, I attempted to tape an interview with Abbie. He fled from my tape recorder. A friend of his told me Abbie had just survived getting almost killed when his vehicle was in a sabotaged crash situation.

Unlike Rennie Davis and his CIA-financed whitewashers who protected big business from being fingered as war profiteers, I spoke in the 1970s at numerous peace rallies with specific details about the war-mongering industries which were interwoven with top-level Federal banker-judges and pressfakers and activities of America's secret political police and their domestic units. At the time, I greatly angered media celebrities and hotshots by fingering some of them with their CIA connections. And since 1991, through my public-access cable-TV weekly show, I continue from time to time with the same.

In the 1970s, at student-sponsored seminars, I taught a several week course to large audiences at the University of Illinois, Chicago campus. My subjects included details of CIA-linked foundations misdirecting and limiting dissent by installing and buying supposed "leaders" of dissent movements. As to the CIA foundations, see my website story (by scrolling all the way down my Home Page list of stories) first posted in 1999: "A Short History Of Reported CIA Fronts".

(We have a limited number of self-printed leaflets, a little shelf-worn, left over from those we distributed at anti-war rallies in the early 1970s, as to the CIA's involvement with the Chicago Seven. To get that, send $1 and a stamped, self-addressed BUSINESS-size envelope (#10 envelope, 4-1/8 x 9-1/2) to: Citizen's Committee to Clean Up the Courts, Sherman H. Skolnick, Chairman, 9800 So. Oglesby Ave., Chicago IL 60617-4870. The heavily detailed leaflets tell a rather complete story of CIA involvement.)

If the Iraq controversy drags on, war and post-war, will there be "fragging" incidents as in the wind-down of the Vietnam War? Will they, in some way, be related to the details in our Part 30 story?

Stay tuned.

Who bothers to point out, other than us, the issue of U.S. Black soldiers being located in the Middle East to protect Saudi and Kuwait, each of whose royal family own BLACK CHATTEL SLAVES?

"America did not invent human rights. In a very real sense, human rights invented America."

Vatican Assassins

Wounded In The house of My friends

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's un-godly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

—The Book Reader, America's most independent review of new titles, Fall/Winter 2001/2002

"Probably of all books which could be called 'conspiracy oriented', this is the grand-daddy. This is the Big One, I mean it...."

"It's one of those books that, even if you're a cynic and can come to terms with only half of it, it changes everything." — Jeff Rense, Oct. 11, 2001

THE OMEGA FILES: SECRET NAZI UFO BASES REVEALED

This large book describes how German engineers actually flew flying saucers shortly before the end of World War II and how some of the Nazis escaped due to help from the U.S.'s own version of the Secret Government, and how they actually work today from underground bases around the world. SPECIAL SECTION of photographs of Nazi-built flying saucers and stories told by our own pilots of encounters with so-called "Foo Fighters" during WW-II. Here is final proof that not all UFOs come from outer space!

OTHER VOICES

BY GEORGE HUNT WILLIAMSON
& TIMOTHY GREEN BECKLEY

The author was one of the original witnesses at the meeting between contactee George Adamski and Orthon from the planet Venus. Williamson claims he also had contacts with aliens and received transmissions over his radio from friendly extraterrestrials. Others have claimed the same. Senator Barry Goldwater reportedly heard mysterious signals on his ham radio and our own astronauts have reportedly picked up messages not transmitted from Earth.

Other Voices is essentially a reprint of The Saucers Speak, by George Hunt Williamson and Alfred Bailey, originally published in the 1950s. Much of what the authors report has come to pass. Warnings of aliens about nuclear war and environmental doom remain urgent.

AL BIELEK ON CD-ROM

This is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date on one computer CD. The information comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. Use this information as the beginning resource to help you onto your own research track.

The five people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

Children Of The Matrix

How an interdimensional race has controlled the world for thousands of years—and still does!

We are born into a world controlled by unseen forces that have plagued and manipulated humanity for thousands of years. You may look around and think that what you see is "real". But in truth you are living in an illusion designed to keep you in a mental, emotional, and spiritual prison cell.

Icke exposes these forces and their methods of human control and reveals a fantastic web of global manipulation, orchestrated by forces beyond this physical realm. He exposes the hidden bloodlines, through which other-dimensional entities live and operate unseen among us; and he shows how the bloodlines of the royal, political, and economic rulers of today are the same as those who ruled as the kings and queens of ancient times.

The truth is not only out there.

Much of it is right here.

Operation American Freedom

We Must Restore God's Precious Gift!

5/1/03 RICK MARTIN

"You have rights antecedent to all Earthly governments; rights that cannot be repealed or restrained by human laws; rights derived from the Great Legislator of the Universe."

— John Adams (1735-1826; U.S. statesman and second president from 1797-1801. He led the protest against the Stamp Act in 1765 and was the "colossus of the debate" on the Declaration Of Independence.)

As the thunder of Operation Iraqi Freedom subsides, it seems appropriate to take a good look at ourselves—at where we REALLY stand as a nation.

What is this concept we call freedom? Many simply take it for granted and don't ever really consider its implications or responsibilities.

Obviously our Founding Fathers were very cognizant of what freedom means. A lot of blood was shed securing the freedoms that we enjoy today. Or perhaps I should say: the freedoms that we used to enjoy. (See: Operation American Freedom p.42)

NEWEST OFFERINGS AT WISDOM BOOKS

Star Wars Weapons And End Times Warfare!

by Dr. Leonard Horowitz

If power is the game, and population control the aim, the world's most advanced weapons and energy technologies would be directed from space. Star Wars Weapons would be able to change everything from the weather to people's moods, thoughts, behavior, and health.

Have you noticed the weather has been changing? Are you like millions of people who no longer feel as good as you know you should for your age? Welcome to the new world of electromagnetically managed chaos heralded by U.S. National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski in his book The Technotronic Era.

In this video presentation, Dr. Leonard Horowitz, an award-winning internationally-known public health authority, discusses these technologies for war-making and population control. He explains how toxic metals and human genetics can now be manipulated from space, providing an insidious arsenal with which to conduct genocide in the name of "national security" and the New World Order's "war on terrorism".

Anthrax, Smallpox, Vaccinations, And The Mark Of The Beast!

by Dr. Leonard Horowitz

If you are one of the millions of people concerned about recent bioterrorist threats in the wake of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks on America, prepare yourself for a reality check. This shocking video analysis of the little known facts regarding threatened outbreaks, and the science, economics, and global politics underlying bioterrorism and forced vaccinations, features one of America's most riveting speakers. Among the world's foremost authorities on the subject of bioterrorism, vaccination risks, and public health, Dr. Horowitz's expert diagnosis here dovetails perfectly with Bible prophecies. Pay special attention to his disclosures regarding the infamous "Mark of the Beast". Dr. Horowitz reveals sacred Bible codes that give expanded meaning to the infamous "666" prophecy (Rev. 13:18) while implicating widely trusted vaccinations, medical biochips, politicians, and institutions that have advanced some of the most horrific population-controlling ploys ever conceived. Anthrax, smallpox, and vaccinations are all part of the same deadly swindle. Watching this video may do more than raise awareness. It may help save millions of lives!

THE GREAT BETRAYAL: The Story Of The Constitution

by Eustace Mullins

Now Available

This monograph was originally delivered as a Legal Opinion, "Mullins on the General Welfare Clause of the Constitution of the United States" at the Observance of the Eightieth Anniversary of the Secret Writing of the Federal Reserve Act in the Jekyll Island Club, Jekyll Island, Georgia. It was given by Eustace Mullins in the Federal Reserve Room at the meeting of the Lawrence Patterson Financial Strategy Organization under the auspices of Criminal Politics, on February 1, 1991. Mullins reveals that no agent has authority over any American citizen; cites Article 1 Section 8 of the Constitution.

Everyday Enlightenment: The Twelve Gateways To Personal Growth

$14.99 (+S/H)
Code: EDE (1.0 lb.)

Here is Dan Millman's magnum opus—the most complete presentation of his teachings, showing how to live as a peaceful warrior, how to actually practice a more enlightened way of life. Everyday Enlightenment presents twelve "gateways" or arenas that radically redefine the meaning of success and the purpose of our lives. These twelve gateways: keys to worth, will, energy, money, mind, intuition, emotions, fear, shadow, sexuality, heart, and service, represent twelve books in one, a clear map of the territory of human potential.

Comments by Dan: Those who have read most or all of my books know that each has a different purpose, and expresses another piece of the puzzle of personal and spiritual growth. Like the story about the five blind men who came upon an elephant and perceived a different kind of creature depending on whether they touched the elephant's ear, tail, trunk, or leg—someone who reads The Life You Were Born To Live may see me as a "numerologist". Someone who reads Divine Interventions or Body Mind Mastery or The Laws Of Spirit will have a completely different experience.

Everyday Enlightenment provides, in a single volume, the most complete map to the major practical and spiritual challenges (and solutions) we face in everyday life. It culminates with a final chapter worth far more than the price of the book: "The Practice Of Enlightenment"—a radical approach to living wisely and well.

FREEDOM BEGINS IN THE MIND

If you were to submit, as fictional scripts to the Hollywood studios, some of the things we're supposed to believe on the news, they'd get rejected outright amidst howls of derisive laughter.

Take Dubya's recent bold transgression against the National Rifle Association that donates heavily to Republican causes. Dubya's pushing to outlaw certain firearms ("Here we go again!" you say)—a surprising move for a Texan, and definitely not favored by the NRA. So he's been getting a lot of heat for several days now.

Then, like some kind of "politically correct" macabre miracle-tragedy, all of a sudden on Friday 5/9/03 (but not reported till the next day, by the way) a "crazed shooter" appears at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio, and holds 70 people hostage in a building for 7 hours, while this former student fires "hundreds of rounds" at police from two guns that—you guessed it—Bush wants to outlaw.

How many people do you think will swallow this tale without batting an eye? After all, the story ran relentlessly, every half hour on Saturday news programs like CNN's Headline News. And how's the NRA supposed to counter this "coincidence", in good conscience, when the opposition (the government) ruthlessly ignores any rules of common decency along the way to achieving their goal?

To the average American, naive or lazy about the ways of the world, it's simply unbelievable that the above sequence of events could be anything but coincidental. You readers of this publication know better. But a lot of the public—content to wave their flags and sing their songs of freedom—are in no way inclined to confront such a reality.

So then the scene changes (remember, we're still trying to sell our movie script) to an elderly American veteran who has endured chronic illness for years from having been ordered to participate in nuclear testing conducted in the 1940s, 1950s, and even 1960s.

An investigation is being initiated, we're told by the blank-faced newscaster, because "perhaps" the government lied to at least 18,000 guinea-pig veterans in "underestimating" (by factors of 10 to 100!) how much radiation they actually received. This was done in order to deny them compensation for the hazardous experimental duty.

Now get this: The one-time corporal, who's now painfully debilitated from many years of radiation sickness from participating in 1950s tests in the Nevada desert, who was featured in the CNN Headline News story on Saturday 5/10/03, said this about the matter: "I love my country. I think it's the greatest country in the world. But we've been lied to and used."

There go the howls of laughter again, as we get booted out the door of another movie executive's office. But in truth, it's no laughing matter.

Is the tragedy the way these veterans were treated? Or, does the tragedy reside in the way many people think? How can one say they've been deliberately so mistreated, and yet continue to wave their flag of gushing patriotism as if nothing's wrong?

And that's the heart of the matter that runs like an annoying thread through much of this issue of The SPECTRUM.

For example, Rick Martin's front-page feature story examines what Freedom really means. And what needs to happen to heal the ailing experiment in Freedom called the United States.

Waving a flag and pretending everything is fine, when it's far from fine, is hardly a productive road to manifesting freedom. But it's certainly the road our government wants us on—so we don't get in their way of fencing us in like a herd of dumb sheep.

So, many will say: "Well, I know there's a lot wrong; but what can I do? I'm just a common person."

Well, guess what? You need go no farther than this issue's News Desk for several powerful projects that, if diligently carried out by enough of the "common folks" who make up the backbone of America, would set our current bully government on end and send all those soulless bureauc-RATS scurrying back into their sewers.

Then we have the spiritual message, this month from Soltec, which, in addition to some timely warnings of a very physical nature, literally moves our understanding of Freedom into another dimension—the realm from which we can achieve the greatest success.

And guess what? That's the realm of the mind—from which we regularly create our own prisons to defeat a true realization of Freedom, as the ill veteran above so plainly illustrated.

Indeed, we are in the time of the Great Awakening and Great Cleansing on planet Earth. Yet, no matter how well the external institutions may get cleaned, or the public shaken awake through even violent means, Freedom is not about to manifest until the longtime fences we hold IN OUR MINDS are brought down through the recognition that, when we finally so desire, they then become dissolved from the landscape of our behavior.

That's the truth that will ultimately set us free. And thanks to you who help The SPECTRUM financially to keep going, those fences don't stand much chance!

— Dr. Edwin M. Young, Editor-In-Chief

"The world is a dangerous place in which to live; not because of the people who are evil, but because of the people who don't do anything about it."

— Albert Einstein

With Einstein's insightful criticism in mind, how about the following poignant message from a great yet humble "servant of the people" who IS bravely trying to do something about the crooks in high places—at great personal cost until we-the-people awaken enough to rally for his cause:

LETTER FROM PRISON: REP. JIM TRAFICANT SPEAKS

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 4/26/03: [quoting]

The following is from a correspondent who wishes to remain anonymous.

The correspondent said: "I sent James Traficant a Christmas card a few months ago. I received this reply today."

Dear (anonymous),

Thank you! Thank you for thinking of me and my family. Life is hectic and fast-paced—and for you to have thought of me, and then to stop and take time from your precious life to write me—is an honor. And once again, I thank you!

Most of the people who write me say they cannot understand why the government targeted me with such a passion. Every rumor and innuendo that any political opponent would plant and foster became public and, before long, developed into an indictment without any physical evidence—only the testimony of subjects who were able to avoid jail by fabricating falsehoods about me.

Lies and half-truths became "facts"; and ultimately became a 10-count indictment. My evidence, that would have proved they were lying, was not allowed to be presented—either before the Congress or the Federal Court!

However, I know why I was targeted: I was not afraid of the government, and I had learned too much! The beginning of all of this was my first trial, in 1983, when I became the only American in history to defeat the U.S. Department of Justice in a RICO case—pro se (representing myself), and me not being an attorney. They were embarrassed!

The straw that broke the camel's back was when I proved that John Demanjuk was not the infamous Ivan the Terrible of the Treblinka death camp in Poland. The government was stunned and in shock. The real Ivan was nine years older, taller, and had black hair and a scar on his neck; his name was Ivan Marchenko. My investigation, in conjunction with John Demanjuk's beautiful family, proved not only that John was innocent, but also that the Justice Department knew he was not guilty—even before they took him to court!

Shame, shame! They lied to the court—gave false testimony and presented false witnesses—knowing that he would be put to death! Shame! The Justice Department then came after me with revenge, and a passion!

I lost my respect and my faith in our government. Because this case was "too sensitive", Congress would not even hold a hearing on my evidence. Congress, all of them, at the time—turned their back, worried about re-election! The Democrats were in charge then, and they knew of my investigation in Congress—hoping I would abandon it! I did not! I sent my findings to the Israeli Supreme Court—and they had no choice: They released John Demanjuk! In fact, they delivered him to me at the airport in Tel Aviv, Israel, and I personally brought him home, along with his son, his son-in-law, and Israeli bodyguards!

I am proud of what I did. No one else, in the House or the Senate, would even talk to the family—afraid of media power and the vindictiveness of the Justice Department. But even today, John Demanjuk is still being persecuted.

Shame!

The government agents who destroyed Demanjuk's life should be in jail! That was just the tip of the iceberg. When people saw what I had done for the Demanjuk family, they came to me with unbelievable information.

The information is so powerful that it is hard to believe, and the government knew I was getting sensitive information that could damage the American people's confidence in the government. People came to me with facts about Waco, Ruby Ridge, Pan Am Flight 103, Jimmy Hoffa, and the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. It may all sound far-fetched, but I do know what happened to Hoffa and J.F.K. The government knows that I know—and so they had to ruin my voice by destroying my credibility. I may yet divulge this information if I can get the proper forum.

As you know, I was the dreaded enemy of the I.R.S. My legislation in the last I.R.S. Reform Bill changed the Burden Of Proof law. Before that, you had to prove you were innocent in a tax court. The burden of proof was on the taxpayer. The I.R.S. said you owed—but the I.R.S. did not have to prove it. Unbelievable!

Now that the I.R.S. has to prove their charges, the following statistics tell the true story.

Comparing one year before the changes to one year after:

(1) Wage garnishments dropped from 3.1 million to 560,000;

(2) Taxpayer property liens dropped from 680,000 to 161,000;

(3) Foreclosures on individual family-owned homes dropped from 10,063 to 57! That's right: only 57 homes in all 50 states! Fact is, the I.R.S. was seizing our homes—over 10,000 every year—when they had neither proof nor the right to do so!

Congress allowed the I.R.S. to intimidate us and frighten us. Think about it! And then maybe you can begin to understand why I love America but hate the government—and why the government hates me. The Justice Department had to get rid of me, but I'll be damned if I would back down!

America is in trouble—not from without, but from within!

The Central Government has become too powerful. Citizens fear the Government. This is wrong. This is dangerous! I know the Government covered-up and promulgated LIES about Waco, Ruby Ridge, Pan Am Flight 103, Hoffa, and J.F.K. The Government knew I was right when I called Janet Reno a traitor. Janet Reno sold us out when she refused to investigate a $10-million payoff to the Democratic Party from a general in the Red Chinese Army (no less!). Think about it! And the Government knew that I had known why Reno was forced to betray America! I'm proud that I tried to do something about it! Someday the truth will come out. (I hope China never attacks us!)

Many of you have asked what you can do for me. I appreciate this. You can help my family:

Mrs. Tish Traficant

429 N. Main Street

Poland, OH 44514

Thank you for remembering me, for thinking of me, for caring! God Bless!

(Signed) Jim Traficant

Jim and his family REALLY need the support of ALL truly patriotic Americans—not the rah-rah flag-wavers with no clue about the TRUE extent of the cancer overtaking the United States. PLEASE spread this message far and wide, especially you crusaders for Truth in Ohio.

Regular readers of The SPECTRUM are well aware of several past stories we have presented on why Jim was taken down by our out-of-control government. The biggest clues are in his brief references to China near the end of his wonderfully candid letter.

New readers may want to go back and review, especially, the story titled THE CHINESE CONNECTION: Powerful Hidden Reasons Why DOJ Conspired To Get Rep. James A. Traficant back in the September 2002 issue of this publication for some incredibly shocking background you'll never hear on the evening news.

If the public knew the truth (and didn't die from shock), Jim Traficant would not only be completely vindicated, but more likely voted President overnight. And THEN we'd see the fur fly in Washington as the rats scurried back into the sewers!

And speaking of the sewers and the precious water systems of the United States, be aware of the foreign rats as well:

WATER FOR PROFIT

OR

RED ALERT ABOUT BIG FRAUD

From MOTHER JONES magazine, Nov./Dec. 2002: [quoting]

Contamination, riots, rate increases, scandals. From Atlanta to Manila, cities are confronting the true cost of water privatization.

by Jon R. Luoma

Even before the water turned brown, Gordon Certain had plenty to worry about. With his north Atlanta neighborhood in the middle of a growth boom, the president of the North Buckhead Civic Association had been busy fielding complaints about traffic, a sewer tunnel being built near a Nature preserve, and developers razing tidy postwar ranch homes to make room for mansions.

But nothing compared to the volume of calls and emails that flooded Certain's home office in May, when Georgia's environmental protection agency issued an alert to North Buckhead residents: Their tap water, the agency warned, wasn't safe to drink unless they boiled it first.

Some neighbors, Certain recalls, had just fed formula to their baby when they heard the alert. "I had parents calling me in tears" he says. "The things that have happened to the water here have sure scared the hell out of a lot of people."

A month later, another "boil water" alert came. This time, when Certain turned on his own tap, the liquid that gushed out was the color of rust, with bits of debris floating in it.

Atlanta's water service had never been without its critics; there had always been complaints about slow repairs and erroneous water bills. But the problems intensified three years ago, says Certain, after one of the world's largest private water companies took over the municipal system and promised to turn it into an "international showcase" for public-private partnerships. Instead of ushering in a new era of trouble-free drinking water, Atlanta's experiment with privatization has brought a host of new problems.

This year there have been five boil-water alerts, indicating unsafe contaminants might be present. Fire hydrants have been useless for months. Leaking water mains have gone unrepaired for weeks. Despite all of this, the city's contractor—United Water, a subsidiary of French-based multinational Suez—has lobbied the City Council to add millions more to its $21-million-a-year contract.

Atlanta's experience has become Exhibit A in a heated controversy over the push by a rapidly growing global water industry to take over public water systems. At the heart of the debate are two questions: Should water, a basic necessity for human survival, be controlled by for-profit interests? And, can multinational companies actually deliver on what they promise—better service and safe, affordable water?

Already, the two largest players in the industry, French-based conglomerates Suez and Vivendi Universal, manage water for 230 million people, mostly in Europe and the developing world. Now they are seeking access to a vast and relatively untapped market: the United States, where 85% of people still get their water from public utilities.

Private water providers have positioned themselves as the solution to the developing world's water problems, notes Hugh Jackson, a policy analyst at the advocacy group Public Citizen. "But it's a lot harder for them to make the case when here, in the world's center of capitalism, cities are delivering tremendous amounts of high-quality, clean, inexpensive water to people."

Yet over the past decade, hundreds of U.S. cities and counties, including Indianapolis and Milwaukee, have hired private companies to manage their waterworks. Currently New Orleans; Stockton, California; and Laredo, Texas, are in the process of going private, although opposition has sprung up in all three cities.

Water companies have been conducting annual "fly-ins" to Washington DC, to press their legislative agenda, lobbying for laws that would protect companies from lawsuits over contaminated water and block municipalities from taking back troubled privatized systems.

[Editor's note: Notice how closely this tactic parallels what the major drug companies requested (and got) from the Bush Administration to give them immunity from prosecution if they produce bad vaccines, etc.]

Most recently, a bipartisan group in Congress has been pushing a federal waterworks funding bill, advocated by the National Association of Water Companies, which would require cities to "consider" privatization before they can tap federal funds for upgrading or expanding public utilities and would also subsidize such privatization deals.

At the municipal level the lobbying pressure is equally intense, with water companies actively courting local officials (the U.S. Conference of Mayors' website features a large ad from Vivendi subsidiary U.S. Filter) and spending hundreds of thousands of dollars supporting privatization in local referendums. "It's hard for local guys to turn these companies away" Massachusetts' former water commissioner Douglas MacDonald has said. "They're everywhere, with arms like an octopus."

The argument behind privatization is that only corporate efficiency can rescue the nation's aging waterworks. But if success is measured in terms of delivering an essential commodity to everyone who needs it, then the industry's record is less than encouraging.

Around the world, cities with private water-management companies have been plagued by lapses in service, soaring costs, and corruption. In Manila—where the water system is controlled by Suez, San Francisco-based Bechtel, and the prominent Ayala family—water is only reliably available for two hours a day, and rates have increased so dramatically that the poorest families must choose each month between either paying for water or two days' worth of food.

In the Bolivian city of Cochabamba, rate increases that followed privatization sparked rioting in 2000 that left six people dead.

And in Atlanta, city officials are considering canceling United Water's contract as early as this winter. "Atlanta was going to be the industry's shining example of how great privatization is" says Public Citizen's Jackson. "And now it's turned into our shining example about how it maybe isn't so great an idea after all."

How Can Electricity Help Restore Health?

On a cloudy August day that brought a welcome bit of drizzle to drought-parched Atlanta, Mayor Shirley Franklin lugged a seven-pound bound volume off a shelf and heaved it onto a table in her office. The report, prepared by a committee she appointed shortly after taking office last January, contained the city's case against United Water.

It detailed violations of federal drinking water standards, including one instance in which levels of chlorine rose to six times the level the company agreed to in its contract. The report also listed a string of maintenance problems ranging from broken security cameras and gates to open manholes and water-main leaks that went unrepaired for weeks.

Some residents had to wait months for basic repairs, even though the company's contract specifies that some repairs must be made within 15 days. In fact, United failed to complete more than half of all required repairs in 2001, and it allowed rust and debris to build up, so that when the boil-water alerts forced the company to flush the system, brown water flowed from the taps.

Finally, the report noted, instead of improving collections of unpaid water bills as promised, United actually allowed collection rates to drop from 98% to 94%, costing the city millions of dollars.

United has succeeded at one thing, according to the city: cutting its own operating costs, chiefly by reducing the waterworks staff by 25% even as demand for water in burgeoning Atlanta keeps rising. Staff reductions were partly responsible for the company's service troubles, the report indicated, as were higher-than-expected repair expenses: Last year United demanded that the city provide an additional $80 million for unanticipated maintenance costs. The increase was blocked when a lone City Council member refused to sign the revised contract.

In mid-August, Mayor Franklin announced that "United Water has not lived up to its responsibility" and formally notified the company that it had 90 days to fix the problems or the city would terminate its contract. "They keep telling me they are part of a world-class corporation that can bring us world-class service" she says, offering a small smile. "So I'm giving them a chance to prove it." United has offered to spend $1 million on outside inspectors to reassure city officials that it isn't, as Franklin puts it, "cutting any corners".

It wasn't supposed to turn out this way. In 1998, when Atlanta's City Council voted to contract out its water filtration and delivery system, city officials insisted that corporate management would stave off a budget crisis and drastic rate increases, and would lower costs by more than 40% while improving service. (Franklin herself, then a management consultant, lobbied for one of the companies bidding on the contract.) It was the largest water-privatization program ever attempted in the United States and was expected to prompt a wave of similar contracts around the country.

Water privatization has been gaining steam since the early 1990s, when market advocates began touting it as the next logical step after deregulating electricity. Many city waterworks that were built or expanded in the 1970s are now decaying, and the cost of needed repairs is staggering. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency estimates that U.S. cities will have to spend nearly $151 billion to upgrade or replace pipes, filters, storage tanks, and other infrastructure over the next two decades. Cities will have to spend an additional $460 billion on sewage systems—another area where the corporate water giants are making inroads.

The prospect of skyrocketing infrastructure costs prompted U.S. officials to look overseas, where privatization is already a booming business. Multinational companies now run water systems for 7% of the world's population, and analysts say that figure could more than double, to 17%, by 2015. Private water management is estimated to be a $200 billion business, and the World Bank—which has encouraged governments to sell off their utilities to reduce public debt [clue—projects it could reach $1 trillion by 2021. Fortune has called water "one of the world's great business opportunities", noting that it "promises to be to the 21st century what oil was to the 20th".

The biggest contenders for this emerging market are Suez, a corporate descendant of the company that built the Suez Canal, and the media conglomerate Vivendi Universal, which owns the USA network and Universal Studios. Together, the two companies now control about 70% of the world's private water-delivery systems and take in a combined $60 billion in revenues.

Both have spent billions in recent years expanding in the United States: In 1999, Suez bought United Water for $1 billion, and Vivendi acquired the then-largest American company, U.S. Filter, for more than $6 billion. RWE/Thames Water, a German/British conglomerate, is currently completing its merger with the biggest remaining domestic company, American Water Works.

The water companies have been expanding even more dramatically in the developing world, where antiquated, often colonial era, water systems are no match for rapidly increasing populations.

More than 1 billion people lack access to clean drinking water, notes Peter Gleick, president of the Pacific Institute for Studies in Development, Environment, and Security. A recent report he co-authored points out that: "Half the world's people fail to receive the level of water services available in many of the cities of ancient Greece and Rome."

Yet corporate water's record in fixing those problems—or even maintaining the industrialized world's systems—has been mixed at best. In 1989 Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher pushed through a program to privatize the United Kingdom's water supply. Costs to consumers soared over the following decade, despite billions in government subsidies to the water companies.

In some cities, water bills rose by as much as 141% in the '90s, while thousands of public-sector jobs were lost. Even the conservative Daily Mail declared that: "Britain's top ten water companies have been able to use their position as monopoly suppliers to pull off the greatest act of licensed robbery in our history."

Last year the Ghanaian government agreed to privatize local water systems as a condition for an International Monetary Fund loan [clue]. To attract investors, the government doubled water rates, setting off protests in a country where the average annual income is less than $400 a year and the water bill—for those fortunate enough to have running water—can run upwards of $110.

In Bolivia's third-largest city, Cochabamba, water rates shot up 35% after a consortium led by Bechtel [clue] took over the city's water system in 1999; some residents found themselves paying 20% of their income for water. Street protests led to riots in which six people were killed. Eventually the Bolivian government voided Bechtel's contract and told company officials it could not guarantee their safety if they stayed in town.

Privatization has also spawned protests and, in some cases, dominated elections in several other countries, including Paraguay—where police last summer turned water cannons on anti-privatization protesters—and Panama, Brazil, Peru, Colombia, India, Pakistan, Hungary, and South Africa.

Here in the United States, some municipalities that initially jumped on the privatization bandwagon are now having second thoughts. In Milwaukee, which turned its sewage system over to United Water in 1998, an audit released in July found that a sewer tunnel was dumping raw sewage into local waterways, including Lake Michigan. Vivendi managed Puerto Rico's water and wastewater treatment for seven years, but after a territorial commission cited inaccurate billing and poor maintenance this year, its contract wasn't renewed.

Companies scrambling for lucrative municipal water contracts have also been caught up in corruption scandals. In June, Katherine Maraldo, a New Orleans Sewer and Water Board member, and Michael Stump, the former president of Professional Services Group, which ran the city's wastewater system, were convicted on bribery charges. PSG is now part of Vivendi, which is bidding to take over New Orleans' drinking-water system. And in 2001, two associates of Bridgeport, Connecticut, mayor Joseph Ganim pled guilty to racketeering, mail fraud, and falsifying tax returns in connection with a $806,000 payment from PSG, which was negotiating for the city's $183 million water contract.

Such incidents point to a fundamental problem with allowing private companies to take over public water systems, says the Pacific Institute's Gleick. In attempting to make attractive bids for long-term contracts, companies often underestimate the cost of maintaining a water system, and so are forced to either skimp on staffing or demand more money to keep turning a profit.

“At least when you have public utilities, the money they take in stays in the community” Gleick says. “With the private companies, the profits are going to go out of your community, out of your state, and probably out of your country.”

Nevertheless, Troy Henry, the southern regional manager of United Water, is convinced that private water providers can do a better job than public utilities. He readily admits that his company and Atlanta city managers have had problems “dealing with the complexities of the system” in Atlanta and says the company is spending “multiple millions of dollars [to] win back the citizens’ and mayor’s confidence”. A biomedical and electrical engineer and former manager at IBM, Henry argues that private companies can do for water delivery what Big Blue did for computing—revolutionize technology and attract “the best and the brightest and most talented people”.

Perhaps Henry can mend fences in Atlanta, which he insists is United Water's—and corporate parent Suez's—“No. 1 priority”. But Clair Muller, chair of the City Council's utility committee, contends that even if United Water ends up saving its Atlanta contract, it will merely have proved that privatization can work only under tight city supervision. And if tight supervision is possible, why privatize? “If government is run correctly—and that's always a big if—there's no profit motive” she says. “So if this is about saving money, we should always be able to do it cheaper.”

In the end, the debate is about more than money. Taking responsibility for a community's water, Muller argues, is simply not the same as running a sports stadium or a cable franchise. “Water is the worst thing to privatize” she says. “It's what we need to live. I think that's key to the whole debate—are we going to lose control over functions that are essential to life?”

Water's Big Three

A handful of global companies have come to dominate the water industry by buying up dozens of smaller competitors. The three top players are based in Europe, but San Francisco-based Bechtel is a close fourth, and Enron's water division, Azurix, was muscling its way into water contracts from Ghana to India before it collapsed.

A quick sketch of the Big Three:

- Suez

Number of customers: 120 million

Does business in: 130 countries, including France, U.K., Argentina, Indonesia, Philippines, and Cameroon; runs water systems in dozens of cities, including Buenos Aires, Casablanca, and Amman, Jordan.

U.S. activity: Owns United Water, which manages systems in Atlanta, Puerto Rico, Milwaukee, and Washington DC, and is bidding to take over New Orleans' sewer system

Also owns: Waste disposal, electricity, and gas operations; built the Suez Canal in 1858.

Trouble spots: Nkonkobe, South Africa. The city went to court late last year to get out of its contract with a Suez subsidiary, arguing that it could save $1.8 million by returning the water system to municipal control.

Buenos Aires, Argentina. In 1992, Suez won a 30-year contract to manage the city's water and sewage systems. But because it failed to install wastewater lines fast enough, sewage has been flooding streets and basements, posing a threat to public health.

- Vivendi Universal

Number of customers: 110 million

Does business in: 100 countries, including Hungary, China, South Korea, Kazakhstan, Lebanon, Chad, Romania, and Colombia.

U.S. activity: Owns U.S. Filter, the second largest U.S. water company, best known for its Culligan filters; runs water systems in more than 500 communities.

Also owns: Universal Studios, the USA television network, and Houghton Mifflin, as well as waste disposal, energy, and telecommunications operations.

Trouble spot: Tucuman, Argentina. Water prices more than doubled after Vivendi took over management of local water systems throughout the province in 1995. Residents protested, and in 1998 the company withdrew from its 30-year contract.

- RWE/Thames Water

Number of customers: 51 million

Does business in: 44 countries, including U.K., Germany, Turkey, and Japan.

U.S. activity: Acquiring American Water Works, which runs water systems in 27 states; the company also owns E'town, a water and sewage company that serves more than 50 communities in New Jersey

Also owns: Electric utilities in Germany, wastewater, gas, recycling, and oil operations.

Trouble spot: Lexington, Kentucky. When American Water Works announced its merger with RWE/Thames in September 2001, Lexington indicated that it might try to buy out the conglomerate's local subsidiary, Kentucky-American Water. In response, the company sent letters to each of its 104,000 customers, asking them to fight a “forced government takeover”. At present, the utility is still under RWE/Thames’ control.

[end quoting]

This is one of the most important issues for all of us to be aware of at the present time, and please alert your local government officials too. We surely need to keep control of our water supplies out of the hands of the same kinds of crooks (domestic AND foreign) who did their greedy best to run California into bankruptcy through the electrical utilities scam.

Furthermore, look at the clues as to just WHO is pushing such privatization; it’s coming from the highest levels of New World Order control machinery—the World Bank, International Monetary Fund, etc. If that doesn’t alert you to a hidden agenda of large-scale people control through consolidation and manipulation of basic resources—hallmarks of New World Order tactics—then we might as well simply go ahead and give the United States away to opportunistic foreign interests.

On the depopulation front, this same New World Order gang of criminals is waging a new assault on our right to pursue healthy alternatives to their poisons. Here’s the latest attack:

MASSIVE SCAM-ASSAULT ON ALTERNATIVE MEDICINE BEGUN IN AUSTRALIA

From the homepage.ntlworld.com/steveseymour/subliminalsuggestion/vitamins.html website, 5/2/03: [quoting] by Joe Vialls

This week, Australians nationwide were deliberately denied access to more than one thousand products ranging from vitamin pills to multi-mineral supplements.

Under cover of the fake “SARS Crisis” currently saturating the Western media, Australia’s Therapeutic Goods Administration has suddenly moved to outlaw and remove from store shelves about 80% of all vitamins and other related alternative products. Although less than a week ago customers were happily buying everything from vitamin A to Z, and enthusiastically chewing every conceivable mineral and trace element, these same customers today face empty shelves in more than 5,000 healthfood stores across the country.

American and European readers who may be wondering “What has this Australian stuff got to do with me?” are urged to read on a little further.

Australia is well known as a gullible, and thus attractive, proving ground for multinational scams—meaning that what happens in Oz this week, might well serve as a foretaste of what is yet to come in America and Europe next week, or next month, or even next year.

The extraordinary situation, facing Australians today, started at the beginning of this week, when the Therapeutic Goods Administration (TGA) suddenly decided to cancel the manufacturing license of Pan Pharmaceuticals, a large Australian company which not only manufactures its own line of medicines, but also provides a manufacturing service for 80% of all alternative goods providers across Australia. Basically then, by shutting down Pan Pharmaceuticals without just cause, the TGA ensured that alternative healthgoods purveyors and customers would be critically disadvantaged across the entire nation.

To suggest (or even think) that the TGA action was deliberately designed to shut down natural health products in favor of the huge pharmaceutical multinationals and their coal-tar synthetic drugs, at first seems ill advised, perhaps even absurd. But unfortunately for the TGA, we can and will prove here, in a proper step-by-step investigation, that the shutdown process was premeditated and deliberate.

Members of the Therapeutic Goods Administration are Australia’s medical goods “thought police”, endowed by government with incredible powers. There are documented examples of these people shutting down retail healthfood businesses for daring to suggest that cheap apricot kernels might retard (not “cure”) cancer, while at the same time other members of the TGA were busy endorsing the massive use of highly-addictive and extremely profitable amphetamines on Australian children, with alleged but unproven “learning disorders”.

Every scam needs a convincing trigger to start the desired chain of events. In the case of Pan Pharmaceuticals, the trigger was an in-house medicine called “Travacalm”, designed as its name suggests to combat motion sickness in its various manifestations. The TGA allegedly received complaints in late 2002 about this medicine, including claims of minor “hallucinations”. In an apparent response to these uncorroborated claims, on 21 January 2003 Travacalm Original tablets were recalled, with the official reason given as: “The product is being recalled following a number of reports of excess side effects related to the active ingredient."

Fine so far, and the TGA certainly seemed to be acting responsibly, but it was not.

You see, there are actually three versions of Travacalm, but only the "Original" version was recalled. Travacalm Original is unique in its active ingredient dimenhydrinate, which is not contained in Travacalm H.O. (hyoscine hydrobromide), or in Travacalm Natural, which contains only zingiber officinale (natural ginger).

So by banning Travacalm Original but not the other two Travacalm products, the TGA revealed to us all that it was really only banning the single ingredient dimenhydrinate, the active antihistamine not present in either the H.O. or Natural versions of Travacalm.

There is nothing unique or secret about the side effects of dimenhydrinate, which have been known for many years. Users can be subject to headache, blurred vision, palpitations, loss of coordination, dry mouth, low blood pressure causing dizziness and weakness, and ringing in the ears. What are less widely known, are the disturbing hallucinogenic side-effects of dimenhydrinate experienced by many experimental users with access to the Internet.

(A good description is posted at the <http://www.angelfire.com/ca7/legalize/drugs/dimenhydrinate> Internet website: "It takes about an hour for the full effects of this drug to be reached, maybe even more. You know when it hits you though. The most screwed up thing is a complete loss of balance. Walking around without falling is quite the challenge. Small hallucinations are possible. And auditory hallucinations come into the picture at higher doses. Short-term memory is shot. As soon as you finish a thought, you forget what it was you were thinking about.")

Obviously then, all medications, including dimenhydrinate, are potentially very dangerous and perhaps capable of producing hallucinations—which leads us to question why it was that on 21 January 2003, the Australian Therapeutic Goods Administration recalled only Pan Pharmaceutical's Travacalm Original, while leaving other medicines with higher levels of dimenhydrinate on the open market.

These other dimenhydrinate medicines include (but are not limited to) Calm X, Dimetabs, Dinat, Dommanate, Dramamine, Dramanate, Dramocen, Dramoject, Dymenate, Hydrate, Marmine, Nico-Vert, Tega-Vert, Triptone, and Vertab. All without exception should also have been ordered off the shelves, but were not.

Predictably perhaps, all of the other dimenhydrinate medicines are manufactured by pharmaceutical multinationals "friendly" to members of the Therapeutic Goods Administration, and unconfirmed rumors still persist about certain senior TGA bureaucrats being discreetly provided with free "medical seminars" in Fiji or Bali, complete with all essential extras—including unlimited alcohol and prostitutes.

Regardless of the fine detail of exactly how this situation was engineered, by February 2003 Australian Pan Pharmaceuticals had been artificially "dirtied", and was ripe for the picking. The scene had been set for the biggest recall of natural health products in Australia—perhaps in the world.

The scam itself started on Monday 28 April 2003, and a mere four days later, on Thursday 1 May, the TGA had identified and ordered 1,363 complete product lines to be stripped from store shelves across Australia.

Does anyone out there really believe that a bunch of lazy bureaucrats managed all that in four days, without considerable forward planning?

So, by Thursday 1 May, one thousand three hundred and sixty-three complete product lines had been officially recalled—meaning hundreds of millions of alternative health pills and capsules had to be stripped from the shelves, leaving Australian consumers understandably anxious. To claim that this TGA action "undermined public confidence in alternative health" would be seriously understating the case.

Naturally the Therapeutic Goods Administration provided no details of why this was happening, though the ever-compliant media immediately started circulating rumors about "that dangerous Travacalm", and hinted at mixing machines not being cleaned properly between blending batches of different products. One former employee was produced on television, to state that he was only allowed one hour to clean his mixing machine between batches instead of three hours, and that was that. The media fix was in, despite a total lack of evidence.

Hundreds of thousands of Australians were suddenly deprived of the ability to buy their chosen alternative health products, and "doubt" had also been deliberately cast over the safety of the alternative health products already in their homes. Many Australians started to grumble that the alternative health manufacturers were no better than the hated drug companies: all of them obviously out to make a quick buck without the slightest regard for public safety. Lines of demarcation became blurred, and customers started to mill around like lost sheep.

Hard evidence indicates that the undermining of public confidence, and the resulting confusion, were the prime object of the exercise, because there is no proof that any of these 1,363 product lines pose the slightest risk to human health. Ironically perhaps, in its headlong rush to shepherd Australians back towards out-of-fashion medical doctors and their wide range of synthetic coal-tar-based drugs, the Therapeutic Goods Administration reinforced the reality of perfect safety with official statements.

Putting its foot firmly in its mouth, the TGA publicly announced three times in less than a week: "there are no problems with prescription drugs obtained from your doctor", and "prescription drugs are not affected". This was unquestionably reassuring news for potential patients being herded back toward the medical profession, and even greater news for the pharmaceutical multinationals, who up to this point in history have been losing A$2,000 million per year in Australia alone to alternative health products.

Unfortunately there was a fatal flaw in these glib and very convenient TGA statements. Though Pan Pharmaceuticals is best known for its own alternative health products, and as a contract manufacturer for 80% of all other alternative health products across Australia, it is also a significant producer of a wide range of in-house and contract "prescription drugs". Those prescription drugs manufactured by Pan are still in your doctor's surgery, and they are still on the shelves at the pharmacy, despite the startling fact that all were produced in the same allegedly "unclean" mixing machines as the 1,363 banned alternative health products.

In summary, the Australian Therapeutic Goods Administration recalled a Pan dimenhydrinate product in January 2003 but failed to recall its fifteen multinational equivalents at the same time. The TGA also failed to issue a public warning about the possible hallucinogenic side effects of dimenhydrinate.

In late April the Therapeutic Goods Administration started a whispering campaign against Pan Pharmaceuticals, with the intent of severely undermining public confidence in alternative health products. This latter claim has now been proved by the selective TGA recall of all 1,363 Pan Pharmaceutical alternative health products, but without the recall of a single Pan Pharmaceutical “prescription medicine”.

It is difficult to forecast the longterm outcome of this deliberate campaign, because no one yet knows what the multinational pharmaceutical corporations will instruct the Australian TGA to do next. Certainly the massed media campaign has already severely undermined Australian public confidence in alternative health products, and for a few weeks or months it will be very difficult (in some cases impossible) to even purchase fresh stocks of vitamins, minerals, and so on. In turn, this forced lack of trade will send thousands of small alternative health retail outlets into bankruptcy.

Using these techniques, the multinational pharmaceuticals seek to “break the alternative consumer habit” if possible, and to an extent they will be successful. The “hard core” alternative crowd will not respond, of course, and if necessary will import their own products, but it is not the “hard core” that the multinationals seek to undermine.

It is “middle” Australia (and America and Europe) that the multinationals are targeting. Millions of intelligent folk used to go to medical doctors all the time, until they started to pick up the warning signs of the horrific side-effects of prescription medicines. These are the people who must be weaned off healthy products, and brought back under direct medical control.

The fake Australian Therapeutic Goods Administration scam will certainly help to do this, and if only 50% effective, should still return roughly one billion dollars per annum to multinational pharmaceutical investors. Not a bad return for the price of a few hookers in Fiji and Bali.

This author has done a tremendous service by walking the reader, one step at a time, through the unfolding of this very recent scam by the multinational medical mafia. How much of this did you hear on the evening news?

The more people are aware of the tactics these crooks employ, the less effective will be their assaults because they can't handle a large number of people who can spot what is going on and rise up in protest. Likewise, intermediary puppets like the above TGA “policing” agency in Australia would buckle under sufficient public pressure, as is the no-backbone nature of such morally bankrupt bureaucrats.

And while we're talking about rising up against such tactics of the medical mafia, consider the following breath of fresh air:

Dynasty Of Deception Broken;
Major Court Precedent Set

California Appeals Court
Bludgeons Quackbusters

Opinion by
Consumer Advocate Tim Bolen

A California Appeals Court, yesterday, April 22, 2003, bludgeoned the National Council Against Health Fraud (NCAHF), and their whole argument about what constitutes good and bad healthcare. The quackbuster's operating theme, the argument they use against alternative proponents, came under a major American court's scrutiny. The court, basically, in their decision, said the quackbusters' arguments were hogwash, and they had no business meddling in California's system.

The court also declared that top quackbusters Stephen Barrett (quackwatch.com) and Wallace Sampson MD (Scientific Review of Alternative and Aberrant Medicine) “were found to be biased and unworthy of credibility”.

The quackbusters lost in a PUBLISHED case. The quackbuster premise failed. Not some of it, not most of it—but ALL of it. The “quackbuster” measuring stick for how to evaluate healthcare has been completely discredited. Official quackbuster credibility is now ZERO.

In a minute I'm going to give you a link to the Appeals Court decision. But first let me give you a road map. Here's what happened:

The quackbusters' flagship, the self-proclaimed National Council Against Health Fraud (NCAHF) decided one day to sue about 43 “Alternative Medicine proponents” in California, basically claiming that all of them were engaging in health fraud “because what they were doing wasn't scientifically proven”.

Their argument was that: “The defendant has to PROVE their products work, or it's health fraud.”

California was the wrong place for them to try this stunt. Here, health freedom bills tend to pass through the legislature UNANIMOUSLY. We like to be healthy. It's our life style.

The very first case that came to trial was called NCAHF vs. King Bio (a manufacturer of about 50 homeopathic products). The NCAHF lost badly. Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Haley Fromholz wrote a long decision, virtually battering the quackbusters for wasting the court's time with their silly case. The quackbusters had accused King Bio of false advertising. At issue was the credibility of the NCAHF's witnesses, Stephen Barrett and Wallace Sampson MD. The judge thrashed their arguments.

You can read the judge's words in this original case decision by going to the www.quackpotwatch.org/quackpots/california_superior_court_judge.htm website location.

You can find out who King Bio is by going to their www.kingbio.com website.

The NCAHF appealed. And, boy, did it cost them. You need to read the decision. It is written in plain language, not legalese, and is clearly understandable. Read the footnotes also. Pass this around to anyone under attack by the quackbusters. Their attorneys will love this precedent-setting case.

To me, one of the more important statements is the last footnote in the Appeal Court's decision, for it attacks the whole quackbuster operation. It says: “The trial court concluded NCAHF failed to prove a false or misleading statement. King Bio's expert testified the products were safe and effective. The products were included in the Homeopathic Pharmacopoeia and complied with FDA guidelines. NCAHF presented no evidence that King Bio's products were not safe and effective, relying instead on a general attack on homeopathy, made by witnesses who had no knowledge of, or experience with, King Bio's products, and who were found to be biased and unworthy of credibility.”

But more occurred: At trial, NCAHF proceeded on the theory that there is no scientific basis for the advertised efficacy of King Bio's products. NCAHF performed no tests to determine the efficacy of King Bio's products and presented no anecdotal evidence. NCAHF instead argued that King Bio's products were drugs, and the scientific community required representations regarding the efficacy of drugs to be supported by acceptable scientific evidence. NCAHF asserted that the burden of proof should be shifted to King Bio to prove its products' efficacy.

On appeal, NCAHF acknowledges that, under current California law, a false advertising plaintiff bears the burden of proving the defendant's advertising claim is false or misleading. NCAHF contends, however, that we should shift the burden of proof to the defendant to facilitate the campaign against health fraud. NCAHF argues that federal law shifts the burden to the defendant in false advertising actions.

In response to the NCAHF's demands, the Court said: "We conclude there is no basis in California law to shift the burden of proof to a defendant in a representative false advertising and unlawful competition action. We conclude further that the Legislature has indicated an intent to place the burden of proof on the plaintiff in such cases. Finally, we conclude federal authority is not apposite."

What this means to the North American Health Freedom Movement:

This is a PUBLISHED case. It is PRECEDENT setting. It can (and should) be used in any case in the U.S. where quackbusters are involved. The quackbusters have been court tested—and they lost. Their whole argument against alternative medicine has been thrown in the trash. Their credibility is zero. The case was handled, on our side, by famous California litigator Carlos Negrete. You can read his comments on the case at the www.healthfreedomlaw.com website.

What I want to know is: Who funded the quackbusters' lawsuits?

My advice to you: If you are the subject of derogatory remarks on top quackbuster Stephen Barrett's website (www.quackwatch.com) or Robert Baratz's website (www.nachf.org), you might want to consider showing this story, and the court decision papers, to your attorney. This might be a good time for your attorney to send them a letter pointing out their new legal problems—and demanding removal of the information from their website within 24 hours. Your attorney might want to ask for compensation.

Stay tuned.

LOCAL OFFICIALS RISE-UP TO DEFY THE PATRIOT ACT

From the Washington Post for 4/21/03:
[quoting]

by Evelyn Nieves, staff writer

ARCATA, California — This North Coast city may look sweet—old, low-to-the-ground buildings, town square with a bronze statue of William McKinley, ambling pickup trucks—but it acts like a radical.

Arcata was one of the first cities to pass resolutions against global warming and a unilateral war in Iraq. Last month, it joined the rising chorus of municipalities to pass a resolution urging local law enforcement officials and others contacted by federal officials to refuse requests under the Patriot Act that they believe violate an individual's civil rights under the Constitution. Then, the city went a step further.

This little city (population 16,000) has become the first in the nation to pass an ordinance that outlaws voluntary compliance with the Patriot Act.

"I call this a nonviolent, preemptive attack" said David Meserve, the freshman City Council member who drafted the ordinance with the help of the Arcata city attorney, city manager, and police chief.

The Arcata ordinance may be the first, but it may not be the last. Across the country, citizens have been forming Bill Of Rights defense committees to fight what they consider the most egregious curbs on liberties contained in the Patriot Act. The 342-page Act, passed by Congress one month after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, with little input from a public still in shock, has been most publicly criticized by librarians and bookstore owners for the provisions that force them to secretly hand over information about a patron's reading and Internet habits.

But citizens' groups are becoming increasingly organized and forceful in rebuking the Patriot Act and the Homeland Security Act for giving the federal government too much power, especially since a draft of the Justice Department's proposed sequel to the Patriot Act (dubbed Patriot II) was publicly leaked in January.

[Editor's note: See the front-page feature story—titled Fuhrer Ashcroft's Patriot Act II Shreds America's Soul; Public Exposure Only Antidote—in our April 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM for details.]

Both the Patriot Act and the Homeland Security Act, which created the Cabinet-level department, follow the Constitution, says Justice Department spokesman Mark Corallo. [And if you believe that, there's still a bridge for sale on the Moon.]

Federal law trumps local law in any case [not as our Founding Fathers created the blueprint for the United States], which would mean Arcata would be in for a fight—a fight it wants—if the feds did make a Patriot Act request.

LaRae Quay, a spokeswoman for the San Francisco FBI office, whose jurisdiction includes Arcata, said that the agency has no plans to use the Patriot Act in Arcata any time soon, but added that people misunderstood it. Although some people feel their privacy rights are being infringed upon, she said, the agency still has to show "probable cause for any actions we take".

But to date, 89 cities have passed resolutions condemning the Patriot Act, with at least a dozen more in the works and a statewide resolution against the act close to being passed in Hawaii. [And definitely passed in New Mexico; see next story.]

"We want the local police to do what they were meant to do—protect their citizens" said Nancy Talanian, co-director of the Bill Of Rights Defense Committee in Florence, Massachusetts, which gives advice to citizens' groups on how to draft their own resolution.

Although cities across the country passed antiwar resolutions before the attack on Iraq with little notice from the Bush Administration, Talanian said that the anti-Patriot Act resolutions are "not quite as symbolic" as those that passed against the war.

"Normally, the president and Congress don't pay that much attention when it comes to waging war" she said. "But in the case of the Patriot Act, the federal government can't really tell municipalities that you have to do the work that the INS or the FBI wants you to do. The city can say: 'No, I'm sorry. We hire our police to protect our citizens and we don't want our citizens pulled aside and thrown in jail without probable cause.'"

In Hawaii, home to many Japanese Americans who vividly recall the Japanese internments during World War II, Democratic state Rep. Roy Takumi introduced a resolution on the Patriot Act as a way to raise debate, he said. Although the resolution may be seen as symbolic, he said: "States have every right to consider the concerns of the federal government and voice our opinions. If a number of states begin to pass similar resolutions, then it raises the bar for Congress, making them realize our concerns. I hope to see what we've done here plays a role in mobilizing people to take action."

Lawmakers and lobbyists on both ends of the political spectrum are beginning to sound more alarms about the antiterrorism act, which gave the government unprecedented powers to spy on citizens. Rep. Bernard Sanders (I-VT) has introduced a bill, the Freedom To Read Protection Act (H.R. 1157), that would restore the privacy protections for library book borrowers and bookstore purchases. The bill has 73 co-sponsors.

Earlier this month, Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr. (R-WI), the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and Rep. John Conyers Jr. (D-MI), the ranking Democrat, asked the Justice Department for more information on the government's use of the Patriot Act to track terrorists, questioning what "tangible things" the government can subpoena in investigations of U.S. citizens.

Sensenbrenner and Conyers sent an 18-page letter to Attorney General John D. Ashcroft, challenging the department's increased use of "national security letters" requiring businesses to hand over electronic records on finances, telephone calls, e-mails, and other personal data.

They questioned the guidelines under which investigators can subpoena private books, records, papers, documents, and other items; asked whether the investigations targeted only people identified as agents of a foreign power; and asked the attorney general to "identify the specific authority relied on for issuing these letters".

The Justice Department said it is working on the request.

But citizens groups, worried about a timid Congress, are not waiting for their elected officials to act before launching a campaign against the proposed sequel to the Patriot Act, the Domestic Security Enhancement Act. The Idaho Green Party has begun the Paul Revere Project to stop Patriot Act II before it can be passed.

The proposed addendum to the Patriot Act, which the Justice Department has insisted is only a draft of ideas, would enlarge many of the controversial provisions in the first Patriot Act. It would give the government authority to wiretap an individual and collect a person's DNA without court orders, detain people in secret, and revoke citizenship, among other powers.

The proposed sequel to the act has galvanized communities in a bottom-up, grass-roots way, Talanian said. "Before a community votes on resolutions, they engage in forums and petitioning to show the town council they want this. After, communities band together and do things like visit the offices of their entire congressional delegations and say our communities have these concerns and now we are asking you to help."

In Arcata, where forums drew little debate, the new law is an unqualified hit. It passed by a vote of 4 to 1, but has what looks like near-unanimous approval from residents.

Meserve, a weather-worn builder and contractor in his fifties who wears a ponytail and flannel shirts, hasn't felt so popular since he won his council seat running on the platform: "The Federal Government Has Gone Stark, Raving Mad."

"The ordinance went through so easily that we were surprised" he said. "We started going up to people asking what they thought. They thought 'great'. It's our citywide form of nonviolent disobedience."

The fine for breaking the new law,

46th Legislature
State Of New Mexico
First Session, 2003

Introduced by Max Coll

A JOINT MEMORIAL AFFIRMING CIVIL RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES; DECLARING OPPOSITION TO FEDERAL MEASURES THAT INFRINGE ON CIVIL LIBERTIES.

WHEREAS, the state of New Mexico is proud of its long and distinguished tradition of protecting the civil rights and liberties of its residents; and

WHEREAS, New Mexico has a diverse population, including immigrants and students, whose contributions to the community are vital to its economy, culture, and civic character; and

WHEREAS, the preservation of civil rights and liberties is essential to the well-being of a democratic society; and

WHEREAS, federal, state and local governments should protect the public from terrorist attacks such as those that occurred on September 11, 2001 and should do so in a rational and deliberative fashion to ensure that a new security measure will enhance public safety without impairing constitutional rights or infringing on civil liberties; and

WHEREAS, government security measures that undermine fundamental rights do damage to American institutions and values that the residents of New Mexico hold dear; and

WHEREAS, the house of representatives believes that there is no inherent conflict between national security and the preservation of liberty and that Americans can be both safe and free; and

WHEREAS, federal policies adopted since September 11, 2001, including provisions in Public Law 107-56, known as the USA Patriot Act, and related Executive Orders, regulations, and actions threaten fundamental rights and liberties by:

A. authorizing the indefinite incarceration of non-citizens based on mere suspicion and the indefinite incarceration of citizens designated by the president as "enemy combatants" without access to counsel or meaningful recourse to the federal courts;

B. limiting the authority of federal courts to curb law enforcement abuse of electronic surveillance in anti-terrorism and ordinary criminal investigations;

C. expanding the authority of federal agents to conduct so-called "sneak and peek" or "black bag" searches, in which the subject of the search warrant has not been notified that his or her property has been searched;

D. granting federal law enforcement and intelligence agencies broad access to personal, medical, financial, library, and educational records with little, if any, judicial oversight;

E. chilling constitutionally protected speech through overly broad definitions of "terrorism";

F. driving a wedge between immigrant communities and the police that protect them by encouraging involvement of state and local police in the enforcement of federal immigration law; and

G. permitting the Federal Bureau of Investigation to conduct surveillance of religious services, internet chat rooms, political demonstrations, and public meetings of any kind without evidence that a crime has been or may be committed; and

WHEREAS, these new powers pose a particular threat to the civil rights and liberties of the residents of New Mexico state who are or who are assumed to be Arab, Muslim, or of South Asian descent; and

WHEREAS, other communities throughout the country have enacted resolutions reaffirming support for civil rights and civil liberties in the face of government policies that threaten these values and have demanded accountability from law enforcement agencies regarding their use of these new powers;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO that it:

A. affirm its strong support for fundamental constitutional rights and its opposition to federal measures that infringe on these rights and liberties;

B. affirm its strong support for the rights of immigrants and oppose measures that single out individuals for legal scrutiny or enforcement activity based on their country of origin;

C. direct the New Mexico state police to:

(1) refrain from participating in the enforcement of federal immigration laws;

(2) seek adequate written assurances from federal authorities that residents of the state of New Mexico and individuals in the custody of the state who are placed in federal custody will not be subjected to military or secret detention or secret immigration proceedings without access to counsel and, absent such written assurances, refrain from assisting federal authorities to obtain custody of these individuals;

(3) refrain from engaging in the surveillance of individuals or groups of individuals based on their participation in activities protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, such as political advocacy or the practice of a religion, without reasonable and particularized suspicion of criminal conduct unrelated to the activity protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution;

(4) refrain from using race, religion, ethnicity, or national origin as a factor in selecting who is subject to investigatory activities unless race, religion, ethnicity, or national origin is part of the description of a specific suspect to be apprehended;

(5) refrain, whether acting alone or with federal law enforcement officers, from collecting or maintaining information about the political, religious, or social views, associations, or activities of any individual, group, association, organization, corporation, business, or partnership unless such information directly relates to an investigation of criminal activity and there are reasonable grounds to believe that the subject of the information is or may be involved in criminal conduct;

(6) provide advance or simultaneous notice of the execution of a search warrant to any resident of the state of New Mexico whose property is the subject of the search and refrain from participating in a joint search with any law enforcement agency absent assurances that such a notice will be provided;

(7) refrain from undertaking or participating in any initiative, such as the terrorist information and prevention system, also known as TIPS, that encourages members of the general public to spy on their neighbors, colleagues, or customers;

(8) refrain from the practice of stopping drivers or pedestrians for the purpose of scrutinizing their identification documents without reasonable and particularized suspicion of criminal activity; and

(9) report to the Legislature and the interim Corrections Oversight And Justice Committee, any request by federal authorities that, if granted, would cause agencies of the state to exercise powers or cooperate in the exercise of powers in apparent violation of a city ordinance or the laws or constitution of this state or of the United States;

D. direct public schools and institutions of higher education to provide notice to individuals whose education records have been obtained by law enforcement agents pursuant to Section 507 of the USA Patriot Act;

E. direct public libraries to post in a prominent place within the library a notice as follows: "WARNING: Under

(1) the names of all residents of New Mexico who have been arrested or otherwise detained by federal authorities as a result of terrorism investigations since September 11, 2001, and:

(a) the location of each detainee;

(b) the circumstances that led to each detention;

(c) the charges, if any, lodged against each detainee; and

(d) the name of counsel, if any, representing each detainee;

(2) the number of search warrants that have been executed in New Mexico without notice to the subject of the warrant pursuant to Section 213 of the USA Patriot Act;

(3) the extent of electronic surveillance carried out in the state pursuant to powers granted in the USA Patriot Act;

(4) the extent to which federal authorities are monitoring political meetings, religious gatherings, or other activities within New Mexico that are protected by the First Amendment of the United States Constitution;

(5) the number of times education records have been obtained from public schools and institutions of higher learning in New Mexico pursuant to Section 507 of the USA Patriot Act;

It's about time the states began to assert their rights and begin to return the federal government to its rightful position as a SERVANT to the states and citizenry, rather than the swaggering big bully on the block.

States are largely controlled by the withholding of federal funds if states don't comply with federal mandates. But why should the states forward so much of their revenues to Washington DC in the first place, and then beg for a small percentage back? It's about time the states adopted this tactic—by withholding funds to the federal government—thus taking back their rightful control over a federal government that's gotten way too big and bossy.

Make sure YOUR state legislative leaders know about this action taken so far in New Mexico and Hawaii and, as united groups of citizenry, strongly urge them to adopt a similar measure. The more states that stand up for their rights, the less power is allowed into the hands of out-of-control crooks in Washington.

Speaking of which, here's the latest rundown on how persistently the cancer is trying to grow:

RUMSFELD PUSHES FOR PENTAGON TOTAL CONTROL (MILITARY DICTATORSHIP?)

From the www.scoop.co.nz website, for 5/5/03: [quoting]

Below are a series of short news excerpts concerning the latest legal developments in the War on Terror on the U.S. home-front. Some of you will already be familiar with debate over Patriot Act II, which if passed would effectively end the law of habeas corpus and the right to legal representation in the United States. The stories below concern two other proposed law changes which have received far less attention.

Firstly there is a Pentagon Bill to give Rumsfeld what looks like effective absolute control at the Pentagon—eliminating Congressional oversight and granting him apparently unlimited powers to contract on behalf of the U.S. Government—and an Intelligence Bill which would, if passed, give the CIA and Pentagon powers to spy domestically inside the United States.

(From www.thenation.com, 4/29/03:)

The Nation's Daily Outrage: Two-Front Rumsfeld

Brace yourself. The Defense Secretary is pushing a 205-page Bill through Congress that would (take a deep breath):

- Strip Defense Department employees of their unions, whistleblower protections, annual pay raises, and rights to appeal disciplinary actions;

- Let the Defense Secretary dole out no-bid, no-oversight, no-accountability contracts worth billions (one observer calls it “the Halliburton Bill of Rights”);

- Exempt the military from environmental and wildlife protection rules on more than 23 million acres of American lands;

- Free the Pentagon from dozens of requirements it reports to Congress.

Dissing Congress seems only fair. As long as the Pentagon is offering contempt to taxpayers, the environment, and its own workers, why should it pretend it respects our elected representatives? Especially since Congress doesn't respect itself.

Rumsfeld's bill is moving up Capitol Hill with a bullet. It was being discussed this morning at a House subcommittee hearing, and soon could make its way into the front pages.

New Powers To Snoop
Sought Domestic Access For CIA, Army

by Tom Brune, Washington Bureau

Washington — The Bush Administration is secretly trying to expand the investigative powers of the CIA and military, allowing them to demand personal and business records of people in this country, government officials confirmed yesterday.

If enacted, the new powers would broaden the scope under which the CIA and Defense Department could legally gather sensitive records from businesses and other organizations in the pursuit of foreign intelligence and terrorism investigations, civil liberties advocates and experts said yesterday.

Government intelligence and law enforcement officials sought to downplay the significance of the administration's proposal yesterday, saying it probably was going nowhere.

Civil libertarians and privacy advocates called the proposal an "outrage" and complained it represents "a radical change in U.S. law" that should be openly debated as an important policy matter and not discussed only behind closed doors.

The provision containing the proposal was quietly attached to the Intelligence Authorization Bill being considered in confidential sessions of the Senate Select Intelligence Committee, officials said.

(From www.nytimes.com, 5/2/03:)

Broad Domestic Role Asked For
C.I.A. And The Pentagon

By Eric Lichtblau and James Risen

WASHINGTON, May 1 — The Bush Administration and leading Senate Republicans sought today to give the Central Intelligence Agency and the Pentagon far-reaching new powers to demand personal and financial records on people in the United States as part of foreign intelligence and terrorism operations, officials said.

The proposal, WHICH WAS BEATEN BACK, would have given the C.I.A. and the military the authority to issue administrative subpoenas—known as "national security letters"—requiring Internet providers, credit card companies, libraries, and a range of other organizations to produce materials like phone records, bank transactions, and e-mail logs. That authority now rests largely with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the subpoenas do not require court approval.

The surprise proposal was tucked into a broader Intelligence Authorization Bill now pending before Congress. It set off fierce debate today in a closed-door meeting of the Senate Intelligence Committee, officials said. Democrats on the panel said they were stunned by the proposal because it appeared to expand significantly the role of the C.I.A. and the Pentagon in conducting domestic operations, despite a long history of tight restrictions, officials said.

After raising objections, Senator Dianne Feinstein of California and other Democrats succeeded in getting the provision pulled from the Authorization Bill, at least temporarily, Congressional officials said.

In a closed vote, the committee passed the bill unanimously without the proposal. But Senator Pat Roberts, the Kansas Republican who is chairman of the Intelligence Committee, indicated to panel members that he wanted to hold further hearings on the idea, officials said.

There was some disagreement over exactly how the provision originated. Several Senate aides active in the debate said that Senator Roberts had included it in the Authorization Bill. But a senior Congressional official said the Bush Administration had initiated the proposal and that Senator Roberts had not objected.

A C.I.A. official said the provision had come from the Bush Administration, after the White House's Office of Management and Budget signed off on it.

The official said that Congressional leaders had asked the Bush Administration whether there were any additional powers needed to help combat terrorism. The Administration responded with the proposal to give the C.I.A. and military the power to use the national security letters, the official said. Another Congressional official said the move came at the urging of the C.I.A. The White House had no comment last night.

Because the F.B.I. now has primary responsibility for domestic intelligence operations, the C.I.A. and the military must currently go to the F.B.I. to request that it issue a national security letter to get access to financial and electronic records.

And then consider the following, which illustrates how public exposure can be a very effective antidote to the cancer:

PENTAGON REVERSES POLICY AT ELEVENTH HOUR, AVERTS "PUBLIC-RELATIONS NIGHTMARE"

From the www.tompaine.com website, 4/30/03: [quoting]

Rumsfeld Blinks

Averting what one veterans' advocate called a "public-relations nightmare", the Pentagon reversed itself yesterday by announcing that it has now decided to perform medical exams on troops returning from the Iraq war, as required by law. The military must test troops both before and after deployment, according to Public Law 105-85, but the Pentagon has admitted that it did not test troops bound for the Iraqi conflict, and it had said it would not do so upon their return. The Pentagon's admission and its intransigence led to criticism from veterans' advocates, members of Congress, and doctors who advised the military on soldiers' health.

That criticism inspired today's TomPaine.com opinion advertisement on the op-ed page of the New York Times, and accompanying articles posted at the www.TomPaine.com website. The Pentagon made its announcement yesterday at 6:20 pm, long after the Op Ad had been submitted to the Times and after the articles were posted online.

The announcement "looked like a pre-emptive strike" by the Pentagon's press office, said Steve Robinson, a former Army Ranger who now heads the National Gulf War Resource Center, a veterans' advocate. "At the eleventh hour and the fifty-ninth minute, it appears that DoD has averted a public relations nightmare by changing certain aspects of the deployment policy for soldiers. Someone must have gotten wind that this ad by TomPaine.com was going to run."

"When Mr. Rumsfeld says that America has conducted the Iraq war with 'compassion', just remember: He's the guy who disobeyed a law passed to protect our soldiers' health" said TomPaine.com editor John Moyers. "When he's about to get a black eye in the media, he shows plenty of compassion—for his reputation."

[end quoting]

The moral of this story is a lesson in well-placed public pressure on the crooks in Washington. As stated just above, IMAGE is everything to these conscience-deficient empty shells, and if public exposure can be used as an effective persuasion to induce moral actions from those otherwise empty shells, then that's surely a technique to keep handy in the citizens' arsenal.

ENTIRE PLANET ROCKED
BY SEISMIC ACTIVITY:
POLE - SHIFT COMING?

I sent intuitive Anna Detweiler an email requesting her to respond to the following article—her response is attached at the end.

From the wrightworld.net/poleshiftnews.htm website, 4/23/03:

[quoting]

Since March 5th there have been a number of worldwide seismic events recorded on USGS Live Internet Seismic Servers. We have been witnessing an amazing series of seismographic images from diverse places around the globe, showing a simultaneous worldwide seismic event in progress. I would urge everyone to keep a watchful eye for more such activity. It's a definite prelude to a pole-shift.

These seismic events are unprecedented and have not been witnessed before. It is scientifically impossible under current geological theory for tremors to be occurring in diverse places around the Earth, on different tectonic plates thousands of miles apart, unless there is something happening at the core of the planet upon which the entire mantle of the planet comes into contact. And for this to be happening repeatedly is certainly most unusual, and was never seen before March 5th.

From: planetx2003@yahoo.com

Dear Friends,

We are experiencing some very unusual Earth changing activities at this time. A new phenomenon has developed, one we have termed Global Quakes. The first one to be reported occurred on March 5, 2003.

We recommend that you stay informed of these developments by tuning into Prof. James McCanney's Thursday night radio shows [see last month's SPECTRUM], streamlined on the Internet at www.realityradionetwork.com and find your way to a program called At The Crossroads. You can also check our www.planetx2003.com website for any message alerts. For now, we are only posting the regular egroupp messages under the egroupp tabs. Should anything significant develop, we will create an Alert Page, set up for quick reference.

KIND WORDS FROM OUR READERS

"Your magazine is great! It's the best magazine I've ever seen. I thought it would be a long time before a news source like yours would appear, but I'm so glad it is there before that time! If ever I can do something for you, please write me. All the best for all the staff who help make The World's Best Newsmagazine. If ever I'll be in the position to help you with money, I'll think of you. I'm sorry at the moment I can't. God bless you." — H.E. from Amsterdam, Holland

"Dear Friends: Again thanks for another super edition of The SPECTRUM. I don't have a computer, so the only news I have of introduction to these people who are impacting humanity is through you. Wouldn't it be great if the media made all this information available to the masses? Oh, what a different world we'd have! And, if it was not for you, where would others of us be? In the dark, I expect." — D.W. from NC

"Just finished the Rick Martin article about McCanney in the May issue. I just wanted to congratulate you. What a great job you guys are doing." — D.D. from NV

"How you bless us all with another exceptional magazine! The very best reading on the market, and 100 pages yet—more like a book. I will never be able to understand how you do it." — G.B. from KS

"Thank you so much for a newsmagazine that will tell it like it is and not full of lies. You are very brave people and we hope you will continue to bring the truth to readers like me." — G.M. from AZ

"Rick, WHAT a feature story! [May 2003 issue.] The best yet I've read on Planet X (etc.), and I still have about 4 pages to go before I finish it. Thank God for the Prof. McCanneys in the world who've got the guts to tell it like it is, and thank God for The SPECTRUM who has the guts to publish it!" — J.T. from AZ

"We realize how much we would miss The SPECTRUM because, when it doesn't arrive at the usual date for whatever reason — WOW, do we miss it! Thank you so much." — L.&J.L. from NJ

"I don't know how you do it. What can I say? Words fail me. But, I surely can't say that about you! You always find enough words to fill nearly 100 pages. And I'm still behind on my reading! I simply can't keep up with you." — D.B. from IL

From: Anna D.

To: "alo"

Hi Al,

This e-mail makes me sit up very straight and take notice of what may be happening. You have probably noticed that in the last few weeks I have not been writing much. One reason is the beautiful and busy springtime that is upon us, but another reason has been that I seem to be tuning into something else; I can't quite put my finger on what it is.

It is something going on within the Earth that feels strange and uncomfortable. I used to only feel it periodically, but it is now where I feel it almost continuously. I have searched for the place where this feeling originates, including something within my own body, and most of the time it seems to be coming from the Earth.

There are days when I want it all to just go away so I can concentrate on what I need to do, but it is not even something that I can shield myself from. If I would explain it in terms where people have some idea what it feels like—it is like a tone that is not harmonizing with the tone that I am. And I do not feel comfortable changing my tone to match the tone that is steadily being put out.

So it feels most of the time like the Earth and I are singing a very discordant song together! If I change my tone to match that tone, it is a long, drawn out scream/wail type of sound. Like the Earth is crying out in agony.

I have looked to see if it is the collective consciousness creating the tone, but even that doesn't seem to fit.

At this point I'm watching with my "eyes" wide open. These global earthquakes certainly fit into the scenario of something big to come. Someday I will know what is happening.

Nibiru may very well be coming onto our doorstep and/or some other catastrophic event may be close, too. I am ready to go on through with it whenever the time comes.

May the Balance of The One Light be with us all! Love and Peace, Anna

[end quoting]

It's wise to be prepared for some perhaps drastic events immediately ahead. But please don't act out of fear, but out of common sense. The elite controllers are trying their best to keep us suffocating in a state of fear.

[Editor's note: The timely message from Soltec, shared elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM, will likely provide additional insight concerning what is happening to Mother Earth at this time. And, as well, insight concerning some of Anna's weather-related commentary shared in the following item, too.]

ANNA'S COMMENTS ON PLANET-X AND WEIRD WEATHER

This is Anna's reply to a question about Planet X and strange Earth weather that I sent to her 4/30/03: [quoting]

This post makes me go hmmm. The reason for it is that I have also been watching for Planet X and in the last two weeks the area where I thought was the place to look has moved increasingly close to the sunset. There is no way I could still be viewing the right area at 11 p.m.! Here, by the time it is dark enough in the right area to look, the area has moved into the horizon. Or am I not looking at the right area? Have any of you been looking?

I did, one night about three nights ago, have a moment when I was viewing and an orange flash seemed to hit my eyes. But it was not clear enough and it was so momentary that I questioned whether it was real or imagined. Also, there was a lot of light pollution when it happened.

I find it very interesting with the earthquakes that are ongoing and happening in places that are "diverse"! There were people in this area who felt the quake in Alabama, but I didn't.

We had something of a thunderstorm last night, but I have never heard thunder that sounded so strange. It sounded more like an air quake than thunder and the sound seemed to roll for miles. Also, it was thundering at very random places, not like in a concentrated place at all.

As for Planet X, I still believe it is coming our way; it's the date it will arrive that is uncertain for me. I know people all over are saying it should be seen clearly by now, but I have always stated that it is a very dark planet and will be very difficult to spot. My solution is to be prepared for something like that; then proceed to live my life to the fullest! Love and Peace, Anna

[end quoting]

Good advice. And many of you who are paying attention to weather behavior are likely noticing oddities similar to what Anna describes above.

ANALYST STEWART SWERDLOW'S NEWS BRIEFS AND COMMENTS

From the stewartswerdlow.com website, 5/1/03: [quoting]

In this regularly updated column, Stewart discusses current events based upon his personal knowledge and experience of Illuminati plans for the Earth.

The Truth Will Make You Unemployed: (4/1/03)

NBC fired correspondent Peter Arnett for granting an interview to Iraqi state-controlled television. In the interview, Arnett said that the coalition war plan had failed because of Iraq's resistance. In 1991, Arnett reported that the allies bombed a baby milk factory when the U.S. military said it was a biological weapons plant. In 1998, while working for CNN, Arnett said that in 1970 the U.S. bombed a Laotian village using Sarin nerve gas to kill U.S. defectors. He was fired. Apparently, telling the truth is dangerous to your career. There is also the case of the U.S. Country & Western group, the Dixie Chicks, who while on tour in London, told the audience that they were ashamed that President Bush was from Texas. Radio stations all over the U.S. blackballed them and encouraged ticket buyers for their upcoming U.S. tour to return the tickets and boycott the shows. The group was forced to issue two public apologies to the President and the U.S. public. Free country? Freedom of speech? Finally, Geraldo Rivera, famed loud-mouthed reporter, former talk-show host, and sensationalist, was escorted from Iraq to the Kuwait border for reporting on Fox News the location of the 101st Battalion. In the New World Order, news is what you are told it is. Truth no longer exists. Get used to it.

FBI International: (4/1/03)

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), which was designed to catch interstate criminals in the U.S.A. alone, is now expanding to include offices in Jakarta, Kabul, Sarajevo, Belgrade, Abu Dhabi, Kuala Lumpur, Tunis, San'a and Tbilisi. They will also expand offices in Ottawa, Seoul, London, Berlin, and Moscow. In addition, the U.S. and U.K. are combining their police cooperation, in effect, unifying the two forces. What we are seeing here is the formation of a global police/monitoring force. It is all under the guise of national security—but these other nations are all allowing it.

Osama Is Laughing: (4/1/03)

We should not be concerned about chemical/biological attacks in the U.S. The government is killing people instead. There has been a third fatal heart attack as a result of the smallpox vaccination that was supposed to keep us alive in case of a nonexistent terrorist attack. The Center for Disease Control is looking into the possibility of a link between the vaccination and heart inflammation. (Ya think?!) Instead of worrying about bogus terrorist attacks, we should be concerned about the various ways our own government is killing us.

Unopposed: (4/1/03)

Many states in the U.S. have decided to cancel the 2004 February Presidential Primary because they say: "President Bush is likely to be unopposed and it would save local clerks millions of dollars." Well, that's a lame excuse to have a single-party dictatorship. This is becoming a very scary and serious political situation. This staged war in Asia is going to be used as an excuse to eliminate what is left of the few freedoms we still have. Someone should get America's tombstone ready.

Interesting Global Bits: (4/8/03)

- The University of Hawaii announced that it discovered six more "moons" orbiting Jupiter, traveling in the opposite direction of Jupiter's rotation. This doesn't make logical sense. Wouldn't the pull of that gigantic world force smaller objects to move in the same direction? Unless, of course, these moons are not moons at all.

- The Weather Research Center and Colorado State University predict a severe hurricane season from June to November in the Atlantic Basin. Better get your supplies on hand now and prepare for heavy ELF bombardment.

- The Stromboli volcano in Southern Italy is erupting again. We should also keep an eye on Mt. Etna and the volcanos in Japan, Mexico, Indonesia, Hawaii, and Colombia.

- Starbucks closed all their shops in Tel Aviv due to management difficulties. No fooling! Did you ever try to work with an Israeli?

SARS SCARS: (4/8/03)

Here we have another created illness, purposely entered into the population in order to legally impose vaccinations, quarantines, and take copious blood samples. Most of the world did not buy the smallpox, anthrax, or chemical weapon scares, and refused to take shots. Here we have a way to show actual deaths and horrible symptoms to terrify the population into submission. You will be comforted to know that the NIH, CDC, WHO, and FDA and many other acronyms are developing a wonderful vaccine for a global illness they claim to know little about.

What Did They Know? (4/8/03)

Reporters are dropping like flies in Iraq. Michael Kelly of ABC News was killed in a Humvee accident, and David Bloom died of a pulmonary embolism.

Both, allegedly, not combat related. Another foreign journalist was killed when he got out of a vehicle and stepped on a landmine. We saw the same type of journalistic attrition in Afghanistan, including the ritualistic murder of Daniel Pearl. My question is: why were these young, healthy men killed? What did they see or find out that was unacceptable for public knowledge? We may never know. Condolences to their families.

From Tunnels To Looting: (4/14/03)

The American occupation of Iraq's major cities has resulted in incessant looting of palaces, administration centers, and government buildings. Worst of all, the Iraqi National Museum was completely stripped of ancient, irreplaceable artifacts from Sumer and Mesopotamia.

Another issue that has arisen is the famous tunnel system under Baghdad and other parts of Iraq. Most of the surface tunnels are new, built by Serbian, German, and Chinese engineering firms.

There are about 60-100 miles of these newer tunnels that are layered hundreds of feet deep. This is in preparation eventually to tell the public of a vast, secret cavern and tunnel system under Iraq that supposedly contains a stargate built millennia ago by Lyraen refugees from Mars. I will write more about this in the next few weeks.

Who's Next? (4/19/03)

With Iraq under U.S. control, sights are set on the rest of the Islamic world that does not acquiesce to the New World Order agenda. Syria, called a "rogue nation" by White House Spokesman Ari Fleischer, will be politically forced to give up its "unacceptable" ways. There is no way that Syria could defend itself against a U.S./U.K. invasion. We shall see Syria change from within, rather quickly. Same goes for North Korea, which is in no condition for war. Next in line will be Iran, which will probably put up a bit of a fight. This will be followed by some former Soviet Republics in Central Asia. Meanwhile, Israel and China smile with glee!

The Land Of The Free? (4/19/03)

Americans no longer live in a free country. Duh! We can no longer say what we feel without being ridiculed or persecuted. It is the USSA. If you are not a country-singing, ass-kicking, Bush-praising warmonger, then you are not a good American. That is the way it is right now.

The new Patriot Act is "shrouded in secrecy" according to Wisconsin Republican James Sensenbrenner. He says that the Justice Department has most of the Act classified as "top-secret". What? Who works for whom? The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) claims that the government will be allowed under this new law to "enter homes, conduct searches, download computer contents and Internet viewing histories without informing the occupant that such a search was conducted". This is scary and violates the now defunct Constitution that Americans hold so dear.

The U.S.A. Patriot Act also gives the government "broad new powers to use wiretaps, electronic and computer eavesdropping and searches, and the authority to access a wide range of financial and other information in its investigation". Patriot Act? This is an Act of Treason!

A few thousand Americans are protesting this new police-dictatorship under GB Jr. by refusing to pay their Federal Income Tax this year. They don't want their hard-earned money to go to the murder of civilians in helpless countries.

The Internal Revenue Service is warning them of dire consequences. What happened to the U.S.? When did we lose our right to speak out and disagree? When did we become controlled slaves of the government, instead of the government being freely-elected politicians working for us? The U.S. is becoming like the Iraq we supposedly "liberated". Who will liberate us?

“sickening stew of germs and bacteria” according to U.S. authorities. Contaminated lab animals are roaming freely on the grounds outside. The Marine lieutenant in charge of this area of the city said he was never told that this building was within his territory to be guarded. Meanwhile, no weapons of mass destruction have been found anywhere in Iraq. So, what is the REAL reason for the invasion? The Iraqi populace now wants the Americans and British forces to leave.

From Russia Without Love: (4/20/03)

This last week, another Russian lawmaker was killed outside of his apartment building. He is the 9th politician to be killed this way in Russia since 1994. There was no known reason for his assassination. All of the deaths have been the work of professional killers according to the Moscow Chief of Police. Most killings in Russia are motivated by money deals and to eliminate competitions or squealers. Very rarely are any solved.

WMD: (4/22/03)

No weapons of mass destruction have been found in Iraq. The cover story now is that an Iraqi scientist claims they were destroyed just days before the invasion. Really? If I were Saddam, I would have saved them to use on the invaders. Why would he want to destroy his only hope of defending his country? Makes no sense—because it is a lie. The Iraqi people now want the Americans out. Let's see what happens when they don't leave.

What will happen in Syria or Iran? What will they do with North Korea and Afghanistan? When will they bring up Libya, Cuba, Sudan, and the former Soviet Republics? Then, the Israelis and Palestinians have been acting up again. That will soon explode all over again, especially when Syria is targeted. Keep an eye on the Philippines, Indonesia, India, Pakistan, and Myanmar (Burma).

Things will heat up and come to a head from the end of May through October 2003.

Scheduled News: (4/22/03)

If you look at how news stories are scheduled and staged, the news media becomes like another Hollywood studio. The amazing story of Elizabeth Smart being found in broad daylight was abruptly ended by the start of the Iraqi war. Literally, the day that war was concluded, the bodies of Laci Peterson and her unborn son were found in San Francisco Bay after a four month search. Even Larry King, on CNN, said it was as if the news stories were planned for certain days!

The arrest of Scott Peterson was not much of a surprise. He has always been a suspect in the death of his wife and unborn child. However, the bodies were found in an odd manner. The headless body of Laci was found separated from the nearly full-term baby boy, named Connor. How did the fetus separate from the body, yet be found nearby the mother? Then, a suspicious tarp washed up a couple of days later. This all seems rather staged. A headless victim and a removed fetus seem like evidence of a ritual murder.

The victims disappeared on Christmas Eve, and were identified on Good Friday, right before Easter. Hmmm! Scott Peterson was arrested in San Diego. He had dyed his hair blond, grew a goatee, and had $10,000 cash on him. Was he headed to Mexico? I believe that he is a mind-controlled slave, specifically a male Monarch. The truth may never come out as the media already has him portrayed as a monstrous murderer who deserves the death penalty. Perhaps he was running for his own life. I think he knows more about what happened than he is allowed to say. Stay tuned.

Who's Crazy? (4/22/03)

The Government Accounting Office (GAO) has announced that almost 13,000 mentally ill children have been turned over to foster care or juvenile detention centers all over the U.S. because their families can no longer afford to care for them. Once turned over, these children are in the custody of the juvenile justice system or the child welfare system. Either way, the parents no longer have a say in their care and the families may never regain custody. The health system in the U.S. over the past decade has been to make healthcare almost unobtainable by the lower and middle class, therefore, making difficult home situations impossible to continue. Insurance companies refuse to pay for many medicines and procedures. Elderly and juvenile healthcare problems then are unaffordable and adults turn their children and parents over to the government. What if the New World Order decides to euthanize patients who are deemed permanently disabled and unproductive? Scary thought.

KALININGRAD, RUSSIA — Skywatch International Inc. reports that James L. Choron provided information regarding a crash of an unknown craft on Friday, April 18, 2003. The entire Russian Baltic Fleet and a large number of residents of Kaliningrad (formerly Koenigsburg), a city of over 3 million inhabitants, in the Russian Baltic enclave on the Baltic Sea, watched in awe as a “flying wing”-shaped UFO winged over rapidly and plunged into Kaliningrad Harbor at 6:17 PM, local time. The event was caught on videotape by a local RTR Russian State Television news crew, which was present on the massive naval base, filming a documentary segment on the fleet for airing on Russian television. The UFO, described as a “flying wing” with two elongated, dome-like protrusions on top, and three similar structures underneath, was flying over the Baltic Fleet. According to a Russian Naval Commander, the craft was apparently caught, accidentally, within the sweep patterns of ship-mounted search radars, which came on to track its progress, causing some sort of malfunction which resulted in the crash. “It was traveling at a tremendous rate of speed” he said to RTR reporters on the scene. “It was very low, not more than 1,500 meters (5,000 feet) altitude, when our radars came on. It simply winged over and dove into the water, as if it has lost either power or control.” The light gray-colored craft, with no apparent “seams” or rivet patterns visible, was estimated by onlookers to be the size of a small airliner, and traveling at speeds in excess of Mach 2 (twice the speed of sound), was absolutely quiet as it passed, but made a “tremendous noise” as it plunged into the water, causing a geyser of steam and water, mixed with small debris, which shot an estimated 500 meters (1500 feet) into the air.

A civilian onlooker said: “Whoever was in control of the craft made a deliberate effort to take it away from the naval ships and the shoreline before it went into the harbor.” One Sovremeni-Class Destroyer was lightly damaged by flying debris, but so far no casualties have been reported. Radiation levels at the site are high, but the source of the radiation, as well as its nature, have yet to be determined. Russian authorities from the Ministry of Health are quick to point out that the radiation levels are not dangerous, simply “higher than normal”. So far, debris recovered have been small, averaging less than a meter (just over three feet) in diameter, at the largest. Most debris recovered, to date, have been what appear to be “skin material” of an unknown alloy, and interior bracing and piping, composed of a very high grade and extremely pure aluminum. All metal debris have been dispatched to various institutes and universities for analysis, including the prestigious Bauman Institute of Engineering in Moscow, and the Moscow State University School of Metallurgy. It is considered highly doubtful that any significant remains of crew, if, in fact, the vehicle was piloted, will be recovered. "This looks like your basic 'hair, teeth, and eyeballs' situation, one Russian Navy diver said, somewhat grimly. It is interesting to note that, in spite of the high speed at which the craft was traveling, and it's extremely low altitude, there was no characteristic "sonic boom" associated with it's approach, and no noticeable vibration on the ground. This has led many observers, especially those associated with the Russian military establishment, to speculate that the propulsion system of the craft was based on some sort of "antigravity" device. "Whatever it was" said one Russian Naval Captain, "it was certainly not one of our craft, and I am also not aware of anything of this sort being present in the West." The immediate area of the crash will be dredged, starting in the next several days.

The entire episode is noteworthy in that it was not only captured on videotape by an RTR news crew, but was instantly aired, not only on RTR, but on all major Russian network television, via a live feed from the RTR crew in Kaliningrad. Updates have followed on each regular news broadcast since the initial downing. Russian Government officials are quick to point out that the downing was, in fact, accidental, and not a "shoot down".

Divers, however, report that the water in the vicinity of the crash is, in fact, noticeably several degrees warmer than normal. The water surrounding the crash site is, understandably, reported to be "murky" with extremely poor visibility. This leads many of the divers and supervisory personnel to speculate that at least one relatively large fragment might exist. Wintersteel enjoys a very good relationship with the Russian Navy, as well as with the mainstream Russian media, and will be posting photographs of the site, and debris recovered, as soon as they become available. Thanks to Skywatch International and James Chorton, Wintersteel.

Note: It seems a crash of this magnitude would be reported worldwide. It seems that if we wanted to obtain intelligence on the Russian fleet, satellites would have been used rather than a low-flying craft. The Russians and the U.S. are thought to own craft of this description.

Like A Hole In The Head: (4/26/03)

There was an interesting ceremony at the Karbala, Iraq shrine to Imam Hussein, a saint for the Shiite Muslims. In this ritual, which was depicted in color in U.S. newspapers, Shiite pilgrims slash their heads open with swords to let their blood flow over their faces and white tunics. This ritual was banned under Saddam's rule. There are many programming and triggering connotations to this dangerous and barbaric ceremony. First of all, it takes place in Karbala, the birthplace of Kabala, under the Jewish exile in Babylon. It is an outgrowth of ancient Sumerian/Babylonian blood sacrifices to Reptilian gods. Secondly, slashing open the head signifies a symbolic willingness to open the mind for programming. Globally, it depicts humans as sacrifices and as mindless victims. Aren't you grateful that U.S. occupation of Iraq has allowed this banned ceremony to be re-enacted?

Red Flag! (4/26/03)

I recently received some information from a reader about something that was received via email. Seems there is a warmongering movement in the U.S. supported by the Special Operations Association and the Special Forces Association. Basically, they want all Americans who support our troops to wear something red on each Friday. The hope is that eventually, some Friday down the road, all patriotic Americans will wear red that day, spitting in the face of "un-Americans" who do not support the war efforts overseas. So, if you don't wear red, are you a traitor? Hope y'all realize that bright or dark red in hyperspace color language represents anger, hurt, frustration, and violence. All the things the warmongers stand for. This is a blatant mind-control display that is designed to trigger vigilante and assassination programming. This is a NSA/military project. Beware!

European Tidbits: (4/27/03)

- The U.S. is looking for ways to punish France for not participating in the Iraq war. How mature! It is really Illuminati family game-playing.

- A marriage is taking place in the United Kingdom that will unite the Rothschild, Guinness, and Goldsmith families—three very elite families. Could this be a "peace plan" among the Illuminati?

[Editor's note: For several years now there has been word circulating that some of the younger members of the high-powered world-control families are very much against the old ways of doing things, are breaking down old walls of prejudice, and rebelling against long-entrenched family philosophies and perverse moralities of exploitation. One wonders if that situation factors into the wedding event noted above.]

Antarctic Grave: (4/27/03)

A 76-year-old woman is pushing to find the grave of her brother, who died in a military plane crash in Antarctica in 1946. The mission he was on was part of a post-World War II project to map and explore Antarctica. This project suddenly ended in April 1947 with the sightings of UFOs near Mt. Rainier in Washington State. The dead crew is buried under an estimated 150-260 feet of ice and snow.

New technology is to be used that would employ ground-penetrating sonar to find the crash site. Seems rather strange that after 57 years, the military would go to such effort to find a few dead bodies and some wreckage. Could this be an excuse to see what is really under the ice and snow? More important wreckages could be located in less dangerous places, yet no one is looking for these.

Red Again! (4/27/03)

Red is a triggering color. A 14-year-old boy shot his junior high school principal to death in the cafeteria, and then shot himself. There is no known motive, no note, no previous problems with the boy. This occurred in—are you ready—Red Lion, Pennsylvania! This could be another activation of vigilante programming or a programming gone

Fear & Life: (4/27/03)

Newspapers and the Internet are pushing articles this week about fear levels. They say we live in the safest society ever, yet people are afraid. They fear terrorist attacks, strange diseases, financial loss, and unhealthy food. In short, they fear everything the New World Order is perpetuating on them, without realizing who is doing this. If mind-pattern victimization were brought into the story, it would be made clearer. There is an old Chinese Proverb: Bu pa man; pa jan. Translation: Don't fear moving slowly; fear standing still. Our society is not moving. It is under a dome of control and fear purposely thrust upon us. If we all grab an edge of that dome and push real hard, it will flip.

Program Boy: (5/1/03)

By now you have all heard about the little six-year-old blond boy in Illinois who was left at a hospital by a man who claimed to be his father. The man quickly left, leaving the boy alone in the Emergency Room. Authorities believe the boy, Eli Quick, is really Tristen Alan Myers of North Carolina, who disappeared two years ago when he just walked away from his aunt's house where he lived. The blond boy is the son of a fifteen-year-old girl and an unknown father. He was born in Mississippi and moved to Louisiana, where his maternal grandfather "accidentally" drove over him, breaking his leg. He then went to live with his aunt in North Carolina.

She took him to a mental hospital after the little boy killed the family dog. Then the boy disappeared, and police think this darker-haired boy in Illinois is the same one. DNA testing could take several weeks. The boy missing from North Carolina and the one in Illinois both have star-shaped marks on the neck, scars on the body, a speech impediment, blond hair, and blue eyes.

Well, let's look at the programming clues: star-shaped mark, body scars, blond hair, blue eyes, "Alan" as a middle name (a programming designation), unknown father, murderous actions, missing for two years and then mysteriously appears with a new name. This poor boy has been tortured, traumatized, and programmed. Let's wait for the DNA results.

Noting each of Stewart's examples of Illuminati mind-control going on right before our eyes adds to our ability to spot these kinds of conditions ourselves—and perhaps save a child (or adult) from further trauma.

HYDROGEN'S DIRTY SECRET OR BUSH'S NOD TO BIG OIL

Excerpted from MOTHER JONES magazine, May/June 2003: [quoting]

President Bush promises that fuel-cell cars will be free of pollution. But if he has his way, the cars of tomorrow will run on hydrogen made from fossil fuels.

by Barry C. Lynn

When President Bush unveiled his plans for a hydrogen-powered car in his State of the Union address in January, he proposed $1.2 billion in spending to develop a revolutionary automobile that will be "pollution-free". The new vehicle, he declared, will rely on "a simple chemical reaction between hydrogen and oxygen" to power a car "producing only water, not exhaust fumes".

Within 20 years, the president vowed, fuel-cell cars will "make our air significantly cleaner, and our country much less dependent on foreign sources of oil".

By launching an ambitious program to develop what he calls the "Freedom Car", Bush seemed determined to realize the kind of future that hydrogen-car supporters have envisioned for years. Using existing technology, hydrogen can be easily and cleanly extracted from water. Electricity generated by solar panels and wind turbines is used to split the water's hydrogen atoms from its oxygen atoms. The hydrogen is then recombined with oxygen in fuel cells, where it releases electrons that drive an electric motor in a car.

What Bush didn't reveal in his nationwide address, however, is that his Administration has been working quietly to ensure that the system used to produce hydrogen will be as fossil fuel-dependent—and potentially as dirty—as the one that fuels today's SUVs.

According to the Administration's National Hydrogen Energy Roadmap, drafted last year in concert with the energy industry, up to 90% of all hydrogen will be refined from oil, natural gas, and other fossil fuels—in a process using energy generated by burning oil, coal, and natural gas. The remaining 10% will be cracked from water using nuclear energy.

Such a system, experts say, would effectively eliminate most of the benefits offered by hydrogen. Although the fuel-cell cars themselves may emit nothing but water vapor, the process of producing the fuel cells from hydrocarbons will continue America's dependence on fossil fuels and leave behind carbon dioxide, the primary cause of global warming.

[end quoting]

This plan from Big Oil's little puppet shouldn't surprise any readers of this publication. If they allow any advance from the present technology, it has to be one they control and which keeps the money coming in to them.

But the grassroots "problem" is becoming much larger than they can realistically control because too many technically competent people are becoming wise to their monopoly scam and won't be satisfied just being "thrown a bone" like Bush's ludicrous solution. In fact, his "solution" more effectively reveals Big Oil's covert scam to those who may still be sitting on the fence than any mere argument could have done!

Some of you may also have noted the sprinkling of fake-concern articles over the past several months in major publications like Popular Mechanics and Consumer Reports supposedly discussing the need for wringing a little better gas mileage from our automobiles. From these articles the gullible public is led to believe we're pushing some kind of technical limits to achieve what we manage to get out of a gallon of gasoline today. But you won't find these pretend-world consumer-oriented icons dare to mention that we have had 200 mile-per-gallon carburetors, documented in tests by such companies as Shell Oil and Ford Motor, as far back as 1936. And that's hauling around a lot more metal than weighs down a modern automobile!

And why do you suppose such a glaring oversight persists? Do you think it's simply poor or sloppy research skills on the part of these vast-resource publications? Or perhaps something more cowardly, sinister, and certainly

U.S. BANKS BUILD LEGALIZED LOAN-SHARKING

From CBS Market Watch, 4/30/03:
[quoting]

Big Profits
Without Busting Kneecaps

Loan-sharking is an extremely lucrative business—especially if you're a pillar of the community and don't need to fear the cops busting your operation.

As it stands, the U.S. banking industry enjoys protection from prosecution for a lending racket that would make mobsters salivate. So that its reputation isn't sullied through comparison with "pay-day loan" companies, the programs go by such respectable terms as "overdraft privileges" and "bounce protection".

These fast-growing programs are different than traditional checking-overdraft protections, which cover overdrawn funds by tapping into the check-writer's savings account or a backup credit line.

Rather, they invite people to write a bad check that the bank agrees to honor for a $25 to $35 fee, for what amounts to a cash advance. Account holders can write as many rubber checks as they want up to a total of about $200 to $1,000, depending on their average daily balance. They must deposit the overdrawn amount within about 10 days to a month or lose the overdraft privilege in the future....

A perversion of the banking system, these programs take living too large with credit cards to a new level—living beyond your means with your own income stream—and threaten to further undermine a nation's already eroding financial discipline. Where once writing checks you couldn't cover was a potential criminal offense, now there's no such thing as a "bad" check....

A growing practice, from industry heavyweight Washington Mutual to small community institutions like the Central National Bank in Kansas, fee-hungry bankers, pinched by low interest rates, have adopted these programs in various forms at a staggering pace, consumer advocates say.

An estimated 1,500 of the nation's 18,000 banking institutions now offer overdraft privileges. The figure runs as high as 25% in some states more reliant on community banks, which ironically, given their service mission, have been the worst transgressors.

"Consultants have sold smaller banks on this idea that you're not Citigroup or Wachovia, you're not in investment banking, so this is a way to grow fee income" said Charles Phillips, director of the Indiana Department of Financial Institutions. "They'll say that interest spreads are being compressed, and if you don't find non-interest income, you're not going to survive."....

Get 'em while they're hot: The problem, critics says, is that many banks are actively marketing these programs and thus encouraging people to write bad checks for a short-term loan, rather than discouraging the practice as standard bounced-check fees do. It's no different than pay-day lending—most kited checks get covered when payroll deposits come in—but it appears more reputable since white-collar bankers are doing it.

While the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency has weighed in against the practice, and the Federal Reserve is reviewing the practice under Truth in Lending laws, regulators have yet to come down hard on these programs....

The practice is especially heinous due to the banking industry's hypocrisy. While pressing for reform of U.S. bankruptcy laws to rein-in profligate spenders, the industry is offering products like bounce protection that encourage irresponsible money management.

In that respect, it's worst than loan sharking—it's like a drug dealer who gets the legal system to put the squeeze on junkies who don't make good.

[end quoting]

Actually, the above conclusion isn't strong enough. It's like the drug dealer goes to medical school to legitimize what he's peddling. But then, now we're into the ongoing corruption in an entirely different "professional" field of crime!

by Vox Day

At times, one is forced to wonder if the financial media operates on some sort of Orwellian contrarian basis, wherein every word's meaning is wholly inverted. After all, the "inevitable" post-war rally left the Dow 183 points lower than it was when the pre-war rally ended, and the "lackluster trading" that was sure to characterize the lead-in to the three-day Easter weekend somehow managed to pump the NASDAQ up 5% on "light" volume that was 18% higher than the monthly average.

There's a reason for all of this, of course. The truth is that America's capital markets are in no way free—they are massaged more carefully than a Dow component's books the week before earnings season.

There's been quite a debate on the existence of the Plunge Protection Team (PPT). It's interesting to read arguments for and against the existence of this notorious beast, but the fact that the financial media avoids discussing the issue like the plague is surely decisive proof that someone, somewhere, is trying to prop up the markets.

I tend to be skeptical of human nature, so I don't find the notion of a PPT incredible simply because there are so many people who profit from the notion of the eternal bull market. Also, being a serious night owl, I've watched the NASDAQ futures jump noticeably on small volume in the Asian markets while said Asian markets are dropping like stones. Coincidence? Sure, once or twice, perhaps, but not when the same thing keeps happening repeatedly.

It's hilarious to watch the European markets get faked out of their cleats like a hapless cornerback trying to tackle Barry Sanders in the open field—this repetitive chicanery is why the German DAX is now up 29% compared to the NASDAQ's 12% since March 12. It's profitable, too, as a short picked up on the opening highs can clear 100% by the afternoon. And speaking of shorts, did I mention that the DAX was up 17% over the NASDAQ?

So, why complain if I'm riding the system? First, the corruption offends my sense of justice. A free market should be free, not secretly managed for the benefit of inside players or even for the economy as a whole.

Second, this charade gives me the same nausea as walking into one of those palatial Vegas casinos and seeing the blue-hairs losing their meager pensions in the slots. The people who suffer most are those who can least afford to lose.

Third, and by far the worst, this market managing leads to inefficient capital flows, exacerbating the lingering malinvestment problem that is already pounding the tottering U.S. economy. Inflating the money supply and temporarily propping up equity prices will only extend the bust and ensures that the inevitable payback will be that much more painful for all concerned.

I'm no technician, but a wily old trader once told me to ignore the news and trust the charts. What's interesting is that every technical chart and buy/sell indicator—and every whisper of a hint of desperate Plunge Protection Team activity—is now screaming that the markets are heading for a brutal fall. It may not begin too hard or too fast, but before November, equity prices will blow past last year's sub-800 lows like the Marines going through the Republican Guard. The PPT has failed in its valiant, but hopeless 4-month effort to extend the October rally, and the time to abandon ship is now.

But what about last week's impressive performance? Wasn't it a powerful demonstration of market resilience in the face of downbeat economic data? Weren't earnings surprisingly super-duper? In a word, no.

I won't bore you with my exotic analytics, but here's an anomaly to ponder: The NASDAQ-100 is down 77.5% since the bear first roared in March 2000, but has closed up 61% of the time during short weeks—45.2% more often than the statistical average would indicate. How lackluster indeed! You see, the streetwalkers of Wall Street like to make their hay when the Sun is shining and anyone who might be paying attention is on vacation.

Wall Street has many sins for which to answer. But what the market makers truly don't seem to understand is that neither people nor markets can be controlled for long, and with every well-intentioned stabilization exercise, they risk killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

[end quoting]

The manipulations noted above concerning such an entity as a "Plunge Protection Team" is certainly not news to those of you who follow the financial markets carefully and likewise read The SPECTRUM. The outrageous excuses given by the financial "experts" each day can often be more imaginative than children's reasons why they don't have their homework done.

But as this very articulate financial commentator explains so well, the moral issue is also a practical one: the more the manipulations occur, the greater the fall when it happens. And that's surely something to keep in mind, because even if you're not directly involved in the markets, indirectly their deep plunge affects our entire economic stability.

And speaking of economic stability, how about this report:

REVEALING INFORMATION ABOUT THE CURRENT STOCK MARKET

From "chris lock",
(lockkpeter@hotmail.com), 4/27/03:

[quoting]

Some very interesting observations about debt, stock-based-compensation, and the health of the stock market from Porter Stansberry, editor of the Porter Stansberry Investment Advisory (www.Pirateinvestor.com):

- About debt: Total non-financial debt (public and private) for the U.S.A. now stands at $20 trillion. This is nearly three times our country's gross domestic product. [And that doesn't include the ongoing and still hidden costs of the Iraq war that Senator Byrd has been speaking out about.]

- The typical baby boomer has $40,000 in savings (including savings meant for retirement) and spends more than half his/her income on debt.

- Adobe Systems, the software firm, has seen net income grow from $105 to $191 million in five years—but of that $191 million, over $184 million is stock-based compensation to executives. If you subtract that, you have a real income of $7 million. Its value, according to Wall Street? $7 billion!

- Apple Computer lost $25 million in 2001 and paid out $371 million in stock-based compensation that year. In 2002, it made $65 million but spent $229 million on stock-based compensation. Apple's founder, Steve Jobs, just gave Al Gore 30,000 shares of stock for sitting on the board.

- Yahoo! last year had a net income of $42 million but spent 10 times that amount on stock-based compensation. The year before, $890 million was given to employees at the stockholders' expense. Since 1998, Yahoo! has lost over $3 billion on operations—when you include stock-based compensation. Officially, the company reports earning $55 million during this period. To paraphrase someone at Agora: Yahoo is a wonderful company but a hopeless business.

[end quoting]

As has been stated many times by honest watchers of the financial scene, many more financial debacles like Enron are just waiting to happen. And who will suffer? The "little guy" investors and employees—not the executives who take their unconscionably greedy portions right off the top. What a world.

U.S. TAX RETURNS OUTSOURCED TO INDIA CAUSING A STIR

From the timesofindia.indiatimes.com website, 4/17/03: [quoting]

Millions of Americans sweated it out on Tuesday, struggling to meet the deadline—April 15—for filing their annual tax returns, as accountants and post offices stayed open late to accommodate the laggards. Many will be hoping the Indians have lived up to their reputation for sound number-crunching.

In keeping with the great outsourcing trend that has swept across American businesses, thousands of U.S. tax returns are now being processed in India, a development that has led to quite a stir in the accounting community. Numbers are hard to pin down, but according to Kishore Mirchandani, president of Outsource Partners International, the firm that claims to have triggered the development, more than 10,000 returns went to India for scrutiny this year.

The accounting firm Ernst and Young alone is believed to have forwarded 7500 American tax returns to its subsidiary in India after transferring a tax partner familiar with U.S. tax laws there. Scores of other smaller accounting firms have also sent returns numbering hundreds to India after a pilot study last year showed encouraging results.

"The business is still in its infancy, but we are looking at over 100,000 returns going to India this coming year" says Mirchandani, whose firm has a 300-person operation in Bangalore and is looking to expand because of the growing demand. Several traditional American firms are also lining up to send returns to India, after pilot projects showed significant reductions in costs and turn-around times.

"More and more firms are jumping on the bandwagon after seeing the results. They seem very satisfied with the quality, not to speak of the speed and cost factors" says Bill Carlino, Editor-In-Chief of the journal Accounting Today, which has tracked the trend over the past year.

Expectedly, not everyone is thrilled with the outsourcing of what some regard as sensitive financial information. In the latest issue, the magazine Practical Accountant ran a column by a New York accounting professor questioning the trend on grounds of security and job loss to Americans.

"If you were to stop by any downtown skyscraper where Ernst & Young has an office, I guarantee that you could not just walk to the elevators and go up to the company's offices. You would be stopped by at least one security officer before you got anywhere near the elevator bank" wrote Prof. Lloyd Carroll, head of the accounting department at Manhattan Borough Community College. "Yet the company does not appear to be troubled by the notion of putting taxpayer security in peril by sending returns out of the United States."

"The very notion of transmitting confidential tax data—from Social Security and employer identification numbers to financial information—to any foreign country, even Canada, borders on the reprehensible at best, and is treasonous at worst" Carroll fumed.

But accounting firms say security is a non-issue. What they are moving to India are only images and the original data remains with the U.S. firm. The software used by the firms is also web-enabled and is accessed by the Indian subsidiary through a server in the U.S.

Firms also reported a 50 to 60 percent cost reduction, besides improved scrutiny because they are able to hire better qualified people. In the U.S., simple returns are often viewed by junior staff who are not CPAs.

Although the pilot studies of last year involved sending simple low-end returns, some firms such as Toronto's Horwath Ornstein are now said to be sending high-end returns. In turn, firms are also posting Indian-American CPAs qualified in U.S. tax laws to India to oversee the work.

"The accounting profession in India itself has improved a great deal and quality should not be a problem" says Ram Ganesan, a Maryland-based CPA, who practices in the United States but sees outsourcing as an encouraging trend.

[end quoting]

And what do you think about this happening to YOUR private tax information? Of course the companies doing this are going to say your personal information is safe! What else could they say? (Think of "honest" ol' Enron.) And there is no doubt that it means yet another chunk of jobs lost to Americans.

This is another clue illustrating that whoever is controlling the U.S. is controlling the world, otherwise this wouldn't be allowed to happen. Sounds like a very good issue to take up with your representatives in Washington DC.

And while you're at it, maybe this is a good opportunity to tell your representatives their continued employment depends upon HONESTLY answering one very important, simple question posed in this next item:

answer to the simple question: Where is the law that compels Americans to pay income taxes on their wages? Lear, the wife of William Lear who was recently sent to federal prison for "willful failure to file", broke her fast after receiving a long awaited response from Rep. Pete Hoekstra (R-MI). Though Hoekstra could not cite the law, he did promise to look into the issue further.

April 7, 2003: Federal Judge Lloyd George ordered the injunction against Schiff, author of The Federal Mafia which has been in print for 13 years, be continued pending the outcome of a Motion to Recuse Judge George scheduled to be heard April 10.

If tax honesty advocates manage to maneuver the IRS before a jury and force Congress to answer one simple question, the federal government may soon have to explain why it has been illegally taxing peoples' wages for 90 years.

Not a bad place to start in a national citizen's action to take back the country from the crooks! The other arm of this financial fraud is the Fed, which is having its own problems confronting The Truth these days:

FED EXTENDS RESCUE PLAN

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 4/8/03: [quoting]

by Martin Crutsinger

"Experimental Moves"

May Head Off Recession

Confronting new fears of recession, the Federal Reserve is refining an emergency economic rescue plan that includes further interest rate cuts and billions of dollars in extra cash for the banking system.

The Fed's effort would be aimed at pulling the country out of a nose dive that has seen 465,000 jobs evaporate in just the past two months, raising fears among economists that the weak recovery from the 2001 recession is in danger of stalling out altogether.

"Clearly, the Fed is in uncharted territory" said economist David Jones. "I think they will try some experimental moves."

One key element hasn't been used successfully in a half-century.

Based on comments by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and other Fed officials, the central bank is expected to move beyond its traditional buying and selling of short-term Treasury securities held by banks to the direct purchase of longer-term securities in an effort to influence long-term interest rates.

Also, Fed officials have indicated they are prepared in the event of an unexpected shock to the system to lend massive amounts of money directly to commercial banks to make sure that financial markets do not freeze up.

And as a third policy option, Fed officials have indicated they would explicitly state that if the federal funds rate is moved below its current 41-year low of 1.25%, it is likely to stay at the lower level as long as needed to get the economy on its feet—which would help investors' worries about a sudden jump in interest rates down the road.

The fact that Fed officials have been so open in discussing these options underscores the need the central bank sees to restore investor confidence that has been shaken by the fact that the Fed's aggressive two-year campaign to cut short-term rates has yet to produce a sustainable economic recovery. The Fed's target for the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge for overnight loans, is now at a 41-year low of 1.25 percent.

"The Fed is trying to buck-up fragile confidence" said Mark Zandi, chief economist at Economy.com. "They know that everyone is asking the question, what can be done if the U.S. economy slides back into a recession and it ignites a deflationary cycle?" [end quoting]

The Fed is really admitting, as discreetly as possible, that they don't know what they're doing and our economy is likely outside their ability to prop-up for much longer.

Besides, as most of you readers are well aware, the Federal Reserve is as phony a "governmental" agency as is its IRS extortion arm. The U.S. Treasury Department should be returned to the driver's seat—a goal that some financially savvy, patriotic Americans have been working long and hard to achieve. Perhaps an economic collapse will have to occur first.

Which leads to the following telling observation:

THE SHAPE OF THINGS TO COME

From WIRED magazine, May 2003:
[quoting]

The bell curve, that beautiful form of regularity, is getting turned upside down.
by Daniel H. Pink

In the mid-19th century, a few of Europe's finest scientists and mathematicians noticed something peculiar about the way the world organized itself. When they measured large samples of various things—the length of people's middle fingers, say, or the price of certain goods over time—the results tended to cluster around an average. When plotted on a chart, the data took the shape of a bell. This bell curve, as it was dubbed, defined "normal distribution"—and it became a fundamental law of natural science, an elementary truth about the nature of reality. Charles Darwin's cousin Francis Galton—who pioneered the related idea that everything from stock prices to your descendants' IQs would eventually revert to the mean—called the bell curve "an unsuspected and most beautiful form of regularity".

But today Galton's beautiful form might not be so regular. Although bell curve distribution is still considered normal, a surprising number of economic and social phenomena now seem to follow a different arc. Instead of being high in the center and low on the sides, this new distribution is low in the center and high on the sides. Call it the well curve.

It's popping up everywhere. Take the size of organizations. Large companies—pairing off like beer-goggled students at a frat party—are becoming gargantuan enterprises. Think HP-Compaq, Citigroup, and AOL Time Warner. Meantime, small enterprises are also proliferating. The U.S. Census Bureau reports record numbers of "nonemployer businesses"—teensy firms without any paid employees. So while the big grow bigger, the small multiply.

[end quoting]

What this author doesn't realize is that this kind of distribution curve is common for a "stressed" system, where extreme behaviors become the dominant modes for survival.

A good example is what happens to the distribution of students at expensive colleges in bad economic times. They're either wealthy and running around in an expensive sports car, or very poor and working in the school cafeteria (and even with their on-campus job, only able to attend the school with scholarship aid). So you have a splitting into a very polarized, two-class social scene.

In any case, this kind of situation is far from being healthy, and leads to trouble down the road.

And if you think you're seeing more and more breakdown of society these days, how about this item:

"WILL YOU BE MY GIRLFRIEND?"

From This Is True, 4/18/03:

[quoting]

The proper punishment, ironically, would be a tongue lashing: Sal Santana II, 12, of El Paso, Texas, asked another student if she would be his girlfriend. When she said no, he stuck his tongue out at her.

"Sexual harassment!" screamed Magoffin Middle School administrators, who immediately suspended the boy for 3 days and scheduled hearings to see if they could expel him to an "alternative" school. Even if the school backs off, says his father Salvador, he will probably sue them. "It's got to be done because God knows how many other kids have been involved in something like this" he said. (El Paso Times)

More than you think, sir. A lot more.

[end quoting]

Put yourself in the place of this boy's parents, and then consider if there remains any common sense in school boards who act in such a manner. Remember: these are the "professionals" we've entrusted to make many of the decisions critical to the education of our children!

And while we're on the subject of things which impact the educating of children, note this well:

SMALL AMOUNTS OF LEAD AFFECT KIDS' IQ SCORES

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 4/18/03: [quoting]

Lead poisoning may impair children's intelligence at far lower levels than current federal health guidelines, meaning that potentially millions more U.S. children than previously thought have lost a few IQ points by ingesting contaminated dust.

Not only do small amounts of the toxic metal lower a child's intelligence, but each additional unit of lead has a relatively more dramatic effect than at higher levels of exposure, according to a study published today in the New England Journal Of Medicine.

In the study, an increase from 1 to 10 micrograms of lead per deciliter of blood was associated with a 7.4-point drop in IQ. An additional 20 micrograms of lead above that had a much smaller added effect—about 2.5 IQ points.

The study is expected to guide an advisory committee of the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention as it decides whether to recommend a change in policy later this year. That could include lowering the guideline—which sets “a level of concern” for lead in blood—or recommending new ways to prevent additional cases.

An estimated 434,000 children younger than 6 currently have blood-lead levels above the federal guideline.

That number of affected children represents about 2% of the U.S. population. That represents a sharp decline from the late 1970s, when nine out of 10 children had levels that high.

The improvement is attributed to the removal of lead from gasoline and to growing awareness about the dangers of lead-based paint and lead used to solder plumbing.

Yet the problem remains grave, said Bruce P. Lanphear, one of the study’s authors and a professor of children’s environmental health at Cincinnati Children’s Hospital Medical Center.

[end quoting]

One suspects this is information the New World Order gang would have preferred not be made public, since their agenda includes the continual dumbing down of society as well as covert forms of depopulation.

But not to worry, they’ve got the school systems pretty well controlled (and parents too busy making a living to pay much attention) to the point where, according to some medical observers, “drugs are handed out like candy” by school nurses to keep the more bright and lively children docile, like all good sheep should be.

PESKY TELEMARKETERS: WAYS TO FIGHT BACK

From WIRED magazine, April 2003:
[quoting]

Junk mail can be tossed and spam can be filtered, but telemarketing has always had a technological edge. At least until the TeleZapper. The device—AS SEEN ON TV!—promises to erase you from telemarketers’ lists and stop the unsolicited solicitations. And it works, at least until the industry devises a workaround. But why spend $50 for uninterrupted evenings? The fledgling Telemarketing Resistance has banded together online to help you do it for free. Just follow the steps below. — N.M.

The TeleZapper fools telemarketers’ autodialing equipment by emitting the ascending three-note special-information tone you hear before: “We’re sorry, the number you have reached has been disconnected.” You can download this tone from the Web. Do a Google search for sit.wav to find one of these audiofiles.

Open sit.wav in an audio-editing program like Microsoft Sound Recorder. Edit out the second and third notes. (You don’t actually need those, and they’re sure to annoy family and friends.) Save the WAV file.

Play that one note on your computer and record it as the first sound on your answering machine’s outgoing message. Follow with an oh-so-witty greeting.

Now sit back and screen those calls. Over time, telemarketers will get the “zapping” tone and take you off their lists. [end quoting]

So there you have it, two simple ways to avert these pesky calls—at least for awhile!

LIFESAVING GLOVE FOR MEDICS

From Popular Mechanics magazine, April 2003 [quoting]

It takes 2 to 5 minutes for a medic to make a field assessment of a wounded soldier’s injuries. In combat and other mass-casualty situations, shaving off seconds can mean tens of lives saved—hence, the medical community’s interest in the Middas Glove.

The moment three fingers of the glove touch a victim’s chest, vital signs appear on a PDA and are transmitted via a computer and wireless links to a trauma specialist. If the patient is unstable, a clip-on monitor keeps the connection open, while the medic moves to the next victim. With this link doctors can monitor as many as 200 patients. Should a patient’s pulse, respiration, temperature, blood-oxygen, or electrocardiogram readings signal trouble, an alarm alerts the medic in the field.

Developed by Titan Corporation of Rancho Cucamonga, California, the Middas Glove is being evaluated by the Navy SEALs and is scheduled to be tested by the Clark County, Nevada, fire department later this year.

[end quoting]

Anything that reduces the chaos of a large-scale medical emergency will help save lives. Let’s hope this device works as stated, in which case it is surely a blessing.

STERILIZING WITH SOUND

From Popular Mechanics magazine, April 2003: [quoting]

High-frequency sound is a killer.

Working independently, teams in Pennsylvania and Georgia have developed sound-based disinfectant systems. The Pennsylvania State University design, which works in open air, was shown to be 99.99% effective in killing anthrax-like spores. The method developed by researchers at Georgia Institute of Technology and Georgia State University creates cavitation in a mild solution of isopropyl alcohol. Cavitation occurs when acoustic energy creates tiny voids or bubbles in a liquid that burst with explosive force. The Georgia device will be used to sterilize medical instruments that are difficult to clean. [end quoting]

Keep in mind that it’s a long way from a laboratory demonstration to a useable and affordable product on the shelf. But it’s good to know some people are working on novel techniques to eradicate some of the new “engineered” superbugs which are resistant to normal disinfectants.

Which leads to the following important announcement:

[Editor’s note: The following important information is follow-up to Dr. Len Horowitz’s timely article on SARS in last month’s issue of The SPECTRUM.]

DOCTORS MAKE NATURAL TREATMENT FOR SARS AVAILABLE WORLDWIDE

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Ken Becker (858) 442-3487
5/6/03

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA — A team of doctors well-known for their research in alternative medicine and emerging diseases has developed an effective treatment for SARS (Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome) utilizing a little-known antidote to coronavirus. According to the doctors, coronavirus can be successfully treated with methanolic extracts of two berry bushes common to British Columbia and the northwestern states—Amelanchier alnifolia and Rosa nutkana—both members of the Rosaceae family of plants.

Dr. Leonard Horowitz, a Harvard-trained, internationally-known expert in public health and emerging diseases (), and Dr. Joseph Puleo, a leading naturopathic physician and a founding member of the World Natural Health Organization (www.wnho.net) developed the treatment from findings originally made in 1995.

Esteemed Canadian botanist Dr. Neil Towers, Professor Emeritus at the University of British Columbia, pioneered the decade-old study that proved Rosaceae plants could overcome coronavirus infections in cell cultures, a system far more sensitive to toxicity than living organisms.

Doctors Horowitz and Puleo advanced Dr. Towers' studies by adding two additional natural ingredients and have named the new treatment the "Urbani SARS Formula". The name recognizes Italian communicable disease expert Dr. Carlo Urbani, one of the disease's earliest victims. Dr. Urbani, who received a Nobel Peace Prize for his humanitarian work with Doctors Without Borders, died in Thailand after contracting the disease while caring for patients.

While the doctors cannot make "cure" claims due to variations between individuals and FDA restrictions, they profess that the ingredients in the Urbani SARS Formula are time-tested, inexpensive, readily available, and well proven against the bovine coronavirus and other respiratory pathogens.

Dr. Puleo saw rapid improvement among patients who presented in March with SARS-like symptoms at the Natural Health Research Clinic he directs in Sandpoint, Idaho.

The primary ingredients in the proprietary Urbani SARS Formula are extremely hard to acquire in freshly harvested lots, which are required for maximum strength and effectiveness. The ingredients include:

Lomatium dissectum root extract

This has been known for centuries to have potent anti-microbial uses and to be useful as an immuno-stimulant. It also protects cells from another pathogen, the Rotavirus, which is a common cause of dysentery. SARS has been linked to symptoms of dysentery in a significant number of cases. It was used by Native Americans as a food and as a medicine for treatment of Tuberculosis and other lung infections. It has been used effectively in the treatment of bronchitis and pneumonia.

Devil's Club (Oplopanax horridus)

This is best known as an immuno-boosting "adaptogen" that mitigates the effect of stress throughout the body. It also functions as an expectorant and mucous secretion stimulator when prescribed for respiratory infections. Native Americans have long used Devil's Club to help heal insulin-resistant type-II diabetes. Dr. Puleo explains that most SARS victims have ongoing blood-sugar and immune-suppressive problems that give viral infections the edge over natural immunity.

The Rosaceae (Amelanchier alnifolia) and Rosa nutkana (or Saskatoons)

These berries are a naturally-occurring edible fruit once used by Native Americans for stomach problems and for maternal recovery after childbirth. In 1995 it was demonstrated that extracts from these berries were very active against coronaviruses.

Xylitol Sugar

Xylitol is a relatively new weapon in the war against infectious diseases. This five-carbon sugar was largely unappreciated before WW-II sugar shortages brought it to attention. Researchers in Finland determined that a 5% solution of Xylitol reduced 68% of Strep and Pneumonia bacteria attachments and 50% of flu viruses. Small amounts of Xylitol are made naturally in the body, which means it does not have the problems associated with man-made antibiotics. Bacteria do not develop a resistance to Xylitol and cannot introduce mutating strains to overcome its effectiveness.

The doctors and Puleo have granted worldwide distribution rights of the Urbani SARS Formula to World Natural Cures, LLC, a firm directed by Mr. John Mills. Mr. Mills can be contacted at 1-800-336-9266 or via e-mail (at john@cureforsars.net). The product is available in four formulations, including the Extra-Strength Tincture, the Standard Urbani SARS Formula, the Extra-Strength Homeopathic, and a nasal spray. The first three are prescribed the same way: "Apply nine drops under the tongue three times per day for up to nine days."

Because the proprietary formulas are not toxic in the manufactured amounts, the dosage does not have to be reduced for children, although the homeopathic remedy is especially recommended for young children and infants. Costs for the two-ounce bottles are extremely reasonable compared to the risky antiviral drugs and steroids currently prescribed for SARS.

The products may be ordered at the www.HealthyWorldDistributing.com website or by calling toll-free: 1-888-508-4787.

AN EFFECTIVE, NON-TOXIC ALTERNATIVE TO CHEMICAL BUG-SPRAYS

In a recent issue of Nutrition & Healing letter, Dr. Jonathan V. Wright tells us that, with repeated applications of an orange-oil spray, ants, other creeping critters, and even some houseplant pests will stay away. Some of the little buggers even die when directly sprayed with it. And, not only is orange oil generally environmentally safe, it smells good, too.

You can buy orange-oil spray in natural-food stores and some regular grocery stores. It is usually labeled as a "grease cutter" or "air freshener". (The labels say nothing at all about using it as bug repellent or "bugicide".)

And while we're on the subject of working to replace bad things with good things, here's the latest battle report in that most dangerous food war ever to be in our midst:

EAT MODIFIED CORN?
SOME PEOPLE WOULD RATHER STARVE

From WIRED magazine, May 2003:
[quoting]

Why GM Food

Could Start a Trade War

Nearly a third of Zambians were starving last year when the United States donated 74,600 tons of food to the southern African nation. President Levy Mwanawasa didn't want it. The food—mostly corn—was genetically modified to be pest-resistant. To Mwanawasa, that made it "poison". Never mind that numerous scientific bodies have deemed it safe. If he were to accept it, he'd jeopardize future crop exports to GM-wary Europe—and imperil his nation's economy.

Zambia is the most dramatic example of the growing conflict over GM food—one that threatens to ignite a global trade war. Here's a guide to the competing interests in a scuffle that makes cloning debates seem tame. — David Appell

Americans Buy It

Introduced in the mid-'90s as a way to decrease pesticide use, GM crops now dominate U.S. agriculture. Today, 70% of all American foodstuffs contain ingredients with altered DNA. Acreage grew from zero in 1996 to about 88 million in 2002. For the most part, U.S. consumers seem more concerned with the fat in their diets than genetic engineering. Not so in Europe. The EU placed a moratorium on GM foods in 1998 and has used its economic leverage with African governments to get them to do the same.

Europeans Fear It

Europeans cling to the time-honored idea of food purity, preferring fresh to processed, stovetop to microwave. Despite assurances that GM food is safe, consumers remain dubious; they haven't forgiven farming authorities since being misled about the spread of mad cow disease. The European Commission is trying to lift the moratorium, replacing it with legislation requiring that any food containing more than 0.9% modified ingredients be labeled. But given the way consumers feel about GM, such a change probably wouldn't make much difference.

Environmentalists Hate It

Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth have come down hard on GM crops—especially in Europe, where they have more lobbying power. They argue that we won't know for decades the danger GM food poses to our health, and they're particularly concerned about the environment. They worry GM crops will overtake indigenous strains, kill species of feeding insects, and create superweeds. The groups also object to the influence that Big Ag companies like Dow and Monsanto have over American farmers—not to mention the cozy relationships between these corporations and U.S. regulatory agencies.

Farmers Are Locked Into It

GM seeds increase crop yields, save money on expensive pesticides, and reduce the need for fertilizer. But the EU's moratorium has cost U.S. farmers $300 million in corn exports. With so much at stake, why don't farmers switch back? It's too expensive. And they can't grow both GM and standard crops—there's no accounting for airborne pollen.

Biotech Execs Are Banking On It

Meanwhile, science marches on. Public biotech firms spend $15 billion a year on R&D and are about to release a new generation of products that contain everything from new genes to drugs and industrial chemicals. Epicyte Pharmaceuticals expects to begin clinical trials next year on a herpes antibody derived from corn. Which means the heated GM debate will only get hotter. [end quoting]

As longtime readers of The SPECTRUM are well aware, we've regularly shared articles on the serious concerns and outrageous shenanigans circling around genetically modified (GM) and genetically engineered (GE) products—things that make Enron's behavior look downright saintly by comparison. And—as truth is always stranger than fiction—it's worth remembering (from an article we shared in the January 2000 News Desk) how GM/GE giant Monsanto's own headquarters cafeteria BANNED these products! What do you think that means, coming from those who know?

REPROGRAM YOUR GENES AND REVERSE DIABETES

From "chris lock" (lockkpeter@hotmail.com),
4/29/03:

[quoting]

Some writing in the Bible says: "Bread is the staff of life." I have often wondered about what that meant, and still actually have no idea what it was talking about. I have never heard any pronouncement or explanation on this sentence that has made the slightest sense. Maybe their "bread" was completely different [it was superbly naturally healthy], or maybe they were really sick and didn't know it. One thing's for sure:

according to modern observation and findings, over-consumption of modern refined bread is clearly the staff of diabetes. — Chris

From: Dr. Sears

Subject: Reprogram Your Genes And Reverse Diabetes

Dear Subscriber:

You can reverse diabetes. Recent gene research has revealed that diabetes is not an irreversible genetic disease. Diet, physical activity, and environment can change the way that your genes act. In this letter, I'll show you that it's possible to reverse diabetes through diet.

Everyone is born with a distinct set of genes. But, how you use your genes is much more important than which genes you have. You can turn your genes on and off, amplify them, or never use them at all.

Your current health is the result of how your choices have activated genes from your genetic library. Make the best possible choices from here on out, and you can "program" your genes to build a better you.

One Patient's Success

A couple of years ago I started to see a middle-aged patient named Will. He had a few health problems, but his nastiest problem was diabetes. Will had been injecting himself with insulin for years. And his previous doctor told him that he would have to take insulin shots for the rest of his life.

When I asked Will about his history, everything seemed to be in order. He was a letter carrier, so he got plenty of exercise. When I asked him to tell me about his eating habits, I found what I had been looking for. Will loved to eat carbohydrates. With every meal, he would have potatoes or mounds of bread. He had been eating loads of starches his entire life.

OTHER VOICES

BY GEORGE HUNT WILLIAMSON
& TIMOTHY GREEN BECKLEY

The author was one of the original witnesses at the meeting between contactee George Adamski and Orthon from the planet Venus. Williamson claims he also had contacts with aliens and received transmissions over his radio from friendly extraterrestrials. Others have claimed the same. Senator Barry Goldwater reportedly heard mysterious signals on his ham radio and our own astronauts have reportedly picked up messages not transmitted from Earth.

Other Voices is essentially a reprint of The Saucers Speak, by George Hunt Williamson and Alfred Bailey, originally published in the 1950s. Much of what the authors report has come to pass. Warnings of aliens about nuclear war and environmental doom remain urgent.

SEE NEXT-TO-LAST PAGE FOR ORDERING OR CALL TOLL-FREE: 1-877-280-2866

His doctors and the literature from the American Diabetic Association had told him to avoid sugar but not starches. But all those starches ended up turning into sugar in Will's body. Throughout the years, he had forced his body to adapt to handle an overload of sugar.

He consumed high starches, which stimulated more insulin than his body was genetically able to tolerate. This insulin overload switched on genes that eventually produced diabetes.

I started Will on a specialized very-low-glycemic index, high-protein diet plan. I changed his exercise plan to focus on the big muscle groups of the legs and back. They burn off much more blood sugar.

When Will took my advice and severely restricted carbohydrates for a time, insulin went way down and his insulin receptor switches were thrown in the other direction. Eventually he reset his diabetes genes to their "prediabetes" settings. Will is now "expressing" a different set of his inherited genes.

In a matter of months, he no longer needed insulin shots. His blood sugar, insulin, and other labs returned to normal. He no longer had (and still doesn't have) any signs of diabetes.

My Plan For Improving Diabetes

Here are some diet tips that will train your genes to bring an end to diabetes.

1. Stay away from starches. Starches are of little nutritional value. They convert to sugar. Your body stimulates too much insulin when you eat starches.

Manufacturers are producing highly processed starches. If it is processed, don't eat it. Processed foods often have harmful additives like sugar, preservatives, and other chemicals.

2. Eat foods with a low glycemic index. Health Alert 21 contains a great chart [see nearby] of foods on the glycemic index. Eat foods with the lowest glycemic indexes. Foods with high glycemic indexes cause blood sugar levels to spike.

3. Eat plenty of protein. Your genes need the nutrients in protein. Lean protein like fish are chock full of nutrients. Protein will counteract the damage done by starches. The more protein you eat, the better.

4. Exercise large muscle groups. Concentrate on exercising the biggest muscles. Leg muscles are the largest. These hefty muscles burn excess sugar in the blood faster than any others.

To Your Good Health, Al Sears, M.D.

[end quoting]

This is good dietary advice even if one is not presently fighting diabetes. If you know someone who is, please make sure they see this.

AIRBAGS FOR AIRLINERS

From Popular Mechanics magazine, April 2003: [quoting]

Take a close look at your seatbelt the next time you fly. If you are seated in a bulkhead aisle, the seatbelt may look a little thicker than normal. This is because it also contains an airbag.

The AMSAFE Aviation Inflation Restraint system is activated by sensors similar to those in automobile airbags.

Sensors trigger if deceleration would cause a passenger's head to fling forward at a speed that could result in an injury.

The bag fully deploys within 0.18 second, then deflates when motion stops. The deflated airbag takes up no more space than an airline blanket. Phoenix-based AMSAFE says a dozen airlines have begun using the new restraints, which cost about $1000 each.

[end quoting]

Hopefully these air bags won't exhibit the same "false detonation" problems as so many automobile air bags have, that caused the car companies to finally add switches to allow you to defeat them!

And then there's the following:

AIRBAGS GET SMART

From Popular Science magazine, April 2003: [quoting]

And they're getting smarter.

This fall, more than a third of new cars must, by federal mandate, be able to sense the difference between an adult occupant, a child, and an empty seat.

Airbags would then only inflate as much as needed. Weight and tension sensors under seats and in seatbelts are the first step, but Siemens, TRW, and Motorola are developing lasers, 3-D cameras, and electrical fields that can determine occupants' position as well as their size. "The existing technology can determine if someone's in a seat" notes TRW engineer Roger McCurdy, "but the real value will be when airbags determine when someone is out of position—that's the root cause of injuries". [end quoting]

It's quite a chore balancing the protective value of air bags versus their ability to be lethal weapons!

SCANNER OVERCHARGES STILL PREVALENT YEAR LATER

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 4/16/03: [quoting] by Troy Anderson

Los Angeles County Agricultural Commissioner Cato Fiksdal said Tuesday he expected the year-old "Buyer Beware" inspection program of automated check-out scanners to reduce the number of times customers are overcharged at the cash register.

"It's a little premature to say our program has yet made an impact" Fiksdal said. "We are still finding a significant number of overcharges, but we are hopeful this program, along with a public awareness campaign, will make a big impact in the near future.”

During 2002, the first year of the program, workers conducted 2,700 inspections and were overcharged on one or more items 25% of the time, according to Fiksdal.

The overcharge rate has remained virtually unchanged in 2003, Fiksdal wrote.

The current rate is little changed from the 11-26% overcharge rate inspectors found during undercover investigations in early 2002.

Now, 12 field inspectors are “going full blast” conducting inspections throughout countywide, Fiksdal said.

The rates of overcharges have varied from no overcharges at jewelry stores, to 5% at hair salons, 34% at grocery stores, 47% at office supply stores, and 55% at department stores.

In 2002, Fiksdal’s inspectors referred 501 misdemeanor cases to the courts for prosecution in cases involving overcharges of $1 or more. These resulted in stores paying individual fines of up to $7,937.

Also, 86 infraction cases involving overcharges of less than $1 were processed in 2002. These involve fines of up to $500.

In contrast, during all of 2001, less than 100 overcharge cases were prosecuted.

Fiksdal said he had only a few inspectors in early 2002 and didn’t get everybody hired, trained, and going until July. He is authorized for 17 inspectors and plans to hire more in the near future.

The program generated $1.2 million last year from scanner registration fees, and Fiksdal expects it to generate $1.3 million this year.

“I’m not surprised there is still a significant percentage of stores with overcharges” Supervisor Zev Yaroslavsky said. “Frankly, in prior years, we haven’t really enforced these rules and regulations. For the first time, that is happening. I think it will have the desired effect.” [end quoting]

This has become a chronic problem nationwide, and apparently quite a lucrative, if sneaky way for some stores to enhance their profit margin. It’s also hard to monitor the numbers if you have, say, a large grocery order, since the items zip by the scanner so fast. It’s ironic that the scanning technology was originally promoted as the “solution” to PREVENT this kind of pricing error problem at check-out stands. But we should have known better than to believe that.

COPYRIGHT WARS: CAN THE DMCA BE FIXED?

From WIRED magazine, May 2003:
[quoting]

by Rick Boucher

Five years after it was enacted, the Digital Millennium Copyright Act is living up to critics’ worst fears. The antipiracy law has become a broad legal cudgel that’s wielded against legitimate reapplications of intellectual property, from mix CDs to off-brand toner cartridges.

Representative Rick Boucher (D-VA) has written the Digital Media Consumer Rights Act (HR 107), which would make it legal to, among other things, create art archival copy of a CD or DVD. Good fix for a bad law—but why not just blow up the DMCA instead? — Lucas Graves

Interview

WIRED: Are you trying to defang the DMCA by reasserting fair-use rights?

BOUCHER: I’m reluctant to make a really broad statement, because no sooner would I say that than I would have those words quoted back to me by [Motion Picture Association of America president] Jack Valenti. HR 107 does not defang the DMCA with respect to people who are trying to commit piracy. It does, however, defang the DMCA with respect to the innocent, with respect to the purchase of digital media for legitimate purposes.

Where was the DMCA opposition on Capitol Hill in 1998, when it would have counted? I was paying a lot of attention then, and in fact I offered the same amendment. Not very many members of Congress were willing to listen to those concerns at the time. Now a much larger external community is determined to make changes—most notably technology companies, which were not a part of the debate in 1998.

The realization is that the market for technology products and services will be adversely affected as the DMCA bites deeper and inhibits the rights of digital media purchasers.

I might add that the entertainment companies will also get hurt: When consumers start finding they can’t use the media fully, they will value it less.

You’ve called the DMCA a testament to Hollywood’s lobbying power. How can you win? Consumer outrage will grow as copy-protected CDs make their way into the market in greater numbers. The public response is going to be visceral, and it will be heard by members of Congress.

Digital piracy has been illegal since the 1976 Copyright Act. Why not just scrap the DMCA? As a practical matter, it’s probably easier for us to make these surgical changes than to simply attempt to repeal the act. And, after all, we’re looking for a victory. We’re not looking just to make a statement.

[end quoting]

This has been a real problem for the usual greed of the Hollywood crowd wanting both to limit the public’s “free” use of artistic materials and yet not so anger the public they stop buying Hollywood’s offerings. By the way, how did the industry ever survive in the old days, before all these high-tech “safeguards” came on the scene? Such greed-oriented measures, besides irritating a public already spending too much for such items, will likely only inspire them to greater resourcefulness creating ways around the control measures!

And if you feel that a lot of modern music verges on noise, how about this:

NOISE MAY AFFECT LANGUAGE LEARNING

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 4/18/03: [quoting]

The high noise of modern life may affect speech and language development in the very young, according to a study that found the auditory parts of the brains of young rodents are slower to organize properly in the presence of continuous sounds.

Researchers at the University of California, San Francisco, reared a group of rats in an environment of continuous background noise and found that their brain circuits that receive and interpret sound did not develop at the same rate as animals that were raised in a quieter environment.

Edward F. Chang and Michael Merzenich, co-authors of the study appearing in the journal Science, said the continuous noise delayed the organization of auditory neurons during a critical two- to three-week period after the rat pups were born. [end quoting]

There have been other studies that say the best and fastest way to learn languages is to listen to the right kind of classical music and play the correct kind of foreign language course in the background at the correct volume. It is said that, in this environment, learning will take place at a tremendous speed.

Of course, studies like these also indicate how some brainwashing and mind-control techniques can be easily inserted into society.

ANIMAL CRACKERS

Email from a reader, 5/2/03: [quoting] by Jennifer Tovell

The asphalt walkway was a beautiful thing to roller skate on, with its little hills and valleys that you could almost effortlessly glide on, ever so smoothly.

I frequented the housing complex with my metal skates clipped on over the toes of my shoes and the leather strap buckled around my ankles. What a beautiful feeling, to glide along in the Sun, feeling the summer breeze in my hair. It made me feel like I hadn't a care in the world.

This one afternoon, I took my time there enjoying the warm afternoon with no reason to hurry home for supper. I knew there'd be no "real" dinner waiting. These last few days were the leanest my family had ever seen since my father left.

My mother was great at making something-out-of-practically-nothing taste really good, but even the practically-nothings seemed to be just about gone.

But as a kid, you don't worry too much about things like that. My sister and I would make grape jelly sandwiches (if there was any bread and jelly, and peanut butter was usually just a wish) but there was always a book to read to take my mind off of my growling tummy. I especially liked to read Dr. Seuss. But this day, I knew, would be a long one, with lots tummy-growling, lots of reading.

As the Sun began to settle, resting after blazing long in the summer sky, I turned to go home. There may not have been food there, but it was my home and my family was there, and a book.

I skated back on the smooth, winding asphalt walkway making my way home. As the light in the sky grew dimmer, I could almost feel the night entering my soul.

I crossed the street and headed for our doorway. We lived in a small, second floor apartment next to Sam's Fish Market. My mom used to go in there and ask if she could buy food "on credit", with a promise to pay him as soon as she got some money. Sam was usually kind enough to allow it; seeing she had a large family, how could he turn her away? But she couldn't go in there these days. No, the bill was getting just a little too high and my mother was a proud woman.

I turned toward our stoop and the big glass door that loomed just past it when I noticed there was something on the step.

Someone must have left something here, I thought. I wonder if they're coming back?

Then, as though a light switch was thrown on in my head, it registered just what it was. Two large, two very large, brown grocery bags, just brimming with food!

There was long, crusty bread hanging over the top of one of them, and when I peeked inside I could see spaghetti and rice and cans of vegetables and sauce and, and, cookies! Animal crackers they were, to be precise. My favorite!

I think my heart just leaped to the sky with happiness as I realized that maybe, just maybe, this food was left for us. But who would have left it here? It didn't matter. Mom will be so happy!

I tore off my skates and grabbed one of the bags and ran upstairs just as fast as I could, making sure not to let anything spill out.

"Mom, Mom!" I cried, as I ran huffing and puffing up the stairs. I was so out of breath from the excitement that I could barely answer her question of where the food came from as I practically crash-landed the bag on the kitchen table.

"Mom, Mom!" I cried. "You're not going to believe this, but there's another bag! There's another bag! I don't know who forgot it on our step, but can we keep them?"

My mother was silent but so overjoyed that tears came to her eyes. She didn't jump and shout like I did, and I don't think she even got out of breath when she went down the stairs to get the other bag.

She just closed her eyes and said: "Thank you for hearing my prayer."

At that moment, I joyfully figured we were keeping the food as she seemed to know who left it for us.

God does answer our prayers—in His own way and in His own time. Perhaps our biggest challenge is NOTICING when He's done so!

Looting Iraq Of Priceless “Weapons Of Mass Destruction”

Editor's note: The following collection of reports is perhaps most useful for those of you who wondered if we had finally lost our minds, here at The SPECTRUM, back when our March 2003 issue discussed the REAL reasons for invading Iraq. (Remember that was written in January for February printing and distribution.) Of course, there was an unusually large number of orders for extra copies of that issue—probably from the two or three of you who were likewise accused of having gone off the deep end as you attempted to share those extra copies with relatives and friends.

But now look at who gets to say “I told you so!”

The front-page subject matter of that March 2003 issue was so “far out” and so different from the relentless conventional media propaganda (to “liberate” Iraq from “bad guys”) and even the mainline conspiracy chatter (about oil), that it seemed helpful to devote the page-3 editorial to an overview of that which would help put Rick Martin's front-page feature story into the Larger Picture context of then unfolding events.

That editorial was titled Real Miracle Behind Saddam's “Weapons Of Mass Destruction” and therein was mentioned the wealth of ancient treasures of that ancient land which comprised the TRUE central focus of the so-called war in Iraq. These treasures—many of which aren't even known to the public, including scholars who could really make hay with them—were indeed “weapons of mass destruction” of the cultural and religious lies long promulgated by those who had long controlled planet Earth. And thus the need for their “removal” so as not to upset the status quo that kept the common person in various states of enslavement.

With that in mind—and also remembering that conventional professional journalists need to do their reporting in a relatively conservative manner if they want to help their stories get into print despite a heavily controlled media apparatus—the following items may provide some insight about that “war within a war” in this very ancient land full of surprises about the true history of planet Earth.

The parallel story elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM called For Iraqis—No Liberation, A New Colonial Oppression expands the scope of what you are about to read below to include social and political facets of the “looting” of an ancient culture.

Meanwhile, to call such precision looting of ancient artifacts a tragedy is to hardly scratch the surface of the matter. Let's begin with the following report, key points being emphasized in bold text:

“Cradle Of Civilization” Treasures Lost In Iraq War

(by Rosalind Russell, 4/15/03)

BAGHDAD (Reuters) — Iraq's heritage has been stolen. Ancient and priceless artifacts documenting the development of mankind are missing, rare manuscripts set alight, and artwork snatched.

Baghdad's museums, galleries, and libraries are empty shells, looted and torched almost overnight by gangs operating in the security vacuum which accompanied last week's invasion of the city by U.S. forces and the fall of Saddam Hussein.

Iraq sits on the land of ancient Mesopotamia, the “land between two rivers”—home to prehistoric man and the cradle of civilization. On the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates, the Mesopotamians were the first people to study the stars, develop the written word, and enforce a legal code. Standing among shards of glass outside the Iraqi National Museum, Dr. Moayad Damerji said the objects and artifacts which bore witness to mankind's development had vanished, their loss immeasurable.

“The Iraqi National Museum is the only museum in the world which shows all the steps in the history of mankind” said the professor of archaeology at Baghdad University, and the former director general of the Iraqi Department of Antiquities.

“These witnesses to our own development have gone; they are gone.” Among the most priceless treasures missing are the Vase of Uruk and the Harp of Ur, dating back to between 3,000 and 2,500 B.C. and the rule of the Sumerian kings. The exquisite bronze Statue of Basitki from the Akkadian kingdom is also gone, somehow hauled out of the museum despite its huge weight.

“Savage And Furious”

“They were savage and furious in their deeds” Damerji said of the looters, who operated under the cover of fighting between U.S. troops and Saddam Fedayeen militia in the western quarter of Baghdad where the museum stands.

“They used iron bars and different kinds of tools to go through the doors. They went through every single room, every place. They took what they could and broke down the rest into pieces to show that they were here.” The heads of stone statues have been decapitated, precious inscribed tablets from the great Sumerian libraries lost. But the full extent of the damage is still not known. With no electricity, museum workers are keeping their movements inside the building to a minimum for fear of disturbing what remains.

Nearby at the Saddam Arts Center there is a similar story of destruction and despair. Picking through lumps of plaster, glass, and discarded picture frames scattered on the floor, Iraqi artist Moayad al-Haidari is searching for his paintings.

“My work was here. Before the war my work was here” he said, gazing at the empty white walls of the exhibition space on the ground floor. “We painted our dreams, our ideas, our future. It's a complete disaster.”

On the upper floors of the post-modern concrete gallery, the permanent exhibition of the works of the Iraqi Pioneers, a group of early 20th-century painters and sculptors who laid the foundation for the modern Iraqi art movement, has simply disappeared.

"This has been organized. It is not just theft; the aim is bigger than this" said Haidari, dressed neatly and almost in tears. "This is to undermine us, our heritage, our identity, our pride."

Library Smouldering

Other Iraqis share his sentiment. Tareq Abdulrazak, a 63-year-old scientist, on Tuesday stood outside the charred and smoldering shell of Iraq's national library, opposite the defense ministry in Baghdad. Yellow catalog cards fluttered in the breeze on the library steps; inside the air was still warm and the floor covered in flimsy black pieces of charred paper. Every book, every manuscript has been destroyed.

"Here was Iraq's culture. Ancient and modern, all in writing" said Abdulrazak. The Americans watched this happen. It is not enough to destroy our buildings, our people? Now our history too?"

The widespread looting that followed the capture of the Iraqi capital has invoked fury among Baghdadis, who say U.S. forces did little to protect their shops, businesses, and public buildings after the collapse of Iraqi authority.

Moayad Damerji of the Iraqi National Museum said the raid on the building was planned in advance by people who knew exactly what they were looking for among artifacts mainly unearthed during excavations between the First and Second World Wars.

"This was a program, well organized. The Americans protected the oilfields, but did nothing to protect our museums; they are obliged to protect these sites" he said.

International Help

"Now everything is gone. Eighty years of work is gone. It is too late."

In London on Tuesday, the British Museum announced it was sending nine conservation experts to Iraq to help restore its cultural heritage.

Britain's Culture Secretary Tessa Jowell

also stressed the importance of preventing an illegal market developing in stolen goods and called for a declaration that would see them returned to Iraq.

"We have to kill the market in stolen Iraqi treasures" Jowell said. "We are determined to make sure that the U.K. is not a market for stolen Iraqi imports."

UNESCO deputy director Mounir Bouchenaki said leading archeologists will meet in Paris on Thursday to seek ways to rescue Iraq's cultural heritage. They also plan a fact-finding mission to Iraq.

This next report, published a day later, is from the www.wsws.org Internet

Tue May 6, 2:15 PM ET — Recently recovered artifacts are accounted for at the Iraq Museum in Baghdad, May 4, 2003. The museum's collection included Sumerian, Akkadian, Babylonian, Assyrian, Chaldean and Abbasid artifacts. (Petr Josek/Reuters) website and carries a headline strikingly parallel in sentiment to our March 2003 front-page feature story:

The Sacking Of Iraq's Museums: U.S. Wages War Against Culture And History

(by Patrick Martin, 4/16/03)

The looting of Iraq's museums and National Library, with the destruction of much of Iraq's cultural heritage, is a historic crime for which the Bush Administration is responsible.

U.S. government officials were warned repeatedly about possible damage to irreplaceable artifacts, either from American bombs and missiles or from post-war instability after the removal of the Iraqi government, but they did nothing to prevent it. Their inaction constitutes a gross violation of the 1954

Hague Convention on the protection of artistic treasures in wartime, adopted in response to the Nazi looting of occupied Europe during World War II.

At least 80% of the 170,000 separate items stored at the National Museum of Antiquities in Baghdad were stolen or destroyed during the looting rampage that followed the U.S. military occupation of Baghdad.

The museum was the greatest single storehouse of materials from the civilizations of ancient Mesopotamia, including Sumeria, Akkadia, Babylonia, Assyria, and Chaldea. It also held artifacts from Persia, Ancient Greece, the Roman Empire, and various Arab dynasties.

The museum held the tablets with Hammurabi's Code, perhaps the world's first system of laws, and cuneiform texts that are the oldest known examples of writing—epic poems, mathematical treatises, historical accounts. An entire library of clay tablets had not yet been deciphered or researched, in part because of the U.S.-backed sanctions that restricted travel to Iraq.

[Editor's note: You want to make a guess as to why so much pressure was placed on Iraq to keep scholars from deciphering these ancient tablets?]

The 5,000-year-old alabaster Uruk Vase is the earliest known depiction of a religious ritual. The stone face of a woman, carved 5500 years ago, is one of the oldest surviving examples of representational sculpture. The world's oldest copper casting, the bust of an Akkadian king, dates from 2300 B.C.

Another significant loss came from the burning of the nearby National Library, containing tens of thousands of old manuscripts and books, and newspapers from the Ottoman Empire to the present. The library's reading rooms and stacks were reduced to smoking ruins.

Ironically, the only hope for the survival of some archaeological treasures is that they might have been removed from the museum before the war, to be displayed in one or another of the private residences of Saddam Hussein and his family. A large selection of artifacts made of gold was stored for safekeeping at the Iraqi Central Bank, but that facility was looted and burned as well.

U.S. Officials Ignored Warnings

U.S. claims to have been taken by surprise by the ransacking of cultural facilities in Baghdad, Mosul, and other cities are not credible. Such a tragedy was not only predictable, it was specifically warned against.

In late January of this year, a delegation of scholars, museum directors, and collectors visited the Pentagon and explained the significance of the Iraq National Museum and other cultural sites. One participant told the Washington Post: "We told them the looting was the biggest danger, and I felt that they understood that the National Museum was the most important archaeological site in the entire country. It has everything from every other site."

The Archaeological Institute of America called on "all governments" to protect cultural sites, and it appears that the Iraqi government took this appeal far more seriously than the American or British governments. After looting in 1991 during the uprisings that followed the first Persian Gulf War, the Iraqi government passed legislation restricting the export of historical artifacts.

There is a long tradition of concern for history and cultural heritage in Iraq. As soon as even nominal independence was established, in the 1920s, the Iraqi government required that reports be filed with the museum on all archaeological "digs". More recently, all excavated material had to be submitted to the museum for cataloguing, making the facility the central database for all such work in the country.

As an American assault on Baghdad loomed, officials of the National Museum made preparations to safeguard their priceless collections, removing some items to secret locations and putting the bulk of the artifacts in specially secured vaults under the building, protected from bomb damage by layers of brick and cement. Those items too large to be removed from the galleries were carefully wrapped.

Looters took or destroyed everything in the galleries, then broke into the underground vaults and plundered their contents. They also destroyed the card catalog and wrecked the museum's computer system.

The Pentagon not only knew in advance of the potential threat to Iraq's cultural heritage, the U.S. military received direct appeals, as the looting began, to safeguard the National Museum. One Iraqi archaeologist, Ra'id Abdul Ridhar Mohammed, told the New York Times he had gone directly to a squad of Marines aboard an Abrams tank in Museum Square, less than a quarter mile from the museum, and asked them to stop the looting.

The Marines went to the museum, chased away the first wave of looters, then left after 30 minutes. "I asked them to bring their tank inside the museum grounds" Mohammed told the Times, "but they refused and left." He continued: "About half an hour later, the looters were back, and they threatened to kill me, or to tell the Americans that I am a spy for Saddam Hussein's intelligence, so that the Americans would kill me. So I was frightened, and I went home."

The archaeologist added: "A country's identity, its value, and civilization resides in its history. If a country's civilization is looted, as ours has been here, its history ends. Please tell this to President Bush. Please remind him that he promised to liberate the Iraqi people. But this is not a liberation, this is a humiliation."

The Politics Of Cultural Destruction

There are direct commercial reasons for the Bush Administration to permit the plundering of Iraq's cultural treasures. According to a report April 6 in the Sunday Herald, a Scottish newspaper, among those who met with the Pentagon before the onset of the war were representatives of the American Council for Cultural Policy (ACCP), a lobbying group for wealthy collectors and art dealers that has sought to relax Iraq's strict ban on the export of cultural artifacts.

The group's treasurer, William Pearlstein, has criticized Iraq's policy as "retentionist" and said he would urge the post-war government to make it easier to export artifacts to the United States. The group sought to revise the Cultural Property Implementation Act, the U.S. law that regulates such international trafficking in artistic treasures and antiques. According to this press account: "News of the group's meeting with the government has alarmed scientists and archaeologists who fear the ACCP is working to a hidden agenda that will see the U.S. authorities ease restrictions on the movement of Iraqi artifacts after a coalition victory in Iraq."

The Los Angeles Times reported Tuesday a Northern California collector of Iraqi art had been "contacted surreptitiously before the war and told that Iraqi antiquities would soon become available. He speculated that the thieves acted in accordance with a plan, but no such design has been revealed."

Appeasing a group of millionaires with a taste for Oriental curiosities would certainly fit the profile of the Bush Administration. Much more fundamental, however, is the political value for the American ruling elite of allowing such repositories of Iraq's history and culture to be destroyed.

The goal of the U.S. military occupation is to impose colonial-style domination over Iraq and seize control of its vast oil resources. It serves the interests of American imperialism to humiliate Iraq and condition its population to submit to the United States and the stooge regime to be established in Baghdad. Attacking the cultural resources that connect the Iraqi people to 7,000 years of history is part of the process of systematically destroying their national identity.

The tragic result is that treasures that survived even the Mongol sack of the city in the 13th century could not withstand the impact of 21st-century technology and imperialist barbarism.

Bush, Rumsfeld, and company personify the new barbarians: a "leader" who is himself only semi-literate and wallows in religious backwardness; an administration populated by former corporate CEOs for whom an artifact of ancient Sumer is of more interest as a tax shelter than as a key to the historical and cultural development of mankind.

Notice how the "private collector" vultures were already preparing the way and "circling the kill" well before the war with Iraq even began. And while there's no doubt that significant money can be made in such illicit trade of precious artifacts, those who look no deeper for reasons behind actions are akin to those who are satisfied that a single bullet from a lousy shot killed JFK in 1963.

With that in mind, consider what may be the underlying message(s) in the following report, published a day after the above story, from the Washington Post (www.washingtonpost.com):

Bush Cultural Advisers Quit Over Iraq Museum Theft

(by Niala Boodhoo, 4/17/03)

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — Two cultural advisers to the Bush Administration have resigned in protest over the failure of U.S. forces to prevent the wholesale looting of priceless treasures from Baghdad's antiquities museum.

Martin Sullivan, who chaired the President's Advisory Committee on Cultural Property for eight years, and panel member Gary Vikan said they resigned because the looting should never have been allowed to happen.

"If we understood the value of Sumerian cuneiform tablets to our past, as we do with oil getting us somewhere in our cars, I don't think this would have happened" Vikan, director of the Walters Art Gallery in Baltimore, told Reuters on Thursday.

At the start of the U.S.-led campaign against Iraq, military forces quickly secured valuable oil fields.

Baghdad's museums, galleries, and libraries are empty shells, destroyed in a wave of looting that erupted as U.S.-led forces ended Saddam Hussein's rule last week, although antiquities experts have said they were given assurances months ago from U.S. military planners that Iraq's historic artifacts and sites would be protected by occupying forces.

"It didn't have to happen" Sullivan told Reuters. "In a pre-emptive war, that's the kind of thing you should have planned for." Sullivan sent his letter of resignation earlier this week.

The Iraqi National Museum held rare artifacts documenting the development of mankind in ancient Mesopotamia, one of the world's earliest civilizations. Among the museum collection were more than 80,000 cuneiform tablets, some of which had yet to be translated.

Professional art thieves may have been behind some of the looting, said leading archeologists gathered in Paris on Thursday to seek ways to rescue Iraq's cultural heritage.

Among the priceless treasures missing are the 5,000-year-old Vase of Uruk and the Harp of Ur. The bronze Statue of Basitki from the Akkadian kingdom is also gone, somehow hauled out of the museum despite its huge weight.

The White House repeated on Thursday that the looting was unfortunate but the U.S. military had worked hard to preserve the infrastructure of Iraq.

"It is unfortunate that there was looting and damage done to the museum and we have offered rewards, as Secretary Rumsfeld has said, for individuals who may have taken items from the museum to bring those back" White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan said in Crawford, Texas, where President Bush is spending a long Easter break.

FBI Director Robert Mueller added that the bureau was sending agents to Iraq to assist with criminal investigations and had issued Interpol alerts to all member nations regarding the potential sale of stolen artifacts.

[Editor's note: Do you care to speculate if these agents are sent to finish the job, or just act as show, now that the massive "looting" objective has been achieved?]

"We recognize the importance of these treasures to the Iraqi people and as well to the world as a whole" Mueller said. "And we are firmly committed to doing whatever we can in order to secure the return of these treasures to the people of Iraq."

The president appoints the 11-member advisory committee, which works through the State Department to advise the executive office on the 1970 UNESCO Convention on international protection of cultural objects.

If you believe the FBI is being sent over there to help return items, then I suggest you donate generously to the Republican Party and avoid being annoyed by the contents of this magazine. Note how they can put on a pretend show of concern, and at the same time clandestinely make sure that nothing important that was supposed to be "looted" gets back into Iraqi hands.

Along that line of reasoning, consider the following report from the www.wsws.org website, published two days after the above story:

The Looting Of Baghdad's Museum And Library U.S. Government Implicated In Planned Theft Of Iraqi Artistic Treasures

(by Ann Talbot, 4/19/03)

As the full extent of the looting of Iraq's National Museum in Baghdad emerges, it becomes clear that there was nothing accidental about it. Rather, it was the result of a long planned project to plunder the artistic and historical treasures that are held in the museums of Iraq.

Had the National Museum of Iraq been looted by poor slum dwellers it would have been crime enough, and the responsibility would have rested with the American administration that refused, despite repeated warnings, to provide for the security of Baghdad's cultural buildings.

EVIL AGENDA OF THE SECRET GOVERNMENT

BY TIM SWARTZ

Exposes Project "Paper Clip" and the underground UFO bases of Hitler's elite scientific corps. Elements of the CIA and the Secret Government have imitated real alien abductions to convince the public of interplanetary invasion so New World Order gang can rule the Earth unchallenged.

Project Paperclip was the secret plan that took Nazi scientists and psychiatrists out of Germany and into the upper echelons of the U.S. governmental, scientific, and academic realms.

communicate with the outside world, however, it became apparent that the looting was not random. It was the work of people who knew what they were looking for and came specially equipped for the job.

Dr. Dony George, head of the Baghdad Museum, said: "I believe they were people who knew what they wanted. They had passed by the gypsum copy of the Black Obelisk. This means that they must have been specialists. They did not touch those copies."

Speaking on Britain's Channel 4 News, he told Dr. John Curtis of the British Museum that among the artifacts that have been stolen are the sacred vase of Warka, a 5,000-year-old golden vessel found at Ur, an Akkadian statue base, and an Assyrian statue. It was, said Dr. Curtis, "Like stealing the Mona Lisa."

It was only almost a week after the museum was originally looted that Dr. George was able to alert archaeologists worldwide to what had been stolen. The American military authorities had made no effort to prevent the objects leaving Baghdad or to put in process an international search for the stolen artifacts.

The U.S. reluctance to act cannot be explained by any lack of warning. Professional archaeologists and art historians had told the Pentagon of the danger of looting beforehand. Dr. Irving Finkel of the British Museum told Channel 4 that the looting was "entirely predictable and could easily have been stopped".

The museum was the victim of a carefully planned assault. The thieves who took the most valuable material came prepared with equipment to lift the heaviest objects, which the staff could not move from the galleries, and had keys to the vaults where the most valuable items were stored. Not since the Nazis systematically stripped the museums of Europe has such a crime been committed.

The U.S. online publication of BusinessWeek magazine reiterated the theme of premeditation and conspiracy in the looting of Iraq's museums in an April 17 article headlined "Were Baghdad's Antiquity Thieves Ready?" The article carries the subtitle: "They may have known just what they were looking for because dealers ordered the most important pieces well in advance."

BusinessWeek writes: "It was almost as if the perpetrators were waiting for Baghdad to fall to make their move. Gil J. Stein, a professor of archaeology at the University of Chicago, which has been conducting digs in Iraq for 80 years, believes that dealers ordered the most important pieces well in advance. 'They were looking for very specific artifacts' he says. 'They knew where to look.'"

Since the last Gulf War in 1991, Iraqi antiquities have flooded onto the market

According to a report by the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research, titled "The Trade In Illicit Antiquities: The Destruction Of The World's Archaeological Heritage" (produced in 2001), London and New York are the main markets for this trade. Switzerland, which allows an art work that has been in the country for five years to be granted a legal title, is a key trans-shipment point.

Professor Lord Renfrew of Kaimsthorn, director of the McDonald Institute at Cambridge, told a press conference at the report's launch that the trade continued because: "The government is in the pocket of the art market, which wants to keep the flow of antiquities." He added: "It's a scandal."

[Editor's note: This actively greedy underground market also acts as a perfect, willing cover for the REAL reason for such "looting"—that is, keeping ancient historical Truth from being revealed to a long-duped public that includes most historians.]

As news of the latest looting broke, the Labour government of British Prime Minister Tony Blair organised a hasty press conference in the British Museum, at which Culture Secretary Tessa Jowell promised official support to protect Iraqi antiquities.

Even as she spoke, the National Library of Iraq was being looted. Home to rare, centuries-old illuminated copies of the Koran and other examples of Islamic calligraphy, as well as irreplaceable historical documents from the Ottoman Empire, the building was set on fire, destroying an untold number of texts.

Reporter Robert Fisk [see his dynamic up-front-and-personal story elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM], who saw the flames, ran to get U.S. Marines in an attempt to save some of the collection, but they refused to help. Fisk wrote in the Independent: "I gave the map location, the precise name in Arabic and English. I said the smoke could be seen from three miles away and it would take only five minutes to drive there. Half an hour later, there wasn't an American at the scene and the flames were shooting 200 feet into the air."

After the fate of Baghdad museum, it can only be concluded that the generalised looting and arson at the library served to cover up a more systematic crime, in which select from the museums that were looted then and from archaeological sites that have been attacked with bulldozers. At such locations ancient statues have been sawed apart so they could be exported.

This plundering of Iraq's cultural heritage has only whetted the appetite of collectors who are already responsible for looting Far Eastern, Latin American, and Italian archaeological sites. With the collapse of global stock markets, works of art and antiquities have come to be regarded even more highly as a secure investment, fuelling an already huge underground market.

The illegal trade in antiquities is thought to be as lucrative as drugs trafficking, to which it is often linked.

manuscripts were stolen for wealthy collectors. In the process they connived in the burning of books—another Nazi practice.

The Role Of The ACCP

In the aftermath of these two devastating attacks on culture, attention has focused on the activities of the American Council for Cultural Policy. Even the British press (that works under some of the toughest libel laws in the world) has been willing to suggest that the ACCP may have influenced U.S. government policy on Iraqi cultural artifacts.

The ACCP was formed in 2001 by a group of wealthy art collectors to lobby against the Cultural Property Implementation Act, which attempts to regulate the art market and stop the flow of stolen goods into the U.S. It has defended New York art dealer Frederick Schultz, who was convicted under the National Stolen Property Act, and opposes the use of the 1977 U.S. v. McClain decision as a legal precedent in cases concerning the handling of stolen art objects.

In the McClain case a U.S. judge accepted that all pre-Columbian art or jewelry brought into the U.S. without the express consent of the Mexican government was stolen property. Mexican law regards all archaeological artifacts as state property and bans their export. Mexico is one of a number of countries that has such legislation.

Ashton Hawkins, a leading art lawyer and founder of the ACCP, regards such legislation as “retentionist”. He has condemned the archaeologically rich “source” countries for attempting to protect their archaeological sites and museums by such measures, and has argued that, under the Clinton Administration, such “retentionist” policies came to dominate U.S. government policy.

[Editor's note: Do you smell anything suspicious about a monied group that suddenly comes out of nowhere and has the audacity to assert that your property shouldn't belong to you, but to those who want it? As Mark Twain said about a different matter: "Why, even a burglar couldn't have said it better!" And the first sentence below is the killer clue revealing the hidden agenda.]

Hawkins has his sights set on the great Middle Eastern museums. He has called for the Egyptian antiquities that are held in the Cairo Museum to be dispersed. “I would like to propose” he said, “that the Cairo Museum offer museums around the world the opportunity to acquire up to 50 objects for their collections. In return, the museums would make a very substantial contribution for the construction of the new museum under the Giza plateau—$1 million each, for example.”

The ACCP's inaugural meeting took place at the Fifth Avenue apartment of that concern means is evident from the remarks of William Pearlstein, the group's treasurer, who also describes Iraqi laws on antiquities as “retentionist”. The ACCP deny that they want Iraqi laws changed, but the looting of the museum and library will effectively circumvent that problem if U.S. law on stolen art objects and archaeological material can be changed.

Professor John Merryman of Stanford Law School and a member of the ACCP has called for a “selective international enforcement of export controls” in U.S. courts. In other words, it should be perfectly legitimate to import the objects looted from Baghdad if a U.S. court chooses not to recognise Iraqi legislation.

Merryman set out the organisation's principles in a 1998 paper in which he argued that the fact that an art object had been stolen did not in itself bar it from lawful importation into the U.S.

[Editor's note: Read the above again. Can you imagine such arrogance? No wonder truth is stranger than fiction! And if that reasoning isn't corrupt enough, read on. And keep this typical kind of a “role model” in mind when you're wondering about the astronomical cost of sending your children to one of the so-called “premier” higher educational institutions!]

He went on to claim: “The existence of a market preserves cultural objects that might otherwise be destroyed or neglected by providing them with a market value. In an open, legitimate trade cultural objects can move to the people and institutions that value them most and are therefore most likely to care for them.” (International Law And Politics, vol. 31:1)

This is a self-justifying argument that reeks of hypocrisy. Wealthy collectors can now point to the chaos on the streets of Baghdad, the looting of the museum, and the burning of the library as evidence that the Iraqis are unable or unwilling—too poor or too ignorant—to look after their treasures, which would be better housed in American museums or private collections.

The ACCP's ideas represent the interests of particularly rapacious sections of the U.S. ruling class, who operate on the principle that everything—even an object of priceless artistic or scientific value—is defined by its “market value”.

Sun Apr 13, 6:57 PM ET — Parts of a beheaded sculpture lie among rubble after a mob of looters ransacked and looted Iraq's largest archeological museum in Baghdad (AFP/Patrick Baz)

Guido Goldman, a collector of Uzbek textiles. Among those present were Arthur Houghton, the former curator of the Getty Museum at Malibu in California, which is notorious for displaying works of suspicious provenance. Hawkins himself retired in 2000 as vice president of the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, an institution that, according to its own former director, Thomas Hoving, holds many artifacts looted from Etruscan tombs.

Before the war began, the ACCP met with Pentagon officials, declaring their great concern for Iraqi antiquities. What

What they mean is price, since the real value of the objects stolen from the Museum of Baghdad and the Iraqi National Library is incalculable. These are quite literally people who understand the price of everything and the value of nothing.

The prescription for the market to determine possession of and access to works of art and archaeological material would place these artifacts in the hands of a rich minority and make public access to them depend on the good will of their wealthy owners. Despite the fact that many of the ACCP members have been associated with major public institutions, their agenda is profoundly opposed to the public dissemination of art and archaeology. They are not only trying to change the law in other countries, but are working against the most progressive traditions of American society, which has always prized its public museums.

A Scientific Tradition

The development of public museums went hand in hand with the development of a scientific understanding of archaeological artifacts and the societies that produced them. Publicly funded museums represented a break with the tradition of private treasure-hunting. Their exhibits aimed to display the material artifacts of the past in a rational and scientific manner.

The accumulation of archaeological artifacts in private hands tends to disrupt scientific work, since material becomes scattered, is difficult to catalogue, and much of it remains unknown to scholars working in the field.

Public museums are public not only in their funding and because they open their galleries to visitors, but in the sense that they make knowledge available to all—something that has been recognised as a primary requisite of the scientific process since the scientific revolution of the seventeenth century.

One of the effects of the looting of the Baghdad museum has been to destroy the card catalog and computer records of the museum's holdings. This has not only made tracking down its treasures more difficult, but has also undermined generations of patient archaeological work. To destroy such a catalog is, both in a symbolic and practical sense, to make a collection private, because its contents become unknown to the outside world.

While the major objects are well known internationally, a museum's records goes far beyond these spectacular works of art. It includes all the minor finds of archaeological excavations that, in themselves, are not eye-catching, but when studied together produce a picture of a society that cannot be gained from its art alone.

Archaeologists spend their time sifting the detritus of past civilisations, often literally. They may sieve tons of earth looking for beetle wing cases or seeds. Cess pits and rubbish heaps produce a wealth of knowledge. What is thrown away and discarded provides a context for the relics of great temples and palaces, or royal tombs.

Petr Charvat's recent book Mesopotamia Before History [1] contains lovingly photographed images of pieces of mud impressed with rush matting. This is not the stuff to grace a collector's cabinet, but reveals vital information about the craft skills and way of life of ancient Mesopotamians.

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the "London Connection". The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and

A Writ For Martyrs by Eustace Mullins

This is a fully documented exposé of the atrocities which federal agents regularly commit against American citizens.

This book reproduces 121 pages from Eustace Mullins' FBI file, which he obtained only by the personal intervention of a college classmate, Senator John Warner, Rep. Of Virginia. The FBI refused for two years to send Eustace his files through Freedom of Information Act inquiries. When Eustace found it, he discovered a plot by the FBI, with 60 pages of memos, in which J. Edgar Hoover personally ordered that Eustace be committed to a mental institution for life.

On the basis of these revelations, Eustace obtained two "Default Judgments" against the FBI in Federal Court. One judgment was for $50 million, and one for $35 million, which remain on the books today.

This book also documents atrocities committed against Eustace's handicapped sister, his ailing mother, and his invalid father, who all died of heart attacks after daily harassments by the FBI terrorists.

Mullins was one of the principal victims of the notorious FBI counter-intelligence program called COINTEL, set up by Alex Rosen, one of five FBI assistant directors. The COINTEL program was actually organized by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and the Mossad intelligence agency.

This book will give you an idea of what Eustace has had to put up with in his life as a crusader for Truth.

therefore possessed a database of knowledge that was accessible to researchers internationally, and was the hub of a vast cooperative endeavour. Its looting and the destruction of its records are a blow to world scholarship. It threatens to turn the clock back more than 150 years, to the period before scientific archaeology in Mesopotamia.

Early excavations were, by modern standards, unscientific, as excavators were still learning their discipline by a process of trial and error. One of the most elementary lessons of that learning process was that context is everything in archaeology. An artifact can only tell its full story if its context is known.

By context, an archaeologist means the physical position of an artifact in the ground, its relationship to other artifacts, and to the layers of earth around it. From this information it is possible to determine an artifact's relative date and considerable information about its practical use and social significance. Ripped out of this context, it loses much of its meaning. Even the finest work of art can be better appreciated when its context and the social conditions of its creators are understood.

In its widest sense, understanding an artifact's context means understanding its relationship to the entire archaeological site at which it was found, to other sites round about it, and to the historic landscape in which it belongs. While national feelings are often evoked to justify keeping archaeological artifacts in their country of origin, the more important scientific reason for doing so is that the context of the artifact is preserved by keeping it close to where it was found.

It is still possible to see, in modern Iraq, houses built by similar methods to those employed by ancient builders and to see boats built to similar designs. The full significance of Mesopotamian artifacts can only be appreciated by seeing them in the context of the extraordinary landscape of modern Iraq—a country where every hill that rises above the plain has been built up from layers of mud brick representing generations of occupation.

The American colonial administrator, retired general Jay Garner, tried to co-opt the emotional impact of that landscape for his own political purposes by holding his big tent meeting within view of the 4,000-year-old ziggurat of Ur, which was the temple platform for the moon god Nanna. But by allowing the museum of Baghdad to be looted, the U.S. authorities have shown they have no regard for the real importance of Iraq to human history.

When the medieval European cartographers who drew the thirteenth century Hereford map of the world set out to represent the planet on which they lived, they put Asia at the top because to them it was the most important continent. There lay the lands of the Bible. Jerusalem was at the very centre of their world view, and beyond it lay Babylon, the scene of the Jewish captivity, the Tower of Babel, and Abraham's home in the city of Ur.

So deeply impressed on the European mind was the biblical image of the world that the first excavators of ancient sites in this region were looking for confirmation of the Bible. Even in the twentieth century, Leonard Woolley referred to his excavations at Warka by the biblical name of Ur of the Chaldees.

Yet the material that came out from the excavations carried out by Woolley, and others such as Layard, Botta, and Hormuzd Rassam, shook the Biblical view of the world.

Not the least important discovery was that familiar Bible stories such as Noah and the Flood had their origin in Mesopotamia long before the Bible was written.

As the cuneiform writing of thousands of clay tablets was deciphered, it was realised that numerous complex and highly developed civilisations had existed in Mesopotamia of an antiquity never before guessed.

[Editor's note: The two paragraphs above only BEGIN to address the true reasons why the world-controlling elite so wanted to "remove" ancient data from public scrutiny through the "smoke screen" of the Iraq war. Again, go back to our March 2003 issue of The SPECTRUM for many more incredible details. Such awesome artifacts constitute "weapons of mass destruction" of the elite's long-held grip on humanity through major cultural and religious constructs of deception.]

The full extent of this history only became apparent as the technique of Carbon-14 dating and other scientific methods were refined. Only in the second half of the twentieth century was it realised that settled farming could be traced back to the mid-eleventh millennium B.C. in the Middle East.

The Cradle Of Civilization

The earliest farming communities do not occur in the area that is present-day Iraq, but in the better watered highlands of the Zagros Mountains, Anatolia, the Levant, and the Deh Luran Plain. Nevertheless, Iraq was the centre of the second phase of the protracted Neolithic Revolution that began with the domestication of animals and cereal crops.

In Iraq that revolution went a significant step further with the development of irrigation, a technique that vastly increased agricultural productivity. The surplus produced by irrigation allowed the first urban civilisation on the planet to emerge in the very region that the combined military forces of the U.S. and the U.K. are reducing to a wasteland.

By 5800 B.C., small farming communities were appearing along the Euphrates. Within a few centuries they had coalesced into dense urban settlements, each of several thousand people centred on a temple which was largely responsible for managing the irrigation system, distributing food, and importing stone, minerals, and timber from the neighbouring highlands.

Over two millennia these Mesopotamian cities developed the art of copper smelting, alloying bronze, and most importantly, writing. Writing was

Fallen Angels

And The Origins Of Evil

Did rebel angels take on human bodies to fulfill their lust for the "daughters of men"?

Did these fallen angels teach men to build weapons of war?

That is the premise of the Book of Enoch, a text cherished by the Essenes, early Jews, and Christians, but later condemned by both rabbis and Church fathers. The book was denounced, banned, and "lost" for over a thousand years—until in 1773 a Scottish explorer discovered three copies in Ethiopia.

Elizabeth Clare Prophet examines the controversy surrounding this book and sheds new light on Enoch's forbidden mysteries. She demonstrates that Jesus and the apostles studied the Book of Enoch, and tells why Church fathers suppressed its teaching that angels could incarnate in human bodies.

Contains Richard Laurence's translation of the Book of Enoch, all the other Enoch texts (including the Book of the Secrets of Enoch), and biblical parallels.

essential to the administration of cities that depended on a largely artificial ecosystem created by irrigation, and which needed to import even the most vital raw materials. [2]

Writing enabled a dramatic intellectual development to take place. What began as a method of recording stores and deliveries became a medium for writing poetry, stories, and history. Science and mathematics flourished.

Modern research has revealed evidence of multiplication tables, tables of reciprocals, squares, square roots, cubes, and logarithms to bases 2 and 16. Other texts show volumes and areas, linear and quadratic equations. Babylonian mathematicians calculated the value of pi to 3.125, close to its true value. Astronomy was highly developed, and if it was understood in terms of omens and prophecy, its predictions of eclipses and the movement of the planets were nonetheless accurate. [3]

[Editor's note: Actually, the above assessment of "advanced" scientific cultural achievements is highly limited both by what has so far remained deliberately out of the hands of scrutiny of archaeologists, and because of the rules imposed if you want to keep your job and paychecks coming in. Such control mechanisms imposed by the elite have so far kept a number of astonishing truths out of public awareness concerning just how awesomely scientifically advanced were some ancient cultures on Earth due to their (1) interactions with and (2) heritage from extraterrestrial influences. When this Truth becomes generally better known—and it will—the game is up for the elite's spell of control over humanity on planet Earth.]

The social and political structure of Mesopotamian society cannot be traced directly from its material remains, and archaeologists differ about its character and the course of its development, but Petr Charvat finds in Mesopotamian society to 3000 B.C. that: "in all spheres of society the principle of universality and equality comes to the fore.... The material standard of living is equalised by redistribution.... People meet in assemblies to discuss and decide matters of common interest.... All receive the same treatment in life and death." (Mesopotamia Before History, pp.158-159)

From 3000 B.C. there is some evidence of social stratification and the emergence of a political elite or ruling class in the "royal burials" of Ur, but some archaeologists dispute this characterisation of those burials.

In this period two great civilisations emerge: in the south of present-day Iraq is the Sumerian civilization, and in the north the Akkadian, which are both based on a collection of city-states that preserve many of the cultural traditions of the earlier period. Not until 2334 B.C. does the first empire appear under the rule of Sargon of Agade, who unites these two confederations.

Sargon's short-lived empire was replaced by that of Ur Nammu in 2112 B.C. The thousands of clay tablets that survive from this period testify to the careful management of resources that kept this empire alive until 1990 B.C., when it was replaced by the Babylonian empire, which reached its high point under Hammurabi in 1792 B.C.

The mid-fourteenth century B.C. saw the rise of the first Assyrian empire. The Assyrians were to dominate Mesopotamia again, and the whole region from the Gulf to the Mediterranean in the ninth century B.C. In 612 B.C. the Babylonian empire was established. Its most outstanding ruler, Nebuchadnezzar, built the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, the double walls of the city, the great ziggurat, and the processional way. He was responsible for sacking Jerusalem and taking many of the Jews into captivity.

This succession of empires, and the Persian empire that followed, were sustained by the immense productivity of the irrigation system and the complex system of administration that maintained it. The sophisticated concepts that had been developed in the process fed into the intellectual systems of later societies. Even the Greeks, from whom we derive the name for the land between the rivers, stood in awe of Mesopotamia's achievements.

One of the ministries that has been systematically destroyed in the recent days of looting is the Ministry of Irrigation. We might say that, by this act, the U.S. Administration seeks to drive Iraq back to the dark ages, except that Iraq has never known a dark age in the sense that Europe has.

Empires might rise and fall, but as long as the irrigation system continued to function, the land between the rivers could produce more food than it needed. By attacking the irrigation system, the U.S. Administration is causing more damage in a few weeks than any other previous invader.

Iraq's cultural significance did not end with the close of the Persian empire. Throughout the Dark Ages of Europe it remained a haven of learning, preserving under the Caliphs of Baghdad classical texts lost in the West. Islamic scholarship was to prove vital to the re-emergence of Aristotelian philosophy in thirteenth century Europe and to the Renaissance.

The full extent of the losses in this respect will only become apparent when the looting at the National Library is itemised. That account is yet to come.

What is already clear is that a great crime has been committed against not only the Iraqi people, but against the whole of humanity, since it is the history of humanity that has been attacked.

For this reason the sack of Baghdad marks a significant point on the trajectory of the Bush Administration [acting as puppets for the elite who put them into power in the first place] as it attempts to plunge the world into a new barbarism that would outstrip anything that history can show from the past.

Interview by Rick Martin

Even our schools have so watered down their teaching of the profound ideas upon which our society was formed that ones becoming adults in American society today have little-to-no appreciation for the divinely ordained birthright they have inherited to carry forward.

What were some of those “profound ideas” our Founding Fathers had in mind? How did THEY view freedom? What do YOU really know about what they had to say about it?

If you haven’t looked at any of their sparkling writings for awhile, you’re in for a heart-warming—and maybe even astonishing—surprise! What they had to say is as critical to a modern examination of the American conscience as it was, well, revolutionary at the time their thoughts were first put into words.

In this story I’m going to take us back and share some quotations from a few of the well-known Founders (and other authors from that period) on the matters of freedom and liberty. Then we’ll see how several modern thinkers view the same subject. I’ve likewise asked a few who might be considered modern courageous patriots of sorts, who I’ve interviewed over the years in these pages, to comment on the subject of freedom, too.

Are we a free society? Why? As a people, do we even know, these days, what it means to be free?

And if we aren’t free, why aren’t we? If we have moved down the path to servitude and enslavement, how may we reverse that trend and once again breathe freely?

Is it already too late? Or is it perhaps a dark hour before the dawn?

This first excerpt—which is only the first section of a magnificent yet little-known early revolutionary document—provides some very clear insight into the advanced thinking of the colonists four years PRIOR to the 1776 birth of the Declaration Of Independence.

The Committee of Correspondence was the first “national” gathering of opinions on the subject of colonial independence. It was chaired by Samuel Adams (1722-1803), a cousin of later-president John Adams. He organized opposition to the Stamp Act (1765), was the chief agitator at the Boston Tea Party (1773), and later signed the Declaration Of Independence:

[quoting]

The Rights Of The Colonists

The Report Of

The Committee Of Correspondence To The Boston Town Meeting

by Samuel Adams

November 20, 1772

I. Natural Rights Of The Colonists As Men.

Among the natural rights of the Colonists are these: First, a right to life; Secondly, to liberty; Thirdly, to property; together with the right to support and defend them in the best manner they can. These are evident branches of, rather than deductions from, the duty of self-preservation, commonly called the First Law of Nature.

All men have a right to remain in a state of nature as long as they please; and in case of intolerable oppression, civil or religious, to leave the society they belong to, and enter into another.

When men enter into society, it is by voluntary consent; and they have a right to demand and insist upon the performance of such conditions and previous limitations as form an equitable original compact.

Every natural right not expressly given up, or, from the nature of a social compact, necessarily ceded, remains.

All positive and civil laws should conform, as far as possible, to the law of natural reason and equity.

As neither reason requires, nor religion permits, the contrary, every man living in or out of a state of civil society has a right peaceably and quietly to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience.

“Just and true liberty, equal and impartial liberty” in matters spiritual and temporal, is a thing that all men are clearly entitled to by the eternal and immutable laws of God and Nature, as well as by the law of nations and all well-grounded municipal laws, which must have their foundation in the former.

In regard to religion, mutual toleration in the different professions thereof is what all good and candid minds in all ages have ever practiced, and, both by precept and example, inculcated on mankind. And it is now generally agreed among Christians that this spirit of toleration, in the fullest extent consistent with the being of civil society, is the chief characteristic mark of the Church.

Insomuch that Mr. Locke has asserted and proved, beyond the possibility of contradiction on any solid ground, that such toleration ought to be extended to all whose doctrines are not subversive of society. The only sects which he thinks ought to be—and which by all wise laws are—excluded from such toleration, are those who teach doctrines subversive of the civil government under which they live. The Roman Catholics or Papists are excluded by reason of such doctrines as these, that princes excommunicated may be deposed, and those that they call heretics may be destroyed without mercy; besides their recognizing the Pope in so absolute a manner, in subversion of government, by introducing, as far as possible into the states under whose protection they enjoy life, liberty, and property, that solecism in politics, imperium in imperio [translating something like: power through tyranny], leading directly to the worst anarchy and confusion, civil discord, war, and bloodshed.

The natural liberty of man, by entering into society, is abridged or restrained, so far only as is necessary for the great end of society: the best good of the whole.

In the state of nature every man is, under God, judge and sole judge of his own rights and of the injuries done him. By entering into society he agrees to an arbiter or indifferent judge between him and his neighbors; but he no more renounces his original right than by taking a cause out of the ordinary course of law, and leaving the decision to referees or indifferent arbitrators.

In the last case, he must pay the referees for time and trouble. He should also be willing to pay his just quota for the support of government, the law, and the constitution; the end of which is to furnish indifferent and impartial judges in all cases that may happen, whether civil, ecclesiastical, marine, or military.

The natural liberty of man is to be free from any superior power on Earth, and not to be under the will or legislative authority of man, but only to have the law of nature for his rule.

In the state of nature men may, as the patriarchs did, employ hired servants for the defense of their lives, liberties, and property; and they should pay them reasonable wages. Government was instituted for the purposes of common defense, and those who hold the reins of government have an equitable, natural right to an honorable support from the same principle that “the laborer is worthy of his hire”. But then the same community which they serve ought to be the assessors of their pay.

Governors have no right to seek and take what they please; by this, instead of being content with the station assigned them, that of honorable servants of the society, they would soon become absolute masters, despots, and tyrants. Hence, as a private man has a right to say what wages he will give in his private affairs, so has a community to determine what they will give and grant of their substance for the administration of public affairs. And, in both cases, more are ready to offer their service at the proposed and stipulated price than are able and willing to perform their duty.

In short, it is the greatest absurdity to suppose it in the power of one, or any number of men, at the entering into society, to renounce their essential natural rights, or the means of preserving those rights; when the grand end of civil government, from the very nature of its institution, is for the support, protection, and defense of those very rights; the principal of which, as is before observed, are Life, Liberty, and Property.

If men, through fear, fraud, or mistake, should in terms renounce or give up any essential natural right, the eternal law of reason and the grand end of society would absolutely vacate such renunciation. The right to freedom being the gift of God Almighty, it is not in the power of man to alienate this gift and voluntarily become a slave.

[end quoting]

So we see emerging, already in 1772, a strong consensus opinion about freedom being a DIVINE birthright, not up for debate among the powers of human governmental authority.

Samuel Adams

This next series of extracted quotes comes from a two-volume set of books titled American Political Writing During The Founding Era, 1760–1805, compiled by Charles S. Hyneman and Donald S. Lutz. Several odd spellings of that time period have been corrected for ease of reading.

When skipping to different passages from within the same article, I have identified the jump through the use of ***.

This first quote comes from an essay appearing in the October 6, 1766 issue of the Charleston South Carolina Gazette—ten years before the Declaration Of Independence:

[quoting]

The Tribune

As the stability and prosperity of this kingdom must primarily depend on freedom, and the security of freedom can only be in public virtue, it must of course follow to be pronounced, that whatever tends to undermine public virtue should be most carefully guarded against. ***

Let individuals then be but true to their common interests, and it will always be secure. But if they have not virtue or sense enough to do so, they will suffer themselves first to be made fools, and then deservedly slaves and wretches; for where power, on one side, has no bounds, their misery on the other, will be sure soon to have no limits, as we may be convinced by a candid survey of the conditions of many nations, and at no great distance from our own country.

[end quoting]

Notice the passionate undercurrent running through the expression of opinion. This is speaking from the heart, rather than some kind of academic exercise.

This next dissertation—by Thomas Paine, a man whose name is synonymous with representing the passion of the colonists about freedom and independence—comes from portions of The Crisis, 1776, with its famous first sentence:

[quoting]

These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it NOW, deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. What we obtain too cheap, we esteem too lightly; 'tis dearness only that gives everything its value. Heaven knows how to put a proper price upon its goods; and it would be strange indeed, if so celestial an article as FREEDOM should not be highly rated. ***

Not a place upon Earth might be so happy as America. Her situation is remote from all the wrangling world, and she has nothing to do but to trade with them. A man can distinguish himself between temper and principle, and I am as confident, as I am that God governs the world, that America will never be happy till she gets clear of foreign dominion. Wars, without ceasing, will break out till that period arrives, and the continent must in the end be conqueror; for though the flame of liberty may sometimes cease to shine, the coal can never expire. ***

Quiting this class of men, I turn with the warm ardor of a friend to those who have nobly stood, and are yet determined to stand the matter out: I call not upon a few, but upon all: not on this state or that state, but on every state: up and help us; lay your shoulders to the wheel; better have too much force than too little, when so great an object is at stake. Let it be told to the future world, that in the depth of winter, when nothing but hope and virtue could survive, that the city and the country, alarmed at one common danger, came forth to meet and to repulse it. Say not that thousands are gone, turn out your tens of thousands; throw not the burden of the day upon Providence, but "show your faith by your works" that God may bless you.

It matters not where you live, or what rank of life you hold, the evil or the blessing will reach you all. The far and the near, the home counties and the back, the rich and the poor, will suffer or rejoice alike. The heart that feels not now is dead; the blood of his children will curse his cowardice, who shrinks back at a time when a little might have saved the whole, and made them happy. I love the man that can smile in trouble, that can gather strength from distress, and grow brave by reflection.

'Tis the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm, and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles unto death. My own line of reasoning is to myself as straight and clear as a ray of light. Not all the treasures of the world, so far as I believe, could have induced me to support an offensive war, for I think it murder; but if a thief breaks into my house, burns and destroys my property, and kills or threatens to kill me, or those that are in it, and to "bind me in all cases whatsoever" to his absolute will, am I to suffer it? What signifies it to me, whether he who does it is a king or a common man; my countryman or not my countryman; whether it be done by an individual villain, or an army of them? If we reason to the root of things we shall find no difference; neither can any just cause be assigned why we should punish in the one case and pardon in the other.

Let them call me rebel and welcome, I feel no concern from it; but I should suffer the misery of devils, were I to make a whore of my soul by swearing allegiance to one whose character is that of a sottish, stupid, stubborn, worthless, brutish man. I conceive likewise a horrid idea in receiving mercy from a being, who at the last day shall be shrieking to the rocks and mountains to cover him, and fleeing with terror from the orphan, the widow, and the slain of America.

There are cases which cannot be overdone by language, and this is one. There are persons, too, who see not the full extent of the evil which threatens them; they solace themselves with hopes that the enemy, if he succeed, will be merciful. It is the madness of folly, to expect mercy from those who have refused to do justice; and even mercy, where conquest is the object, is only a trick of war; the cunning of the fox is as murderous as the violence of the wolf, and we ought to guard equally against both.

[end quoting]

And then we read the following reflection by this same fiery author and orator, at about the time of the ending of the Revolutionary War in the early 1780s:

[quoting]

Thoughts On The Peace, And The Probable Advantages Thereof

"The times that tried men's souls" are over and the greatest and completest revolution the world ever knew, gloriously and happily accomplished.

But to pass from the extremes of danger to safety, from the tumult of war to the tranquility of peace, though sweet in contemplation, requires a gradual composure of the senses to receive it. Even calmness has the power of stunning, when it opens too instantly upon us.

The long and raging hurricane that should cease in a moment, would leave us in a state rather of wonder than enjoyment; and some moments of recollection must pass, before we could be capable of tasting the felicity of repose. There are but few instances, in which the mind is fitted for sudden transitions: it takes in its pleasures by reflection and comparison, and those must have time to act, before the relish for new scenes is complete.

In the present case the mighty magnitude of the object, the various uncertainties of fate it has undergone, the numerous and complicated dangers we have suffered or escaped, the eminence we now stand on, and the vast prospect before us, must all conspire to impress us with contemplation.

To see it in our power to make a world happy to teach mankind the art of being so to exhibit, on the theater of the universe, a character hitherto unknown, and to have, as it were, a new creation entrusted to our hands, are honors that command reflection, and can neither be too highly estimated, nor too gratefully received.

In this pause, then, of recollection while the storm is ceasing, and the long-agitated mind vibrating to a rest, let us look back on the scenes we have passed, and learn from experience what is yet to be done.

Never, I say, had a country so many openings to happiness as this. Her setting out in life, like the rising of a fair morning, was unclouded and promising. Her cause was good. Her principles just and liberal. Her temper serene and firm. Her conduct regulated by the nicest steps, and everything about her wore the mark of honor.

It is not every country (perhaps there is not another in the world) that can boast so fair an origin. Even the first settlement of America corresponds with the character of the revolution. Rome, once the proud mistress of the universe, was originally a band of ruffians. Plunder and rapine made her rich, and her oppression of millions made her great. But America need never be ashamed to tell her birth, nor relate the stages by which she rose to empire.

The remembrance, then, of what is past, if it operates rightly, must inspire her with the most laudable of all ambition—that of adding to the fair fame she began with. The world has seen her great in adversity; struggling, without a thought of yielding, beneath accumulated difficulties, bravely, nay proudly, encountering distress, and rising in resolution as the storm increased. All this is justly due to her, for her fortitude has merited the character.

Let, then, the world see that she can bear prosperity; and that her honest virtue in time of peace, is equal to the bravest virtue in time of war.

She is now descending to the scenes of

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original Native inhabitants of America. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all feel honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

quiet and domestic life. Not beneath the cypress shade of disappointment, but to enjoy in her own land, and under her own vine, the sweet of her labors, and the reward of her toil. In this situation, may she never forget that a fair national reputation is of as much importance as independence. That it possesses a charm that wins upon the world, and makes even enemies civil. That it gives a dignity which is often superior to power, and commands reverence where pomp and splendor fail.

It would be a circumstance ever to be lamented and never to be forgotten, were a single blot, from any cause whatever, suffered to fall on a revolution, which to the end of time must be an honor to the age that accomplished it; and which has contributed more to enlighten the world, and diffuse a spirit of freedom and liberality among mankind, than any human event (if this may be called one) that ever preceded it.

It is not among the least of the calamities of a long continued war, that it unhinges the mind from those nice sensations which at other times appear so amiable. The continual spectacle of woe blunts the finer feelings, and the necessity of bearing with the sight, renders it familiar.

In like manner, are many of the moral obligations of society weakened, till the custom of acting by necessity becomes an apology, where it is truly a crime. Yet let but a nation conceive rightly of its character, and it will be chastely just in protecting it. None ever began with a fairer character than America, and none can be under a greater obligation to preserve it.

The debt which America has contracted, compared with the cause she has gained, and the advantages to flow from it, ought scarcely to be mentioned. She has it in her choice to do, and to live as happily as she pleases. The world is in her hands. She has no foreign power to monopolize her commerce, perplex her legislation, or control her prosperity. The struggle is over, which must one day have happened, and, perhaps, never could have happened at a better time. And instead of a domineering master, she has gained an ally whose exemplary greatness, and universal liberality, have extorted a confession even from her enemies.

With the blessings of peace, independence, and a universal commerce, the states, individually and collectively, will have leisure and opportunity to regulate and establish their domestic concerns, and to put it beyond the power of calumny to throw

GEORGE HUMPHREY

[Excerpts from the author's Introduction:] Though I knew in my heart from day one that the 9/11 WTC/Pentagon assault was a staged event, I told myself that I would not write another booklet. Plus, I had had one too many conversations with dear and educated friends who had gone absolutely ballistic when even the concept that anything other than the reported "news" could be behind this episode.

However, as I listen to the media and their 24/7 frenzy of hateful misinformation, I knew it was time to act. This booklet is not for everyone. But it is for those who love their country and have that rare quality called an open mind.

9/11: The Great Illusion is intentionally kept short so as many as possible will have access to this material. People must wake up to some cold hard realities: A small occult group—The Illuminati—have been organized for centuries, and have control of our economy, culture, and political organizations. These people have ZERO respect for our Republic and Bill Of Rights. They are behind a vast majority of the wars and revolutions, and are behind the events of September 11th.

This booklet is presenting evidence that goes against everything that the mainstream media and political structure would have people believe.

the least reflection on their honor. Character is much easier kept than recovered, and that man, if any such there be, who, from sinister views, or littleness of soul, lends unseen his hand to injure it, contrives a wound it will never be in his power to heal.

As we have established an inheritance for posterity, let that inheritance descend, with every mark of an honorable conveyance. The little it will cost, compared with the worth of the states, the greatness of the object, and the value of the national character, will be a profitable exchange.

But that which must more forcibly strike a thoughtful, penetrating mind, and which includes and renders easy all inferior concerns, is the Union of the States. On this our great national character depends.

It is this which must give us importance abroad and security at home. It is through this only that we are, or can be, nationally known in the world; it is the flag of the United States which renders our ships and commerce safe on the seas, or in a foreign port. Our Mediterranean passes must be obtained under the same style. All our treaties, whether of alliance, peace, or commerce, are formed under the sovereignty of the United States, and Europe knows us by no other name or title.

The division of the empire into states is for our own convenience, but abroad this distinction ceases. The affairs of each state are local. They can go no further than to itself. And were the whole worth of even the richest of them expended in revenue, it would not be sufficient to support sovereignty against a foreign attack.

In short, we have no other national sovereignty than as United States. Individuals, or individual states, may call themselves what they please; but the world, and especially the world of enemies, is not to be held in awe by the whistling of a name. Sovereignty must have power to protect all the parts that compose and constitute it: and as United States we are equal to the importance of the title, but otherwise we are not.

Our union, well and wisely regulated and cemented, is the cheapest way of being great, the easiest way of being powerful, and the happiest invention in government which the circumstances of America can admit of. Because it collects from each state, that which, by being inadequate, can be of no use to it, and forms an aggregate that serves for all.

The states of Holland are an unfortunate instance of the effects of individual sovereignty. Their disjointed condition exposes them to numerous intrigues, losses, calamities, and enemies; and the almost impossibility of bringing their measures to a decision, and that decision into execution, is to them, and would be to us, a source of endless misfortune.

It is with confederated states as with individuals in society; something must be yielded up to make the whole secure. In this view of things we gain by what we give, and draw an annual interest greater than the capital. I ever feel myself hurt when I hear the union, that great palladium of our liberty and safety, the least irreverently spoken of. It is the most sacred thing in the Constitution of America, and that which every man should be most proud and tender of.

Our citizenship in the United States is our national character. Our citizenship in any particular state is only our local distinction. By the latter we are known at home, by the former to the world. Our great title is Americans, our inferior one varies with the place.

So far as my endeavors could go, they have all been directed to conciliate the affections, unite the interests, and draw and keep the mind of the country together; and the better to assist in this foundation work of the revolution, I have avoided all places of profit or office, either in the state I live in, or in the United States; kept myself at a distance from all parties and party connections, and even disregarded all private and inferior concerns; and when we take into view the great work which we have gone through, and feel, as we ought to feel, the just importance of it, we shall then see, that the little wranglings and indecent contentions of personal parley, are as dishonorable to our characters, as they are injurious to our repose.

It was the cause of America that made me an author. The force with which it struck my mind and the dangerous condition the country appeared to me in, by courting an impossible and an unnatural reconciliation with those who were determined to reduce her, instead of striking out into the only line that could cement and save her, the Declaration of Independence, made it impossible for me, feeling as I did, to be silent; and if, in the course of more than seven years, I have rendered her any service, I have likewise added something to the reputation of literature, by freely and disinterestedly employing it in the great cause of mankind, and showing that there may be genius without prostitution.

Independence always appeared to me practicable and probable, provided the sentiment of the country could be formed and held to the object; and there is no instance in the world, where a people so extended, and wedded to former habits of thinking, and under such a variety of circumstances, were so instantly and effectually pervaded, by a turn in politics, as in the case of independence; and who supported their opinion, undiminished, through such a succession of good and ill fortune, till they crowned it with success.

But as the scenes of war are closed, and every man preparing for home and happier times, I therefore take my leave of the subject. I have most sincerely followed it from beginning to end, and through all its turns and windings; and whatever country I may hereafter be in, I shall always feel an honest pride at the part I have taken and acted, and a gratitude to Nature and Providence for putting it in my power to be of some use to mankind.

[end quoting]

Notice in the above the shining qualities of the human spirit and the solid respect for a Higher Authority—principles which were dear to those who fought for a FREE and INDEPENDENT United States.

Let's now turn to a message written about 25 years AFTER the American Revolution by one of the principals involved. Because of its looking-back perspective, it's easier to find yourself, a resident in this modern world, relating to the sentiments and, in some places, saying to yourself that this speech could just as well have been written today. What follows are excerpts from Noah Webster's grand yet brutally honest commemorative oration of 1802:

[quoting]

An Oration On The Anniversary Of The Declaration Of Independence

New Haven, 1802

by Noah Webster

It is worthy of observation, that nations sometimes begin their political existence, as young men begin the world, with more courage than foresight, and more enthusiasm than correct judgment. Unacquainted with the perils that await their progress, or disdaining the maxims of experience, and confident of their own powers, they expect to attain to supereminent greatness and prosperity, by means which other nations have found ineffectual, and bid defiance to calamities by which others have been overwhelmed.

Nations, like individuals, may be misled by an ardent enthusiasm, which allures them from the standard of practical wisdom, and commits them to the guidance of visionary projectors. By fondly cherishing the opinion that they enjoy some superior advantages of knowledge, or local situation, the rulers of a state may lose the benefit of history and observation, the surest guides in political affairs; and delude themselves with the belief, that they have wisdom to elude or power to surmount the obstacles which have baffled the exertions of their predecessors. ***

The eminent characters who have conducted the revolutions in England and America, have laid it down as a fundamental principle in government, that by nature all men are "FREE, INDEPENDENT, and EQUAL", and this principle, without definition or limitation, forms a main pillar of our constitutions.

If there were but a single man on Earth, he certainly could have no masters—but the elements and the inflexible laws of Nature. But political axioms, if not mere empty sounds, must have reference to a social state. How then, can men, exposed to each other's power, and wanting each other's aid, be FREE and INDEPENDENT? If one member of a society is free and independent, all the members must be equally so. In such a community, no restraint could exist, for this would destroy freedom and independence.

But in such a state of things, the will of each individual would be his only rule of action, and his will would be supported by his strength. Force then would be the ultimate arbiter of right and wrong, and the wills of the weaker must bend to the power of the stronger. A society, therefore, existing in a state of nature, if such a state can be supposed in which there should be no law but individual wills, must necessarily be in perpetual anarchy or despotism.

But no such state of society can exist. The very act of associating destroys the natural freedom and independence of each member of the society, anterior to any compact limiting their respective powers and rights; for it is a principle, resulting from the very nature of society, independent of any mutual agreement for the purpose, that one individual shall not exercise his own power to another's prejudice.

Of course, by the very constitution of society, the will of each member is restrained by the laws of general utility, or common good, the details of which are to be regulated by the supreme power. Whatever may be the abstract reasoning of men on this subject, the practice has been, and by the nature of man, must continue to be, that the members of a state or body politic, hold their rights subject to the direction and control of the sovereignty of the state.

It is needless to discuss questions of natural right as distinct from a social state, for all rights are social, and subordinate to the supreme will of the whole society. Nor, without such a supreme controlling power over all the members of a state, can an individual possess and enjoy liberty.

In the supposed state of nature, every man being free from the restraint of law, every man would be subject to the restraint of force, and of course would be a slave. Civil liberty, therefore, instead of being derived from natural freedom and independence, is the creature of society and government. Man is too feeble to protect himself, and unless he can protect himself, he is not free. But to secure protection, man must submit to the restraints of a sovereign power; subordination, therefore, is the very essence of civil liberty. Yet how often has the abstract, undefined proposition, that "all men are by nature free and independent" furnished the motive or the apology for insurrection!

Equally fallacious is the doctrine of equality, of which much is said, and little understood. That one man in a state has as good a right as another to his life, limbs, reputation, and property, is a proposition that no man will dispute. Nor will it be denied that each member of a society, who has not forfeited his claims by misconduct, has an equal right to protection. But if, by equality, writers understand an equal right to distinction, and influence; or if they understand an equal share of talents and bodily powers; in these senses, all men are NOT equal. Such an equality would be inconsistent with the whole economy of Nature. In the animal and vegetable world, however strong the general resemblance in the individuals of a species, each is marked with a distinct character; and this diversity is one of the principal beauties of Creation, and probably an important feature in the system.

There are, and there must be, distinctions among men; they are established by Nature, as well as by social relations. Age, talents, virtue, public services, the possession of office and certain natural relations, carry with them just claims to distinction, to influence, and authority. Miserable, indeed, would be the condition of men, if the son could disengage himself from the authority of his father; the apprentice from the command of his master; and the citizen from the dominion of the law and the magistrate.

Again: It is asserted as an axiom in politics, that the sovereign power resides in the people. Unfortunately our language does not, like the Roman, distinguish the populus from the plebs; the free citizens from those who have not the privilege of suffrage. But if we restrict the word people to the free citizens or electors, what act of sovereign power do they, or can they, exercise? They cannot assemble for debate; but sovereignty consists in the single will of a body acting together, deliberating, deciding, and capable of carrying its decrees into effect. Do the people possess this power?

To avoid this absurdity, some writers allege that the sovereign power is derived from the people. This proposition is more correct. The people possess the right of electing agents or substitutes to meet and constitute the supreme power, and farther than this right of electing, which is exercised by a private act of each individual, the people cannot possibly have a share in the sovereign power. This right of election is certainly a precious right, and one which, if used with discretion, is the safety and glory of a free state; but the exercise of it cannot, with propriety, be denominated an act of sovereignty.

Closely connected with this axiom, are the principles recognized by some of the State Constitutions, that "the people have a right to meet together to consult upon the common good, give instructions to their representatives, and request of the legislature a redress of wrongs." But are the rights here described compatible with each other? Are they consistent with the nature of a representative republic? The electors appoint deputies or substitutes, and by that act, delegate away their own power; how then can they meet and exercise the same power? And it is to be observed in this species of delegation, that the agent is appointed, for this very reason, that the electors in person cannot deliberate and act upon public affairs, in their several towns or districts, for if they could, no substitution would be necessary.

The right in the electors to meet and deliberate on the common good, is directly incompatible with the act of delegation, which they have before exercised.

And it ought not to be forgotten, that the insurgents in Massachusetts, in 1786, cited the clause in the Declaration Of Rights, prefixed to the Constitution of that State, recognizing this right of meeting and consulting for the common good, in justification of their opposition to the law.

It should be remarked farther, that the same clauses in the constitutions, which authorize the people to instruct their representatives, permit them only to request of the legislature a redress of grievances. But a right to instruct, is a right to direct and control. Instruction implies superior power, whereas, request implies a want of such power, or subordination. Such are the contradictions which disfigure our constitutions!

In the same spirit of exalting the people over the legislature and the magistrate, it is asserted that the officers of government are the servants of the people, and accountable to them. Is not the direct tendency of such language to degrade all authority, to bring the laws and the officers of government into contempt, and to encourage discontent, faction, and insurrection?

Such language is not correct—the proposition is not true either in theory or fact. The legislative officers are declared, by the Constitution, not to be liable to be called in question, for their opinions or votes their inviolability is guaranteed in the most express manner.

How then can they be accountable to the people? The two propositions are a contradiction in terms. The power of the people to omit choosing a representative at a subsequent election is, by no means, a power to call him to account for his conduct. Nor are executive and judicial officers responsible to the people. If guilty of crimes and misdemeanors, they are answerable to the laws in courts of justice, and to no other tribunal.

It is not unfrequent, that the citizens of our country express their surprise at the popular tumults which have disturbed our tranquility. They are astonished that, in this free country, the people should be so lost to a sense of their duty as to resist the laws. But their surprise must cease, when, upon examination, they find that the people have a constitutional right to direct and control the legislature.

The transition from the right of instruction to the right of resistance is extremely easy; and if all officers of government are the servants of the people, how can it be expected that the masters should not, at times, take the government out of the hands of the servants?

To ourselves, however, and to posterity, it will be useful to inquire, with candor and impartiality, into the causes of our disappointments. The real truth is, our revolutionary schemes were too visionary—and our hopes too sanguine. A republican government, in which the supreme power is created by choice, is unquestionably the most excellent form of government in theory; and with all its imperfections, is, in fact, the most eligible form for nations in the early stages of society.

In old, corrupt, and very populous nations, it is probable that the state of society must always prevent the mass of citizens from acquiring that portion of property, knowledge, and independence of mind, which are absolutely essential to render an elective government a public blessing. Government takes its form very much from the character of the people to be governed; and a republican or free government, necessarily springs from the state of society, manners, and property in the United States. No other form is proper for the country; no other will suit the present state of society; no other can be imposed upon our citizens. It would be as difficult to establish a monarchy in the United States, as to found a durable republic in France; and the difficulty would, in both, proceed from a common cause: the unfitness of each species of government for the people of the respective countries.

The French project, of conquering all nations into liberty, or of giving them all a republican government, has had its admirers. We have seen the tragedy and its catastrophe. As well might the reformers of government attempt to fit all nations with one kind of garment, compelling a Laplander to wear, in winter, the muslins of India, or the tribes that pant beneath a sultry Sun on the banks of the Senegal, to wrap themselves in the furs of Siberia.

But although a republican government is admitted to be the best and most congenial to our state of society, its innate perfections and unavoidable abuses render it far less durable than its enthusiastic admirers have supposed. This conclusion, drawn from experience, should silence the complaints of men, who look for more perfection in government than it is susceptible of receiving; it should allay the animosities and temper the discussions of our citizens; it should produce a more indulgent spirit towards the faults of men in power and the errors of private individuals.

The consideration, also, that the intended effects of a free government are mostly defeated by an abuse of its privileges, should make us more solicitous to acquire a deep and correct knowledge of its true principles, and more vigilant in guarding against the impositions of designing men—men who seek offices by fair promises, and flatter only to deceive.

Most men are more willing to command than to obey; and more men are desirous to obtain public favor, than are willing to deserve it, by severe study and laborious services. One truth, also, ought to be deeply impressed on the minds of freemen: that men of real worth are always the last to seek offices for themselves, and the last to clamor against men of worth who possess them.

But while considerations like these should abate the expectations of the enthusiast, we should carefully avoid despondence, and faithfully exert our talents to realize the blessings of freedom, under our present form of government.

The real object of the revolution was to secure to the United States the privilege of governing themselves—not to dissolve all government and resign our country to be the sport of licentious passions and wild misrule. The real object of Independence ought not to be abandoned; it must be steadily and perseveringly pursued. Weak or wicked men may occasionally rise to distinction in the public councils; but whoever may be the men in power, let the government be obeyed.

As the poet enjoins: “Respect to your great place; and let the devil be sometimes honored for his burning throne.” [Measure For Measure]

To know the real worth of men, their talents and views must be put to the test. The weak and the corrupt, exalted to high and responsible stations, are tried and exposed, and from their elevations, they fall like Lucifer, never again to rise.

See and hear David Icke at the top of his form as he presents six-and-a-half hours of incredible information before a sellout audience of 1200 at the Vogue Theatre in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

You will laugh, you may cry, and you will be on the edge of your seat as the fantastic story of true human history, and WHO really controls the world today, unfolds in Icke's unique style, aided by video footage and hundreds of illustrations.

This is the presentation that the Illuminati (the forces of global control) tried so hard to stop—media interviews were cancelled; immigration officials turned up at the theatre to question his right to speak; pressure was applied on the venue to cancel the event itself; and pies were even thrown at David at a book signing by a rent-a-mob who ludicrously and outrageously sought to dub him a “racist”.

But nothing could silence him or break his spirit—and here you will see the result.

Nor are combinations of profligate men very formidable in society, as their influence can never be of long duration. Were the power of such combinations equal to the turpitude of the members, they would, in every age, overwhelm the Earth. But it is the decree of Heaven that the league of iniquity should dissolve, like a rope of sand, for the same perfidious principles which impel men to betray their country and its religion, will make them treacherous to each other.

While we thus attend to the objects of the revolution, with the errors and dangers to which our government is exposed, let us employ a moment in calling to mind the gloomy scenes and vicissitudes of the war, the wants, the feebleness, and the distractions of the Colonies; the distresses of the army, and the solicitude of our citizens. This solemn anniversary has demands upon the sensibilities of the heart, no less than upon the faculties of the mind; and by mingling the recollections of manly sorrow, with the joys of the day, we unite the purposes of virtue with convivial pleasure, and give dignity to the festival.

Let this anniversary renew the deep but tranquil grief of the aged sire, who bore the bleeding carcass of a brave son, from the field of victory to a grave. Let it revive the keen anguish of the mother, whose heart was wrung by the loss of a favorite son, and of the widow, bereaved of an affectionate husband. Let it soften the heart of the orphan, whose hopes of protection and support were blasted by the premature fate of a kind father!

Yet while we yield, for the moment, to the sensibilities of our nature, let the proud recollection of the glory won, and the blessings acquired, in the field of battle, arrest the sympathies of the soul, and check the rising flood of sorrow. While our hearts melt with the recollection of the severe sufferings and glorious fate of our departed friends, let us be animated with new zeal to imitate their virtues, and with fresh desires to cherish the honor and interest of the country, which they shed their blood to defend.

Let the youth of our country, who were not spectators of the distresses of the war, but who have entered upon the stage of life in time to see the silver locks of the revolutionary patriots, and to witness the scars and the poverty of the war-worn soldier—let these ponder the history and listen to the tale of their fathers' sufferings, and their country's danger. Let them read the animated and energetic addresses of the first American Congress, whose firmness and eloquence would have honored a Roman Senate. Let them early imbibe the manly and dignified sentiments of that illustrious council which pointed out the road to independence. Let them catch a portion of the patriotic flame, and by learning to revere the sentiments, may they be led to follow the example, of those venerable sages.

Let them review, in imagination, the heroic achievements of the American troops. Let them see, at Bunker's hill, a few hardy farmers, twice repulsing the numerous, well-marshalled columns of the foe, and holding the issue of the contest in suspense. Let them transport their imaginations to the hills of Bennington, the fields of Saratoga, the almost inaccessible cliffs of Stony Point, and the plains of Yorktown, where the armies of America closed their triumphs; there let them admire the heroism of the citizen soldier, and catch the spirit of victory.

Then let them cast their eyes upon a shattered army, retreating before a triumphant foe. See the magnanimous Washington, almost deserted and driven to despair, rallying a small band of half-clothed, dispirited troops, whose naked feet, lacerated with the frost-bound clods, stained the road with blood, as they marched to the victories of Trenton and Princeton! Let scenes like these lead them to compassionate the distresses of a half-famished soldiery, who suffered and bled to defend the blessings which we now enjoy, and whose services are yet unrewarded.

And when our youth see a needy soldier, grown old in poverty, or the widows and orphans of soldiers, doomed to want by the loss of their protectors and the depreciation of government paper, let them open the liberal hand of bounty, and by relieving their wants, still divide with them the burdens and the distresses of the revolution. Let them consider that upon them has devolved the task of defending and improving the rich inheritance, purchased by their fathers. Nor let them view this inheritance of National Freedom and Independence as a fortune that is to be squandered away, in ease and riot, but as an estate to be preserved only by industry, toil, and vigilance.

Let them cast their eyes around upon the aged fathers of the land, whose declining strength calls for their support, and whose venerable years and wisdom demand their deference and respect. Let them view the fair daughters of America, whose blushing cheeks and modest deportment invite their friendship and protection; whose virtues they are to cherish and reward by their love and fidelity; and whose honor and happiness it is their duty to maintain inviolable. Let them learn to merit the esteem and affections of females of worth, whose rank in life depends much on the reputation of their husbands, and who therefore never fail to respect men of character, as much as they despise those who waste their lives in idleness, gaming, and frivolous pursuits.

And let us pay the tribute of respect to the memory of the illustrious hero who led our armies in the field of victory, and the statesman who first presided over our national councils. Let us review the history of his life, to know his worth and learn to value his example and his services.

Let us, with a solemn pleasure, visit his tomb; there to drop a tear of affection, and heave a fervent sigh, over departed greatness. There let us pluck a sprig of

Don't you think the above oration would make a great teaching document for analysis and discussion in high schools throughout the country today? The points—both weaknesses and strengths—that Noah Webster recounts would make a great exercise in understanding and appreciating what all is behind the concept of freedom as visualized for the then-young United States. His oration begs a comparison to where we stand today as a so-called “free” society!

Now let's turn to an essay by a lesser-known contemporary of Noah Webster whose Glossary Of Archaic And Provincial Words was later incorporated in Noah Webster's dictionary:

[quoting]

On Civil Liberty, Passive Obedience, And Nonresistance

by Jonathan Boucher, 1775

To respect the laws is to respect liberty in the only rational sense in which the term can be used, for liberty consists in a subserviency to law. “Where there is no law” says Mr. Locke, “there is no freedom.” The mere man of nature (if such a one there ever was) has no freedom: all his lifetime he is subject to bondage. It is by being included within the pale of civil polity and government that he takes his rank in society as a free man.

Hence it follows that we are free, or otherwise, as we are governed by law, or by the mere arbitrary will, or wills, of any individual, or any number of individuals.

And liberty is not the setting at naught and despising established laws—much less the making our own wills the rule of our own actions, or the actions of others—and not bearing (whilst yet we dictate to others) the being dictated to, even by the laws of the land; but it is the being governed by law and by law only.

The Greeks described Eleutheria, or Liberty, as the daughter of Jupiter, the supreme fountain of power and law. And the Romans, in like manner, always drew her with the pretor's wand (the emblem of legal power and authority), as well as with the cap. Their idea, no doubt, was that liberty was the fair fruit of just authority and that it consisted in men's being subjected to law. The more carefully well-devised restraints of law are enacted, and the more rigorously they are executed in any country, the greater degree of civil liberty does that country enjoy. To pursue liberty, then, in a manner not warranted by law, whatever the pretense may be, is clearly to be hostile to liberty; and those persons who thus promise you liberty are themselves the servants of corruption.

True liberty, then, is a liberty to do everything that is right, and the being restrained from doing anything that is wrong. So far from our having a right to do everything that we please, under a notion of liberty, liberty itself is limited and confined—but limited and confined only by laws which are at the same time both its foundation and its support. It can, however, hardly be necessary to inform you that ideas and notions respecting liberty, very different from these, are daily suggested in the speeches and the writings of the times; and also that some opinions on the subject of government at large, which appear to me to be particularly loose and dangerous, are advanced in the sermon now under consideration; and that, therefore, you will acknowledge the propriety of my bestowing some farther notice on them both. ***

No government upon Earth can rightfully compel any one of its subjects to an active compliance with anything that is, or that appears to his conscience to be, inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the known Laws of God, because every man is under a prior and superior obligation to obey God in all things. When such cases of incompatible demands of duty occur, every well-informed person knows what he is to do; and every well-principled person will do what he ought, viz., he will submit to the ordinances of God rather than comply with the commandments of men.

[end quoting]

Though his family name sounds of French origin, Boucher (1738-1804) was an English-American clergyman who went to Virginia in 1759 as a private tutor. As rector of Annapolis, Maryland, he tutored George Washington's stepson and became a family friend. A conservative scholar who supported established authority, he used his pulpit to combat the winds of revolution that began to sweep the country after 1764, and these views finally cost him his position and he was forced to return to England in September of 1775. In his retirement he wrote A View Of The Causes And Consequences Of The American Revolution in 1779. One wonders if, in later life and upon reflection, he felt he had made a mistake in not participating more in the great American freedom experiment.

This next item is a good example of the kinds of concepts which the individual states and their peoples were expressing that eventually became part of the Declaration Of Independence as a national document:

[quoting]

Virginia Declaration
Of Rights — 1776

All men are by nature equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot, by any compact, deprive or divest their posterity; namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

[end quoting]

The above sentiment, with variations, was a common theme in the expressions of basic freedoms by the peoples of the other states, too.

The following is another good example of the kind of thinking that went into the formation of the United States, this time by a not-well-known individual who actually should be a lot better known. (Perhaps that's yet another reflection on what has happened to the content of our history books.)

James Wilson (1742-1798) was a

Scottish-background American lawyer and politician. He arrived in Philadelphia in 1765, where he practiced law after studies with J. Dickinson. In 1774 he published a widely read treatise proposing a commonwealth of British colonies. He was a member of the Committee of Correspondence, a delegate to the Continental Congress (1775-77), and a signer of the Declaration Of Independence. He helped draft the U.S. Constitution and the Pennsylvania State Constitution, and he delivered several lectures that became landmarks in American jurisprudence. He served on the U.S. Supreme Court from 1789 to 1798.

Here is what he had to say:
[quoting]

Of The Natural Rights Of Individuals

by James Wilson, 1790

“The law”, says Sir William Blackstone, “which restrains a man from doing mischief to his fellow citizens, though it diminishes the natural, increases the civil liberty of mankind.”

In a state of natural liberty, everyone is allowed to act according to his own inclination, provided he transgress not those limits which are assigned to him by the law of nature: in a state of civil liberty, he is allowed to act according to his inclination, provided he transgress not those limits which are assigned to him by the municipal law. True it is that, by the municipal law, some things may be prohibited which are not prohibited by the law of nature; but equally true it is that, under a government which is wise and good, every citizen will gain more liberty than he can lose by these prohibitions. He will gain more by the limitation of other men’s freedom, than he can lose by the diminution of his own. He will gain more by the enlarged and undisturbed exercise of his natural liberty in innumerable instances, than he can lose by the restriction of it in a few.

Upon the whole, therefore, man’s natural liberty, instead of being abridged, may be increased and secured in a government which is good and wise. As it is with regard to his natural liberty, so it is with regard to his other natural rights.

[end quoting]

And this has always been the core of the debate on freedom: striking a balance between what is gained and what is lost by imposing civil laws upon natural personal liberties in order to maximize the general public’s overall enjoyment of true freedom.

One thing we can be sure about is that laws such as the Patriot Act and institutions such as Homeland Security would never have passed muster with the Founding Fathers who argued so passionately and conscientiously for identifying and protecting the rights of the individual.

While we’re on the subject, a modern quote comes from the late Mother Teresa, who said:

“Human rights are not a privilege conferred by government. They are every human being’s entitlement by virtue of his humanity. The right to life does not depend, and must not be contingent, on the pleasure of anyone else, not even a parent or sovereign.”

And then there’s this practical reminder from always witty Benjamin Franklin, probably in response to those in the colonies who were, out of fear and timidity, arguing loyalist positions toward England:

“They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.”

For a measure of just how much freedom has been sacrificed with the passage of the Patriot Act and through the establishment of the Department of Homeland Security—not to mention further diabolical legislation on the drafting table such as we addressed in the April 2003 SPECTRUM—consider this by the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson:

“Freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom. The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order.”

And finally—as a kind of period at the end of a very long sentence of the colonial perspective on freedom—consider this reminder from Thomas Jefferson:

“When governments fear the people there is liberty. When the people fear the government there is tyranny.”

There are, obviously, many, many more founding documents to draw upon for insight into the general attitude and philosophy at the time our country was formed. I believe what you’ve just read is sufficient to gain a basic understanding of both their concept of freedom, as well as their fervent, heartfelt desire to achieve it.

With that said, let me here step back to the Larger Picture and share the following profound allegorical essay. Coming not at all from American roots, it captures the universal “cry from the soul” for freedom. This is from the book The Treasured Writings Of Kahlil Gibran and, as with all his writings, begs a careful, thoughtful, measured reading:

[quoting]

Slavery

The people are the slaves of Life, and it is slavery which fills their days with misery and distress, and floods their nights with tears and anguish.

Seven thousand years have passed since the day of my first birth, and since that day I have been witnessing the slaves of Life, dragging their heavy shackles.

I have roamed the East and West of the Earth and wandered in the Light and in the Shadow of Life. I have been the processions of civilization moving from light into darkness, and each was dragged down to hell by humiliated souls bent under the yoke of slavery. The strong is fettered and subdued, and the faithful is on his knees worshipping before the idols. I have followed man from Babylon to Cairo, and from Ain Dour to Baghdad, and observed the marks of his chains upon the sand. I heard the sad echoes of the fickle ages repeated by the eternal prairies and valleys.

I visited the temples and altars and entered the palaces, and sat before the thrones. And I saw the apprentice slaving for the artisan, and the artisan slaving for the employer, and the employer slaving for the soldier, and the soldier slaving for the governor, and the governor slaving for the king, and the king slaving for the priest, and the priest slaving for the idol.

And the idol is naught but earth fashioned by Satan and erected upon a knoll of skulls.

I entered the mansions of the rich and visited the huts of the poor. I found the infant nursing the milk of slavery from his mother's bosom, and the children learning submission with the alphabet.

The maidens wear garments of restriction and passivity, and the wives retire with tears upon beds of obedience and legal compliance.

I accompanied the ages from the banks of the Kange to the shores of Euphrates; from the mouth of the Nile to the plains of Assyria; from the arenas of Athens to the churches of Rome; from the slums of Constantinople to the palaces of Alexandria. Yet I saw slavery moving over all, in a glorious and majestic procession of ignorance. I saw the people sacrificing the youths and maidens at the feet of the idol, calling her the God; pouring wine and perfume upon her feet, and calling her the Queen; burning incense before her image, and calling her the Prophet; kneeling and worshipping before her, and calling her the Law; fighting and dying for her, and calling her Patriotism; submitting to her will, and calling her the Shadow of God on Earth; destroying and demolishing homes and institutions for her sake, and calling her Fraternity; struggling and stealing and working for her, and calling her Fortune and Happiness; killing for her, and calling her Equality.

She possesses various names, but one reality. She has many appearances, but is made of one element. In truth, she is an everlasting ailment bequeathed by each generation unto its successor.

I found the blind slavery, which ties the people's present with their parents' past, and urges them to yield to their traditions and customs, placing ancient spirits in the new bodies.

I found the mute slavery, which binds the life of a man to a wife whom he abhors, and places the woman's body in the bed of a hated husband, deadening both lives spiritually.

I found the deaf slavery, which stifles the soul and the heart, rendering man but an empty echo of a voice, and a pitiful shadow of a body.

I found the lame slavery, which places man's neck under the domination of the tyrant and submits strong bodies and weak minds to the sons of Greed for use as instruments to their power.

I found the ugly slavery, which descends with the infants' spirits from the spacious firmament into the home of Misery, where Need lives by Ignorance, and Humiliation resides beside Despair. And the children grow as miserables, and live as criminals, and die as despised and rejected non-existents.

I found the subtle slavery which entitles things with other than their names—calling slyness an intelligence, and emptiness a knowledge, and weakness a tenderness, and cowardice a strong refusal.

I found the twisted slavery which causes the tongues of the weak to move with fear, and speak outside of their feelings, and they feign to be meditating their plight, but they become as empty sacks, which even a child can fold or hang.

I found the bent slavery, which prevails upon one nation to comply with the law and rules of another nation, and the bending is greater with each day.

I found the perpetual slavery, which crowns the sons of monarchs as kings, and offers no regard to merit.

I found the black slavery, which brands with shame and disgrace forever the innocent sons of the criminals.

Contemplating slavery, it is found to possess the vicious powers of continuation and contagion.

When I grew tired of following the dissolute ages, and wearied of beholding the processions of stoned people, I walked lonely in the Valley of the Shadow of Life, where the past attempts to conceal itself in guilt, and the soul of the future folds and rests itself too long. There, at the edge of Blood and Tears River, which crawled like a poisonous viper and twisted like a criminal's dreams, I listened to the frightened whisper of the ghosts of slaves, and gazed at nothingness.

When midnight came and the spirits emerged from hidden places, I saw a cadaverous, dying spectre fall to her knees, gazing at the Moon. I approached her, asking: "What is your name?"

"My name is Liberty" replied this ghastly shadow of a corpse.

And I inquired: "Where are your children?"

And Liberty, tearful and weak, gasped: "One died crucified, another died mad, and the third one is not yet born."

She limped away and spoke further, but the mist in my eyes and cries of my heart prevented sight or hearing.

[end quoting]

One wonders if dreams and visions conveying such feelings as Gibran evokes above haunted the Founding Fathers as they wrestled with the practical matters of birthing a new nation in freedom.

Freedom

When considering the concept of freedom, it's instructive to see how Black's Law Dictionary (6th edition) defines the word freedom:

"The state of being free; liberty; self-determination; absence of restraint; the opposite of slavery.

"The power of acting, in the character of a moral personality, according to the dictates of the will, without other check, hindrance, or prohibition than such as may be imposed by just and necessary laws and the duties of social life. See Liberty.

"The prevalence, in the government and constitution of a country, of such a system of laws and institutions as secure civil liberty to the individual citizen."

Listed directly under freedom in Black's Law Dictionary are:

THE BIGGEST SECRET by David Icke

The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, Icke reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed: "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

choice; Freedom of contract; Freedom of expression; Freedom of Information Act; Freedom of press; Freedom of religion; Freedom of speech; Freedom of the city; Free election; Free enterprise; Free entry, egress, and regress; Free exercise clause.

Let's also look at the definition of Liberty from the same Black's Law Dictionary:

"Freedom from all restraints except such as are justly imposed by law. Freedom from restraint, under conditions essential to the equal enjoyment of this same right by others; freedom regulated by law. The absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community. (Brazo v. Connecticut Real Estate Commission, 177 Conn. 515, 418 A.2d 883, 890.)

"The 'liberty' guaranteed and protected by constitutional provisions denotes not only freedom from unauthorized physical restraint, but embraces also the freedom of an individual to use and enjoy his faculties in all lawful ways, acquire useful knowledge, marry, establish a home, and bring up children, worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, live and work where he chooses, engage in any of the common and lawful occupations of life, enter into all contracts which may be proper and essential to carrying out successfully the foregoing purposes, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free people."

Now that we know the modern technical definitions of freedom and liberty, let's consider what a range of modern-day thinkers have to say on this fundamental subject. Some of the following personalities—having been the subjects of feature articles of one kind or another—are familiar to longtime SPECTRUM readers and some are not. The "who" is not anywhere near as important as the "what" that's being shared. In fact, it's kind of a boost to note how passionate and articulate some people today can be on the subject of freedom—despite being immersed in a world so saturated with the numbing mind-controls of slavery in so many forms.

Christopher Rudy

I'll start by quoting from an email I received "out of the blue" on 4/14/03, while working on this story, from commentator Christopher Rudy, titled "Let's Keep Some Perspective" and in part he says this:

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

From the perspective of the "common man" who gets along by going along and just wants to be accepted as one with his patriotic countrymen, democratic "majority rule" sounds like a viable concept. They forget that America is a republic and that democracy is akin to mobocracy, where a well-connected gang of banksters and corporate fascists typically own and control the social, political, and economic institutions that "govern" civilization.

Few people realize that the mainstream mass-media outlets—TV, radio, and newspapers—are 97.5% owned and controlled by these banksters and ZioNazi minions, utilizing sophisticated mind-control techniques that manipulate elections as a choice between pre-chosen "lesser of two evils". History has shown that, once such a "democracy" of bought-off reps figure out how to vote kick-back benefits from the public treasury, democracy quickly self-destructs into mobocracy and dictatorship—typically in the name or context of chaos, or problems they create, and solutions they then provide in the name of "freedom, law, and order".

All while the silent majority gets along by going along, "keeping perspective" by reading the mind-control propaganda in the controlled media which degenerates from mere elite apologists and sycophants into overt propaganda extensions of the emotional tyranny that the provocateur terror tyrants create and manage to coerce subservience.

[end quoting]

While the circumstances have changed from those simpler times our Founding Fathers encountered in the 1700s, the goal of control over the people—the squashing of freedom—has remained a constant goal of the planetary elite controllers, as readers of this publication are well aware.

David Icke

In the September 2001 issue of The SPECTRUM, I interviewed well-known, prolific, courageous author, lecturer, and longtime SPECTRUM friend David Icke. The rallying front-page headline read: Let's Re-Create Prison Into Paradise! Check-Mating Globalization; David Icke Exposes What Elite Fear Most and in that story David made some profound statements that are worth revisiting for this present story on freedom. As earlier, I will note with  when jumping forward to a later section:

[quoting]

You start to realize what we're living in is just an illusion.

The reason I called the book Children Of The Matrix is because the basic themes of that movie, The Matrix, are absolutely the way things are. We are creating an illusion. And the world that we see and perceive is illusion, created by our own minds.

If you, therefore, have this knowledge, as the Illuminati do, you can manipulate the minds of the masses to create the world, the illusion, that you want them to create, because it suits your agenda.

And what we're looking at here, in the end, is not moving from an illusion to the "real world"—because there is no real world in this frequency range we're operating within. It's "just" an illusion. We're looking at the choice between creating an illusion which is a prison, or an illusion which is a paradise. But either way, both are based on illusions because this world is just the creation of our own minds. ***

And our current imagination is one of: "I can't" or "I must not" or "I'm not in control of my own destiny; I must look to others to tell me what to think because others know best" and "I am just an ordinary man on the street, so what can I do?"

That is the present figment of our imagination of ourselves, and therefore it has collectively manifested as what we call "the world".

So, what we need to do—because we have thought this prison into existence, our internal prisons have collectively become the selective prison we call "planet Earth"—we need to understand—and this is more important than any exposure of Bilderberg groups or anything—that WE HAVE CREATED the world that we perceive! It is the figment of our collective imagination. And what we need to do is not fight it, or shake it, or bomb it out of existence; we need to think it, feel it out of existence, and replace it with a better reality.

And that's the foundation of how we switch a prison to a paradise.

We think one out of existence because it's no longer our reality of ourselves, and therefore, collectively, the world. And we think into existence another reality, a reality of peace, of love, of respect for another's right to be different. ***

This world is just a manifestation of human consciousness. If we all thought and projected an energy and a consciousness of love for each other, and respect for each other, LIKE NOW, THIS MINUTE, this world would transform this minute, absolutely transform. It would not be the same place 60 seconds from now that it is now. This is the key. This is the foundation.

And this is when we reach this critical mass of consciousness awakening—and we're moving there, not as fast as we want, but we're moving there. Then we will see this world change. And we will see the structure of power and control fall with a speed that would beg a belief from the perspective that we have at the moment. ***

We are people who create this world by our thoughts, second by second. We change the thoughts, we change the world.

[end quoting]

This "power of the people" to literally change Reality (for the better) is what—in a less sophisticated, 18th century way—the Founding Fathers were recognizing in addressing the issues of freedom and liberty.

Continuing along this path, in the October 2002 issue of The SPECTRUM, I again interviewed David Icke. That front-page feature was headlined The Fork In The Road: Fascism Or Freedom? David Icke Talks On: Alice In Wonderland And The World Trade Center Disaster. This was well after the shock and shenanigans of 9/11 and David expands upon the concept of how we REALLY create a world of freedom:

[quoting]

The land, or the place, that the fork in the road will be decided, will not be a physical location; it will be in the minds of all of us. What we need to do is not stockpile weapons, and stockpile food, and get into survival mode; we need to take back control of our minds! That's what we need to do.

You can either look for a solution to something, or you can do the sensible thing, which is that you remove the cause of the problem you want to solve.

The reason that we are in this state, and facing the global fascist state, is that vast billions of people on this planet have given their minds away. They've given their right to think away to external sources, "authorities" in their various forms. What we need to do is to take that power back, and start thinking for ourselves. ***

It's taking back control of our minds that is the key!

I'm not going to fight anyone. I don't want to fight George Bush. It's not about fighting. It's about being, because the world is a reflection of our

RULE BY SECRECY: The Hidden History That Connects The Trilateral Commission, The Freemasons, And The Great Pyramids

BY JIM MARRS

In this astonishing book, celebrated reporter and New York Times bestselling author Jim Marrs painstakingly explores the world's most closely guarded secrets, exposing clandestine cabals and the power they under the mindful auspices of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CIA, and even the Vatican.

Drawing on historical evidence and his own impeccable research, Marrs carefully traces the mysteries that connect these modern-day conspiracies to humankind's prehistory. The eye-opening result is an extraordinary synthesis of historical information—much of it long hidden from the public—that sheds light on the people and organizations who rule our lives.

Disturbing, provocative, and utterly compelling, Rule By Secrecy offers a singular worldview that may explain who we are, where we came from, and where we are going.

cover-ups. After describing his own UFO sighting near Jackson, Mississippi, in 1952, Marrs recounts his involvement with other UFO cases as a newspaper reporter, and his suspicions that the U.S. government knows much more about aliens than it will admit. He incorporates an ample amount of information from UFO books of the 1960s and 1970s—strange lights on the Moon, the ancient-

Jim Marrs is best known for Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy (1989), the book that Oliver Stone's film JFK was partially based on. Now Marrs attacks new mysteries and conspiracies in this extensive review of UFO history and government astronaut theories of Erich von Daniken, cattle mutilations, Nazi saucers at the South Pole, the contactees of the 1950s—and updates it credibly with UFO data from the 1980s and 1990s, providing a reasonable survey of abductions, secret underground UFO bases, the MJ-12 group, crop circles, remote viewing, and channeling. How can something as momentous as contact with aliens be kept secret? In an appendix, Marrs refers to the Bilderbergers and the Council on Foreign Relations as examples of how small groups of powerful individuals can withhold information and manipulate world events. The facts are mostly accurate, and the writing is crisp and journalistic.

consciousness. If we live in a state of mind in which we are in fear, we are striving not to express ourselves in an unlimited way, but to survive another day. If we will not take control of our thought processes, and therefore we give that away to some external force, a very simple thing must manifest physically from that, and that is: a few people will control and dictate to billions. That has to happen. ***

We have thought this into manifestation!

We can, therefore, de-manifest it, and manifest something else, by changing our state of consciousness: Start realizing that we are not ordinary; we are genius. We've just forgotten. But we are not little men and women in the street. We are ALL CONSCIOUSNESS. We are all that exists, ever has existed, ever will exist.

It's a matter of BEING free. And that's a state of being. It's not a doing, it's a state of being.

And once you get into that state of being free, and not allowing anything to stop you being free, then you create, you project, an energy field, a thought-form around you, a state of being, that allows you to be free.

[end quoting]

Is David too advanced for the thinking of our Founding Fathers? Or were they perhaps given visions—like those of Nostradamus—of what sophisticated techniques would assault the heart of the United States (and world) later on? After all, the principles for cultivating freedom that were expressed in the 1700s remain just as timely today.

With that said by way of background, in preparation for this story I also asked several thoughtful, articulate people—some of whom I've interviewed in these pages over the years on subjects connected to freedom—to answer one "simple" question as best they can:

What Is Freedom?

Here are their quite unique and decidedly thought-provoking responses:

Being free is like being pregnant—you either are or you're not. There's very little in between. Responsible people should be allowed to do whatever they want without interference of the "state", as long as no other person is being harmed. The state should only step in when one fails in their responsibility, resulting in a complaint, and then only

TRANCE Formation Of America

This is the documented autobiography of a victim of government mind-control. Cathy O'Brien is the only vocal and recovered survivor of the CIA's MK-Ultra Project Monarch mind-control operation. Chiseled deep into the white stone of the CIA's Langley, Virginia headquarters is a partial verse lifted from the Holy Bible and writings of Saint John: "...and the truth shall make you free." This statement, like the agency, is total unreality. The building that it is engraved upon houses the world's most successful manufacturer of lies to facilitate psychological warfare. The "Company" uses truth and technology as their raw materials to produce "pure" lies for control of you and America's allies. Within the pages of TRANCE Formation Of America you'll find the truth.

There are at least four aspects of freedom:

1. Physical—the capacity to move unobstructed by others within the context of the Law, both legal and moral;
2. Intellectual—the opportunity to develop one's mental potential within the context of one's ability;
3. Emotional—the ability to experience Love without limitation of class, creed, or caste; and
4. Spiritual—the ability to stretch one's Dimension towards Infinity.

And what is freedom to you?

True freedom is freedom of thought—an absolute freedom so personal as to allow me, unencumbered by restrictive secrecy laws or bias, to intellectually pursue and examine all known and unknown aspects of any subject and to "speak my mind" to whomever is interested as to the findings discovered.

Don Harkins
(The Idaho Observer Newspaper
<http://proliberty.com/observer>)

Freedom is traveling anywhere minds and bodies desire to go.

Have you ever wondered how one wire, held up by ancient split-rail fence posts, can keep horses in a pasture even though they could easily jump over or walk through them? Is it possible that walls erected in horses' minds are much bigger than the tired, one-wire barrier that stands between them and freedom?

Not unlike pastured horses, people tend to diminish their own freedom by building fences in their minds. Once the fences are in place, they seek the counsel of experts to make decisions for them, rather than becoming competent to represent themselves in areas vital to their personal health and prosperity.

Though most people will spend their entire lives romancing the notion of freedom, few actually live in freedom because the price of freedom is accountability for one's actions. Inseparable from freedom is responsibility—responsibility for one's spiritual, political, physical, and economic successes or failures.

Historically, the bulk of humanity insists upon transferring the individual's responsibility to make important personal decisions regarding spiritual, political, physical, and economic matters to organized religions and governments.

Said another way, people beg churches and governments to make decisions for them so they can be absolved of responsibility for their spiritual, political, physical, and economic activities.

Said yet another way, people pay tribute to churches (tithes) and governments (taxes, fees, fines, penalties) so that they can be relieved of the "burden" of freedom endowed upon them at birth.

Throughout history people have demonstrated they prefer to pay churches and governments to take their freedom as opposed to keeping it for themselves.

Rather than accept responsibility for their own spiritual growth, people give their freedom of worship to a hierarchy of elders within their church. The elders, or clergy, commonly preach doctrines that demand their people first go through them to get to God. In this manner organized religion is able to extract immense revenues, compel compliant behavior, and thus accumulate political power by conditioning their flocks to fear the wrath of God(s) should they fail to follow the church's doctrine of salvation.

Government is as aware of peoples' desire to allow others to make decisions for them as the rancher is aware of the walls in pastured horses' minds. Government meets this demand by legislating regulatory schemes and hiring the government personnel to administrate and enforce them. Government uses these schemes to tell people what they can and cannot do. In exchange for government regulation of our political, physical, and economic lives, taxes are levied, fines are imposed, and penalties enforced. Similarly to how people adapt their spiritual beliefs to avoid the wrath of God(s), they adapt their political, physical, and economic behavior to avoid the wrath of a vengeful state by complying with its regulatory schemes—no matter how absurd.

Fueled by revenues extracted from the responsibility-abdicating masses, the authority of organized religion and/or government inevitably grows larger and larger in the minds of their people. Eventually peoples' behavior becomes so influenced by the dictates of these outside forces that they begin to do as they are told. They, in turn, teach their children how to behave in a society that rarely questions the intelligence or morality of the "laws" under which they exist.

The glue that holds people in this form of bondage is fear—fear of the unknown and fear their unauthorized actions may prompt punishment from the authorities they themselves have imagined into existence by paying various forms of tribute.

Those who intend to mold peoples' behavior to best suit their greed and power-driven interests, teach people to fear the world outside the fences in their minds. However, there have always been those who do not pasture well. History has been shaped by the people who have gone under, over, or through fences placed between them and the rest of the universe.

Those people define freedom. Ironically, some of them were slaves. The truth is that no government or religion is capable of keeping people in their pasture—unless they build the fences themselves.

Dr. Leonard Horowitz

Freedom is perhaps the greatest of all human blessings. It offers the ability to make choices consistent with one's highest good. It facilitates the greatest opportunity to fulfill one's purpose in life, both enabling political contribution and social service.

It is also a double-edged sword demanding constant vigilance and supreme personal responsibility. The scriptural prescription for this comes with the understanding that our Creator is bound by having given us free-will. Now we have to be COMPLETELY responsible, personally and politically, for its proper expression. Without our wise performance in exercising free-will, we are destined for generations of hardship. So much for repeating history!

The ultimate blessing from properly exercising free-will will come when a critical mass of loving persons choose to open their hearts, to the fullest extent possible, to be filled with the spiritual anointing of the Creator's song. At that point we will raise our voices in harmony, not as victims in anger or condemnation, not as sufferers in pain or sadness, but with joy for the eternal communion of Yah* in (wo)man that makes us co-creators of our magnificent universe.

COMMON SENSE II

Thomas Paine's pamphlet Common Sense was written and widely circulated in 1776. The simple logic and wisdom presented in Common Sense persuaded thousands of ordinary citizens to support a movement that sought to unite the colonies in an effort to win their independence from England. The birth of our nation and freedom from King George's tyranny is a direct result of this nation's people understanding the REAL issues and choosing freedom over tyranny.

We, the editors of Common Sense II, are anonymous—just as Common Sense was originally published anonymously. We recognize that this 92-page, 3" x 6" booklet has tall shoes to fill. Time is running out and we must once again persuade our countrymen to choose freedom over tyranny.

The sole purpose of Common Sense II is to awaken our sleeping countrymen. We have compiled the most illustrative and eloquent writings available, and have arranged them in the manner most likely to persuade a nation to stand up for freedom and independence—our God-given rights!

We're All In This Together

If I had asked YOU to write a personal statement just like any of those above, how would it read? Perhaps here would be a good place to pause and consider such an essay—even if you only compose it in your mind rather than writing it out on paper.

Francis Bacon's New Atlantis

This final story is as provocative as it is little known to most people today. It has been chosen to stretch our thinking on the subject of freedom, and was published in 1627.

Have you ever wondered what our society might be like if, rather than gradually relinquishing so much of our freedom, we held strong to that original path laid forth by the Founding Fathers? And beyond that, have you ever contemplated what a freedom-based utopian society might be like? Well, consider the following, written so long ago by Francis Bacon, and interestingly enough titled New Atlantis.

I would first like to share the Internet introduction to this work from the Modern History Sourcebook to set the stage:

[quoting]

Introductory Note

Bacon's literary executor, Dr. Rawley, published New Atlantis in 1627, the year after the author's death. It seems to have been written about 1623, during that period of literary activity which followed Bacon's political fall.

None of Bacon's writings gives in short space so vivid a picture of his tastes and aspirations as this fragment of the plan of an ideal commonwealth. The generosity and enlightenment, the dignity and splendor, the piety and public spirit, of the inhabitants of Bensalem represent the ideal qualities which Bacon the statesman desired to see characteristic of his own country; and in Salomon's House we have Bacon the scientist indulging without restriction his prophetic vision of the future of human knowledge.

No reader acquainted in any degree with the processes and results of modern scientific inquiry can fail to be struck by the numerous approximations made by Bacon's imagination to the actual achievements of modern times. The plan and organization of his great college lay down the main lines of the modern research university; and both in pure and applied science he anticipates a strikingly large number of recent inventions and discoveries.

In still another way is New Atlantis typical of Bacon's attitude. In spite of the enthusiastic and broad-minded schemes he laid down for the pursuit of truth, Bacon always had an eye to utility. The advancement of science which he sought was conceived by him as a means to a practical end—the increase of man's control over Nature, and the comfort and convenience of humanity. For pure metaphysics, or any form of abstract thinking that yielded no "fruit", he had little interest; and this leaning to the useful is shown in the practical applications of the discoveries made by the scholars of Salomon's House.

Nor does the interest of the work stop here. It contains much, both in its political and in its scientific ideals, that we have as yet by no means achieved, but which contain valuable elements of suggestion and stimulus for the future.

[end quoting]

With that said, remember that the following was written in about 1623. Perhaps our Founding Fathers were more familiar than we realize with the underlying vision of freedom in this story by the great British statesman, philosopher, and father of the modern scientific method, Sir Francis Bacon:

New Atlantis

We sailed from Peru (where we had continued by the space of one whole year) for China and Japan, by the South Sea, taking with us victuals for twelve months; and had good winds from the East, though soft and weak, for five months' space and more.

But then the wind came about, and settled in the West for many days, so as we could make little or no way, and were sometimes in purpose to turn back. But then again there arose strong and great winds from the South, with a point East; which carried us up, for all that we could do, towards the North; by which time our victuals failed us, though we had made good spare of them. So that finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest

by Dr. Leonard Horowitz

If power is the game, and population control the aim, the world's most advanced weapons and energy technologies would be directed from space. Star Wars Weapons would be able to change everything from the weather to people's moods, thoughts, behavior, and health.

Have you noticed the weather has been changing? Are you like millions of people who no longer feel as good as you know you should for your age? Welcome to the new world of electromagnetically managed chaos heralded by U.S. National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski in his book The Technotronic Era.

In this video presentation, Dr. Leonard Horowitz, an award-winning internationally-known public health authority, discusses these technologies for war-making and population control. He explains how toxic metals and human genetics can now be manipulated from space, providing an insidious arsenal with which to conduct genocide in the name of "national security" and the New World Order's "war on terrorism".

Anthrax, Smallpox, Vaccinations, And The Mark Of The Beast!
by Dr. Leonard Horowitz

If you are one of the millions of people concerned about recent bioterrorist threats in the wake of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks on America, prepare yourself for a reality check. This shocking video analysis of the little known facts regarding threatened outbreaks, and the science, economics, and global politics underlying bioterrorism and forced vaccinations, features one of America's most riveting speakers. Among the world's foremost authorities on the subject of bioterrorism, vaccination risks, and public health, Dr. Horowitz's expert diagnosis here dovetails perfectly with Bible prophecies. Pay special attention to his disclosures regarding the infamous "Mark of the Beast". Dr. Horowitz reveals sacred Bible codes that give expanded meaning to the infamous "666" prophecy (Rev: 13:18) while implicating widely trusted vaccinations, medical biochips, politicians, and institutions that have advanced some of the most horrific population-controlling ploys ever conceived. Anthrax, smallpox, and vaccinations are all part of the same deadly swindle. Watching this video may do more than raise awareness. It may help save millions of lives!

wilderness of waters in the world without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death.

Yet we did lift up our hearts and voices to God above, who “showeth His wonders in the deep”, beseeching Him of His mercy, that as in the beginning He discovered the face of the deep, and brought forth dry land, so He would now discover land to us that we might not perish.

And it came to pass that the next day about evening we saw within a kenning [perceptible distance] before us, towards the North, as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land; knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown; and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light. Wherefore we bent our course thither, where we saw the appearance of land, all that night; and in the dawning of the next day, we might plainly discern that it was a land, flat to our sight, and full of boscage [woods], which made it show the more dark. And after an hour and a half’s sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city: not great indeed, but well built, and that gave a pleasant view from the sea. And we thinking every minute long till we were on land, came close to the shore and offered to land. But straightways we saw divers [many] of the people, with batons [heavy sticks or bats] in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land: yet without any cries or fierceness, but only as warning us off by signs that they made. Whereupon being not a little discomfited, we were advising with ourselves what we should do.

During which time there made forth to us a small boat with about eight persons in it, whereof one of them had in his hand a tipstaff [a staff carried as a symbol of authority] of a yellow cane, tipped at both ends with blue, who came aboard our ship, without any show of distrust at all. And when he saw one of our number present himself somewhat afore the rest, he drew forth a little scroll of parchment (somewhat yellower than our parchment and shining like the leaves of writing tables, but otherwise soft and flexible), and delivered it to our foremost man. In which scroll were written in ancient Hebrew, and in ancient Greek, and in good Latin of the School [classical Latin], and in Spanish, these words: “Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days, except you have further time given you. Meanwhile, if you want fresh water, or victual, or help for your sick, or that your ship needeth repair, write down your wants, and you shall have that which belongeth to mercy.” This scroll was signed with a stamp of cherubin’s wings, not spread, but hanging downwards; and by them a cross. This being delivered, the officer returned, and left only a servant with us to receive our answer.

Consulting hereupon amongst ourselves, we were much perplexed. The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much: on the other side, to find that the people had [knew] languages, and were so full of humanity, did comfort us not a little. And above all, the sign of the cross to that instrument was to us a great rejoicing, and as it were a certain presage of good. Our answer was in the Spanish tongue: “That for our ship, it was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests. For our sick, they were many, and in very ill case; so that if they were not permitted to land, they ran in danger of their lives.”

Our other wants we set down in particular, adding: “That we had some little store of merchandise, which if it pleased them to deal for, it might supply our wants, without being chargeable unto them.” We offered some reward in pistolets [Spanish coins] unto the servant, and a piece of crimson velvet to be presented to the officer: but the servant took them not, nor would scarce look upon them; and so left us, and went back in another little boat which was sent for him.

About three hours after we had dispatched our answer there came towards us a person (as it seemed) of place [man of authority]. He had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water chamolet [a fabric made of goat’s hair], of an excellent azure color, far more glossy than ours; his under-apparel was green, and so was his hat, being in the form of a turban, daintily made, and not so huge as the Turkish turbans; and the locks of his hair came down below the brims of it. A reverend man was he to behold. He came in a boat, gilt in some parts of it, with four persons more only in that boat; and was followed by another boat, wherein were some twenty.

When he was come within a flight-shot [distance an arrow can be shot] of our ship, signs were made to us that we should send forth some to meet him upon the water, which we presently did in our ship-boat, sending the principal man amongst us save one, and four of our number with him.

When we were come within six yards of their boat, they called to us to stay, and not to approach farther, which we did. And thereupon the man whom I before described stood up, and with a loud voice, in Spanish, asked: “Are ye Christians?” We answered, we were; fearing the less, because of the cross we had seen in the subscription. At which answer the said person lift up his right hand towards Heaven, and drew it softly to his mouth (which is the gesture they use when they thank God), and then said: “If ye will swear, all of you, by the merits of the Savior, that ye are no pirates, nor have shed blood, lawfully nor unlawfully, within forty days past, you may have license to come on land.”

We said we were all ready to take that oath. Whereupon one of those that were with him, being (as it seemed) a notary, made an entry of this act. Which done, another of the attendants of the great person, which was with him in the same boat, after his lord had spoken a little to him, said aloud: “My lord would have you know that it is not of pride, or greatness, that he cometh not aboard your ship: but for that, in your answer, you declare that you have many sick amongst you, he was warned by the Conservator of Health of the city that he should keep a distance.” We bowed ourselves towards him, and answered we were his humble servants; and accounted for great honor and singular humanity towards us, that which was already done; but hoped well that the nature of the sickness of our men was not infectious.

So he returned; and a while after came the notary to us aboard our ship, holding in his hand a fruit of that country, like an orange, but of color between orange-tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent odor. He used it (as it seemed) for a preservative against infection. He gave us our oath: "By the name of Jesus, and his merits"; and after told us that the next day, by six of the clock in the morning, we should be sent to, and brought to the Strangers' House (so he called it), where we should be accommodated of things, both for our whole and for our sick. So he left us; and when we offered him some pistols, he smiling said he must not be twice paid for one labor: meaning (as I take it) that he had salary sufficient of the state for his service. For (as I after learned) they call an officer that taketh rewards twice-paid.

The next morning early there came to us the same officer that came to us at first with his cane, and told us: "He came to conduct us to the Strangers' House; and that he had prevented [anticipated] the hour, because we might have the whole day before us for our business. "For" (said he) "if you will follow my advice, there shall first go with me some few of you, and see the place, and how it may be made convenient for you; and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land."

We thanked him, and said that this care which he took of desolate strangers, God would reward. And so, six of us went on land with him; and when we were on land, he went before us, and turned to us, and said he was but our servant, and our guide. He led us through three fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row; but in so civil a fashion, as if it had been not to wonder at us but to welcome us! And divers of them, as we passed by them, put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome.

The Strangers' House is a fair and spacious house built of brick, of somewhat a bluer color than our brick; and with handsome windows, some of glass, some of a kind of cambric oiled. He brought us first into a fair parlor above stairs, and then asked us "what number of persons we were? And how many sick?"

We answered: "we were in all (sick and whole) one and fifty persons, whereof our sick were seventeen." He desired us to have patience a little, and to stay till he came back to us, which was about an hour after; and then he led us to see the chambers which were provided for us, being in number nineteen. They having cast [arranged] it (as it seemeth) that four of those chambers, which were better than the rest, might receive four of the principal men of our company; and lodge them alone by themselves; and the other fifteen chambers were to lodge us, two and two together. The chambers were handsome and cheerful chambers, and furnished civilly. Then he led us to a long gallery, like a dorture [dormitory], where he showed us all along the one side (for the other side was but wall and window) seventeen cells, very neat ones, having partitions of cedar wood. Which gallery and cells, being in all forty (many more than we needed), were instituted as an infirmary for sick persons.

And he told us withal that as any of our sick waxed well, he might be removed from his cell to a chamber: for which purpose there were set forth ten spare chambers, besides the number we spake of before. This done, he brought us back to the parlor, and lifting up his cane a little (as they do when they give any charge or command), said to us: "Ye are to know that the custom of the land requireth that after this day and tomorrow (which we give you for removing your people from your ship), you are to keep within doors for three days. But let it not trouble you, nor do not think yourselves restrained, but rather left to your ease and rest. You shall want nothing, and there are six of our people appointed to attend you for any business you may have abroad." We gave him thanks with all affection and respect, and said: "God surely is manifested in this land." We offered him also twenty pistols; but he smiled, and only said: "What? twice paid!" And so he left us.

Soon after our dinner was served in; which was right good viands, both for bread and meat: better than any collegiate diet [meals in a college hall] that I have known in Europe. We had also drink of three sorts, all wholesome and good: wine of the grape; a drink of grain, such as is with us our ale, but more clear; and a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Besides, there were brought in to us great store of those scarlet oranges for our sick; which (they said) were an assured remedy for sickness taken at sea. There was given us also a box of small gray or whitish pills, which they wished our sick should take, one of the pills every night before sleep; which (they said) would hasten their recovery.

The next day, after that our trouble of carriage and removing of our men and goods out of our ship was somewhat settled and quiet, I thought good to call our company together, and when they were assembled, said unto them: "My dear friends, let us know ourselves, and how it standeth with us. We are men cast on land, as Jonas was out of the whale's belly, when we were as buried in the deep; and now we are on land, we are but between death and life, for we are beyond both the Old World and the New; and whether ever we shall see Europe, God only knoweth. It is a kind of miracle hath brought us hither, and it must be little less than shall bring us hence. Therefore in regard of our deliverance past, and our danger present and to come, let us look up to God, and every man reform his own ways. Besides we are come here amongst a Christian people, full of piety and humanity: let us not bring that confusion of face upon ourselves, as to show our vices or unworthiness before them. Yet there is more, for they have by commandment (though in form of courtesy) cloistered us within these walls for three days: who knoweth whether it be not to take some taste of our manners and conditions? And if they find them bad, to banish us straightways; if good, to give us further time. For these men that they have given us for attendance may withal have an eye upon us. Therefore, for God's love, and as we love the weal of our souls and bodies, let us so behave ourselves, as we may be at peace with God, and may find grace in the eyes of this people."

Our company with one voice thanked me for my good admonition, and promised me to live soberly and civilly, and without giving any the least occasion of offense. So we spent our three days joyfully, and without care, in expectation what would be done with us when they were expired. During which time, we had every hour joy of the amendment of our sick, who thought themselves cast into some divine pool of healing, they mended so kindly [naturally] and so fast.

The morrow after our three days were past, there came to us a new man, that we had not seen before, clothed in blue as the former was, save that his turban was white with a small red cross on the top. He had also a tippet [scarf worn about the neck] of fine linen.

At his coming in he did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad. We of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner; as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death. He desired to speak with some few of us. Whereupon six of us only stayed, and the rest avoided [departed from] the room. He said: "I am by office Governor of this House of Strangers, and by vocation I am a Christian priest; and therefore am come to you to offer you my service, both as strangers, and chiefly as Christians. Some things I may tell you, which I think you will not be unwilling to hear. The state hath given you license to stay on land for the space of six weeks: and let it not trouble you, if your occasions [needs] ask further time, for the law in this point is not precise; and I do not doubt but myself shall be able to obtain for you such further time as shall be convenient. Ye shall also understand that the Strangers' House is at this time rich, and much aforehand; for it hath laid up revenue these thirty-seven years, for so long it is since any stranger arrived in this part; and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay. Neither shall you stay one day the less for that. As for any merchandise ye have brought, ye shall be well used, and have your return, either in merchandise or in gold and silver: for to us it is all one. And if you have any other request to make, hide it not; for ye shall find we will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Only this I must tell you, that none of you must go above a karan (that is, with them a mile and a half) from the walls of the city, without especial leave."

We answered, after we had looked awhile one upon another, admiring this gracious and parent-like usage, that we could not tell what to say, for we wanted words to express our thanks; and his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. It seemed to us that we had before us a picture of our salvation in Heaven; for we that were awhile since in the jaws of death, were now brought into a place where we found nothing but consolations. For the commandment laid upon us, we would not fail to obey it, though it was impossible but our hearts should be inflamed to tread further upon this happy and holy ground.

We added that our tongues should first cleave to the roofs of our mouths ere we should forget, either his reverend person or this whole nation, in our prayers. We also most humbly besought him to accept of us as his true servants, by as just a right as ever men on Earth were bounden; laying and presenting both our persons and all we had at his feet. He said he was a priest, and looked for a priest's reward; which was our brotherly love, and the good of our souls and bodies. So he went from us, not without tears of tenderness in his eyes, and left us also, confused with joy and kindness, saying amongst ourselves that we were come into a land of angels, which did appear to us daily, and prevent [anticipate] us with comforts which we thought not of, much less expected.

The next day, about ten of the clock, the Governor came to us again, and after salutations, said familiarly that he was come to visit us; and called for a chair, and sat him down; and we, being some ten of us (the rest were of the meaner sort, or else gone abroad) [of inferior rank or else gone out], sat down with him; and when we were set, he began thus: "We of this island of Bensalem (for so they called it in their language) have this: that by means of our solitary situation, and of the laws of secrecy, which we have for our travellers, and our rare admission of strangers, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Therefore because he that knoweth least is fitted to ask questions, it is more reason, for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions than that I ask you."

We answered that we humbly thanked him that he would give us leave so to do: and that we conceived, by the taste we had already, that there was no worldly thing on Earth more worthy to be known than the state of that happy land. But above all (we said) since that we were met from the several ends of the world, and hoped assuredly that we should meet one day in the Kingdom of Heaven (for that we were both part Christians), we desired to know (in respect that land was so remote, and so divided by vast and unknown seas from the land where our Savior walked on Earth) who was the apostle of that nation, and how it was converted to the faith?

It appeared in his face that he took great contentment in this our question; he said: "Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question in the first place: for it sheweth that you first seek the Kingdom of Heaven: and I shall gladly, and briefly, satisfy your demand.

"About twenty years after the ascension of our Savior it came to pass that there was seen by the people of Renfusa (a city upon the eastern coast of our island), within sight (the night was cloudy and calm), as it might be some mile in the sea, a great pillar of light; not sharp, but in

...and the truth shall set you free

David Icke exposes the real story behind global events which shape the future of human existence and the world we leave our children. Fearlessly, he lifts the veil on an astonishing web of interconnected manipulation to reveal that the same few people, secret societies, and organizations control the daily direction of our lives. They engineer the wars, violent revolutions, terrorist outrages, and political assassinations; they control the world market in hard drugs and the media indoctrination machine. Every global negative event of the 20th Century, and earlier, can be traced back to the same Global Elite, and some of the names involved are very well known. Never before has this web, its personnel, and methods been revealed in such a detailed and devastating fashion.

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the

form of a column or cylinder, rising from the sea a great way up towards Heaven; and on the top of it was seen a large cross of light, more bright and resplendent than the body of the pillar.

"Upon which so strange a spectacle the people of the city gathered apace together upon the sands, to wonder; and so after put themselves into a number of small boats to go nearer to this marvelous sight. But when the boats were come within about sixty yards of the pillar they found themselves all bound, and could go no further, yet so as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer: so as the boats stood all as in a theatre, beholding this light, as a Heavenly sign.

"It so fell out that there was in one of the boats one of our wise men, of the Society of Salomon's House; which house or college, my good brethren, is the very eye of this kingdom, who having awhile attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face; and then raised himself upon his knees, and lifting up his hands to Heaven, made his prayers in this manner:

"'Lord God of Heaven and Earth, thou hast vouchsafed of thy grace, to those of our order, to know thy works of creation, and the secrets of them; and to discern (as far as appertaineth to the generations of men) between divine miracles, works of Nature, works of art, and impostures and illusions of all sorts. I do here acknowledge and testify before this people, that the thing which we now see before our eyes is thy finger, and a true miracle. And forasmuch as we learn in our books that thou workest miracles but to a divine and excellent end (for the laws of Nature are thine own laws, and thou exceedest them not but upon great cause), we most humbly beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy; which thou dost in some part secretly promise, by sending it unto us.'

"When he had made his prayer, he presently found the boat he was in movable and unbound; whereas all the rest remained still fast; and taking that for an assurance of leave to approach, he caused the boat to be softly and with silence rowed towards the pillar. But ere he came near it, the pillar and cross of light broke up, and cast itself abroad, as it were, into a firmament of many stars, which also vanished soon after, and there was nothing left to be seen but a small ark or chest of cedar, dry, and not wet at all with water, though it swam. And in the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm; and when the wise man had taken it with all

How an interdimensional race has controlled the world for thousands of years—and still does!

We are born into a world controlled by unseen forces that have plagued and manipulated humanity for thousands of years. You may look around and think that what you see is "real". But in truth you are living in an illusion designed to keep you in a mental, emotional, and spiritual prison cell. Icke exposes these forces and their methods of human control and reveals a fantastic web of global manipulation, orchestrated by forces beyond this physical realm. He exposes the hidden bloodlines, through which other-dimensional entities live and operate unseen among us; and he shows how the bloodlines of the royal, political, and economic rulers of today are the same as those who ruled as the kings and queens of ancient times.

reverence into his boat, it opened of itself, and there were found in it a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons [pieces] of linen. The book contained all the canonical books of the Old and New Testament, according as you have them (for we know well that the Churches with you receive), and the Apocalypse itself; and some other books of the New Testament, which were not at that time written, were nevertheless in the book. And for the letter, it was in these words:

"'I, Bartholomew, a servant of the Highest, and apostle of Jesus Christ, was warned by an angel that appeared to me in a vision of glory that I should commit this ark to the floods of the sea. Therefore, I do testify and declare unto that people where God shall ordain this ark to come to land, that in the same day is come unto them salvation and peace and goodwill from the Father, and from the Lord Jesus.'

"There was also in both these writings, as well the book as the letter, wrought a great miracle, conform [similar] to that of the apostles, in the original gift of tongues. For there being at that time, in this land, Hebrews, Persians, and Indians, besides the natives, every one read upon the book and letter, as if they had been written in his own language. And thus was this land saved from infidelity (as the remain of the Old World was from water) by an ark, through the apostolical and miraculous evangelism of St. Bartholomew."

And here he paused, and a messenger came, and called him forth from us. So this was all that passed in that conference.

The next day the same Governor came again to us, immediately after dinner, and excused himself, saying that the day before he was called from us somewhat abruptly, but now he would make us amends, and spend time with us, if we held his company and conference agreeable. We answered that we held it so agreeable and pleasing to us, as we forgot both dangers past and fears to come, for the time we heard him speak; and that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life. He bowed himself a little to us, and after we were set again, he said: "Well, the questions are on your part."

One of our number said, after a little pause, that there was a matter we were no less desirous to know than fearful to ask, lest we might presume too far. But encouraged by his rare humanity towards us (that could scarce think ourselves strangers, being his vowed and professed servants), we would take the hardiness to propound it; humbly beseeching him, if he thought it not fit to be answered, that he would pardon it, though he rejected it.

We said we well observed those his words, which he formerly spake, that this happy island where we now stood was known to few, and yet knew most of the nations of the world, which we found to be true, considering they had the languages of Europe, and knew much of our state and business; and yet we in Europe (notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age) never heard any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. This we found wonderful strange; for that all nations have interknowledge one of another, either by voyage into foreign parts, or by strangers that come to them; and though the traveller into a foreign country doth commonly know more by the eye than he that stayeth at home can by relation of the traveller; yet both ways suffice to make a mutual knowledge, in some degree, on both parts. But for this island, we never heard tell of any ship of theirs that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no, nor of either the East or West Indies, nor yet of any ship of any other part of the world that had made return from them. And yet the marvel rested not in this; for the situation of it (as his lordship said) in the secret conclave of such a vast sea might cause it. But then, that they should have knowledge of the languages, books, affairs, of those that lie such a distance from them, it was a thing we could not tell what to make of; for that it seemed to us a condition and propriety [property] of divine powers, and beings to be hidden and unseen to others, and yet to have others open, and as in a light to them.

At this speech the Governor gave a gracious smile and said that we did well to ask pardon for this question we now asked, for that it imported, as if we thought this land a land of magicians, that sent forth spirits of the air into all parts, to bring them news and intelligence of other countries. It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness, but yet with a countenance taking knowledge [acknowledging], that we knew he spake it but merrily; that we were apt enough to think there was somewhat supernatural in this island, but yet rather as angelical than magical. But to let his lordship know truly what it was that made us tender and doubtful to ask this question, it was not any such conceit, but because we remembered he had given a touch [hinted] in his former speech that this land had laws of secrecy touching strangers.

To this he said: "You remember it aright; and therefore in that I shall say to you, I must reserve some particulars, which it is not lawful for me to reveal, but there will be enough left to give you satisfaction.

"You shall understand (that which perhaps you will scarce think credible) that about three thousand years ago, or somewhat more, the navigation of the world (especially for remote voyages) was greater than at this day. Do not think with yourselves that I know not how much it is increased with you, within these six-score years; I know it well, and yet I say, greater then than now; whether it was that the example of the Ark, that saved the remnant of men from the universal Deluge, gave men confidence to adventure upon the waters, or what it was; but such is the truth.

"The Phoenicians, and specially the Tyrians, had great fleets; so had the Carthaginians their colony, which is yet further west. Towards the east the shipping of Egypt, and of Palestine, was likewise great. China also, and the Great Atlantis (that you call America), which have now but junks and canoes, abounded then in tall ships. This island (as appeareth by faithful registers of those times) had then fifteen hundred strong ships, of great content. Of all this there is with you sparing [slight] memory, or none; but we have large knowledge thereof.

"At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels of all the nations before named. And (as it cometh to pass) they had many times men of other countries that were no sailors that came with them; as Persians, Chaldeans, Arabians, so as almost all nations of might and fame resorted hither; of whom we have some stirps [families] and little tribes with us at this day. And for our own ships, they went sundry voyages, as well to your straits [of Gibraltar], which you call the Pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantic and Mediterranean Seas; as to Paguin [Peking] (which is the same with Cambaline) and Quinzy, upon the Oriental Seas, as far as to the borders of the East Tartary.

"At the same time, and an age after or more, the inhabitants of the Great Atlantis did flourish. For though the narration and description which is made by a great man [Plato describes Atlantis in the "Critias"] with you, that the descendants of Neptune planted there, and of the magnificent temple, palace, city, and hill; and the manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers (which as so many chains environed the same site and temple); and the several degrees of ascent, whereby men did climb up to the same, as if it had been a scala coeli [a ladder to Heaven; see Genesis 28:12] be all poetical and fabulous; yet so much is true, that the said country of Atlantis, as well that of Peru, then called Coya, as that of Mexico, then named Tyrambel, were mighty and proud kingdoms, in arms, shipping, and riches: so mighty as at one time (or at least within the space of ten years), they both made two great expeditions; they of Tyrambel through the Atlantic to the Mediterranean Sea; and they of Coya, through the South Sea upon this our island; and for the former of these, which was into Europe, the same author amongst you (as it seemeth) had some relation [report] from the Egyptian priest, whom he citeth. For assuredly such a thing there was.

"But whether it were the ancient Athenians that had the glory of the repulse and resistance of those forces, I can say nothing; but certain it is there never came back either ship or man from that voyage. Neither had the other voyage of those of Coya upon us had better fortune, if they had not met with enemies of greater clemency. For the king of this island, by name Altabin, a wise man and a great warrior, knowing well both his own strength and that of his enemies, handled the matter so, as he cut off their land forces from their ships, and entailed [trapped] as both their navy and their camp with a greater power than theirs, both by sea and land, and compelled them to render themselves without striking stroke; and after they were at his mercy, contenting himself only with their oath that they should no more bear arms against him, dismissed them all in safety.

"But the divine revenge overtook not long after those proud enterprises. For within less than the space of one hundred years the Great Atlantis was utterly lost and destroyed; not by a great earthquake, as your man saith (for that whole tract is little subject to earthquakes), but by a particular deluge or inundation, those countries having at this day far greater rivers and far higher mountains to pour down waters than any part of the Old World. But it is true that the same inundation was not deep, not past forty foot in most places from the ground, so that although it destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the wood escaped. Birds also were saved by flying to the high trees and woods. For as for men, although they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water, yet that inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale that were not drowned perished for want of food, and other things necessary.

“So as marvel you not at the thin population of America, nor at the rudeness and ignorance of the people; for you must account your inhabitants of America as a young people, younger a thousand years at the least than the rest of the world, for that there was so much time between the universal Flood and their particular inundation. For the poor remnant of human seed which remained in their mountains peopled the country again slowly, by little and little, and being simple and savage people (not like Noah and his sons, which was the chief family of the Earth) they were not able to leave letters, arts, and civility to their posterity; and having likewise in their mountainous habitations been used (in respect of the extreme cold of those regions) to clothe themselves with the skins of tigers, bears, and great hairy goats, that they have in those parts; when after they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked, which continueth at this day. Only they take great pride and delight in the feathers of birds, and this also they took from those their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited unto it, by the infinite flight of birds that came up to the high grounds, while the waters stood below. So you see, by this main accident of time, we lost our traffic with the Americans, with whom of all others, in regard they lay nearest to us, we had most commerce.

“As for the other parts of the world, it is most manifest that in the ages following (whether it were in respect of wars, or by a natural revolution of time) navigation did everywhere greatly decay, and specially far voyages (the rather by the use of galleys and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean) were altogether left and omitted. So then, that part of intercourse which could be from other nations, to sail to us, you see how it hath long since ceased; except it were by some rare accident, as this of yours.

“But now of the cessation of that other part of intercourse, which might be by our sailing to other nations, I must yield you some other cause. For I cannot say, if I shall say truly, but our shipping, for number, strength, mariners, pilots, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever; and therefore why we should sit at home, I shall now give you an account by itself; and it will draw nearer, to give you satisfaction, to your principal question.

“There reigned in this island about 1,900 years ago a king, whose memory of all others we most adore; not superstitiously, but as a divine instrument, though a mortal man: his name was Salomana; and we esteem him as the lawgiver of our nation. This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good [unfathomable, inexhaustible] and was wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy. He, therefore, taking into consideration how sufficient and substantive [self-sustaining] this land was, to maintain itself without any aid at all of the foreigner, being 5,600 miles in circuit, and of rare fertility of soil in the greatest part thereof; and finding also the shipping of this country might be plentifully set on work, both by fishing and by transportations from port to port, and likewise by sailing unto some small islands that are not far from us, and are under the crown and laws of this state; and recalling into his memory the happy and flourishing estate wherein this land then was, so as it might be a thousand ways altered to the worse, but scarce any one way to the better; though nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions, but only (as far as human foresight might reach) to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established.

“Therefore amongst his other fundamental laws of this kingdom he did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions which we have touching entrance of strangers; which at that time (though it was after the calamity of America) was frequent; doubting [fearing] novelties and commixture of manners. It is true, the like law against the admission of strangers without license is an ancient law in the kingdom of China, and yet continued in use. But there it is a poor thing; and hath made them a curious, ignorant, fearful, foolish nation. But our lawgiver made his law of another temper. For first, he hath preserved all points of humanity, in taking order and making provision for the relief of strangers distressed; whereof you have tasted.”

At which speech (as reason was) we all rose up, and bowed ourselves. He went on:

“That king also still desiring to join humanity and policy together; and thinking it against humanity to detain strangers here against their wills; and against policy that they should return and discover [reveal] their knowledge of this estate, he took this course: he did ordain that of the strangers that should be permitted to land, as many (at all times) might depart as would; but as many as would stay should have very good conditions, and means to live from the state. Wherein he saw so far, that now in so many ages since the prohibition, we have memory not of one ship that ever returned, and but of thirteen persons only, at several times, that chose to return in our bottoms. What those few that returned may have reported abroad I know not. But you must think whatsoever they have said could be taken where they came but for a dream.

“Now for our travelling from hence into parts abroad, our lawgiver thought fit altogether to restrain it. So is it not in China. For the Chinese sail where they will or can; which sheweth that their law of keeping out strangers is a law of pusillanimity and fear. But this restraint of ours hath one only exception, which is admirable; preserving the good which cometh by communicating with strangers, and avoiding the hurt: and I will now open it to you. And here I shall seem a little to digress, but you will by and by find it pertinent.

"Ye shall understand, my dear friends, that amongst the excellent acts of that king, one above all hath the pre-eminence. It was the erection and institution of an order, or society, which we call Salomon's House; the noblest foundation, as we think, that ever was upon the Earth, and the lantern of this kingdom. It is dedicated to the study of the works and creatures of God. Some think it beareth the founder's name a little corrupted, as if it should be Solamona's House. But the records write it as it is spoken. So as I take it to be denominate of the king of the Hebrews, which is famous with you, and no stranger to us; for we have some parts of his works which with you are lost; namely, that Natural History which he wrote of all plants, from the cedar of Libanus [Lebanon] to the moss that groweth out of the wall; and of all things that have life and motion.

"This maketh me think that our king finding himself to symbolize [agree], in many things, with that king of the Hebrews (which lived many years before him) honored him with the title of this foundation. And I am the rather induced to be of this opinion, for that I find in ancient records this order or society is sometimes called Salomon's House, and sometimes the College of the Six Days' Works; whereby I am satisfied that our excellent king had learned from the Hebrews that God had created the world, and all that therein is, within six days: and therefore he instituting that house, for the finding out of the true nature of all things (whereby God might have the more glory in the workmanship of them, and men the more fruit in the use of them), did give it also that second name.

"But now to come to our present purpose. When the king had forbidden to all his people navigation into any part that was not under his crown, he made nevertheless this ordinance: that every twelve years there should be set forth out of this kingdom two ships, appointed to several voyages; that in either of these ships there should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Salomon's House, whose errand was only to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed [assigned]; and especially of the sciences, arts, manufactures, and inventions of all the world; and withal to bring unto us books, instruments, and patterns in every kind: that the ships, after they had landed the brethren, should return; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. These ships are not otherwise fraught than with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure to remain with the brethren, for the buying of such things and rewarding of such persons as they should think fit. Now for me to tell you how the vulgar [common] sort of mariners are contained [kept] from being discovered at land, and how they that must be put on shore for any time, color [disguise] themselves under the names of other nations, and to what places these voyages have been designed, and what places of rendezvous are appointed for the new missions, and the like circumstances of the practice, I may not do it, neither is it much to your desire. But thus you see we maintain a trade, not for gold, silver, or jewels, nor for silks, nor for spices, nor any other commodity of matter; but only for God's first creature, which was light: to have light, I say, of the growth [of the kind found in] of all parts of the world."

And when he had said this he was silent, and so were we all; for indeed we were all astonished to hear so strange things so probably [matter of factly] told.

And he perceiving that we were willing to say somewhat, but had it not ready, in great courtesy took us off, and descended to ask us questions of our voyage and fortunes, and in the end concluded that we might do well to think with ourselves, what time of stay we would demand of the state, and bade us not to scant [skimp] ourselves; for he would procure such time as we desired. Whereupon we all rose up and presented ourselves to kiss the skirt of his tippet, but he would not suffer us, and so took his leave.

But when it came once amongst our people that the state used [was accustomed] to offer conditions to strangers that would stay, we had work enough to get any of our men to look to our ship, and to keep them from going presently to the Governor, to crave conditions; but with much ado we restrained them, till we might agree what course to take.

We took ourselves now for free men, seeing there was no danger of our utter perdition, and lived most joyfully, going abroad and seeing what was to be seen in the city and places adjacent, within our tedder [limits, tether]; and obtaining acquaintance with many of the city, not of the meanest quality, at whose hands we found such humanity, and such a freedom and desire to take strangers, as it were, into their bosom, as was enough to make us forget all that was dear to us in our own countries; and continually we met with many things, right worthy of observation and relation; as indeed, if there be a mirror in the world worthy to hold men's eyes, it is that country.

One day there were two of our company bidden to a feast of the family, as they call it; a most natural, pious, and reverend custom it is, showing that nation to be compounded of all goodness. This is the manner of it. It is granted to any man that shall live to see thirty persons descended of his body, alive together, and all above three years old, to make this feast, which is done at the cost of the state. The father of the family, whom they call the Tirsan, two days before the feast taketh to him three of such friends as he liketh to choose, and is assisted also by the Governor of the city or place where the feast is celebrated, and all the persons of the family of both sexes are summoned to attend him. These two days the Tirsan sitteth in consultation, concerning the good estate of the family. There, if there be any discord or suits between any of the family, they are compounded [settled] and appeased. There, if any of the family be distressed or decayed, order is taken for their relief, and competent means to live. There, if any be subject to vice or take ill courses, they are

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

reproved and censured. So likewise direction is given touching marriages, and the courses of life which any of them should take, with divers other the like orders and advices.

The Governor assisteth [attends], to the end to put in execution by his public authority the decrees and orders of the Tirsan, if they should be disobeyed; though that seldom needeth, such reverence and obedience they give to the order of Nature. The Tirsan doth also then ever choose one man from amongst his sons to live in house with him; who is called ever after the Son of the Vine. The reason will hereafter appear.

On the feast day, the father or Tirsan cometh forth after divine service into a large room where the feast is celebrated; which room hath an half-pace [platform] at the upper end. Against the wall, in the middle of the half-pace, is a chair placed for him, with a table and carpet before it. Over the chair is a state [canopy] made round or oval, and it is of ivy; an ivy somewhat whiter than ours, like the leaf of a silver asp, but more shining; for it is green all winter. And the state is curiously wrought with silver and silk of divers [various] colors, broiding or binding in the ivy; and is ever of the work of some of the daughters of the family, and veiled over at the top, with a fine net of silk and silver. But the substance of it is true ivy; whereof, after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some leaf or sprig to keep.

The Tirsan cometh forth with all his generation or lineage, the males before him, and the females following him; and if there be a mother from whose body the whole lineage is descended, there is a traverse [screened compartment] placed in a loft above, on the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass, leaded with gold and blue, where she sitteth, but is not seen. When the Tirsan is come forth, he sitteth down in the chair; and all the lineage place themselves against the wall, both at his back, and upon the return [sides] of the half-pace, in order of their years, without difference of sex, and stand upon their feet. When he is set, the room being always full of company, but well kept and without disorder, after some pause there cometh in from the lower end of the room a Taratan (which is as much as a herald), and on either side of him two young lads, whereof one carrieth a scroll of their shining yellow parchment and the other a cluster of grapes of gold, with a long foot or stalk. The herald and children are clothed with mantles of sea-water green satin; but the herald's mantle is streamered with gold and hath a train.

THE REPTILIAN AGENDA: PARTS I, II & III

NEW 3-Tape Set!

the reptilian agenda

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now!"

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli") has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

Then the herald with three curtsies, or rather inclinations [bows], cometh up as far as the half-pace, and there first taketh into his hand the scroll. This scroll is the king's charter, containing gift of revenue, and many privileges, exemptions, and points of honor, granted to the father of the family; and it is ever styled and directed. "To such a one, our well-beloved friend and creditor" which is a title proper only to this case. For they say, the king is debtor to no man, but for propagation of his subjects. The seal set to the king's charter is the king's image, embossed or molded in gold; and though such charters be expedited [granted] of course, and as of right, yet they are varied by discretion, according to the number and dignity of the family. This charter the herald readeth aloud; and while it is read, the father or Tirsan standeth up, supported by two of his sons, such as he chooseth. Then the herald mounteth the half-pace, and delivereth the charter into his hand; and with that there is an acclamation, by all that are present, in their language, which is thus much: "Happy are the people of Bensalem."

Then the herald taketh into his hand from the other child the cluster of grapes, which is of gold; both the stalls and the grapes. But the grapes are daintily enamelled; and if the males of the family be the greater number, the grapes are enamelled purple, with a little sun set on the top; if the females, then they are enamelled into a greenish yellow, with a crescent on the top. The grapes are in number as many as there are descendants of the family. This golden cluster the herald delivereth also to the Tirsan, who presently delivereth it over to that son that he had formerly chosen to be in house with him; who beareth it before his father, as an ensign of honor, when he goeth in public ever after; and is thereupon called the Son of the Vine.

After this ceremony ended the father or Tirsan retireth; and after some time cometh forth again to dinner, where he sitteth alone under the state as before; and none of his descendants sit with him, of what degree or dignity so ever, except he hap to be of Salomon's House. He is served only by his own children, such as are male; who perform unto him all service of the table upon the knee, and the women only stand about him, leaning against the wall. The room below the half-pace hath tables on the sides for the guests that are bidden; who are served with great and comely order; and towards the end of dinner (which in the greatest feasts with them lasteth never above an hour and a half) there is a hymn sung, varied according to the invention of him that composeth it (for they have excellent poesy); but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah, and Abraham; whereof the former two peopled the world, and the last was the father of the faithful; concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour, in whose birth the births of all are only blessed.

Dinner being done, the Tirsan retireth again; and having withdrawn himself alone into a place where he maketh some private prayers, he cometh forth the third time to give the blessing, with all his descendants, who stand about him as at the first. Then he calleth them forth by one and by one, by name as he pleaseth, though seldom the order of age be inverted. The person that is called (the table being before removed) kneeleth down before the chair, and the father layeth his hand upon his head, or her head, and giveth the blessing in these words: "Son of Bensalem (or daughter of Bensalem), thy father saith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word; the blessing of the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, and the Holy Dove, be upon thee, and make the days of thy prilgrimage good and many." This he saith to every of them; and that done, if there be any of his sons of eminent merit and virtue (so they be not above two), he calleth for them again, and saith, laying his arm over their shoulders, they standing: "Sons, it is well ye are born, give God the praise, and persevere to the end." And withal delivereth to either of them a jewel, made in the figure of an ear of wheat, which they ever after wear in the front of their turban, or hat. This done, they fall to music and dances, and other recreations, after their manner, for the rest of the day. This is the full order of that feast.

By that time six or seven days were spent, I was fallen into strait [close] acquaintance with a merchant of that city, whose name was Joabin. He was a Jew and circumcised; for they have some few stirps [families] of Jews yet remaining amongst them, whom they leave to their own religion. Which they may the better do, because they are of a far differing disposition from the Jews in other parts. For whereas they hate the name of Christ, and have a secret inbred rancor against the people amongst whom they live, these, contrariwise, give unto our Saviour many high attributes, and love the nation of Bensalem extremely. Surely this man of whom I speak would ever acknowledge that Christ was born of a virgin and that he was more than a man; and he would tell how God made him ruler of the seraphim, which guard his throne; and they call him also the Milken Way, and the Eliah of the Messiah, and many other high names, which though they be inferior to his divine majesty, yet they are far from the language of other Jews.

And for the country of Bensalem, this man would make no end of commending it, being desirous by tradition among the Jews there to have it believed that the people thereof were of the generations of Abraham, by another son, whom they call Nachoran; and that Moses by a secret cabala [doctrine] ordained the laws of Bensalem which they now use; and that when the Messiah should come, and sit in his throne at Jerusalem, the King of Bensalem should sit at his feet, whereas other kings should keep a great distance.

But yet setting aside these Jewish dreams, the man was a wise man and learned, and of great policy, and excellently seen in the laws and customs of that nation. Amongst other discourses one day, I told him I was much affected with the relation I had from some of the company of their custom in holding the feast of the family, for that, me-thought, I had never heard of a solemnity wherein Nature did so much preside. And because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage, and whether they kept marriage well, and whether they were tied to one wife. For that where population is so much affected [desired], and such as with them it seemed to be, there is commonly permission of plurality of wives.

To this he said: "You have reason for to commend that excellent institution of the feast of the family; and indeed we have experience that those families that are partakers of the blessings of that feast do flourish and prosper ever after in an extraordinary manner. But hear me now, and I will tell you what I know.

"You shall understand that there is not under the heavens so chaste a nation as this of Bensalem, nor so free from all pollution or foulness. It is the virgin of the world. I remember I have read in one of your European books of a holy hermit amongst you that desired to see the Spirit of Fornication, and there appeared to him a little foul ugly Aethiop [also Ethiop; a dark-skinned African]. But if he had desired to see the Spirit of Chastity of Bensalem, it would have appeared to him in the likeness of a fair beautiful Cherubin. For there is nothing amongst mortal men more fair and admirable than the chaste minds of this people. Know therefore that with them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind.

"Nay, they wonder (with detestation) at you in Europe, which permit such things. They say ye have put marriage out of office, for marriage is ordained a remedy for unlawful concupiscence, and natural concupiscence seemeth as a spur to marriage. But when men have at hand a remedy more agreeable to their corrupt will, marriage is almost expelled. And therefore there are with you seen infinite men that marry not, but chase rather a libertine and impure single life than to be yoked in marriage; and many that do marry, marry late, when the prime and strength of their years is past. And when they do marry, what is marriage to them but a very bargain, wherein is sought alliance, or portion [dowry], or reputation, with some desire (almost indifferent) of issue, and not the faithful nuptial union of man and wife, that was first instituted. Neither is it possible that those that have cast away so basely so much of their strength should greatly esteem children (being of the same matter) as chaste men do.

"So likewise during marriage is the case much amended, as it ought to be if those things were tolerated only for necessity? No, but they remain still as a very affront to marriage. The haunting of those dissolute places or resort to courtesans are no more punished in married men than in bachelors. And the depraved custom of change, and the delight in meretricious embracements (where sin is turned into art) maketh marriage a dull thing, and a kind of imposition or tax. They hear you defend these things, as done to avoid greater evils, as advoutries [adulteries], deflowering of virgins, unnatural lust, and the like. But they say this is a preposterous wisdom, and they call it 'Lot's offer' who to save his guests from abusing, offered his daughters; nay, they say farther that there is little gained in this, for that the same vices and appetites do still remain and abound, unlawful lust being like a furnace, that if you stop the flames altogether, it will quench, but if you give it any vent, it will rage.

EMERGING VIRUSES - AIDS & EBOLA

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted Hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein.

This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses and experimented with antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

"As for masculine love, they have no touch of it, and yet there are not so faithful and inviolate friendships in the world again as are there; and to speak generally (as I said before) I have not read of any such chastity in any people as theirs. And their usual saying is: 'That whosoever is unchaste cannot reverence himself.' And they say that: 'The reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices.'"

And when he had said this the good Jew paused a little; whereupon I, far more willing to hear him speak on than to speak myself, yet thinking it decent that upon his pause of speech I should not be altogether silent, said only this; that I would say to him, as the widow of Sarepta said to Elias [Elijah], that he was come to bring to memory our sins; and that I confess the righteousness of Bensalem was greater than the righteousness of Europe. At which speech he bowed his head, and went on this manner:

"They have also many wise and excellent laws touching marriage. They allow no polygamy. They have ordained that none do intermarry, or contract, until a month be past from their first interview. Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct [punish by fine] it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance."

And as we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger, in a rich huke [a kind of cape with a hood], that spake with the Jew; whereupon he turned to me, and said: "You will pardon me, for I am commanded away in haste."

The next morning he came to me again, joyful as it seemed, and said: "There is word come to the Governor of the city, that one of the fathers of Salomon's House will be here this day seven-night; we have seen none of them this dozen years. His coming is in state; but the cause of his coming is secret. I will provide you and your fellows of a good standing [standing place] to see his entry." I thanked him, and told him I was most glad of the news.

The day being come he made his entry.

One half of the world's current population should soon be dead according to authoritative projections. Will you, your family, and friends be among the survivors or the deceased?

Dr. Len Horowitz and Dr. Joseph S. Puleo investigate 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge and "healing codes" to humanity. It offers hope for the loving masses to survive the worldwide plagues, famines, and weather changes that are now at hand. Healing Codes

He was a man of middle stature and age, comely of person, and had an aspect as if he pitied men. He was clothed in a robe of fine black cloth, with wide sleeves, and a cape: his under garment was of excellent white linen down to the foot, girt with a girdle of the same; and a sindon or tippet of the same about his neck. He had gloves that were curious, and set with stone; and shoes of peach-colored velvet. His neck was bare to the shoulders. His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero [a hunter's cap with a flap]; and his locks curled below it decently: they were of color brown. His beard was cut round and of the same color with his hair, somewhat lighter. He was carried in a rich chariot, without wheels, litter-wise, with two horses at either end, richly trapped in blue velvet embroidered; and two footmen on each side in the like attire. The chariot was all of cedar, gilt, and adorned with crystal; save that the fore-end had panels of sapphires, set in borders of gold, and the hinder-end the like of emeralds of the Peru color. There was also a sun of gold, radiant upon the top, in the midst; and on the top before, a small cherub of gold, with wings displayed. The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissue upon blue. He had before him fifty attendants, young men all, in white satin loose coats to the midleg; and stockings of white silk, and shoes of blue velvet; and hats of blue velvet with fine plumes of divers colors set round like hat-bands.

Next before the chariot went two men, bare-headed, in linen garments down to the foot, girt, and shoes of blue velvet, who carried the one a crosier, the other a pastoral staff like a sheep-hook: neither of them of metal, but the crosier of balmwood, the pastoral staff of cedar. Horsemen he had none, neither before nor behind his chariot: as it seemeth, to avoid all tumult and trouble. Behind his chariot went all the officers and principals of the companies [guilds] of the city. He sat alone, upon cushions, of a kind of excellent plush, blue; and under his foot curious carpets of silk of divers colors, like the Persian, but far finer. He held up his bare hand, as he went, as blessing the people, but in silence. The street was wonderfully well kept; so that there was never any army had their men stand in better battle-array than the people stood. The windows likewise were not crowded, but every one stood in them, as if they had been placed.

When the show was passed, the Jew said to me: "I shall not be able to attend you as I would, in regard of some charge the city hath laid upon me for the entertaining of this great person." Three days after, the Jew came to me again, and said: "Ye are happy men; for the father of Salomon's House taketh knowledge of your being here, and commanded me to tell you that he will admit all your company to his presence, and have private conference with one of you that ye shall choose; and for this hath appointed the next day after tomorrow. And because he meaneth to give you his blessing, he hath appointed it in the forenoon."

We came at our day and hour, and I was chosen by my fellows for the private access. We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged [hung with tapestries], and carpeted under foot without any degrees to the state [steps to the canopy]. He was set upon a low throne richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satin embroidered. He was alone, save that he had two pages of honor, on either hand one, finely attired in white. His under garments were the like that we saw him wear in the chariot; but instead of his gown, he had on him a mantle with a cape, of the same fine black, fastened about him. When we came in, as we were taught, we bowed low at our first entrance; and when we were come near his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved, and in posture of blessing; and we every one of us stooped down, and kissed the hem of his tippet. That done, the rest departed, and I remained. Then he warned the pages forth of the room, and caused me to sit down beside him, and spake to me thus in the Spanish tongue:

"God bless thee, my son; I will give thee the greatest jewel I have. For I will impart unto thee, for the love of God and men, a relation of the true state of Salomon's House. Son, to make you know the true state of Salomon's House, I will keep this order. First, I will set forth unto you the end of our foundation. Secondly, the preparations and instruments we have for our works. Thirdly, the several employments and functions whereto our fellows are assigned. And fourthly, the ordinances and rites which we observe.

"The end of our foundation is the knowledge of causes, and secret motions of things; and the enlarging of the bounds of human empire, to the effecting of all things possible.

"The preparations and instruments are these. We have large and deep caves of several depths; the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms; and some of them are digged and made under great hills and mountains; so that if you reckon together the depth of the hill, and the depth of the cave, they are, some of them, above three miles deep. For we find that the depth of a hill, and the depth of a cave from the flat, is the same thing; both remote alike from the sun and heaven's beams, and from the open air. These caves we call the lower region, and we use them for all coagulations, indurations, refrigerations, and conservations of bodies [thickening, hardening, chilling, and preserving for scientific research]. We use them likewise for the imitation of natural mines, and the producing also of new artificial metals, by compositions and materials which we use, and lay there for many years. We use them also sometimes (which may seem strange) for curing of some diseases and for prolongation of life in some hermits that choose to live there, well accommodated of all things necessary, and indeed live very long; by whom also we learn many things.

"We have burials [burial places] in several earths, where we put divers [various] cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. But we have them in greater variety, and some of them more fine. We also have great variety of composts and soils, for the making of the earth fruitful.

"We have high towers, the highest about half a mile in height, and some of them likewise set upon high mountains, so that the vantage of the hill, with the tower, is in the highest of them three miles at least. And these places we call the upper region, accounting the air between the high places and the low as a middle region. We use these towers, according to their several heights and situations, for insulation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors [phenomena of weather]*—*as winds, rain, snow, hail; and some of the fiery meteors also. And upon them, in some places, are dwellings of hermits, whom we visit sometimes, and instruct what to observe.

"We have great lakes, both salt and fresh, whereof we have use for the fish and fowl. We use them also for burials of some natural bodies, for we find a difference in things buried in earth, or in air below the earth, and things buried in water. We have also pools, of which some do strain fresh water out of salt, and others by art do turn fresh water into salt. We have also some rocks in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapor of the sea. We have likewise violent streams and cataracts, which serve us for many motions; and likewise engines for multiplying and enforcing [reinforcing] of winds to set also on divers motions.

"We have also a number of artificial wells and fountains, made in imitation of the natural sources and baths, as tinted upon vitriol, sulphur, steel, brass, lead, niter, and other minerals; and again, we have little wells for infusions of many things, where the waters take the virtue quicker and better than in vessels or basins. And amongst them we have a water which we call Water of Paradise, being by that we do to it made very sovereign for health and prolongation of life.

"We have also great and spacious houses, where we imitate and demonstrate meteors*—as snow, hail, rain, some artificial rains of bodies, and not of water, thunders, lightnings; also generations of bodies in air—*as frogs, flies, and divers others.

"We have also certain chambers, which we call chambers of health, where we qualify the air as we think good and proper for the cure of divers diseases, and preservation of health.

"We have also fair and large baths, of several mixtures, for the cure of diseases and the restoring of man's body from arefaction [drying up]; and others for the confirming of it in strength of sinews, vital parts, and the very juice and substance of the body.

"We have also large and various orchards and gardens, wherein we do not so much respect beauty as variety of ground and soil, proper for divers trees and herbs, and some very spacious, where trees and berries are set, whereof we make divers kinds of drinks, besides the vineyards. In these we practice likewise all conclusions [experiments] of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees, which produceth many effects. And we make by art, in the same orchards and gardens, trees and flowers to come earlier or later than their seasons, and to come up and bear more speedily than by their natural course they do. We make them also by art greater much than their nature; and their fruit greater and sweeter, and of differing taste, smell, color, and figure, from their nature. And many of them we so order as they become of medicinal use.

"We have also means to make divers plants rise by mixtures of earths, without seeds, and likewise to make divers new plants, differing from the vulgar, and to make one tree or plant turn into another.

"We have also parks and enclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds; which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials, that thereby we may take light what may be wrought upon the body of man. Wherein we find many strange effects: as continuing life in them, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth; resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance, and the like. We try also all poisons, and other medicines upon them, as well of chirurgery as physic [of surgery as a medicine]. By art likewise we make them greater or taller than their kind is, and contrariwise dwarf them and stay their growth; we make them more fruitful and bearing than their kind is, and contrariwise barren and not generative. Also we make them differ in color, shape, activity, many ways. We find means to make commixtures and copulations of divers kinds, which have produced many new kinds, and them not barren, as the general opinion is. We make a number of kinds, of serpents, worms, flies, fishes, of putrefaction [rotting matter], whereof some are advanced (in effect) to be perfect creatures, like beasts or birds, and have sexes, and do propagate. Neither do we this by chance, but we know beforehand of what matter and commixture, what kind of those creatures will arise.

"We have also particular pools where we make trials upon fishes, as we have said before of beasts and birds. "We have also places for breed and generation of those kinds of worms and flies which are of special use; such as are with you, your silkworms and bees.

"I will not hold you long with recounting of our brew-houses, bake-houses, and kitchens, where are made divers drinks, breads, and meats, rare and of special effects. Wines we have of grapes, and drinks of other juice, of fruits, of grains, and of roots, and of mixtures with honey, sugar, manna, and fruits dried and decocted [condensed]; also of the tears or woundings of trees, and of the pulp of canes. And these drinks are of several ages, some to the age or last [duration] of forty years. We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots and spices; yea, with several fleshs and white-meats; whereof some of the drinks are such as they are in effect meat and drink both, so that divers, especially in age, do desire to live with them with little

The Nazi-American Biomedical/Biowarfare Connection

If you think the Nazi agenda for world control, disposing of undesirable populations, and experiments to genetically develop a master race, ended with World War II, you are in for a shock! Learn about the links between Hitler's top medical and biowarfare researchers and U.S. and British intelligence, allied pharmaceutical and population control interests, the Rockefellers, the Bushs, and the British Royal Family! Dr. Horowitz and Dave

Emory, nationally syndicated talk-show host, reveal how Merck, Sharp, and Dohme—the world's largest vaccine producer—was a principal recipient of the Nazi war chest, as part of a scheme to create a monopoly over the world's chemical and pharmaceutical industries, for the purpose of creating a "New World Order" and giving rise to "The Fourth Reich". or no meat or bread. And above all we strive to have drinks of extreme thin parts [properties], to insinuate into the body, and yet without all biting, sharpness, or fretting; insomuch as some of them, put upon the back of your hand, will with a little stay pass through to the palm, and taste yet mild to the mouth. We have also waters which we ripen in that fashion, as they become nourishing, so that they are indeed excellent drinks, and many will use no other.

"Bread we have of several grains, roots, and kernels; yea, and some of flesh, and fish, dried; with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, some do nourish so, as divers do live of them, without any other meat, who live very long. So for meats, we have some of them so beaten, and made tender, and mortified, yet without all corrupting, as a weak heat of the stomach will turn them into good chilus [chyle; stomach contents readily absorbed by the intestines], as well as a strong heat would meat otherwise prepared. We have some meats also, and breads, and drinks which taken by men enable them to fast long after; and some other that used make the very flesh of men's bodies sensibly more hard and tough, and their strength far greater than otherwise it would be.

"We have dispensaries or shops of medicines; wherein you may easily think, if we have such variety of plants and living creatures, more than you have in Europe (for we know what you have), the simples [herbs], drugs, and ingredients of medicines, must likewise be in so much the greater variety. We have them likewise of divers ages, and long fermentations. And for their preparations, we have not only all manner of exquisite distillations and separations, and especially by gentle heats, and percolations through divers strainers, yea, and substances; but also exact forms of composition, whereby they incorporate almost as they were natural simples.

"We have also divers mechanical arts which you have not; and stuffs made by them, as papers, linen, silks, tissues, dainty works of feathers of wonderful luster, excellent dyes, and many others: and shops likewise, as well for such as are not brought into vulgar use amongst us, as for those that are. For you must know, that of the things before recited, many of them are grown into use throughout the kingdom, but yet, if they did flow from our invention, we have of them also for patterns and principles.

"We have also furnaces of great diversities, and that keep great diversity of heats: fierce and quick, strong and constant, soft and mild; blown, quiet, dry, moist, and the like. But above all we have heats, in imitation of the Sun's and heavenly bodies' heats, that pass divers inequalities, and (as it were) orbs, progresses, and returns, whereby we produce admirable effects. Besides, we have heats of dungs, and of bellies and maws of living creatures and of their bloods and bodies, and of hays and herbs laid up moist, of lime unquenched, and such like. Instruments also which generate heat only by motion. And farther, places for strong insulations; and again, places under the Earth, which by nature or art yield heat. These divers heats we use as the nature of the operation which we intend requireth.

"We have also perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colors; and out of things uncolored and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colors, not in rainbows (as it is in gems and prisms), but of themselves single. We represent also all multiplications of light, which we carry to great distance, and make so sharp, as to discern small points and lines. Also all colorations of light; all delusions and deceits of the sight, in figures, magnitudes, motions, colors; all demonstrations of shadows. We find also divers means yet unknown to you of producing of light, originally from divers bodies. We procure means of seeing objects afar off, as in the heaven and remote places; and represent things near as afar off, and things afar off as near; making feigned distances. We have also helps for the sight, far above spectacles and glasses in use. We have also glasses and means to see small and minute bodies perfectly and distinctly; as the shapes and colors of small flies and worms, grains, and flaws in gems which cannot otherwise be seen, observations in urine and blood not otherwise to be seen. We make artificial rainbows, halos, and circles about light. We represent also all manner of reflections, refractions, and multiplications of visual beams of objects.

"We have also precious stones of all kinds, many of them of great beauty and to you unknown; crystals likewise, and glasses of divers kinds; and amongst them some of metals vitrified [turned into glass], and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Also a number of fossils and imperfect minerals, which you have not. Likewise loadstones of prodigious virtue: and other rare stones, both natural and artificial.

"We have also sound-houses, where we practice and demonstrate all sounds and their generation. We have harmonies which you have not, of quarter-sounds and lesser slides of sounds. Divers instruments of music likewise to you unknown, some sweeter than any you have; together with bells and rings that are dainty and sweet. We represent small sounds as great and deep; likewise great sounds, extenuate [thin] and sharp; we make divers tremblings and warblings of sounds, which in their original are entire. We represent and imitate all articulate sounds and letters, and the voices and notes of beasts and birds. We have certain helps which set to the ear do further the hearing greatly. We have also divers strange and artificial echoes, reflecting the voice many times, and as it were tossing it; and some that give back the voice louder than it came, some shriller and some deeper: yea, some rendering the voice, differing in the letters or articulate sound from that they receive. We have also means to convey sounds in trunks [tubes] and pipes, in strange lines and distances.

"We have also perfume-houses, wherewith we join also practices of taste. We multiply smells, which may seem strange: we imitate smells, making all smells to breathe out of other mixtures than those that give them. We make divers imitations of taste likewise, so that they will deceive any man's taste. And in this house we contain also a confiture-house, where we make all sweetmeats, dry and moist, and divers pleasant wines, milks, broths, and salads, far in greater variety than you have.

"We have also engine-houses, where are prepared engines and instruments for all sorts of motions. There we imitate and practice to make swifter motions than any you have, either out of your muskets or any engine that you have; and to make them and multiply them more easily and with small force, by wheels and other means, and to make them stronger and more violent than yours are, exceeding your greatest cannons and basilisks [a long cannon]. We represent also ordnance and instruments of war and engines of all kinds; and likewise new mixtures and compositions of gunpowder, wildfires burning in water and unquenchable, also fireworks of all variety, both for pleasure and use.

"We imitate also flights of birds; we have some degrees [of success] of flying in the air. We have ships and boats for going under water and brooking of seas, also swimming girdles and supporters. We have divers curious clocks, and other like motions of return, and some perpetual motions. We imitate also motions of living creatures by images of men, beasts, birds, fishes, and serpents; we have also a great number of other various motions, strange for equality, fineness, and subtlety.

"We have also a mathematical-house, where are represented all instruments, as well of geometry, as astronomy, exquisitely made.

"We have also houses of deceits of the senses, where we represent all manner of feats of juggling, false apparitions, impostures, and illusions, and their fallacies. And surely you will easily believe that we, that have so many things truly natural which induce admiration, could in a world of particulars deceive the senses if we would disguise those things, and labor to make them seem more miraculous. But we do hate all impostures and lies, insomuch as we have severely forbidden it to all our fellows under pain of ignominy and fines, that they do not show any natural work or thing adorned or swelling, but only pure as it is, and without all affectation of strangeness.

"These are, my son, the riches of Salomon's House.

"For the several employments and offices of our fellows, we have twelve that sail into foreign countries under the names of other nations (for our own we conceal), who bring us the books and abstracts, and patterns of experiments of all other parts. These we call Merchants of Light.

"We have three that collect the experiments which are in all books. These we call Depredators.

"We have three that collect the experiments of all mechanical arts, and also of liberal sciences, and also of practices which are not brought into arts. These we call Mystery-men.

"We have three that try new experiments, such as themselves think good. These we call Pioneers or Miners.

"We have three that draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables, to give the better light for the drawing of observations and axioms out of them. These we call Compilers.

SEEDS OF FIRE CHINA AND THE STORY BEHIND THE ATTACK ON AMERICA

On the eve of the first war in the 21st Century, one perplexing question remains: the role of China. The answer comes in what will be seen as one of the most important books of all time. It explains how China will use the crisis to launch itself as a new Super Power—and become America's new major enemy.

China by 2015 will have deployed tens to several tens of missiles with nuclear warheads targeted against the United States, mostly more-survivable land and sea mobile missiles. It will also have hundreds of shorter-range ballistic and cruise missiles for use in regional conflicts. Some of these shorter-range missiles will have nuclear warheads; most will be armed with conventional warheads.

As an example of his total credibility, hours after the book was published, the CIA was forced to confirm its findings about the threat China poses. The CIA publicly confirmed what Gordon Thomas reveals in SEEDS OF FIRE. Just how big a threat China is.

This has been kept out of the news agenda because it does not suit certain business interests to have that truth emerge. But at last here it is. Every patriotic American should buy and read this book! It is simply revelatory.

Other revelations include the Inslaw/Promis "largest global software theft in history", MK-ULTRA mind-control applications, and the link between newspaper magnate Robert Maxwell and the Los Alamos laboratory nuclear secrets "spy" case.

But it is the China connection that ought to alert all thinking Americans to "the sleeping giant" of the Orient. Be informed. Be astonished. 600 pages.

"We have three that bend themselves, looking into the experiments of their fellows, and cast about how to draw out of them things of use and practice for man's life and knowledge, as well for works as for plain demonstration of causes, means of natural divinations, and the easy and clear discovery of the virtues and parts of bodies. These we call Dowry-men or Benefactors.

"Then, after divers meetings and consults of our whole number to consider of the former labors and collections, we have three that take care out of them to direct new experiments, of a higher light, more penetrating into Nature than the former. These we call Lamps.

"We have three others that do execute the experiments so directed, and report them. These we call Inoculators.

"Lastly, we have three that raise the former discoveries by experiments into greater observations, axioms, and aphorisms. These we call Interpreters of Nature.

"We have also, as you must think, novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail; besides a great number of servants and attendants, men and women.

"And this we do also: we have consultations, which of the inventions and experiences which we have discovered shall be published, and which not; and take all an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret, though some of those we do reveal sometimes to the state, and some not.

"For our ordinances and rites, we have two very long and fair galleries; in one of these we place patterns and samples of all manner of the more rare and excellent inventions; in the other we place the statues of all principal inventors. There we have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies; also the inventor of ships; your monk that was the inventor of ordnance and of gunpowder [Roger Bacon]; the inventor of music; the inventor of letters; the inventor of printing; the inventor of observations of astronomy; the inventor of works in metal; the inventor of glass; the inventor of silk of the worm; the inventor of wine; the inventor of corn and bread; the inventor of sugars; and all these by more certain tradition than you have. Then we have divers inventors of our own, of excellent works, which since you have not seen, it were too long to make descriptions of them; and besides, in the right understanding of those descriptions you might easily err. For upon every invention of value we erect a statue to the inventor, and give him a liberal and honorable reward. These statues are some of brass, some of marble and touchstone, some of cedar and other special woods gilt and adorned; some of iron, some of silver, some of gold.

"We have certain hymns and services, which we say daily, of laud and thanks to God for His marvelous works. And forms of prayer, imploring His aid and blessing for the illumination of our labors, and the turning of them into good and holy uses.

"Lastly, we have circuits or visits of divers principal cities of the kingdom; where, as it cometh to pass, we do publish such new profitable inventions as we think good. And we do also declare natural divinations [forecasting by natural observation] of diseases, plagues, swarms of hurtful creatures, scarcity, tempests, earthquakes, great inundations, comets, temperature of the year, and divers other things; and we give counsel thereupon, what the people shall do for the prevention and remedy of them."

And when he had said this he stood up; and I, as I had been taught, knelt down; and he laid his right hand upon my head, and said: "God bless thee, my son, and God bless this relation which I have made. I give thee leave to publish it, for the good of other nations; for we here are in God's bosom, a land unknown."

And so he left me; having assigned a value of about two thousand ducats for a bounty to me and my fellows. For they give great largesses, where they come, upon all occasions.

[end quoting]

How often while reading this did you have to remind yourself that it was written about 1623? Did parts of it strike you as similar to the visionary prose of the great prophet Nostradamus from a century earlier? In any event, the overall picture being painted is unmistakably one of what CAN be accomplished in a society resting on a strong foundation of freedom. And that picture is no doubt close to the long-term aspirations our Founding Fathers wished to preserve through the new nation dedicated to freedom.

Closing Thoughts On Freedom

As we come to the end of this wide-ranging survey, hopefully what you have read will trigger your own personal meditation on a gift so profound, yet so taken for granted in the United States, as is freedom.

Perhaps in summary it could be said that freedom is a state of being that implies rights and responsibilities.

Rights are like muscles—you need to exercise them. Responsibilities are like the weights you lift with those muscles to keep strong and fit.

Granted, we are a society of laws; yet if the laws are too restrictive of fundamental freedoms, too much against the common good, too destructive of the creative human spirit, then action MUST be taken to repeal those laws. Complacency only leads to further controls on the populace, like a growing cancer left unchecked.

As our Founding Fathers so wisely (and practically) asserted, elected leadership is the workable mechanism that runs a free republic. But if those elected officials are not upholding their sworn representational responsibilities, elect them out of office! That means the citizenry must be responsible enough to pay attention to what their representatives are up to.

And just WHO ought to be one of those representatives of the people? Perhaps YOU! Run for office yourself. Work at the local level. Work at the city, county, and state level. Start town meetings. Help in the drafting of local legislation. Repeal bad legislation. Roll-up your sleeves and get involved. Write an editorial in your local newspaper. Talk to family and friends and your elected officials. Start your own watchdog group on matters of particular interest or expertise. The possibilities are as endless as is freedom's profound yet often overlooked importance—like the air we breathe.

Remember that much can be accomplished through a political approach of non-violent non-cooperation with regard to outside influences. Rise above the herd-of-sheep mentality used to control the masses.

You are as free as you want to be, within common limits of civility toward your fellow citizens. Or as David Icke might say, we are each as free as we perceive freedom in our minds.

Give thanks for the freedoms we still do enjoy. And if you don't feel free, why don't you? Is it something you can change? If so, what's stopping you?

Just because our government's government has long been actively involved in mind-control of the masses doesn't mean that living free is not possible. Break their programming and regain control of your own mind.

Start thinking. Start creating. Put those ideas into constructive action. The choice, as always, is yours to make.

Let's reclaim America's great experiment in freedom. It's our most precious gift from God. △

California Reamin': California And The Power Pirates

Editor's note: Longtime readers of The SPECTRUM may recall our February 2001 issue's front-page story on the then-common electric power blackouts titled Will The Lights Go Out In California And The Nation? Expert Exposes Fraud & Greed. It was many months after that before snippets of similar information, as we presented then, began to trickle out of other alternative news sources, and eventually a few mainstream news conduits presented extremely watered-down versions of what happened. And then it all went away like a bad dream—with the taxpayers holding yet another highway robbery bill, as usual, while politicians faked compassion, as usual.

What you are about to read is not only the first good investigative work we have seen on this important NATIONAL matter since the lights came back on in California, but the style in which it is presented ranks in that category of the truly exceptional, as a kindred witty spirit to Michael Moore's widely appealing work.

The following is excerpted from a book titled The Best Democracy Money Can Buy by wickedly fine writer and investigative journalist Greg Palast. (See the information box for this book nearby.)

According to a background article on Greg at the www.zmag.org website which promotes his work:

"Katherine Harris [who helped Jeb Bush fabricate his brother's Florida presidential victory] calls Greg Palast 'twisted and maniacal' but in Britain he's known as 'the most important investigative reporter of our time' (Tribune Magazine).

"Despite breaking some of the decade's biggest stories (the theft of the elections in Florida, Enron's machinations, the real story of the coup d'etat in Venezuela, and more), this Los Angeles-born journalist's work has been all but banned in the U.S.A.—except at ZNet which first brought his writings for the [London] Guardian and BBC to America.

"Palast's new book, the new U.S. edition of The Best Democracy Money Can Buy, has been rising up the New York Times bestseller list since it's release last month."

And rightly it should—just like Michael Moore's quietly suppressed book Stupid White Men—since Greg tackles Truth head-on, and with the kind of ironic humor which can only be generated by the very highest-level crooks up to their usual no-good antics.

4/23/03 GREG PALAST
(www.gregpalast.com)

On April 10, 1989, Jacob "Jake" Horton, senior vice president of Southern Company's Gulf Power unit, boarded the company plane to confront his board of directors over the company's accounting games and illegal payments to local politicians. Minutes after takeoff, the plane exploded. Later that day, police received an anonymous call: "You can stop investigating Gulf Power now."

Fast-forward to December 2000. The lights in San Francisco blink out. Wholesale electricity prices in California rise on some days by 7,000 %, and San Francisco's power company declares bankruptcy.

Dick Cheney, just selected vice president by the U.S. Supreme Court, begins a series of secret meetings with power company executives. On their advice, within three days of Bush's inaugural, his Energy Department wipes away regulations against price gouging and profiteering ordered that December by outgoing President Clinton.

Out of Cheney's off-the-record meetings came the energy plan released by the president in May 2001. Billed as the response to the California electricity crisis, the president told us the plan contained the magic potion to end the power shortage. Then, after the horrors of September 11, 2001, the plan was remarketed as a weapon against Middle East terrorists.

Nasty-minded readers may believe the Bush energy program, still rolling around Congress, is just some pea-brained scheme to pay off the president's oil company buddies, fry the planet, and smother Mother Earth in coal ash, petroleum pollutants, and nuclear waste. In truth, it's more devious than that.

There is a link running from Jake's exploding plane to blackouts on the Golden Gate Bridge to the polluters' wet dream of an energy plan offered by Cheney and Bush. They are connected through the mystical economics of electricity deregulation.

Beneath the murky surface of this odd backwater of market theory is a multicontinental war over the ownership and control of $4 trillion in public utility infrastructure—gas, water, telephone, and electricity lines—a story that began a decade earlier with Jake Horton and continued through a coup d'état in Pakistan and the bankruptcy of a company called Enron.

Andersen's Magic Show

In 1989, I was brought into an investigation of Horton's employer, Southern Company of Atlanta, by Georgia civic groups suspicious that Southern had overcharged its several million electricity customers in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida. I focused on transcripts of tape recordings made a year earlier by accountant Gary Gilman.

Wearing a hidden microphone, Gilman recorded his fellow executives detailing the method by which Southern charged customers $61 million for spare parts which, in fact, had not been used. Like all good accountants, Southern's kept a careful record of the phantom parts in electronic ledgers—found in the trunk of one executive's car. I obtained copies of the documents, spending months decoding the accounts, gaining an insight into what would, a decade later, lead to blackouts and bankruptcies from California to Argentina.

There's two sets of numbers—one for government and one for the boys at the top of the company structure to keep track of reality. Here's where it turns a little technical. The parts held in inventory should have been "capitalized"—that is, listed as an investment in "Account 154". In fact, they were "expensed"—to use the accounting lingo—and charged as if they were used. The difference between capitalizing and expensing is the difference between having your cake (investing) and eating it (using it up).

Moving numbers from one account to the other cheated the IRS and bill payers out of millions.

Shortly after Horton's death, a grand jury in Atlanta was prepared to indict Southern Company's Georgia unit for the spare-parts accounting manipulations. But, invoking a rarely used procedure under the federal racketeering statute, Bush Senior's Justice Department overruled local prosecutors to quash the request for indictment. The reason? Keeping hidden accounts in secret files and booking costs into the wrong accounts may be a bit unusual, and may have cost the public a bundle, but it was approved at each step by that upstanding auditing firm, Arthur Andersen.

Indeed they had. I found one letter from Andersen coaching the power company executives on how to wave a bookkeeping magic wand over the spare-parts records to make the problem disappear.

I suggested at the time: "Why not indict Andersen?" and proposed a civil racketeering claim against the accounting giant, naming them as Southern's co-conspirator.

My suggestion, not surprisingly, was dismissed with a chuckle by lawyers who understood that politics trumps law.

The signal from the Bush Administration was clear enough: Hire Andersen, knead your account books like cookie dough, and get a "Get Out of Jail Free" card.

The New World Business Order

What about poor Jake? "Looks like he saw no other way out" says former Southern chairman A. W. "Bill" Dahlberg of the airplane explosion.

A suicide? Jake's brother doubts it: He says Horton had planned to meet with the U.S. attorney in Atlanta. Jake apparently had a lot to say about Southern's charging consumers for loads of coal bought from an affiliated mining company. At times the train cars were

THE BEST DEMOCRACY MONEY CAN BUY

Award-winning investigative journalist Greg Palast digs deep to unearth the ugly facts that few reporters working anywhere in the world today have the courage or ability to cover. From East Timor to Waco, he has exposed some of the most egregious cases of political corruption, corporate fraud, and financial manipulation in the U.S. and abroad. His uncanny investigative skills as well as his no-holds-barred style have made him an anathema among magnates on four continents and a living legend among his colleagues and his devoted readership.

This new collection brings together some of Palast's most powerful writing of the past decade, including his celebrated Washington Post exposé on Jeb Bush and Katherine Harris's stealing of the presidential election in Florida, and recent stories on George W. Bush's payoffs to corporate cronies, the payola behind Hillary Clinton, and the fake energy crisis. Also included in this volume are new and previously unpublished material, television transcripts, photographs, and letters. You'll laugh & cry at the same time!

filled with rock instead of coal.

Jake's death and the failure to indict Southern and Andersen in 1989 marked the radical turning point, albeit unseen at the time, in the way corporate America would do business—or, as it turned out, fail to do business.

This "new world business order" would be lead by power, water, and natural gas corporations and telecommunications (what we used to call phone companies).

Until the 1990s, U.S. state governments kept a tight lid on these monopolies' profits. America's old regulatory system, based on public hearings and open records, was uniquely democratic, found nowhere else in the world. This was a legacy of the Populists, an armed and angry farmers' movement whose struggles from 1900 through 1930 bequeathed to Americans just about the lowest priced, most reliable electricity services in the world—which is, of course, anathema to power company shareholders.

In 1933, President Franklin Roosevelt caged the man he believed to be the last of the power pirates, Samuel Insull, a wheelerdealer whose electricity trust companies were cesspools of rigged prices, cooked books, watered stock, and suffocating monopoly. Roosevelt hit Insull and his ilk with the Public Utility Holding Company Act, the Federal Power Act and the Federal Communications Act which, combined with state laws, told electricity, gas, telephone, and water companies when to sit, stand, and salute.

[Editor's note: Actually, Roosevelt's actions were an exercise akin to our modern government's "war on drugs" in order to get the ambitious amateurs out of a domain the wealthy elite controllers wished to rule themselves, now that the technologies had evolved enough to prove their sustained worth.]

Prices and profits were capped; the tiniest asset had to be accounted for; issuing stock and bonds required government approval; sales between affiliated companies were controlled; "offshore" and "off-books" subsidiaries were prohibited; and lights kept on by force of law: no blackout blackmail to hike prices. Furthermore, FDR made political donations from these companies illegal—no soft money, no hard money, no money period.

Roosevelt's rules held for half a century. And utilities hated it, for good reason.

Southern Company was typical: In the 1980s, it was an unremarkable regional electricity company dying the death of a thousand financial cuts. Consumer groups used the old regulatory hearings to force Southern to eat the company's dumb investments on overpriced nuclear plants. As a result, Southern showed nothing but cash losses for years.

Then CEO Dahlberg, who took over after Horton's death, conceived an unorthodox way out for Southern from its regulatory and financial troubles. The company had tried breaking the law without much to show for it. (It pled guilty to political donations, a felony crime, and suffered penalties, though not criminal charges, for its accounting games.)

Now it would go straight—not by adhering to the law, but by changing the law to adhere to Dahlberg's plan. That plan was not small stuff: The near-bankrupt local company would take over the entire planet's electricity system and, at the same time, completely eliminate from the face of the Earth those pesky utility regulations that had crushed his company's fortunes.

California blackouts were just a hiccup on the road to the astonishing success of this astonishing program. Today, in 2003, Southern is by far the biggest power company in America (that is, since the collapse of Enron).

In early 2001, America's papers were filled with tales of the woes of the two California electric companies bleeding from $12 billion in payments for electricity supplies. Yet, at the time, virtually nothing was said of the companies collecting their serum: Southern and a half dozen of its corporate fellow-travelers: Entergy International of Little Rock, Duke Power of North Carolina, and Texas operators Reliant, TXU, Dynegy, El Paso Corp, and Enron.

Until November 2001, when America discovered a hole in Houston where Enron used to be, the U.S. press could not be bothered with the who, how, and why of these companies. True, there were some profiles of Enron's chairman, Ken Lay, but these were drooling hagiographies portraying Enron's chairman as a cross between Einstein and Elvis.

America's media have finally taken note of the Harry Potter accounting methods of many U.S. corporations. But I have yet to read the whole truth: that this ledger-dream began with the senior Bush's crusade to eliminate Roosevelt's pesky rules, and crucially, the utility accountants' rule book, the Uniform System Of Accounts.

Electricity deregulation, voted into law in 1992, the last big gimme for Bush donors before the elder Bush left the White House, tore the heart out of FDR's Holding Company Act. At the same time, Bush's Federal Communications Commission castrated its own oversight system.

As a result, the Uniform System Of Accounts became a museum curiosity. Without it, power and telecommunications companies could outfit their balance sheets with antigravity shoes. It is no accident that ten of the twenty mega-bankruptcies of the last two years involved the utility industry. Two companies in particular—WorldCom and Global Crossing—became virtuosi at the trick that got Southern in trouble in the pre-deregulation days: switching capital and expense items.

When Global Crossing paid Bush that $13 million in stock for one chat in 1998, was it for his golden words or gratitude for his bulldozing the stop signs and safety rails that once constrained Global Crossing's industry?

What was a crime in 1980, by 2000 became "entrepreneurship".

These so-called reforms didn't come cheap. The electric utility industry showered pols with $18.9 million in the last presidential campaign spree, though for every dollar Gore wheedled from the power players, Bush took seven.

But the official records of donations don't tell half the story. GreenMountain.com is one of the power-selling creatures created in Bush Senior's deregulation laboratory, founded by Sam Wyly. The Wyly clan of Texas are billionaires listed with the Federal Elections Commission as the eleventh largest contributor to George W. Bush's campaigns, with donations totaling a quarter million dollars. But that's just the tip of the cash-berg. The Wyls laid out a crucial $2.5 million for Bush that you won't find on any campaign report. These millions paid for venomous advertisements aired in March 2000 smearing Senator John McCain who was, until then, wiping the electoral floor with Bush Junior in the Republican primaries.

Bush Senior's killing of federal regulations in 1992 put Sam Wyly in the power biz. Still, there were restrictions at the state level. Bush Junior's deregulation act, which Wyly's company helped draft, gave Wyly the right to sell into that big Western market. On the day

George W. signed the Texas law, Sam Wyly said: "Governor Bush's hard work and leadership have paid off." And, it seems, in March 2000, the Wyls paid back.

The Rantings Of A Woman In Authority

The cloudburst of cash for politicians was not limited to, nor really begun, in the U.S.A. The success of the plan by Southern, Enron, and their Texas followers for world power conquest (or, if you prefer, "vision for globalization of energy supplies") hinged on Britain.

As the economist J. M. Keynes said: "The mad rantings of men in authority often have their origins in the jottings of some forgotten professor of economics." The professor in question here is Dr. Stephen Littlechild.

In the 1970s, young Stephen, a Briton who studied at the University of Texas, cooked up a scheme to replace British government ownership of utilities with something almost every economist before him said simply violated all accepted theorems and plain common sense: a free market in electricity. The fact that a truly free market didn't exist and cannot possibly work did not stop Britain's woman in authority, prime minister Margaret Thatcher, from adopting it.

It was more than free market theories that convinced her. Whispering in her ear was one Lord Wakeham, then merely "John" Wakeham, Thatcher's energy minister. Wakeham approved the first "merchant" power station. It was owned by a company created only in 1985—Enron. Lord Wakeham's decision meant that, for the first time in any nation, an electricity plant owner, namely Enron, could charge whatever the market could bear—or, more accurately, could not bear.

It was this act in 1990 that launched Enron as the deregulated international power trader. Shortly thereafter, Enron named Wakeham to its board of directors and placed him on Enron's Audit And Compliance Committee, charged with keeping an eye on the company's accounting methods.

In addition to his board fee ($10,000 a month), the company paid him for consulting services. If that strikes you as a conflict of interest, conflict is Wakeham's forté. His lordship took the Enron posts while remaining a voting member of Parliament. In Britain, that's quite legal.

Following the Enron deal, Wakeham pushed the British government to sell off every power plant in the nation along with all the wires from plant to home. Thatcher then launched the England-Wales Power Pool, Professor Littlechild's dream: an auction house for kilowatts that would set electricity prices for the nation based on free-market principles.

On paper, the Power Pool was an academic beauty to behold. The new, privately owned power plant owners would bid against each other every day, ruthlessly undercutting each other's prices for the right to sell to England's consumers, who would, as a result of this market competition, benefit from lower bills.

That was the theory. I can't say whether the market scheme failed in minutes or days, but the Power Pool quickly became a playground for what the industry called "gaming"—bid manipulation techniques that allowed the deregulated companies to expertly vacuum the pockets of consumers. Electricity prices jumped, and the owners of the power plants saw their investments grow in value by 300% to 400% virtually overnight.

Thatcher put the nutty professor Littlechild in charge of regulating the power industry mess. When his term ended in 1998, he left behind a "free market" that worked like a fixed casino and stank of collusion. Littlechild then landed on the board of one of Enron's strange little affiliate companies.

There was no way that Southern was going to let Enron and the Brits have all the loot to themselves. In 1995, the Atlanta company, besieged at home by consumers and regulators, bought up England's South Western Electricity Board. In England, Southern could charge double what they charged in Georgia, and earn five times the profit allowed by U.S. regulators.

This was the first purchase ever by an American power company outside the United States. The takeover was new, bold—and illegal.

Or, at least the law said so.

Bush Senior had mangled and beaten FDR's regulations, but many still stood, including the prohibition, written in clear no-nonsense language, that barred U.S. electric companies from gambling on foreign operations (or even operating outside their home states). But as Enron showed, rules were made to be broken—or "reformed".

Despite a formal complaint by elderly "New Deal" Democratic congressmen, the Securities and Exchange Commission blessed the Southern Company purchase after the fact. Getting the SEC to bend over wasn't easy, but then, Southern had political

Sixty years ago Eustace Mullins was a protégé of literary giant Ezra Pound, who understood central banking and its relationship with world unrest. He has been a respected researcher for over 50 years, and has since authored many books on conspiracy, including Secrets Of The Federal Reserve and The World Order.

Using his recent travel experiences and Orwell's 1984 as examples, Eustace discusses the irony of Homeland Security and how Americans are now treated as "Enemies of the State". He then describes the real manipulators behind all major wars, the Cold War, the Stock Market, the Medical Scam, 9/11, terrorism, and more.

To accomplish all this, the "perpe-traitors" control the government, the schools, and the media, while keeping us in unimportant jobs, and stealing most of our earnings. For these purposes the Central Bank is the only mechanism that works. Without the government-granted license to print money, the conspiracy would be no more of a threat to us than bin Laden actually is.

Eustace gives a history lesson you won't forget—nor should you!

insurance: Entergy International of Little Rock, Arkansas. Bill Clinton was president, and Entergy, his wife's former client, also wanted a piece of the English action.

Entergy, the near-bankrupt owner of some badly built nuclear plants and lines running across Louisiana and Arkansas, soon became the proud owner of giant London Electricity. In just eighteen months, Entergy would "flip" London to the French government for a gain of over $1 billion. The return on investment was infinite; Entergy bought London without putting up one dime in equity cash.

Behind Southern and Entergy came TXU of Dallas, and other Americans, which within three years owned 70% of the British power distribution market, no money down. Southern nearly grabbed Britain's biggest power seller, but reports of Horton's demise and unsavory stories of accounting trickery forced the Tory government, then fighting a losing election battle, to ban the takeover.

The new government of Tony Blair was outwardly hostile to the American colonizers. But in 1998, while working undercover for the Observer newspaper, I secretly recorded the details of a backroom deal between government ministers and a power company executive to let Reliant of Houston take over the second largest company in England. I also learned that Blair had personally overruled his regulators to allow Enron and Entergy to build new deregulated power plants—the special request of the Clinton White House.

Texas Gets Lay'd

By 1998, after boarding and capturing England, U.S. power buccaners, led by Southern, Enron, TXU, Reliant, and Entergy, had grabbed generating stations and wires on every continent save Antarctica.

But not in the United States, not at first. Americans believe in free enterprise, but we prefer cheap electricity and nearly free water, the product of a combination of our tight regulations and government ownership.

Almost alone on the planet, the U.S.A. stubbornly exempted itself from what the World Bank calls "neoliberal reform"—and this rankled the new international players who hungered to work the free-market con in the U.S.A. The industry lobbyists landed on two beachheads, Texas and California, the only two states with electric systems big enough, and governments Republican enough, to convert to "free" markets.

California was the first to fall over the electricity deregulation cliff, but Texas was the first to leap—with a push from its young new governor, George W. Bush. With Texas companies raking it in worldwide, it's not surprising that the rush to deregulate started in the Lone Star State.

But there was a technical problem that delayed the ripping down of regulation in Texas. To understand why requires a little lesson in engineering.

The power stations of Texas produce three things: electricity, pollution, and political donations. And, as always, Texas is biggest in all three.

Take, for example, the giant power plant named, with admirable candor, Big Brown, owned by TXU. When it comes to filth, Big Brown is champ. A strip mine near Waco stuffs Big Brown's furnaces with lignite, a kind of flammable dirt. TXU dumps 389,000 tons of contaminants into the air each year, making it the number-one polluter in the number-one polluting state in the U.S.A.

Bush made Dallas residents gasp (literally) when he signed a "grandfather" statute exempting some TXU plants from laws requiring scrubbers for these fossil-burning dinosaurs. The other beneficiary: polluter number two, Reliant. TXU and Reliant popped over half a million dollars into Bush's second gubernatorial race.

In 1995, the Clinton Justice Department opened an investigation into evidence of conspiracy by TXU and Reliant to monopolize the Texas power lines. The promised "competition" created by deregulation could placate the Feds and make Enron's Ken Lay a very happy man at the same time. Problem was, TXU and Reliant were stuck with Big Brown and plants so costly, inefficient, dangerous, and contaminated that the companies would lose billions in a true competitive market.

Governor Bush was always cautious to avoid conflicts of interest—in this case, the conflict between the interests of his top donors, Enron, El Paso Corporation, and Dynegy (power traders), and TXU and Reliant (power producers).

Former Enron lobbyist Terry Thorn told me straight up this quandary for the governor kept Texas deregulation stalled for two legislative sessions, until Bush found a third party to pick up the tab: Texas electricity customers. In 1999, the governor, the power traders, and power producers shook hands on a deal to add a $9 billion "stranded cost" surcharge to Texans' electric bills.

Ken Lay had another concern. Bush's stranded cost surcharge would let the games begin, but if the deregulation house of cards ever folded, there would be hell to pay—because one set of rules remained: tort law, the unique right of Americans to sue the bastards who rip us off.

In 1994, the year Bush ran for governor, Lay founded Texans for Lawsuit Reform. Lay doesn't fool around: TLR's PAC pays out a million dollars a year to Lone Star politicians.

In 1995, Bush's first big move as governor was to call an emergency session of the legislature to act on TLR's agenda. "Tort reform", in the hands of Bush and Lay, became tort deformed. The governor pushed through the legislature new restrictions on the right of stockholders, workers, and pensioners to sue rogue executives.

It looks like Ken Lay thought of everything.

The Texans Grab California By The Bulbs

While Texas companies delayed deregulation to haggle over the spoils, their lobbyists, and the industry's, bored ahead in California.

Lincoln said you can't fool all the people all the time—but, then, you don't have to. To turn a quick buck, a slick line of academic hoodoo and some well-aimed campaign contributions will do the trick.

Like Columbus bringing Indians back to the Old World for display, the power industry lobbyists brought Margaret Thatcher's professors and their wheezing free-market contraptions to California. In 1996, armed with the suspect calculations of well-compensated academics and inebriated with long droughts of utility political donations, the California legislature tossed out a regulatory system which, until then, had provided reasonably cheap, clean, reliable energy to the state.

Despite knowledge of the British disaster, the Sun-addled legislators wrote into the preamble of the enabling legislation the lobbyists' line that a deregulated market would cut consumer prices by 20%.

In 1999, my parents sent me their bill from San Diego. Instead of the 20% savings promised by the law, in the first year of full deregulation, their energy charges rose 379% over the previous year.

But before the big bills hit San Diego, the new planetary power merchants, using a combination of money, muscle, and Americans' penchant to follow the Hula Hoop state, suckered twenty-three other states into adopting deregulation laws.

Not every economist was for sale. Dr. Eugene Coyle, an incorruptible expert, calculated that his fellow Californians were in for a multibillion-dollar fleeing.

In 1998, in an extraordinary uprising of the lambs on the slaughterhouse ramp, Dr. Coyle and a band of community activists were able to get a referendum on the California ballot to overturn the legislature's deregulation vote. The power merchants didn't have to wait for the ballots to be counted to know the outcome: They had bought it.

In what is unarguably the highest price ever paid to buy an election, Southern California Edison, Pacific Gas and Electric, and their allies spent $53 million to defeat professor Coyle's proposal to slow deregulation.

From the get-go, California's new computer-controlled electricity auction system was a mess. The flow chart looked like a bowl of linguini thrown against the wall. In confusion is profit, in complexity more profit. I smelled Texans. Commissioner Carl Wood, appointed after the blackout disasters began, told me that Enron had little to do with the initial lobbying for deregulation, but much to do with writing these weird, knotted details.

In 2000, Beth Emory told me something quite astonishing. Emory had been vice president and general counsel to the agency that oversees California's auction house for kilowatts.

It struck me that, if Coyle and I knew the English-style system would lead to a price explosion and blackouts, certainly the Republican utility commissioners blessing the system knew it too. Politicians expressed po'-faced shock when in 2002 they discovered an Enron memo that describes tricks used to manipulate the market—with filmic names like Get Shorty, Death Star, and Ricochet.

Yet every one of these tricks the power gang used on California had been well rehearsed in England. Even the players were the same: Enron, TXU, Duke, Southern California Edison (which owns England's dams) and Southern of Atlanta. Over there, market hucksters used "stacking", "cramming", and "false scheduling"—Get Shorty's crude progenitors.

So, I asked Emory, did the state go ahead with their deregulation plan knowing it would blow up? “Oh yes, we knew it” Emory told me in 2000. Now an industry lawyer in Washington, she added: “What happened [the blackouts and price explosion] was predictable. We knew last year we’d have serious problems.” There was, she said, discussion of stalling deregulation, but the political push was on, despite foreknowledge of disaster.

Insider Emory says the state was not surprised that, on the first hot summer day after deregulation, when California needed every bit of juice it could find, the small coterie of plant owners held California’s power system hostage. They could name their price for electricity and they did: $9,999 per unit of power—30,000% above the old regulated price of about $30.

Californians were lucky, says Emory: The power pirates thought that the state’s computer could only accept four-digit bids in the automated auction.

In fact, the computers would have accepted seven digits, bankrupting half the families in Los Angeles in a day.

But one man’s disaster is another man’s windfall. And if that other man is someone like Ken Lay or Steve Letbetter of Reliant, one might expect some of the windfall to end up in the Republican Party pokey. The Typhoid Mary of deregulation was California Utility Commission chairman Daniel Fessler who, after an industry-sponsored junket to England, carried back this economic virus to California. Fessler didn’t know a darn thing about electricity when Governor Wilson put him in charge of the state’s power agency, but as a Republican functionary, he certainly knew how to get the party’s bread buttered.

How They Did It

Markets for electricity don’t work and can’t work. Electricity is not a bagel—that is, unlike your morning muffin, you can’t do without it when it gets too pricey.

Enron knew that, too.

Shortly after the California market opened for business, for example, an Enron trader sold the state about 5,000 megawatts of power to go over a 15 megawatt line. That’s like trying to pour a gallon of gasoline into a thimble—it can’t be done. This forced the system operator, the agency that actually keeps our lights on, to make costly emergency purchases, blowing market prices through the roof. Enron, knowing in advance of the panic it would create, could earn a super-profit.

The slightest shortage on a hot or cold day and—whammo!—the tight little wolfpack of electricity sellers can extract a limitless ransom. When the weather would not create a shortage, a monkey wrench could.

Repairs were scheduled at peak times. Reliant employees say the company was running plants at odd hours, “ramping” them up and down, which whistleblowers at the company considered deliberate sabotage.

Duke Power of North Carolina was less subtle. Its managers, say employees, simply threw away spare parts needed to keep the plants running. And San Diego’s power distribution company told me that Duke Power ordered them to shut down a plant during a shortage period—an order the California firm refused.

Merely by holding back the power from a single generator, the power merchants could make the electricity from their other plants worth more than gold.

In a report for California’s purchasing agency, Dr. Anjali Sheffrin had evidence that California power companies used “physical withholding” and “economic withholding” to create false shortages in California 98% of the time between May and November 2000.

Three giant companies (for which I have, frustratingly, only code names A1, A4, and A5) didn’t put in a single honest bid in those months. Add in “false congestion”, “false scheduling”, and “megawatt laundering”—and the overcharges add up, conservatively, to $6.2 billion in a single year.

In addition to the $39 million they paid to defeat Dr. Coyle’s anti-deregulation referendum in 1998, the three big California power companies—PG&E, Edison, and Sempra—spent another $34.8 million that year on lobbying and campaign contributions. It was a big payout, but the payback in billions proved again that investing in politicians has a consistently higher rate of return than investing in plants or products.

There are glimmers of justice. Pacific Gas & Electric, the company that crushed Dr. Coyle’s referendum, wrote a price freeze into that deregulation law. The sly codicil permitted the San Francisco outfit and its Los Angeles counterpart, Southern California Edison, to stuff their pockets with a $20 billion windfall as oil prices fell. They earned even more selling off their power plants to the out-of-state power merchants—who then used all those English tricks to beat the two California companies financially senseless. Their $20 billion windfall soon became a $12 billion loss—and PG&E declared bankruptcy at the end of 2000.

But we didn’t have long to enjoy PG&E’s comeuppance. California’s governor, Gray Davis, moved to bail out the companies.

Davis signed off on long-term contracts to buy electricity for PG&E and Edison, some of it priced at $500 per megawatt hour, more than ten times the old regulated tariff. The state is paying for these pricey contracts by issuing several billion dollars in government bonds. As Sam Wyly said, the Bushes’ hard work has paid off—and now, California will pay back at the rate of $2 billion a year for thirty years.

In other words, California didn’t run out of energy, it ran out of government. △

“All well and good, Mr. Edison—but in a typical small town who’s going to volunteer to stay up all night generating electricity?”

“And The Walls Come Tumblin’ Down”

5/4/03 SOLTEC / TESLA

Good morning, and thank you, my dear friend, for taking time from other pressing duties to provide this avenue for our signal to be stepped down in frequency and translated into words. My, but don't we sound “scientific” in our language today?! No matter, for that is the physics of the process, and we are, by nature and presence, of a scientific inclination.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, and with me in blended energy for this particular message is the great scientific-humanitarian soul who some of you ones know and respect as Nikola Tesla. We are present in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source, and we come in Service to you, our brothers and sisters of Light.

For those of you newer readers who may be asking—yes, our messages are often of a “blended” nature, with input, as needed, from many beings of the Higher Realms—some you would recognize and some not. But on occasions when a message's contributions are from one or two dominant energies, their identification in your reference frame, if possible, often allows for your better “digestion” of the information being shared. And such is the case at this time.

As geophysical overseer of this current Earth Transition Project, I, Soltec, would first like to strongly suggest to all of you who appreciate these messages that you check the condition of your emergency supplies. Replace those old water containers and the dead batteries in your flashlights and radio, at the very least.

Your beautiful planetary being, Mother Earth, is moving into a time of experiencing greatly intensified cleansing energies which are PARTLY responsible for causing—as a mechanism of her rebalancing process—an increase in seismic activity, including areas not generally known for such shaking.

I say “partly responsible” because these cleansing energies, while Good News for the health of Mother Earth, are Bad News for the dark entities struggling to maintain their longtime covert control over all aspects of your planetary environment. As a result, they, in turn, are redoubling their foolish, selfish, desperate use of poorly understood inter-dimensional technologies to attempt to nullify the incoming cleansing energies because these energies have quite uncomfortable effects on them—a subject we have discussed in many past messages within these pages.

This “tug-of-war” is like trying to protect a fragile sandcastle, built at the edge of the ocean seashore, from the next powerful incoming high-tide. It's only a matter of a short time before the entire beachfront is washed and renewed by the incoming waves.

But at this stage of the cleansing cycle, great efforts are always made to “fight the system” by those who prefer the way things are now—and therein results a great deal of turmoil, which originates in what could be called the etheric energy dimension (or higher-frequency band), and then ripples down into the physical and adds its contribution to increased seismic, volcanic, and meteorological disturbances.

Furthermore, you are witnessing an increase in what we have long termed “natural disaster warfare”. That is, the directed employment of covert “advanced” (to you) technologies to induce geographically localized disturbances ranging from seismic, volcanic, and meteorological anomalies (like earthquakes, tornados, intense lightning, and deluges), to more subtle manipulations of what you could term a psychological nature (like apathy, confusion, or agitation perhaps leading to riots). Such covert “bombardments” are usually directed to specific locations for political reasons of one kind or another.

The country of Turkey is a good recent example: First Turkey refused the United States a base from which to conduct the northern leg of the war on Iraq; then Turkey experienced a devastating earthquake, the intensity of which was at least a factor of ten stronger than reported (which, along with other “technical assistance” like was used to bring down your World Trade Center towers, caused a high degree of damage to even newer, better-built buildings); and then there was generated widespread, often violent rioting of the citizenry in affected areas—which the controlled media reported to you was in response to governmental incompetence.

Note what happens: The Turkish government is effectively made to look inept on the world stage, as well as made to deal with a very big mess that, in turn, causes a further heavy drain of resources. All this to repay Turkey for opposing “the great satan” in carrying out an unconscionable assault on Iraq—an innocent people and a region rich in historical clues to man's TRUE heritage on planet Earth.

These tit-for-tat events of natural disaster warfare go on and on—usually between the United States and Russia (as fronts for opposing factions of your so-called elite controllers). And they do not simply end, as you may suppose, with the desired objective. They have a cumulative “domino effect” that in turn often triggers other events, elsewhere on your planet, as she works to balance out such focused unnatural energies at both etheric and physical levels.

So, a strong word to the wise at this time would be to check your various emergency provisions, just in case you happen to get caught in the crossfire of one of these “snowball fights” representing many levels of ongoing lessons, most of which are having to be learned the hard way!

[Editor's note: You readers might be interested to know that this message was

“The Supreme Law of the land is the Great Spirit's Law, not man's law.”

— Hopi wisdom

penned only 12-18 hours before the start of an astonishing wave of peculiar and devastating storm activities that continues as of the writing of this note, seven days later. The Southeast United States is still under relentless "attack", while other violent and equally peculiar storm cells (even to the meteorologists quoted on major media outlets) have devastated many areas of the Midwest, and even appeared all the way over in Denver, causing much damage there.

Some of you longtime readers of The SPECTRUM may notice that many of these "natural disaster warfare" storms "coincidentally" bombard areas known for unusual events (like fried dead birds falling from the sky on a clear day) that some would rightly associate with shenanigans from secret underground technical facilities nearby.

Besides the usual structural damage, nearly a hundred deaths (so far reported), many thousands of injuries, and hundreds of thousands of people now homeless, who were caught in these terrible events, there has been extensive agricultural (food supply) damage inflicted all the way to the West Coast. The West Coast weather has been off the media radar screens due to the violence (ratings pizzazz) of these other storms. There, however, mounting food-crop damage is primarily due to unusually prolonged overcast, rainy, and cold conditions that have kept the ground soggy and temperatures in some growing areas—get this—consistently 20°-30° below normal for this time of year!]

We would further call your attention to a recent message from the Hopi nation [shared nearby] which wisely urges not just basic physical preparations, but additional kinds of preparation at the mental and spiritual levels consistent with many past messages shared within these pages.

You see, with great nurturing compassion, and at painful personal expense, Mother Earth has been dedicated to providing a wonderfully interactive schoolroom environment. And that holds not just for those students who you can see, but also for many you can't, who you may not even realize are participating in the lessons underway.

And it's that matter—of unseen participants in the unfolding drama—which takes us into our next topic of discussion. Though such occurrences are not within the direct field of perception of most of you at this time, many of you are (or will be) nonetheless FEELING THE EFFECTS of what we wish to discuss.

Let us first take a brief aside here to describe a matter that, while it relates to our message, always perplexes our scribe when it happens—until the "pieces of the puzzle" later come together in clarity.

What happened is, starting a day or so before penning this message, our scribe "heard"—like a radio playing in the background of one's thoughts—your old American spiritual tune called "Joshua Fit [Led] The Battle Of Jericho" which is also the first line of the tune's lyrics. The second line, completing the stanza of musical thought, goes: "And the walls come tumblin' down."

Now—consider the main ideas we discussed earlier, and recall that, in the biblical story, Joshua's group brought the walls of the city of Jericho down with a ritual procedure (focusing of mind and etheric energies) that culminated in the blowing of horns (mixing mental/etheric energies onto a "carrier wave" of sound vibration).

In other words, an "interdimensional" technique or technology was employed to reduce an area of massive stone walls (symbolically a confining, controlling structure) to rubble. And that second line of the song stanza will turn out to have a central bearing on our discussion—as we continue where we left off before pausing to describe the kind of musical communication that often "haunts" our scribe. So let us continue.

Recently, this scribe was asked to provide some clarification to a series of emotionally charged intuitive visions that were being experienced by a friend. This friend—who we shall simply refer to as "Kay"—is a spiritual healer, author, Crop Circle investigator, and trance channel with strong Native American leadership roots. Her most challenging personal accomplishment (and subject of one of her powerful books) was the successful escape from (and ongoing healing from) an early life of entrapment within the hidden corridors of interdimensional ritual abuse by ones affiliated with your highest-level secret government, your so-called Illuminati.

These dark (of soul), contrary ones are always looking to identify and utilize the psychic (interdimensional) talents of ones so gifted as Kay, and it is always a matter of great rejoicing when a beautiful and compassionate soul such as this one breaks free from that hold of darkness. Substantial spiritual lessons are learned for all involved in the cycle of such experiences into enslavement and back to personal freedom.

Among other recurring emotional visions observed by this strong yet gentle soul, Kay said she would "see" a human

"I don't know what it measured.
The Richter scale is down there."

strapped in a chair-like apparatus that had a headpiece—a machine that looked like a cross between an “electric chair” for executions and a “hair drying” chair in a ladies’ beauty salon. Kay said she was given to understand that this apparatus was amplifying and broadcasting the thoughts of the one in the chair.

The location was vague, but seemed like it could be somewhere underground. She saw many such people strapped in such chairs. The scene was much the same as what several courageous authors have shared about secret operations like your Montauk Project.

The one placed in the chair is chosen for outstanding mental abilities—though kidnapped is a more accurate operational term. After being located and identified as a gifted candidate, the person is first programmed, through a series of torturous experiences, to express intense emotions of fear. Once these frequencies of fear have been cultivated and fine-tuned to an exceptionally high level, then the person graduates to placement in the chair—where, together, they operate as a high-power “broadcasting station” sending pure fear into your planet’s etheric atmosphere.

This has long been a practical method utilized by ones associated with your secret government to counteract the upward movement of your planetary frequency. As we have many times explained, fear acts like a poison that depresses and “jangles” the frequency spectrum of the etheric energy atmosphere in which you are immersed and with which you interact continuously. The large-scale injection of pure fear into your planet’s etheric atmosphere, from many such secret broadcasting sources, acts like a layer of dank fog to block an otherwise sunny day.

What Kay has been concluding from her recent visions—that prompted her to call our scribe for clarification—was actually a matter of great rejoicing. She related observing: (1) the falling apart into piles of rubble—like those walls of Jericho—of these etheric broadcasting stations as well as other interdimensional contraptions she thought to be part of the world control structure, (2) the release of anguished humans trapped in support capacities like the people in the chairs, and (3) the anger and desperation coming from dark ones associated with these kinds of etheric projects as they watch their equipment fall apart before their eyes—despite expending their best mental efforts to “hold” it all together—and thus realize that, in the Larger Picture, their remaining time of control over you ones is quite short. High tide is coming in!

Our scribe offered the opinion to Kay that what she was seeing was indeed quite real, and what was happening was as technically straightforward (though at an etheric level) as what happens to an overcast morning when the day’s strong sunlight gradually burns away (evaporates) the fog.

Another analogy shared was that of winter snowflake or ice crystals “collapsing” (melting) into liquid as the days grow warmer with movement into springtime. This analogy was especially satisfying to Kay since her visions showed the machines literally falling apart and disintegrating—a lot like the way sculptures in snow or ice do once the air temperature rises enough above freezing. What she saw disintegrating were the actual energy patterns which the dark beings utilize (in mental and etheric space) to literally construct such interdimensional machinery as the mind-amplifying chair-apparatus. (Some of you may be familiar with the way Tesla created and “tinkered with” his inventions in a similar way before producing a final product for use in your physical domain.)

Consider that such interdimensional machinery is formed, from a mental image, in the etheric equivalent of snow or ice. So long as the creation remains in “cold temperatures”, its solidity remains stable and it remains functioning.

But what happens if the “temperature” starts to rise faster than one can cool down the local atmosphere? Then the “molecular bonds” holding the etheric construct together begin to break and the machinery disintegrates—similar to what would happen in your physical domain if you took, say, a cell-phone from your pocket

MESSAGE FROM THE HOPI — PEOPLE OF PEACE

Editor’s note: The following message is from the www.newconnexion.net website and warrants careful reading.

You have been telling people that this is the Eleventh Hour; now you must go back and tell them that this is The Hour.

And there are things to be considered:

Where are you living? What are you doing?

What are your relationships? Are you in right relation?

Where is your water? Know your garden.

It is time to speak your Truth. Create your community.

Be good to each other. And do not look outside yourself for the leader.

This could be a good time!

There is a river flowing now very fast. It is so great and so swift that there are those who will be afraid. They will try to hold onto the shore. They will feel they are being torn apart, and they will suffer greatly.

Know the river has its destination. The Elders say we must let go of the shore, push off into the middle of the river, keep our eyes open and our heads above water. See who is in there with you and celebrate.

At this time in history, we are to take nothing personally—least of all, ourselves. For the moment that we do, our spiritual growth and journey comes to a halt.

The time of the lone wolf is over. Gather yourselves!

Banish the word “struggle” from your attitude and your vocabulary. All that we do now must be done in a sacred manner and in celebration.

We are the ones we have been waiting for.

The Elders of the Hopi Nation
Oraibi, Arizona

and tossed it onto a fire.

Can you imagine the predicament this puts these dark energies in? Their vast structures of control are literally “melting” due to the influx of high-frequency energies showering your planet at this time! (Now consider the second line of that musical stanza: “And the walls come tumblin’ down.”)

Moreover, you can appreciate why these visions were so emotionally charged for Kay, for she had broken free from such diabolical entrapment and now frequently helps others do so, too. Such actions have been a matter of great elation for her to behold!

We wish to call such a seemingly strange matter as Kay’s visions to your attention because—as we mentioned earlier—though the majority of you are not directly attuned to the perception of such “housecleaning” activities going on in other-dimensional realities coupled with your own, you are nonetheless FEELING their effects in subtle ways. Walking you through an experience such as Kay’s may help you to better comprehend the vast extent of the Earth Transition Project in progress at this time that we call the Great Awakening and the Great Cleansing.

The sophisticated nature of the entrapment and control that has prevailed on your world for a long time extends well beyond that which is visible to physical eyes or can be understood in physical terms like handcuffs or jails. Your Founding Fathers were given to understand (more accurately: to remember, from past experiences) the nature of these invisible kinds of slavery which would arrive at your doorstep as the young United States grew. And it was this inner understanding upon which they drew in fashioning the powerful concepts that coalesced into the blueprint for a Nation of Freedom that is reflected in their Inspired documents like your Declaration Of Independence.

If these Divinely Guided Principles had been diligently adhered to, rather than allowed to slowly erode over time, you ones would not now be in such a condition of slavery as you must now surmount if you truly desire Freedom.

You see, your minds hold deep “patterns of slavery”, many of which originate from relentless etheric-to-physical “broadcasts” of the dark controllers, your spiritual testers. Thus, even though their “walls” are falling down (as Kay accurately perceives in her visions), in many of your minds those “walls” still remain real, as habitual patterns of limiting thought, and these thoughts effectively keep you corralled.

So, it is this longtime “conditioning” that you must yet strive to overcome to achieve Freedom. Old patterns of thought energy are more responsible for keeping you enslaved at this time of the Great Awakening and Great Cleansing than are the seemingly “outside” forces you are inclined to point to as being at fault.

With that in mind, you could regard our message this month as a “scientific extension” of Germain’s message on Freedom last month in these pages.

Contemporary with the days when Nikola Tesla was upon your place (creating that which could have liberated you from many forms of imposed slavery), your renowned psychic Edgar Cayce often said “mind is the builder”. And nowhere is that axiom more important than in the building, in physical reality, of that which you call a State of Freedom.

As Germain explained last month, your Founding Fathers were striving to fashion easily applied ideals of Freedom that would “automatically” predispose the powers of your collective minds to not only repel the kinds of other-dimensional-based entrapments like we have discussed herein, but also build a strong etheric energy pattern (foundation) for the manifestation of true Freedom in your physical domain. In other words, powerful “alchemical” or higher-dimensional underpinnings govern the ideals your Founding Fathers fashioned into deceptively simple concepts to facilitate your ability to create a multidimensional atmosphere of Freedom.

But look how far those great ideals of Freedom have been allowed to erode since those tumultuous days of only a few hundred years ago! Look how far you have allowed such a precious, God-given birthright to deteriorate just since your contrived events of September 11, 2001!

Consider this, especially you more technically focused readers: Ones on your world are constantly asking us for help with the development of such liberating technologies as free-energy devices. But how would we of the Higher Realms be helping you by granting such requests when what we would actually be doing is helping to birth a “baby” into a largely lazy and uninformed culture wherein it will just as quickly be taken away from you as have so many other aspects of Freedom?

WHAT HAPPENED WHEN TESLA GIFTED YOU WITH JUST SUCH TECHNOLOGY A HUNDRED YEARS AGO?! WHERE IS IT NOW? WHY? WHAT DO YOU NEED TO FIX BEFORE BEING READY TO RECEIVE IT AGAIN?

You see, how can you realistically expect to safeguard such technologies “for the people” when you’ve collectively allowed the thieves such complete reign within your house? Until you first “prepare the way”—through a fundamental housecleaning that repels the thieves—you can no more hold onto free-energy devices than you can to any other representations of a responsibly free society. We, especially Tesla, could say much more on this subject, and perhaps we will at a later time.

For now, we leave you with the thought that this message has been written in the early hours of the 33rd (for you students of Illuminati symbolism) anniversary of a tragic lesson for a “free” nation—a nation at that time far more blissfully ignorant than now about the extent to which you have lost your fundamental freedoms.

It was this day in 1970 when national guardsmen, called to Kent State University in Ohio to “control” a student Vietnam anti-war demonstration, opened fire, killing four students and wounding nine. As a moving assemblage of conscience turned to horror, a modern awakening began the hard way—an event which your Founding Fathers were all too familiar with.

Many of those who lost their lives in that so-called war are back again, participating with renewed vigor in the vast worldwide marches of awakening that you have witnessed in recent months concerning Iraq. And this time the groundswell of conscience energy, like Joshua’s group blowing their horns, is enough to make your Founding Fathers smile—as currents are set into motion which can amplify desires where “the walls come tumblin’ down”.

Yes, be aware that Mother Earth is herself taking action to shake down many kinds of walls. And as well are people of conscience coming together with one voice to bring down the walls that fence-in Freedom.

WHAT SONG STRIVES TO SING FREELY FROM THE DEPTHS OF YOUR SOUL? WHAT’S HOLDING YOU BACK?

We are Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec and Nikola Tesla, at the end of our present lesson on the “science” of Freedom. We leave you with the Light of KNOWING that the God-spark within each of us is Infinite, and therein resides the path to Freedom you seek. May you walk Thoughtfully upon that path. Salu. △

For Iraqis—No Liberation, A New Colonial Oppression

“America’s war of ‘liberation’ is over. Iraq’s war of liberation from the Americans is about to begin.”

Editor’s note: In last month’s SPECTRUM we shared a brilliantly insightful assessment by renowned investigative journalist and author Gordon Thomas titled: When The War Is Over, The Real War Begins that looked at a number of likely matters of retaliation in sharp contrast to the baloney being dished out to the public about “America the savior”.

The following daring report is not only a confirmation of Gordon’s assessment, but also supplies first-hand observations which add an “ah ha!” for SPECTRUM readers looking for clues which support the far-out assertions of the front-page story for our March 2003 issue. But you have to read this thoughtful journalist’s tremendously UNDERSTATED report carefully because he knows just how far to go—without crossing over the censorship line—so that his story actually could get into print for you to read!

Pay special attention to both the systematic destruction and looting of historical artifacts AND to the well-organized nature of the curious arson gangs running around Baghdad. Do you think it’s a mere coincidence these happenings look just like those conducted by undercover Special Operations units of governmental alphabet agencies like the CIA? After all, you can get away with a lot of purposeful mischief amidst a contrived atmosphere of chaos!

The following story is from The Independent, based in London (www.independent.co.uk). If there is any bias to take into account, perhaps it’s the author’s oversight of British collusion in the United States’ shenanigans he so delicately alludes to. That noted, you really feel as if you’re walking through the rubble along with this reporter. It’s a first-class first-person account—what journalism ought to be.

In a sense, this report could have been woven into the parallel story in this issue of The SPECTRUM called Looting Iraq Of Priceless “Weapons Of Mass Destruction” but this story’s focus spans a wider field of view than is the subject matter of the other. Taken together, the bottom line clearly spells out the “war within a war” that was conducted right in front of a largely duped and mesmerized public.

And let’s not overlook the hidden agenda that was so well expressed in the 4/10/03 Idaho Observer:

“Do the people of Iraq view the U.S. military as liberators or occupational forces?”

“The fact that the U.S. has close political ties to Israel is not in dispute; it is also no secret that the U.S. and Israel are close military allies.

“If it were not for U.S. military might backing the state of Israel, the Jewish state, surrounded on all sides by Moslems, would not have survived this long. Israelis and Arabs are mortal enemies.

“So, if the enemy of my enemy is my friend, then the friend of my enemy is also my enemy. No matter what propagandists in government say, it is impossible for the Iraqis to view U.S. military personnel as liberators because they are allied with their mortal Israeli enemies. After all, the Israelis have the most to gain from a war-torn, depopulated, and de-stabilized Arab world.”

And you’ll never hear this crucial perspective from the controlled media.

4/17/03 ROBERT FISK

It’s going wrong, faster than anyone could have imagined. The army of “liberation” has already turned into the army of occupation. The Shias are threatening to fight the Americans, to create their own war of “liberation”.

At night on every one of the Shia Muslim barricades in Sadr City, there are 14 men with automatic rifles. Even the U.S. Marines in Baghdad are talking of the insults being flung at them. “Go away! Get out of my face!” an American soldier screamed at an Iraqi trying to push towards the wire surrounding an infantry unit in the capital yesterday. I watched the man’s face suffuse with rage. “God is Great! God is Great!” the Iraqi retorted.

“Fuck you!” said the soldier.

The Americans have now issued a “Message to the Citizens of Baghdad”, a document as colonial in spirit as it is insensitive in tone. “Please avoid leaving your homes during the night hours after evening prayers and before the call to morning prayers” it tells the people of the city. “During this time, terrorist forces associated with the former regime of Saddam Hussein, as well as various criminal elements, are known to move through the area.... Please do not leave your homes during this time. During all hours, please approach Coalition military positions with extreme caution....”

So now—with neither electricity nor running water—the millions of Iraqis here are ordered to stay in their homes from dusk to dawn. Lockdown. It’s a form of imprisonment. In their own country. Written by the command of the 1st U.S. Marine Division, it’s a curfew in all but name.

“If I was an Iraqi and I read that” an Arab woman shouted at me, “I would become a suicide bomber.” And all across Baghdad you hear the same thing, from Shia Muslim clerics to Sunni businessmen, that the Americans have come only for oil, and that soon—very soon—a guerrilla resistance must start.

No doubt the Americans will claim that these attacks are “remnants” of Saddam’s regime or “criminal elements”. But that will not be the case.

Marine officers in Baghdad were holding talks yesterday with a Shia militant cleric from Najaf to avert an outbreak of fighting around the holy city. I met the prelate before the negotiations began, and he told me that “history is being repeated”. He was talking of the British invasion of Iraq in 1917, which ended in disaster for the British.

Everywhere are the signs of collapse. And everywhere the signs that America’s promises of “freedom” and “democracy” are not to be honoured.

Why, Iraqis are asking, did the United States allow the entire Iraqi cabinet to escape? And they’re right.

Not just the Beast of Baghdad and his two sons, Qusay and Uday, but the Vice-President, Taha Yassin Ramadan, the Deputy Prime Minister, Tariq Aziz, Saddam’s personal adviser, Dr. A. K. Hashimi, the ministers of defence, health, the economy, trade, even Mohammed Saeed al-Sahaf, the Minister of Information who, long ago, in the days before journalists cosied up to him, was the official who read out the list of executed “brothers” in the purge that followed Saddam’s revolution—relatives of prisoners would dose themselves on Valium before each Sahaf appearance.

Here’s what Baghdadis are noticing—and what Iraqis are noticing in all the main cities of the country.

Take the vast security apparatus with which Saddam surrounded himself, the torture chambers and the huge bureaucracy that was its foundation. President Bush promised that America was campaigning for human rights in Iraq—that the guilty, the war criminals, would be brought to trial.

The 60 secret police headquarters in Baghdad are empty, even the three-square-mile compound headquarters of the Iraqi Intelligence Service.

I have been to many of them. But there is no evidence even that a single British or U.S. forensic officer has visited the sites to sift the wealth of documents lying there or talk to the ex-prisoners returning to their former places of torment. Is this idleness. Or is this willful?

Take the Qasimiyeh security station beside the river Tigris. It’s a pleasant villa—once owned by an Iranian-born Iraqi who was deported to Iran in the 1980s. There’s a little lawn and shrubbery, and at first you don’t notice the three big hooks in the ceiling of each room or the fact that big sheets of red paper, decorated with footballers, have been pasted over the windows to conceal the rooms from outsiders. But across the floors, in the garden, on the roof, are the files of this place of suffering. They show, for example, that the head of the torture centre was Hashem al-Tikrit, that his deputy was called Rashid al-Nababy.

Mohammed Aish Jassem, an ex-prisoner, showed me how he was suspended from the ceiling by Captain Amar al-Isawi, who believed Jassem was a member of the religious Dawa party. “They put my hands behind my back like this and tied them and then pulled me into the air by my tied wrists” he told me. “They used a little generator to lift me up, right up to the ceiling, then they’d release the rope in the hope of breaking my shoulder when I fell.”

The hooks in the ceiling are just in front of Captain Isawi’s desk. I understood what this meant. There wasn’t a separate torture chamber and office for documentation. The torture chamber was the office. While the man or woman shrieked in agony above him, Captain Isawi would sign papers, take telephone calls and—given the contents of his bin—smoke many cigarettes while he waited for the information he sought from his prisoners.

Were they monsters, these men? Yes. Are they sought by the Americans? No. Are they now working for the Americans? Yes, quite possibly; indeed, some of them may well be in the long line of ex-security thugs who queue every morning outside the Palestine Hotel in the hope of being re-hired by the U.S. Marines’ Civil Affairs Unit.

The names of the guards at the Qasimiyeh torture centre in Baghdad are in papers lying on the floor. They were Ahmed Hassan Alawi, Akil Shaheed, Noaman Abbas, and Moham-med Fayad. But the Americans haven’t bothered to find this out. So Messrs Alawi, Shaheed, Abbas, and Fayad are welcome to apply to work for them.

There are prisoner identification papers on the desks and in the cupboards. What happened to Wahid Mohamed, Majid Taha, Saddam Ali, or Lazim Hmoud?

A lady in a black chador approached the old torture centre. Four of her brothers had been taken there and, later, when she went to ask what happened, she was told all four had been executed. She was ordered to leave. She never saw or buried their bodies. Ex-prisoners told me that there is a mass grave in the Khedeer desert, but no one—least of all Baghdad’s new occupiers—are interested in finding it.

And the men who suffered under

Saddam? What did they have to say? “We committed no sin” one of them said to me, a 40-year-old whose prison duties had included the cleaning of the hangman’s trap of blood and faeces after each execution. “We are not guilty of anything. Why did they do this to us?”

“America, yes, it got rid of Saddam. But Iraq belongs to us. Our oil belongs to us. We will keep our nationality. It will stay Iraq. The Americans must go.”

If the Americans and the British want to understand the nature of the religious opposition here, they have only to consult the files of Saddam’s secret service archives. I found one, Report No. 7481, dated 24 February this year, on the conflict between Sheikh Mohammed al-Yacoubi and Mukhtada Sadr, the 22-year-old grandson of Mohammed Sadr, who was executed on Saddam’s orders more than two decades ago.

The dispute showed the passion and the determination with which the Shia religious leaders fight even each other. But of course, no one has bothered to read this material or even look for it.

At the end of the Second World War, German-speaking British and U.S. intelligence officers hoovered up every document in the thousands of Gestapo and Abwehr bureaux across western Germany. The Russians did the same in their zone. In Iraq, however, the British and Americans have simply ignored the evidence.

There’s an even more terrible place for the Americans to visit in Baghdad—the headquarters of the whole intelligence apparatus, a massive grey-painted block that was bombed by the U.S., and a series of villas and office buildings that are stashed with files, papers, and card indexes. It was here that Saddam’s special political prisoners were brought for vicious interrogation—electricity being an essential part of this—and it was here that Farzad Bazoft, the Observer correspondent, was brought for questioning before his dispatch to the hangman.

It’s also graced with delicately shaded laneways, a creche—for the families of the torturers—and a school in which one pupil had written an essay in English on (suitably perhaps) Beckett’s Waiting For Godot. There’s also a miniature hospital and a road named “Freedom Street” and flowerbeds and bougainvillea. It’s the creepiest place in all of Iraq.

I met—extraordinarily—an Iraqi nuclear scientist walking around the compound, a colleague of the former head of Iraqi nuclear physics, Dr. Sharistani. “This is the last place I ever wanted to see and I will never return to it” he said to me. “This was the place of greatest evil in all the world.”

The top security men in Saddam’s regime were busy in the last hours, shredding millions of documents. I found a great pile of black plastic rubbish bags at the back of one villa, each stuffed with the shreds of thousands of papers. Shouldn't they be taken to Washington or London and reconstituted to learn their secrets?

Even the unshredded files contain a wealth of information. But again, the Americans have not bothered—or do not want—to search through these papers. If they did, they would find the names of dozens of senior intelligence men, many of them identified in congratulatory letters they insisted on sending each other every time they were promoted.

Where now, for example, is Colonel Abdulaziz Saadi, Captain Abdulsalam Salawi, Captain Saad Ahmed al-Ayash, Colonel Saad Mohammed, Captain Majid Ahmed, and scores of others? We may never know. Or perhaps we are not supposed to know.

Iraqis are right to ask why the Americans don't search for this information, just as they are right to demand to know why the entire Saddam cabinet—every man jack of them—got away. The capture by the Americans of Saddam's half-brother and the ageing Palestinian gunman Abu Abbas, whose last violent act was 18 years ago, is pathetic compensation for this.

Now here's another question the Iraqis are asking—and to which I cannot provide an answer. On 8 April, three weeks into the invasion, the Americans dropped four 2,000-pound bombs on the Baghdad residential area of Mansur.

They claimed they thought Saddam was hiding there. They knew they would kill civilians because it was not, as one Centcom mandarin said, a "risk free venture" (sic). So they dropped their bombs and killed 14 civilians in Mansur, most of them members of a Christian family.

The Americans said they couldn't be sure they had killed Saddam until they could carry out forensic tests at the site. But this turns out to have been a lie. I went there two days ago. Not a single U.S. or British official had bothered to visit the bomb craters. Indeed, when I arrived, there was a putrefying smell and families pulled the remains of a baby from the rubble.

No American officers have apologised for this appalling killing. And I can promise them that the baby I saw being placed under a sheet of black plastic was very definitely not Saddam Hussein. Had they bothered to look at this place—as they claimed they would—they would at least have found the baby. Now the craters are a place of pilgrimage for the people of Baghdad.

Then there's the fires that have consumed every one of the city's ministries—save, of course, for the Ministry of Interior and the Ministry of Oil—as well as UN offices, embassies, and shopping malls. I have counted a total of 35 ministries now gutted by fire, and the number goes on rising.

Yesterday I found myself at the Ministry of Oil, assiduously guarded by U.S. troops, some of whom were holding clothes over their mouths because of the clouds of smoke swirling down on them from the neighbouring Ministry of Agricultural Irrigation. Hard to believe, isn't it, that they were unaware that someone was setting fire to the next building?

Then I spotted another fire, three kilometres away. I drove to the scene to find flames curling out of all the windows of the Ministry of Higher Education's Department of Computer Science. And right next to it, perched on a wall, was a U.S. Marine, who said he was guarding a neighbouring hospital and didn't know who had lit the next-door fire because "you can't look everywhere at once".

Now I'm sure the Marine was not being facetious or dishonest. Should the Americans not believe this story, he was Corporal Ted Nyholm of the 3rd Regiment, 4th Marines and, yes, I called his fiancée, Jessica, in the States for him to pass on his love. But something is terribly wrong when U.S. soldiers are ordered simply to watch vast ministries being burnt by mobs and do nothing about it.

Because there is also something dangerous—and deeply disturbing—about the crowds setting light to the buildings of Baghdad, including the great libraries and state archives. For they are not looters.

The looters come first. The arsonists turn up later, often in blue-and-white buses. I followed one after its passengers had set the Ministry of Trade on fire, and it sped out of town.

The official U.S. line on all this is that the looting is revenge—an explanation that is growing very thin—and that the fires are started by "remnants of Saddam's regime", the same "criminal elements", no doubt, who feature in the Marines' curfew orders.

But people in Baghdad don't believe Saddam's former supporters are starting these fires. And neither do I.

The looters make money from their rampages, but the arsonists have to be paid. The passengers in those buses are clearly being directed to their targets. If Saddam had pre-paid them, they wouldn't start the fires. The moment he disappeared, they would have pocketed the money and forgotten the whole project.

So who are they, this army of arsonists?

I recognised one the other day, a middle-aged, unshaven man in a red T-shirt, and the second time he saw me he pointed a Kalashnikov at me.

What was he frightened of? Who was he working for? In whose interest is it to destroy the entire physical infrastructure of the state, with its cultural heritage? Why didn't the Americans stop this?

As I said, something is going terribly wrong in Baghdad and something is going on which demands that serious questions be asked of the United States government. Why, for example, did Donald Rumsfeld, Secretary of Defence, claim last week that there was no widespread looting or destruction in Baghdad? His statement was a lie. But why did he make it?

The Americans say they don't have enough troops to control the fires. This is also untrue. If they don't, what are the hundreds of soldiers deployed in the gardens of the old Iran-Iraq war memorial doing all day? Or the hundreds camped in the rose gardens of the Presidential Palace?

So the people of Baghdad are asking who is behind the destruction of their cultural heritage: the looting of the archaeological treasures from the national museum; the burning of the entire Ottoman, Royal, and State archives; the Koranic library; and the vast infrastructure of the nation we claim we are going to create for them.

Why, they ask, do they still have no electricity and no water? In whose interest is it for Iraq to be deconstructed, divided, burnt, de-historied, destroyed? Why are they issued with orders for a curfew by their so-called liberators?

And it's not just the people of Baghdad, but the Shias of the city of Najaf and of Nasiriyah—where 20,000 protested at America's first attempt to put together a puppet government on Wednesday—who are asking these questions. Now there is looting in Mosul, where thousands reportedly set fire to the pro-American governor's car after he promised U.S. help in restoring electricity.

It's easy for a reporter to predict doom, especially after a brutal war that lacked all international legitimacy. But catastrophe usually waits for optimists in the Middle East, especially for false optimists who invade oil-rich nations with ideological excuses and high-flown moral claims and accusations, such as weapons of mass destruction, which are still unproved.

So I'll make an awful prediction: That America's war of "liberation" is over. Iraq's war of liberation from the Americans is about to begin. In other words, the real and frightening story starts now. △

What If Al Martin Were A Regular On National Radio?

Editor's note: Can you imagine what kind of a shockwave would ripple out over the airwaves to the numbed and dumbed public if an articulate, no-nonsense truthbringer like Al Martin replaced motor-mouthed morons like Bill O'Reilly and Rush Limbaugh?

For SPECTRUM readers, it would be a breath of fresh air. The "only" problem would be the same one we here at The SPECTRUM often joke would be the case if a person who works at one of the local secret underground facilities were to bravely stand on a street corner and simply tell what they do at their job all day: no one would believe them! And for sure someone would come along and lock them up in a straight-jacket.

So considering the level of mental conditioning ruling the kind of person who is attracted to be part of the large listening audience of a Rush or a Bill, the sorry fact of the matter is that truthbringers like Al would come across as a nut case—just like the guy on the street corner.

This is as gravely serious at the heart of the matter, as it is humorous on the surface. The United States appears to be going down the drain as a result of what prevails in the "thinking" of the empty-headed flag-waving majority. And it's that sobering theme which recurs as a message of great consequence throughout Al's columns here.

For those newer readers who may not be familiar with this crusader, according to his own biographical statement (at his AlMartinRaw.com Internet website), Al is America's foremost whistleblower on government fraud and corruption. A retired U.S. Navy Lt. Commander and former officer in the Office of Naval Intelligence, he has testified before Congress (the Kerry Committee and the Alexander Committee) regarding Iran-Contra. Al Martin is the author of the revealing and witty exposé titled The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider (© 2001, National Liberty Press; order from Wisdom Books & Press; see information nearby).

Is Bill O'Reilly Guilty Of Promoting Sedition?

(3/24/03)

Now Fox News has Bill O'Reilly—Bush's Wannabe Reichsminister of Propaganda—on all day. This guy has gotten so far out there, the way he treats people, it's beyond arrogance.

There were a couple of liberal professors on the other day and he absolutely destroyed them—despite the fact that they were citing legal arguments. And then one of the professors asked: "When has the Bush Administration really cared about the law?" And O'Reilly got really pissed off; he cut him off immediately and said "Goodbye Professor" and that was it—even before the interview was over.

O'Reilly admitted that he gets a lot of email (as you can imagine) asking him about his own politics and now he uses the old Bill Bachelor quote saying that he's "somewhere to the right of Attila the Hun".

But the pandering that this guy does—O'Reilly really does the nation a disservice by pandering to the quintessentially Amercian sense of fear and ignorance, which is what his whole schtick is based on.

I'd love to get on the show with this guy. I'd show who could tear who down.

Every single guest he has on now is someone who is opposed to the Bush Regime, and the reason it's done is so he can tear them down. He tries to talk over them. He says that we shouldn't care about the Bill Of Rights or the Constitution in times like these.

Interestingly enough, when they were showing pictures of demonstrators outside the White House, he was applauding the actions of the police. He said the police are obviously not going to tolerate this any more, and the police beat the crap out of them with billy clubs and stun guns and sting darts. The police encircled the whole group, then went in unison with billy clubs and so on.

But these poor people must have thought the sky was falling down. They're completely surrounded by police, and then on cue the head cop blows the whistle and out come the billy clubs, Valium gas, spinning nets, and electronic darts. These people must have thought that the world was coming to an end.

O'Reilly is no longer saying that protesters should be charged with sedition; now he's saying they should be charged with treason. He's saying that anti-war protesters or anyone who disagrees with the Bush Administration constitutes a direct threat to the security in the United States in that they drag down or commit law enforcement resources, which should be committed to defending the nation from terrorism.

And of course I thought to myself: What charter states that law enforcement is charged with defending the nation from terrorism?

O'Reilly acts as if Posse Comitatus has already been overturned. Maybe it has already—in his mind.

But when you read the statute he was referring to (and I've read it): Statute 792-794 U.S. Title Code XVIII, otherwise known as the Sedition And Treason Acts, if you read about the actual "treason" which is defined in 793 and 794 as being a citizen of the United States who unlawfully acts to aid and abet the enemy or to give the enemy information and/or material support that is of use to said enemy in threatening the security of the United States, they call it a "hostile combatant" or more interestingly enough the statute actually says "probable" hostile combatant. That's the key difference and the reason why a lot of people can't be charged with treason, because of that "probable". Who defines "probable"? That's beyond the court's purview because the government defines what is probable and what isn't.

To the same extent, all of the NFWCs (pronounced "niffwacks"), the Naïve

Flag-Waving Crowd, represent the same threat to the security of the United States—if not even moreso—than do anti-war or anti-Bushonian protesters.

In other words, all of the NFWCs, the right-wing nuts, and the fearful and ignorant, who have bought American flags made in China (now that China has publicly announced what it is using the profits for: to build thermonuclear missiles that are aimed at the United States) also threaten the security of the United States. Those people who buy American flags made in China are in fact under the Statute, Section C, 793. They are giving direct material support to an enemy (or probable enemy) of the United States.

If I went on the Bill O'Reilly Show, I would say that if you want to charge, not only anti-war protesters, but any who publicly express any disagreement with the Bushonian agenda with treason, then every naïve flag-waver in this country who is out there with their beer bellies waving around the American flag, who have written on those flags "Let's bomb Iraq back to the Stone Age" should also be charged with treason—and actually they are in more direct violation of Statute 793-794 than are the war protesters, insofar as the flag-wavers are giving direct material support to a nation that has already publicly stated that it is using their profits to build Weapons of Mass Destruction with long-range delivery systems and are further targeting those systems at American cities.

Therefore, all the naïve flag-wavers should be put in CILFs (Civilian Inmate Labor Facilities). Even O'Reilly is using this term CILF, which is tantamount to admission that they exist. (See my book The Conspirators: Secrets Of An Iran-Contra Insider for more details.) And all the anti-war protesters should be made the guards.

But you can make the same analogy about the Naïve Flag-Wavers that you can about the anti-war protesters—and even moreso. War protesters are not contributing to the direct material support of an enemy or a would-be enemy of the United States, whereas the Flag-Wavers who bought American flags made in China are. And 83% of all American flags sold in the United States are made in China. Even that statistic is slightly skewed, since the 17% of American flags made and sold in the United States are mostly made by Whitaker Corporation of South Carolina, and they are generally specialty flags. In other words, they manufacture very large American flags for the military and custom-made American flags for various governmental purposes—like flags used on yachts and ships. In other words, you don't find American flags made in America for sale in Wal Mart and K Mart—because they are simply too expensive.

You could actually make a collateral argument that O'Reilly himself is in violation of the very same state security policies that he thinks fit others (those who protest or are against the Bush Administration) insofar as he is a person of public prominence who is using his platform to encourage fear, ignorance, narrow-mindedness, naïveté, prejudice, and bigotry.

O'Reilly is as much of a threat to the security of the state by promoting fear and ignorance, as is any liberal commentator with the same outlet who favors a peace or anti-war agenda.

In other news, the nation's alert status was raised back to orange. Secretary Ridge reminded everyone to go out and buy more duct tape and plastic sheeting and cans of Spam. People are mobbing the shopping malls to buy batteries and food.

Operation Liberty Shield is an effort (to use Reichsfuhrer Ashcroft's own words) to "lock down the United States" and secure the United States from "terrorist" threat. That's prison terminology, by the way. The police and the National Guard have now secured all "sensitive facilities".

Major intersections and arteries will be blocked and spot checks will occur, so have your identification prepared. All citizens are ordered to obey any public officials, be they local, county, state, or federal. Refusal to obey will result in immediate arrest. That's what he said.

This is unprecedented. And the authority? He's just taking it. It's a new era. The people just don't care. Ashcroft said that this is just a precursor. He said that he expects the security risk will be raised to red.

It should really be called Operation Liberty Strip. It's stripping the American people of any remaining liberty.

And the people are scared. They're interviewing people in the street and they're not frightened of a "terrorist" attack. They're scared that the Bush Administration has just gone wild with this stuff. But there's nothing they can do about it.

They were showing pictures of Manhattan, and there are pictures of army vehicles on Wall Street and Hanover street. That's to protect "sensitive buildings and areas". It reminds you of that movie The Siege. There are roadblocks up in front of the stock exchange. And I guess he's right. They're going to "lock down" the country and there's nothing the American people can do about it.

[Editor's note: Of course there's something that can be done about it, but not with most people numbed with Prozac or preoccupied with maintaining a paycheck. And that is exactly what the crooks in high secret places are counting on—not enough Americans willing to pressure their duly elected representatives to carry out their sworn job to uphold the Constitution.]

They also said that, because of the demands placed on the National Guard and reserve units in Iraq, they are beginning to run short of military troops to station domestically. They only earmarked 100,000 National Guard and reservists who are left here for domestic security, and the Office of Homeland Security may start to recall retired military people.

They won't recall them to active duty because then they would have to pay them a regular wage, but they might invoke some paramilitary authority (and this I find particularly dangerous because of their mindset). This would take place pursuant to the power granted the White House under the emergency extension of the Law Enforcement And Military Powers Act.

This hasn't been done in recent history, either. The Republicans, who had controlled Congress during the Second World War, had pressured Roosevelt to recall retired military people. But Roosevelt wouldn't do it. He saw it as a direct threat. He thought that putting guns into the hands of gung-ho people like that was dangerous.

Roosevelt was also concerned about the idea of rearming World War I veterans and paramilitarising them insofar as the government had lied to them about their so-called "bonuses". There were the 1932 riots in Washington which were called the "Veterans' Riots". They were never paid their military service bonuses from the First World War, which they were promised. Then there was the Great Veterans March of 1932, when the Great Depression really began to hit. Roosevelt wouldn't pay it to them, and told them they didn't have the money. He then ordered the standing army at the time to use force against them, and a bunch of them were shot.

CNN actually showed a piece on the growing number of American citizens who are leaving the United States because they don't want to have to deal with state security laws. They think it's coming and this country is going to be a dictatorship. They interviewed people who are going to western Canada and south of the border like Costa Rica and Guatemala. It's surprising the numbers now. It's not just isolated conspiracy theorists who are going. These are people who are generally concerned. The numbers are pretty substantial—between 13,000 and 15,000 a month. This is something that the Bush Administration doesn't want publicized—the number of American citizens fearful that the Bushonian Regime is turning the country into a dictatorship.

Then the Department of Justice (and this is real strange in an Administration that was always pro-tobacco) and Deputy Reichsfuhrer Ashcroft said that the Department of Justice is seeking $289 BILLION from U.S. tobacco companies, which constitutes their entire accumulated profits from the past 50 years. They will be prosecuted because they have illegally marketed cigarettes.

Ashcroft admitted that which everybody already knew—that this will be the first step in a series of steps to make tobacco products illegal in the United States.

What he's not saying, of course, is that the states specifically levy taxes against cigarettes. The tobacco companies are going to say: "Where were you, the Department of Justice, 50 years ago, when you were encouraging us to sell cigarettes?"

People in this country forget that, after the Second World War and during the 1950s, the federal government did everything it could to increase the sales of tobacco to garner the tax revenue. They did everything to encourage production and export of tobacco and increasing smoking in the United States because of the enormous tax revenue that came with it. Shutting down tobacco, as was pointed out on CNBC, would deprive the country of $100 billion a year in federal, state, and local taxes. Ashcroft said that the states would receive no compensation for loss of tobacco tax revenue.

And then there's Oliver North's new "mission". Not only is he working as a paid consultant—war correspondent for Fox News—but he's going in with U.S. forces into Iraq. He is also covertly working for his former boss and fellow Iran-Contra felon, Vice Admiral John Poindexter, now chairman of the Office of Information Awareness and Exploitation.

North is heading up an army group, which is operating under the auspices of the Office of Information Awareness, whose job it is to secure any and all Iraqi documents which are seized. His orders are to make sure that NO documents return to Washington that can implicate the Bushs in any illicit covert nastiness vis-à-vis the Hussein regime.

He will be the on-site Document Cover-up Meister and they have a nine-man document-shredding contingent. They have U.S. Army-issued Canon document shredders, which are painted in camouflage colors. Oliver North also has, in his pocket, his trusty Ron Popeil battery-operated pocket paper-shredder, which he endorses.

However, Oliver North is not, repeat not, bringing a cake for Saddam Hussein—as he did in the past for the Ayatollah Khomeini in Iran during the "October Surprise" Hostage Caper. And he is not bringing a Bible either. All he's got is his trusty battery-operated pocket paper-shredder. No cake. No keys. And no Bible.

North told the gal from Fox News: "I'm here in an undisclosed location with my trusty shredder at the ready."

Oliver North is still the Bushonian Cabal's Man in the Field—even after all these years.

Paul Simon can update his song: "Still shredding, after all these years."

Clueless In Iraq;
FUBAR Strikes Again
(3/31/03)

Like the Roman Imperial legions, American troops in Iraq have met stiff and unexpected resistance to their invasion. Meanwhile the American plebes, surfeited by junk food, false "reality" shows, and mind-numbing sitcoms (this era's version of bread and circuses) watch the Pentagon as it spins for the ProGovNet (Pro-Government Network) media—oblivious to the carnage and destruction of the Bush Cabal's War on Iraq.

It was reported on CNN by an unnamed U.S. general (he didn't want his name used) that the Iraqis have the entire allied forces completely befuddled, confused, and tied-up in knots. In other words, they really don't know what they're doing. The latest pronouncement of our military's incompetence was how they made a big deal about the Iraqi 51st Infantry Division's surrender en masse. It turns out that they didn't.

What happened was that the commanding general of the Iraqi 51st Infantry Division surrendered to U.S. forces and said that he had arranged for the surrender of the division. Instead of waiting to confirm anything, the White House was so anxious to show that they're doing something, that they immediately put that out. It was a big deal and the press talked about it. Then they found the "actual" commanding general of the Iraqi 51st Infantry Division was commanding Iraqi forces outside of Basra. As it turns out, the guy who surrendered was his double. And they didn't know it.

This was reported on CNN, and no arrangements had been made for surrender. The division was engaging the U.S. forces, as we speak.

Since they believed it, it screwed up their war plans, since they had assumed that this 10,000-man division was out of the war. But they didn't bother to check. They just assumed that they would put up a surrender flag on the battle map and that's it.

Then, all of a sudden, the American forces get surprised when they encounter the very same 51st Infantry Division north of Basra. They were so confused they didn't even know who they were engaging. The field commanders had been told that the 51st Infantry has surrendered—so it couldn't be them. So they couldn't even figure out who the hell they were fighting.

Talk about screw-ups. This unnamed brigadier general they kept quoting on CNN said that we don't have the slightest idea what we're doing. Frankly, he said, all these Arabs look the same to us and we can't even pronounce any of their names. He also said that the CIA didn't provide us with any real intelligence. They provide us pictures of Iraqi generals who turn out to be carpet salesmen. The CIA doesn't have a clue.

When we went into Iraq, it was only after a number of hours that "an unnamed senior Iraqi official" (I assume it was Tariq Aziz) started to negotiate through the Saudis a surrender of the Iraqi government. The minute that happened, the United States changed the entire order of battle. They began to disburse the forces into small units to take all the small towns and clean up the ports and take the airfields in the south, but they stopped pushing toward Baghdad. Instead, they kept lobbing-in Cruise missiles every 6 or 7 hours in an effort, they thought, of maintaining the pressure for the surrender talks.

But it was all just a ruse—to keep the Americans bogged down in place where they were and to allow the Iraqis time to disburse some of their larger divisions into company-size units. Now, on CNN, General Franks was talking about "stiff resistance" and "grand battles are ensuing". You'd think it was a hundred divisions of guys fighting another hundred divisions.

In fact, the real story is, thus far in the campaign 100 miles into Iraq, our forces had not engaged Iraqi forces in anything larger than company size. This is very deceptive. They're making it sound like they're engaging these entire divisions in these grand battles, but they're actually engaging tiny elements of these divisions that have been disbursed.

The Iraqi strategy of allowing the unreliable conscripts, regular army conscripts, in the front line, in company-size units, and then inter-disburse them with loyal Republican troops (the people who know what they're doing) and are actually going to fight, has proved to be a tremendous strategy for the Iraqis.

The British Minister of Defense admitted that these surrenders and the patterns of these surrenders (companies at a time, in widely disbursed locations) is forcing the allies to send vehicles to areas where they hadn't intended and transporting these prisoners to the rear lines, which is choking up their regular supply lines. They've had to build prisoner-of-war facilities which they hadn't intended on building.

Even the U.S. Air Force has complained that they couldn't land their cargo aircraft carrying munitions that our forces needed at certain air bases we've already captured in Iraq, because they had the airfields all clogged up with Iraqi prisoners.

Thus far the whole war is a joke.

BBC has been airing these reports all the time. You won't find it on CNN, but you will find it on BBC. They showed one American company of the 3rd Infantry Division, which has been bogged down by 2 squads of Iraqi conscripts, who are apparently loyal to Saddam. This has been a problem and they can't dislodge them. They run from hut to hut, and to further confuse the commanding the 3rd Infantry was complaining about it. He said that CNN and MSNBC have their cameras everywhere. They have their cameras behind every machine gun emplacement and every mortar emplacement.

BBC showed this company from the 3rd Infantry division. There was a U.S. Army four-man machine gun emplacement on top of a sand hill. About a hundred yards away is another sand hill with Iraqis on top of it. The 4 U.S. Army guys are lounging around in their foxhole, smoking cigarettes and drinking coffee, and then the sergeant comes over and slaps one on the helmet and says: "Wake up, wake up, the cameras are rolling. Fire off a few bursts." And the soldiers don't know what they're doing, so they try to wake up, and one guy rolls over and puts his hand on the trigger and fires off a few bursts for the camera—to make it look like they're doing something. Then the Iraqis fire a few bursts back. They keep shooting at each other, but nothing happens. Then, when the Iraqis see the BBC cameras, they stand up and fire their guns in the air. They're just jumping up and down, as if they're saying: "We're still here. We're still here."

BBC also showed a clip of an American missile detail. There was a two-story adobe building with Iraqis firing out of it through windows, which were actually just holes, no windows. So they fired a missile and it completely missed the building. And the sergeant said: "This is a laser-guided weapon. The building is only 50 yards away, so how in the hell could you possibly miss?" And the guy says: "Oh, it's something wrong with the weapons system." Of course, knowing that it's a U.S. weapons system, who knows? The first missile goes over the roof of the building. The second one hits it and actually blows about half of it up. And the Iraqis on the other side of the building are still firing.

Then they shoot another missile and blow the other half of the building up, and all the Iraqis run out the back, dressed in civilian clothing, into a small adobe building next to it, and start firing again.

And the general says that the U.S. Army was actually glad when al-Jazeera TV gave us a copy of the film showing the U.S. American prisoners of war the Iraqis captured. We knew we had people missing, he said, but we frankly had no idea where they were. And he's going down this list. He says we have 6 guys missing here, and 9 guys in this company

On November 5, 2001, William Cooper was shot to death by sheriff's deputies in a gunfire exchange. Who was Bill Cooper? Was he a true patriot? A tough survivalist? Or simply a fanatic?

Some knew him as a UFO "expert" (claimed insider information on government knowledge of extraterrestrials living among us)...a conspiracy theorist...a former Navy Intelligence operative...and the person the President once called "the most dangerous man on American airwaves". Cooper always said he acted from his "conscience" and sought to warn all Americans of the dangers of the New World Order, creeping socialism, and our own brand of Nazism. Here is the inside story, as told by a fellow patriot and government whistle-blower. Commander X has collected together for the first time Cooper's thoughts and finds on such subjects as: The Illuminati • The Kennedy Assassination • MJ-12 and the UFO Cover-Up • Area 51 • The AntiChrist • The World Trade Center Disaster • Gun Control • Skull and Bones Society.

Americans, they put their uniforms on, then when they run from hut to hut they put on civilian dress. And our troops have been told not to fire at Iraqi civilians, so they know that Iraqi army people are moving around in civilian dress, but they're frightened to shoot them because there are news cameras everywhere. What happens if they really are civilians?

This captain and 12 guys over here missing. He said we don't have any idea where all these missing people are.

You look at what CNN carries, and what BBC carries, and it's a different story. They did admit on CNN that they had captured the wrong "general"—who wasn't even a general. They don't know how many Iraqi prisoners they have. They kept saying we have 2200 Iraqi prisoners, and then CNN comes out and says: well we actually don't know how many Iraqi prisoners we have—because some of them just wander off during transportation.

They said that "elite elements" of the 3rd Infantry division are transporting Iraqi prisoners. What happened is that, after they were captured, the Iraqis had people dressed up as goat herders or camel jockeys who turn all the road signs around behind them. As they're driving the prisoners back, they get lost, and end up in the middle of nowhere.

They showed a sergeant trying to read the road signs. They're in Arabic script, then in syllabic English like: El Kababba Wabba Rabba. And the corporal has the map and he says: "Oh, we're in El Kababba Wabba Rabba."

This war coverage is great entertainment.

But these guys in the Bush Cabal don't care. The first thing Cheney said he wanted to see accomplished was to stop a current GAO audit of Department of Defense expenditures in the Redstone Arsenal and Central Missile Command Base in Huntsville Alabama. (See previous columns on the Redstone Arsenal.)

The GAO has had an ongoing investigation into corruption and fraud. The second thing he wanted to get done is large tax cuts for the wealthy. They just come out and say it. And then there's George Bush's "Shock and Awe" war strategy in Iraq—not to be confused with the usual "Shuck and Jive".

The only lasting "Shock and Awe" that's going to be felt is the shock and awe felt in the wallets of the American taxpayer.

Meanwhile Tony Blair is pleading with Bush to please find some chemical weapons in Iraq because he needs the political cover. Since they haven't found any yet, Blair went so far as to say that if you don't find any there, just plant some and find them later. He said it's nothing you Bushs haven't done in the past.

The Department of Commerce has made a new estimate and it's carefully scripted every week for Republican-controlled mainstream media. There will be more money made with the new

French and Russian bashing, and soon-to-be German bashing (because they voted against the resolution as well). Not only are 83% of the American flags made in China, but 90% of all foreign flags sold in the United States are made in China.

The People's Republic of China will be able to garner sufficient revenue through the new French, Russian, and soon-to-be German bashing, on the recommendation of O'Reilly et al, that Americans should buy these flags to burn or otherwise desecrate them.

Then the Beijing government will earn enough money from this secondary windfall in export revenue, so the Chinese Army will be able to build another four additional ICBMs armed with multiple 170-kiloton thermonuclear warheads (the designs of which the Bush Administration allowed the Chinese Government to get their mitts on) to aim at more U.S. cities.

The war coverage is giving the sitcoms a run for the money now. There have to be other people besides me who see all this for what it is. They're sitting there in front of their television sets watching CNN and MSNBC war coverage and laughing about it.

Perhaps this whole thing was designed to be a tawdry sordid mess as an entertainment vehicle.

Fox News said that this war coverage has allowed them to increase advertising fees, so it's commercially profitable for them. By being part of the Great Bushonian Lie Campaign and the Lie Script, as I call it, they appeal to everyone. They appeal to the 80% of the people who are stupid and don't know the difference, who have their eyes glued to see What Happens Next in the War Against Iraq, sitting on their couches, drinking Budweiser, and waving an American Flag Made in China. These are the Americans who have been hijacked by fear and ignorance.

This also appeals to the 20% of the people like me, who understand things for what they are and think it's comical. So they're covering all the bases.

Remember: It's the Bush Administration Lie Machine—Covering All the Bases.

After all, the Bushs are not stupid. They're running the country. Unlike the rest of us, they're running it into the ground.

People should not be surprised, however, that the support for the war is diminishing. The White House announced that Bush will be giving a major speech every single day—but of course it will be for a Preaching to the Choir Crowd. Remember: the Administration led people to believe that the Iraqis were going to surrender last week.

This is, however, typical incompetence of our own armed forces. We should be in Baghdad already, and the reason we're not is because the Iraqis have been able to run rings around us. They keep playing this game. Tariq Aziz pretends to negotiate a surrender, which changes the whole American order of battle as they had envisioned it. That's when they came up with this idea of sending in Cruise missiles every 5 or 6 hours.

They used up 3000 Cruise missiles. They've launched 12 B-52 strikes against the same seven buildings. Over 400 individual sorties against the same seven buildings. Do you think they're destroyed yet?

But that was just a ruse to buy time for the Iraqis. The problem is that we don't know where the Iraqi forces are. We don't know the disposition of those forces. We don't know the capabilities they still have.

The problem is, we don't have enough mobile armor on the ground because the Bush Administration is trying to save money by relying so much on air power. Mobile armor is expensive to transport. It's expensive to maintain in the field, and it's expensive to move in the field. And that's what you need to claim territory and hold it.

Meanwhile, the Bush Administration, by its own admission, says that we are using air power to fill-in the gaps, but the weather is not cooperating. The secondary problem, and the reason the Afghani campaign is still ongoing, is that we have troops which have been captured and we don't know where they are.

We can't maintain our table of organization. Our helicopters continuously crash. We have units that are misdirected by the enemy to the middle of nowhere. Our global positioning units don't work—and it has nothing to do with Russian jamming devices. The Russian jamming devices didn't work, but that was last week. This week they work, so we don't have to admit that most of the GPU units we give to our troops don't work.

It is the same old problem of having multi-billion-dollar weapons systems that don't work, having troops which are ill-trained in the use of items that don't work, and losing assets, particularly helicopter gunships, through incessant crashes—all due to design flaws or faulty spare parts.

Then, if you throw into it the fact that we don't even know where the enemy is—this is what takes the campaign so long.

Then Rumsfeld comes on the television saying there's a column of Iraqi troops coming to engage them. It has a thousand armored vehicles in it. And we didn't notice it till a half an hour ago.

We have underestimated Iraq's paramilitary forces, which are not under the control of the regular Iraqi army but are under control of the Ba'ath party. These groups have infiltrated every single city in Iraq. They've cut communications and turned around road signs.

We're all screwed up, due to our own incompetence and due to the fact that we didn't have any intelligence. This is the same thing that happened in Afghanistan. They don't even have any current maps. And they haven't been able to find any bombed out BP gas stations to get road maps. (See awhile ago column "Clueless in Afghanistan".)

Rumsfeld admitted that they don't even know the location of fully a quarter of the 3rd Armored Mechanized division. You talk about clueless.

The Bush Administration has allowed the media unprecedented access to the point that 298th Mechanized Infantry company had a camera in every machine gun emplacement. The Bush Administration wants to show "our brave troops" engaging Iraqi forces. The only thing it showed was a bunch of Iraqis on a sand dune a hundred yards away firing back at us while we fired at them.

And our guys didn't have food and rations because their supply lines were all clogged up with Iraqi prisoners. We send-in a hundred trucks with food, and they get lost in the middle of the desert because the Iraqis have turned the road signs around. You talk about FUBAR.

So now it costs the American taxpayers $2 billion a day to have 250,000 of our troops bogged down in Iraq. It would be one thing if they were bogged down by enemy fire. But it's FUBAR all over again. They don't know where they are. They don't know where the enemy is. They can't get supplies.

And then there's the sand—a fine powdery sand that's like grit. They fire off a single round from a 155-mm artillery battery, and after every round the whole gun has to be cleaned. They've shown our guys just endlessly cleaning their M-16s. These 18- and 19-year-old grunts look miserable, sitting in the heat.

And there they are in Downtown Hell. But it's hell we're creating. If we weren't so incompetent and if we had weapons systems which actually worked, we would be in Baghdad.

To top it off, the Canadian and British governments have formally complained to the State Department about the Bushonian Regime awarding $50 billion worth of post Saddam Iraqi rebuilding contracts without putting them out to bid—which they are supposed to do.

These contracts were awarded to Fluor, Halliburton, Bechtel, and E-systems. The British and Canadians said it was a flagrant example of how the Republican Party panders to the American Military-Industrial Complex, who in turn support the Right-Wing Political Cabal in Washington. They said they weren't notified of the bids, which the Bush Administration previously promised to them.

These contracts were simply awarded. They were no-bid contracts, and the "winners" were told to set their own prices. This is money that the American taxpayers are going to have to pay for; this is not coming out of Iraqi oil.

Not only were these bids awarded to corporations which support the Right-Wing Cabal of the Bushonian Regime, but George Bush and his family, Dick Cheney and his family, as well as all cabinet officers and over half of all sub-cabinet-level appointees in the Bush Administration have direct financial interests in these companies.

This is a direct conflict of interest. The law says they can have no direct personal ownership. They get around this because they own shares through various offshore trusts. In Bush's case, it's through the Bush Family-controlled Pilgrim Investment Trust. In Cheney's case, it's through the Cheney Family Foundation Trust in the Netherlands Antilles, which is secret. And that's how they control it—through secret offshore trusts. These shares that the Bushonian Cabalists hold weren't even bought. They were given to them.

This is Crony Capitalism, American Style—a/k/a Bushonian Cabalism.

But this is so indicative of what Bob Dole said—that if it were not for the fear and ignorance of the Narrow-Minded Right in this country, and the political and financial support they give to George Bush, Bush would not be able to accomplish any of his political, economic, or military agendas.

Dole's famed comments, spoken during he re-inauguration dinner in 1985, should never be forgotten. Dole said: "America, land of the naïve and home of the provincial—thank God!"

Conflict Of Interest—It's A Way Of Life For The Bushonian Cabalist (4/7/03)

Interviewed by Bill Moyers, Charles Lewis of the Center for Public Integrity spoke about Richard Perle and how it embarrassed the White House because the financial and conflict-of-interest disclosures were not supposed to be made publicly available. Richard Perle is a former Assistant Secretary of Defense (1981-1987), now acting as a private consultant to Republican-controlled industry, bidding for government contracts, primarily through the Department of Defense.

Perle's financial and conflict-of-interest disclosures showed that he had conflicts of interest with corporations that he represented, the CEOs and members of the boards of directors of which were former Bushonian minions. This was supposed to be behind the scenes, so when Defense Secretary Rumsfeld was asked about it, all he could answer in Perle's defense was that "Richard Perle is a loyal citizen."

To avoid a repeat of this embarrassment, Bush signed a new national security directive giving the Vice President, Dick Cheney (of all people), absolute control over the classification of ALL government documents. This is completely unprecedented.

Cheney said that the first order of business he's going to enact is to bring all financial and conflict-of-interest disclosures, as well as disclosures of past ethical and/or criminal violations, under national security seal, as it relates to Republican consultants who are former members of the Bushonian Regime(s). Normally this would have to be passed through the GAO (Government Accounting Office), but now this directive circumvents the current process and places the entire power to classify documents in the hands of the Vice President—solely.

Such a thing has never been done before, but they are determined not to have another Richard Perle Embarrassment.

The only way that can be done is to place all information, including financial disclosures, conflicts of interest, past ethical violations, and past criminal records of all Bushonian minions now acting as consultants, under national security seal. Further, the Vice President stated that he would now move with his new powers to completely eliminate the Freedom Of Information Act.

The Freedom Of Information Act was legislated by Congress, but with the passage of the U.S.A. Patriot Act, the President now has the power to eliminate the Freedom Of Information Act, claiming that would-be "terrorists" could make filings for sensitive government documents, which they could then use in an attempt to extort the Bush Administration by potentially finding out about past illegal activities of said Bush Administration and/or its minions.

Therefore the President (or in this case the Vice President; it was done this way to give Bush cover) has the authority, without congressional action, to eliminate the Freedom Of Information Act—not simply water it down as was done in 1986. Cheney declared the Freedom Of Information Act to be "a dangerous nuisance".

It should be remembered that it was so watered down in 1986, under the revised Freedom Of Information Act, that it had virtually become a moot point. For once they are being genuine about the reason for getting rid of it: that would-be "terrorists" might get a hold of sensitive government documents, which reveal past misdeeds of Bushonian Regimes and their minions, and then the "terrorists" could use that to extort the All Powerful Right-Wing Cabal. So the bogeyman of "terrorism" is again used to quash any potential problems for the

This is the most in-depth compilation of interviews with survivors of the Philadelphia Experiment and Montauk Project to date on one computer CD. The information comes from the memories of those who were interviewed. Because these projects are so secretive, gaining hard evidence is nearly impossible. However, that doesn't mean the projects never happened.

There are many out there who do not want you to know the truth about these projects. Use your own judgment as you hear the words of these survivors. Use this information as the beginning resource to help you onto your own research track.

The five people featured on this CD all testify that they worked with Al at the Montauk Project, and some even remember him as Ed Cameron during the Philadelphia Experiment.

Bush Cabal.

As Lewis points out, we have reached another milestone in the Bushonian agenda to turn this nation into a right-wing dictatorship. The biggest problem is that now the Bushonian Cabalists don't have to disclose their conflicts of interest. Nor do they have to disclose how much money they are being paid.

Perle had made millions in commissions from these defense contracts and other government contracts. From now on, the President will invoke his national security privilege on all DoD contracts and they are simply going to stop the bidding process, putting out contracts for open bid for the Department of Defense.

Then the rationale becomes that, since these contracts are put out for bid, they have to disclose sensitive information about weapons projects. This won't be done anymore. Typically the losers in the bidding wars challenge the granting of contracts to their competitors, but the reason they challenge is because they didn't get their piece of the pie. The next time around they quietly make a two or three million dollar extra donation to the Republican National Committee's offshore slush fund in Curacao (which is where it is, by the way). It's held at the Curacao branch of a Swiss bank called Geo Bank, which has since been swallowed by a bigger bank. They probably have thousands of these offshore accounts.

If you want to consolidate control into "higher, tighter, and righter hands"—this is the path upon which you travel. You make it all tight and leakproof—and the public never knows.

Richard Perle has been called "the prince of darkness" and that's very apropos because he's so far back in the shadows and he's so well-connected. But the amount of money these guys get is amazing—Brent Scowcroft, James Baker, Frank Carlucci, and the entire Bushonian Cabal. Their income, just from fees and kickbacks on government contracts they direct, from controlled corporations to the Bush Regime in which they act as intermediaries, is in the tens of millions at a time—PER TRANSACTION.

"Conflict of interest" thereby becomes a moot point as well. For the average two or three BILLION dollar defense contract, there might be as much as TWO OR THREE HUNDRED MILLION at the end for "consultant fees".

[Editor's note: Keep in mind that this robbery from the public purse continues because our elected custodians of the public trust either look the other way or, perhaps more likely these days, are in on the take. What do you think our Founding Fathers would have to say about fixing such governmental decay from within? After all, the hanging tree was an effective tool back then!]

Another part of this is that the Department of Defense will no longer have to make public the offshore defense consultancy fees. If someone demanded them, they were part of the public record. Under the new rule, the only way they have to disclose it is if they're based in the United States—which none of them are. They all have offices around McLean, Virginia, but they're actually domiciled in the Cayman Islands, Netherlands Antilles, or even Bulgaria.

This is also the extrapolation of the Shadow Government into greater shadows and deeper control.

One of my favorite examples was how Bush authorized the contract last year for the V-22 Osprey, which both the U.S. Army and the U.S. Navy didn't want. There were 28 prototypes built, and 14 subsequently crashed due to inherent design flaws. Four of them crashed on Navy carrier decks—and caused about $50 million worth of damage at a time. So the Navy backed out of it. The Army and Air Force backed out of it, and finally the Marines said they didn't want the thing.

P.X. Kelly, the former commandant of the Marines, called the V-22 "a flying death trap" in Jane's Defense Weekly. He said the Marines don't want it.

But it's so typical of a Bush Regime. They authorized a weapons system that doesn't work and is dangerous—insofar as 50% of all the ones built so far have crashed.

The V-22 Osprey has inherent design flaws, which the Department of Defense admitted as a reason for not buying the things in the first place.

The Bush Administration then overrides the Department of Defense and gives the billion dollar contract to the Boeing-Bell consortium, despite the fact that none of our armed forces want the aircraft. They said they won't use them.

The question becomes, as always with these Bushonian defense contracts given out simply to garner Republican money or donations to Republican interests (the defense contractors): as these come on line (and they're not cheap; they're about $60 million a copy; they only ordered 12 initially), who is going to use them?

None of our armed forces want them or are going to use them. They ordered 12 of them at a cost of three quarters of a BILLION dollars to the American taxpayers, and they will be shipped by the Air Force to the Air Force's graveyard, dismantled, and covered with tarps.

In other words, this project will be expending three quarters of a BILLION dollars of the people's money for nothing. No wonder they said that, from now on, journalists will not be able to get access to the military "graveyard" in the U.S. southwest desert anymore.

The Bushonian Cabal is a scourge that endlessly saps the economic strength of the nation in order to continuously fulfill its agenda of the "continuous consolidation of power and money into higher, tighter, and righter hands".

And we should also add some words that Bush Senior didn't use in that infamous quote of his: "more shadowy".

* * *

In other news, the Union Bank of Switzerland is having a tussle with the Caymanian government. As background to this story, it should be noted that the reasons why the islands are still nice is because they have very strict building codes. It's clean and it's safe because it's still a British Crown Colony. The reason it's still picturesque is because you can't put up anything over four stories. It must be Caribbean architecture.

Because of land restrictions, the Caymanians are complaining that the Swiss banks are attempting to pressure the Cayman Island government to loosen commercial zoning to build more offshore banks in Georgetown, the capital. As the Cayman Islands Tourist Authority pointed out, more than 80% of all the commercial property are offshore banks. But they want to expand because business is booming.

It should also be noted that the principal residency group in the islands are Republican Scamscateers. That's why the Cayman Islands don't need much of a tourist trade or a sport-fishing industry. That way you can keep all the riff-raff in Jamaica.

That's also why the Cayman Islands are the Republicans' idea of heaven. There's the Union Bank of Switzerland; then there's a pharmacy which says "Prozac On Sale"; then there's a liquor store; and then there's the Canon paper-shredder store. No wonder the place is full of Republican Scamscateers.

In fact, the latest news is that Republican Scamscateers outnumber the native Caymanian population.

Also the governments of Saudi Arabia and Turkey had threatened to withdraw overflight privileges for U.S. Tomahawk and Cruise missiles, which the U.S. had been shooting over their territory. They keep crashing on Saudi and Turkish territory, and most recently, Iranian territory.

The ambassadors from these countries spoke about this problem—saying that these Tomahawk and Cruise missiles keep crashing on our territory and they're killing our peasants and smashing huts and squashing camels. They said: "You can't keep doing this!"

In order to keep the overflight privileges, the U.S. government has quietly agreed to compensate the Saudi, Turkish, and Iranian people with Afghan-style money drops. (See my awhile ago column "Clueless In Afghanistan".) Like the ambassador said, it's not hard to find these places. You just look for a bunch of smashed huts and squashed camels.

So the United States has agreed to do this—at U.S. taxpayer expense. By the way, this is happening every single day that we fire Tomahawk and Cruise missiles. A percentage always go off course, and as we have mentioned from the GAO Report before, only 38% of these things actually work and hit their target.

The deal was that the CIA would make money drops to smooth things over, providing that, for all further instances, the Saudi, Iranian, and Turkish governments do not inform the media about U.S. missiles going off course.

As it turns out, they showed a bunch of Turkish peasants who are singing the Afghani "I Want My Bennies" Song (sung to the tune of Boy George's "I'll Tumble For You"). The popularity of this song has spread throughout the Middle East, with people singing and dancing to this song with ghetto blasters.

The CIA, using Russian helicopters (since they refuse to use U.S. helicopters), will drop the green and white envelopes with the smiling picture of George Bush, saying: please be America's friend and there will be two bennies (hundred dollar bills) in each envelope.

Wait till they decide they want Euros instead of dollars. Won't that be upsetting?

But that's not very likely. Everybody on Earth knows what bennies are—and they want them.

[Editor's note: Look back at the thought provoking item titled "The Euro And The War On Iraq" on page 9 in last month's News Desk before dismissing so fast a very interesting postulate by Al above.]

So now the problem will be solved with Bushelopes—envelopes with Bush's face on it and two crisp hundred dollar bills inside.

Since the war in Iraq has begun, the United States have taken 103 casualties, 46 killed and 57 wounded, and a still-to-be-determined number of captured.

They don't know how many are captured and there's an indeterminate number missing because they don't know where the units are because the GPUs don't work. The radios don't work and, as we mentioned, the Iraqis switch around the road signs.

Of these casualties we've taken, just 9 have been due to enemy fire. The rest have been due to crashes of helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft because of inherent design flaws—which the Department of Defense admitted but will not force the underlying defense contractors to resolve.

Then there's the faulty spare-parts problem, parts which are made, as we've said before, by Chinese-controlled offshore companies.

Other soldiers have been killed in "friendly fire" incidents, or other faulty U.S. military equipment and munitions failures.

The Afghani statistics also continue. In Afghanistan, 97% of all casualties were due to crashes, faulty munitions, etc.

The fault therefore lies with the Bushonian Cabal and their contractors who use the money they're given to recirculate it to the Republican National Committee in the form of hard or soft money donations. Or it gets deposited into offshore Republican-controlled slush funds, so it turns into a Big Loop which the American people pay for—again and again and again.

This is Bushonian manna from heaven.

Lt. General Michael Short said that if the commanders in the field, like General Franks, had their way, they would be fighting the war the right way—not the Rumsfeld way.

Dick Cheney is also getting sucked into this with the new Halliburton contract to rebuild Iraq. (Cheney was the former CEO of Halliburton.) They dropped the $654 million contract which had been awarded last week because it was announced that Cheney is still being paid by Halliburton $180,000 per year in some payout scheme he had. On the original FEC disclosure forms when he became Vice President, Cheney failed to disclose he was getting the payments. He said that he had severed all ties with Halliburton and owned no more shares and was receiving no payments. Nothing.

Even though $180,000 is chump change for a guy like him, the appearance is evidently too blatant even for him—the Vice President who's put in charge of awarding the contracts. The first contract is to Halliburton, which is still paying him.

It should be noted that Cheney, because of his insider knowledge, was able to get out of Halliburton stock at $50 a share—almost at the highest price, while everybody else got out at $9 to $12 a share.

Martha Stewart: look out. Here comes Dick Cheney—your new bunk-mate.

But to put Cheney in charge of awarding the contracts so Bush can say "I didn't do it", and to give Cheney new and absolute powers over classification of government documents, is more egregious than even Cheney can tolerate.

The financial cross-ties between Bush and Cheney and Rumsfeld and these various corporations, and the blatant conflicts of interest, are astonishing. The U.S. government is literally becoming Dictators-R-Us.

Ari Fleischer was asked a question about shredding documents, and he replied: "We don't hardly shred documents anymore." They don't have to—because they have such control over the media and all of the government agencies, which are supposed to be internal watchdogs, that they don't have to shred documents anymore.

If you never have to worry about anybody investigating you (independent of your own control), it doesn't make any difference.

To paraphrase the Love Story tagline: "Dictators never have to say they're sorry."

You may have heard that Geraldo was kicked out of Iraq, and Fox News actually tried to cover it up. It was CNN who exposed the fact that he had left.

The Bush Administration had tried to intervene to keep him there. General Franks said: "No, we don't want this guy here; he's a security risk." He apparently even talked to George Bush about it.

General Franks calls the Bush White House "The Friends of Fox Society."

"If you try to intervene to keep him here" said General Franks, "I'll go public with it and tell everybody he's a security risk."

But that's Fox News. It's like the Fox guarding the Bushhouse.

Naïve Flag-Waving Americans And Their Homeland Insecurity

(4/14/03)

Last week our nation's "lawmakers"—as the media calls the members of Congress—decided that they would not agree to European participation in the rebuilding-of-Iraq program, if the United Nations were involved.

Bloomberg News even commented on it: "As lawmakers pander to the right." And that's what they're doing. They're engaging in UN-bashing because it's popular at the moment, and they really are pandering to the right-wing flag-wavers who want to bash the UN.

France and Russia's response to Congress was: "Please go ahead and exclude the UN."

If we excuse the UN, that automatically releases our "allies" from their financial obligations, vis-à-vis the money they agreed to come up with in rebuilding Iraq. Therefore, 100% of the financial cost would be borne by the American people. You therefore pay for your own narrow-mindedness.

Then Congress agreed to obstruct the aid bill to Turkey, in order to punish Turkey for its refusal to allow U.S. troops in the country from the get-go. This is another case of pandering to the flag-wavers, because Turkey-bashing is also in this week.

However, if we do that, the narrow-minded flag-wavers (who know absolutely nothing about anything) should bear in mind that it is only American money that keeps the pro-western secular Turkish government in power, because it is a minority government.

If it were not for U.S. financial support, Turkey would immediately revert to a radical Islamic state. It should be noted that the radical Islamic faction in the Turkish government is the largest, and it is only American money that holds them at bay.

If Turkey becomes a radical Islamic state (which is what will happen if we withhold U.S. aid), it would simply create a new Middle Eastern spawning ground for terrorists. It would destabilize the entire region and directly affect U.S. strategic interests in the Middle East. This would ultimately cost the taxpayers of this nation far more money, down the road, than it would by keeping Turkey financially alive now.

As always, Americans pay for their own stupidity.

Here it is in a nutshell: When Americans start waving the flag, watch out because they get stupid. There is a direct correlation.

You may remember Jerry Fallwell and his comment on AIDS—that it was a curse from God on gays. Now he's got an explanation for SARS.

Jerry immediately said this was a second curse on the Orientals. He hates Orientals and he obviously doesn't know when to shut up. And he gets fatter and fatter. Every time you see him, he's fatter than he was the time before. Some people just eat food—instead of taking Prozac like they should.

And the Rumsfeld bashing also continues. The military wants to get rid of Rumsfeld in the worst way. Bush has to come out daily to support him. The crawl tape says: "Bush reiterates support for Rumsfeld."

But when Bush actually says something (this was one of those rah-rah conferences he attends daily; this one was with the Coast Guard in Florida), the "endorsement" was only tepid. The Bush Administration now understands that, if this continues, they should let Rumsfeld take all the heat, and that deflects it away from the White House.

As I was telling John Oakley on his radio show on CFRB, this war was all screwed up from the beginning.

[Editor's note: CFRB is a powerhouse 50,000-watt day-and-night AM radio station in Toronto, Canada, at a frequency of 1010 kHz on the dial.]

Bush pushed this thing before the military was even ready. We didn't even have all the forces in theater yet. We didn't have any prisoner-of-war facilities established. We did not have lines of transportation, communication, or supply. Our logistics were all screwed up. Units didn't have enough munitions or the right munitions. And you combine that with the fact that all of our wonderful high-tech gizmos don't work.

And then you push a war before the military is ready.

Then, when things go wrong, the military will start impugning the political leadership. That is precisely what has happened, and to deflect that, Rumsfeld is going to absorb the heat. He knows it and I'm sure the agreement between Bush and Rumsfeld has already been made. Rumsfeld has been told to take all the heat, and then when they get rid of him, it will protect the Administration. And in exchange, he'll get a million-dollar-a-year consulting contract from the Heritage Foundation.

It should be noted that Rumsfeld has had no military command experience. He used to sell drugs (pharmaceuticals) and pushed through FDA approval of Aspartame when nobody wanted to approve it because of the harmful side effects. The only thing he ever did is push pills.

Imagine—a pill pusher is running the most powerful military on Earth.

This War on Iraq, of course, has the possibilities of turning into Vietnam Redux—with potential guerilla action for years to come. The Bush Administration made a calculated gamble in allowing such unprecedented media access to the war, because when you do, you have to let in all the media of our allies, like it or not.

The Bush Administration can't control foreign media the way it controls domestic media. So when you have all these cameras set up around Baghdad for the world to see, the problem is that you can't make the people always see what you want them to see. And it makes it harder to lie and blame other people when something goes wrong.

It should be noted we have fired about 3000 Cruise and/or Tomahawk missiles into Baghdad in the 11 days of the campaign, and aren't we doing something. But the reality is that we have bombed the same 13 buildings over and over again.

It's the same 13 targets that we're bombing every day. Remember the movie Wag The Dog and the joke about the same bomb going down the chimney over and over again?

What tactical military advantages is it to bomb the same pile of rubble every day?

The only advantage is the political value—to make it appear to the American people that we're doing something, that we're bombing Baghdad. It's also a lot less risky, when you have news cameras everywhere, to bomb the same pile of rubble every day, rather than bomb something else when you might make a mistake and a lot of civilians get killed.

Therefore we have spent $5 billion of the American taxpayers' money (that's what 3,000 Cruise missiles cost, fully deployed in the field). That's $5 billion WASTED—strictly for the Bush Administration to have political cover. We should always be mindful of what Alan Greenspan said in 1993: "The nation can't afford any more Bushs."

But that's why Prozac is so popular. It puts you into a monotone. It makes you look and sound like George Bush. But it's hard to say. A guy like him who's drank and taken drugs all his life. The Bushonian Cocktail—Jim Beam and Prozac. It lasts a lifetime.

Then there was the story about the billboard in Olympia, Washington. It shows a bunch of our troops holding a flag and the caption reads: "If you don't support our team, get out of our stadium."

This was a lead-in to the story about the new Office of Information Awareness (and Exploitation). State Security Psychological Operations Directorate has contracted to lease thousands of billboards, and they are now designing them. The first one is around the greater Washington DC area and it shows a bunch of Americans marching with red white and blue armbands, holding up the American flag, and it said: "Marching For Freedom."

It showed the guy on the front with his right foot in the air (you know, like the goose step) and some graffiti artist apparently got up on the billboard and drew a picture of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill Of Rights under his foot—crushed under the foot of the new narrow-minded right.

And then, on the American citizens marching (who all had blond hair and blue eyes), the artist drew-in little toothbrush mustaches.

The police are going to charge this graffiti artist (if they can find him) with sedition.

This will be bringing back the days of John Adams, who threw dozens of newspaper editors in prison because they dared to criticize him. There was the biography of John Adams, which was promoted heavily as if he were some kind of hero. But the Adams Family has been considered one of the primary villains of American history and they could be even considered a precursor of the Bushonian Cabal, family dynasty and all.

But this gives you another idea where the Bush Administration is taking the country. They will be leasing tens of thousand of billboards, which aren't being used because of the economic slowdown due to Bushonomics. It's ironic. They have the availability of the billboard space—due to Bushonomics.

Then you have to remember that Clear Channel is one of the largest owners of billboards in this country. It makes you wonder how many they will be "donating" to this propaganda campaign. "Donating" for a fee, that is, but the fee is tax-deductible since it's a donation.

You see the tawdry humor here. The billboard space is available due to the economic slowdown because of Bushonomics. Then this division of a newly created federal office uses taxpayer money from the same people suffering under Bushonomics to lease the billboards for these new State Security signs. And they're leasing them from a corporation (Clear Channel) whose board of advisors includes Henry Kissinger and George Bush Sr. This is a great example of the Bushonian Cabal at work.

In fact, it's a reasonable question to ask: Is the Bushonian Cabal guilty of incest?

With all the facts in hand, George Bush, Henry Kissinger, et al, should probably be charged with having illicit incestuous (business) relations.

The circle is complete now. There is no more pretense of any conflicts of interest. (See preceding column "Conflict Of Interest".) The Bush Administration doesn't even try to hide the conflicts of interest. All investigations by the FCC and the Department of Justice have ceased. They don't even bother to try to hide it.

But I can't wait to see the new billboards, with the American citizens marching along with their new armbands. They'll probably make them region specific.

They'll show the Floridians marching along in their Bermuda shorts and flip-flops. Or maybe in their lime-green polyester pants and naugahyde belts. It'll be all old people, with their crooked spectacles, their false teeth coming out, and their hearing aids hanging down—all holding the American flag. It'll be a special lightweight American flag, specially made for oldsters.

Then there's the story of the University of Montana professor, Dennis Holt, who was fired for speaking out against the War on Iraq. He said that there should be a "peaceful takeover of the government". But he should have known better.

You can't talk like that anymore. It's seditious.

The University of Montana said he wasn't fired because of freedom of speech issues, and not because "he shared anti-war sentiments, calling the rumors absolutely false".

But of course it's true. The university should just stop lying. The administrator of the University of Montana got a call from the LCB, the Lie Coordination Bureau: "We hear you have a seditious professor and you're not coordinating your lies on campus, and we've got to get rid of him. The young impressionable minds on campus need all the help they can get."

And just to make sure, the Office of Homeland Security will be sending an extra vanload of American flags—American flags made in China, of course.

You'll also be interested in knowing that, according to John Ashcroft, the disloyalty laws in times of war have been re-established—despite the fact that we're not officially at war. But the act doesn't state "declared war"; it just says "during times of war". And we're always at war. There's the War on Poverty. The War on Drugs. Which "war" are they talking about?

So now citizens can be declared "disloyal" as a reason for dismissal from a job or to prevent them from getting a job or to restrict them from travel. You'd better watch it or you could end up like Ezra Pound at St. Elizabeth's. All citizens will be informed by the Office of Internal Security if they have been declared "disloyal" and be required to get a new driver's license because that information will be included on your new security threat dossier.

You can of course contest it. And when you do, you'll get a piece of paper which says "here's the reason"—and it's all blacked out. All redacted. "Under National Security laws, we have been advised that we can't reveal to you the real reason."

But you see how far this is going. I keep telling everyone to watch out for those naïve flag-wavers who, in their patriotic zeal, would readily usurp the rights of others.

It reminds me of Reverend Thomas Malthus, the English social theorist, who had done research about civilizations from 3500 BC to the early 19th century. He pointed out that there had been revolutions in every society when the top 1% of that society began to control more than 50% of all the private wealth of that society, and when the income spread in those society's businesses and industries, between the highest and lowest paid employees, went above 263X.

When those two circumstances were reached, there was a revolution in every nation from 3500 BC on. This was called the French Revolution Theorem because those were the exact numbers reached prior to the French Revolution. It's interesting to note that now, in the United States, the top 1% of the nation controls 66.3% of all the private wealth, and the spread between the highest paid employee and the lowest paid employee, within the S&P 500 index of 500 leading corporations in the United States, is now 299X.

Is another American Revolution coming?

Don't bet on it. The naïve flag-wavers are firmly behind the wheel. △

Follow The Money For History Lessons

Editor's note: In the last article of Sherman Skolnick's lessons for this month there's a remarkable account of the money trail that went along with transporting Saddam and his top generals out of Iraq and into safety.

There's usually such a money trail behind the important events of history, and Saddam's case is only the latest in a long line of uncovering such ancient "trade routes" which always seem to get deleted from the official accounts we read in our sanitized history books.

It's as if our historians were to try to explain why so many cities are located near water while completely overlooking the obvious! When you take out that critical connection, you are left with the very kinds of goofy disinformation often given as facts to explain why key historical events happened.

In the following historical accounts, Sherman not only puts the "water" back in the picture, but never forgets to point out how central it was to what actually evolved. And the events sure do make much more sense from THAT perspective!

And returning for a minute to Saddam and his generals—keep in mind that our tax dollars not only paid for a phony war to "get Saddam" (while acting as cover for other agendas), but also paid a bundle to get him out of the area—BEFORE the show started that dazzled the American people into a patriotic frenzy. Why do you suppose the saying "a fool (taxpayer) and his money are soon parted" comes to mind here?

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 31: Great Storms And Big Lies Of History (3/26/03)

Throughout the events of the world, there were happenings that, on occasion, changed the course of history. Later generations often failed to remember or note the same, or see an evil omen of these past occurrences. Some later called them acts of Mother Nature; others, preferring to be spiritual, called them Divine Intervention. And then there were the Big Lies of foreign invaders.

From about the 15th Century on, Spain amassed great wealth from plundering countries in the New World. Such as, early in the 16th Century, Spain conquered Peru and Mexico. Perhaps at the time, Spain denied invading those lands to steal their gold and silver. For a time, the Spanish Hapsburg royalty became the most powerful in the world.

In 1588, Philip II of Spain ordered his huge Spanish Armada, considered invincible, to set sail to conquer England. Call it Mother Nature, call it a Judgment from Heaven, but a terrible storm blew them off course. What was left of the shipwrecked fleet ended up on the shores of Ireland. The surviving sailors/killers later intermarried with the inhabitants, thus resulting in the Dark Irish.

Following the French Revolution late in the 18th Century, what survived of the French Aristocracy that had not met their fate at the guillotine—a machine invented for beheading condemned prisoners—in a form of counter-revolution, installed a brilliant military conniver, Napoleon Bonaparte, of Corsica. As the dictator of France, acceptable to the monied class, he sought to restore their "glory"—hurling the best of the French youth, some to their deaths, to conquer, with his clever strategies, Germany, Austria, and other places.

Eventually Napoleon conquered Russia, and briefly set up his headquarters in Moscow. In the winter of 1813, retreating from Moscow, his armed forces were hit with the worst winter ever—80° below zero. Most of his army of 600,000 were lost. Some were frozen deep in ice, and their corpses did not thaw out until many months later.

After the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo, he was sent to be exiled on an island in the mid-South Atlantic Ocean, St. Helena. Some now contend that there is proof, from surviving strands of his hair, that Napoleon was murdered, bit by bit, by being poisoned with arsenic.

After Adolf Hitler's armies invaded Russia in 1941, the two winters that followed were, like what hit Napoleon's army in 1813, some of the worst low temperatures ever. Many German soldiers considered being sent to the Russian front as a death warrant. Was it a dark omen of what was to be the great Nazi military disaster at Stalingrad?

Perhaps over the last two centuries, foreign invaders and would-be foreign invaders of the Middle East, did not learn from previous events. Failure to understand the region, rather than Mother Nature or Divine Intervention, brought them eventually to ruin. Each such foreign invader started with bombarding the targeted nation and others with the Big Lie that the invaders were coming, not to steal their land and treasures, but for the good of the populace.

As one publication quoted George W. Bush, comparing him to Napoleon, Bush was invading Iraq for spreading "God's gift" of liberty "to each and every person" and of how "Iraqi lives and freedom matter greatly to us."

(Wall Street Journal, 3/19/03, "Past Mideast Invasions Faced Unexpected Perils".)

What follows are excerpts from the same newspaper:

"Napoleon proclaimed a similar era of equality and respect for 'true Muslims' as he marched into Cairo in 1798, killing a thousand members of Egypt's ruling caste.... 'Peoples of Egypt: you will be told that I have come to destroy your religion' said Napoleon as he entered Cairo. 'Do not believe it! Reply that I have come to restore your rights.' Napoleon's real goals involved France's colonial rivalry with Britain."

(Note: Several times before George W. Bush invaded Iraq, the head of British Petroleum warned the Bush White House that British Pete, as they are called, will demand a piece of the Iraq post-war oil treasure. Guardian newspaper, London, 10/30/02.)

More excerpts from the Wall Street Journal:

"British troops landed in what's now Iraq in 1914, as part of Britain's campaign against the Ottoman Turks, allies of Germany in World War I. 'Britain was bursting with confidence in an easy and early victory' wrote British officer T.E. Lawrence, better known as Lawrence of Arabia.... Capturing Baghdad after the first three years, they offered almost the same salutation as Napoleon had in Cairo: 'Our armies do not come into your cities and lands as conquerors or enemies, but as liberators' trumpeted Gen. F.S. Maude, commander of the British forces in Iraq. 'Your wealth has been stripped of you by unjust men.... The people of Baghdad shall flourish under institutions which are in consonance with their sacred laws....' But Britain retained the Ottomans' long reliance on Sunni Muslims as the governing class in Iraq, an arrangement that exacerbated conflicts with Iraq's larger Kurdish and Shia Muslim populations."

The story in the Wall Street Journal, apparently reflecting the faction of the Ruling Class that opposed the arbitrary installation of George W. Bush, has a great deal of details of the disasters of foreign invaders into the Middle East and the Big Lies proclaimed by each.

So, in 2003, a huge American army, contrary to good military tactics, came up to the outskirts of Baghdad through desert from the South. Coming up principally on a highway designed by the Germans similar to their autobahn. The military's purported masterminds had an excuse: Turkey would not permit the U.S. army to come to Northern Iraq the easy way, across Turkey. Retired generals and other clever sorts grumbled that it could lead to a possible military disaster.

Some saw an evil omen of what might follow, as the U.S. army camped on the outskirts of Baghdad. Like Napoleon, purported Commander-in-Chief George W. Bush, to vindicate his father's personal grudge against his former business partner, Saddam Hussein, might eventually come to ruin. All the while, George W. Bush was claiming, like Napoleon, that Bush was there not to steal their oil to use as collateral for the out-of-control U.S. debt and tax cuts for the wealthy, but to do wonderful things for the inhabitants of Iraq, like Napoleon promised those in Egypt.

Just as the U.S. Army came up to Baghdad, a tremendous desert sandstorm befell them, one of the worst anyone could recall. A fine sand bombardment, capable of clogging up the mechanisms of military vehicles, helicopters, and jet planes, on which a modern army relies. Was it just a quirk of Mother Nature or Divine Intervention? To some, perhaps praying for Peace and being spiritual, it was a sign from Heaven, passing Judgment on the foreign invaders, without an avenue of appeal. Were the Peace demands of the bulk of those on Planet Earth, by this, ratified? Was it a signal that the wrath of Heaven, long biblically patiently withheld, will belatedly fall on those who violate the Ten Commandments?

Time will tell. Stay tuned.

The Overthrow Of The American Republic, Part 32: U.S./Iraq Plots And Secret Weapons (4/4/03)

Both the U.S. and Iraq have the same secret weapon and they share in joint plots. Without publicity, the U.S. used the weapon in Persian Gulf War One. Iraq, recipient of the same technology from Daddy Bush and others when Saddam Hussein was his private business partner in the 1980s, may use it in Persian Gulf War Two.

A huge body of details, known to us, is necessary to try to understand this report by those who may not be well-informed, and/or in years past have not been much interested in knowing about these matters that we put into our reports.

A summary of some of those details:

1. Both Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein were created by the American CIA, with the aid and connivance, among others, of Daddy Bush, and despite appearing to be on the outs with their creators, continue to play sophisticated "games" with the CIA and others, seldom understood by or explained to common Americans. The oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press tells us less than 10% of the truth, 90% fairy tales, to protect The Establishment, the "powers-that-be", the Ruling Class, or whatever you call "THEM".

2. Our reports right after the multiple bombings of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Office Building in Oklahoma City, April 19, 1995, were often misunderstood and widely heckled by poorly informed persons. Despite that, we continue to try not to deal with readers of our reports, listeners of our radio shows, and viewers of our non-commercial TV shows, as if such persons are all eight-year-olds, the rotten way the pressfakers keep the public as dumb as possible.

2a. Right after April 19, 1995, we wrote exclusive reports which appeared on one or more websites, years before we had our own website. (We believe they may still be archived by Brian Redman, who has been running a superior website, Conspiracy Nation, although we are NOT conspiracy theorists.)

2b. We said that multiple weapons were used to take down the building in Oklahoma City. We later interviewed some of those who came from some distance as volunteer rescuers with their sniffing dogs, searching for possible survivors. We found later that some of them were suffering from radioactive fallout ailments. AND, that their skilled dogs thereafter died. For various reasons becoming suspicious, the volunteers dug up the carcasses of the dead animals and a laboratory determined they had huge amounts of radioactive material in their lungs. The volunteers themselves were suffering from diseases associated with having been heavily exposed to radioactive materials. Government doctors told the volunteers that, if they did not SHUT UP about the subject, their ailments would not be dealt with, and they would receive no medical attention, and doctor-hospital bills would NOT be paid.

Who among the press prostitutes mentioned the independent-minded investigators who came to the bomb site with Geiger counters, to measure radioactive fallout and were astounded by what they found? Nuclear experts who permitted us to talk to them on the promise of extreme secrecy, informed us that the residue substance discovered at the bomb site was Tritium. It is described as: "A rare radioactive hydrogen isotope with atomic mass 3 and half-life 12.5 years, prepared artificially for use as a tracer and as a constituent of hydrogen bombs."

Excerpt of our interviews:

Citizen's Committee To Clean-Up The Courts: "Why are you whispering to me?"

Nuclear expert: "You are a layman. You do not know what you are messing with in discussing tritium, sir."

Weapons experts prefer tritium because it has a half-life, when it is still potent, much, much less than better known plutonium.

The press whores, in a position to know about these things or even to ask questions, were silent and censored all mention of anything linked to this. If anything, they steered know-nothings to privately blast us as "liars". The press raised no questions when the FBI, to cover up the radioactivity, quickly demolished what was left of the Murrah Building and cemented over the site, calculated to keep the radioactive residue from being further measured and detected.

3. As we detailed in various of our stories posted on websites of pals of ours, we mentioned that, starting before April 19, 1995, there were efforts by dissident "flag officers" (slang for Admirals and Generals) to seek to arrest their Command-in-Chief, Bill Clinton, a real-life Seven Days In May. They felt authorized under the Uniform Military Code to arrest Clinton. If he arrested them for mutiny, if they were not immediately assassinated, they were prepared via heavy documentation to defend themselves at Courts Martial with data proving Clinton met from time to time with the head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, Wang Jun, and turned over to him U.S. financial, industrial, and yes, MILITARY secrets. The Red Chinese, being sworn enemies of the U.S., made these acts by Clinton fit the classic U.S. Constitution definition of treason (Article 3, Section 3).

4. Right after April 19, 1995, Clinton went as a surprise on CBS's 60 Minutes Sunday TV program, and proclaimed that the "militia" (then much in the news) were dedicated, he said, "to try to overthrow the U.S. Government"—a false notion Clinton well knew. Clinton and his cronies, the Bush Crime Family, clearly had prior knowledge of the Oklahoma City Bombings. Clinton's purpose was to divert attention from the political debacle of the 1994 Congressional Election, wherein the GOP took control, after many years, of the U.S. Congress.

5. In 1992, members of our investigative group spent about four months extensively interviewing Michael Riconosciuto. Described by those who knew him well as a weapons and electronics genius, which we verified he is/was, he ran afoul of the American CIA because he divulged to a Congressional Committee the dirty business of Daddy Bush and others in the "spook" industry. (The federal jails, in various places in this nation, are holding, by frame-ups on long jail sentences, several former CIA pilots who blew the whistle on dope shipments, CIA covert operators, and such, all on the outs with the spy cartel. Riconosciuto was framed on a 28-year rap.)

As we confirmed, Riconosciuto helped invent and develop a subatomic weapon he and others called "blue lightning". We talked to him in the Federal "Triangle", one of the few buildings in the U.S. shaped with three sides and being the federal jail in the Windy City. He was brought to Chicago from another jail, while he waited to be brought before a very, very Special Federal Grand Jury supposedly investigating corruption of the U.S. Justice Department and the American CIA.

In charge of the Grand Jury was retired former Chicago U.S. District Judge Nicholas J. Bua. Was it a mere coincidence he was a key member of the secret group P-2 (Propaganda Duex), dedicated to overthrowing representative governments in Italy, France, England, and the U.S? P-2 is made up of top-level judges, cabinet members, legislators, media brass, and bosses of the secret political police. (A history of P-2, from various publications available through web search engines, shows they specialize, for example, in bombings to blame onto innocent dissidents.)

Get this: Former Judge Bua in 1992 was the Special Counsel for the U.S. Justice Department. Neat trick! Investigating themselves—a perfect whitewash.

Little known or understood is that every person has a fundamental right to find the foreperson of the Grand Jury and submit to that person evidence and testimony that the Grand Jury may wish to investigate. Of course, no outsider has a right to ask a Grand Juror what they are deliberating on behind the unmarked door. I located the foreperson of Bua's Grand Jury, as she was walking on the way to the secret door. I told her I and associates of mine had testimony and evidence for the Grand Jury. Bua's assistant, not wishing to know the law that applied authorizing what I was doing, tried to arrest me right there. When I told Bua, who knew me for several decades, that I will sue him and his assistant for false arrest, Bua called off his vicious dog.

6. A secret copy of Bua's whitewash report was somehow delivered to us. We found out that Bua had, without evidence he could refer to, condemned Riconosciuto and any mention of the "blue lightning" weapon. Shortly thereafter I and an associate of mine and Riconosciuto brought a suit in the Chicago Federal District Court against Bua and others. We claimed they were unlawfully blocking our evidence and testimony before the Federal Grand Jury, an offense known as obstruction of justice. A fellow judge of Bua, without allowing us to appear even once in his courtroom, secretly dismissed our case, stating no reason for doing so.

7. During Persian Gulf War One, 1991, without publicity, or if ever mentioned at all, soft-pedaled, the U.S. military used Riconosciuto's invention "blue lightning" to blast away and incinerate great numbers of Iraqi troops. Riconosciuto and others familiar with the weapon contend it releases a form of subatomic power. A residue leftover in or near where it is used is tritium, same residue left over after the multiple blasts at the Oklahoma City bombings, April 19, 1995.

8. For many years after the Oklahoma City disaster, I was the only one writing exclusively about how domestic dissidents—whether they were fully aware of it or not—were actually surrogates for Iraq playing a dirty game in the U.S. for the American CIA and others. At the close of Persian Gulf War One, as I exclusively described, Daddy Bush, then President, quietly brought into the U.S., four thousand supposed elite Iraqi military and intelligence division defectors, some of them skilled pilots. Bush and later Clinton were in a position to know that some of them were actually double agents.

In a heavily censored and watered-down story, CBS's 60 Minutes TV program mentioned that 550 such supposed "defectors" were housed and became residents, with their families, in Lincoln, Nebraska. Not mentioned was the real details. Namely, that 2,000 of such were set up, with federal subsidies for them and their families—housing, rent, food, and such—in OKLAHOMA CITY. And, that they were involved in using Timothy McVeigh and others as surrogates, whether directly or immediately known by him and others or not.

Many years after my original exclusive stories, a huge documented book came out. It documented how between 4 thousand and 13 thousand such Iraqis were brought into the U.S. with vast sums spent on them. AND YET, the report states, U.S. citizens, as former soldiers, were often being DENIED benefits from the Veterans Administration.

(See Final Report—On The Bombing Of The Alfred P. Murrah Building, April 19, 1995, by The Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee, © 2001, P.O. Box 75697, Oklahoma City, OK 73147, pages 476-477.)

9. Just prior to the Timothy McVeigh trial, his Chief Defense Counsel, Stephen Jones, filed, in the Federal Appeals Court, a special petition against the trial judge, Richard Matsch. Jones sought to compel the trial judge to release records of the American CIA and others that showed there was, among other things, an Iraqi connection, and that defendant Timothy McVeigh was a domestic dissident surrogate for Iraq, apparently seeking revenge on U.S. soil against the U.S. The government and the trial judge contended that the CIA was a different unit of the U.S. government and Jones could only seek records from the Justice Department. That is like claiming someone has money in another pocket of his jacket or pants. In his 185-page petition, Jones surprisingly refers to both the public Court Record AND THE SECRET COURT RECORD as to the Iraqi connection.

The press were silent about Jones' petition, which was summarily refused and denied. Recently a group of those whose loved ones died in the Oklahoma bombings brought a damage suit against the government of Iraq. Evidently they were seeking to get at, by way of damages, Iraq funds frozen within the U.S. jurisdiction. The monopoly press said little about this.

10. On April 4, 2003, a spokesman purportedly for the Baghdad government stated that the Iraqis had what he described as "a non-military surprise" for the U.S. military forces acting as foreign invaders in his country. He denied it was a weapon of mass destruction.

Was he hinting that "blue lightning"—made available to Iraq by Daddy Bush at a time Bush was a private business partner of Saddam Hussein—would be used to teach the U.S. a lesson in how a small nation of 24 million people could resist a monstrous, well-equipped aggressor of 280 million people?

Some unanswered questions:

- Will "blue lightning", a subatomic weapon apparently not as serious as a nuclear weapon, be used for example against the huge airport near Baghdad, once called Saddam Hussein International Airport, renamed by the U.S. military as Baghdad International Airport? Are the makings of "blue lightning" in the tunnels and passageways under that airport?

- Will the "blue lightning" weapon, if used by Iraq, tend to unravel Daddy Bush and his crony, Bill Clinton, and their prior knowledge and complicity as to the Oklahoma City multiple bombings? And maybe even expose Daddy Bush and monsters in the U.S. military brass having carried out the disasters of September 11, 2001, falsely blamed on "Arabs", but calculated to destroy the U.S. Constitution and Bill Of Rights? Remember: how to do such a thing was documented in the book Body Of Secrets by James Bamford, which came out right before 9/11, as to how the top U.S. military in 1962, under "Operation Northwoods", planned to commit horrible violence against fellow Americans to blame onto Cuba to justify the U.S. invading Cuba.

- If the truth about "blue lightning" comes out, will ordinary Americans find out what really took down, as by controlled demolitions, the World Trade Center twin towers and WTC Building 7 in Manhattan, September 11, 2001?

- Will common Americans come to understand that 9/11 is part of a long series of events to overthrow the American Republic?

- In the process of finding out about "blue lightning" as a direct or side issue, will common Americans come to wonder about the following:

One of the first network reporters to show up to cover the Oklahoma City bombings was Dan Raviv, CBS News International/National Correspondent. Is it just a mere coincidence that he co-authored the book about the Mossad (Israeli intelligence) called Every Spy A Prince: The Complete History Of Israel's Intelligence Community, co-authored with Yossi Melman, 1990. Also, the same two co-authored Friends In Deed: Inside The U.S.-Israel Alliance. Did a faction in the Mossad have prior knowledge of the Oklahoma City bombings and, in vain, informed Daddy

The Missing Diary Of Admiral Richard E. Byrd

"I must write this diary in secrecy and obscurity. It concerns my arctic flight of the nineteenth day of February in the year of nineteen hundred and forty-seven.

"There comes a time when the rationality of men must fade into insignificance, and one must accept the inevitability of the Truth! I am not at liberty to disclose the following documentation at this writing, perhaps it shall never see the light of public scrutiny, but I must do my Duty and record here for all to read one day in a world which hopefully the greed and exploitation of certain of mankind can no longer suppress that which is Truth."

Bush and Bill Clinton, who for geopolitical and other power purposes allowed it to happen?

And did the Mossad have prior knowledge of 9/11 and, in vain, informed the George W. Bush White House who allowed it to happen anyway to be falsely blamed onto "Arabs"? FBI Deputy Director John P. O'Neill, a leading counter-terrorist expert, was blocked by the Bush White House from continuing to investigate Osama bin Laden. Why? Because it would lead back to the Bush Crime Family, the Carlyle Group, and others. Quitting the FBI about August, 2001, O'Neill became the Security Chief of the World Trade Center, lured at the last minute into one of the buildings, and there perished.

AND, who mentions that George W. Bush's younger brother, Marvin, was a director of an insurance company having coverage of the twin towers, and he apparently cancelled his company's coverage BEFORE the disaster. Further, Marvin Bush was a director of a firm that arranged the security of the twin towers. (Put Marvin Bush into a good website search engine and see what all you pull up.)

My stories are unacceptable to the monopoly press. Do not heckle me, demanding that I make available stories like this to the newsmakers—as if I am responsible for them censoring stories like this.

More coming. Stay tuned.

The Blackmail Business, Part 2 (4/23/03)

There should be a course in college called "Blackmail 101" giving you the principles of the subject—a reality in a real world. In reading this, consider you have enrolled in the same.

First things first. There are DEVILS. And who are they? To simplify, let us call them the Aristocracy, or a split faction of the same, or the Ruling Class or Ruling Elite, or the Establishment, or the "Powers-that-be", or just Them.

If you have no clue as to Them, then I, as your instructor, hereby send you back to read my series "The Overthrow Of The American Republic". If you are too busy to read that, or not so inclined, then I hereby release you from this course. That is, you have flunked out. (Tending to be polite, I will NOT call you naïve or a know-nothing.)

1. Major and even minor powers are inclined to be devils. For instance, France, which more than two centuries ago helped in repelling the British and aiding in founding this nation, are not innocent babes.

A study of history shows that France was more or less x'd out of a real role in grabbing parts of the Middle East, for imperialist and oil-soaked reasons. A simple answer is that the Brits, historically enemies to French colonial powers and other French aims, kept them out. The French sarcastically called them "limeys" and the Brits hurled insults against the "frogs".

No, we have not forgotten about Lebanon and a few other items of history.

2. When it came to the era leading up to Persian Gulf War Two, the French demanded a piece of the action. All the while, the American media, almost all pro-British, kept insisting the U.S. wished to invade Iraq "for the Iraqis' own good, to free them from their dictator Saddam". Left out, of course, is that the American CIA, to counter the Communist Party of Iraq, installed Saddam Hussein, using him in the beginning, 1959, to assist the American CIA's assassination squads. (United Press International's story about the secret background of Saddam started circulating about the time of Gulf War Two. Why were we not told THIS much earlier?)

3. The French CIA has gathered substantial data for financial and other blackmail of the U.S.

A few examples:

- Members of the French secret political police infiltrated the two or more plots to assassinate President John F. Kennedy. Such as the aborted plot, two and a half weeks before Dallas, to murder JFK at a football game in Chicago. (Our April 1970 Chicago Federal District Court lawsuit on this subject, with eleven documents, stolen from the U.S. National Archives, received almost no attention from purported assassination researchers busy selling their own books lint-picking which way the bullets went in Dealey Plaza.)

- The French CIA has a suppressed film, apparently never previously shown, documenting the Dallas shooting of JFK from a storm sewer concealed on the railway embankment. Newfarker Dan Rather was standing in the shadows, right near the railway overpass, right near one of the military-style triangulating-fire shooters. Covering up political murders is a way to get to the top of the Ruling Class's spy-riddled media.

- The French secret political police have video tapes proving Daddy Bush was in or near Paris, October 1980, working his treasonous deal with Iranian mullahs, to delay the release of the 52 U.S. Embassy hostages, to wreck Jimmy Carter's bid for re-election. Thus was blocked the GOP's dreaded "October Surprise".

- The French have proof that TWA Flight 800, scheduled for Paris from New York, was shot down by missiles from an Iranian submarine bought from the former Soviets and with a Russian mercenary crew. Among those who perished were 60 French nationals, eight of whom were part of an elite group of the French CIA. (Their team leader, perhaps warned, refused to get onboard Flight 800, and thus survived.) The French hold back this data to blackmail the U.S. Justice Department from prosecuting 14 French nationals in the U.S. who were to be charged with stealing U.S. financial and industrial secrets (through Chicago).

4. With the apparent connivance of the French, aided by Moscow boss Putin, Saddam Hussein has purportedly been concealed outside of Iraq.

CBS Market Watch, their website financial service, also picked up by some CBS radio outlets, on 4/22/03 broadcast unsubstantiated reports contending that Saddam Hussein was in custody. Why did CBS's boss, Viacom, want that story to run just briefly? Simple. For financial speculation and blackmail. CBS bosses have been on the wrong side of stock index gambling. It helped CBS news gamblers—who are idle for part of the day anyway—get out of their wrong bets on the markets.

5. The French, in an apparent reversal of position, will go along with U.S. plans to seize Iraqi oil, considered the second most reserves on the planet, to act as collateral to support the U.S. debt structure running out of control. In a secret deal, the French have been promised about 30% of the Iraqi "oil action", their cut of the stolen petroleum treasure.

6. And who are the INDEPENDENTS? Simple. Those without financial hang-ups prevalent in the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press. A recent website series, called Gatekeepers, as to CIA financing of much of the so-called "liberal" alternative media outlets—like Pacifica Radio, the Nation magazine, and such—shows there are very, very few sizeable operations in the alternative media. (Scroll all the way down our website to our story about CIA fronts, financed by CIA-linked foundations, done through several levels, by way of deception.)

[Editor's note: Sherman's comment above is quite true, and it holds true well beyond just the arena of disinformation disguised as alternative media. For instance, if some UFO "expert" is full of baloney, he/she will find some CIA front—let's just call it the Golden Nuggets Foundation—say: "Gee, we really like your work and want to fund you." So this "expert", with ego and wallet well inflated, will have book deals fall out of the sky and be able to travel all over to continue to spread baloney. Meanwhile, the genuinely truthful experts—whether in the alternative media, the UFO area, psychic phenomena, free energy, etc.—will starve or worse, depending on a number of factors. This is one of the most popular ways to keep the public dumb—and at taxpayer expense!]

So, in learning about the Blackmail Business (the major enterprise on planet Earth), the forces are not the Devils versus the Angels, but the Devils versus the Independents.

While this is happening, two major Russian oil companies have, at the same time, merged, making them the reputed fourth largest Big Oil on the planet.

7. More details of what the French have ready, if they consider it necessary, to blackmail the Bush White House:

- Data tending to prove Daddy Bush was directly implicated in the plot to snuff out President John F. Kennedy, and afterwards, use Nazi war criminals, then resident in the U.S., to assassinate upwards of 300 witnesses by way of cover-up. Others have documented the Nazi past of the Bush Family—such as that George W. Bush's grandfather, Prescott S. Bush, Sr., helped install Adolf Hitler, and that Nazi war criminals assisted George Herbert Walker

Bush's rise to power.

• French television has, ready at any moment to be telecast, a two-hour documentary proving the Bush fraud in bribing Democrats in southern Florida to stop the recount showing Gore was the winner and got the Electoral College vote over and above Gore's nationwide popular plurality of 600,000 votes. AND, how the five majority on the U.S. Supreme Court were corrupted to install Bush, Jr. as the occupant and resident of the White House. To be candid, Gore is the duly elected, BUT NOT INAUGURATED, PRESIDENT.

• The French have followed up on our exclusive story about the pedophile-homosexual underground, showing George W. Bush cavorting with his longtime male sex-mate, violating National Security in that the Red Chinese Secret Police are using such details to blackmail financial, industrial, and yes, military secrets out of Bush. (See early installments of our ongoing series "The Overthrow Of The American Republic".)

In future parts of this series, there's more to learn and understand about "The Blackmail Business". One cynical type, off the record, asked if we would quickly aid him to blackmail his former business partner. I guess he did not get the point that we should be considered among the Independents, not among the Devils.

Stay tuned.

The Overthrow Of

The American Republic, Part 33: Saddam Hussein And The Exit Money (5/7/03)

The Persian Gulf War Two ended before the actual shooting started. On March 17, 2003, George W. Bush, the occupant and resident of the White House, proclaimed a 48-hour deadline in which the Iraqi strongman, Saddam Hussein, should turn over Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) and he should leave the country.

As of this date, no WMD have been discovered to exist in Iraq. By the time the shooting started, March 20, 2003, Saddam, according to very knowledgeable sources, had already left the country. The exit was arranged by the Moscow government, with the knowledge, if not the aid, of the Paris government, and with the full knowledge and connivance of British Prime Minister Tony Blair and George W. Bush, as supervised by Daddy Bush.

Just as the deadline passed on Wednesday, March 19, 2003, the American CIA, with the U.S. Military brass, covered up these and other events herein described, by a much trumpeted effort to supposedly assassinate Saddam in Baghdad, using bunker-busting weapons.

It was a treasonous fraud, calculated to distract common Americans addicted, like druggies, to the oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press, to cover up the true nature of what was really happening.

According to the best, most well-informed sources, who have in the past been accurate, here is what already had occurred prior to the March 19, 2003, White House deadline:

1. Tens of millions of dollars had been promised by the American CIA and the Bush White House, to the top generals of Iraq. The contacts with the Iraqi military brass had been started as long ago as October 2002, or even before. Part of the pay-offs were already deposited in secret accounts. The plan, agreed upon by all concerned, was to have the major Iraqi military units permit the U.S. Military to quickly take Baghdad, supposedly with a minimum of U.S. casualties. (A heavily-censored, watered-down story about the pay-offs was titled "U.S. Bribed Iraqi Military Leaders", The Express, London, UK, 4/18/3.)

The opposition to the overwhelmingly superior U.S. fire-power was to be by misled, poorly-informed, poorly-organized local Iraqi bands of shooters, what Americans in a U.S. context would call "patriots" or "militia". These highly nationalistically minded would-be "troops", mostly not even in uniforms, without good clothes or shoes, were mowed down by the heavily-armed Americans, killing the Iraqis often twenty or more at a time.

The Iraqis, some as conscripts, fought, as best they could, as any patriotic citizen of a nation would against foreign invaders attacking their homeland without provocation. History may well describe it as the great slaughter of the innocents.

2. The bought-off Iraqi generals and other top military officers, and their wives and families, were, shortly after the shooting started, flown out of Iraq in U.S. military helicopters. They have been quietly and secretly re-located in the U.S., just as a similar series of events after Persian Gulf War One.

In prior exclusive stories, we told about the four thousand or more Iraqi military intelligence and other military officers as supposed "defectors" quietly re-located, after Persian Gulf War One, to the U.S. The Elder Bush, then president, and perpetuated later by Bush crony Clinton as president, jointly knew that some of these supposed POWs were "double agents". Some two thousand such Iraqis, and their wives and children, were set up in Oklahoma City, their housing, food, clothing, and such, paid for by the Elder Bush/Clinton administrations and perpetuated by George W. Bush.

"We're rolling out the welcome wagon to prisoners of war, yet our own veterans who fought there are having trouble getting any help" said Congressman Clifford Steans (R-FL).

Said U.S. Senator John Warner (R-VA): "I find it unconscionable that an Iraqi combatant soldier would be admitted into this country under refugee status and be given certain privileges and benefits and, indeed, a job at a time when many, many U.S. veterans...cannot or have not been able to get comparable benefits."

— FINAL REPORT On The Bombing Of The Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building April 19, 1995, by the Oklahoma Bombing Investigation Committee, published 2001, pages 476-477.

Some two thousand of these Iraqi officers have been housed in Oklahoma City. The chief defense counsel, Stephen Jones, in an unpublicized higher court petition on behalf of defendant Timothy McVeigh, contended that U.S. dissidents, whether they knew it completely or not,

Visit the past and future with safe and proven methods. We have long been taught that time travel is impossible and the work of science fiction, but during the past several decades secret agencies with the U.S. military have successfully been crossing the barriers of space and time. Here is the shattering evidence that we are being visited by "time surfers" from the future, and that we too can journey forward and backward in time.

THE DULCE WARS: Underground Alien Bases & The Battle For Planet Earth

Is an alien "Fifth Column" already active on Earth preparing total conquest via implantations and mind control? In the corner of a small town in America's Southwest something very strange is going on. Did U.S. military forces perish recently in hand-to-hand combat with a group of hostile "Greys" who subsequently seized control of one of our top-secret underground bases? Includes latest on animal mutilations, energy grids, secret societies, lost civilizations, abductions, and missing time.

were domestic surrogates for a secret Iraqi operation to get revenge on the U.S. for the Persian Gulf War One. Attorney Jones' 185-page court filing, amazingly, referred to both the public and SECRET McVeigh court record. (See, for example, our website series of stories on McVeigh.)

3. The wire service, United Press International, owned wholly or in part by the American CIA, suddenly ran a story on 4/10/03: "Saddam Key In Early CIA Plot", telling how Saddam, as a young man, became part of a CIA assassination squad to snuff out Iraqi leaders, paving the way for Saddam as dictator. Hey! Why did the CIA suddenly, at this late date, tell us this, through their puppet wire-service fakers?

In 1916, with the downfall of the Turkish Ottoman Empire, the victorious British took over Mesopotamia as a protectorate. In so doing they more or less tried to weld together three countries, as Iraq, made up of warring tribes, religions, and groups. By the 1930s, recognizing failure, the Brits dumped Iraq. During World War Two, oil-rich Iraq and Iran were both pro-Hitler monarchist types, an inviting target for the Nazis to try to over-run Cairo and seize the Middle East.

After the war, a sizeable political party was the Communist Party of Iraq. To combat them and assassinate pro-Moscow Reds was the purpose of the American CIA and the Ba'ath political party and the installation of dictator Saddam, who kept the warring factions within Iraq together as one nation, using savagery and an iron fist against dissidents.

4. In the 1980s, Daddy Bush and Saddam Hussein were private business partners, sharing billions and billions of dollars from shaking down the weak, oil-soaked sheikdoms of the Gulf. The foreign bank records showing this became the subject of an publicized suit in the Federal Courts in Chicago. I was the only journalist attending the hearing and writing an exclusive story about it. (See our website story "The Secrets Of Timothy McVeigh".)

This vast extortion horde became the secret subject of a U.S. Treasury Internal Affairs unit inquiry examining the 25 secret worldwide accounts of the Bush Crime Family, jointly held loot with Saddam Hussein. For example, the Bushs had a One Hundred Billion Dollar joint account with the Queen of England, at her private bank, Coutts Bank London. These transactions were done with the aid of Federal Reserve Commissar Alan Greenspan, using his secret authorization code. The authenticated documents and the details are in our research series "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush".

Prior to the actual shooting "war" starting March 20, 2003, billions and billions of dollars of this Bush/Saddam extortion loot was transferred through the Royal Bank of Jordan, in part to the Central Bank of Iraq. (The Kingdom of Jordan has been a recipient of huge funds for more than 40 years from the American CIA. The Royal Bank of Jordan is a form of reputed CIA proprietary. (See our "Overthrow" series, Kingdom of Jordan Link, Part 25.)

On May 6, 2003, the New York Times ran a heavily-censored, watered-down story how upwards of one billion dollars of this was extracted by Saddam's son just before the shooting started. The New York Times did not bother to remind themselves of their earlier story about the possibility of huge amounts of U.S. paper currency, found in Iraq, might be counterfeit. (See other parts of this series as to superior quality counterfeit U.S. money.)

5. It should come as no surprise to those who are well-informed and NOT naive, that Saddam has been playing dirty games, against his own people, for the benefit of the American CIA, while Saddam was/is supposedly "an enemy".

Saddam, prior to the shooting started in Persian Gulf War Two, reportedly ended up in Switzerland, to have his face changed by expert plastic surgeons. From there, he was transported to Paris, where the French CIA can use him, if they see fit, to blackmail the worldwide secret accounts are, in part, by way of Saddam's half-brother in Switzerland. The Bush Crime Family, in transferring just a small part of this loot for the exile of Saddam, are keeping Saddam from his "proper" portion that he would be "entitled to" as a private business partner of Daddy Bush in shake-down and extortion.

Cynical lawyers might point out, however, that a falling out of thieves cannot be a subject of a court partnership damage suit, since under American law it would be "against public policy", sort of like a bank robber, caught by a policeman, suing for "brutality".

6. Some items, some summarized, that have to be considered:

- Supervised by Daddy Bush, George W. Bush has committed treason against the American people, which is becoming more and more known by those overseas.

- There was no basis in international law, United Nations rules, or the U.S. Constitution, for the attack on Iraq, there being, apparently, no weapons of mass destruction, and Saddam Hussein had already gone into exile.

- The so-called "war" was a fraud and a sham. Unfortunately, the American newsmakers are concealing that U.S. casualties in the conflict were much, much greater than the monopoly press announces. Some estimate that upwards of 800 Americans perished—U.S. military, American CIA clandestine, out-of-uniform types, Special Forces, and other Special American operatives—and as many as five thousand of the same wounded.

- The Iraqi oil treasure, second largest in the world, is to be used as collateral to support U.S. out-of-control debt, to aid Bush in seeking to give a huge tax cut to the very wealthy. An additional purpose, if not the actual main one, is that the Iraqi oil treasure is to head-off (maybe actually impossible to sidestep), the downfall of the U.S. Dollar and the looming possible default of U.S. Treasury securities, 40% of which currently are owned by the Japanese and the Saudi Royal Family (both, since 1973, having THEIR U.S. Treasury paper backed by U.S. Gold, not so for ordinary Americans).

- Is some of the billions, turned over to Saddam by the Bush Crime Family, proceeds of their joint extortion loot, actually superior quality counterfeit U.S. paper money? (See earlier parts of this series for related items.) Is Saddam, savvy about this, in the process of dumping this phoney baloney money BACK onto the U.S., aiding the British in their long-time plans to destroy the U.S. Central Government? (Read this series from Part One to present.)

More coming. Stay tuned.

"Tell me again . . . How did we go from a bunch of screwed-up ballots in Florida to this?!"

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach, Volumes I & II

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where these books come into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen." — Back Cover, Vol. I

"Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you. (God!) You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose." — Esu "Jesus" Sananda (Vol. II)

Do you enjoy the spiritual messages shared here in The SPECTRUM? If so then you won't want to miss these two volumes packed full of earlier shared messages.

More Quotes From Volume II

"Be not in fear of the changes that are upon you, for they are a very necessary part of the [planetary] transition. The Earth will heave to and fro, and many wondrous things will you experience, but lose not your sight upon the final goal. We will always be there with you, and we are but a call away."

— Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec

— Sanat Kumara ("Grandfather")

"The physical body is 'merely' a conduit for the interaction into and the interfacing with the physical experience. I say 'merely' because that body is a most exquisite creation indeed and poorly understood by your current level of so-called medical science."

— Master Hilarion

"Be at peace, you who acknowledge and take within these messages of Higher Guidance, for you are being given that which you will need, in the way of instruction, to meet and surmount these challenges ahead."

— Aton, The One Light

The HeartMath Solution AUDIO Book by Doc Childre & Howard Martin

WHAT IF YOU COULD EASILY—
• MAKE BETTER DECISIONS?
• ENHANCE CREATIVITY?
• SLOW-DOWN AGING?

You can. Simply by understanding your heart's intelligence—which has more impact on our emotions, our mind, and our physical health than was ever thought possible! In this audio, the authors offer astonishing proof that the heart has an intelligence, one that profoundly affects our mental and physical health. When we engage the power of our heart's intelligence, then, and only then, can we make the most of our health and our minds. These life-altering techniques will show you how to deepen the qualities long associated with the heart—wisdom, compassion, courage, love, strength, and joy.

The Masters And The Spiritual Path

You have friends in high places!

There are Masters who have come out of all the world's great spiritual traditions. These great Lights have graduated from Earth's schoolroom. Now they come to show us the pathway home.

The Masters tell us that they are examples and not exceptions to the rule. We, too, are destined to fulfill our life's purpose and reunite with Spirit.

In this intriguing work you will discover valuable keys to your own spiritual path. You will learn about the function of the Spiritual Hierarchy and the role of the Masters of East and West. Includes a unique meditation on the bliss of union with Spirit and a breathing exercise to help you balance and expand consciousness.

THE INDIGO CHILDREN The New Kids Have Arrived by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The "Indigo Child" is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern requires parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to help them achieve balance, harmony, and avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- Why do a lot of our children today seem to be "system busters"?
- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

$13.95 (+S/H)
Code: TIC (1.0 lb.)

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober bring together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in "knowing" who they are—so they must be recognized, appreciated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

Vatican Assassins

Wounded In The house of My friends

An explosive, detailed, shocking, historical account of the long-suppressed history of the Jesuit Order, from 1540 to the present, and their involvement behind the scenes manipulating the world through the Pope, via the Jesuit's General, the "Black" Pope—the most powerful man in the world.

If you were astonished by the front-page story in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM titled: The Most Powerful Man In The World? The "Black" Pope: Count Hans Kolvenbach—The Jesuit's General, then you won't want to miss this in-depth study of perhaps the greatest ongoing conspiracy the world has ever known. Author Eric Phelps goes into countless details and fully documented facts concerning the "dark" side of the Vatican's ungodly history.

"Almost 700 pages filled with names, facts, and carefully wrought conspiracies on the kind of vast scale that creates or destroys empires."

—The Book Reader, America's most independent review of new titles, Fall/Winter 2001/2002

"Probably of all books which could be called 'conspiracy oriented', this is the grand-daddy. This is the Big One, I mean it...."

"It's one of those books that, even if you're a cynic and can come to terms with only half of it, it changes everything."

Why the official story of 9/11 is a monumental lie

David Icke

$29.95 (+S/H)
Code: AIW (1.75 lb.)

Since September 11, 2001, the people of the world have been told the Big Lie. The official story of what happened on 9/11 is a fantasy of untruth, manipulation, contradiction, and anomaly. David Icke has spent well over a decade uncovering the force that was really behind those attacks and has traveled to 40 countries in pursuit of the truth.

When the attacks came, it was easy to recognize the "Hidden Hand" behind the cover story of "Bin Laden did it". Icke takes apart the official version of 9/11 and the "War on Terrorism" and shows that those responsible are much closer to home than a cave in Afghanistan. He explains why 9/11 was planned and to what end. It is vital to maintaining our freedom that the light shines on the lies and deceit behind September 11.

Icke also places these events in their true context as part of an agenda by hidden forces working behind the puppet politicians to create a global fascist state based on total control and surveillance. But it doesn't have to be like this; it does not have to happen. We can change the world from a prison to a paradise and, as Icke explains, the power to do that is within you and within us all.

DEATH IN THE AIR: GLOBALISM, TERRORISM & TOXIC WARFARE

Hard Cover: $29.95 (+S/H)
Code: DTA (2.5 lb.)

This book explains how and why:

- We have evolved from the nuclear age into a "Technotronic Era" with "psychotronic warfare" for optimal population control.
- Non-lethal warfare is being effectively used to produce sociopolitical and economic outcomes consistent with global genocide.
- The world's wealthiest policy-makers have recommended, and are working toward, eliminating half the world's population.
- Accepted methods of disease prevention, such as pesticide sprayings, can only be scientifically rationalized as costly and deadly contributions to non-lethal warfare and population reduction.
- Chemtrail sprayings that obscure blue skies are not normal, but reflect a conspiracy of silence and military attacks on the health and welfare of people around the world.

Striking at the heart of those responsible for the latest forms of bio-terrorism, psychotronic warfare, and ecological genocide, the revelations contained in this book offer more than a reality check—they give you and your loved ones a final, last-minute choice for survival.

The United States of America is in a health crisis of staggering proportions. What happened to the supposedly most bountiful and advanced nation on Earth?

Millions and millions of Americans have no healthcare coverage, and can't afford the costs of the medical-pharmaceutical cartel's stable of remedies. Meanwhile, many who CAN afford "the system" are disillusioned by fixes creating more problems than the patient began with.

Therefore, millions and millions of Americas have been seeking so-called "alternative" approaches to health and wellness. And with statistics like Jim Folsom mentioned above, who can blame anyone for wanting a saner approach to health and wellness?

Painful Questions: An Analysis of the September 11th Attack

by Eric Hufschmid

$20.00 (+S/H)
Code: PQB (1.5 lb.)

Is the U.S. Government so incompetent that the 9/11 attack merely appears to be a scam?

This book discusses the aspects of the September 11th attack and the response of the U.S. Government that can make us wonder whether our government is involved in the attack, or whether they are so amazingly incompetent that they only appear to be involved. A government of idiots is as dangerous as a government of conspirators, so we have a serious problem in either case.

The suggestion that the CIA or military knew about the 9/11 attack is often rebuffed with a remark similar to: "But it doesn't make sense for them to allow the attack!"

It may not make sense to you, but it may have made sense to them. After all, it made sense for them to use Americans in LSD and nuclear radiation experiments many years ago. For all we know, they decided to sacrifice a few thousand of our lives and a few

Those of you who do not believe anything illegal occurred should look for explanations for the mysteries this book brings up. The inability to properly explain the attack is simply more evidence that we are witnessing an incredible scam.

THE WAR ON FREEDOM: THE 9/11 CONSPIRACIES BY JIM MARRS

$19.95 (+S/H)
Code: WOF (1.75 lb.)

Was the U.S. invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq planned long before the tragedies of September 11, 2001? Why did many WTC survivors mention bombs? Why did normal security measures consistently fail that day? Why has no one in government been fired or even reprimanded for failure to anticipate and prevent the attacks? For that matter, who was truly behind the strikes? Who and where is Osama bin Laden? What connects the bin Laden and Bush families?

If the purpose of the perpetrators of 9/11 was to end traditional American freedoms, they may well have succeeded. Laws rushed through a Congress that never had a chance to read them while under a declared state of emergency have curtailed our freedoms.

Research for The War On Freedom was begun on September 11, 2001 and culminated in a contract with a major New York publisher. Despite passing a legal review and the excited interest of the editors, the book was suddenly canceled with the explanation that it may "upset the families of 9/11 victims". These families, as well as the public, deserve the truth, even if it is not "politically correct". Here are the uncensored facts; judge for yourself.

Behold A Pale Horse audio cassettes, read by the author William Cooper

"William Cooper is the only man in America who has all the pieces to the puzzle that has troubled so many for so long." (Anthony Hilder, Radio Free America)

William Cooper, a former U.S. Naval Intelligence Briefing Team member, accurately predicted the fall of the Soviet Union, the end of the Berlin Wall, and the invasion of Panama. His information came from top-secret documents that he read while with the Intelligence Briefing Team and from over twenty years of research. Cooper reveals his theories on the assassination of John F. Kennedy, the war on drugs, and UFOs. He urges the listener: "Like it or not, everything is changing. HAPPY BIRTHDAY, NIKOLA TESLA

After 23 years, it still angers me to talk about this subject. But the shorter—and less painful—version of the story fits well with accounts in this month's SPECTRUM on what happened to Dr. Royal Raymond Rife and Dr. Wilhelm Reich.

My story began on Father's Day of 1976. Based on earlier research into Kirlian Photography, I built a detector (see photo) which I thought might show the presence of "psychic" energies like those flowing from the hands of a healer. It was about the size of a sandwich, and operated sort of like a Geiger Counter. In the wee hours, just after the clock struck Father's Day of 1976, it was finally ready to test. So I fired it up for the first time. And it worked.

Boy, did it work! I soon found that you could even concentrate on it, mentally, from another room, and cause it to chatter away like you've seen Geiger Counters do near radiation in the old science fiction movies.

Over the next several years I performed some 2000 novel, painstaking experiments to prove that what was happening was genuine. Some involved then-well-known psychics who were friends and wanted to visit my lab at Stanford to play with "that contraption of yours" after the word got around.

My goal was "simply" to prove, once and for all, that such non-physical energies existed, so science could move past the point of arguing over whether or not they're real, and get on with expanding such an amazing frontier of understanding.

In 1980 the milestone scientific paper describing my detector and its astonishing attributes was sent to the foremost scientific journal in the world for disseminating new fundamental phenomena. Mind you, any paper carrying the kinds of implications this one did certainly needed to be supported by strong evidence of repeatable, quality experiments—as I said, more than 2,000 in this case. That's what helps other scientists who read the paper to discern if something real is going on. The stage was set for a fundamental, undeniable revolution in the scientific acceptance of matters psychic. Or so I thought.

Of course, I was naïve back then about how science REALLY worked. I hadn't yet hit my first brick wall. But I was about to.

It wasn't long before the top scientific journal's response came back to me in a letter from the esteemed Editor. I'll never forget the one key sentence that made me grow up fast: "Clearly what you are describing is not possible, therefore you must have done something wrong."

What was that again?!? The overwhelming evidence I reported was not up for debate. My findings should have been shared widely so other careful scientists could conduct their own experiments and observe the same fantastic phenomena I uncovered.

Ah—but now we're glimpsing the REAL agenda! There was no way such paradigm-busting findings were going to be allowed into print to awaken a wide audience of credible scientists. Especially not when so comprehensive a disinformation campaign was in full swing from the highest levels of the world controllers to keep conventional science ignorant of the whole world of subtle energies and their awesome implications for mankind.

Many other brick walls followed, and soon, just to survive, I had to completely shelve the many years of grueling yet amazing research and, with lingering outrage, turn to "acceptable" scientific pursuits.

Every year around now, I'm reminded of this eye-opening chapter in my life—not only because that's when it all began, but also because it's the birthday time of the most notable "unseen guide" haunting me during that research, Nikola Tesla.

He was born at midnight between July 9 and 10, 1856, in a tiny house in the village of Smiljan, province of Lika, Croatia, between Yugoslavia's Velebit Mountains and the eastern shore of the Adriatic Sea.

Like Rife and Reich after him, Tesla's most important work was only really understood by those who knew how completely it threatened to topple their control mechanisms long enslaving humanity. Were his most profound gifts to all of us not so craftily stolen and hidden away, our planetary society would have been well on its way from prison to paradise a century ago!

Tesla opens his great little 1919 book titled My Inventions with this deep, clue-filled reflection:

"The progressive development of man is vitally dependent on invention. It is the most important product of his creative brain. Its ultimate purpose is the complete mastery of mind over the material world, the harnessing of the Forces of Nature to human needs. This is the difficult task of the inventor, who is often misunderstood and unrewarded. But he finds ample compensation in the pleasing exercises of his powers and in the knowledge of being one of that exceptionally privileged class without whom the race would have long ago perished in the bitter struggle against pitiless elements."

As we read herein about what happened to Rife and Reich (and by inference, many others) when they tried to share the fruits of their creativity for the upliftment of the human condition—as Tesla attempted before them—may we make a solemn vow to stop such freedom-robbing atrocities from persisting any longer.

Happy Birthday, Nikola Tesla!

IT'S PERFECTLY OK TO LIE IN THE PRESS

Appellate Court Rules Media Can Legally Lie

by Mike Gaddy

On February 14, a Florida Appeals court ruled there is absolutely nothing illegal about lying, concealing, or distorting information by a major press organization. The court reversed the $425,000 jury verdict in favor of journalist Jane Akre who charged she was pressured by Fox Television management and lawyers to air what she knew and documented to be false information. The ruling basically declares it is technically not against any law, rule, or regulation to deliberately lie or distort the news on a television broadcast.

No Iraqi Weapons Of Mass Destruction?
U.S. Media Scoundrel Shrugs
His Shoulders

by David Walsh

The pollution of the American body politic continues unabated. U.S. media pundits, whose lies about Iraqi "weapons of mass destruction" have been exposed by events, are rapidly inventing new falsehoods to justify the old ones.

Michael Schrage, a "senior adviser to the Security Studies Program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology" has penned a column, published in the May 11 edition of the Washington Post, headlined: "No Weapons, No Matter. We Called Saddam's Bluff".

The First Amendment gives broadcasters the right to lie or deliberately distort news reports on the public airwaves.

Any other commentary is not needed.
[end quoting]

It's not that readers of our publication didn't know this already, but it's almost refreshing when such an admission is now made matter-of-factly—especially when it comes to understanding why, a few months ago in Iraq, certain journalists lost their lives in curious "accidents" and others were prevented from further reporting.

FLOATING THE DOLLAR

From Conspiracy Nation, 5/29/03:

[quoting]

In the mid-1990s, Mexico decided to "float" its peso: allow the market to fix the price of the peso, instead of quietly intervening to support their currency. Ever since paper money was no longer backed by gold and silver, the value of each nation's currency is relative to that of other nations' currencies. The rise of post-modernism—"the truth is relative"—coincides with the abandonment of relatively stable backing (i.e. gold and silver) for paper money. But which came first? Did the truth first become "relative" and then the currencies became relative? Or did the currencies first become relative and then were mirrored by post-modernism?

In late December of 1994, foreign investors were nervous about the Mexican peso; their deposits made "a stampede for the exits". (See Conspiracy Nation, "Behind The Immigrant Trailer Deaths".) There was a financial crisis. It was decided to float the peso. This caused the value of the peso to decline relative to other currencies.

Also in the 1990s, the value of the dollar compared to the Japanese yen declined drastically, until the dollar/yen ratio sank below par to about 1 dollar equals 0.85 yen. But at that time the European currency, the euro, had not yet been inaugurated, so there was not such an attractive alternative haven as now.

Given the mid-90s dollar/yen ratio of about 1/0.85, the current dollar/yen ratio of about 1/1.15 does not seem nearly as alarming. But this is because most people do not take into account the new currency, the euro, not available yet in the mid-90s.

"John Snow, the U.S. Treasury Secretary, has signaled that Washington was content to let the dollar slide." ("Soaring Euro Poses Economic Threat" by Gary Duncan, Times Online (U.K.), 5/28/03.) Take your pick: Snow's recent comments were—just stupid. Snow put his foot in his mouth and his comments were meaningless; a shot across the bow, a warning to Europe to behave "or else".

Washington has decided to float the dollar. According to an article by Jay Hancock ("Economic Stealth Attack Takes Revenge On France", sunspot.net, 5/25/03), Treasury Secretary Snow basically stated that: "The dollar is strong if it can't be counterfeited."

Given reports by Chicago independent reporter Sherman Skolnick [whose commentaries appear regularly in The SPECTRUM, including what is mentioned here] regarding a sophisticated counterfeiting scheme threatening the dollar, Snow's statement that "the dollar is strong if it can't be counterfeited" might be more than ironic.

Indications crossing the desk of Conspiracy Nation are beginning to buttress Skolnick's original report. For example, there has been a frantic upgrade to multi-colored paper for the U.S. dollar as a way to thwart possible dollar-hackers who have already cracked an embedded picture counterfeiting-prevention device.

"This is the beginning of the bear market for the dollar, which is still being propped up by massive intervention around the world...." reports Gary Duncan ("Soaring Euro Poses Economic Threat" by Gary Duncan, Times Online (U.K.), 5/28/03.). [end quoting]

The fall of the dollar would "only" be the latest casualty in a world economic collapse that is simply proceeding slowly enough so that the Big Boys can gather as much loot as we suckers are willing to give up ("Experts say: 'Keep investing in the markets.'"), and then run for financial cover before the roof falls in on the little guy.

Are They Seeing What Is Coming Dead Ahead? Anatomy Of A Real Estate Crash

by Clif Droke, Publishing Concepts, May 30, 2002:

The last great financial bubble to blight the American economic landscape that has not yet popped, the real estate bubble, should realize its peak sometime this year and by no later than the first quarter of 2004. It will be my intention to prove this assumption using detailed cycle analysis and other forecasting methods in the article that follows. While Americans have enjoyed a generational speculative mania in the "ultimate" personal asset, namely housing, the doormat will soon be ripped out from under them as the bear continues to work out its vicious assault on everything the public holds dear....

[end quoting]

Unfortunately, it will take the collapse of this most sacred cow of the consumer-investor before many believe the truth about our ailing economy. WILL NEW U.S. BANKING SYSTEM THREATEN THE FED?

From the www.washingtonpost.com website, 5/22/03: [quoting]

Firms' Push To Enter Banking Wins Hill Support Brokerages And Retailers Would Operate Without Fed Oversight; Greenspan Is Among Critics

by Kathleen Day

Merrill Lynch, Morgan Stanley, Wal-Mart, General Electric, and other companies are gaining support in Congress for the right to set up a nationwide banking system that could compete with commercial banks but operate under looser federal rules.

Consumer groups, bankers, some lawmakers, and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan have sharply criticized the effort, saying it would create a second, parallel banking system that would result in unfair competition and more risk for the federal deposit insurance system and possibly taxpayers....

At issue is whether Congress should expand the power of obscure entities known as industrial loan companies. These state-chartered, limited-purpose banks—which operate in Utah, California, Colorado, Nevada and Minnesota—generally specialize in one area, such as offering credit cards. The owners of these companies are not regulated by the Federal Reserve and may include automakers, discount department stores, and other firms that are largely unrelated to financial services.

The House Financial Services Committee has passed two bills that would allow the giant Wall Street and retail firms to transform their industrial loan companies into full-blown banks. For example, Merrill Lynch would be allowed to open full-service branch offices around the country that could

A second bill, passed by the committee this week, would make it possible for industrial loan companies to set up branch offices nationwide without seeking states' permission. Currently they cannot do that in most states.

Greenspan, in a letter to Rep. Michael G. Oxley (R-OH), chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, said the changes "would alter the structure of banking in the United States and be contrary to two important national policies" one prohibiting non-financial companies, such as Wal-Mart, from owning a bank, and one that gives the Federal Reserve responsibility for ensuring that "companies that own federally insured banks operate in a safe and sound manner."

The American Bankers Association is against giving the industrial loan companies new powers without Federal Reserve supervision. The Federal Reserve is worried that if the bills become law, companies that have full-service banks, such as Citigroup, might drop their regular bank charters and move their operations into their industrial loan companies to avoid Fed scrutiny, according to Fed sources. Citigroup declined to comment....

Executives at Merrill, Morgan, and Goldman say they do not want to be regulated by the Federal Reserve Board, because they think it is overly restrictive. For example, if they are under the Fed, most security companies would have to hold more capital as a potential cushion against loss than they currently have to hold....

Critics say the issue for them is potential conflicts. "Without proper oversight, a commercial company might be tempted to use an industrial bank as a personal piggy bank and endanger the safety and soundness of the bank" said Travis Plunkett, legislative director of the Consumer Federation of America. Plunkett said it was ironic that Merrill Lynch, Morgan Stanley, Goldman Sachs, and UBS were pushing to expand the power of industrial loan companies—and are embracing the state of Utah as a primary regulator that could help set national bank rules.

Last month, these firms were among ten Wall Street firms that paid $1.4 billion to settle state and federal charges that they had cost individual investors billions of dollars by issuing inaccurate, overly rosy stock research reports to win investment banking business. These firms continue to decry a probe by New York state that led to the settlement because they say state officials should not be setting rules for a national and global industry.

"We think it's a particularly bad idea that the companies pushing this are investment firms: Given everything we know about how poorly investment firms have handled conflicts of interest in recent years, why would we make it easier for them to skirt federal restrictions?" Plunkett said.

[end quoting]

While all this fighting is going on among different factions of the elite controllers for "king of the hill" of the money pile, you can be sure of one thing: NONE of it is meant to help the average person who just wants an honest bank to deal with. Should anybody decide to go the route of true service, without all the ridiculous fees that banks are presently slapping on us right and left, well—look out—there'll be a mob beating a path to their door!

BAYER AGREES TO PAY U.S. $257 MILLION IN DRUG FRAUD

From the www.nytimes.com website, for 4/17/03: [quoting]

In the largest Medicaid fraud settlement, Bayer agreed yesterday to pay the government $257 million and pleaded guilty to a criminal charge after engaging in what federal prosecutors said was a scheme to overcharge for the antibiotic Cipro. According to documents turned over to the government by a whistle-blower, Bayer was coached in the scheme by a purchasing manager from Kaiser Permanente, one of the nation's largest healthcare organizations. The fraud involved selling Cipro to Kaiser at prices lower than the company was charging Medicaid, in violation of a federal law that requires drug makers to give the Medicaid program the lowest price charged to any customer. To cover up the fraud, the Cipro bottles sold to Kaiser were relabeled with Kaiser's name and given a different drug identification number.

[end quoting]

If Bayer got this large a fine, how high would you estimate the real theft was—knowing how the Big Boys always profit from their thefts even if they put on a token morality play for our benefit?

And do you really think the taxpayers will receive any benefit from this "fine" or will it just be a shuffling of funds between the pockets of different factions of thieves?

And speaking of robbers of the type our front-page feature story points out this month, how about the following item, which follows from the Press Release on page 27 of last month's News Desk, which said "Doctors Make Natural Treatment For SARS Available Worldwide":

DR. HOROWITZ REFUTES FTC CHARGES OF ILLEGALLY MARKETING SARS CURE

Excerpted from www.tetrahedron.org, 5/13/03: [quoting]

Subject: Urgent Open Letter from Dr. Len Horowitz

RE: SARS, FDA, and FTC

May 12, 2003

Federal Trade Commission

Bureau of Consumer Protection

Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Commissions and Bureau of Consumer Protection Officials:

This open letter is in response to the e-mailed notice that you sent to our customer service representative at www.cureforSARS.net wherein you wrote: "The Federal Trade Commission staff has reviewed marketing claims on your website...." and "we remind you that the FTC Act requires that health-related claims...[for] SARS must be supported by competent and reliable scientific evidence at the time the claims are made."

This provides you with notice of three health-related claims that we are making regarding SARS and our Internet communications:

(1) The scientific evidence supporting our justifiable claims regarding the utility of a plant-based formula for SARS is available on our website (www.cureforSARS.net) based on the scientific publication by Towers, et al. (1995) from the Journal of Ethnopharmacology;

(2) We do not recognize the FDA, or your "commission" in collaboration with them, pursuant to this notice, as anything other than irresponsible, misplaced, and misdirected authority; and

(3) the insidious economic motive behind your political notice is transparent among well-educated consumers and natural healthcare investigators and providers.

Such commercial interference, allegedly on behalf of American consumers and public health, is rooted in the advancing Anglo-American global Codex Alimentarius legislation that seeks to control all non-patent-protected natural cures and treatments on behalf of multinational drug companies (best termed the "global petrochemical-pharmaceutical cartel"). In other words, we view the FDA's widely publicized persuasion campaign attacking natural healing practitioners and formula manufacturers as a real life enactment of the Wizard Of Oz. Pull back the curtain and behold who profits from pulling strings on your commission, and the FDA overstepped authority.

We notice that responsibility for your electronic notification was signed, not by a person, but by your non-human organization/entity. For your information and official notification, we only respect and respond to real people. As sovereign individuals subservient to only one Creator, we rebuke any and all misplaced authority in your "commission".

We do this cognizant of rapidly advancing multinational corporate efforts increasingly administered through the World Health Organization (WHO), affecting global drug sales, healthcare policies, and contrived declarations of urgencies directed against nation states to compel compliance with neocolonialistic politics, policies, and interventions inconsistent with personal freedoms and democratic governments.

Your transparent efforts may be effective in deceiving the general population, but most of us in the natural healing arts and sciences are not fooled or frightened by your threats. Most members of our allied organizations view as inexcusable, if not despicable, increasing German-American political efforts to suppress natural healing methods and materials.

This includes new SARS treatments and potential cures at a time of global urgency when, in fact, government health officials in the hardest hit nations, including China, Hong Kong, Singapore, and Taiwan, have been embracing herbal and plant-derived natural medicines for the prevention and treatment of SARS.

We notice your commission and the FDA turns a blind eye to the promotion and use of the experimental, expensive, and highly toxic drug Ribavirin, never tested against the SARS-associated coronavirus, yet widely promoted as the standard for SARS patient care since before anyone knew the illness was linked to a coronavirus.

Reflecting on the FDA's and your commission's official tolerance of this harmful, if not lethal, practice by the mainstream media and medical doctors treating SARS patients adequately exposes your hypocrisy. American tax dollars would be far better spent having your commission and the FDA address the third leading cause of death in the United States—iatrogenesis, that is, physician-induced illnesses and lethal drug side-effects. How do you have the audacity to virtually disregard this pervasive public health threat, yet proclaim throughout the media our natural healthcare industry's shortcomings?

What is most sad is your organizations' manipulation of the average American who does not comprehend this joint FDA/FTC attack for what it really is—simply a promotion to facilitate a form of nutritional and pharmacological slavery through a political and economic drug agenda called Codex Alimentarius.

In recent years the global drug cartel has sought to pirate and patent anything uncontrolled in Nature's bounty. Examples of this, in recent months, include further violations of freedom of choice with declared restraints on ginseng production and the classification and labeling of stevia—the natural therapeutic sugar substitute—as a regulated "nutritional supplement" rather than a food.

Beyond these reasons for our disregard of your authority, there are many more egregious violations of human rights perpetrated by those with whom you are associated. One example involves the origin of HIV/AIDS and the FDA's apparent role, in collaboration with the Merck pharmaceutical company and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), having cooperatively produced the 1974 Hepatitis-B vaccines tested on gay men in New York City and Central African Black women. According to the most recent scientific evidence cited and discussed at www.originofAIDS.com, this collaboration played a major role in triggering the international AIDS pandemic.

In conclusion, we will not be intimidated, coerced, or corrupted by your drug company collaborating, administration, and/or commission.

We understand that mostly well-meaning persons within your ranks have been persuaded, largely by deception, to act as agents on behalf of the above-named global menaces. We simply rebuke your misdirected, politically contrived authority, yet remain open to serving your policy-makers by sharing, in every way possible, the uncommon intelligence required to expose and arrest the "Wizard of Oz behind the curtain" for the sake of world health and the public's protection.

Very truly yours,

Leonard G. Horowitz, D.M.D., M.A., M.P.H.

PRESCRIPTION FOR VIOLENCE? GEBAUER CASE DRAWS NOTICE OF GROUP LINKING CRIME, ANTIDEPRESSANTS

From the www.post-gazette.com website, 6/1/03: [quoting]

by Joe Smydo, Post-Gazette staff writer

Looking to bolster a theory linking antidepressants to adolescent violence, a group that studied the Columbine High School massacre has decided to follow the John Gebauer murder case.

The International Coalition for Drug Awareness—counting dozens of cases in which juveniles reportedly hurt themselves or others while taking prescription drugs such as Paxil, Prozac, Celexa, and Luvox—wants Congress to hold hearings on whether the antidepressants are appropriate for young people.

Through monitoring of newspapers and the Internet, group members built a bank of cases to advance their claims. In the process, they became aware of Gebauer, 16, charged last year with fatally shooting his adoptive mother, Alison, and sexually abusing her corpse at the family's Fallowfield farm.

Gebauer, who faces a preliminary hearing June 18, acknowledged taking an antidepressant in an October 2000 school essay he wrote about his family life. He didn't identify the drug.

Washington County [Pennsylvania, near Pittsburgh] assistant public defender Thomas Cooke said Gebauer had been prescribed Prozac before coming to live with Alison and Edward Gebauer, who adopted him in 1999, but didn't know whether his client ever took the drug. Washington lawyer David DiCarlo, Gebauer's court-appointed guardian, declined comment.

Ann Blake Tracy [*the front-page feature story for our July 2000 issue, titled The Ticking Time Bomb—PROZAC—Prescription For Disaster], the coalition's executive director, said Prozac and other antidepressants can induce a state in which adults or juveniles act out their "worst nightmares". Tracy said she founded the nonprofit group in Salt Lake City, Utah, about 10 years ago to educate people about the risks and described teenagers as particularly vulnerable because of their developing minds and bodies.

She said Prozac, Luvox, and Paxil belong to a family of drugs that, in fighting depression, restrict the brain's ability to metabolize the chemical serotonin. The coalition's website (drugawareness.org) says serotonin "is the same brain chemical that LSD, PCP, and other psychedelic drugs mimic in order to produce their hallucinogenic effects".

In some people, Tracy said, violent tendencies occur during use of the drugs and during withdrawal. If people aren't weaned from the drugs slowly, she said, violent behavior can linger for months or years.

"It begins to subside, but it can continue" she said.

A spokesman for the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America could not be reached for comment. But drug companies have refuted the coalition's claims and similar arguments by lawyers who took the companies to court.

Lisa Van Syckel, the coalition's New Jersey director, said she called Cooke last month after Common Pleas Judge Katherine B. Emery rejected Gebauer's motion to have his case heard in juvenile court. She said she wanted to alert Cooke to the drugs' effects on some people and speak about cases the group had investigated, including the 1999 Columbine massacre of 12 students and a teacher by trenchcoat-clad teens Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold.

"I know the Eric Harris file like the back of my hand.... I now understand how Columbine could have occurred" Van Syckel said, referring to the gunman's use of Luvox.

Cooke said he's willing to consider Van Syckel's information but doesn't know how, if at all, the group's concerns would fit into a defense strategy for Gebauer. He said he doesn't know whether there's a conclusive scientific basis for the theory of antidepressant-induced violence or whether it would be possible to isolate a drug's effects from the effects of a traumatic childhood.

Gebauer, 15 at the time of the shootings, lost his biological mother to cancer when he was 7. His father was out of his life by then, and the child was shuttled between foster homes for years before the Gebauers decided to adopt him.

Cooke said he still needs medical records to determine when Gebauer took Prozac, if at all. He said it doesn't appear Gebauer took an antidepressant while living in Washington County.

Van Syckel said she would consider traveling to Washington for Gebauer's trial.

The notion of antidepressant-induced violence has been introduced in court with mixed results.

Van Syckel said she helped Mark Taylor—wounded multiple times by Harris—to file suit against Luvox manufacturer Solvay Pharmaceuticals. In February, Taylor settled for a $10,000 contribution to the American Cancer Society.

Two years ago, a federal jury in Cheyenne, Wyoming, ordered Paxil maker GlaxoSmithKline to pay $6.4 million to relatives of a man who fatally shot his wife, daughter, granddaughter, and himself after 48 hours on the drug. It was the first major victory in such a case, with the jury finding the drug primarily responsible for the violence, said the plaintiffs' lawyer, Andy Vickery of Houston, Texas.

Vickery reached an undisclosed settlement for Melvin J. and Diane V. Cassidy of Monroeville, Allegheny County [a suburb of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania], in their lawsuit three years ago against Prozac maker Eli Lilly and Co. The suit alleged Diane Cassidy attempted suicide because of the drug.

While Tracy blames the drugs' impact on serotonin levels, Vickery offered a somewhat different theory. He said a small percentage of people may have difficulty metabolizing the drugs and act aggressively when the medications build inside them.

Vickery, who chronicles some of his cases on the website at justiceseekers.com said drug companies are liable because they haven't adequately warned consumers about the danger.

Some lawyers also have assailed the drugs in criminal cases.

Psychiatrist Peter R. Breggin says on his website (breggin.com) that his expert testimony persuaded a South Carolina judge to reduce the sentence of a man who committed rape after taking Paxil and a Virginia judge to reduce the sentence of a man who shot his wife and a sheriff's deputy after taking Prozac and other drugs.

Columbine is one of many cases the coalition cites in letters to elected officials demanding better regulation of the drugs. One case hits close to home for Van Syckel, who said her family's story will be told in the August issue of Good Housekeeping magazine.

She said she became active in the coalition after her daughter, Michelle, a high school senior, four years ago complained of ill health, mistakenly was diagnosed with depression and was prescribed a variety of antidepressants. Van Syckel said she saw sweeping changes in an honor-roll student who spoke French fluently, had no history of drug or alcohol abuse, and hailed from a stable family.

She said her daughter cut herself dozens of times with knives, razors, and jagged pieces of compact disc cases. "She even cut the word 'die' in her abdomen" and threatened to kill her mother with an ax, Van Syckel said in a July 30 letter to President Bush that urged him to act on her concerns about the drugs.

Van Syckel said her daughter had Lyme disease, not depression, and was evidently infected by a tick when the family settled in New Jersey after living five years in Belgium.

Meanwhile, the Van Syckels have sued the doctors who misdiagnosed Michelle and the hospitals where she was treated. The case has not been resolved.

"Her beautiful smile and wonderful disposition have returned, and she has been treated for her Lyme disease" Van Syckel told Bush. However, the letter said Michelle has irreversible brain damage and other problems.

Van Syckel said she wasn't satisfied with Bush's response, which arrived in the form of a letter from a U.S. Food and Drug Administration official who asked the family to file a formal report about Michelle's reaction to the drugs. On a more positive note, she said, a handful of congressmen have come out in support of hearings on the issue.

U.S. Rep. Tim Murphy, R-Upper St. Clair [another Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania suburb], a child psychologist who took office in January, said he did not know whether his office had been contacted by the coalition. But Murphy, co-chairman of the Mental Health Caucus, said he's willing to listen.

"I'll certainly review anything they send to me on that" he said.

Longtime readers of The SPECTRUM are well aware of Dr. Ann Blake Tracy and her powerful book PROZAC: Panacea Or Pandora? which we first featured in September 1999—almost a year before our eye-opening July 2000 feature interview with her. Naturally the large pharmaceutical companies, making handsome profits from pushing these drugs, are denying any such correlations as Dr. Tracy has so shockingly and consistently documented. These drugs seem to cause aggressive and sometimes downright bizarre behavior, yet so many of them are being dispensed to children and young adults like candy.

Of course, as many readers of The SPECTRUM would be quick to point out, from the larger perspective this pill pushing is part of the elite world controllers' strategy for neutralizing many gifted, advanced beings incarnating into planet Earth at this time with an agenda to break the longstanding chains of slavery over the people.

And speaking of ones who have been exposing the world controllers like those called the Illuminati:

FRITZ SPRINGMEIER RAILROADED

From the www.rumormillnews.com
Reading Room Forum, 4/28/03:

[quoting]

Posted By: Novice

For the many who may be unfamiliar with this man and his work, the details about his books and video offer important information.

I received this message just as is from Virginia Brooks, Reform Party of Ohio, State Chair. I met Virginia at the We The People Congress event called Operation Enduring Patriotism which was held at the National Press Club in November 2002. We have stayed connected. She has been given permission by Patricia Springmeier to spread this information far and wide.

I am surprised that this book is available. I thought that the Illuminati had done everything that they could to prevent it's distribution. I have no idea as to the validity of Arizona Wilder's work. In this forum, I have read of the skepticism concerning Kathy O'Brien's material. I hope that those Agents who can offer valid critique of Fritz Springmeier's work and/or Arizona

Wilder's work will do so for the Rumor Mill News Readers. Many of us just don't have the connections, background, or knowledge. Thank you. — Novice

From Virginia Brooks:

Please help this wonderful patriot in buying his book, one of the most outstanding books you will ever read!

Fritz's book will show you what the Reform Party is fighting against. Fritz had the guts to put it into print, and I truly believe that was why he was targeted, put into prison, to shut him up. But let's not let that happen in vain. Buy the book; you will never be sorry for the knowledge you will have access to by reading his great book. And if you can, make a donation too. Thanks.

— Virginia Brooks

P.S. Please pass this on to everyone you know, who realize what is happening and why it is happening! Fritz has and is paying the price for getting this information out for the salvation of our great country. Please don't let him down!

Please read his story below.

Dear Friend:

You are being contacted on behalf of my husband, Fritz Springmeier, who has been framed by several criminals in exchange for outrageous plea bargains.

Fritz unfortunately made the acquaintance of some of these people through ministering to them through Bible study sessions. (He has ministered to Jehovah Witness, mind-control victims, and many others since the early 1980s.) This email is being sent to knowledgeable and aware people with the hope that we can fight this injustice together. First, allow me to fill you in on the trial.

Fritz's Trial

The proceedings seemed unreal as I sat there and watched as defense revealed that the principal witness for prosecution, Tony Huntington, when faced with approximately 130 years on various weapons and drug charges—received a paltry 2-½ year sentence as a plea agreement for testifying against my husband!

Furthermore, our side had learned from the attorney for Forrest Bateman (a man who had pled guilty to the robbery) that Huntington had actually taken an active role in the bank robbery on the day of the robbery. When pressed by defense cross-examination, Huntington finally admitted to this—thus, impeaching his own testimony and perjuring himself! The most unfortunate thing about this was that, because Bateman was still awaiting sentencing, he was unable to testify.

Another witness against Fritz, Jim Vermeer, had five years for marijuana cultivation reduced to two. When confronted with statements recorded by a BATF interviewer that, within days of the robbery in question, Bateman told Vermeer that Scotty (AKA Simon Elliot) helped him do "it" (the bank robbery)—Vermeer said that Bateman meant prior bank robberies. When actually shown the written statements by Fritz's defense attorney, Pat Birmingham, Vermeer said that the BATF interviewer got it wrong. (Oh really!)

Worse still, was the testimony given by Simon Elliot (AKA Scotty). When approached by FBI interviewers offering leniency in exchange for information, Elliot received a signed guarantee by the agents that the statute of limitations for bank robbery was five years. At this point, Elliot admitted to committing seven bank robberies. He proceeded to give the names, locations, and approximate date of six of these.

When he got to the seventh, his memory had somehow failed. Is it possible that Elliot suddenly realized that the seventh robbery—the one that Fritz ended up getting indicted for—had not yet passed the five-year mark? These and other idiosyncrasies were all brought to light through defense cross-examination.

It seemed as though prosecution didn't

THE CROP CIRCLES: PRIMARY MESSAGE by Drunvalo Melchizedek.

As a celebrated mystic and teacher, Drunvalo Melchizedek's life experience reads like an encyclopedia of breakthroughs in human endeavor. After having taken physics and art at UC Berkeley, he ventured out, and over the last 25 years has studied with over 70 masters from all belief systems and religious backgrounds. An accomplished speaker, he instinctively communicates what's in his heart—his personal warmth, his love for life in all forms, and his deep compassion for humanity. His "Flower of Life" teachings and "Mer-ka-ba" meditation system have helped thousands better understand their own history and life work. An expert on Sacred Geometry, he has studied how Crop Circles manifest these ancient forms for a decade.

THE IMPORTANCE OF HOW AND WHEN THE CROP CIRCLE PHENOMENON BEGAN by Colin Andrews.

One of the earliest and best-known crop circle researchers and authors, Colin became involved in this mystery when, in 1983, he saw a quintuplet formation near his home in Andover, England. An electrical engineer by training, he was intrigued about what forces could create such perfect glyphs in crop fields. In 1989 he and Pat Delgado wrote Circular Evidence, a best-seller, followed by Crop Circles: The Latest Evidence, a year later. Colin founded Circles Phenomenon Research International (CPRI) and later moved to Connecticut. His scientific investigations have been widely recognized as models in the field and he has been featured in many crop circle documentaries. Recently, he has stated that while he considers many complex formations to be man-made, one cannot rule out unknown paranormal involvement in the rest.

SACRED GEOMETRY WORKSHOP by Drunvalo Melchizedek.

Drunvalo's information was given to him from 1972 through the 1980s by Thoth, best known as the Egyptian deity of inner wisdom pertaining to science, mathematics, and literature. Since the 1980s, Drunvalo has been presenting his Flower of Life Workshops (either personally or through his trained facilitators). His work has been spread to at least 40 countries, is taught in many languages (such as Spanish, Dutch, German, French, Japanese), and has deeply touched thousands of people around the globe. When the teachings of geometry are used to show the ancient truth that all life emerges from the same blueprint, we can clearly see that life springs from the same source—the intelligent, unconditionally loving Creative Force some call "God". When geometry is used to express and explore this great truth, a broader understanding of the universe unfolds until we can see that all aspects of reality become sacred. The ancients, such as the Egyptians, Mayans, and others all knew this truth and incorporated sacred geometry teachings into their mystery schools as a way for anyone to begin to practically understand his or her personal relationship to "God" and the universe. In this presentation, Drunvalo speaks on the experience in his life that led him on the path to practicing the Flower of Life teachings. A full two-hour presentation on the Flower of Life and sacred geometry.

have much of a case. Later that evening when at home, Fritz's attorney, Pat Birmingham, telephoned Fritz and suggested that there was no need to call any of the witnesses for defense. At Fritz's urging he then promised to call at least two of the twenty defense witnesses.

The next day, Birmingham called none of the twenty witnesses for the defense. All the jury knew of Fritz were lies, rumor, and hearsay, and that's what they took with them into deliberations.

Thus, on February 12, 2003, Fritz was found guilty of bank robbery. Appeals are in process now and sentencing will be passed on June 15, 2003. This is why I must work quickly while there is still time to fight.

Fritz's Books

Anyone who is not familiar with Fritz might ask: "Why would they want to frame Fritz Springmeier?"

Those who are familiar with his work would say: "Because of his books."

Fritz has spent most of his adult life exposing the Illuminati, their false religions, and their total mind control. His third book, Bloodlines Of The Illuminati is now in print. This book, the first of three volumes, exposes the "who", "what", and "when" of the Illuminati and their ancient plans for a New World Order. (The second and third volumes, co-authored with ex-Illuminati Mother of Darkness, Cisco Wheeler, exposes "how" the Illuminati have maintained control over their own people through the use of total mind-control programming.)

A Call To Action

This letter is a request for help with Fritz's defense fund. We cannot allow the establishment to "railroad" Fritz into jail. We need money to pay for transcript evaluations and other legal expenses while there is still time to fight.

OVERTIME PAY CUT

From the <http://www.aacb.com> website, 5/12/03: [quoting]

A Bush Administration overhaul of decades-old labor legislation could force many Americans to work longer hours without overtime pay. The Administration argues that the pillars of U.S. labor law, which established the 40-hour work week, a minimum wage, and overtime pay, are antiquated. According to the Labor Department, the changes would make more lower-income workers eligible for overtime. Unions fear the changes will severely restrict who is legally required to be paid for overtime.

This is but a small token consideration, likely designed by a bureaucrat and based on economics, to offset the way modern agribusiness has made the farmyard life of chickens, pigs, cows, etc., so miserable.

HOW WE'VE HELPED IRAQ SO FAR

From The Tehachapi News, Tehachapi, CA, 5/21/03: [quoting]

Another View, by Norm Haughness

Some malcontents and spoilsports are saying that, despite the heroic photo op President Bush had, celebrating the end of the Iraq war by riding with three other men to a carrier landing in a Viking S-3B jet May 2, all's not well in that conquered land.

O, they of little faith. Iraq has freedom now. Can't the soreheads see that freemarket capitalism and religious fervor are now starting to bless the country lately locked in Saddam's cruel embrace? All those critics whine about is the destroyed infrastructure, the blasted roads and bridges, the bombed and looted schools, homes, hospitals, and museums that once made life livable in Iraq.

They complain that at gas stations where, until the Americans freed them, Iraqis could buy gasoline for about 7¢ a gallon, there are now mile-long lines of vehicles at the few pumps still working, motorists waiting dawn till dusk to get a few liters.

"Iraq's oil must benefit the Iraqi people" according to Mr. Bush. They'll soon share the blessings of the $2-a-gallon fuel we enjoy in America, courtesy of the U.S. oil companies on whose behalf Iraq was attacked.

Sure, it was necessary to destroy much of the country to save it from the barbarous Saddam. But we were forced to do it, and right away, to keep that dictator from using all his Weapons of Mass Destruction against us.

Okay, maybe no WMDs have been found. So far. But they're there. You know they are, because you have Mr. Bush's word for it, and you know his honest character from both his record at school and as a businessman and his valiant conduct during the Vietnam war.

Besides, it might not be wise to criticize too loudly. Bush's attorney general has already suspended habeas corpus in the United States and conducted many secret arrests and imprisonments without trial. So unless we want to risk being disappeared, like so many American residents of Islamic heritage [and many others], best to hold our tongues.

There's plenty more room in those cages at Guantanamo Bay and other undisclosed locations for people who express disloyalty by criticizing our leaders. If this column should suddenly cease to appear—but we won't get into that.

President Bush is, as he often boasts, a very religious man. So it's only to be expected that he encourage the reintroduction of religious control of all aspects of life (except oil production, of course) in newly liberated Iraq. Our good friend and ally, Saudi Arabia, where the mullahs rule everything and the oil flows unimpeded, will be the model.

The U.S. conquest is bringing back religion—the fundamentalist kind Mr. Bush prefers. Suppressed under Saddam, Iraq's majority Shiites were seen on TV recently marching by the thousands, streaming blood, having slashed their scalps with knives. More inspiring sights to come, as Iraqi women are returned to proper subjugation.

Why can't these impatient critics of the war on Iraq wait a year or two? Look at what we've accomplished in Afghanistan. There, the U.S. presence has brought a return to the order the Taliban once imposed. This is the Taliban we armed to defeat the awful Russians who were supporting a secular government.

Today, it's expensive to bribe the Afghan warlords not to attack the capital, Kabul, where our puppet, Hamid Karzai, huddles behind his U.S. Special Forces bodyguard. But it's calm there, and the same tranquility can soon be realized in Iraq, if only we give Mr. Bush and Company a chance.

[end quoting]

This writer has captured the sentiments of many thinking Americans who can't articulate these same thoughts so powerfully. Perhaps his column WILL disappear soon, a casualty of the new federal laws in effect against badmouthing the government, a matter that Al Martin points out elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.

ID Cards For All, In Battle To Track Immigrants

by Richard Ford, Home Correspondent

The Home Secretary is to legislate in the next session of Parliament for a national identity card to be issued to every adult living in Britain.

The move was disclosed yesterday as the Home Office released figures showing a sharp fall in asylum applications in the first three months of the year. In spite of the fall of 32% compared with the last three months of 2002, David Blunkett is to tighten asylum laws further with new measures in the autumn.

A Home Office policy paper, including a recommendation to proceed with the identity card, is likely to go to the Cabinet for agreement before the summer recess. Legislation would follow in the next session of Parliament, although the scheme would not be operating before the next general election.

The card, carrying a photograph, name, and address, would be voluntary, although without it citizens would find it difficult to get healthcare or education. It would also be used in an attempt to curb illegal working in the black economy. The ease with which people can find work in Britain is believed to be one of the reasons why the country is attractive to asylum-seekers and illegal migrants.

OPEN-MEETING PROVISION MAY BE CUT

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 5/20/03: [quoting]

by Naomi Kresge, staff writer

Gov. Gray Davis' latest budget proposes dropping a requirement that local governments make public the agendas, locations, and times of official meetings.

The law obligates the state to pay for something that local governments should feel duty-bound to do on their own and produces no "significant benefit" to the state, according to Davis' proposal.

Open-government advocates say the proposal diminishes the public's access to government.

Some local governments said Monday that they would post agendas anyway, regardless of state reimbursement.

The proposal appears within a budget item that would save the state $32.9 million by reducing reimbursements to local governments.

The governor's revised budget does not specify how much of that money pays for the agenda mandate—the only state mandate within the item proposed for elimination instead of suspension.

State Department of Finance officials could not be reached for comment Monday afternoon.

The money-saving proposal leaves the door open for corruption in local government, government watchdog groups say.

"There were long fights to remove the secrecy in local government, and it's not necessary today in the era of South Gate, Colton, Carson, San Bernardino to make it easier to conduct the people's business behind closed doors" said Richard McKee, president of the California First Amendment Coalition.

Since 1986, the California open-government law, the Ralph M. Brown Act, has required that agendas be posted three days before each public meeting.

Advocates for open government say removing the requirement that local agencies tell the public what they will talk about before they talk about it cuts out the heart of the open-meeting law.

Cutting the requirement means that even if local governments post an agenda, they are not required to stick to it, said Thomas Newton, general counsel for the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

California is likely a test case for this tactic to keep the public away from monitoring political shenanigans. Once it happens in California, then the rest of the states are likely to follow in short order unless the public kicks up a fuss.

HOW TO SURVIVE A HEART ATTACK WHEN ALONE

Sent to me via a reader from an Internet source, 5/27/03: [quoting]

Do read. This could save your life. Pass this on to everyone you know.

Let's say it's 6:15 p.m. and you're driving home (alone of course), after an unusually hard day on the job.

You're really tired, upset, and frustrated.

Suddenly you start experiencing severe pain in your chest that starts to radiate out into your arm and up into your jaw.

You are only about five miles from the hospital nearest your home; unfortunately you don't know if you'll be able to make it that far.

What can you do? You've been trained in CPR, but the guy who taught the course neglected to tell you how to perform it on yourself.

How To Survive A Heart Attack When Alone

Since many people are alone when they suffer a heart attack, this article seemed in order. Without help, the person whose heart stops beating properly and who begins to feel faint, has only about 10 seconds left before losing consciousness.

However, these victims can help themselves by coughing repeatedly and very vigorously.

A deep breath should be taken before each cough, and the cough must be deep and prolonged, as when producing sputum from deep inside the chest.

A breath and a cough must be repeated about every two seconds, without let up, until help arrives, or until the heart is beating normally again.

Deep breaths get oxygen into the lungs, while coughing movements squeeze the heart and keep the blood circulating.

The squeezing pressure on the heart also helps it regain normal rhythm. In this way, heart attack victims can get to a hospital.

Tell as many other people as possible about this; it could save their life!

[end quoting]

Surely the worst-case scenario is when you're alone and something like a heart attack happens. Make sure your family and friends know about this technique.

257 CHILDREN MISSING IN 3 MONTHS

From The Daily News, Los Angeles, for 5/21/03: [quoting]

by Troy Anderson

Los Angeles County, which has one of the nation's largest number of missing foster children, saw a further increase of 257 runaways and abducted children in the first three months of this year, according to a report released Monday.

That increase follows a county Department of Children and Family Services report in January that listed 990 children as missing since 1995, including 238 who had returned or been located.

As of Sunday, 759 foster children were still listed as missing.

"Clearly, we are at a critical point because this keeps happening" said Janis

Spire, executive director of the Alliance for Children's Rights. "The number of children showing up missing is not going down. I think one of the most disturbing things I read was that 75% of the runaways are teenage girls. That is an astounding number."

The number of abducted children jumped from 21 in the last quarter of 2002 to 44 through March 2003. Also, 213 children ran away in the first quarter of this year, up from 194 in the last quarter of 2002. Of the runaways, 53 voluntarily returned or were located. A total of 11 children who were abducted were located or recovered.

Nationwide, 9,112 foster children were listed missing in March.

DCFS Director David Sanders said social workers need to spend more time with foster children and develop relationships with them so they can spot early signs of trouble.

"I'm concerned we are not spending the kind of time we need to with the child in the very beginning to actually prevent them from running away" he said.

Sanders said social workers are now visiting children once a month as required by a recent court order.

"I think it needs to be more than once a month" he said. "Not just 'Hi, how are you doing?' but to have a kind of relationship where the children can say 'It's not working. I'm thinking about running away.'"

By moving more administrative and management employees into social worker positions, Sanders said he could reduce the average caseload from 30 to 15 children, a ratio similar to other large child-protection systems in the nation.

"The number of cases is critical in that it allows social workers to spend time with families” he said.

[end quoting]

Do you ever wonder why certain children are given so much publicity when they are missing, yet hundreds go missing every day under the government’s “protection” programs after many of them are literally stolen from their parents by the courts?

Of course, those of you aware of the secret satanic ritual abuse of children, by ones belonging to secret societies and often including some with jobs high up in government, already know the answer to why so many children are “missing” and why so little of substance is done about it!

FDA APPROVES SHOT TO NEUTER MALE PUPPIES

Excerpted from the www.cnn.com website, 5/20/03: [quoting]

Veterinarians now can offer an alternative to surgery to neuter puppies.

Called Neutersol, it’s a shot administered directly into the testicles of puppies at the right age for neutering. The ingredients—the amino acid l-arginine and a zinc salt—cause the testicles and prostate to atrophy.

The alternative, surgically removing the testicles, guarantees sterility. In a study of 224 dogs, Neutersol did almost as well: Semen analysis showed only one sterilization failure, said Dr. Melanie Burson of the Food and Drug Administration.

The FDA approved Neutersol in March, but did not announce the approval until Monday.

A type of chemical castration already is available for humans. Sex offenders often are sentenced to regular injections of hormones that deplete testosterone. But that’s not permanent sterilization.

The new method for dogs is permanent, but some testosterone production continues because it’s not hormonally driven, Burson said. So unlike surgical castration, Neutersol may not eliminate unwanted male behaviors such as roaming, marking, and aggression, the FDA warned.

Pet overpopulation is a serious problem, and scientists have struggled to find ways to make animals infertile. Some were dangerous either for the animal or for the veterinarian administering them, said Bruce Addison, founder of Addison Biological Laboratory of Columbia, Missouri, which is selling Neutersol.

[end quoting]

One can only wonder what other agenda may really be driving this research and product. The usual neutering process for pets has a longstanding track record of reliability and safety, and is a relatively cheap and painless procedure to perform.

MISS A PAYMENT AND YOUR CAR MAY DIE

From the www.rumormillnews.com website, 5/26/03: [quoting]

Imagine getting in your car and it won’t start. The situation would be aggravating for most, but for hundreds of thousands of Americans it could simply mean their car payment is overdue. A growing number of car dealers are using “starter stoppers” technology to ensure you don’t get lax on your loan.

Macy Pearson loves the used car she just bought, but it will only start if she’s made her car payment. Nestled under her dash is a device called a starter interrupt system. If Macy doesn’t pay, the device is set to disable her car so she can’t drive.

Macy’s salesman insisted she have it, since she has no credit history. Once Macy sends in her payment, she’s given a code number to input into a remote that connects to a device underneath the dash. “I stick it right in here. You punch in your code, you hear another little chirp, and you’re done” explains Macy, as she easily connects the device that will allow her car to run for another week.

Mike Simon’s company, Payment Protection Systems, made the device in Macy’s car and some 60,000 others bought at corner used-car lots and dealerships alike. He says the device protects dealers from credit risks. “The people know that they have to make their payment and they really do perform in making their payments on time” says Simon. “Our delinquency rate was probably up around ten to twenty percent without the device. And since then, it’s dropped down below two percent” says car dealer Steve Matthews about using the device with customers.

It may be good for dealers, but what about drivers? Not everyone’s sold on the idea of “no cash, no dash”. Jack Gillis of the Consumer Federation of America has written a book about buying a car. He says the devices could put customers at risk. “You might be in a situation where you are in an unsafe position, and you need to get out of there quickly, and you can’t do it” says Gillis about the pitfalls of such a device.

But device makers say cars won’t stop while in motion, they just won’t start once they’re turned off. Even then, drivers like Macy can call their salesman for an emergency code that is good for 24 hours. Dealers also insist everyone is told about the service before they buy, and device makers like Stan Schwarz says drivers are warned before the “kill”.

Manufacturers say the technology can make the difference between getting a car and walking on foot for many. But critics say customers don’t always leave the car lot with a better price, or better financing if they have the device. It turns out cars may not be the only things fitted with those kill chips. Look for them to turn up in computers, air conditioners, and yes, even TVs.

Macy’s no critic; she’s grateful for the opportunity to buy a car and working hard to get a solid credit history started. To her, that device under her dash is a dose of discipline. “It really helps because it makes you pay on time.”

[end quoting]

Do you get the feeling from this technological “advance” that perhaps Big Brother has arrived at a new level of surveillance and control over us? Next they’ll be wanting to put a lock on our wallet so we pay them first—or else!

FLUORIDE APOLOGY FROM PROMINENT RESEARCHER

From The Tribune, Mesa AZ, 12/5/99: [quoting]

Prominent Researcher Apologizes For Pushing Fluoride

by Barry Forbes

“Why’d you do it, Doc? Why’d you toss the fluoride folks overboard?”

I had just tracked down Dr. Hardy Limeback, B.Sc., Ph.D in Biochemistry, D.D.S., head of the Department of Preventive Dentistry for the University of Toronto, and president of the Canadian Association for Dental Research.

Dr. Limeback is Canada’s leading fluoride authority and, until recently, the country’s primary promoter of the controversial additive.

In a surprising newsmaker interview this past April, Dr. Limeback announced a dramatic change of heart: “Children under three should never use fluoridated toothpaste” he counseled. “Or drink fluoridated water. And baby formula must never be made up using Toronto tap water. Never.”

Why, I wondered? What could have caused such a powerful paradigm shift?

“But certainly the crowning blow was the realization that we have been dumping contaminated fluoride into water reservoirs for half a century. The vast majority of all fluoride additives come from Tampa Bay, Florida smokestack scrubbers. The additives are a toxic byproduct of the super-phosphate fertilizer industry."

"Tragically" he continued, "that means we're not just dumping toxic fluoride into our drinking water. We're also exposing innocent, unsuspecting people to deadly elements: lead, arsenic, and radium, all of them carcinogenic. Because of the cumulative properties of toxins, the detrimental effects on human health are catastrophic."

A recent study at the University of Toronto confirmed Dr. Limeback's worst fears. "Residents of cities that fluoridate have double the fluoride in their hip bones compared to the balance of the population. Worse, we discovered that fluoride is actually altering the basic architecture of human bones." Skeletal fluorosis is a debilitating condition that occurs when fluoride accumulates in bones, making them extremely weak and brittle.

The earliest symptoms? "Mottled and brittle teeth" Dr. Limeback told me. "In Canada we are now spending more money treating dental fluorosis than we do treating cavities. That includes my own practice."

One of the most obvious living experiments today, Dr. Limeback believes, is a proof-positive comparison between any two Canadian cities. "Here in Toronto we've been fluoridating for 36 years. Yet Vancouver, which has never fluoridated, has a cavity rate lower than Toronto's."

And, he pointed out, cavity rates are low all across the industrialized world, including Europe, which is 98% fluoride free.

Low because of improved standards of living, less refined sugar, regular dental checkups, flossing, and frequent brushing. Now less than 2 cavities per child Canada-wide, he said.

"I don't get it, Doc. Last month, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) ran a puff piece all across America saying the stuff was better than sliced bread. What's the story?"

"Unfortunately" he replied, "the CDC is basing its position on data that is 50 years old, and questionable at best. Absolutely no one has done research on fluorosilicates, which is the junk they're dumping into the drinking water."

"On the other hand" he added, "the evidence against systemic fluoride in-take continues to pour in."

"But Doc, the dentists."

"I have absolutely no training in toxicity" he stated firmly. "Your well-intentioned dentist is simply following 50 years of misinformation from public health and the dental association. Me, too. Unfortunately, we were wrong."

Last week, Dr. Hardy Limeback addressed his faculty and students at the University of Toronto, Department of Dentistry. In a poignant, memorable meeting, he apologized to those gathered before him.

"Speaking as the head of preventive dentistry, I told them that I had unintentionally mislead my colleagues and my students. For the past 15 years, I had refused to study the toxicology information that is readily available to anyone. Poisoning our children was the furthest thing from my mind."

"The truth" he confessed to me, "was a bitter pill to swallow. But swallow it I did."

South of the border, the paradigm shift has yet to dawn. After half a century of delusion, the CDC, American Dental Association, and Public Health stubbornly and skillfully continue to manipulate public opinion in favor of fluoridation.

Meantime, study after study is delivering the death knell of the deadly toxin. Sure, fluoridation will be around for a long time yet, but ultimately its supporters need to ready the life rafts. The poisonous waters of doubt and confusion are bound to get choppy.

"Are lawsuits inevitable?" I asked the good doctor.

"Remember tobacco" was his short, succinct reply.

Welcome, Dr. Hardy Limeback, to the far side of the fluoride equation. It's lonely over here, but in our society loneliness and truth frequently travel hand in hand. Thank you for the undeniable courage of your convictions.

Want more scientific information about fluoride/fluoridation? Find it on the net: International Society for Fluoride Research (www.fluoride-journal.com).

"We have a duty to look after each other. If we lose control of our government, then we lose our ability to dispense justice and human kindness. Our first priority today, then, is to defeat utterly those forces of greed and corruption that have come between us and our self-governance."

[end quoting]

The miracle is how this doctor's story ever made it into print, past the censors. Most inquiring minds (including some of us who were dentists) knew many years ago that fluorides are horrible poisons.

Notice this story is almost four years old and yet you haven't seen any changes in the official American policy toward fluoridated water. Could that have anything to do with the dumbing-down effect of fluoride (known since Nazi experimentation during World War II) to facilitate the control of the masses of we-the-sheep?

Hello Jeff Rense,

I am a truck driver, and have hauled just about everything over the past 13 years.

I read your site's article postulating that naturally occurring aluminum found in water might be the key to Alzheimer's disease. I'll go one better than that.

I once picked up a 44,000 pound load of aluminum dioxide powder in the aptly-named town of Bauxite, Arkansas. Noting that the destination for the load was not a processing plant or a mill, I enquired as to why this load was destined for the Colgate-Palmolive Company. The shipping agent said that the quality of bauxite (aluminum dioxide) found in Arkansas was too low grade for manufacturing purposes, but was fine for toothpaste.

"Toothpaste?" I enquired. He then went on to explain that common white toothpaste is made largely from aluminum dioxide, which is a mildly abrasive, brilliantly white powder. They'll simply add a sudsing agent to make the bubbles, a flavoring agent to make it palatable, perhaps a food coloring agent, some water, and presto—toothpaste.

Go read the ingredients on your tube of toothpaste. It'll list one or two "active ingredients"—notice the combined total amounts of "active ingredients" is usually less than 1%. What about the other 99%?

- Were you aware that every day of your life, you are filling your mouth with a gob of nearly pure aluminum dioxide?

- Can you imagine the possible health effects?

- Do you see how this is the number-one entry point for aluminum to enter the body?

- Can you guess why the inactive ingredients aren't listed?

- Imagine the outcry from all the millions of health-conscious Americans who suddenly discovered that they are being poisoned!

- Yes, that's why they aren't listed.

So, if you and your vast readership are concerned about getting too much aluminum in your diets, you can all relax about naturally occurring aluminum in the water, or cooking with pots and pans. These are trivial sources of aluminum compared with the several pounds of aluminum directly swallowed or absorbed through the tissues while brushing your teeth.

On the bright side, we can all still have a beautiful smile in our old age, if only we can remember how to smile.

As a now-retired dentist, I learned long ago that you can't believe any labeling!

Furthermore, through their various well-paid puppets, the elite world controllers are quite skilled in feeding us the required poisons to advance their depopulation agenda—all the while filling their wallets from various poison-induced illnesses we get along the way to our death.

In this regularly updated column, Stewart discusses current events based upon his personal knowledge and experience of Illuminati plans for the Earth.

To The Emerald City (5/7/03)

As you all have heard in the past few days, there were over 90 tornadoes touching down in the Midwestern and Southern United States. Some of them were categorized as F4 and possibly F5 on the Fujita Scale. The town of Pierce City, Missouri was completely destroyed. The May 6, 2003 edition of the Chicago Tribune reports that there are 13 people still missing in the (13)0-year-old town. I am familiar with this town having passed through it several times on the way to visit relatives. This little town of 1400 people looked like something out of the 1950s. The word "pierce" in programming vernacular means to "cut through to another level".

These tornadoes that killed at least 40 people were artificially generated and were part of the same ELF pulses that created the earthquakes last week in Alabama and Arkansas. Tornadoes occurred on May 5, 2003 which numerologically equals 5-5-5. This is an activation of triplet programming and was part of an Illuminati national ceremony. Tornadoes within a programming matrix are created mentally by the internal programmer to switch alters from one level of programming to another. This is standard imprinting and conditioning. Local residents and meteorologists from Nebraska to Georgia said that they had never seen such devastation over such a wide area due to tornadoes. We must watch what happens in the next few days in the United States that would have required the need for such a ceremonial event. This type of activity is most likely going to trigger programmed slaves with Wizard of Oz programming.

Was Jessica Lynched? (5/11/03)

Former U.S. POW Jessica Lynch, age 20, who was rescued from an Iraqi hospital as the sole survivor of her unit, has amnesia. She cannot remember anything from the moment her vehicle was attacked until the moment of her rescue. How odd? (Convenient!) Doctors at Walter Reed Army Medical Center (and programming center) said she may never recover her memory (especially since they wiped it clean). All of her unit members died and were found buried outside the hospital. There has been no information about the condition of those bodies. Only her handlers know what type of heinous ritual she was used in and for what purposes.

It will be interesting to see what Utah's Elizabeth Smart remembers or forgets when her time comes to testify.

Grow This! (5/15/03)

The U.S. Agriculture Department is proposing a new rule that would require farmers to prove that their product is American-grown. This means paperwork detailing the life history of every pig, cow, sheep, etc. The cost and logistics of this documentation will put the small producer out of business since they are responsible for paying for this and maintaining detailed records. Eventually, only large, government-sponsored farms and ranches will be left viable. Their products will all be genetically re-engineered and under strict government control.

If I Only Had A Brain (5/15/03)

From 1970 to 1999, the brains of at least 20,000 people were removed without permission in Britain by medical personnel and morticians. A report by Her Majesty's Inspector of Anatomy said that these were used for neuropsychiatric research (or possible cannibalism at rituals). Many more could have been destroyed or taken elsewhere. There were also more than 3500 organs from babies and children taken without permission by the Royal Liverpool Children's Hospital. In the U.S., the FDA is delaying regulation on transplant tissue that might be infecting and contaminating patients. Perhaps they were tired of sending Igor out to the cemetery with a shovel in the middle of the night.

A Naughty In Saudi (5/15/03)

The recent attack on the foreign compound in Riyadh has already been blamed on Al Qaeda, without ever sifting through the rubble. Guaranteed that the evidence will point to another Islamic country hosting the terrorists. Perhaps they shall accuse Iran, Syria, or Libya. We also have to eliminate the former Soviet Republics that are Islamic and bordering on China. These staged terrorist attacks are designed to rile up American support for destroying all countries where the populations wear robes and pray to Mecca. Saudi Arabia will eventually have a change in government and become extremely westernized as an example to others. The Royal Family of Saudi Arabia, set up by the British Monarchy in the 1920s, is on its way out.

The Blair Witch Hunt (5/15/03)

New York Times journalist, Jayson Blair, has been accused of embellishing and making up stories for his news reports. Blair, a Black man, is said to be a scandalous reporter who included fabrications in his articles. Remember a while ago I wrote about journalists being fired or killed for what they were writing, especially concerning the war in Iraq and the Elizabeth Smart case in Utah. Journalism is no longer about the truth. Perhaps it never was. Today, the news is a media variety show, designed to entertain and entrain the population to New World Order-sanctioned propaganda and disinformation. Hitler would be proud.

Weird News—Really! (5/17/03)

I have seen on the news that now there is possible evidence that Laci Peterson was murdered by a Satanic cult who cut the fetus out of her during a ritual ceremony. I reported this back in December, 2002, when she disappeared from her California home. If proven, her husband will be vindicated of her murder and the police will have a lot of 'splainin' to do!

Also, I have been receiving reports about that missing Los Angeles film crew in Antarctica. They disappeared in November, 2002. Now, apparently their film has been discovered 100 miles west of Lake Vostok (check the archives for an earlier story on this). The film supposedly contains scenes of a large excavation by the U.S. government two miles below the ice which revealed an ancient city with amazing architecture, technology, and glyphs on the walls. The U.S. government has censored release of this film, citing national security risks. (Perhaps this is where Saddam and Bin Laden are hiding—or perhaps it's Superman's frozen hideout.) I am attempting to verify this story, which is reported to have other strange connections to a Lovecraft novel from the 1930s. The film crew is still missing.

I am researching the news story of the woman who killed two of her sons by bashing them in the head with a rock because God told her to do it (shades of the Houston drownings). Her one-year-old still clings to life. Hearing voices like that is a sure sign of programming triggers.

Finally, a military attack in Iraq this week by American troops was called "Operation: Planet X". This is a clear reference to Nibiru/Marduk and a staged alien invasion. As details of the above stories emerge, I will tap my sources for the story behind the media story.

Yellowknife Strife (5/20/03)

The son of Canadian Prime Minister Chretien was acquitted of sexually assaulting a 19-year-old woman in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. The woman said Michel Chretien, 34, assaulted her three times when she was 10 or 11 years old. The active Michel was sentenced to three years in prison in 1992 for sexually assaulting a woman. In 1998 he received a nine-month suspended sentence for assaulting his girlfriend's six-year-old son. Well, he certainly sounds like U.S. Presidential material.

The Imprinting Update (5/20/03)

The following is a small list of current Illuminati imprinting on the public concerning mind-control, ritual, and sacrifice:

KIND WORDS FROM OUR READERS

"Dear Ed: I am in profound appreciation for the great work that you and your team of Lightworkers are doing to help the American people wake up now that the American Dream has turned into the American Nightmare.

"Blessings on your path."

— Dr. A.J. from CA

"Dear SPECTRUM: I found your article in your June 2003 issue on 'Looting Iraq Of Priceless Weapons Of Mass Destruction' very interesting.... Your articles always make me think about what is going on—very inspiring. Thanks, and keep up the good work you all are doing. It is much appreciated."

— M.G. from OK

"Dear Friends: I'm always grateful to you for the information each month. I read it all! It seems that much more is about to happen for us. Have our water, food, batteries, etc., updated and doing the best that we can."

— V.B. from WV

"To all at The SPECTRUM: Health and Happiness! With Love and Light! Don't know how you do it. You must work 36 hours a day." — H.M. from AZ

[Editor's note: That's the only drawback once we perfected the time machine. Now there's no excuse not to work 36 hours a day—or so it seems!]

"I've been reading The SPECTRUM for the last 2-3 years, and I have always thought it was great. But in the last year, you have really reached a new level."

— N.P. from NY

"Dear SPECTRUM: I want to thank every one of you who work so hard to get each month's issue out. I pray for you all. I really look forward to each issue. Light and Love to you all."

— D.F. from MO

"There are many interviews, talks, and classroom lectures that I have given over the years, but sometimes things just flow and new bits of information come out that I never included anywhere before. Rick Martin and I had been talking about this interview for some time and then one day he called me and turned on the recorder and we let it roll. The following interview is 'A#1 primo' and a credit to Rick Martin who guided the path for you to see the past, present, and future."

— astrophysicist James M. McCanney holographic reality mind-control.

- Serial killer on the loose in Southern Louisiana who defies capture. The police have basically told women that they cannot protect them. Perhaps the police know who he is but are protecting him.

- The hazing incident in the Chicago area high school where the pledges were videoed being beaten, abused with paint and garbage, and verbally humiliated.

- The constant appearances of white rabbits on American television commercials.

- Virtual grass is being promoted in the Southwestern U.S. This new form of Astroturf which turns the desert to green is another method of encouraging artificial environments which subliminally support

I've Seen Fire & I've Seen Rain (5/20/03)

A volcano in the Northern Mariana Islands, previously thought to be dormant, erupted last week, causing an evacuation of the tiny island of Anatahan. There has not been a significant eruption in this island chain since 1981. The seismic equipment set up there years ago is no longer functioning since funding has run out. The eruption brings to light the dangers of volcanic activity in the Pacific. Recently, new fault lines were discovered under Hawaii, and a moving plume of magma was pushing toward the Big Island. There has also recently been a swarm of small quakes near Mt. Rainier in Washington State.

PARADIGM POLITICS by Daniel Sheehan

VHS VIDEOS

Daniel Sheehan is a social activist who has spent virtually his entire life working on progressive social programs and initiatives. As the Legal Counsel on such nationally-recognized investigative cases involving government as the Karen Silkwood Case, the Iran/Contra Case, the Pentagon Papers Case, the Watergate Burglary Case, and the American Sanctuary Movement Case, Dan brings to the issue of Extraterrestrial Intelligence and the UFO Phenomenon a unique background in investigating and exposing the world of American governmental covert operations, "black budget" operations, mind-control programs, government disinformation projects, covert warfare, and clandestine operations. He established the Christic Institute in Washington DC, which for nearly two decades was the country's preeminent public-interest law firm.

THE TRUTH ABOUT 9-11 by Carol Brouillet

Carol Brouillet is a Co-Founder of the International Media Project, which produces Making Contact, a half-hour radio program now heard on over 165 stations, primarily in the U.S. and Canada. (Making Contact will also pilot a new daily show beginning in February 2001.) Carol also helped found the Who's Counting Project, which promotes the film Who's Counting? Marilyn Waring on Sex, Lies & Global Economics. Both non-profits seek to connect people, vital ideas, and important information to nurture healthy social change, economic justice, and ecological sustainability. A passionate advocate of local currencies to raise consciousness, nurture community, and increase local self-reliance, her paper Reinventing Money, Restoring

The Earth, Reweaving The Web Of Life has won an honorable mention from the Millennium Institute as one of the best ideas for the 21st Century.

FORBIDDEN ARCHEOLOGY by Michael Cremo

Michael Cremo is on the cutting edge of science and culture issues. In the course of a few month's time he might be found on pilgrimage to sacred sites in India, appearing on a national television show, lecturing at a mainstream science conference, or speaking to an alternative science gathering. As he crosses disciplinary and cultural boundaries, he presents to his various audiences a compelling case for negotiating a new consensus on the nature of reality. Michael Cremo is a member of the History of Science Society, the World Archeological Congress, the Philosophy of Science Association, the European Association of Archaeologists, and associate member of the Bhaktivedanta Institute specializing in history and philosophy of science.

SCIENCE, POLITICS AND THE NEW MILLENNIUM by Dr. Nick Begich

Best selling author and lecturer Dr. Nick Begich presents an overview of the HAARP (High-Frequency Active Auroral Research Program) transmitter and antenna in Alaska. His countless years of research helps to provide a glimpse of new technological achievements that can help better the environment and reshape mankind in the future. Pulling from an array of extensive documentation from government, academic, and media sources, Begich is able to explain the big picture in terms that anyone can understand. There was a city-wide power loss shortly after Begich began his presentation, but through the use of a quickly placed battery pack, very little of this valuable presentation was lost.

Meanwhile, in Sri Lanka, flash floods and landslides have killed over 140 people, and more rain is on the way. The region hardest hit is the Ratnapura district famous for its gem mines.

Arrogant Ari—Gone (5/21/03)

White House Chief Spokesman Ari Fleischer, the bald-headed, snippy, anti-social voice of George W. Bush to the press, has decided to resign as of July, 2003. The official reason is that the pressure of the job is too much, and the 42-year-old wants to return to a quieter life in the New York suburbs with his wife of six months. Fleischer is known to reporters for his arrogant attitude, and often incorrect information. He is the latest in a string of Bush aides who have left the White House service in the last 18 months. Wonder what they found out?

Bandar Barter (5/21/03)

Prince Bandar bin Sultan, Saudi Arabia's Ambassador to the U.S. (and resident of Aspen, Colorado) warns that "something big" in the way of terrorist attacks may soon strike the U.S. and Saudi Arabia. Bandar, exposed by Cathy O'Brien in her book, Trance-Formation Of America, as a handler for Monarch sex-slaves, says he gleans this information from his "gut feeling". Well, that's hard evidence! How about he knows because he is part of the plan! Remember, fifteen of the hijackers on 9/11 were Saudis. Osama bin Laden is Saudi. The Saudis also refused to allow their country to be used by American forces against "their brother, Iraq". Is this Prince to be trusted? What does he know that he hides behind those robes? There is a great deception here.

Pardon Me, Have You Seen My Tank? (5/21/03)

The Department of Defense has a problem. They cannot account for $1 trillion (yes, that's trillion!) in cash! They also seem to have misplaced 56 airplanes, 32 tanks, 36 Javelin missile command launch-units, and a partridge in a pear tree. These are the same folks who spent $640 on a toilet seat. Seems to me the cash and equipment went somewhere.

Oh, and Vice President Cheney is missing too! Perhaps they should look in those 131+ underground bases the public doesn't know about. Or, perhaps they might look at the secret terrorist programming centers that the New World Order has all over the world—none, by the way, in Afghanistan or Iraq. We, the American public, are not amused. We would like our money back—and not be persecuted for asking! People are afraid to say anything these days for fear of being placed on a list of "suspected terrorists" or being a "person of interest". What has happened to America? We should not be looking in Central Asia. We should look along the Potomac!

Body-Mania (5/23/03)

- United Kingdom: Archeologists have unearthed six bodies near Stonehenge that date from 2300 B.C. At least some evidence points to the fact that they originated in Switzerland.

- Arizona: Three mummified infant bodies were found in a warehouse. They were stored by a woman from New York who apparently gave birth to three babies from 1981 to 1984. When they died, she kept their bodies in storage.

- Congo: Government and military personnel are hunting and killing pygmies to eat. They claim their flesh has magical powers.

Another One Bites The Dust (5/23/03)

Former New Jersey Governor Christie Whitman, EPA Administrator, just resigned from the Bush Cabinet, adding to the growing list of those who are fleeing the Bush Government. Whitman, from the most polluted state in the U.S.A., was a poor choice to head an Environmental Protection Agency. She and President Bush allowed more arsenic in the drinking water and more oil drilling in pristine areas. To her: good riddance! No loss! However, she claims she wants to spend more time with her family. All of them have said this. What do they know is coming? By the way, Prime Minister Blair of the United Kingdom had his spokesperson recently resign.

G8 Not GR8 (5/23/03)

Next week, this year's G8 meeting will be held in France. Bush will argue for the acceptance of genetically-altered food to Europe and Africa, whose countries are reluctant to accept them. Bush will also push for $15 billion over the next five years to combat AIDS in Africa and the Caribbean. He said: "I will remind them that the clock is ticking." Yes, it is a countdown to their deaths. As usual, the global public will not be informed about what these self-righteous men have planned for them.

Alter-Nate Reporting (5/23/03)

Former New York Times reporter Jayson Blair said he often laughed at his deceptive stories in the newspapers. He was gleeful over fooling the "most brilliant people in journalism". It is reported that Blair had serious mental issues. In an interview he states: "I was either going to kill myself or I was going to kill the journalist persona. So Jayson Blair the human being could live, Jayson Blair the journalist had to die." Those readers who have seen my mind-control and programming videos know that this is the statement of a person trying to deprogram by eliminating a front alter in his programming matrix.

Mad Cow, Eh? (5/23/03)

It has been determined that a cow in Alberta, Canada that was slaughtered last January(!) has Mad Cow Disease. It took until May(!) for the test results to return. Talk about a quick turnaround! Seems like someone in the New World Order wants to punish Canada. First SARS, now Mad Cow. Many countries now ban beef imports from Canada even though this animal died five months ago and nothing has turned up since. The fallout has caused stocks in food retailers to drop. Stand on guard, Oh Canada!

Quake Report (5/23/03)

Algeria is the latest target of temblor activity. A M6.7 quake rocked this North African country, killing well over 1,000 people. Following a reverse trend, quakes are moving east to west this month. Starting with China, then Afghanistan, Turkey, now Algeria. Next in line is the Mid-Atlantic Range (undersea) followed by Southeastern U.S. (Charleston area), then Missouri, California, and Hawaii.

Halliburton Halibut (5/26/03)

A recent article in the New York Times titled "Dancing With The Devil" was a fascinating comparison of how the public, guided by the media, attacked the Dixie Chicks for speaking their minds, while Vice President Cheney and his "meal ticket" the Halliburton Company remain unscathed. Since 1984, Halliburton has made moneymaking deals with Libya, Iraq, and Iran, three nations on Bush's "axis of evil" list. Yet, Cheney, from 1995-2000, while head of Halliburton, continued these deals.

In fact, in 2000, Halliburton opened an office in Teheran, Iran. Interestingly, they also now stand to make $billions running Iraq's oil production operations. So, why aren't people saying anything about this? Only Congressman Henry Waxman of California has raised these issues with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld—old bathroom face.

The New York Times article refers to Halliburton as "a slithering enterprise with its rapacious tentacles in everybody's pockets". A clearly Reptilian description. Looks like a Congressman and another New York Times writer are going to bite it!

9/11 Holdovers (5/26/03)

After 9/11, men from Muslim countries were ordered to register with the U.S. government. About 13,000 Arabs and Muslims have been detained without legal representation and could be prosecuted and/or deported. These men have American families who are now not supported financially. Phone calls from the detention centers cost $2 per minute.

These men registered to comply with American law, and now they are being persecuted as are their families. Reminds one of another country back in the 1930s and 1940s.

Don't Do It! (5/29/03)

For the past two years, I have warned Black Americans not to register with the government. The ploy has been to determine connections to slavery for possible reparations. Then it was to pay them for DNA samples to determine connections to White ancestry from slave owners. Since none of that worked, they are saying it is to help collect data for Black race diseases since Blacks are "left out" of health studies and healthcare. None of this is true. They want Black DNA to determine who should be eliminated and who is "salvageable" for programming. The last people to do this were the Nazis. The Jews in Germany who registered are now gone from the Earth. Please, all Black readers—do not do this!
